TABLING OF PAGES ONE AND TWO OF OCTOBER ISSUE OF "FOREIGN TRADE"

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2), and as indicated in the reply given to question No. 838 on April 28, 1971, I now wish to table copies, in French and English, of pages 1 and 2 which were omitted in the October issue of the Foreign Trade magazine published by my department. That correction does not apply to the magazine Commerce extérieur.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON FAMILY PLANNING PROGRAM

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the House yesterday in reply to a question by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), I wish to outline very briefly the achievements of the family planning program within my department.

For the past several months, health and welfare officials of my department have been engaged in launching a Canada-wide family planning program in co-operation with the provinces and with professional and voluntary organizations. Our aim has been to include both health and welfare interests and responsibilities, ensuring co-ordination and making full use of the resources and capacities available. The department is also working with the Medical Research Council and with the International Development Research Centre in this program.

I expect that during the coming months we shall be able, through our existing and developing programs, to enhance our support of the growing efforts of the provinces and of voluntary groups and agencies. In this regard, as the latest development I am happy to say that I have recently approved a direct contribution of $100,000 to the Family Planning Federation of Canada to assist that organization to extend its activities throughout Canada.

In order to strengthen our combined efforts to promote family planning, we intend to hold a family planning conference in 1972, with participation of provincial health and welfare authorities, professional associations, citizen groups and other organizations. Such a conference will provide an opportunity to assess progress and to develop measures to improve and extend family planning services throughout Canada.

I realize that the time of the House is limited and therefore I will conclude my remarks. However, because of the interest of the House in this subject, in accordance with Standing Order 41 (2) I wish to table in both official languages a document which outlines in more detail the achievements of the family planning program of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for supplying copies of his document on family planning in sufficient time for us to review its contents.

First I wish to say I am pleased that the government is making a reasonable start on introducing a program on family planning, but it is only a beginning and an elaboration of an information program which has been needed by thousands of families for many years. I would like to have seen more planning in the direction of needy families in line with the family income security plan.

The document indicates co-ordination with the provinces and other organizations but does not suggest, as it should, financial assistance for more family planning clinics in hospitals. This should be a very basic consideration. Only 23 of 948 Canadian subsidized hospitals have family planning centres. This brings up the fundamental question of the difficulty in providing counselling to the poor and poorly educated who live in areas that are far distant and isolated from this type of service. In this connection we hope that in order to overcome this difficulty a system of mobile clinics will be established to serve these remote areas in order to help those who need advice most. The dissemination of birth control information is important and in carrying out the task attention should be paid to those who, even at this sophisticated stage of our communications media, are far removed geographically from those to whom they can look for advice.

I think it is worth while questioning the sufficiency of the sum of $100,000 granted to the Family Planning Federation of Canada to direct the publicity and advertising informing families of this service. I hope that, as the minister has stated, during the coming months he will increase government support to the provinces and voluntary groups.

Another question which should be answered is when the minister and the government will initiate legislation or regulations under the Food and Drug Directorate to require manufacturers of birth control devices to indicate on the label the level of effectiveness of their products.

I hope that the minister will also consult with his colleague, the Minister of Justice, for the purpose of clarifying the Criminal Code so that sterilization performed by qualified medical practitioners at the request of the patient will not involve criminal responsibility on the part of the practitioner.

We are pleased that the minister has chosen to implement some of the recommendations set out in the report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women, and we hope that this year's program will consist of more than a mere introduction.

I had hoped that we would hear the minister speak today about the relationship of the basic need for family planning to assistance programs under the Canada Assistance Plan to provide increased benefits to those who are poverty-stricken. There will be great disappointment, that the family income security plan, as was stated by the minister, will not be introduced now so that the needy may receive the benefits announced in the white paper on income security. This is also a part of family planning. It is obvious from the criticisms of the white paper by the Canadian Welfare Council that new reviews and discussions will have to take place in the cabinet. The delay will have a serious effect on many thousands of our citizens, and I implore the government to take the necessary action as quickly as possible. I hope the upcoming conference of provincial ministers of welfare will show Canadians that positive action will be forthcoming, and that ongoing discussions will take place in order to make progress in line with the document introduced today.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the minister for his courtesy in making this statement and the accompanying document available in time to give us a chance to study it before commenting on it. I am sure all of us are very happy to be in on what the minister has described as the launching of a Canada-wide family planning program. I do not know whether he should have provided champagne for the launching. We will have to find out whether the ship is good, stout and seaworthy. She has been stuck on the ways for quite a while now, and I am very much relieved to see that at last she is going down to the sea.

It is not always that one has a chance to commend the minister for something really solid, apart from words, but there are certain solid features of this program which appeal very much to many hon. members. For one thing, Mr. Speaker, the program is Canada-wide. This is an excellent thing at a time when the mobility of people is making boundaries, provincial or otherwise, less and less relevant.

Another point in the minister's statement on the program which I like very much was the indication that there is to be co-operation with the provinces, with the professions and with voluntary organizations. I am very glad that the minister used the plural—organizations.

Some people feel that the $100,000 to be given to the Family Planning Organization is not a great deal in comparison with what will be needed to handle the business of family planning across Canada but, after all, this is probably just a start with the major family planning organization. It is obviously a very good start, and let us hope that there will be more to come. What I am glad to see is that $100,000 in good hard cash is being made available for this purpose because, if the repeal of the provision in the Criminal Code which prevented the dissemination of birth control information was a milestone, as the minister described it, I am hoping this program will prove to be a second milestone on the way to helping people plan, space and limit their families. I am hoping that this will be a beginning in making the Canadian people realize that population experts are not just talking nonsense when they talk about the need to limit the average family to two children. If we cannot work in that direction, Mr. Speaker, then it is absolutely ridiculous to talk about improving the quality of life in this country because the quality of life is dependent on our keeping the population within bounds.

There is great need for this new planning program. I cite to hon. members the latest example that came to my attention. Just this morning I was told that more than half of the babies born in the Ottawa Civic Hospital last week were born out of wedlock. I am convinced it is not only in Ottawa that people need to be told about ways and means of not having children, particularly children that they cannot look after and do not welcome. I believe that contraception, family planning and birth control are the first line of defence against unwanted pregnancy.

I congratulate the minister on taking this action because it will mean that abortion will not be necessary on as wide a scale now that we are undertaking family planning by the other route of birth control and use of contraceptives. I know there is much lacking in this program, Mr. Speaker, but in the accompanying document I notice that the minister makes reference to the way in which the Canada Assistance Plan can be used or has a potential for use in dealing with family planning if the provinces come through with requests for programs and put up 50 per cent of the cost in order to get the other 50 per cent from the Department of National Health and Welfare.

Also, Mr. Speaker, for training personnel to staff family planning clinics both professional training grants and the National Welfare grants program can be used.

This is a very important subject, Mr. Speaker, but I am not going to trespass on the time of the House. I am just going to congratulate the minister on taking one of the very important steps recommended by the Royal Commission on the Status of Women, that family planning be instituted across Canada. I believe this program will make that a possibility.

• (2:20 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I would ask you to be patient enough to listen to the Creditistes who have things to say which are quite different from what the minister and the two hon. members who spoke before me had to say.

I wish to thank the minister for having distributed his statement in advance, a gesture which allowed us to study it from the first line down to the last.

I find the minister's attitude in the House—and that goes for the two members who spoke before me, too—simply scandalous. In my view, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) should promote the family ideal in Canada. However, when I look closely at the minister's statement, I see that while he appears to be promoting family planning, he is actually favouring the destruction of the family.

In the circumstances, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who is responsible for the Canadian family, should resign because instead of being in favour of the Canadian family he is against, as he has just most explicitly demonstrated.

The minister should, in this House, promote the respect for and the beauty of the Canadian family. But the statement that he has just made proves that he wishes to subject the Canadian family to the requirements of finance, because the financial system does not allow Canadian families to flourish, grow and be comprised of more than two children, as the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) has just claimed. Although I could not have children, being of the male sex, I am still a father of seven, and quite happy with my lot.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Rondeau: I fail to understand how some hon. members, and the three who have spoken before me, can advocate the destruction of the Canadian family instead of its promotion. They may be influenced by the believers in the myth that the world is over-populated.

When people mention human pollution or over-population, I rather feel that the pollution exists in their own minds. It is a shame to hear them talking about over-population when Canada, a young country with only 22 million people, can feed and help develop and prosper over 100 million citizens.

Mr. Speaker, I can neither understand nor approve the attitude and the way of thinking of the hon. members who accept the position and the statement of the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

The minister has also announced that, under the new law, it will be legal to advertise contraceptives anywhere in Canada.

He also announced that the Family Planning Federation of Canada will henceforth be recognized by the Department of National Revenue as a charitable organization so that contributions to it will be tax deductible.

I am convinced that if the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) does not transfer him before long, the Minister of National Health and Welfare will come again before the House to announce a monthly bonus for each child that a mother will not have raised. Thus, the latter will be better rewarded than a mother who will have raised children.

Thirty-five years ago, the Department of Agriculture paid $2 to farmers of both eastern and western Canada not to raise any hogs, and at that time farmers did their best not to produce any. Some of them were resourceful enough not to raise 2,000 hogs.

I am therefore wondering whether the minister will not include in the legislation provision for an allowance to be paid by his department to mothers who use contraceptives.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I feel I must remind the hon. member and, indirectly, other members participating in the debate, that according to the Standing Order of the House comments of party representatives after a minister's statement should be brief.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I am taking your kind remarks into consideration and I must say that I was about to close. As I said before, I am shocked and surprised to see that in the House charity has become selfishness and selfishness charity. The Department of National Health and Welfare, according to the minister's statement, spent $90,000 last year to promote the destruction of the family. For this year, he has just stated that the department he heads will be spending a further $100,000, not to promote the family, as indicated in the document he has tabled, but to promote its destruction, to the prejudice of our beautiful country.

CANADA-FINLAND SUPPLEMENTARY INCOME TAX CONVENTION ACT, 1971

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FINANCE

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY CRISIS—EFFECT ON CANADIAN DOLLAR

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. Is the minister in a position to make a statement to the House giving in some detail the situation in the international money market, and also how he foresees that the Canadian dollar position will be protected by steps taken to date so that we do not suffer any splash, shall we say, from this international monetary crisis which is building up to very serious proportions?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would consider making such a statement when the position is somewhat clarified. I understand that the finance ministers of the European Economic Community are meeting in Brussels on Saturday and that the German cabinet has scheduled a cabinet meeting for Saturday afternoon. So far as the Canadian dollar is concerned, there has been very light trading in the Canadian dollar and its value has not been affected materially.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The minister will appreciate, of course, that the Canadian dollar could be considerably affected if there is, shall we say, a movement away from certain currencies and the Canadian dollar becomes a currency of refuge for speculators. We must also consider the position of our exporters, and I think that is the position the minister must guard the most.

INTERPROVINCIAL MARKETING—QUEBEC LEGISLATION TO ESTABLISH BORDER CONTROL STATIONS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Has the minister seen the legislation to establish border control stations which the government of Quebec is proposing, or has he been consulted in regard to the implications of this legislation with respect to trade in agricultural products?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): No, Sir, not yet.

Mr. Gleave: In view of the fact that Bill C-176, which the minister referred to yesterday, does not provide any protection against obstacles to interprovincial trade, will he now join the government of Manitoba and support its application to the Supreme Court of Canada so that we may have a decision from the highest court regarding the crucial problem of interprovincial trade in agricultural products?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that the hon. member's supplementary is similar to a question which was asked yesterday or the day before.

[Mr. MacEeachen.]

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. What is the policy of the government toward this move to balkanize Canada which could be followed by other provinces and would result in the effective balkanization of the country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe our policy has been announced to the House on this matter.

Mr. McGrath: In view of the concern felt in the country over these moves to restrict the free flow of trade between provinces, which could have very serious detrimental effects on some provinces, including my own, I think the House deserves a much better answer than the Prime Minister gave, which in fact was no answer at all.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary North on a supplementary.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, with great respect, a similar question was asked yesterday to the one asked by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar with regard to joining the government of Manitoba in its application to the Supreme Court of Canada. The answer was that Bill C-176 would do the job. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the question the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar asked took precise note of what the Minister of Justice said yesterday. He suggested to the minister that Bill C-176 does not have anything to do with it and asked him whether, in view of that, he would join the government of Manitoba in its application to the Supreme Court of Canada because the subject matter is of immense importance to the country.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary North.

INTERPROVINCIAL MARKETING—INSTRUCTIONS TO FEDERAL COUNSEL IN PROCEEDINGS BEFORE SUPREME COURT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): In light of the questions asked today and the answer given yesterday by the Minister of Justice and in view of the constitutional question of free trade and keeping this country together and unified, will the Minister of Justice now accept his responsibility, stand in his place and advise the House whether he has instructed counsel to represent the federal government, whom he has instructed, what province that counsel is from, and what are the instructions? This is not an ordinary case. It is a constitutional question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the minister might reply to the supplementary just asked by the hon. member and the supplementary asked by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I did say yesterday in reply to questions put to me by the hon. member for Calgary North and the hon. member for Peace River that I had instructed counsel to represent the federal government before the Supreme Court of Canada on the appeal from the Manitoba Court of Appeal. I can now add that I have instructed counsel to defend the constitution in so far as those areas relating to interprovincial trade and the British North America Act are concerned.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): With regard to the counsel we have appointed, I would like to get a more precise answer for the hon. member later.

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question. I hope Your Honour will not think that it is argumentative. It is not meant that way. In view of the answer of the Minister of Justice as to what instructions were given, if he knows the instructions can he now tell us to whom he gave those instructions? How can he give instructions if he does not know to whom they were given?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I think the hon. member knows how this works. I gave the instructions to the Deputy Minister of Justice. Whether the Deputy Minister of Justice has asked that the department be aided by outside counsel, that is, counsel in private practice, or whether he is relying on the very capable officials and counsel within the Department of Justice, I do not know. However, instructions were given to the Deputy Minister of Justice and he will see that the department is represented before the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. Woolliams: Is the Minister of Justice thinking of resigning?

INTERPROVINCIAL MARKETING—QUEBEC LEGISLATION TO ESTABLISH BORDER CONTROL STATIONS—SUGGESTED DELAY—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Justice. With the residual powers the minister has under the constitution, does he intend to ask the province of Quebec to cease and desist from the erection of these inspection stations until the matter has been resolved by the courts?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar.

Mr. Horner: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Justice was about to attempt to answer.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member was looking at the minister more closely than I. He did not appear to be rising very quickly. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar on a supplementary. Perhaps the minister might then indicate whether he wants to reply to both questions.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): In view of the lack of clarification of the government's stand on this issue, will the Minister of Justice very soon report to the House clearly and distinctly what action the government proposes to take?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): The government's position has been made quite clear by the Minister of Agriculture, namely, that Bill C-176 will provide co-ordinated marketing legislation that might well be the vehicle for solving the problem.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Does the hon. member for Sainte-Marie want to put a supplementary question?

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): I want to direct a different question, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to hon. members that we might return to this matter in a few minutes. I realize it is a matter which is obviously of interest to all hon. members, but at this point it might be desirable to recognize the hon. member for Lotbinière and then return to this matter.

GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS

"CANADA 1971"—ALLEGED ERROR CAUSING PREJUDICE TO SOCIAL CREDIT PARTY OF CANADA

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Can he say whether he took part, before its publication, in the supervision of the booklet entitled "Canada 1971" which pretends to be the annual magazine about present living conditions and recent developments, prepared by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and whose publication has been approved by the hon. minister himself?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Lotbinière want to put a supplementary question?

Mr. Fortin: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Did the hon. minister know that in this booklet, prejudice is inflicted directly to a political party represented in this House, a party whose name is "Social Credit Party of Canada" but which was known as Ralliement créditiste of Canada before this booklet was issued?

Mr. Pepin: No, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware, but I shall inquire. If there is any mistake and if there are apologies to be tendered, I shall oblige on behalf of whoever wrote those words.

Mr. Fortin: I wish to point out the seriousness of the statements made in this publication and I shall quote from them briefly. I refer to the following sentence on page 46:

> The Social Credit Rally is the former Quebec wing of the Social Credit party, which, outside Quebec, has now virtually disappeared from federal politics.

Since public funds are thus used to mislead the Canadian people and especially our younger generations, would the minister agree to request the immediate withdrawal of this book and to have it corrected so that Canadians will not be misinformed concerning the status of the Social Credit Party of Canada which is faring better than ever?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I could certainly crack a few good jokes on this subject, but I shall refrain.

I would simply like to repeat what I said a few moments ago, that I will peruse through the brochure and, again, if apologies are in order, I will make them.

Mr. Fortin: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member may put a supplementary, but we must proceed with the question period because we will run out of time very shortly.

Mr. Fortin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The minister has undertaken to apologize if need be, but the situation is more serious than that.

Since in addition the English version differs from the French version, is the minister prepared to discontinue the distribution of the brochure and replace it with a new factual one?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, perhaps we might take measures which are somewhat less dramatic than those suggested by the hon. member. I read recently a booklet written by the leader of the Social Credit which contained a whole list of errata; perhaps we might use the same method with regard to this document.

AGRICULTURE

INTERPROVINCIAL MARKETING—POLICY RESPECTING PROVINCIAL REGULATIONS INTERFERING WITH FREE TRADE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to return to the very important matter of free trade interprovincially in agricultural products. In view of the fact that Bill C-176 only comes into effect with the intervention of the provinces and some provinces have already indicated they will not support it in its entirety, will the Prime Minister indicate that the federal government's policy, if this is its policy, is vigorously and strongly opposed to any provincial regulations interfering with the free movement of goods between provinces which constitutes a basic and cardinal principle of confederation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have done this several times. The latest time I did so in the presence of the provinces was at the federal-provincial meeting, the one before last. This whole matter was discussed. We were urged by the provinces to get along with Bill C-176 which the overwhelming majority of them thought was the proper solution to this problem.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Of course, the opposition is really defeating its own purpose. It is criticizing the government for not having a policy when it is preventing that policy from at least being tried. I think the opposition is in a very sorry state in this regard.

Some hon. Members: Hear, Hear!

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The remarks of the Prime Minister are, of course, argumentative and should not be made. It would be equally argumentative for me to say we are in this mess because the government was too cowardly to do something about it some time ago.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not wish to limit supplementaries unduly, but I believe we should soon move on to another subject. We have spent about 15 minutes of the question period on this subject and we shall be running short of time. If hon. members feel this is in order, I might allow a supplementary to the hon. member for St. John's East. I believe the hon. member for Lotbinière has a supplementary also but for the moment the Chair will recognize the hon. member for St. John's East.

INTERPROVINCIAL MARKETING—QUEBEC LEGISLATION TO ESTABLISH BORDER CONTROL STATIONS—SUGGESTED DELAY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I wish to pursue the matter, Mr. Speaker, because the Minister of Justice was attempting to answer my original question—which I shall now rephrase—but he did not catch Your Honour's eye. Will the government, using the residual powers it has under our constitution, ask the province of Quebec to cease and desist from the establishment of these inspection stations until the question has been resolved either by Parliament or the courts?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I do not know what power the hon. member has in mind. We do not have the power to effect regulations. As far as the power of reservation and disallowance is concerned, that has not been exercised by the federal government since 1943. The matter is now properly before the courts and, short of legislation, it will be for the Supreme Court of Canada to decide whether any cease and desist order should issue.

Mr. Woolliams: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I hope the Prime Minister did not mislead the House with reference to the position of the provinces. I do not believe that the province of Alberta, the province of Saskatchewan or any other western province would, because of their major primary industry being agriculture, endorse the balkanization of this country. I would hope that the Prime Minister, with his knowledge of constitutional law, would now rise and correct that misunderstanding.

Mr. Trudeau: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker. I was asked by the opposition whether I had made this point to the provinces. My answer is yes, I did. When the hon. member talks of balkanizing Canada he may be reflecting the result of the obstructionism of his own party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question to the Minister of Justice. Since the hon. gentleman has said he has not seen the legislation which is presently before the Quebec legislature, the bill which purports to give authority to set up inspection stations for agricultural products, in this case, I think, eggs, and in view of the serious repercussions this could have for the rest of Canada, would the minister undertake to secure a copy of that legislation and make a statement on motions as to what the federal government's intention is with respect to this legislation in order to prevent very serious dislocation in the movement of agricultural products across provincial boundaries?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I shall certainly secure a copy of the bill before the Quebec legislature, but what action the federal government could take in expressing an opinion about that bill, or expressing a constitutional view about the bill, is highly doubtful. If the measure is to be challenged, it will be challenged before the courts, and the reference from Manitoba is presently before the Supreme Court of Canada. The other alternatives are, of course, interprovincial negotiation or the type of co-ordinated marketing legislation envisaged by the Minister of Agriculture.

NATIONAL DISASTERS

ST. JEAN-VIANNEY—FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO VICTIMS

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

In view of the statement he made yesterday in the House, would he tell us if the government has decided to offer financial or other assistance to the St. Jean-Vianney victims and, if so, what kind of help will it be?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): As I said yesterday, Mr. Speaker, we will abide by the procedure in the present case. The municipality needs only to make a request to the federal government through the provincial government. To my knowledge, such a request for assistance has not yet been made. The hon. member wants, like us I think, to show consideration for the constitution and would not wish the federal government to intervene "over the head" of local authorities.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

I should like to ask the Prime Minister if, without prejudice to the constitution, he has sent an observer who would keep him informed of problems experienced by those stricken people?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. In addition to the observers which I mentioned yesterday, that is some members of the Canadian armed forces and officials of the Central Housing and Mortgage Corporation, I can say that the one chosen by the constituents to represent them in Ottawa, namely the member for Lapointe, has been sent on the scene.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

DELAY IN ESTABLISHMENT OF BILINGUAL DISTRICTS—DISCUSSION AT FORTHCOMING FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Does he intend to defer any decision about the establishment of bilingual districts or the implementation of the Advisory Board's recommendations to a later date, that is after the prime ministers' conference next month, to allow provinces to make representations?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand the Secretary of State answered that question yesterday in the House when he explained that the legislation itself forbids any interference in that area before a delay of 90 days. This gets us much later than June 15 and 16.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Can the Prime Minister tell the House whether he intends to include formally this item on the agenda so that all premiers can take part in the discussion?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the matter of the agenda of the June conference is not yet settled. There are exchanges between the provinces and the federal government in order to know which items should be on the agenda. I cannot therefore answer with certainty any question on that subject.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—UNITED STATES CUSTOMS COURT DECISION RECLASSIFYING CANADIAN-FORGED PARTS AS DUTIABLE

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): I should like to address my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It is related to a question I asked him on April 27 and concerns an United States customs court decision on imports of Canadian forged auto parts which is in direct violation of the auto pact. I would ask what results his representations have produced?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I did secure more information on that subject. I found the following. The Canadian exporters concerned have advised the department that their forgings are subjected to additional processing which both they and we consider to be sufficient processing to allow for the continued free entry of these forgings into the United States under the auto pact. In conjunction with the industry, the government has made representations to the United States Bureau of Customs to this effect. The bureau is expected to rule very soon, and the decision is expected to be favourable.

Mr. Hales: What steps does the minister propose to take if the decision is not satisfactory?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question is hypothetical.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

PURPOSE OF INQUIRY INTO DROPPING OF LITERATURE PROTESTING AGAINST BILL C-176 FROM AIRPLANE

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to address my question to the Solicitor General who I understood was supposed to be in the House today according to the roster system. In his absence perhaps I might address it to the Minister of Justice who acts on his behalf. What was the reason or purpose of the RCMP inquiry into the procedure used by western ranchers and farmers of dropping literature from an airplane protesting against Bill C-176 at several rural points in southeastern Alberta?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice: I will take that question as notice on behalf of the Solicitor General.

POLICY RESPECTING SUPPORT PRICE OF WOOL

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): My question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the low cash returns to wool producers, will the minister say whether the government intends to continue deficiency payments on wool at the same level as last year?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, an announcement was made some time ago and the cheques have already been issued in the amount of something over 17 cents per pound, bringing the support price up to 45 cents. If the hon. member is asking whether it is the same as it was in the past, of course it is not as high as it was last year.

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP—INQUIRY AS TO PUBLICATION OF REPORT

Mr. R. Gordon L. Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot give that assurance. The minister has told the House repeatedly that this was not properly a task force which would issue a report to be published. It was a working group within the department, assisted by others, which will submit recommendations to the government for study. What will be done then, beyond a policy announcement, will have to be known by the opposition in due course.

In view of the reply he has just given, namely, that he is willing to study the validity of Quebec's legislation dealing with the establishment of inspection stations in the interest of egg producers, could he at the same time assure the House that he will also study the Ontario legislation concerning broiler producers particularly?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

CHURCHILL—INSTALLATION OF EQUIPMENT TO HANDLE COARSE GRAINS AND OILSEEDS

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport but in his absence

I should like to direct it to the acting minister or the parliamentary secretary. In view of the announced protective wheat purchasing policy recently introduced in the United Kingdom, which may have an adverse effect on wheat shipments out of the port of Churchill because wheat is the only grain presently exported out of that port, will the minister confer with officials of the National Harbours Board to see if the necessary equipment can be installed at Churchill to handle coarse grains and oilseeds?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): I will take the question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

RETROACTIVITY OF SUGGESTED NEW BILL OF RIGHTS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, last evening the Minister of Justice returned to the theme of a new bill of rights entrenched in the constitution. I wonder whether in contemplating this new bill of rights the minister can indicate to the House that it will have a retroactive aspect in the same manner as the bill introduced last fall respecting public order?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the assumption is wrong so I cannot answer the question.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, will the minister indicate whether in this bill of rights the government is now returning to the previously held position under English common law that there will be a presumption of innocence rather than a presumption of guilt as in the bill introduced earlier by the minister?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the assumption is again wrong. We have always held the presumption of innocence as paramount.

FISHERIES

STEPS TO ENSURE THAT LEGITIMATE SALMON FISHERMEN RECEIVE LICENCES

Mr. Ambrose Hubert Peddle (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry, but in his absence I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary who appropriately is wearing a salmon pink shirt. In view of the fact that the new salmon fishing regulations require that an applicant for a licence must produce evidence of having held a licence last year, and in view of the fact that fisheries officers advised applicants last year that only the crew leaders of salmon fishing boats required to be licensed, what steps is the minister willing to take to ensure that all legitimate salmon fishermen may be eligible for licences irrespective of whether they held one last year?

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, the salmon pink shirt I am wearing was made in my riding. The matter referred to by the hon. member is under active consideration, but there are appeal boards set up to deal with such matters.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the new regulations announced by the department come into effect on May 15, will the minister's department immediately revise and review the regulations especially as they pertain to fishermen who may not receive licences now but who prepared for the fishing season by buying and manufacturing fishing gear during the winter of 1970 and now find themselves unable to use that fishing gear during this season? Will he immediately review the matter and clarify the position in the hope that these people will be allowed to prosecute salmon fishing during the 1971 season?

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Speaker, I should again like to advise the hon. member that this matter is under active consideration and we hope to be in a position to issue a statement on it later this week.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

AUTHORITY FOR ISSUANCE AND DISTRIBUTION OF PUBLICATION, "BI-MONTHLY RESEARCH NOTES"

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Perhaps the minister can answer this question when he returns to the House. On March 16, as recorded at page 4293 of Hansard, I asked a question in respect of a publication issued under the authority of the minister of the environment. This is a publication called "Bi-Monthly Research Notes", put out by the forestry division. My question referred particularly to this publication for the months of January and February. I have now the next issue of the magazine for the months of March and April, again issued under the authority of the minister of the department of the environment. In view of the fact there is a bill before the House relating to the establishment of this department, and an amendment to that bill, I feel that this affects my privileges and that the House is entitled to an explanation.

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I will bring that matter to the minister's attention.

Scholastique project has resumed while there still remains a problem as to whether the Canada Labour (Standards) Code or the provincial code is applicable, can the minister advise whether he is aware of this peculiar problem and, if so, has he directed any written and definitive statement to the contractors involved as to which code is actually in effect?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Some time ago I notified the contractor that his obligation to the federal government was a contractual one and that his obligation to the province was a legal one.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we are of course fully aware of the advice and the legislation in this area in the province of Quebec. It is also a fact that contractors have certain obligations under their contracts in connection with certain developments undertaken by the federal government. The services of the Canada Manpower Centres are involved in this obligation and are fully available. In many cases, they are being used.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary. I wonder whether the minister could perhaps advise us right now in respect of federal projects? Am I to understand from the minister that it is the federal manpower service which takes precedence?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, the obligations of the contractors are with the federal government under certain terms of the contract. In those circumstances, our offices are offering services and are making placements.

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO FINAL PAYMENT FOR 1969-70 CROP YEAR

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the concern by western farmers about the final wheat payment this year, can the minister indicate now whether or not there will be such a payment?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the pool for the 1969-70 crop year for wheat was closed effective April 30, but in the ordinary course it takes a fair number of weeks before the Wheat Board can make a final calculation in respect of the final payment since there is involved the transfer of a certain amount of wheat from one pool to another. There is every prospect there will be a payment, but at this stage I could not attempt to estimate the figure.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, may I ask whether this payment will be out in time for the election?

Mr. Lang: I should hope so, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I will take this question as notice, Mr. Speaker. May I deal with a question asked previously, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I realize the minister has tried to catch the Speaker's eye, and this may be the time to recognize the minister. USE OF NET SOCIAL BENEFIT RATHER THAN GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT AS INDICATOR OF PROGRESS

Hon. There is widespread interest among statisticians, I am informed, in the possibility of developing a set of "social accounts" which might provide in a different sphere the sort of logical structure—obviously, I did not write this—which the "national accounts" and "gross national product" have provided for many years.

The topic is under study by the statistical agencies of the OECD and the United Nations, and the Dominion Bureau of Statistics is participating actively in this work. Thus far the project has been exploratory. At the moment, a senior officer of DBS is at meetings in Europe on the matter.

So, obviously NSB was something quite well known among enlightened people.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have received a number of wires from sources, including sources in Japan, on this subject but also broadly related to the question of the rapeseed market. In some cases it was not easy to tell whether their concern was about the suggested closing of the Vancouver futures market which had been contemplated by the Winnipeg Grain Exchange or some other steps being taken or whether it was the result of the erroneous report about the bill which was given initially. I have also received telegrams from them two months ago on the general subject of the problems they were having with the rapeseed market, following which there was action on our part in conjunction with the rapeseed association and the Winnipeg Grain Exchange to correct the situation.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not know the survey of which my hon. friend speaks. I do know there are indications that consumer spending is increasing in Canada.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Spadina on a supplementary, but we are running short of time. I bring this to the attention of hon. members.

POTATOES—ASSISTANCE TO PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND GROWERS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the very depressed condition of agriculture in Prince Edward Island and the recent submission by the provincial Minister of Agriculture, is he prepared to indicate what forms of assistance will be forthcoming, particularly to the potato growers as they face the heavy expenses of buying fertilizer and seed?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we had a very useful meeting with the Ministers of Agriculture from both P.E.I. and New Brunswick about a week ago. While there are some difficulties with the proposal they made, I should like to advise the hon. member that at the present time the market price for potatoes from P.E.I. is at its highest level this year.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, since the time is running very short, could the minister indicate whether the federal government is prepared to give any assistance, as it has in the past, because of the very long-term low prices which have been suffered and the very few people who have any stocks of potatoes remaining that can be marketed?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, the discussions which were initiated with the meeting that started last week are continuing.

If so, will he be able to advise on motions in the near future what the changes will be?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated previously and I do so again today, we have as a government various proposals under consideration in respect of changes in the family income security plan. GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PRAIRIE GRAIN ADVANCE PAYMENTS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING RATE PER BUSHEL, EMERGENCY PAYMENTS, EXTENSION OF APPLICATION TO RYE, FLAXSEED AND RAPESEED

The House resumed, from Wednesday, May 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang that Bill C-239, to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): At six o'clock last evening I was discussing this bill with particular reference to the handling of rapeseed because, of course, this bill would bring rapeseed under the provisions of the advance payments legislation. I pointed out to the House, and to the minister, that the government intervention in respect of rapeseed is having a bad effect and that this is very important because of the success of the rapeseed crop in western Canada over the past few years.

I gave an example of government interference in this industry and said that, even though the Wheat Board presently has no jurisdiction over that crop, the government has expressed its intention to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act to include rapeseed under the act. In fact, at present people who, according to the government, have delivered too much rapeseed are suffering from interference with their permit books. I mentioned that I made a request of the Canadian Wheat Board for information as to the basis on which they exercised their jurisdiction over permit books relating to rapeseed. I said that over the past month or so I have been unable to get a reply.

In general, I think that the proposal of the government to bring rapeseed under the jurisdiction of the Wheat Board through this legislation is ill advised because over the past few years, as the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie) said, this has been a cinderella crop. It has done very well on its own. I do not think that this type of legislation or any other should be brought in which might have an adverse effect on the industry, as I believe this bill will. So, in order to give the minister a chance to reconsider his position in this matter, I would like to move:

That this bill be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. A. C. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): In taking part in this debate, my memory goes back to the time some years ago when this very important measure was brought in by the Diefenbaker government, after the subject matter had been kicked around for many years prior to that. In view of the way in which the present government drafted the bill for the grain act, one wonders what this bill means and what is the intention of the government in tampering with the original act. People in western Canada do not trust this government, and they think that this legislation might lead to the scrapping of the original act altogether.

Last night I was reading some of the speeches that were made by members of the opposition when this Act was first introduced. At that time hon. members were saying that the bill was impossible. One of them went so far as to say that the Wheat Board would resign. Hon. members have remarked on how quickly this measure became law, and how much it has meant to western Canada. The legislation is of great importance to the farmers and the producers. When one goes back through the years, one realizes what it has really meant to businessmen and to people from all walks of life, to machine companies and to people in business in all parts of Canada, because it made it possible for the farmer to meet some of his obligations.

At the time the act was originally brought in, I was a municipal official. I saw what this legislation meant to the rural communities, municipal councils and school districts because it gave people a little money to pay a portion of their taxes, which would allow the municipalities and schools to keep functioning. This is one of the reasons that I think we should be very cautious. There might be room for improvement. The bill contains provisions with regard to the interest rate and that is why I think we should go into this cautiously. We must keep in mind what this act has really meant in the past years, and the money that it put into circulation. The small amount of money that is still outstanding today gives one some idea of the value of this bill. The original act was passed in 1957.

At that time the country was just about in the same mess as it is getting into today. Western Canada had almost an identical mess to that facing it today. But during the few years when we had a government that got out and did something about selling, the situation was resolved, and we can see that by the difference in the amounts used for loans on farm stored grains. That amount has increased since the present government took office, and in fact jumped sharply in the years 1967, 1968 and 1969. In fact it has almost tripled, indicating the great need of producers.

The original act was one of the first pieces of legislation introduced by the Conservative government. It was passed in November or December of that year, and at once became very useful to the farmers. We must consider the proposed amendments carefully because of the value of the legislation. I hope the government has given careful study to them, but I wonder when I see a clause in the bill dealing with interest rates.

True enough, Mr. Speaker, some people took advantage of the fact that interest-free money could be obtained under the terms of the legislation, but they made up only a small percentage of the farming population. Prior to the introduction of that legislation, people had to go to the banks to get loans on their farm-stored grain. They almost had to sign their lives away in order to get a bank loan. They had to pay interest on those loans, and they had to have a certain amount of assets before they could get loans no matter how much grain they had in storage. As a result, many people appreciated the introduction of the legislation. I remember seeing people coming out of banks after applying for loans, with documents that they had to have signed and with affidavits that they had to have attested. We would not like that situation to return. As I say, we must look at the proposed amendments and proceed cautiously, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. members who represent constituencies in western Canada know that farmers are really confused. Right now when they should have some idea of what they are going to seed they simply do not have a clue what to seed. The Lift program, instituted last year by the government, created too much confusion and did little, if any, good. This year people are still confused. Up in the northern part of Saskatchewan where I live there is a feed shortage this year. There is a shortage of barley and oats. It is a mixed farming country, and following encouragement by the government and the introduction of the Lift program, many acres were put into summer fallow that otherwise would have been seeded with barley and oats. If people had not turned those acres into summer fallow at least they would have their own feed, and right now there is a good market for barley but they have none to sell.

I would like to show you my file of complaints with respect to the Lift program, Mr. Speaker. People did not understand that program. I do not really think the government, and in particular the minister, understood it either. It has created terrible confusion in western Canada. I can show you complaints that I have received from young people who would like to enter dairying but they cannot get a dairy quota. It used to be the case that if young people had an old cow and a cream can they could get a start in the industry, but they cannot do that any more. I believe the government's policies are directed to getting farmers off the land.

The other day I was at a meeting of farmers and heard one gentleman ask those present, "Do you realize every second one of you will soon be off the land?" People were looking around at their neighbours trying to decide which ones would be leaving next. That is the case in western Canada in the dairy industry. The present mess in the hog industry has never been equalled. Then there is also discontinuance of the PFAA to consider, and the thing that worries me so much is that it will be a long while before many farmers can get crop insurance. PFAA kept many small farmers on their land, but that will no longer be the case.

There is confusion in western Canada today in all sectors of agriculture, and the worst confusion I have seen has been caused by Bill C-176. I think both ministers who are sitting opposite should go out to western Canada and see the situation for themselves. I do not profess to be always right. I like to study the different bills proposed by the government because I think that is our job. But, Mr. Speaker, just the other day I attended a meeting of 350 farmers engaged in livestock and mixed farming, and I did not find one single person there who supported Bill C-176.

Mr. Paproski: You won't either.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am following the hon. member's speech with much interest. It is obviously a sincere and well prepared speech, but I should advise the hon. member not to stray too far from the bill which is now before the House. I would hope that at this time we would not get involved in a discussion on Bill C-176. There will be other opportunities to consider that piece of legislation. At the moment, hon. members should relate their contributions to the bill which is before the House and not get involved in debate on Bill C-176.

Mr. Cadieu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I realize that, but I would like to point out that it is a part of the government's program. It all fits in, just like a glove, but I will abide by your ruling. Surely this government knows the problems that their agricultural legislation create for western Canada. When you look at the whole plan it is just one problem after another.

• (3:30 p.m.)

I listened to a former cabinet minister speak over the radio only last Sunday. Although he did not refer to this bill, the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans) exposed this government's lack of organization. I should like also to mention a bulletin from the Canada Department of Agriculture which arrived in my office today.

The subject is "Farmers Borrow Less From FCC" and in part it reads:

> The largest portion of the loan decline is reflected in the amount borrowed to purchase land. Reasons for this are seen as (1) the unwillingness of some farmers to expand their business during a period of uncertainty in the agricultural industry, and (2) lack of opportunity in the economy for low-income farmers to find satisfactory alternatives for earning a living and thus a reluctance to sell their properties.

This gives some idea of the position in western Canada. I think that there are other bills and legislation which would be far more important to western farmers than the amendment to this particular bill. The government should let the farmers know what they should be seeding in order to give them an opportunity to try and clear up the mess they got into with their barley and oats acreage. The government encouraged the farmers to diversity and now there is no sale for their crops. These matters should be looked into without further delay. This act was put through the House some years ago by a Conservative government and it won acclaim throughout the country. It has kept farmers on the land who could otherwise have been squeezed off by an earlier Liberal Government.

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): In speaking on this legislation to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, I want to stress at the beginning that I agree with the principle of cash advances for farmers. We all know that this legislation was introduced by a Conservative government. However, there are several provisions that I do not agree with in this bill, and I should like to point them out to the minister.

Under the bill, the government can set the rates for cash advances at any time by order in council. We all know that under the old act the rates for cash advances were $1 per bushel for wheat, 40 cents per bushel for oats and 70 cents per bushel for barley. Under this bill, with the government setting the rates by order in council, the farmer cannot plan his finances at the start of each season. He is not sure of the marketing prospects nor of how much cash will be available to get the crops harvested. The way grain prices have been going down, the rate of the cash advance will soon be higher than the sale price of the grain and I think this is why the government has changed the rates.

I am also against changes in the interest rates proposed by this legislation. Under the old act, past due interest was set at 6 per cent but under this bill the interest will be set at the going rate. I am afraid the same thing will happen as happened under the Farm Improvement Loans Act and the Farm Credit Act when interest rates went from 5 per cent to over 8 per cent at one time. The government can, if it likes, set the interest from the date of the loan. I do not like this as it is going to be particularly detrimental to small farmers and farmers who have been forced to sell their grain to feed lots. This winter farmers in Manitoba were able to sell barley to feed lots for approximately 85 cents to 90 cents per bushel, but if they delivered to the elevator they only got 75 cents or 76 cents. They will not be able to take advantage of this type of market in future because, if the government cares to do so, it can predate interest to the day the farmer makes the loan. This will certainly discourage him for selling grain to feed lots. What it amounts to, Mr. Speaker, is that the government is turning the cash advances into a demand not through this legislation. In many ways it is another step by this government to destroy the family farm operation as we know it. Much of the legislation is directed toward this end.

Let us look at the record of the government pertaining to agriculture and the legislation they have brought forth in the past year which, in some respects, ties in with the legislation before us. Operation Lift is an example. Last week I was talking to a farmer who ably described this program when he said, "Another Lift and I will be off the farm." There were changes in the Crop Insurance Act and coming before Parliament shortly is the grain stabilization program which should be carefully scrutinized by all members. There was also the Canada Grain Act. We were told that the purpose of this measure was to increase markets by bringing in the new grading system for grain based on the protein content. When the bill came before the House and the Agriculture Committee, we found that the legislation was designed to try to phase out country elevators.

Then, there is the marketing bill, C-176. From the number of coupons and correspondence I have received, it is obvious that few farmers support this bill. Just last Wednesday I received a call from farmers in Gladstone, Manitoba, inviting me to speak at a meeting this past Monday in order to explain Bill C-176. There were 350 farmers at the meeting and after two hours of discussion and questions on the legislation, the chairman called for a vote from the floor to determine support for this legislation. Not one farmer rose in support of Bill C-176 but over 300 opposed it. This certainly illustrates the farmers' reaction to this legislation.

An hon. Member: Or your explanation.

Mr. Stewart (Marquette): There was not a Liberal member from the west who would go out there and explain it to them. Changes are also proposed to the Wheat Board Act regarding rye, flax and rapeseed. You will notice, however, that none of these programs, including the bill before us today, gets down to the real problem facing agriculture and that is, aggressive marketing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stewart (Marquette): When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) asked in Winnipeg, "Why should I sell grain?", it indicated the attitude of the present government toward the western farmer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stewart (Marquette): Instead of the government coming out with negative programs, it is time they got some positive selling program for agriculture in western Canada. I say we should have aggressive selling and, as an example, let us look at what happened last year. A little over one year ago, the world supply of wheat was approximately 3 billion bushels. Our supply of wheat in Canada, if we added what we had on farms, at the terminals and in elevators, was approximately 1.5 billion bushels, half the world's supply. Why did the government introduce a program to cut back on wheat production? We had half the world's available supply of wheat, yet we produce only in the neighbourhood 15 per cent of the world's production. Something is definitely wrong with our selling program.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Horner: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stewart (Marquette): Look at the feed market, Mr. Speaker. A little over one year ago our share of the market was down to around 2 per cent of the total world market. We saw barley prices drop approximately between 20 and 23 cents in one day. The price of barley dropped so low that, to get back into the market, the government started selling our grain at fire sale prices. To fulfil our export commitments this spring, the government had to raise the price by ten cents a bushel because farmers could not afford to deliver barley to elevators. They were farther ahead selling it to feed mills for 85 cents a bushel, which was far more than they would have received at the elevator, even if they included their final payments.

While we are talking about marketing may I ask, what do we do, for example, with regard to the beef market in Japan? I understand that beef in Japan sold for as much as $5 or $6 a pound retail. Is there no way that we can enter this market and sell for $2.00 a pound to develop this market? No mention has been made of this.

I became alarmed last October, on reading the monthly economic report of the Department of Agriculture, to learn the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) had announced that Canada had become a net importer of agricultural products. We are supposed to be an agricultural producing nation, and the minister made a statement like that. At the same time, the government has told many farmers in western Canada not to grow grain and to try to diversify. Instead of bringing forward legislation like this, which is to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, the government ought to be telling farmers well in advance of seeding what crops they ought to grow and what their market expectations are. More effort should be put into market research and giving the farmers some guidance. They should know in what direction they are heading. This government has not told our farmers the direction in which we are headed at present.

Another thing that has bothered me has been the Canadian Wheat Board. We all approve of the principle of the Canadian Wheat Board, yet how effective have they been in the last few years so far as marketing is concerned?

An hon. Member: There has been government interference in that area.

[Mr. Stewart (Marquette).]

Mr. Stewart (Marquette): Yes. I sent a questionnaire to every farmer in my riding. One of the questions was, "Are you pleased with the performance in the past year of the Canadian Wheat Board?" I was surprised that the majority said they were not. At one time every farmer in western Canada was well satisfied with the Canadian Wheat Board. At present, because of government interference and government policies, the hands of the Wheat Board have been almost tied, which has made it next to impossible for it to pursue aggressive selling programs. My main point is this: instead of bringing forward legislation like this dealing with cash advances—and we all realize that farmers must have operating capital, although in the past money and credit have been too easily available for farmers—the government should tackle the root of the problem and pursue aggressive marketing policies. The sooner the government realizes this, the sooner will the situation in western Canada be corrected.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, one particular aspect of this legislation has not been dealt with and I should like to cover it briefly. In this bill, as in other bills, we can see that the entire program of the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board is aimed at reducing the amount of grain in commercial storage. How do those remarks apply to Bill C-239? If we are to reduce the grain in commercial storage to between 200 and 250 million bushels, as projected, that means automatically that more grain will be stored on farms. You cannot have it any other way. Farmers harvest grain only once a year, normally in the fall. In Alberta, rye is handled sometimes in July; yet, basically, grain is harvested in the fall, although some is harvested in the spring. Since all grain cannot be sold in the month in which it is harvested, some of it must be kept in storage. If the government is introducing a program to reduce the amount in commercial storage, it follows as night follows day that more must be stored on farms. If more grain is stored on farms, we must ascertain how this can best be done to the advantage of farmers. In other words, how will the farmers benefit most financially?

The minister said the old cash advances legislation was designed to encourage wheat production because it allowed a cash advance of $1 a bushel, interest free, on grain supposedly stored on the farm. The minister said that this was wrong, and the government thereafter allowed only 70 cents per bushel for barley and 40 cents a bushel on some other grains. He said, as reported at page 5491 of Hansard, that the prices are related, (a) to the initial price paid to the grain and, (b) to the amount of deliveries or expected deliveries of any particular commodity. Although the minister has said this, we are asked to pass legislation which says little except, "leave it to the governor in council". Under clause 7, the governor in council can determine what cash advances will be made for the various crops. They will determine when that amount is to be made available. In other words, in one month you might get a cash advance of $1, and in the next month you might get only 50 cents. In the month after that, if the government does not want any grain, it may reduce the advance to as little as 25 cents, I suppose.

In my opinion, Bill C-239 ignores certain things, because there seems to be no relationship whatsoever between the amount you can draw as a cash advance, under the bill, and the real worth of the product. Under the old act, when it was originally introduced, you were given 50 cents a bushel on wheat, and you had to repay 50 per cent of that when the crop was sold. The final payment on the wheat was, on average, slightly better than $1 a bushel, depending on the variety of the grain, and that made sense. Even the worst grades, or the lowest grades, Nos. 5 and 6 of wheat, were covered at around 95 cents a bushel. Of course, for those who are not familiar with the way we grade our crops, the lowest grades usually involve grain which has been badly frozen or badly infected in some way or badly shrivelled through drought. Nevertheless, there was some logical way in which the farmer could repay his advance.

On June 2, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made his speech in Winnipeg, it was obvious what would happen. The government wanted to entice the small farmers into debt through its cash advances legislation.

An hon. Member: Which year was that?

Mr. Horner: In 1968, before the minister in charge of the Wheat Board was ever considered as the minister who would be in charge of cash advances legislation. When the minister came into the House on May 4 and explained with that right tone of voice why the cash advances legislation had been adjusted in the fall of 1968, he ought to have been honest and frank and told us the truth. He ought to have told us why the Prime Minister made that announcement on June 2, 1968, and why the government would amend the cash advance legislation by providing for lower repayment terms. There was no basis for this. There was no sound business practice followed in that legislation unless it was to drive the small farmer into debt.

I forgive every member for not being suspicious of the government when that legislation was debated on October 29 and 30, 1968. At that time we did not know that the object of the government was to drive the small farmer off the farm. That is the purpose and intent of every piece of legislation that has been submitted to this House. There has been a whole series of measures of that type.

Other hon. members have referred to Bill C-176, the marketing bill. I am not going to refer to it in detail. That bill establishes in perpetuity the large producers of commodities and prohibits small or new producers from getting into the business. The same applies with regard to this legislation.

In 1968, the government enticed the small farmer into borrowing more money than he could possibly repay. At that time, some of us warned the minister that it was mathematically impossible for the farmer to repay within a given crop year what the government was prepared to lend him. The minister realized the folly of his legislation and stated after one or two days debate that if the farmer could not repay his indebtedness at the end of the crop year, he would be allowed to carry that amount over to the next year.

What does Bill C-239 do? It bangs the door shut on those poor farmers who have been sucked into debt. The interest rate is going to be increased. Under the old bill, the interest rate for cash advances was 6 per cent. The standard rate for all farm legislation is now 7½ per cent. The going rate of interest will now apply to cash advances for farmers. Cash advance legislation was always interest free until the wheat board called upon a farmer to deliver the grain. If he could not deliver, interest would apply from that day forward. This legislation goes further than that. Under clause 6 of the bill, the Governor in Council has the power to backdate the interest to the date the loan was originally taken out, if it is so decided.

I wish to reduce this to practical terms so that all hon. members will clearly understand what I am saying. For example, if I were a farmer who produced a lot of barley and could not sell it because I had no way of getting it to the elevator, either because of the roads being blocked or for some other reason, I would take a cash advance. If a feed dealer or feed lot operator came along, I could sell him my barley. He would pay more than the elevator would pay. Later on, the wheat board would call on me to deliver this barley. If I had recieved the cash advance and could not deliver, the wheat board would ask me to pay up. No only would I have to repay the loan, but I could be charged interest from the time I took out the loan, even though at the time I took out the loan my intention was to sell the barley to the wheat board.

The minister in charge of the wheat board, much to his amazement and the amazement of the Wheat Board, knew that the initial price of barley was too low this fall. The Wheat Board were not getting any barley. It was moving to the feed lots and feed mills. It was being sold in any way it could be sold at a higher price than the Wheat Board was prepared to pay, particularly the initial price. What did the minister do? He turned aside barley sales. We in Canada, with our ability to produce, actually turned aside barley sales. I notice that the minister is paying close attention to what I am saying. He is not disputing the fact that we have actually turned aside barley sales. He is nodding his head in the affirmative. We turned aside barley sales because the price was too low.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The minister is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Lang: It is actually a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The implication of the hon. member is that I am either agreeing or not agreeing. For future guidance I say to him that when he says anything right, I will say so. In that way, I will not have to speak very often.

Mr. Horner: I guess that was just a smart remark, Mr. Speaker. I did not get that point of order or question of privilege. The minister is going to inform me when I am right. When I am not right, I guess he will not inform me.

Mr. Lang: You can assume that.

Mr. Horner: I did not catch that last remark. It probably is not a point of order either.

Mr. Boulanger: Keep going; you are doing well.

Mr. Horner: I have the advice of the assistant government whip that I can speak. I am glad that he is making the decisions for Your Honour.

Mr. Boulanger: Keep going.

Mr. Horner: More advice.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Crowfoot has the floor.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With these interruptions, one does not really know whether to keep going or not. I want to point out that the government realized the price of barley was too low. In order to get barley delivered to the elevators, they had to increase the price by 10 cents a bushel.

Bill C-239 does not disclose what will be paid to the farmers on delivery. At the end of the crop year, July 31, the government will disclose how much is available under cash advances. In my opinion, that does not lend too much assistance to the farmers. I want to point out what the minister said about this bill, as recorded at page 5491 of Hansard. I quote:

> The bill before the House to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act is a further step in attempting to rationalize and improve the situation of the grains industry of this country.

The minister admitted that this is a further step to rationalize and improve the grain industry in this country. It is another program. The question we must ask ourselves is whether it is helping. Does it help the farmer or the government? In my opinion, it does not help the farmer. That must be made abundantly clear in this debate. Up until this time, the farmer knew on May 1 what to plant and there was some guidance available. He knew that if he had a surplus, he could get a cash advance of $1 a bushel for wheat, 70 cents a bushel for barley or 40 cents a bushel for oats. What does he know now? He knows absolutely nothing under this legislation. Is that helping the farmer to rationalize grain production on his farm? It is not. It is helping the government, because it is bailing the government out of a commitment it made some time ago. When we analyze this bill, we find that it guarantees the farmer no advances. However, the interest rate on any advance they take, may go up.

An hon. Member: Will go up.

Mr. Horner: My hon. friend says it will go up. I hate to say it, but he is right. It is a sure bet that under this government interest rates will go up. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) was formerly a member of the Social Credit party. In those days he used to go across the country saying that an interest rate of 2 per cent was high enough, that the banks did not need any more than that; this was what it cost to distribute money. Now, he is part and parcel of an establishment which increases interest rates. He could not remain in the Social Credit party and advocate increased interest rates. Indeed, I do not know whether he will be able to remain for very much longer in the Liberal party, either, taking into account his negative ideas on marketing. He believes that if he controls the supply sufficiently there will be a market for a product, rather than going out and searching for markets. As one of my hon. friends suggests, he will probably go down in history as the coupon king. His legislation outdid Benson and the white paper, and that is a fair strike—a couple of months ago I would have thought it was impossible.

Let us get back to Bill C-239 and what it really means to the farmers. As I said when I began, the minister in charge of the Wheat Board has based his whole approach on an attempt to rationalize and improve the grain industry—I quote his words again. In his attempts to do so he has published papers and articles to the effect that we must eventually reduce the amount of grain in commercial storage. He hopes to get it down to 200 million bushels by 1972. What does this mean? It means there will be increased storage on farms, and less cash in the hands of farmers. We have made great sales this year. I am proud of Canada as a producer for making such great sales.

An hon. Member: You just said something right.

Mr. Horner: The beaver over there is flapping its tail. We have made great sales as a country and I am proud of that. But it has not registered with the farmers. Try telling farmers in western Canada: Wheat is moving well; we have exported millions of bushels this last month. The farmer scratches his head and says: I have not seen it move off my farm. Why is it still there? It is there because the grain has been moving out of commercial storage and the storage space has not been filled again. There is room for at least 100 million bushels in elevators at the terminal. At the height of the difficulties in Vancouver last month, the elevators were less than half full and boats were waiting.

Why has the government deliberately kept elevators half empty? Is it in line with the program of attempting to rationalize and improve the situation in the grain industry? The minister in charge of the Wheat Board would quickly say yes to that. Even the Minister of Agriculture would say yes. But we should ask ourselves this question: For whose sake are they attempting to rationalize the grain situation?

Mr. Lang: For the farmer.

Mr. Olson: For the farmer. Get it on the record.

Mr. Horner: I got it that time. For the farmer. So they say. But does the farmer want increased interest rates under this legislation? Did he ask that the interest rates in connection with cash advances should go up? Did he ask that the government be allowed to back date interest to the time the loan was taken out?

Mr. Lang: May I ask the hon. member a question? Does he appreciate that the bulk of farmers who take cash advances will continue to pay no interest at all? No interest is charged on almost the total range of cash advances.

Mr. Horner: I accept those words. But the minister has referred to the great bulk of farmers concerned. In effect, he admitted that what I have been saying is right. For the great bulk of farmers the loans will continue to be interest-free and interest rates will not affect them. But there are some farmers who will be obliged to pay higher interest rates. Who are they? Are they the big, prosperous farmers with lots of grain? No, it is the small farmer who has been sucked in by this legislation and driven into debt by the government. It is he who will be called upon to pay high interest rates, which is the point I was making before I was interrupted.

We are told the government intends to improve the situation in the grain industry. Improve it for whom? Not for the small farmer who is in difficulty, but for the government. This is one more piece of legislation which will bail them out and save them some money at the expense of getting rid of a few farmers. After all, they say, what do a few farmers matter? Send them into the city, put them on unemployment insurance, put them on welfare, re-educate them. Is this the quality of life we are seeking in our society? I do not think so. No one enjoys a better quality of life than the small, satisfied farmer. This bill is one more step toward driving the small farmer into oblivion. For the farmers this government is trying to eradicate, interest rates will go up. This is one piece of legislation along with three others which will assist the government in removing small farmers from the land. This is the issue. I have no hesitation about speaking on this piece of legislation because it is our duty to point out vividly that this government is basically a selfish government when it comes to agriculture. They are out to save money and to heck with the industry. They are out to restrict markets rather than enlarge them.

We know that Canada has enjoyed three or four great years in the last ten years when it comes to wheat sales. It was possible to take advantage of these orders because the grain was on hand. We made particularly big sales to Russia when that country suffered a crop failure. We made large sales because the government knew we had grain in commercial storage and made efforts to sell and deliver it. We did deliver 500 million bushels as a result of a Russian wheat sale some years ago. Under this program, we are going to encourage and go along with a rationalization program to reduce the amount of grain in commercial storage and the amount stored by farmers. As I pointed out the other night, we are down on barley sales because we do not know whether we can deliver it. We do not have it in commercial storage.

Today, I would rather the minister left than fall asleep as he did yesterday. In any event, it does not matter because I am talking to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. He has the predominant influence upon the western economy. That minister has deliberately cut $150 from the amount farmers will receive as a result of his rationalization of the grain program. He has deliberately reduced the amount of grain in commercial storage. How will this bill affect that situation?

The farmers who have already received $90 million in advances are not given any guidance in this bill as to how they can pay back that money or how the provisions can be utilized. When this legislation was first introduced in 1957, the Liberal party opposed it. This measure has proved to be very satisfactory and workable. A former Prime Minister, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was told when he introduced this measure that it would be unworkable. It worked successfully up until October 29, 1968, at which time the party now in power deliberately set out to ruin the small farmer and drive him into the cities.

A year ago $228 million was obtained from cash advance funds by prairie farmers. A great number of bushels of wheat has been sold since then, but the government has latched on the most of the money. The government latched on to $133 million. Most prairie points have a delivery quota of about five bushels per acre. I do not know the actual quota figures, but they used to be about 80 million bushels of wheat per one-bushel quota on the prairies. That was the rule-of-thumb in respect of elevator clearances. About $130 million, as a result of this ratio, was absorbed by the government between the crop year 1970-71.

Let us analyse this. The rule-of-thumb is 80 million bushels for a one-bushel quota. Surely, that does not justify the government absorbing $130 million. Farmers have been able to deliver up to a five-bushel quota. According to the old rule-of-thumb this would amount to a little over one-fifth of the farm income from wheat sales taken by the government. Surely that is not fair ball as far as the farmers are concerned. At the moment there is about $95 million owed by farmers as a result of cash advances. How will this bill affect that situation? A great proportion of this amount of money is outstanding. This bill suggests that the government can charge interest on this outstanding amount. I suggest it would only be a hard-hearted man who would suggest that the government charge interest on the total amount.

Perhaps the minister is right in suggesting that the bulk of farmers will not be charged interest, but the ones who will be charged are those who are most in need of help. What does this government suggest? Obviously, this government intends to take steps to force small farm operators to move into the city. That is apparently the aim of this government, and that is what this legislation will accomplish. The provisions of this bill represent one more step, in the words of the minister, in the attempt to rationalize and improve the situation of the grain industry, to save the government money and, if necessary, to make grain farming more expensive. This is a wrong step to be taking at this time.

This piece of legislation does one other thing. It puts flax, rapeseed and rye under the provisions of the cash advance program. As a result of this bill the farmers producing rapeseed, flax and rye will be in a position to receive cash advances. In 1968 I argued for this principle. I suggested that rye should fall within the cash advance system. I suggested that cash advances should apply in respect of all crops developed under the diversification program. At that time the minister said this grain could not be taken under the provisions of the cash advance legislation because flax, rye and rapeseed did not fall within the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. I did not accept that logic or rationalization at that time and I do not accept it now.

The concept that flax, rye and rapeseed should be under the jurisdiction of the Wheat Board is wrong. I hasten to state that those people responsible for the marketing of rapeseed have done a tremendous job. Rapeseed is used by the vegetable oil producing industry. This Canadian crop is in competititon with other vegetable oil producing groups. Any commodity in Canada which faces such severe competition is deserving of assistance. Producers of rapeseed should be in a position to receive registered demands for this crop. Many farmers in my constituency have for years had a very dim view of the Grain Exchange. Rapeseed should be registered on the exchange in order that farmers in this country can know whether this is a good crop and the conditions under which it should be harvested. At this moment, they do not know the demand for this grain. They do not know when or at what price they should sell their crop.

Let me remind the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board that Canadian barley was being sold last fall by the Wheat Board at 20 cents per bushel less than it should have been sold. Advance sales on the world market last fall were 20 cents higher per bushel than Canadian farmers were receiving. This was a result of a lack of instant registration of the demand for barley on world markets. Because of an increase in feed grain supplies throughout the world there is often an immediate problem in the United States, but so far as these grains are concerned this demand or lack of demand is not immediately registered. As I suggested, this deficiency resulted in Canadian barley being sold at 20 cents less per bushel last fall than the market price.

There is a fear in my mind. I have no axe to grind with the Grain Exchange or the Canadian Wheat Board, but I believe I have an axe to grind for the farmers. As legislators in this House, we must set up a mechanism so that the farmers will get as much as possible on the world market for the products they produce and are able to sell. I have the fear that in respect of a crop such as rapeseed, which is in such a competitive position with the other oilseed or other vegetable oil producing crops, the demand for the product will not register as vividly as it has. I have a fear that if it comes under the Canadian Wheat Board, this is what will happen. We may sell less rapeseed for less money than ever before. It is correct that we might be able to pool the sale price so that all farmers would receive an equal amount. However, the inclusion of rye, flax and rapeseed in Bill C-239 does not encourage the growing of these crops.

A rapeseed producer does not know how much a bushel he will receive for the rapeseed stored on his farm. He does not know how much he will receive as a cash advance. That is not mentioned in the bill. This rate is set by the Governor in Council who can change it from month to month. The same is true in respect of rye and flaxseed. Flaxseed is being used extensively. I believe flax has amazed the market by its ability to sell. Originally, is was used as a base for paint. Now, actually it is not used as much for that purpose but is used to a growing extent as an additive to feed.

Mr. Lang: That is the second thing you have said which is correct.

Mr. Horner: Bully for me. Put a mark on the wall. I have said two correct things according to the minister.

Mr. Olson: Only two things in 40 minutes.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) wishes to make a contribution.

Mr. Olson: I said you have contributed two things in 40 minutes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I take it the debate would proceed more orderly if hon. members who wish to speak would rise in their places. Otherwise, the hon. member for Crowfoot has the floor.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, it is nice that the Minister of Agriculture would say I have said two things correctly in 40 minutes because the people in Canada, particularly in western Canada, do not believe a thing he says anymore. It does not matter, therefore, what he says. They do not think he could say one correct thing.

Mr. Boulanger: That is your opinion.

Mr. Horner: No, it is not my opinion. It is the opinion of his constituents and every farmer in western Canada.

Mr. Boulanger: That is not what they said during the election. They elected him to Parliament.

Mr. Horner: The assistant government whip who is interrupting should know there is no by-election in Assiniboia. I wonder why? They are afraid to call an election in Assiniboia.

An hon. Member: They cannot get a candidate.

Mr. Horner: Some member from Saskatchewan who should know better than you or I, Mr. Speaker, suggests they cannot even find a candidate in Assiniboia.

Mr. Boulanger: That is the old one you pulled yesterday.

Mr. Horner: I did not speak yesterday. The point I am attempting to make, Mr. Speaker, is that there is no advantage in including rye, flaxseed and rapeseed under this cash advance legislation unless the government is prepared to commit itself and say it will give half the value of the crop as a cash advance. This, of course, was what happened in 1957 when the cash advance legislation was first introduced. At that time it was stated absolutely that half the value would be advanced to a farmer interest free. If that principle were incorporated in this bill, without naming the amount of dollars available, then the bill might be piloted through this House with greater ease. The minister, however, has drafted a bill which will bail out the government and only bring harm to those farmers who are having a difficult time now. I regret very much that the two ministers in charge of the agriculture industry can sit in this House and be so hard and callous as to say the interest rate will go up in respect of a portion of the agricultural industry which they know needs help. I regret very much that anyone in charge of the agricultural industry could do such a thing to the farmers of Canada today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired. Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Boulanger: Filibuster again.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher) and seconded by the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Cadieu) to the effect that this bill be not read a second time but be read a second time this day six months hence. I am very pleased to support this amendment because of the very words spoken by the hon. member for Crowfoot. We on this side of the House challenge the government, and the two ministers in question today, to go to the Prime Minister and ask him to call an election within a period of six months. Then, they will find out what the farmers think about their agricultural policy.

Mr. Boulanger: That is why you are talking; you are going to an election.

Mr. McIntosh: We challenge the government to call an election because every day we wait we gain more votes from the farmers.

Mr. Boulanger: You are a politician and a small-time one, too. I thought you were a legislator but you are a small-time politician.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair is having a little difficulty in following the hon. member who has the floor because of the interjections by the hon. member for Mercier. If the hon. member for Mercier wishes to contribute to the debate, he knows he should rise in his place. He is an experienced member.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to contribute but when I hear members having fun in this manner I am so ashamed I do not think I will bother talking.

Mr. McIntosh: Is that a promise?

Mr. Boulanger: Yes.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat like you. I have difficulty trying to make my speech with interjections such as the hon. member has made. I certainly did not catch what the hon. member's point of order was. I missed something. Would he repeat what he said?

Mr. Boulanger: Later.

Mr. McIntosh: So long as you keep your promise; do not be like the Minister of Agriculture and break it. That is all I am worried about. I believe the Minister of Agriculture made a comment. I did not hear what he had to say. The last time he said that he did not listen to me. Would the minister repeat what he said?

Mr. Olson: I am listening.

Mr. McIntosh: At least I have an audience of one. The hon. member for Crowfoot issued a challenge to the government to go to the country on its agricultural policy to see what would happen. We can tell you beforehand what would happen. There are two ministers, sitting in this House who are supposed to be representing agriculture. The point has been made about the by-election in Assiniboia. I am sure many people across this country are wondering why it was not called at the time the other two by-elections were called. I am sure we guess correctly when we say the Prime Minister, because of the intervention of these two ministers, thinks it would be more desirable to call an election after they have an opportunity to give back the $100 million they think they will give back out of the $140 million they have taken from the farmers. The people of western Canada are not that gullible. They know what the government is doing and they know what it intends to do. We challenge the government to call that by-election in Assiniboia, and let them see what will happen to them.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Boulanger: I wish to rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the hon. member who has been speaking would want me to give him an answer about that by-election. I am ready to give it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. McIntosh: Yes, I agree.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members might well be interested in the answer which the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger) wishes to give, but I have some doubt that the question of the by-election in Assiniboia is relevant to the bill. It may be related, but I doubt that it is within the confines of the bill. Having said that, I may point out that I am not critical of the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh). He has developed his contribution to the debate or the bill with reference to the by-election, but I do not think we should debate the point of the by-election at this time.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, I could go on for quite some time trying to put your mind at ease as to the reason this by-election in Assiniboia was not called, but I disagree with your view the by-election has no bearing on what is being said at present. I would be quite prepared to let the assistant whip of the Liberal party rise at this time, and I would forgo my time in the House if he would announce the date of the by-election in Assiniboia. I am sure that farmers in western Canada are waiting for the opportunity to show—

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. First, my point of order is that we are at present debating Bill C-239, which means that the hon. member is not in order. The second point is that the hon. member should know we should try to show some respect for the family of the hon. member who died a few weeks ago. We should wait some time before calling a by-election to give time to the family of the deceased to think of something else than an election.

Mr. Horner: But it is three months.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I again ask hon. members not to enter into a debate about the by-election, about whether it may or may not be held or when it will be held. The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek has the floor. His reference to the by-election is relevant in the sense that he wanted to develop reasons why the government may or may not have called it, but let him do so only in relation to the bill before the House.

Mr. McIntosh: My only concern is that my constituency borders on the constituency of Assiniboia. Because constituents there do not have a member representing their riding, they have written me dozens of letters about the problems they are having with the present government, asking me if I could do something. I do not mind doing it, but when the assistant whip of the Liberal party pleads for more time, as he did, because of the death of the member representing that area, I wonder why he did not apply the same reasoning with regard to one of my colleagues on this side of the House, the former hon. member for Lisgar. They only waited six weeks at that time.

Mr. Horner: And the former hon. member for Trois-Rivières.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

Mr. McIntosh: I would forgo my time, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would get up and announce the date of the by-election in Assiniboia, otherwise I will continue.

The reason we are opposed to this bill is not that there are not some good parts in it, as I said yesterday. Most of my colleagues have spoken in favour of the bill to a certain degree. But my concern is that this bill, along with other agricultural legislation that this government is putting before the House, directly affects the small farmers of western Canada. I said yesterday that the basic premise behind this bill is to change the whole financial situation of small farmers in Canada. It will change it so that the loans small farmers have at present, which were promised interest free and which would be repaid in full if the government would only sell the product which they said they would sell, namely grain, would force farmers into bankruptcy. I say that based on what I understand has been the information given to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

Of the 430,000 farmers in Canada, there are 200,000 who will have to leave their farms. I could say a lot about what will happen to those 200,000 farmers whom this government is forcing off farms. They will go to the cities; they will be placed on relief rolls, and they will take welfare. No consideration is given to these people. So far as this government is concerned, the faster they get off the farms the better. This bill is one method by which they are going to force farmers off smaller farms. They are trying to force 200,000 of them into bankruptcy. Under this legislation the money which the farmer owes the government will be recallable on demand. Any time the operator of a small farm can get a few dollars for operating expenses he will not be allowed to keep them. The government will demand that the loan be repaid immediately. As I said yesterday, anyone who has been in business knows that you cannot operate unless you have operating capital. The government will take the operating capital away from the farmer with a small farm. This is the whole intention behind Bill C-239.

Mr. Gibson: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. McIntosh: What the hon. member knows about agriculture would fill a lot of books.

Mr. Gibson: I am not trying to be smart and I do not say I know much about the subject, but yesterday I had the benefit of hearing a farmer's group before the Committee on External Affairs. That group expressed great interest in the substance of this bill as a means of helping to marshall and plan marketing facilities for these farmers on small farms about whom the hon. member was speaking. Would he agree that there is some hope in that?

Mr. Ricard: To which bill is the hon. member referring?

Mr. Horner: We will be on that one next month.

Mr. McIntosh: I did not get the import of the hon. member's question. I accept his explanation that he is not trying to be facetious. Some hon. members over here asked to what group he was referring. Are they farmers, are they Canadians? He mentioned the External Affairs Committee? Are they a group of agricultural people from some other country?

Mr. Bell: Yes, Rumania.

Mr. Gibson: It was a farmers group.

Mr. McIntosh: Are they from eastern or from western Canada?

Mr. Gibson: All of Canada.

Mr. Boulanger: We call them Canadians over here.

Mr. McIntosh: Oh, no. The bill before us applies only to western Canada. Let the hon. member read the bill. It does not apply to Quebec, to Ontario or to any other place. That is why I asked the hon. member whether those farmers were from western Canada. I know that farmers in eastern Canada, particularly those hon. members from eastern Canada who are engaged in agriculture, do not understand the situation that exists in western Canada.

I will give hon. members an example of one of the complaints that we raise. I think the hon. member who put the question a moment ago will agree with me that these farmers have a genuine reason for protesting. If a group of farmers in Alberta ship a hundredweight of carrots to eastern Canada, they pay three times more for that shipment than if the same amount were shipped from Ontario to Alberta. I think hon. members would agree with me that that is not fair. These are some of the points that we are talking about. It is very difficult to get these points over to hon. members representing eastern agriculture because eastern and western agriculture are almost as different as day and night. It is difficult to get our point across. However, with two more members after the next election, it will be much easier for us.

Mr. Boulanger: I remember when you numbered 208. What did you do then?

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. McIntosh: I said that the government is trying to get 200,000 farmers off the farms. I do not know what they are going to do. This government says, "Come hell or high water those 200,000 farmers are going." I wish to say to the Liberal whip, and to the minister who is present, that if I read my mail correctly, particularly that which I received during the last ten years, I think I can truthfully say that those 200,000 farmers are saying, "Maybe we must go so far as the government is concerned, but there are too many Liberal politicians in Ottawa. There are at least two too many Liberals representing agriculture, and one as Prime Minister who is not interested in agriculture."

Mr. Olson: All these distortions will come back to haunt you.

Mr. McIntosh: In order to impress the acting whip for the Liberal party, I would like to quote a front page editorial which appeared in the Maple Creek News of April 28, which is not very long ago. I am sure the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) knows this area very well.

Mr. Olson: I also read the editorial.

Mr. McIntosh: You also read the editorial, but there are a lot of members here who did not. As an interesting aside, I want to tell the House that I understand the writer of the editorial has a Liberal background.

An hon. Member: It serves him right.

Mr. McIntosh: Yes, I think he realizes now that it serves him right. The heading on the editorial is, "Politicians Take Note." It reads:

> Even if at times citizens of the country may doubt whether or not a democratic system of government still does exist in Canada (when learning of passage of certain pieces of legislation) there can be little doubt that it does still exist in western Canada.
> On Saturday night of last week, when a meeting was held by the cattlemen of the district, it was obvious that this was a non-political meeting. The ranchers gathered because they had a common problem—Bill C-176.

I think the minister has read that bill too.

> The ranchers have been given assurance by Premier Thatcher of Saskatchewan that as long as he was the provincial premier there would be no marketing bill to affect the cattlemen unless they specifically asked for such a bill.

Mr. Olson: Hear, hear!

Mr. McIntosh: I continue:

> And while this was a noble gesture on the part of the provincial premier, it gives little consolation to the ranchers. For example, even without the marketing bill in Saskatchewan, if the province of Quebec, or any other province does have such a bill and restricts the movement of cattle into that province (unless allowed at a price set by that government) Saskatchewan cattle will not find a market in that province.
> However, democracy was apparent at the conclusion of the meeting, when without coercion, or compulsion of any kind, the majority of those in attendance at the meeting lined up at a table in the corner of the hall, to make a cash contribution to fight the bill in any way possible.
> It was noted by this writer that many of the people lined up at the table have been staunch supporters of the Liberal party for many years. Yet they contributed substantial amounts of money to fight legislation proposed by the very party for which they had voted. It showed to us that these people were prepared to pay for legislation they do (or do not) want.
> It made us wonder if these people that were making the contribution were trying to tell the federal Liberal party something—

It's impossible.

> —trying to tell them something that livestock men clear across Canada have been telling them. That they dislike legislation that is imposed against their wishes. Legislation that may destroy the agricultural industry in Canada, and will give state control to the marketing of all agricultural products.

That is exactly what we over here have been saying for months. The minister said that there was no sustained opposition except from this side of the House, and that we have been misleading the agricultural industry. Will he now stand up and say there is no sustained opposition except from this side of the House? If he could see the coupons, letters and everything else that I have been getting, from a constituency next to his—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I know that the hon. member is going to lead into discussion of the bill before the House, but I respectfully draw his attention to the fact that the editorial which he quoted and his remarks have been related more to other legislation than the bill before the House at the present time.

Mr. Olson: Let us have a few relevant remarks.

Mr. McIntosh: You want me to stop when it hurts, but I will have lots of opportunity to get back at you, Mr. Minister, at the right time and with the right tactics, too. I realize, Mr. Speaker, that you have been very lenient but my remarks were necessary because of the interjections that were made.

I understand that a recent cabinet minister, the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans), left his position because he was not satisfied with the advice that economists and other high priced help were giving the cabinet and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I cannot understand why the two ministers representing Alberta and Saskatchewan do not do the same thing. The hon. member for Duvernay said that the cabinet advisers were second rate. I am quite sure that people engaged in agriculture in western Canada are convinced these two ministers from the west are not just second rate but fourth or fifth rate, so far as the advice they have been getting and so far as the advice that they have been giving the Prime Minister on agriculture is concerned.

I said that I think both these ministers are just puppets pulled by a string. I do not think for one moment that the Minister of Agriculture, coming from cattle country, believes what he is trying to put across to the people of Canada. I do not believe that the minister in charge of the Wheat Board actually believes what he is trying to tell the House. But these two ministers are compelled to do these things because a decision has been made by the Liberal party to introduce state control, call it whatever you wish, over agriculture in the rural areas of Canada.

An hon. Member: That's it.

Mr. McIntosh: Yes, and I can understand why some of the members of the NDP sitting to my left are going to support some of this legislation.

Mr. Olson: It was one of your own members who said that.

Mr. McIntosh: I could refer back to the situation a year ago with respect to Bill C-197. The only fear NDP members who come from western Canada have is that the government is going to out-socialize the NDP. This is regrettable, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. McIntosh.]

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I have great pleasure in supporting this amendment calling for a six months hoist because I believe that for the most part the cash advances system has worked very well in its present form. I see the primary purpose of this bill is to make collections by the government easier in the future. That is the whole gist of it. It will not really enhance the position of the producer so far as his ability to get cash advances is concerned. It is a government housekeeping measure, to make it easier for the government to collect and to squeeze the farmer a little tighter. For these reasons, I would like to see the bill delayed for six months so that we may get an indication from the producers whether or not they want to be squeezed in this manner.

Under the present system, cash advances cover wheat, oats and barley, and now it is proposed to include rapeseed, flaxseed and rye. This simply means that when a farmer takes various grains to the market place there will be a deduction made in respect of all of them. Prior to that he had an opportunity to deliver his wheat in repayment for his loan, but he could still sell his rapeseed or other grain for cash. Now, when he sells anything he will have to repay his loan immediately, which means that the credit being extended will be for a shorter period of time.

When I spoke on this bill yesterday I tried to impress on the minister the concern that everybody feels about the tight manner in which credit is strung across the farming belt. The farmers owe money to the banks and to the Farm Credit Corporation. Only this morning in committee the head of the Farm Credit Corporation told us that in the province of Alberta 26 per cent of the total loans are in arrears. This is a serious situation, Mr. Speaker.

An article which appeared in the Edmonton Journal of April 7 encouraged me to believe that the minister in charge of the Wheat Board was concerned about the plight of the farmers. In case some members are not aware of his genuine concern, I should like to read some excerpts from the article regarding the two price system for wheat which is to be introduced to help the western grain farmer. The article reads:

> Otto Lang, the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, made the recommendation himself to cabinet about two months ago when the government was discussing the final details of his new grains stabilization policy though he declines to acknowledge this.
> Mr. Lang, it was learned here, told his cabinet colleagues he was convinced the grain farmer needed his basic income supplemented and the best way to do this was through a two-price system that would increase and subsidize the domestic price of wheat.
> There was considerable opposition inside cabinet because of what a two-price system would do to the prices of such basic staples as bread and flour. Consumer Affairs Minister Ron Basford is reported to have been in the forefront of the opposition.

Still referring to the minister, the article continues:

> He told Southam News Services he had become convinced the farmer was getting a raw deal compared with other sectors of the economy.

It is evident from this article that the minister in charge of the Wheat Board is aware of the plight of the western farmer but he does not seem to be able to influence his colleagues in the cabinet. I say that in his position, if he is to remain honest, he should have the intestinal fortitude to do as two other members of the cabinet have done and disassociate himself from a group so callously indifferent to the needs of agriculture.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Downey: Both the ministers who are concerned with agriculture are presently in the House. At hearings of the Committee on Agriculture, it has been evident that their concern is for larger and more efficient agricultural units. We all know what it is like when farms get larger; one large four-wheel drive tractor replaces six old units. Fences have to be torn up and everything bulldozed down to make large fields. It seems we are going in this direction all the time. It raises problems of ecology. The fence lines are the habitat of birds and wildlife, the pheasant and the prairie chicken. I do not understand why fish and game associations are not more concerned about this. Surely, we need to look at the total picture in regard to ecology. The hunters who come in the fall and the tourists contribute to the small towns. This policy of consolidating farms into large units will do away with the things that attract them to the country regions. The tourist industry is one of our few remaining natural assets. The area I come from is well known for the goose, the prairie chicken and the pheasant and with the consolidation of farm units I see their natural habitat being destroyed.

If anything I say today, Mr. Speaker, fastens the attention of fish and game associations or hunting groups in Canada on this problem I shall be very happy. I feel they should be as concerned as the farmers with protecting these resources. We want our children to be able to hunt and enjoy this wonderful outdoor sport.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis)—Canadian Pacific Railway—request by high school class for explanation of federal grant in light of net income; the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg)—Supply and Services—letting of contracts without competitive tendering.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions (papers).

[English]

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR COPIES OF COMMUNICATIONS BETWEEN DR. BARBER AND NATIVE ORGANIZATIONS REGARDING CLAIMS AND TREATIES

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved:

That an order of the House do issue for copies of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between Dr. Lloyd Barber and the native Indian peoples organizations across Canada regarding the matter of Indian land and treaty claims and aboriginal rights.

Mr. Gibson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This motion refers to Dr. Barber by name but there is no reference to any official capacity that he may have. I think it might be of benefit to the House if the motion could be amended so that we know what his position in the matter is. There is nothing to indicate that he is not acting as an ordinary citizen. What capacity does he have in relation to the House at this time? I say this in all sincerity.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): I am sure this is a matter for debate, and I am sure the information will be given to those who listen to the debate which is about to proceed. The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard).

Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): The hon. member for High Park (Mr. Deakon).

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I was reluctant to rise to debate the question because of the lack of concern exhibited by the cabinet and the government about the proprieties of things involved here. The motion deals with correspondence relating to aboriginal treaty rights and claims of native Indian peoples. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien), within whose jurisdiction this matter falls, has not the courtesy even to attend the House. His parliamentary secretary is not here to deal with a matter of this fundamental importance. That ought to be noted in the record. This item ought not to be proceeded with until those hon. gentlemen who have the primary responsibility and governmental authority with respect to Indian affairs have the courtesy to come to this House and explain why, when this matter initially arose on October 4 of last year, the people responsible for Indian affairs refused to allow native Indian peoples to see the correspondence in question. Sir, we ought not to be asked to proceed in the light of this discourtesy on the part of the minister and the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Gibson: Mr. Speaker, on that same point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order, please. I am sure the hon. member appreciates that he was given the floor not on a point of order but to permit him to present his case.

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, these remarks will probably also deal with the point of order that the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Gibson) tried to raise. May I point out that this notice of motion for the production of papers refers to Dr. Lloyd Barber, Chairman of the Indians Claims Commission, who was appointed by order in council PC 169-2405 and who reports directly to the Prime Minister. This matter is not in the hands of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It concerns the office of the Prime Minister, whose repeated statements have indicated concern for our native peoples. I am advised that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan) will be in the House because of his interest and concern in this matter. I, therefore, believe that the hon. member's point of order is incorrectly based.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order, please. The Chair is somewhat embarrassed, because there was no point of order in the first place. I thought that the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) was rising to explain why he had not risen initially to speak in the debate. Under the circumstances, I should like to see this debate proceed properly. Will the hon. member for Skeena indicate if he intends to speak on another point of order or if he intends to speak to the motion?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, I realize that Your Honour has to make sure that debate in the House takes place in an orderly fashion, in accordance with the rules. That, I hope, will be the case. I raised my point of order because the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and his parliamentary secretary were not present in the House when this matter was called this afternoon. If you are insisting in our proceeding with the debate then, in the absence of those hon. gentlemen who seem to show no interest in the subject, I have no choice except to make a few comments.

Mr. Boulanger: Withdraw the motion.

Mr. Woolliams: Don't be ridiculous.

Mr. Roberts: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; if I recollect correctly, and I was sitting near you, you had recognized the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Deakon) when the hon. member who has just spoken raised a point of order. I do not really see how, having given the floor to the hon. member for High Park, you can now give it to another speaker. I myself, would be happy to hear what the hon. member for High Park has to say on this matter.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): It is not difficult to answer the hon. member for York-Simcoe. I am sure hon. members of the House realize that they can bet even money on the hon. member for High Park speaking after the hon. member for Skeena has spoken, or vice versa. So, we are just playing games. However, since the hon. member for High Park indicates that he will cede the floor to the hon. member for Skeena, the hon. member for Skeena has the floor.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, far be it from me to accept such graciousness from hon. gentlemen in the Liberal party who do not want to see this matter come to a vote and intend to talk it out in any event.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): On two occasions, first on March 11, 1970 and then—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order, please. Is the hon. member speaking to the motion now?

Mr. Boulanger: The hon. member wants to kill his own motion.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I am in error, but I thought you had recognized me for that purpose.

Mr. Deakon: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I have heard the hon. member for Skeena many times and always held him in high esteem. Before he makes remarks about other hon. members, I wish he would listen to what they have to say. He has not heard my speech. I would ask him to listen to any remarks I might make before making such comments.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I did not think I was making comments about the anticipated speech of the hon. member for High Park. I was talking about the attitude of the Liberal party in general which has denied to certain people access to the documents in question. Members of that party have talked out, I think, eight other notices of motions for the production of papers on Thursdays and thus prevented those matters from coming to a vote. I made my remarks in that context. If the hon. member for High Park feels that he is part of that group called the Liberal party which denies certain people certain freedoms and rights, he will have to wear that hat and be content with it.

This particular hour for debating notices of motions for the production of papers was set aside, under our rules, in order that those notices of motions for production of papers which were objected to on Wednesdays, when no debate may be permitted, could be transferred to another part of the order paper, under "notices of motions (papers)", and debated and voted on. When the rules were changed, hon. members harboured a companion thought. It was thought that this hour would provide an opportunity for the exchange of views on such papers. We might learn why they cannot be produced and argue why they should be produced, and a vote might be taken. The government on many occasions has resorted to the subterfuge of using this mechanism within the rules to deny us the opportunity, in many instances, of talking about these matters, and to prevent a vote.

Mr. Woolliams: They changed the rules.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I believe that on the order paper there are 69 notices of motion for the production of papers. Eight of these motions have been talked out up to now. As I say, we are looking at 69 such motions. The time available during the rest of this session for the discussion of these matters indicates that there will be little opportunity to discuss or debate these matters, let alone vote on them. Parliament will not be given an opportunity to express its opinion, through a vote, on whether certain documents should or should not be produced. That is tantamount to an abuse and misuse of the rules of procedure, and a denial of the spirit in which the rules were revised. That is why a debate of this kind is almost a futile exercise. Certainly, by its past activity the Liberal party has shown that it is not interested in debating these matters and certainly not interested in seeing them come to a vote in order that the opinion of the House may be tested. That applies particularly to the matter now before the House. All this indicates that the government treats with supersecrecy legitimate documents relating to information that is of extreme importance and value to the native Indian people.

If we look back at the reasons that were given for not acceding to the request in the first instance, we see that it is simply a matter of hiding information from the very people who will be greatly affected by this information and who will be helped if they have access to it. On March 11, 1970, I put forward a similar motion. If I am not mistaken, it was the then Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister who said that the government could not agree to the tabling of the documents sought in the motion because, in the opinion of Mr. Barber, the Commissioner appointed under the Inquiries Act to look into these matters, it would not be in the best interests of the commission or the native Indian people for such documents or information to be disclosed to the Indian people. I suppose Dr. Barber, inasmuch as he is the commissioner, has the right to say that it is not in the best interest of the commission to have these documents disclosed, but it is very arrogant and overbearing for him to say that it is not in the interest of the native people to have the correspondence and documents made public.

I do not wish to get into a discussion about what I think of Dr. Barber as an individual. He distinguished himself by his absolute lack of concern for the rights of the native Indian people when on the Northwest Territories territorial council, at which time he gave no heed to the aboriginal rights of the natives of the Northwest Territories. It was presumptious on his part to say what was and what was not in the interest of the Indian people. That was the reason given by the parliamentary secretary on March 11 last, and reiterated on November 4 when this motion was transferred for debate at the request of the government.

Dr. Barber was appointed a commissioner under Part I of the Inquiries Act on December 19, 1969. I presume that he is a royal commissioner, not an Indian land claims commissioner. That title is not even used in the order in council. Royal commissions are appointed under Part I of the Inquiries Act to examine certain things. Dr. Barber was appointed to inquire into and consult with authorized representatives of the Indian people and to inquire into a couple of other matters. First, he was to inquire into the performance of the terms of treaties and agreements formally entered into by representatives of the Indians and the Crown, and second, the administration of moneys and lands pursuant to schemes established by legislation for the benefit of Indians. This is followed by authority to make a report and recommendations as to what should happen with respect to these two items which I enumerated.

In substance, Dr. Barber's terms of reference are twofold. They are to inquire into whether treaties have been lived up to and to inquire into the administration of moneys and lands established by law for the benefit of Indians. Excluded from his terms of reference are native Indian people who, by virtue of history, are not covered by any formal treaties or agreements. The aboriginal land claims and hereditary right claims of the native Indians of the province of Quebec are excluded from Dr. Barber's terms of reference. The commission has no authority to examine the native Indian people of the Northwest Territories and Eskimo people who have an underlying, undeniable hereditary claim to the land and resources, something which has never been extinguished. The bulk of the native Indian people in British Columbia are not covered by treaties. Their aboriginal and hereditary rights are excluded from Dr. Barber's examination.

It is worthwhile looking at the origin of the order in council that appointed Dr. Barber as a royal commissioner. It arose in part from the white paper on Indian affairs which was introduced in this House on June 25, 1969, by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien). There were a number of matters proposed, including the Indian claims commission. At that time there was a commitment to the native Indian people that none of the provisions in that white paper would be introduced or put into effect unless it was agreed to by the Indian people. This has been reiterated time and again.

One of the proposals related to the establishment of an Indian claims commission. The government has stated that this commission, of which Dr. Barber is the sole commissioner, is the Indian claims commission. If that is so, this is an abrogation of the commitment made to the Indian people that this would never happen unless the Indian people agreed. It is an imposition by the government on the native Indian people without any agreement or consultation. It is contrary to the stated declarations of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development on many occasions and the stated declaration of no less a personage than the esteemed right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

Mr. Gibson: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I will be pleased to answer a question, but I wonder if the hon. member will wait until I have concluded my remarks.

Mr. Burton: By then he will have forgotten what he wanted to ask.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): This motion seeks the exchange of correspondence between the native Indian people who have communicated with the royal commission about their hereditary and aboriginal rights, their treaty claims and the like. I am simply paraphrasing the motion. The reason for introducing the motion is not solely out of interest and concern on the part of members of our party. It is as a result of discussion with native Indian people. Naturally, we were not able to speak with every native person in Canada, but we did speak with a goodly number of leaders and chieftains. They would like to know the extent of correspondence with regard to their treaty rights and claims and aboriginal rights and claims.

Indians in one part of the country would like to know the trend of conversation and correspondence with regard to Indian people in another part. They would like to know what responses these people have received from Dr. Barber and the royal commission. They would like to see what, if anything, is happening to the claims which Indians in another part of the nation are proposing. There is the same general interest in treaty and aboriginal rights from one end of this land to the other, regardless of tribal affiliation. This is partly for information purposes. Hon. members know that bands or tribes of Indian people may not be thoroughly familiar or cognizant of the procedures to be followed. In many instances, they may not even recognize what may be classified as an aboriginal claim, even though they may have one. They may not recognize what it is or how to phrase it. They would receive guidance and assistance from seeing the correspondence which other Indian tribes, associations and other organizations have entered into with the royal commission. This is the reason for the introduction of the motion, to make this information public and available to the Indian people whose rights are being dealt with and considered. After all, it is they who will be affected by whatever recommendations the royal commission may make, and to the extent that they engage in these discussions they wish to do so in a full and complete manner.

The government itself is financing out of public funds what I believe is called a national committee on historic rights, or treaty rights, something of that sort. In any event, this is a committee of Indian people assisted by funds from the office of the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) or the Privy Council, and research work into treaty rights, aboriginal rights and so forth is being undertaken by that committee in order that Indians will be in a better position to present arguments to governments with force and clarity. On the one hand, the government takes the view that it is helpful and valuable for us to use public moneys to make a grant to a committee of Indian people to do research work on historic rights and treaty rights, while on the other hand, in connection with a royal commission appointed to look into the self same thing, it denies Indians access to correspondence and information which might well be of value to them.

The opinion of Dr. Barber that it would not be in the interests of the Indian people to disclose this information is, to say the least, a presumption on his part. I do not think he should have the right to make such a finding or express such a determination, and even if he does, it seems to me the government should not accept such a position. Rather, it should take the view that the people who are in the best position to decide and determine where their best interest lies are the Indian people themselves.

We know that the Indian people per se, with the exception of the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo (Mr. Marchand) who is not at present in the chamber, are not able to attend the House and move such a motion as I have put forward. This can only be done by those who happen to get elected to this place. This is what we are trying to do to the best of our ability, to give expression to a request on the part of the Indian people that they be allowed access to these documents by moving an appropriate motion in the hope that it will be accepted by the government and that not even a hint of doubt will be expressed as to the right of Indians to obtain information about their own affairs. In other words, so that this will not be looked upon, as it is in some quarters and as I myself look upon it at the moment, as a deliberate attempt at secrecy, a deliberate attempt to circumvent the rights of Indians and deny to them rightful access to information which is of such importance to their well-being, particularly as far as treaty rights and aboriginal rights are concerned. Now, if the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Gibson) wishes to ask his question I shall attempt to answer it.

Mr. Gibson: I should like to ask the hon. member whether any process has been embarked upon, for example, by way of writ of certiorari to obtain the results he is seeking? It appears to me that the matter is now sub judice before the inquiry and that the hon. member is inviting what would amount to a further parliamentary inquiry at the same time as the commission is attempting to deal with this matter. Would the hon. member not agree that if, at the time the commissioner is trying to carry out his work, he is ordered by Parliament to do certain things it would become most difficult to deal with the question in a cohesive way? Would it not amount to unwarranted interference with the inquiry?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): In the first place, whether one might proceed by way of a writ of certiorari is beyond my knowledge. The hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Gibson), who is learned in the law, will know that better than I. I am not able to say whether this procedure is available, indeed, I would not care to comment on this suggestion. I do know, however, that this royal commission is being financed by the taxpayers of Canada. The Indian people with whom I have spoken —and, naturally, I have not been able to speak with them all—feel they would like to have information with respect to the terms of reference, indeed, with respect to two matters which are of fundamental importance to them, and I have proceeded on the basis of fundamental respect for the desire of people to know what is happening in connection with their affairs.

Mr. Walter Deakon (High Park): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) is well aware that all members of this House are just as concerned as he is about the welfare of the Indian and other native peoples. I will restrict my contribution to consideration of the claims of the aboriginal peoples for legal rights to land whether by treaty or by hereditary claim.

There are in Canada today approximately 450,000 people who are descendants of the aboriginal peoples who occupied this land before its discovery by Europeans. The law divides these groups into status Indians and non-status Indians and Eskimos. The status Indians, in turn, are divided into treaty Indians and non-treaty Indians and both of these groups are in turn divided into reserve Indians and non-reserve Indians. Historically, these people were divided into 11 linguistic groups and spoke at least 50 different languages. The settlements, reserves and bands are located in areas over the vast expanse of Canada. This is one of the reasons it is so difficult to get a true perspective of the place of Indians in Canada.

To consider the present objectively we must understand the past. The history of Indian relationships with the white man has not altered appreciably during the years, even with the emergence of new Indian leadership. The descendants of the aboriginal peoples are at least as concerned with the issues of treaty and aboriginal rights as were their predecessors.

Initially the Indians were friends and helpers of the white explorers who were small in number and unfamiliar with the land. As the land was colonized the Indians became restive because of the growing encroachments on their preserves. The Indians also assisted the white settlers in the fur and agricultural trades, but as settlements further advanced the more valuable lands held by the Indians were coveted and acquired by the whites. The Indians were therefore left with pockets of land frequently far distant from the rapidly settled and industrialized society.

Before the discovery of Canada, land was held communally; family ownership of certain resource areas existed within certain tribes, but land was not sold outside the tribal unit. The only method of obtaining land from others was by conquest. The concept of the sale of tribal lands by treaty or any other formal means to people outside the band or tribe was not within the native legal concept. This is a concept of European law, not a recognition of native law.

Undisputed possession and native concepts of land ownership were sufficiently developed in Canada that we must consider the legal aspect of aboriginal title. The native peoples did have clear possession and, therefore, at least a moral right; but legal right existed only in lands in settled occupation. The history of laws relating to Indians in North America, and their interpretation, shows the gradual extension of the new legal system and the parallel diminution of native rights based upon aboriginal occupation.

It has been submitted that aboriginal rights are part of international law, recognizing that territorial title is based on long and undisputed possession. This concept of aboriginal title and the adoption of it as a legal doctrine by the Privy Council leaves no question or doubt that it is part of Canadian law, although it may be that this concept does not apply to all parts of Canada, with all respect to the submission of the hon. member for Skeena. This leads us to examine the historical pattern of dealings with natives in this country. If aboriginal title has been extinguished where it existed, then we are in the right; but if it has not been extinguished we must, I submit, consider what legal claims, if any, can now be made by the native peoples.

I am sure hon. members on all sides of the House will agree that a solution to this problem must be reached soon and has long been overdue. For our treatment of the Indian population in Canada I do not believe we have any cause to be proud. Our native peoples are set aside from other citizens. The government for at least half a century has been encouraging Indians to leave their reserves. This movement has weakened the social and economic potential of reserve lands and now, because of this policy, the government is embarrassed by the backward nature and character of some of these peoples. The government finds itself in a paternalistic role. The Indians may be citizens of any particular province in which they may have settled, but they are also wards of the federal government; they are financially, economically and socially dependent upon the federal government.

The government found this role distasteful and realized that paternalism has not resolved the problem but has resulted only in heavy criticism of the government. The government would appreciate a change. On the other hand, Indian leaders are equivocal about change and have not a clear mandate from their people for such change. To them a change is frustrating and even threatening. The indians are striving to ascertain just who they actually are, and are looking for their true identity to the past.

A government study in 1967 made the following comment:

> It was the conclusion of the field workers that the question of treaty rights pervades the field of Indian/non-Indian relationships to such an extent that resolution of these differences is a precondition to acceptance by the Indian people of most programs for their benefit and advancement.
> The evidence from this survey, from that of the Hawthorne group, and others, suggests that treaty rights are increasing in importance as more Indian people become better organized and develop a more vocal approach to government.

A brief to the joint committee of the House of Commons and Senate on Indian Affairs in 1960, by the Indian-Eskimo Association, stated in part as follows:

> We know also that those Indians who, on one ground or another, mistrust the white man, tend to focus their bitterness on some treaty right, the alleged violation of which becomes a rallying point for anti-white sentiment and agitation. For these Indians, therefore, a treaty becomes at once a sacred document of inviolable rights and a potent symbol of current wrongs.

During the consultations and discussions with Indian groups across the country by the Indian Affairs branch of the federal government in 1968-69 for purposes of discussing the Indian Act, it was significant that the Indian Act as such received little, if any, discussion, whereas on the other hand the Indian leaders in attendance constantly expressed their concern with treaty and aboriginal rights. The concern with treaty and aboriginal rights was eloquently put in sharp focus by Chief Dan George to a meeting of teachers on the west coast:

Let no one forget it, we are a people with special rights guaranteed us by promises and treaties. We do not beg for these rights, nor do we thank you. We do not thank you for them because we paid for them, and God help us, the price we paid was exorbitant. We paid for them with our culture, our dignity, our pride and self-respect. We paid, we paid and we paid until we became a beaten race, poverty-stricken and conquered.

The treaty and aboriginal rights issue is not just a legal matter but has an important emotional and symbolic value for the aboriginal peoples. In order to deal with Indian and Eskimo claims justly, we must keep this in mind. A very interesting and informative research documentation was made possible by a grant from the Harvie foundation, published under the title "Native rights in Canada". Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote from the chapter headed "The basis of native rights":

There are perhaps three general conceptualizations of the historical relations between Indians and whites in this country.

1) The Indian nations had full sovereignty over their territories. The land was unjustly taken from them by conquest, occupation and, in some cases, by blatantly unfair treaties. In its most colourful form, this general view produces assertions of continuing sovereign independence, and the Six Nations reserve in Ontario continues to try to have a case heard before the International Court of Justice in the Hague.

2) The Indians had legal claims to the land, though not full sovereignty or full ownership, which have ended except for reserve lands. The treaties extinguished these legal claims in a proper manner. Indian claims in the non-treaty areas were dealt with before confederation by the colonial governments. In British Columbia, the major non-treaty area where colonial policy was not fully settled at union, compensatory payments have been made in lieu of treaty payments.

This view begins with an assertion of legal rights in the Indians and attempts to fit that assertion to the historical facts in Canada.

3) The Indians had no political or property rights recognized by law. Treaties were made on occasion to avoid conflict and facilitate settlement. They serve that purpose and have no current significance.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in his 1969 Indian policy statement stated that the federal government would recognize treaty rights since he considered treaties as contracts, but would not recognize aboriginal rights. It was the Prime Minister's contention that it was inconceivable that there should be a treaty between subgroups in a given society. It is contended that treaties that do exist should be terminated, presumably by negotiation, so that the Indian people can become equal members of our Canadian society. The Prime Minister feels that aboriginal rights as described in the policy are too general and undefined to be considered specific claims and are something that the Prime Minister and his government are reluctant to guarantee. This is the main reason why the Commissioner of Claims is having great difficulty in justly dealing with and resolving the claims submitted to him for adjudication.

I should also like to draw attention to an article which appeared in the Montreal Star of Tuesday, April 27, 1971 under the heading "Indian rights 'incontestable'", with the sub-heading "Native land claims set Ottawa rethinking". This article verifies the situation at hand. It is my respectful submission that the issue of aboriginal rights has as great a significance, if not greater, to the Indians as does the French language to the French. This fact must be realized before any headway can be made. If the legal concept underlying the treaties is a recognition of aboriginal title, then there is a contradiction inherent in the government's position.

Under the circumstances, and because of the delicate nature of this matter, I respectfully submit that the motion presented should be defeated.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak on the motion presented to the House by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). In his motion the hon. member requests that the House issue copies of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between Dr. Lloyd Barber and the native Indian peoples organizations across Canada. The hon. member outlined quite clearly the reason these documents should be made available to the native people. He also explained that the native people of Canada are widely spread geographically across this country and therefore are not always in a position to know from one group to another just what the thinking may be among themselves.

In recent months this difficulty has been eliminated to some extent by the formation of provincial Indian brotherhoods, and more recently by the formation of the National Indian Brotherhood with its head office in Ottawa. I believe we should support this motion very strongly because it is very necessary that all Indian groups should have access to the correspondence which has been directed to the Commissioner of Indian Claims and the replies these groups have received from the commissioner.

Spokesmen for the government have tried to indicate the interest of the government in the native people. The hon. member for High Park (Mr. Deakon) emphasized the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has indicated that he recognizes treaty rights. We hear this time and time again. This only makes us wonder, if the Prime Minister and the government are so emphatic about recognizing treaty rights, why some of the problems the Indian people have presented to the government over the years have not been brought to successful conclusion. I need mention only the hunting rights of the Indian people. Here we have the case of numerous Indian people who believed they had the opportunity to hunt at certain times and on certain lands and found that legislation or treaties drawn up between the government of Canada and other nations precluded these rights which they had emphatically been lead to believe were theirs throughout the years.

In my contituency the native people have been brought before the courts on charges of hunting illegally. One such case was taken to the Supreme Court of Canada. In this particular case, unfortunately the Supreme Court of Canada, on a split decision, ruled that the Migratory Birds Convention Act superseded Indian treaties. The government might feel that for the time being this gets it off the hook. However, time and time again the Indian people and many members of this House, including myself, have requested that the government renegotiate the Migratory Birds Convention Act with the government of the United States.

If the Supreme Court of Canada in its wisdom feels the Migratory Birds Convention Act supersedes these treaties which the Prime Minister of our country says he recognizes, then I believe there is only one solution. The treaty made with the United States, which it is claimed supersedes Indian treaties, should be renegotiated. Four years have gone by and the government still indicates its intention to renegotiate this treaty.

Of course, there are many cases of land disputes in so far as the Indian people are concerned. The government claims it set up the commission headed by Dr. Lloyd Barber to look into the claims which Indian people feel they have. The Indian people have given considerable study to the government's white paper. They found they did not like it and asked the government not to implement it at that particular time. However, as the hon. member for Skeena has mentioned, the setting up of this claims commission has already abrogated the government's assurance that nothing would be done in relation to the white paper until the Indian people agreed to it.

Government members from time to time tell us of the extreme interest of the government in the problems of the Indian people. As I mentioned before, in recent years Indian groups have formed brotherhoods in the provinces. They reached agreement with the government in respect of financial grants in respect of the administrative costs of these organizations. I know that in Manitoba particularly, the Indian brotherhood and its staff are doing a tremendous job of liaison between the Indian people of the province and the federal government. But I am told grants pertaining to the past fiscal year should have been turned over to these organizations many months ago.

Last Thursday the Indian brotherhood offices in the province of Manitoba reached the stage where they would have been forced to suspend operations if the moneys promised several months ago were not forthcoming. The question was raised in the House and it is my understanding that the government has made provision for these moneys to go forward to Indian brotherhood offices, particularly those in Manitoba. I understand other provincial bodies have had the same difficulty.

In debating and possibly voting on the motion of the hon. member for Skeena we should ask why, with all the members in this House continually talking about their interest in the native people, we have to reach a showdown whereby we have a deadline in respect of keeping an office open because of the lack of money which should have been forthcoming from the government. The answer of the government at that time was that sufficient information was not presented to it in order to allow it to pay these grants. This was not the case in respect of the province of Manitoba. I understand that the Manitoba grant and others were held up, even though the information was available, because one or two organizations in other parts of Canada probably had not presented all the information the government required. Therefore, the Indian brotherhood offices which had presented all the pertinent information the government required for these grants were discriminated against.

The hon. member for High Park quoted the stirring words of Chief Dan George in relation to treaty rights. There is no doubt whatsoever that the Indian people do have treaty rights which are not being recognized. Therefore, I support the motion of the hon. member for Skeena and hope that this House will unanimously support it.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I am quite prepared to make in this chamber today the charge that the purpose of the appointment of the Barber Commission was to do a snow-job on the Indian people. In the absence of the production of the documents requested in the motion of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), I challenge anyone in this House to disprove my statement.

Mr. Mahoney: Sit down and listen.

Mr. Barnett: This commission was appointed through a minute of the meeting of the committee of the Privy Council in December of 1969. Neither the members of this House nor any of the Indian people in Canada really know what, if anything, Dr. Barber has been doing since he was appointed commissioner under the Inquiries Act. The hon. member for Skeena interjected that very likely he does not even know himself. I can support that statement without any particular discredit to Dr. Barber, because if one considers the circumstances of his appointment it is obvious that it was impossible for him to do a worth-while job even if he had wanted to.

Why do I suggest that the purpose of this royal commission was to do a snow-job or to pull the wool over the eyes of the Indian people across the country? I do so for one very fundamental reason if for none other, namely, that this House has never recognized that the Indian people have any rights in this country. It has never admitted that the original inhabitants of this country have any rights which stem from the fact that they were here before our ancestors arrived here. This was confirmed not long ago in the House by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) when he declared—and he stated it more than once—that all the lands in the Northwest Territories are held by the Crown, which means that the Eskimo people do not even have squatters rights on the lands where their forefathers dwelt for hundreds of years.

On looking through some of the records of this House one finds that far from having given any recognition to the fact that the Indian people have basic rights, the reverse is true because the last recorded opinion of this chamber was in 1927 when the House rejected the proposition that the Indian people had any real rights. That decision has not yet been reversed, even though there have been debates in the House and attempts have been made to have Parliament make a declaration that such rights do exist.

I cannot for the life of me understand how anyone who has read the document entitled "Native rights in Canada," to which the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Deakon) referred in his speech, could say that what I am saying is not the basic truth. To appoint a commissioner with responsibility not to the Indian people but to the Governor in Council is by its very nature a rejection of the real rights of the Indian people.

Mr. Gibson: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I have been listening to my hon. friend and I submit that his remarks are irrelevant for two reasons: one, that he is not speaking to the substantive motion before the House and, two, that he is slandering a public official who is conducting an inquiry, I submit that on both grounds his remarks are irrelevant.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): If I were to consider seriously the point of order put forward by the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Gibson) I would be inviting him to make a long speech. However, I do not consider the point of order to be well taken. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) has the floor.

Mr. Barnett: I was going to suggest that if the hon. member would do a little listening with his ears, and a little reading with his eyes, instead of using his mouth so much—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order, please. The hon. member has only a few minutes left. I am sure he would like to use the time to discuss the motion.

Mr. Barnett: —he might understand the relationship of what I am saying to the motion. Members of the House and the Canadian people should know exactly what, if anything, the commissioner has been doing since his appointment. I am sure that hon. members who have followed the developments leading up to the tabling of the white paper are fully aware that this is not the kind of action for which the Indian people have asked. They asked to be enabled to establish their rights and to have assistance to do so. Never at any time have they requested that a commissioner charged with reporting to the Governor in Council in secret be set up to deal with matters concerning them. I think this fact makes valid the request of the hon. member for Skeena for the immediate production of these documents, if any, for the information of the Indian people and members of the House.

[Mr. Barnett.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Hon. members will forgive me if my remarks are of a serious nature this evening, but in view of the tragic death of so many Canadians in the horrible tragedy at St. Jean Vianney yesterday I will confine my remarks to an expression, on behalf of hon. members and myself, of deep sympathy and condolence to the people concerned. May those who have died rest in peace and may their faith be rewarded in safer land.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PRAIRIE GRAIN ADVANCE PAYMENTS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING RATE PER BUSHEL, EMERGENCY PAYMENTS, EXTENSION OF APPLICATION TO RYE, FLAXSEED AND RAPESEED

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang that Bill C-239, to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, before private members' hour I was outlining some of the side-problems that we are running into with a depressed agricultural industry. Again I say to the minister that we all agree on the provision of cash advances, but there are many other problems that we should be solving rather than dealing with stop-gap measures such as cash advances.

I wish to quote some of the remarks made by the former head of the Board of Grain Commissioners, Mr. Hamilton. I will read some of his suggestions which I submit should be looked upon as alternatives to stop-gap measures such as cash advances. An article in the Edmonton Journal of April 5, 1971, quotes Mr. Hamilton as saying:

Ottawa must sell grain more imaginatively. "If industry can negotiate 15-year contracts surely the same can be done for grain." Ottawa should also be willing to ship grain in 1,000-ton lots as requested by developing countries, control ocean freight, place grain in position where it is needed, and lease storage space in vicinity of markets or help customers build it.

I emphasize that we should put grain where it is needed, in position to ship it. This was brought home to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board during the recent rail strike when the storage facilities at the coast were not full and as a result we lost about a week's supply of shipping. We need to keep this in mind as an insurance measure. Mr. Hamilton continued:

The Ottawa bureacracy is more interested in efficiency than effectiveness. "The question is not how well we are doing things but are we doing the right things." The bureaucrats are out of touch with reality.

There is too much governmental control and interference except in the case of the most successful crop, rapeseed. Now Ottawa is jumping on the bandwagon "to become associated with the rapeseed success story of western Canada."

These statements were made by one of the most respected and knowledgeable men in the grain trade. He has since been replaced as head of the Board of Grain Commissioners, and this concerns all of us interested in the trade. The man who has taken his place, Mr. Delmar Pound, is probably a capable man but I am sure no more so than the former commissioner, since some of Mr. Pound's experience was gained as campaign manager to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson).

The bill before us will undoubtedly be of help to the farmer. It is interesting to note that an amendment was moved in the Agricultural Committee not too long ago that would guarantee the farmers yearly income boosts comparable to those received by other organized sectors of the economy. I believe a 5 of per cent or 6 per cent income boost was proposed. Why does this government not consider a built-in price increase on agricultural commodities? They grant wage boosts to industry and even to members right here in this House, so why are farmers left out? The government is supposedly trying to improve the situation and would like the farmers out west to think so, but they turned down this proposal.

These things are a mystery to me, Mr. Speaker, and I hope the ministers responsible will explain why they continue with stop-gap measures instead of getting to the root of the problem. I know that the minister in charge of the Wheat Board realizes the importance of doing something in the farming belt if the agricultural sector is to continue at all. As a representative of the farmers in this House I feel that the minister must make his position or his thoughts known to the cabinet, or do as any man of intestinal fortitude would do—get with it or get out.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have sat through much of this quite lengthy debate. It may give some hon. members comfort to know that this particular phase of the farming debate is coming to an end.

With regard to cash advances I want to say briefly that in 1957, when the Conservative party took office, the situation on the farms of western Canada was almost identical to the situation today. Grain had been piled up on the farms. There was a surplus of about 700 million bushels of grain and a shortage of cash flow and cash return for farm produce. Today we find ourselves in similar circumstances.

There has been a myth spread over the land these last two years regarding the surplus of grain. I want to talk about world surplus. I would be the last to say that there was not a surplus in various exporting countries, but the fact is that Canada has moved from being first among the wheat exporting country of the world to fifth or sixth. If we had retained our export position, this cash advance bill would not have been so important. Shortly after we implemented legislation in this regard, the Diefenbaker government managed to sell and export grain and got it off the farm.

In 1957, 1958 and 1959 very few cash advances were taken up by the farmers because grain was moving. When produce is moving to market, cash advances are not necessary. A similar situation exists in the corn belt of the United States, where the government goes in, buys the product outright and puts a seal on the bin. The commodity then belongs to the government and not the farmer, although it is stored on his farm. Under the Canadian system the farmer got only approximately half the value of the commodity, and when it is delivered to the country elevator the department takes its share on the cash advance and that money is returned, so really it is a part payment for grain.

As every speaker has said—and this matter affects the whole western economy—there is a shortage of cash in agriculture and a depression today in western Canada. There are three or four bills on farming matters now before the House. If the government had come clean with Parliament and with the country regarding the constitutional matter which is before the Canadian people and the Supreme Court of Canada, this debate would have been shorter and the problems on the farm would have quickly disappeared.

One of the problems of marketing is that some of the ten provinces are now setting stringent regulations at provincial borders, preventing the free flow of produce from one province to another. That is what I meant today in the question period when I said that we were moving toward the balkanization of Canada.

I want to deal briefly with the questions that were raised yesterday. Surely this government, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) or the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) could say, "We are going to test the Manitoba case in the Supreme Court of Canada. The Manitoba Court of Appeal has declared it ultra vires. We will brief the top counsel of Canada and adopt a national approach to marketing, not the narrow, parochial approach that might affect only the Maritimes or the west."

I now understand the Liberal party for the first time. They believe in a ten-nation program.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. Gibson: Where did the hon. member read that?

Mr. Woolliams: I want the hon. member to read this speech and think about it. If he would listen more and be as polite to me as I am to him, and keep his mind as open as his mouth, he would make a great contribution to Parliament.

Mr. Gibson: My mind is open.

Mr. Woolliams: Section 121 of the British North America Act provides:

All articles of the growth, produce, or manufacture of any one of the provinces shall, from and after the union, be admitted free into each of the other provinces.

I maintain that regulations enacted by various provincial governments seek to prevent the free flow of farm products among provinces. Any such legislation—I am referring particularly to the province of Quebec and to the action being taken by the province of Manitoba—is ultra vires and beyond the power of a province. It is beyond the power of a province to enact such legislation, and even if the federal government were to attempt to enact it, it would still be ultra vires. You cannot prevent the free flow of products among provinces.

I say, to illustrate my point, that this legislation would be unnecessary or cash advances would not have been needed to the same extent if the government had assumed its responsibilities. Today I asked the Minister of Justice whether counsel had been appointed to plead the case I have referred to before the Supreme Court of Canada and to represent the national interest. I asked what instructions had been given to counsel.

Mr. Pepin: What is the relevancy of those remarks?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to make it perfectly clear that I am always delighted to listen to my hon. friend, and I would be glad if later he would give us his thoughts outside in the corridor or in the hallway. However, tonight we are considering Bill C-239 and I would appreciate it if the hon. member would stay somewhere close to that subject.

Mr. Woolliams: I do not want to argue with the distinguished and illustrious minister from Saskatchewan who was dean of my law school. I am prepared to accept your ruling, Mr. Speaker. This is the first time I have spoken on this matter. I submit that my remarks were relevant in that the kind of cash advances being considered in this bill would not be necessary if the government had assumed its responsibilities. In that sense I submit that my remarks were relevant to this debate. If the minister would bear with me and listen, perhaps the debate on this bill and on others could be shortened. It is up to him.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I might say that it is a question for the Chair, rather than the minister, to decide whether matters are relevant. I realize that to some extent the hon. member in his argument took a roundabout way. When the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Cadieu) this afternoon referred to the other bill which is to be the subject matter of debate, I suggested to him that perhaps he should try as much as possible to limit his remarks to the bill being considered.

The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) said that he intended to speak for just a few moments on this point and I was willing to take that into consideration. If it were the essence of his presentation I think it could be said that the speech ought to be made when the other bill is before the House, rather than on this bill. I am prepared to take into account the hon. member's suggestion that this is not the whole essence and substance of the speech he wishes to make tonight.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that. May I also point out that the purpose of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher), that the bill be not now read the second time but that it be hoisted for six months, is to enable us to obtain answers to our questions.

Mr. Gibson: Which bill is the hon. member speaking to now?

Mr. Woolliams: May I finish what I was saying? I asked the Minister of Justice the name of counsel and what instructions he had been given. I asked whether the instructions of counsel, who was not named, were such as to take into account the national interest. Today the Minister of Justice said, "I do not know who he may be. I left that appointment to the deputy minister and do not know what the instructions were." In addition to fooling around with such a knotty constitutional question, this government wants to play politics with the livelihood of farmers.

Mr. McIntosh: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: The government has tried to cover up this problem by saying that it is changing the terms and conditions of the old act.

Mr. Lang: Which old act?

Mr. Woolliams: The cash advances legislation. The dean, as I always call him, is always very polite in this House. He has been noted for his arrogance if not for his intelligence.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gibson: That was a great contribution to the debate.

Mr. Woolliams: May I now refer to the case of Murphy v. Canadian Pacific Railway Company. It illustrates the case in point. The facts were these: produce was produced in Manitoba by one Murphy who wished to ship it to British Columbia to his poultry farm. He went to the CPR. The grain was already bagged but the CPR refused to take the shipment of grain, and litigation began. The court dealt with the point we have sought to raise on an entirely different premise. Chief Justice Cartwright said, after argument on the point that I am raising now, that if a provincial legislature had enacted such restrictive legislation, it would have been declared ultra vires. In other words, legislation that controls interprovincial trade would have been ultra vires. I am confident that when the Supreme Court of Canada decides the Manitoba case, it will say that such restrictive legislation is ultra vires.

I therefore say that this legislation ought to be held up until that decision has been handed down. In addition, counsel for Crown ought to take the national approach; he ought to argue the national case as set out in the British North America Act and obtain a decision which would enble the free flow of trade between provinces.

Mr. Pepin: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: That is my submission. I cannot put it more clearly than it was put by the Manitoba Court of Appeal when dealing with this subject. They referred to the case of Rex v. Nat Bell Liquors, Limited. Lord Sumner in that case said this:

In their Lordships' opinion the real question is whether the legislature has actually interefered with interprovincial or with foreign trade.

That is the real question to be determined.

Mr. Pepin: That was the question.

Mr. Woolliams: If this question were cleared up farmers would not need cash advances to the extent that they are now needed, because the cash problem on the farm would be partly, if not completely, remedied. The Court of Appeal then dealt with the Murphy case, which I will deal with in greater detail in a moment. In that case Mr. Justice Rand said:

What is forbidden is a trade regulation that in its essence and purpose is related to a provincial boundary.

I say to the government, why does it not instruct counsel appearing before the Supreme Court of Canada to adopt the national approach?

Mr. Pepin: He will.

Mr. Woolliams: Not only are these regulations affecting materially the free movement of trade but they are undermining the very foundations of confederation. There must be free trade between the provinces.

Mr. Pepin: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: In Murphy v. CPR Mr. Justice Cartwright said:

I am in general agreement with the reasons of my brother Rand and those of my brother Locke and would dispose of the appeal as they propose. I wish, however, to add a few words as to one of the submissions made by Mr. Finkelstein in the course of his full and able argument.

It was argued that section 32 of the Canadian Wheat Board Act forbids—

That is the section dealing with powers and regulations affecting the transporting of grain between provinces, thereby controlling interprovincial trade. The question was whether a man in Manitoba could ship his wheat from Manitoba to British Columbia.

Mr. Pepin: He can.

Mr. Woolliams: That point, although not directly argued in the Murphy case, was decided by the Manitoba Court of Appeal. That decision is now before the Supreme Court of Canada. I continue reading from the judgment:

It was urged that section 32 of the Canadian Wheat Board Act forbids a person who produces grain in one province to transport the grain so produced into another province to be there used by himself for his own purposes, that this prohibition is invalid, that it cannot be severed from the other provisions of the section and that consequently the whole section falls. The facts in the case at bar do not fall within the supposed case on which Mr. Finkelstein bases this argument but this circumstance does not affect the relevance of his submission to the issue of constitutional validity.

He now comes to the crux:

It seems clear that the enactment of such a prohibition would be beyond the powers of any provincial legislature and so would appear prima facie to fall within the powers of Parliament under the opening words of section 91 of the British North America Act and to be valid, unless it contravenes section 121 of that Act.

I already referred to this; it is basically free trade between the provinces.

It may be that if, on its true construction, section 32 would have the effecmt of prohibiting the supposed transportation it would be in conflict with section 121 as being a prohibition which, to borrow the words of my brother Rand, "in its essence and purpose is related to a provincial boundary" and not being a regulation of trade or commerce (since there are difficulties in regarding a person as engaged in trade or commerce with himself) or a necessary incident of such regulation. If this be so it would furnish a strong reason for construing section 32 as excluding from its operation the transportation in the case supposed, but I do not find it necessary to reach a final conclusion on the point—

That point has never been directly before the Supreme Court of Canada. It is now directly before the Supreme Court of Canada in the Manitoba case. The reason the Minister of Justice, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang), who is in charge of the wheat board, and the Minister of Agriculture will not take a position on this subject and want to see me ruled out of order is because they do not want me to mention it. Why? They know that what I am talking about is the very essence of every one of these bills and the debate that applies thereto.

Mr. Colin D. Gibson (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The hon. member is presently dealing with a sub judice matter since an appeal is underway. I therefore submit that the hon. member's speech amounts to a breach of our Standing Orders and that he should not interfere with a trial court decision which is now under appeal.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) and the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Gibson) are both learned in the law. They realize that we should be very careful in discussing matters which are before a court, perhaps even more so the Supreme Court of Canada than the lowest of our courts, although precedents do not establish a distinction between the highest and lower courts. I am sure that the hon. member for Calgary North is keeping this in mind.

It has been in the back of my mind that we must be careful in dealing with a matter that is before a court. Whether a case can be argued in the House of Commons which is at the same time being argued before a court of the country is an interesting point. I am sure the hon. member is keeping this in mind.

In any event, my understanding was when the hon. member began referring to this particular matter that he would not be very long and it was only part of his presentation. I must say that it has been longer than I expected. I expected he would eventually relate what he was saying to the bill now before the House. I will take both aspects of the matter under consideration.

Mr. Lang: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I do not want to deal with the wanderings of the hon. member, but he indicated that he thought I understood what he was talking about. I would like it to be known that neither I nor anyone else understood what he was talking about.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to join in that kind of argument with the minister. I am going to treat it with the kind of contempt it deserves. With reference to the remarks made by Your Honour, I will abide by them. As far as the case is concerned, I was careful to stay on the line in that regard. I was not dealing with what judgment may come down from the Supreme Court of Canada. I was asking who will represent the federal government, what province counsel will be from and what his instructions will be in representing the national interest.

I repeat so that I will make myself clear to everyone, including the minister, that if this problem were settled he would not have to take the taxpayers' money to subsidize the farmers. There would be a cash flow on the farm if there were a market for goods and free trade among the provinces.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: If that is not relevant, nothing is relevant in this whole debate.

Mr. Lang: Are you opposed to this bill?

Mr. Woolliams: I am not opposed to the principle of the bill, Mr. Speaker, because it was our party that brought in cash advances.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: When our party brought in the cash advances, C. D. Howe said they would never work. The whole Liberal party voted against cash advances when they came before the House. I ask the minister to check that statement.

I would like to deal with the problems of the Minister of Agriculture. He will not come to grips with the real problems of the farmers. The same is true, as I said the other night, about the Minister of Agriculture who has climbed up the political ladder wrong by wrong by wrong. He has climbed from Social Credit to socialism by slickness and slyness. He will not accept the responsibility of seeing that there is a free flow of goods and produce from province to province.

I understand that in Alberta leaflets are being distributed in the minister's constituency. I would be surprised if this man who has climbed the political ladder wrong by wrong by wrong, from Social Credit to socialism by slickness and slyness, could even return to his own constituency.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth is rising on a point of order.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Some hon. Members: Hoot, hoot!

Mr. Gibson: Mr. Speaker, these personal attacks on the minister are unparliamentary. I submit that they are completely out of order.

Mr. Woolliams: There is one thing about my good friends. They always manage to say that the argument is not relevant. For an irrelevant argument, I have never seen an argument get under their skins so quickly. They know that everything I say is true. As far as this bill is concerned, they are trying to cover up the destitution and poverty that exists on the farms.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: To make it even worse, the Minister of Justice has joined the Minister of Agriculture: the Minister of Justice has climbed the political ladder from Cambridge to constitutional inaccuracies, to anti-confederation. This is the true position of these men. I do not need to say any more; I have made my point. But I want to repeat—

Mr. Pepin: Go ahead, repeat.

Mr. Woolliams: Will the distinguished gentleman please bear with me? He is a man not gifted with words; he does not use them often.

Mr. Pepin: Let's have a repeat.

Mr. Woolliams: If the government wants to get this farm legislation through it will have to come to grips with the problem that I have mentioned and stop sweeping it under the carpet. Then this debate on agriculture would soon come to an end. It is no answer to say in this debate or the debates that will take place on the other two bills that Bill C-176 will be the answer. That bill is also unconstitutional. If the government does not think so, why does it not make a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada?

• (8:40 p.m.)

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to say that I do not think we should refer this bill back. I say this because of the situation which exists in the Prairie region. I agree with the previous speaker—

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Gleave: Why not?

An hon. Member: Because he is wrong.

Mr. Gleave: What he said was correct in some respects. When he told us Mr. C. D. Howe had said this type of legislation was impossible, he was correct. I know that, because I was around at the time. When the succeeding government put the legislation into effect, changes in the act made it less effective than it should have been. As a matter of fact, it worked hardship because farmers sold their crops in advance and were charged in the following year in respect of the advances they had received. Nevertheless, I do not think this bill should be referred back. We ought to correct what is wrong with the present legislation. My mentor in the front seat says this is a motion for a six months' hoist.

An hon. Member: Water under the bridge!

Mr. Gleave: I think the bill should proceed. There are some features we should try to correct in clause 6. I believe the bill should go to committee and changes ought to be made if possible. I wished to make this statement, Mr. Speaker, before you put the motion.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Schumacher) which was negatived on the following division:

PRAIRIE GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

PROVISION FOR PAYMENTS TO WESTERN CANADA PRODUCERS IN YEARS WHEN RECEIPTS BELOW FIVE-YEAR AVERAGE

The House resumed, as from Tuesday, May 4, consideration of the point of order on the motion of the minister responsible for the Wheat Board for the second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Agriculture of Bill C-244, respecting the stabilization of prairie grain sale proceeds and to repeal or amend certain related statutes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When Bill C-244 was before the House on Tuesday of this week the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) raised a point of order which was taken into consideration by the Chair.

An hon. Member: We cannot hear you, Mr. Speaker; the sound system is turned off.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I indicate to hon. members that I should like to dispose of the point of order raised by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar when Bill C-244 was called for second reading.

An hon. Member: We still can't hear you.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When Bill C-244 was called for second reading the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar raised a procedural point and urged the Chair to separate the bill on the grounds that the bill, in the words of the hon. member, "carries within it two separate proposals". The hon. member argued that clause 32 provides for a special transitional payment to producers out of the consolidated revenue fund. This payment, he said, would recognize a situation in existence, whereas the rest of the bill deals with a long-term proposal for prairie grain farmers.

The hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) and other hon. members made the point that the House should not be required to accept the whole bill respecting the stabilization of prairie grain sale proceeds in order to obtain the immediate transitional payment for farmers as provided by clause 32. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) contended that not only clause 32 was involved but that clauses 33 and 34 should also be required, as he put it, "to stand on their own feet".

On the other side of the question, the minister responsible for the Wheat Board stated that the provisions of clause 32—that is what he called the transitional feature—are tied into and are part of the bill because they are based upon the stabilization provisions contained in the body of the bill as well as the repeal of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act which, he noted, was likewise provided for in the bill.

Hon. members will recall that a ruling was made on a similar point of order in respect of Bill C-207, an act respecting the organization of the government of Canada. Mr. Speaker's ruling on that occasion is to be found at page 283 of Votes and Proceedings for January 26, 1971. This ruling reviewed the precedents and indicated that in all the circumstances Mr. Speaker felt that he should not take the "drastic and extreme" position of saying that the bill could not be accepted. His Honour then stated, however, as pointed out by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre during the discussion on the point of order, that there must be a point where an omnibus bill becomes more than an omnibus bill and is unacceptable from a procedural viewpoint.

I would like to thank all hon. members who assisted the Chair on the point of order now before it for determination. It seems to the Chair that while the matter is not free from doubt, there is a relationship between clause 32, between clauses 33 and 34 referred to by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the remainder of the bill.

The Chair suggests that there is no specific set of rules or guidelines governing the content of a bill. It follows, of course, that there should be a theme of relevancy among the contents of a bill and they must be relevant and subject to the umbrella which is raised by the terminology of the long title of the bill.

It is, of course, a matter of judgment in each case as to when a bill offends to the point that it should be ruled as unacceptable because it contains disparate matters. In my opinion this bill cannot be said to go that far. Therefore, I cannot agree that Bill C-244 should be divided by the Chair and I think that the motion for second reading should be put to the House.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration) moved that Bill C-244, respecting the stabilization of prairie grain sale proceeds and to repeal or amend certain related statutes, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-244 now before the House is a further portion of the total approach which this government is taking to the problems facing the grain industry. I would like to review for hon. members the way in which these problems have existed for many years without any totally effective action in relation to them, and to put the point to hon. members that in this group of bills, as with our total program for the grain farmer, we are attempting in rather short order to tackle many problems which have lain dormant for a long time.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

I could mention the fact that the quota system which was brought into being a long time ago was very severely criticized as long ago as 1958 by a commissioner appointed by the then Conservative government to study the question. The Bracken commission described the quota system as something which, if it was in effect for a long time, would create inequities which would prove to be intolerable. Of course, nothing was done about that quota system. The same quota system stayed in effect throughout the time of that and successive governments.

During this period of time we have been examining all the problems facing the grain industry, trying to put the situation right. The quota system had been defective because it favoured one grain over the others. It had been defective by encouraging farmers to produce one particular grain, wheat, even if they lived and farmed in areas where other grains were better from an agricultural point of view. The quota system of their delivery privilege in terms of the money they could get from this grain simply dictated that they do this notwithstanding the agricultural conditions which they faced.

For many years farmers had been growing grains on the basis of far too limited information. When deciding what to plant, a farmer faces a real challenge. He always will, because he has to look at all the circumstances of the market and at his own ability and his farm before deciding what he should do. It seemed to us that he at least deserved as much information as was available and that he should receive it prior to seeding time.

This is what led us this year, for the first time, to indicate to farmers what their initial prices would be on March 1, so that they would have a final opportunity to look at those prices in determining their seeding intentions. This led us to introduce the cash advances legislation which provided greater equity as between grains and reflected to the farmer what his income would be on a particular grain so that he could determine what he should grow.

It is, of course, axiomatic that we have been concerned with the most important issue facing farmers, that of marketing. It was vital that we improve in every way possible the facilities available to the Canadian Wheat Board to market grain in the world. This led us to introduce credit programs which have brought us into markets to which we either did not have access for many years or we had not entered before. We got into these markets in a very big and important way.

Mr. Horner: Will the minister permit a question before ten o'clock? Will he clear up the doubts in the minds of hon. members and all Canadians in connection with his position in this regard? I understand that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) is seeking an appointment to the Senate. Is this minister also seeking an appointment to the Senate?

Mr. Lang: We have heard a good deal from the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) during the past couple of days. I must say that that remark is as relevant and as accurate as anything else he has said.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: To be perfectly accurate, Mr. Speaker, I would like it to be noted that this afternoon, as recorded in Hansard, twice in 25 minutes the hon. member said something which was correct. I acknowledged it each time he was correct. The rest was simply nonsense.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—REQUEST BY HIGH SCHOOL CLASS FOR EXPLANATION OF FEDERAL GRANT IN LIGHT OF NET INCOME

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, on April 23 I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) a question which was put to me by someone in my constituency. The letter read:

> The writer is a senior student of Killarney secondary school. Recently we were analyzing the 1970 annual report of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. On page 14 we noted that the net income for the year amounted to $55,772,000. On page 12 we learned that the company received $33.1 million as a normal payment from the federal government.
> I would respectfully ask if you would explain the reason for this grant to a company with such a favourable earning statement.

As the federal government pays this annual subsidy to the CPR, I naturally thought the Minister of Transport would be the best person to give me an answer. However, Mr. Speaker ruled that my question was not in order at that time and I am therefore asking it now. Why was it necessary for the federal government to take $33 million of the taxpayers' money and give it to a company whose net income for 1970 was $55,772,000? Why has it been doing this sort of thing for years?

It is very difficult for some organizations to get much smaller subsidies. There are the organizations which help people without any profit to themselves. This year's estimates, for example, list the grants given to the Canadian Foundation on Alcoholism, the Canadian Mental Health Association, the Canadian Paraplegic Association, the Canadian Public Health Association, the Canadian Red Cross Society, the Canadian Tuberculosis Association, the Health League of Canada, the St. John Ambulance Association, the Traffic Injury Research Foundation and the Victorian Order of Nurses.

Taken together, all these organizations received a grand total of $172,000—an infinitesimal fraction of the $33.1 million handed over to Canadian Pacific Railway whose net profit last year was $55,772,000. Why the difference in treatment? The recent statement on income security issued by the National Council of Welfare refers to the inconsistency of our programs with our professed values. It compares welfare payments to various types of recipients—mothers on welfare, foster parents and others. Then it comments as follows:

> But if welfare payments to foster mothers are more than three times what welfare payments to assistance recipients are, they are still modest compared to payments to the real beneficiaries of government welfare programs, the corporate rich. Only these aren't called welfare programs. They are called things like "economic growth incentives". These payments—mining subsidies, tariff supports, tax incentives—represent regressive income transfer programs, money taxed from the poor and near-poor and given to the rich.

It seems to me that Canadian Pacific Railway has been a very fortunate social assistance recipient for years. The National Council of Welfare thinks it is time we extended this kind of welfare state to include the poor. But no, not this government! The National Council of Welfare goes on to say:

> Rather than provide money to people, we give it to companies on condition they will use it to create jobs (along with profits). Under the Regional Development Incentives Act—through which IBM for example, received a grant of $6 million and all told more than $125 million has already been given away to corporations—we provide subsidies averaging more than $6,150 per job and running as high as $30,000 per job. And we continue to pour money into industrial support schemes, notwithstanding the spectacular record of failures and wastages of taxpayer money chalked up by government-assisted industries.

Of course, what the National Council of Welfare wants to see is a guaranteed income adequate to enable full participation in the Canadian society by every member of that society. We can afford it, but only if we stop subsidizing the corporate rich who don't need it, by the various devices which are used to give social assistance to the wealthy CPR and others.

Now I should like to hear the parliamentary secretary's answer to the question raised by the senior students of Killarney secondary school in Vancouver: Why was it necessary for the federal government to take $33.1 million of the taxpayers' money and give it to Canadian Pacific Railway, whose net income for 1970 was $55,772,000?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, since this matter was raised by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) a number of weeks ago I have had an opportunity to take a look at the annual report from which figures were quoted.

The hon. member will recall that substantial changes were made to the National Transportation Act in 1967 which attempted to further rationalize financial assistance provided by the federal government to our national rail lines, in the public interest. The $33.1 million which was mentioned represents what is known as the normal payment by the federal government to Canadian Pacific Railway for 1969, not 1970. In 1970 the sum was reduced to $27.4 million, and it will be reduced again this year and again in each succeeding year to 1974 when the authority for such payments will expire under the act.

If the hon. member would like a detailed account of the approach adopted by Parliament to this matter I would refer her to section 469 of the act. When the act was passed "normal payment" was defined as follows:

—the payment that would have been made to a railway company for a year if the sum specified in subsection (2) for that year was available to be divided among the eligible companies as a parliamentary appropriation to reimburse eligible companies for maintaining the level of rates for freight traffic at a level that would satisfy Order No. 101055 of the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada dated April 27, 1960.

Mr. Speaker, without attempting to explain the order referred to I would draw the hon. member's attention again to the fact that total normal payments are declining by the amount of $12 million per year to 1974, at which point they will end. These matters are technical and are somewhat difficult to explain without going into a great deal of detail. However, I hope my explanation has been of some assistance to the hon. member, and for more detail I am sending her a copy of section 469 of the act to which I have referred.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—LETTING OF CONTRACTS WITHOUT COMPETITIVE TENDERING

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, on April 30 I asked the following question of the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Richardson):

Since $1.8 million was paid to one consultant firm for federal contracts in the last two years without competitive tendering, can the minister indicate what guarantees there may be against abuses in awarding contracts on the basis of non-competitive tendering?

Mr. Speaker suggested at that time the question was somewhat wide in scope, hence the reason for debating it tonight. In answer to question No. 675, which was an inquiry of the minister, I received certain figures. Perhaps I should put the question on the record. It was:

1. How many federal contracts have been let to the consulting firm of Kates, Peat and Marwick, in 1968 and 1969 (a) what was the total cost of the contracts in 1968 (b) what was the total cost of the contracts in 1969?

2 How many of these contracts for consulting services were awarded by competitive tender?

3. Were there any contracts let to the firm of Kates, Peat and Marwick concerning the survey of coal reserve estimates in any part of Canada and, if so, in what areas?

In response to that inquiry it was indicated that the Department of Agriculture had $20,350 with no tenders; CMHC, $2,000 with no tenders; Consumer and Corporate Affairs, $3,525 with no tenders; Energy, Mines and Resources, $5,000 with no tenders; Department of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, $10,000 with no tenders; Industry, Trade and Commerce, $13,000, two on competitive tenders; again, Industry Trade and Commerce, $65,200 with two contracts, one of which was on the basis of a tender; Manpower and Immigration, $40,020, no competitive tenders; the department of the minister responsible for housing, $5,000, no tenders; National Defence, $30,000 were tendered; Treasury Board, $320 with no tenders; National Health and Welfare, $23,108 with no tenders; National Revenue, $9,500 with one competitive tender.

[Mr. Duquet.]

The next one I cannot make out, but it amounted to $294,475, involving three contracts, one on a competitive tender basis. Then, the Privy Council, $4,000 with no tenders; the Public Staff Relations Board, $8,700 with no tenders. Then we have the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, with two contracts amounting to $17,500, one on a competitive tender; the Department of the Secretary of State, $9,145 with no tenders; and the Department of Transport, with $1,523,173 with no competitive tenders. Canadian Transport Commission, $46,795, no competitive tender; the National Harbours Board, $11,800, one competitive tender; Treasury Board, $113,700, no competitive tender.

This amounted to $2,256,311. These figures amount to close to $2 million in respect of which there was no competitive tendering. Mr. Speaker, the main reason behind this question is to find out whether or not there have been any abuses in respect of tendering, when so few competitive bids are called for. I am not questioning the firm involved at this time or the ones granted the $2,256,311 in contracts, but it does make one wonder why that one firm with no competitive tendering is allowed to obtain so much of the taxpayer's money. There would appear to be a sharp increase in non-competitive tendering and the people of Canada are entitled to know the reason for granting contracts without competitive tendering.

We ask whether contracts should not be granted based on merit, and should they not be granted based on equality and fairness to all consulting firms. How can Canadian-managed and owned consulting firms establish themselves if they are not given an opportunity to bid on contracts? Who has the right to determine ability, in so far as consulting companies are concerned, to bid on these contracts? I suggest departments should not have the right to determine who should have an opportunity to obtain this type of contract.

I suggest Canadians are entitled to protection from being scalloped, and the only way this can be done—I agree there may be a few exceptions—is to put contracts up for competitive tendering. I am sure no one in this country would like to think that pork-barrel politics are involved in this type of non-competitive tendering. Therefore, I would ask the parliamentary secretary, who is kind enough to be here this evening, why so many contracts have been let on a non-competitive tendering basis and why there appears to be an increase in this type of non-competitive tendering in so many departments of government.

Mr. Alastair Gillespie (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to reply to the hardworking member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You are a man of perspicuity.

Mr. Gillespie: He has shown an impressive interest in management consulting, although whether or not he feels the government should benefit from the services of management consultants was not altogether clear to me. On receiving notice of his question I did my own research and a little management consulting. I hope I shall be able to answer his question this evening.

Mr. Skoberg: Did you hire somebody?

Mr. Gillespie: There was no competitive tendering on this one. The basic principle, of course, is that on all contracts tenders must be called unless there are good reasons for not calling them. There are a number of safeguards to the system of awarding contracts throughout the government service. They are prescribed in government contract regulations issued under authority of the Financial Administration Act.

Tenders must be called except in specified circumstances such as—there are three examples I can cite—when the need is urgent, when there is only one source of supply, or when the value of the contract is small and the cost to both the taxpayer or the unsuccessful contractor is out of all proportion to the value of the contract itself. I believe hon. members would agree that these combine both the principles of control on the one hand and concern for the public purse and the necessary flexibility in managing a giant enterprise.

In the case of awards of contracts to management consultants, price competition alone is only one of the selection criteria. There is a directive on this subject issued by the Treasury Board. It instructs all departments to obtain proposals where possible. These are judged on the basis of eight factors included in the directive. I should like to say, also, that this policy has the endorsement of the Canadian Association of Management Consultants. A registry of qualified firms is maintained by the board. I think it is also important to add that the firms themselves evaluate their own capabilities for entry in this registry.

The hon. member read into the record this evening the summary of the return tabled the other day in the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The time allotted to the parliamentary secretary has expired.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.20 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MACDONALD (EGMONT)—ACCURACY OF HANSARD REPORT OF ANSWER BY MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege. I received yesterday's Hansard just a few moments ago so it was not possible to give Your Honour notice of my question. In looking at yesterday's Hansard I note that when the Minister of Justice replied to my question in which I asked him whether there would be a presumption of guilt, on the same basis as in the public order legislation, with respect to the bill of rights which he is shortly to introduce he said that the government was again going to pursue a presumption of guilt. This has been rewritten in yesterday's Hansard—I am not sure by whom, to read:

Mr. Speaker, the assumption is again wrong. We have always held the presumption of innocence as paramount.

I am sure that along with myself many other hon. members heard the minister yesterday afternoon when he spoke in the House, and while he may not have meant to say what in fact he did say, he did say it. I think that this trespasses upon the rights of members to have an accurate reflection of the debates and comments made in the House. I hope Your Honour will take steps to provide an accurate rendition.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member knows the situation. It is rather difficult to change Hansard after it has been published. When the minister is in the House perhaps he might give an explanation. I might say in all honesty that what I heard the minister say was not what the hon. member heard, but I have not reflected on it at all, of course, and I may easily be wrong. I will listen to the tape which is available to the Chair. Perhaps that might be considered to be the authority, and eventually when Hansard is published officially the exact words of the minister will be reported accordingly.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of privilege. Every Member in the House yesterday heard the Minister of Justice give his answer. He obviously made a slip of the tongue and as soon as the words were uttered he corrected them. He did so publicly and every member here heard him. Obviously, the hon. member is being very small.

• (11:10 a.m.)

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): On a point of order, I am very grateful to have the Prime Minister's confirmation of the exact rendition of what did transpire. All I am asking is that the correct rendition of what was said be reflected in Hansard. That is all I am asking for.

INTERPROVINCIAL MARKETING—QUEBEC LEGISLATION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion which I consider to be of urgent and pressing necessity. This matter concerns the amendments to the Quebec Agricultural Products and Food Act and the Quebec Agricultural Marketing Act, which go into effect immediately and enable the government of Quebec to close the Quebec borders to the farm products of other provinces as of now, and the failure of the federal government to assert and protect the principle of free trade between provinces which is guaranteed by the constitution.

Therefore, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask unanimous consent to move, seconded by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner):

That in the opinion of this House the government should give immediate consideration to exercising its jurisdiction in this area under the residual powers of the BNA Act, until such time as the matter has been resolved by the Supreme Court or by this Parliament.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion which requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, before we leave the order for motions I wonder if the Minister of Transport has any statement to make concerning pension changes by the Canadian Pacific Railway?

Mr. Jamieson: No.

HEALTH

MEDICARE—ONTARIO INVESTIGATION OF BILLING BY DOCTORS—FEDERAL ACTION TO PREVENT ABUSES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. In view of the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, in view of the startling reports that have prompted the provincial Minister of Health in Ontario to investigate the basic operation of the billing aspects of the medicare program in that province, and in view of the danger of a clear loss of respect both for the medical profession and for the medicare plan itself, can the Prime Minister inform the House exactly what measures are being pursued and exactly what steps are being taken so that the national medicare program will not be seriously abused and so that many needy people will not in this way be inadvertently deprived of the services of the medical profession?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on this general subject of shared cost programs like medicare, where the federal government pays 50 cent dollars—permits the provinces to spend 50 cent dollars—

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Did you get that?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The Prime Minister is being honest.

Mr. Trudeau: —the federal government has impressed upon the provinces the importance for them to keep these expenses under control. This applies not only to medicare but to post-secondary education, hospital grants, and so on. In all these areas where the federal taxpayer is paying 50 per cent of the cost of provincial programs, or of national programs which are administered provincially, we have constantly impressed upon the provinces the need to keep these costs under control. I am glad they are beginning—I should not say "beginning" because some time back they have indicated their strong desire to co-operate in this area.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): In view of the fact, as the Prime Minister indicated, that the federal government does participate on a 50 per cent basis in this program, can he indicate whether or not the office of the Auditor General has been directed to conduct a full investigation into the operations of the medicare program and, if the government has not directed the Auditor General to do so, can he at least assure the House that he or the government will not impede the Auditor General from undertaking such an investigation should he think it necessary?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Pepin: Rewrite that now.

An hon. Member: Back to square one.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

SUGGESTED PENSION INCREASES FOR RETIRED EMPLOYEES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Transport did not have a statement to make on motions, can he tell the House whether the Canadian Pacific Railway has advised the government of changes it is proposing to make in its pension plan and, in particular, will these cover an increase in the pensions of CPR employees already retired?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have asked the Canadian Pacific Railway to let me have the details but they have not done so up to this time. I can tell the House, however, as I am sure the hon. member knows, that at the time when we agreed to the extension and improvement of pensions in the case of Canadian National Railways I conveyed to Canadian Pacific Railway our hope that this would prompt them to do likewise and, similarly, we made other arrangements with CPR which would enable them to do this. On the basis of the announcement made I can only assume that they have in fact complied with this request. I shall try to get specific details on just what they have arranged and make them available to the hon. member early next week.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. In granting extra time to the Canadian Pacific Railway to fund their plan and extending that time to 60 years, were any commitments given by the Canadian Pacific Railway that they would make some significant increase in benefits to those people already on pension?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker. The move was simply made to put the Canadian Pacific Railway on the same basis as Canadian National Railways.

Mr. Skoberg: In view of the fact that the plan announced by the Canadian Pacific Railway today did nothing significantly to increase pensions for those already drawing them, can the minister tell us whether he will take immediate action to make sure that the Canadian Pacific Railway will now move to do something for those people already on pension?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, my position in this regard must be that I put the Canadian Pacific Railway in the same position as Canadian National Railways in regard to making up arrears. Pension benefits are negotiable between employees of the CPR and the railway, not between the railway and me.

Mr. Skoberg: A further supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member may ask a final supplementary but I would remind hon. members that the question period is only 40 minutes in length.

Mr. Skoberg: Since those people already on pension have no means of negotiating and since the Canadian Pacific Railway is now basing its pension improvements on years of service instead of years of retirement as is done by the Canadian National Railways, will the minister personally intervene right now to do something to help those people already on pension?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's further supplementary question is very much like the previous one.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES MANIC LTD.—MEASURES TO PREVENT CLOSING

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Since, according to the reports received this morning, it seems obvious that the MANIC Co. of Granby—the only Canadian company building sports cars—is on the verge of bankruptcy and that the government has already given that company a grant of $344,000 representing the direct federal tax of $319 per car for a minimum production of 1,000 cars in the first year, is the Prime Minister aware of that eventual bankruptcy and does he intend to take the necessary steps to avoid it and prevent once more a Canadian company from becoming the property of foreign interests and more specifically of American interests for lack of the small amount of $400,000 which that industry would need to avoid bankruptcy?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member may ask a question but he may not make a speech.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The answer to the first question is no, Mr. Speaker. As for the second one, I can only say that I will study the matter.

AIRPORTS

CALGARY—DISCUSSIONS WITH ALBERTA CABINET MINISTERS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that questions have been put to him about the new Toronto International Airport and in view of the fact that yesterday one or more cabinet ministers from the province of Alberta were here, did any discussion take place with reference to the international airport in the city of Calgary which is so important to the province of Alberta and particularly to the petroleum industry because of the travel of personnel between the United States and Canada?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, so far as I am aware there were no conversations in Ottawa yesterday with visitors from Edmonton. Discussions took place between myself and His Worship, the Mayor of Edmonton, a week or so ago, and during this present week there have been discussions in Edmonton between officials of the Department of Transport, the city and various other organizations in the Edmonton area.

Mr. Woolliams: Has a decision been made at the federal government level about the international airport at Calgary, and has the matter now been referred to officials of the Alberta provincial government and officials of the city of Calgary?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to suggest that the hon. member is talking about the wrong airport. If he is talking about the industrial airport at Edmonton, as opposed to the international airport, may I say that the talks which have been going on have been related to the future use of the industrial airport in the city of Edmonton.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, may I ask one further question. Perhaps the minister will not able to answer it. Has there been conversation between the minister and the hon. member for Calgary South about extension of Calgary International Airport and the building of a new depot?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member cannot ask the minister whether he has had conversation with another member of the House.

[Later:]

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet may I apologize to the hon. member for Calgary North. I misunderstood him. During the past week there has been a great deal of discussion about the future of Edmonton's industrial airport. I was under the impression that that was the nature of the question. So far as the Calgary airport is concerned, I have had a request from the mayor of Calgary for a meeting with him, which I propose to agree to next week. I believe that the Minister of Highways for the province of Alberta will be accompanying him to that meeting. I am sorry I misunderstood the hon. member.

Mr. Woolliams: Thank you very much.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE ON MARKETING OF RAPESEED FROM PRODUCERS AND OTHERS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the minister responsible for the Wheat

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not have them here with me now, but I am looking into the matter.

OIL

PROPOSED TANKER ROUTE BETWEEN ALASKA AND WEST COAST STATES—PROTECTION OF CANADIAN ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister arising from a statement made in Anchorage, Alaska, by the Deputy Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to the effect that Canada would be prepared to accept the west coast oil tanker route provided that full protection is given to the Canadian environment in adjacent regions. May I ask the right hon. gentleman what he would consider to be full protection of the Canadian environment if an oil tanker route were established between Alaska and the more southerly states of the United States?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of that statement.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member might like to rephrase his question. He has asked the Prime Minister to express an opinion and I would not think that in those terms the question is in order. I know that the matter is important. Perhaps the hon. member might like to rephrase his inquiry.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could rephrase the question this way: can the Prime Minister say whether Canada has officially indicated to the United States the terms and conditions which this country feels would be acceptable for the establishment of an oil tanker route on the Pacific between Alaska and other states of the United States?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am rather sure that Canada has not because we would not be empowered under law or writ to tell the United States how it can move oil on the high seas. I will have to look into the speech to which the hon. member referred and perhaps, ask the minister to answer the question in due course.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

INQUIRY AS TO REFERENCE OF CARR REPORT TO TRANSPORT COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim McNulty (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Transport if the Carr report will be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications for study?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would have no objection to that procedure at the appropriate time. We have released the report generally for consideration and discussion. If, after some of these representations are in, it appears that there is merit in having it discussed by the committee, certainly I would be more than pleased if that were done.

WHEAT—TRANSITIONAL PAYMENTS TO FARMERS

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Is he now in a position to inform the House when and how the $100 million will be paid to the farmers? Will it be paid on an acreage basis and how much per acre will be paid? Who will be able to receive payments?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the legislation is before the House. When the payments are to be made will depend, of course, upon the passage of that legislation. I hope that the payments can be made very quickly after royal assent has been given to the legislation. The qualifications of persons and the basis of the payments are all contained in the legislation.

Mr. Horner: I wish to pursue this a little further. Will the minister not consider making the payments even before the legislation is passed? This money is urgently required before seeding, and the minister took so long to introduce the legislation. It should have been introduced months ago.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

BILINGUAL DISTRICTS—AMENDMENTS OF STATUTE TO INCLUDE URBAN CENTRES

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): My question is for the Prime Minister. Is it the intention of the government to bring in amendments to the Official Languages Act to give effect to the recommendation of the Bilingual Districts Advisory Board so that certain major urban centres in Canada which are now excluded from becoming bilingual districts may become bilingual districts?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The Secretary of State has explained to the House that, the report having been tabled, the government is now studying it and that no action can be taken before the expiration of 90 days. Until that time expires, the government cannot legally take any action. By then we will have studied the report, and we will make such announcements as are required in due course.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Does the Prime Minister not agree that, apart from the actual implementation of the recommendations presently before the House, after the 90-day period has expired it is not impossible for the government to put on the order paper additional recommendations that will give effect to some of these recommendations specifically with regard to urban areas?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's supplementary is in the form of a suggestion or submission.

PRAIRIE PROVINCES—ACTION TO IMPROVE NET FARM INCOME

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): I wish to direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the figures that have just been released by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics which show that net farm income in Saskatchewan has dropped by 56 per cent in the past two years and in view of the fact that bills before the House will do little to seriously alter that situation, is the Prime Minister contemplating any emergency action to try to improve the farm income picture in western Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will recognize that he has invited the Prime Minister, or someone on behalf of the government, to make a rather general statement. He might inquire whether such a statement will be made on motions in due course.

Mr. Nystrom: In that case, may I ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement indicating whether he is planning any legislation to improve the farm income picture in western Canada in a serious way?

Mr. Horner: Call the by-election.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): As the hon. member for Crowfoot said a moment ago, there is a proposed sum of $100 million in the offing, if the opposition can get on with the business of passing these bills.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Horner: I rise on a question of privilege. That legislation was first proposed in the House on October 29. Why did the minister not bring it in months ago? He did not have it drafted. We have not held it up.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that during the question period we are now discussing legislation which is otherwise before Parliament. That is not in order.

PUBLIC SERVICE

BILINGUAL PROGRAM—USE OF DELEGATED AUTHORITY—FEARS EXPRESSED BY HEADS OF EMPLOYEES' ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): My question is for the President of the Treasury Board. What action is the government taking with regard to the fears expressed by Mr. Edwards of the Public Service Alliance and Mr. Barnes of the Professional Institute of the Public Service suggesting that the government's bilingual program for public servants is becoming bicultural and also that the use of delegated authority by government departments is compromising the merit system and introducing a form of patronage?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the conclusions drawn by the hon. member or the hypotheses of his question about the bilingual program are not well-founded. In relation to the second part of his question, I think the hon. member knows this was the subject of discussion in a parliamentary committee. The Treasury Board is now looking into it.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SUGGESTED AGREEMENT TO LIMIT DEBATE ON FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING BILL

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Privy Council.

In view of recently announced policies of Quebec and Ontario regarding the marketing of certain farm products and since in my opinion Bill C-176 could have corrective effects and opposition parties are anxious to arrive at an agreement, would the President of the Privy Council approach them in order to reach an agreement to limit debate on Bill C-176, which would demonstrate our determination to serve the best interests of Canadian farmers?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question sounds more like a submission or recommendation. I do not think it can be accepted as a question. I have some doubts whether or not we are straying somewhat from the recognized practice of not anticipating an order of the day.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to change the form of his question?

Mr. La Salle: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

I should like to ask the President of the Privy Council whether he could meet with the representatives of the opposition parties so as to decide, upon common agreement, to restrict the debate on Bill C-176?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I shall continue my consultations on this and other bills with the opposition.

AGRICULTURE

FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING BILL—SUGGESTED REFERENCE TO SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): In light of the Prime Minister's answer with regard to Bill C-176, which he feels can remedy the present situation of no free trade between the provinces, I should like to ask him whether he is prepared to refer that bill to the Supreme Court of Canada to determine whether it is intra vires or ultra vires and thus confirm or otherwise the position he has taken in the House as to its constitutionality?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The bill is before the House. Surely the proper procedure is for the House to adopt the bill and then, if some citizens believe it to be ultra vires, they can refer it to the Supreme Court. The government of Canada obviously drafted the bill with the advice of its legal officers and we have presented a bill which in our view is fully constitutional. I find it strange that when we are being told by many provinces that this bill is needed to remedy the situation, the opposition—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think I should interfere unduly, but it seems to me we are again, as we did yesterday for a good part of the question period, engaging in a debate on Bill C-176 which is otherwise before the House.

Mr. Woolliams: May I ask one more supplementary question, because this is important. We shall not even have a parliament if confederation breaks up, and that is what we are talking about. I should like to put this question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact there are plenty of precedents for the government of Canada asking the Supreme Court to determine the constitutionality of legislation would the Prime Minister be prepared to take such a course—yes or no?

Mr. Trudeau: The answer is no. I must add, Mr. Speaker, that it is difficult to understand how, the government having proposed a measure which would precisely prevent the balkanization of Canada—

Mr. Horner: You will balkanize Canada.

Mr. Trudeau: A request for marketing boards by the agricultural section of the economy has been made at least since I have been around, and now the government is at last moving forward with such a bill. The government has caused it to bog down for more than a year in the House and now they are suggesting it be delayed further by the making of a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members will be recognized, but we have to give others an opportunity to ask questions.

[Later:]

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I was talking about slips of the tongue and I am told I made one a moment ago. Perhaps I might be allowed to correct it. It had to do with Bill C-176.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Mr. Horner: Don't misrepresent it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You were right the first time.

Mr. Trudeau: Apparently I said it had been slowed down by the government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Everyone knows that it is the hon. member for Crowfoot in particular who has been slowing it down.

STATUS OF WOMEN

IMPLEMENTATION OF COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. As it is some time since I inquired about the intention of the government with regard to the recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women, may I inquire whether the right hon. gentleman is now in a position to give a progress report and tell us what the government intends to do?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I did say, the last time I answered the question, that the government had taken steps to make sure that each department was examining the report to ensure that its legislation and its policy reflected the studies of the commission. I might add that this needs co-ordination at the ministerial level, and I have asked the energetic Minister without Portfolio responsible for housing to ensure this co-ordination between the various departments.

CITIZENSHIP

EXTENSION TO CHILDREN THROUGH MOTHER AS WELL AS FATHER

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): May I direct a question to the Minister of Immigration. Does his department intend to extend right of citizenship through the mother as well as through the father to children who are in need of such status?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): That question should properly be directed to the Minister without Portfolio responsible for citizenship when he is in the House.

HOUSING

SUGGESTED DECREASE IN INTEREST RATE FOR PEOPLE ON LOW INCOMES

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister without Portfolio responsible for housing.

Could he say whether, under the housing program for 1971, loans with a decreasing rate of interest may be provided for low-income people as regards the building of single dwellings?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): We have entered into reciprocal or co-operative arrangements with some of the provinces in cases in which those provinces are applying interest rebates. The province of Quebec, for instance, has a program whereby it joins with purchasers of low income cost homes to provide a 3 per cent interest rebate and we are working out arrangements with other provinces along these lines. I hope to be able to make an announcement shortly.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

I do not think the minister understood my question. I am not referring to the interest rebates offered by the provinces, but to the loans at a decreasing rate down to 7½ per cent granted by the government for the construction of apartment buildings or row housing.

I would like to know whether the minister may also grant loans at a decreasing rate down to 7½ per cent for the construction of single dwellings.

[English]

Mr. Andras: We have not made federal government loans through CMHC at the rate of interest to which the hon. member has referred. We have made loans at interest rates lower than market cost under section 16 of the act and, in some cases, under section 40 of the act, but never at rates lower than those permitted under section 16. Therefore, the interest rates to which the hon. member refers must reflect participation by the provincial government.

SPECIAL CREDITS FOR MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a supplementary to the Prime Minister.

Could he tell the House whether the Union of Municipalities has asked the federal government to grant funds to municipalities for certain projects? I know that the minister responsible for housing is directly involved, and I was hoping that this morning he would give us an answer—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member should give the minister an opportunity to answer this question.

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I really cannot deal with the precise points the hon. member has raised because I do not quite understand them. All I can say is we were successful in discussing last week in Winnipeg, with the provincial ministers of municipal affairs and representatives of municipal governments, arrangements and a commitment concerning tri-level consultation on a whole range of matters involving urbanization and urban problems. The question of grants, if that is what the hon. member is referring to, was not dealt with in any specific way.

FINANCE

STORAGE OF COMPUTER DATA ON ECONOMY IN UNITED STATES DATA BANKS

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Is the hon. gentleman now in a position to say whether or not data on the Canadian economy is being stored in United States data banks?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Ryan: A supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Can the hon. gentleman assure the House that the census data will not be stored in United States data banks?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I will look into it. I suggest the answer given by the Minister of Finance will apply in this case, but I will try to secure confirmation.

PUBLIC SERVICE

DELAY IN SIGNING AGREEMENT WITH SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH GROUP

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the long process of collective bargaining which has gone on with the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada with regard to the scientific research groups, since August 7, 1970, can the minister say why Treasury Board has delayed signing the final agreement?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether there was any delay but I shall make an inquiry and advise the hon. member.

Mr. Bell: I hope the minister will reply because I understand some members who have shown good will in this regard are annoyed by the thought that this is another way by which Treasury Board is frustrating this method of collective bargaining.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

BILINGUAL DISTRICTS—RECONSIDERATION OF CERTAIN AREAS—CRITERIA TO BE USED

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister a question relating to the establishment of bilingual districts as recommended by the advisory board. My question relates specifically to areas suggested for reconsideration such as the city of Thompson, Manitoba. If reconsideration is given to these areas suggested by the board, will this be based on the criteria of the Official Languages Act or will additional criteria be taken into consideration?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I cannot answer the question beyond what I answered a moment ago, that we have 90 days to study this report. I prefer not to hypothesize as to what the government might do. I apologize if I did not understand some subtlety of the question, but unless there is a specific supplementary that is as far as I can go.

Mr. Simpson: Is the Prime Minister in a position at this time to say whether the government is considering any additional criteria to those contained in the Official Languages Act?

Mr. Trudeau: Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker. It may be that the Secretary of State has a memorandum which he will submit to cabinet as a result of his study of this report, but as far as I know there are no further criteria at present before the cabinet.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct to the Prime Minister a question which is supplementary to the one asked by my colleague the member for Churchill.

Why is it that the Commissioner has not considered the province of Ontario as one bilingual district the way he did with the province of Quebec?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that it is provided in the act that a Board is to be established in order that the government be relieved from having to make such decisions on a political basis and in order that the Board may consider the problems objectively. The hon. member could perhaps read the report and then find for himself the reason why the result has been as published by the Board.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a further supplementary.

Could the Prime Minister tell us whether he intends to take steps in order to protect the rights of French-speaking minorities in Ontario?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the Official Languages Act which was passed by Parliament is precisely to guarantee the linguistic rights of French and English-speaking minorities throughout the country. The hon. member knows that this act provides that this must be done on a practical basis and that for that purpose it is necessary to establish bilingual districts. These bilingual districts will be established in the light of the report of the Board, and I am sure that the hon. member will be invited to express his views at that time.

SURVEILLANCE OF EAST COAST FISHING ZONES BY ARMED FORCES' CRAFT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in view of the resolution passed at the recent meeting of the Fisheries Council of Canada calling upon the government to increase its surveillance of our east coast fishing zones, I should like to ask whether in fact surveillance by armed forces' air and surface craft is continuing and whether this surveillance will be kept up during this peak fishing season?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, surveillance is continuing, particularly by Tracker aircraft. In respect of the long-range intention, I hope to be able to speak at some length on this when the white paper is presented to the House.

WESTERN CANADA—GOVERNMENT LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM—MEANING OF STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. It is based on a news release under today's date from his office. It refers to objections by the opposition to the Liberal government's agricultural legislative program and says that it would cost the western farmers $100 million this year if our opposition continues.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McIntosh: I ask the minister to elaborate on this statement by informing the House whether this is a threat of closure in regard to our actions in opposition to the agricultural program, or is it legislation by intimidation?

URBAN AFFAIRS

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR MASS TRANSIT

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, in view of the $10 billion program the United States government has initiated in respect of mass transit in urban areas in the United States, can the minister who reports to the House on urban affairs inform the House what, if any, program he has in mind for Canada along this line?

Mr. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, any consideration in respect of federal assistance for mass transit would involve many departments of the government, most particularly the Department of Transport. All I can say is that the whole question of urban problems, as I indicated a few minutes ago, including mass transit and many other factors, will be a subject of discussion and consultation and, ultimately, decision. There is no precise legislative program now that directly involves the federal government in financial participation for mass transit.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is likely the sequence in which they will be presented to the House.

TRANSPORT

SPECIAL FREIGHT RATE ASSISTANCE TO MARITIME SHIPPERS TO REPLACE STATUTORY SUBSIDY

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I directed a question to the Minister of Transport on March 26 inquiring whether the government was taking any action on a federal-provincial recommendation in respect of special assistance in the form of subsidies. At that time the parliamentary secretary said the department was considering this and would probably announce something soon. Has a program for special assistance been drawn up and, if so, when will the minister announce it?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I always have difficulty with this kind of question because there is special assistance of one type or another being extended on an ad hoc basis on a more or less day to day basis. In so far as consultations with the provinces are concerned, these are continuing. Within the last two or three days there have been consultations with the province of New Brunswick on one aspect of transport. If the hon. member has some specific form of assistance in which he is interested, I will do my best to answer his inquiry.

FINANCE

STORAGE OF COMPUTER DATA ON ECONOMY IN UNITED STATES DATA BANKS—BANK OF CANADA RECORDS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to one asked as few minutes ago by the hon. member for Spadina concerning the storage of Canadian economic data in computer banks in the United States. Will the Minister of Finance indicate whether his negative answer also applies to Bank of Canada records? If he is unable to answer that question at the moment, will he undertake to ascertain what the situation is in respect of the Bank of Canada?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the same answer would apply but I will check this out with the Bank of Canada. Perhaps I should extend my earlier answer by saying that data which is public can be stored by anyone anywhere. Data issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, for example, which is published can be stored anywhere by anybody who wants to do so because it is public data.

SUGGESTED SALE OF SWORDFISH TO OTHER COUNTRIES

Hon. My department has studied all major markets for swordfish to determine the possibility of sales. Most European countries have established administrative guidelines setting tolerance levels for mercury content in fish the same as we have in Canada. These levels would effectively prohibit the import of nearly all available supplies of Canadian swordfish. Japan is the world's largest producer of swordfish and is encountering difficulties similar to those which Canada faces.

FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING BILL—SUGGESTED MEETING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND INTERESTED PARTIES

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister with regard to Bill C-176 and the impasse which he feels has been brought about by the hon. member for Crowfoot. Is he now prepared to sit down and meet with interested parties from across Canada to see whether or not the objectionable parts of the bill can be ironed out and agreement reached?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a series of meetings have been going on. I know that my parliamentary secretary was at a meeting a few days ago, which apparently was very successful, with the cattlemen. I myself the day before yesterday received a telegram from the Canadian Federation of Agriculture asking the government to proceed with the bill as quickly as possible. So apparently opinions are divided on this bill. That is usual in Parliament, but we feel that as the division has lasted more than a year perhaps it is time to get on with the business of counting heads.

Mr. Horner: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Crowfoot on a supplementary and then we will have just about reached the end of the question period. However, I shall also recognize the hon. member for Broadview.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, this is a quick supplementary arising out of the reply of the Prime Minister. With regard to counting heads, I wonder if he would now go along with the calling of a by-election in Assiniboia so the heads could be counted?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Broadview.

HOUSING

SUGGESTED LIFTING OF URBAN RENEWAL FREEZE

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister in charge of housing. Has the minister considered the recommendation of the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities with regard to the necessity of lifting the urban renewal freeze imposed by the government? Was this discussed in Winnipeg at the tri-level meeting and, if so, what steps does the government intend to take?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the recommendations from the brief of the CFMM were considered; it was discussed briefly during their presentation to cabinet a week or two ago. However, it was not discussed in Winnipeg because the Winnipeg meeting, by agreement of all concerned, was to deal with the basic fundamental decision with regard to entering into tri-level consultations and the agenda. Any precise program discussions were by agreement deferred until that precise question was answered.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Ryan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I was the member who was seeking to ask a supplementary and apparently you took it that is was the hon. member for Broadview. I wonder whether under the circumstances I may be permitted to ask a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: That was not the point. The hon. member for Broadview had been waiting 40 minutes for an opportunity to ask a question, supplementary or otherwise. The hon. member for Spadina had his opportunity, and if he will bear with the Chair and the House he might be given an opportunity to ask more questions and supplementaries on Monday. Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PRAIRIE GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

PROVISION FOR PAYMENTS TO WESTERN CANADA PRODUCERS IN YEARS WHEN RECEIPTS BELOW FIVE-YEAR AVERAGE

The House resumed, from Thursday, May 6, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang that Bill C-244, respecting the stabilization of prairie grain sale proceeds and to repeal or amend certain related statutes, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, last evening in the few minutes I had at my disposal I was beginning to point to the extreme importance attached by this government, as well as by the grain farmers of Canada, to marketing and market development. It was with that priority in mind we established special credit facilities for the Canadian Wheat Board which allowed the Canadian Wheat Board to move into markets such as Brazil, an important market into which we had not been for many years, and into markets like Peru, Syria and the Philippines in order to make sales of grain and to develop new customers for the over-all good of the grain industry.

It was also because of this that we emphasized continually the need to be competitive internationally and the need for Canadian farmers to concentrate on the possibilities which exist in the coarse grains market and in particular, because of the nature of the Canadian production at the moment, on the barley market. It has been our view that this is a market which should grow for us in the international field. We have been talking to farmers about growing barley. This would enable the Wheat Board to go after our potential share of this market. It was also because of our belief that marketing is so important that a fundamental part of our present program included the setting aside on an annual basis of $10 million for a market development fund, which would allow us to pursue in a most flexible way the encouragement of new customers to look to Canadian grains. It would allow us to look to research into new products and development of better products for the markets, and to assist in a variety of techniques for gaining a Canadian foothold in markets which may not be available to us at the moment or available on only a limited basis.

The market development fund of course is new. Before very long, however, I expect the first announcement to be made of the use of this fund in creating new marketing opportunities. Of course, the emphasis on marketing comes at a time when sales have been going very well. Last July, in an attempt to give farmers a better idea of the year ahead, I was able to forecast the very real possibility that our exports this year of all grains would reach a record total and would surpass the 685 million bushel level of many years ago. It continues to be very likely indeed that we will set this record, and that our exports may reach the 700 million bushel figure. At the present time, exports are running at a very good rate and stand well above the levels of a year ago. As of April 21, the total exports of grains stood at 430.9 million bushels compared to 267.1 million bushels a year ago. But, of course, in terms of the present year the important facts are the marketing program ahead.

The Canadian Wheat Board, with the co-operation of the railways and the elevator companies, particularly the terminals, has worked out a program which may well set a record both at Vancouver and at Thunder Bay in the course of the remaining months of this crop year. The block system is allowing a quick and efficient movement of grain when it is not impeded, of course, by forces over which we have little or no control. The delay in the opening of the seaway, one of the latest years on record, again has caused some concern in respect of our eastern program. But the Wheat Board is still confident that with the full co-operation which they have come to expect from the various agencies, 250 million bushels of grain will be moved from Thunder Bay to eastern destinations in the balance of the crop year.

This movement would be an all time record and would compare with the previous record of 221.8 million bushels which was established in the 1966 shipping season. This marketing has, of course, depended upon a sound movement of wheat and a record movement of barley as a result of our determination to be in this market, and also because of a very good movement of that new crop which has become such a successful contributor to income on the Prairies, the rapeseed crop. The record production is moving efficiently into market, and I pay tribute to all those who participate in making this market work so well.

While I emphasize the marketing aspects of our program, the fact that this year is an improved year, and that we will continue to strive for increased deliveries of grain into the markets of the world, the fact remains that there are strong forces at work which will create instability in our Canadian grains income in some situations unless measures like those before the House are put into effect.

The historic situation in regard to our marketing record shows why we must expect instability in grain income in Canada. World trade in grain is volatile. It is not at all unusual to see changes of 20 per cent or even close to 40 per cent in the amount of grain traded in the world, even in wheat alone in a given year. When one, for instance, looks at the figures for 1965-1966, one sees 2,298 million bushels of wheat traded in the world. Two years later, in 1967-1968, this figure had gone down in two stages to 1,876 million and one year later to 1,638 million bushels, a fantastic proportionate drop of 600 million bushels, or over a quarter of the total traded in 1965-66.

In that volatile market, of course, Canada's stake is very large. We would expect again to be at levels in the order of 23 per cent of the wheat traded in the world this year, and we tended to be there except for those two very difficult years when we tried, with the full support of the producers, to maintain prices at the levels indicated by the then new International Grains Arrangement.

Not only is our share of this market large, but the important thing is that the income of our grain producers is dependent upon our export trade. Here again, only one or two other nations come close to Canada in the extent to which export trade in grain dominates the grain picture. This has always been true for wheat, or as long as we have been significant wheat producers. It is not at all unusual for us to see five or six times as much grain being traded into the export market as can be utilized at home. This means, of course, that the volatility in the export market, the ups and downs in export, will mean serious ups and downs in the income of our grain producers. This has been more true of wheat than of barley, but as we move in our determination to an export barley market of magnitude, the same factors will tend to exist in that market as well, although it is true that that market is somewhat less volatile than the wheat market.

It is also true that with our growing interest in rapeseed, we will be dependent again upon the export market and subject to the ups and downs which may exist there in regard to rapeseed. There is no doubt that the diversifying of our exports from wheat, as it was in the past, to wheat, barley and rapeseed in the future may have some effect in improving our stability. But the instability will tend to exist, as the historic pattern shows. There is no secret about the logic as to why this should be. If you put together good crop conditions in the most important producing countries in the world, the trade in grain will change very remarkably as compared with another year where poor conditions may occur in those countries. In these circumstances, our grain trade will swing up and down remarkably from the good year to the bad year.

In the past we have basically had only two mechanisms for dealing with this instability in our export trade, and both of them were very limited in their availability. The first, which came to be used from time to time, was the pulling of grain into the elevator system beyond what might be required for commercial reasons and beyond what made sense from a real cost point of view. But in the desperate situation in which grain farmers found themselves over those years, this was a technique which was used. It had some seriously bad effects in that it impeded the efficient operation of our grain handling system which became storage conscious, and indeed so full of grain that it was not able to handle grain at maximum efficiency.

The Temporary Wheat Reserves Act which was brought in as a method of offsetting some costs in the agricultural community in the grain sector and which, when C. D. Howe was speaking about the legislation was referred to as, in his view, a better solution than a two price system as a means of obtaining money for the grain farmer, turned out over the years to accentuate the move toward putting grain into the system, whether or not it was required from a commercial point of view. This re-emphasized the tendency of having a full grain system which meant that grain could not be handled effectively, and it had the additional unfortunate effect that as the years went by it became more and more doubtful whether any of the good from the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act was being passed on to the farmer because more storage space was simply being built to make use of the greater amount of money which might be paid out under the act. It is true of course that at present our storage system is perhaps still more full of grain than one might like.

There have been some comments in recent days about the amount of grain in storage, with the emphasis on wheat. But the fact of the matter is that the total amount of grain in the country elevators is not much lower than it was a year ago. On April 1, the figures showed 307 million bushels of grain in the country elevators compared with 312.1 million bushels the year before. The mix of grain was different, reflecting the new position of barley and rapeseed, and indeed even the good marketing conditions for Durum and flax in this particular year.

Wheat storage was down by 50 million bushels, but the other grains were up by 45 million bushels in total. In these circumstances, we may well want to see some further reduction of the amount of grain in storage because the point that has to be made is that grain in commercial storage is often grain in an expensive position. Some figures by the Canadian Wheat Board on the cost in 1968-69 compared with 1969-70, of handling and storing barley are very instructive in this regard. In 1968-69 producers had delivered to the Wheat Board 75,317,000 bushels of barley. In 1969-70 they delivered over twice that amount, 163,447,113 bushels of barley.

In 1968-69 the total costs of storage and handling, including the interest rates and all the administrative charges of the Wheat Board for the handling of barley added up to $7,933,000. In 1969-70 when more than twice as much barley was taken into the system and put through the system, the cost of handling, storing and administering that barley was actually a smaller amount in total dollars than in 1968-69. The total was $7,449,583. This meant, on a comparative basis, on a per bushel basis the 1968-69 cost per bushel of barley was 10.53 cents, whereas in 1969-70 it was 4.55 cents, almost 6 cents lower as a dead weight cost, gained by the better proportion of through-put to storing the barley in the subsequent year.

This meant that there was available to the farmer in the second of those two years 6 cents more per bushel on every bushel of barley he delivered to the Wheat Board in that crop year. This is what has led the Board to conclude it should not, in the farmers' interest, carry too much wheat. But of course this was not a very effective method of stabilization in any case, because once the system was plugged, and it tended to be plugged prior to August 1, it was not possible in another year to fill the system because the farmers' income situation was particularly bad. So, the only other technique available was the one which was used particularly in the last crop year, and that was to make use of the cash advances system to allow the farmer to take more in advances than he would be able to repay in deliveries during the course of that year. This, as a way of getting cash into the farmers' hands, was in fact a tremendous help in the 1969-70 crop year, but of course the system of loans had its limitations, and indeed its difficulties from the point of view of the individual farmer.

We very much believe that the cash advances system still has an important purpose, but not by way of stabilizing income because we propose a different form of stabilization. The purpose, however, will continue to be one of obtaining cash for a farmer when delivery opportunities are not available. We foresee this happening less often because, as we see the system working now, we would hope it would not be plugged with grain as of August 1, and that grain deliveries during the harvest period, direct to the elevator, may be known again on our prairie farms.

What we propose to do, however, is to introduce through this bill a stabilization plan. This stabilization plan is effectively intended to make use of the kind of money which the government might otherwise in the past have paid out under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, although indeed it will involve more money from the government than would likely have been involved in the future under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act because of the intention and the necessity to maintain less wheat in the systems, and particularly on any August 1.

The stabilization plan is designed to obtain from the producer, on the basis of his marketing of the six principal grains, 2 per cent of their marketed value, and to match that amount with a 4 per cent payment by the government. The bill proposes in fact that particular formula for a five year period, subject to a review then to see how the fund itself is operating, but it does enshrine the principle that for every dollar going into the stabilization fund from the farmer $2 will go in from the federal treasury.

Because we have an alternative method for payment, or basing the payment on 90 per cent of marketings, the federal payment in any one year may be more than that. This really means, on the basis of the history of the past and on the projections of the likely stability in the future, payments to the farmer will tend to bring back to him $3 for every dollar he puts into the fund. In the first five years this will tend to assure, in other words, that whatever is the over-all level of grain income on the farms, the stabilization fund will mean that the farmers' income will be at 104 per cent, the 100 per cent from marketings, and the 4 per cent from the treasury, of what it otherwise would have been.

It is true we expect, as I have indicated, that our marketing thrust will tend to mean a rising level over a long period of time of gross receipts for grain. This means that the sales levels will generally be moving in an upward direction, as indeed they have in the past long period of time. But in that upward rising line of sales levels, history and logic teach us that there will be dips, serious drops to lower levels than a previous plateau. This is why we propose the payments out of the fund will be made in each year when the total receipts from those six principal grains in the prairie region fall below the previous five year average.

Now, I may rush to say that in any year where it is exactly 99 per cent, or closer to 100 per cent than that—

Mr. Korchinski: Dabbling in decimals.

Mr. Lang: —it is proposed that no payment be made. But in any year when the gross receipts are below 99 per cent, a payment will be made out of the fund to bring the producers' gross receipts up to 100 per cent of the average of the previous five years' gross receipts.

Mr. Korchinski: Dabbling in decimals.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister should be allowed to make his speech, and it seems to the Chair it would be difficult for him to make his speech with this kind of interruption.

Mr. Lang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The five year average was selected essentially as a measure of a recent record of grain receipts in the prairie region. There is no particular magic about a five-year figure, but it seems to me to be the best judgment between taking too short a period, in which case the ups and downs might be too severe, or taking too long a period, in which case the earlier years, which on the whole tend to be lower years in total grain receipts and would have too much adverse effect on the basis on which we operate.

The payments out to producers are proposed to be made on the basis of the producer's own recent participation in the market, that is to say, the payments out are to be made to producers basically in proportion to their recent share of the market. Again, as a judgment on what that recent share is, we propose after the fund has been operated for three years, to use the current year and the two preceding years as the best guide to what recent marketings are. We chose the three-year figure as a balance between taking the current year figure as the most accurate reflection in one sense of a person's place in the market, which could have many ups and downs, and a longer period than three years which might have carried forward into the scheme too many factors which no longer exist in his producing picture.

We did not want to add a factor which would in any way discourage the need for a farmer to make the best possible decision about what to plant, about how to farm, in order to maximize in an ordinary year his marketing opportunities. Initially, we propose to put into the plan the $15,000 limit. This is referred to in the bill in terms of a figure which ordinarily will maintain within the plan approximately 90 per cent of the total receipts in the prairie region. It is anticipated that as need arises, the $15,000 limit which will be proposed for the first year will be adjusted to keep approximately 90 per cent of the total receipts within the plan.

Essentially, what we are saying to them is that those grain receipts produced by farmers on farms larger than a $15,000 delivery need not attract the treasury support which is contained in the stabilization plan. In other words, we are really saying that while we are delighted to see the treasury money, government money, going to the assistance of the income levels of farmers up to a certain size, and even to the operators of large farms up to that size, we do not propose that that same government money should go in a way which might encourage the farmers to grow more than may be required from the point of view from a basic, effective and efficient operation.

This leads me to say how much this emphasizes this government's real belief in the desirability of maintaining farming as a viable and effective way of life. It is very true that it is our belief that we should try to assure that the total system, where the government has any control, should be made as effective as possible to maximize returns to those involved in farming. I want to state, as a fundamental matter of our philosophy, that we do not in any way have the view that anyone should be made to move off a farm if he chooses to live on it. I want to state that most categorically, and I hope all members opposite will remember this firm statement of our view. The decision about how many people want to farm is essentially to be made by the people involved in farming.

I think it important and I urge hon. members opposite to give up their constant reference to some malicious intention on the part of the government.

An hon. Member: That is pretty cheap politics.

Mr. Lang: I urge them to give this up because, not only is it cheap politics as my colleague says, but it is calculated to increase the despair and hopelessness in any group of farmers who know what their difficulties are well enough. I urge the opposition to recognize, as we do, that we should try to offer alternatives and opportunities to farmers in difficulty. We must offer to those who want to stay with farming the means to become more viable if their units are too small or where their need is for capital investment in order to diversify. We must also offer to those who want to leave farming, decent opportunities and information about what may be available elsewhere. I want to emphasize to hon. members, and the people of Canada, our belief that the men and women who want to continue to live on farms and raise their families there will do so with our assistance to make them more effective and efficient and with our assistance to put the whole matter of handling and transportation as well as the rest of the system as it pertains to them into the best possible shape.

In the bill before us there is a section dealing with a transitional payment which is related to the fact that in this Act we are proposing the repeal, for this crop year, the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act and the government's obligation under it and the fact that the stabilization fund is not yet in effect. In our earliest proposals there was the implication that we might try to treat this year as though the stabilization fund were in effect for the purposes of payout. In the long and fruitful discussions we had with farm organizations, and their leaders, however, we came to the conclusion that it would be better not to try to tie the payout to the stabilization fund formula this year. For one thing, the figures would not be available in time or in full, and for another it seemed possible this year to allow the payout to go not only to those farmers who had been marketing their full share but to those who had experienced special difficulties and, therefore, had not participated in the market as fully. It would be wrong to tie that kind of feature into a future scheme because of the way it might interfere with marketing judgments and decisions, but for this year it was possible. Here again, we believe it was right, in looking at eligible permit holders, to limit the number of acres upon which payment could be obtained to 640 acres per permit holder. This reflects not a scientific judgment about the size of a grain operation but a ball park figure which comprehends the wide range of sizes in the prairie region and is a figure related to the grain industry rather than those operations which are essentially involved in other agricultural products.

We propose that the payout be based on eligible acres, those acres in the six principal grains and in summer fallow. It would also include, however, those acres in new forage crops added last year because of the special encouragements in existence then. It would be unfair to declare those acres ineligible now. Essentially, the acres eligible are those acres which are related to the grain production involved in the stabilization fund of the future. On this basis, as soon as the legislation has received Royal Assent, we hope to issue cheques to all permit holders who had their permit books prior to March 1. We estimate at this time that the per acre payment may be $1.40 per acre eligible. This will result in an important infusion of cash into the prairie scene. I say this because, although grain deliveries have been moving at a much better rate this year than last, and even after allowing for the repayment of cash advances and the fact that the cash flow situation at this point of time is better than it has been on the prairies and will be much better in the remaining three months, there is still a serious backlog of cash deficiencies on the Prairies as a result of difficulties of past years.

The important thing that we see in the bill, however, is what it plans for the future. Under these plans a farmer will know that whatever may come to him in any year as a result of marketing conditions in that year, his income will not fall drastically; that, so long as he is participating in an average way with other farmers in that marketing, he will in those difficult years receive a payment from the fund which will bring his income up, along with that of others, to that level represented by the total five-year average of gross receipts from grain. Although we call this a stabilization plan, it is important to know that, really, it will stabilize matters in bad years by wiping out the low point. It will not destroy the high points which can still come about. Very good years of marketing will still bring extremely good returns for the grain producer. It is the low points which are to be removed.

It was felt possible, in connection with this legislation, to repeal the Prairie Farm Assistance Act over a three year period. We shall propose phasing out the 1 per cent contribution under PFAA, beginning with the 1971-72 crop year. Benefits under PFAA will still be available in that crop year and in the following year, as well as in those years in which crop insurance is not available.

It is our hope and for sometime has been our hope, that the very useful federally supported crop insurance plans will be more and more extended through provincial action to all parts of the prairie region. We see this legislation as another important part in our total plan to put agriculture on the Prairies into a better position. I urge hon. members to help in the passing of this legislation and to see that it becomes law, so that on the earliest possible date the cash payments involved may be made. Mr. Speaker, I am most pleased to move the second reading of this bill and its referral to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the minister's remarks about this bill. Contrary to what I said the other day, I think notice may now be sent to Mr. Thatcher that he can call an election. I understand that $100 million is up for grabs.

One ought not to be disillusioned too readily. Nevertheless, the amount of money to be paid out is not nearly as great as the government tries to pretend. This legislation is really a mirage in the making, or the result of excessive imagination. It is the result of the government's hallucinations. This government is capable of imagining things that are not correct. It suggests that it really wants to save an industry. I wonder. I remember what former Prime Minister Pearson once said. He said, "You know, when you have a half rotten egg, it is hard to know what part to discard? Which part of it do you discard?". That is precisely what this legislation is like. It is typical of the sort of legislation this government has brought before this House. This legislation is half rotten or half-baked and is typical of the legislation this government has presented to this House.

Mr. Pepin: And that is a half-baked argument.

Mr. Korchinski: The point is that the appropriate message ought to be sent to Mr. Thatcher. Although I referred to the possibility of a grant concerning a pulp-mill, I think the government was actually trying to get out of a difficulty as a result of the controversy over Bill C-176 and other measures which have been brought forward.

Mr. Pepin: Good Lord, what an argument.

Mr. Korchinski: So, we find ourselves in this situation: the government is trying to buy votes on the Prairies, one by one.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Pepin: Good Lord, what a thing to say.

Mr. Korchinski: On the basis of my contact with farmers in western Canada, I am able to say that farmers have enough intelligence to read between the lines. I do not think they will be bought by legislation like this.

Mr. McBride: Clearly, the hon. member does not want farmers to be helped. Why does he not visit my riding in Ontario?

Mr. Korchinski: I heard my preacher friend across the way asking why I do not visit Ontario. I suggest that he might do well to listen to my remarks. I say that the government is paying out conscience money. That is all that this is, conscience money. According to Mr. Atkinson—

An hon. Member: You don't know the western farmer, Stan.

Mr. Korchinski: —and others who are in a position to make these observations, in the last two years western farmers have lost as much as $500 million as a result of government policies. The answer to question 1,020 in my name on the order paper suggests that the amount in question is over $600 million. In other words, that is the amount of the gross shortage in western Canada and the government is trying to make it up by paying $100 million to our farmers. I do not think for one moment that, in view of these losses, payment of this conscience money will remedy the situation in western Canada. I suggest that although Mr. Thatcher may call an election with the help of his blood brothers who will go to his province with salves and ointments, so to speak, to heal wounds, the situation will not be remedied. This legislation is a salve; it is not salvation.

Mr. McBride: The hon. member is trying to give us hell and needs salvation.

Mr. Korchinski: It is a salve. It is conscience money. That is the essence of the bill.

Mr. McBride: Nonsense.

Mr. Korchinski: If you take the $100 million out of the bill, what have you left?

An hon. Member: Stabilized poverty.

Mr. Korchinski: As my hon. friend says, we shall have stabilized poverty.

Mr. McBride: The hon. member is afraid of being helped.

Mr. Korchinski: If, for example, we had three years of depressed prices—

Mr. Boulanger: If!

• (12:40 p.m.)

Mr. Korchinski: We have had for the past three years. If the hon. member looks at the reply to my question 1020, he will see that it is not a question of "if"; it is a fact. I will quote the prices.

Mr. Boulanger: Do you have them?

Mr. Korchinski: The government whip does not think I have the figures. I will give him the figures. I have the figures for the equivalent receipts in each cash year from 1956-57 to 1967-68. In 1967-68, the figure was $1,092 million. In 1968-69, it was $744 million. There is another figure of $769 million. Those were the total cash receipts for all grains, including all those in the stabilization program. If the hon. member would study these figures for two days, he would understand the impact of what I am saying.

If you have a series of three years in which the government has to contribute toward the stabilization fund, for the next three years, regardless of whether there are great sales or not, you know what will happen. You will still be in abject poverty. That is what the government is stabilizing.

An hon. Member: Poverty.

Mr. Korchinski: The government is stabilizing poverty because they want to maintain the farmers at a normal level. It is typical Liberal philosophy.

Mr. McBride: Cheap politics.

Mr. Korchinski: If it is typical Liberal philosophy, it is cheap politics. The hon. member admits that. I did not say it, he did. It is typical Liberal philosophy to maintain stability providing everyone is in abject poverty. Try to apply that philosophy to capital gains. What is the government trying to do?

Mr. McBride: That is nonsense.

Mr. Korchinski: I agree with the hon. member that it is nonsense, but so is this bill. All the government is trying to do is keep everyone at a minimum level.

Mr. Paproski: They want to stabilize that by-election in Assiniboia.

Mr. Korchinski: Many aspects of this bill are objectionable. I will try to explain these objectionable features in terms that even a Liberal member can understand.

Mr. McBride: We won't understand it after you explain it.

Mr. Korchinski: If the three year average is lower, then you take money from the consolidated revenue fund to maintain the average. It is not like it used to be. The wheat pool formerly received money from the federal government which it paid to the farmers. This will no longer be the case. The payment is going to be stabilized. In other words, it will be necessary to borrow money from the federal government and pay interest to the government. This is what we talked about when debating the other bill.

If you have three successive years of tough luck, you sell at a lower price. This is what happened in the past few years. All you have to do then is pay for it in the next three years. Even if you have an opportunity to sell at a better price, you have to repay your loan first. This is exactly what is meant by abject poverty. Stabilized poverty is probably a better term. This is where we are heading under this bill. Stabilization of what? Stabilization of poverty.

Mr. Boulanger: You have said that four times.

Mr. Paproski: Stick around and he will say it four more times.

Mr. McBride: This is nonsense.

Mr. Korchinski: This is a very stupid bill.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Korchinski: I will keep repeating that statement until it sinks in with the Liberal members. Do members opposite know what this bill does? You have an average for the past three years. I ask members to apply that to their own salaries. How do they get off with that? All I am saying is—

Mr. Boulanger: Speak to the bill.

Mr. Korchinski: I will speak to the bill. I suggest that members opposite apply this principle to their own conditions to see how they make out with it.

Mr. Boulanger: You poor western farmer.

Mr. Korchinski: The cost of production, fuel, taxes, owning a tractor and depreciation, all keep going up. Although the cost of producing the commodity goes up, the government is trying to stabilize the income and keep it on an even keel. The cost of production keeps going up while the level of income remains constant. This is what this bill guarantees. What kind of guarantee is this? This is not stability.

Mr. McBride: Nonsense.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. When the minister spoke earlier today, he was being interrupted. I thought it was my duty to bring to the attention of hon. members that the minister should be given an opportunity to make his speech. Members on both sides thought that was a good suggestion. I think the suggestion applies equally to the hon. member for Mackenzie, and he should be given an opportunity to make his speech freely without interruption.

Mr. Korchinski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I did not think I was having any difficulty. Interruptions are most welcome because they are really inspirations.

Mr. Boulanger: They are the best part of the speech.

Mr. Korchinski: The income is to be stabilized and maintained for a period of years. Who in this country would accept the principle that he should maintain a stabilized income? No industry, union or anyone else will accept that principle, yet this government, through this minister who projects the image that he does, intends to sell it in Assiniboia and other parts of Saskatchewan. The government has to tell these people that the costs of production have not increased. I suggest they check with Mr. Thatcher because he raised the price of fuel by 2 cents one year ago.

[Mr. Korchinski.]

The Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) intends to increase the minimum wage. How can the government rationalize the fact that the cost of production is increasing, yet the level of income is to be stabilized? That is not the point. What you have to do is consider the gross returns after considering the expenses. It is very easy to figure this out. If they had figured it out on that basis, because, you know, what do you call it—what is the term, now?

• (12:50 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Net social benefit.

Mr. Korchinski: Net social benefit, that's it. I am having trouble with new terms.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That's all it is, just a new term.

Mr. Korchinski: It is a new term. They figure out the total cost of producing a bushel of grain, and so on. I know these are factors that can be figured out. In the end, you can see an incline in the graph, and if this were the type of scale the minister worked on it would be readily accepted by me and I think by members of my party.

I wish to go on to another aspect of the bill. It has been said that PFAA does not really matter too much in the over-all agricultural picture in western Canada. True, there are many people in my area who would say: Fair game; we paid into the thing but we are not so willing to fight to maintain it. Yet between 1939 and 1969, the amount the federal government contributed to the farmers was something like $176 million in excess of what the farmers themselves had contributed. This may not represent an important part of the economy, yet $176 million over a period of some 30 years amounts to about $6 million a year on an average. In some years there was a greater contribution and in others it was less. The point is that the government was committed to a contribution of this type.

There are many areas in my province which are not covered by crop insurance. Crop insurance will eventually bring some benefit to those who pay for it. The point is that farmers have been contributors over the years and this in itself has meant the syphoning off of a lot of money from these people, money which is not readily available. In order to be in a position to benefit from a crop insurance program, one has to pay a certain amount of money into it. Money has to be taken out of circulation and paid into a fund.

I have some figures here which might interest hon. members. Three-quarters of the amounts are paid by the farmers and the other quarter by the federal government. In 1968, the average premium paid by farmers in the three prairie provinces was as follows: In Saskatchewan, $200; in Alberta, $295; and in Manitoba, $214. In 1969, the average amount in Manitoba was $177. In Saskatchewan, it was $157 and in Alberta it was $260. We can readily see what has happened. As soon as a bad years is experienced the farmers begin to withdraw from this program. A lot of people may say there is no benefit to be gained from PFAA. It seems there are certain pockets, certain areas, where people do not take out crop insurance. Most of the people concerned are farmers with small farms. They will either have to enter into a crop insurance program or do without any coverage at all. Saskatchewan does not provide for full coverage, anyway. This is where the minister is remiss. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) has not insisted on full coverage being provided for the entire province.

What will happen to all those people who were inspectors under PFAA, you know, those patrons of the Liberal party who were inspectors? A place for them will have to be found somewhere else. There is a place for them. They do not need to worry. They will become inspectors of the feed mills.

An hon. Member: They are all waiting for Lift.

Mr. Korchinski: They will be inspecting the feed mills because this is exactly what the minister intends in later legislation. They will become a little more sophisticated. No doubt they will require an increase in salary because they will need to carry sophisticated documents, and so on.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but it being one o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

• (2:00 p.m.)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this important bill I should like to point out that it will have an underwriting effect on the economy of western farmers for many decades. I am disappointed that the $100 million was not kept separate from the total grains stabilization program. There is an urgent necessity to make this money available to the farmers. This $100 million could have been disbursed before the passing of this complicated and far-reaching piece of legislation to establish a stabilization program.

We must scrutinize this stabilization program carefully in order to improve on it. We must watch very closely the administration and its methods of putting this money into the hands of the farmers. It is not yet clear whether the right formula has been devised in respect of producer and government contributions. We do not as yet know whether the pools should be reimbursed as a result of losses on barley and wheat in any crop year.

In his opening statement, the minister emphasized what had been done to increase grain sales and improve the farm economy. A close scrutiny of this government's policy in the past will indicate that Canadian wheat producers experienced a disaster in the 1968-69 crop year. The actual figures do not give an accurate picture of the situation because they are based on sales of grain which had been stored from the previous crop year. The fact that this grain was sold in the 1968-69 crop year makes it impossible to obtain a clear set of figures for that year.

Canada sold approximately 27 million bushels of barley from the 1968-69 crop year. This is an extremely small amount and most of it went to the malting trade. That trade varies only slightly from year to year. The genial Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) at that time was in charge of the Wheat Board. I asked him about the Japanese market for barley and why it had been taken over by France. The Canadian Wheat Board was holding our barley at approximately $1.00 per bushet while the French were underselling our wheat. All that was admitted was that the Wheat Board and the Canadian government were protesting to the French that they were undercutting us in our markets and this was not according to Hoyle. Nothing came of this.

But in September 1969, the Wheat Board suddenly and without warning dropped the price of barley 23 cents in one day. It went down to 78 cents or 79 cents. This was an extremely large drop and was contrary to the rules of selling whereby if you must reduce your price you reduce it a nickel at a time in the hope that you will be able to save some sales on the way down. Subsequently, we have been able to sell barley, but in the spring of 1970 it was sold at an extremely low price, unfortunately, perhaps because the Wheat Board panicked. One cannot fault the board too much for this because it could not foresee that the United States corn crop would be suffering from blight and that the loss of corn would be substantial. Also, the rise in the price of feed grain was unforeseen. The Italians, who seem to be the early buyers of barley noted that feed grain would be in short supply, so they made sharp sales. They were thus able to accumulate a considerable profit and at the same time obtain a large supply of Canadian barley at a greatly reduced price. Since then, there seems to have been some attempt to recoup this loss by increasing the price in the eastern market or our own country.

Now, what has the government done for the grains industry in this current crop year? First of all, the floating of the Canadian dollar last May has meant an almost nine per cent discount in the price of all grains sold for export. This amounts to a loss of approximately $90 million. The Wheat Board, in its own statement, states that it had to reduce the price six cents to eight cents in one day with further drops as the Canadian dollar rose higher. This has had to be absorbed by the grain trade and in the final analysis the farmer will receive $90 million less than he might have had the Canadian dollar remained at its original level. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), during the discussion of the floating of the dollar, suggested that industries severely affected would be compensated and efforts made to improve their position. So far nothing has been done for the grain trade unless one could consider the $100 million stabilization fund to be an effort in that direction. However, in practice that amount will only meet what the grains industry has lost in the past year by the rise in the exchange value of the Canadian dollar. As well, the Canadian government, by phasing out the $70 million or so that was paid out of the wheat reserves fund, is saving that amount of money.

To some extent I am in agreement with the phasing out of the Wheat Rserves Act, but I believe if the money is to be used for subsidies it could be used in a better manner. While the original purpose of the Wheat Reserves Act was good, it did become clouded through becoming involved in a storage problem. None the less, I should like to point out that the wheat reserves fund represents a large amount of money that the Wheat Board paid to wheat growers at the time the wheat was delivered and, in effect, represents a part payment in that the farmer would be paid for grain before it was sold. So, the government really is not giving $100 million. It is hardly recouping the farmer for the losses suffered due to the rise in the value of the Canadian dollar alone.

Then, we have the Lift program which was touted as an effective way to reduce the amount of wheat grown and in storage. There is no doubt it did reduce the amount of wheat. It was touted in the eastern papers that it would cost about $125 million. In fact, however, I believe the figure is somewhere in the order of $65 million. The result is that we have 10 or 15 acres per farm more in summer-fallow than ever before in western Canada. I must give the minister credit for introducing a new word to describe a certain type of summer-fallow. One does not often have an opportunity to introduce a new word into the vocabulary. I suppose in a normal crop year one may have ten to 20 acres more of stubble crop. The question, however, is whether this land will eventually produce a better crop.

What is the outlook in so far as selling Canadian wheat is concerned? If we study the picture, almost 60 per cent of our sales are to Communist countries or state-directed countries. These countries generally take our lower priced grain because their standards of living are low. They are dependent on aid programs and on long-term credit. As taxpayers, I am sure most of us are happy to extend these long-term credits and I do not find fault with this. I would point out, however, that these are somewhat artificial in application. The United Kingdom, Japan, Germany and so on have accounted for slightly more than half of our sales of wheat. This is quite a depressing picture. We are slowly losing out and may lose out very rapidly. For instance, we were able to sell approximately 36 million bushels to Japan, yet the United States has been able to capture sales of 100 million bushels and they have an inferior product to ours. So, in our assessment of wheat sales we find that the increase is largely the result of aid sales and credit sales, so we are not doing all that well in the traditional markets which can afford to pay for our higher quality grain.

Now, what about our barley sales? At the present time barley prices are very low. We are not selling as much barley for future commitment. Indications are that if Canadian farmers plant 15 million bushels of barley this year, with a possible yield of 50 bushels per acre which is not uncommon, we could end up with more barley than we know what to do with. The blight problem with the United States corn crop does not seem to be as great now as originally indicated. Also, chemicals are now available to treat the corn in order to lower the incidence of blight, so we can expect to find increased competition from corn for our barley and other feed grains. The outlook for barley, therefore, is not all that rosy. The price for barley will certainly be low even if it moves in volume.

Finally, speaking of rapeseed, which has been an extremely good crop this past year, since the advent of the amendment to the Wheat Board Act by which the minister suggests that rapeseed, along with flax and rye, be put under the Wheat Board, there has been a drop in price from 45 to 50 cents. The activity on the exchange in the area where rapeseed is presently being sold is almost nil. Although the minister assured us that he has no intention at this time of putting rapeseed under the Wheat Board Act, there seems to be a substantial fear that he might, and at present it is upsetting the trade. I hope that before rapeseed is put under the Wheat Board, representations from farmers will be heard and there will be good discussions with the producers, the marketing people, and so on, to ensure that this move is advantageous to the Canadian rapeseed industry as a whole. We cannot allow this most promising crop, of which farmers expect 500 million bushels a year although this may be too great an expectation, to be mishandled.

Turning to the income plan promoted in the grain stabilization program, I should like to point out at the onset that 2 per cent of the gross receipts, although it may not seem high at first glance, is a relatively high amount to be deducted. Therefore, if this program is to function we hope that the payout will be adequate and will be channelled in such a manner that the producers will gain from it. When one considers that it is estimated that the net income of a farmer is only 15 per cent of his gross, 2 per cent of the gross income is a great deal of money. Like all businesses, farming in particular is run on a very narrow margin, so the commitment to deduct 2 per cent for every 4 per cent which the government puts in, has its advantage. It certainly indicates, however, that the producer will be carrying a large part of the burden.

What about the payout? It is with regard to the payout in the plan that I have most misgivings. First of all, payments are not to be made on the basis of an individual's loss but rather are to be based on the loss in the whole designated region, that is the prairie region, as against the practice in the past five years. Although perhaps people in other parts of Canada may regard the Prairies as one region, in practice they are three rather distinct provinces. My own province of Manitoba is considerably different from the other Prairie provinces. It's farm and grain economy differs from the Saskatchewan wheat district. It might happen that the province of Manitoba might experience a crop failure or a drop in sales but it would not receive any payment because the other two provinces may have a larger than normal sale of grain. Even though they might experience a crop failure but are able to sell wheat in storage that particular year, they would not be entitled to a payment under the plan. The payment is not even to be made on a regional basis. The plan might have something to commend it if the payment were to be made on a regional basis.

Under the previous plan as well as under PFAA, payments would be made on the basis of the need of an individual person. I suggest that the minister look at the possibility of making payments to crop districts into which areas are divided. Then, he might consider an equal distribution of payment to individual farmers. At least in that way, although a farmer in a certain area might have a good crop, the crop district as a whole would receive a payment if a crop that year were generally poor. In fact, the only way in which the plan could function fairly would be if the individual producer could receive a payment according to the condition of his crop, even though the whole area had a good crop that year and there were no general payout.

This is a blunderbuss type of payout. Under this legislation, payments will be made to farmers who do not need it and who may well have had the best year of their farming lives, while no payments will be made to individuals or areas which have experienced crop losses. Even if a whole province had little to sell that year, it still might not meet the qualifications for a general pay out.

As I understand the intention of the minister in this legislation, a farmer who in the third year has guessed right so far as the market is concerned and has sold more than an average crop will be rewarded, and this would make agriculture more efficient. There may be something to be said for this, but I think the plan is too nebulous and farming is still too variable. It cannot be refined to this extent. The receipt of a payment would depend too much on the luck of the draw. It seems to me that under this program payments will not be made to those who need or deserve assistance.

It is obvious that the grain stabilization plan is in no sense a crop insurance plan. It is purely a general income plan whereby when the income in a whole area drops, money will be put into the area according to a certain formula. I believe that this plan is not sufficiently refined to be adequate. Since considerable money will be paid out, I hope that some thought will be given to improving the plan so that when an individual farmer receives a payment his needs will be more related to the payment. The minister in his statement suggested that the government policy was designed to keep small scale farmers on the farm. In speaking to this very point, I should like to quote in part an editorial which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press entitled "Otto-Man Empire". I reads:

> The admitted objective of Bill C-176 is to depopulate farms at the lower end of the economic scale. Under it, the stabilization clauses will drain income from these smaller farmers, and will have little benefit for them. At the other end of the farm economic scale, the quota system could easily bankrupt viable farmers who have heavy capital investment in their farms. They must be free to produce to the maximum in order to pay interest, and amortize their debts. If their quota does not permit them to do this, their earnings will not be sufficient to meet payments.

The minister suggests that the objective of the government program is to keep the small scale farmers on the farm. According to the Canadian Dairy Commission, 25,000 producers were phased out in 1968, of whom 75 per cent were in western Canada. Nearly all of them were small producers. I doubt that phasing out the dairy quota was a proper way to keep farmers on the land, but that is what the minister has suggested.

In the grain stabilization program there is a provision dealing with pool payments, stipulating that pool payments will be made out of the fund to take care of any pool losses incurred during the crop year. I am sure this is a harmful provision. If enacted there would be little incentive for the Wheat Board to make sure it did not have pool losses. Further, it is wrong to take the payment out of the fund to which farmers may have contributed, even though at the time the losses are incurred they do not have any grain in the pool. It is a provision that we should examine very carefully.

I hope the government will consider changing this provision. If this is to be an income stabilization program it should not be a stabilization program for pool accounts, to make up losses when those concerned have made errors and over-estimates. There is enough instability in the grains industry, and the minister took great pains to tell us about it this morning, without adding the further instability of taking money out of the fund in order to make up pool losses.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I suggest this bill is increasing the regulatory powers of government, of bureaucracy, over the grains industry. When this program is fully implemented the grain farmer will be so regulated that he will not know which way to move. The minister proposes to make it easier for the Wheat Board to reach its commitments, because having reached a goal of 20 bushels per authorized acre it will have no stimulus to increase sales beyond that, unless such increased sales just fall in its lap. So, Mr. Speaker, we are headed into a very regulated, regimented type of grains program, judging by this and other legislation on the order paper. I hope that when the bill is considered in committee changes will be made to make it more workable, and particularly make it more effective for the producer in a time of need.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, this proposal by the government undertakes to chart the future of the grains industry, not just of the wheat industry, but of the total grains industry of western Canada for some years ahead. Even more than that, it proposes to pattern the lives of people and of the communities within which they live. Taken with rail line abandonment, which will come about in full force in another three or four years, it may very well change many of the communities and much of the pattern of living in western Canada.

I suppose I should not be surprised that before the debate got properly under way the minister's office issued a press release accusing the opposition of deliberately working against the interests of prairie farmers by delaying passage of important new grains legislation. But, Mr. Speaker, we have seen how the minister at times chides the opposition. It depends upon his mood. If the minister is a bit more put out than usual, he lets off a blast at us. If he is not really very much put out he rises in his place and chides us in schoolmasterly fashion for not being as willing and able as he to get on with the business, and for not being good boys. I can tell him he does neither himself nor the government much service adopting that approach.

The government can be charged with tying the proposed payments this year to this bill in order to force its passage through the House, and denying a full opportunity to those of us who are interested in farming to examine thoroughly what the bill will do. We must first examine the situation the bill is intended to deal with, and that situation is the present condition of grain farming.

Grain farming is seriously depressed, and one has only to look at the figures to verify the fact. Returns from grain production in Saskatchewan have declined steadily from 1967 to 1970, the last year for which we have official figures. Over all it declined in round figures from $976 million to $690 million in 1970. Those are the kinds of averages with which the proposed stabilization fund will be dealing. To put it another way, I quote a speech made by the minister last October:

> Prairie farm cash receipts from the six major grains (wheat, oats, barley, rapeseed, flaxseed and rye) were $878 million in the 1969-70 crop year, down $270 million from the average of $1,148 million for the preceding five years.

This is the point of departure, Mr. Speaker. It is from here that we proceed. The minister is bringing forth a proposal which he says will meet that shortfall, or will enable farmers to meet that shortfall. If it is not a policy to meet that shortfall, then I do not understand how the government can introduce this bill as a measure to meet the needs of prairie farmers. This should be the first consideration of the government, but I doubt that it is. The government is looking at ways to keep a system going rather than to keep farmers going. This program makes the assumption that, at the level which the government is talking about, farmers will survive. I question whether that assumption can be made in light of the figures and information given by the minister himself in his statement to the House.

When you look at the deductions and the contributions they are proposing—$1 billion at 6 per cent produces roughly $60 million a year and this is supposed to run the stabilization program—you wonder if it is even actuarily sound. Although the minister has been asked, he has not chosen to release any of the figures or working papers from his department to show how they arrive at the assumption. Perhaps when we go into it in committee the minister will be able to come forward with figures to show how it will work.

Clause 15 of the bill provides that this fund will also be charged with any deficits in the pools operated by the Canadian Wheat Board. If the government carries through its intention to put rye, flax and rapeseed under the Wheat Board, then it will cover the total grain industry. The assumption that this sort of program will ensure that the industry will survive is not well founded for the reasons I have stated. The bill takes no account of the cost of production. We are expected to believe that in an economy where banks, industry, labour and the professions seek increases at least commensurate with the increase in cost of living, the agricultural industry in western Canada will survive by stabilizing its income on the level of the previous five years, even if that trend continues downward.

The whole trend of the pricing assumptions in this bill, and the approach by the government follow the direction and the policy of the agriculture task force recommendations. That policy was to sell grain on world markets for whatever it would bring and, if possible, to clean up whatever crop came forward each year. This is the thrust of this bill. It also makes the assumption that we can carry on without a storage policy because it makes no provision for assistance in storage. It does not say how the farmers are going to carry the storage charges without any financial aid. The minister's document of last October states clearly that it is the plan to encourage adjustment of farm units to a more efficient size. This is definitely a part of the policy. We do not know how many farmers will be able to remain in business and this information is not given.

A press release today quoted the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) as saying in committee yesterday that the Farm Credit Corporation would be used as an instrument to adjust farm size and to provide the credit for adjustment of the agricultural industry. We tried to get information about the amount of money involved in this program but we still have not got it.

The bill ignores the importance of farmers as consumers as well as producers. There is no consideration of the necessity to maintain the earning power of farmers as consumers or to maintain their communities. It accepts the fact of the irregularity of demand for grain in the overseas market and the minister has accepted this in his statement. The bill rejects the need for storage and an inventory program so that we can have the capacity to hold grain in position to meet the irregularity of the market demand.

If he wishes, the minister may say that the storage program for wheat under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act caused some distortion but is the answer to throw it out, lock, stock and barrel and not put anything in its place? The storage system of this country has always acted as a sort of bank for the export market. Now, the minister chooses to say that it is either no longer necessary to have this function performed or that the farmer is not going to be assisted to carry it, or that he can carry it himself. The government leaves grain storage and the transportation system, and all that is involved in them, home-free and says to the farmer that he can carry whatever costs are involved.

The government accepts the fact of irregularity of weather and drought in this country or if they do not, they have not been around long enough. However, they ignore and destroy the Prairie Farm Assistance Act and put nothing in its place. They say, "We will carry it on for 1971 and phase it out in 1973 and governments can move in with crop insurance programs." There has to be a reason that the crop insurance program has never taken hold in the Palliser triangle, the great semi-arid wheat growing region of western Canada, but I wonder if this government knows it. The reason is that the premiums are too high in comparison with the risk, so the system is ignored in that area. The government could have used the PFAA and adjusted it to an effective crop insurance program for that area, but instead they wanted to lay their hands on every dollar they could to bolster this stabilization program so that it would not cost the government any more than it is costing them now. They wanted to grab the money in the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act and the amounts out of the crop insurance program and to recover some of the cost of subsidized interest programs in selling grain overseas. They wanted to lay their hands on all these things and put them into a total package which they could present to the people saying, "We have a program; we are doing something really big." In fact, they are only juggling figures and destroying, without thought of replacement, at least two programs that have served the farmers in many ways in the past, instead of updating these programs and making them function.

The decisions to be made will be important. They will control of the Wheat Board and there are no provisions for farmers to participate. There are charges in the quota system which the farmer will have to live with. These are significant changes and will require significant adjustments on the part of the farmer. We are left with the assumption that all these decisions are to be made in Winnipeg and Ottawa, that there will be no machinery set up enabling farmers to participate in these decisions in order that there may be some feed back and communication. If in five or six years from now there is unrest in the country over the total program, the reason for that in part will be that farmers will not have been participating in the decision making process.

When contemplating the last appointment which was made to the Wheat Board, the government ought to have appointed someone from one of the various farm organizations who would have been closer to farmers and had a background in farming. The government chose not to do so. Instead, it reached back into one of the Federal government departments and appointed a man from that level.

The decisions to be made will be important. They will affect farmers day by day, their income and how they live. I heard some useful comments in this area at a seminar in Saskatoon under the auspices of the University of Saskatchewan. It was made by one of the people who has worked on the program. At the seminar there was an assistant professor named Storey, an economist with a farming background. He made some comments which I do not suppose will affect the course the government is adopting, but in part he said:

> I believe that income fluctuation is a problem but it is not the major problem. The Income Stabilization Plan is directed at reducing the problem of income fluctuations but it does little or nothing toward solving the problem of an adequate level of income, whether stable or unstable over time. There appears to be little or no additional money for the farmer in this program because the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, and the Prairie Farm Assistance Act were given up so there would be government money for this program.

This statement was made at the seminar in Saskatoon by a professor at the University of Saskatchewan. That was an opinion expressed at that meeting by an intelligent observer. He was right. Although we hear on the news and are told by farming organizations that farm income has dropped by 50 per cent, the government persists in its parsimonious and ill advised course of action and ignores the plight of the farmers of western Canada. Of course, if the minister does not want to heed the remarks I have just quoted, perhaps he would care to listen to the provincial treasurer of Saskatchewan, Dave Steuart.

An hon. Member: A great Canadian.

Mr. Gleave: For you he may be a great Canadian, but for me he is slightly less of a disaster, so help me, than this government. Here, the important decisions are made and the provincial people make the secondary ones, then stand in their places and cheer the stabilization bill. Why? I will tell you why, Mr. Speaker. They cheer because $100 million is coming in their direction. But what will that do for our farmers in the future? Hon. members can cheer that provincial government. I do not blame them. They are stuck with it but I am not, and that is the essential difference between us.

An hon. Member: Hon. Members over there can have that provincial government.

Mr. Gleave: According to a statement put out by that provincial treasurer, farmers in Saskatchewan owe, on the average, between $1,070 and $1,250 in respect of cash advances. They are in debt to that extent, and this government proposes to stabilize them in that condition. This bill is designed to make sure that they will remain in that condition. It is designed to get the government off the hook so that farmers and provincial ministers cannot come back and say, "But you should do this or that in terms of sales, assistance or storage. This bill is designed to get the government nicely off the hook. They will be able to say to farmers in western Canada, just as they have said to the big cities of Canada, "This is really not our concern; it is a provincial responsibility, and you people can struggle with it." That is the position into which the government is putting itself. They will distribute the $100 million, but the program will not really be tied to grain other than through the permit book. In many cases, the money will not be distributed properly or fairly.

Over the week end a farmer in Saskatoon said to me, "How will this work out?" He said that he has two sons in partnership but that the Wheat Board will only allow them one permit book. I ask, what will be the position of the corporation and of the co-operative? I am speaking of the sort of corporation in Manitoba and Alberta in which a father and two or three sons jointly operate a farm. There is no provision in this bill for them and I can foresee considerable difficulties. I do not know if the minister has something in the works to look after these things. He did not say he had when he spoke but then, of course, he referred to the more attractive parts, if there are attractive parts, of this program.

An hon. Member: There are attractive parts.

Mr. Gleave: Does the hon. member think so? I want to tell the hon. member something, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: It's about time.

Mr. Gleave: If the people of Canada were paying what they should be paying for wheat produced in western Canada, which is at least another $1 a bushel, we could put as much money into this program every year as the government is proposing to put into it, and even more. We could do that if we were paid for our wheat what we ought to be paid. We could put more into the program. A Winnipeg Tribune story says—and the minister may deny it—that the minister was in favour of establishing higher prices for wheat sold domestically in Canada.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, will the hon. member permit a question? Has the hon. member read clause 32(4) which provides that in the special case where a couple of producers or more farm together under one permit book, a bigger share is to be allowed them.

Mr. Gleave: If the government is to do that, that will be helpful.

Mr. Osler: It is in the bill.

Mr. Gleave: That is good.

Mr. Osler: The bill the hon. member is talking about.

Mr. Gleave: Thank you.

Mr. Osler: That is to be found at page 19, beginning at line 10.

Mr. Gleave: There will be more problems if—

Mr. Osler: It is there in English and in French.

An hon. Member: He can read neither language.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I think it would be helpful if hon. members engaging in the debate would direct their remarks to the Chair.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, I try to be as courteous as possible. The minister wanted to draw attention to something in the bill which I had overlooked and I appreciate his doing so.

I will get back to the point I was making. This approach overlooks many of the practical things which could have been done to meet the need which exists because of low farm incomes in western Canada. I am afraid that there will be insufficient participation by producers and more decisions in the pattern of those which made up the Lift program. After the event we see the mistakes and try to correct them. There will be a real distortion in price patterns.

Mr. Pepin: You change your philosophy every day.

Mr. Gleave: I am sorry; I did not hear the minister. We could have done just as much by getting a decent price for the product the farmer is selling. We shall move away from the position we occupied previously of looking at initial prices from two points of view—first, what the market will return and, second, the need of the farmer for income. This is one of the most serious aspects of the government's approach. I do not think it is realistic or practical to expect the Canadian grain farmer to compete in world markets against subsidized grain exports of other countries without aid in meeting his cost of production, without the benefit of subsidies.

I have serious doubt that we can maintain a viable working and capital structure within the grain economy no matter how much adjustment the government is able to force on the farmer or persuade him to accept. I do not think there will be sufficient total income forthcoming to enable us to maintain a viable farming structure unless marketing conditions improve drastically within the next two or three years.

I should like to move an amendment seconded by my hon. friend from Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis):

That Bill C-244 be not now read the second time but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this House the said bill should be withdrawn and that the government should consider introducing in its place two separate bills, the first of which would deal exclusively with the proposed special transitional payments, and the other with the principle of prairie grain stabilization payments.

I move this amendment because I believe the House should have an opportunity to consider objectively the full implications of the stabilization legislation the minister has brought before us. I do not think the opposition should be placed in such a position that if and when it debates the bill it is accused of preventing the measure from passing the House and, by implication, depriving farmers of the amount the government proposes to distribute.

If the minister believes the measures he proposes are sound and in the interest of prairie farmers, I challenge him to separate the $100 million payment, which is merely the recognition of the desperate situation of prairie farmers, from the rest of the bill. Then let him bring in the measure he proposes and let it be debated on its merits in this House and in the Standing Committee on Agriculture. If he follows this course, hopefully it will be possible to make some amendments, certain revisions, so that the bill may serve the purpose which it should serve.

The concern should be not only to stabilize the prairie grain industry but also to ensure that farmers in western Canada have sufficient income to maintain a viable industry with an adequate working capital. The figures I have quoted today and which the minister himself quoted in his statement last October tell anyone who reads them that we face a situation in western Canada in which farm capitalization and the farming structure generally will no longer be viable. The minister will not have to worry about helping people to get out of farming; they will be going. The sad fact is that they will be going out broke. It is fine to say they can be retrained, but I do not know where the government intends to send people from the farms when there are at present 700,000 unemployed in Canada, many of them with skills and training. I do not know if he intends to do anything about it. I do not know what advice he got from farm organizations, but at least one press release from the National Farmers Union suggested it did not have undiluted enthusiasm for this bill.

The Saskatchewan Wheat Pool indicated on March 16 that the board of directors contended that 2 per cent of gross receipts from producers as a contribution is too high in relation to the plan's benefits. The board also suggested the plan should include features to take care of steadily rising costs of production. Within the last month we have experienced an increase in the price of fuel. This apparently is being ignored. The government must think that a farmer is some kind of a magician who can pull dollars out of a hat and continue to live and function on the income figure the minister has quoted. Surely the minister should pay some attention to these facts pointed out by the directors of the wheat pool.

The assessment of 2 per cent of the gross income of farmers is perhaps the worst way to collect money. It is in effect a total production tax. It does not amount to a contribution; it is a production tax of 2 per cent. This is like a property tax on your farm; you pay it whether you make money or not. Why did the minister not relate the tax, or the contribution, to income? Apparently there would not be sufficient return if it were based on net income so the minister decided to base it on gross income.

Mr. Lang: How do you figure it?

Mr. Gleave: That is not difficult. A contribution of 2 per cent on gross income is 2 per cent on the gross. If there is another way of putting it, I would be glad to listen to another interjection from the minister.

Mr. Lang: I should be delighted to ask the hon. member a question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. For what reason is the hon. minister rising?

Mr. Lang: I am rising to ask the hon. member a question, Mr. Speaker. Since the hon. member seems to know how this can be done, calculated on the basis of net income, I should like to ask him how we are to distinguish between appropriate premiums in respect of well operated farms and poorly operated farms? How do we distinguish between different types of land and operations and a thousand and one other things I could list?

Mr. Gleave: I tell the minister that if I were going to devise a method to help out people in an industry which was known to be in serious economic difficulty, I would not start off by taking money away from them. That is my first point of departure.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has some observations about the procedural aspect of the motion of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave). If there is consent that the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar should continue, I will recognize him.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Gleave: I express appreciation to hon. members for extending my time. I do not want to say a great deal more. I will wind up my remarks very quickly. If I wanted to take 2 per cent of someone's net income, or the net income of a group of people, I expect I would do the same as the minister has done; I would say to some of the boys in the back room, "Figure out a way to make this assessment based on net income. Tell me how to do it".

Mr. Lang: They said it was impossible.

Mr. Gleave: I suggest in all sincerity that it is wrong in the first place to make a deduction.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Get some new back room boys.

Mr. Gleave: All I can suggest is that the minister has ignored the major problem outlined by the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. I have in mind the increase in production costs. This over-all program ignores that fact; nothing is mentioned about production costs. There is nothing envisaged in this bill to meet the short fall which now exists in the farming economy or the increase in production costs which exists throughout Canada and which in all likelihood will continue. That is all I can say to the minister.

In closing, let me tell a story about a chap who delivered grain to an elevator. The farmer hauled his grain to the elevator and the agent made up a little ticket. The farmer asked what an item on the ticket was for and the agent replied that it covered dockage. The farmer asked what the next little item was and the agent told him it was to cover shrinkage. The farmer said, "I do not understand dockage and I do not understand shrinkage but I know there is too much 'takeage' ". That is your problem, Mr. Minister.

An hon. Member: Ho, ho, ho!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Before the Chair recognizes another hon. member perhaps I should make some comments in respect of the procedural aspect of the motion of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar. I intend to invite the hon. members to assist me in deciding upon its acceptability. It might be helpful if I read the motion, which is as follows:

That Bill C-244 be not now read a second time, but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this House the said bill should be withdrawn and that the government should consider introducing in its place two separate bills, the first to deal exclusively with the proposed special transitional payments, and the other to deal with the principle of prairie grain stabilization payments.

Without making a judgment, I should like to point out that the proposed motion does not oppose the principle of the bill but suggests that it be divided. Hon. members will recall what was said last evening by the Chair in respect of a point of order dealing essentially with the same question.

The matter of dividing a bill seems to attach conditions to its passage. The Chair must decide first if the amendment is acceptable. The Chair must keep in mind the factors enumerated last evening in respect of dividing or separating portions of a bill. I would also invite hon. members to assist me in respect of the suggestion that a reasoned amendment should be declaratory of a principle and, of course, must fall within the four corners of the bill.

Let me refer again to the words of the motion. It states that the bill should be withdrawn and the government should introduce, in its place, two separate bills. With respect, it is my feeling that the hon. member is not opposing the principle of the bill but is suggesting another way in which the government could deal with essentially the same subject matter. Having said this, I invite hon. members to assist me on this procedural question.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I believe you have covered most of the essential points I should like to make in objecting to the form of the amendment. It is clear it is in effect an attempt to bring back in, or to bootleg in a different way the point of order which was rejected at the beginning of the debate on the bill before us. Further, it would seem to me a fundamental objection that the motion to bring it back in two bills, apart from being unacceptable on the ground Your Honour mentioned would in effect direct the bringing back of bills which would require at least in one case, a form of resolution and in that sense it would affect the former resolution. This would be a rather exceptional way for an opposition amendment to effect the spending of money contrary to the rules of this House.

It is also clear that throughout the debate and the consideration of this matter before the bill was introduced, the parts sought to be separated have been clearly labelled as inseparable from the point of view of government policy and principle in respect of the bill and therefore the separation, if it were effected, would have the effect of defeating the bill. If the hon. member wishes to defeat the bill he can do so by voting against it.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have been trying to decide for myself what kind of a mood the minister is in today. I saw the press release he put out this morning which I do not believe was designed to speed up things. Now he accuses the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) of doing some bootlegging and then sits down having said that members who are opposed to the bill can vote against it. I do not understand this kind of mood and perhaps I should stick to the point of order.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

I say to you, Sir, and to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board that there is quite a difference between the Chair ruling as it did last evening that it does not have the authority to instruct that a bill be separated into two parts, and the House deciding on the basis of its authority that this is what it wants done. The fact that the Chair ruled last night that there is no procedural basis on which to insist it be divided does not prevent the House from deciding that that is what it would like.

The minister just now repeated that point and then made the statement that the government has decided that these parts are inseparably bound together. We have a Speaker in the chair with certain responsibilities and we have a government with certain responsibilities. However, we also have a House of Commons which has certain rights. I submit it is within the prerogatives of the House of Commons to request that any step be taken. The manner in which that request is made must be procedurally proper, but I submit that the decision of the government that the different parts of this bill are inseparable, and the decision of the Chair that it could not demand the splitting of the bill, do not stand in the way of the House of Commons deciding this is what it wants done. Of course, it would require not only that the motion be procedurally proper but also that the mover of the motion could obtain a majority of the votes in the House for that to be done.

The minister also said he thought the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar contravened the rules about a private member's motion involving the expenditure of money. That, again, falls to the ground pretty quickly because the amendment suggests the government should consider introducing in its place two separate bills. It has been established time after time that although a private member cannot move anything involving the expenditure of money, he can move that the House ask the government to consider doing something even though, as I say, it might involve the expenditure of money.

Now we come to a couple of points raised by the Chair. The Chair wonders whether the position taken in this amendment is one of opposition to the principle of this bill. Well, what is the principle of this bill? We on this side are impressed by the fact that its principle, as it appears to us, is to combine two things which we think ought not be combined. We think it is pretty fundamental that we are being asked to vote at one and the same time on a $100 million hand-out and on a long-term stabilization program. We feel we have the right to oppose that principle of asking us to vote at one and the same time on two things which we do not think should be put together.

I might also point out what is said in citation 382 of Beauchesne. This citation has been read from the floor and the chair so often that we ought to know it by heart. It is a citation which contains a good many clauses and therefore is like some things in the Bible; you can prove anything if you read it the right way. Citation 382 reads:

It is also competent to a member who desires to place on record any special reasons for not agreeing to the second reading of a bill—

That is my hon. friend's suggestion. He has special reasons for not agreeing to the second reading of this bill. The citation continues:

—to move as an amendment to the question, a resolution declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principles, policy, or provisions of the bill—

I think he is doing that in that he is opposed to the principle of putting these two things together. I underline these next few words:

—or expressing opinions as to any circumstances connected with its introduction—

That describes this amendment perfectly. The hon. member is expressing an opinion on the circumstances connected with the introduction of this bill, namely, that it includes in it two things which ought not to be there together. The citation continues:

—or prosecution; or otherwise opposed to its progress—

When we look at citation 382 we see that although it has many clauses it is clear that for an amendment to fall within its terms it does not have to meet all of them but certainly has to meet some of them. I submit it meets the condition of being opposed to the principle of putting these two things together, and is also critical of the manner in which this bill is being introduced and the manner in which its prosecution is being sought. I suggest, therefore, that the member should have the right to put this request to the House in the form of a motion.

I come back in my concluding remarks to the point I dealt with at the beginning. There are a number of things which arise in this House which can be decided in one or other of two ways. If a member seeks to move a motion for adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26, the Speaker has the complete say on that and if he rules against it, that is the end of the motion. But if a member seeks to move the same motion the next day under Standing Order 43, it is not the Speaker who makes the decision then but, rather, the House. There are other examples of the same situation, and I think that is what we have here.

We accept the ruling that the Chair made last night that the Chair does not have the right to direct that the bill be divided, but that does not deny to the House the right, if it so wishes by a majority vote, to call upon the government to divide the bill. There is no question that that is in essence what the amendment is, an attempt to divide the bill so that two parts which we do not think are related can be dealt with separately. But it is our contention that in terms of the requirements for an amendment on second reading, this one should be allowed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If no other hon. members would like to assist the Chair, I would be prepared to make a ruling on the amendment of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave).

I indicated initially, before inviting comments and assistance from hon. members, the questions that the Chair had in mind. I thank the minister and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for assisting me in deciding whether or not the amendment is procedurally correct. Perhaps I did not emphasize that one of my main concerns was that the amendment does not oppose the principle of the bill. I think it does oppose the form of the bill. Whether or not the bill is in a form in which members would like to consider it may be a matter of argument among hon. members, and I do not pass judgment on this. I do suggest, however, to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—and I do this with great respect—that citation 382 of Beauchesne on which the hon. member relies to a great extent deals with the matter of the principle of a bill. I should like to read the citation as follows:

It is also competent to a member who desires to place on record any special reasons for not agreeing to the second reading of a bill, to move as an amendment to the question, a resolution declaratory of some principles adverse to, or differing from, the principles, policy or provisions of the bill—

It seems to me that for the amendment to be acceptable procedurally it must be in opposition or adverse to the principle of the bill, not to the form of the bill. That is what gives me a great deal of concern. In essence, the hon. member's amendment says that the bill should be divided. It does not quarrel with the principle of the bill. It does, however, quarrel with the form in which the bill is presented to the House.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre argued very forcibly that there is a difference for the Chair to take into consideration as between the point of order which was before the Chair last evening and the reasoned amendment that the Chair now has before it. I say with respect that I find some difficulty in following the argument of the hon. member to its conclusion.

It seems to me that the Chair has a responsibility, whether the question is raised on a point of order or by means of an amendment, to determine whether or not it is procedurally correct and one that can be put to the House. The question last evening was whether or not the motion for second reading of the bill could be put to the House. This was raised on a point of order. I cannot see too much difference between the two methods from a procedural standpoint. It is the procedural question, of course, with which the Chair must be concerned, whether it is raised on a point of order or in the manner suggested today by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar in which he proposed that the bill should be divided and put to the House in a different form.

So I suggest, without repeating my initial concern but adding to it these remarks, that it seems to me the opposition to the bill as set out in the hon. member's amendment is an opposition to the form of the bill and is not an opposition to the principle of the bill. He is suggesting that the way in which the House should deal with it should be changed. Again, that is a matter of debate but it seems to me that it is not acceptable as a reasoned amendment. Therefore, I must rule that I cannot accept it.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have waited a long time for an opportunity to speak this afternoon and I am glad now to be able to speak on Bill C-244, an act respecting the stabilization of prairie grain sales. I would like to say at the outset that I believe that a form of stabilization of farm grain sales is popular among prairie grain producers.

I should like to deal with one of the most important aspects of the program. I believe that it is basically designed to establish a policy with an initial interim payment of $100 million to western farmers in the current crop year. It is designed to hold cash farm receipts at a predetermined level. The fund itself will be on a two to one ratio, the government contributing 4 per cent of the total receipts for each year and farmers contributing 2 per cent of their total up to an average cash receipt of $15,000 payable from any one farm. This will mean the total that any one farm will end up paying in any one year is $300.

At first glance, the idea of having a relatively stable income in the grain industry has a basic attraction, although the plan does have faults, one fault being that it ignores completely the cost of living or the inflation factor. We all know that the cost of living has risen rapidly in the past few years. I believe that the inflation rate quoted by a good many economists is now 4 per cent to 4½ per cent a year. If this plan were to be implemented in the form proposed by the minister, this inflation rate or factor would be completely ignored and the burden would be on the agricultural producers who were unfortunate enough to be affected in this way.

In other segments of our society, when there is bargaining at any level this is one of the costs that is automatically built into the bargaining mechanism, but because the government is dangling $100 million in front of western Canadian farmers in the current crop year they feel they can accept such a plan. In reality, farmers will find that when the plan is in effect they will end up in a situation similar to the present one. If the plan is to be of any real benefit to the grain growing community we should consider this aspect when the legislation goes to committee.

The plan does consider the industry as a whole but, I suggest, only on a gross receipts basis. As I mentioned before, it does not take into consideration the costs of production, inflation, etc. One of the real faults of this kind of legislation is that it ignores the individual farmer or grain producer. This could happen in Manitoba where due to weather conditions farmers might have a small crop but under normal conditions they would qualify for a stabilization payment. But if Saskatchewan, which produces most of the grain grown in western Canada, had a good crop, and Alberta also, thus keeping the average up to the point where there was no need for a stabilization fund, Manitoba farmers paying into the fund would receive no real benefit whatsoever, when in reality they should receive some payment.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

That is why this legislation is similar to Bill C-176, the marketing boards bill, that we have all been talking about. Basically, it is poorly drafted legislation in that it ignores the rights of individual producers affected by it. It gives the power and control to the government, to the civil service, and takes it out of the hands of the producer. When the legislation is being considered in committee, an alternative that could be examined is a plan devised on a net income basis, as suggested earlier this afternoon, thus allowing for variations in cost factors. As we all know, cost factors vary greatly from the Red River Valley in Manitoba to central Saskatchewan or to a spot in northern Alberta.

I do not believe that there are many western farmers who would not like to have their income stabilized at a reasonable level, although there are a great many farmers who do not believe that the proposed grain stabilization program will adequately meet their needs. It was felt, and I believe rightly so, that if contributions were to be made by grain growers to the stabilization plan, they should be based on a maximum of 1 per cent of their gross sales, of course with the assurance that PFAA was to be discontinued, and as we see in this legislation, it is to be discontinued.

If we are to look at some form of government stabilization for the grain industry, then I believe the government should be paying a greater percentage than it is. I say this in light of the kind of legislation with which we are dealing. If the government is bound and determined to meddle in the affairs of farmers, then the federal treasury should be prepared to shell out more money than is proposed in this piece of legislation. Payments from the fund could then be matched by the government on a one to six ratio, meaning that for each $1 that the farmer contributed, the federal government would pay $6.

I would also like to see a provision that contributions by producers to the fund would cease when the fund had accumulated $100 million at any one time. Then, of course, interest could be added to any balance in the fund. As I stressed previously, payments to producers from the stabilization fund should include a factor directly related to the changes in the cost of inputs into production. A program such as this should be subject to a complete review annually, Mr. Speaker. I suggest it should not be reviewed by the civil service and by the minister himself. It should be reviewed at the local farm level, giving people directly affected by it a chance to voice their criticism or praise of the program. In this connection I refer to clause 22 of the bill which provides:

> The minister shall establish an advisory committee consisting of a chairman and four other members to be appointed by him from among producers and representatives of producer organizations.
> (2) The advisory committee established under subsection (1) shall
> (a) meet at least once a year; and

(b) advise the minister with respect to the administration of this act.

I do not think this is good enough. I think the producers affected by the legislation are the people who should have some say with respect to how they believe the act is working.

These are the questions that this program raises, Mr. Speaker. Should a farmer be able to get all or part of his equity out of the fund if and when he decides to stop farming? An example of this would be a farmer who had paid $1,000 into the fund. On retiring from farming, should he be repaid that $1,000 in equity? Here I refer to a portion of clause 5, on page 5 of the bill, which stipulates that if a farmer ceases to farm, or dies, two years must elapse before the money he has accumulated in the fund can be freed. After the program is in operation, Mr. Speaker, how will someone just beginning to farm be able to participate in it? These are just some of the many questions that programs such as this raise in my mind and in the minds of a good many grain producers in western Canada. I hope we will be able to deal with them more fully at committee stage.

One of the real fallacies of the plan concerns the $100 million that the government will give the farmers in the coming year. If one looks at the plan a little more closely, one can see that the $100 million is made up in part by the termination of the Wheat Reserves Act and also the termination of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. Out of the $100 million to be paid by the government this year, I believe the cost to the treasury would be $42 million, counting on the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act as paying out approximately $52 million, plus a 1 per cent deduction under PFAA to be turned over to the general revenue fund of $5 million.

So, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that what the minister has been stating from time to time is not completely true, particularly when he says that the government will be paying out $100 million to the farmers. In reality, a good portion of the amount to be paid to the farmer will be money that he has coming to him. Instead of looking at a figure of $100 million coming from the federal treasury, we should be looking at a greatly reduced figure. This program should be explained to the Canadian people in its proper light.

As mentioned by a previous speaker, clause 15 provides for deficits on pool accounts to be met from the grain stabilization fund. In this connection I would like to quote briefly from a speech made by Mr. Frank Hamilton, at one time chief commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board, who said:

> We have to level out the yearly ups and downs in the grain industry. Farmers must be able to plan ahead and not just be stabilized at a poverty level. I read with interest an Ottawa release about a $100 million payment into the western economy this summer. I think that's great and I'm all for it. It went on to say, however, that losses on grain pool accounts will be recovered from the stabilization fund. I just wonder how many producers in western Canada realize that the last pool account—wheat 1968-69—required $119,548,299 from the government of Canada in order to break even. If you doubt this, take a look at the supplementary report of the Canadian Wheat Board, 1968-69. It puts the $100 million in its proper perspective—$20 million short on that particular pool.

I am in basic agreement with the termination of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act because I believe that act has had a tendency to create an overabundant supply of wheat simply because of the nature of the act itself. It is still not completely clear in my mind whether the abandonment of the Wheat Reserves Act would create storage problems for producers and elevator companies. I believe that the present facilities have not been used to the maximum. This was accentuated in the rail tie-ups that took place across the country some months ago.

The consideration must be that with the termination of the storage payments under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, elevator companies will be short of income. If the co-operative and private elevator systems are to be modernized and rationalized as I believe they must be, earnings will have to be generated and in all probability the farmer will pick up the costs through an increase in elevator charges. The prairie grain stabilization program is for the most part an effort by the government to lock the farmer into one particular segment of his own grain industry.

Mr. Speaker, instead of the government thinking in terms of the average cash receipts over the past five years, or the last three years, I would rather see it take a more positive attitude and project sales into the future with the outlook of increasing our grains sales to other countries. It has been shown in the past through various trade commissions to other countries that the potential is certainly there, potential that we have been ignoring for many years. I believe a far more positive approach, and one which would put money into the hands of grain producers in western Canada and would be better than asking the farmers to subsidize themselves, would be a longer range outlook so far as selling our grain is concerned.

I suggest that the minister and the government are ignoring one of the basic assumptions of farming. It is a fact that the minister must deal at all times with individuals, not abstract numbers or quantities. One of the greatest concerns of a program such as this is that it has a tendency to look at the whole of the grain industry and not at the individuals within it. I am anxious to see this piece of legislation go into committee because, while the idea of having a relatively stable grain industry for western Canada is a good one, there are parts of this legislation which I believe should be brought more into the open so that agricultural producers may have a better chance to voice opinions on it.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I shall not have time this afternoon to finish the comments I want to make on this bill, but I shall make a start. The minister wondered how anyone could work out a contribution system on the basis of net income. I agree it would be difficult. The net income of farmers in western Canada is low and some of them went into the red in tre past few years. If the minister is not aware of this, he should go out into the country and listen to the farmers.

I had a question on the order paper about the amount of income tax paid by Saskatchewan farmers, but unfortunately the figures for two important years, 1969 and 1970, are not yet available so I am not in a position to prove just what happened. I am sure the minister is aware, apart from any awkwardness in proving what the net income is, that there is not very much net income. We have today heard Dominion Bureau of Statistics' figures quoted which show that net income is down.

I listened very carefully to the minister this morning because I hoped that somewhere in his remarks on payments and stabilization of income he would talk about the relationship of income to cost. If he made any such comments, I did not hear them, so he must have said them very quietly or just thought them. Any discussion of agricultural income without a discussion of agricultural costs would be as ridiculous as it would be in regard to any other industry. Obviously, costs will increase. A royal commission has studied the cost of farm machinery. However, costs have increased so much that by the time we receive the commission's report the data will be "old hat." I suggest to the minister that any discussion that does not take costs into account is no good to the farmers and I hope the farmers in his constituency tell him so.

It is obvious that the stabilization plan will increase the costs. One per cent of $15,000, on the basis of the old PFAA, was obviously $150, but now at 2 per cent it is $300. I use the figure of $15,000 because it is the maximum allowed under the plan. I give the minister credit for accepting the principle of limitation of payment in respect of any one farmer. I think this is one of the problems in the United States with stabilization of income or agricultural subsidies—it has got out of hand. They would not have had as many complaints from taxpayers if they had accepted this principle and done something about it. I think there is a valid reason for doing this and I would be prepared to accept it. I will not argue whether $960 is adequate, but if we are to subsidize anybody let it be these with the greatest need.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it four o'clock?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I should like the consent of the House to revert to motions so that I may move the reference of several reports to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Does the minister have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

REFERENCE OF ANNUAL REPORTS OF AIR CANADA AND CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That the Air Canada annual report, 1970, the Canadian National Railways annual report, 1970, and the auditor's report of the Canadian National Railways for the year ended December 31, 1970, be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

[Mr. Thomson.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we would be happy to agree to this motion. If the minister would like to add to it the annual report of the Canadian Pacific Railway and Canadian Pacific Airlines, we would agree to that as well.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, can the government House leader confirm the business for Monday?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I confirm that the business I announced shall continue, namely, agricultural stabilization, with the Wheat Board following. Tuesday and Wednesday are opposition days, and on Thursday there will be a debate on the reference to the special committee of matters relating to public order legislation.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely notices of motion.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' NOTICES OF MOTIONS

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

PROPOSED SIMULTANEOUS PENSIONS FOR HUSBANDS AND WIVES

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi) moved:

That, in the opinion of the House, the government should consider the advisability of introducing a measure allowing the spouse of a person receiving a pension by virtue of the Old Age Security Act to be entitled at the same time as his partner to the pension even if his age is lower than the present act demands.

He said: Mr. Speaker, once again I am introducing this motion with the hope that ensuing discussions will bring this government to follow up on it with an amendment to the Old Age Security Act, in order to enable husbands and wives—generally, it is wives—to receive the pension at the same time even though both have not yet reached the age now set at 65.

During debates on a similar motion a few years ago, one member said that if no age limit was established for this pension, this could perhaps encourage some men to abuse, that is, they would marry younger women in order to receive the pension. This could still be very crucial today since our Prime Minister recently married a very young lady and could also be tempted to take advantage of such a measure.

The reason I did not mention an age limit in my motion is that I think it should be provided in the bill introduced by the government. This limit could be set at 55, or ten years less than the age required to receive retirement pension and later, when the government lowers retirement age to 60—which I hope it will—the act could be changed so as to allow the wife to receive the pension upon reaching the age of 50.

Of course, the arguments and considerations which lead me to introduce such a motion again this year, are provided by the many people who request this legislation and are justified by the conditions in which our senior citizens and pensioners have to live. Even if these are social measures which outwardly seem to indicate that our senior citizens are well provided for, actually it is not so. A few people are perhaps gaining some advantages from the situation but it so happens that our social laws, especially with regard to old age security, are not what they appear to be in the eyes of the public.

Generally speaking, our society complains about the ever-increasing cost of living while professional people, semi-professional employees and all classes of workers are getting together and creating associations and unions, and while union leaders are calling for strike after strike. Within this confused situation of requests and requirements, there is one group of people that are not making any noise and which accordingly are left completely to their own resources. This group of people includes all the small pensioners over 65. They worked hard for 40 or 45 years at a time when wages and the cost of living were at a low level, at least at the beginning, and when pensions plans were rare. And when, by chance, it happened that some employers offered their employees a pension plan to which both parties made contributions, serious-minded employees tightened their belts in order to make sure that they would get a monthly income of $100 or $150 after 65.

In those same years, especially during the Second World War, the government appealed to patriotism to urge people to buy victory bonds. The wage earners tightened their belts and, because they were good patriots, they managed to get some small bonds by monthly instalments of $5. Later on there were provincial savings bonds and Government of Canada savings bonds.

What happens now is that beneficiaries of a small pension who own a few savings bonds are, to a certain extent, being penalized for their efforts to ensure a retirement income. They are penalized because now that their income exceeds the limits set by the government they are not entitled to the $55 added last April to old-age security pensions of needy persons with no other source of income.

In many cases the pension, which is fixed at $135, does not exist. When there are two spouses, the maximum per person is $127.50. Beneficiaries of small pensions also have to pay premiums on life insurance they may have, otherwise when their small savings have dwindled away they would have nothing left at their death. That might be a good way of obtaining funerals at government expense.

In most cases, beneficiaries of small pensions, however old, still have some family responsibilities, which does not help their lot, and this happens, in most cases when the wife is a few years younger than her husband. If the beneficiary of a small pension has worked without respite over many years in order to own his house, he still has to cope with municipal and school taxes which never reach a point of saturation. In repairs because imperative, he has to pay for services of electricians or carpenters, the cost of which is constantly increasing.

If the "small pensioner" does not own his house, he has to live in an apartment or in a room and there again rents are not decreasing! How can he afford lodging and food with $135 a month if he is the only one to receive a pension?

At this rate, should all the "small pensioners" go in senior citizens' homes for the rest of their days and be indirectly dependents on the state? These institutions are full and they have endless waiting lists.

I would like at this point to digress a little and indicate what is now happening in the province of Quebec in this regard. Before the guaranteed income supplement was increased in April, a couple was receiging $226.82 a month. I take as an example a couple who is living in a home for the elderly. In the province of Quebec, this couple had to pay $166 a month for board and lodging. They had then $60.82 left. Since April, because of the increase in the guaranteed minimum income supplement, the same couple now receives $255 a month, but they have to pay $208 to their boarding home instead of $166. Therefore, they have $47 left each month, that is $13.82 less than before the raise.

As regards couples who live in homes, people seem to believe that the pension these aged persons receive has indeed been increased, but through the action of another government which tries to finance itself directly from old age pensions, the pension did not go up but decreased by $32.80 a month. Such is the unbearable situation now in the province of Quebec.

In those cases where only the head of the family, for example, receives a pension, the maximum he may get is $135 per month.

Now, it was customary in the province of Quebec—I speak of Quebec because that is where I live—for the government, under the public assistance legislation, to grant an additional amount to the wife in order to allow the couple to live decently. But since the increase in the guaranteed income supplement paid by the federal government, Quebec has practically abolished all additional allowances granted to the wife. Sometimes, an amount equal to that of the increase granted by the federal government is deducted but, often, the amount deducted is greater than that increase.

So, that is another aspect which is not very attractive and which is approved by the Quebec government that advocates co-operative federalism. In fact, it is rather a backward federalism, one that is not acceptable to the citizens, at least to those of Quebec.

Now a couple living on one pension must face very great difficulties because they have to pay rent or if they own a small house which they finally bought through savings of all kinds, they must keep it up.

It is impossible to make both ends meet with $135 and to provide for two and quite often three or four people since, in many instances, such couples have in charge 15- or 16-year-old dependents. So these young people attend school and it is rather costly to support them.

My request is altogether justified. It covers those couples, including the head of the family who used to be the breadwinner and must in one way or another—if it is not of his own free will, he is forced to do it—retire, and when no income comes into the home, it is the difficulties which do come in.

During the active years of a worker, the government has taken from him what he could have saved for his old age, through income tax and other taxes of all kinds. So in most cases when the worker reaches 65 years of age his savings are very small and often do not allow him to lead a normal life.

I say that saving is penalized, and I have in mind a concrete case. This is about a widower who, last year, decided to work for a month, so as to improve his financial lot, and the federal government immediately penalized him by decreasing the amount of his pension, so that he only gets $70 a month. And this, merely because he had worked before or after the establishment of the Pension Plan. He is drawing $10.08 from the Quebec Pension Plan, and the Welfare service pays him an allowance of $7, which only gives him—and that, from three different sources—$87 a month. In these circumstances this old person cannot think of going to live in a home for the aged, because this would cost him $104 a month. He must stay in a boarding house, at cost of $20 a week, and since there are sometimes five weeks in a month, one can imagine in what trouble this man finds himself. He had to stop smoking and can no longer buy clothes or enjoy his hobbies. He cannot even afford to buy a newspaper!

I wanted to put those considerations before the House this afternoon, in order to show as much as possible the numerous difficulties experienced by old people even if quite often they seem covered by some legislation. As for the legislation, I compare it to a cake which has failed. When that happens, it is iced and it looks good. But when it is cut, then one realizes that it is not so good. Most of our social legislation is somewhat like that. As long as we do not need it, we imagine that everything is perfect, but when we get a taste it, we realize that there is not much under the icing.

That is why we ask for improvement on those laws to allow elderly couples of which only one has reached pension age, to lead normal lives without having to beg.

I hope hon. members who studied the motion and listened to my arguments will speak in favour of the motion and ask the government to introduce a bill that will clear up the situation.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I listened attentively to the eloquent speech of the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise). He aroused my curiosity so much that I wondered if the speech he delivered in such a masterly fashion would not fall in the darkness and void of times and if the Quebec National Assembly would not have been the more appropriate place for it.

Since the problems he set forth are, I believe, administrative problems under the jurisdiction of a certain province I am sure that his speech—and I am happy for him—will not fall into the darkness of times because he will be able to give it to one of his friends from the Quebec National Assembly. The hon. member dealt with our every day problems in the province of Quebec,—he referred to nearly all Quebec social security programs, including welfare—and we know there is an administrative unrest at present that will eventually be corrected.

But I agree with his remarks on social security programs. So I advise him to have his speech retyped and sent to one of the Créditiste members in Quebec who will be able to call the attention of the National Assembly on that problem.

Older people surely have a fairly deep feeling of insecurity, although that group more than any other group of citizens gets assistance at the present time through public programs. When older people retire, their income decreases while their needs often greatly increase.

I quite understand the object of the motion of the hon. member for Abitibi and I admit that allowing the wife of a pensioner to be entitled as well to the pension would perhaps improve for a while the conditions of retired couples, but I also claim that such a measure would not be in accordance with government policy.

This is what I mean. Our policy consists in channeling available resources toward the improvement of income security benefits for older people who live in dire poverty because of a very low income. If we examine the position of older people, we realize that older married couples are much better off than single persons.

It is an undeniable fact, shown in statistics, that poverty is more widespread among single persons than among married couples.

In fact, without some guaranteed income programs for the aged, about 72 per cent of single people over 65 would obtain less than $1,500 whereas 55 per cent of married couples would get less than $3,000.

It should be noted that the new programs have reduced such percentages to 53 per cent for single people and to 31 per cent for married couples in the over-65 category.

This proposal provides on a standard benefit of $80 for all wives under 65 whose husbands have reached retirement age. Of course, this benefit would do injustice to single women in the same age group since, not being married to pensioners, they would not be entitled to any benefit.

In that group of single women, we should include those who were never married and those who head a family, and we know that there are now more and more of them. The woman who acts as family head, if she works, can rely only on her own earnings, that is earnings on average lower than those obtained by men. Often those family heads are widows or deserted, separated or divorced wives, with dependent children. On this account, those women are reduced to an even more precarious and disastrous situation socially and financially.

If adopted, this proposal would mean granting a new demogrant, before the regular pension age, to the wife of a pensioner. The demogrant or the guaranteed income are acceptable means to provide sure income, since conditions for eligibility are simple. It should be noted, however, that this scheme is extremely costly since the same benefits are paid both to high income people and low income people.

To understand the federal government policy in the area of senior citizens income maintenance, it is important to be aware of all the current measures which cover this group of people. I can well imagine the chaos that this motion, if adopted, could cause since it would permit an old man to marry four or five times merely to have young and pretty girls get lifetime retirement payments. And, once the retired husband has passed away the pension will continue and the tearful wife will be able to try her luck again because she will not be too old yet.

I want to say that if we decided to discontinue the pension proposed under this motion, we would be faced with many more problems since those people would keep increasing in number. Moreover, we would have many complaints from those people who, for a period of time, would have enjoyed a certain level of income which would be interrupted overnight.

As I said earlier, this would be an injustice to the other group of citizens who are considered as unmarried and who, in fact, are not. They are widows, deserted women, divorced women, etc.

We know that the future has many surprises in store. From our current sociology, and mainly taking into account the present trend in society, it seems that divorces will become more and more numerous. When debating a motion such as that of the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) we should understand the government social security measures intended for our senior citizens.

Social security measures for the aged include the guaranteed income, assistance benefits and social welfare services, as well as the guaranteed income from private pension plans.

The guaranteed income legislation covers first of all, the old age security allowance; secondly, the guaranteed income supplement; and thirdly, the pension benefits granted through the Canada Pension Plan or the Quebec Pension Plan.

All those who meet the requirements with regard to age and residence are entitled to old age security benefits. In addition, old age pensioners whose income is lower than a set amount are entitled to a supplement, as I have just mentioned, by virtue of the guaranteed income supplement plan. Contributors to the Canada Pension Plan or the Quebec equivalent are eligible to pensions granted through those two plans, and these also provide for survivors' benefits. Such income maintenance measures are designed to guarantee only a basic minimum income; the government expects that the party concerned will have in due course taken steps to have at his disposal a more important income at the time of his retirement. If this income is inadequate to meet his basic requirements, he can apply for public assistance in his province.

Speaking about public assistance and various income maintenance measures, it might perhaps be useful to explain that those who have reached retirement age can apply for instance, to the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan. It is also useful to explain that the contributors to those two plans get a pension at the time of their retirement.

The plans were designed to provide workers with a retirement pension related to earnings, and they cover roughtly 92 per cent of all workers.

They also provide for benefits to disabled contributors and their dependents. Upon the death of a contributor, his widow and children are also paid a lump sum and monthly benefits.

The Canada Pension Plan is not in force in provinces where a similar scheme is operated. Hon. Members know that only Quebec provides for such a plan; the Quebec and the federal plans are closely related and are actually operating as one plan. Many thought the Quebec Pension Plan was not identical to the federal plan. On the contrary it is. If an employee insured under the federal plan moves his place of work to Quebec, or if a self-employed worker moves his residence to Quebec, their contributions to the Quebec plan will entitle them to the same benefits as if they had been paid into the Canada Pension Plan and vice versa.

One contribution is enough to ensure entitlement to a retirement pension, but in this case the pension will normally be very low. To be entitled to a disability pension, the contributor must obviously suffer from a disability which prevents him from being gainfully employed. In addition, he must have contributed during at least one third of the years during which he could have contributed, or ten years, whichever is the less, but in any event, he must have contributed at least five years.

In order to ensure that the person was a member of the labour force until fairly recently, the requirements are that he must have contributed during at least five of the last ten years, during which he could have contributed before coming disabled. So that the survivors be entitled to benefits, a person must have contributed during a third of the years he could have contributed or ten years, whichever is the less, but never less than three years.

Old Age Security Act

A retirement pension, as everyone knows, is payable to a citizen between 65 and 70, if the contributor ceases to have a permanent job. If he earns $900 or less, he is considered as retired and can apply for pension. Those who take a job after they receive a pension are subject to a means test. If the income from this job is between $900 and $1500 a year, the pension is reduced by half the amount earned over and above $900, the maximum reduction being $300. If the annual income exceeds $1500, the pension is reduced by $300 plus the balance over $1500. However, no reduction will be made for the months when the pensioner's income is not more than $75, regardless of his annual income. After 70 years of age, however, the pension is paid in full. Whatever the earnings, the limits mentioned above will vary according to the changes made in the pension index.

In its white paper on income security published a few months ago, the federal government proposed several changes to improve this plan.

The proposed changes cannot come into effect before January 1973. It is a mere technicality, because the provinces must be consulted and since the law provides, as I said a while ago, that a three year advance notice is required before any change is made. The main amendments are as follows:

The maximum pensionable earnings will be gradually raised from $5,500 in 1972 to $7,800 in 1975.

Benefits will be based on a maximum average of pensionable income of $7,800 (benefit under the unamended program). The maximum will reach $162 in 1977, from $121 in 1976 when the plan comes into force, over and above old age security benefits.

Disabled persons will receive a maximum of $199 a month in 1973; they now receive $114, which will be increased to $249 by 1977. Wives of disabled contributors will receive a flat amount of $80, when the disabled contributor is less than 65 years old, with dependent children. Widows will receive a maximum of $170 per month in 1973; they are now receiving $71 and will receive $208 by 1977, whatever their age.

Some special adjustments will be necessary. Those receiving pensions as widows or wives of disabled contributors in 1972 will have their benefits adjusted in 1973 according to the scale of increase.

We could go into more detail about old age security. Under an amendment to the 1951 Old Age Security Act, the federal government is paying a standard rate of $80 a month to all persons who meet the age and residence conditions. The old age security system protects almost all aged people, except the few citizens who do not meet the residence requirements.

The old age security system offers a basis on which all Canadians may rely on for their retirement income. This is the standard rate basis on which the guaranteed pensions have been established for the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan. It is also the base on which the guaranteed income supplement is calculated.

[Mr. Isabelle.]

Mr. Speaker, I would not like to take more of the time of the House to remind the hon. member for Abitibi that I insist that he asks his colleagues to give in the Quebec National Assembly the magnificent speech he has just delivered. I hope the Assembly will take the matter into consideration since the issue that the hon. member has just raised in the House falls under provincial jurisdiction. We have basic security plans, but their application is left to the provinces, as it happens with the Canada Assistance Program, which allows to do a lot of things, but unfortunately the provinces do not seem interested in using it. They had the opportunity to do so, because it is up to them to decide on the implementation of this plan. Again, we have an assistance plan which in my view is extraordinary, which could meet all the needs, and again I hope the hon. member's speech had been made in the Quebec National Assembly.

[English]

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to participate in this debate in order to support the principle of the resolution moved by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise). It is also a pleasure to speak on behalf of that group of people whom I believe are the most deserving in our society and, tragically, in many instances are the most needy. I could not help smiling at the remarks of the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle) when he reminded the hon. member for Abitibi that he should make sure his speech is drawn to the attention of the National Assembly of Quebec. It would seem to me that a member representing the government party would be much more able to give such advice than a member who sits in the opposition in either the National Assembly or in this House.

Although I support this motion in principle, I cannot support it in its detail, in that the hon. member suggests the pension should be available to the spouse at the time of the passing away of the other half of the family who was eligible. This would make the spouse eligible at a younger age than 65. I agree with the principle, but let us consider this example: Suppose the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) should have a normal life span of three score years and ten, and after he had been eligible for the old age pension for five years he should pass away. That would mean that his surviving wife would be eligible for the pension at 41 years of age.

I do not really think it is necessary to make a surviving spouse eligible at such an early age. Perhaps it would be better to set a minimum age such as 60 years or something similar. I am sure this would meet the need the hon. member has in mind, because I know that very often the surviving spouse is in great difficulty. So in principle I believe this motion represents a real need.

However, Mr. Speaker, apart from that there are several other points which I think are logical, which could well be implemented without any great cost to the government or to the taxpayer and which would substantially help our senior citizens who are eligible for pension. I think there should be an increased exemption so far as tax is concerned, not only for old age pensioners but for all Canadian citizens. If Parliament was justified in 1949 in setting the exemption at $1,000, with the decreased purchasing power of the dollar and the increased cost of living if we were to set the same standard of exemption today it would be $2,500 rather than $1,000. Perhaps this is not possible so far as the tax budget is concerned, but certainly the $1,000 exemption is not enough. The group in our society that has this problem more than anyone else is composed of senior citizens who are pensioners. There should be an increased exemption for them, although I believe it would be only social justice for the increased tax exemption to be applied to everybody.

There is another way in which I think the pensioner can be helped. Again, I do not think it would cost the treasury much money but it would help the old age pensioner. I think the old age pension should be tax exempt. If we believe that pensions belong to our senior citizens because of their contribution to society and to the nation as a whole, then their pension should be exempt from tax.

I am confident, based on my experience across Canada, that the people who suffer most as a result of inflation and the increased cost of living are not really the unemployed or even those on welfare—although I do not take away from the need of many of those in that category—but are the working poor. There are many people who work the normal 40 hours a week. Suppose they get $70 a week: they earn $280 a month and deductions come off that amount. How can any family live on $260 take-home pay? There are many in that category. Even those earning $100 a week, meaning that the family is trying to live on $400 a month or less because of deductions, are below the poverty line laid down by the Economic Council of Canada.

It is in this area that we have the greatest responsibility. Senator Croll and his Special Committee on Poverty made it very clear that it is in this area that the greatest need exists. There are probably 4½ million people locked into the classification of the working poor. When you project them through the later years in life, what is a difficult situation normally for those in the middle-age bracket becomes much more difficult in the upper-age bracket.

One of the things the government has done, and I agree with it, is to improve the Canadian Pension Plan. Its present projected benefits constitute a far superior type of pension to any previous plan. If the plan proceeds as planned to 1978, a very sizeable pension will be available to anyone who has contributed for up to ten years if their income has been such that they contributed the maximum amount. There is now an indication from the government that they will increase the minimum amount on which tax can be paid, which will result in an increase in benefit to those who earn more than $5,000. But this does not really help the middle group, the working poor, whose income is less than $5,000 a year. It is to these people that the Canada Pension Plan means less because, their contribution having been smaller, their returns are smaller.

So again I think it is very important that the basic pension be broadened to help these people as they enter into the senior citizen group. I believe that this is all part of very legitimate reforms which should be brought in by the government. After all, it is their responsibility to bring about the social justice which they have talked about so much and which certainly belongs to our senior citizens more than to any other group, apart from those who are unable to earn a living or who are incapacitated. Apart from the points which I have raised, I think the principle involved in this motion is a very legitimate one. I hope that the House will give support to that type of legislation.

There are two more comments that I should like to make in closing. It has long been my political philosophy, so far as social responsibility is concerned, that it is sound for anyone in politics, and basically sound as a principle, for us to accept special responsibility for two particular groups in our society. First let us remember our senior citizens, including our parents and those who have reached advanced years, because when we were young it was they who looked after us. Let us also remember the special responsibility that we have to our young people to provide them with an opportunity to earn a gainful living and also to save and to contribute through the productive years of their lives for the time when they become senior citizens, because when we become old it is they who will be responsible for taking care of us.

I think a very sound approach to this area of responsibility is brought before us in this motion. Senator Croll made a very important statement in the first report of the Committee on Poverty when he spoke about the over-all welfare system. He said:

> I think we ought to be able to scrap the system completely. We could actually repeal every one of our social measures, with the exception of the Canada Assistance Plan, the Canada Pension Plan and the unemployment insurance plan, and meet every requirement under the basic definition of "need" in the Canada Assistance Plan, modifying it to some slight extent so it would all fit under an umbrella rather than as now under a tent with 200 or so measures.

This is not the time to talk about welfare, but I wish to draw to the attention of members of the House the fact that the one area which he felt should not be included under a new approach to welfare is the Canada Pension Plan and the Canada Assistance Plan, because I think that in these two areas we are looking at a very special need.

I am grateful for the opportunity to support the hon. member for Abitibi in principle. I hope government members will allow this motion to go to the committee. We cannot be expected to pass it here this afternoon but in committee it could be discussed in a realistic way, to make provision for those in this area of special responsibility. It would not upset the treasury too much, but it would help more effectively to achieve social justice in our land.

[Translation]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to say a few words about this motion, because I agree with my friend the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise).

• (4:50 p.m.)

[English]

I agree even more strongly in English. The motion is really a very simple one. If I heard him correctly, I think the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) did not quite get the point. The motion does not have to do only with the pension being continued after the death of a pensioner to that pensioner's widow, but more specifically it requests that when man and wife are both alive and one of them is of pensionable age and the other is not, the younger of the two should also draw the pension. I think this is a very commendable proposal and I think it should be supported. And since the motion is only a request that the government should consider the matter, I do not see why we cannot allow it to come to a vote this afternoon.

An hon. Member: Then Margaret would get the pension at 36.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is a very interesting bit of byplay about the Prime Minister's young bride, but the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) made it quite clear that his motion does not set out the details. It is a request that the government consider bringing in a measure, and if the government brought in that measure the details would have to be set out in that legislation.

I agree with the sponsor of the motion that it would be appropriate, when putting in the details, to set some age at which this would come into effect. I think he suggested age 60 or perhaps 55, and I think we would all agree that such an age would be a reasonable one at which it would be understood that the spouse of a pensioner would also get the pension.

I am sorry that the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle) is not in the chamber, because that limits me somewhat in commenting on his speech today. I am always interested in speeches that he makes on pension matters. Today he did not quite give us all the history of pensions that he usually does, but really he travelled all over the world to find ways in which these people could have their needs met without the implementation of this motion. But the hon. member forgot a few things. He forgot about unemployment insurance. Maybe these young wives could qualify for unemployment insurance. Why didn't he try that one? He forgot about workmen's compensation, but maybe he will include that in his next pension speech. And he forgot about the special position of the wives and widows of Members of Parliament.

Why all this beating about the bush? Why not admit that this is a sensible, simple proposition that the hon. member has placed before the House and agree to it, namely, that if one member of a married couple is 65 and gets the pension, then the other member, whether at age 63, 58, or down as far as 55 ought to get the pension as well? I urge that this be done. I commend the hon. member for bringing the motion before the House, not only for that reason but for one or two other reasons as well.

For one such other reason, I think it is a good idea to raise the pension question at every opportunity we can. I say that because when the government brought in a white paper last November and got a pension bill through the House in about 17 days, that was a strange form of participatory democracy. People are only now discovering what was in the white paper and how much of it was wrong. So we have to keep raising the pension question at every opportunity. This motion also provides an opportunity to make one or two other suggestions, but in view of the way the clock is moving I shall restrict myself to just one. I think that just as we have a provision like this in some other pieces of legislation, there ought to be a provision that when one partner of a married couple dies, both of them having been on pension, the pension should continue to the survivor at the married rate for a year or at least for six months. The problem people face in such a situation in getting adjusted, whether it be a widow or a widower, is an extremely difficult one. As a matter of fact the length of time that people live on alone is not so great that we could not continue the pension right along, but at least for a period of a year and certainly for not less than six months the pension should be continued at the married rate.

Mr. Speaker, if I end abruptly I do so deliberately because I wish to leave a few minutes during which a vote may be taken on the motion. I am sorry so much time has been spent in running all around the issue instead of facing up to the simple question involved. I support the motion.

Mr. Murray McBride (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to seize this opportunity to make a few comments on the notice of motion placed before the House by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise). I might venture to suggest that even the erudite hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) may have slightly missed emphasizing one of the attributes of the motion, in the sense that as I read it it simply refers to spouse, which can be either a husband or a wife, and it might well be that the motion would apply to situations where an older woman had married a younger man. Therefore, I assume that the hon. member for Abitibi would want, in circumstances when the elder of the two reached pensionable age, which at the moment is 65, that both would receive the pension.

I think it is important to raise a few questions and put them on the record at this time. I am assuming that according to the terms of the motion, when an elder partner in a marriage reached pensionable age the hon. member for Abitibi would want the younger partner to receive the benefits that accrue to the elder partner, regardless of the age of the younger partner, although he did make reference to the fact that we could set an age limit above which the younger partner must be. But it was to be regardless of the financial circumstances of the younger partner.

At face value it seems to me a good idea, as was suggested by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson). For example, a man who is 65 or older and who is married to a woman who is considerably younger could have several young dependent children and might well need extra assistance. Therefore, if he loses his source of income from his work by being pensioned off at 65, and if his wife is much younger, his income may take a drastic slump. In such circumstances this motion would have great merit. However, I think it is inadequate in certain respects.

If the motion were tightened up and made more realistic, I would support it, Mr. Speaker. Therefore, I present two suggestions to improve it. The first is simply that the motion ought to be acted upon provided the spouse of the pensioner will have reached the age of 55 years and, in addition, provided that the first partner of a marriage to become a recipient of old age security will have been—this is the crucial point—the principal wage earner of the home over the five-year period immediately preceding. This would require a spouse to apply and that a family is in a position where both partners are forced to live on the income of one of them, all of which assumes—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order. The hour set aside for consideration of private members' business has now expired. As it is five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday at 2 p.m.

[English]

Because Sunday is Mother's Day I thought the following lines might be a gentle reminder:

They say that man is mighty
He governs land and sea,
He wields a mighty sceptre
O'er lesser powers that be
But a sovereign—gentler, mightier,
Man from his throne has hurled—
For the hand that rocks the cradle
Is the hand that rules the world.

Mother or ruler, no one can take her place. She is our provider of life and love. Thanks a million, mothers! God bless you and make us worthy sons.

At five o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, May 10, 1971

The House met at 2 p.m.

AGRICULTURE

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND POTATO GROWERS—REQUEST UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43 I rise to move a motion on a matter of urgent public importance. It arises out of the crisis conditions at the present time in the agricultural industry of Prince Edward Island. This is due to a very long period of below cost prices for our basic agricultural product, potatoes.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) in recent days, in answer both to myself and to the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean), seemed to indicate that his only response is that prices are higher at the present time. This answer, I feel, is either misleading or perhaps even dishonest because most of the farmers have already sold their potatoes—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has previously presented motions to the House under Standing Order 43 and I have had occasion to remind him of the terms of the Standing Order. The hon. member knows that he cannot argue the case. He can only indicate the urgency of the matter which he seeks to raise. The hon. member also knows that under the standing order no opportunity is given to anyone to reply to the motion. Thus, to my way of thinking it is basic and elementary fairness that hon. members should limit themselves to the terms of the Standing Order, indicate briefly what the urgency is, and not make accusations about other members of the House, which is what the hon. member is doing at the present time. I would invite the hon. member to respect the spirit and the letter of Standing Order 43 and propose as soon as possible the motion which he has in mind.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I was deliberately trying to be very brief, but I felt I had to say a brief word in explanation of the urgency of the motion because farmers at the present time do not have potatoes for sale regardless of the present price and desperately need funds for seed and fertilizer in order to get into the new growing season. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean):

That the government of Canada immediately consult with the government of Prince Edward Island to formulate an immediate program of assistance for P.E.I. potato growers and that the government present this program to the House of Commons within seven days.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Egmont. Under the terms of Standing Order 43 the motion can only be put with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimity?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has heard, as I have, that there are dissenting voices. Consequently the motion cannot be put in this form at this time.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member rises on a point of order.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, a moment ago in referring to the motion that I presented you suggested that perhaps it is not proper to present argument in the course of proposing such a motion. I would not want in any way to take away from the Minister of Agriculture the opportunity for him to make a statement on motions this afternoon with respect to the very serious situation of the potato producers of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

TAKEOVER BY STEINBERG'S LIMITED OF CARTIER REFINED SUGARS LIMITED

Question No. 646—Mr. Watson:

1. Did the Department of Trade and Commerce advise the Bank of Canada and/or the Industrial Development Bank in January, 1965 that it had been informed of a takeover bid by Steinberg's Limited of Cartier Refined Sugars Limited?

2. Did the Department forward a memorandum dated January 7, 1965 from the Commodities Division to the Bank of Canada or IDB outlining the takeover attempt?

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: 1. The Industrial Development Bank was so advised orally on February 1, 1965.

2. No, however, a copy of a memorandum from Mr. Robin Austin of that date was forwarded to the Industrial Development Bank in February, 1965.

Questions

INCLUSION OF ORIGINAL CANADIAN LITERATURE IN PROVINCIAL CURRICULA

Question No. 658—Mr. Rowland:

Has the Government of Canada developed a program designed to encourage curriculum authorities in the several provinces to carefully consider the inclusion of original Canadian literature in their curricula and, if not, is the Government considering establishing such a program in the near future?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): The Government of Canada has no such program. The Education curriculum is under the jurisdiction of provincial Departments of Education.

*UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE RECIPIENT SAMPLINGS, ABITIBI, TÉMISCAMINGUE AND VILLENEUVE

Question No. 923—Mr. Laprise:

1. What are the names and addresses of persons designated by DBS or other governmental agencies to determine unemployment insurance recipient samplings in the constituencies of (a) Abitibi (b) Témiscamingue (c) Villeneuve?

2. How are such people paid?

[Translation]

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, Statistics Canada (Dominion Bureau of Statistics) does not conduct either sample or full coverage surveys to provide information on unemployment insurance recipients. The Labour force survey, upon which Statistics Canada estimates of employment and unemployment are based, does not include questions relating to unemployment insurance.

[English]

YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—UNEMPLOYMENT STATISTICS

Question No. 938—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

1. What is the rate of unemployment in (a) the Yukon (b) the Northwest Territories?

2. What is the breakdown of these figures for native population and other residents?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. The Department of Manpower and Immigration and the Unemployment Insurance Commission report that they do not collect data on unemployment for those areas. Statistics Canada (Dominion Bureau of Statistics) does not collect data on unemployment in the Yukon and Northwest Territories on a regular basis, due to the high cost of conducting labour force surveys in these areas. There are Canada Manpower Centres in Whitehorse and in Yellowknife. They report the following numbers of registered clients without employment on the last working day of December, 1970. Whitehorse, 545; Yellowknife, 429. These numbers represent the count of clients in each office and are not a measure of unemployment.

2. No distinction is made between the native population and other residents.

[Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary).]

BEAUCE CONSTITUENCY—DESIGNATION OF INTERVIEWERS BY STATISTICS CANADA TO DETERMINE NUMBER OF UNEMPLOYED

Question No. 954—Mr. Rodrigue:

1. What are the names and addresses of the people designated by Statistics Canada or any other government agencies to determine the number of unemployed people in the constituency of Beauce?

2. How many people are consulted during each survey?

3. What is the salary for this work?

4. Are any expense allowances paid apart from the salary?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Statistics Canada (Dominion Bureau of Statistics) reports that: 1. The following people are interviewers for the Labour Force Survey of Statistics Canada (Dominion Bureau of Statistics), in the constituency of Beauce: M^me^ Annette Bisson, C.P. 172, Vallée Jonction, Co. Beauce, Québec; M^me^ Marthe Morin Poulin, C.P. 74, B.P. Bolduc, St. Martin de Beauce, Québec.

2. During each survey, approximately 90 households located within the constituency of Beauce are interviewed for Labour Force information.

3. These interviewers are paid at the hourly rate of $1.92 for time spent on interviewing and receiving instructions.

4. These interviewers receive 13 cents per mile for use of a privately owned automobile. When it is necessary for an interviewer to work in an area which is more than ten miles from their home, the Regional Director can authorize that a meal allowance be paid in accordance with Treasury Board Travel Directive dated June 1969.

ACCIDENTS INVOLVING BUSES

Question No. 1,075—Mr. Mather:

1. What was the number of accidents involving commercially operated buses in 1968, 1969 and 1970?

2. (a) How many fatalities resulted from these accidents in each of these years (b) how many injuries?

3. What, in dollars, was the property damage of these accidents?

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada (Dominion Bureau of Statistics) reports that: Information on the number of accidents involving commercially operated buses is incomplete because only those commercial school buses operated by intercity or urban transit companies are surveyed. Also, information for 1970 is not yet available. The following information has been collected on Intercity and Rural Passenger Bus Firms for 1968 and 1969. This information includes all motor vehicles that were operated by the carrier.

WORLD PETROLEUM CONGRESS, MOSCOW—CANADIAN REPRESENTATION

Question No. 1,124—Mr. Yewchuk:

Does the government have any plans to send technical representatives to the World Petroleum Congress in Moscow in early June and, if so, who will represent Canada at the Congress?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Canada will be represented at the World Petroleum Congress in Moscow by one technical representative of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and by a small group of senior officers of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and of the National Energy Board.

*EMERGENCY RELIEF REQUESTED BY GOVERNMENT OF NOVA SCOTIA SINCE JANUARY 1, 1971

Question No. 1,178—Mr. McCleave:

What amount of emergency relief has been requested by the Government of Nova Scotia since January 1, on what basis and with what response?

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question is quite lengthy and I wonder if we might have the permission of the House to print it in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: The above-mentioned answer reads as follows:]

Mr. Mahoney: In so far as the Department of Finance is concerned, the Government of Nova Scotia has indicated that in view of recent floods in that province a request for assistance may be forwarded to the Federal Government when realistic estimates of the cost of dealing with the flood situation become available. The Federal Government has indicated its willingness to consider assistance to the province on the same basis as it has assisted other provinces which have experienced similar problems in the last few years (see the answer to question 748 on page 3028 of Hansard, February 3, 1971).

Questions

In so far as the Department of National Defence is concerned, the following Emergency Flood Assistance was provided to the Government of Nova Scotia since January 1, 1971, in accordance with the Order-in-Council 1962-13/653 dated May 2, 1962.

Bridgewater, N.S.

MONEY SENT TO UNITED STATES BY CANADIAN ORGANIZED LABOUR AND COMPANIES

Question No. 1,250—Mr. Alexander:

To the knowledge of the government, how much money was sent to the United States last year (a) by organized labour in Canada (b) by Canadian companies controlled or owned by United States interests?

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada (Dominion Bureau of Statistics) reports that: (a) In 1968, the last year for which information is available, $41,792,000 in Canadian members' per capita taxes were paid to the United States headquarters of international unions. This included contributions of $278,000 to pension plans administered by entities separate from the unions. (b) It is estimated that Canadian companies controlled or owned by United States interests made investment income payments to the United States of approximately $700 million in 1970. These payments include dividends, interest on funded debt and profits of unincorporated branches.

USE OF NRC LABORATORIES BY CONSUMERS ASSOCIATION OF CANADA AND OTHER GROUPS

Question No. 1,252—Mr. Thomson:

Does National Research Council allow the use of its laboratories to groups such as Consumers Association of Canada and (a) if so, does NRC charge for such service and on what basis (b) if not, for what reason?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): In so far as the National Research Council of Canada is concerned, the answer is as follows: (a) Yes. NRC Laboratories' services are made available to companies, associations or individual as well as Government Departments and Agencies except in so far as these would conflict with private firms engaged in providing such services. Where the amount of laboratory service warrants charges being levied, it is on the basis of labour, materials, and overhead. When the services provided are of scientific interest to NRC the costs are sometimes shared by NRC and the requisitioner. (b) N/a.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FINANCE

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY CRISIS—CANADIAN ACTION TO ACHIEVE STABILITY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question concerning the currency and exchange difficulties to the Minister of Finance who has just arrived in time. While realizing that the revaluations that have taken place will perhaps benefit Canada's export industries and thereby ease our difficulties, may I ask the minister whether he intends to take any initiative with regard to bringing about a greater degree of stability in international monetary exchanges in view of the tremendous interest of this country and our economy in greater stability?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Discussions have been taking place through the International Monetary Fund, Mr. Speaker, and our director at the IMF has been in touch with the government for guidance in these discussions.

Mr. Stanfield: Does Canada intend to call for a special meeting with regard to the present difficulties or the degree of instability that seems to exist? Does Canada intend to call for a special conference or intend to put forward any recommendations for changes in view of the fact we have been through three or four crises in the last three or four years?

Mr. Benson: I am trying to think back to the three or four crises in the last three or four years, Mr. Speaker. Discussions normally take place through the IMF. If it is decided that it is advisable to have a meeting of the governors of the IMF or the Group of Ten, of course Canada will take part.

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the importance of the subject to Canada, is the Minister of Finance taking a position with regard to these difficulties and the present international arrangements regarding foreign exchange? Is the government of Canada making any recommendations or does the government regard it as satisfactory to have a continuing crisis?

Mr. Benson: Of course not, Mr. Speaker. The government of Canada does not regard it as satisfactory. The normal course of discussions is through the IMF. We are taking part in those discussions through our director at the IMF.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY CRISIS—CANADIAN REPRESENTATIONS TO INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND ON METHODS OF FIXING EXCHANGE VALUES

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since Canada is a non-conforming member of the International Monetary Fund in that it has floated its exchange rate for 11 months or so, would the minister not think that it would be incumbent upon Canada to make special representations now to the governors of the IMF that special measures be taken to consider alternative methods of fixing exchange values in light of the fact that there now seems to be a breakdown and we have a mess in Europe at the present time?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend knows, studies of the exchange system have been taking place through the IMF. We are participating in these through our permanent director at the IMF.

INTERPROVINCIAL MARKETING—DISCUSSION WITH PROVINCES—CONSULTATION WITH FEDERAL GOVERNMENT PRIOR TO ESTABLISHMENT OF PROVINCIAL RESTRICTIONS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister arising out of continuing developments in obstacles to interprovincial trade in agricultural produce which, if not checked, may extend to other products as well. Has this question been the subject of discussion at federal-provincial conferences or other meetings in the past and, in any case, has the government or any department of government been consulted by those provinces which have established obstacles to free interprovincial trade?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, this subject has been discussed at federal-provincial conferences. The federal-provincial conference on the constitution of last September, I believe, discussed the matter at some length and, as I reported to the House at the time and since, most of the provinces present encouraged us to proceed with great haste with Bill C-176, because they felt that it was an honest attempt to meet the problem. The general subject, which I am sure also interests the hon. member, of the Canadian common market was put on the agenda of the constitutional conference at the initiative of the federal government some time ago. When time is found for that on the agenda, we will discuss the general constitution in relation to the need to preserve the Canadian common market.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I put this question seriously to the Prime Minister. Since Bill C-176 is obviously a permissive piece of legislation which may or may not be implemented by some provinces or may or may not be accepted by the majority of some producing segments, has the government made any clear statement to the provinces of its policy with regard to a common market in Canada? Would he also consider, in light of developments, placing the subject definitely on the agenda of the federal-provincial conference which is to take place next month in Victoria?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, concerning the agenda in Victoria, personally I would hesitate to suggest that it be put on the agenda. Of course, if the provinces so wish it will be done. But we learned from the previous federal-provincial conference that this matter of a common market is a very intricate and delicate one to discuss with the provinces. As a matter of fact, the leader of the New Democratic Party will remember that when we were discussing jurisdiction over taxation, and indirect taxation in particular, it was even then difficult to come to agreement with the provinces on how perhaps indirect taxation could be allowed to the provinces under the constitution without affecting adversely this Canadian common market. Therefore I would not have great hopes that even if it were on the agenda we could reach a solution in June which would be of a theoretical and constitutional nature. This is why, I repeat, the government has followed the approach of trying to set up, in co-operation with the provinces under the present constitution, national marketing boards of one kind or another.

INTERPROVINCIAL MARKETING—FEDERAL POSITION IN PROCEEDINGS BEFORE SUPREME COURT RESPECTING VALIDITY OF PROVINCIAL REGULATIONS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): May I ask the Prime Minister a final supplementary question. The Minister of Justice has informed us that the government is entering the case that will go before the Supreme Court of Canada on this subject. He has stated that the government intends to defend the constitution, which is a little cryptic and not entirely intelligible. Will the Prime Minister inform the House whether counsel for the federal government will take a position against the constitutionality of these varying provincial steps to interfere with interprovincial trade?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not believe I can answer, Mr. Speaker, without giving a very intricate legal opinion. I draw to the attention of the hon. member that he knows very well how the constitution reads on this matter. It talks about free movement, without fiscal impediment, between provinces. But the hon. member also knows that the practice of provinces imposing regulations within their own boundaries is one which is also accepted under the past practices of the constitution.

Mr. Horner: No, no.

Mr. Trudeau: That is the reason why the federal government, contrary to the advice of some hon. members, did not think the solution was in going to the courts. That is why we have pleaded with the House to get on with this remedy, Bill C-176—

[Mr. Lewis.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: —even if it is not to the satisfaction of the opposition, so that a chance might at least be given to try to implement these national marketing boards.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a supplementary question. As the hon. member for York South stated, the Minister of Justice said, in response to a question from me, that he had instructed counsel to defend the constitution in so far as interprovincial trade and the British North America Act are concerned. As the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice do not always see eye to eye on legal matters, I ask the Prime Minister if it is the policy of the government that the marketing acts and regulations passed by certain provinces, including Quebec and British Columbia, are repugnant to and offend against the spirit and letter of the British North America Act and should be struck down? If so, which regulations or regulations and acts of which provinces—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question is very interesting, but I suggest that he is asking for an opinion, legal or otherwise. The way I understand the hon. member's question, he is inviting the Prime Minister to state whether he feels that certain provincial legislation is contrary to the spirit of the constitution. At that point the Prime Minister would be expressing an opinion legal or otherwise. In those terms the question is not acceptable.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I was careful to say the spirit of the act. With great respect, in that respect I think that the government, through the Prime Minister, should be entitled to indicate the position it takes with regard to this matter. This is not asking for an abstract opinion of law. Certain regulations have been passed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I certainly do not want to cause difficulties. I am prepared to allow the Prime Minister to answer, but the hon. member will note that I was careful in expressing my view; I said "legal or otherwise". The hon. member says he did not ask for a legal opinion. He asked for a non-legal opinion, and that is also against the rules. Perhaps the Prime Minister might be allowed to reply to the hon. member's question provided it is done briefly, because there are a number of other supplementaries on the same subject.

Mr. Trudeau: In his supplementary, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member indicated that he was not talking in the abstract but about concrete regulations and laws which are now before the Supreme Court of Canada. I must confess that, unlike the hon. member, I would not be so bold as to tell the Supreme Court of Canada what they should be deciding.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Is the right hon. gentleman aware that if Bill C-176 were passed today or tomorrow trade barriers could still exist and, in fact, might well exist because of that measure?

INTERPROVINCIAL MARKETING—DISCUSSION WITH PROVINCIAL MINISTERS OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): May I direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. Has the minister met with his counterparts, particularly in Ontario, Quebec but also in other provinces, to discuss the present dislocation of marketing? If not, is he planning a meeting with these ministers in the very near future in an effort to resolve the situation?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I have not held such a meeting within the last few days but it is generally agreed that as soon as we have the legal authority on which to base an agreement we would meet at once.

Mr. Gleave: Does the minister not consider the constitution as now written a sufficient legal basis upon which to hold conversations with his counterparts in the provinces?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question is certainly not in order.

INTERPROVINCIAL MARKETING—COMMUNICATION OF FEDERAL POSITION TO PROVINCIAL PREMIERS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Has the Prime Minister communicated the attitude of the federal government in this matter to the Prime Ministers of Quebec and Ontario, setting out the position the government intends to take before the Supreme Court and stating that the government considers that the action they have taken is ultra vires of the constitution? Has the prime minister set out that position?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we set it out last September before the present case went to the courts. As I said in answer to the leader of the New Democratic Party a few moments ago, we did state our position quite clearly in September on the basis of the importance of finding a solution to the marketing problem in Canada. At the time, I repeat, we had the support, if not of every province, of certainly an immense majority of the provinces. I see the hon. member for Crowfoot wants to ask a supplementary. It is true that since then some provinces have apparently wavered in their support of the bill, but I am not surprised; they have been waiting for it for a year and a half because of the hon. member's obstruction.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before I give the floor to the hon. member for Crowfoot may I point out that we should give a chance to an hon. member representing the party seated at the extreme left of the House. I will allow a few more supplementaries and then invite the hon. member for Bellechasse to ask a question.

Mr. Horner: I rise on a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Horner: Hon. members may laugh, but how can one man be so powerful as to stop a whole government? I have been accused of holding up the legislation. I do not think that statement can be justified or substantiated by the Prime Minister or anyone else. I am wrongfully accused.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is debate between the Prime Minister and the hon. member for Crowfoot. Having stated his question of privilege, perhaps the hon. member might now ask his supplementary.

An hon. Member: Don't be so modest, Jack.

FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING BILL—EXEMPTION OF CATTLE

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): My supplementary arises out of the Liberal party's policy convention held in April, 1970—I think it was on the third or fourth. They stated then that no provincial barriers should be permitted to prevent the interprovincial movement of farm products. The Prime Minister has based his case for Bill C-176 on the September conference with the premiers. Is he not aware that at that conference the premiers agreed that cattle would be exempt? Cattle are not exempt under the bill and therefore no province can agree with the legislation.

An hon. Member: They are exempt.

Mr. Horner: They are not.

An hon. Member: Read the bill, Jack.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Hon. members are again injecting into the question period debate on Bill C-176. I realize that this is an important matter and that questions can be asked about it, but those questions should not go to the extent of discussing what is or is not contained in a measure which is before the House. Hon. members should bear this in mind.

Mr. Horner: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said the provinces had agreed to early passage of this bill. They agreed on one condition, that cattle should be exempt. Cattle are not exempt at this date and therefore the provinces are disagreeing with the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure all these arguments will be made when we reach the debate on Bill C-176.

CONFIDENTIALITY OF PAYMENTS BY CANADAN DAIRY COMMISSION FOR BUTTER STORAGE

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a question fo the Minister of Agriculture.

Further to the partial reply to my question No. 1,294 on the order paper concerning the total paid by the Canadian Dairy Commission for the storage of butter during the fiscal years 1968-69 and 1969-70, could the minister tell us why details of payments to individuals or companies are confidential? Is the House not entitled to know those details?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it has been the general practice, I think, not to reply to questions of this type asking for exact details, including names, addresses and amounts of particular producers' business with the dairy commission.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member for Spadina and the hon. member for Fraser Valley West wish to ask supplementaries to the previous question. These are the only supplementaries that will be allowed for the moment on this subject and then we should move on to the next matter.

FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING BILL—EFFECT ON CONSUMER PRICES IN URBAN AREAS

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. Has the government made an advance study of the effects of Bill C-176 on consumer food prices in urban areas such as Toronto, Ottawa and other cities across the country?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would read some of the clauses of Bill C-176 he would note that consumers' interests are to be taken into account.

FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING BILL—CONSTITUTIONAL POSITION IN FACE OF POSSIBLE OPTING OUT BY PROVINCES

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I direct my supplementary to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister has suggested to us that the passage of Bill C-176 might avoid certain constitutional problems in regard to import orders and free trade across Canada, and hopefully it will. But does the Prime Minister not agree that should some provinces or any province decide to opt out of the bill the government will still face the constitutional problem if the province that opts out insists on shipping its product into the common market area?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that this is argument, it is debate, and a question in those terms is not in order. Does the hon. member wish to rephrase his question?

Mr. Rose: If I may raise a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I asked the Prime Minister whether he did not agree and he appeared almost ready to answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. When the hon. member asks a minister whether he agrees or does not agree he is of course inviting argument, and the hon. member puts himself out of court the moment he asks a question in those terms. The hon. member is now apparently agreeing to disagree and wishes to rephrase his question.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government will not continue to face the constitutional problem should a province decide to opt out of Bill C-176 and continue to insist that constitutionally it can ship its products into the common market area covered by the bill?

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am inclined to agree that there will be difficulties even after Bill C-176 has been adopted if we do not get the co-operation of the provinces in the implementation thereof. However, this is not new. The hon. member will remember that as long ago as the Rowell-Sirois commission they were trying to come to grips with the problem of national marketing and the difficulty of reconciling it with provincial jurisdiction. Now, after some 30 years, the federal government has come up with a bill that tries to solve the problem by way of co-operation with the provinces and I am rather distressed that the opposition will not even permit us to try that course.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP—ANNOUNCEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. When does the government plan to make public its views on the important matter of foreign investment in Canada, and does it intend to do so in the form of a white paper so that public debate on this matter may take place?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I answered a question in those very terms a few days ago. If the hon. member will look back through a few issues of Hansard he will find the answer.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I have looked through Hansard to see whether a satisfactory answer was given but none was. Would the Prime Minister say when the government intends to make its views known?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, that is the very question I answered last week.

[Later:]

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. A few minutes ago I asked the Prime Minister to advise the House when the government intends to make its views known on the importance of foreign investment in Canada. The Prime Minister told me he had answered that question last week. I have looked through all the questions last week. I find that on Thursday he answered an unrelated question but in no way did he make any attempt to say when the government intends to make its views known on this matter. Will he please do so now?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Come on, get up on your feet.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: Come on, get up on your feet and stay there.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The answer the Prime Minister gave me earlier is the kind of answer we get every day in the House. The Prime Minister is deliberately misleading the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: Come on; have the guts to stand up, little Lord Fauntleroy.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—INCREASE IN AMOUNT OF MONEY ALLOCATED—PROJECT CRITERIA —PROVINCIAL REPRESENTATION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. On a number of occasions I have been attempting to find out from the Secretary of State whether or not further funds will be provided for the Opportunities for Youth program in light of the heavy demands and the number of submissions made under the program. I should also like to know when the minister plans to make public the division of these programs according to the early criteria of a regional mix and the levels of unemployment across the country.

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I told the House before that I was confident that additional funds will be made available to the Department of the Secretary of State for this program. I said on many occasions that I thought I would be able very soon to give a specific answer on this matter, and I reiterate this statement. As to the application of criteria for the distribution of projects, I think that they have been clearly established.

As far as the distribution of funds throughout the country is concerned, we said that it would be done on the basis of the unemployment rate among young people in various parts of the country, and this is how the distribution is being done now, that is, according to these criteria.

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that the minister heard me when I asked him whether there would be funds additional to the $15 million that has been provided. Perhaps he would answer that question and also indicate what steps are being taken to overcome the considerable frustration of the provinces in having programs adequately and effectively considered by the national office. Would he also say whether steps have been taken to have provincial representation in the national office, as I believe has happened in the case of at least one province?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I think that as far as the first part of the question is concerned, the hon. member is wrong; in fact my answer was so lengthy that I thought you would lose patience, Sir, and ask me to proceed to the second part of the question. The hon. member will therefore find my answer in today's Hansard.

As for the second part, if the member knows of a case which is particularly serious, I would ask him to bring it to my attention.

In so far as frustration is concerned, I can understand the young people's impatience, but I announced in the House several weeks ago the deadline we have set—it is May 15 for the final designation of all subsidized projects. We are not quite certain of being ready for that date, but we hope that should delays occur they will be very brief.

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary. I did not hear the minister answer my previous supplementary about the steps that are being taken. Since there is considerable frustration regarding the consideration of projects on a regional and on a provincial basis, what steps are being taken to have representations directly from the provinces? In the case of Prince Edward Island there seems to be a very poor relationship.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—NUMBER TO BE EMPLOYED—ADDITIONAL PROGRAMS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State. Is the minister yet in a position to say with any certainty how many jobs he expects will be created for students under the Opportunities for Youth program?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): No, Mr. Speaker, not with certainty, not with any certainty whatever at this stage.

[English]

Mr. Nystrom: In view of the fact that thousands of students are still likely to be without jobs this summer, is the government contemplating any further programs to employ students?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Not as far as I know, Mr. Speaker. However, the programs that are put into effect, and about which the government never said that they would completely solve the problem, do reduce it considerably, and this the hon. member may see for himself if he takes a look at what is going on in the provinces.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—PROJECT CRITERIA

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary to the minister. Do the criteria adopted by the department take into account the provinces as opposed to regions, and do they take into account such factors as the rate of unemployment per province and the population per province, because the projects so far approved for my own province, which has the highest rate of unemployment in the country and the fewest opportunities for jobs, would indicate that this is not so?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the minister might be allowed to reply briefly, but again I bring to the attention of hon. members the fact that we will be running short of time and we have considered only two or three subjects so far.

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): To all the questions asked by the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes. However, when he states that unemployment among the young is higher in his province than in any other, he is mistaken.

[Later:]

[English]

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I am sure the Secretary of State did not mean to indicate I was trying to slander my province by my question. The translation indicated that the Secretary of State did not understand my question. I did not indicate in my question, nor did I mean to, that there was the highest rate of unemployment among young people in Newfoundland. What I said was that my province had the highest rate of unemployment—period.

AGRICULTURE

POTATOES—PROPOSALS BY PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND AND NEW BRUNSWICK FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE—RESOLVING OF DIFFICULTIES

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Have the difficulties he referred to in his reply to the hon. member for Egmont last Thursday in respect of the proposals made by the Ministers of Agriculture of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick regarding assistance to the potato industry in those provinces yet been resolved?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): No, they have not, Mr. Speaker. One of the difficulties, which I did not spell out at that time, is that they are not asking for a deficiency payment but rather for assistance with regard to seed potatoes for this season. I am sure the hon. member will realize this is not one of the practices under the aegis of the Agricultural Stabilization Act. The other problem in regard to the 1970 crop is that returns to producers for the two areas have been running between 95 per cent and 100 per cent of the long-term average. This also has to be considered.

CRIMINAL CODE

INQUIRY AS TO DEBATE ON ABORTION

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a completely non-controversial question I should like to direct to the government House leader. In view of the fact we are now into the month of May and the Speech from the Throne last October promised a debate on abortion, is the minister in a position now to say when we are going to have this debate?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to do so. I can assure the hon. member that it will take place before the end of this session.

FISHERIES

SWORDFISH—ASSISTANCE TO FISHERMEN BECAUSE OF CONTAMINATION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. In view of the economic hardships faced by swordfishermen in Atlantic Canada caused by the mercury content in swordfish, has the minister established a policy to assist these fishermen and, if so, when can we expect the details of this policy to be announced?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, the task force working on the swordfish problem has reported to both the Nova Scotia and federal governments in this connection. Negotiations are being pursued by our two governments to resolve this difficult problem.

SURVEILLANCE OF FOREIGN FISHING FLEETS IN CANADIAN WATERS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): In view of the criticism levelled by the Fisheries Council of Canada that surveillance of foreign fishing fleets in Canadian waters was not being adequately maintained, has the minister worked out a formula with his colleague the Minister of National Defence on this matter, and how will information on the activities of foreign fleets be conveyed and provided to the Canadian fishing industry?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, there is close co-operation between the Department of Fisheries and Forestry and the Department of National Defence in this connection. I might add that surveillance by the Department of Fisheries and Forestry has continued and with our new closing lines the difficulties of policing Canada's exclusive fishing zones is much reduced.

COMMUNICATIONS

JURISDICTION OVER TELECOMMUNICATIONS AND BROADCASTING—FEDERAL POSITION

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. In light of the fact that Quebec and Ontario now claim varying degrees of jurisdiction over telecommunications and broadcasting, is the government sticking to the position that the federal government has clear authority over broadcasting, including cable television, or is it going to consider this as an area of concurrent jurisdiction? In order to avoid asking a supplementary question, may I ask whether some conference will be arranged to resolve this policy anomaly?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I believe the first part of the question does not call for an answer in absolute terms. I think the hon. member will agree with me: for instance, to state that broadcasting falls within the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal government or within the exclusive jurisdiction of the provincial governments, does not make sense considering the nature of our modern means of communications.

Concerning the second half of the question, I would say that we are willing—as we have stated so many times—to consult with the provinces after having, however, established—and intending to establish it even more specifically—that we consider some points of federal jurisdiction as being non-negotiable.

GRAIN

SEPARATION OF TRANSITIONAL PAYMENT FROM STABILIZATION PLAN BILL

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the very strong objections voiced by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture to Bill C-244, the grain stabilization plan, and its recommendation that the transitional payment be separated from the permanent plan, is the government now considering separating these two features of Bill C-244?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I disagree with the first comments of the hon. member. It has been made perfectly clear that the various portions of Bill C-244 stand together as a whole and must proceed as a whole in the view of the government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that we should not transpose the question period by referring to debates which are progressing and proceeding to some extent in the House. I believe that after orders of the day are called the bill to which the hon. member has alluded will be considered by the House. I doubt whether it is in order to use the time of the question period to ask this kind of a question.

Mr. Burton: I have a supplementary question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will allow a supplementary question but I hope it is acceptable from a procedural standpoint.

Mr. Burton: My supplementary question is designed to facilitate consideration of the bill. In view of the widespread public interest in Bill C-244, will the minister facilitate steps to ensure that witnesses will be heard when the bill is before the committee?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that this again anticipates an order of the day and that the question in those terms is not in order.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether it will be necessary to have the difficulties in respect of Bill C-176 resolved by legislation, by decision of the Supreme Court, or by making funds available under Bill C-244 before he will call a by-election in Assiniboia?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton West.

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY AS TO TABLING OF WHITE PAPER—AMENDMENTS AFFECTING IMMIGRATION APPEAL BOARD

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether he is in a position to tell us that he is going to bring forward his white paper on immigration and amendments to the Immigration Appeal Board Act before the end of June?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I indicated not long ago in answer to a question regarding legislation at least that I hoped so. There has been no decision yet as to the date by which it may be possible to bring forward a policy statement regarding immigration in the broad sense.

FISHERIES

TREATMENT OF RIVERS FLOWING INTO GEORGIAN BAY AND LAKE HURON WITH LAMPRICIDE

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry whether streams and rivers flowing into Georgian Bay and Lake Huron will be treated with lampricide this year? If not, what areas are receiving attention for lamprey control, and are sufficient funds available to cope adequately with the problem?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I do not know the answer to that question but I will endeavour to get it to the hon. member as quickly as possible.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RECONSIDERATION OF ECONOMIC SANCTIONS AGAINST RHODESIA

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Would the minister reconsider our present attitude toward economic sanctions against Rhodesia, taking into account the fact that Rhodesia is offering employment opportunities to a wide variety of Canadians?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. The government of Canada intends to abide by the sanctions endorsed by the United Nations.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

STAFF REDUCTIONS IN OFFICES IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether he can state that the Unemployment Insurance Commission offices in seven or more Atlantic provinces' centres will not be reduced in staff by July 1?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot give that assurance. The only assurance I can give is that the unemployment insurance organization is designed to give the best possible service to people and not necessarily to please the employees at work.

Mr. Comeau: Mr. Speaker, in view of the controversy surrounding this matter, would the minister be prepared to make a statement on motions explaining exactly the changes that are taking place and what effect they will have on the offices as they exist?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, the bill in question is before a committee of the House and these questions are now, I presume, being directed in this regard.

EFFECT OF ONTARIO BUDGET ON PROGRAMS

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Has the minister had a chance to examine the budget of the Ontario government in which it offers tax incentives to industry? Will he state whether he thinks this will affect the federal government's programs, and is a change in the kind of grants available being considered?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of that. The department is reviewing the implications of that budget, but we do not believe it will affect our programs.

[Mr. Davis.]

[English]

Mr. Saltsman: Can the minister say when he anticipates he will be concluding his study and assessment of the situation and be able to report to the House?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to report on this matter. We merely want to know if there is any incidence on our own programs and we do not see any.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES

PROPOSED DISCONTINUANCE IN CASE OF HIGHER INCOME FAMILIES—INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can he indicate whether it is his intention to proceed with the previously proposed change in the family allowance plan which would discontinue family allowances to upper income families? Is it the intention to proceed with this during this session?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I believe I have already indicated several times, particularly during the latter part of last week, in answer to a similar question that we are entertaining various suggestions for improvements in various features of our proposals in the white paper. These suggestions are coming in now and we are going to consider them. We hope to have legislation before the House in the fall.

POWER

PROPOSED JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT—DISCUSSION WITH QUEBEC ON DIVERSION OF WATERS—STUDY OF ECOLOGICAL EFFECTS

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Has the federal government had any discussions with the provincial authorities in Quebec on the diversion of waters southward from rivers now flowing into Hudson Bay?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Harding: Will studies be initiated by the federal government on the possible ecological effects of any diversion?

Mr. Davis: That is a hypothetical question, Mr. Speaker. I do not believe that any diversion southward is being considered.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PRAIRIE GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

PROVISION FOR PAYMENTS TO WESTERN CANADA PRODUCERS IN YEARS WHEN RECEIPTS BELOW FIVE-YEAR AVERAGE

The House resumed, from Friday, May 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang that Bill C-244, respecting the stabilization of prairie grain proceeds and to repeal or amend certain related statutes be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, the other evening when we were debating this bill I suggested to the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt (Mr. Lang), the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, that one reason the government could not charge a percentage of net income under this stabilization bill was that farmers had so little net income from the grains industry. It would not be practicable to do this.

I should like to suggest to the minister in respect of the threat to withhold $100 million in transitional payments from grain producers in order to get them to swallow Bill C-244, a universally unpopular scheme, that this represents money which rightfully belongs to the farmers now, and includes what they would normally receive this year under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. This $100 million is an overdue obligation. The sum has been arbitrarily fixed, according to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, but it is related to the payment which farmers would normally receive under an agreement which is to be cancelled with the passage of this bill. If the bill should not pass, the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act would remain in effect and payments under the act would have to be made on July 31 this year. Farmers are being bribed by the threat of the withholding of money which is rightfully theirs. They are being bribed in order that they might swallow a long-term plan which every grain producer and producer organization in this country condemns as disastrous in its long-term results.

This is not a $100 million bonus. It is an overdue obligation that is owed to the prairie grain farmer. It is a reprehensible act for the government to seek to force passage of an unpopular long-range scheme by suggesting that the money will not be forthcoming unless the bill is passed. The government is under a clear obligation to pay it, stabilization act or no stabilization act. If a two-price system, long demanded by prairie farmers, had been in effect during the past two years when world prices were disastrously low, the farmers would have had an effective bulwark against inflationary costs and a stabilization scheme which made sense during periods of acute fluctuation. As representatives of the grain producers have argued, consumers in Canada have no right to eat cheap bread. If the consumer were to pay a price commensurate with the price paid for everything else in Canada, the price of wheat would be at least $1 a bushel higher than it is at present. Considering that we consume between 50 million bushels and 60 million bushels a year, this would represent $50 million or $60 million which the Canadian consumer, not the Canadian taxpayer, would be paying for this wheat.

We would argue that this would be the proper course. Why should the Canadian consumer get cheap wheat? If the government suggests that it should provide cheap wheat, flour or bread for the Canadian consumers, then it has an obligation to pay the money to the Canadian farmers and has no right to make threats to withhold it. A statement of intent with regard to the stabilization bill came to my office this morning. It is put out by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. I should like to quote one, two or three passages from it which I believe have some bearing on this subject. It also includes an expression of opinion of the farmers and farmers groups on this bill. I quote:

> It is clearly and unmistakably the federal government's responsibility to ensure that the special payment is made and made soon, while also ensuring that adequate opportunity is given for the consideration, modification and improvement of the long term proposals contained in the bill.

I would like to quote another passage from the Federation brief:

> It must be recognized that this bill is clearly designed to place definite limits on the federal obligation to support prairie income, even in the face of chronic income inadequacy.
> It is also a policy which has a major objective the protection of the prairie and national economy—the businessman and the farm supplier—from the impact of sharp income fluctuations. It would be a great fallacy to view it as anything else.

In one of the recommendations at the end of this brief, the Federation has this to say:

> It is just not right that we should be the only, or virtually only, wheat producing nation that accepts world price levels as an adequate guide to prices that should fairly be paid in the market place by domestic consumers. It is a shocking fact that in the entire post-war period since the Second World War there has been essentially no increase in grain prices and therefore no increase whatever in the amount the farmers receive from flour and cereal products sold to the consumer. This must be corrected by substantial increases in the price received by the farmer for grain used for domestic human consumption. The impact on the consumer would in any case be very small. The great bulk of the cost of cereal products to the consumer is transportation, processing and distribution.

I submit that the price the farmer receives for wheat is clearly out of proportion to the price that consumers pay for anything else. Had it not been for farmers engaging in the most efficient possible production of cereal grains on the Prairies, the bulk of farmers would have gone bankrupt before now. When we look at the increase in costs which farmers face we can only wonder how they still exist. We have seen great modifications take place in farm communities because of the economic pressures placed upon them by low grain prices.

I would like to ask the minister which farm group advocated the changes indicated in the stabilization bill? Obviously, it was not the Federation of Agriculture, because in its brief it has just said as much. Did the National Farmers Union advocate some of the changes? Was it the Palliser Triangle group? Did the Wheat Board suggest these changes, or the Grain Exchange? Are we to assume that Ottawa knows best, or that the minister himself thought out these changes? Is the minister going to encourage these different groups to have witnesses appear before the Agriculture Committee to suggest changes in the legislation?

I would like to deal with some of the figures implicit in the bill. If we take the fairly top figure of $900 million, the 4 per cent works out at $36 million. When we consider that the government saves some $40 million in storage charges by doing away with the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, and saves an average of $6 million by doing away with PFAA, we find these savings total $46 million. If my arithmetic is correct, under the proposed changes the government will actually save $10 million on the whole transaction. If that is aid to the farmers, Mr. Speaker, I would like somebody to explain it to me, because on the basis of these figures it looks as though the government is saving money.

I grant you that if individual farmers are going to take up more crop insurance, then the costs to the government will be higher. Taking a top of $15,000 for the individual farmer, the 4 per cent comes to $600, which would be less administration costs. I cannot see where this necessarily has any relationship to the costs of that farmer. It might even be argued that it is too much, but how does anyone have any way of knowing? Does the taxpayer know that this is a fair sum to give to a farmer with a gross of $15,000? I do not think the minister has presented a very clear case on whether it is or is not. Anyway, now that the individual farmer will have to carry crop insurance on his own because PFAA will be done away with, we realize he has to pay a 6 per cent to 9 per cent premium. I phoned an insurance agent in my area the other day to see what the cost would be and those were the figures he gave me.

While it is difficult to arrive at a cost for crop insurance for a grain farm of a size that would yield a $15,000 income, because of the different rates applicable to different farms, I suggest the cost would run to several hundred dollars. Again, I do not see how this 4 per cent that the government is suggesting has any relationship to the costs the farmer faces, whether it be in relation to crop insurance or anything else of this nature. By and large I suggest that the 4 per cent would hardly look after the increase caused by today's inflation. A tractor required to work two sections, which in most cases is what a farmer must have in my part of the country in order to make a gross income of $15,000, would cost about $10,000, and there would be a similar cost for a combine. Admittedly, these costs are spaced over a period of years, but I suggest that the aid proposed by this bill does not correspond to the actual costs involved.

I would like to talk briefly about the contribution of the grains industry to the national economy. Since western Canada was first developed the grains industry has exported billions of bushels of grain bringing a great deal of new money into Canada. Over the last few years this new money has amounted to as much as $1 billion and even $1.2 billion. It has averaged between $500 million and $1 billion. Mr. Speaker, grain is a renewable resource, and it has generated much economic activity throughout the country. I recall reading a short time ago, when we made one of our big sales to China, about the effect which this sale would have on the port of Vancouver. The people involved in the grain handling industry were shaking hands with themselves. They said their share of the deal would be $40 million. When the minister is planning aid to the grains industry, I ask him to consider whether his proposals have any relationship to the well-being of the industry or whether his proposals are just designed to keep it in a state of hand-to-mouth existence.

Is the minister concerned about the social implications of this plan for the people in the industry? Does he consider what the grains industry means to the well-being of the national economy? Farming is no longer a subsistence industry but a cash and carry one. Nowadays the number of in-puts is larger. In the spring many farmers have to purchase 20 tons to 30 tons of fertilizer, at a cost of $30 a ton. That generates a lot of activity in the economy generally and provides a great many jobs. When we consider the aid we are giving to some other industries, such as $12 million for one pulp mill which does not have a significant impact upon the economy, I wonder if it would not be more reasonable to look for a different approach to the problems of agriculture. This is an industry which has done a great deal for Canada, and hopefully will continue to benefit not only farmers like myself but the country as a whole. I think we have been concerned with regional development primarily because of the jobs involved. However, the grain industry itself has provided a great deal of employment on the Prairies and on a long term basis a healthy, viable agricultural industry will continue to provide employment.

I suggest to the minister that he should again consider the different aspects of that 4 per cent. Taking everything into consideration, I feel that the farmer's contribution is too high and the government's percentage should be increased. I was speaking to a member of this House who is involved in a different type of business and he told me that he receives a tariff protection of 11 per cent. What could the grain industry not do with 11 per cent instead of 4 per cent? It may be that the 11 per cent is too high and some effort should be made to remove this kind of protection. Obviously, some sections of Canada receive much better treatment than others. I suggest that the grains industry has not yet received its fair share of the national income when we take all factors into account.

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to make a few comments on this bill which could very well be referred to as a two factor bill. One factor is very beneficial and will bring something like $100 million to the grains industry, which is at present in dire need of it. This amount provides something like $560 for each of the 181,000 farmers in western Canada. On Friday afternoon the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) moved an amendment which would separate the payment provision from the stabilizing provision of the bill. I do not understand why this amendment was not supported to a greater extent. It is obvious that the payment factor is completely unrelated to the principle of the stabilization program and the provisions that are inherent within the plan. There is no doubt in the mind of anyone who looks at it from an unbiased point of view that the $100 million is merely a bribe to try to get legislation through that will actually reduce the ultimate government payout to agriculture in this country.

I should like to read some comments with regard to the $100 million payout which were presented by the Federation of Agriculture in a brief presented in reference to Bill C-244, the Stabilization Act:

> We cannot accept the assumption, as a ground rule set by the government, that to get the immediate payment the long term policy must be accepted. It is clearly and unmistakably the federal government's responsibility to ensure that the special payment is made and made soon, while also ensuring that adequate opportunity is given for the consideration, modification and improvement of the long term proposals contained in the bill.
> The urgent necessity of immediately supplementing the incomes of Prairies farmers is clearly seen in the disastrous figures on farm income recently released by Canada Statistics.

From page 5 of the brief I read:

> The national responsibility to protect the farmers' prices when these are especially depressed as a result of competitive subsidization, and world surpluses in relation to commercial demand.

On the same page I find the following:

> The transitional payment must be made immediately and not made conditional either upon acceptance of the rest of the bill as it stands or upon its rapid passage.

Then, the conclusion is:

—the bill is not acceptable as it now stands.

The other afternoon the minister said that one part of the bill was contingent upon the other. He knows better than that, Mr. Speaker. He is trying to mislead the public, because he knows very well that the payment of part could be put through as an estimate. The passage of such an item would take only part of a day, and the payment could be made to the farmers of this nation without accepting the principle of stabilizing their incomes at their present level. Referring to this matter of misleading the public, a press release dated May 7, 1971 issued by the minister in charge of the Wheat Board reads:

> "It is simply a filibuster, and for no apparent reason," said Mr. Lang, who is minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. "If it continues, it could cost the western farmers $100 million this year.

As reported in Hansard of the same date, the minister said in this House:

> I think it important and I urge hon. members opposite to give up their constant reference to some malicious intention on the part of the government.

I say again, Mr. Speaker, that this $100 million payout is in no way contingent upon the rest of this bill. The rest of the bill is unacceptable, and this payment could be made through an item in the estimates. The farmers could have the money in their pockets within a few weeks.

The other factor of the bill which we are being asked to accept—and they are hoping that the farmers will put pressure on us to get it through—is the intent to stabilize poverty. At page 8 of their brief, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture stated:

> If not improved as we recommend, the initial impact of the act will likely be for a period to in fact reduce the level of income available to the producer, because of the deduction of the levy and the termination of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. Moreover, the protection afforded to the level of farm income will be altogether inadequate over time.

That is a clear statement of the situation. It is useless to talk of stabilizing farm income today when farmers are going broke and their credit is stretched tight. Then, the minister comes along and says he is going to stabilize this situation. It is just as if a group of social workers were to go into the slums of Chicago, Detroit or even New York and tell the people not to worry. These people could be sleeping in the street, and they would be told, "Don't worry; your condition could be worse. We will stabilize your present condition." That is exactly what we are saying to the farmers of western Canada in this bill. We want to stabilize their incomes at near bankruptcy levels.

Last year the incomes of farmers in western Canada were the lowest since 1955. If you bear in mind the 45 per cent erosion in the value of the dollar, you can see that this bill will only make worse what is already an intolerable situation. The government proposes paying out to the farmers of western Canada $100 million, and nobody disagrees with that. On page 5604 of Hansard the minister suggested why the government would not pay out under the stabilization program this year. He said in part:

> —we came to the conclusion that it would be better not to try to tie the payment to the stabilization fund formula this year. For one thing, the figures would not be available in time or in full, and for another it seemed possible this year to allow the payout to go not only to those farmers who had been marketing their full share—

In other words, the government did not have all the figures available for this year. Yet that is not the main reason, I suggest, for the $100 million figure. The government knew that if the average were based on some past years, the amount it would have to pay out would be between $200 and $250 million, and not $100 million. The latter figure has been brought about as a result of the drastic reduction in grain sales and that, in turn, reduced the averages which will come into effect when the program is implemented. Last year was one of the worst years farmers have experienced in the last 20 years. The payout will be made on the basis of this low long-term average, and that will make it more difficult for farmers to obtain more from the stabilization fund in future.

Let us see how much money will be saved for the federal treasury as a result of doing away with certain plans. The federal government has been putting between $60 million and $70 million into the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act program. The government is doing away with the Prairie Farm Assistance Act with respect to which it spent each year $6 million on average. Look at the action taken last year by the Canadian Wheat Board. Admittedly it had to reduce wheat prices by between six and eight cents a bushel, yet the floating of our dollar cost the grain producer approximately $90 million. Look at what has happened under the Lift program. The government paid out under the Lift program something like $58 million or $59 million. The net loss to producers under the Lift program is hard to imagine. The amount farmers lost as a result of their inability to grow grain totals hundreds of millions of dollars. Figures have been bandied about in this House. When the Lift program was announced, figures of $125 million and $150 million were thrown about. Those were the amounts that were to be paid out under the program. When I asked the minister about these figures in the House last fall, he said that they were hypothetical figures and that, instead of the payout under the Lift program approaching $140 million, it was between $57 and $59 million, or in the neighbourhood of $60 million. Yet the people of urban Canada who had heard about the big, glorious figure of $150 million to be paid out under the program said to themselves, "Just look at all we are doing for our farmers; isn't that great."

If you look at Wheat Board reports you will see listed big, potential grain sales which were announced but fell through. There is page after page of orders which have not been taken up, yet all our people think that this government has been doing a great job. As I say, all they need to do is look at reports of the Wheat Board. They will see exactly what is being accomplished with regard to these sales. At any rate, what do all these savings to the federal treasury represent? Anybody who looks at the figures will discover that this country is in a far better position to support agriculture than some other countries are. I believe that these figures were mentioned in the House the other day. To support agriculture, Canada spends about $300 per capita, whereas a little country like Switzerland spends $1,500 per capita to support agriculture. We are reducing our payouts to agriculture.

May I return to the stabilization concept? This concept, which will stabilize incomes in rural Canada at poverty levels, is ridiculous. It is difficult to know why a minister like the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, who supposedly has had some association with the farm belt in the past, should support this kind of program.

While we are talking about stabilizing the incomes of farmers, let us look at some of the increases in wages that have been granted elsewhere. In London, Ontario, sheet workers' hourly rates have gone from $5.40 to $7.60, a two year hike of 40 per cent, plus fringe benefits. Plasterers in Toronto have a new contract which takes them from $5.70 to $6.90 next year.

[Mr. Downey.]

An hon. Member: They have a union.

Mr. Downey: One recent study of 27 United States areas recently found that workers in seven of the lowest paid building trades already average $11,342 yearly in wages and fringe benefits. In Indiana, iron workers average $15,828 a year, while in southern California the figure for carpenters is $22,234.

Mr. Benjamin: Does the hon. member have any figures for doctors' incomes?

Mr. Downey: You could include figures for doctors' incomes and bank profits as well.

Mr. Benjamin: And lawyers.

Mr. Downey: Let us look at the levels at which other segments of the population are being asked to stabilize their incomes. I read one statement that wage settlements in the construction industry have been twice as high as they were in manufacturing generally. In 1970, the average contract settlement in the building trades called for first year increases of 18.3 per cent, compared with 8.1 per cent in manufacturing.

Another article is headlined, "Toronto plasterers get 21 per cent raise to $6.90 an hour over two years". The increase represents an increase of 21 per cent over the current wage rate. The same article reads in part:

A number of Toronto area construction unions have their eye on a reduced work week of four eight-hour days and four hours on Fridays. At least six unions are on a 37½-hour week.

Can you imagine the length of the farmer's work week after his income has been stabilized at near bankruptcy levels? Incomes for people in the rest of the community are increasing. It is small wonder that an article in the Edmonton Journal of Wednesday, March 24, indicates that few university graduates want to return to the farm. The article reads:

• (3:30 p.m.)

The economics of today's farming work is against many trained young men staying on the farm after they marry.

It then refers to the remarks of Mr. K. R. Parker, acting coordinator of agricultural education in Alberta.

He says better income prospects have been found in off-farm occupations because of the small returns on farm investments.

If the designation of the minister in charge of the wheat board could be changed to the minister in charge of getting rid of farmers, it would certainly be more appropriate in view of what is contained in some of the programs he has introduced. I heard a story one time about a professor. I have heard that the minister in charge of the wheat board may have been a professor at one time. This story concerns an election campaign. Several candidates were vying for the position, including a druggist and a farmer, a pretty tough old rancher from down by the "crick". They were both presenting their reasons why the people should vote for them. After the druggist made his pitch, the farmer made his.

The farmer said that although the druggist was a fine fellow and a good druggist, this was a farming community. He said that a farmer should be elected to Parliament to deal with their problems. He asked the people whether they could imagine a druggist out on the range or himself working as a druggist. The farmer had long hair and was not too clean. He said that if he were a druggist, he might mistakenly give birth control pills to a woman who was looking for saccharine tablets and she would have the sweetest babies this side of heaven. In light of this, I suggest that we should not have professors looking after our farm problems. We should have people who are a little closer to what really goes on in the farm belt and are aware of the problems.

With regard to the income stabilization, I cannot help but associate the horrible conditions that now exist with stabilized poverty. In the 1930's there was almost as big a disaster in the farm belt as under the present reign of the Liberal government. The only difference is that there were compounding features then, such as drought and grasshoppers. What would have happened if in the 1930's someone had had the same foresight as the minister and introduced a program of stabilized farm incomes? With a program such as this, there would not have been any payout for over 20 years. There would not have been any payout during the crucial and critical 1930's. This illustrates what this plan is really all about.

Some provincial representatives think that this bill is all right. I suggest that they are being bribed politically to do so. They see a little of this $100 million coming their way. They are afraid of what Ottawa might do if they do not subscribe to the stabilization of poverty plan. The farmers of this nation are a very resilient group. They have overcome drought, hail and grasshoppers. I am not sure whether they are going to be able to overcome this present Liberal administration.

Mr. H. A. Moore (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, this bill is designed to appear to do much for the prairie grain producers. What it does initially is impose a 2 per cent levy at the time of sale, in addition to the various other charges already imposed. If, after various complicated calculations, it is determined that 90 per cent of the over-all proceeds from the sale of grain for a particular crop year are down more than 1 per cent from 90 per cent of the average grain sales for the preceding five years, the producer will receive a stabilization payment. Whether a producer receives a stabilization payment will not depend on his need for one in that particular year. In fact, the poorer his crops, the less he will likely receive. The only persons assured of benefits from this scheme are those who produce the calculations and carry out the administration.

I object to one of the conditions imposed by the bill on which transitional payments depend. To be eligible for the transitional payments, acreage payments, or whatever they might be called, the producer must be named in a permit book issued before a specific date. I maintain that as long as a producer is eligible for a permit book, there is no law that states he has to take one out for the 1970-71 crop year. If he wants to sell grain, naturally he must take out a permit book.

If a farmer does not have any grain to sell, I cannot understand why he must take out a permit book. Legally, he could still farm without one. Because of being hailed, dried or frozen out, or any other accident of this nature, he may not feel the need to take out a permit book. Not being a mind reader, he could not guess what the minister or the government will come up with next. We can understand that some method of proving a farmer's planted acres, but what about the prairie farm assistance inspectors? In these types of cases, they inspect the land. They have a record of the crops sown and the number of acres of each. In other words, the farmer is technically in default if he has not taken out a permit book. This is not fair.

A grower who has not taken out a permit book by the required date because something happened to his crop may be in the greatest need of this payment. The minister should announce some alternative method for determining this man's eligibility for an acreage payment or at least allow an appeal. There does not seem to be any such method at the present time. In answer to a question in the House, the minister was adamant in saying that the criterion stated would be the criterion used. I admit that the minister did not have time to consider this question. I realize there are many farmers who would be in this situation and this should be all the more reason for the minister to give this type of consideration. It would certainly not cost the government or the taxpayer much more and it would at least result in impartiality and fairness in a case where a man was hurt through no fault of his own. If this proposal is not accepted it would appear that one more effort is being made to shaft the operator of a small farm.

The clause relating to transitional payments has little relation to the rest of the legislation. There have been other instances of bills covering more than one subject; indeed, this has become a practice. Here, we encounter the same threat; it was expressed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) the other day, and, since then, by the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In brief, we are asked as parliamentarians to pass the whole of this bill quickly; if we refuse, we are accused of withholding much-needed cash from the hands of western grain producers. However, this kind of threat is no longer effective. Producers read the press and follow these debates very closely. They know the score.

My main criticism of the legislation is that it is not designed to aid those who are most in need. It could be that such people would be helped in particular areas, but the opposite might also be the case. The bill deals with gross income, whereas to an individual producer it is net income that matters, that is income after all expenses have been met. A stabilization fund is established by imposing levies on producers. The government will, or may, make contributions at times. One of my hon. friends who spoke before me drew attention to the fact that prairie farm assistance would be phased out, and that the legislation under which the government paid for storage of farm-stored grain will also be phased out. All this will take a lot of money away from the western farm economy at a time when costs of production are rising year by year, placing producers in a worse position as each season goes by. I should like to end by saying that this legislation will not ensure the producer of an adequate return for his work.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): The bill before us today really relates to two separate items. The first has to do with transitional payments to farmers in an amount said to be $100 million. The other part deals with the setting up of a stabilization plan and the fund required for its operation. I wish to join others in the House in calling upon the minister to withdraw this bill and reintroduce it as two separate measures.

The provision for transitional payments is short-term in its nature; the money is required for immediate payment to farmers. The stabilization provision, on the other hand, is a long-term plan, more fundamental in terms of income security for western farmers. We are not alone in asking that the legislation be introduced as two separate bills. I noticed earlier today that the minister in charge of the Wheat Board appeared to be stunned when hon. members questioned him about a statement made on behalf of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. I want to remind him that the Federation has urged that this measure be treated as two distinct bills. As proof of this assertion, I wish to quote from the first page of a statement on prairie grain income and stabilization needs issued by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture on May 7. The Federation stated:

> The Federation can in no circumstances view these two parts as conditional upon one another in dealing with this bill. They should not be, and need not be, conditional. We cannot accept the assumption, as a ground rule set by the government, that to get the immediate payment the long term policy must be accepted. It would be highly improper for us to temper our criticisms of the long term grains policy in this bill—and we do have criticisms and very serious ones—out of a feeling of fear and urgency respecting a possible delay of these essential "transitional" payments. It is clearly and unmistakably the federal government's responsibility to ensure that the special payment is made and made soon, while also ensuring that adequate opportunity is given for the consideration, modification and improvement of the long term proposals contained in the bill.

I doubt whether there is anyone in the House who would speak against the need for an injection of cash into the western economy, but it amounts to political blackmail when the minister in charge of the Wheat Board includes both the transitional payments provision and a proposal for long-range change into the same bill. In my view, he has done this intentionally; it is the type of thing the government often does.

I notice that in a press release issued on May 7 the minister responsible for the Wheat Board made the following statement with regard to the debate in which we are now engaged:

> It is simply a filibuster, and for no apparent reason. If it continues, it could cost the western farmers $100 million this year.

[Mr. Moore (Wetaskiwin).]

Statements of this kind will not speed up the passage of the bill before us, or help accomplish anything for western Canada. The minister should forget about playing petty, partisan politics. He should agree to separate the different parts of this bill in order that the farmers can get this bit of money immediately. Parliament, in turn, will be able to seriously debate and consider ways of dealing with farm incomes in the future.

I wish to deal with the proposition relating to transitional payments. References have been made to a sum of $100 million in transitional payments to farmers in Canada. This, in itself, is misleading. Under the legislation before us, the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act is to be terminated and I am told this will mean a saving of approximately $50 million next year. The government will have got rid of that responsibility. PFAA will also be terminated. Under that plan, the producer was contributing 1 per cent of his annual earnings, and I understand that last year the government participated in the fund to the extent of between $5 million and $6 million. So, altogether, the government is saving around $55 million. On this basis, the increase in expenditure is probably closer to $45 million than it is to $100 million. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board should be honest with the Canadian farmers and the Canadian people at large and not talk of a payment of $100 million when it is by no means as much.

I also think that the transitional payment is much too small. As I have said, we are talking of an expenditure of about $45 million odd. I think a much larger injection of cash than this is needed. For some time the farm organizations have been calling for an injection of $250 million into the western economy, and their argument is valid today. The western farmers are still suffering severely from lack of income, just as they were last year.

For reference purposes I want to quote a few figures issued by Dominion Bureau of Statistics a short time ago relating to the net income of farmers, from which the House can readily see the seriousness of the situation in western Canada. We find that since the present government took office in 1968, net farm income in Canada has fallen in two years by $516 million. In Saskatchewan, the province from which both I and the minister come, net farm income over the same period has dropped by 56 per cent, a drop that is almost unbelievable and which illustrates why I and others from Saskatchewan are so concerned about this bill and other pieces of agricultural legislation.

According to these figures, the net income of farmers in Saskatchewan in 1968 was $462,348,000 while two years later, in 1970, it had fallen to $202,718,000, a drop of roughly 56 per cent, I think all members will realize that this suggests there is something fundamentally wrong with the western Canada economy, something that a small injection of cash, whether $50 million or $100 million, is not going to solve. In view of this I think members of this House should consider making some fundamental changes to the benefit of agriculture.

When an industry suffers a drop in income of 56 per cent over two years, it must give concern to all members of the House. If this can happen to one industry, it is bound to affect others in Canada. We have already witnessed lay-offs in farm machinery plants in eastern Canada as a result of the farmers not buying as much machinery as they used to buy. This, in turn, aggravates the unemployment problem at the present time.

Not only the members of the agriculture committee but the people of Canada should also have cause for concern in regard to the stabilization plan outlined in this bill. Under this plan, the farmers of this country will have to pay 2 per cent of their total or gross income and the government will contribute 4 per cent. The other day the Minister, in explaining why gross income instead of net income had been selected, said that his economists did not know how calculations could be made on net income.

I should like to inform the minister that net income could have been used had the government wanted to do so. Perhaps this is why the former Minister of Communications, the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans), said that all the government's advisers are second rate. If they cannot calculate income in terms of net income rather than gross income, then they must be second rate. We have too many second rate advisers in the Department of Agriculture and on the minister's staff. It is not we of the opposition who suffer but the farmers, who find themselves over a barrel because of lack of concern and inefficiency.

Under this stabilization plan the farmers will have to contribute 2 per cent of their income up to a maximum of $15,000. Although the bill makes reference to the agricultural industry as a whole, it has no regional or provincial flexibility. In addition, the legislation repeals the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, and PFAA is phased out. As I have already said, the bill has many long term implications. Personally, I think it is the first step toward implementing the report of the task force on agriculture which was released by the government several months ago. Passage of this bill will mean less government involvement in agriculture instead of more. The federal commitment, once this bill is passed, will be less than before when the old acts were in effect.

Mr. Lang: That is not true.

Mr. Nystrom: The minister says that is not true, but many farm organizations, such as the Farmers Union and others, say that it is true. Perhaps when the minister speaks he will want to comment on these matters which seem to be controversial and which are interpreted in different ways by members of the House. Many people think that this is true and, unfortunately, so do many of the farmers.

Another matter for concern under the stabilization section of the bill is that, to use the words of some farmers, it would stabilize poverty or low incomes in the farming communities of Canada.

Mr. Lang: That is not true, either.

Mr. Nystrom: The minister says that is not true, either. Perhaps the minister would visit the farmers in my riding and tell them that this is not true, because certainly that is not their impression. In addition, the minister has been unable to offer any explanation to them. Perhaps this is where many members of this side of the House differ with the minister. Many of us are fed up with the piecemeal approach that he has taken during the last three years, the lackadaisical and aloof approach he has taken to agriculture. The way of life in western Canada is being eroded, not gradually but rapidly. As I said, farm incomes have dropped by 56 per cent. The cost of farm machinery and the cost of producing a bushel of wheat has risen each and every year. The Barber commission has stated that the farmers have been victimized for years by the high price of farm machinery.

I should like to know why the government does not take some action in this regard. They have many economic tools in their hands to bring down the cost of farm machinery. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that perhaps they are more interested in protecting the farm machinery companies than the farmers and ordinary people of Canada. This is why the government has not taken action, and is probably why it will not do very much about implementing some of the recommendations made by the Barber commission.

Many people have left the province of Saskatchewan, having been forced out by low farm incomes and the lack of real stability in the province as a whole. Businesses have gone bankrupt, people have become unemployed. We have seen the erosion of small communities as a result not only of agricultural policy but other government plans as well. The closing of rural post offices, the removal of station agents and other changes of this sort have all contributed to threatening the rural way of life in western Canada. I think this is a way of life that is worth preserving, but only the government can act to preserve, to stimulate and to assist it.

The answer of the government has been to establish the task force, a task force on which the farmers themselves were not really represented and other people talked about the way of life of our farmers. What has this task force recommended? It has recommended a number of measures that the minister is now trying to implement. One of the recommendations is that two thirds of the farmers must leave their farms in the name of efficiency; another that there must be less government involvement in agriculture instead of more. Other countries in the world have governments that are becoming more and more involved in helping farmers by allowing them to plan and to organize for themselves.

If you analyse this whole situation, what is the logical conclusion? What is going to happen? We are going to see more and more farmers leave the land each and every year, perhaps at an accelerated rate, as is happening today in the west. We will see more and more of our towns, villages and small cities dwindle and disappear. These places are directly tied to the farming community. If this trend continues, we will have in western Canada, and Saskatchewan particularly, a few corporate farm units run in the same way as any other huge business, with an eye to the profit margin and efficiency. There is no concern about the human element or what will happen to the operators of small farms as well as other people who live in rural areas. What does this government have in mind for them? It seems it has nothing in mind at all except the welfare rolls and the unemployment cheques being delivered in large Canadian cities today.

These are a few of the long-range ramifications of these agricultural programs unless we have action right now in respect of rural Canada and the whole agricultural picture as it is in the west. I think the rural way of life is worth preserving. I think there is a certain quality to it. Instead of pushing people into larger cities we should be talking about repopulating, stimulating the agricultural economy and making the rural life viable. I understand the average age of farmers in western Canada is 57 years. This in itself once again underlines the fact that this industry is dying rapidly. This is another point which proves that we are not really just talking to ourselves when we say this is an industry in a tremendous amount of trouble.

I want to suggest to the government, and to all members in this House, that we should make agricultural problems a top priority. We should draft a bill to put $250 million immediately into the hands of farmers. Let us give them $250 million as some farm organizations are requesting. This is what the people who know about farming recommend. This is not what is being said by government bureaucrats or directors of corporations, but the farmers themselves. This is what is needed.

I think in the long range we must make some very important decisions, and I should like to suggest three that come to mind at this time. First, the government must make the fundamental decision that rural life is worth while. I believe it should not only be preserved but helped and stimulated in every way possible. I think urbanization is taking place much too rapidly in Canada, and in an impersonal way. The basic and fundamental decision which must be made is that rural life in this country must be helped. Farmers must be helped, and if we are going to do anything at all we must first make this fundamental decision. Secondly, if rural life is to be worth while, the farmers must make some of the decisions that effect him and his life. There is no reason that the farmer should not participate in these decisions. Farmers should be involved in agricultural decision-making process. Why are they not consulted in a really meaningful way? Why can farmers not have some say in respect of the prices they receive for their commodities? Why can the farmers not have a say as to what they should pay for tractors and other implements necessary to the production of grain? Many other sectors of our society have this power.

Perhaps to the minister of the government, this sounds like a revolutionary or new idea. I do not think the minister is ready to let the farmer have this type of authority over his own destiny. We could get involved in a discussion about Bill C-176, but I will leave that for later. Under that bill, why not give the producer control over what is going to happen in his own area of concern and endeavour? These are things we must do in the future if we want to do something really significant to help the western farmer and rural life.

Finally, if we really want to do something about helping the farmer and western rural communities, the government and the people in this country must decide they are going to support agriculture in a really meaningful way. The government must finally, some time, do something to support agricultural prices. The price of a bushel of grain is probably lower now, or no higher than it was at the end of the Second World War. This should not be the case. This is about the only country in the industrialized world which does not support our wheat prices in some way when it comes to trading on the international market.

Once again I should like to refer to a statement by the Federation of Agriculture about the price of grain. There is a reference to the two-price system, with which this government has flirted for several years but has never done anything in a serious way to implement. The statement by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture reads in part:

> Finally, an adequate two-price system must be made a part of the total policy package with respect to income protection for western grain growers. It is just not right that we should be the only, or virtually only, wheat producing nation that accepts world price levels as an adequate guide to prices that should fairly be paid in the marketplace by domestic consumers. It is a shocking fact that in the entire post-war period since the second world war there has been essentially no increase in grain prices and therefore no increase whatever in the amount the farmers receive from flour and cereal products sold to the consumer. This must be corrected by substantial increases in the price received by the farmer for grain used for domestic human consumption. The impact on the consumer would in any case be very small. The great bulk of the cost of cereal products to the consumer is transportation, processing and distribution.

I suggest that the time has come when the government should take organizations such as the Federation of Agriculture, the farmers' union, the wheat pool and others very seriously when they talk about policies with regard to farm income. It is about time the farmers themselves had a real and meaningful voice in determining the policy under which they will live. It is about time this government placed a high enough priority on agriculture that we put our money where our mouths are and supported the price of agricultural commodities. We can do many things to increase the incomes of farmers. We can do many other things, for instance, along the line suggested by the Barber commission concerning farm machinery. There is no reason farm machines should cost so much or that profits should be so excessive. We could do something immediately to bring down the price of farm machinery, and this will have to be done if we want to improve the farm income factor.

There are many other things I could add, some of which have already been mentioned by people such as the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) and the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. Thomson), in respect of improving farm income. If we did these things we might find that farm communities would be more viable and much better places in which to live. This would improve the quality of life as well. Farming would then be something young people might become involved in, since they are not becoming involved in it today. The young people cannot afford to get involved in agriculture. This would be a positive result, and might be accomplished by a strong agricultural policy here in Ottawa. If we had a strong agricultural industry, all people in Canada would enjoy a higher level of income. Agriculture is still one of the primary industries in Canada. It is still the backbone of our economy. When the agricultural industry is adversely affected, other industries are negatively affected as well.

The only people who would really suffer as a result of implementing the suggestions I have made would be the huge corporations. These are the people who are really benefiting from the efforts of farmers. They are raping the farmers of western Canada. These are the people who are calling the tune. I refer to the farm machine companies and their friends, the minister in charge of the Wheat Board and his friends. It is about time we turned the tables and allowed the potential wealth of this industry to be reaped by the farmers. Decision-making should be left to the farmers. Neither of these two things is being done today, and that is precisely why we are running into so much difficulty in respect of western agriculture.

So, to summarize, I should like once again to suggest that we break this bill into two parts, and that we increase the amount of the transitional payment from what it is now, probably $45 million, to something like $250 million, as has been recommended by farm organizations. We can see this amount is needed when we look at the DBS figures which show that farm net income in Saskatchewan has dropped 56 per cent in two years. I do not know how the minister in charge of the Wheat Board can sit in this House with a smile on his face when he knows that people in his own riding, which is near mine, have had a drop in income during the past few years since he assumed responsibility for them. It must take smug arrogance to sit here and defend those policies when we have all the wealth, resources, as well as the technology, in Canada to do something about the situation.

Now, I notice we are getting comments from the puppets in the Liberal backbenches. This is the only time they speak out. I should like to see them do or say something constructive for a change. They should come to my constituency or the constituencies of Regina Lake Centre and Saskatoon-Biggar and make some of these remarks to the people there who are facing the brunt of the agricultural policies. It is all right to jostle back and forth in the House of Commons, but we are pretty secure here. It is the people in the country today who are taking the brunt of the stupid, inhuman and immoral policies. This is what we must fight and change. Let us stop talking about the small, irrelevant points and get down to the real business of giving the farmers a better living and allowing them to participate in making decisions instead of having them made by the bureaucrats or corporations. These are the issues and this is the time for action.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on Bill C-244, I should like to pay strict attention to the minister's remarks as recorded at page 5603 of Hansard when he attempted to urge the members of the House of Commons to pass the legislation as quickly as possible and not project the belief that the government is trying to do away with small farms. A complete paragraph of his remarks on that particular page, in the right hand column, dealt with that subject. He said that members in the opposition are doing a disservice to the agricultural industry by attempting to project what is actually in the mind of the government. However, it would seem to be the intention of the government to remove the operator of the small farm from the land. The minister states that this is the furthest thing from his mind. Actually, this piece of legislation, along with other pieces of legislation, was spelled out very clearly by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on June 2, 1968.

While I do not have a copy of the Prime Minister's remarks at that time, I do have a copy of an editorial in the Winnipeg Free Press of June 4, 1968 commenting on the Liberal farm policies. This article, in essence, paraphrases what the Prime Minister said on June 2 in outlining the farm policy. The article reads:

> One of the most pressing long range problems for western farmers is the need for an adequate yearly income to get away from the boom-and-bust cycle that has become part of prairie farm life. To this end, the Liberals are proposing a plan which, in effect, sounds like the equivalent of unemployment insurance for farmers. In good years they would pay into a fund; in bad years they would draw money from the fund, thereby, to a degree, stabilizing their income.

I read this merely for the purpose of pointing out that this plan was already on the books before the present minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board was appointed to that office. When we analyse this plan carefully, we might ask where it came from. Well, we can see it must have come from former Liberal party conventions and former meetings of the Liberal greats. I suggest it came from top bureaucrats, some of whom are in the Prime Minister's office today. These are people who know nothing about agriculture and whose main theme is to get the small scale farmer off the farm in the hope that the remaining farmers, will be able to sustain themselves in an economy which is inflating so much each year. One might say I am being overly critical of the Prime Minister and his concept of agriculture, but I do not believe one would think so after reading the speech in which he dealt with the program for small farms, and also the Liberal convention policy statement.

I have correspondence here in respect of a Liberal executive meeting of April 3 and 4 which deals with the redrafting of their policy document. It contains this reference to the Canadian Wheat Board:

> Protein grading for wheat is a must.

We have that. Then, there is this statement:

> The federal government should pay for all saleable grains in order to have a storage reserve and to reduce costs to the farmer.

That must mean that the federal government should pay all the storage costs on saleable grain. Then, the statement continues:

> Capital gains, estate taxes and succession duties should not be permitted to break up viable family farms, nor should capital gains deprive a farmer of his retirement income.

Those statements are very important when one considers the over-all aspects of the grain stabilization program and the eradication of the farmers. As I was saying, the name of the game in this whole series of farm legislation is the removal of the small scale farmer. If we look back at the Winnipeg speech of June 7 we will see that the Prime Minister had a specific policy for the operators of small farms. He said this:

> While the situation varies from commodity to commodity, in general 30 per cent of Canada's farmers produce 70 per cent of our agricultural production. This great variation in farm size and with it productivity renders the development of agricultural programs appropriate to varying farm sizes most difficult. The problem could be met through the institution of a system of farm differentiation by productivity and size. This differentiation could provide a basis for modifying programs to meet the particular needs of farms of different sizes.

He continues:

> In return for the differentiation level of assistance the smaller farmer could undertake that at the time the farm passed from his possession he would not dispose of it for other than farm consolidation or for movement into the public sector. Thus the special programs designed for farmers in this category would not perpetuate the problem.

When we look at that statement, we realize that no owner of a small farm can pass on his farm to his son. He must pass it on to a neighbour or to the government. These are the conclusions one must arrive at from reading this speech. Certainly, that statement differs markedly from the original Liberal policy which was suggested that the capital gains tax, estate tax and succession duties should not be permitted to break up the viable family farm. The policy proposed in this bill is directly contrary to the views expressed at the last Liberal convention.

Let us look at the grain stabilization program. When was it first proposed? It was proposed on October 29, 1970 in this House. When it was first proposed, the minister complained about opposition members of all parties holding up farm legislation. If this program is so necessary and so acceptable to the farm population, where has the minister kept it from October 29? The next we saw of it was the first reading of the bill on April 29, 1971, six months later. Mr. Speaker, amendments are proposed to many pieces of legislation asking that they be not now read a second time but read a second time six months hence. Nobody suggested that that be done with this bill, but the minister, in effect, has done so himself.

Since then, the minister has followed certain procedures. He has bombarded the Prairie farmers with at least four or five pamphlets advertising this program, seeking feedback, and wanting to know how to change and modify it. Then, on March 15 he did modify it to some extent. On that date he said the federal government would make a contribution which would be twice the size of the contribution made by the farmer. He did not say that on October 29. But then he began to get the feedback, and so he made the change. Then, the minister had to tag on another $100 million as a temporary measure. He admits that this is an one-shot program, but I think he will agree that, in contrast, the stabilization program is a long-term measure. What have the two in common? This makes one wonder. Why tie them together in one bill? All along the minister has been attempting to devise some way to smooth the passage of this bill through the House and through the committee.

The minister has been attempting to persuade the farmers that he is right. He did not bring the bill before the elected representatives of the farmers because he was aware that they were knowledgeable of the legislative processes. They know what the provisions of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act mean to the farmer. The minister deliberately refused to allow these representatives to debate the bill until he had received enough feedback and had changed it to the point where he thought he could pilot it through the House. It took the minister six months to get the feedback, six months to try to convince the farmers that they should accept this program. Now, to the surprise of many, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture—and in this case I think the primary influence would have been the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool—says the grain stabilization program is no good, that it won't benefit the farmers at all, and that in fact it will put them in a straitjacket.

This bill, coupled with a lot of other government legislation, is an attempt to remove the government's commitment to the agricultural industry. The government does not want to give any subsidies to that industry. The government feels it can best arrive at this solution by taking control from the farmers. When that stage is reached the government will tell the farmers, "We will manage your business. You plant what we tell you to plant, and take off what we tell you to take off. Then, we won't have to give you any subsidy." The aim is nothing less than state control of the agricultural industry. I suppose this all stems from the Prime Minister's famous query to the wheat farmers of western Canada, at a time when he did not know any better. He asked them, "Why should I sell your wheat?" When he found out that he had this responsibility, then he said to himself, "I had better control the industry so that the farmers won't produce a surplus, because I have other things to do; I have a whole world to see, and to see seven times over. I cannot be concerned with these mundane problems of the farmers. They are becoming less and less a political influence as time goes on, and the more of them we can get off the land the less a political influence they will be."

How does this attitude compare with what other governments are doing for their agricultural industries? Last fall, speaking to the Agricultural Congress, the Minister of Agriculture put some interesting figures on the record. Here I quote from the Western Producer of December 3, 1970:

> Mr. Olson said the federal government spends about 3.3 per cent of the total federal budget on agriculture—the Canada Department of Agriculture spending $281 million and other departments and agencies spending an additional $142 million ...
> Admitting the difficulties of making exact comparisons, he said Canada spent about $350 per person employed in agriculture in 1968, and this compares with $675 in West Germany, $980 in France, $1,059 in Britain, $1,287 in the United States and $1,502 in Switzerland.

We are by far the lowest with respect to government expenditures per person engaged in the agricultural industry. One can wonder, why spend money on agriculture? Why can't the agricultural industry stand on its own feet? Why is the opposition against this measure to reduce the federal government's responsibility for the spending of money on agriculture? In some respects we must accept the consequences of inflation, like it or not. Germany is just finding this out now as a result of the effect of inflation on the United States dollar. Germany has had to free its Mark because its rate of inflation was less than that of the United States.

We had the same trouble in this country within the last couple of years. Even with our tighter money supply, we had inflation. The primary producer does not benefit one bit from inflation. Therefore, it is the duty of the federal government to make some concessions with regard to the primary producer. The federal and provincial governments have done this from time to time, but in its over-anxious rush to clean up the agricultural industry the present federal government is introducing a series of legislative items which will do nothing but hasten the withdrawal of the small scale farmer from the land. He will be driven into the cities where he will not be happy and where he will have difficulty adjusting. This is a wrong and backward step for the Canadian government to be taking at this time.

What does this bill propose to do, Mr. Speaker? First, it proposes to do away with the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, which provides that the government will pay for all the costs of wheat placed in commercial storage over a total of 178 million bushels. The minister has suggested that this act has contributed to farmers growing more wheat than they should. He has said it is a contributing factor to the surplus in wheat. If that is so, why not change the provisions of the act so the federal government will pay all the commercial storage costs on the first 200 million bushels and the farmers will have to pay all the costs of storage on any amount above that figure? In that way there would be no incentive for the farmers to over-produce. Just reverse the present program, Mr. Speaker. Hon. members on the government side of the House are forever asking members on this side what we would do. That is one thing I would do immediately. Just reverse the provisions of the present act.

Second, the bill proposes that the losses on pool accounts for wheat, barley and oats would be recoverable from future surpluses in the stabilization fund. That is not a sound business practice and the minister should know better after all the difficulty he got into with the cash advance legislation. We warned him about that, and I am warning him now that this is not a sound business practice.

Let us suppose the government feels that corn blight is likely to reduce production in the United States with resulting high world prices. We, therefore, set a high initial price for barley but the United States solves the blight problem and there is a resultant surplus of feed grain in the world. Naturally, the price of barley will go down. Then, let us suppose that next year there is a loss from the sale of barley and that is carried over to the following year. After that experience who is going to grow barley? Supposing there is an average loss of ten cents per bushel on the pool, then who is going to grow barley and have that deducted from his production? The minister may say that we will pool all accounts, that the wheat, oats and barley accounts will be in the one pool so we won't know whether a loss is charged against barley, wheat or oats. This only suggests that the government is acknowledging my point, and is attempting to deviate from sound business principles.

If the government is going to set an initial price for feed grains and wheat, then it should take the responsibility for setting it high or low. The government knows the market and has the ability to seek out new customers by giving credit and making long term arrangements for repayment. No farm organization in western Canada has agreed with the principle that the losses on pool accounts should come out of the stabilization fund. It just is not sound business.

The other day the minister made a big thing out of being able to project the initial price for grain. It used to be that the initial price would be set after seeding, and sometimes before seeding, but the minister said he will set it on March 1 or March 15. Unless he accepts the responsibility for how high or low it is set, he is not being brave but only political. Is there anything else he could use to make more political hay? In his speech he also suggested that the government will spend $10 million for market research, for the development of new markets. What is that going to do? On October 29, when the minister issued the initial proposals he suggested:

> That the government make available up to $10 million annually in support of market development programs.
> It is proposed that a part of the market development program be the establishment of a product research and development program which would aggressively pursue development of and processes by which Canadian content in both domestic and export foods and feed can be increased. It is proposed that this program not be limited to grains and oilseeds but that a special emphasis be given to this area initially.

One can say that the $10 million for research will soon be absorbed in a research establishment, but not necessarily searching out new markets. I think this is a wrong step. We know that universities all across Canada have received grants for the development of new products and the development of new marketing techniques for existing products. What does the minister mean when he says that, initially only, special emphasis will be given to grain and oil seeds. This program may not be continued.

Here is another of the proposals made on October 29:

That the Canadian government continue its policy of supporting credit sales of wheat, but that the costs, if any, of providing the buyer with medium term credit at interest rates below commercial rates be assumed as a cost by the pool.

This is another cost to the farmer, and another example of allowing the salesman to make the sale, then have the farmer pick up the tab. For far too long, the farmer has been picking up the tab. A former minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board said a few years ago that he did not have a thing to do with the Wheat Board, that the Wheat Board sold the grain. This minister is putting himself in a position where the Wheat Board will not be able to make a move without asking him how they are to sell grain and what interest rates they are to set. In the end, it will be the farmer who will pick up the tab.

Surely, the Canadian government should be creating a situation in which more flexibility could be given to the Wheat Board so that it could serve the farmer better, rather than the government. This series of bills is geared to creating a situation where the Wheat Board serves the government and the government is responsible to the farmer. Should we not put more emphasis on bringing in legislation that would make the Wheat Board directly responsible to the farmer? There would be less chance of sympathetic and slick politicians hoodwinking the voters at election time.

At the Liberal party policy meeting in March of this year the question of the Canadian Wheat Board was discussed. There was agreement that the Canadian Wheat Board should be retained but made more flexible. That is the point I am attempting to make now, but how is it being made more flexible? Today, a farmer has to be a Philadelphia lawyer to figure out what the quota should be, what he should sell and what he should grow. The old system moved grain because of the assistance of Operation Lift, but I do not want to get into that because everybody across Canada knows that Operation Lift was an utter failure. As someone said in the House the other day, a farmer told him that if he had one more Lift he would be out of business. That explains Operation Lift very well. What does the program do? This whole series of bills creates a situation in which the farmer is placed in a straitjacket.

He must be a producer of barley, wheat or oats with little opportunity of becoming the producer of any other commodity. Some may say that this is all to the good, because then the goverment will know exactly what is happening in the field. Well, the government attempted to tell the farmer what he should do last spring when it introduced Operation Lift. Then, this fall, we found ourselves short of barley and were prepared to sell barley at between 10 cents and 15 cents a bushel less than we ought to have sold it. Why, Mr. Speaker? Apparently the all-knowing eye, and I mean the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) did not know the answers. He was not superior to anybody else in knowledge and did not know about the corn-blight in the United States. Last spring he advised our farmers not to grow barley, and this spring he advised them to grow barley. Mr. Speaker, I should like to hear the minister taking objection to some of the statements I am making. I suggest that he advised farmers not to grow barley. I submit that before May 1 they were advised not to grow barley, and perhaps in June they will be advised that they can grow barley.

Mr. Lang: The hon. member does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. Horner: The minister suggests that I do not know what I am talking about. I think I know a great deal more about agriculture than the minister knows, and I care a great deal more about agriculture than the minister does. To give you some idea of how much he cares, may I read a report from the Free Press Weekly dated May 1, 1971. It reads, in part:

Canadian Wheat Board Minister Otto Lang put his head on the chopping bock of prairie farm opinion last week by introducing a Commons amendment that could give the board marketing control of flax, rye and rapeseed.

That gives you some idea of what the minister knows. He does exactly as he is told to do and is following policies laid out in the Winnipeg speech. If he does not do as he is told he will have to go the way the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans) and the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) went. Since his old job at the University of Saskatchewan may not be open, he would rather stay here.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Horner: Let me make one point which may or may not have been made with regard to the stabilization program. The PFAA program helped farmers, although not as much as had been hoped. In situations where drought or other hazards had brought farmers economic losses, the program worked almost on an individual basis. It was not quite as efficient on an individual basis as crop insurance, but it was almost as efficient. Under the program being discussed, we are considering the five-year average of income obtained from six major crops. If a farmer's income is 90 per cent or more of that average, no payment is made. On the other hand, if there is a drought in the Peace River area, or in southern Manitoba or along the Red River Valley and farmers lose their crops there, or if there is a drought or a crop failure in southern Saskatchewan, and these conditions do not prevail throughout the rest of the country which may enjoy a good crop, there will be no compensation at all under the stabilization program.

Mr. Lang: Has the hon. member not heard of crop insurance?

Mr. Horner: The minister asks if I have heard of crop insurance? Why, I helped to have that legislation passed in this House. I know how it applies to some areas. It applies to some areas of Canada, but not all areas of western Canada.

Mr. Lang: It will.

Mr. Horner: It will, as the minister says. First, a new program ought to be implemented before we do away with the one we have.

Mr. Lang: We have two years.

Mr. Horner: I see the minister nodding his head affirmatively in response to that remark. I do not see any crop insurance legislation on the books.

Mr. Lang: It is there.

Mr. Horner: I am talking about legislation on the books that could be applied this year, or next year or the year after. The minister suggested that we had to wait for two years in order to fully implement this crop insurance scheme. I do not know if an election will intervene in the interim. I think he meant that that legislation will not take effect for two years. I submit that the legislation we are considering will not take effect for two years. First, the farmer must average his receipts from six major grains over five years, to determine how much he is to get. Then, he must average these amounts out over the last three years. In other words, he must wait for three years before this legislation becomes effective, yet the government will have done away with the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act by July, 1971. If that act had been allowed to stay in force, farmers receiving payments under it would have received more than the $100 million this program will make available because every year farmers receive on the average $46 million under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act program. The minister is not denying these statements. He knows that what I say is correct. The federal government's contribution to farmers under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act would be greater than it will be under this program.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. It should be recorded that the hon. member is mistaking my views when he says that I agree with him merely because I do not argue with him. I should like it to be recorded that it is much simpler, as it was the other day, to let him know when he says something that is accurate. That way I shall not rise very often.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner: One should not really criticize the minister. One can really only feel sorry for him. As a boy, he grew up on the farm.

Mr. Lang: That is not true, either.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Haven't you grown up yet, Otto?

Mr. Horner: His father owned a farm. The minister could not bear it and swore that he would have nothing to do with agriculture. When he came down here the Prime Minister did not feel that the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) was capable of handling the Wheat Board. It was decided to divide the responsibility for agriculture. The Prime Minister needed someone from Saskatchewan in his cabinet, and so the load fell on the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Wheat Board. I feel sorry for him because he has no love for the farm and no love for the agricultural industry. He is only carrying out the wishes of the master in trying to eradicate the small scale farmer. In any event, this program does not take into consideration the plight of the individual farmer; nor does it consider the plight of a region. It applies nationally. There must be a national catastrophe before money is paid out.

The other glaring error in the program is that it ignores the effect of inflation. We know that the farmer's costs of production are going up each year. Some hon. members may say that, to meet this, the farmer ought to become more efficient. Mr. Speaker, in the last ten or 20 years, Canada's agricultural industry has been one of the most efficient of our industries. In terms of goods produced per man hour of work, it has been more efficient than most industries in Canada. This program will fail because it does not take into account inflation and because it does not take into account farmers on a regional or individual basis. We need more flexibility and not more rigidity in our system. Our salesmen ought to be more aggressive in selling wheat, oats, barley, rye, rapeseed, flax and other produce. This legislation will create a cushion for agricultural salesmen. They will sit back and not be induced to sell. The legislation is intolerable in the eyes of many farm organizations and farmers who have followed the discussion in the House and in Committee.

I might say that even on October 29, when the minister proposed this program, he had no idea of offering farmers $100 million. He did not even suggest that until March 15. It is interesting to note why the minister made this suggestion on March 15. At that time he realized this bill would not be accepted across the country nor would he get it through the House or the Standing Committee on Agriculture because many of the members who represent farm areas are willing to pass only legislation that will benefit the farmers. The minister knows he has to offer as a bribe this piece of the legislation. He has to use a bribe of $100 million. The last speaker pointed out that, in essence, there is only $45 million being offered because the minister is taking away the funds contributed by the federal government under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act and the Prairie Farm Assistance Acts.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): In speaking to Bill C-244, Mr. Speaker, I want to try to determine whether the government is concerned about the agricultural economy. I was surprised to see the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang), who is responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, become touchy when the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) was speaking a short while ago. It seems that he is somewhat ashamed of the legislation he has to bring before the House. He is ashamed of the legislation because he is unable to answer the questions which the agricultural producers across this nation are now asking.

After looking at the minister's press release of May 7, it would appear that if anyone is playing politics it is the minister. I suggest it is cheap politics that the minister is playing. When one becomes as touchy as the minister, there is a basis for this type of reference. In his May 7 press release, he refers to a so-called filibuster in the House which is working against the interests of all the Western farmers. Those involved in agricultural production are concerned that there may be some cheap politics used in this House to ram through legislation that in the long run is not in the best interests of the agricultural industry.

It amazes me that we are unable to divide the two factors in this bill, one of which is the $100 million figure which the government throws around as the amount that will be passed to the farmer. In his press release, the minister stated:

> As long as these members continue to be more interested in making political hay in the House of Commons than in helping the prairie farmers reap the benefits of new legislation, the House cannot turn its attention to the huge backlog of other legislation which must be dealt with.

I suggest that it is only the members of the opposition who are interested in the agricultural economy. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who has today assumed the new name "Jack in the box", is not concerned about what really happens to the agricultural producers in western Canada. It appears that after being given two portfolios, manpower and immigration as well as responsibility for the Canadian Wheat Board, the minister is not interested in trying to serve one or the other or he would say that he cannot handle both of these portfolios. Both are areas of great concern to the people of this country. If he was consistent and responsible, the minister would indicate to the Prime Minister that he cannot handle these two portfolios. Since he has to handle both portfolios, no doubt it is the bureaucrats in the department who are really calling the shots.

I like to think that the minister is concerned about the agricultural economy. When I read the minister's recent news release, I wondered whether the minister was saying it was just too bad, he had to ram through this legislation which does not mean anything to anyone, particularly the agricultural producers, because they do not understand it. As I said the other day, the minister was not on very good terms with the premier of Saskatchewan. He must have returned to the good graces of that premier a short while ago. In the address he made at Morse, the premier of Saskatchewan said he did not want to tip his hand on when an election would be held but he added, and I quote:

> It would be very nice to have those cheques in the hands of farmers before an election.

[Mr. Skoberg.]

I suggest that the premier of Saskatchewan and the minister are in cahoots in order to try to ram through a provision, the application of which the average producer is not aware. I am sure all members appreciate the fact that we must plan if we expect this nation to grow. At the same time, there is more to planning than philosophizing about what should be done for the agricultural industry. Not too long ago the Prime Minister was interviewed about what he considered to be the real problems of agriculture. At that time he said, and I quote:

> Perhaps, to be quite candid with you, when you talk of growing disenchantment I must begin by saying that some of my reading of the west is that it is always disenchanted.

This is a typical example of the interest of the Prime Minister and his cabinet in the agricultural economy of the west. They give zero consideration to that particular area of our country. It is time we realized that this government does not care one iota about what happens to the agricultural economy. Later in the interview the Prime Minister said:

> If this is the case, it is not so much a question of meeting the disenchantment by specific things, but by convincing the west that the way to beat this alienation is to get in there and fight.

The Prime Minister is suggesting that the farmers get in there and fight for what is rightfully theirs. The minister, members of the cabinet and members opposite are saying that we are trying to filibuster a bill which is not in the interests of the agriculture industry at this time. In the same interview, the Prime Minister said:

> This is exactly what we did in Quebec. I am speaking now as a Quebecker and a French-Canadian. There was a great disenchantment with Ottawa in Quebec. It was leading to the breakup of the country.

I believe this interview took place before the so-called apprehended insurrection in Quebec. At that time the Prime Minister thought he had Quebec in the palm of his hand and could do exactly what he wanted. If the Prime Minister now believes he has any part of Canada in the palm of his hand, he better take another look because that is definitely not the situation.

May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I followed with more than usual interest the earlier debate on this motion, motivated in part by concern for the welfare of animals, particularly those used in medical research and, in addition, as one who has lived not only in northern Ontario. When one live's only a few minutes drive or walk from the virgin forests you probably come to appreciate the value, beauty and necessity of maintaining animal life in Canada. And as a resident of the City of Toronto, where drives and long trips have to be undertaken in order to recognize the beauty of Canada's northland, I probably take more interest in this subject than the average human being who has not had the opportunity to live in northern Ontario or for that matter in the Northwest Territories. In addition, it was brought home to me forcibly, as often happens to a father of children, by seeing programs on television or reading articles put out by wild life organizations and seeing the kind of abuse that cruel men sometimes commit when dealing with the animal world. A son or daughter who sees this kind of cruelty taking place recognizes that you are a legislator and asks what the government is doing in this field or, more particularly, what are you doing. So, from a sense of interest in the first instance, as a result of my early life and from a sense of obligation to children who look to a father for guidance and direction in this area, I have done a bit of research. I want to say at the outset that I welcome the hon. member's motion.

You know, he is not making suggestions or recommendations as to the kind of regulations we should have in dealing with animals. He is not suggesting the most humane method of trapping fur-bearing animals nor is he suggesting methods which might be used to preserve wildlife and animal life in Canada. He is suggesting that a special committee be set up to consider all the things he would like to see done in this field. Why does he feel that this is necessary? I suppose he has done at least as much reading as I have. He is probably a member of a wild life organization, maybe of one or two, and because of his interest in this field I am sure that people not only from his own constituency but all over Canada write to him, knowing his concern.

Who can disagree that today there is a necessity and a sincere desire to safeguard the health and welfare of research animals? We do recognize that there is cruelty. No government can legislate against cruelty. A government can only draw up guidelines for the direction of people who are entrusted with the care of these animals. In the past I believe there has been an abuse and a waste of research animals, not because the majority of researchers are callous, but because in all societies there are people who, in the absence of guidelines, act in an uncontrolled and disdainful manner. Our society is still far from perfect and we must constantly strive to bring about improvements. One of the wonderful things about Canada is that we get as disturbed as we do about the destruction of seals, the destruction of wolves, the destruction of animals, hunting them by aircraft and even the licences which have been given recently for the killing of polar bear for what have been described as good economic reasons. This amount of concern makes me feel we have little to worry about in this area.

What improvement has the federal government brought about in the use of research animals? It has established the Canadian Council on Animal Care and the Animal Care Resources Panel. Members of these responsible bodies, acting from a sincere desire and sense of obligation to provide the highest possible standards of care and treatment of animals used for scientific research and for teaching purposes, have produced a booklet called "Care of Experimental Animals—A Guide for Canada." I respectfully suggest that this be required reading for all engaged in this field. The concepts presented in this guide are derived from scientific principles, moral considerations and from a feeling of responsibility for the lower forms of life. Let me quote from the introduction to this guide:

Before the decision to use an animal for experiment is made, consideration must first be given to the possibility that lower orders, or non-sentient methods would provide the necessary information. If not, it is the responsibility of the investigator to choose judiciously the species of animal.

In this short quotation is summarized the entire field of responsibility of the scientific profession toward the use of animals in research, and I stress the word "responsibility" because the scientists in this group do recognize their obligation in this field. Surely, it is their responsibility to consider whether lower forms of animals or non-sentient forms of life can be used to provide the answers that research is seeking. This would prevent some of the cruelty which is inflicted upon animals and eliminate some of the waste to which I referred earlier.

The major principle for the care of experimental animals is the prevention of unnecessary pain and discomfort. We seem to be balancing two priorities here as so often is the case. We need to carry out this kind of medical experimentation in order to find cures for cancer, and who can deny it would probably be necessary to inflict some pain, some death and some discomfort on animals in order to bring about a cure for this most dreaded disease. We recognize that there are situations in which pain or discomfort may be experienced by an animal being used for experimental purposes and this may be a necessary concomitant of the investigation. However, such experiments should be, and I think are, only undertaken when, on the basis of expert opinion, the significance of scientific investigation justifies the procedure. Here again a judgment must be made by those individuals who have the responsibility to do so.

What is the responsibility of the government? Would we, in effect, be in the research laboratory itself looking over the shoulder of research scientists? I think not. But I do feel that we have an obligation to provide some kind of guidelines so that the individual medical research technician or doctor will know what is expected of him. I understand that the guide being put out by the organization to which I referred earlier has become so sophisticated in its recommendations that even noise levels in animals rooms are controlled. Background noise may be provided to cover or modify the level of existing noise, depending on the specific need. If this had not been suggested to individual researchers, I wonder whether it would, in fact, have occurred to them.

I think that the care of animals goes beyond their immediate environment. There are also considerations of a structural nature. For example, the location of the building to avoid unnecessary transportation of animals over long distances and exposure to climatic extremes immediately before experimental use are two such considerations. Floors of buildings must be specifically designed to be hard, durable and impervious to water. All of these things to an individual who has little or no concern for the welfare of animals seems to be carrying it to a ridiculous extreme; yet if we do not set these high standards we will surely find that medical researchers will feel it is their moral right to drop below the standard is expected of them.

One further aspect that I should like to stress in connection with animal husbandry is the handling of animals so that they are accustomed to proper and frequent handling and made more suitable for experimentation. Only trained individuals who are familiar with animals and who have been trained in handling and restraint procedures should manipulate animals in order to minimize the possibility of injury to them and to the handler, and to minimize disturbance to the well being of the animal itself.

In conclusion, the humane care and use of research animals, indeed of all animal life, is the concern of any moral and conscientious society. Surely, it is the prime responsibility of those individuals who use animals for research purposes. One cannot underestimate the benefits to man that accrue from the use of animals in biomedical research. We must expect that such research in the future will bring equal or even greater benefits to all forms of life. It is this expectation that justifies the necessity for animal experimentation.

As I said in my opening remarks, non-sentient and lower forms of animal life are used whenever possible. However, when higher forms of animal life are used, it is the responsibility of the user to provide humane care and treatment, to minimize pain and discomfort and to avoid unnecessary use. I have a daughter who wrote an article for a humane society competition and received an award for her concern for the welfare of the animal world. I am proud to have had the opportunity of playing my part publicly in this forum, as she did in the only forum that was open to her.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a request which I believe will be granted. The hon. member for Vancouver East is not able to be in the chamber this afternoon and he had hoped that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway might say a few words in this resumed debate. However, the hon. lady did speak when the matter was before us on October 26 and it would require unanimous consent for her to be given the floor again. I am asking that that consent be given; there was a previous understanding that it would.

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Speaker, on the understanding that the hon. member for Hull, who also has spoken previously to this motion, will be afforded an opportunity of saying a few words on the subject.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare will be accorded the privilege of speaking a second time in this debate?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, may I thank the House for its courtesy; I will not trespass unduly on the time of the House. I was very pleased indeed to hear the first speaker welcome this motion, and I should like to re-emphasize the purpose of the motion, which is to have the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) designate a committee to which various matters affecting animals would be sent for purposes of regular discussion. This committee would have the power to call witness and to call for documents, to study the matter and to make recommendations in its report.

I feel that it is of great importance that this be done. I say this because I do not think that animal well-being or welfare has received any concerted study by the House, partly because we are so engrossed in the welfare and needs of human beings that we have not yet got around to animals. I believe that one of the reasons for the establishment of such a committee now, and for it to be put to work without delay, is that the Canadian public as a whole needs to be alerted to the matter. Some of them are. Some members of the public have been pressing for this action for years. But the on the whole the Canadian public is not alterted to a number of the aspects governing animal welfare.

I want to touch very briefly on just a couple of these aspects. The first is the matter that has just been dealt with at length, namely animals used for experimental purposes. I do not think that in the year 1971 it is sufficient for animal experimentation to be carried on by voluntary guidelines; that is just not good enough. Certainly, it has not been regarded as good enough in the countries of the world that are ahead of us in restricting cruelty to animals and in seeing to their care. While I do not undervalue the work that is being done by the Canadian Committee on Animal Care, I do feel that they need the additional assistance of legislation to make sure there is proper care.

I do not think that this matter should resolve itself into a question of trying to find species of animals whose pain threshold is not as great as that of other animals that are higher up in the sphere of evolution. My colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch), referred the last time he spoke to the establishmemt in the United Kingdom of the first research institute that does not use animals for experiments. This is the Walter Hadwen Trust for Humane Research, located in England which employs the techniques of tissue culture, cell culture, organ culture, robotics, films and computers.

Dr. Charles Mayo, one of the founders of the famous Mayo Clinic, has made this statement:

> I abhor vivisection. It should at least be curbed. Better, it should be abolished. I know of no achievement through vivisection, no scientific discovery that could not have been obtained without such barbarism and cruelty. The whole thing is evil.

Perhaps this statement is going a little too far; perhaps not. But I believe that a committee of this House designated by the Prime Minister should go fully into such questions as the experimental use of animals for research purposes. They should attempt to find out how much live experimentation is legitimate, how much legislative protection this requires, and what other means can be made available. My colleague from Vancouver East has spoken earlier about the experiments taking place to devise less cruel animal traps for trapping wild fur-bearing animals. Several versions of traps are being tested. Such a committee should call witnesses in order to find the most humane means of trapping.

What I have said relates to the part of the motion about cruelty to animals. The other part I want to deal with relates to the protection of humans. Unless we can find ways and means of protecting animals, fish and birds in our environment, we are going to bring down the whole ecology necessary to our very existence as a species. Let me refer to the Montreal Gazette of May 9, 1970. This article reads:

> The Canadian Wild Life Federation says 65 Canadian wild life species are being endangered and face possible extinction.

The article then asks why this is so. There must be reasons which could be provided the Canadian people in order thatthey might know the appropriate action to take. Of course we know bits and pieces of the total picture. We know about oil and mercury pollution and the effects of pesticides. We also know the danger of over-hunting. But we have not had the whole picture put together in order to help us plan a concerted program to save our wild life. We know that at least eight Canadian species are in great danger of being wiped out, including the timber wolf, the fisher and the polar bear. There are supposed to be about 10,000 polar bears left in the world, 6,000 of which are in Canada. The Soviet Union decided some years ago to take measures against polar bear hunting. I understand we, in Canada, cannot contemplate such action because polar bears are the only animals the Eskimos can shoot in order to survive. We are not prepared to adopt ways and means to save either the Eskimos or the polar bears. The other species in danger of extinction are the cougar, the walrus, the grizzly bear and the bald eagle. There are some other species which have been saved in the nick of time as a result of proper action, including the beaver, the bison and the whooping crane. But these are still on the very precarious edge of extinction.

We should urge the government to set up this committee to study ways and means of dealing with the whole matter of animals and their well-being. The committee should study the aspects of experimental animals and how they are being looked after. We must also look into the over-all picture. We are not only talking in terms of saving animals but also in terms of saving human beings, our quality of living and the ecology upon which we depend. What is the use of talking about the tourist industry, with all the beutiful parks and that sort of thing, if we are going to kill off some of the most attractive features, namely our wild life species?

Without using any more of the time of the House I should like seriously to urge that we consider the intent of this motion. It is not the intent to have the committee study the narrow aspects of experimental animals, humane trapping or penalizing people who abuse animals and that sort of thing. These are all necessary features and are included. My colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver East is making an appeal on the broad ground that we should look at animal species from every possible angle in order to determine whether we can deal with their welfare as a whole program, giving the Canadian people a chance to understand the situation. We want to get at the facts as a result of calling witnesses and asking for the presentation of documents to a parliamentary committee. If we do this, we will be taking one step in the direction of making Parliament very much more relevant in the minds of a lot of people in this country. These people are concerned not only about animals but that we shall have an increasing interest in living things. We must preserve our wild life for the benefit of our children and grandchildren. I strongly urge the Prime Minister to designate a standing committee of this House to make this the first piece of business for the fall session.

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): In rising to speak on this motion I should like to deal specifically with parts (b) and (c). Perhaps I should read them:

(b) as far as federal jurisdiction permits, recommendations regarding legislation providing penalties for those abusing animals, and any persons making a business of raising or catching animals for sale to research individuals or centres and not keeping same in humane manner (c) the most humane method of trapping fur-bearing animals . .

Previous speakers have touched on some aspects of the trapping of wild animals. One of the considerations to be taken into account when dealing with this matter is the economic and sociological problems that would arise when the prohibition of trapping precludes the possibility of banning leg-hold traps. Humane traps are available but are much more expensive to buy and require further testing before being acceptable to trappers. In fact, a great deal of testing has been going on for years.

A number of committees have dealt with this important subject. So far there seems to be no valid or conclusive consensus as to which kind of trap would be the most efficient in the circumstances. Another consideration one must take into account is that trapping and fur management are provincial responsibilities, and although previously discharged to some extent by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in the Northwest Territories they have now been transferred to the territorial government. This matter also involves co-operation between various jurisdictions, in this case the provinces and the federal government. It is not an easy situation because the provinces are quite jealous of their jurisdiction in this and other fields. This poses a number of practical problems in arriving at some viable solution. The point is that as far as the public is concerned, when there is some blame to be pinned on anyone it is usually pinned on the federal government. I should like to make it quite clear that perhaps the provincial authorities have not researched this important question deeply enough.

I would have to admit, however, that there has been some on-going co-operation between the two levels of government in the hope of arriving at an acceptable long-term solution. The Canadian Association for Humane Trapping, CAHT for short, which is affiliated with the Canadian Federation of Humane Societies has established a trap development committee. That committee plans to test the efficiency of hunane traps available and establish further basic parameters for the development or modification of humane traps; a quicker kill is the obvious objective. That agency will deal directly with the provincial and territorial agencies once the humane traps have been evaluated.

Some time ago Dr. Nicholas Novakowski, who is staff specialist of the Canadian Wildlife Service, Department of Fisheries and Forestry now, presented a paper dealing with the efforts which have been made to date in arriving at what one would call a humane trap. He had this to say:

The subject of humane trapping has been discussed by the Federal-Provincial Wildlife Conference on several occasions over the past few years. You are probably all well aware of the joint efforts of the Canadian Wildlife Service and the National Research Council to design and develop a trap which is both technically efficient and humane. In 1966 the Indian Affairs Branch became actively involved in the development of the Mohawk trap, resulting in the production of 2,500 muskrat-mink models and 30 beaver models for field testing purposes. The Conibear trap—

Mention was made of this earlier in the debate.

—developed by the American Trap Co., has been available for several years, and its use has gradually increased, particularly for beaver trapping and other underwater sets.

When the Mohawk trap was distributed, a questionnaire accompanied each trap, requesting certain specific information relating to its technical efficiency, catching capability and killing qualities, and also to determine its market potential. Many of you are familiar with the questionnaire.

The over-all response to the questionnaire has been disappointing in that relatively few trappers have replied, and few detailed comments have been received from the field staff concerned. However, this may be due in part to the method used to solicit the information and the fact that only a small number of trappers were equipped with the traps. In any case, 20 questionnaires were returned on the beaver trap and 43 returned on the muskrat trap.

In addition to these returns, we have reports on several projects designed to test the traps under more or less controlled conditions. It is significant to note that reports from both sources are comparable. We can, therefore, assume the comments received are a fairly true indication of the Mohawk trap's technical efficiency and humane qualities.

Trapping using a leg-hold trap is offensive to many people. We have been exposed to this method of trapping on a number of occasions on television and through photographs in the printed press recently. It is understandable that there should be a very strong movement afoot to ban this form of trapping. One's humane emotions are aroused when one sees a small animal trying to wriggle its way out of a leg-hold trap. Naturally, our heart goes out to such an animal. However, until an efficient, humane trap is available at prices within the reach of trappers, the banning of leg-hold traps would impose real hardships on many Canadians. This would be true particularly of our Indians, Eskimos and Métis.

I have some figures I would quote. They are not very recent. The average annual value of raw fur production in Canada during the ten-year period 1950 to 1959 was $25.7 million. In 1958-59 the total production of raw furs in Canada was 5.2 million pelts with a value of $25.8 million. The value of wild furs was $9.7 million, and ranch furs $16.1 million. This proves that if one were to ban, starting tomorrow, the use of leg-hold traps it would certainly impose economic hardship on those people who have depended for years, indeed for generations, on such traps. It is a way of life with most people who have depended on this source of income.

Reference has been made during this debate to the conservation of birds and mammals. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) mentioned that eight species are in danger of extinction. I believe I could enlarge on that figure and mention some species which are in danger of disappearing from the Canadian wildlife scene.

There is the Roosevelt elk, which was found on the mainland in southern British Columbia and is now found in limited numbers only on Vancouver Island. There is the California bighorn. This species, formerly present throughout the southern interior of British Columbia is now restricted in separate herds—the Chilcotin-Riske group, the Ashnola group, the Vaseaux Lake group in the Okanagan and some other groups associated in the same general area which total approximately 1,200 animals.

The wood bison naturally comes to mind when we speak of endangered species. There is also the northern kit fox. This species, once common on the great central plains of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, is now found only in southern Alberta and southern Saskatchewan. Then there is the Vancouver Island wolf, the northern Rocky Mountain cougar, the eastern cougar, the blue bear or glacier bear and a number of brown bear groups which may disappear if we are not careful in the management of our wildlife.

There is the barren-ground grizzly, the Lillooet grizzly, and the big plains grizzly. This animal is another species of wildlife which is reported to be endangered. Another example is the black-footed ferret. This interesting species was once common in southern Alberta and southern Saskatchewan and was generally associated with prairie dog colonies. A predator of the prairie dog, the ferret, was reduced in numbers as a result of poisoning campaigns to reduce the number of prairie dogs which interfered with ranching operations and cultivation. There are very few records of any black-footed ferrets being sighted and the animal may be more common in the United States than in Canada. If so, rehabilitation is a possibility.

The Newfoundland pine marten is another endangered species on the list, as is the black-tailed prairie dog. And unfortunately in connection with this list we must mention those species which have disappeared altogether from the Canadian wildlife scene. These are the Queen Charlotte Islands caribou, the great plains wolf and the Newfoundland wolf. There are also many species peripheral to Canada which are in danger of extinction if man is not careful.

I referred a few moments ago to federal-provincial jurisdiction and I would like to return to that subject. Federal authority in the management of terrestrial wildlife, birds and mammals, is restricted at the present time to migratory birds as defined by the Migratory Birds Convention of 1916 with the United States, and to all forms of wildlife found in national parks. Responsibility for all other forms of terrestrial wildlife is vested with the provincial or territorial governments. This includes upland game birds such as grouse and pheasants, all fur bearers and big game animals such as deer, moose and caribou.

The management of migratory game birds is carried out under close federal-provincial co-operation and co-ordination. The principal mechanism is through a federal-provincial wildlife conference held annually in mid-July. All regulations relating to upcoming hunting seasons are reviewed at that meeting of chief provincial and territorial game officers and the Canadian Wildlife Service. Enforcement of the subsequent regulations is also a co-operative venture wherein all provincial conservation officers hold cross appointments as ex officio game officers under the Migratory Birds Convention Act. In addition to the major federal-provincial conference, provincial subcommittees have been established to discuss non-policy technical matters and provide a forum for briefing senior provincial and federal officers.

This will be the extent of my contribution to this debate, Mr. Speaker. I see a lot of merit in the motion which is before the House and certainly I would not object to the establishment of a committee to deal with this matter. I am sure that the discussions which would take place in such a committee would enlighten not only Members of Parliament but the Canadian public generally as to humane practices in dealing with animals, as well as to our conservation efforts in the area of wildlife.

Mr. D. W. Groos (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I did not realize that this motion would come before the House quite so soon, so I am somewhat unprepared. But I would begin by saying that the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) and I many times have things in common, and this is one of them. I support him strongly on this motion which covers in part a matter which is close to the hearts of a number of people in this chamber, including the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis). I wish I could have been here to support her motion when it was put before the House but, as second best, I am glad to do so in the case of this motion proposed by the hon. member for Vancouver East.

I have been reading the debates, Mr. Speaker, particularly the one on the hon. member's motion when it was first presented on October 26. I am a little surprised and would like to make a correction for a situation which appears to have arisen in that in the various comments that were made at that time, no mention was made of an organization which I think is a valuable one which operates out of Vancouver and is called the Council for Laboratory Animals.

As you will notice, Mr. Speaker, the motion is in five parts, (a) (b), (c), (d) and (e). I will restrict myself to commenting on the first part of the motion which has to do with "the use of animals for medical research purposes, their care and utilization, and procedures for government licensing and inspection of, and control over, all premises using animals for laboratory research or medical training." What we are faced with here is a very natural conflict which arises within all our minds, namely, the conflict of the requirements for legitimate research involving experimentation on animals and our very natural concern for animal welfare that this research be carried on in as humane a way as possible and that no unnecessary pain be caused the animals which in some cases are giving their lives so that we can live better lives.

Just to point this up, Mr. Speaker, I would first like to put on record a remark made by Sir Graham Wilson, who was former director of Britain's public health laboratory, in testimony before a United States House of Representatives committee on animal care in 1965. He used these words, which I think strike home:

There is a degree of pain which no human being has a right to inflict on an animal no matter what increase in knowledge might be expected to result.

I agree with that and that is why I support so strongly the Council for Laboratory Animals. In the previous debate on October 26 we heard of another very fine organization, the Canadian Council on Animal Care. But as the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway pointed out, the Canadian Council on Animal Care deals with animal husbandry, whereas it is the Council for Laboratory Animals which is dealing specifically in an area where apparently at the moment there appears to be no real effective law, namely, the welfare of animals while they are undergoing experimentation.

In the brief time at my disposal I would like to place on record a submission which was made to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) by the Council for Laboratory Animals as recently as the beginning of this year. It is very short, just one page, but it says a lot of things that need to be said and I think to place it on record in Hansard, which has such wide distribution, is the best possible use I can make of my time in bringing my remarks to a close so that a vote can be taken on the motion. It reads:

It is now some seven years since the Council for Laboratory Animals first drew the federal government's attention to the unsatisfactory treatment of research animals in Canada.

During the last three years considerable progress has been made in improving the housing and husbandry of laboratory animals in Canadian universities. The Canadian Council on Animal Care, set up at the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada in 1966 with National Research Council financing, has been active in encouraging the universities to upgrade the 70 per cent of animal facilities which were rated as inadequate at the time of the original survey. Animal care committees have been established at most universities, and steps taken to raise the standards of training of laboratory technicians responsible for the animals.

The Canadian Council on Animal Care has not, however, been given the responsibility of reviewing experimental procedures and this represents a major gap in the protection afforded to laboratory animals. The medical journals report considerable numbers of Canadian experiments involving pain or stress to animals each year, some of which appear, on the face of it, to be of doubtful value in relation to the suffering involved, and we attach a short list of examples to indicate the wide variety of experiments in which animals are used.

Here we come to the meat of this submission, Mr. Speaker.

We believe that, just as the private individual is required under the Criminal Code to justify the infliction of suffering on an animal, so the scientist should be ready to justify painful experiments before a competent body. We suggest, therefore, that the staff of the Canadian Council on Animal Care be expanded to include a small, but highly qualified, inspectorate of medical and veterinary scientists who would review proposals for experiments approved by university animal care committees and the subsequent reports of these experiments.

It would be the duty of the inspectorate to ensure that unjustified or excessively painful experiments were not conducted; that the statistical minimum number of animals required were used, and that suffering was reduced, wherever possible, through appropriate methods of anaesthesia, analgesia and euthanasia. The inspectorate would also examine every possibility of substituting one or another of the increasing number of techniques in which animals are not required, in place of the time honoured, but generally less reliable, methods of experimentation and testing on animals.

I should like to speak at greater length on that aspect of the matter, Mr. Speaker, but time is pressing.

The work of the inspectorate would not impede legitimate research in any way, as experiments could proceed on receipt of initial approval by the local university animal care committee—

One of the primary tasks of the inspectorate would, in fact, be to advise and assist scientists in the use of humane techniques, but in the event that a scientist deliberately disregarded the recommendations of the inspectorate, the granting bodies would be advised to take note of the fact in respect to future grant requests.

One province has already recognized the need to exercise a measure of control over experimentation through legislation which requires that "every animal used in a research facility in any experiment that is likely to result in pain to the animal shall be anaesthetized so as to prevent the animal from suffering any unnecessary pain." Supervision of experimentation requires, however, a high degree of scientific and veterinary expertise and it makes little sense, financially or administratively, to establish separate inspectorates in each province for this purpose, when a small but highly qualified federal inspectorate, in close touch with the national granting bodies, could handle the job more effectively and at considerably less expense.

We suggest, therefore, that the federal government take steps: (1) to provide permanent funding for the inspectorate of the Canadian Council on Animal Care in order to ensure its continuity and (2) to make the inspectorate responsible to the Minister of Agriculture rather than to the institution whose facilities it is required to supervise. The council would then become advisory to the minister and its membership could be expanded to include a higher proportion of persons concerned with the interest of animals.

If the inspectorate was placed under the aegis of the federal Minister of Agriculture, it could also take over the inspection of federal government institutions engaged in animal research and testings, and of those pharmaceutical companies conducting research with animals which sell their products to the federal government or its agencies.

Under the above proposals, while the university animal care committees would retain their local autonomy, every phase of animal use in all fields of Canadian research and testing would be brought under centralized supervision, with its attendant advantages of uniformity of application, high qualify of personnel and administrative economies.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I repeat that this submission was prepared by the Council for Laboratory Animals in Vancouver, British Columbia, and was submitted to the Minister of Justice in January, 1971. I have no hesitation whatsoever in placing it on record because I think it lends support to a portion of this motion of the hon. member for Vancouver East, from the far west, and I leave it now to the decision of this chamber.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Question.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we have been hearing for some time quite interesting discussions on animals used for research purposes. I do not wish to rise without paying a tribute to the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) who introduced that motion, because I know that he is a dedicated man and a very active politician. As he is ill, I hope that he will soon recover, in order to contribute with his customary enthusiasm to the proceedings of this House.

I continue to speak on the motion, because I wonder where medicine, whether it is dentistry or other branches, would stand if we had been unable to carry on our medical research on animals.

I wonder what stage medical science, and particularly surgical science, would have reached without the availability of research animals.

Finally I wonder what Best and Banting would have done, those great research scientists who discovered insulin, who succeeded in extracting from the pancreas of animals a fluid called insulin which has enabled the great number of diabetics—and God knows that among the Canadian people as among the population of the world the proportion of diabetics is great—to lead a normal life, that is to live like first class citizens.

In the treatment of shock as well as in the treatment by antitoxins, I wonder where we would be if animals had not been available.

Furthermore, I would like to say that the Food and Drug Directorate uses several species of animals in its laboratories in order to test new products which arrive on the market every day—

PRAIRIE GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

PROVISION FOR PAYMENTS TO WESTERN CANADA PRODUCERS IN YEARS WHEN RECEIPTS BELOW FIVE-YEAR AVERAGE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang that Bill C-244, respecting the stabilization of prairie grain proceeds and to repeal or amend certain related statutes, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, before we adjourned this debate at five o'clock I had been asking what stabilization is really all about. I am bothered because many members of the press and many people on the government side of the House keep speaking about the $100 million payment. Many politicians across the country have been talking about this $100 million. The Premier of Saskatchewan has talked about the $100 million which is to be paid out to the agricultural producers in that province. The Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang) also has talked about this $100 million. If we break this figure down we find that the average payment to the individual producer will be only $560. We also find that the largest amount any producer could receive under any circumstances would be $960.

If members opposite suggest that the votes of these people can be bought for $560, or if we the Premier of Saskatchewan believes that $560 will make the difference between success and failure in that province, they should be corrected. The average producer in this country knows what $560 will buy. I am positive that every member of this House knows what it will buy for him. It can be used very easily for contributions and other things without any problem at all. When talking about this mythical $100 million, the producers in western Canada realize that $560 will be the average payment. They will not be able to build even one grain bin to store their grain when the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act is done away with.

It is important that we realize that the stabilization program is not related to the cost of production or inflation. Both the gross and net farm income become less and less. Every year the average payment will be lower and the law of diminishing returns will step in. The minister is aware that in the present situation the law of diminishing returns will step in.

When we look at the bill before us we are actually looking at economic stagnation. We are talking about stabilization. Hon. members know what that is all about. It is stabilization of those least able to obtain a fair return on their investment. That type of stabilization is not in the interest of the agricultural producer or our economy generally. The stabilization which the government is talking about really means elimination. That is the name of the game that the federal and some provincial governments which support the stabilization plan are talking about. This whole nation will suffer from the consequences of any legislation brought in under this stabilization program.

The second problem, of which the minister is well aware, concerns competition against the treasuries of other nations. The government talks about stabilizing the income of our agricultural producers. Other nations subsidize agricultural producers through their treasuries. These nations have a fair and equitable standard of living. They take into consideration the cost of production and the inflationary spiral about which we hear so much. This country has always been one of the world's main producers of grain. We must realize that we are not being fair to those who produce the basic commodities of life. It is strange that the minister has introduced a bill such as this when we are not prepared to give favourable consideration to the backbone of our nation, the agricultural economy.

I could draw on many statements from different sources in this country that spell out in detail what I am talking about. The Manitoba pool elevators did not hesitate to criticize the stabilization plan. They passed a resolution at their December, 1970, meeting dealing with the stabilization plan. The resolution reads:

> Whereas Mr. Lang is urging the immediate passage of his grain stabilization plan through the House of Commons;
> And whereas a lack of information to the western farmers on detail, and implications of the proposed plan are not available nor forthcoming;
> Be it resolved that Manitoba pool elevators urge our provincial government and all Western MPs to do everything possible to delay passage of this bill until farmers are fully aware of the contents of the bill and what benefit it will be to the farmer.

This resolution was forwarded to all Members of Parliament, including the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. It appears from this resolution that the Manitoba pool elevators are questioning whether the stabilization program proposed in this legislation is really telling the agricultural producers what may happen if the plan goes into effect. They suggest that serious consideration be given to this type of stabilization program.

The attempt by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) at the outset of this debate to divide the bill would have made it more worth while discussing. We could have dealt with the bill in two areas, instead of suggesting that because we are going to hand out $560 to an individual producer this is enough to make members vote for the bill. I have some figures from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. I realize that they were quoted last Friday. I think it will be sufficient to read the net farm income for three of the prairie provinces. In 1967 the figure for Manitoba was $154,392,000; in 1970 it was $78,631,000. The 1967 figure for Saskatchewan was $354,-896,000, and $202,718,000 for 1970. For Alberta, the 1967 figure was $282,953,000, and $226,231,000 for 1970.

When talking about stabilization, the government should be asked whether it is using the 1970 or 1967 figures with regard to stabilizing farm income. I am sure the minister will have something to say about this situation when he winds up the debate, whenever that may be. Although the government talks about an average five years, the fact remains that there have been terrific differences in the figures from 1967 to 1970. This situation can again occur, if we use the figures put out by DBS.

The National Farmers Union have clearly pointed out the situation. They have stressed the importance of stabilization payments being based on realized net farm income rather than gross farm income. Surely the minister realizes the difference between net and gross income. I am sure the agricultural producers of this country will not hesitate to state their costs of production. The difference between net and gross has definitely been missed by the minister and the cabinet in general. I quote from the National Farmers Union "National Newsletter" as follows:

> The net income base is essential if the plan is to help individual farmers and rural communities.

Hon. members with constituencies composed of rural and urban areas realize that the people in both areas are concerned about the net income that individual producers will receive. The government believes it can talk about gross income and completely forget about net income.

• (8:20 p.m.)

An article in the Financial Post of March 13, 1970, talks about the government's new big farm policy. It may be "big farm" for some individuals who may be lucky enough to become big farmers, but in the area I come from we are still concerned about the basic, individual farmer. In many areas throughout Canada today, particularly in the west, we are concerned about the basic farmer, the part he plays in the community in which he is involved, the type of recreation he enjoys and contributes to, and the type of income he must receive to make his a viable and economic rural community. The article reads in part.

> The federal cabinet has approved a broad national plan designed to speed up the exodus from Canada's farms and encourage larger-scale farm operations.

Larger-scale farm operations, to me, really means corporate farms and it would appear that this government is hell-bent on a program of ensuring that corporate farming will take over from the individual farmers we have always had. I am also of the opinion that the rural people in our agricultural economy are very fightened of this stabilization program because they feel that the only people who will be stabilized are the corporate farmers. Past history has taught them that the government is really not concerned with making sure that the smaller farm can be a viable, economic unit. I quote further from the article in the Financial Post as follows:

> One result of the long-awaited adjustment program should be to speed up the exodus from the farm and to accelerate the process towards larger, more economically viable farms.

Again I would suggest that if it is the intention of the government to speed up the exodus from the small farms and accelerate the process toward larger, more economically viable farms, then the government should say so right now. It is not fair for agricultural producers in this country to be left in doubt as to what the government is really talking about. It seems to me it is only right and fair to let the individual farmer, the person who has made his life on a farm, know whether or not he is to be allowed to remain on his farm.

As we read some of the statements which have been made—I refer now to the statement made by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture—we see reference to the fact that the federation believes strongly that one program or policy cannot and should not attempt in itself to meet all the outstanding needs to which I have referred. The federal financial commitment in meeting the economic needs of farmers and the prairie economy involved in the stabilization plan is far too low in terms of present conditions and prospects. It appears to me the views of the federation should have been recognized by the minister. Perhaps he does not listen very often to the opinions expressed by the federation or to the views of outside sources generally, preferring advice from inside his department. The minister should be thinking about the statements which are being made, recognizing that they come from practical people.

Many times I have said in this House since I came here about three years ago that we need more practical individuals to deal with problems affecting our agricultural community. Unfortunately, I seem to make no impression with my view. We involve ourselves with people coming from universities, with people who have never been on a farm in their lives, with people who really don't give a damn whether or not the agricultural economy survives in this country.

This is one of the main questions which I am asked when I tour my constituency. I am asked whether there are any practical people involved in the decision-making process. This in itself is one of the most important areas which we as parliamentarians should be considering. The statement of May 7 by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture—I am surprised that the minister had not read it before the question period today—is as follows:

> It is clearly and unmistakably the federal government's responsibility to ensure that the special payment is made, and made soon, while also ensuring that adequate opportunity is given for the consideration, modification and improvement of the long-term proposals contained in the bill.

At some point, Mr. Speaker, it appears the minister ought at least to consider that there should be two sections to the bill which he could quite easily bring before this House. There would then, in my humble opinion, be no difficulty in having the fundamental portion of the bill referred to the committee in order that we could look at the proposal in greater depth than we can in the House at this time. As long as the minister continues to talk about a $100 million stabilization plan, when in effect he is talking about $560 per individual, this debate could continue for quite some time. I believe that the minister and the cabinet will have to accept reponsibility if the farmers receive only the paltry $560 to which I have referred.

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture continued in its brief:

> The urgent necessity of immediately supplementing the incomes of prairie farmers is clearly seen in the disastrous figures on farm income recently released by the Bureau of Statistics.

I read those figures to the House. It would also be worth while, Mr. Speaker, to read another paragraph from the brief of Canadian Federation of Agriculture:

> It must be recognized that this bill is clearly designed to place definite limits on the federal obligation to support prairie income even in the face of chronic income inadequacy.

Perhaps the minister would look up from his seat for a moment and realize that there is a chronic income inadequacy contained in the legislation introduced into this House of Commons. It would appear to me that the least the minister could do would be to realize that right now there is a problem in the rural areas of Canada. He should realize there is something which he could do immediately, that is, divorce the two issues dealt with in the legislation before us.

Another quotation I should like to use is taken from a statement issued by the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. A resolution passed in February urges that the Canadian Wheat Board's jurisdiction be expanded to cover the marketing of flax, rye and rapeseed. Further, that the federal government should guarantee initial prices at realistic levels for each grain. No attempt has yet been made by the government to do this. It may be an attempt has been made to guarantee a basic level for each grain which, in fact, as has been pointed out many times, is a poverty level.

In fact, as I pointed out the other day, the individual grain producer is not making more than four cents a bushel on his grain. This is a disgrace, to say the least. It is a disgrace that the government should sit back and do nothing for a producer who cannot make more than four cents a bushel on his grain. Another point made by the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool is that an adequate grain reserve should be established to meet all market demands, the costs shared jointly by producers and government. When we look at today's situation we realize there is no adequate grain reserve.

In a quotation attributed to the minister himself he suggests that there can be other areas where individual farmers can make private arrangements with elevator companies to store grain; that this could be done despite the amount of grain presently in the elevators.

What surprises me most of all is that the minister has said many times in this House that we need space available in elevators to meet any situation demanding immediate attention. With this I agree wholeheartedly. But in the next breath the minister goes on to say that private arrangements may be made by individual farmers to use country elevators for storage. This makes me wonder whether the government is really concerned to see that grain storage space is available. I suggest it is high time this situation was looked into.

I should like to remind the minister of one of the proposals submitted by him on October 29 of last year. It concerns encouraging adjustment of farm units to a more efficient size. The minister proposed:

> The problem of farm consolidation is one which is not peculiar to the prairie region and which, perhaps, is less critical in this region than in other areas of Canada. It is therefore believed that it would be inappropriate to propose programs for the prairie region to deal with the consolidation issue in advance of the availability of programs to deal with this problem in Canadian agriculture generally. Such a general plan is in preparation.

I should like to ask the minister just what he means by encouraging adjustment of farm units to a more efficient size, if he is not in fact talking about corporation farms. I suggest the government should be charged with wanting to destroy the family farm, especially in view of proposals like the one I have referred to and the introduction of legislation that does not explain what the government is talking about. I believe that if the minister is interested in rural life in western Canada, he is obligated at this time to indicate just what he means by encouraging adjustment of farm units to a more efficient size.

Many people, the majority of whom have means and do not have to try to live on a modest income, have suggested that we should consolidate farm units into those of more efficient size. I suggest that rural Canada today is still the best place in the world to bring up a family. I also suggest that in rural Canada you do not find the kind of problems which are facing our large urban areas. When the minister talks about the adjustment of farm units to a more efficient size he should also take into consideration the amount of money being spent in urban centres to try to meet changing conditions. In effect, in talking about encouraging the adjustment of farm units to a more efficient size you are really talking about phasing out the small rural centre. The rural people of this country should be given the opportunity to examine the implications of the proposal made by the minister before deciding whether or not to support the so-called farm stabilization program, because you cannot talk about the one without talking about the other.

I suggest a deliberate attempt is being made to reduce the amount of grain in storage at elevators in order to avoid making payments under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. Perhaps not too many people can argue with that, but the fact remains that we should find out exactly what the minister and the cabinet mean by the elimination of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act and whether or not there is a satisfactory substitute for the storage policy under that act. I can recite without hesitation the cost of storage facilities, and the minister knows that the sum to which he has referred as being sufficient for the average farmer, $560, would not even come close to buying one storage facility to store the quantity of grain that the agricultural producer will have to store on his own premises once the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act is repealed.

On February 26 an inquiry of the ministry was tabled. It asked, first of all, whether payments were being made on a monthly basis to the Canadian Wheat Board under the provisions of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act; secondly, if so, whether the payments were still being made; and thirdly, if not, why not? If the government were on its toes, and the Canadian Wheat Board—which provides the answer to this type of question—and the people in the department realized the implications behind the question, an answer would have been furnished by this time, but I am still waiting.

We all realize that there must be a maximum normal carryover of all grains in position, at government cost. If this government intends to go into the wheat exporting business, there is no question that we have an obligation to ensure that grain will be in position for export to our overseas customers. I have heard statements made in this House that criticize the Canadian Wheat Board. As far as I am concerned, if more politicians would keep their cotton-picking fingers out of the Canadian Wheat Board's operations we would be a lot better off. It appears to me there are too many regulations, too many bureaucrats and too many people lacking practical knowledge condemning the Canadian Wheat Board to the extent that it cannot do its job.

The Canadian Wheat Board is in a position to know exactly what is required by way of grain exports. I recommend to the minister that when he has finished reading his novel the government should give the Canadian Wheat Board the tools to do the job. Let the board travel the world and do a proper job of selling our grain. I have seen too many brokerage firms trying to sell our grain today. I believe the Canadian Wheat Board can do the job if given the tools.

In closing, I urge the government, and particularly this minister, to reconsider the bill. Once again the minister should remember that he cannot gain political favour with the farmers of this nation by suggesting that they should accept this $100 million—$560 for each individual producer—with the rest of the legislation. If he separated that part of the bill there should not be any problem in taking a realistic look at the legislation before the House.

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, since the announcement of this program in October last most members of the House and many farmers across western Canada have been waiting rather anxiously for their legislation hoping that an effective measure might be incorporated in it in order to cope with continuing deterioration in the prairie grain economy. Unfortunately, it is rather questionable whether this measure will be very helpful in the long run. Obviously the government has high hopes for it, because it seems that every question directed to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board in the last six months respecting the prairie grain industry has been answered by reference to the legislation coming forth under the stabilization program.

It would be a gross oversimplification to suggest that this bill will cure all the ills of the prairie grains industry. On the contrary, it is conceivable that within three years the results of this bill will only add to the already long list of producers who have fallen by the wayside. It is no surprise that this bill is in close conformity with the bureaucratic, complicated red-tape programs that have preceded it.

Before dealing with the bill specifically I think in all fairness one has to take exception to the comments made by the minister in his press release of May 7, charging opposition members with deliberately working against the prairie agricultural industry. He want on to say that if this continued it would cost the western farmers $100 million this year. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, is this supposed to be some kind of a threat? The farmers understand this bill very well. They are not going to be taken in by this kind of gimmick. They certainly will not be bought off that easily, in spite of the fact they are now suffering very severe hardship.

I do not believe it is wrong to rise in this House of Commons and inform hon. members of the desperate plight, which is growing, in the west. This is our responsibility. Many members of this House come from western Canada and feel very strongly about agriculture and the legislative measures being introduced, ostensibly to assist the industry. We are in very close contact with the producers out there and know their reaction. It is quite obvious that many of these measures are not acceptable to the majority of producers. It is fair to say that the minister is not communicating very well with the vast majority of producers out west, because the programs instituted under his jurisdiction simply do not provide solutions and to a very large degree these programs conflict with the aims, aspirations and wishes of the majority. I believe this bill fits that category. It merely sets out to stabilize incomes rather than improve them.

An hon. Member: Stabilized poverty.

Mr. Mazankowski: All it does is perpetrate a program of stabilized poverty. The vast majority of Canadians know it is of no use to talk to the minister responsible for agricultural policy or the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. They know they will not listen. Their promises are empty and meaningless.

The minister also talked about making political hay. Who was trying to make political hay when this program was first announced? The headlines across the country suggested the western farmers would receive a gift from the government. They were going to get a bonus in the form of a huge cash injection. The newspaper articles were misleading. They were distorted; they did not tell the people all the facts. There was no headline to the effect that the government intended to withdraw the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act and coverage of the pool accounts.

This bill sets out to reappropriate the expenditures and funds which have normally been supplied under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act and losses on pool accounts which amounted to $131 million in the last crop year. We must remember the withdrawal of PFAA payments which have amounted to an average of $6 million a year paid by the federal government since the program was incorporated. Who was making political hay when the Lift program was announced? When that program was introduced the suggestion was that western farmers would receive another gift of $100 million to $140 million. Again this was misleading and the facts were not completely detailed. Now that the smoke has cleared, we find something like $55 million or $60 million being paid out under this program.

I have not seen any headlines retracting the grossly misleading statements made when the program was instituted. In addition, the measure was useful to only about 50 per cent of the people engaged in the production of grain in western Canada. Certainly the measure discriminated against and penalized those who engaged in a voluntary reduction of wheat in the previous year. Many more were short-changed by the program because of the complicated, bureaucratic devices and regulations surrounding the measure, not to mention the ambiguous statements made and misinterpretations in respect of it.

This is the kind of misleading and distorted propaganda facing the agricultural industry in western Canada. This performance is being perpetrated by the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson). We know very well that the same thing happened in respect of Bill C-176, which was to be a producers' bill. We found out that it was nothing more than a bureaucrats' bill or a government bill. This bill was supposed to serve the interests of producers but it was designed merely to set up another political haven for the government, administered by government appointees. The producers caught on very quickly and wanted no part of this measure. They have rejected it completely. They know they cannot trust the Minister of Agriculture. He has broken faith with the farmers.

A great deal has been said about Bill C-176. There has been a fair amount of political in-fighting. Let me quote a short poem which I believe puts the matter in proper perspective. I do not know who is the author of the poem but it is signed by "Old Rancher". The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh) suggests it was written by one of his constituents.

Mr. McIntosh: I didn't suggest; I told you.

Mr. Mazankowski: It goes like this:

Big Jack Horner got Bud in a corner,
Said your promises sound rather strange,
At this stage in the battle you've included cattle,
And sold out your home on the range.
You saw easy pickin's for backing French chickens,
May the goose pimples rise on your neck,
When you see the visions of voters' decisions,
And a chicken farm down in Quebec.

The Minister of Agriculture was crying in the same manner as the minister in charge of the Wheat Board when the House was considering Bill C-175, the new Canada Grain Act. In the June 30 issue of the Globe and Mail we find the following passage:

Opposition MPs "performed a real disservice" for western grain growers by holding up passage of a new grain act, agriculture minister H. A. Olson said yesterday.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Refusal to let the act through before the Commons summer adjournment, started last Friday, may seriously impede Canada's ability to market wheat with a guaranteed protein content, the minister said in an interview.

Many wheat importers seek a protein content guarantee before they will make a purchase.

Mr. Speaker, this is a distortion of the facts. I had the opportunity to attend a meeting in Lloydminster, Alberta, where the now chief commissioner, Mr. Vogel, was in attendance. I asked him whether Canada was losing any significant grain sales because of our inability to guarantee protein grading. He said that losses because of our inability to guarantee protein grading were negligible. When I asked how many countries had requested guaranteed protein content, he said one or two. So we see this is nothing but sheer nonsense.

The bill did not become law until April 1. We heard the minister say over and over again that we were making record grain sales. We were told we have made sales of 256 million bushels this year, compared with 181 million bushels last year without protein grading. These are the kinds of distortions and misrepresentations that are being made across the country. The minister speaks of a huge backlog of other legislation which must be dealt with. Well, Mr. Speaker, other than Bill C-176, the agricultural products marketing bill, three agricultural bills have been introduced and have been before the House for less than one month. Each and every one of us who has constituents engaged in the business of agriculture must have an opportunity to speak on these measures and an opportunity to place our views before this House.

I do not believe any minister of the Crown should deny us the opportunity to express our views. I believe it is fair to say the minister knows very well that any measure introduced which would truly assist the western farm economy would be passed with a minimum of delay. Certainly this government's record in respect of introducing perfect legislation is far from adequate. We have only to look at Bill C-176 to see that only 42 amendments were adopted out of 129 proposed. There are some 30 more amendments to be considered. The grain act had 20 or 30 amendments incorporated, and yet the minister says this is just a senseless waste of time. Here is what the Free Press had to say about Bill C-176, the new Canada Grain Act:

> Despite continuing objections from some quarters, the new bill seems to be a step in the right direction, designed to help Canadian wheat secure and hold its fair share of world trade. It is a definite improvement on what was offered at the last session of Parliament in Bill C-196.

So I say much the same feeling has been generated in respect of Bill C-176. Let me assure you, Mr. Speaker, the producers do not see this as a senseless waste of time. This bill undertakes the payment of $100 million, or a reappropriation of the expenditure of funds. Certainly this is welcome. However, over a long period this measure will have very deep and underlying implications for the grains industry. As has been pointed out by previous speakers, the government will withdraw from its responsibility under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act as well as its responsibility in respect of the coverage of losses in pool accounts. In total this amounted to $131 million in the crop year 1968-69. The federal government's share under the PFAA, which resulted in an average payment of $6 million per year since its incorporation, is also being withdrawn.

The future impact, in my opinion, will have a very detrimental effect on the industry, particularly smaller producers and those who are at the lower end of the income scale. Because the $100 million is tied to the legislation, it is also very difficult to examine this legislation objectively and in an accurate manner without any pressure. I say the opposition and farmers of this country are being blackmailed by the $100 million payment which is hanging over our heads. It is difficult to be effective and constructive in attempting to put forward amendments and recommendations to improve the operation of this legislation. Believe me, it needs many. It certainly needs major improvement, as I see it, if it is to provide any effective measures for the welfare of the western grains industry. To do this, of course, will result in a delay in the payment of the much needed $100 million transitional payment.

There are many aspects to consider in conjunction with this bill. For example, we are currently dealing with other important aspects of the grains industry. We know that the Prairie Farm Assistance Act will be withdrawn. We are enacting changes in the advance payments legislation. We have just recently been informed of a new quota policy. A number of reviews are being conducted. The Menzies committee has tabled its final report. There are many changes and redirections of thought in respect of the Canadian Wheat Board's policies.

In dealing with this legislation and a program which will affect the future of the prairie grains industry for many years one must take into consideration all these matters. Certainly, with the attitude of the thin-skinned minister which was displayed in his press release, and his threats, we can only assume he is very touchy and wants to ram through this legislation while attempting to recoup some political gain—I may say, temporarily.

If the minister is sincere and understanding about wanting to assist and help the western grain industry, the payment should have been made in time for seeding operations, at the same time as he announced his intention to withdraw the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act and the coverage in respect of the losses in the grain pool accounts. Then the bill could have been dealt with in a constructive and careful manner, taking into consideration all potential developments and implications which I believe are very serious. They must be considered very carefully because we are dealing not only with an industry and with dollars and cents, but with people, of course, engaged in the industry. Therein lies the problem which must be dealt with. It is not only an economic problem; it is a social problem as well. Instead, we are being blackmailed and coerced into accepting this bill without having an adequate and uninhibited opportunity to study it.

I reiterate that the payment should be made now, without further delay. Farmers are in desperate need of this money. The agricultural industry in western Canada is depressed to the state that it is probably in the worst condition it has been in history. We might take a look at the net income for the western provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. According to figures taken from "Outlook '71", we find that in 1970 Alberta had a net income of $86 million, Saskatchewan had a net income of $56 million and Manitoba had a net income of $32 million, for a total net income in western Canadian agriculture of $174 million.

This is less than $1,000 net income per farmer, Mr. Speaker. While this includes receipts derived from the sale of other products, we have only to subtract the sale of those items to know that the income derived from the sale of grain is considerably less than that. If this is the kind of income the bill is intended to stabilize, I as a member of this House certainly do not want any part of it. When you study these figures it is little wonder that the farmers are having such difficulty meeting their commitments, their bank payments, their Farm Credit Corporation loan payments, their farm improvement loan payments and their cash advance return payments.

Some time ago during an adjournment debate I urged the minister to consider proposing a moratorium on the repayment of farm cash advances because of the difficulties being experienced in western Canada. Such a measure would have alleviated much of the hardship and I think it could have been easily implemented. However, the minister saw fit not to do that; he merely suggested the stabilization bill would solve this problem and urged speedy passage when it was introduced.

Western producers who are confronted with these difficult times are being subjected to harassment and intimidation by debt collectors. Threats are being made to throw them off the land. Is it any wonder that there is such anxiety, frustration and apprehension being suffered by them—not promoted by the opposition, as the minister would lead one to believe, but by the policies of the government? Is it any wonder that the rural population is constantly declining and that rural communities are dying? The population of rural Canada is declining at the rate of 1,000 persons per month, as was pointed out by the National Farm Union's director, Mr. Hubert Earl.

Is it any wonder that the Farm Credit Corporation has noted such a significant increase in the number of foreclosures that have taken place in western Canada, with many more pending? Does it not mean anything to note that Farm Credit Corporation arrears outstanding in 1971 doubled over the previous year, from 8.9 per cent to 17.9 per cent, with the situation particularly bad in western Canada? For example, Mr. Speaker, total arrears outstanding in Saskatchewan in 1969 represented 6.6 per cent; in 1970 the amount outstanding had doubled to 12.2 per cent; and by 1971 the figure was triple the 1969 figure, having risen to 21 per cent. In Alberta, in 1969, the figure was 14.9 per cent; in 1970 it was 21.7 per cent, and in 1971 it was 26.3 per cent.

This also had a marked effect on the business community. Many small businesses have closed their doors. Communities are stagnating and, of course, there have been many bankruptcies. In my own province of Alberta, in 1968 there were 75 business failures with liabilities of $7.3 million. In 1969 there were 87 failures with liabilities of $4.5 million, indicating that many of these corporations and companies were small in size because of the smaller ratio of liability, and in 1970 the number of failures had increased to 135 with $12 million outstanding in liabilities. Saskatchewan and Manitoba recorded similar experiences.

While this situation continues to develop, along comes the task force report which recommends that the government withdraw its support from agriculture and that it should not institute any ad hoc programs to meet unforseen conditions and circumstances affecting the industry. But in the meantime, Mr. Speaker, other countries are taking a different approach. For example, look at the United States. I quote from the Manitoba Co-operator of April 29, 1971, under the heading, "Recharging Rural America":

> Recognizing the contributions agriculture makes . . . in terms of our high standard of living, and agriculture's importance to the balance of payments, he said, "For the first time agriculture and rural America will be given due priority, which it has not had in the past."
> The President explained that it is essential for rural America to get fair and equal treatment; essential to develop a sound economy for the family farm, adequately financed. He said we must develop opportunities for education and employment or we will have the continuing problem of rural erosion (migration) which adds to the problems of the cities.
> Mr. Nixon admitted all this is a big order and there is no simple answer. Progress can be made, he said, through rural development and revenue sharing. He called this a process, not a program. It calls for additional funds totalling $1,100,000,000 (an increase of 25 per cent) to be spent in rural America for education, health, transportation, environmental improvements, housing, or for whatever local authorities may choose. Money would be shared with the states based on need. Need would be determined by such things as loss of rural population and rural per capita income.

These are the kinds of programs at which we should be looking. Instead we have the program initiated by the task force report, which was certainly endorsed by the government. All these pieces of legislation had their origin in the task force report. Apparently we are saying that Canadian agriculture must fend for itself. Not only must it shoulder the vagaries of climate and the elements, but also the vagaries of the international marketplace and even of the federal government.

We have seen the government grant assistance to other industries—the automobile industry, the shoe industry, the textile industry. We have watched more money being poured into these industries under the guise of rationalization programs. But what are we seeing for agriculture? There is a constant withdrawal by the federal government. This is evident in the Department of Agriculture's estimates for the current year, which show a decrease in expenditure of $30 million. It is about the only government department to show that sort of reduction. One of my hon. friends says the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) must get money for his staff somewhere, and perhaps this is the easiest place from which it can be obtained. The whole theme of the task force report now constitutes government policy. It emphasizes efficiency at any price without regard to the social and economic disasters entailed for rural communities. This cannot continue forever. It must stop, or rural communities will sink into oblivion.

What can be done? Certainly a two-price system, long advocated by many knowledgeable agricultural personnel and endorsed by the majority of farm organizations, could be incorporated with relative ease. As my hon. friend suggests, perhaps even a change of ministers would help. But with respect to a two-price system I must say I share the minister's dedication in trying to convince his cabinet colleagues that a two-price system is necessary. However, it seems that the minister's colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford), is the big bottleneck. That minister is concerned only about consumers. If the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is so concerned about the consumer, I suggest that he inquire into the price of pork products in the stores, because it is much higher than the price received by the producer.

I have here a document prepared by the National Farmers Union which indicates that a farmer receives an average of 19 cents a pound, or about $29.07 for a hog which is ready for market. When it is sold across the counter we find that it brings something like $107.30 in downtown Ottawa. In other words, a farmer would have to sell four hogs at market in order to realize enough money to buy one back across the counter. If the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is concerned about the reaction of the consumer if a two-price system is instituted, perhaps the minister in charge of the Wheat Board would pose that question to him. Certainly a two-price system would not solve all the problems, but it would be a step in the right direction. I feel the producer should have some measure of guarantee based on costs of production, but it should be a simple formula and not a bureaucratic one which would entail inspections and regulations. We have already seen too much of them.

The transitional payment is a relatively simple matter but the administration and handling of the stabilization program will be expensive, complicated and in many cases confusing. We have had experience with this in the Lift program and then ew quota programs now being announced, which are difficult to understand and somewhat confusing. The measures being introduced, this one included, tend to create a false note of optimism in my opinion. The government will herald this as another great measure, but we have heard this all before. For instance, "Grow all the wheat you can and we will sell it". And last year all we heard was, "Let's diversify". Then, of course, the Prime Minister came along and said, "You can sell your own wheat".

A great deal could be achieved by the adoption of a two-price system or a guaranteed price geared to production costs on, say, the first 2,000 bushels of wheat sold by every farmer. The unit quota should be reinstated as well to assist the smaller operators and preserve their rightful place in the community. The emphasis on the Wheat Board's policy has changed from that of equity to that of efficiency. This will only tend to speed up what I call the eradication process.

Another point which must be considered is the exorbitant interest costs being incurred by the Canadian Wheat Board. Something should be done to alleviate this problem. Probably the best method would be for the government to provide sufficient funds to cover grain purchases. If we look at page 59 of the latest annual report of the Wheat Board we find that approximately $4 million have been spent in interest and this is the responsibility of the producer. Then if we look at the 1968-69 annual report we find that approximately $11 million became the responsibility of the producer in respect of interest costs which were incurred in the provision of funds required to purchase grain. At the present time the Canadian Wheat Board has a liability of close to half a billion dollars to the banks, while its liability to its respective buying agencies is in excess of this, for a total liability in excess of $1 billion.

Under clause 15 of this bill the producer will again be subjected to further interest costs covering deficits in the pool, on which interest will be charged. So, Mr. Speaker, for the present the payment of $100 million will be welcomed, but looking at the long-term effects this bill is nothing more than a vehicle to stabilize poverty and to exacerbate the small farm massacre. It will eradicate the rural community and the rural life style to which we have grown accustomed. The 2 per cent payment into the stabilization fund will further aggravate the low net income position of farmers and will affect those who are at the seriously low end of the income scale. As mentioned by other speakers, there is no formula to take into consideration the effects of inflation.

The total withdrawal of storage obligations by the government seems to me to contradict the concept that Canada's wheat producing abilities and its ability to provide food for a hungry world are not only a national asset but an international asset. We see now that the government has pretty well left the grain producing community on its own, and I suggest that from here on it will never be considered a national asset. Canada can remain the great trading nation she has become through her grain industry if we adopt effective measures to aggressively pursue sales. With this in mind, I believe it is reasonable to suggest that it should be the duty of the government at all times to cover the costs of carrying at least one year's supply of wheat for export. I believe the Canadian Federation of Agriculture suggested something along those lines and mentioned sharing the cost on about 400 million bushels. I submit, however, that the federal government should cover the total cost.

With the passage of this legislation, coupled with the recommendations of the Menzies report, it is evident that the responsibility for storage of wheat and other grains will be left solely to the producers. This will mean new facilities and increased costs, all at the expense of the producer. With the new quota system, the concept of terminal non-cumulative quotas, the small operator will be under great pressure. In addition, with the commercial system reduced by 100 million to 150 million bushels, the grain elevator companies will lose revenue because of the reduction in storage income. I believe this, too, will result in an increased rationalization process of the elevator system, to the detriment of the producer. Coupled with that we have—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member and I do so only to advise him that his time has expired.

An hon. Member: Question.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member may continue if there is unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mazankowski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also wish to thank hon. members who have been kind enough to permit me to continue. It will take only a few minutes to finish my remarks. I merely point out that a reduction of grain in the commercial system and the terminal system only aggravates the situation. It places the responsibility on the farmers to provide more storage facilities, and affects the producer in this respect: as long as grain is in the system, it will be paid for and the cash will be distributed. Nevertheless, the reduction of 150 million bushels or 200 million bushels means that that wheat will not be purchased, and this relates to a corresponding amount of cash and that is lost to the prairie economy.

I submit that the long-awaited report of the grains group which has been studying handling and transportation problems of the grain industry should be made known before this legislation receives passage. This study is long overdue and I believe that the benefits of its recommendations should be considered. I presume that the report will attempt to suggest ways of streamlining the handling system and the shipping system, and no one can argue about that. There is some suggestion that perhaps a new inland terminal system ought to be developed. I only remind you, Mr. Speaker, that if this is to be developed, the producers will be paying the shot.

I wish to make another point. Since the industry is considered as a whole in the three prairie provinces, it seems to me it is conceivable that in one province there could be a total crop failure in any one year while in the other two provinces there might be sufficient receipts to exceed the five-year average. Thus, the farmers in the province that suffered crop failure will be deprived of any assistance. Withdrawal of PFAA will literally force those producers to buy crop insurance. That, again, will mean added costs which, as I must point out, producers can ill-afford at this time. Also, the crop insurance program is not available in all areas and this fact must also be considered.

In conclusion, I say that the concept of the grain stabilization program may be all right in theory; however, the level of stability has a great deal of bearing on this question. This whole matter must be considered in terms of the current social and economic realities of our society. Those realities have not been considered in this bill. Second, there is a danger of those who are responsible for marketing relying too much on the fact that a half-conceived insurance policy will cushion any lost sales, and thus those engaged in the marketing of these commodities may not be as aggressive as they ought to be.

Conceivably, those in our sales mechanism might adopt a laissez-faire attitude which would have a negative rather than an aggressive effect on their marketing approach. This matter ought to be considered. Without doubt there has been a great degree of complacency in this area in past years, something that producers can ill-afford at this time. It seems to me that when a country produces 5 per cent of the world supply of a commodity and carries in excess of 50 per cent of the world surplus, something is very wrong. The bill will do nothing to overcome this problem. The bill, Mr. Speaker, is a buy-off. Although farmers urgently need the $100 million, we would be remiss in our duty if we failed to predict the consequences of this measure, consequences going beyond the payment of the $100 million. In my opinion, passage of this bill will hasten a reduction in the number of small farms. Unless major changes are incorporated in the bill, I shall have serious reservations about supporting it.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate because about 5,500 square miles of my constituency is farm country, most of it being grain farm country. I am also rising because we are in the middle of another national tragedy, one that is being looked at mostly by the people of the three prairie provinces and not by many people in the rest of Canada. I say that in light of the kind of legislation that the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) in charge of the Wheat Board and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr.Olson have recently brought down to cope with problems besetting agriculture generally and besetting prairie farmers particularly with respect to grain.

I say that this is a national tragedy because, since this government took office, since the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) assumed office, since the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt joined the cabinet, and since the time his predecessors who were just as incompetent as he is, took charge of the Wheat Board and of the grains business of the three prairie provinces, net farm income in Canada—you must see this figure to believe it—has dropped by $516 million.

Only the organizational genius of this kind of government could arrange that, Mr. Speaker. Canada grows a lot of grain. We raise great quantities of food products and are possessed of resources which few countries in the world possesses. Only the organizational genius of this kind of government could arrange for people involved in primary production, fishermen, grain farmers and other primary producers, to lose money.

An hon. Member: We import agricultural produce.

Mr. Benjamin: The minister in charge of the Wheat Board has presented this legislation to the House. He has threatened us with it. Let me say at once that I fully accept his sincerity. I believed him when he said, as reported at page 5603 of Hansard for May 7:

> This leads me to say how much this emphasizes this government's real belief in the desirability of maintaining farming as a viable and effective way of life.

He went on to say:

> I want to state, as a fundamental matter of our philosophy—

Meaning, the philosophy of the Liberal government.

> —that we do not in any way have the view that anyone should be made to move off a farm if he chooses to live on it.

I accept the minister's sincerity in this regard. I believe him when he says that the viability of family farms in Canada is important to the entire national interest. We take him at his word when he says that. Yet, Mr. Speaker, he continues to perpetuate policies that will speed up, not slow down, those practices which have been adopted with respect to agriculture in Canada since 1945. We have lost over 300,000 family farm units in this country. It is not surprising, perhaps, that most if not all of our quarter-section farms have gone and that most half-section farms have disappeared from the Prairies. But when farmers farming 1½ sections, 2 sections or 2½ sections have lost money, as they have in my riding, we know that something must be wrong. When you find that net farm income has fallen by $516 million since June, 1968, or approximately since this government took office, you know that something must be fundamentally wrong.

We can find $120 million for uranium. I am not against that sort of payment. It has saved the life of several communities in Canada and the payment has enabled us to stockpile uranium. But what does the minister propose? He proposes that we abandon the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. He suggests that the government should not pay its share of the cost of keeping in this country an inventory of wheat and other grains. Mr. Speaker, he can threaten us with his press release. Yesterday it was being handed out, I gather, while he was making his speech in the House. He can threaten us that way if he likes. If he likes, he can act like the typical ward-heeler of the Prairies who went out with the dinosaurs in the 1920s or 1930s. Oh, yes, he can threaten us if he likes. While his press release was appearing in the nation's newspapers or was being carried on the news wires, the minister was making his speech on this bill and telling us we were filibustering.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Benjamin: The way the minister was talking, it had to sound like a filibuster in the sense that this government is determined to get out of supporting agriculture. The task force report on agriculture outlined that policy for the government. It is not unexpected that the government would follow the recommendations of the task force.

• (9:30 p.m.)

The minister says we are filibustering for no apparent reason. I wish he would return to his ivory tower law faculty of the University of Saskatoon. If he would return now, he would do both the law faculty in Saskatoon and all the farmers in Canada a favour. When the minister says we are filibustering for no apparent reason, and net farm income has dropped by $516 million since he joined the cabinet, he is talking through his hat. The minister suggests we are working against the interest of grain growers in the three prairie provinces and trying to make political hay. If fighting a fight that has been going on here since the end of World War II for grain growers in western Canada is making political hay, I plead guilty. I hope the minister will visit my constituency and butt into grain instead of post offices. I would appreciate it. I will never write a letter to anyone in his constituency urging that a post office be closed. I would like the minister to visit my constituency and talk about grain.

I would like the minister to explain to the farmers in my constituency, let alone in the three prairie provinces, where this $100 million will come from. I have some opinions. I might be wrong, and I am sure the minister will correct me when he closes the debate, but when the minister abolishes the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, albeit we can store uranium for five years at a cost of $120 million, the government will save $40 million a year. That is almost half of $100 million. When you add to that the amount the government will not have to pay out for the grain pools at the start of the next crop year in the form of losses, it can be seen that the government will more than recover the $100 million.

As another member pointed out during the debate on the pay increase for Members of Parliament, there were 11 people sitting in the press gallery. When talking about wheat, there are only a couple up there. I hope they are farmers. In any event, for the benefit of those Canadians who do not live in the three prairie provinces I hope they will point that this program will not cost the government or our taxpayers anything. This $100 million is not a gift from the taxpayers.

I now wish to deal with the transitional payment. It is called a transitional payment because the minister has not been able to persuade his colleagues or to set up the machinery to establish the stabilization fund for the current crop year. That is the main reason it is called transitional. The minister is a very nice man. He is very smart; but when it comes to wheat he is incompetent. We are going to say so all over western Canada. The minister can try political blackmail if he wishes. He can object to a filibuster on this bill while he is still making his speech, but that is not going to stop us.

At the beginning of my speech I spoke of a national tragedy and a drop in net farm income of $516 million. The minister is going to pay out $100 million. This means he will still owe us $416 million. If the minister wants to add that into his transitional payments, this bill will go through so fast he will not have time to speak to close the debate. With regard to the stabilization fund, if one were to assume $1 billion worth of sales of the six grains at 4 per cent that the government is going to contribute to the stabilization fund, that is barely equal to what the government will save by cancelling the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. Each year, starting with the next crop year, the government will pay no more into a stabilization fund than it has done under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. If you add to that the deficit, which I understand is $51 million on the 1968-69 pool account, there is the whole $100 million.

It has been said several times in this debate, and it will be said several more times, that all the minister is doing is stabilizing a grains income that for the past several years has been below what the grain growers needed to operate economic farm units of one, two or three sections. In the term "prairie grain stabilization fund" the very words mean something. They sound as though this legislation could be a real step. However, when one looks at the fine print he realizes what could and should be in the meaning of a grains stabilization fund. What the minister proposes perverts any kind of meaning that should be there. Political perversion is not an unknown pastime of various Liberal governments.

If the minister's grain stabilization took account of farm costs, farm net income and an inflationary rise in either the cost of living or farm costs—it does not do any one of these three things—it could be legitimately called a grain stabilization fund. In essence, all it does is even out an inadequate income. The minister can bandy about the phrases of his agricultural experts and the ones he learned from the law class at university, but he cannot get away from the fact that his stabilization fund stabilizes what has been there for the past five years and has already proven to be inadequate. The minister said he was as anxious as anyone in this House and in this country to make family farms, particularly family farms producing grain, viable, useful and worth while. I accept that; I believe he is sincere, but he introduces measures which will not do anything to improve that income.

The 4 per cent which it will cost the government of Canada will already have been saved. That is not an increase in farm income. The minister will not get away with threatening me, but he may be able to hoodwink or kid some people east of Thunder Bay that the opposition is holding up these acreage payments. These acreage payments will go out, Mr. Speaker. Whether they go out in June, July, September, October or November, they will go out. As soon as they have been sent out, there will be a by-election in Assiniboia and a provincial election in Saskatchewan. In fact, it is very possible that the cheques have already been made out with the names, addresses, and so on, on them but not the amount. We know the minister can do that. He should not kid us. The minister can try to hoodwink the people of eastern Ontario that the opposition is holding up $100 million in acreage payments, but it is not going to work. We are going to fight to get something better in this legislation.

We are now at the crunch. I will say this to the minister and the government. For the first time in a number of years, probably since the days of Jimmy Gardiner, the government is coming out with something which is substantially or fundamentally different from what it has been doing. It is fundamentally different in its mechanics but not fundamentally different in what it thinks should be the kind of society and the kind of economy we should have. I believe the minister when he says he is in favour of maintaining family farms. But he brings in legislation which perpetuates what has been going on for the last 25 years: it cannot help but do so, because even if the minister is correct when he says the stabilization fund will make it easier for small and average farms in terms of equalizing the farmers' income, he has forgotten to say that this income is still inadequate to enable them to survive. Whether the income is stabilized over a period or whether you get it all at once, it is still inadequate.

One has only to consider how many farmers have left the land. In the ten years from 1955 to 1966 during which we were blessed with both Liberal and Tory governments, we lost 38,000 farm units in the three Prairie provinces. We had interim payments and final payments in those years. We had the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act payments, and all of this was based on farm prices none of which were designed to meet farm costs or to give farmers a net return on which they could live decently.

The bill before us continues the same way of thinking. As I said, the minister can threaten if he likes. In government terms, the legislation is trying something new. It reminds me when I was a child in the dirty thirties. Every time the wind blew, the gophers were 20 feet in the air digging. But at least when Jimmy Gardiner came around, he knew about horses and he knew about people. The horses had gone but he still knew about people. Now the horses are gone and these Liberals have now forgotten about people.

They have policies for agriculture, they have policies convenient for the railway industry, they have policies that are convenient for the grain trade, very nice for the Winnipeg grain exchange; they have policies which continue to handcuff the Canadian Wheat Board. But they still do not have policies for farmers. Just policies for agriculture. When the minister interrupted one of the members this afternoon while he was talking about the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, he asked him: Have you never heard about crop insurance?

These Liberals are the birds who in the fifties decried crop insurance and similar legislation when it was brought in by the government of the day in Saskatchewan. These are the birds who said the premiums would drive farmers out of business. These are the birds who have formed the national government of Canada before and since and who refuse to pick up a larger share of the tab in connection with crop insurance. When one talks to them about all-risk crop insurance, they don't want to talk to you.

The minister conveniently forgets that in the main grain growing areas of southern Saskatchewan and south eastern Alberta it is almost impossible to buy crop insurance. Let him just try it. Unless he can tell the House that the federal government intends to triple, quadruple or multiply by five times what it is paying into a crop insurance program,—an all-risk crop insurance program—there is no way any farmer will be able to pay those premiums. The premiums they would pay would be a great deal more than they are to receive in one year under the minister's so-called stabilization fund.

Mr. Lang: Would the hon. member permit a question? Would he not agree that those areas in which PFAA has been so important might not be exactly the ones to benefit from the incentive program which would induce farmers to put the land into forage and not leave it in a crop which fails all the time?

Mr. Benjamin: What it cost grain growers under PFAA with a 1 per cent deduction does not come anywhere near what it would cost per acre under crop insurance in the grain growing areas, particularly in the gumbo country of southern Saskatchewan. The minister knows this. He should not try to kid us that crop insurance will replace PFAA until he has crop insurance legislation to offer. The minister has not yet settled anything with the three Prairie provinces, or with any of the provinces for that matter, with regard to a crop insurance program. If he had, I am sure he would be rushing in here to tell us about it. In fact, he would be rushing into the Commonwealth room to do so. Until the federal government is prepared to do a hell of a lot more about the cost of an all-risk crop insurance program, the cancellation of PFAA will in fact be a loss to grain growers.

The minister professes to be in favour of maintaining people on family farms. Yet the most efficient, the most energetic farmer you can imagine, the man with the most initiative, the man who has diversified, who has specialized, who has increased his acreage, who took the minister's advice in connection with operation Lift, has his back to the wall. I am not talking about some friendly farmer or so-called farmer who is owned by the hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Pringle). I am not talking about the kind of farmer who is owned lock, stock and barrel by some friendly packing plant. I am not talking about the fellow who farms for a hobby. I am talking about grain growers whose families have farmed for two or three generations, who have achieved an economic size. The price they receive per bushel does not meet what it cost them to pay for their land and equipment and earn a living.

The minister proposes a stabilization fund which still is inadequate. He perpetuates what every government prior to this one has done. He says: Canadian grain growers will sell their grain in competition with the treasuries of the United States, France, Argentina, Australia and other countries. If we can get $1.50 a bushel with no interim or final payment, this government says "fair ball". But, Mr. Speaker, in 1949 farmers got $1.75. Name me another industry which has suffered a decline of this proportion in the price of the product it has to sell. If the minister is the champion of rural Canada, he should be placing his constituency and his job on the line right now.

If he really means business he will get the support of every Prairie member in this House. If he really means business, he will say: From now on, the whole of Canada will do something about carrying a share of production costs. We carry a share of costs when uranium, textiles or some other product is concerned. But when it comes to grain, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) say we cannot have any new money. And the minister will not get any new money. None of the money which will go into the stabilization fund or into so-called transitional payments will be new money. Over the next three years, and I hope I am wrong in this prediction, because if I am maybe the farmers will gain a few million dollars—

Mr. Lang: You are wrong.

Mr. Benjamin: I hope so, but I shall need to hear a lot more from the minister before I will believe it. So will more than 100,000 permit holders. They will have to hear a lot more from the minister before they will believe it.

Mr. Speaker, this represents a transition for the government. It involves getting out of what should rightfully be a responsibility of the nation as a whole. It implies placing a greater share of the burden on the backs of the grain growers themselves. One can make this plea for a lot of other sections of our society; we just happen to have this one in front of us at the moment.

If the minister meant what he said on May 7, he will persuade the Prime Minister, his cabinet colleagues and the member of his caucus that there is not another industry of any shape or form in Canada that has had a drop in net income such as the grain industry and farmers have suffered. There is not another industry in Canada that has lost over half its employees—at least, not an industry that counts for anything in the economy.

I do not want to be sentimental. If the quarter-section farmer has gone and the little hamlet of 50 people has gone, it's too late. But when thousands of farmers leave and many Prairie communities become ghost towns—the minister has some in his riding with vacant stores, vacant houses, towns where once there were five farm machinery dealers and now only one or two, with no station agents, and so on—that is a different matter. I do not know how often the minister goes around these towns, but I would be glad to show him some in his own riding.

If the minister meant what he said, he will persuade his colleagues to accept the proposition that the nation as a whole is responsible for the preservation of primary production. It is wrong to repeal the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. Not that the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act in itself is good, but I agree with the minister that we are doing the thing backwards. Surely the minister can say to his colleagues and the nation, and have the support of agriculture if not of his colleagues, that we should establish a national granary concept where the government and people of Canada maintain—pick your figure, 150 million, 200 million bushels of grain in store at terminal elevators, and over and above that the farmers pay the storage, which is just the reverse of what the government has been doing.

What happens in our export markets is something of concern to the nation as a whole. If we are worried about the textile workers or automobile workers, is it not equally valid to be worried about grain production and our export markets? If the United States treasury or the treasuries of countries like Australia, France and Argentina ruin price agreements—I do not fault the Minister of Agriculture or the minister in charge of the Wheat Board on this score, because we are in a big league—it is time to call upon this Parliament and the nation as a whole to say to these other countries. If you boys want to play that kind of game, we will play along with you.

We should have continued to pay prices that bore some relation to the cost of production, with the nation as a whole picking up the losses. But no. This minister, who says he is worried about family farms and that he will not take a back seat to anyone in his concern to preserve viable family units, brings in a stabilization plan that pays no attention to farm costs or to farm net incomes, which makes no provision for any increase in the cost of living. If we can agree to escalation provisions for MPs and old age pensioners, what about similar provisions in this stabilization plan?

The minister can continue to threaten us if he likes. He can accuse us of filibustering if he likes. But this is bad legislation because it betrays the grain growers and family farmers. It does nothing to preserve the family farm unit in rural Canada. It is merely continuing what has been happening to us for 25 years. I wish the minister would explain why there are only two rural Liberal members left from the three prairie provinces. Surely that state of affairs should tell him something. If he wants to get rid of idiots like me, all he has to do is to bring in legislation that is really meaningful to the grain industry of western Canada, legislation that will really preserve family farms in the three Prairie provinces.

These birds opposite have been running around promising a two-price system. They even promised the Gardiner dam for 35 years and then the Tories built it, though they named it after a Liberal. Then the Liberals named a lake after a Tory. I do not know who is friendly to whom, but they are both the same breed of cat. We still keep losing thousands of farmers, with dozens of communities dying on their feet.

If the minister wants to get rid of NDP members from Saskatchewan and Manitoba, and Tory members from Saskatchewan and Alberta, there is an easy way to do so. If I do not make it back here it will be because the minister has really done something to improve farm incomes, to keep people on farms and to preserve viable communities in the Prairie provinces. If that becomes the case, then I do not need to be here. If the minister beats me in that way, fair ball.

However, if the minister thinks he can horse around and threaten us, telling the press that we are filibustering, then he has another think coming. If he thinks that he will get any semblance of this legislation through by talking in that way, then he has two thinks coming. It is about time this minister started listening to farmers and western Members of Parliament, to guys who are growing the grain, instead of experts on task forces and from the Winnipeg grain exchange.

I for one do not intend to vote for this legislation, not unless it emerges from the committee much improved. I will take my chances. The minister is welcome to come into my riding and to tell every farmer that I voted against this $100 million. I shall be glad to take him on exactly on those terms. He can even name the towns we go to in my riding, though I should like to visit some towns in his riding too. This $100 million is coming out anyway. I do not want to call it a buy-off. It is conscience money. Farm incomes have gone down by $516 million. The government is putting up $100 million, so it still owes grain growers $416 million.

As I say, we are not going to be threatened or blackmailed. I hope the minister will prove, as he said in his speech, that he has as much or even more concern than any other member of this House about the number of people in rural Canada, and that he will bring in improvements to the bill that will have all of us cheering for him in front of the city hall at high noon. If he does that, then I should be glad to join the cheering.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under standing order 40 deemed to have been moved.

INDUSTRY—ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS FOR SHOE MANUFACTURERS

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Chairman, I tried to call once again the attention of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) to the conditions prevailing in the footwear industry in Canada, because workers and leaders of that industry had once more shown their "despair" publicly. As a matter of fact, in the Monday, May 3, 1971, edition of La Presse of Montreal, Mr. René-François Desamore wrote the following:

> At a meeting held in Montreal on Saturday, union representatives of the workers of the footwear industry in Quebec City, Montreal, Beauce county and the Mauricie cried out in despair because their industry is dying.

At least 34 footwear manufactures have closed down in Quebec since 1961, thus putting hundreds of people out of work. Moreover, the manufactures still running are only operating at half capacity and work only one week out of two.

Mr. Speaker, we find the minister's attitude quite strange under the circumstances. Last year, in several questions I asked in the House, I indicated to the hon. minister certain figures supplied by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics to the shoe manufacturers who used them to prepare their brief. As recorded on page 8338 of Hansard of June 19, 1970, the hon. minister stated, and I quote:

> Mr. Speaker, I am at the present time reading the brief submitted by the Shoe Manufacturers Association of Canada. This document contains certain questionable statistics—

In view of the current situation, the minister remains completely unconcerned despite our rising unemployment and above all despite the many difficulties met by the shoe manufacturers and by the thousands of workers who have been and will be forced to a premature retirement.

Is this due to the Canadian shoe industry? Absolutely not, since the Canadian worker's productivity increased by 67 per cent between 1948 and 1968, which means that it is 35 per cent higher than that of the Economic European Community countries.

Nevertheless, the union representatives, meeting in Montreal under the chairmanship of Mr. Eugène Rancourt, stated, and I quote:

> Imports are the major problem in the footwear industry. In 1956, Canada imported only seven million pairs of shoes, that is 11.7 per cent of its national production, but, in 1969, 46 million pairs were imported, that is 79.4 per cent of the national production.

It is estimated also that footwear imports in 1969 were equivalent to a loss of at least 15,000 jobs in Canada. Canada is the country which is most open to shoe imports from Asian and state-controlled countries. In general, Canada's imports from those countries are almost as high as those of all the Common Market countries together, although its population is only one tenth of that of the European Community. All that meant that in 1968 there was an excess of footwear imports over exports of the order of 46 million.

It is obvious that nothing has yet been done in that respect and, which is even more serious, the skilled men in that field have no hope whatever of being hired back, since Canadian manufacturers are getting ready to avail themselves even more of easy import conditions.

A letter which the Slater Shoe Company (Canada) Limited sent to its customers on the closing of its Montreal plant is another proof of this alarming situation.

Let me now quote that letter dated April 1, addressed to the company's customers.

> During the past few years, Slater has secured the co-operation of the best master shoemakers from Europe in order to give you a product of superior quality.
> Today, after years of discussions, an agreement has finally been entered into in connection with quality control, data checking, choice of models, and so on.
> Our national advertising campaign throughout Canada will be stepped up and we hope that you will join that program by taking advantage of our co-operative system.

On April 7, the Slater Shoe Company (Canada) Limited sent to its customers another letter which reads as follows:

> As you know, the famous Slater shoes, known for their quality for 102 years, are now made in Spain, Italy, France and Great Britain.
> Everything is going according to plan, and you will soon be able to admire a magnificent collection of Slater shoes both in current and high fashion models.
> Our new models will soon be on display and our representatives, whom you know so well, will certainly be proud to show them to you.

The letter was signed by Mr. Phillippe Ayers, vice-president of Slater Shoe Company (Canada) Limited.

Mr. Speaker, because of very strong competition from some countries where labour costs less, the Canadian government is allowing plants to close their doors.

[Mr. Godin.]

The same thing is happening with regard to household appliances. This includes radio and television sets that are imported at the expense of Canadian manufacturers and workers.

We also import textile products, claiming that in so doing we save money because it would cost too much to produce them.

On the same principle, the government does not exercise any control over shoe imports from other countries. It is not profitable to make them, so we buy them.

Mr. Speaker, if this keeps up, how long will the Canadian economy hold out? If we are not given protection to manufacture here what we can manufacture, according to the needs of Canadian consumers, how long can we hope to remain idle, while buying elsewhere?

In peacetime, trade should be limited to international transactions. Our production is constantly chalenged by foreign competition, again, because of the allegedly good wages paid in these countries. But when war is declared, all this is forgotten.

I remember the 1939-45 war, when England became our best customer. I remember also that our manpower was not considered too costly to be sent to fight in these countries, and even to destroy them.

In war time, cost is no object. To keep troops in Germany, cost is no object. To keep troops fighting in Korea, Greece or Turkey, the wages paid our soldiers are no problem.

So, I wonder whether the minister can assure us that he will take measures, and will soon let us know what he intends to do so that Canadian manufacturers are considered essential to the operation of our economy.

Canadian industry, the shoe trade in particular, deserves protection and I would like to know what the government intends to do in that regard.

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the hon. member for Portneuf that I am well aware of the difficulties of the footwear industry.

Increased imports have hurt some sectors of the Canadian shoe industry. However it has not been clearly specified what field of production was affected and how serious was the damage. Special statistical analyses should show where pressure is strongest. Furthermore, the department, in co-operation with the industry, has undertaken a special study in order to ascertain whether low cost imports have really hurt the Canadian industry.

If so, the interdepartmental low price import policy committee will make recommendations to the minister in order to cope with the situation.

The government is ready to pay special attention to cases where competition due to imports is unfair. The Minister of National Revenue recently completed an inquiry into possible dumping in the case of shipments of shoes from France, Spain and Italy. If it is true that there was some dumping, the matter will be brought to the attention of the Anti-dumping tribunal, which will be asked to rule on the matter.

In December last, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce announced new steps proposed under the General Adjustment Assistance Program, that is the GAAP Program, about footwear industries needing assistance to get reorganized in order to improve their competitive position on domestic or world markets.

These industries may receive incentives up to 50 per cent of the cost of consulting services required for the development of viable re-organization projects—

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DEBATE ON FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING BILL —REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I raise an urgent question to which, in my view, the House must give consideration.

Considering that the situation of a large number of Canadian farmers is deteriorating day by day and that Bill C-176 can bring some relief or even correct the situation; and considering that it is the responsibility of Parliament to act quickly with regard to this serious problem, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Corriveau):

That the House should instruct the Committee on Procedure and Organization to study the possibility of establishing a reasonable though limited delay for the adoption on third reading of Bill C-176, and to report to the House within 48 hours.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion moved by the hon. member for Joliette. This motion, under Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Is there unanimous consent for the motion proposed by the hon. member for Joliette?

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—INCREASE IN FUNDS—STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, on April 22 I spoke to this House of the enthusiasm, imagination and creativity of the younger generation as so abundantly demonstrated in the quality and quantity of the proposals submitted under the Opportunities for Youth program.

Last week, as agreed, I began to announce both to the students and the public at large what projects had been approved. To date, some 600 project co-ordinators have been notified that their projects will be financed by the government of Canada. Similar announcements are being made at the rate of some one hundred a day. As I already mentioned to the House, we hope to have this phase of the program completed around mid-May. To date, we have received more than 13,000 projects.

On April 22, I emphasized that the government would respond to the enthusiasm of youth and I am pleased to announce today that the government has decided to allocate $10 million more to the Opportunities for Youth program. The government is aware that the amount does not fully meet the young people's requests but we are convinced that the vast majority of the many excellent proposals may now be approved. Furthermore, we count on being able to inform the young people whose projects may now be approved through this additional amount by May 25 at the latest. The Opportunities for Youth program, it will be remembered, Mr. Speaker, is based on the initiative of the young people and is designed to create new jobs and additional activities.

The government has presented a program to which the youth of our country has spontaneously responded. It is therefore obvious that the program truly meets the needs of the younger generation.

[English]

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, first of all I must congratulate the Secretary of State for accepting the suggestions made on this side of the House and elsewhere.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Hon. members over there have a short memory. I am glad that the government is expanding the funds for the program from $15 million to $25 million. As happens so often when the government finally accepts the advice of the opposition, its action is too little and too late.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Greene: Is that an original line?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Quite obviously the vast majority of young people who took the government at its word when the program was first announced will still be disappointed. They are already disappointed because in most cases they have not received any information about the projects they submitted almost one month ago. The fact that the government is now accepting projects at the rate of 100 a day will be cold satisfaction to the vast majority of young people who hoped and expected the government to respond favourably to their applications.

Although all hon. members welcome the addition of $10 million to the program, I must say that some of us are extremely disappointed that the Secretary of State has not indicated what alternative suggestions or proposals he or his department has in mind with respect to the remaining thousands of projects. After all, some 13,000 projects have been submitted. If about 600 have already been accepted, and a few hundred more may be accepted, this means that between 11,000 and 12,000 projects will go unanswered. This is one of the most, if not the most, shocking aspects of the whole Opportunities for Youth program.

I would have been much happier if the Secretary of State had indicated that he and his officials, in light of the great reaction to this program, were now actively consulting with municipalities, provinces, universities and industry so that some of the most imaginative projects that have been put forward by Canada's young people could be acted upon either in the private sector or in other areas of the public sector. Instead we have been told that, while an additional $10 million will be allocated to the program, the vast majority of projects, conceived in good faith and presented to the minister and his officials with great hopes, will simply not be allowed to come to fruition. That is simply not good enough for the hundreds of thousands of this country's young people who have taken the time and trouble to advance some of the most important, useful and constructive projects that young people of this country have advanced for many years. I urge the minister, in conjunction with his officials, to give serious consideration within the coming week to finding areas where programs that have not been accepted may yet be instituted in order to give our young people an opportunity to serve and so that they may be assisted to continue their education in the fall.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of this party may I thank the minister for making his statement and announcing that an extra $10 million is to be made available for the Opportunities for Youth program. Like the hon. member for Egmont, I am very happy to see that the minister has acted upon our suggestions—

Mr. Nystrom: —and upon the suggestions of thousands of young people across the country. The issue that must be raised is that this announcement has been made on May 11, two or three weeks after many university students have finished their classes, when it should have been made several months ago. I do not see why we should still be formulating student employment policies in the month of May. I do not see why this had to happen. It should have been done last fall or in the early winter so that the young people could have planned their university years and their summers.

As the minister has said, thousands of projects will not be granted or approved. What will happen to the young people depending on getting jobs through the Opportunities for Youth program when their projects are turned down on May 25? How much time will they have to compete for jobs that may not be available? These are things the minister should have thought of early last fall and early last winter instead of coming up with an ill-planned ad hoc type of Opportunities for Youth program at the last moment.

There are other points which come to mind. How many jobs will actually be created under this program? We still do not know the answer. In the jobs that are created how long will the students be employed? Will they only be employed for six or seven weeks or for two or three months? Many students need full summer employment if they are to be able to return to university next fall. They also need summer jobs that pay wages high enough to enable them to continue their studies. These are some of the questions which the program has failed to answer.

In general, this program is a good public relations job, but how much of the problem will it really solve? I would like to make two or three suggestions.

The minister and his department should start thinking right now about next year and do some long-range planning. Why not convene a conference with young people such as the proposed conference that was cancelled last spring? Why not contact the provincial and municipal governments with regard to planning for next year? This should have been done this year instead of this last minute attempt to put forward a patched-up program.

The government should also be pursuing a policy of full employment. If we had full employment we would not be faced with so many problems in finding jobs for our young people.

Finally, whether a student finds a summer job should not determine whether he returns to university. We must think about universal accessibility to education regardless of one's financial background.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: One's future in education should not depend on how successful one is in competing for jobs that are all too scarce in Canada today.

These are a few points that I hope the minister and the government will consider. Let us not get into this bind next year and disappoint the students again by coming out with a plan at the last moment. Young people want to do something. The minister was surprised that the young people have responded so enthusiastically to this program. I was not surprised. I knew the young people wanted to do something, so let us start planning now for next year and get on with something meaningful.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, last March 16, the right hon. Prime Minister invited our young people to participate actively in the Opportunities for Youth program.

On April 22, the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) cited some statistics and pointed out, for instance, that his department had received 2,485 projects and that he was not surprised because the young were enthused over the opportunity of working towards building the country.

Today, the Secretary of State announced in the House that he had received over 13,000 projects from students and that of this number, only 600 had been approved so far. He announced also that the total budget of the program would be increased by $10 million.

No matter what members opposite might want to say, I would like to remind them that after the announcement made by the Secretary of State which has been reported on page 5150, I strongly urged the government to increase the program's budget, so as not to augment further the feeling of frustration of Canadian students.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this opportunity to direct your attention to the ambivalence of the problem confronting the young students of Canada, namely to complete their studies while trying to avoid as much as possible running into debts. It is a well known fact that the scholarship and loan system contributes directly to get them into debt and to delay their start in life and the benefits that their knowledge and skills can bring to society. When they get out of school, students are up to here in debt and receive no government help to continue their education while governments claim credit for making education free.

Moreover, young people are impatient to participate in building their country in projects where their personal initiative is emphasized, where development, environment beautification, recreation, pollution control are involved. These are problems that are of deep concern to young Canadians and their response to the Opportunities for Youth program—more than 13,000 projects probably involving thousands of students—shows the number of students who are in debt and neglected by governments and also their interest not so much in dissent—since they know that in any case the government will not give them a hearing—as in building up their country.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to express somewhat qualified praise of the Secretary of State for the budget and for the number of projects presented by students which have been approved. Ten million dollars are certainly better than the total of $14.7 million originally allotted for the whole program, but that certainly is still inadequate.

Therefore, I want to renew my pleading with the government and particularly the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State to review their positions and further increase the budget in order that the Opportunities for Youth program should not bring about increased frustration among students who, believe it or not are really people to build up our country.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING—NEW MEASURES TO CONTROL INFLATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Now that the Dominion Bureau of Statistics has announced an increase in the cost of living for the first four months of this year amounting to 1.8 per cent, or an annual rate of some 5½ per cent, is it the position of the government that, as the right hon. gentleman indicated last December, inflation has been licked by the policies of this administration, or does the government intend to announce new measures to control the increase in the cost of living?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it has never been the position of the government that inflation is something you can lick once and for all.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I am happy to hear that the opposition thinks it is. I am happy to see that now they are proposing we should shift our economic policies toward combating inflation rather than unemployment.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, that was surely the shortest licking in history.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: Now that the Prime Minister has admitted elsewhere that unemployment was created by the government to fight inflation, I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman whether he intends to fight the bout of inflation indicated by this increase in the cost of living by creating more unemployment?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: Now that the Prime Minister has said that inflation with high employment is not an acceptable alternative to no inflation with high unemployment, I should like to ask the government whether it is quite satisfied to have both high unemployment and a high rate of inflation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Waterloo on a supplementary.

Mr. Saltsman: I have another question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yukon on a supplementary.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING—RECONSIDERATION OF CUT IN ISOLATED POST ALLOWANCES FOR GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I wish to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board; I am sure the answer will interest the hon. member for the Northwest Territories as well as myself. Having in mind the figures recently released by the Bureau of Statistics indicating an increase in the cost of living, will the government reconsider its announced cut in the isolated post allowances for government employees in the north?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think, as the hon. gentleman knows, this particular problem has been reviewed quite extensively and is near final resolution.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Waterloo.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker—

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Again I apologize to the hon. member for Waterloo. I believe the hon. member for Joliette has a supplementary.

INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING—FULL EMPLOYMENT POLICY, WAGE AND PRICE CONTROLS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

With reference to the statement made by the Chairman of the Economic Council of Canada that the government should establish compulsory programs, could the Prime Minister tell us whether he intends to propose a total employment policy including the freezing of prices and salaries?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have had occasion to state previously that freezing prices and salaries was one of the alternatives considered by the government should other decisions become necessary in matters of economic policy. Obviously if such a decision were taken it would be announced in the House, but for the time being, Mr. Speaker, we are still at the stage of developing such measures and many others.

TRADE

SUGGESTED OFFER OF ATLANTIC FREE TRADE AGREEMENT TO UNITED KINGDOM

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the information reaching Canada that there is a growing body of opinion in the United Kingdom with serious second thoughts about joining the European Common Market, would the minister tell the House whether he would take the initiative, under these circumstances, in offering the United Kingdom and other members of EFTA an alternative to the EEC in the form of an Atlantic free trade agreement?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, it is my impression that the British government has always been aware of the opinion of the British population when proposing entry into the Common Market. This is not a new event.

Mr. Saltsman: As the minister is aware, there is a change in opinion, but the question that I hoped he would answer was whether the department, the minister personally or the government is taking some initiative in offering to the United Kingdom and the EFTA countries an alternative to the European Common Market?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I think we presume that entry will take place and we are trying to get the best possible deal for Canada within that context.

Mr. Saltsman: Since that kind of assumption has some doubts attached to it, would the minister say whether he has any alternative program to offer in the event that Britain is prepared to consider—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I can think of many procedural objections to the hon. member's supplementary.

POSSIBLE ENTRY OF BRITAIN INTO EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET—ARRANGEMENTS TO PROTECT CANADA'S INTERESTS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the minister. Would he indicate very briefly the nature of the arrangements that he is seeking to make in order to protect Canada's interests?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to the Chair that is a very broad question. If the minister is able to answer the question briefly he might do so, but normally this is the kind of reply which ought to be given by way of a general statement on motions.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think the Secretary of State for External Affairs and myself have reported extensively on what we have been trying to do. We have had some relatively interesting results regarding, for example, British agricultural policies and so-called sensitive items such as plywood, newsprint and the like, and doubtless others will come up in due course.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—ACCEPTANCE OF PROJECTS—ALLOCATION OF FUNDS TO ONTARIO AND QUEBEC

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Secretary of State.

Will the government consider the Opportunities for Youth program projects presented after the date of expiry since the grants allocated to those projects have been increased?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): We have always stated, Mr. Speaker, that the projects which had been received on the set date would have top priority, but we are not legalistic and a delay of two or three days will not be considered as a diriment impediment.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Lotbinière wish to put a supplementary question?

Mr. Fortin: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to ask the Secretary of State how much of the $10 million increase in the Opportunities for Youth budget will go to Quebec and Ontario.

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, such calculations have not been made yet. I do not have any figures. My only reply to the hon. member is that the allocation of funds to subsidize projects is in terms of the unemployment rate among the young people in the various regions of the country.

[English]

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—ASSISTANCE OF OTHER GOVERNMENTS AND AGENCIES—COMMUNICATION WITH APPLICANTS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the minister has now acknowledged that the vast majority of projects will not be accepted under the Opportunities for Youth program, will he indicate whether steps are being taken to consult with other bodies including municipal and provincial governments and independent agencies such as universities and industries to determine whether some of the more imaginative and important programs can even yet be implemented with their assistance?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I was surprised to hear the hon. member for Egmont talk about that in his reply to my statement on motions, and I am now to hear him raise the matter again in a question, because it has been established for weeks—I had the opportunity to mention it many times—that the secretariat of Opportunities for Youth would not consider a refusal as final, but would rather try, as it is already doing, with regard to projects that it cannot finance entirely, to find with the young people themselves as much as possible, other sources of financing and other ways of implementing them, either in co-operation with private industry or through various levels of government.

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that many hundreds and conceivably thousands of people who have submitted projects have had no word so far from the Opportunities for Youth program, what steps are being taken to clear the communication log jam that presently exists in order that many of the people who are still waiting, some for longer than a month, will finally be able to get in contact with this agency?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, the worst of the problem which in my opinion was unavoidable, has now passed. In any youth organization, like in any other for that matter, when a deadline is set, most people report on or about that date and, inevitably, communications cannot be planned for just that rush period. However, I think we have now passed that period and that the hon. member will observe that the communications situation is coming back to normal if it has not already actually returned to normal.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—INCREASE IN NUMBER OF PROJECTS

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Montréal-Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State.

In his statement, he said he had approved 600 different projects. With the additional $10 million does he expect to be able to approve as many projects as with the former subsidy, and can he tell the House when we can expect information on the additional projects?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): In my statement, Mr. Speaker, I said that we were making every effort to have all the projects approved by May 25, which would give enough time to implement them and give summer employment to the students. On the other hand, the number of projects will depend on the importance of each one and on their average cost which we will try to maintain at the same level, that is the average subsidy allotted each project to date. I believe the program will be increased proportionately to $10 million, that is to say by approximately two-thirds, numerically as well as financially.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—CRITERIA FOR ACCEPTANCE OF PROJECTS

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister which general criteria are used to reject or approve a project. Is the decision taken arbitrarily or is a particular study made in that connection? The minister must have criteria to decide whether to accept or to reject a piece of legislation.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, those criteria have been established and publicized. If the hon. member will make a thorough search in his office, I am sure that he will find accurate information in this connection. Were I to list here all the criteria, which are rather numerous and sophisticated, I would surely go over the time which Your Honour can allow me.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—ALLOCATION OF FUNDS TO BUILD SATELLITE CITY IN NORTH

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State. Is any part of these funds being allotted to the suggested program announced by the Prime Minister for the building of a city in Canada's north involving 10,000 young Canadians?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I think, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member was not here the other day when somebody else asked me this question to which the reply was no.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. In view of the $10 million increase in the money allotted to the Opportunities for Youth program, is the minister now prepared to indicate whether it is intended to increase student militia and civilian employment in this area?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I regret to say that the budget allocated to the Department of National Defence has not been increased so we will not be able to increase the approximate number of 7,000 to 8,000 young people who will be provided with opportunities by the Department of National Defence this summer.

REORGANIZATION OF RIDEAU-CARLETON RACEWAY—ROLE PLAYED BY TRUSTEE AND MESSRS. ARMSTRONG AND FASKEN

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Following the chicanery involved in the reorganization in Ottawa yesterday of Rideau-Carleton Raceway, will the minister conduct an investigation of the role played by the trustee and by Messrs. Armstrong and Fasken?

[Mr. Asselin.]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar with the situation, not being a track fan, but I will certainly look into it and report to the hon. member as soon as possible.

Mr. Broadbent: In addition to his personal service to myself, will the minister undertake to report back to the House as a whole?

Mr. Basford: If that is appropriate, of course I will.

TORONTO INTERNATIONAL—REPORTED DISTURBANCE INVOLVING RCMP CONCERNING ARRIVAL OF AIR CANADA PLANE

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister of Transport in a position to inform the House of the circumstances of the reported disturbance at Toronto International Airport last evening concerning the arrival of an Air Canada 774 aircraft which involved the RCMP? Have any charges been laid as a result of the reported fracas?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice.

QUEBEC—ESTABLISHMENT OF PARK IN MAURICIE AREA

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Could he indicate whether the final plans for the development of the St. Maurice valley national park are ready?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, general plans have been prepared by experts. Of course, there may be changes while the park is being developed but this is not anticipated at the present time.

HIJACKING—PARLIAMENTARY RATIFICATION OF HAGUE CONVENTION—AMENDMENTS TO CRIMINAL CODE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. As Canada is one of the nations that signed the Hague convention in reference to the suppression of unlawful seizure of aircraft, is it now the government's intention to have that agreement ratified by Parliament? Is it the intention of the government to bring forward immediately amendments to the Criminal Code in reference to and along the lines of the suggested agreement which covers, of course, hijacking?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will take notice of the question on behalf of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Prime Minister whether he has made any suggestions as a matter of policy in this regard to the Department of Justice, and is that the reason a bill with reference to hijacking has not been brought forward this session?

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ESTABLISHMENT OF FIRST INDIAN MUNICIPALITY AT CAPE MUDGE—DEPARTMENTAL INVOLVEMENT

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Can he indicate whether he or his department was involved in the negotiations that paved the way for the establishment of Canada's first Indian municipality at Cape Mudge, British Columbia? If there was any involvement, in what way was it done?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we always give consideration to new measures approved by the Indians and I must say that we have had many consultations with the Minister of Municipal Affairs of British Columbia in order to solve the Cape Mudge problem. I am happy to note that a solution has been found. As it was impossible to amend the Indian Act, the provincial government has decided to amend the Municipal Code of British Columbia.

[English]

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, does the minister consider this step of establishing a municipality as implementation in part of the white paper proposals? Can the minister give the assurance that the federal government will continue to discharge all its responsibilities in respect of funds, services and programs for the Indian people or will these responsibilities be transferred to the provincial government in some way?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the solution co-ordinates the responsibilities of the federal government and allows the Indians of British Columbia, especially those of Cape Mudge, to take advantage of provincial services since they are citizens of British Columbia.

NATURAL RESOURCES

PROPOSAL FROM FIVE EASTERN PROVINCES RESPECTING OFFSHORE MINERAL RIGHTS

Mr. Ambrose Hubert Peddle (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister received a joint proposal from the five eastern provinces regarding offshore mineral ownership? If so, what response has he made to this proposal?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not received such a response, barring it having arrived in the last few hours. As recently as a few days ago I looked into this matter and there was no response from the collective five provinces, as the member asked. Indeed, I said last week, I believe, that the federal government was still waiting for an answer from many provinces on the proposals it made more than two years ago.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Will the Prime Minister not agree that in fact the five provinces concerned have always had a common position with regard to offshore mineral rights.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Greenwood.

COMMISSION RECOMMENDATION FOR NATIONAL DAY CARE ACT—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I just mislaid my glasses.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is recognized for the purpose of asking a question.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister without Portfolio who has been assigned responsibility for co-ordinating the proposals of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women. In view of the central importance assigned by the report to the provision of day care centres, has the minister consulted or will he consult with the provinces with a view to adopting a national day care act as recommended by the commission?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I think somebody across the aisle answered that. It is a good question. As with all the other recommendations we will give it very serious consideration, but I make no comment at this stage.

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Public Works I will direct my question to the acting minister. PROVISION OF REPRINTED FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING BILL TO QUEBEC MINISTER

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker. I am not entirely sure one has been, but I believe the general practice is that all provincial Departments of Agriculture receive all bills pertaining to agriculture which are introduced in this House.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF SPREAD IN PORK PRICES

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In light of the continuing spread between the prices of pork currently being sold to the consumer and the price being received by the producer, representing a differential of approximately four to one, would the minister undertake to investigate this discrepancy at once and report the results of his investigation to the House?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think a definitive statement on this matter was made on the ten o'clock show a little while ago, and there is really not very much I can add.

SUGGESTED REPLACEMENT OF PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION BY MORE EFFECTIVE AGENCY

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the continuing rise in the cost of living announced today, is it the intention of the minister to terminate the Prices and Incomes Commission and create a more effective agency to protect the consumer from inflation?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, a consumer price increase of less than 2 per cent a year on an annual basis would seem to indicate the effectiveness of present government policies.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give any other information than what is known at present. This is a new discovery of oil in the Mackenzie delta area. In the course of the next few weeks, we shall know the exact nature of this formation. PROPOSED TRANS-ALASKA PIPELINE SYSTEM—EFFECT ON GOVERNMENT POSITION OF STATEMENT BY DEPUTY MINISTER—PROVISION OF POLLUTION CONTROL ZONE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources arising out the statement made by his deputy minister, Jack Austin, at Anchorage in which he said that provided full environmental protection is assured for adjacent Canadian territories Canada would accept a United States decision to send tankers from Valdez down the Pacific coast. I want to ask the minister whether his deputy's statement indicates that the Canadian government has withdrawn its objection to the TAPS route and to the passage of oil tankers down the west coast of Canada?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, Mr. Speaker. I believe the government's position has been consistent throughout. We are greatly concerned about the possibility of ecological damage resulting from a tanker accident if the Valdez route is pursued.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary to the Prime Minister. In view of the very firm action the Prime Minister took last year in asking Parliament to provide for a 100-mile pollution control zone in the Arctic, may I ask whether the government intends to take similar action to protect the west coast of Canada where the danger is just as great and the possibility of oil spills even greater?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

PROPOSED TRANS-ALASKA PIPELINE SYSTEM—MEASURES TO PROTECT CANADA

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the minister whom I am happy to see back in the House looking very well. Now that he is back I wonder whether he would take a very early opportunity to tell the House what measures he proposes to take to protect Canada with regard to the proposed TAPS route?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Secretary of State for External Affairs has indicated the action we are taking in discussing this matter with our United States counterparts. If any further action is possible by Canada or is determined by the government, it will be announced in the House in proper fashion. I am certainly pleased to see the Leader of the Opposition looking well as usual also, Mr. Speaker.

PROPOSED TRANS-ALASKA PIPELINE SYSTEM—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF SPEECH BY DEPUTY MINISTER

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister a supplementary arising in part from some questions I addressed to the Prime Minister on May 7 on this subject. First, when the deputy minister spoke in Alaska, was he speaking officially on behalf of the minister and the government?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member cannot ask that question. Perhaps he might rephrase it. I have previously suggested to hon. members that we will get ourselves into some difficulty if the question period relates to statements made outside the House by officials of the government or public servants. I would think the hon. member should find it possible to rephrase the question.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I will try a different tack. In the light of the answer given to me by the Prime Minister, and in view of the confusion surrounding the question of what this statement made by the deputy minister in Anchorage means, I would first of all like to ask the minister whether he would table a copy of this speech in the House so that we may understand its content fully and, second, would he undertake to clarify to the House whether or not the contents of this speech do represent government policy?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I will be very pleased to file a copy of the speech if this meets with the approval of the House, but of course the government speaks for the government and, popular opinion to the contrary, it is not the officials who determine policy; it is the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: What is the policy, Joe?

AIRPORTS

TORONTO—FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE IN PROVISION OF ACCESS ROADS AND OTHER FACILITIES FOR NEW AIRPORT

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In reply to a question I asked him a few days ago he said that he had had some discussions with the provincial Minister of Transport in Toronto in connection with the new airport that is going to be built there. In view of the tremendous expenditures that the province and the municipalities surrounding the airport are going to be faced with in providing access roads and sewage and pollution control facilities, was there a formula presented or arrived at for a sharing of the costs or for assistance from the federal government in the carrying out of these projects?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, because, of course, the site itself would have to be determined before the actual costs of the development at that site could be estimated. However, in consultation with the province of Ontario we did identify the various levels of expenditure, and so it is known for the various sites what roads and various other forms of infrastructure would be required in each instance.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Howe: Have any discussions been held with the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion in order that this airport region might be made a designated area, as has been done in the Montreal case, so that such assistance would be made available in Toronto as well?

Mr. Jamieson: Again, Mr. Speaker, I might borrow one of your phrases and say this is hypothetical until the site is actually known and determined.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister if he would be prepared to give the province of Ontario the same support for these services as he has given to the St. Scholastique airport in Quebec?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, the situation at the moment is as I have outlined it on one or two previous occasions. This is a very complex matter. We have put all of our data at the disposal of the province of Ontario. It is now being examined very thoroughly by them, as I understand from the provincial Minister of Transport, with a view to formulating their response to the proposals we have placed before them. When they have gone through this exercise, which I can well understand will take some time, I have indicated that I am quite prepared to sit down and talk to them about every aspect of the proposals.

JURISDICTION OVER TELECOMMUNICATIONS AND BROADCASTING—DISCUSSION WITH QUEBEC AND ONTARIO

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, since the Secretary of State is not in the House, I will address my question to the Prime Minister.

In view of the contradictory positions of the Quebec and Ontario governments and the federal government over the subject of telecommunications and since Ottawa announced it was ready to negotiate, while Quebec is entering this field, I would like to ask the Prime Minister if talks are taking place between the federal and provincial governments in order to arrive at tentative solutions to this problem.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know that federal officials have already met with their provincial counterparts to discuss the problem.

Mr. Fortin: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Could the Prime Minister tell us whether these negotiations are formal or informal, and whether a report will be submitted to the next federal-provincial conference?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, these meetings are social and I do not know what difference the hon. member makes between "formal" and "informal", but in fact the meetings did take place. As far as I know, no province has called for this item to be placed on the agenda of the June conference.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the position of the federal government was made quite clear in an exchange of correspondence with the Mayor of Montreal at the time the federal government supported both Montreal and Vancouver, British Columbia, in their applications for the Olympics. In the case of Montreal it was that we were not prepared to assist financially in the organization and carrying out of the Olympics.

PROPOSED JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT—SCOPE OF NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD INVESTIGATION OF APPLICATION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has the government given any policy directive to the National Energy Board so that in considering the application for development of power from rivers flowing into James Bay the board will study the effects on the ecology of the region, the possible loss of resources such as lumber and minerals, and the displacement of Indians who live in the area, before giving approval to the project?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I believe the first two items referred to in the hon. member's question are within the direct purview of the board under the terms of the National Energy Board Act. I am not sure whether the last item he referred to is under their terms of reference, but I will certainly be pleased to consider same.

PROPOSED JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT—PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF INDIANS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. adversely affected, as were the interests of the Indians living behind the Bennett Dam?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have looked into the matter and as Quebec Indians have made such a statement I have requested my officials to place the problem on the agenda of the next meeting of the three-level committee including representatives of the federal and provincial governments and of the Indians.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

DISCUSSION OF REMOVAL OF RESTRICTIONS ON USE OF FEDERAL PAYMENTS UNDER SHARED-COST PROGRAMS

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of yesterday's statement by the Quebec minister of social affairs that the federal government has failed to establish minimum living standards and that the province should have precedence, is the government considering discussing with Quebec and the other provinces at the constitutional conference the possibility of paying out the federal portion of shared-cost programs without the existing stipulations on the use of such funds?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a meeting has been planned of the federal and provincial ministers of health and welfare for, I believe, May 25 or May 26. That federal-provincial meeting is to report to the federal-provincial meeting in June. Beyond that, Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that the provinces will make their representations and the federal government will make its representations.

Is the Prime Minister now prepared to call the provinces together again to discuss their approach to Bill C-176?

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—ALLEGED FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO ADOPT POLICIES TO DEVELOP THE HUMAN, CAPITAL AND NATURAL RESOURCES OF NORTHERN CANADA

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that my point of order has nothing to do with the fact that I did not get in my supplementary question; I will ask that tomorrow. There have been discussions among House leaders about the length of speeches today and I think you will find that, despite the provisions of Standing Order 58(13), there is agreement that the principal spokesman for each of the four parties should be granted 30 minutes and all other speakers 20 minutes. There is no suggestion that the 20 minutes be reduced but there is the hope that nobody will go over that.

[Mr. Jamieson.]

Mr. Baldwin: This is agreed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River) moved:

That this House believes that an enlightened program of human and economic progress for northern Canada offers great opportunities for the people of this country; and that the economic and social policies of the present government have brought about confusion and delayed progress; and that it is essential to make appropriate changes in our approach in respect of northern Canada;

And this House condemns the government for its failure to promote a truly Canadian strategy for the north based on human, capital and natural resources, and urges that appropriate policies be adopted at once that will bring about such development in that region.

He said: Mr. Speaker, when you started reading the motion I saw that there were in the House three of the four horsemen on the government side who have been riding off in different directions on this issue over the last two or three months but three of the horsemen have vanished, leaving only the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien). I had hoped that the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis)—soon, we hope, to be given the accolade of minister of the environment—the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene), the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) and of course last, but not by any means least, the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans) would have remained for the debate. I am in great hopes that the latter hon. member, before this debate concludes, may give us the benefit of his views, although he may well have left that opportunity to the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) who is here and who may well be informed on this particular issue.

This party, which has the honour to be Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, may not have any copyright on issues dealing with the north but certainly by right of its history, traditions and actions, it has the best right to bring forward a motion of this kind. The first leader of this party after confederation was one of the main architects of national unity. He brought in a program and a national policy which has continued to the present time.

During my period in this House and during the elections in 1957 and 1958 the party, then led by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), proposed a program of northern development which caught the imagination of this country and which was to a large extent implemented during the period when that government was in office. It was the Conservative party which built the railroads that stitched together the far flung areas of the northern continent. When we talk about a country which is unique we use the words bilingualism, multiculturalism, diversity and economic conditions. I suggest to you and to this House, Mr. Speaker, that there is a quality of uniqueness about a country which has a large and well established industrial base, a great expanse of territory and a frontier land awaiting human development to bring about the coalition of forces involved in a nation of this kind.

In spite of differences of language, manners and customs, and in spite of things silently gone out of mind and of things violently destroyed, this land should bind together in passion and understanding and shared problems, a great empire of human society. From time to time this party has been the instrument to bring out to some substantial extent this form of development.

In 1957 and 1958 there was a Road to Resources program; there was the construction of a railroad line into the northern territories, something which had been talked about for many years but was implemented by this party; there was construction of airports and airstrips throughout the north; there were a number of factors which brought about facilities in northern Canada which had been lacking in the past. In his concern for the questions relating to northern development as they touch upon industrial development in other parts of Canada and the dangers of pollution, the present leader of this party has seen fit to intervene and to inspect personally some of the problems of the north and to talk to its people. While he has had some opportunities to discuss this in the House, I am sure we will have an opportunity to hear more about it.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, and to this House that our party is qualified by experience and desire to deal with this particular problem. On the other hand, the government is made up of a party which, from the earliest days, has scoffed, jeered and poured contempt on programs leading to northern development. The records of this House are studded with illustrations of my statement. Defences are like trousers; they should be kept up at all times. Unfortunately, the government's defences in this area are down, and there has been a most improper and indecent exposure of the government's insignificant and irrelevant programs with regard to northern development. History shows that this government and the Liberal party have scuttled the expansion of genuine Canadian development. I will not go into the facts; they are well known and taught in the history books. Children in school know that the Liberal party has never been interested in northern development.

An hon. Member: That is not correct.

Mr. Baldwin: I and certain of my colleagues have seen at close range the precise form which that opposition has taken. Who will not recall that the leader of the Liberal party in 1957 and 1958 jeered at the Roads to Resources program and said that we would be building roads from igloo to igloo. Those roads were built, Mr. Speaker. They were built in all provinces of this country and they laid the foundation on which we could build further and necessary northern development.

What about the Pine Point railway, Mr. Speaker? For 50 years, or ever since Alberta came into confederation, there was talk of this development. That was the dream of people in northern Alberta and in the Northwest Territories. Motions were brought in this House under the administration of Right Hon. Mackenzie King, and under that of other Liberal leaders, yet nothing was done. In 1958, the man who led this party made a pledge, and in due course that pledge was implemented. The Liberal party, then in opposition, bitterly and strenuously opposed the construction of that railway.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Baldwin: I am afraid that they were joined in opposition by my friends to my left, who were then members of the CCF party. They voted against the bill incorporating the Pine Point railway. The Conservative government of the day, supported by its Conservative members, instituted and brought forward in this country the very wise and sensible program of railway development which has brought about such great improvement in our northern country.

My hon. friends opposite, both while in government and in opposition, have also been opposed to certain other programs. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) illustrated, with his eloquent and articulate remarks, the dangers inherent in the Yukon minerals legislation and in the bill dealing with the Northern Canada Power Commission. This afternoon, in the question period, the Bennett dam was mentioned. Although I and members of my party protested the building of this dam to the Liberal government of the day, that Liberal government insisted upon proceeding with that dam in the face of what I suggest were definite warnings about dangers which were inherent in the proposal to construct that dam. Its construction was bound to affect seriously all those who inhabited the downstream areas in Alberta and in the Northwest Territories. The government insisted on going ahead. They would not demand from the government of British Columbia, as it was their moral and legal duty to do, assurances that that government would proceed to secure a permit under the provisions of the Navigable Waters Protection Act for the building of that dam. This would have meant that the government of British Columbia would have had to file documents indicating what its engineering plans were. I am convinced that if that information had been made available to the public, the people of Canada and this party would have brought pressure on the government of British Columbia because they would have realized the necessity of taking steps to prevent the serious deterioration of the environment which has affected the people of northern Alberta and of the Northwest Territories.

The Liberal government has dragged its feet continuously on the question of self-government for the Yukon and for the Northwest Territories. They are satisfied, as they have always been, to maintain the status quo, meaning a quasi-colonial establishment.

May I turn to the motion in my name. After all, I could spend 30 minutes cataloguing the sins, errors and omissions of this government. I want to speak constructively and to make some proposals which I hope the government will consider, although I have strong doubts about that. I want to touch briefly on certain areas covered by the motion and leave to my colleagues the task of going into them in more detail later. We must re-examine the form in which we deliver our resources outside of Canada's borders. Canadian needs of the future must be examined and taken into consideration when considering the question of our resources. We must consider dangers to the environment involved in the processing of our resources in northern Canada and in the use of our rivers, waters, minerals, natural gas and petroleum. We must consider the extent to which we can make use of a combination of our resources to produce power. We must also consider the best way to use resources which we have in large quantities. I am talking about resources which may be refined and processed in this country. For far too long there has been no meeting of minds on this issue. I hope that the hon. member for Duvernay who has made public comments on these matters will enlarge on his views in this debate.

I am convinced that in certain situations we ought to rationalize certain industries. It will be possible for the people of this country to process and refine, in secondary and tertiary industries, resources obtained and developed in the north. All this will require careful planning. We will need to examine our resources and catalogue them. We will need to decide where the markets are for these and, having decided whether the markets are to be in Canada or outside or both inside and outside of Canada, we must decide where we can best process these resources. If we can best process some of these resources in Canada, we must consider our ability to deliver some of these resources to countries outside Canada. This, in turn, will lead to the consideration of transportation questions. Too often we have blindly worked out schemes of transportation to apply in northern Canada without calculating carefully what we ought to transport and where we ought to transport it. Careful planning of that sort will be absolutely essential.

There must be, therefore, a rational approach to the exploring and to the cataloguing of our resources, and a rational approach to our consideration of markets, to our consideration of the placing, processing and refining of these resources, and to our consideration of transportation questions. We have heard much about transportation from this government; yet all too often, when rhetoric is mated with a Liberal government, we find that it produces only masterly inactivity. Some of my colleagues will deal with the question of the TAPS line, the question of using the Mackenzie valley for pipelines, the dangers inherent in that course and what precautions must be taken before that route may be used if there is an economic need to use it. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has made a few comments on this matter. Yet his comments have been of the kind that make his silences positively delightful, Mr. Speaker.

However, I want to deal mainly with the question of the native peoples of the country, and the extent to which they are enabled to develop their individuality, something which has been lost in much of our society. With regard to the native peoples, Mr. Speaker, the attitude of this government is abysmal. In particular, I refer to the refusal of this government to accept the fact that the people of the Northwest Territories and other parts of Canada have aboriginal rights. I do not have the time to deal with this as extensively as I would like, but I want to refer the House to the royal proclamation of 1763. I am going to analyse and summarize that document very briefly in so far as it deals with aboriginal rights.

This royal proclamation made it abundantly clear that the Indian people of Canada, including western and northwestern Canada, have specific aboriginal rights with regard to their properties, including the land, forests and minerals under the land. That was made quite plain. As a matter of fact, in one or two judgments the late Mr. Justice Sissons of the territorial court of the Northwest Territories referred to this proclamation and the rights of the aboriginal people. He made it abundantly clear in his judgments that these rights have never been surrendered.

We have a situation today where the government is talking about mineral rights in the north, the possibility of pipelines down the Mackenzie valley and development of the north. I suggest to hon. members that a condition precedent to acts of this nature must be the negotiation and settlement of the aboriginal rights of the native people of the north. I wish to add on this particular score that the history of the dealings of the English speaking people throughout the world with native people, while it is in part a record which is not universally good, nevertheless has always been one of practicing understanding of the native people. This practice has acquired the status of a tradition, almost a law, by which the natives have rights. The lands belong to them until they are taken away by act of Parliament or negotiation. This course was followed in so far as the lands between the west shore of Lake Superior and the Rocky mountains were concerned. A number of treaties were entered into. Those treaties were specifically enacted for the purpose of acquiring the rights and title to those lands from the Indian people. Concessions were made, although they were most inadequate. These treaties were never honoured. The people of this country have this on their conscience and they should be concerned about it. At least, in those cases, the government went through the form of executing a treaty.

For a large part of the Northwest Territories, there are absolutely no treaties. The minister shakes his head. I admit that one of the treaties did cover the southern part of the Mackenzie district, but that treaty was negotiated outside of the territories. At that time there was not the distinction that exists today between the territories and the provinces. Because of that, the treaty included some of the areas of northern Canada.

If pipelines are built in the Mackenzie valley, they will be built under circumstances which at the present time do not take into account the legal and moral rights of the native people of northern Canada. That is the smallest part of the problem. What about the rights of these people to the minerals, lands and forests? I suggest it will lay heavy upon the consciences of the Canadian people, including the members of this House, if this pipeline is constructed before negotiations being entered into take place with the natives. This problem will be settled only when there have been conferences and discussions, not the kind of consultation in which we say to the Indian people that this is what we are going to give them. There should be prior, reasonable consultations and ultimate agreement. If we do not do this, we will have something on our consciences for a great many years.

Mr. Chrétien: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Baldwin: I would not mind, Mr. Speaker, but my time is exceedingly limited. Maybe the House will grant permission later.

Mr. Chrétien: We will give you the time.

Mr. Baldwin: I am willing, Mr. Speaker, if the House agrees to grant me extra time.

Mr. Chrétien: In order to save time, Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the hon. member whether he is aware that the Indians of Canada have formed a committee on Indian rights. This committee is financed by the government. It is now looking into this question.

Mr. Baldwin: I am aware that the government, pressed by the opposition, has granted an opportunity for the Indian people to press for their rights. However, they have asked for their rights and they are not getting them. This is what we are complaining about.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: I only have a few minutes left, Mr. Speaker. I want to go into the matter of the extent to which the north may redevelop that which we have almost lost, the spark of individuality. I wish to quote a statement made by John Buchan at the time of the commencement of World War II. At that time he visited the Peace River in his capacity as Governor General. I had an opportunity to show him some of the places of historical interest, including the place where Alexander MacKenzie spent the winter of 1791. He intended to write a historical novel dealing with the north, but death intervened. I wish to quote a statement he made shortly before his death. He talked about the Peace River pioneer. This statement can now be widened to cover the pioneers all over the north. I quote:

> He is wholly secure, he possesses his soul, he is the true philosopher. He is one of the few aristocrats left in the world. He has a right sense of the values of life because his cosmos embraces both nature and man. I think he is the most steadfast human being now alive.

I am glad to represent people like that, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Not to mention the fact that you think you are like that.

Mr. Baldwin: No, no, Mr. Speaker. We repress the individual at our peril, and we tamper with him to our great danger. We erect monolithic and gigantic imitations of the prehistory hunting band, the earliest example of the human herd, which are dedicated to the initiation and enlargement of the welfare state. In the end, we will find, as we are beginning to find now, that no such state can continue to exist without some form of police power to enforce conformity.

I do not know whether the exception will always prove the rule, but certainly it has been our experience as a nation that men at war, fighting for survival, will tighten their social contract, renounce individual demands, and exist as a single group. The quality of the group, not the distinction of the individual, then becomes a criterion for survival. Thinking of the individual as the product of the north and the north as a place which can generate individualism as we used to know it, some people conceive of the individual as the ancient reality and society as the human invention. I cannot accept this. It seems that the social order, with its rules and regulations, alphas and omegas, territories and hierarchies, has been the evolutionary way. Surely, it was the individual who created our civilization. It was certainly the individual who created the north. He went in there on his own and created what we have at the present time. This can be seen if we look back over closely recorded history and check out the contributions which have been made. For this reason in many parts of this country, certainly the north, we must make elbow room for individuality.

I realize that it is fashionable today to accept violence, aggression, crime and related phenomena as the product of the individual. There is a limited element of truth in this. However, when we examine our history, are we not entitled to say that the aggressive self-assertive tendencies in the emotional life of the individual are less dangerous to the species than the integrative tendencies of group society? Certainly, the number of victims of individual crimes committed in any given period of history cannot be compared to the masses who have been sacrificed in the name of a religion, a dynasty or a political system. And so, while we desire to redirect our trinking to provide far a better use of our resources, to deal with the question of taxation so that taxation may be used as an instrument of incentive, not as a weapon to blunt the initiative of individuals in the north, while we wish to establish a blueprint for development leading to a greater use of manpower in the processing and refining of our resources, and while provision must be made for consequential transportation facilities, to my mind the human resources which can be accommodated and shaped on the anvil of the north, rank highest, for it is toward a reacknowledgment of the virtues of individualism that the north must be adopted.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I am not an expert on the north, but two or three experts in my party have insisted that I say a few words at the outset of this debate, so I have agreed to do so.

Mr. Stanfield: You will soon become an expert like me.

Mr. Lewis: I can say to the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), I am learning I have to know a little something about every aspect of Canada, and I shall be participating in debates on that basis.

An hon. Member: A good idea.

Mr. Lewis: I want to take an entirely different road from that followed by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) because I do not believe the situation we find in the north today is the result of action by this government alone. It is just as much the result of a vision which the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) had some years ago, and what he tried to do. Indeed, it is the result of decades of a certain type of approach to the north.

What disturbs members of my party is not so much some of the details involved in this approach as the fact that the traditional attitude to the resources of the north has been the same as has been shown toward the resources houth of the north, if I may put that way, namely, a greedy and reckless desire for exploitation, a greedy and reckless depletion of non-renewable resources for very little purpose other than to ship them out of this country, mainly to the United States. In all of this development in the north, there has been no evidence of any intention to build communities. There has been no adequate concern shown for the native population over the years, and I am not singling out the present minister or the present government. There has been no adequate concern shown for the environment, no adequate concern for the future of Canada, that is whether or not some day we may need the resources we are now so anxious to yank out of the ground. There has been no adequate concern shown for the needs of the world, really. We simply cannot wait to exploit these non-renewable resources and sell them to the one country in the world which uses up by far the largest proportion of the planet's natural resources, necessarily to the disadvantage of newly emerging countries who will need them badly in a little while. And we are doing this without any thought, it would appear, for its effect on the increasingly serious problem of foreign ownership in this country.

The wealth with which we have been endowed, not only in the Yukon and Northwest Territories but in regions to the south, is now to be recklessly exploited by large corporations with financial assistance from the government, to no social purpose which is evident to anyone who has studied this subject—and I have studied it a little. Why are the government and the Official Opposition so anxious that all this exploration for oil, minerals and gas should take place?

Mr. Nielsen: Do you want to keep the north in a deep freeze?

Mr. Lewis: Not at all. If the hon. member would wait awhile, perhaps I can enlighten him. I shall certainly try. What are we seeking to accomplish? Does the minister know what he is trying to accomplish? Does anyone in the government, or even the department, know what is the long range plan? Is it intended that the population in the north should be increased, and if so are plans being made for that situation? Is it intended that the native people are to be employed? If so, are they to be suitably trained? Is it intended that the resources which are exploited should be used for any other purpose than shipment south of the Canadian border? In the course of a fair amount of reading in the last 24 hours I have been unable to discover any long range plan. It appears we are simply anxious to invite every corporation in a position to do so to accept the benefits and incentives provided by the government, to enter the north, endanger the environment and do all the other things I have mentioned, without purpose in terms of the future of this country or, indeed, the future welfare of the world.

Take the question of concern for the natives. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) rightly insisted that one of the first things to be done is to settle the claims of the native people in the northern regions. It seems clear that they have rights to the land and its resources. Some machinery must be set up to deal with these claims, and not merely a committee to discuss them, but a body authorized to take steps to settle them. As the minister well knows, both the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States have bills before them at the present time in connection with this subject. I believe they are now in the hands of the joint committee whose function it is to reconcile legislation introduced in each of the two houses. These bills seem to suggest payments to the natives of Alaska amounting to well over $1 billion besides large tracts of land which would be granted to them for the future. But I have heard no suggestion that consideration is to be given to aboriginal rights of native people in the Canadian north.

In turn, now, to consider our record as employers in the north. I cannot see how the minister or anyone else in Canada can help feeling ashamed of this. In all the mining operations in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, only about 4½ per cent of the employees are drawn from the native people.

Mr. Nielsen: Less than that.

Mr. Lewis: I think it is a little less than that in the Yukon and a little more in the Northwest Territories. And over the two territories, according to one expert from the minister's department, the average is about 4.5 per cent. The proportion of native people to the total polulation in those two territories is close to 50 per cent—some 23 per cent in the Yukon and about 60 per cent in the Northwest Territories. The population in the latter area is, of course, considerably larger than in the Yukon. So although the native people account for almost 50 per cent of the population in the north, only 4.5 per cent of them are employed in these mining companies.

When the private corporations were asked in a survey made by two gentlemen, one of whom was from the minister's department, as to why the mining corporations employ so few native people, one of the answers was:

The point is made that the industry is not able to shoulder the cost of training or developing the Indigene—

That is a word I have not seen before and which makes me shudder, but I suppose it means someone who is a member of the indigenous population.

—that this role belongs to the public sector and that only when the public sector raises the indigenous labour force, both in training skills and job attitudes, to the required level are they more likely to fit into the industrial environment.

Mr. Chrétien: You should read some of my speeches on this.

Mr. Lewis: I have read the minister's speeches, and without intending to be anything but complimentary may I say he is as brave in his speeches as anyone I have known, as forward looking in his words as many people I have known, and as backward and inadequate in his actions as many ministers who have occupied his portfolio before him. The fact that he makes speeches about this does not change the situation; the situation remains the same.

Mr. Chrétien: Not true.

Mr. Lewis: The minister says that is not true, but let him wait a moment for I shall have more to say about his own department. We give incentive grants and very large tax exemptions to these large corporations which make a very considerable profit, yet they are not prepared to spend any money on upgrading the education and skills of the native people. We, the people of Canada, have to do this for them out of the public purse; otherwise these companies will not employ any of the native people.

Mr. Chrétien: Is the hon. member aware that in the last agreement we signed with the industry to develop resources in the north we put in clauses to force them to hire native people?

Mr. Lewis: I have seen those clauses—

Mr. Chrétien: Then mention it.

Mr. Lewis: —and I am glad to mention it; and I shall be very glad, after these agreements have been in force for some time, to examine the situation three, four, five years from now. I take such clauses at their face value. I have had a little experience in this world, and the fact that there is a clause in an agreement does not satisfy me or dampen my fears or doubts. These corporations have had a way all through their existence in Canada of finding loopholes in any clause in almost any agreement. Until I see the result and effect of the clauses in the agreement, the minister is not going to raise my hopes by saying that the department has found some words to put into the agreement. I bet you dollars to doughnuts that sooner or later the department will find some way of saying to the corporation that if they cannot find skilled labour in the north they should find it somewhere else.

Mr. Chrétien: The problem is that it is the unions who support you who object to that.

Mr. Lewis: If the minister wants to engage in that kind of argument I shall be pleased to join him, but I know of no union supporting either me or my party that is standing in the minister's way. If the minister refers to the fact that a good many unions in the north have rigid rules that make this difficult—and I condemn and criticize that as readily as he does, though if I were in his place I would be a little ashamed to use that as an excuse for inactivity by his department over many years—then the unions are not a law unto themselves and their rigid rules can be dealt with in the north as they have been dealt with elsewhere.

Mr. Nielsen: The problem lies with the minister's bureaucrats.

Mr. Lewis: If the minister and his bureaucrats, referred to by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), have any ideas on how to overcome this particular obstacle that is created by the rigid rules mainly of the construction unions—and, by the way, let me inform the minister, if he does not already know, that these are not unions which by and large support either me or my party—then he will have support from my colleagues and myself in making these rules reasonable ones. So let him not take refuge in that kind of excuse which does not meet the general situation.

The fact is that nothing important has happened to improve the employment opportunities of our native peoples. The minister has made the statement that by 1977 he would like to see people from the north constitute 75 per cent of the total work force employed there by his department. In a story that appeared in the Globe and Mail on January 26 of this year the following appears:

Northern Development Minister Jean Chrétien's prediction that 75 per cent of government employees in the Northwest Territories would be native northerners by 1977 won't be realized, officials say.

"The matter is being reviewed by an advisory commission on northern development," a Chrétien aide said yesterday.

A little further on in the story reference is made to the proportion of native people employed in his department in 1961, which I have calculated to be about 20 per cent. Then, the article continues:

A federal official said the percentage of native northerners now employed has changed little.

Mr. Nielsen: That is in the Northwest Territories.

Mr. Lewis: The percentage in the Northwest Territories has changed little. If that is not true the minister will have an opportunity of contradicting it, but this is the story that appeared in the January 26 edition of the Globe and Mail put out by the Canadian Press, and according to information received from other sources this is true. I notice that the minister is now quiet because he finds he cannot blame the unions or anyone else. The fact of the matter is that in ten years there has not been any improvement in the proportion of natives in the employ of his department in the Northwest Territories.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Lewis: Or there has been no improvement of any consequence.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I think I should like the hon. member to be a bit more factual. In the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development this morning I outlined the position to the members of that committee and they said there was a hell of a big improvement. We went from 700 in my department—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Chrétien: —to almost 2,000 in two years.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister does not have the floor. This is not a question of privilege but a point for debate. I assume that the minister will have an opportunity to take part in this debate, at which time he will be able to give his interpretation of the facts.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am sure you were tempted to say what a hell of a point of privilege, in answer to the language used by the minister. The improvement is still picayune despite what the minister says; and the fact that this has occurred in the minister's own department shows some of the difficulties that are in the way.

I think it would be much better for the conscience of this government and of this parliament if the minister were to tell us about the difficulties that are in the way, and if the minister would indicate the amount of money his department is willing to put into the necessary facilities to upgrade the educational skills of the native people in order to enable more of them to be employed both by private corporations and government departments. We must not forget that government departments are very large employers of labour.

I used the term the other day in another context "mincing steps of progress" in regard to our native people. By now we ought to have taken giant steps of progress. Every time we pick up a report by a member of the minister's department, a journalist, student, professor or what have you, who has made a survey of the situation we see the same situation, namely that the use of native people in the exploitation of our resources in the north has been very small indeed. Have we made a study of the need for all these minerals, oil and gas that we are now looking for in the north? Are these reserves required in Canada or elsewhere outside of the United States of America? Has anyone made a study to make certain what would happen 5, 10, or 20 years from now if we had these reserves for sale at that time when the needs of the United States will be a great deal more stringent and the needs of the other parts of the world will be serious? Have we made any study at all? I suggest to you that we have not. We have a large tract of land with which this country is blessed. Everyone expects there are large reserves of minerals, oil, gas and other riches, so, we simply invite people to break open the land and pull out the resources without any plan or study whatsoever.

The hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans) was saying things which I think I could claim, without any arrogance, our party has been claiming for many years now.

An hon. Member: You can have him.

Mr. Lewis: Someone said "You can have him". I always knew how easily the Liberal party sloughed off those who disagree with it, and I sometimes admit that with a little envy.

An hon. Member: You will never get power that way.

Mr. Lewis: I want to say to the hon. member for Duvernay that he is right when he points out to us that large amounts of capital are now being sunk into mineral, oil and gas exploration and exploitation and are being wasted. The only real justification for going at these resources now in any part of Canada, particularly the part over which this government has jurisdiction, is to build around these resources complete industrial complexes. We should not only take the resources out of the land, we should be building processing, smelting and refining plants, and building within reasonable economic distance necessary secondary and tertiary manufacturing plants, so that around these resources in Canada's land we are building all the various industrial complexes for which the resources should be used.

In that way only can we build communities up north that are viable and lasting. In that way only can we have a permanent type of security for the native people and the other people who make their homes in the north, and in that way only can we have what the hon. member for Peace River was talking about, the development of more of the individualism he suggests the north produces. I am sure he is right. In this way only can we attract more people up there. This is the only way we can build cities in the north of greater size, of viability and lasting usefulness to the people concerned rather than little cities populated with hippies as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) suggested some time ago. That was a pretty meaningless and typical Prime Ministerial statement, or the kind of statement made by this Prime Minister.

Merely to pull the riches out of the ground and ship them away to the United States, as we do now, will mean that not only are we shipping our resources out, we are shipping thousands of jobs out of this country. We are making it impossible for this country to develop the larger industrial requirements which can meet the needs of the world as well as of Canada. We are making it impossible to plan for the real development of the north which needs population as well as drills, machines and equipment. If you are not concerned about building the north with people, then of course these corporations will do it for you. They do not need very many people to pull the riches out of the ground and ship them out. That does not require very many people. That does require, as pointed out by the hon. member for Duvernay, very large capital but not many workers.

If we are thinking of developing and building the north in community terms, not only for the native people and other people who are there, but for the people who can be attracted from the crowded cities in the south because of a particular kind of life that many people in the south might prefer, then we are talking of the kind of planning I have been suggesting. That kind of planning will not take place if we merely hold out carrots to the large private corporations, well over half of which are foreign-owned. More than 60 per cent or 70 per cent of the area involved is being exploited by foreign-owned corporations, mainly from the United States, although not exclusively so.

This will all require public investment, public control and public planning. It will require the kind of Canada development corporation the NDP has proposed, with a large funding that the minister and his associates could then use if they had the imagination and the will to do so. They could then develop the riches in the north for the benefit of Canada, the Canadian people and for the development of much larger populations in decent, modern communities in the north. It is only in this way we will get to the point of moving self-government for the Yukon and the Northwest Territories out of the talking stage and into reality.

Mr. Nielsen: How could it when the public would not be controlling it?

Mr. Lewis: Let the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) not become so worried, because I am not talking about all this being controlled from Ottawa. If the hon. member for Yukon would stop being a lawyer for large private corporations, he would if I had the chance, with his great skills as an advocate and a lawyer, he could become a lawyer for some public corporations doing some good for the north which he represents rather than those private corporations he now represents.

Mr. Nielsen: That's not nice.

Mr. Lewis: I do not always try to be nice, I try to be exact and that sometimes is not the same thing. At that point we could talk about self-government for the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. This would be more realistic because the communities would be larger and self-sufficient, and we would then have a leading area in Canada in terms of human welfare in this country.

Mr. Nielsen: I rise on a question of privilege. Let me assure the hon. member that I would give up my corporation practice and trade places with that hon. member who is a wealthy labour lawyer.

An hon. Member: Touché.

Mr. Lewis: I would not say touché at all. I was going to say something rather silly but perhaps I should not. If I exchanged positions with the hon. member I feel certain I would be better off, but I do not know anything about him and he knows nothing about me. I have not been practising labour law since I was re-elected in 1965, except in little driblets, so my friend does not have to worry about that.

In short, let me repeat what I commenced to say and then I will sit down. Our concern is not merely with the details, which will be pointed out during the debate and have been pointed out already, but with the general approach to the subject. We are concerned about the reckless and greedy exploitation of resources without any plan for the north, the native people there or for Canada as a whole. Let me express my convictions that five years from now, when a debate on this subject takes place, we will say the same things about each other because, relatively speaking, the position will still be that the large private corporations will be making a killing out of the north and that the native people and others in the north, as in many other parts of Canada, will be getting very little in return for the exploitation of Canada's rich resources. I therefore plead with the minister that he pay some attention to the over-all long-term program, and tell the House and the people of Canada whether he is merely interested in depleting the resources or that he and his government are interested in building a permanent series of communities where Canadians can live in comfort, dignity and in pride.

Therefore, in order to make clear what we have in mind and in view of the fact that I find it a little difficult to understand precisely what kind of policy the mover of the motion had in mind, I move:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the words "that appropriate policies be adopted" and by substituting therefor the following words:

"which would take into account environmental dangers, the problem of foreign ownership, the future needs of Canada, and the basic and prior rights of the native inhabitants of the Territories, including their claim for a settlement that would recognize their rights in the land of its resources".

I move this amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), because the motion as proposed merely talks about bringing about such development in that region, without enumerating the elements which are of importance. We thought it would be useful to set out the elements the policy ought to have.

Mr. Nielsen: You left out the other inhabitants of the north.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, our country's wealth, importance and size offer us in fact endless possibilities. We are all aware of the huge potential of these vast territories in Northern Canada. Unfortunately, it is quite true that the present government has spread confusion and delayed progress as is mentioned in the motion now before us.

Hesitations and delays have jeopardized the successful start of development in this vast region. It even seemed, at one time, that our powerful neighbours to the South were enjoying so much powers that the very unity of our territory could be involved.

So I agree with the non confidence motion which in part reads as follows:

—condemns the government for its failure to promote a truly Canadian strategy for the North based on human capital and natural resources,—

As long as we fail to apply the basic and elementary principles of a sound economy, we will always meet with difficulties of all kinds which too often become insuperable obstacles.

The appropriate programs which would cause such a development to take place in that area, as recommended in the motion, cannot be but of an economic character.

Needless to say, I take into consideration the preservation of the rights and privileges of the native Indians and Eskimos, this being but one aspect of the overall respect for the human individual.

But, Mr. Speaker, with your permission, I shall dwell a little longer on the economic aspect of the problem raised by northern development. An adequate financial policy would first determine the true viable potential, taking into account the existing natural resources and the human resources required for this development. The actual potential or actual credit of the area could be determined and converted into banking credit by way of our own Bank of Canada.

If we could start off from this elementary principle of issuing the credit we need to develop whatever is physically apt to be developed, most of the difficulties would dissolve. We have been saying for years and we are still saying more forcibly and vehemently than ever that for us the time has come to take a hard look at the possibility of placing credit in the service of Canada's development and particularly in the service of the development of these immense undeveloped regions which constitute the Canadian north. These areas could contribute greatly to the welfare and progress of all Canadians.

It would therefore be important to try precisely to use interest-free loans from the Bank of Canada for the development of these tremendous natural resources of the great northern territory, which are either underground or lying on the surface.

Mr. Speaker, one cannot object, in my opinion, that this is the same old story, and that we think we can solve all problems by saying: Let us use the Bank of Canada!

Mr. Speaker, when something is true, even if its authenticity and profitability have never been fully tested, it remains true, and we can always think better of it, at a given time, and apply it as we would wish, as an increasing proportion of the Canadian people would wish.

So, Mr. Speaker, if we eliminate this problem of capital investment, as far as northern development is concerned, by using the credit possibilities of the Bank of Canada, we could give more time to the consideration of programs, engineering works and their consequences on the native population of these areas. We could, in other words, carry out much more profitable, efficient and humane work, if we were not so concerned with that big problem of capital investment.

We are all aware to some extent, as I said a while ago, of the development possibilities in the Far North, especially of the inexhaustible oil resources. However, we would have again to consider the development of those oil resources in a way that would benefit the citizens of this country. One overriding concern should dictate every agreement and progress in this regard, namely that it must be really useful not only to the people of these regions, but to all Canadians, and this constant care which should be ours, would, in my opinion, allow for the harmonious development of these regions, for the greatest pride and the greatest good of all people in this country.

The development of all the other mineral resources, the importance of which is not exactly known to us, might result in a true expansion which could only please all Canadians.

The motion now before us, says that the government has failed in its task in this regard, and I think we have to admit that it is quite true. While proper ways to bring about the striking development of these resources are not yet quite settled, it is to be concluded that this is due either to a lack of foresight or to a lack of planning or simply, to a lack of leadership from this government.

Mr. Speaker, we hope very strongly that it will be possible at last to have the whole population enjoy the advantages provided by such a rich, such a vast country as ours; we hope all this wealth from the North will benefit Canada as a whole, while enabling Canadians to have a better life.

[English]

Mr. R. J. Orange (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Baldwin: You are not under oath.

Mr. Orange: Pardon? Naturally, I am delighted to have an opportunity to participate in this debate, and to talk about the part of the country that possibly I know best, the Canadian north. I commend the opposition for brining forward this non-confidence motion because I have no doubt that when the debate is concluded the people of Canada and this House will recognize the work done and the progress made in the Canadian north as a result of the policies of the government.

Had I the right, which I do not, I would like to amend this motion to congratulate the government on its programs and progress, and to urge it to accelerate what it has been doing in the Canadian north. Any of us who have read the motion can only wonder what the opposition was really proposing to say or do. The first sentence reads:

That this House believes that an enlightened program of human and economic progress for Northern Canada offers great opportunities for the people of this country—

That is obvious, Mr. Speaker. It is like motherhood. Then, the sentence continues:

—and that the economic and social policies of the present government have brought about confusion and delayed progress—

Surprisingly, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) was the kick-off speaker for the opposition. I thought it would have been the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) who, in my view, has probably forgotten more about the Canadian north than the rest of his party will ever know.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you.

Mr. Orange: What did the hon. member for Peace River say was wrong? He did not say a word about that. He dwelt on past glories of days gone by "when we were in power and we had a vision of the north."

Then, the motion reads:

—and that it is essential to make appropriate changes in our approach in respect of Northern Canada;

I listened attentively to the lead-off speaker for the opposition, the hon. member for Peace River. I am sorry to say that I must have fallen asleep when he suggested changes because somehow or other I missed any changes or new policies suggested by him on behalf of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Nielsen: You wouldn't recognize a change if it came back from the laundry, Bud.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Orange: Then, the motion continues:

And this House condemns the government for its failure to promote a truly Canadian strategy for the North based on human, capital and natural resources—

And this is the key —and urges that appropriate policies be adopted at once that will bring about such development in that region.

The hon. member, Mr. Speaker, did not suggest one change in policy.

Mr. Baldwin: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker; I hate to interfere with this well documented and reasonably articulated speech but I must point out that fully 30 per cent, 35 per cent of my speech was dedicated to that part of the proposition. I will send the hon. member a copy tomorrow and underline those parts.

Mr. Orange: I won't argue with the hon. member for Peace River because I did hear him say something about the Bennett dam. I will give him credit for talking about his province and about native people, but he seemed to indicate that the native peoples of the Northwest Territories are not all covered by treaties, which they are.

Mr. Nielsen: No, they are not.

Mr. Orange: Yes, they are.

Mr. Nielsen: Eskimos are Indian people. The Supreme Court said so.

Mr. Orange: Let us review the record of the government's accomplishment in so far as the development of the Canadian north is concerned. Back in the period 1958 to 1962, a proposal was advanced by a former deputy minister of northern development and Indian affairs to the effect that the Northwest Territories should be divided into two separate territories, one to be administered from Yellowknife and one from Ottawa. To give credit where credit is due—

Mr. Nielsen: Gordon Robertson.

Mr. Orange: You know who it was, as well as I do. This proposal met with a bad reaction from the people in the north so it was abandoned, for which members of the opposition deserve a great deal of credit.

Following that the Carrothers Commission was appointed, one of its terms of reference being to recommend to the government a political organization system for the people of the Territories. That Commission made its recommendations, and this government has taken action on them. On previous occasions in the House I have mentioned the action which has been taken by the government in respect of the recommendations of the Carrothers Commission. However, it may be useful to review a few of those recommendations once again.

The Carrothers Commission recommended that in no way should the Northwest Territories be divided. The government accepted that recommendation. The Commission recommended the establishment of a capital in the Northwest Territories, with the transfer of public servants from Ottawa to the Territories to administer provincial type activities.

Mr. Nielsen: Colonial.

Mr. Orange: You will have your turn.

Mr. Nielsen: I am sorry I said that word.

Mr. Orange: Subsequent to that, the Territorial government has been established, which is completely responsible for provincial type functions throughout the area. As an illustration, I mention that within the last week or so there was a disturbance at one of the correctional institutions in the Territories. Only two, three or four years ago that would have become an issue on the floor of this House, with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) being asked what he intended to do to take corrective action. But now, because that institution comes under the responsibility of the Commissioner of the Northwest Territories and the Council, this is all a local matter. This indicates one of the advances that have been made.

Mr. Nielsen: The minister is still responsible.

Mr. Chrétien: We can always delegate when we have good people.

Mr. Orange: In 1963, there were four elected representatives on the Territories Council and five appointed representatives. Over a period of seven years the number of elected members has increased by 150 per cent, from four to ten. All of the people in the Territories now have a territorial franchise, something they did not have six, seven or eight years ago.

As a result of the activities of the Territorial government, we have seen the development of local government in the Territories. People in the towns, villages and hamlets now have responsibility for managing their own affairs.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Nielsen: You don't believe that.

Mr. Orange: Go and take a look for yourself.

Mr. Nielsen: You can't believe that.

Mr. Orange: I know you can't. You are backward in the Yukon; you have not got that far yet. Mr. Speaker, local government has brought to the citizens the knowledge that they can participate in the decisions of the government.

Mr. Nielsen: Subject to the minister's will.

Mr. Orange: It is unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that all the people on the other side who are so knowledgeable have not had an opportunity to see some of these councils in action, taking total responsibility for their own activities, with their own budgets. I think they would be very impressed with the advance of democracy throughout the territories.

Regarding housing, upwards of 2,000 homes have been built for the Eskimo people since 1956, thus taking them out of tarpaper shacks.

Mr. Comeau: It is not enough.

Mr. Boulanger: It is a darned good start from what you did from 1958 to 1962.

Mr. Orange: My friend across the way, who has a penchant for interrupting in areas he knows nothing about, should realize that this program has brought adequate accommodation to every Eskimo family in the territories. I am sorry I have not got the figures on Indian and Métis people, but I suspect they are comparable. I defy anyone to say that our education system in the territories is not as good as any in southern Canada. We have a program of integrated schools going back to the early fifties.

Now, I should like to give a few facts in the area of health. Since 1966, 22 nursing stations have been built to serve Indians in the territories, three old nursing stations have been replaced and six have been expanded. Four health stations have been formed to accommodate small communities and a new hospital has been built this year at Fort Simpson. By the end of this year every community with a population of over 100 persons will have a nursing station staffed by professional nurses.

Mr. Chrétien: It is better than southern Canada.

Mr. Nielsen: It is wonderful what government can do.

Mr. Orange: In the area of justice, Mr. Speaker, a few years ago we had a judge, a police magistrate, and an inadequate system for justices of the peace. All were directed and administered from Ottawa. In the press releases issued by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) since receiving the report on the administration of justice in the Hay River area, which dealt primarily with the administration of justice throughout the territories, it is indicated that virtually all the recommendations of Mr. Justice Morrow have been implemented. There is now a local department of justice and functions formerly carried out by Ottawa are now the responsibility of the commissioner and council of the Northwest Territories. Recently, the number of police magistrates has been increased by 100 per cent.

Mr. Nielsen: You have a good sense of humour, Bud.

Mr. Orange: This means that the federal government has turned over the reins for the administration of justice to the territorial government.

I listened to the remarks of the new Leader of the Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis). I admire him for the fact that he admitted he was not an expert on the north. Very few people who put a foot inside the sixtieth parallel, or who have read a book about the north, have not formed all sorts of opinions on what should or should not be done. However, Mr. Speaker, I did find his remarks somewhat ambivalent. I do not know whether he wanted to keep the north in cold storage and put everybody back in the igloo, whether he wanted to build satellite cities and let the resources come to the cities or whether he was trying to demonstrate what appears to be anti-Americanism. I was concerned about his confusion and I hope he can unravel it because I think some of the ideas of his party could have an influence on the development of the Canadian north. The idea of building the cities now but not developing the resources is not sound. You have to go where the resources are before you can put up the buildings; it is that simple.

Having been kind to the government up to this point, I think I must now mention a few things to encourage the government to continue in its present direction. We should start with Treaties 8 and 11 and aim at a dialogue between the Indian peoples of the Northwest Territories and the government regarding the unfulfilled provisions. Basically, these unfulfilled provisions relate to land rights. Within the treaties there is a provision that a certain tract of land would be granted to every Indian family, and the size of the tract would depend on the size of the family. Time and time again the Indians have said that they do not want to be put on reserves. They have said that so long as the sun rises in the east and the Mackenzie River flows to the north they want the right to hunt and trap throughout their land. The government and the Indian people of the territories must discuss this problem. The government must also soon talk to the Eskimo people about aboriginal rights and about the fact that the land traditionally used by the Eskimo people for hunting is now being used for other purposes.

I acknowledge that in some ways the government is responsive to the concerns of the Eskimo people. We have the example of Sachs Harbour where last year the trappers were concerned about the proposed seismic surveys. The government and the oil companies, under the direction of the minister, sat down with the people concerned and worked out a solution. Another example in the last few days has been the problem which the people of Coral Harbour brought to the notice of the department. Officials were despatched to the north to discuss it with them and today I received a telegram to the effect that an agreement had been reached.

Another area where I think the government must press forward is that of economic development in terms of the operator of a small business, such as a gas station or theatre. I do not understand why we have all sorts of designated areas in Canada where grants are available and yet the program does not apply north of the sixtieth parallel. I do not understand either why it is so difficult for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to provide a loan to the individual who wants to build his own home outside a serviced community. Nor can I understand why the Industrial Development Bank insists on a high percentage of capital in certain areas.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Nielsen: Parliament controls CMHC.

Mr. Orange: Mr. Speaker, may I refer to what I was saying about the Industrial Development Bank; I have spoken about those things which will encourage and promote the development of the Canadian north.

Mr. Boulanger: This is the best speech that I have heard so far.

Mr. Orange: We must give to the young people of Canada and of the north an opportunity for education. We must provide jobs for them. We cannot just leave the north in cold storage, to be developed at some future date. We must consider the hopes and aspirations of our young people.

Mr. Nielsen: All ten thousand of them.

Mr. Orange: They want to participate in the mainstream of Canadian life. Around Ottawa at any one time there are between 40 and 100 Indian and Eskimo youngsters who are taking educational and upgrading training. I defy anyone to look at those kids and tell the difference between them and other kids on the streets of Ottawa. We must develop within the framework of the policies of government those opportunities that will enable those young people to take their rightful place in the economy of the north. We must look at many things. We have talked about pipelines until they are coming out of our ears. I hope a pipeline comes down the Mackenzie valley. I want to see that pipeline, as do most people of the north. We want to see it because it will mean development for the north and permanent jobs for those involved with the operation of the pipeline. We want to see it properly installed in the ground and we want the environment and ecology of the north to be protected. We do not want the way of life of the people who might be affected to be disturbed unnecessarily.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member. I do so to advise him that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for South Shore.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I had recognized the hon. member for South Shore. If there is unanimous consent, the hon. member for Northwest Territories will be allowed to continue.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, this is a limited debate and, although we appreciate the special interest in the subject of some hon. members, I really think that the remarks of the hon. member ought to be limited to the two or three more sentences necessary to finish his speech in an orderly way.

Mr. Orange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank hon. members for their co-operation. In conclusion may I say that, at this juncture in Canadian history, we ought to seize our opportunity of looking beyond our parochial boundaries. Development of the north will unify us. We ought to develop northern Canada in a truly national spirit. What we do in the north can become an example of the unity of Canada. What we do there will transcend the sort of regionalism too often found in other parts of the country. Northern development can bring together all the talents to be found in Canada. In developing the north we shall also develop the human resources found in this extensive land. The north can become a melting pot of languages and skills as people work directly for the benefit of the entire economy. I believe that the government has done a good job in the north. It has a tremendous responsibility to ensure the orderly and competent development of our north for the people of the north and for the people of Canada. It has that responsibility to the world, especially if we want to maintain our control of the Canadian north.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I do not profess to be an expert on the north but I welcome this opportunity to participate in the debate on northern development and the state of the economy. It is becoming increasingly evident to everyone except the government that our ship of state has been set on a collision course for the rocks of high unemployment and rising inflation. As we tack back and forth between these two hazards, Captain Trudeau and his crew of inexperienced landlubbers appear to be callously indifferent to the falling barometer of frustration among our people or the rising wind of indignation and concern over present policies among the large and small businessmen of this country.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am feeling sea sick already.

Mr. Crouse: Canadians today are calling out for leadership; they are calling for a firm hand at the wheel. Yet, instead of setting a true course, the present Liberal government has our ship of state going around in circles, like a ship without a rudder, subject to the whim of every senior civil servant or economic wind that blows. Without a chart or compass, without even a Kierans or a Hellyer to guide them, the present Liberal government is in a fog, with the Canadian nation wallowing in a sea of uncertainty over the right course to follow.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Now I am sea sick.

Mr. Crouse: It is for these reasons that we moved the motion on northern development and the state of the economy. The objective of our resource development policy especially in our northern areas, should be more jobs. If Canada processed her iron ore, then jobs would be created right here in Canada rather than in the United States. This is basically the same line of criticism respecting economic policy as voiced by the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans) following his resignation from the cabinet.

Just what did that former cabinet minister say in his letter of resignation, as submitted to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)? Among other things, he is reported to have said, "Canada is fortunate in its resource base and can insist on exports with a higher labour content. Tax concessions that force the pace of our raw material exports or favour the over-employment of capital, which we have to import, at the expense of labour, which is in surplus, would not be consistent with long run Canadian growth and employment objectives." "If Canada is to be an industrial force in the 1980's" he said, "we must be prepared now to husband our resources and to select those areas in which we can be internationally competitive and to manage and invest in the resources, physical and human, that will give us a compelling position." Those are strong words, Mr. Speaker, and it is evident that the former minister is of the opinion that Canadian economic policy is directed too heavily towards the export of resources. He is also concerned that present government tax policies favour investment in new machinery rather than the creation of jobs.

In my view there is nothing wrong with tax policies which favour investment in new machinery, since any company seeking to establish itself in the north must undertake additional expenses. At the same time, however, our tax laws should be amended to encourage new job opportunities through the processing and manufacturing of our raw materials.

It would be difficult to speak on this motion without commenting on the $6 billion hydroelectric project for James Bay recently announced by the Premier of Quebec. This will be the biggest financial undertaking in Quebec's history; yet to date no one has been told how the project will be financed or where the power will be sold. The financial implications of this project are far reaching. I say this because the proposed development will be the largest hydroelectric project ever to be undertaken in North America, and it will have to be financed almost entirely by foreign capital. All Canadians are concerned about the proposed inflow of foreign capital in such large amounts, since that could place further pressures on our dollar. That, in turn, would be harmful to Canada's export oriented manufacturing industry. While it is true that the James Bay project will provide thousands of construction jobs, there is concern about the overal impact of this project on our economy and on our national unemployment problem. Hopefully, this hydroelectric project, when developed, will encourage the processing of more raw materials in Canada, will encourage new manufacturing industries in northern Quebec and will encourage increased productivity at lower cost, for only increased productivity and the economic benefits that it brings will ease our serious unemployment problem.

How serious is this problem, Mr. Speaker? Last month there were some 625,000 Canadians unemployed, representing about 8 per cent of the Nation's labour force. In March, the nation's consumer price index reached 131.3 points, an increase of 1.9 per cent over the index at the same time last year. Spelled out in layman's language, this means that something which cost $100 ten years ago now costs $131.30. Surely, someone in this government could stop long enough between trips from Canada to some foreign country to ask these questions: what brought about this situation? Why have we so many people unemployed? Why has our cost of living reached such fantastic heights? If someone were to ask these questions I feel certain that the answers would be that the government has established wrong policies in the wrong places at the wrong times, and that the Liberal party has been following this course since 1965.

The sad truth is that in this period in which the Liberal party has been in power, Canada has had too much inflation, unemployment and slow growth. Our existing economic policies are not adequately coping with our national needs and problems. These are not my views alone, Mr. Speaker. They are also the views of Mr. John Young, the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission, who told the Star Forum, as reported in the Toronto Daily Star of March 10, that the country's present level of unemployment results from the inflation which was allowed to develop and persist between 1965 and 1968 and the inability of the experts to agree on a way to cope with it. Who are the experts today, Mr. Speaker? Mr. John Young is one of them. Although he obviously does not have any of the answers, it appears that neither he nor his staff of bureaucrats have any intention of giving up their jobs, thereby taking the load of their salaries and expenses off the back of the Canadian taxpayer.

When the Progressive Conservative party was in power, we had a policy of northern development. We called it Roads to Resources. What did the Liberals say? They called it a policy of building roads from igloo to igloo. They scoffed and they jeered. Obviously, the Liberal party has never been overconcerned with the development of our northern resources. Ottawa's bureaucrats have shown some interest in the north, but they want absolute control over this area so that they can conduct a vast experiment in state socialism. If this ever happens, all initiative, ambition and development will be destroyed. At the present time we have an example of this condition in our nation. We see the incentive of our people destroyed and all of Canada fast becoming subservient to the state.

Anyone who serves on the Standing Committee on Public Accounts has a better understanding why Canada and bureaucratic Ottawa is in such a mess. I have been here since 1957. For most of those years I have served on the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. I have learned that when a departmental head makes a real booboo, he is not dismissed or demoted. He is, of course, moved, but he will most likely be promoted to serve as the assistant deputy in an old department or possibly as the head of a new department whose activities are only adding to our inflationary problems.

Canada and the present Liberal government are prisoners of these appointed bureaucrats. By the time one of these mandarins has worked his way to the top or accepted a top position, as did Mr. Pickersgill, he has lost touch with the people and the country. Money is no longer the taxpayers' hard-earned dollars, it is something to be spent, and always a little more than was budgeted so that the budget can be increased the next year.

Mr. Baldwin: Too many of them come into the House of Commons and sit on the government side.

Mr. Crouse: Programs are set up, not in terms of what they will do for the people but on the basis of what they will do for the department. This results in continuous infighting among departments for control over certain programs. We recently had an obvious example of this when no less than seven departments were fighting over which would be responsible for administering control over pollution. The Department of Fisheries won the battle.

As a result of this victory, the Department of Fisheries is to be abolished. In the eyes of some civil servants, it is obviously not important. It is to be replaced with the department of the environment which will have approximately 13,000 employees. As no existing building in Ottawa is large enough to house this enormous staff, the mandarins have decided that a new, modern, large building will be built in Hull. While this is being done, the Department of Public Works will build a new bridge from Ottawa to Hull so that the employees can get to and from work on time.

I have no objection to the building being erected in Hull. What I am trying to point out is that Parliament and its elected representatives were never consulted about this development. In fact, when the decision was made to build the new bridge, it was evident from the loud outcries that there had been no consultation with Ottawa city council, Hull city council or the provincial highways departments of Ontario and of Quebec. This was simply a bureaucrat's dream. In their opinion, what the bureaucrats can dream the taxpayers can afford. Once they have made their plans, it is useless to try to interfere. Outside advice is not wanted or tolerated. For example, look at the number of recommendations of the Glassco Royal Commission on government efficiency which never saw the light of day. What happened to the Carter Royal Commission Report on Taxation? Was it completely useless? When it came time for a task force to study Canada's welfare programs, who headed the task force? It was none other than the deputy minister of Health and Welfare who brought most of the old programs into being. Was he going to say that there was a better way?

During a discussion over loans to the CBC in the Standing Committee on Public Accounts last week, Mr. Reisman, the deputy minister of Finance, said that Parliament had approved the loans so they were the responsibility of Parliament. Parliament only hears of these over expenditures by the CBC after they are a fait accompli.

I have said enough to indicate that, in my opinion, some of the rights of Parliament must be restored. If Parliamentarians are to be held responsible to their electorate, a way must be found to give them some voice in the decision making process for it is the decisions presently being made by people who are not responsible to the taxpayers of Canada which in no small way have contributed to the present crisis in our economy and our society.

In my opinion, our economy is in a mess as a result of the clumsy, ham-handed policies of the present government as set out by one of the cabinet's "yes men", namely the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). Here is a man whose left hand does not know what his right hand is doing. He is so lacking in mental intellect and moral fibre that he continues to support the left wing policies of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand), the three men who rule cabinet and therefore Canada, when his own conscience should tell him that certain right wing policies are required at this time.

Anyone with a basic knowledge of economics, and I hope this includes the Minister of Finance, knows that economic recovery can always be hastened by lowering taxes or by using taxation as an incentive rather than a penalty for growth. However, when this logic is put forward by those of us who would like to see job opportunities provided for our young people as well as some of the 625,000 unemployed who are not so young, the Minister of Finance says it would be a dangerous action because it would start another inflationary upsurge and bring about the possible imposition of direct wage and price controls.

There has been so much discussion about inflation during the past few years that we sometimes forget that the fundamental condition for the occurrence of inflation is reasonably full employment of our resources. Prices normally rise when the amount of money that people have to spend increases faster than the supply of goods and services on which they may spend it. This is not the situation today. There is excess production capacity and there is not sufficient consumer demand to purchase all the goods and services that can be placed on the market. It seems logical to everyone but the government that what is needed is more purchasing power in the economy. This is precisely what a tax cut will provide. In my opinion, and in the opinion of Mr. Arthur Smith, chairman of the Economic Council of Canada, and other eminent economists, there is absolutely no way in which a tax cut can be generally inflationary in a period of under-employment of resources.

If the government knows of industries or sections within the economy in which there is no excess production capacity, then I believe these industries should be encouraged by tax incentives to locate in areas of regional economic disparity, such as in our northern regions or Atlantic Canada, rather than using the present hit and miss financial handouts as practised by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Employment opportunities, which are now needed, would then be provide in the north and in the Atlantic provinces where chronic unemployment hovers in some areas at 15 per cent of the work force. Whenever tax cuts are suggested as a means of stimulating the economy to bring it back to full employment, the Minister of Finance takes the position that the government cannot afford the loss of tax revenue which is the end result of a tax cut. This, of course, is nonsense.

The very purpose of a tax cut is to stimulate the economy. It should be obvious to even the present Minister of Finance that at a full employment level the total tax revenue will be considerably greater than when the economy is operating approximately $3 billion below its potential. This is the measure of the gap, as estimated by the Economic Council of Canada, between our actual output at present levels of unemployment and our potential output if unemployment had been approximately 3.8 per cent, and a large source of this untapped potential lies in Canada's north.

In fact, the demographic boundaries of Canada lie in a thin band of population 150 miles wide, running along the American border. Above this area, stretching all the way to the Arctic circle, lies a great band of unused Canadian potential. Typical of government economic thinking, no comprehensive development strategy has been articulated for this vast area. The possible returns to this and future generations are immense yet, thanks to the government's ad hoc approach, the Canadian people are not benefitting from northern development. I believe a comprehensive development strategy for the north would assist the southern regions of Canada in their economic recovery. With personal incomes down and unemployment up, the Canadian economy desperately needs a shot in the arm. Development of the rich potential of the north would provide this stimulus. This development must be approached systematically. With a forward-looking strategy, Canada's north could be a great contributor to the over-all attainment of Canada's economic potential.

[Mr. Crouse.]

Canadians must seriously ask themselves how many billions of dollars in lost productivity, in wasted resources, both human and material, they can afford before they make a determined effort to get rid of this government. Obviously the government takes the position that during periods of unemployment taxes must be kept high since there are fewer gainfully employed to supply the total revenue needs of the government.

The government and its policies are outdated and my concern is that the errors which have been made to date may be compounded by the introduction of wage and price restraints which could well be the final straitjacket imposed on Canadians by the Liberals. If this is done, I believe the cure would be worse than the disease. Whenever we criticize the government and its suicidal economic policies we are asked: What would you do if you had the responsibility to act? Well, as I have already said, I believe a tax cut is warranted to stimulate the economy. I also believe that inflationary pressure in the south is caused in part by bottlenecks in the economy. In these areas of the south, stress could be relieved by providing business with opportunities to expand, and an excellent way of doing this would be to make provision for greater opportunities in the northern regions.

A large area of Canada has been classified as the "mid-Canada corridor". In my opinion this area, rich in resources but sparsely populated, should provide the first take-off area for development. Obviously, the Regional Development Incentives Act, as administered by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, has not done the job it should have done because its purpose has not been developed in the larger context of a northern development strategy. The mid-Canada corridor is a project which calls for a hard second look by the government. We can afford to start development now. In fact, if our potential is not to be lost forever, we must start development of the north now.

In the Ottawa area some economies could be carried out and I believe the Minister of Finance would do well to consider the appointment of an all-party committee of Members of Parliament interested in finance to act as a kind of financial ombudsman in the examination of projected programs and expenditures. There are a number of sacred cows around Ottawa and in my view it is time some of their horns were clipped. Consider the CBC, for example. I do not advocate selling the corporation but it would be interesting to see what would happen if the management of the CBC were to be informed that a deficit of $2 million a week, or $104 million a year, was the largest amount acceptable to the government instead of the $165 million deficit listed for the CBC this year.

Undoubtedly some programs would have to be curtailed, but the $61 million saved could provide a considerable amount of aid to the 165,000 Indian people presently living in Canada.

As I mentioned earlier, the Prices and Incomes Commission and its expensive staff of economists is only window dressing which adds to the load of the taxpayers without solving any of their problems. In my opinion, and in my opinion alone, it should be abolished. In fact, I have grave doubts whether the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs established in 1967 can justify its cost to the Canadian people.

In conclusion, I implore this government to seriously reconsider its present policies relating to the north, as well as to the rest of Canada, in the hope that productivity, incentive and even the normal desire to build or expand a business are given some encouragement and result in the reduction of the numbers unemployed. Both unemployment and inflation vie for position as our number one problem. I do not believe we can effectively deal with the other needs of our society until we have shown ourselves capable of solving these two problems.

Mr. Paul St. Pierre (Coast Chilcotin): Since the House is considering a motion of non-confidence, I suppose we must expect members of the opposition parties to be wide-ranging in their criticism of the goverment. This afternoon we have been told that our policies are leading the country directly into the morass of state socialism. That was the view of one hon. member. On the other hand, we have heard that our policies are designed to open the north to rampant, greedy and avaricious capitalists. The criticism being as wide-ranging as it is, there is little room left to me to find new areas of criticism, even if I wished to do so.

An hon. Member: You don't, anyway.

Mr. Baldwin: I have some of my speech left, some more ideas for you.

Mr. St. Pierre: I must say that the tone of doom and gloom with which the previous speaker put his ideas forward reminded me of an old Presbyterian clergyman in the province from which that hon. member comes. Addressing the congregation about their sins, he said: I tell you that you will be up to your necks in boiling brimstone and there will be devils poking pitchforks into you and you will lift your eyes from the smoke and say to the Lord "Laird, Laird, we didna ken." And the Lord in His infinite compassion and mercy will look down on you and He will say "Well, ye ken the noo."

For myself, I intend to deal with only one aspect of this subject, namely, the development of the north and, particularly, the development of oil and gas reserves. I listened with considerable interest to the speech of the leader of the New Democratic Party. I share some of the concern he expressed. I share his concern for the future of the native people as development proceeds, because such development could be damaging. I also share his concern about damage to the environment. We all know this is possible, and if we neglect to take adequate precautions it becomes probable. What bothers me about the speech of the leader of the NDP, as well as other speeches which have been made recently is this—they seem to reflect a counsel of despair.

Because there are risks attached to the development of the north, because there are risks to the environment, because there is the possibility that the native people will not be helped by such development, they seem to argue that the only course to take is to do nothing. They seem to argue that we ought not to seek solutions or attempt to find a secure and positive method of developing the north but, rather, that we should leave the north in cold storage. This is certainly not the way in which we developed the Canadian west and it is not the kind of spirit in which we shall develop the Canadian north, either.

The leader of the New Democratic Party appears to see a considerable distinction between the sale of renewable resources and non-renewable resources. Part of his criticism of northern development appears to be an opposition to the extraction of oil and its sale abroad, specifically to the United States. Apparently in his view there is something wrong with finding oil, taking it out of the ground and selling it. I wish he would explain that to the people of the province of Alberta and of northern British Columbia who have prospered to a very considerable degree from the oil industry.

Admittedly, we cannot export more than our surplus of non-renewable resources, but surely surpluses are for selling. If there is something economically wrong with selling a non-renewable resource, such as oil, gas, coal, nickel and such minerals, does it then follow that it is quite all right to sell renewable resources, such as grain—I suppose the hon. member would agree with this—lumber and pulp which, as long as we do not overcut our forests, are renewable resources? Among renewable resources that could be sold is water. Water is clearly a renewable resource, for as long as the winds blow and deposit rain and our lakes and rivers flow down to the sea, we shall have water. I wonder whether he would favour the sale of water abroad; I doubt very much that he would. I do not think I would myself, even though it is a renewable resource. There is nothing sacred about the words "non-renewable" and "renewable". Decisions must be made in light of current conditions and a reasoned and sensible estimation of what the future may hold.

The hon. member also spoke of the desirability of settlement in the north and the desirability of developing such industries as smelters in the north. Certainly, I could not agree with him more, except that I would point out that in some areas of the north, specifically the Northwest Territories, the sub-Arctic and true Arctic regions, we are faced with conditions that are in many ways very different from those in the south. The suggestion to build a smelter is interesting enough in this regard. Smelters are notorious for the emission of great quantities of pollution into the air from their stacks. I think most hon. members are familiar with the extent to which air pollution is increased by what is called a temperature inversion. When Los Angeles or Montreal has a temperature inversion in the atmosphere lasting for two or three days, the results are quite noticeable and quite serious.

We should take into account that over much of the Northwest Territories in winter a temperature inversion frequently develops and lasts for a month to a month and a half. Therefore, we may find some developments which, though suitable to the south, cannot be established in the north. I hope there are not but it is possible that there are. In any event, I believe it surely cannot be beyond the ingenuity of our technicians in Canada, or even in the world community, to develop safe delivery systems for oil and gas not only out of the northern mainland but out of the high Arctic.

A great many methods of transport are being considered at the moment for the high Arctic. The northern development committee has heard evidence in this respect from a number of witnesses. To review it briefly, if oil is discovered in, say, the Sverdrup group—and gas has already been discovered on King Christian Island in quantities that would constitute a commercial field if discovered in southern Canada—delivery of oil would almost certainly have to take place by undersea pipeline; by the use of Manhattan-type ice-strengthened tankers with icebreaker support; by submarine tankers of 170,000 tons and above operating in open water to Godthab, Greenland, or down to Trinity, Newfoundland, or by what is called a semi-submersible submarine. This is a new idea not yet fully developed which calls for a submarine to operate near the surface with a tall 16-foot steel sail, so-called, cutting through the ice, the ship being capable of submerging and running on a closed circuit, oxygen-breathing diesel system for sufficient time to move underneath the pressure ridges when the barrier of ice is more than can be cut by the sail.

The committee was also informed—and such is the progress of technology that I do not suppose this will surprise members of the House—that it is not inconceivable that delivery of oil out of the high Arctic by air is possible in the foreseeable future. The cost of heavy air transport is down to three and a half cents per ton mile in the United States at the present time. At least one witness before the committee clearly saw the possibility of the cost of air transport coming down to two and a half cents and eventually to one cent per ton mile.

So, if and when a major discovery of oil is made in the high Arctic, and I think most people who have been observing developments up there would say it is a question of when rather than if, we will be faced with the necessity of doing some adventurous engineering and will need some adventurous and very able people in that part of Canada. Hopefully—indeed, we should insist and demand—the people who are most experienced in the high north, namely the Eskimo and further to the south the Indian, should use their very real and practical expertise in the exploratory and development stages. They should be trained as quickly as possible to take over the ever-increasingly technical aspects of the operation. In this respect the more they take over, the better.

However, there is a difficulty we must face both in the employment of these people in the north and in determining how we are going to get the oil out of these islands. We cannot move too far in the preparation of means of transit for oil out of the high Arctic until we have found the oil. Equally, I can see a danger in too hurriedly giving Eskimos and northern Indians specialized training for pipeline work and other technical jobs if we fail to discover oil in the north. It is bad enough that the training of these people for modern society is, with the exception of a few young people, not as advanced as it should be.

We must hope that the people who have to make the decisions are wise enough to chart these two lines so that they cross at the right point. It is important that our Eskimos and northern Indians be given training to take over most of the technical jobs in the north at the time they become available. Their training must begin at a time that will enable them to be ready to take job opportunities that will open for them. If they are not trained in time we face the prospect of southern whites taking these jobs in the absence of a trained labour pool in the north. If their training is given too early, it will be a tremendous and bitter disappointment to them if jobs fail to materialize.

In any event, I do not want to take more time of the House except to repeat a point I made earlier. We should not look upon the north as a parkland we intend to leave unspoiled, because leaving it unspoiled in its natural state will also mean leaving it with a rapidly increasing population of Eskimos and Indians who really do not wish to go back to living in ice houses. They do not want to depend for their living on the Arctic fox. They want what other Canadians want, the right to earn a decent living, to live in homes and decent communities. We cannot accomplish this by sealing Canada at the 60th parallel and leaving an unspoiled wilderness to the Arctic fox.

I favour, and I hope to see, rapid development of the north, within certain limits. There are two severe limits this House and others should be constantly watching. The first is that the rights of native people must be adequately protected. They must be brought into the mainstream of development. The second is that there must be protection for the northern ecology. I thank hon. members for their attention.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, hon. members of the House who participate in this debate, from whatever approach they take, look to this vast sector of Canada, described by cliché and otherwise, as the undeveloped hinterland of Canada. During this generation we are facing a challenge similar to the one faced by our ancestors 100 years ago during the development of western Canada. I am sure the pioneers 100 years ago looked upon the west with the same degree of hesitation Canadians now experience in respect of the development of the north. They must have looked at weather conditions, the lack of transportation, the lack of habitation, the lack of markets for production and sparse population in much the same way we contemplate the north at the present time. The fact is that the west and other parts of Canada which were not developed 100 years ago have now been developed to a tremendous extent, perhaps not as fast as possible, but with considerable success.

Having experienced that development, knowing of the vastly increased number of people and improvements in technology, we as Canadians would be abdicating our responsibility in respect of the development of the rest of the country if we ignored the north. We have in that part of Canada a great number of indigenous people. There is a grave danger that the north will be developed from the white man's point of view. There is a danger that we will be paternalistic in the development of this part of the country without allowing active native participation.

These people have a long way to go in respect of education and technology. They require assistance. There has been a lack and a neglect over the years. It is more than 10 years now since the vision of the north which was derived by many of our opponents as something revolutionary. It was suggested it meant the construction of roads from wigwam to wigwam and from igloo to igloo. There has been a great deal done since that time, and a certain amount is being done now. This effort will have to be increased. It is not and will never be good enough to merely attempt to transplant the Eskimo part way toward the white man's culture. We cannot think in terms of training these people this century and possibly next century up to a certain point, then abandoning them. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) realizes that there is a danger in this regard. We cannot take these people away from their traditional modes of life, give them a smattering of white man's training along with a lot of his bad habits, and then leave them to fend for themselves. We must take a giant step forward in our policies relating to these people of the northland.

Incentives will have to be provided. I doubt if the northland will develop as a result of natural initiatives. I know very little about the eastern Arctic and it is many years since I was in the western Arctic, down the Mackenzie valley. Development was only beginning when I was there 30 years ago. Yellowknife was barely four years old. It was a small hamlet. Today it is the capital of the Northwest Territories. If we wait for natural development we will wait a long time.

We must provide incentives to encourage people from the southern parts of Canada to develop the north. We must convince people in the more populated regions in the south to expand into the north. This is more important than providing the people there with the pill and abortion on demand; that is not the answer and I suggest it is self-defeating. In this part of Canada there exists a tremendous scope for Canadian development. There are tremendous resources yet undiscovered. Incentives must be provided in order to discover and develop these resources and a proper tax system is the way to accomplish this. We need roads, waterways and airways. I do not intend to refer to railroads at the present time, but this kind of development will take place some time in the future. Already we have reached the shores of Great Slave Lake by rail.

In this regard, the present policies of the government are deficient. We have seen the white paper on taxation, but such a policy would quite frankly kill any incentives for the development of the north. We are slowing down this potential development if we pursue our present philosophies with regard to resource development, and the imposition of taxes on the production of primary resources. There cannot be any differentation between that land north of the 60th parallel and the land to the south. We must treat our mining companies, lumber companies and oil companies on the same basis across Canada. We must not adopt attitudes which will destroy incentives to resource development companies and individuals, including unincorporated syndicates who are interested.

In the past, we have given opportunities to foreigners who enjoyed a considerable tax advantage over our own Canadians in the development of our resources. One only has to look at the late forties and early fifties when Canadians who were trying to participate in the development of the oil industry in Alberta and Saskatchewan were beaten to the post every time, particularly by our friends in the United States whose tax laws were much more favourable. Therefore, I say the policies of the government with regard to tax law and tax incentives in respect of resource development have been wrong. If the government persists in the recommendations contained in the white paper it will eternally condemn the north to stagnation, unless that development takes place through public ownership and public participation entirely. This may suit a number of people, but I suggest the history of our performance in that type of development has been indeed a sad and sorry one.

Let us consider transportation. Yes; there are roads. There cannot be an instant system of highways. There has been a certain amount of work in this regard but more could have been done. Then, there are such things as aids to navigation along the Mackenzie. These could be improved. The lack of insistence, for instance, on permits at the time of the construction of the Bennett dam was something that worked against the development of the north because that dam has affected the water levels on the navigable portions of the Mackenzie. In respect of air, last year we saw an ill-fated proposal by the government to tax airline tickets on a percentage basis. If there was ever anything designed to stultify the development of the north it was this proposal. I admit it applies to aircraft of certain size, and that there were exemptions, but the tax applied to passengers going by regular carriers such as Pacific Western Airlines to the down-river posts and the Arctic. What a way to strangle development! Well, somehow or other I think we finally got to the government and it saw how ill-advised this policy was.

Here again, I believe the lack of a real regional air carrier policy will also work to the detriment of the north. I say we must have an inquiry into our domestic air policy. I think the Globe and Mail was quite correct in its editorial yesterday concerning the policy of our national air carriers in respect of domestic flights, and the fact that it is costing Canadians far more than should be the case. For that reason, I say we must have an inquiry in order to determine a far better national air policy for Canadians. This will also affect the north.

In the limited time I have available to me, I want to say Canadians must be encouraged to participate in the development of the north since they have an equity in it. There is no such suggestion in the present plan. Where is it suggested that these developments in the North are to be owned by Canadians? I made these proposals during the hearings of the Finance Committee in respect of tax reform, but I want to make them again. I would be very discriminatory in favour of Canadians and Canadian companies, truly owned by Canadians, in the resource development field, be it mining, be it lumbering or be it exploration and production of oil and gas.

In respect of these things which represent the development of our primary resources, Canadians should enjoy a certain tax advantage. If we were to have a capital gains tax such a person should be exempt in respect of any gains made in that field, provided the investment remained in the resource development sector. He could move around from one mine to another mine or from a mining company to a lumbering company or from a lumbering company to an oil and gas company, but there should be encouragement for him to remain within these fields. If the tax is to be 25 per cent, and if he remained there for one year, he would pay the 25 per cent tax. However, if he remained a second year it would be reduced by 5 per cent and if he remained a third year it would be reduced by 10 per cent, then 15 per cent and so on all the way down. If he remained there five years there would be no capital gains tax. That is a medium range investment, but I would say it is a sufficient encouragement to Canadians to participate in the development of their own resources. It would be an advantage for Canadians. I do not deny there is discrimination against an outsider and you may say, in so far as that taxpayer is concerned, there is discrimination in favour of him as against an investor in a manufacturing company in central Canada. Yes, there is, but I have a stated objective.

The objective is greater ownership and participation by Canadians in the development of their own resources. It is not by setting up Crown corporations that you will guarantee this. It will not be done by setting up a Canadian Development Corporation, as we now see it and are studying it in the Finance Committee. This Corporation will be a non-starter in so far as this type of development is concerned. It will not accomplish the purpose. We want Canadians from one end of our country to the other to be able to participate in the development of the resources of our vast north. Certainly there are many safeguards involved.

Members will speak about ecology and so on, but it is still possible to carry out this development of resources which will bring people to the north and see to the development of the north. If one said we would require an instant development of the west our ancestors a hundred years ago would have said, "Why, man, you are crazy". But it went step by step. We require transportation and development of our resources to attract people and provide for the economic development of the whole region. However, I do not see much prospect of that happening with the government's present policy. As a matter of fact, I see the reverse. I see an attitude of complete neglect. Some things are being done, but I want to see greater emphasis on this aspect. I want to see emphasis that is applicable in the tax field, with greater assistance through our financial institutions for this type of work. The challenge is there.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Chrétien: You don't agree with the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans).

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I have not heard the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans) speaking in the debate, so the minister has me at a loss.

Mr. Chrétien: About resource development?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I did not know that the hon. member for Duvernay had participated in this debate, but his thesis, so far as I have heard it, has no application to the north country because there are not enough people there. And for all of his strictures, I think he is completely wrong on one because accelerated depreciation only hastens the day when you can no longer claim depreciation on buildings and equipment. It is only when you get, shall we say, a bonus on depreciation that you have a real incentive toward capital-intensive industries.

In the 20 minutes at my disposal I do not have time to argue against the thesis of a former minister of the Crown, but I say that we want our tax system to encourage Canadians to participate more, and it is not on the basis of so-called equity between taxpayers. I would discriminate in favour of Canadians in regard to resource development in order to encourage our development. To that extent, I find that government policies have been deficient in so far as they are oriented toward the north, which to me is now the field of challenge and opportunity in this country; and I most certainly support the motion.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, the remarks I intend to make will be a change of pace from those of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). I intend to confine my remarks to a discussion of one aspect of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), namely, the lack of recognition of the basic and prior rights of the native inhabitants of the territories, including settlement of their claims which would recognize their rights in the land and its resources; because, Mr. Speaker, if there is one single matter about which I have ever-increasing concern as a Canadian, it is the blatant refusal of the government headed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to recognize that aboriginal rights do in fact exist. I must say that this came as a bit of a shock to me in view of the fact that it did appear over a period of several years that the government was moving toward a recognition of aboriginal rights and a willingness to deal in a more realistic way with treaty rights than they had been dealt with in the past.

Hon. members may recall that we had two versions of a bill on this general subject matter introduced in the House, although neither one was fully dealt with. The present Prime Minister, before he became a member of this House, before he became Minister of Justice and later Prime Minister, from all the reports I heard of him had been a champion of civil rights and liberties. It is therefore with considerable astonishment and certainly with great regret that I feel the position he has taken, and taken quite adamantly, on the rights of the Indian people is a complete negation of recognition of some of the basic principles of civil liberties and human rights.

I think it is time that more and more members of this House came to grips with a determination of this basic question, with particular reference to the north. If we do not, before too long if the present pace of exploration for possible exploitation of the natural resources, particularly the non-renewable resources, continues the problem in that area of the country, as has been the case in the past in other parts of the country, will be so late being dealt with that it will be too late for it to be dealt with meaningfully.

The time has come when members of the House should begin to turn their attention to the booklet which was published as the result of a research study by the Indian-Eskimo Association of Canada, entitled "Native Rights in Canada." I intend to devote at least part of the time that I have today to putting into the records of this House some of the things which are said in this book. The introduction reads:

> The issues around Canada's aboriginal peoples are, even today, not separable from Canada's particular history of Indian-white relations. To look at the present we must understand the past. The emergence of a newer Indian leadership does not change this fact. The new organizations and the new leaders are at least as concerned with the issues of treaty and aboriginal rights as their predecessors.

I think that is a true statement. I had the pleasure and honour of knowing, to some extent at least, the great, late Reverend Dr. Peter Kelly, a chieftain of the Haida, one of the pioneer leaders of the Indian people who first appeared and made their voices heard before members of this House. His concern for and knowledge of the whole question were deep.

But I think it is true to say, as the introduction to this publication points out, that the new leaders of the Indian peoples have as deep a concern as did people like the late Reverend Dr. Peter Kelly who, as some hon. members may know, in addition to being a chief of the Haida was an ordained minister of the United Church of Canada who was chosen by his church to head the British Columbia conference some years before his death. The phrase, "To look at the present we must understand the past," I think is the key point in that quotation.

That, I suggest, Mr. Speaker, apparently is exactly what the Prime Minister does not understand or refuses to recognize. In fact, I would say that the only way one can describe him in this context is to label him an historical illiterate, which seems rather surprising if one looks at the record of his academic achievement and his fields of interest as set forth in the Parliamentary Guide. In it we read that he studied law at the University of Montreal, graduating with honours, and undertook post-graduate studies in law, economics and political science in Paris and at the London School of Economics. When he was in practice he specialized in labour law and civil liberties cases in Quebec, and became associate Professor of law at the University of Montreal where he taught constitutional law, civil liberties and carried out research.

All I can say is that during that period of his career the Prime Minister could not have conducted any research into the question of the basic concepts of civil liberties as they apply to the Indian people of Canada. There is no record of that kind after my name in the Parliamentary Guide, although I was an honours student in history at the University of British Columbia. I do not make the charge of historical illiteracy against the Prime Minister only on my own knowledge, but after reading with interest and I hope some degree of understanding the contents of this book.

This is not a haphazard publication but is the result of a research grant from a foundation in Calgary. The head of the research committee was Dean R. J. Macdonald of the faculty of law, University of Toronto. Mr. Alfred Best, Q.C., Mr. T. A. King, Q.C., Mr. Malcolm Montgomery, Mr. T. H. B. Symons, Mr. B. J. MacKinnon, Q.C., and Mr. I. Binnie were members of the committee. Director of the research staff was Douglas Sanders, faculty of law, University of Windsor. Research associates were Kenneth Lysyk, faculty of law, University of British Columbia, and Anthony Hooper, faculty of law, Laval University.

Having read the book, I feel that I am not alone in my appraisal of the position taken by the Prime Minister in turning his back on the question of aboriginal rights. In an appendix there are quotations from a speech made by the Prime Minister on August 8, 1969, in Vancouver on the subject of Indian aboriginal and treaty rights. He refers to the fact that the government had come up with a proposal, a policy paper on the Indian problem which proposed a set of solutions. "It doesn't impose them on anybody", said the Prime Minister. Mr. Speaker, some of these things were imposed upon the Indian people long before the white paper policy was presented to this House. It is all very well for the Prime Minister to say that this white paper does not impose anything on the Indian people, but I suggest that it does not propose—it rejects the alleviation of some of the things already imposed upon the Indian people. If we are to understand the present we must have some understanding of the past.

The Prime Minister went on to talk about some of the choices before Canadians generally and before the Indian peoples within our boundaries in particular. He said the question was the following:

—whether Canadians as a whole want to continue treating the Indian populations as something outside, a group of Canadians with which we have treaties, a group of Canadians who have as the Indians, many of them claim, aboriginal rights or whether we will say well forget the past and begin today and this is a tremendously difficult choice because, if—well one of the things the Indian bands often refer to are their aboriginal rights and in our policy, the way we propose it, we say we won't recognize aboriginal rights. We will recognize treaty rights. We will recognize forms of contract which have been made with the Indian people by the Crown and we will try to bring justice in that area and this will mean that perhaps the treaties shouldn't go on forever.

He went on to talk about its being inconceivable to have treaties between peoples within a single nation, as if the treaties and all they stand for were only concerned with whether the Indians were to receive a little twine and gunpowder. This strikes me as approaching the whole question of treaties with sneering contempt, without any appreciation of historical significance. This is something that is separate and apart from the matter of aboriginal rights. Later he said:

But aboriginal rights, this really means saying, "We were here before you. You came and you took the land from us and perhaps you cheated us by giving us some worthless things in return for vast expanses of land and we want to reopen this question. We want you to preserve our aboriginal rights and to restore them to us." And our answer—it may not be the right one and may not be one which is accepted but it will be up to all of you people to make your minds up and to choose for or against it and to discuss with the Indians—our answer is "no".

He went on to refer to a statement of the late President Kennedy regarding the question of the Negro people in American society and quoted with approbation, "We will be just in our time. This is all we can do. We must be just today." I agree with the sentiment expressed by the late President Kennedy as strongly as does the Prime Minister. What I am suggesting is that the Prime Minister either cannot or will not see what is involved here. When he interprets the Indians' plea as, "We want you to preserve our aboriginal rights and to restore them to us," this is not my understanding of what they have been trying to tell us.

They recognize that we cannot turn back the clock. None of my Indian friends has ever told me that they want the white man to go back across the seas where he came from, and not return. They recognize that we are here and that they are a minority. They are not asking us to do as some of the colonial powers have in territories in Africa and Asia where the white people have always been in the minority. They are only asking us to recognize their aboriginal rights, to sit down and negotiate a settlement of them. "Then, and then only," they say, "we can become part of the same society with the rest of you. Then, and then only, can we discuss whether the ancient treaties should continue."

It is my submission that if we are prepared to accept the reality of aboriginal rights, the suggestion of the Prime Minister that the treaties should not necessarily continue is something that the Indian people would be willing to discuss. Mr. Speaker, I must admit that I have lost track of how much time I have left. If I have a few minutes more I would make one or two further references to this book. On page 14 it deals with the origin of the concept of aboriginal titles. I commend this book to hon. members. The book points out that this concept goes back a long way in history, that it is basic to the notion of native rights, that it is not a matter which has been thoroughly studied in this day and age—actually, this little volume is a pioneering work in this field—that it developed really with the beginning of the occupation of North America by people from Europe, and that one of the earliest nations to be concerned about this question and come to grips with it was Spain. It reads on page 14:

Charles V sought the advice of the foremost theologian of the day, Franciscus de Vittoria, a humanist and a friend of Erasmus. Vittoria was Professor of Sacred Theology at the University of Salamanca. He gave two lectures in 1532, which are recorded in his book . . . in which he deals with basic questions of Indian rights and the question of slavery. Vittoria asserted that the Indians were the true owners of the land both from the public and the private point of view. Their lack of belief in the Roman Catholic faith could not affect the question, as heretics in Europe were not denied property rights. He suggested that the Indians were no less intelligent than some Spanish peasants and therefore were equally fit to have legal rights.

The author goes on to suggest that the Spanish had the right to travel into Indian lands so long as they did no harm to the natives, for, says the author, "hospitality is part of the law of nations". Also, the Spanish had the right to trade with the Indians. In certain circumstances, if the Indians were to deny these rights after reasonable explanation, the Spanish could lawfully make war. Otherwise, the Spanish could not wage a just war and by that means claim rights by conquest. In 1537 Pope Paul III used the Bull Sublimus Deus and the author quotes from it as follows:

—Indians are truly men . . . they may and should freely and legitimately enjoy their liberty and the possession of their property nor should they be in any way enslaved; should the contrary happen, it shall be null and of no effect.

The book contains a further quotation from "Commentaries on the Law of England," by Sir William Blackstone. This was published in 1705 and was a monumental commentary which dealt with the matter of Indian title. The quotation from the work begins with these words:

Plantations, or colonies in distant countries—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I can quote these passages on other occasions.

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): Mr. Speaker, for the remaining few minutes before six o'clock I shall whet the appetites of the frontbenchers of my party because I say that the motion is very generous. It assumes that this government has policies. The subject of my remarks will be that the government has no policies. It has no policies so far as the north is concerned and has no policies in most of the other areas of concern. Whose fault is this? The burden always rests on the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

Mr. Barnett: What are the hon. member's policies?

Mr. Otto: The fault, if there is a fault, rests with this Parliament, as the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) said in this House several years ago. He said that the House of Commons, Parliament, does not govern. It does not set policy. It has only one function. It is the place where grievances are expressed and where freedom is maintained. It has no other function. That is true today. Consequently, when we talk about policy, we have no policy. When matters relating to Home or Denison are raised, we devise instant policies. We encounter labour problems and we devise instant solutions. We work from one position of panic to another. I should like to suggest, in the time at my disposal after eight o'clock, some remedies for this situation.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: Before leaving the chair may I bring to the attention of hon. members that pursuant to Standing Order 40 the following questions will be discussed at the time of adjournment: the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald)—Agriculture—Potatoes—Assistance to Prince Edward Island growers; the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams)—Air transport—Hijacking—Parliamentary ratification of The Hague Convention—Amendments to Criminal Code.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—ALLEGED FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO ADOPT POLICIES TO DEVELOP THE HUMAN, CAPITAL AND NATURAL RESOURCES OF NORTHERN CANADA

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Baldwin:

That this House believes that an enlightened program of human and economic progress for northern Canada offers great opportunities for the people of this country; and that the economic and social policies of the present government have brought about confusion and delayed progress; and that it is essential to make appropriate changes in our approach in respect of northern Canada;

And this House condemns the government for its failure to promote a truly Canadian strategy for the north based on human, capital and natural resources, and urges that appropriate policies be adopted at once that will bring about such development in that region.

And the amendment thereto of Mr. Lewis.

Mr. Otto: Before the dinner hour, Mr. Speaker, I had mentioned that the motion very generously presumes that the government has policies. It is a fallacious presumption but nevertheless it is the gist of the motion. My remarks were directed toward the fact that neither this nor any previous government has really had time to formulate policies. We work from one moment to the next and one panic to another. We had no policy on the export of energy resources until Denison Mines was going to be sold; then suddenly we made a decision. Then there was the situation with regard to Home Oil. The shirt and textile manufacturers got after the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) and he immediately had a policy for that.

What the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans) objected to was that under our parliamentary system it is almost impossible to form policies for any length of time. In order to remedy this system it is not enough to just make remarks about it. The whole system must be changed to a great extent. That may mean the introduction of certain republican ideas or congressional ideas, or a mixture of the two merged with the parliamentary system. It just will not work the present way, nor can we expect the government to have policies for any length of time.

This motion concerns northern development. If I heard the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) correctly, his idea of development means immediate exploitation. His idea of development seems to be to get the resources out of the ground, sell them quickly and get rid of our energy, including hydroelectric power in the north, because there is reason to get rid of them very quickly. If we examine this situation carefully, we will see that usually the corporation or exploitation company is controlled by an American company which desires to develop the resources to sell to Americans. They want to beat other American companies who are importing from various parts of the world, at the same time leaving a tiny residue of resources in respect of which Canadians can build pipelines, as has been stated by the minister.

I visited these areas and talked with some of the people who are working on the projects. The presumption, of course, is that a great many qualified Canadian will have jobs in perpetuity. But oil riggers are, by and large, members of an international pool and their headquarters are in Dallas, Texas. The pipe manufacturers—

Mr. Orange: Are in Edmonton.

Mr. Otto: —if they are not foreign-owned, employ a small number of Canadians as labourers, but management skills are something else again. What we are talking about, really, is an impetuous desire to get rid of the reserves. This is what we are really talking about when we say "policy". It seems to me that if we are to have a policy, that policy should be tied to some criteria.

Mr. Benjamin: Such as a national objective.

Mr. Otto: For example, it is not enough to say to the Americans, "You can have $6 billion worth of gas provided we have some labour content." It is time for us to say, rather, "You can have $6 billion worth of gas, but this represents energy you do not possess and that energy will produce for you Americans $50 billion worth of employment. Therefore, if we can reach some agreement by which Canadians will be ensured of $25 billion worth of employment, you can have the gas." The same line of thought can be applied in the case of hydroelectric exports. But we are still working on outdated assumptions and at no time have we stopped to formulate such policies, because we are apprehensive that a small segment of our society will complain on the ground that the resources are there and we are not getting rid of them.

Most of us are cognizant of the problem involved here, particularly as it concerns the export of our gas and the transportation of Alaska oil. I think evey hon. member should read carefully the proceedings of the Special Committee on Environment and Pollution, issue No. 17. The witnesses before the committee were Dr. Fuller, Dr. Lambert and Mr. Passmore, members of a special task force examining the pipeline question and the proposed route by tanker.

It is important to note—the evidence they gave bears this out—that at the present time the government should be in no hurry to allow the export of gas nor, indeed, the construction of a pipeline through the Mackenzie Valley. The witnesses whose names I have mentioned pointed out that the pipeline, if built, would pass through two earthquake zones. Moreover, no one can tell what the ecological consequences of an oil spill might be, since sufficient research work has not been done. I believe it is now acknowledged that there will be a spill, whether a tanker spill or a pipeline spill, and until more research has been carried out it is not possible to predict the results.

The scientists also pointed out to the committee that insufficient attention had been paid to the possibility of using other transportation systems such as the Alaska Highway or railroad system along conventional lines, or a monorail system. We are going pell-mell into a situation in circumstances in which we are not obliged to do so. We think we have to do these things. We think it is essential to get this oil to the United States because ten years from now it may not be of any use.

The fact is that ten years from now the petrochemical industry may be willing to pay a lot more for these resources. Why this great rush, until we have investigated? The evidence is that it would take a minimum of five years before we could know what the consequences may be. The real question, therefore, is how we could prevent the Americans risking an oil spill. After all, it is their oil in Alaska.

I believe the government should realize that we are sitting in Canada with a powerful hand. We need not send out battleships, soldiers or anything like that. But we need to say firmly that we have a policy, or propose to have a policy, based on research, on an accurate estimate of the reserves which will be needed by ourselves and others, tied to benefits to our own productive capacity. Then we should say to the Americans, "If you really insist, you can take your oil by tanker from Valdez to a point near Seattle, but we shall not like it. You happen to need our water to keep your Imperial Valley growing vegetables; you also require our uranium, our nickel and our ore. If you displease us, remember we control these resources."

I think it will need no more than that because, after all, the Americans are well aware of our position and some of them are not too keen about rushing headlong into the type of oil transportation which, of course, some of the companies desire. If the government of the United States realized we had a policy and were adamant on it, I am sure we would get co-operation.

It comes down to this. Canadians elected a government which we expect would be courageous, daring and inventive. But somehow all these clouded policy issues have convinced our people that we as a government are not daring, but cautious; that we are not inventive, but that we cling to conventional ways of thinking. This is what influences our lives. The capital is here. If we want it, we have it. We can do all these things. I think the government should pay attention to this disenchantment and ask, "Why are we here?" The answer should be, "we are here because we have been elected to do these great things, and we can do them." Therefore, I believe the second part of the motion has a great deal of substance.

Mr. Benjamin: Do you intend to vote for it?

Mr. Otto: I said it has a great deal of substance. Before this debate is over I expect to hear many members contributing to this point of view. How can we, as a government, set policy? How can we, as parliamentarians, tolerate the injection of new concepts into the parliamentary system which will enable the government to formulate long-range policies instead of being a government which looks after immediate problems on a day-to-day basis only?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: Would the hon. member permit a question? I agree with much of what he has said, though the concepts are not new. I have an application form with me. Would he like to take out membership in the New Democratic Party tonight or tomorrow?

• (8:20 p.m.)

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, the House is asked to consider a most important question, and I believe that the official opposition was justified in proposing the non-confidence motion appearing on the Order Paper so that this government would state which measures it proposes to take in the shortest possible order to rationalize the development of our natural resources to enable Canadians to exploit them as fully as possible.

Last fall, I visited the North with a House committee and I was enthralled by the magnitude of its untapped natural resources, while in Canada there are today thousands of unemployed who would be only too happy to see the government implement a rational planning policy to launch the development of these resources for the benefit of the nation as a whole.

It is difficult, in a debate such as this, as a member from Quebec, not to say a word about the James Bay project. We know that immediately after the announcement of this project by the premier of Quebec, authorities involved in the fields of politics, sociology and economics expressed their views.

This project, Mr. Speaker, will cost almost $6 billion. Three rivers will be used: the Nottaway, Broadback and Rupert rivers. There is a possibility to extend this number to five. The project will give birth to the most powerful hydro-electric complex in the western hemisphere, with a production capacity of 10 million kilowatts. The dam will produce twice as much power as Churchill Falls, and the project will cover an area of 50,000 square miles.

Because of the far-reaching dimensions of such a project, there are so many factors to be taken into account that many experts have expressed some doubt as to its validity. Until now, over $14 million have been spent on studies and discussions to ascertain the viability of this project.

If I deal with this project tonight it is not that I am a priori objecting to it. Not at all. As a member of Parliament from Quebec, I must naturally ask questions in order that public opinion be further enlightened and to get answers from the authorities concerned.

When he made his statement, the premier of Quebec said that up to 125,000 jobs would be created through this project.

[English]

Mr. Orange: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understand that this debate, if one reads the motion, reflects upon the approach of the federal government. It refers to "our approach", which I presume is the approach of the federal government, to northern development. The hon. member across the way has concerned himself with development in one part of northern Canada, namely, northern Quebec. Although I appreciate his concern, I am wondering whether he is talking about a provincial matter concerning which an announcement has been made by the provincial government.

Mr. Ricard: Let the Speaker decide that.

Mr. Orange: May I continue my remarks? My hon. friend will have his chance later.

Mr. Ricard: There is no reason whatever for saying that.

Mr. Orange: My precise point of order is that the motion is talking about the approach of the federal government to total northern development. The words of the motion are "human, capital and natural resources". I am wondering whether the hon. member is relating his remarks to this debate in talking about a proposed program of a provincial government for a northern part of the country.

[Translation]

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, in reply to my hon. friend's point of order, I will say that if he will hear me out attentively he will see that what I mean is that the federal government has some responsibility in the implementation of this project. I mention it, of course, because the project was brought forward several times by the premier of Quebec in the National Assembly and opposition members asked what would be the federal government's participation in the very important James Bay project. I do not feel that this debate is restricted merely to Quebec. I also want to stress the responsibility of the federal government in its implementation. That is why I am mentioning the James Bay project. In fact, I had just started laying the foundations for my argument and my hon. friend will understand at the end of my speech that the points I am making will strike home with the government, which will have to take action jointly with the province of Quebec to carry out the project.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): The hon. member will surely appreciate that the motion and amendment before the House are very broad in scope. The motion reads:

> That this House believes that an enlightened program of human and economic progress for northern Canada offers great opportunities—

And so on. Northern Canada is not the territory of just one province but all Canada. We are dealing with development policy relating to northern Canada.

[Translation]

I would say to the hon. member for Charlevoix that I well appreciate the fact that he does not intend to limit his remarks to the Bay James project, but rather to the relationship between this project and the general policy the government should establish in matters of development of our natural resources. I understand the hon. member intends to outline some arguments that are by nature related to the Bay James matter and to the development policy of northern Canada.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I did lay the groundwork. First of all, I shall deal with the Bay James project and then, in conclusion, I shall outline the federal government's responsibilities in this regard.

As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, the government of Quebec claimed it could create 100,000 jobs. Such an announcement is really encouraging for the increasing number of unemployed of Abitibi, when gold mines are closing down their operations.

• (8:30 p.m.)

Again, to give an answer to my hon. friend, I will state that until there is contrary evidence the province of Quebec is still part of Confederation and that if some resources are being developed in northern Quebec, they belong not only to Quebecers but to all Canadians.

As I was saying, this will no doubt be of great help to the unemployed in the Abitibi area, at a time when the Quebec gold mines may have to close down in a few years. That again is a Canadian problem.

The project includes the construction of six to ten dams and six canals. A 200-mile road will be built across very difficult terrain. A port will be constructed on the bay and two airports will be required. Within a year, 2,000 jobs are expected to be created.

All the electric power will be sold to the United States. Already, Consolidated Edison of New York intends to purchase some to the value of $2 billion.

The money for financing this project will come from Quebec, which hopefully will contribute half a billion, as well as from Europe, which might contribute almost $3 billion while the balance would come from the United States.

Here, I make a digression to point out that this is where the federal government plays its part. If we follow the policies of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), who urged the provinces not to borrow too much on the foreign market, the minister will have to take his responsibilities and tell Quebec how to negotiate its loans on the Canadian market. This is where the federal government will intervene for the first time in the financing of the project.

It is reported also that a government-owned company will be responsible for carrying out this project. Its aim would be to co-ordinate all activities in this area, including those of such other Quebec companies as SOQUIP and SOQUEM.

Mr. Speaker, the keen observer sees at a glance the vastness of the project not only for Quebec but for the rest of Canada also.

Quebec has furnished evidence of its efficiency in this field: let us consider the Manicouagan and Outardes projects for instance. One passes rapidly from great amazement to questions which remain unanswered. As a French-Canadian member of the House, I have a right to doubt the profit-earning capacity of such a project.

Will this project encourage the development of northern Quebec? Will the electric power produced be used in developing industry in this region? Unfortunately, up until now nothing points to such an accomplishment. Besides water which resources can we draw from this region? The forests are sufficiently exploited and we have no more need for gold.

If my hon. friend who just interrupted me would read today's La Presse, he would notice that this project is so important to Canada that four pages are allotted to the study of its political and social effects.

When we know that only half of the 13.5 million cords of wood will be salvaged before the area is flooded by the waters of James Bay, we still wonder if the federal government as well as the province of Quebec should not have contemplated salvaging all of it, at a time when Canadian pulp and paper plants are having difficulties.

Will other resources be processed in the United States, in Quebec or somewhere else in Canada? After its $6 billion investment in that hydro-electric project will Quebec have the capital needed to develop and process these resources?

Many are doubtful about the economic viability of the project as far as the potential market is concerned. New England could face a power shortage within five years and plans to build nuclear reactors to meet the demand. Each reactor would produce twice the amount of electricity which would be generated at James Bay.

Of course, the experts answer that the construction of reactors is much too costly and that from a technical point of view, they must undergo major improvements.

Now, what will happen to the ecological balance which is not only the responsibility of Quebec but also that of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien).

Several streams now flowing into James Bay will be diverted. What will be the effects of those changes on the water system of James Bay which, as we all know, is covered with ice seven or eight months a year. The wildlife will be subjected to the effects of geographic alterations.

Let us take, for instance, the wild geese which follow the Nottoway River when migrating. How will the life of these geese be affected by the diversion and almost complete disappearance of this river? What measures has the federal government taken to prevent this situation? Your Lordship, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Chrétien: Your Lordship!

Mr. Asselin: It happens sometimes that I use this expression, Mr. Speaker; as if I were still in court. This is a kind of professional habit.

I have asked the minister, today, what research and what studies had been made, or shall be made, to try to avoid the disappearance of these migrating birds. I know that the minister has already answered that his experts were working on this problem, but I must show to the hon. member who interrupted me and the name of whose riding I have forgotten, that this is not merely a Quebec but also a Canadian problem.

From an economic viewpoint, the only unfortunate aspect is that the financing will come from foreign countries, mostly from the United States. These days, economic nationalism is a current topic. As Canadians, we would also like to keep our natural resources and develop them ourselves.

We would like to learn from the government what projects it intends to bring forward in order to meet the requirements of the economic nationalism advocated by some Canadians who, I think, have every reason to worry about the take-over of our natural resources by foreigners. How will the country be affected by a $5.5 billion loan at current interest rates?

We are aware of the value of the project as to the effects such large exports of power will have on the balance of payments, and we must welcome it. The fact remains that every precaution must be taken to spare Quebec and Canada serious after-effects if the project were to abort or prove unprofitable.

The government expects, as I said a while ago, that 125,000 jobs will be created. What will happen to that manpower when the project is completed? Once it is set up, the hydroelectric complex will operate with the help of a computer or about one hundred men. That is what is happening at Manicouagan, since the projcet has been completed.

What we ask is this: To what extent will the federal government participate in the project? It is now levying an 11 per cent tax on building materials. Does it intend to co-operate with the Quebec National Assembly by repealing this tax to reduce the cost of the undertaking? Building materials will be needed to the tune of $1.5 billion. Does the government intend to remove that tax or to grant an exemption? As was the case for Churchill Falls, does the government intend to grant tax exemptions to shareholders?

Finally, the human factor has to be taken into consideration. In the James Bay area, there are Indians who are still under the federal jurisdiction. Some say that they number 10,000 and others, 5,000. Today's issue of La Presse mentions that there are 3,500 Indians in the territories involved, and as we know they still come under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

To speak of the Far North is to speak of the Indians. Therefore we are right in asking the minister whether he looked into the matter or intends to do so, in order to determine what will become of the Indians who live in those territories.

It is a human element that should concern the federal government. In today's edition of La Presse, one could read the following about the 3,500 Indians in the territories concerned, and I quote:

> —it is that... the mass arrival of the white people will destroy there as elsewhere the unity of the Indian culture. One must go to Schefferville to know exactly what is going to happen in the James Bay area—

In Churchill and in Schefferville, towns that are not far from my constituency, we find alcoholism, racism, lack of culture, tensions, degradation of every aspect of social life. Of course, those are human factors which the federal government must take into account when discussing a project of such importance.

A more accurate census should be made of the number of Indians living in those territories which will soon be inhabited by white people. Those Indians belong to the Cree tribe and have been living in this hunting and fishing territory for over 300 years. Will they be indemnified accordingly? Will they be hired to work on this project? Does the federal government intend to set up immediately a training program so that those Indians will be able to find work when the project is under way?

Mr. Speaker, this again comes under the government's jurisdiction. We are affected by these questions. Far from opposing the James Bay project, we are entitled to ask questions and to know what will be the government policy and contribution to this huge loan the province of Quebec will have to raise. Will this province be able to borrow the full amount abroad or will it be able to find on the Canadian market the billions of dollars required for this project? This is the responsibility of the Minister of Finance.

As regards ecology and natural resources, of course, they come under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. As he has already been asked today, I ask him how he will co-operate with Quebec toward the implementation of such a project.

This is why, in my opinion, the official opposition was right in raising such an important question, and this is also why I will support the motion.

• (8:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Ian Watson (Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, I intend to confine my remarks this evening to two main areas which are the responsibility of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien). The initial area which I should like to discuss relates to one aspect of the social policies of this government. I believe it is an aspect which has frequently been criticized in the past, but from my personal experience in visiting a number of Indian communities it is evident that we have made enormous progress over the last few years in providing adequate and improved housing for our Indian and Eskimo people. The Indian and Eskimo housing program has already resulted in more than 11,000 new homes having been built. This year alone more than 2,000 homes will be added to the 11,000 total. Without question, we are improving the strictly material aspects of our social policy vis-à-vis the Indian and Eskimo people of Canada.

I am afraid the record is less satisfactory when we look at some of the results of our social policy in the educational and employment field, although I realize that there too the government is making enormous strides. Important new programs have been developed over the past three or four years and these are beginning to produce results. However, I do not think anyone in this government is satisfied with the present unemployment rate among our Indian people, nor is anyone in the government satisfied with the extremely high drop-out rate of Indian youngsters, particularly in our high schools. This drop-out rate is close to four times the national average and unemployment rate ranges, at least for part of the year, between 40 per cent and 50 per cent.

Having said that, I do not think there is any hesitation on the part of this government to take whatever action is necessary and to inaugurate whatever new policy may be necessary to reduce the rates of unemployment and drop-outs among our Indian students, rates which belie the material progress the government has been making in providing for the physical wants of our indigenous peoples.

Clearly, the most important thing this government has accomplished in the last few years is the provision of the mechanisms by which our Indian people can act on their own and can take the initiative in solving their own problems. Increasingly in the last several years we have seen Indian organizations spring up, representing every provincial group of Indians. A strong national organization has also been developed. These organizations are not yes-men for any government. They are making gains on behalf of the Indian people they represent in a very forceful and effective way.

This is producing results for the Indian people and is instilling pride in them when they are able to see the results of the new forcefulness translated into government action. The mechanisms which have been provided to allow our Indian and Eskimo people to take this self-initiative will in the long run, I believe, prove to have been the most important thing we have done in this transitional period which started in the late 1950s, really, and accelerated during the early 1960s—a period in which we have seen the number of Indian and Eskimo children in high school multiply many times over, and the number of children in university increase many fold.

Mr. Yewchuk: You are daydreaming.

Mr. Watson: These years have been important years. But again, Mr. Speaker, the government has not hesitated to admit the serious deficiencies which remain.

Mr. Benjamin: This is no time to brag about it.

Mr. Watson: I should like to deal particularly with one area of the north, northern Quebec.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Quebec government will have to hurry its consideration of Indian claims to prevent its James Bay project from being hampered by legal proceedings.

I believe that the Quebec government's position when dealing with the Indian people, in particular those living in the so-called New Quebec area, is untenable. No doubt people know that when the federal government in 1912 transferred jurisdiction on the New Quebec territory to the Quebec government, the latter assumed responsibility for direct settlement of all the claims the Indians in the area could make. Up to now, those claims have never been sustained and, if the Quebec government does not want to see its James Bay project obstructed indefinitely, it is most important that the native rights issue in the New Quebec area be settled.

• (8:50 p.m.)

[English]

The other area I would like to touch upon tonight concerns the resource policy of the government as it relates to the oil and gas regulations which have been under suspension for some time now. I do not remember precisely when the suspension first took effect, but it seems to me it is more than a year ago since the oil and gas regulations applicable to the Northwest Territories and the Yukon were suspended.

Up until they were suspended the basic philosophy behind the regulations was that the permit holder should have first choice of 50 per cent of his permit area and that should return the remainder to the Crown. The choices were subject to certain restrictions, but in any event they all boiled down to a 50 per cent turnback to the Crown in the event of a discovery of normal size. There were a whole series of explanatory rules which provided for the discovered resources to be separated one from another by a row of sections, or that the permit holder could choose his section squares on an alternate basis; but the end result was that the Crown kept its 50 per cent.

The practice in the provinces has been for this 50 per cent to be auctioned off to the highest bidder. The regulations were different in the Northwest Territories and in the Yukon, at least until they were suspended. They provided that the Crown's 50 per cent was subject to the original permit holder's option to take it, as well, by paying a double royalty. This was an additional incentive, and it was judged to be necessary to encourage the higher risk and cost of exploration in the Northwest Territories. It had that effect; it did encourage a certain amount of risk capital that would not have gone there had this additional incentive not existed. But at the time when the discoveries were made at Prudhoe Bay, all this changed and in this changed situation there was no longer any requirement on the part of the Crown, in my view, to provide this additional incentive.

The potential which was demonstrated by the Prudhoe Bay discoveries, the potential which the Arctic area held for possible oil and gas discoveries was such that this double royalty clause was no longer a justified sweetener for the purposes of getting additional risk capital into exploration.

What concerns me now is the likely direction in which I feel the regultions may be changed. It is reasonable to expect that there will be a tendency on the part of the government to opt for the type of option regulations which already exist in the provinces and which have proven effective in a province like Alberta. These option regulations have given Alberta a fairly high percentage return on its oil resources, when all taxes, federal and provincial, and the royalities are taken into consideration. If Alberta is compared with oil producing countries throughout the world, then the results there compare fairly well. But the Alberta regulations have resulted in a situation which I think most of us deplore, in that the percentage of foreign control of the oil and gas resources in Alberta, and throughout the Canadian west, ranges well over 85 per cent.

This has been a result of this policy and I would like to suggest to the government, as I did in a previous speech—if I remember correctly, last June—that instead of the 50 per cent that is returned to the Crown being auctionedoff, it be retained by the Crown or at least remain directly under Crown control or ownership, possibly with farm-out provisions, perhaps with first preference going to the original permit holder.

Mr. Benjamin: Make up your mind. Which way do you want it?

Mr. Watson: The members of the NDP on many occasions have made sweeping suggestions about nationalization. I am suggesting a method which in the long run would have a far more sweeping effect than many of the suggestions made by the NDP, short of outright nationalization. We could retain a higher percentage of our oil and gas resources in Canadian ownership, in the long run, if the method I am suggesting were adopted. And we would do this without any cost to the Canadian taxpayer, except conceivably that there would be some slowdown in oil and gas exploration which in turn would result in some slowdown in tax revenues.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Geologists tell us that there is abundant oil and gas in the Northwest Territories. As it is discovered I hope the government will follow a course which will result in Canadian control rising from the present 10 or 15 per cent to perhaps 40 or 50 per cent over a 15 to 20 year period. This method would be painless, would produce results and would not cost the exploration area an insupportable loss of risk interest. If a major discovery of oil were made in the Canadian Arctic within the next few weeks there is no question of the policy I am suggesting resulting in a decrease in risk capital investment interest in that area, although I admit that if no major discovery were made for a year or two perhaps there would be some lessening of interest.

Mr. Benjamin: What is that?

Mr. Watson: Mr. Speaker, if the government were to accept my suggestion, there would be a number of alternatives; and I think we should be flexible. We could maintain the Crown's 50 per cent under a Crown control similar to the Panarctic mechanism; or we could give Panarctic the first choice; or we could give any Canadian company a chance to bid on it, including Panarctic; or we could keep it under Crown control through another corporate entity similar to Panarctic, and with this form of Crown corporation we could arrange for its development partly under Canadian and partly under foreign control.

These alternatives, with their objective being greater Canadian control, would produce better results than anything that is being done at the moment or that can be achieved through tax policies or through the Canada Development Corporation. I do not believe that the Canada Development Corporation under its present set-up—and I was critical of this in the recent debate—can achieve what the government hopes for in the resource area, because it is not designed for this. From government statements, the Canada Development Corporation will have to show a profit eventually for dividend purposes. It is therefore not suited to ventures in the north which are high-risk with no guarantee of return. That being the case, unless there is an extremely capable man at the head of the Canada Development Corporation, with some experience in mining, I believe we will end up—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Ambrose Hubert Peddle (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, with the contributions to this debate limited to 20 minutes I could not, in conscience, presume to roam all over the north and the Canadian Arctic.

An hon. Member: Stick to Newfie.

Mr. Peddle: I shall confine my remarks to that large area, that huge land mass of Labrador which lies within the riding of Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador. Of the 121,000 square miles comprising the riding, approximately 100,000 square miles constitute Labrador.

The motion before the House reads in part:

> That this House believes that an enlightened program of human and economic progress for northern Canada offers great opportunities for the people of this country; and that the economic and social policies of the present government have brought about confusion and delayed progress; and that it is essential to make appropriate changes in our approach in respect of northern Canada.

I think that applies very well to Labrador, Mr. Speaker, and the next part condemning the government is only a technical form. I shall probably vote for the motion, but I do not see what can be gained by dealing with that aspect of it. I think Labrador is usually described as the near north. It is made up basically of the Labrador City-Wabush area which has a combined population of about 13,000. Then there is the Goose Bay-Happy Valley area with a population of 9,000. Churchill Falls has a fluctuating population which goes up to 6,000 or 7,000, and when the project is completed it will probably go down to a couple of thousand. The only other populated area of Labrador is the very long coast line.

I shall not make any particular appeal on behalf of the Labrador City-Wabush are because I think these twin towns could be described in almost every respect as ultra modern. I do not give credit for this to any federal or provincial government; the natural resources were there, private companies saw them, realized the potential and built two very fine towns. They have every amenity from a curling rink to a golf club to a bowling alley. The only two problems in this area, which are common to Labrador, are transportation and communications. There is an excellent air service, but no road connection with the outside world. With regard to communications, the complaint for the most part is about lack of proper radio and television facilities. I will not dwell on these people tonight because whether they agree or not, they are pretty well off.

Development of Northern Canada

• (9:10 p.m.)

Up to 1½ years ago the people of Goose Bay, one of the other two populated areas in Labrador, depended 100 per cent upon the activities of the United States Air Force base. In the last year or so there has been a wood exporting operation that sort of comes and goes and seems to operate on no firm basis. Generally speaking, the economy of the area still depends for all practical purposes solely upon the operation of the base.

As was done in connection with the other, similar United States installations in Newfoundland, we have been given indications that despite assurances to the contrary there is a possibility that this base might fold. Recently a small curtailment of the activities of the base was announced, causing the people of the area great concern. Between 8,000 and 9,000 people depend solely on this base. I am asking, relative to the motion: What action is being contemplated by the government, which has a responsibility in this area, in the event that the base should close? What will it do after consulting the province? Except for a few desultory or token signs of activity, there is no sign of proposed action.

Let me say that when the base at St. John's, Newfoundland, closed the population affected was absorbed by the larger population of the town. There is no large population in Goose Bay which could absorb the people affected by the closure of the base. I have read that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is interested in making deals with provincial governments and setting up what they call infrastructure. Infrastructure, as I understand it, is a variety of amenities that may improve the economic and social climate. It may entice or encourage industry to come into the area.

There is no sign of any infrastructure program being undertaken in Goose Bay. There is no program, apart from plans with federal participation to build a vocational training school—I do not know what good that will do—for creating an economic climate that will induce industry to the area. As I say, I do not know what good that will do or I do not know what I am talking about. I presume that the people who live in such northern communities could move to the pollution-ridden areas of the south.

I remember vividly one night this past winter boarding an aircraft to fly to Newfoundland. It was a murky evening in Ottawa, with a low cloud ceiling, the kind of ceiling that helps you to appreciate fully the odour that comes from the factory across the river. That night I could hardly breathe. At midnight I left for Goose Bay and a few hours later, five or six to be exact, I landed in Goose Bay on a frosty, clear morning. It was wonderful to get off the aircraft and breathe pure, fresh air. It smelled fresh. One cannot describe it except by saying that it smelled like pure, fresh air.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) has spoken about this. He appreciated that air. When he was last in that area, the major part of his speech to groups that were giving him a hard time about their various needs in communications, transportation, and so on, had to do with fresh air. The message that he left with them was, "You don't know how lucky you are." I agree with him up to a point. Fresh air is not the end-all of everything. People can only appreciate such advantages after they have been given all the other amenities of basic transportation and communications. I appreciated what the minister said, although I am not so sure that he sold the crowds any more than he has sold me at other times.

I do not want to be completely critical, Mr. Speaker. During the past few years, with the co-operation of Bell Canada and the CBC, which is not a national favourite—although I must say that there has been a fair degree of co-operation with CBC and Bell Canada during the past few years—radio communication has improved and there has been a pretty fair improvement in our telephone system in Labrador.

The areas I have talked about so far are more or less urban. Labrador City, Wabush and the Happy Valley area may not seem urban but they are. The area that captures everybody's imagination is that long, 700-mile coast line of Labrador. It is an area that this government nor any other will ever be able to computerize. You might feed the problems pertaining to Labrador City and Wabush into a computer and the answer might be that you should move the people away from the area. You could get away, perhaps, with feeding the problems of the Goose Bay area into a computer, but for the people living along that 700 mile coast line of Labrador no computer devised will really find an answer. If their problems were fed into a computer, the answer probably would be that everybody in the area should be moved to Toronto, Montreal or somewhere else. I submit that the people of the Labrador coast and people of Labrador generally are not going to accept that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peddle: Recently the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that we need a new sense of human values in Canada. Apparently it is time we developed a new sense of values, not one that measures people strictly in terms of dollars and cents but more in terms of human values: we ought to pay more attention to human values. I do not know if he is about to use the slogan that he used several years ago, the just society.

I say this with all the sincerity I can muster: People from these districts have written letters to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) and to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing) asking for a few basic facilities, costing a few thousand dollars, to help fishermen and others along the coast to keep from drowning as they pursue their daily work and try to earn a living. When they ask for a measly few dollars I presume their request is fed into a computer. When the answer is no, it is not economically feasible, I think we ought to remind the Prime Minister that the government should show these people more human consideration and not consider only dollars and cents.

I suppose most people who visit the coast of Labrador have visited it as tourists. Last summer I travelled along this coast on the coastal boat. It took approximately three weeks to get there and back. There were a number of tourists from the United States and Europe as well as one person from Australia. Every time I looked at these people during the waking hours of the three weeks, they had their mouths open in wonderment because of the almost frightening beauty of the coastline.

We have a fairly long-standing commitment from the Minister of Transport. I do not know whether he recalls it. This matter was brought to his attention last year or the year before. Instead of serving the purpose for which they were intended, the coastal boats are catering to the tourist trade. The tourists are ending up with a cheap holiday. It cost them approximately $240 for a three-week holiday. The people of Labrador who live in this area either have to travel steerage or lie out on the deck at night. They cannot get a bunk because these are taken up by the tourists.

When this matter was brought to the attention of the minister, he said that the thought of having a tourist ship especially for this purpose was under consideration. It was an excellent idea. I am convinced that this is thinking along the right line, but it is absolutely useless to talk about it if we do not take action.

Mr. Jamieson: Find one.

Mr. Peddle: Build one. Instead of chartering, begging or borrowing a ship, build one. There are many expenses that are less justified than what I am now suggesting.

Mr. McGrath: You could call it the Don Jamieson.

An hon. Member: Buy back the Bonaventure.

Mr. Peddle: I cannot say all that I would like to in 20 minutes because I do not have the facility, articulation and eloquence of the Minister of Transport.

An hon. Member: You do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peddle: The minister is a professional. He was spawned by and grew up with the media. He knows how to say things that will be accepted. I have to say what I feel. I keep my fingers crossed and hope that what I say will be accepted; this is the problem I have.

Mr. Jamieson: You are doing all right.

Mr. Peddle: I know that cabinet ministers are busy. I know how busy I am. It is almost a morning to night, seven-day work week operation. I can appreciate that ministers are even more busy. However, a lot of their work, such as acknowledging letters and saying that the minister will reply in due course, can be done by the numerous underlings in the offices. I suggest that the Prime Minister, the Minister of Transport, the Minister of Public Works and the other ministers should get out in the country once in a while. They should do this at least once during their three, four or five-year term. When was the last time the Minister of Transport was on the Labrador coast?

Mr. Jamieson: Last winter.

Mr. Peddle: The minister says last winter. Maybe he was. How extensive was his tour? You do not get the feeling I am talking about by sitting in a plush office in Ottawa, feeding questions into a computer and reading the answers. Maybe I was unkind to the minister.

Mr. Jamieson: That's right. I am hurt.

Mr. Peddle: Possibly the minister does make extensive tours of the Labrador coast. Maybe the influential ministers have not been up there.

Mr. Jamieson: Thanks a lot!

Mr. Peddle: The ministers should see these dilapidated little places and get the feeling of the people, which is so relevant to this motion. They will never get this from a computer which says it is not economically feasible. I toured that coast last summer. I saw—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the House is anxious to know what the hon. member saw and he might be allowed to finish his sentence. But according to the Standing Orders I have the duty and obligation to inform the House that the hon. member's time has expired. With the consent of the House, the hon. member might be able to pursue his remarks or at least complete his sentence.

Mr. Jamieson: What did you see?

Mr. Peddle: I warn the House that this may be a long sentence. I thank the House for its indulgence. Sometimes I get carried away. Twenty minutes is not long enough. Mr. Speaker, I saw God-fearing people working in their fishing boats 10, 12 and 14 hours a day. They brought in loads of salmon which would command the price of $1.50 a pound in Montreal, or Arctic char, a delicacy which demands top prices in places like Montreal. Because of the dinky little stores provided by the federal government, they were filled to capacity with frozen fish. The fishermen were compelled to take their day's catch and dump it back into the sea. This is the kind of situation that is relevant to our motion. For this reason I would like to see the ministers get out of their carpeted offices. They will not find any Holiday Inns or Newfoundland Hotels on the coast, but they should visit that area at least once while in office in order to have a better appreciation of what I am saying when the very soon become members of the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, the motion now before us is of the utmost importance since it will enable Parliament to consider the possibilities of developing our natural resources in the Canadian North.

When in school, I remember having the map of Canada explained to me over and over again. I was always so fascinated by the teacher's explanations. Some years ago we could read on top of the map the words: "Dominion of Canada."

Development of Northern Canada

A few years later, the name was "Dominion of Canada" while the north changed neither in location nor in name. It was still the north, still the Arctic, still an immense territory which we were told was peopled with Eskimos and Indians, an immense tract of land unfit for white men's settlement, covered by ice and devoid of any resources men could benefit by.

Now, after reading the motion brought forward, I went out of my way to study the history of that vast territory in order to find out how it has been administered in past years, the past 90 or 100 years, and that is when I really understood why the motion has been brought before the House.

The motion is worded as follows:

That this House believes that an enlightened program of human and economic progress for Northern Canada offers great opportunities for the people of this country; and that the economic and social policies of the present government have brought about confusion and delayed progress; and that it is essential to make appropriate changes in our approach in respect of Northern Canada;

It is advisable, I believe, to take a quick look at what happened in the past and at the form of government that existed in the Northern Territories. The Act of 1869 concerning the transitional government provided for the first time for the administration of the land of Rupert and the Northwest Territories. But this legislaion was replaced by the Act of 1870.

Following the creation of Saskatchewan and Alberta the Northwest Territories government saw its status reduced to that which existed before 1870. The Act of 1905 established a council of four members appointed by the government, but no appointment was made during 16 years. An appointment was expected but none was made. After 16 years, a commissioner was appointed and given all powers that had been so far those of the Lieutenant Governor, the Executive Council and the Assembly of the Northern Territories. One man was carrying out all these duties.

The first commissioner was Colonel White, a Northern Mounted Police controller, who, from Ottawa, administered the territories, while carrying out his other duties. It is not surprising then that the North was developed very slowly, as it was administered almost in the same way as it had always been since the time of the fur trade.

It is in 1963 only that the duties of the Commissioner of the North were separated from those of the deputy minister of the federal department in charge of the administration of the northern regions. No territorial law was adopted between 1905 and 1920 and most of the orders made applied to conditions in the Prairies rather than in the region north of the sixtieth parallel.

The present act on the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development gives to the head of this department vast powers for the development of the northern territories, provided he gets the funds required to carry out the projects that are planned.

The present act gives him the non-allocated powers in all matters of federal jurisdiction in the North. The minister must co-ordinate in the northern territories the activities of the various federal agencies and provide and apply all measures required to ensure a greater economic expansion of the northern territories. He is entrusted with the control and management of all the vacant lands which form the major part of this vast territory. The federal government's interest and authority with regard to Northern development is mainly explained by the Act itself and the department established under the Act.

In general, the federal government is concerned with the Indians and Eskimos living in the Northern Territories where they make up a considerable portion of the population—nearly 60%—as well as with the development of most of these areas.

The territorial government has no separate and public body to provide the services which are usually available in the provinces, except for the Liquor Board. Employees of the Northern Development department carry out most of the administrative work, they teach school and provide social assistance as well as engineering work.

Since the headquarters of the territorial government is actually in Ottawa and that the commissioner and council members only visit the North occasionally, the average citizen of the northern territories cannot fully appreciate the contribution, which is still very limited, of the territorial government.

The sources of income within the jurisdiction of the territorial government are very limited. Consequently, a very rapid development of this territory is not to be expected unless the central government is willing to make its fiscal policy more beneficial to this territory.

When we read the history of the Canadian territories, we understand better why this region which contains all kinds of resources has not been developed more quickly.

The second part of the motion condemns the government for its failure to promote a truly Canadian strategy for the North based on human, capital and natural resources, and urges that appropriate policies be adopted at once that will bring about such development in that region.

The word "economy", derived from the Greek, means: good use of home resources. If we apply this definition at the national level, it is to be noticed that the word "economics" means good management of public affairs.

According to a division generally accepted, even by economists, three factors are necessary in order to provide men with the goods they need to provide for their wants: nature, work and capital. Those three factors are also necessary when the development of a given territory is concerned.

Sometimes, nature offers some resistance to man. This element is absolutely essential to the production and development of some resources, because without it human activity would be performed in a vacuum and it would be necessary to create, that is to make something out of nothing.

Whether intellectual or manual labour is concerned, it is the only reality which can be described as an active element. Alone it can take some steps in the production and development process of our resources.

Capital is a passive element. It does not exist per se. It is derived from nature and work and is at times fully created by those who have the privilege of controlling the nation's credit.

Nature provides man with a place to dwell, to build shelters, to cultivate the soil, to harvest fruit and vegetables and to breed stocks answering his two most essential needs: food and clothing. Lastly, the subsoil provides industry with minerals and energy.

Since those three components are required in a national economy looking after the needs of its members, it is normal that society, through the organization it has provided for itself and must improve upon, should ensure conservation and control of those three components, if it wants the natural resources—whether located in the Canadian north or elsewhere—to be at the service and fill the human needs of its members, the work to be geared to the fulfilment of the needs of all—not of a few or of some privileged classes—and the instrumental component, that is capital, to serve the appropriate ends of the national economy.

We have in Canada the potential required for the Canadian government to provide for the development of the northern territory. We have there natural resources a great number of which yet to be discovered. We have engineers, tradesmen of all kinds, the most up-to-date machinery in the world which is gathering rust in manufacturers' lots.

In brief, we have everything we need to develop this vast territory, which would provide employment for thousands of young people and make Canada benefit from their abilities. They would be only too happy, once their education completed or even during the summer holidays, to help through their ability and work, people older than they are to develop Canada and to discover throughout its immense territory, in the north or elsewhere, those great resources with which the Providence has endowed our land.

In that area as in others, in order to use human labour and machinery, one must have the necessary finances. In brief, the "dollar" must be available also, which is not the case yet.

Unfortunately, it happens sometimes that without thinking too much about it we believe that the sensibility of those living in northern territories is different from ours.

But after you have met some of them and have discussed with them and when you know their customs and how they want to improve their situation, you realize how much they expect from the Canadian authorities and from the Canadian people to develop all the resources which will enable them to live decently in spite of their primitive customs.

I do not question the goodwill of the minister in charge of this territory but he does not have all the tools required to improve the plight of those northern people.

Let us grant him the funds required to develop Northern Canada and we shall find that there will be no lack of projects. I am convinced that his staff are finding new projects daily. They are in a position to submit to him the projects which would make it possible to improve the situation, and develop those territories but the minister must often tell them: I should like very much to comply with your wishes, but available funds are limited.

If it were a war project, money would be there at the right time, as we saw in the past, unfortunately, and in adequate amounts. But as it is a peace, project money is not readily available. In fact, there is none. It does not exist in sufficient amounts to implement projects which should normally be implemented during the seventies at the latest because they were not implemented before. This is too bad. It is a logical conclusion in my opinion.

I urge the government to use its majority to subdue our financial system so that it may become a perfect servant for years to come and enable Canadians to build a beautiful country that will belong to them and not to foreigners.

Mr. Speaker, those were the points that I wished to bring to the attention of the House during the debate on this very important motion concerning northern territories. I am convinced that these two days of study on this subject will cause the government to take it into serious consideration and to bring suggestions that will help improve the situation and develop these territories.

[English]

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, development in the north has been a dream shared by millions of Canadians for many years. It was not till the period from 1957 to 1962, a period in which we had a Conservative government, that a genuine and vigorous effort was made to carry out or initiate such development. It was the continued destructive criticism levelled by the Liberal opposition of the day, just as is the case with Liberal members opposite today, which again arrested the development plan just as it was getting under way.

In considering such development every effort must be made to conserve the ecology of the region and to prevent pollution of the air and the water. The best possible living conditions must be offered white and native alike who live there now and who will be going to the north in the future. None of this can be achieved without an over-all, well prepared development policy that is based on research, study, adequate negotiations and consultation with the local residents, and a good deal of effort.

I must stress that orderly development can be achieved only with a nationwide policy of development that is acceptable to the population at large, and in this respect I think there has been a gross failure on the part of the present government. Since the Liberals returned to power in 1963 I think it is fair to say that northern development in all its aspects has been arrested.

Mr. McGrath: Remember how they laughed at the igloo to igloo policy?

Mr. Yewchuk: That is right. The construction of roads was slowed down by the discontinuance of the roads to resources program. There was a slowdown in development of other transportation systems, including the construction of airports. The government failed to continue to carry out educational planning toward the ultimate goal of establishing one or two universities in the north as well as a school system that would much more adequately serve the needs of the widespread population.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Who wrote the speech for you?

Mr. Yewchuk: In response to the hon. member may I say I wrote it myself. We write our own speeches on this side. Members on the other side always get them handed to them, but we prepare our own.

Mr. McGrath: The hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) always makes his best contributions from his seat.

Mr. Yewchuk: That is correct. The hon. member has not spoken in this or in many other debates, for that matter. This government has tightened its grip on the colonial style of government and has virtually killed any hope of provincial status for the Yukon or Northwest Territories in the foreseeable future. In industrial development, Crown corporations such as Northern Canada Power Commission, while useful in some areas are proving in other areas to be obstructive to the orderly development of private enterprise which, as has been shown on many occasions, can be much more efficient. With the new legislation before us—

Mr. Chrétien: A motion of this nature is very badly timed, because we found more oil yesterday.

Mr. McGrath: Perhaps you will discover the real north some day.

Mr. Yewhuck: If the minister wants to make a speech, I will yield the floor to him in five minutes. I have only ten minutes left, but I will share it with him.

Mr. Chrétien: I will speak tomorrow—and I will not have a prepared text, like you.

Mr. Yewchuk: If I may return to my remarks, I was saying that Crown corporations such as NCPC have proved in some areas to be obstructive to the orderly development of private enterprise, which on many occasions has proven to be much more efficient than civil service-operated corporations.

• (9:50 p.m.)

New legislation before us such as the Yukon minerals act pose greater possibilities of a slowdown of industrial development, particularly in mining. The possibility of slowdown is getting greater as the days go by. I am pleased to note that the discovery of oil was made before some of the new proposals of this government had been put into effect. I am sure they will cut down the amount of exploration going on in the north.

The slowdown possibilities posed by the Yukon minerals act are typical of this government's economic ability. There is not a comprehensive policy or strategy for this vast area of our country. We have seen nothing but an ad hoc approach and the Canadian people, particularly those of the north, are not benefiting from the kind of northern development that is possible and should be in motion at the present time.

In human and natural resources Canada is probably the world's richest country. Under the feeble guidance of the government this potential lies idle and useless. The Economic Council of Canada has estimated that Canada has lost $3 billion a year in income and jobs because of the economic ineptitude of this government. I think it is fair to say that with the present high rate of unemployment, the sagging economy and the decrease in personal income, the Canadian economy desperately needs a stimulus. The Liberal government has failed to come to grips with this need. The most obvious answer lies in the development of the rich potential of the north.

The Department of Regional Economic Expansion has made a feeble effort in what is known as the mid-Canada corridor, with its high resource potential and its sparse population. The approach used has not been in the context of an over-all development strategy, and for this reason alone this government should be served with an eviction notice at the next election.

For many years the Progressive Conservative Party has been a leader in the discussion of how best to utilize our northern resources. We must rekindle this spirit and vigorously press this slothful government for immediate and significant action. As I have mentioned, unemployment at the present time is worse than at anytime since the depression days of the 1930s, but we continue to export our raw resources and by that method we export thousands upon thousands of jobs to other nations. Why are we not developing resources here in Canada? Why are these raw materials not being processed right here? We have the know-how, the manpower and the money to do it. We have a good credit rating if we need more money. What is required is simply a government with development policies. We do not have that.

In considering northern development we must recognize that Canada has need of nationwide purpose. Canada needs a common objective behind which our citizens can gather to contribute individual talents and energies. We are in a position of being able to learn from others' mistakes in the past and avoid repeating them.

At the moment the majority of our population occupies a narrow strip along our southern border and the rest of the country is a tremendous, undeveloped area. We must avoid exploitation and a degradation of Canadian natives. We must avoid uncontrolled pollution of air, water and land. We must avoid indiscriminate destruction of what is in effect the only remaining, virtually untouched, habitable region left on this continent.

We have a unique opportunity. We know there is a need in the world for our natural resources and we should strive to develop them ourselves. We should develop them in a positive way, to the greatest benefit of our citizens. Perhaps it is time to reconsider and rethink the old ideas that our country's greatness depends upon exploitation and export of our raw, natural resources, particularly by high-subsidized corporations which some people consider virtually steal these resources from us to use in their own manufacturing processes, creating jobs in their own country and selling back the finished products at a very handsome profit. This seems to be the basis of the present government's policy. I say it is an outdated policy.

I do not want to be misinterpreted. I should not like anybody to think I am saying we do not need foreign capital. I do want hon. members to think I am saying the government has a responsibility to create an economic climate and mechanisms which would allow Canadians to do more of the developing and have the opportunity to play a greater role in solving unemployment problems and improving the economic despair which has been hanging over us since this government's policies have had the opportunity of becoming effective.

Any program to develop the north must take into account mid-Canada and the Arctic as distinct geographic belts. Development strategy should relate roughly to three distinct parts. There should be a separate program for the development of mid-Canada, there should be a separate program for the development of the Arctic, and there should be an over-all, co-ordinating program whose principal function would be to provide the various support facilities necessary for the implementation of development strategies for mid-Canada and the Arctic region.

Under such a program the rights of the indigenous people must be protected. This matter has been raised on many occasions in the House of Commons. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) have indicated that the native people along the Mackenzie Valley have been consulted with regard to the proposed Mackenzie Valley pipeline construction. Information given to me by the residents of the area would indicate that no such consultations have been held. I notice the minister looking in the other direction as I make these comments. I hope he can give us some information on this matter.

Mr. Chrétien: I am looking straight at you and your red shirt.

Mr. Yewchuk: The same applies to the future of the Eskimo. Adequate planning and consultation with these people must also be carried out, since in the development program their present method of gaining a livelihood may well be seriously altered, if not obliterated. Therefore, a plan of development must include a detailed plan for the development of these human resources in order to ensure that they are not simply overrun by machines from the south.

An hon. Member: That's Socialism.

Mr. Yewchuk: That is Conservatism. Protection of the environment cannot be overlooked. A massive effort in research is still required as against the token efforts now being made by the government. It seems rather ironical that this government is objecting to the TAPS system, proposing the Mackenzie Valley pipeline as an alternative, but as yet there has been nothing like the amount of research required before constructing a Mackenzie Valley pipeline without causing irreparable harm to the ecology of the area.

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Yewchuk: It will take five or ten minutes to complete my remarks, Mr. Speaker, so perhaps we should call it ten o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the House would allow the hon. member to complete his remarks, if he requires only another five minutes. I must inquire whether hon. members want the Chair to call it ten o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure what hon. members are agreeing to.

An hon. Member: An extra five minutes.

Mr. Speaker: Do hon. members agree that the hon. member be allowed to complete his remarks?

An hon. Member: It is ten o'clock.

Mr. Yewchuk: I know that hon. members would not want to hear any more of this tomorrow.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: You have your cheering section along with you tonight.

Mr. Yewchuk: With regard to natural resource extraction, an orderly program of exploration and development of our lumber, mineral and water resources is required, along with assessment and exploration of oil and gas reserves. In respect of an over-all, co-ordinating program, adequate transportation systems must be developed. There must be a re-establishment of the roads to resources program. There must be a further development of rail facilities. There must be greater research into the transportation of oil and other resources from the high Arctic.

• (10:00 p.m.)

As you know, Mr. Speaker, Panarctic is spending millions of dollars on exploratory work and many of these millions are public funds, but the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has indicated that he has not even thought of having research undertaken on how to transport oil from the high Arctic Islands if it is found in that area. That is rather startling when you consider the kind of expenditures being made. We still do not have any idea of how high Arctic oil will be taken to market so that a return may be realized on the investment.

There is some thought of a pipeline from the high Arctic, but there is no evidence that this is in fact a realistic mode of transportation, say of gas from Christian Island. Shipping is another possibility. But it is a United States company that has done most of the research, with the Manhattan project, into this method of transportation. We are told that Baffin Island is the site of some of the world's largest iron ore deposits. It would appear that an initial investment of $150 million would provide sufficient capital to bring one of these deposits into production. Therefore, why is this deposit not being developed? Could it be because of the failure of this government to assume, wholly or in large part, the cost of providing the infrastructure facilities required to service an entire area?

It could be that the development of a government-sponsored Arctic shipping network could satisfy these requirements. It could be that construction of a modern townsite at Mary River—the site I referred to—would put to better use government funds now spent at Inuvik or Frobisher, where there is little or no industrial base and little to support the native peoples there except welfare.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to conclude by again referring to the native population. I quote from the Globe and Mail of May 7 with respect to Indians in the Northwest Territories:

> There is a growing feeling among Indian leaders in the Northwest Territories that Indians are being used as guinea pigs.
> They feel that Indians have been overtaken with a subtle implementation of the basic concept of the federal government's supposedly discarded white paper Indian policy.
> The basic concept of the white paper policy was to bring about integration of Indians into Canadian society by granting them equality through such measures as the abolition of the Indian Act and the disbanding of the Indian Affairs Department.
> Indians reacted strongly against the policy proposal saying that it was simply a sop to white liberal ideals of equality which would result in the eradication of what remained of the rights granted to them for surrender of their land.

Again may I say that government policy which seeks to achieve healthy, productive and economically secure lives for the native peoples of Canada must respect their cultural heritage and traditions. The Canadian Indian must be free to choose to live in or away from his native community without prejudicing the opportunities available to him to enjoy the standard of living and quality of life of other Canadians. In both the formulation and application of such a policy the native peoples must be fully consulted and fully involved.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, thank you for your indulgence.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

AGRICULTURE—POTATOES—ASSISTANCE TO PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND GROWERS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to pursue with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) on this adjournment debate a question of very great concern to the people of Prince Edward Island. I am glad the minister is here this evening. This is an encouraging indication from him, I hope, of his interest and concern for the agricultural situation in Prince Edward Island.

[Mr. Yewchuk.]

I must confess quite frankly that from the answers the minister has given the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean) and myself during the past few weeks I wondered whether he was either well informed or concerned about the very serious situation existing in respect of the agricultural industry in Prince Edward Island. For some weeks the hon. member for Malpeque and myself have been attempting to find out from the minister what forms of assistance his department envisaged in terms of the very real problems that exist in the potato industry in Prince Edward Island.

It is no secret to anyone acquainted with the marketing of potatoes over the past few years that for some years now we have experienced very depressed markets, particularly in the marketing of table-stock potatoes. As a result, a number of farmers have tried to diversify into other forms of agriculture or into the growing of seed potatoes. But we in Prince Edward Island are in a particularly distressing condition this year. That is why on Thursday of last week I asked the minister again—it was not a new question; it had been raised on a number of occasions—whether in view of the very depressed conditions of agriculture in PEI and the recent submissions by the provincial Minister of Agriculture, he was prepared to indicate what forms of assistance would be forthcoming to the potato growers as they faced heavy expense in buying fertilizer and seed.

As those involved in the industry know, there is a particularly distressing problem at the present time in terms of farmers having sufficient funds to be able to get on the land and engage in spring planting. There is the heavy expense—particularly so this year, I might say—involved in the purchase of seed because of a crop which was not altogether satisfactory last fall due to a damp period during harvesting, as well as disease, as a result of which the number of people who have usable seed this spring is smaller than usual. All this is an extra expense to PEI farmers. There is the added expense of fertilizer. With fertilizer, as with most of the costs relating to agriculture, there have been regular increases, I think particularly so during the last couple of years.

The minister's response to me last Thursday was simply to indicate that at the present time potatoes were going at a very high price. I was really shocked by this answer—shocked to think he would deal with the potato industry of Prince Edward Island in such a cavalier fashion. He must know, if he knows anything about the potato industry, that the number of farmers who would have any usable stock of potatoes for sale would be minimal, almost to the point of non-existence. For farmers, particularly this year, it was hard for them to hold stocks for any length of time and most had to sell their stocks last fall, during the winter or early in the spring. It was a shame for the minister to suggest that now that prices are somewhat higher this would be of assistance to the producers.

That is why on Monday I presented a motion in the House urging the government to consult immediately with the province of Prince Edward Island to formulate a program this week of immediate assistance. This should not have come as any great surprise. Indeed, the party presently in power, about three years ago—I believe when the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) was Minister of Agriculture—initiated a program of acreage payments of, I think, $25 per acre which was of considerable assistance in terms of giving farmers sufficient financial resources with which to purchase badly needed seed and fertilizer.

I am wondering, Mr. Speaker—I do not really like to mention this—if we have not seen, because of the minister's unwillingness to act in this matter, a further instance of government policy to force a number of people to stop growing potatoes in Prince Edward Island. It is a rather brutal method, but I am told that one of the recommendations in a publication from his department suggests that there should be less potatoes grown this year. Well, that certainly will be the case so far as Prince Edward Island is concerned, because already too many farmers have been driven to the point of bankruptcy or have had to sell off their farms by way of farm auction. I quote the words of one rural banker the other day when he said to me, in terms of the crisis into which too many farmers have been forced, "This is the worst I have ever seen."

When the minister quotes, as he did on Monday in reply to the hon. member for Malpeque, the long-term averages, when we look at the situation on the basis of long-term averages that really do not make the present situation look very serious, I suggest he is trying to divert attention away from the problem, particularly when he includes New Brunswick with PEI. I would remind the minister that the agricultural situation is very different, in terms of potatoes, between PEI and New Brunswick.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's time has expired.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as I previously advised the hon. member, I had a very useful meeting with the ministers of agriculture of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. At that time they submitted a formal proposal requesting assistance. The agricultural stabilization board, of course, have been considering the proposal and they have not closed out consideration of it, but there are a number of things we have to take into account.

• (10:10 p.m.)

While it is true that for a very short period the price of potatoes to producers dropped to a very low level, since then prices have strengthened significantly and are now higher than they have been in three of the last five years. I am sure the hon. member would be interested in noting that the estimated return to all growers in Canada for the 1970 crop year was approximately 90.4 per cent of the long-term average, and that Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick growers returns were 98.1 per cent and 94.8 per cent, respectively, of their long-term averages. The return to the producers in Prince Edward Island, as a percentage of the long-term average, was higher than any other province for the 1970 crop year.

I do not wish to comment on the problems that agricultural producers are having with respect to purchasing seed, fertilizer and so on. I am sure the hon. member realizes that when we initiate an assistance program we must take into account the total returns to producers from their crops.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.14 p.m.

HARBOURS

STATEMENT ON PORTS POLICY

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in August of last year I invited comment from interested parties on a number of proposals designed to improve the operation and development of our major Canadian ports. The response was gratifying both in terms of the number of submissions and the comprehensive nature of the various suggestions advanced. In addition to receiving a number of written submissions, I met with various representative groups particularly from the Vancouver, Montreal and some of the major Atlantic ports to discuss at first hand with them their particular suggestions and problems.

Although the submissions received represented a very wide range of different and sometimes conflicting views there was unanimity on two basic principles. First, there is a continuing and increasing need for federal participation in comprehensive planning of port development on a national basis. In determining the federal role, it has become clear to me that the situation is not precisely the same for every major commercial port. Indeed, there is a diversity of practices that will need to be reconciled, but I am convinced that the federal role can be achieved best through the closest co-operation with the provincial governments and even more particularly with those concerned with the particular ports themselves.

Second there is a clear need for more local involvement in the day to day operation of our major ports and for more effective communications between these local groups and the federal departments and agencies with responsibilities in these fields.

To meet this second objective, I propose to create local port authorities for each of the nine major ports now administered by the National Harbours board, namely and from west to east, Vancouver, Churchill, Montreal, Trois-Rivières, Quebec City, Chicoutimi, Saint John, N.B., Halifax and St. John's, Newfoundland. Details concerning the responsibilities and make-up of each of these authorities will be worked out through consultation. In general terms, I can say that each group will be as representative as possible of all local interests, including management and labour, municipal and provincial authorities. Each will have a good deal of autonomy, including consultation in the appointment of port managers, the preparation of budgets, forward planning and all other important matters.

In order to strengthen still further the expressed desire of many to bring the decision-making process closer to the actual ports, rather than having much of it centered in Ottawa, we will change the system that has seen all four members of the National Harbours Board resident in the capital. In future, one member of the board will reside in Vancouver with special responsibility for dealing with western ports and one will reside in Montreal with similar responsibilities for the east.

Also, since there are major port developments on the west coast that are outside the normal activities of the National Harbours Board, but which are of great present or potential economic importance, we intend to appoint a senior official of the marine transportation administration of the Department of Transport to co-ordinate all port developments in British Columbia and to serve as the department's direct liaison with various harbour interests. This official will, of course, be resident in British Columbia.

These steps alone should do much to answer the need for local autonomy and for shorter lines of communication. In addition, there is a need for co-ordinated planning at the national level and for a means through which the various port authorities can be kept informed of what is taking place in other parts of the country.

To answer this need we will establish a National Ports Council. It will be chaired by the marine administrator of the Department of Transport, and its membership will consist of nominees from the port authorities and, as well, from the various harbour commissions throughout the country. In addition, because inland provinces without harbour facilities have a vital interest, nevertheless, in how our major ports are administered, we will invite the provinces to name representatives to the National Ports Council. This council, and thus indirectly, the port authorities and commissions will act as advisors to the Department of Transport and the National Harbours Board.

One of the first assignments to be given the council will be the task of monitoring how the new system is functioning and to make recommendations for additional improvements. Some who submitted briefs in recent months have suggested that some ports now under the National Harbours Board should become, instead, commission harbours under the present Harbour Commissions Act. There was a wide divergence of views on this point and, in any event, much study is needed to assess fully the wisdom and practicability of such a transfer.

Since the National Ports Council will in fact be making recommendations about the total system and what ports should remain under the National Harbours Board or, alternatively, what ports might be granted commission status, it would be premature in my view to alter the legislation affecting the National Harbours Board until such recommendations are received. It is my intention, however, to announce soon the appointments of new members for the National Harbours Board and, at as early a date as practicable, the names of those who will serve on the National Ports Council.

In addition, representatives to the local ports authorities will be named without extensive delay because quite clearly the functioning of the National Ports Council is contingent upon their appointment.

I am sure that all those concerned will agree that this is a practical step which the government is now taking to ensure that Canada's ports remain strong and viable. At the same time, it ensures that private initiative is integrated in an effective way with the general objectives of the federal government which must be concerned with the good of all Canadians and not just of any particular vested interest or indeed particular region.

When I announced the reorganization of the new federal transportation complex a little over a year ago, I stated one of the purposes of change was to adopt new principles designed to co-ordinate, stimulate and balance regulation, operation and development throughout the entire transportation system. I also emphasized the greater emphasis which was to be given to decentralization of responsibility and to the concept of financial viability through the balanced use of the principle of cost recovery. The new ports policy is not only consistent with this objective but an important step in carrying it forward.

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister of Transport for having provided the Official Opposition with a copy of his statement in advance so that we might have the opportunity to prepare a reply. We welcome this statement by the minister on his new ports policy. Since his announcement of last August, all those concerned with the activities of various ports have anxiously awaited details of his proposal.

In general, we in the Official Opposition agree with the objectives set forth—to decentralize responsibility and ensure financial viability. We realize that this is simply a statement of objectives and that machinery is to be set up to hammer out the details of the program. A determination as to which ports shall remain under the National Harbours Board and which shall receive commission status will emanate from discussions with the parties concerned.

We hope the minister will be receptive to having the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications visit the ports concerned to make an assessment of the situation and present its recommendations to the National Ports Council.

We trust that any changes in the administration will not interfere with the present efficient operation of the ports and that proper consideration will be given to the existing labour force and that there will be no undue dislocation of the same.

We note that the new council is to make recommendations for additional improvements. We suggest that the council should constantly review policies and present an annual report on its findings. I would hope that when policy is finally formulated under the set-up of the new board there will be a greater measure of control than exists under the present board. I hope there will not be a repetition of unauthorized people settling or squatting on harbour commission property, with the expensive litigation that has followed.

The program as outlined will give a greater degree of responsibility to the local port set-up but we are wondering what will be the situation with respect to policy-making. It is not clear from the minister's statement who will be responsible for policy-making. Will it be the National Ports Council, the Minister of Transport or the port authorities themselves? Will the Ports Council also be responsible for co-ordinating the activities of the various ports?

I welcome the suggestion by the minister that the National Harbours Board should be decentralized so that the four commissioners will no longer reside in Ottawa. I note that one commissioner will be stationed in Vancouver, and another in Montreal to handle the affairs of all the ports in eastern Canada. I urge the minister to give consideration to stationing a port commissioner in the Atlantic provinces. As a Maritimer himself, I am sure he will agree with me that the Atlantic ports are different in their nature from the port of Montreal and that sometimes they are in competition with Montreal. We fear that if all control is centralized in Montreal decisions may sometimes be taken to the detriment of the more active ports in the Atlantic provinces. I ask the minister to consider this point when final decisions are made as to setting up the board.

I reiterate that we welcome this proposal of the minister. We hope he will go along with the suggestion of letting the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications assess the situation, and that as a result of their recommendations, plus the recommendations made by the many people concerned, this board will soon be established.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the minister for having provided us with an opportunity to have an advance look at his statement. The announcement he has made today is, in my opinion, an important one because I think no member of the House would argue that the ports of Canada are not one of our most important national assets in a great trading nation.

The basic principle of the minister's statement is, I think, one with which we can all concur, namely, that while we must recognize our harbours as a national asset and national responsibility, there is a need for flexibility in administration and for some degree of local autonomy in their operations. I realize that this statement, in the minister's own words, is simply a rough outline of the steps that are to follow, and therefore we cannot at this point arrive at any definitive conclusions as to how these proposals are going to work.

I am glad that the minister has made reference to the need for greater attention to be paid to the management of harbours generally on the Pacific coast and to the fact that special attention is going to be given to existing problems. I cannot help but interpolate that I hope one of these days some of the smaller fishing ports about which I have been bugging the minister for some time will receive similar attention. As far as our major export ports are concerned, I think the idea of having local administrative bodies that will be autonomous except in matters of major general national policy is sound.

One of the questions that has been raised in many quarters about the operation of local harbour authorities is as to who is going to take the initiative in making appointments. This is one point that I had hoped the statement of the minister would clarify, but it did not. While the minister says that these bodies are to be generally representative, he does not say who is to have the determining voice as to who in fact those representatives will be. This is a point that I hope he will clarify very shortly because I think it is of real concern to many people. Does the authority to appoint rest entirely in the hands of the minister, or does it depend on the appointing authority of local bodies, such as city councils or provincial governments, labour bodies and that sort of thing? I regret that the minister has not clarified this point in his statement because I think it is one of the keys to any judgment and assessment of how well his proposed system is likely to work. I can only say that we will be watching very closely the developments that take place in the coming months.

[Translation]

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the Minister of Transport for making his statement available to us in both official languages.

According to this statement, the minister realizes that the situation is not the same in all Canadian ports. That is to his credit! However, he attempts to define the function of the federal government in the administration of those ports.

There is mention of sharing responsibilities and carrying out studies. In the latter case, there is rapid progress, but with regard to realizations, it is not the same thing. As a matter of fact, 100 years ago, our country ranked fourth among countries having a merchant marine, and ours numbered over 1,000 units. Well, today Canada does not own more than two, and I feel that is reason enough for a minister to wonder about the part which the government should play in water transportation.

The minister reveals in his statement his intention to create a National Ports Council. To my mind this is another gimmick within the whole gimmick. It is another agency to create jobs for certain gentlemen who are seeking a role in the administration of the country. It is true that the establishment of a National Ports Council would put to use some offices across the country, but this would also mean the employment of a few more civil servants.

Since our country has 60,000 miles of coastlines, which is more than twice the circumference of the globe, and since we have such a great number of unemployed in Canada, we Créditistes would really have preferred to learn of the establishment of a merchant marine.

TRANSPORT

NEWFOUNDLAND RAILWAY SERVICE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I rise to move a motion under Standing Order 43 for the usual reasons. A recent statement by the Canadian Transport Commission enunciated and accepted principle of that body to ensure the continuance of transcontinental passenger service to meet the needs of the Canadian public. Two years ago the elimination of rail passenger service in the province of Newfoundland rendered that goal unattainable. Today the downgrading and impending elimination of passenger, express and freight service further displaces this national goal. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan):

That the complete question of rail service in Newfoundland be referred to the Standing Committee on Transportation with a directive from this House that the province of Newfoundland be granted equal status in line with the objectives of the rail transportation policy as stated by the Canadian Transport Commission.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe. This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity so the motion cannot be put.

Regulations of trucking has in the past been in the hands of the Provinces and information as to the rules which exist for the transport of hazardous commodities by highway may be obtained by contacting directly the various Provincial governments.

STUDY OF HEALTH AND MORTALITY RATES OF MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Question No. 792—Mr. MacRae:

Has any department ever made a study of the health conditions, mortality tables, et cetera, of the Members of the House of Commons comparable to that carried out a few years ago in the British House of Commons?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): The only study which has been made is on the mortality experienced by Members of the House of Commons in connection with the establishment of the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act.

SNOWMOBILE SAFETY RESEARCH

Question No. 801—Mr. Hales:

For each research project on snowmobile safety standards mentioned by the Minister of Transport on January 19, 1971, at page 2536 of Hansard (a) to whom was the grant given (b) what is the purpose of the grant (c) what is the amount of the grant (d) when are the results of the research to be given to the government (e) is it expected that the research findings will be made public?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): (a) A research project has been awarded Hovey & Associates, Vehicle System Engineers, Ottawa. (b) The purpose of this research project is to carry out a detailed examination of the design and operation of snowmobiles, to identify areas of design, construction or equipment that are related to their safe operation, and to form the basis for development of additional snowmobile safety standards. (c) The amount of this research contract is $45,500. (d) The final results are expected by the end of May, 1971. (e) When the results of the research project have been received consideration will be given to this.

AIR CANADA—INCREASE IN BUSINESS—IMPROVEMENT OF YARMOUTH SERVICE

Question No. 1,017—Mr. Comeau:

1. By how much has the air service business increased over the past five years and by how much can the service be expected to increase before larger aircraft are needed?

2. (a) How long have Viscounts been used by Air Canada (b) have these aircraft been paid for (c) have the revenues from Viscount flights been sufficient to pay for the cost of the aircraft?

3. When calculating earnings, what percentage is allocated to improvement of the Yarmouth service?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. Statistical data in this regard may be found in monthly and quarterly reports issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics under the heading Transcontinental and Regional Air Carrier Operations, Air Carrier Operations in Canada and International Air Charter Statistics. In addition significant statistics relating to Air Canada may be found on pages 22 and 23 of the company's printed Annual Report for the year 1970. The need for larger aircraft is related to a combination of factors such as volume of traffic at any given point or on any given route and the frequency of service that it is desirable to provide.

2. Viscounts have been used by Air Canada since 1955. The present Air Canada fleet of Viscounts is now fully depreciated.

3. The company does not allocate any specific percentages of total earnings to service improvements at specific points, but rather develops a service plan each year based upon estimated growth and service requirements related to expected revenues and operating costs.

Questions

CBC—CANADIAN PROGRAMS

Question No. 1,089—Mr. Yewchuk:

1. Is any provisional data available which would give the number of new (a) Canadian producers (b) production of Canadian feature films, since CRTC decision to provide for more Canadian programs on television and, if so, what is the approximate number of increases for both groups?

2. What financial assistance will the government give to CBC and private broadcasters who will be needing bigger budgets to meet CRTC requirements of Canadian programs on television?

3. Which educational institutions in Canada offer courses in (a) the development (b) the techniques (c) the social and artistic functions of film and television?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): 1. I am informed by the Canadian Radio Television Commission that no provisional data is available. It is somewhat early for the CRTC to assess the effects of the new Television Broadcasting Regulations in terms of new Canadian producers and production of Canadian feature films, since the regulations only began to apply to the CBC on October 1, 1970, and will not apply fully to private stations and networks until October 1, 1972.

2. The Government will continue to give financial assistance through the presently existing channels, i.e. annual Parliamentary grants to the CBC, and CFDC aid to the private feature film industry.

3. Studies in various aspects of communications are now widespread in universities and colleges across Canada. A considerable number of post-secondary institutions are now equipped with broadcasting and film studios and provide both background courses and practical experience in producing films and television programmes. Information regarding courses available is contained in "A Guide to Film Courses in Canada" published by the Canadian Film Institute.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE—INCOME DERIVED FROM COMPUTER SERVICES

Question No. 1,208—Mr. Robinson:

What income, if any, is derived from the computer services provided by the Department of National Health and Welfare (a) from other departments (b) from sale or services to industry (c) to provincial government departments (d) to municipalities?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The Department of National Health and Welfare does not derive any income from its computer services.

RESEARCH STUDIES ON MOVEMENT OF SOLIDS BY PIPELINE

Question No. 1,222—Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West):

1. Has CTC recently entered into any agreement with any Research Council or similar organization of or in any of the western provinces for a feasibility study of the movement of coal or other solids by way of pipeline and, if so (a) on what date (b) with whom (c) for what amount (d) what was its purpose and other pertinent detail?

2. (a) Is there authority for the power and ability to enter into such a research agreement and, if so, what is it (b) what is the source of funding such a project?

3. Is CTC aware of lengthy research studies on the movement of solids by pipeline conducted by the Research Council of Alberta on behalf of a syndicate, transportation, oil companies and others funded by a research grant from the former Department of Industry in or about the year 1965 and, if so, how would the first mentioned study differ in purpose, etc., from that conducted by the Research Council of Alberta.

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: 1. and 2. The Canadian Transport Commission has entered into an agreement with the Research Council of Saskatchewan to undertake studies and research to prepare "large-scale slurry property data appropriate to suitable candidate commodities for transmission in pipelines". This agreement was signed on December 24, 1970; however, the negotiations leading up to this agreement commenced in detail in the early spring of 1970. The Treasury Board submission for an amount not exceeding $400,000 was made on July 6, 1970. Funds for the project are to be allocated as follows: $104,000 fiscal year 1970-71; $121,000 in 1971-72; $130,000 in 1972-73; and $45,000 in 1973-74. The purpose of the research into slurry pipeline hydraulics at S.R.C. is to: (a) provide CTC with appropriate technical information on the design of slurry pipelines from which appropriate costing and subsequent economic analyses can be made on that portion of the slurry pipelines system interfacing between the slurry preparation and the slurry reconstitution plants at the source and destination locations respectively; (b) encourage the consolidation of a Canadian Team to undertake meaningful large scale research and development into the hydraulic design of slurry pipelines; (c) make known, to the Canadian public, all technical information directly arising from the research.

The Saskatchewan Research Council, under this agreement is: (a) not attempting to investigate either the technical or economic feasibility of specific commodity movements by pipeline; (b) not attempting to study directly the technology of slurry preparation, reconstitution, subsequent movement of the slurry commodity by other transport modes or other related areas.

In a specific sense, the objectives of the physical research at the Saskatchewan Research Council are to study the hydraulic performance of metallurgical and thermal coal, iron concentrates, potash and sulphur in a water-base slurry in pipelines. Studies will be carried out in 2/4/6/8/10/12-inch diameter pipe test loops. The conditions under which the tests are to be carried out are to be as close to commercial situations as is possible.

Surveys of certain industries have shown that a great interest exists in industry to obtain large scale slurry technical information. Even certain consultants in related fields, who claim that they have considerable large scale data, stated that there are several unknown areas such as start-up characteristics, grade control criteria, and erosion and corrosion problems. These are areas of investigation within the S.R.C. program. Subsequent to the initial industrial survey, members of the Coal Consumers and Producers Association have shown very serious interest in the possibility of moving not only metallurgical but thermal coal by slurry pipelines, and have offered their assistance in the practical orientation of the coal slurry research.

The authority to enter into this Agreement is the 1967 National Transportation Act, Section 15.

The source of funding the project as a whole is Vote 55, Canadian Transport Commission main estimates for the fiscal year 1970-71 and for all subsequent years to March 31, 1974, from the Transport Development Agency.

3. CTC is aware of the research carried out by the Research Council of Alberta on the Transport of Commodities in capsule form. CTC. is, however, also aware that the Research Council of Alberta has not investigated the hydraulic performance of large scale slurry pipelines at their facility. The nature of these two types of solids pipelines is completely different. The research, therefore, carried out at RCA. for the future (sponsored by T.D.A.) is not similar to the SRC. work, in subject or in nature.

Questions

INDUSTRIAL MILK QUOTAS

Question No. 1,267—Mr. Nesbitt:

Were any industrial milk quotas transferred from Ontario to Quebec between January 1, 1970 to March 31, 1971 and, if so, how many?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): It is only since Ontario and Quebec introduced market quotas on December 1, 1970 that the Canadian Dairy Commission has maintained readily available records of the origin of subsidy quota transferred between these provinces. From December 1, 1970 to March 31, 1971, 350 quotas have moved from Ontario to Quebec.

LEGISLATION WITH RESPECT TO ACTIVITIES OF BANKS

Question No. 1,315—Mr. Rodrigue:

2. The cost of this program was within the budget allocated for the purpose. It has not been customary to require the Corporation to disclose such detailed information about individual programs.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Before the remaining questions are allowed to stand I should like to ask that questions 1,098 and 1,100, both standing in my name, be allowed to be dropped as I have already been furnished with the information requested.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

• (2:30 p.m.)

Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Speaker, on November 12, 1970, six months ago today, I placed a simple question on the order paper asking for an audited financial statement of the affairs of the Blue Water Bridge Authority. This question was taken in order that certain disturbing rumours that were circulating about the financial operations of the Authority could be brought to an end. As the seconder of the bill originally establishing the Authority in 1964 I have a particular interest.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must interrupt the hon. member. I hope he will not make a speech. I do not believe a motion that the remaining questions stand is debatable. The practice that hon. members may inquire whether or not a specific question will be answered has been allowed, but I do not think it should be the occasion of a speech on the part of an hon. member who is complaining that his question has not been replied to or a speech on the part of the parliamentary secretary in reply. I assume the hon. member will put his question as soon as possible.

Mr. McCutcheon: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the seconder of the motion on the bill I feel a moral responsibility and I would hope the government would see fit to answer this simple question soon.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was good enough to speak to me about this matter last week and following this I have had the matter reviewed. I did have some information on it this morning and I hope to be able to table a reply soon.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I have been on my feet weekly for the last month or more asking the parliamentary secretary when I may have an answer to question 79 which was not only placed on the order paper on October 8 but was also on the order paper last session. It has been there for a year or more. I do not think it is that difficult a question. The parliamentary secretary has been very nice and has assured me the answer is coming. I am anxious to know when it is coming.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, I am unable to give any assurance to the hon. member at this time, but we are working on it.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT—INCLUSION ON AGENDA OF FORTHCOMING FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the question of unemployment will be placed upon the agenda of the forthcoming federal-provincial conference as has been requested by, among others, the premier of Ontario?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question of the agenda of course has to be agreed to by all members of the conference. I agree with the Leader of the Opposition that Mr. Davis has asked that this be done. However, I cannot answer the question until the first ministers have a discussion concerning what the agenda will contain.

CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES ON MEASURES USED TO FIGHT INFLATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. In relation to the policies of the government for which the Prime Minister now accepts the blame in terms of the creation of unemployment, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether there was consultation with the provinces and agreement by the provinces with regard to these policies which created unemployment?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I recall the sequence of the policies with regard to the fight against inflation, there was consultation with the provinces and general agreement by the provinces that this was a major problem in Canada and that all governments must do all they could to fight inflation in the country.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance very directly whether he or some other minister of the government consulted the provinces and secured their agreement to the adoption of policies deliberately designed to slow down the economy and therefore create unemployment, for which the Prime Minister now accepts the blame, despite all the difficulties they would create for the provinces?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, there was consultation with the provinces at several meetings of first ministers, and Ministers of Finance and provincial treasurers, at which this was agreed to be the major problem in Canada and at which it was agreed that certain things, including some wage guidelines, would be adhered to by the provincial and federal governments. I must say that beyond the meeting at which this was agreed some of the provinces at least were not noteworthy in carrying out the voluntary guidelines with regard to wage settlements in respect of their own employees.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

PARTICIPATION BY REPRESENTATIVES OF YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the government has made provision with regard to the forthcoming federal-provincial conference for the inclusion of representation of the councils of the Yukon Territory and Northwest Territories at that conference?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of the question and if the Prime Minister is not here tomorrow I shall endeavour to answer it.

INCLUSION OF UNEMPLOYMENT PROBLEM ON AGENDA OF FORTHCOMING MEETING

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Témiscamingue rising for a supplementary?

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have a supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister.

Since the agenda of the federal-provincial conference will not necessarily be established or submitted exclusively by the provinces, and the federal government will have a say in the matter, does the government intend to suggest discussion of the alarming unemployment situation at the conference?

[Mr. Stanfield.]

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am quite confident that whether in this Parliament or among the first ministers there will be discussion about economic conditions in Canada. Whether that discussion should take precedence over the importance of agreeing upon a formula for amendment of the constitution and other matters is, I think, a question of judgment. I would hope that this meeting and all members of the House would agree that we should make as much progress upon the question of constitutional reform as possible.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT—ASSISTANCE TO PROVINCES AND CITIES ALLEGEDLY INJURIOUSLY AFFECTED BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the government has now admitted its role in the unprecedented high unemployment the country faces, is the government now reconsidering its position and is it now in a position to state it is prepared to help the provinces and cities which have been practically bankrupted as a result of the policies of the government?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is not asking a question; he is making a statement. The hon. member knows very well that a question cannot be asked in those terms. Perhaps he could make it easier for the Chair by rephrasing the question.

Mr. Alexander: I will rephrase the question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Acting Prime Minister indicate whether, as a result of the government's fiscal and monetary policies, the government is now in a position to give further assistance to the provinces and cities which have been injuriously affected?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the premise of the question. I think the policies followed by the government have resulted in a stronger Canada than would otherwise have been the case, and if one doubts this one should look at the situation throughout the world in respect of inflation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North on a supplementary and then I believe we should move on to the next subject. If hon. members have further supplementaries on this subject a debate could develop. Hon. members will know, of course, that when argumentative questions are asked argumentative answers are given and we have a debate rather than questions and answers. However, I think we might allow the hon. member for Winnipeg North to ask a supplementary and then we will continue with the next subject.

CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES ON MEASURES USED TO FIGHT INFLATION—MANITOBA RESERVATION RESPECTING WAGE RESTRAINTS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. When the government of Canada discussed the question of its restraint program with the provincial governments, is it not true that the government of Manitoba entered reservations with regard to the federal government's proposals, including the reservation that wage restraints should be implemented only if restraints on other forms of income, including rents and profits, were included along with wage and salary restraints?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I think that at the particular meeting about which my hon. friend is talking, which was a meeting of Ministers of Finance and provincial treasurers, such a condition was suggested by the province of Manitoba. It was also indicated by some provinces, as indicated by some members of the opposition, that they really did not care about inflation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PUBLIC SERVICE

CLYNE COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION FOR WITHDRAWAL OF RIGHT TO BARGAIN COLLECTIVELY FROM CERTAIN EMPLOYEES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. It is supplementary to one that I asked yesterday and which I would have asked had Your Honour not rung the bell at the end of the question period. In view of the minister's statement to me yesterday regarding the removal of top public servants from collective bargaining, which the minister said was a request for a prejudging of the review, may I put the following question to the minister. In view of the fact that on April 26 the Prime Minister gave tacit approval to this recommendation,will the government not relieve the apprehension of top public servants by stating that the government has not taken the position of approving the Clyne committee recommendation in this respect?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): I would repeat again that to make a judgment now, and in fact to report a decision or to suggest a decision, would be prejudging the issue. I cannot share the hon. gentleman's view that top civil servants are apprehensive about the Clyne committee report.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If the minister feels that it is not appropriate to prejudge the situation, why did the Prime Minister do so on April 26 when he tabled the Clyne report?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

COMMUNICATIONS

JURISDICTION OVER TELECOMMUNICATIONS AND BROADCASTING—FEDERAL POSITION

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State.

Could the minister tell the House whether he has strengthened his position by defining government policy in respect of federal jurisdiction in the field of communications and more particularly in broadcasting?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I don't know exactly what the hon. member has in mind when he talks of strengthening my position. The positions that I have expressed so far and which are those of the government are, in my opinion, firm. I can only say to the hon. member that we shall formulate them more precisely in a very short while.

JURISDICTION OVER TELECOMMUNICATIONS AND BROADCASTING—DISCUSSIONS WITH QUEBEC AND ONTARIO AT FORTHCOMING FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question to the Secretary of State.

According to the news we receive with regard to communications, Ottawa would be ready to negotiate while Quebec is entering the field. Would the minister tell the House whether the federal government has started negotiating with the Quebec government and if so, what reply did it receive?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that the hon. member's question, including the preamble, has been put previously. Should I be mistaken, the minister is free to answer it, but I think that this question has been asked before.

Is the hon. member for Charlevoix seeking to ask a supplementary?

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is as follows:

Will the Secretary of State produce a working paper at the next premiers conference in Victoria in order to start discussions with Quebec and Ontario on telecommunications?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer this question by yes or no. I realize that the agenda of the Victoria conference is not an accordeon, in the sense that it cannot be extended indefinitely. On the other hand, should the premiers request that this issue be put on the agenda and should the government ask me to produce a paper, of course my department would be ready to do so.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Speaker: I now recognize the hon. member for Joliette, for a supplementary.

[English]

May I bring to the attention of hon. members that quite a few supplementary questions have been asked on the original three questions. I suggest to hon. members that we attempt to limit supplementary questions at this point because obviously a number of hon. members are seeking the floor.

The hon. member for Joliette.

Mr. La Salle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Referring to yesterday's answer given by the Prime Minister to the effect that discussions have already opened between Quebec and Ottawa officials and taking into account the wishes of both Quebec and Ontario concerning telecommunications, I would like to ask the hon. minister if he is in a position to say whether his government will allow the provinces to take part in the formulation of the federal policy on this matter?

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, this question seems rather vague. I have already indicated—and I believe it to be the government's position—that there have been discussions aimed at dividing responsibilities especially in production where all producers in Canada will have to do their share in the field of broadcasting if we want to meet the requirements of a consistently developing system.

INTERPROVINCIAL MARKETING—SUPREME COURT HEARING—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES TO ACHIEVE COMMON POSITION

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice with regard to the desirability of the Canadian government and the provinces agreeing on a constitutional position. Has he consulted the Attorneys General of the provinces with regard to the position they might take at the Supreme Court hearing with regard to the Manitoba appeal court decision on interprovincial trade so that the federal government and the provinces might take a united stand at the Supreme Court hearing?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): In the course of the usual proceedings the factums representing the positions of the various provincial governments and that of the federal government will be presented to the court and argued out before that court.

Mr. Horner: I know it will be argued out before the court, but my question was whether there has been any prior arrangement by the federal Minister of Justice in consultation with the Attorneys General of the provinces so that they might present a united argument at the Supreme Court hearing? Has there been any prior consultation?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I have had certain informal conversations with some Attorneys General, including the Attorney General of Manitoba. It is within the interests of the Attorneys General to represent their provinces as they see fit. I have said to the hon. member and the House that I intend to defend the constitution through counsel at the Supreme Court level.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): When these factums are filed and are available publicly, will the minister table copies of the factums so the House can decide if the government is defending the constitution or has only a watching brief?

NATIONAL SECURITY

SCOPE OF TERMS OF REFERENCE OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): My question is to the President of the Privy Council. It concerns the motion to establish a special joint committee which as I understand will be debated tomorrow. The answer to this question may give some direction and determine the length of the debate. The terms of reference contain the following words:

—the nature and kind of legislation required to deal with emergencies that may arise from time to time in the future—

Does the President of the Privy Council agree that the alleged crisis that took place last fall would be material evidence under the terms and conditions of that motion?

Hon Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): I think the terms speak for themselves. It was not intended that it would be a back-looking motion but rather one looking to the future.

Mr. Woolliams: Does the minister not agree that, in preparing legislation for the future in reference to a possible crisis, what occurred in the province of Quebec and what occurred in Parliament with regard to legislation would be material evidence to assist the committee to come to a conclusion?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that this would be a relevant argument to make tomorrow when the matter is before the House.

Mr. Woolliams: May I say with the greatest respect, Mr. Speaker, that unless the House wants the debate to last a considerable length of time this simple and straightforward question should be answered. I have asked a straightforward question and if the minister says yes the debate might be shortened accordingly.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has put the question. I did not dispute the question in the first instance, but he asked it a second time and I suggest that perhaps this is debating in advance a matter which will be before the House tomorrow. I had some doubts as to the original question by the hon. member. I took into account the circumstances which he brought to the attention of the House, but I do not think it would be helpful to have the question asked a second time.

Mr. Woolliams: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. As far as I can see, the whole motion is a sham and a whitewash.

Mr. Fairweather: I have a supplementary and related question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the hon. member in a moment. For the time being I recognize the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF INCOME SUPPORT PLAN PRIOR TO FINAL DEBATE ON UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BILL

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Several weeks ago the minister undertook to bring forward his income support program for fishermen before we debated finally the unemployment insurance legislation. Can the minister tell the House how soon we may expect that income support program to be provided to hon. members?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, it has not been possible to bring it forward in time for the first year of operation of the new unemployment insurance plan and therefore the matter should be reviewed in that light.

Mr. Douglas: In view of the fact that members will have to make a decision with respect to the unemployment insurance legislation which allows the government to remove fishermen from the benefits of that legislation, will the minister be able to give the House, some time before that legislation is dealt with, an outline of the kind of income support program for fishermen that he has in mind?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, there is provision under the new unemployment insurance plan, as it has been explained and introduced in the form of legislation, for coverage for commercial fishermen for the indefinite future. I do not expect to be in a position to outline an alternative plan for catch insurance before the unemployment insurance legislation is passed.

RETENTION OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS FOR FISHERMEN PENDING NEW PLAN

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister assure the House that the present unemployment insurance benefits to fishermen will remain part of the present unemployment insurance legislation until a plan is brought in which will assure them of at least as good a position as they now hold under the old legislation?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think this promise has been made many times by the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. The present plan provides coverage of fishermen in the same manner and on the same basis as in the past. I understand it is the intention of the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry to introduce some time in the indefinite future, I think he said, a plan that will be comparable and acceptable to the industry.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I again suggest to hon. members that we will soon be running short of time and we have already had two supplementaries on that question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FINANCE

OIL AND GAS EXPLORATION INDUSTRIES—CONSIDERATION OF POSITION IN PREPARING INCOME TAX CHANGES

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I have a question for the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell the House whether he has become aware of the deficit that has arisen in the discovery of oil reserves in the province of Alberta as against the utilization of present stocks, and has he taken note of this in the preparation of income tax changes as they deal with resource development industries, in particular the oil and gas industry because this is one of the very serious positions that is affecting the future discovery of oil and gas reserves?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have heard the representations of my hon. friend and similar representations made earlier.

INDUSTRY

MAINTENANCE OF OPERATION OF McBEAN COAL MINE

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources a question I have raised previously. Is the minister in a position today to announce if a decision has been reached regarding the request of the Nova Scotia government for a $2 million grant to allow the McBean mine to continue in operation?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to so announce today, but discussions are continuing with the Nova Scotia government.

Mr. Muir: In view of the minister's answer may I ask him if it is the intention of the government to continue to use the 200 miners involved at the McBean mine and their families as political pawns in the Central Nova by-election?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for South Shore.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DISCUSSIONS WITH FRANCE ON PHASING OUT OF FISHING ACTIVITIES IN CANADIAN WATERS—NEGOTIATIONS WITH OTHER COUNTRIES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister indicate when he expects to hold discussions with the French authorities on the thorny question of phasing out their fishing activities in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and in areas adjacent to Nova Scotia and Newfoundland?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I understand there will be preliminary discussions beginning next week.

Mr. Crouse: Following those discussions will the minister consider making a statement on motions at an early date outlining any progress made in the discussions with the French as well as indicating whether any progress has been made in discussions with Portugal, Spain, Italy, Denmark and the United Kingdom?

Mr. Davis: I shall certainly consider that proposal, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby has a supplementary to a previous question and I will recognize him shortly. For the moment the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate has a supplementary.

VISIT BY PRIME MINISTER TO SOVIET UNION—DISCUSSION OF DEPLETION OF CANADIAN FISHING STOCKS BY RUSSIANS

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): My supplementary is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Can he indicate whether, when the head of our government visits the Soviet Union next week, discussions will be held on the east coast fishery and the depletion of our fishing stocks by that country, as promised by the Prime Minister about six months ago?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): I shall draw this to the Prime Minister's attention, Mr. Speaker. I am sure he will want to discuss with the Soviet authorities all important matters of Russian-Canadian relations.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker —

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again I bring to the attention of hon. members and of the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate that about 25 members of his party and as many members of other parties are awaiting an opportunity to ask their questions and we should limit supplementaries.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I shall forgo my supplementary but I should like to say that I have no intention of limiting supplementary questions on the east coast fishery after six or seven weeks have passed with hardly a question on a matter of such importance.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member please resume his seat. The hon. member knows that according to the procedures and the Standing Orders supplementary questions are in the jurisdiction of the Chair. When 25 or 30 members are seeking an opportunity to ask their questions it is difficult to determine at what point we should try to go on to the next subject. I know that hon. members feel very strongly about certain questions and I apologize if I make a mistake and go on to the next question too soon, but I can assure the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate that I try to be as fair as possible.

[Mr. Crouse.]

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, in the last two years questions have been raised in the House a number of times about the 40-minute question period. Perhaps I should raise a question of privilege and say that if matters of vital importance, such as the east coast fishery, have to be circumvented and cut short because of the 40-minute question period, then it is time to reassess the fact that we are being guillotined by this kind of rule in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Lundrigan: It has been brought to the attention of the Speaker on a number of occasions that we cannot get our points across sometimes in the 40-minute period, and when we would like to pursue in some detail the matter of foreign fishing off our shores we are not able to do so because debate is not permitted on many occasions when we would like to do it so in the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not a question of privilege at all in my opinion. The hon. member has an interesting point when he says that we cannot consider all matters of importance during the question period. This is obvious as there are only 40 minutes allotted. I suggest to all hon. members that the question period was never designed for exhaustive debate on all important matters that are under consideration or of interest to members at any one time. I suggest that hon. members have to exercise discipline to some extent, co-operate with other members and give others an opportunity to ask their questions. It is as simple as that.

Mr. Lundrigan: A supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate on a supplementary, but we have already taken five minutes on this point and to my mind that is highly unfair and unreasonable.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lundrigan: My supplementary question is to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Would the minister request that during the Prime Minister's visit to the Soviet Union he seriously and formally discuss with that government the matter of the exploitation, rape and depletion of our fishery resources off the east coast of Canada so that we will get an official position from them on the conservation and management of these resources?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

REPORTED DISPENSING OF SO-CALLED ABORTION PILLS BY DOCTORS IN HULL AREA

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In light of reports that so-called abortion pills are being dispensed by doctors in the Hull area and in light of the proven uselessness and indeed danger of such pills, will the minister investigate the matter and take steps to warn the public?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I shall certainly have the matter investigated, Mr. Speaker, and report back later.

Mr. Speaker: I shall return to the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby whose supplementary was lost in the shuffle a moment ago.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

EXPANSION OF COAL PRODUCTION AT NO. 20, COLLIERY, GLACE BAY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, during that shuffle I seem to have lost the minister as well so I shall refer my question to his parliamentary secretary because it is of very real importance. I am informed that the minister is behind the curtain. Perhaps he is listening. Would the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion inform the House whether or not he has taken action on the request by the provincial member for Cape Breton East that the minister bring about an expansion of coal production at No. 20 colliery, Glace Bay, as one important means of dealing with the 25 per cent level of unemployment?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond wants to answer for the minister, but perhaps the hon. member who asked the question might ask it again. The question period will not be charged with the few seconds used to rephrase or put the question the second time.

Mr. Broadbent: Thank you for your indulgence, Mr. Speaker. I will omit the preamble. Can the minister inform the House whether he has taken steps to bring about an expansion of production in No. 20 colliery, Glace Bay?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, but I could ask what are the plans of Devco in that regard and report to the hon. member.

FISHERIES

SWORDFISH—RESUMPTION OF OPERATIONS BY FISHERMEN—PROTECTION OF PUBLIC IN SALE FOR HUMAN CONSUMPTION

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is not about coal and is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Now that swordfish are considered safe for human consumption, when will the minister make a public announcement that will allow our swordfishermen to resume operations?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I have not heard that all swordfish have been cleared for human consumption.

Mr. MacInnis: Since the minister has said that he has not heard that swordfish have been cleared for human consumption, am I to take that his departmental officials are watching the sale of this commodity closely in order to protect the public?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, we have been watching swordfish and other fish very carefully. Tests are carried out at all times and only fish which pass our very strict standards are allowed to be sold on commercial markets.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. This is a matter of great concern to each and every member of the House and each and every staff member of the House. I ask the minister, what kind of operation is he running in that department? He has publicly stated that his departmental officials are carefully watching this commodity; yet on May 11, yesterday, the parliamentary restaurant served swordfish.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You walked into that one, Jack.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, all fish that are sold commercially, and this applies not only in Canada but to Canadian fish sold commercially abroad, have first been tested and our department's inspection service guarantees that it is safe for human consumption.

Mr. Speaker: In any event, it appears that some hon. members have survived.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I will allow the hon. member one more supplementary, but I remind hon. members that only five minutes are left before the end of the question period.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, may I raise a further question of privilege. Why did the minister announce the policy that prevents swordfishermen from taking these fish from the ocean, because they cannot be tested until they have been caught? Why does he not allow them to take the fish and subsidize their operation if there is anything wrong with the fish?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not a question of privilege.

Inquiries of the Ministry

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF SEASONAL BENEFITS BEYOND MAY 15

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Labour. Inasmuch as seasonal benefits payable under the unemployment insurance plan expire on May 15, is it the intention of the minister to extend that date, in order to prevent workers from going on welfare and thereby imposing a heavy financial burden on the municipalities?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I cannot presume that everybody who comes off unemployment insurance goes on welfare. I am sure the hon. member would not want to mislead the House in that regard. I have no intention at present of extending seasonal benefits beyond May 15.

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Acting Prime Minister.

FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING BILL—OBJECTIONS TO ALLEGED FALSE AND MISLEADING NEWSPAPER ADVERTISEMENTS

Mr. Colin D. Gibson (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Has he received objections from the Canadian Federation of Agriculture to false and misleading newspaper advertisements calculated to oppose Bill C-176 and obviously intended to misinform the farmers of Canada, which solicit replies to the Leader of the Opposition in particular?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the advertisements may be misleading in trying to purport that the Leader of the Opposition would be effective in his opposition, but surely it was not the purpose—

LABOUR RELATIONS

DISPUTE BETWEEN HUDSON BAY MINING AND SMELTING COMPANY AND EMPLOYEES—STATE OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour and relates to the unfortunate situation at Flin Flon, Manitoba, where members of the Association of Trade Unions have been on strike against Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company for three and a half months. Has the minister anything further to report in relation to the recent resumption of negotiations?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker, other than to say that the offer submitted by the company was rejected by the unions a few days ago and talks have not resumed since. Unless both parties appreciate their responsibility to the community of Flin Flon, I might find it necessary to appoint an industrial inquiry commissioner in the near future.

GRAIN

WHEAT—ADDITION OF UNUSED PORTION OF LIFT PROGRAM FUNDS TO TRANSITIONAL PAYMENTS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the fact that only $53.7 million of the $100 million voted for Operation Lift has been paid to farmers, and since the minister has expressed satisfaction with farmer response to the program, is the government considering adding the unspent portion of the money voted to the transitional payments provided for in Bill C-244. This would be done, of course, after making allowance for certain payments still to be made.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, of course the $100 million associated with Operation Lift was an estimated figure of the amount which would be used if farmers took the fullest possible advantage of the program. The amount spent indicates exactly the extent to which they took advantage of the program and the extent to which cash flow increased in the Prairie region under that policy.

Mr. Burton: Does the minister then renege on the $140 million figure that he originally gave to the House of Commons?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I should like to make it clear that at no time did I indicate to the House of Commons a $140 million figure, although it is true that some press headlines used that figure.

An hon. Member: Where did they get the figure?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: From Information Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Is the minister in a position to provide the House with information on the status of the re-examination of the report of the programming board, which is being carried out by his department and officials of the governments of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, with respect to the Bay of Fundy tides? Can he also tell the House who is heading up the re-examination as far as his department is concerned?

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

AUTHORITY FOR ISSUANCE AND DISTRIBUTION OF PUBLICATION "BI-MONTHLY RESEARCH NOTES"

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. On March 16, as recorded on page 4293 of Hansard, and again on May 6, as recorded at page 5558 of Hansard, I raised a question concerning a publication issued under the authority of the minister of the environment. I was promised a reply to that question and I wonder if the minister has an explanation now?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, some of the staff of the forestry service in their enthusiasm produced a draft document which was reproduced by the Queen's Printer and which contained a reference to the department of the environment. This has since been distributed with an erratum sheet attached correcting it to read "Department of Fisheries and Forestry."

MILLHAVEN—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF REPORTED HUNGER STRIKE

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice in his capacity as Acting Solicitor General. In order to avoid any serious difficulty, will he investigate a reported hunger strike engaged in by 85 per cent of the inmates at Millhaven the other day, which apparently resulted from lack of exercise, no reading material and lack of razors and other facilities?

Hon. John N. Turner (Acting Solicitor General): On behalf of the Solicitor General, without conceding the preamble to the question I will have the matter investigated.

Mr. R. J. Orange (Northwest Territories): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Has the minister indicated to the city of Edmonton the conditions under which the industrial airport of that city will be kept open to 737 air traffic?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not done so formally. I received a report this morning from the officials of the department who went to Edmonton for consultations on the matter. They have put forward a set of proposals which I understand are acceptable to all the parties as an interim measure. PORTS POLICY—ASSURANCE THAT HARBOURS BOARD EMPLOYEES WILL NOT LOSE JOBS

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport about a matter which was not contained in his statement on port policy. Now that the changeover is formally taking place and new appointments are to be made, about which reference was made, will the minister again give a full guarantee that there will not be one employee of the existing National Harbours Board out of work after this changeover takes place?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I can give that guarantee in this context, Mr. Speaker. The reorganization that I am anticipating, and which I announced today, will not affect any employee of the National Harbours Board. It may be that the normal kinds of operations will result in either hirings or firings, but they will not be related to this change.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): My question is for the Minister of Justice. It is important because of tomorrow's debate. Does the minister know whether Claude Ryan and others allegedly involved in the plot to set up a parallel government have been charged with seditious conspiracy or with an offence under the Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act, or are they to remain a convenient excuse for those attempting to prove the need for invocation of the War Measures Act?

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR LIST OF ACCEPTED PROJECTS AND AMOUNTS TO BE EXPENDED

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): My question is for the Secretary of State. In view of the fact that the minister indicated yesterday that more than 600 projects under the Opportunities for Youth program have been accepted and 100 more per day, is the minister willing to table a list of these projects, the number of people involved, their locations and the amount of money to be expended so that the Canadian public may have a better idea of the effective nature of this program?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I do not see anything wrong with that, Mr. Speaker. I could even say to the hon. member that we intend, as of today, to inform all members by sending them a daily list of all the approved projects.

[English]

[Later:]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I wonder whether the Secretary of State will answer the question directly with regard to tabling a list of these projects. Also, will he indicate whether it is the case that some provinces are directly represented in the selection of the projects under the Opportunities for Youth program? If so, will he indicate what provinces are represented?

Mr. Pelletier: I did answer the question directly, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry if the hon. member did not understand my answer. I said that I am favourably disposed to tabling a list of the projects when they are completed. All provinces were informed that if they wished they could send one of their civil servants to act as advisor to our secretariat as far as their region was concerned. I know that Quebec and Ontario have done so and maybe some others, but I am not sure.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—PRIORITY TO EMPLOYMENT OF STUDENTS IN TAKING CENSUS

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): In the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce I will direct my question to the Secretary of State. In view of the concern expressed about the problem of student unemployment this summer, did the government consider giving priority to university students for the thousands of census-taking jobs or did it decide to award these jobs in the traditional way to loyal local party supporters?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question, asked in those terms, is not in order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—ALLEGED FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO ADOPT POLICIES TO DEVELOP THE HUMAN, CAPITAL AND NATURAL RESOURCES OF NORTHERN CANADA

The House resumed, from Tuesday, May 11, consideration of the motion of Mr. Baldwin:

That this House believes that an enlightened program of human and economic progress for northern Canada offers great opportunities for the people of this country; and that the economic and social policies of the present government have brought about confusion and delayed progress; and that it is essential to make appropriate changes in our approach in respect of northern Canada;

And this House condemns the government for its failure to promote a truly Canadian strategy for the north based on human, capital and natural resources, and urges that appropriate policies be adopted at once that will bring about such development in that region.

And the amendment thereto of Mr. Lewis.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the debate in which we have been engaged since yesterday is quite wide ranging. The opposition have been talking about a vision of the north. During the debate they have discussed the policies of the north. Some hon. members have said that the government is not providing enough incentive to the mining industry and in so doing is destroying the potential development of the north. The leader of the New Democratic Party talked about extravagant socialism. He said we should not develop the north, but sit on the resources that are there. I detected in the representations made by the leader of the New Democratic Party that his main preoccupation was not so much what is going on in the north, but he is afraid that everything from the north is going to the United States. If he checked the facts, he would see that most of the exports from the north are not going to the United States but to Japan, India and western European countries.

I cannot understand the position of the opposition. This is not a very embarrassing attack on the government. On the one hand, we have the main opposition party stating that we are directing the north toward a socialist state and, on the other hand, the leader of the New Democratic Party says we are just selling to American interests. However, Mr. Speaker, we should not be influenced by these positions in trying to assess the situation and decide the kind of development which should take place in the north.

This government is not like the previous government. We are not trying to develop the north in a nebulous and uncontrolled way by merely building roads and development of resources. Our objective is a balanced development in the north which takes into account all the factors which we have in mind with regard to developing any part of Canada. In terms of northern policies, the first objective of this government is the people of the north. We have to make sure—

Mr. Yewchuk: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the minister, but a point of order is being raised by the hon. member for Athabaska.

Mr. Yewchuk: I wish to refer to a statement the minister made yesterday. He said: "I will speak tomorrow, and I shall not speak from a text." I see that the minister is reading directly from a prepared text.

An hon. Member: Peanuts.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the minister might be allowed to make his speech in any event.

Mr. Chrétien: If I were reading from a text, Mr. Speaker, I would not be making the errors in English I am now making. If the hon. member knows a bit of English he will recognize that I am not speaking from a text. I am speaking from my mind and my heart right now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I have no prepared text but I can say we know where we are going in the north; we understand the position much better than do members of the opposition. Yesterday there were complaints that nothing was going on in the north. As usual, the opposition showed a bad sense of timing because on the day they put forward their motion in the House another discovery of oil was made in the north. It is always the same. The opposition does not know where to go, in the north, in central Canada or in Quebec.

As I was saying, we have decided that the north is not to be developed at any cost. The first thing to be considered is the wellbeing of the people in the north. It is all very well to be sentimental and talk about the traditional way of living of the Indians and the Eskimos. But at a time when the Eskimo birthrate is 46 per 1,000 because the government is providing better health services than ever before, and at a time when the average life expectancy of native citizens in the north is increasing to a point at which it is almost equal to that of white citizens, it is necessary to find ways and means of permitting Indians and Eskimos to follow a different way of life if they choose to do so. This is why we have decided to put people first. This is why we are providing better services than before.

I should like to remind those who say we are doing nothing in the north that when the opposition was running the country—and those were pretty bad times—in 1960, there were only 930 Eskimos and 948 Indians in school. Nine years later there were 3,100 Eskimos and 1,600 Indians in schools.

An hon. Member: The same program.

Mr. Chrétien: Why are hon. members opposite so sensitive? They say it is the same program. But when the opposition formed the government they were spending $56 million on Indians. Right now we are spending $264 million, apart from what is being spent on health services. Of course, it is the same program, but the emphasis is on the number of dollars we can put into these developments, since we are concerned with people.

Mr. Nielsen: Those figures apply to Indians all over Canada.

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, but I am speaking of the north, too. We have 730 native people in vocational training schools at the present time. We are spending more than $76 million on education alone in the north, compared with probably one-tenth of that sum when the Progressive Conservative party was forming a government.

An hon. Member: That was ten years ago.

Mr. Chrétien: It was not a progressive party, of course. Look at the housing program in the north.

Mr. Nielsen: You are not proud of that, surely?

Mr. Chrétien: Not proud of it? You were talking about going from igloo to igloo, but we are talking about going from one house to another. When I visited the north last summer, accompanied by the former Interior Secretary of the United States, I found he was amazed at the kind of housing available to Eskimos.

Mr. Nielsen: Eskimos, not Indians.

Mr. Chrétien: I know we have not done so well for the Indians, but we are on the way to improving the situation. I realized that was the situation when I was first appointed, which was why I put the Indian and Eskimo programs in the north under the same roof, as it were—to give the same services to each. I hope that within a few years we shall be able to give the same kind of service to the Indians as to the Eskimos in terms of housing.

Criticism has been directed toward the kind of bureaucratic administration from Ottawa which is responsible for some aspects of northern administration. We have transferred the administration of the Northwest Territories to the new capital of Yellowknife and right now we are trying very hard to extend a policy of local government into the settlements. We have founded the first municipalities in the north. Yellowknife, for example, was the first to be established as a city. We have passed ordinances providing for settlement councils and many of the small communities in the north are now administering federal programs themselves. I repeat that we are concerned with people. We must make sure that we provide these people with opportunities to work if they are to share the advantages of the general economic and social levels of Canada.

Of course, we are criticized for not doing enough. I admit that two or three years ago probably only 3 or 4 per cent of the labour force in the mining industry were native people. However, I am glad to report that two years later 17 per cent of the workers employed in the mining industry in the Mackenzie District are native people. Last year we signed an agreement with the Pine Point Mining Development Company as a result of which 21 per cent of their employees at the Pine Point mines are natives. So, the situation is not as bad. Of course, we must continue these efforts, backing them up by a good education program to give the natives the schooling they need to take these jobs.

Some social problems are developing in connection with this effort. Of course, we cannot force Indians and Eskimos to work in the mines if they do not wish to do so. But I say to the Indian and the Eskimo people that we are willing to give them training. In fact, we have trained a lot of Indians and Eskimos in schools at Fort Smith and Edmonton to work on heavy equipment or to become operators on drilling sites and so on. At the same time, even if Indians and Eskimos are taking training to do some of these jobs, I say time and time again in my speeches that it is not only the Indians and Eskimos who have to adjust; the white man has to adjust, too, and accommodate himself to the ways of the Indians and the Eskimos. The Indians and Eskimos should not always be called upon to adopt the same methods of work as ourselves.

I am confident that in time more and more of the native population will become part of the labour force in the north and share in the benefits of northern development. However, if we wish to provide these opportunities for the native people it is necessary to develop the north. This is where my position becomes uncomfortable, because I am caught between two fires. Spokesmen for the Official Opposition tell me I am too tough on the mining industry, I am not giving them sufficient incentive to develop the north. In short, I am not giving them a free ride in the north. On the other hand, the members of the New Democratic Party have told me to sit tight on our resources; not to develop the north or sell non-renewable resources, to keep them frozen in case 20 years from now those assets are of greater value. But what is going to happen in the meantime when there are not enough foxes or caribou or seals to provide a livelihood for the natives?

• (3:30 p.m.)

An hon. Member: You have plenty of seals over there.

Mr. Chrétien: My first preoccupation is with the native people in the north. Certainly, it is not my ambition to sit on resources of the north so that Indians and Eskimos are deprived of any opportunity to find a place in the wage economy and have their share in the wealth of Canada, thus forcing them to live on welfare. Our policy is to develop the north in a balanced way. Even if I am caught between these two extremes, the position of the government and myself is that we want to develop the north in a balanced way so as to take account of human need and the market that exists for our natural resources. We need a new emphasis in these days because of the preoccupation of the Canadian public with ecological problems. We have to find new methods.

For example, we are doing some seismic work trying to find oil and gas. We are taking modern machinery into the tundra where Eskimos and Indians used to hunt their caribou, foxes and muskrats. Some hon. members, like the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk), may laugh at this, but the Eskimos on Banks Island have a real problem finding foxes, as do the Old Crow Indians in hunting muskrats. Even though this is not all that important to the total development of Canada it is damned important to them, and this is why I have personally visited the area in order to find some solution.

I have concluded that the solution is to ask oil and gas companies and mining industries to take into their labour forces some of the trappers from various localities to advise them whether they would be destroying trap lines or the habitat of the wildlife when conducting their operations. We must develop the north in such a way that we do not repeat the errors that have been made in the south. We have developed many mines, gas and oil fields in the south of Canada, and at the same time have created pollution problems.

The government has not been waiting for the opposition to tell it what to do. What amazes me, Mr. Speaker, is that the opposition do not realize that the problem they are talking about today was resolved a year ago when this House passed four different pieces of legislation dealing with environmental control in the north. Perhaps the opposition were asleep the day we passed the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Northern Inland Waters Act, the land use regulations—

Mr. Harding: Just one question; have you proclaimed the Northern Inland Waters Act?

Mr. Chrétien: You are referring to the land use regulations. You asked me many questions, and I told you why we have not proclaimed them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the conversation between the minister and the hon. member might be continued later outside the House, but for the moment the minister should make his speech, which is addressed to the Chair.

Mr. Chrétien: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have to have a balanced development of the north to make sure that this development, first will be in the interests of the citizens of the north and also to the benefit of the economy of the whole of Canada. I am amazed that members of the opposition attack the government for having done nothing in the north. Hon. members might be interested to know that in 1963 mining production in the north reached a total value of $29 million. In six years we have taken the total from $29 million to about $200 million.

Mr. Baldwin: You owe that to the Pine Point Railway.

Mr. Chrétien: That railway is not used in the Yukon. I know the argument used by the other member from Alberta. Since the people of Alberta benefit from northern development, I think hon. members should give us some encouragement rather than trying to stop development in the north.

Mr. Baldwin: That is why we have moved this motion.

Mr. Chrétien: I think that the goals we have in the north have been spelt out by the government on many occasions. I do not want to repeat what I have said so many times in speeches in this House, but perhaps I can just elaborate for a few moments on the kind of objectives we have developed over the last few years for the north. The government has made very clear what are its goals. What we are seeking in the north is a more satisfactory life for northern residents who must become full partners with other Canadians in developing the area and whose preferences and aspirations must be taken into account.

We must also protect the northern environment and prevent irreparable damage to it. This means controls based on research and planning. We intend to maintain Canadian sovereignty and security in the north. We must continue to encourage viable economic development within the regions of the north so as to realize their role in all the objectives and their potential contribution to the national economy. We want to ensure the continuous evolution of government in the territories. We want to realize the potential contribution of the northern territories to the social and cultural development of Canada. We intend to encourage development of leisure and recreational opportunities in the north, particularly through national parks and other appropriate conservation measures. Those are the general goals we are proceeding towards in the north.

I am glad that the opposition has chosen the north as the subject of this two-day debate. What disappoints me is that members of the opposition did not put forward any suggestions for developing the north. They have moved a long way from the vision of the north held by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). Although there were some criticisms yesterday, many of the members who spoke did not even refer to the north. Some members spoke about Labrador, some about new Quebec, some about the Athabasca delta in Alberta and some about the British Columbia government, but very few members of the official opposition made a speech on the north.

A debate like this is an occasion for presenting positive ideas. Although some members had good ideas, the majority did not talk about the real issue, which is: Should we or should we not develop the north? Should we or should we not try to find out whether there are renewable resources in the north? What kind of development should we undertake? Should we construct pipelines in the north or should we not? That is the kind of issue we should debate. Very few members on the opposition side will adopt this approach. That is why I decided to speak first today in an attempt to put this debate back on the rails, otherwise we are wasting time.

An hon. Member: That is what we are doing now.

Mr. Chrétien: I am discussing the real issue, I was glad the leader of the NDP stated we should not sell our renewable resources. I do not share his view, but that is what he stated. He said we should not sell gas to the United States. That is his position, but he should have checked his facts. Much of the production from the north is going to Japan, West Germany, India and so on.

An hon. Member: He said he was not an expert.

Mr. Chrétien: That was quite evident when he spoke. I think there is a possibility of finding a solution which lies somewhere between the suggestions of those who say our resources should not be sold, and the position adopted by others that we should develop our resources and take advantage of them. If you sit on an asset for years and years, you lose all the interest on that asset. You lose the market and you do not derive any revenue which would permit the development of schools, social programs and so on.

The government realizes once more that we cannot go the way members of the official opposition are advocating. They suggest we should just follow certain grandiose visions, build roads, develop our resources without much concern for other problems—the problems of the people and other interim difficulties. There are two approaches to the development of the north. We must develop northern development by finding jobs, and we must do this in a way which will avoid creating new problems. We know there is a lot of gas and oil in the north. We have not yet scratched the surface of this vast land which contains 1.5 million square miles. This amounts to 40 per cent of the land area of Canada. It is half the size of the United States, nine times the size of France and is equivalent in terms of area to that of Ontario, Quebec, Manitoba and Saskatchewan put together. Even if we find a few mines and develop them, along with a few oil and gas fields, we will not deplete the resources of this vast area. If we do not try right now to find these resources we will never know the extent of the resources in that area. This is why we are trying to provide incentives to industry to move to the north. I am referring particularly to the oil and gas industries.

What is significant is that in the north we have a diversity of prospects for Canadian investors. In respect of the oil industry, for example, the first foreigners in the north were the French.

An hon. Member: You mean the minister?

Mr. Chrétien: I had in mind the French from Europe where my ancestors of 300 years ago lived. Since that time we have become Canadians and we speak French. We need incentives. In the Arctic Islands, for example, most of the land exploration is under control of Canadians through Panarctic. The Canadian government has a 45 per cent interest in that endeavour. Most of the private corporations participating in that venture are Canadian concerns. Between 75 per cent and 80 per cent of the shares of Panarctic are controlled by Canadians. This is a new development undertaken by this government.

We need money to find oil. You do not just look at a map and say there is oil there; you have to drill wells. The cost of drilling a well in the north is approximately $2 million. This is a very expensive operation. You must use aircraft to get the material there. We must have plans for development, and we must take into account the need to protect Canadian sovereignty in the north as well as the interests of the Indians and Eskimos there. We must make sure that these vast resources are found and developed in the interests of the people there.

Those who think we have no competition in the resources field better not kid themselves. Along with a member of the NDP and a member of the official opposition, I visited New Zealand and Australia. Those who think we have no competition should visit the northern part of Australia to see the kind of mines they are developing there. Those who think there is no competition in respect of our resources are not on very solid ground. A lot of natural gas has been found in the last few years in the North Sea off the coast of Europe. Perhaps they will devise some method of developing oil fields there.

As a result of these developments, we might find in time that we have lost our markets for our own resources. We have to devise sound development plans. We must develop enough to maintain interest, and at the same time make sure we retain enough reserves to improve our bargaining position if the market becomes improved. This is exactly what we are trying to do.

There is reference in the motion to the difficulties of the Indians and Eskimos in the north. I referred to this today at the beginning of my remarks and I should like to come back to one main point. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) suggested we should look into the rights of the aboriginal people in the north. That hon. member, coming from Alberta, should know that the Indians in the Northwest Territories have treaties with the Crown. We have made many attempts to solve these treaty problems with the Indians. We have held many meetings with them.

Mr. Nielsen: Treaties do not apply to the Eskimos.

Mr. Chrétien: Let me finish. I am talking about Indian treaties. I will come to that point later. We have assured these people that we intend to honour these treaties. During our consultations with the Indians we were told that before they will make any deals in respect of treaty rights they want to resolve their own positions. They intend to retain their own experts, and they have asked the government to help them form a committee to look into these treaty and other rights. They have their own specialists.

Let me settle one thing right now. We have appointed an Indian claims commissioner to look into this situation along with our experts. He is available to these Indians in the north for discussions regarding their treaty rights. They say they are not quite ready to discuss these matters.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. minister but his time has expired.

An hon. Member: Go ahead.

Mr. Chrétien: With permission I can complete my remarks in a few minutes.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. minister is seeking the consent of the House to pursue his remarks. If that consent is given I respectfully suggest that the extension should be brief. In about an hour and a half the vote will be called and a number of members have indicated an interest in this debate and a desire to participate.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I will bring my remarks to a close in a few minutes.

I want to say that most of the Indians in the Northwest Territories are party to two treaties, namely treaties 8 and 11; we have told those Indians that we have every intention of respecting those treaties because we would not impose a unilateral solution on them.

Now, there is the matter of two particular groups in the North, the Eskimos and the Yukon Indians who have yet to negotiate a treaty with the Crown. Obviously, with regard to the Yukon Indians, we can consider their situation similar to that of the B.C. Indians who have presented their case to the Supreme Court of Canada, basing their claims to certain rights on legal arguments, and it would be quite inappropriate for me now to comment on a possible decision of the Supreme Court of Canada. Everybody knows that the Indians of the Nishka Tribal Council, in northern British Columbia, have submitted the question of their rights to the Supreme Court and are waiting for a decision.

As regards the Eskimos, last winter they took a similar decision about their rights, and they joined the Indians from British Columbia in order to obtain a decision from the Supreme Court. I understand that the question is now before the courts.

However, as regards our attitude, we do not believe that it is always necessary to use the same approach as the United States. In fact, it was rather amusing to note that NDP members, who are always traumatized by what comes from the United States, suggested that we should follow the same course of action as the Americans regarding the Eskimos and their rights.

In my opinion, we can find, in Canada, an original solution, and those we have proposed until now tend to ensure that northern development will benefit as much as possible the Eskimos and Indians, the first inhabitants of those territories.

I could dwell on that for a long time, but I must say that our policy is well established. As a matter of fact, we are trying to proceed to a well balanced development that will take into account not only the interests of the citizens living in the North, but also those of the whole country, because mistakes that have been made in the South must not be repeated in the North, we must protect the environment. That is why, even last winter, we took measures which have proven, I believe, that we were interested in these problems long before the opposition which, as usual, woke up a little late. The opposition has dealt with problems for the solution of which we had already passed legislation last year. Even from the point of view of timing, as I said, the opposition, with its usual awkwardness, acted once again in a strange fashion: It moved a non-confidence motion the very day we discovered a new oil-field in the North; all this proves that it has lost whatever for sightedness it might have had a few years ago.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my views on northern and national development have been expressed by me many times in this House before. Rather than go over them again, I shall review some of the philosophy of the government which prevents the implementation of adequate policies for development. All the minister seems to do every time he rises is talk. He is great at winding up but has no pitch. The failure of the present government to promote, articulate and advance, let alone construct, a truly Canadian development strategy for the north can and should be discussed from many perspectives. This is one reason the motion is couched in such broad terms.

Today, I would like to speak to the motion in terms of the central personality of the Trudeau government. The failure of this government in the north is not a peculiar defect, not simply a problem of priorities. It is symptomatic of the general atrophy and unacceptability of this government as an instrument of Canadian development and the public good.

There is no constructive, realistic, coherent or Canadian design for the development of the north because the government has no such design for Canada. The minister talks of isolated projects but fails to emerge with a pattern of development. This is because the government has no such design for the country as a whole. There can be no intelligent strategy for the north by a government that has not a development strategy for Canada. Therefore, this is not merely a motion of non-confidence in the Minister of Indian Affairs (Mr. Chrétien) or the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene), although they richly deserve a singular motion of non-confidence, but a motion of non-confidence in this government and its lack of design and counter development strategy for Canada.

A discussion of northern development is not simply about the appendages, but the heart of the government because the destiny of the north is intimately and integrally connected with the development of Canada. To view the north as an incidental and experimental matter is not only colonial, it is a stupid development policy. For instance, the north will not be developed by some utopian spin-off of 10,000 unemployed young people being told by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on Friday in Vancouver to build a city in the north. For what purpose? What will they do there and how much will it cost? How will they sustain themselves? He does not say but looks for ideas. A full recognition of the potential growth and a conscious diversification of the Canadian economy is the first step.

Further, it would be a sell-out for Canada to escape the TAPS pollution danger by the premature construction of a Canadian oil pipeline in our north. Recognition of native rights to land and adequate research on ecology are essential prerequisites. It would not take an instant for the minister, on behalf of the government, to say they recognize native land rights and will deal with them. But he has not done that and escapes in a diverse fashion by saying we will not follow the United States precedent. The people in the Yukon ask for the recognition of their land rights, but the government does not budge and does not recognize those rights. Standing up for our west coast as firmly as the government appeared to do for the north coast would be both more courageous and practical.

Development of Northern Canada

I have said these things, not to make a case against the government's past behaviour, but to underline the assertion that the possibility of a truly Canadian development strategy for the north depends on the capacity and equality of a government strategy for Canada. And the development of either is a function of the personality of the government, in this case of the Trudeau government. I would like to express some of my conclusions on the question Peter Desbarat asked back in 1968: "He looks fantastic"—referring to the Prime Minister—"but will he work"? Another question should be added: "At what will he work?" Will he work at putting 800,000 Canadians deliberately thrown out of work back on the job? What has he done about the face of a people pockmarked by poverty? What does he do about implacably rising costs of living? What does he do about lakes and rivers all fouled up, and air that kills, and terrorists who kill? What does he do about a land beset by internal pain for which diagnosis is conflicting and prognosis uncertain? What has he done with the law of our land which now punishes for holding an opinion, assumes guilt in the absence of proven innocence and gives such law retroactive effect? At what will he work? At being a leader who pantomimes obscenity upon the stage of Parliament.

These questions are about the three fundamental components of a federal strategy for Canada—inspiration, energy and organization. I assert that on all three the collectivity of Trudeau has been inadequate, wrong, lazy, anti-democratic and disorganized, and in the north his policies have been Simon-pure socialistic.

What has been the inspiration of this government? What are its intellectual preoccupations? I think it displays all the pretentious and narrow radicalism of its first organ Cité Libre. It is essential to recognize the importance of this intellectual womb and its resultant litter who now occupy the treasury benches and other positions of power in the government structure. Most of his old cronies have been provided with sinecures. Harry Crowe did far more justice to this phenomenon than I can. In his article "Decline of Liberalism", published January 16, 1971, he stated:

> The most striking fact about leaders of the Liberal party is that they have been obsessed with demons—
> King's Frankenstein was industrial conflict, class conflict, and the omnipresent forces of darkness. Lester Pearson's demons were first the Soviet Union and then the more formidable John Diefenbaker. Pierre Trudeau has a (closet) full of demons but Duplessis and nationalism tower above (all) the rest.
> King sought to exorcise the evil spirits with moral excellence; Pearson with slogans and Trudeau with mild exhortations.

Crowe further states:

> Now for Trudeau. What is his Liberalism? Strong support for authority, almost to the point of obsession—(his own authority). Advocacy of democracy is—a vital one. (He talks about it but does not practise it). Most of the political leaders, in and out of the Liberal party, assume democracy. But Pierre Trudeau advocates it. (Pays lip service to it in his grasping for absolute power). He grew up with the demon Duplessis—so the Liberalism of French Canada, fashioned as a "counter weight" to "censorship authoritarianism, clericalism, and dictatorship" (Trudeau or Duplessis) becomes the liberalism of Canada.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

Crowe goes on to explain:

> But we won that round in seventeenth century England. The anachronism and the irrelevance are monumental.

Whatever vision and imagination this government had, is being used up in a paranoid struggle against dark dinosaurs of the Cité Libre's past. This posture is negative and in substance anti-democratic. The Trudeau government does not trust the people. What is the explanation? James Eayrs has explained it. He is a dilettante in power. He is the Walter Mitty in the cabinet room. A dilettante is one who interests himself in an art or science merely as a pastime and without serious study. This has immense consequence on the shape and calibre of any Trudeau development strategy for Canada. Leonard Beaton writes of Trudeau:

> In spite of long periods spent wandering about the world, he understands very little and does not know it.

First, most of the inspiration of the Trudeau government is about the unreal world of processes and opinions, not the improvement of the quality of Canadian life. Consequently, the energy of this government is usually spent on the idea and the moods of Canada; his creation of regional offices proves his preoccupation with this area. It is not concerned with the personal needs of Canadians and the economic health of this country, particularly in the north, as the minister would have us believe just now.

The government has made great strides in a counter insurgency propaganda campaign against separatism, parochialism, trade unions and greed. Yet, this government does not even have inflation and employment targets, let alone strategies. Give them credit though, they had an unemployment target of 6 per cent and have exceeded it substantially. They have no timetable for their white paper on foreign investment, and the last draft white paper on income security is back in the cabinet. The white paper on taxation, as well as the other legislation of which the minister is so proud, have scared off up to 50 per cent of the investment risk capital in the Yukon this year. But Pelletier has had the time to write a book. While unemployment grew and inflation rose, he scribbled.

Two aspects of the personality of this government have deeply shaped its organization, its demonology and its arrogance. The first is not surprising and has obvious roots. This demonology—their distrust of the people—has clearly dominated the priorities of the government. Inflation must be eradicated, for inflation, as the Prime Minister stated, has elsewhere led to a fascism of the middle class. But perhaps that is what he wants. Every heckler warrants a lecture on the stress and strain of democratic dialogue. Police surveillance of politicians and peoples homes must be accepted as essential in the protection of our fragile democracy.

A disagreement on the tactics of protecting Pierre Laporte's life became an ingredient in the "erosion of the public will". Nothing could be more damaging to democracy than to send troops into our streets, unless it is to suspend its civil liberties. Trudeau sent troops, suspended civil liberties, and called his critics bleeding hearts.

Organizationally, this distrust of the people has permeated the government. This morbid and negative attitude has generated a kind of defensive organization that covers the powers of government and the status quo. Economic growth, fiscal sharing with the provinces, the business of co-ordinating and constructing a development strategy, have been delegated to the drones, the Bensons, the Mackaseys, the Basfords and the rest. These are not the matters that preoccupy the helm.

Second, this government has not escaped this demonology because of its arrogance. And its arrogance is monumental. After all, Pierre Elliott Trudeau—dilettante and traveller—only just got to Ottawa in 1965. He only got here as an orphan, clinging to the coat tails of Jean Marchand and trailing Pelletier behind him. That is a track record that would humble most. The Prime Minister best described his own kind of arrogance in a discussion in London in January of 1969. A student asked whether it is possible for an intellectual to remain an intellectual after he has become a Canadian politician. The student obviously touched on a rather narcissistic hangup of Mr. Trudeau who replied:

> Not in the true sense of the word, no. I think an intellectual is one who looks for absolute truth and one who looks for absolute values and one who, in the face of any problem, states his belief as to the best answer on moral grounds, on philosophical grounds and who does not inflict a sense of politics into his answer.

With his absolute candour and his absolute moral motivation, the Prime Minister concludes:

> The politician will water it down and say that he cannot get away with it, he must compromise or it will not pass parliament.

So, as Peter Desbarats predicted in the earlier article, Trudeau, the beautiful intellectual, will "have nowhere to go but down". However, the danger of politics to the Prime Minister's precious essence has hardly been overlooked by him or his reverent handlers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Chappell) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Chappell: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have been listening for the last ten minutes and I have reread the motion. I have searched to the best of my ability to see how anything that has been said in the last ten minutes is relevant to the motion. I bring it to Your Honour's attention that if hon. members are serious on this subject, they should speak on the subject and not wander all around Canada, in fact all around the world, to try to find something to criticize.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the point of order that has been raised. The very fact that the hon. member has raised it at all indicates his woeful lack of familiarity with the subject matter of the motion we are discussing. In my remarks I have been pointing out that the underlying reason for the failure of this government to come up with constructive and real policies for the development of the Canadian north—and this includes not only the area above the 60th parallel but the northern portions of Canada—is the lack of a basic philosophy, and nothing could be more justified than to point out the dearth of this government's policies.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member for a moment but the Chair would like to comment on the point of order raised. The Chair felt that the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) was probably ranging quite broadly, but I must say that I think the terms of the motion before the House are quite broad. I might read just one phrase in the motion before the House, which refers to the economic and social policies of the present government, "and that the economic and social policies of the present government have brought about confusion and delayed social progress". I think, with respect, that the remarks of the hon. member may have had a loose connection with that part of the motion but he was generally relating his remarks in that context to the problems of the north. So I think that, in general, the hon. member was in order.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member resume his seat? Is the hon. member rising on another point of order? The Chair has already ruled on the point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: As I say, Mr. Speaker, this government has manifested, in all its structural reforms and its attitude toward Parliament, toward the press, business and all other intruders, a neurotic and devious desire to protect their charmed Prime Minister from the vulgarities of public life. Their dream is of a ship of state with an airtight helm, one that can be seen but not seduced.

Such a state of mind is extremely interesting. However, it is completely inappropriate for the construction of a truly Canadian development strategy for either our north or for the whole of our country. The inner sanctum of this government is not in possession of impeccable motives or impeccable vision. This unadmitted pretention is both ridiculous and malicious.

The men who lead this government have a lot of narrow and irrelevant prejudices to grow out of if they are to lead us well. However, such growth is not evident; they are still a bunch of amateurs and that goes double in spades for the north. They do not have the maturity nor the courage to recognize the fact that Parliament, the press and the Liberal party, for example, must participate and must be engaged in governing if any government is to grow into something really worth while. Paranoia and vanity are not bases for growth and democratic government, but these qualities, above all others, underly the jazzy jargon of Trudeau and his systems men.

Revealed in the Prime Minister's manipulation of his own caucus is the expeditious and loving construction of Information Canada, the unchecked and silly conceit of the Solicitor General (Mr. Goyer), his arrogance, and the departure from the cabinet of the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) and the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans), two men who possess constructive insights and energy for government far beyond those of the Trudeau collectivity.

Mr. Kierans' suggestion that the present disarray and ad hocery in the economic policies of the government calls for some sort of superministry responsible for the economy is all very well but it falls short, I suppose for understandable partisan reasons, in expressing the real problem. The fact is structure is not the real obstacle in developing a constructive economic and social strategy for Canada. A new mentality for the Prime Minister or better still, a new Prime Minister, is the first requirement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: It is obvious that this government is not going to begin to employ the very generous mandate it received from the Canadian people. The Prime Minister and his fan club will never grow out of their present arrogant, sterile, and obsolete concept of themselves and of the business of governing Canada. They are stagnating; it is time for them to go.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hu Harries (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to say a few words in connection with the approach of this government to northern development. Before I do, however, it might be appropriate for me to suggest, in view of the observations of the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), that there are a number of people on this side of the House like myself who have confidence and faith in our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). That has not changed nor is there any evidence to indicate that it should; quite the contrary. We feel that in the last three years Mr. Trudeau has been our Prime Minister he has effected important, lasting and significant changes in Canada which were not only necessary but highly desirable. Members opposite should make no mistake about that.

Mr. Baldwin: For the Liberal party.

Mr. Harries: For Canada, particularly the region I represent.

Mr. Nielsen: Not mine.

Mr. Harries: As far as am concerned, it would be presumptious for me to attempt to defend the Prime Minister in those circumstances because there are many who could do it much better. As a new back bencher I would remind the hon. gentlemen opposite that we feel very strongly on the issue that has been raised. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) spoke first, and quite properly, because he was able to give the House a good deal of factual information, particularly with respect to the way in which his department has instituted programs with respect to the people of the north. If I may, I should like to comment on one or two aspects of the economic policy, the approach of the government to northern development.

This is an approach, Mr. Speaker, that does not presume that all the answers as to the best policy are already in our possession. It is not based on hopes or vision; it is a policy based on the acquisition of facts and the use of those facts to provide an approach to northern development that will be meaningful and lasting, of material benefit to the north and to other parts of Canada. This is the basis of this government's approach to northern development and, in my view, it is one that should be commended because it is intelligent and it will be effective.

Let us take a look at the area of oil and gas development. In the past three years, massive and effective exploration programs have been mounted and we are gradually seeing the result by finding substantial quantities of natural gas with indications of the vast store of oil that is available.

Mr. Stanfield: In spite of you.

Mr. Harries: These happenings have not been in spite of the policy but because of the policy. The policy is realistic and does not presume that we are going to develop the resources of this vast territory by a few government directives or even a few speeches. We tried the speeches ten years ago and obviously they were a failure. I suggest to you that the policies this government is following are soundly based and will result in the most effective use of the resources as they are found.

In connection with the development of the north there has been a great deal of discussion about tax incentives, and I am confident that when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) brings down his budget in June we will find that this government is still evidencing a program of support for northern development through the use of tax incentives. I find it interesting that in Russia, which is a state that I am sure some of my friends opposite might have some enthusiasm for, people who work in northern areas get substantial premiums in addition to an element of private property that is completely lacking in other industrial sectors. You cannot expect to have the necessary incentive to develop unless the opportunity is given for capital and income gains. To say that this government's approach to northern development is socialistic requires a rather peculiar definition of socialism, it seems to me.

Fundamental to the development of the north is, of course, the question of transportation. I should like to commend the government on two policies they recently adopted in connection with research. First of all, a grant of half a million dollars was given to the Saskatchewan Research Council for research on the slurry pipeline. This was followed by a grant of almost the same amount to the Alberta Research Council for the further development of capsule pipelines. The use of pipelines in the north to move fluids and gases is something that does not require a great deal of research as to its economic effectiveness. It most certainly requires and, indeed, is receiving a good deal of research in connection with the environmental impact.

The use of a pipeline for the transport of solids opens a whole, new technology which could have the most important significance for northern Canada. Solids pipelining involves, as you know, Mr. Speaker, either the mixing of the solids with a fluid and the transporting of those solids as a slurry or, secondly and more significantly, the use of capsules which float in a liquid in a pipeline and are transported from one point to another in that fashion. The concept of developing mines in the north where the concentrate could be moved by pipeline directly to markets is one that I think ought to be greated with a good deal of excitement. It implies that it is not necessary, with respect to bulk movements, to have a surface transportation facility. Railroads, of course, are the prime bulk movers. They are very expensive facilities. If it were possible to transmit solids in a facility designed to transport either gases or liquids, we could benefit from a tremendous economic opportunity and a great opportunity for development that otherwise would be denied to us.

This government has indicated that it is aware of the technological possibilities of that sort of development. As I said before, I am delighted that the government will give such wholehearted support to a research effort in this field. That seems to typify the approach of this government to northern development, an approach that is based on an understanding of the technical requirements of that area and the desire to search out and explore the best possible technology to meet the needs of the area.

The development of northern Canada must certainly take place within the context of the development of the rest of Canada. The distribution of regional economic effort within the federal system is certainly occupying the attention of this government. So far as I am concerned, I think it would be quite inappropriate if the government were to pour undefined sums into northern development without having regard to the fact that those funds could be allocated to other regions in Canada in order to obtain the maximum development for all Canada.

I certainly do not support the position taken by some of my hon. friends opposite with respect to the idea that northern resources ought to remain unworked until some indefinite time in the future. If one appreciates what is meant by a "time discount factor", one will realize that that sort of technique suggested involves tremendous costs. On the other hand, it seems that northern resources and their development ought to be considered in some sort of sequential system that considers the needs of other parts of the country. I hope I will be forgiven for distinguishing western Canada, and particularly the Prairie region. More research must be done in that area and there must be substantial greater investment in that area in addition to that investment which has been made with respect to the agricultural economy. Only in that way, only if we develop the various regions of Canada as we go along, will be obtain the best mix of economic activity, designed to give the best opportunities for our people. I, therefore, support enthusiastically the approach of this government to northern development, because it seems to me to make the best economic sense.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested to hear the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Harries) say that he is here because of his confidence in the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I suppose we are entitled to assume that there is some relationship between his attendances here in Ottawa and his actual degree of confidence in the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Stanfield: I am sorry that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) is not present to hear my remarks. I will proceed with them, in any event. First of all, I think I can properly commiserate with the officials of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I understand that several of them were forced to work all Monday night in a desperate effort to find something for the minister to say in this debate.

Mr. Nielsen: They failed.

Mr. Stanfield: We have heard the results. It is obvious that their job was not easy.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Who wrote the hon. member's speech?

Mr. Boulanger: It is a shame that the hon. member speaks in that way.

Mr. Stanfield: The north, of course, is a physical frontier where life perhaps is hard but where hopes can certainly bloom. There are hopes of vast economic growth and hopes, at the same time, in that area for the preservation of a land of rugged, natural beauty where pollution so far is virtually absent and where a healthy and natural life is, so far, possible. The very expression of these goals makes it obvious immediately that there is a danger of conflict from the outset. We can already see the need for the careful balancing of policies that others have referred to that are based on the realistic appraisal of the effects of the various choices that we must make. That is the basic premise from which we, in the official opposition, have started initiating this debate on the northern policies of the present government.

The development of realistic and effective northern policies demands a good deal of care. That, certainly, should not be an excuse for inactivity, confusion or ignorance, all of which this government stands accused of in this present debate.

An hon. Member: What does the hon. member know about this subject?

Mr. Stanfield: It stands accused of that, if I may say so, not only in connection with this debate. From the government's own ranks have come charges of neglect. From its own ranks have come suggestions of incompetence and of refusal to take the necessary lead. There are two questions that we must ask.

An hon. Member: Who must ask them?

Mr. Nielsen: People like the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) are asking them.

Mr. Stanfield: What do we, meaning all the people of Canada, want from our north; and what does the north, and I refer to its peoples and its animals, want from us and need from us? I refer to, those who hold the reins of power. First, what do we want from the north? We want to see a realization of the north's economic potential for the benefit of the whole country, including the present and future inhabitants of that vast area.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: We want to see our resources developed and, as the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) said, we want to see them processed to the greatest degree possible. Certainly, we do not want to see the processing issue used as an excuse for holding back northern development.

May I point out, in connection with the settlement of Indian claims in Alaska, that the discovery of vast oil reserves in that region has made it possible for the state of Alaska to make a generous offer. I am not suggesting that we should withhold a generous settlement until those circumstances prevail in this country. I am just pointing out this fact to those who would tend to downgrade the significance of economic development and the revenue that it can produce. I suggest that much more might be done to encourage the diversification of the economy, especially in the middle north. I am not talking only about the far north. Much more could be done to expand the processing of our nonrenewable products. As others have emphasized, we must not simply be satisfied with draining the north in the shortest possible time. We must have long term policies. As far as I know and can understand, this is where this government has failed. I would love to be proved wrong, Mr. Speaker.

What do we want from the north? We want the north to make its unique contribution to the Canadian economy and Canadian life because the north is part of our heritage. It is a part that we should use wisely for our common benefit.

What does the north expect from us? It is perhaps presumptuous to try and express this, but I would like to try. I think it expects wisdom of the sort to which I have just referred. It expects an understanding of its peculiar problems. It expects a determined effort to find policies that will enhance and not destroy its basic character. It expects us to deal justly with the issue of the rights of the native peoples, not to try to tell them what we want from them, as the present government has been attempting to do so disastrously, but to work with them in a co-operative effort to maintain their culture and to ensure that they benefit in the way they desire from the economic development that will take place.

The native land question has been allowed to fester for too long. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) spoke at some length on this subject which he knows so well. I would simply like to say that the settlement of this issue in a way that is fully acceptable to the Indian and other native peoples must be a top priority for any government that is working out a long term program for the north.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development said this afternoon that the Indians concerned are governed by treaties. As I understand it, that is not a fact.

Mr. Orange: You better get your facts straight.

Mr. Stanfield: I want to get my facts straight and the minister better get his facts straight.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: As I understand it, those treaties do not apply to the Yukon and certainly do not apply to the native people in the territories. This was a misleading statement for the minister to make. The white paper relating to the Indians was a disastrous start to the whole discussion.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): You were in favour of it.

Mr. Stanfield: I said it was a disaster, Mr. Speaker. This has been indicated from day to day. I hope the minister deals more carefully and more openly with the Indian and other native peoples than he did in the House today when he made that assertion about the treaties covering the Indians in the north.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I challenge the minister and member opposite to justify that statement. It cannot be done.

Beyond that specific issue, the north expects us to act on the basis of accurate knowledge as to what its problems, potential and needs are. It is not enough to go in half-cocked like the present government and throw around suggestions in Texas or somewhere else without knowing the actual situation and the effects on the ecological balance of such massive undertakings. In the north, as in the south of this country, this government has frequently indulged in very loose words and vague promises. These are not what is needed, but it is apparently all that this government is able to give.

Although I was joking yesterday with the leader of the New Democratic Party that he might become an expert like myself, I make no pretense at being an expert on the subject. However, on my desk upstairs I have a massive report put out three years ago by the United States government with regard to every aspect of life in Alaska. This report, prepared in the knowledge that the Alaska frontier would soon become an issue, deals in detail with the culture and economy of the native peoples, the geological and geographical structure of Alaska and the possible impact of change. This was done so that any future projects could be examined in the light of knowledge, not in the light of vague reassurances or easy prejudice.

What have we in Canada done that is comparable? That is something I would like to know. What are we doing now?

Mr. Orange: You should see all the reports on the north.

Mr. Stanfield: I do not say that the government has done nothing, but almost nothing. Regardless of the other issues that it raises, the trans-Alaska pipeline system has already had a good deal of work done on it. I say in all sincerity that surely here is an opportunity for the Canadian government to send observers to learn first hand some of the problems in such a major project, a project of a type that we may well be faced with in the future, perhaps before not too long. I believe that observers would have been welcome. I got that impression when I was in Alaska last month. However, none were sent. Why? I do not know.

The University of Alaska at Fairbanks is deeply involved in northern and Arctic studies. Some Canadian students go there, but there is no evidence of any interest on the part of the Canadian government about what is happening.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): We know more.

Mr. Stanfield: The minister says we know more. I want to assure the minister that while I am certainly not an authority, I was highly impressed with the competence of the people I met at the University of Alaska.

Mr. Orange: How about the universities in Canada and the work they are doing?

Mr. Stanfield: I content myself with the fact that there has not been enough liaison with regard to what is going on in Alaska in connection with TAPS by way of research. Also, there has not been nearly enough association with the University of Alaska. There is an agreement with Russia providing for some kind of interest with regard to the north. I highly approve of that. I visited Russia last summer. It was obvious that Canada should be urged to do that. I am happy that it has been done, but we have been neglecting sources of information right next door. This is just another example of the government's lack of foresight or lack of interest. I think it is a lack of foresight. The government has obstinately refused to develop a comprehensive northern development strategy. Such an attitude is not easily forgivable.

I am not suggesting that the government should be planning to take over the northern economy. I say that the federal government has a great responsibility for and toward our country. We have an obligation to encourage its rational exploitation and to protect the environment. We must actively look into the possibilities for future transport routes and systems. The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona referred to the research that is going on in connection with certain aspects of transportation. This is good, but we must go far beyond this. We must see where airport facilities should be developed and expanded. We must see what things are possible and desirable.

Former Progressive Conservative governments did move in this field. As already pointed out, the Roads to Resources program was greeted with ridicule then and now by members opposite. Fortunately, they could not prevent its achievement, but they are making it clear today that they have no intention of making a contribution of their own to any integrated transportation policy.

The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona spoke about ways in which the government was helping out in the north. This is not the impression I gathered from talks with those who were actively engaged in northern development. They were full of complaints about the ineffectiveness of the government, particularly in the area of an appropriate transportation policy. In transport, as in other directions, we must develop a northern strategy, not to destroy the north but to see how it can best interrelate with the southern parts of this country. The present government's lack of such a strategy is merely a reflection of its general lack of long term policies. It has been unable to formulate policies to benefit the economies of the southern or middle parts of Canada. How, then, could we really expect it to accomplish more in the north? It has no policy to protect the environment of the coast of British Columbia threatened by the possibility of oil spillage along the proposed tanker route from Alaska to the south. How could we expect it to do better in the north? Its policies are weak in every sphere of activity and in every area of Canada. This is not the moment at which to deal with regional disparity about which so much was said two or three years ago by the Prime Minister, except to note that it is deeper now than ever it was.

We have chosen in this debate to put the spotlight on our northern land because nowhere is the ineffectiveness of the government more glaring or its failures more dangerous.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: It would be too much for me to ask this government to display vision in the north, or anywhere else, I suppose. I would settle for a little common sense and a spark of imagination, though there is no evidence that even this will be forthcoming. The government has not even been seeking out the information readily available to it. This is why I ask hon. members present for their support for our motion this afternoon. By passing such a motion maybe we could at least scare the government into paying a little more attention to this whole issue, and fear is, after all, sometimes the beginning of wisdom.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): I have followed with a great deal of interest the debate which has taken place on northern development. I listened with unusual interest to the minister's speech today. He gave the impression that everything was going well and according to plan, that the government has the development of the north well in hand. I also gathered that he and his colleagues are content to allow the present type of development to continue without much change.

In one of his asides, the minister said the NDP would like the north to remain in cold storage, that the party to which I belong would prefer to prevent the export of any raw material from that region. This is simply not the case. This is a clear indication that the minister did not understand the point which was made by the leader of our group when he spoke in the debate yesterday.

I should like to bring to the attention of hon. members the terms of the motion put forward by the Official Opposition which we are presently debating. The last part reads:

—and this House condemns the government for its failure to promote a truly Canadian strategy for the north based on human, capital and natural resources, and urges that appropriate policies be adopted at once designed to bring about such development in that region.

Our party offered an amendment to that motion and I should like to put it on record because this is the second day of the debate and some hon. members might have forgotten it. This is how the motion would read together with our amendment:

That this House condemns the government for its failure to promote a truly Canadian strategy for the north based on human, capital and natural resources and urges that appropriate policies be adopted which would take into account environmental dangers, the problem of foreign ownership, the future needs of Canada, and the basic and prior rights of the native inhabitants of the Territories, including their claim for a settlement that would recognize their rights in the land and its resources.

When we talk of northern Canada, we are speaking about an area which contains about 40 per cent of our total Canadian land mass. It is sparsely populated and difficult of access. It contains vast stores of mineral wealth and other resources which have remained largely undeveloped due to the extremely severe climatic conditions and its remoteness from readily accessible markets.

As we look back on Canadian development over the past 100 years, we find that successive Canadian governments have made many major and disastrous blunders in resource development. One of the most recent examples was the fire sale terms of the Columbia River water resources to the United States under conditions which are nothing short of scandalous when we look at the value of water resources today. Our whole Canadian economy is in jeopardy because of past actions by various Canadian governments. National goals and objectives were never laid down for the orderly and sensible development of our nation. In northern Canada, which is relatively untouched as yet, we have an opportunity to do the planning which should have been done throughout the whole nation. We have the opportunity to avoid the mistakes we made in resource planning in other parts of Canada. There is every indication, however, that the present government is plunging ahead as usual without any real plan or direction for our vast northern areas. This is regrettable, for unless full and adequate planning is carried out, we shall be unable to avoid making in northern Canada the same foolish resource blunders which we made elsewhere.

The traditional attitude to resource development in the north has been a greedy and reckless desire for exploitation, particularly of our mineral resources. The main purpose seems to be to dig them up and ship them out to other countries for processing. In all this development there has been little evidence of any intention to process these resources in our own country and to build communities based on the processing of these resources. The lack of concern for our northern environment, for our native peoples in that area, and for the future resource needs of our own Canadian people, makes it crystal clear that the government is following a pattern similar to that which was established in other parts of Canada in earlier days. Not only are we allowing foreign concerns to control our richest mineral resources in the north, but we are actually subsidizing them for doing this. I trust the Canadian people will soon realize that it is the deliberate policy of this government to encourage increased foreign control over the natural resource aspect of our economy, especially as it applies to northern Canada.

It is interesting to note that in 1969, 64 per cent of the value of minerals produced in the north came from foreign controlled enterprises. Most of this production was shipped out of Canada, despite the fact that most of the companies involved had received very substantial government subsidies. The failure of the government to insist on some type of processing in our nation for raw materials of this nature is nothing short of a national disgrace.

In an earlier speech I pointed out that petroleum exploration activity in the north had built up gradually through the early sixties and then slowly tapered off until the major discovery at Prudhoe Bay, Alaska. The Prudhoe Bay discovery sparked an unprecedented search for oil in the Canadian north. An additional 250 million acres were quickly brought under exploration permits and early in 1970 we found over 440 million acres were under permit. This virtually blanketed the whole of the potential oil bearing formations in the north. It is again of interest to note that, of the land held under petroleum exploration permit in northern Canada, 60 per cent is held by foreign controlled enterprises.

Now, let us look at the record of the federal government in their efforts to promote the integration of the native population into the expanding economic activity which is going on in the north. We find that the native or indigenous population, which includes the Indian, Eskimo and Métis groups, make up about 43 per cent of the total population of the territories. According to the 1966 census, the indigenous population in the Yukon territory was about 17 per cent of the total population. It was about 63 per cent of the total population of the Northwest Territories.

When we look at the mining industry, however, we find about 4½ per cent of the total work force came from the native inhabitants. In 1968, there were 11 operating mines in the Yukon and in the Northwest Territories employing a total of 2,002 workers. The total indigenous employment on these projects was 91 men, or 4½ per cent of the total. In the Yukon, there were 28 out of a total of 820, and in the Northwest Territories some 63 out of 1,182. This is a terrible indictment of both this present government's integration policies and of those mining companies which have moved into the territory only to exploit the mineral wealth there, leaving precious little behind for those native indigenous groups which have called the territories their home for generations.

It is obvious that the indigenous groups in the Canadian north do not receive an adequate share of the wealth created through the exploitation of the mineral resources in their area. In addition, there is increasing evidence that adequate plans have not been made either to protect the environment and the wildlife in our northern regions upon which many of these natives depend, or to put much effort into the establishment of a basic economy which could offer them alternative employment. There is increasing evidence that the present unplanned economic activity and exploration which is currently taking place in the north is having a detrimental effect on many aspects of the environment.

We have talked about planning for northern Canada. It is nothing short of disgraceful that the land use regulations, which would help to give some proper direction to economic development in the north, have not yet been brought down by the government. The land use regulations were promised months ago and they should have been in effect right from the start of economic and exploration activity in our northern areas. I see absolutely no reason why they should be held up any longer and I now protest to the minister and this House that they should include the whole of northern Canada rather than only the few selected areas to which apparently they are going to apply.

The Science Council of Canada outlined the problem very clearly in one of their releases last year. The council suggested that we make a special effort now in the Arctic. The council went on to say, and I quote:

> It seems likely that Arctic resources will soon be vigorously exploited without adequate background study of the natural environment. In consequence, there is every prospect that northern development will be accompanied by the creation of a new set of environmental problems which would have been far easier to avoid than to rectify. Because of its high costs, the current prospect is for curtailment of Arctic ecological studies, even though the present pace is too slow. Yet here is a chance for Canada to try to steer the development of a great natural area on an ideal path, a course based on thoughtful prior analysis of the consequences of various policies.
> In association with the various aspects of oil and mineral exploration and transport in the Arctic, it is strongly recommended that there be an intensive program of environmental research. The first priority should be given to renewable resource inventories that would enable classification of Arctic ecosystems and define the distribution of various kinds of frozen ground water. These studies should be initiated immediately. Equally important is study of the productivity of Arctic ecosystems, particularly the tundra and the taiga. The omission of a tundra ecosystem study in the Canadian proposals for the international biological program is much to be regretted. Research is greatly needed on the effects of a modern technology on the slowly renewable resources of the Arctic to which a native culture is adapted.
> The sparse human population of the Arctic makes it unlikely that development will be associated with a strong public reaction. In these circumstances a more positive governmental policy and action are appropriate.

That was the statement made by the Science Council of Canada which pointed out to the government what we should do to develop our northern areas. I should like now to take a little time to point out what is actually happening as far as developing our northern areas is concerned. I should like to quote what the minister said in a radio broadcast on March 11, 1971 in the program "Encounter". This is the statement the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development made at that time when talking about pollution of waters in the north:

> We said about the water in the north that nobody will use it if they pollute it. We will not fine them; we will cut off the water and that will be the end of it. So we want to develop the north in a fashion that we will not repeat the errors that we have made in the south.

Here we have the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development telling us that the government has a program to develop the north, that it is going to look after pollution of the water systems of this vast area. Yet today he was boasting about the passage of several acts relating to northern development, one of which was the Northern Inland Waters Act. We passed that act in the 1969-70 session. Today, I asked him whether it had been proclaimed and he replied that he did not know. Let me tell him that it has not been proclaimed. This legislation, passed a year and a half ago, would have given protection to the rivers, streams and lakes of northern Canada. The minister has the gall to come and tell us the government has legislation on the books, intimating to the general public that they are ready to move in respect of pollution. The minister is the one who is at fault. When we pass legislation it should be brought into effect so that protection against pollution could be given to our waters.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Nielsen: They think if they sit on it long enough it will hatch.

Mr. Harding: I have here a statement, presumably for the council in the north, by Dr. D. J. C. Horwood of the Department of National Health and Welfare, in which he points out to the federal government the pollution problems we are facing in the Yukon Territory, particularly in the Yukon River. Not much more than a year ago we heard about the mining town of Faro, which I understand was planned by the federal government. That town is now dumping raw sewage into the river. The government did not even plan for a sewage treatment plant.

Mr. Nielsen: They did the same thing at Whitehorse.

Mr. Harding: We find now that warnings are being issued by the Department of Health to the people in the area of the Yukon River not to drink the water from certain parts of the river until after they have boiled it 15 minutes. We are now talking about plans for 1971.

This sort of procedure in respect of northern development is just not good enough as far as Canadians are concerned.

Let me refer to another point which is of major concern to the NDP. We are not happy with the extent of foreign ownership of the natural resources in our country. We have made this point time and time again, and we intend to push for Canadian control of our natural resources and our industries. What do we find in the reports emanating from the north? We are subsidizing foreign investment companies in their efforts to go into the north and skim off the cream of our mineral resources. These minerals are not processed in the north or anywhere else in Canada. These resources are shipped out in their raw form to other countries, and that is where labour intensive industries are being developed. This is one reason for wholesale unemployment in this nation. This is the direction in which this Liberal government is leading Canada. It is time Canadian people woke up to the fact and began to realize we need a new deal and a new approach.

Mr. Nielsen: And a new government.

Mr. Harding: And a new government. This problem in respect of our resources is a problem which has irritated us more than enough. We have talked about the native population of the north. There is no reason at all why communities cannot be developed there in which this material can be processed. In this way we could build up the areas with people involved in resource extraction, process and use.

Mr. Len Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I have not listened to all of the debate since I participated yesterday to some extent in committee functions. I have had an opportunity to read some of the speeches. I have listened with great interest to the words of hon. members this afternoon, and I have followed with great interest the intent and the direction of the debate. I am now a little reluctant to participate. Many Indian people have suggested to me that perhaps the white man talks too much. I shall attempt to avoid being guilty of that offence. I am delighted with the manner in which members on both sides of the House have referred to our native people. Perhaps I should limit my remarks in this regard to the difficulties faced by the native people of the Northwest Territories.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and the opposition House leader referred to one outstanding thing which must be settled in the Northwest Territories in the interests of the native people. I wonder how many members in this House know what these treaties are all about, what they contain, when they were signed and so on. I have a few of them in front of me. Two of the treaties outstanding in the Northwest Territories are Treaties No. 11 and No. 8. Treaty No. 8 was dated June 21, 1929. I cannot seem to find the exact date when Treaty No. 11 was signed. Let me refer to some of the things contained in Treaty No. 11. It refers to terms, where it was signed and the people who were involved.

Let me refer to one pertinent section here which reads as follows:

> And His Majesty the King hereby agrees and undertakes to lay aside reserves for each band, the same not to exceed in all one square mile for each family of five, or in that proportion for larger or smaller families;—

This is a very important part of that treaty. Perhaps one of the important questions to be decided upon by this government, the Parliament and people of Canada is the establishment of reserves. The minister has said we have a lot to learn from mistakes we have made in southern Canada. Since I became a Member of Parliament I have often been asked whether the Indian people might not be better off if we abolished these reserves.

An hon. Member: What is the answer?

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): I do not know the answer. This is a typical question. If we could turn the clock back it is difficult to guess what this Parliament, this government or any other government might have decided in respect of the establishment of reservations. This whole question is fundamental to the Indian people, particularly in view of the many disastrous situations which have existed and exist on the Indian reservations of the country.

When I was growing up I was often asked why I was trying to get an education. I was told that I would never get any place, even with an education, because I was an Indian. I was told I would never find a job anywhere because I was an Indian. This is the kind of belief which has been festering over the years and causing difficulty in respect of the reservation system. I do not know what decision I might have made had I been a member of the government at the time these reservations were set apart. Perhaps in the context of the history of that time I might have done the same thing.

It would be a mistake, in retrospect to abolish reservations. This is not the answer to the problem. Reservations are the domains of Indian people. They are part of their heritage and the life they have learned to live. These reservations must be developed. The resources must be developed in order to provide a better living for Indian people. The human resource on the reservations must also be developed in a way that these people can participate in all aspects of Canadian life, social, economic and political. This is what must be done in the Northwest Territories.

I was very pleased to learn recently that four native people were elected to the Northwest Territories Council. This representation is still small when one considers it in terms of the relative proportion of the population comprised by the native people in the Northwest Territories. The native people represent 60 per cent of the total population in the Northwest Territories. However, this is a giant step forward. Part of the reason for the native people being elected to the Northwest Territories Council is the action of this government. I take my hat off to the government for recognizing and encouraging this trend.

Abe Okpik was the first Eskimo appointed to the territorial council. One of the underlying reasons for his appointment was the desire to show that the Eskimo had a contribution to make. It was also a recognition of their culture, that they are a part of the Northwest Territories and should participate in the whole political process of the Territories.

What happened after that? Not too long afterward Simone Michael was elected. This is the way it should be. A few years ago I was involved in encouraging the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, at that time the Hon. Arthur Laing, to appoint an Indian to the Northwest Territories Council. I suppose I assisted in a way because I was helping the Member of Parliament for the Northwest Territories who was of the same mind.

Mr. Nielsen: He does not have a mind.

Mr. Baldwin: He needs help.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): No; he is doing pretty well. So, what happened from that point on? A couple of native people, Métis and Indian, have now been elected to the Northwest Territories Council. This is a great step forward in the participation of the native people in the electoral process and in the government of the Northwest Territories. This is as it should be. During the time I was discussing many things with the natives of the Northwest Territories we also discussed the idea of reservations. It was very interesting to note that a great number of them stated they did not want reservations. They are looking for some other way that would perhaps better fit the times. I do not advocate the establishment of reservations. I really am not suggesting this as a way by which the land part of treaties Nos. 8 and 11 should be settled in the Northwest Territories.

Another significant remark was made by one of the chiefs who has been appointed to the Council. He said that perhaps the longer his people wait for the settlement of this part of the treaty the better off they will be because many of them really do not understand what is going on. He said that perhaps as a great many more of the young people become educated and become leaders in the community the people will be in a better position in 10 or 15 years to understand the situation and make the right kind of settlement or deal for the Indian people so that they will have a better future than the native people have had in the past.

I was very interested when the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) said that the white paper on Indian Affairs was a disastrous start. In many respects this is quite a turnabout because when the white paper policy was announced on June 25, 1969 his party was quite happy to see it introduced. I should like to read a little of what the hon. member for Peace River had to say on that occasion. He said:

> Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for his courtesy in sending me within reasonable time notice that he would be making a statement, and the copy of the statement which accompanied that notice. I hope this permits me to make a reply, keeping well within the framework of the injunction Your Honour laid down the other day.
> I thank the minister for the statement he has made. There was a reminiscent tone to it. I recall during the last years of administration under the leadership of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) that a joint committee studied this issue. The wording of the report of that committee dealt with the winds of change which were blowing through the ranks of the Indian people of Canada. Many of the thoughts which the minister expressed in his statement were good thoughts, repeating the thoughts in the report of the committee.
> We welcome the statement by the minister. It amounts to an acceptance of many proposals made by the Indian people through the years, and made by those who have worked on their behalf, in this party and elsewhere.

That is an indication of that party's acceptance of the policy on that occasion. I had some apprehensions at that time concerning the policy because, knowing how the Indian community would react, I felt some of the things were quite unrealistic. In retrospect, however, I believe this has probably been one of the best things which has happened to the Indian community. More than ever before the Indian people have been discussing the kind of future they want. This discussion has been carried on in the Yukon Territory, in the Northwest Territories and all over Canada. This is a good thing. Very often in the past policies were handed down and the Indian people had to live with them. I commend the government for taking this kind of approach. It is the right approach because if policies are to be made for the Indian people the Indian people must be involved in making those policies. I hope it will not be too long before there is some positive indication of what direction the policy will take. I hope the federal government, the Indian people, and perhaps the governments of the provinces involved will soon arrive at some consensus because there are a number of things which need to be done by way of legislation.

The present Indian Act is very restrictive. It is outdated and must be amended to fit the needs of the Indian people in modern Canada. The Indian people of Canada many years ago lived, and are still living, in very difficult circumstances. We are all aware of this. However, on the other end of the scale some of them also are very progressive and are quite capable of taking on the responsibility of administration of their own affairs and own communities. Such an opportunity should be provided to those who are capable of taking on responsibilities. It has always been my view that a new act should be based upon the philosophy of progressive options. The legislation should provide that the Indian people may move along as quickly as they wish.

During the recent trip to the New Zealand and Australia I had some very interesting discussions with the Maori people. There is a system there whereby four seats are set aside in Parliament for Maoris, representing the north, the south, the east and the west. This system has been advocated in Canada from time to time but I do not agree with it. I believe it would be a backward step if we were to adopt such a system now. The House of Commons must never be a place in which there is special status for any group of people. Everyone who comes here must be elected on the same basis. But on the other hand, the Maori system has worked very well. The people we talked to have said that the standard of living which they now enjoy is a result of their having participated in the political life of the country and in the running of the country. It was also interesting to note that they feel that perhaps their system has now outlived its usefulness. They were interested in doing away with the system so that the Maori people may be elected to their parliament on the same basis as the other people.

I have covered the waterfront here. There are a number of things that I could have dealt with perhaps, but I will end my remarks here.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, in speaking on the motion before the House my first observation is that the government's failure to develop a workable policy concerning human and industrial growth in our northland is simply a reflection of their much greater inability to develop policies to promote a healthy economy. The problems of developing our northland are so vast and require schemes of such great proportions in terms of human and economic ingredients, that they cannot be undertaken, at a time when the economy is in a depressed state and when its future is so clouded with uncertainties, with any hope that we will do a good job.

Hon. members on the opposite side may wish to take some false comfort in the view that it is the opposition's role to oppose the government merely for the sake of opposing, and that we ought not to have anything constructive to say about the government on any occasion. That is certainly not my view of the role of the opposition, but I believe that certain facts speak for themselves.

The present government has had the embarrassment of having two of its senior ministers resign from the cabinet because of disagreements over the economic, fiscal and monetary policies which it is pursuing. The fact that the two former ministers may not have had identical views on the development of our economy should not in any way diminish the dramatic impact of their resignations and the clear evidence of what great divisions exist within the inner circles of the government, particularly on the matter of determining the direction which our economy is to take in the next few years and the fiscal and monetary tools which are to be used in order to arrive at our goals.

As disturbing as anything to me is the division of opinion which clearly exists within the government's chief advisory agencies on the most fundamental issues in our economy. The Bank of Canada and the Economic Council of Canada very clearly and publicly differ over the important question of whether tax cuts are now appropriate measures to be used to stimulate our economy, and I suggest it is most important in view of the future development of our northland.

The government may find some small comfort in reverting to a number of curious slogans such as "we have licked inflation", but the realities which are evidenced daily in the business and economic sections of our newspapers refute the notion that inflation has been stemmed. Indeed, going back to the Economic Council of Canada, it has warned recently that inflation is a problem which is going to persist as a serious matter in our economy for some years ahead, and for the development of our northland this is significant. Combined with this uncomforting but realistic appraisal of the situation goes also the advice that it is going to be some years before Canada returns to a full employment economy. I do not know what constitutes full employment but I should think that a level of unemployment not exceeding 3 per cent would be accepted by most Canadians as a reasonably high rate of employment provided, of course, the 3 per cent of the work force who are unemployed are not the same 3 per cent all the time and that during periods of unemployment they are adequately served by the various institutions and agencies which the government has erected to assist people in such circumstances.

In the not too distant future, and as Canada's vast and virtually untouched supply of natural resources, particularly our great quantities of fresh water, become even more in demand by various countries than they are today, I feel quite certain that the question of our sovereignty in large areas of the north is going to be challenged seriously. Moreover, I believe that some of the over-populated countries of the earth are going to question not only the morality of our holding such vast tracts of land which we appear incapable of putting to useful purpose, but indeed our very sovereignty over them as well.

It may be tempting to hon. members opposite to dismiss such questions, but I think we should all remember that our claim to holding so much of the northern hemisphere has never been acknowledged internationally with complete unequivocation, but rather we have fallen heirs to this land by default. I would have thought that the voyage of the United States tanker, the Manhattan, through our northern passage demonstrated the beginnings of a challenge to our sovereignty. The Americans, you will recall, Mr. Speaker, while attempting to do everything possible to assuage our concerns over the possible consequences of an oil spill, nevertheless failed to give a clear acknowledgement of the fact that the seas through which they were travelling were Canadian waters. If the Americans take the position that such waters are indeed international waters, then it is an easy matter for the Soviet Union, China, Japan and other great trading nations to take a similar view when it becomes necessary, convenient or desirable for them to make greater use of this northern route.

When one examines the pathetically reduced armed forces which this country has, we must give serious thought to whether we have any realistic capability at all of enforcing claims to our entitlement to all of the lands in the north which we now regard as sovereign Canadian soil. I believe the government could well be advised to consider the possibility of referring to the International Court of the Hague our claims to the northernmost regions of our country, particularly to the water between the islands, so that these may be clearly settled before our sovereignty is challenged by different and less impartial sources.

But of even more fundamental concern is surely the question of what bold and imaginative concepts or plans the government has to put forward as realistic measures to develop our northern lands. The question is rhetorical because the answer is very obvious; it has no such plans to place before the House. The government's single largest failing, in my view, is that they have allowed to persist the notion that settlement in our northland is synonomous with deprivation and hardship. Under present development concepts, or rather I should say lack of them, this surmise is a logical and valid one. Surely, it should be apparent to the government that if they wish to attract to the north the human resources which will be required to develop it, they must implement a number of incentive schemes. Chief amongst these must be taxation measures which will offset the economic penalty of settlement in the north. I use the word "penalty" quite deliberately because in the present situation where the price of butter, bread and other staples, let alone any of the luxury items, is twice or more than in the southern parts of Canada, a most basic economic case can be made for tax alleviation.

Some may think that the salary differential in our northern regions is sufficient to offset the increased costs of foodstuffs, clothing and other items. This is not so, and what one must remember is that higher salaries place one in higher income tax brackets so that the net take-home pay which a person receives does not necessarily compensate him fully for the added net salary disadvantage which he encounters by living in the north.

Beyond taxation concessions to people who settle in the north, the government must consider ways of making life in the north more meaningful and attractive for its residents. It is my understanding that the Soviet Union has taken a much more progressive view in developing its northern land, and I think that we might well have something to gain from their experience and achievements. It might be opportune in this connection for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who will shortly be leaving for Russia, to discuss with Soviet officials some of the questions and problems which the Soviet government has encountered in developing its more northerly regions.

I do not believe that we shall ever have sustained growth in our northlands until we begin to develop fully integrated communities. This means that the residents there must have meaningful access to a well developed cultural life. It seems to me that if we are serious in our desire to develop the north, we cannot expect the people who settle there to be deprived of the benefits of multiple radio channels, television channels, live theatre and a modest and expanding range of the performing arts as well as all of the other educational and cultural institutions which mark our southern municipalities and make them attractive urban centres for our population. The days of developing our north on a frontier basis have long since passed and I would have hoped the government would have realized that a frontier mentality will do nothing to develop our northland.

In discussing the development of our northern regions, we come to a more modern and timely problem which perhaps only in the last few years has really begun to seize our attention as it should have done some years ago. I am referring here to the ecological problems which settlement in the north can bring about. I think it is just as important, and perhaps even more so, for the government to have on-going and in-depth studies of the environmental and ecological problems which would be faced in developing the north in the same way that they are concerned with these problems concerning the pollution of our coastal lands by merchant tankers. The permafrost of the north with its problems for drainage and absorption of waste material, and the easy manner in which the tundra can be damaged, make it imperative that before large numbers of people are encouraged to settle in the north the government should bring to bear the best scientific resources and minds possible to determine the implications of large scale human settlement of the north. Only in this way can precautions be taken to meet the problems which will surely arise. Ecology and pollution are modern terms in our vocabulary, but the consequences of our failing to give them proper consideration could well be as devastating upon our future lives as plagues and other great pestilences were to generations gone by.

In particular, Mr. Speaker, I have two suggestions which I believe the government ought to act on forthwith if it has sincere intentions regarding northern development. First, I believe the time is now opportune to make the Yukon Territory a province, and the Mackenzie area as well. It is time that the residents of these two territories were removed from their semicolonial status and accorded the full rights and advantages of provincial status. I believe that the psychological effect alone of such a step by the government would help to attract more people to the areas.

Second, I urge in the strongest possible terms that the government reconsider and withdraw the increased mining taxes and royalties payments which the proposed new Yukon minerals act would enact from mining in the Yukon Territory. Few measures could be more detrimental to the development of the north at this time than for these burdensome measures to become law.

In summing up, Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to say that I support the motion because the government is derelict on all counts in developing a northern policy, as I have endeavoured to outline in my few remarks.

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in the few moments that remain until the bell must ring I cannot possibly deal with all the issues raised in the motion and the amendment before us, nor indeed with all the issues surrounding northern policy and northern development.

Mr. Baldwin: It would take you an hour to defend the government.

Mr. Mahoney: Nevertheless, I should like to raise a few issues. In the first place, I note that in the debate which hon. members opposite made possible a few weeks ago on the Mackenzie Valley pipeline, the environmental aspects of this particular subject as introduced by the NDP amendment were dealt with in an extensive and adequate fashion. Had they listened to or even read that debate, perhaps this particular item might not have been introduced at this time.

Looking at northern Canada realistically, it seems to me that we must admit, regardless of the rosy-eyed vision of many of us from southern Canada, that we are looking at an area which for a good long time to come, is going to have a resource based economy. With that in mind I think we have to look at programs for northern development from the point of view of resources. Programs that are most likely to benefit all of Canada, but particularly the residents of the north will encourage resource development. There is an idea fixée that seems to be shared mainly by members of the New Democratic Party, university professors and to a lesser extent some of our younger people, that it does not matter how we got where we are in Canada. They have accepted the fact that we have arrived and that it is presumably an act of the good Lord that brought us here. They seem to think that it does not matter how inhospitable we are to foreign investment, that we will continue to benefit from it. They have taken an almost psychopathic interest in the degree of foreign ownership in the resource industries, saying that because the companies which are largely engaged in those industries are now foreign owned and controlled, the resources themselves are owned by foreigners. That simply is not true.

Premier Strom has very clearly stated the view of his government when he said:

> It cannot be effectively argued in Alberta that there can be foreign ownership of Alberta's energy resources. Such resources are available for lease, license, or other form of terminal grant. Ownership does not pass to the company developing the resource. The province has and preserves the right to regulate the manner in which operations may be conducted, the terms and conditions under which any energy resource may be acquired and held for development, and the rentals and other charges that must be paid to maintain the operation.

In the federal field, Mr. Speaker, the National Energy Board controls exports of oil and gas, where and when pipelines may be laid, and the federal government controls the federal lands by way of permits or lease terms, rentals and royalties. As we all saw so clearly in the revocation on April 15, 1970, of Land Order 1-1961, the federal government is prepared to exercise its jurisdiction.

With the exception of a few instances of freehold ownership of mineral rights, the people of Canada by and large through their provincial and federal governments own all our resources. The fact that we grant opportunities for the development of these resources to foreigners in no way changes the ownership, and our governments have exercised the kind of control that is conducive to the public interest.

Another idea that seems to me to be predominant is that investment in resources is not productive of jobs, that it is not in the best interests of Canada and that some other type would be better. In view of the fact that the 1971 census is almost upon us, the figures I have to rely on here are out of the 1966 census, but I am confident that the 1971 figures will bear out the trend that is emphasized here.

[Mr. Mahoney.]

It seems to me that between 1946 and 1960 the only thing that happened in Alberta that was unique to that province was the discovery of petroleum in a very large way. During that period the number of jobs in Alberta more than doubled on the basis of the DBS employment index with 1949 equalling 100. Employment in Alberta increased from 82.6 to 167.4. In Canada as a whole the increase was from 88.2 to 130.3, a rise of 48 per cent. For Manitoba and Saskatchewan the increases were 30 per cent and 43 per cent respectively. The total labour force in the province of Alberta increased at an annual rate of 3.3 per cent during the period compared to 2.1 per cent for all of Canada. In other words, the number of jobs expanded in Alberta half again as fast as for Canada as a whole. The non-agricultural labour force in Alberta during that period increased at an average annual rate of more than 5 per cent compared to 3.2 per cent for Canada as a whole. The population of Alberta rose from something over 803,000 to something over 1,463,000, an increase of 82.2 per cent. During the same period Manitoba's population increased by 32.5 per cent. Saskatchewan's population increased by 14.8 per cent. The percentage of increase applied to Canada as a whole was 60 per cent.

• (5:40 p.m.)

What happened in Alberta to create this tremendously better performance in terms of population, jobs and wealth? It is a well known fact that during that period Alberta made the transition from a "have not" to a "have" province. Mr. Speaker, the only thing that happened there that was different from anything that happened in the rest of Canada and that was perhaps more spectacular than anything that happened in the sister Prairie provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan was the tremendous investment in the resources industries that took place in the province of Alberta.

The theory that nobody is standing around a producing oil well or that very few people are standing around a producing mine is all very well. Those who adopt that simplistic approach are not being completely honest in ignoring the additional exploration activity that is being induced by successful production. They completely ignore the secondary and tertiary employment that results from the resource industries. I think that any policy that on a national basis discourages investment in the resource industries will do a great disservice to all of Canada, and particularly to northern Canada.

Mr. Nielsen: That is what the government is doing with Bill C-187 right now.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, when you speak of the north you immediately think of the wealth of the country.

Mr. Peters: Why does the hon. member speak now, just before the vote? Did he not wish to make a speech lasting 15 minutes?

Mr. Bigg: It is some time since oil was discovered at Prudhoe Bay; yet I suggest that that discovery represents only the tip of the iceberg. All Canada is excited about these new discoveries of oil. What the previous hon. member said about Alberta could well prove true for the whole of Canada. We ought to handle our national heritage as Alberta has handled its resources. We need to fear no spectres of American domination of our oil fields if we handle our own resources as they ought to be handled. There is no reason why, in developing the north, the people of Canada cannot utilize the same techniques of government controlled free enterprise which made Alberta prosperous in the last decade. As has been carefully pointed out, we own that oil that is still undiscovered. Nevertheless, it is there. What we need is a shot in the arm which the government could provide.

Mr. Nielsen: A new government.

Mr. Bigg: I hope that the government is thinking of going to the people. I sincerely hope it will do that, and the sooner the better.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order. It being 5.45 p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to section 9 of Standing Order 58, to interrupt these proceedings and forthwith put every question in respect of the motion now before the House.

[English]

Accordingly, the question is on the amendment.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Lewis) which was negatived on the following division.

NATURAL RESOURCES

REPORT BY MINISTER OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES ON MISSION TO AUSTRALIA

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to report briefly to the House on the Canadian government mission to Australia which I headed from April 28 to May 6, 1971. Our purpose was to promote a continuing exchange of information on the development and marketing of natural resources in our respective countries. Our visit was in accordance with the statement made in Australia a year ago by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), with the Australian Prime Minister, establishing an objective of increasing contact by ministers and officials in areas of common interest.

It was generally agreed in talks which we held with federal and state ministers and officials and with persons in the private sector that Canada and Australia faced many similar problems in developing natural resources, in particular matters relating to the foreign investor, further processing of resources, the provision of infrastructure and in obtaining the maximum opportunity in world markets for our commodities.

• (2:10 p.m.)

In a joint statement made in Canberra on April 30, 1971, by myself and the Hon. R. W. Swartz, the Australian Minister of National Development, we outlined the topics and views which arose in our discussions which were conducted in an atmosphere of friendship and frankness. These ranged over the following: Foreign investment policies and the role of the countries' respective banking systems in such policies; an exchange of information on matters concerning minerals and metals in world markets; matters connected with particular mineral commodities which Canada and Australia produce. These included uranium, copper, iron ore, nickel, lead, zinc, sulphur, aluminum and coal; national philosophies and approaches to energy, mining and resource development, mining legislation and relations between central governments and other administrations and provincial governments in Canada and state governments in Australia.

The minerals industry in Australia has experienced spectacular growth since the end of world war II. Australia will become an even more important mineral exporter in 1971 and years ahead, chiefly because of increased sales of iron ore, coal, bauxite, alumina and nickel.

Australia has uncovered significant and rich deposits of uranium. Canada shares a common interest, particularly in the short term, when the uranium market may be soft, in continuing liaison with Australia on the marketing of uranium.

We were informed that the Commonwealth Government of Australia has now under consideration the decision with respect to its nuclear programs and we put forward the Canadian position with respect to the various modifications of Canada's CANDU reactor which could be made available to meet Australia's needs.

It is in the interest of both our countries to get the optimum price for our raw resources, and to achieve maximum economic processing at home, and thus to leave the maximum amount of the dollars in our respective countries in the form of taxes, profits and in wages from resource development for the growth of our own economies. It was clearly agreed that in working more closely together and having a continuing association we can best assure these objectives.

The talks were the most comprehensive of their kind concerning natural resources ever conducted between the two countries, and mark a new aspect of the role of Canada in the affairs of the Pacific basin, in line with the government white paper on foreign policy.

I can report to the House that we expect to continue these discussions with the Hon. R. W. Swartz, Commonwealth Minister of National Development, here at Ottawa within the next two to three months.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I was about to enter a mild complaint about the fact that a copy of the statement we have just heard reached my desk only a few seconds ago, although that may not be the minister's fault, leaving me with insufficient time in which to prepare to comment on it. But having read it and listened to him it is obvious that I had ample time in which to do so. I suggest to the Secretary of State for External Affairs that judging from the language of this communiqué the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources must be considered a strong candidate for his position.

The statement contains some sensational passages; I shall refer to two of them. The minister said: "We outlined the topics and views which arose in our discussions which were conducted in an atmosphere of friendship and frankness." That is a tremendously important statement. He also said: "It is in the interest of both our countries to get the optimum price for our raw resources." Spectacular, Mr. Speaker!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: I think what happened was that the minister went to Australia to sell something and he had no more success in doing so than he had in selling himself to the electorate of Lanark and Renfrew.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to begin my remarks by congratulating the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) on both the humour and the relevance of his remarks. I want to say to the minister that he could save the time of hon. members and save himself the trouble if he would refrain from bringing this kind of meaningless nonsense before the House as an alleged report.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I suggest to him that if he has nothing to say it is much better not to say it.

The minister tells us that the communiqué contained topics and views and then he gave us the topics but not the views. I would be interested in knowing what the views were. I would be interested in knowing what the minister told the Australian minister about the Canadian government's policy on foreign ownership. We have been waiting for that for two years and do not have it yet. If the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was able to tell the Australian minister what the policy is, then he owes an apology to the House for not telling us.

An hon. Member: Don't get political.

Mr. Lewis: I am trying not to. As for the rest of the statement, it is precisely what the hon. member for Peace River said it was—a lot of words.

I hope the minister had a good time in Australia. I have never visited that country and look forward to doing so. I hope he sold a reactor to the Australians, though he did not say so. I have not known the minister to hide his accomplishments under a bushel; therefore I must conclude that he did not succeed in so doing. I appeal to him not to worry us with this kind of thing unless he does so in comedy.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for sending me a copy of his statement approximately two minutes before I left my office, even though this was the English version.

I do not have the French version; I intend nevertheless to make some comments on his statement in the House. He said, for instance, that his trip to Australia had permitted him to have talks with his counterpart, the minister of national development, and to state that the two countries—

[English]

—faced many similar problems in developing natural resources, in particular matters relating to the foreign investor—

[Translation]

The minister likes to hear himself talk. I agree entirely with the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) who said that the statement is made up of well constructed sentences, but that it is at best a piece of rhetoric that does not have much meaning. In fact, he said, and I quote:

[English]

These ranged over: foreign investment policies and the role of the countries' respective banking systems in such policies;—

[Translation]

I should have liked the minister to go a little more thoroughly into his views of that important matter, because that is where the problem lies. What is the contribution of foreign investment to the development of our resources?

For many years we have been telling the government and the minister to use new credits issued by the Bank of Canada for the development of our natural resources and the treatment of raw products but the minister pays no heed to our suggestions.

For instance, when we go to the United States for $100 million which are lacking in Canada, that makes an extra $100 million, but the minister does not bring back from the United States a wheelbarrow load of dollars. He returns with figures. What difference would there be between "setting up figures" based on our resources through the Bank of Canada and going to the United States for them? Does a "7" written in Canada not have the same value as a "7" written in the United States? Is a "10" made in the United States different from one made in Canada? This is what the government should pay attention to.

If the minister is prepared, with his Australian counterpart, to discuss—

Foreign investment policies and the role of the countries' respective banking systems in such policies—

—I am anxious to see him come up with some concrete suggestions concerning a Canadian banking system which would allow Canadians to control their own development.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT INCREASE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on a matter of urgent concern to move a motion under Standing Order 43. My motion relates to the tragic fact, as revealed by labour force statistics released today, that the government's economic plan is causing unemployment to rise continuously in nearly every region of the country when the need for recovery and resurgence has never been greater. The bleak prospects for more than 650,000 Canadians constitute the most urgent and pressing problem which has faced this House and the nation in the last decade. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski):

That this House demand an immediate reconstruction, review and restatement of employment, taxation, and general economic policies, and that the House categorically rejects the traditional and reactionary economic policies accepted and applied by this government which have caused stagnation, blight, and unprecedented human misery throughout this country.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate. Under the terms of Standing Order 43 this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. The Chair must inquire whether there is such unanimity.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Som hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimity; therefore the motion cannot be put.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

PROVISION THAT MEMBERS SHALL NOT ACT AS BARRISTERS AND ACCEPT FEES FOR SERVICES TO CITIZENS

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-247, to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act (St. Luke 11:46).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I must say first that this is not my original suggestion. It came from a former member of the House for Kootenay West, Mr. Bert Herridge. The bill in question proposes to remedy the grievance that arises when the public relationship between Member of Parliament and citizen is subverted to the private relationship between lawyer and client to the financial hurt of the citizen, for example, when a citizen asks his member to make inquiries in an immigration matter and is later dismayed to find that he is billed for the service. This bill is designed to overcome this problem.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

MOTIONS TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT INCREASE

Mr. Speaker: Before I call on the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings I should bring to the attention of the House that both the hon. member for Prince Edward Hastings and the hon. member for York South have submitted, by virtue of Standing Order 26, notices to the Chair of their intention to move motions which are substantially the same. Therefore it might perhaps be preferable if both hon. members were allowed to present their motions, after which the Chair could give an opinion on the procedural aspect of the matter.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Ricard), the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics release showing that unemployment has risen from 6.0 per cent to 6.7 per cent of the work force, seasonally adjusted, during the month of April, despite the assurances by the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and other members of the government at the beginning of the year that unemployment would decline steadily as the year progressed.

INCREASES IN UNEMPLOYMENT AND COST OF LIVING

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the fact that the incompetent economic policies of the government have now continued too long as manifested by the combination of a shocking jump in seasonally adjusted unemployment from 6.0 per cent to 6.7 per cent and an increase at the same time in the consumer price index of 1.8 per cent since the beginning of the year.

Mr. Speaker: As I indicated a moment ago, both the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings and the hon. member for York South have given the Chair notice of these motions. Since then the Chair has spent agonizing moments questioning whether the motions should be put. Hon. members realize that in circumstances such as these it is a very difficult decision to determine whether the provisions of Standing Order 26, from a strictly procedural standpoint, should be interpreted in order to allow the motion to be put and a special debate to take place.

What the Chair must take into account, first, is whether there have been discussions in previous weeks or previous months during the term of the current session on the matter proposed for consideration on an emergency basis. Hon. members know as well as I do that in the course of the current session we have had numerous discussions of the problem of unemployment and on a number of occasions have debated the matter of the economic policies of the government.

As I have said before, I feel there may be an occasion when the statistics brought to the attention of the House might be of such a nature that a motion should be granted in order to move the adjournment for the purpose of discussing the situation revealed by these statistics. At the same time, however, from month to month we have had to consider those statistics and motions proposed on a regular basis dealing with those reports made by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. The Chair has expressed the thought that because of the recurring nature of the matter and since we were dealing, unfortunately, with a continuing situation it was very difficult from a strictly procedural standpoint, to allow the adjournment of the House for an emergency debate.

The Chair must also take into account the possibility or probability of a debate by other means in the future. I do not think I can honestly overlook the fact that we still have before us and available to all hon. members for the purpose of general debate, particularly on the economic situation, 11 supply days which will be available during the weeks ahead. There is also the fact, as announced by the Minister of Finance, that there will be at least the beginning of a budget debate. I do feel that there will be a reasonable opportunity for debate on this very important and urgent matter within the days ahead.

Because of all these circumstances, and taking into account the precedents and the requirements of Standing Order 26, I do not think that from a procedural standpoint that it is possible for me to agree to an adjournment of the House later today for consideration of the very serious matter referred to by the hon. members for York South and Prince Edward-Hastings.

I might say that there is a third motion which in some ways is related to the two to which I have just alluded. The third motion is proposed by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, but there are other aspects of this motion which the Chair would like to consider separately. Perhaps the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby might be allowed at this time to make his motion.

An hon. Member: The budget debate is a month away.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

EMERGENCY AID TO PERSONS NO LONGER ABLE TO DRAW BENEFITS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg), to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the need to provide emergency aid to the thousands of unemployed Canadians who are no longer able to draw unemployment insurance benefits because high levels of unemployment have continued so long and because the government has announced its intention not to continue seasonal benefits beyond the end of this week.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby has given notice of this motion. I have again considered the matter very seriously and, as I pointed out a moment ago, there are very special aspects to this motion which perhaps are not germane to the other two motions to which I have referred, particularly in relation to the government's announced intention not to continue seasonal benefits beyond the end of this week. I have been reflecting on this aspect of the matter.

The Standing Order makes it possible for the Chair to delay decision on such a motion. I should like to have an opportunity later this afternoon to consider certain aspects of the matter, perhaps even in the light of the question period, and later this afternoon indicate to hon. members whether I feel there is such a difference between this motion and the other two that it might be allowed for the purpose of a special debate later today. If hon. members will allow the Chair to do so, as provided by the Standing Order, we will allow this motion to stand and I shall refer to it later in the course of our proceedings this afternoon.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT INCREASE—ECONOMIC STIMULATION BY TAX REDUCTIONS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance arising out of the very disturbing figures just issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics for the month of April relating to employment, and particularly unemployment. Is the minister now prepared to take the advice that we have been offering him for some months and stimulate the economy through selective tax reductions and other methods? I emphasize this, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the seasonally adjusted increase in unemployment between the month of March and April this year is the highest such increase in 20 years.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in preparing the forthcoming budget I shall of course take into consideration all the advice I receive, including advice from the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the minister's statement on January 19 that he would be prepared to bet that unemployment on a seasonally adjusted basis would be progressively reduced throughout the year, I should like to ask the minister whether he meant to indicate that he was staking his position on that forecast and, if so, whether he is now prepared to pay off his bet and resign?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Resign!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Leader of the Opposition is inviting the Minister of Finance—I am not sure what it is he wants him to do, to wager or bet or invest—

Some hon. Members: Resign!

Mr. Speaker: —but I would think that asked in those terms the question is not in order. Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition might care to rephrase it.

An hon. Member: Thirty buck Benson.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I agree that the minister does not have to answer the question but I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the calamitous effect of the policies pursued by this government and by the Minister of Finance, is the Prime Minister prepared to assure Parliament that he will not permit this Minister of Finance to present another budget to the House?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

INCREASES IN UNEMPLOYMENT AND COST OF LIVING—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that we now have a situation of very high unemployment, as has been indicated, and also a rise in the consumer price index for the first four months of the year at an annual rate of around 5 per cent, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether from now on the government will be fighting unemployment or fighting inflation, since we have both?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have always said that we had to beware of these two dangers to our economy and we have fought both.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: We have done it in spite of the advice of opposition parties—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Come off it.

Mr. Trudeau: —who all through the inflationary period were suggesting that we spend more.

An hon. Member: That is a lot of nonsense.

An hon. Member: Why don't you try kissing it away?

An hon. Member: Kiss your problems away.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister this simple question to which I think the Canadian people have the right to an answer: Can the government now state to Parliament and the people of Canada that a policy of full employment is its first priority and not its phobic notion of inflation and that it will therefore abandon the gradual policy of hastening economic recovery that it has carried on until now because of its fears and take full measures?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, when the Leader of the New Democratic Party speaks of our fear of inflation I must remind him that in the first full year of this government it was his party and the Conservative party which were blaming the government for not coming to grips with the problem of inflation. Therefore, if there was any phobia it began on that side.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Champlain wish to put a supplementary question?

Mr. Matte: No, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In view of the unemployment figures announced today and the fact that the cost of living has gone up during the past three months at an annual rate of 7.2 per cent, showing that the government has obviously lost control of the economy, does the government intend in the near future to announce to Parliament a new approach to these twin problems of inflation and unemployment?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Finance just said, if there are any new approaches we will announce them in the budget, but we believe that until then the government must remain free to adopt whatever measures it feels are necessary to combat whichever of these evils is menacing the Canadian economy.

An hon. Member: Don't you know which one?

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member knows that in managing the economy you must look at the trends, and by the indicators which the opposition parties are now accepting, the seasonally adjusted figures, which incidentally they were accusing the government of hiding behind a few months ago—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have heard from the members opposite that it was intellectual dishonesty to use these figures they are now using.

An hon. Member: You can do better than that.

Mr. Trudeau: But if they are now prepared to accept them I suggest that they look at the trends since last September and they will find that the economy is improving.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the trend, of course, is established by a series of figures, not just by one taken out of a month, which 17 times out of the past 18 years have increased between March and April.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, on a further supplementary I would just like to say that if that is a win I would hate to see us have a loss. Would the Prime Minister tell the House very simple which the government considers to be the most important problem, unemployment or inflation?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I suppose the most serious problem of the House is the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: But of the two economic problems, Mr. Speaker, obviously full employment is the goal of this government. All through the period when we were fighting inflation we explained to the Canadian people that in order to have a successful and growing economy you had to kill inflation as an evil. Therefore, whether we fight unemployment directly or whether we fight it by curtailing inflation, we are seeking for a prosperous and successful economy.

Mr. Hees: That goes under the heading of gobbledygook.

UNEMPLOYMENT—INVESTMENT CONTROL TO DIRECT CANADIAN CAPITAL TOWARD JOB-CREATING PROJECTS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that in the government's endeavours to come to grips with inflation it produced 659,000 unemployed at the end of April, while inflation is still with us, does the minister intend to take any new initiatives with respect to the government's economic policy and, particularly, does the government intend to exercise any control over investments with a view to directing the available capital in this country toward job-creating projects?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): First of all, Mr. Speaker, as I have said previously, the government's economic policy is constantly under review, and it is under particular review at this time in preparation for a budget which I have announced will be forthcoming next month.

UNEMPLOYMENT—ASSISTANCE FOR PERSONS WITHOUT UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a further question to the right hon. Prime Minister. While we are waiting for the Minister of Finance to make up his mind about what kind of economic policy will deal with this abysmal situation in the country does the government intend to take any steps to provide for the unemployed who will not have unemployment insurance benefits available to them and who, after the fifteenth of this month, will not be entitled to seasonal benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act?

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not admit the premise of the question. For the past 14 months the government has been indicating that it is turning the economy around, and it began a series of measures—

Mr. Hees: One hundred and eighty degrees around.

Mr. Trudeau: —and began a series of—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I think this is a very bad example for the children in the gallery.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: Go and have a holiday; you need one.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Compton wish to put a supplementary question?

Mr. Latulippe: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for York South has a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Perhaps other hon. members are wiser in laughing at the remark which the Prime Minister made, but I want to say, Mr. Speaker, as one member of the House, that this unbridled arrogance—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: —in the face—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: This unbridled—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lewis: —this unbridled—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are still attempting to hear the point of order. I know that a number of hon. members have supplementary questions. I was trying to ascertain a moment ago whether the hon. member for Compton has a supplementary, and I will call on him in a moment. The hon. member for York South indicated that he has a point of order. Perhaps he might indicate what it is. I had the impression a moment ago that he was making a statement instead of raising a point of order. He might help the Chair by indicating what his point of order is.

Mr. Lewis: If, Mr. Speaker, the hyenas opposite will keep quiet—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please.

Mr. Lewis: I rise, Mr. Speaker, to say that the unbridled arrogance of the Prime Minister—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: —in the face of this discussion of the most serious situation in the country in some time, in attempting to take over your task and tell Members of Parliament what to do and what not to do is unforgiveable.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I have some difficulty in understanding how it can be unbridled arrogance for me to attempt to take over your task and appeal for a bit of order so that I can talk economics, whereas it is not unbridled arrogance for the leader of the New Democratic Party to call the members opposite him hyenas.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether we might not try to return to the questions. I know it is the feeling of all—

Mr. Alexander: Never mind the red herrings. Let's get back to the action.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me it is the feeling of all hon. members on both sides of the House that the matter we are discussing is a very important one. I know hon. members are anxious to ask questions. A moment ago I saw quite a few members seeking to ask supplementaries and I am anxious to give them the opportunity to do so. But if we spend a good part of the question period on points of order and questions of privilege, legitimate or otherwise, there will be very few questions asked.

Mr. Nowlan: A supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has caught the Speaker's eye and his ear. He will be recognized in a moment but I am trying to proceed, as much as possible in the circumstances, in an orderly fashion. I think we had reached the point a few minutes ago when the Chair wanted to ascertain whether the hon. member for Compton had a supplementary question.

[Translation]

INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING—MEASURES TO STABILIZE ECONOMY

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

As the consumer price index is rising in every sector in a disconcerting manner, would the right hon. Prime Minister tell this House whether the government intends to intervene directly to establish a policy aimed at lowering prices and the cost of living in order to balance the economy and ensure stability to the Canadian currency?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, to answer this question, it would be necessary for me to know more about the means proposed by the hon. member to lower prices. Does he suggest control over prices and salaries through statutory means, and does he think, along with his party, that the federal government has indeed the necessary jurisdiction to do so?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I revealed a moment ago that the hon. member for Annapolis Valley had caught the Speaker's eye, so I shall recognize him now.

BUDGET TAX ADJUSTMENTS RECOMMENDED BY MINISTER OF INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE TO OVERCOME PROBLEMS

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would not want to accept necessarily the premise of the Prime Minister that he can talk economics if he cannot understand the subject, and so my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the deepening economic problems of the country, and especially how they are affecting our export trade, and in view of the floating dollar which aggravates this problem, can the minister tell us in a general way, without saying what specifics may be involved, if he has made any recommendations at all to the Minister of Finance as to what adjustments, in a tax way, may be in the budget that the Minister of Finance is supposed to deliver some time?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have reported to the Minister of Finance that notwithstanding our many difficulties exports were doing rather well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pepin: For the first three months of the year the trade balance was favourable by $682 million.

Mr. McGrath: And what was unemployment?

Mr. Pepin: —seasonally adjusted, and on a non-seasonal basis, $682 million.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suspect that the minister has many statistics he would like to impart to the House. I do not think that now is the time. He will have to do that by way of a statement on motions. He should reply to the question as briefly as possible without going into details.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I just want to give one more figure if I may, because a few months ago the hon. member, Prince George of Hastings, was about to make a—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister said he wanted to terminate his reply. It seems to me he was not doing so. He was referring to a previous question. I invite the minister to conclude his reply, if he wants to, as quickly as possible because obviously we will be running short of time.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, last year there was a decline of manufactured products in our export content of about 3 per cent. It is well remembered that some hon. members tried to make a national crisis of this. I explained fully at that time why we had that decline. I am eager to report to the House that we have reached 40.4 per cent now in the manufactured content of our exports. So there was no crisis then and there is none now. On the contrary.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if everything is going as well as the minister just indicated with regard to—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: I was talking only about exports.

Mr. Stanfield: If everything is going so well with regard to the manufacture of exports in Canada, how does the minister explain the unseasonal decline in the manufacturing industry in this country between the months of March and April?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I was talking about exports. The question was about exports and I answered about exports.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: If the hon. member has another question to ask, he should ask it. I was answering the question that was asked.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

STEPS TO PROVIDE ASSISTANCE TO PERSONS WITHOUT BENEFITS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. In view of the increased thousands now who are out of work because of the prolonged period of unemployment, which number will be added to at the end of this week as a result of the curtailment of seasonal benefits, can the minister inform the House whether special, emergency steps are being taken to provide additional benefits for the thousands affected by the level of unemployment?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I said yesterday, to be precise, to an hon. member, "I am sure the hon. member would not want to mislead the House in that regard." He was talking about something else. I also said, "I have no intention at present of extending seasonal benefits beyond May 15." This means that the people on unemployment insurance will be drawing benefits until the end of May. This is the significance of the May 15 date. They will draw benefits for two weeks following May 15. Extending seasonal benefits will do nothing for people presently unemployed and not drawing unemployment insurance as a result of the rather stringent regulations which make it impossible for many people who have been out of work for a long time to draw unemployment insurance. Nevertheless, I am aware of the situation and have asked for a full report from the department. I must bring to the attention of the House that the hon. member's suggestion would require a change in the Unemployment Insurance Act as well as an increase in the rates and would do nothing at all for people presently unemployed and who are not on unemployment insurance benefits, seasonal or otherwise.

Mr. Broadbent: After listening to that rather prolonged answer from the minister may I ask whether he will, after he has looked into the situation, inform the House, say by next Tuesday at the latest, of what he has decided to do?

Mr. Mackasey: Yes, Mr. Speaker. That decision will be based on the facts, figures and statistics which the department is putting together.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT INCREASE—MEETING WITH REPRESENTATIVES OF UNIONS AND INDUSTRY TO FIND SOLUTION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister a question.

Referring to a question asked a few weeks ago on the need to call a meeting of representatives of labour unions and the whole economic sector for the purpose of obtaining suggestions to curb unemployment, the Prime Minister answered that he did not deem this necessary at that time. In view of the present unemployment situation, which seems to be out of the government's control, could the Prime Minister tell the House whether the need for such a meeting at all these levels has not become evident today?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member certainly remembers that one reason why we should hesitate before taking such a step is that we tried to do just that last year when, through the Prices and Incomes Commission, we suggested to various sections of the economy that a meeting be called to try and agree to somewhat curtail the inflationary trends. The hon. member will also recall that at that time we were unable to ascertain the co-operation or the attendance of representatives from large sections of the industry and I have no reason to believe, since I already have contacted them, that such a meeting would now be more agreeable to them.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peace River on a supplementary.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a direct question. In view of the situation releaved, will he replace the government's present economic advisers and scrap their policies which have proved totally inadequate to deal with unemployment and inflation?

INDUSTRY

SHOES—MEASURES TO ASSIST QUEBEC MANUFACTURERS

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who is also the member for Drummond.

I would like to ask the minister who cited figures a few moments ago indicating an increase in exports whether he is aware that footwear imports threaten the very existence of nearly 90 per cent of shoe manufacturers in Quebec, and could he inform the House as to the measures he is considering to rescue this industry from stagnation?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I am well aware of this situation, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member would like to suggest with the unanimous consent of his Conservative colleagues that drastic protectionist measures be taken, I would be very happy to consider his suggestion.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I think that it is a quite urgent question since it deals with an industry of which 90 per cent of its activities are carried on in Quebec.

I am asking the minister a clear and specific question.

Does he intend to take some steps liable to prevent early stagnation in the Quebec footwear industry?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I have often stated in the House that it would be wrong to think that all footwear imports in Canada directly affect the Canadian footwear industry.

Evidently some footwear should not be manufactured in Canada because it would not be profitable to make them. I am thinking, for example, of Japanese sandals.

What we have been trying to do, Mr. Speaker, as I have often mentioned it in this House—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister, I understand, wishes to give the hon. member some detailed information. It would perhaps be more simple if the minister would directly communicate the proper information to the hon. member who, I am sure, would be pleased to obtain it.

Mr. Valade: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Sainte-Marie rising on a point of order?

Mr. Valade: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sainte-Marie.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order so as to report that the footwear industry is now in a deplorable situation and I ask the government to make its position and political objectives known—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Apparently, the minister wanted to go on and the hon. member for Sainte-Marie is rising on a point of order. Because of the very short time available, I will say to the hon. member and to the minister that it is most difficult to allow a minister to give a detailed reply to a question even if it is very important.

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I have a very brief supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe wishes to ask a supplementary.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister why 35 shoe manufacturers closed their plants?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again I suggest that such information could be obtained in a general statement by the minister on motions.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT AND INFLATION—INQUIRY AS TO CANCELLATION BY PRIME MINISTER OF TRIP TO RUSSIA

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the crisis proportions of the unemployment problem and the inflation problem, are his plans still remaining the same with respect to his visit to Russia, or is he going to cancel this visit and stay home to deal with these problems?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know that I am planning to leave on Sunday. I do not seriously think that by delaying or postponing the trip I would change the figures in a way in which the government itself could not change them in my absence.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: However, the hon. member might be interested in knowing that I am going as far as Siberia.

Mr. Hees: The Prime Minister should not just go there; he should stay there.

EFFECTIVENESS OF MANITOBA DEFICIT FINANCING PROGRAM IN DECREASING UNEMPLOYMENT—SUGGESTED CONSULTATION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that, unlike the rest of Canada, the unemployment figures for the province of Manitoba have decreased each month for the past three months because of the aggressive deficit financing program of that province, will the minister consult with his opposite number in Manitoba to find out how they do this and do the same?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's supplementary is in the form of a suggestion.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

In view of the contradictions which cast doubts on his words, could the Prime Minister once and for all clarify the situation and tell us whether or not the existence of a parallel government under the leadership of Mr. Claude Ryan has influenced the government in its decision to invoke the War Measures Act last October?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think that question is in order at this stage. The hon. member for Calgary North.

Mr. Woolliams: My question has already been answered, Mr. Speaker.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

DECISION ON ATLANTIC PROVINCES DEVELOPMENT COUNCIL RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to direct a question to the much neglected Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Can the minister inform us, and I hope he can, when he is going to give an answer, which I will hope will be favourable, to the demand of the Atlantic Development Council for an appropriate strategy of development for the Atlantic provinces? I ask this question particularly in view of the tragic unemployment figures indicated in the DBS report for the Atlantic provinces, which are substantially higher than when the minister took office.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, of course we are working in close co-operation with the Atlantic provinces. To my mind, the Leader of the Opposition is not or does not want to be aware of the statistics. Since my department's programs have been in effect in the Maritimes the unemployment rate in this region, which used to be double the national average, has been cut by half this year and is still going down. So the unemployment rate has not increased compared with the national average, but it has decreased, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question. Can the minister tell us when he will be able to appoint a chairman of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, or are his policies so ineffective and discouraging that he cannot find anyone to put in that position?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ATLANTIC PROVINCES—EFFECTIVENESS OF DEPARTMENTAL POLICIES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Notwithstanding the fact that the minister just misrepresented the figures on unemployment in the Atlantic provinces, is he now prepared to admit that his policies cannot work within the present framework of government policies and that unemployment is growing at a rapid rate in the Atlantic region and in the province of Quebec? Is the minister prepared to admit that his program is ineffective within the framework of government policies?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate.

Mr. McGrath: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think the minister should be entitled to reply to my question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that is a decision which has to be made by the Chair. The Chair is not prepared to allow the minister to reply to a question which in my view is clearly argumentative. The hon. member asked the minister whether he is prepared to admit that his policies are not good policies. That is an argument, not a question which is proper or procedurally correct.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

[English]

Mr. McGrath: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the minister is rising on a question of privilege.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I have been accused of distorting the facts and this is a very serious accusation. I would like to know where is the distortion in my statement that the average unemployment rate had decreased in the Atlantic area as compared with that of the whole country. The hon. member accused me of misrepresentation. This is serious and I think he should stop lying to the House.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again we are dealing with an argument between the hon. member and the minister. The minister gives statistics to the House. The hon. member says the statistics are inexact. The minister claims that they are correct. This kind of matter will never be resolved by a question of privilege or a point of order.

Mr. McGrath: I rise on a question of privilege. I said and I maintain that the figures in the Atlantic provinces for the past 10 years show that the minister cannot take any credit for any trend in the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. McGrath: Also, the present figures indicate that unemployment is rising.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. McGrath: The minister should resign.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. McGrath: The minister should resign.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I realize that the hon. member for Malpeque is anxious to ask a question or a supplementary, whatever the case may be, but I think I should recognize the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate who has been trying to get the floor for a while.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR EARLY STATEMENT ON ECONOMIC POLICIES

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Perhaps I can get an intellectually honest answer from the Minister of Finance. In lieu of the budget speech to be made in June, and in view of the present crisis, is the minister prepared to amend the date for his statement to the House and the country and either tomorrow or early next week make a definitive statement on the review, reconstruction and rethinking of the government's economic policies? In view of the fact that the Prime Minister will soon be leaving for Russia and will be out of the country for several weeks, the country is in need of some kind of statement now indicating whether there are any new plans or thoughts on the part of the government that can help Canadians at least to regain confidence in the economy.

An hon. Member: That is not a question. It is a speech.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): At present it is my intention to present a budget some time in the first half of June.

Mr. Lundrigan: I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact the Prime Minister is not prepared to change his plans to travel to the Soviet Union, will he make a statement on motions tomorrow indicating some of the new plans, new economic policies, new employment policies and new taxation thinking on the part of the government to give some rejuvenation to the Canadian people during this period of crisis?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Regina East.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure whether the hon. member is rising on a point of order or to ask a question. If he intends to suggest that the Prime Minister was about to rise that was not my impression, and I am the one who has to be guided. The hon. member for Regina East.

Mr. Burton: My supplementary question is for the—

Mr. Lundrigan: A point of order—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate rises on a point of order.

Mr. Lundrigan: Perhaps the Prime Minister did not hear my question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Regina East.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

CONSIDERATION OF REGIONAL LEVELS OF UNEMPLOYMENT IN PROGRAMS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the statement by the Prime Minister in a recent interview suggesting that the concept of full employment involves differing levels of unemployment, such as Ontario 1 per cent and the Atlantic provinces 5 per cent, can the minister indicate if this is the approach being followed by his department in its programs?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as has been stated in the House, the objective of the department is to reduce disparities in Canada. Disparity means that a situation is not equal to another when compared with it and the purpose of the department is to reduce the disparity between extremes. We were successful in doing this, as I indicated earlier.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

Mr. Burton: Will the minister inform the House when the level of unemployment in the Atlantic provinces was higher than in the month of April, namely 11.6 per cent—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Portage.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Gerald Richard Cobbe (Portage): My question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who is responsible for the census. Can the minister inform the House if the number of people leaving the province of Manitoba exceeds the unemployed?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

ATLANTIC PROVINCES—REVIEW OF DEPARTMENTAL POLICIES

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): My question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In light of the fact that the number of employed persons in the Atlantic provinces dropped by 3,000 in the month of April and the number of unemployed persons increased by 5,000, indicating that the economy of the Atlantic region is contracting rather than expanding, will the minister assure the House that he will immediately review the policies of his department on an urgent basis so that the name of his department can be justified?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, for the figures quoted to have any sense, one must absolutely consider how the whole national economy is faring. Obviously, the Atlantic provinces have felt the effects of what has gone on at the national level, but when we speak of regional disparities it is a matter of finding out where the relative situation of the Atlantic provinces has improved or worsened, and I say it has improved.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

STEPS TO REDUCE UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): In view of the verification by welfare officials in the city of Sydney and by the executive of the Metropolitan Development Committee for Action in the city of Sydney that unemployment at the present time on Cape Breton Island amounts to 25 per cent—and this has been surveyed—can the minister tell us what steps the Cape Breton Development Corporation is taking or plans to take soon to reduce this unemployment figure?

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I would have no one think that I am pleased with the rate of unemployment, whether it be 10, 15 or 20 per cent. Obviously, I am not. Every program we have prepared is intended to remedy the present situation in Sydney.

[English]

Mr. Muir: I don't know whether other members understood it, but to me the translation was absolutely terrible; I could not figure out what the reply was. In any event, I doubt whether the minister said anything of importance.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will recognize that there are only a few seconds left before the end of the question period. Perhaps he might ask his supplementary?

Mr. Muir: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I shall be pleased to ask the minister a supplementary. Would the minister, on the first occasion he is available outside his own constituency, go to Sydney and meet with the officials of the Cape Breton Metropolitan Committee for Action as they request, and advise them what is going to be done regarding the mass unemployment and starvation in the Cape Breton area?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question put a while ago, I would say to the hon. member that to get an intelligent reply he should ask an intelligent question.

In reply to the second part of that question, I am quite willing to meet those people who wish to see me to discuss the serious problems in the Atlantic provinces.

[English]

Mr. Muir: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the minister is reflecting on the clergy, on union leaders and on business leaders who are involved in the work of this committee. They think these questions are intelligent. However, if the hon. gentleman wishes to advise these people that they are ignorant, that is his affair.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Orders of the day. I appreciate there are many hon. members who have not had an opportunity to ask their questions. I tried to keep the question period moving as quickly as I could but I was not entirely successful. I apologize to hon. members on that account, but perhaps other questions might be asked tomorrow.

Mr. Nesbitt: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I was under the impression, though perhaps I was mistaken, that Your Honour had actually recognized me a few minutes ago.

Mr. Speaker: That is not a very good point of order. I did recognize the hon. member but he was pre-empted when I thought the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys should be permitted to ask a supplementary. Then there was a point of order raised and we had, by then, gone beyond the time allotted to the question period. I appreciate I have an obligation to the hon. member and I will try to keep it in mind and live up to that obligation tomorrow.

Mr. Saltsman: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, since you are keeping in mind the position of the hon. member for Oxford, I wonder whether you would also—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I said that I had taken special note of the hon. member for Oxford, but I always have in mind the hon. member for Waterloo.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CONFLICT BETWEEN MEETINGS OF HOUSE AND STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. McGrath: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. My point of order has to do with the business of the House. Today, while the House is in session, there are, according to Votes and Proceedings, 14 standing committees scheduled to meet. One committee is due to leave today at 4 p.m. on an important mission to Washington.

According to my calculations, these 14 committees have a total membership of 260. In other words, 260 of us are supposed to be meeting in the various standing committees this afternoon. This represents the total membership of the House, bearing in mind that there are five vacancies. In addition, of course, we must take account of the fact that there are 29 members of the cabinet and Your Honour, your two deputies, the Leader of the Opposition and the leaders of the other two political parties who are not normally called upon to attend committees. It is impossible for us to man all the committees this afternoon because, taking into account the factors I have mentioned, we are reduced to a total of 215. Yet 260 of us are supposed to be meeting in 14 committees this afternoon.

I am asking for your guidance, Mr. Speaker, because I am torn between my obligation to the House and my obligation to at least three of the 14 standing committees which are meeting. If I might be permitted to make one more comment before resuming my seat, may I say it seems that the government cannot manage the business of the country and cannot manage the business of this House either.

Mr. Peters: I wish to support the contention put forward by the hon. member for St. John's East. This afternoon, a number of my hon. friends in this party have been trying to farm out the manning of committees because they are concerned about the subject that the House will be considering in a few minutes time. The difficulty is that if they are replaced they will be replaced by members who have no continuity of attendance at meetings of those particular committees, and committees cannot function satisfactorily in that way.

Meetings of House and Standing Committees

Government supporters may be able to man the committees to the extent of providing a quorum, but I do not believe committees can function satisfactorily along those lines. This is a matter which should be taken into consideration.

I have particularly in mind the committee which is discussing the question of unemployment insurance. It is meeting this afternoon, and several of its members wish to participate in the debate in the House. It is obviously not good enough that members in all parties who are interested in the subject should find that the subject to be debated in the House is also before committees in another form. I strongly urge that the House leaders should meet and resolve this matter before the point is reached where members will say: To hell with the committees, we will pay attention to what goes on in the House. If this happens the level of committee work will deteriorate to such an extent that it will not be worth while for members to attend them at all.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: I rise on the same point of order, Mr. Speaker. I should like to support those who spoke before me on this subject.

Today the House is considering government order No. 78 which would establish a special joint committee—another committee on top of all the others we already have—to find out if we should pass permanent legislation on emergency measures.

Mr. Speaker, we see that today's problem is not new. It logically derives from this government's habit of trying to invite out of the House as many members as possible. Thus, as it has been said a moment ago, more than 14 committees will be meeting today so that over 260 members will be out of the chamber during that time. Mr. Speaker, I feel there is abuse there.

Therefore I should like to make a proposal to the government, namely that the subject matter and the number of members making up the committee be referred to the Committee on Procedure and Organization in order to find a much more flexible system that will take into consideration the members' interests, both in committees and in the House, thus enabling every member to do his work properly in both places.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Peace River rising on the same point of order?

Mr. Baldwin: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps before I recognize him I should refer to the point of order raised by the hon. member for St. John's East. The submission that he has made is that there is an apparent or obvious conflict between the responsibility of members to the House and to the committees when we have so many committees sitting at the same time as this House is sitting. The point is not new. The hon. member for Timiskaming has made the point and the hon. member for Lotbinière also reminded us of it.

Indeed, a few weeks ago, perhaps a month, the hon. member for St. John's East made a formal presentation for consideration by the Chair and I subsequently delivered myself of a three-page opinion saying that, while I recognized the importance of the matter, I was not sure there was anything that the Chair was able to do except perhaps to try to bring together representatives of the different parties. I undertook at that time to take this initiative and I followed up on my promise. There have been subsequent discussions in the Speaker's chambers with representatives of the different parties. I brought to their attention, as earnestly as I could, the point made by the hon. member for St. John's East, which was repeated today, and I gathered the understanding was that there would be a discussion of this matter.

All hon. members will realize that the solution to this very serious problem must lie in a change of the rules. Unfortunately, the Speaker has no power to change the rules. We were told that the Committee on Procedure and Organization would be going on a special mission during the next day or so, I believe, and these very distinguished representatives of the different parties, I suggest, might take this opportunity to review once again the problem that has been raised today.

I realize the difficulty here, which is obvious. When we have, as we have today, seven committees sitting in the afternoon and five in the evening it is very difficult to expect a large number of hon. members to be in attendance in the House to debate a matter as important as the one that will be debated later on. What more I can do than I have done already is difficult for me to conceive, except that the matter having been brought up again I will renew my submissions on behalf of hon. members to the House leaders, the very distinguished representatives of the different parties, in the hope that some agreement can be found to alleviate the difficulty and perhaps solve the problem.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise another point of order which I would ask Your Honour to consider at the same time. The government house leader and those responsible are able to get away with the business of scheduling a number of committees to sit while the House is in session because of what I consider to be an illegal practice that has crept into our procedure. I should like Your Honour to take this matter under advisement and rule upon it.

I refer to the committees of this House being allowed to sit and hear witnesses notwithstanding the fact that, according to the rules of the House, they are not allowed to operate without a quorum. That is an illegal practice which allows the government to get away with scheduling 14 committees to meet today while the House is sitting.

Mr. Woolliams: May I make a suggestion, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before I hear the parliamentary secretary it might be helpful to hear the hon. member for Calgary North.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, may I say I agree with the hon. member for St. John's East. I opposed the rule changes, and I suggest this problem can only be solved by setting up a legislative committee to take care of legislation. What we are trying to do is to get legislation through all of these committees at once and we just do not have enough manpower to do it. It seems to me that some legislatures do have legislative committees, which are usually large committees that sit much as we sit in committee of the whole House to study bills clause by clause. I throw that suggestion out if we are not going to go back to the former rules, which I think were much superior to the new ones that are not working at all.

Mr. Jerome: If I may briefly reply, Mr. Speaker, to the point of order that has been raised, may I say at the outset that I understand the concern of the hon. member for St. John's East, and indeed other opposition members who addressed themselves to this point. However, at the conclusion of the question period, which I take it is generally acknowledged to be the time when attendance in the House is at its optimum, only 50 per cent of all opposition parties uniformly across the board were present. So it is no wonder they are concerned about staffing committees.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jerome: Be that as it may—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am having some difficulty in hearing the representations being made by the parliamentary secretary. My impression was that after I had heard the submissions made by the hon. member for St. John's East, the hon. member for Timiskaming and the hon. member for Lotbinière, no member rose to my right. If the hon. member did rise I accept his word for it and apologize for not recognizing him. Fortunately for me, perhaps, a second point of order was raised by the hon. member for St. John's East which might technically give the hon. member the occasion to reply. Perhaps he should try to limit himself to the second point raised by the hon. member for St. John's East.

Mr. Nystrom: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jerome: I do, however, Mr. Speaker, want to hasten to point out that the Votes and Proceedings referred to by the hon. member for St. John's East—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member should resume his seat when I call him to order.

Mr. Crouse: Learn the rules, Jerome.

Mr. Speaker: When an hon. member rises on a question of privilege, the Chair must recognize him.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago the hon. member stated that only 50 per cent of the members of the opposition parties were present in the chamber. I might point out that 17 of our 23 members were here. Of the six who were not, two are ill. Therefore the hon. member is not reflecting the truth in making outrageous statements like that.

Mr. Speaker: This is an indication of the thought that I have always had, namely that not much can be achieved by hon. members pointing to other hon. members and suggesting they are either here or not here, that there is absenteeism when there is not. I believe, generally speaking, there is good reason why members from time to time happen not to be in the House, and that this kind of exchange is not very constructive or productive.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, just to correct the record, if I may, on a point of privilege, the Votes and Proceedings referred to by the hon. member for St. John's East, in which he suggested it was indicated 14 committees were scheduled to sit this afternoon, in fact reveals that only seven committees were scheduled to meet this afternoon, of which one met this morning. This committee, the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, had a meeting scheduled for both this morning and this afternoon; and since it completed its work this morning that reduces the number to six. Even at that—

Mr. Speaker: I would point out that we are debating a point of order and perhaps we should attempt to limit ourselves. We are going backwards instead of frontwards. My impression is that we might try and debate the business of the House this afternoon, though we do not appear to be intent on doing so. Perhaps the parliamentary secretary might be allowed to finish his presentation as quickly as possible and then I shall recognize the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond.

Mr. Jerome: I only wanted to say that we have endeavoured through the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra to co-ordinate the efforts of committees. Our most recent efforts were an endeavour to confine committee meetings to four at any one time, except in so far as the scheduling may be interrupted in cases where witnesses have been summoned. We are all anxious to try and co-ordinate this work in order to eliminate the problem, but it does not help to exaggerate the problem out of all proportion by suggesting that 14 committees have in fact been called to meet when in truth only half the number has been scheduled.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has already spoken to the point of order; I am referring to the hon. member for St. John's East. I wonder whether we should not allow the matter to stand there. It seems to me I have indicated what my thoughts are. Basically and essentially I agree with the hon. member for St. John's East, and I am not in disagreement with the arguments brought forth by the parliamentary secretary. Both sides of the argument have been stated. This is a matter of equal interest to hon. members on both sides of the House. I am sure there are members on the government side who, as members of this committee, are as anxious to have this matter settled as hon. members of other parties. I should hope that those who speak on their behalf in the high councils of Parliament, where representatives of different parties meet, will take into account the desires of the different members who are anxious that a solution to this very serious and pressing problem be found. I really do not see what more can be said at this time, except for the Speaker to reiterate his determination to press ahead with the business of the House.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege and I do not wish to detract from the point of order I raised, because it is very substantial. It has to do with my rights as a member of this House. My question of privilege arises from the fact that I do not think the parliamentary secretary should be allowed to misrepresent what I said and by so doing misrepresent the facts. What I said was that there were 14 standing committees scheduled to meet today according to Votes and Proceedings. That journal does not show the fact that there is a subcommittee of the Committee on External Affairs also meeting today. Furthermore, Votes and Proceedings does not show that the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization leaves at four o'clock today on a trip to Washington. If what the hon. parliamentary secretary said represents his only contribution, he should have remained in his seat.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again I suggest to hon. members that there is little point in proceeding in this direction. We have spent 20 minutes of the time of the House now considering something I do not think relates to the order of business this afternoon or the order of business of the five, six, seven or 15 committees, whatever number there are, and I think we should now proceed at this time with the business of the House.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, could the parliamentary secretary shed some light on the question of what we will be considering tomorrow and next week in the House?

Mr. Jerome: Yes, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon we will be proceeding with government order No. 78, a resolution in the name of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), dealing with the establishment of a committee on public order. If that matter is concluded today, and in any event if that matter consumes the full time of today, we will commence with these measures tomorrow in this order: Bill C-244, the Prairie grain stabilization measure; Bill C-238, the Canadian Wheat Board Act amendments; Bill C-246 respecting pilotage, and Bill C-240, the Post Office Act. I think it has been agreed that Tuesday and Friday of next week will be opposition days. If the debate scheduled for today is not concluded, we will return to this matter on Wednesday of next week.

Mr. Baldwin: For the purposes of clarification, will the parliamentary secretary indicate that if we do not conclude the debate we are to commence in a few minutes we will continue with it tomorrow?

Mr. Jerome: If we do not conclude the measure we are on today we will move tomorrow to Bill C-244 and the items enumerated.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

NATIONAL SECURITY

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE ON LEGISLATION TO DEAL WITH EMERGENCIES CAUSED BY LAWLESSNESS OR VIOLENCE

Hon. John N. Turner (for the President of the Privy Council) moved:

That a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons be appointed to examine, inquire into and report upon the nature and kind of legislation required to deal with emergencies that may arise from time to time in the future by reason of lawlessness or violence in Canadian society and that endanger the existence of government or the maintenance of the peace and public order;

That twelve members of the House of Commons, to be designated by the House at a later date, be members of the joint committee on the part of this House;

That the committee have power to sit during sittings and adjournments of the House;

That the committee have power to report from time to time, to send for persons, papers and records, and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee;

And that a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours thereof.

He said: This resolution arises out of the tragic events of last October and the experience of the government of the Canadian people with respect to those events. The question which this House is being asked to place before the committee for report is the nature and kind of legislation required to prevent and to deal with emergencies precipitated by resort to lawlessness or violence which can reasonably be anticipated to arise in the future.

In October, 1970 the government of Canada, the government of the province of Quebec and the administration of the city of Montreal were faced with a crisis that culminated in kidnapping and violent death. It is not my intention to review the events of that crisis because I am certain that they have been inscribed indelibly in the minds of all hon. members. Much has been said about them both within this House and outside of it, and it is sufficient for me to recall that the government decided, very reluctantly, to invoke the provisions of the War Measures Act.

I have used the word "reluctantly" deliberately because we recognized last October and still recognize that that act, with its sweeping regulation-making authority, touching upon almost every conceivable aspect of our social structure, conferred more potential power on the executive than was needed to meet an October, 1970 type of crisis. We also recognized that power of this kind should not be given to the executive except under conditions of absolute necessity. It was in recognition of this that, as soon as possible, the government introduced the Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act, 1970 which, upon its enactment, restored the War Measures Act to its dormant state.

[Translation]

Even if the October events are now part of history, we must nevertheless consider the present state of our society having regard to the lessons learned from those unfortunate events. We must study our society as it is now, when the impact of such events may increase or escalate because of our important and sophisticated means of communications heretofore unknown, but we must also be prepared to see things as they really are and, unfortunately, we are living at a time of confrontation where too many perhaps have embraced a philosophy which is based on violence and destruction. Their aim is not to ensure reforms or changes through democratic processes, but to destroy the established order and the social structures, in order to replace them with some form of totalitarianism. Such individuals do not hesitate to commit the most serious criminal offences. They have repeatedly done so, by resorting to burglary, bombing, arson, blackmail attempts on governments, kidnapping and even murder.

Hate, destruction and violence have been preached throughout the land and, although there were fewer and much less serious overt acts of disorder and violence outside Quebec than in that province, there is no guarantee, Mr. Speaker, that in future there will be no escalation in this field in other parts of Canada.

• (3:40 p.m.)

[English]

On the basis of Canadian history and Canadian experience over the past decade, and the existing social climate, it appears to the government that the events of last October and November cannot be relegated to the status of isolated aberrations unlikely to be repeated. While every responsible person must hope that there will be no repetition, there can be no assurance of this. Indeed, the government believes that some additional legislation is necessary to cope with those problems that may result in the future from disruption, intimidation and violence used as weapons of political action. Such legislation should be designed to permit a graduated response to emergencies that may arise. To the extent possible, response must be in direct proportion to the dimensions of the threat. The adequacy of our laws to meet future emergencies depends not only upon an analysis of those laws as implements of effective crime control but also upon a balanced assessment of whether they reflect the generally accepted and articulated values of our society—one of which is that they must not only facilitate the apprehension and prosecution of the lawbreaker but also that they must protect the innocent from unreasonable interference and harassment. A law that fails to reflect the articulated values of the social order to which it applies is a law that cannot and will not be enforced effectively.

The government is also fully aware that additional legislation in the field of criminal law, whatever form it might take, will not in itself provide definitive solutions to the problems I have been talking about. Indeed, if these problems are to be solved—and if society is to flourish, they must be solved—the primary solutions will be found outside the criminal law. Most of all, the solutions must be found in reforms that eradicate those inequalities in our society from which political fanatics and anarchists draw nourishment for their existence.

However, that there are gaps in the criminal laws of this country that should be filled to facilitate effective law enforcement in times of serious crisis there can be no doubt. But, in eliminating those gaps, we must do everything that can be done to strike the proper balance between those sometimes conflicting and competing social goals of an orderly society on the one hand and of individual liberty on the other.

I wish to emphasize that while the government is of the view that additional legislation is desirable, a final decision has not been taken as to the nature and kind of legislation. The government agrees with those who are of the opinion that every reasonable opportunity should be afforded to those interested persons who may wish to make representations to this Parliament before definitive decisions are taken on the question. We believe the committee will recognize that its examination into these important matters should be thorough, but should proceed with as much dispatch as circumstances permit.

In conclusion, I wish to emphasize that it should be kept in mind, as the Prime Minister has said, that if the government is again confronted with an abnormal and serious crisis that cannot be dealt with within the framework of the existing laws, the fact that the subject matter of permanent legislation is pending before a Parliamentary committee will not prevent the government from immediately introducing additional legislation, if Parliament is sitting, or from summoning Parliament for that purpose if Parliament is adjourned. And finally of course, if circumstances should warrant it, recourse could again be made, as a last resort, to the War Measures Act.

I know that I speak for all members of this House in expressing the hope that none of these steps will be found to be necessary.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the hon. member for Egmont would like to have the floor for the purpose of asking a question of the minister.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in concluding his remarks the minister talked about an abnormal situation. I think, as a lawyer, the minister would agree that it is very difficult to construct any law without knowing the nature of the problem for which one is trying to construct a law. Since the government is looking for some legal recommendations, would the minister indicate what the abnormal situation is about which he is speaking?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I think it will be up to the committee to examine the threats and the responses which may be necessary to meet those threats. That is the purpose of setting up this committee.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Well, Mr. Speaker, I am always happy to see my good friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) pilot through this House a motion, resolution or legislation. I notice the Minister of Justice was unusually short today. I hope that does not mean he wants to keep the matter which we are about to discuss covered up because I believe it is one of the most challenging things which has been before the House for some time.

In his opening remarks I was happy to hear the minister say that the committee, if it is set up, will wish to come to grips with the crisis—of course we call it the alleged crisis—that took place last fall, and the unfortunate events which surrounded it. I mention that because yesterday I had hoped to be able to cut down my remarks considerably when I asked the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), because the motion is in his name, what was meant by the terms and conditions in this resolution. If we look at it very carefully, we will see that there could be some great argument—I say this with the greatest respect—if the committee is set up, and if this matter goes to the committee, concerning just what the terms of reference mean.

I wish to bring these words to Your Honour's attention:

That a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons be appointed—

By this House.

—to examine, inquire into and report upon the nature and kind of legislation required to deal with emergencies that may arise from time to time in the future—

I am glad the minister said this committee is to be set up because of what happened during the events of last fall. I believe, to start with, we might ask these questions: Was the War Measures Act necessary? Was there an apprehended insurrection? What was the effect of the implementation so far as the question of civil rights of the individual are concerned? How effective was it? What were the abuses and do we need any legislation beyond what is encompassed in the Criminal Code? Having said that, may I say that any committee looking into this matter must therefore have before it those witnesses who have, or allegedly have, the knowledge, such as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand), the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) and indeed the Prime Minister of Quebec.

An hon. Member: And Mr. Saulnier, too.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, and Mr. Saulnier. If these people appear as witnesses, then we should be able to answer these questions. Having set the tone for my remarks, may I say that we have been asked to consider today the setting up of a joint committee composed of members of the Senate and House of Commons for the purpose, as the Minister of Justice has just said, of inquiring into and reporting upon the nature and kind of legislation required to deal with a crisis similar to that which is alleged by the Prime Minister and his government to have existed on October 16 in the province of Quebec.

• (3:50 p.m.)

The terms of reference, I say at the outset, of this committee which is to be established would seem to be narrow. They certainly appear to be narrow from the answers given by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) yesterday, as recorded at page 5736 of Hansard. The examination of the past is important only to prepare for the future, and when I say to prepare for the future then I ask these questions: Is any permanent legislation necessary at all? If permanent legislation of this nature is necessary, what kind of legislation will it be? An amendment to the Code? A new public order act? A watered down version of the War Measures Act? We can only come to conclusions on that if we are able to find out the facts from those hon. gentlemen who have made contradictory statements from time to time in reference to the apprehended insurrection and the implementation of the War Measures Act and, indeed, the public order bill.

We need a far clearer statement from the Prime Minister or the Minister of Justice and all the other Ministers who gave reasons for the implementation of the War Measures Act than we have to this date. We want to be assured that if the Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice and all those other hon. gentlemen I have mentioned are not compellable witnesses—and there is always some difficulty in getting ministers and the Prime Minister before a committee—at least we should have some statement from some distinguished hon. gentlemen that they will at least appear before the committee and give a clear statement of facts. It should be stated, first, why the War Measures Act was implemented and, second, why the public order bill was approved to replace the War Measures Act, then was allowed to wither and die on the vine without any proper and concrete explanation.

We must have the facts and the evidence to make a decision. This government's desire to hide the true situation will produce a useless committee, forcing members to work but not produce.

Mr. Sharp: But they will have to think.

Mr. Woolliams: This committee, and I pause here for a moment, is merely set up to sweep under the carpet the facts that have not come forth from the government in reference to what took place. If action was taken merely to inflame public opinion or even help out a weak government some way, we want to know this, because we are dealing with a most important matter. We have a Minister of Justice who likes to ride around in shining armour, as a great reformer. If we need any law at all, this kind of act can only come about if the truth is produced and nothing short of having the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice give a clearcut statement to the committee on why the cabinet implemented the War Measures Act and proposed the public order bill, will do.

At the beginning we on this side of the House had to accept the words of the distinguished ministers and the prime minister. If you look at the original script when the War Measures Act was implemented you will find they said, "you can take it from us, there is an apprehended insurrection." No shadow boxing is acceptable, otherwise this committee, like many other standing committees of the House of Commons, will be used by the government to cover up half truths and distortions in an endeavour to justify the implementation of crisis legislation. If this country is to stay together can we, in committee, come up with the kind of legislation that is applicable to one province but really is not going to be used in the other nine? I have always believed that the law should serve every Canadian wherever he walks, runs, thinks or where he sleeps, and it should not depend upon the province in which he resides.

Let us look at the reasons given by the Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice and indeed all the other ministers as well as the premier of Quebec for the implementation of the War Measures Act which set aside the civil rights of the people in this country, in particular in the province of Quebec. Even when the public order bill was before this chamber an amendment to have a board of review was denied. It was denied, Mr. Speaker, and since then we have found out that 497 arrests were made. The responsibility for this situation rests on the shoulders of the Minister of Justice, not the Prime Minister, because he just uses the Minister of Justice at times. Of the 497 arrested, 62 were charged and with one or two exceptions, because you cannot pry the information out of this government even with a crowbar, all were charged with offences contrary to the Criminal Code of Canada rather than under the crisis legislation. One is brought to the conclusion of the Prime Minister, upon reflection after the events are over, when he said, "what are you going to do—we have seditious conspiracy." Mr. Speaker, we had seditious conspiracy in the Code on October 16, 1970 when we implemented the War Measures Act.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: That was a little fresh air, a truth that slipped out.

To digress for a moment, I should like to quote from a statement made by the Prime Minister—as usual outside the House of Commons—at Westminster, British Columbia. This statement was reported in the daily newspapers across the nation when he found out for the first time that we have a monarchy. If one looks at the motion one finds that the committee is supposed to look into the situation and come up with a recommendation as to what kind of legislation we should adopt. I can just see the Prime Minister, as quoted on the front page of the Globe and Mail of May 12 1971, saying:

> The federal government will resort again to the War Measures Act if violence like that of the October crisis in Quebec breaks out and parliament gets bogged down in considering special anti-terrorist laws.

Let me pause there for a moment. The Prime Minister knew when he made that statement, as the Minister of Justice knows today, that between the time Canadians went to bed on the night of October 15 and when they woke up on October 16, the rules of the game in society had been changed, yet there had been no action by Parliament. Cabinet met in secret, either that night or the day before, and implemented the War Measures Act. As a result 497 people were arrested and 62 charged, most of them under the Criminal Code. The Globe and Mail article continues:

This was promised recently by Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau on two occasions. One, in a letter dated May 7 to Premier Robert Bourassa of Quebec,—

We now have that letter so I shall not refer to it because it has been tabled in this House. The newspaper article goes on:

—and secondly, in a lengthy interview the same day with a Canadian Broadcasting Corporation television crew.

Having said that, let us analyse now what reasons the Minister of Justice gave for the implementation of the War Measures Act and, finally, the public order bill. He is the highest officer in the government, except for the Prime Minister, because it is the Minister of Justice who looks after the administration of justice in Canada. The minister quoted from two letters, one from the premier of Quebec and one from the mayor of Montreal, the texts of which may be found in Commons Debates for October 16, 1970 at page 212. This letter is from the premier of Quebec and reads:

Under the circumstances, on behalf of the government of Quebec, I request that emergency powers be provided as soon as possible so that more effective steps may be taken. I request particularly that such powers encompass the authority to apprehend and keep in custody individuals who, the attorney general of Quebec has valid reasons to believe, are determined to overthrow the government through violence and illegal means. According to the information we have and which is available to you, we are facing a concerted effort to intimidate and overthrow the government—

Let me pause there for a moment. The Prime Minister, on the Webster radio show in Vancouver—it is quite a show—said one of the reasons the government brought in the War Measures Act was because there was a suggestion of an alternative government. But he did not explain, if Bourassa was so weak at that time, that the alternative might have been a government set up through a democratic process. Maybe one of the members of his own cabinet said, "This man is too weak." Perhaps one of the members of the opposition could have got a group together in the legislature and formed a new government. Mind you, this suggestion was never explained during the debate. That is why the committee must get the facts. That is why we need the Minister of Justice, and the Prime Minister and his friends before that committee as witnesses, not as expert witnesses but as factual witnesses. Then, we will find out.

• (4:00 p.m.)

I really prefer to accept the words of the Minister of Justice because he went beyond the three reasons given by the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister said, "Look, I have laid everything before Parliament. The Canadian people know the reasons." If you read what the Minister of Justice said about that you will see the contradiction and understand why the committee, if it is to come up with adequate, properly legal legislation, has to get at the bottom of this thing. I continue the quotation:

According to the information we have and which is available to you, we are facing a concerted effort to intimidate and overthrow the government—

Of course in the light of the unemployment situation today, I would think if anybody in this Chamber could overthrow this government it would be a good thing for the nation.

Mr. Sharp: By violence?

Mr. Stanfield: Almost.

Mr. Sharp: Do you support violence?

Mr. Woolliams: Certainly, I don't support violence.

Mr. Sharp: You seem to.

Mr. Woolliams: I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) to read what he and other ministers said. Mr. Speaker, their truth is like a bunch of yo-yos going up and down, changing like the weather changes.

Mr. Sharp: You tell us. I am listening but I have heard nothing new.

Mr. Woolliams: I am sorry the Secretary of State for External Affairs is so touchy on this subject. But he always gets a little touchy when he is here and the Prime Minister is not, because he dreams of the leadership he once sought. However, he made the great compromise to become minister of external affairs, and handed over his troops.

An hon. Member: More than you ever had.

Mr. Woolliams: To continue with this quotation:

It is obvious that those participating in this concerted effort completely reject the principle of freedom under the rule of law.

Then, there was the letter from the Mayor of Montreal. I repeat that I am quoting from the speech of the Minister of Justice as recorded in Hansard:

The chief of the Montreal Police has informed us that the means available to him are proving inadequate and that the assistance of higher levels of government has become essential for the protection of society against the seditious plot and the apprehended insurrection in which the recent kidnappings were the first step.

I want to pause there. Under the Criminal Code, kidnapping is an offence, murder is an offence, and suggested conspiracy is an offence. If these people were seditious conspirators plotting kidnappings, plotting murders, blowing up mail boxes, blowing up people,—all of which had been happening,—then all you had to do was get a police force to arrest them under the terms and conditions of the Criminal Code, even in spite of the Minister of Justice's new bail amendment which was more bluff and puff than anything else.

On that day, October 16, as recorded at page 212 of Hansard, the Minister of Justice said:

The government of Canada has to take the final responsibility but when the Government of the Province of Quebec and the mayor of the largest city in this country, on the information available to them and the information available to us through our own law enforcement agencies, are of the opinion that the state has been reached where we ought to, as sound and common sense human beings, anticipate a danger to our society in the form of insurrection and are willing to use that type of vocabulary to the Prime Minister of Canada, then that is material which we cannot ignore.

I want to recite a list of events that have contributed to the rapid acceleration of this dangerous situation in Quebec. They are the kidnappings, which in themselves if they were isolated would be a purely criminal affair but, within the context of a wider conspiracy and being used for ransom against a legitimately constituted government, are something else. We have the continuous threats to life and property in the communications of the FLQ of a seditious, violent and inflammatory nature. They have been issued and members are aware of them.

Now, I want to pause before I come to that part where the Minister of Justice said—this is something the Prime Minister never said—"There are other facts which I cannot disclose to Parliament." He was saying, in effect, there are other facts that the people don't know which I have within my bosom as a result of my responsibility as Minister of Justice. I cannot tell you now, but when history is written either they will be leaked out, or somebody will tell when all this trouble is passed. The Prime Minister said, "I have laid the facts, the three reasons before the House, and there are no other reasons. Parliament has been told. The people have been told." Therein lies a great contradiction and, as I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, I prefer to take the words of the Minister of Justice because there must have been something more.

An hon. Member: Someday we will know.

Mr. Woolliams: We will know someday, and I hope it will be in this committee because I want to have not only the privilege but the pleasure of asking questions of these distinguished gentlemen.

Now, I want to refer for a few moments to page 8 of the Report of the Royal Commission on Security, published in June, 1969. I do this because the government left the impression that all this was new, that on the night of October 15 all this came to light. The Minister of Justice must have read this report. The Prime Minister must have read it. What did it say? Mr. Coldwell, a very distinguished Canadian, and two other distinguished Canadians were on this commission. Some people used to refer to Mr. Coldwell as a sort of revolutionary in Saskatchewan. I am glad he created one revolution to get rid of the Gardiner machine.

I quote from paragraphs 21 and 22 of the report:

In addition to the requirement for security procedures imposed by the communist threat, Canada is at present faced with a second and perhaps even more difficult internal security problem arising from the activities of some elements of the Quebec separatist movement. Separatism in Quebec, if it commits no illegalities and appears to seek its end by legal and democratic means, must be regarded as a political movement—

With all of which I would agree, and I think any hon. member would agree.

—to be dealt with in a political rather than a security context.

Then, the Commission says:

However, if there is any evidence of an intention to engage in subversive or seditious activities, or if there is any suggestion of foreign influence—

About which I am going to have something to say in a few moments.

—it seems to us inescapable that the federal government has a clear duty to take such security measures as are necessary to protect the integrity of the federation.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

I might digress. This government won't even protect the constitutional rights of the people.

At the very least it must take adequate steps to inform itself of any such threats, and to collect full information about the intentions and capabilities of individuals or movements whose object is to destroy the federation by subversive or seditious methods.

Before I read paragraph 22, let me summarize what I have just read. There, the Commission warned the government, early in June, 1969, about the events that were taking place. There were bombings. There were murders. There were buildings being blown up. As the Commission said, if it was a separatist movement in a political sense it had to be dealt with in a political way, but if it was a separatist movement to undermine the very foundations of our nation, that was a very different thing.

What the government told us on October 16 was that there was such a movement. But it could have found that out in June, 1969. We were questioning the government, but we never got any answers about the royal commission. Now, let me read paragraph 22:

Although the more moderate elements of the Quebec separatist movement have up till now been conducting a largely political campaign—

That was the way of Levesque, who at one time was a great friend of the minister.

—it appears to us that there is in certain quarters—

And these are the important words

—a tendency to resort to activities that could well be regarded as seditious.

• (4:10 p.m.)

What did the Minister of Justice, the Prime Minister or any member of the cabinet do about that report? The answer is, nothing. I continue quoting:

What is more, there is no doubt about communist and Trotskyist interest and involvement in the movement.

It is significant that the author speaks of communists and Trotskyists. He was a revolutionary in a parliamentary sense. Actually, I am not quite sure what a Trotskyist is. I have an idea that he will try to undermine you and blow you up. I continue quoting:

Both groups have established 'autonomous' Quebec organizations as somewhat transparent attempts to exploit separatist sentiment.

May I refer to history for a moment? Kerenski was the leader of a democratic revolt, but he was finally overthrown by Lenin and the Bolsheviks. There, evil supplanted good. I continue quoting:

—members of both have achieved positions of influence in at least some of the separatist groups and agencies, helped by the often bitter factionalism within the movement itself.

Was close attention paid to these organizations? Were instructions given at that time with respect to those organizations? The fact that the government implemented the War Measures Act and picked up certain people, some of whom were charged and have been found not guilty, is significant. The facts in those cases in some ways are similar to the facts in the Vallieres case Vol. 9, Criminal Reports, 1970, page 24, that I cited to the Court of Appeal. There was an acquittal in that particular case. I point out that 497 were arrested, 62 were charged and some have been released. The police could have picked them up on the night of the sixteenth, or even a few days after. I wish the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) were here, because these matters formed the subject of one of his speeches. He has already dealt with the situation of people who were not involved in the organization of separatist groups but who had friends who were involved in those organizations. That subject I do not want to deal with at this time.

Let me say this, however. This government knew of and had been advised of the terrorism and the activities of the FLQ in Quebec since June, 1969. What did the government do about this? Nothing, Mr. Speaker. They knew that there had been bombings; they knew that there had been murders and they knew that there was violence even before the unfortunate events that overtook Mr. Laporte. Questions were asked about these matters in the House of Commons. The government knew that for some time ammunition, guns and dynamite had been stolen not only from the Armed Forces of Canada but from other sources where supplies of this nature were kept available and handy. They knew that communist activists were being trained in Cuba for Canada. We had the report of the Royal Commission on Security and we knew where these people were being trained. Yet the government preferred to ignore the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Security and the general build-up of lawlessness. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice said, subsequent to the implementation of the War Measures Act, that the Criminal Code of Canada contained all the necessary law needed to bring these lawbreakers to justice and to conviction. Why was no royal commission set up to examine crime and criminal separatists—I am not referring to political separatists—so that we could get the cards out on the table? We had asked for this for years.

If the objectives of the FLQ were as the government suggested, that organization would have been guilty of seditious conspiracy. I see the minister from Manitoba nodding in agreement with me. I have the best possible witness for that statement.

An hon. Member: He is a peaceful separatist.

Mr. Woolliams: Certainly, the Prime Minister suggested that. What was needed was the tough administration of law, and action; we did not need acquiescence before violence got out of hand, before Mr. Cross was kidnapped and before Mr. Laporte was kidnapped and murdered later. The calling in of members of the armed forces and the militia was not the result of the War Measures Act. That right, as hon. members know, flows from the powers under the Defence Act and regulations thereto, and this step was taken at the time the government implemented the War Measures Act. My friends in Calgary think, as I assume the people in other cities think, that the armed forces were called in because the government threw the lever, so to speak, and implemented the War Measures Act. The Prime Minister made clear what happened on the Webster show. We are on all fours in that regard.

The Minister of Justice said that the War Measures Act was implemented because the Mayor of Montreal and the Premier of Quebec had asked for it. That this conspiracy existed was well known to members of cabinet. The government's action was linked with the kidnappings and activities of the FLQ, which were described as seditious conspiracy, violent and inflammatory. The Prime Minister said that the Mayor of Montreal and Premier of Quebec asked for this action to be taken and that all the facts relating to the situation were out on the table. They knew the facts. And what did the Minister of Justice say? Sometimes government members are very busy and cannot always compare notes. Truth will slip out. After all, even cabinet ministers are subject to the laws of human behaviour.

Mr. Stanfield: Some.

Mr. Woolliams: What did the Minister of Justice say? He said, as reported at page 215 of Hansard:

> It is my hope that some day the full details of the intelligence upon which the government acted can be made public, because until that day comes the people of Canada will not be able fully to appraise the course of action which has been taken by the government.

What does the Minister of Justice know that he has not told Parliament? The Prime Minister has said that the government has disclosed everything, yet the Minister of Justice suggested otherwise. Perhaps the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) who is listening to me can shed some light on this matter. I hope that he takes part in the debate. Why, when the Prime Minister said that the government had disclosed everything, did the Minister of Justice say something else? Just what did the Minister of Justice mean and why was he contradicting the Prime Minister? On this point I prefer to believe the Minister of Justice. He said that the government did hide the facts, that information was withheld and that there was fear on the part of the Quebec government that they might be overthrown or replaced by an alternative government, possibly by democratic means. We do not know the answers.

Let me put these questions. What details of intelligence were withheld by the Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister? What secret information did the government have that they failed to disclose to Parliament and the people of Canada and that they ought to have disclosed? How can we enact legislation until we know these facts and until competent witnesses are willing to come forward? Third, what information did the government have that there was in Canada an organization dedicated to the terroristic overthrow of the Quebec government? What are the answers to these questions?

The Minister of Justice said that some day we shall know the facts. Perhaps he will write a book. I can already imagine him in his den—but what will he write? Will he say, "I will tell the Canadian people and the Parliament of Canada that what the Prime Minister said was nonsense." The government has said that it implemented the War Measures Act because it feared an apprehended insurrection. In connection with that very serious matter compare the statements of the Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister. Answering the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) on October 23, 1970, as reported at page 511 of Hansard, the Prime Minister said:

Mr. Speaker, what I said was that the facts that I have recited—

He meant the facts respecting the two letters.

—and which are known to the House were sufficient for us to take the steps we did. I am not saying that beyond that there are not other facts which may or may not be known to the public. It is a matter that will be left to the police, as far as I am concerned. I say that the facts that are known to the House are the facts on which we acted, and it is on that that we stand.

How can we reconcile what those two witnesses, the Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister, have said before this distinguished and illustrious committee. How can their statements stand? One man says that there is nothing more to be known, and the other one has said or suggested that something has been concealed. I will tell you what the government has been doing. It has been sweeping the whole subject under the rug and trying to get out of political danger at the same time. They were sweeping the whole situation under the carpet and trying to keep their political favour at the same time. In answer to a question by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) on October 26, 1970, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said, as recorded at page 547 of Hansard:

First, we had from the authorities of the province of Quebec and of the city of Montreal a clear statement that they apprehended insurrection. Second, there had been the abduction of two very important citizens in the province of Quebec, with an intention to murder them if the government did not give in to ransom. The third fact was circumstantial, if you wish, that approximately two tons of dynamite had been stolen in the province of Quebec this year, as well as a sizeable number of small arms and other ammunition. Also, there was a state of confusion and threats of violence in the province of Quebec. We decided to act on these facts as we interpreted them, and on this the government will stand or fall.

As recorded at page 547 of Hansard, the Prime Minister said the government would stand or fall on those facts. Everything was confined to one package. However, the Minister of Justice said there was something which the people would not be told. Unless that "something" is made known to the committee, we may be wasting our time. What the Prime Minister said must be compared with what was said by the Minister of Justice.

The Minister of Justice, waxing eloquent as usual, said in a confessional way "Some day we will tell the Canadian people the real truth and they will have to judge accordingly, but I will have left this office by this time". No wonder the Minister of Justice wanted to resign at one point. We need the truth now to make decisions for the future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: How can we move into the future without knowing what kind of a house we are going to build or what kind of a foundation we will have? The Prime Minister denied over and over again, as found on pages 591 to 654 of Hansard, that the War Measures Act was implemented because there was a suggestion that a group of people were prepared to set up an alternative government to that which existed in Quebec. He has now changed his tune and verse. If you can do that, you are a good musician and politician.

When pressed by the leader of the New Democratic Party, as recorded at page 654 of Hansard, the Prime Minister was asked:

Mr. Speaker, I wish to address this question to the right hon. Prime Minister. I appreciate that the War Measures Act is worded in such a way that the mere declaration by the government that there is an apprehended insurrection makes it so, but I want to ask the Prime Minister whether the information he has given us is all the information on which he acted or did he act on any other information which he has not disclosed to us?

The Prime Minister answered in his usual contemptible way. He said:

Mr. Speaker, I acted on the information that I have been accumulating since I was three years old.

That was the answer of the Prime Minister. Did that mean he knew something about all this? I do not know what it means. Compare the following statements with those of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien), speaking in the city of Montreal on October 28 last, said, and I quote from page 685 of Hansard:

A lot of information we have on hand comes from informants, some of them highly placed. It would endanger their situation as well.

We have good and sufficient reasons for invoking the War Measures Act. There are other reasons as well, and we will probably never be able to make them public.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development gave a new answer. Unlike the Minister of Justice, he is going to keep his reasons secret. The Prime Minister said that all the information was laid before the House. Is the Prime Minister asking us to believe that his Minister of Justice and Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development have secret information which he does not have? Of course not. What are the reasons? As recorded at page 212 of Hansard, the Minister of Justice said and I quote:

As I said earlier, this has to be a question of judgment based on the information available to members of the cabinet. Needless to say, some of that information, because of the current state of affairs, is not information that necessarily can be made public.

As recorded at page 215, the Minister of Justice said:

It is my hope that some day the full details of the intelligence upon which the government acted can be made public,—

What is this information? We can only get this information by calling witnesses. That is the only way. We want the Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, Mr. Saulnier and, above all, we want the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) because he shed new light on the subject. He said there were 3,000 known FLQ members in Quebec.

Mr. Orlikow: And that was a conservative estimate.

Mr. Woolliams: Somebody said there were 5,000. If there were 3,000 or 5,000, why were only 497 people arrested and 62 charged? Why were 3,000 persons not charged with seditious conspiracy? The minister did that to create a scare during the municipal elections. That is why he made that statement with grandeur. We want the minister to appear before the committee. If another 2,500 men are trying to overthrow this government by illegal means, the Minister of Justice should be very interested in telling us who they are. He could have had a telephone conversation with the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. That is the question. That is why this committee is so important.

Mr. Lewis: They even see each other sometimes.

Mr. Woolliams: How can the words of the Minister of Justice be reconciled with the words of the Prime Minister? When the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) directed a question to the Prime Minister, the Prime Minister said, as recorded at page 689 of Hansard:

> I am telling the House we did not act on anything else than what is before the House. I am not saying we did not have any other information, but I am saying that if hon. members opposite want to use this information, let them take the credit for it.

I have pointed out the contradictions and distortions on this one matter. I can speak on any matter on which the government is engaged or involved and point out contradictions and distortions. This party is not interested in a committee being set up, without any teeth, to approve what the government has done. If the purpose of the committee is merely to show that the government is right, it should not be set up. This party is not interested in playing games and making political manœuvres to assist the government in soothing its wounds and, indeed, its conscience. We want a committee that can go into the facts.

This party is not interested in acquiescing to the government in abuses of the law as a result of which people were denied the very limited niceties of their civil rights as understood by our system of jurisprudence or in setting aside the freedoms of the individual guaranteed by the Bill of Rights unless, of course, the evidence before the committee indicates that some limitation must be placed upon the freedom of the individual for the good of society as a whole. We will only have the answer to that question from the Minister of Justice and all the other little ministers who were involved in this drama. Only then can we come to the principle.

This is the reason the Minister of Justice spoke so briefly today. He wanted to be brief. The minister is a tremendous politician. He thought that if his speech were very short, the media would think there was not much involved in this little matter. Well, Mr. Speaker, there is a lot to it. We had another minister like that. The Minister of Justice said that the War Measures Act and the public order bill were produced to lessen the onus of proof on the Crown against the alleged accused. Instead of lessening the onus of proof on the Crown they put the onus of proof on the accused. The Quebec court of appeal agreed with me, with other members of this party and members of the New Democratic Party, that clause 8 had a retroactive effect. The Minister of Justice said that he consulted his legal officers. When they speak to the minister, they tell him that is the law. Sometimes the courts do not agree with Ministers of Justice or Attorneys General. I have had that experience.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is not what the Quebec court of appeal said.

Mr. Woolliams: Read the case.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Read the judgment.

Mr. Woolliams: I read the judgment. The courts declared that the legislation was retroactive, although the interpretation by the Minister of Justice in this chamber was the opposite. I can see the great drama playing before my eyes. I can see a committee with Liberal members of Parliament and men from the other place being in the majority, controlling the opinion of the committee and making a majority report, all flavoured as the result of political considerations and associations.

In view of that fact, I wish to move an amendment. Before doing so, I wish to state that I have taken cognizance of the rule. I trust that if Your Honour has any questions as to the legality of this amendment, we will have an opportunity to speak. I would direct Your Honour's attention to Standing Order 47. I have discussed this matter with my hon. friend from Peace River who has a great knowledge of the rules. The Standing Order reads:

• (4:30 p.m.)

> A motion to refer a bill, resolution or any question to a committee of the whole or any standing or special committee, shall preclude all amendment of the main question.

The main question here concerns the setting up of a committee. We are not opposing the setting up of a committee. But we do not want it to be a drama coloured by political associations. I have therefore prepared an amendment, in French and English, and perhaps I might read it.

An hon. Member: In French.

Mr. Woolliams: I have been invited to read it in French but we Calgarians have a little difficulty there. The amendment reads as follows:

> That the motion be amended by adding at the end of the first paragraph thereof the following:
> "and, for better assuring the purposes of such report with respect to emergencies that endanger the existence of government, inquire into and first report upon all the circumstances anticipatory of and giving rise or purported to have given rise to the proclamation of the War Measures Act on October 16, 1970, as well all the circumstances thereafter following and thereto related which may have or presently or in future may endanger the existence of any government, whether federal, provincial or municipal."

If there is any question as to the admissibility of the amendment on procedural grounds, I should like to have the privilege of addressing Your Honour after you have examined it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) has indicated he would like an opportunity to present arguments directed to the procedural aspects of his amendment should the Chair have any difficulty in deciding whether or not it is procedurally acceptable.

I must say to the hon. member and to other hon. members that I do have such a difficulty, and I would invite the hon. member for Calgary North and other hon. members to assist the Chair. I might say that the kernel of the problem is whether the proposed amendment goes beyond the scope of the motion, in other words, whether it raises what might be called a new and substantive question. If this is the case, then, of course, notice would be required under the Standing Orders. The hon. member asserts that this is merely an elaboration or extension of the main motion, and I think this is the question to which hon. members should direct their thoughts when assisting the Chair. I might say there is already parliamentary jurisprudence on this point to be taken into account. Speakers in former Parliaments and, indeed, in this Parliament, have indicated they would look very closely at an amendment such as this which proposes to amend a motion setting up a standing or special or select committee. Thus, it seems to me, argument should be directed to the Chair bearing in mind the parliamentary jurisprudence I am required to keep in my mind when making a decision.

Mr. Woolliams: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that, as you have said, there is jurisprudence to the effect that the substance of such a motion as is before us may not be changed. I will read the relevant Standing Order again:

> A motion to refer a bill, resolution or any question to a committee ... shall preclude all amendment of the main question.

I invite Your Honour to direct attention to the words "the main question". You were not here when the Minister of Justice began his speech. He said he was dealing with this issue in the light of events which took place last October. As I understand it, the motion asks that a committee be set up of Members of Parliament and members of the Senate to determine whether we need emergency legislation for the future. That is the substance of the motion. A crisis might arise similar to the one encountered last fall. The only crisis we have experienced since confederation in which the War Measures Act has been used in peacetime was the situation we encountered on October 16. In order to determine whether we need new legislation at all, and, if so, what kind of legislation is needed, whether an amendment to the Criminal Code or a new public order measure with more teeth in it than is presently the case, we must have evidence, and the only evidence we find on the tracing board is the evidence of the crisis in October. We agree with the motion entirely.

I think I should wait for a moment, because I wish to argue this case before the Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair is listening to the hon. member.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Woolliams: The meat of this motion is the proposal to set up a committee to ascertain whether any legislation is necessary to deal with a possible crisis in the future similar to the one encountered last fall. How could such a conclusion be reached in the absence of the proper evidence? My amendment simply enlarges the motion in a declamatory way to improve the procedure when we get to the committee. We want this committee to have the right to call witnesses and to examine the records of that crisis in October, not because we want to examine the crisis itself, but in order to determine whether or not we need a new law.

The Prime Minister says the Criminal Code covers the situation. I believe the committee is entitled to know whether the Code covered the situation on October 19. Is there need for additional legislation? I am anxious to see a committee which will produce the best results. If the Minister of Justice would rise and assure us that the direction contained in his motion covers what is asked for in the amendment, there would be no need for my amendment to go forward. But think of the narrow approach the other minister took toward this issue yesterday. I repeat, this is not an amendment designed to change the motion in substance; it is merely intended to give direction to the committee and help it to function more precisely.

Mr. Baldwin: I wish to support what my hon. friend from Calgary North has said. In dealing with this question Your Honour must, of course, be guided by precedent and by our Standing Orders, including Standing Order 47, which, as my hon. and learned friend from Calgary North has said, deals with the main question at issue. You must also take into consideration, Mr. Speaker, what was said by the President of the Privy Council in whose name this motion stands. You cannot, as I assume the committee would not—and certainly it is not likely that the co-chairmen of the special committee would—ignore the comments made by the President of the Privy Council who, speaking in response to a question by the hon. member for Calgary North, indicated beyond any doubt that in his view the committee was limited to looking to the future.

How in the name of heaven can a joint committee examine what it proposes to do in the future regarding emergencies of this kind unless it examines the precedents of the past? I do disagree with my hon. friend in one respect. He said that this crisis of October was probably the only crisis we have had for some years. I would add to that the crisis we had in June 1968 when this government was elected.

On this particular issue, surely the committee not only has the right but the duty cast upon it to examine the conditions under which this country, certainly last October and possibly at other times, was precipitated into a crisis by a certain combination of circumstances that might have led to the necessity for imposing some type of emergency measures over and above certain provisions in the Criminal Code. Certainly, the committee as our agent, and to whom we delegate authority, must inquire into this issue. Probably it would also be wise to authorize the committee to look abroad and examine legislation in other jurisdictions to determine what are the criteria that permit other jurisdictions to enact regulations under emergency legislation.

We are faced with the fact that in October the government made a declaration that there was a crisis, an apprehended insurrection, and that therefore they were invoking the War Measures Act. What were the facts that existed then? What did the Prime Minister know? What did the Minister of Justice know? What were they advised? If the committee as our agent is to be inhibited and prevented from examining those facts, then this whole thing is a complete travesty, a farce. The hon. member for Calgary North is not seeking to bring up a matter that is foreign to the main issue; he is seeking clarification. By his amendment he is seeking to have the House declare that this motion means that, in addition to looking ahead, the committee can look back. I suggest that that is the basis of his motion.

The hon. member could just as easily have moved this type of amendment, namely to add the words "that such inquiry shall include the right to examine emergencies which have arisen in the past and the steps taken to deal with them". But rather than move that amendment, which I submit would fall squarely within the ambit of the present motion, he has narrowed it to asking the House to direct the committee to look in particular at the situation that existed in October. Without that direction being given to the committee, I suggest that the committee will be sterile and its deliberations will be futile. The hon. member is not striving to have the committee go off in a new direction; he is keeping it within the direction laid down by the motion, namely to examine, inquire into and report upon the nature and kind of legislation required to deal with emergencies that may arise from time to time in the future. But the hon. member says that in order that the committee may do that competently it should look at the situation that existed last October.

It may well be that the government intends that to be done; but I have the feeling, one that I think I am entitled to, that this government is not anxious to do that. I have a feeling this government has deliberately couched the motion in terms to inhibit and prevent any kind of examination of the situation or what took place last October. If that is the case, let the government stand up and say so. If it is not the case, with the greatest respect, I suggest that this amendment of the hon. member for Calgary North falls squarely within what is allowed and permissible under our rules.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the opinions expressed by the hon. members for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) and Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). May I first do so in very simple language, if I can. As a lawyer I have always believed that unless the application of a rule makes common sense, either the application or the rule is not very sensible.

The problem as you have stated it, Mr. Speaker, is whether or not the amendment is a substantive one which would require notice. I ask you first, Mr. Speaker, with great respect, to look at the amendment. I ask you to assume that the motion is not on the order paper, to assume that the hon. member for Calgary North moved nothing else but his amendment. Is it a substantive motion? Does it make sense? Would it make sense if there were no motion on paper and all you had before you was the amendment moved by the hon. member for Calgary North? Would a motion which said that certain things must be done to better assure the purposes of such report with respect to so and so make sense? Would it be a substantive motion?

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, in the first place I would suggest to you as a matter of simple logic that before Your Honour can hold this to be a substantive motion it has to stand on its own feet. It cannot be a substantive motion unless it does. If it cannot stand on its own feet, it is not a substantive motion. Then, it is attached to the motion that is now before the House and amends it.

The second point I wish to make also seems to me to be common sense. What this amendment does—and it clearly sets out its purpose—is to say that this inquiry that is ordered by the motion before the House can be improved if the inquiry extends to certain events that have taken place. That is all the amendment says. It does not interfere with the inquiry. It does not interfere with the purpose of the inquiry. It does not interfere with the substance of the motion which is now before the House. It interferes with nothing that is basic and central to the motion before Your Honour. It is purely a procedural motion and in no way substantive. It merely says that, in addition to looking at the kind of legislation that we need to deal with emergencies in the future, the committee should be empowered to look at events in the past that will guide the committee in arriving at proper legislation to deal with emergencies in the future. That is all the amendment means and it is clearly procedural. Clearly, it is not an amendment that interferes at all with the substance of the motion. I respectfully submit that I cannot see any way—perhaps Your Honour will teach me later on—in which Your Honour can hold this to be a substantive motion.

May I make a third point? The rules of any society, of any organization, are to serve a constructive purpose. The rules are there in order to prevent the society or organization from failing to deal with matters before it in a proper and constructive way and to arrive at a conclusion.

Mr. Baldwin: To be construed liberally.

Mr. Lewis: And they are always to be construed liberally. If this amendment is not allowed, since I assume that the chairmen of the committee and the majority on the committee will be government members from this House and the Senate—and I shall have something to say about this when I speak to the main motion—if they say that no witnesses can be called in regard to anything that has happened in the past, never mind October 1970 but that the committee cannot discuss what happened at the Riel rebellion, or what happened in Regina during the unemployed marches of the 1930's, or the situation surrounding the Winnipeg strike in 1919, or what happened at Kent State University in the U.S., or anything that happened in the past to guide the committee in arriving at the kind of legislation that may be necessary, then the committee will not be able to do its work. That committee's work will be destroyed before it starts and you will have a Donnybrook at every single committee meeting. The members who want to know the circumstances under which legislation such as suggested in the motion is relevant and should be on the statute books will be illiterate if they do not insist in looking at past events in this country and in other countries in the world.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Let me point out two things the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) said this afternoon. He said the motion derived from the events of last fall. If it derived from the events of last fall, then obviously the events of last fall are relevant to a consideration of the motion.

Mr. Douglas: They are indispensable.

Mr. Lewis: They are indispensable, as the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) suggests. The Minister of Justice said more than that. He tried to place the motion of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) in an historic and philosophic context. I am not quoting him, but the essence of what he said is that we live in an era of violence and confrontation where people are ready to use violence to upset public order. If that is so, and the minister is right, how in heaven's name is the committee to be able to find out what that era really consists of, or is it merely to accept the minister's word?

The minister is not one of the members of the government who acts in this House with any arrogance. He will not expect the members of the committee to say, "John Turner said that we live in an era of violence, therefore that is so". He will expect the members of the committee to want to find out what he is talking about and what constitutes this era of violence. I say that because he related the motion to the events of last fall and because of the historic and philosophic context in which he wants to put this debate. Somewhere in the logic and common sense of this motion we are required to put this authority in the hands of the committee, otherwise the committee cannot do its work intelligently.

For the reasons I have stated, without repeating them, I plead with you to permit this amendment. I believe it is in order because it does not interfere with the substance of the motion, it does not limit that substance or extend it, and it does not touch upon it at all. It merely adds an area in an effort to assist the committee to arrive at the substance of the motion. Surely, that is logical and in order.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, after hearing the mover of the amendment and the N.D.P. leader (Mr. Lewis), I do not intend to speak long.

First, we feel that the main motion is ridiculous and should not have been introduced by the government, since it shows a lack of responsibility. If the government plans to appoint a committee to discuss emergency measures or the opportunity of studying legislation to be passed, we consider the motion ridiculous.

I simply intended to say a few words on the main motion. This motion is evidence of the government's intention not to assume its responsibilities. It had the opportunity to do so at a given time but it failed to do so when the time came.

It seems to me that the amendment introduced by the hon. member if it were adopted would in these circumstances hinder our progress for if we have to investigate the whole of Canada's history, not just last October's events but all the revolutions or pseudo-revolutions which may have occurred in Canada, we shall never see the end of it. If we are to investigate past administrations, there are two parties here in this House that will be the first to object.

If the committee is going to investigate Canada's past in order to better orient its future with regard to emergency measures, it might sit for a rather long period before it arrives at practical conclusions. The committee then will merely fizzle out.

However, since we consider that the committees of the House are of vital importance and that this motion should never have been introduced in the House by the government, we stand firm against it as well as against the amendment. Besides, we will each in our own time have a chance to state our point of view.

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I see that the clock is approaching the witching hour of five. In order that the Chair might have the opportunity to consider the careful arguments which have been made, and in view of the fact that one or two other members, including the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald)—the Minister of Justice must be anxious to put his position regarding this amendment on record—want to speak, we might slightly invade the private members' hour so that all arguments can be put. The Chair would then have an opportunity between now and eight o'clock to consider these arguments. I therefore urge that the House consent to hearing all the arguments on the point of order at this time and then, if necessary, have a decision rendered when the House resumes at eight.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members have heard the suggestion of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). Is it agreed we continue beyond five o'clock to hear the procedural arguments?

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, if the opposition House leader is speaking about one short procedural argument there is no problem. If there is a series of arguments to be made, there is a private member's bill which might be proceeded with, unless the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) is prepared to waive the usual procedure.

Mr. McGrath: What is the motion?

Mr. Jerome: The motion for the production of papers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair must determine whether there is unanimous consent in respect of the suggestion made by the hon. member for Peace River. If there is no consent the Chair will notice the clock.

Mr. Orlikow: On that point, Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of the debate taking place, I have no objection to having my motion set over for another week.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Apparently there is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Lewis: Let us take another ten minutes.

Mr. Boulanger: How do we know how long it will take?

Mr. Jerome: If only one speech is involved we are prepared to accept the suggestion in order to get it on the record. That being the case we are satisfied.

Mr. Lewis: Perhaps the hon. member for Peace River would agree to a time limit.

Mr. Baldwin: Yes.

Mr. Lewis: Perhaps we could take just another 15 minutes, and then go on to private members' hour whether or not the argument is completed.

Mr. Jerome: An extension of 15 minutes would be satisfactory.

Mr. Boulanger: I do not want to disagree with the parliamentary secretary, but I think five minutes should be sufficient. If we do not limit it, then under the rules we cannot stop anyone from getting up and speaking. I think five minutes should be the limit, if we extend the time at all.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It appears to the Chair that there is no consent.

Mr. Jerome: Perhaps a compromise on a ten-minute extension.

Mr. Boulanger: All right, ten minutes.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams)—Air Transport—Hijacking—Parliamentary ratification of Hague Convention—Amendments to Criminal Code; the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Stewart)—National Parks—Riding Mountain—Closure of church camps.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

EMERGENCY AID TO PERSONS NO LONGER ABLE TO DRAW BENEFITS

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before we proceed to private member's business perhaps I might be given an opportunity to refer to the motion proposed by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) this afternoon. I indicated to him that I would take the matter under advisement, and I said to him and to the House that I would be guided to some extent at least by what might transpire during the proceedings in the afternoon. I am not sure whether or not that was a very good guide by which to reach any decision, but I suggest to hon. members the Chair has been helped in this decision in this regard. The hon. member's motion was different from the two which had been proposed by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) and by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) in that it referred specifically to a certain aspect of the unemployment situation, seasonal benefits.

Actually, it is a two-headed motion, part of which deals with the unemployment situation in general. I believe in respect of this aspect of the motion what I said in making a ruling after hearing the hon. member for York South and the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings would apply. I wondered whether a good case might be made for an emergency debate on the other aspect of this motion under Standing Order 26. I have come to the conclusion that perhaps the circumstances might be somewhat different in view of the developments later in the afternoon during the question period, namely, that in answer to two or three questions asked by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby the minister indicated that he would look into the situation and make the statement on Tuesday. I assume this would be a statement on motions. It was also announced that there would be two supply days next week, on Tuesday and Friday. When we look at the opportunity for debate, I would think it would be very difficult for the Chair to suggest that there would not be an opportunity for the consideration or debate of such an important matter as the one raised by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, and indeed the matter raised by the other two hon. members.

In the circumstances, I think it might be wise to allow the matter to stand in so far as Standing Order 26 is concerned and to make a ruling that the motion cannot be put at this time.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely private bills, notices of motions (Papers) and public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

CENTRAL DEL RIO OILS LIMITED

The House resumed, from Thursday, April 29, consideration of the motion of Mr. Harries that Bill S-12, respecting Central-Del Rio Oils Limited, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

An hon. Member: On division.

Motion agreed, bill read the second time, and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. Speaker: I understand that the last item under private bills is a bill standing in the name of the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, Bill S-19, respecting the Royal Victoria Hospital. I gather there are procedural difficulties in relation to the petition. In any event, it has been suggested that the bill might be allowed to stand for the moment. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

POST OFFICE

REQUEST FOR COPIES OF CORRESPONDENCE FROM ORGANIZATIONS SUGGESTING CURTAILMENT OF PUBLICATIONS AS A RESULT OF INCREASED RATES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North) moved:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all letters received by the Postmaster General from churches, professional organizations, trade unions, co-operatives, credit unions and private organizations, indicating that as a result of the increase in postal rates they intend to discontinue or curtail their publications.

He said: Mr. Speaker, shortly after the 1968 election the then Postmaster General, the present hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans), came to the conclusion, and obviously persuaded his Cabinet colleagues, that the postal service of this country should be put on a paying basis and that postal delivery should not be subsidized or at least not subsidized as much as previously. Therefore, there were very sharp increases in the cost of mail deliveries. There were increases in the cost of first class letters, in the cost of second class mail and a very sharp increase, running anywhere from 100 per cent to 1,000 per cent, in respect of the rates charged on publications issued by various organizations.

The organizations affected covered a wide range. There were trade unions, co-operatives, credit unions and educational and scientific organizations which issue publications of great importance to their members and to the general public in the sense that they disseminate as widely as possible the most important basic scientific information in their fields. The increases implemented by the Postmaster General, and by the government, in a desire to wipe out the deficit created by the delivery of various types of mail has had a very adverse affect on a large number of organizations and their publications. I maintain that without newspapers, magazines, weeklies, monthlies and scientific and educational journals, one cannot really expect a country, certainly not a country as diverse and large in area as Canada, to survive as a country. This country is under permanent assault. I do not say this in a critical manner but as a statement of fact.

The survival of this country, as a country, is under permanent assault by the United States of America, not because they deliberately want to harm this country or wipe it out but simply because the richest country in the world lies next to Canada and has a population ten times as large. There is a tremendous flow of printed material from that country to this, as there is a tremendous flow of material from radio and television. Canadian publications of all types are finding it increasingly difficult to survive.

When I set this motion down I was not concerned about commercial publications or profit making publications like Chatelaine, Macleans, Saturday Night and a host of others; I was concerned about publications issued by organizations almost exclusively for their own members. Sometimes these publications are necessary for the survival of the organizations, but a large number of them have gone under.

I should like to point out to the minister in charge of the Post Office that the newspaper issued by the Confederation of National Trade Unions, probably the best of its type in Canada, ceased publication almost immediately after postal rates were increased by the former postmaster general. Other publications too numerous to list here have ceased; many which were weekly switched to monthly or quarterly publications and those which were monthly decided to publish quarterly or twice a year. I could give endless examples, because they are all in my file, of postage increases ranging from 100 per cent to 1,000 per cent which made it impossible for organizations to continue publication.

The former postmaster general had an easy and stock answer to the complaints made by hundreds of these organizations. He said that they should not expect the taxpayers of Canada to subsidize them and that it should not be difficult for them to increase their dues structure to cover payment for the publication. I say to the minister in charge of the Post Office that if he does not know what happened to the publication of the CNTU he should inquire from his colleague the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) who was president for some years. I am sure the minister will substantiate my statement that this vital and aggressive organization decided that it should not raise its membership dues so the only alternative, because of the increased postal rates, was to discontinue publication.

I say to the minister in charge of the Post Office, who comes from a working class family and has some knowledge of what a trade union means to the ordinary worker, that the decision to suspend the publication of the CNTU could only weaken the lines of communication between the elected officials of that organization and its 200,000 to 250,000 members. The difficulties faced by the CNTU in settling strikes may in some degree have been aggravated by its inability to communicate with the membership. Almost every day we have an illustration of these difficulties. We see the former employees of Lapalme, who were members of the CNTU, demonstrating on Parliament Hill. I shall not go into the rights or wrongs of that strike, but I shall simply say that I believe that kind of thing was helped by the effect on the CNTU publication of the decision of the government to increase the postal rates.

I have made a very reasonable request, Mr. Speaker. I have simply asked the minister and the government to table the letters and telegrams received from organizations of the types I have listed, informing the minister that as a result of the increase in the cost of mailing they would have to give serious consideration to suspension or curtailment of publication. Surely, this is not an unreasonable request to make from a government led by a Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who speaks so frequently and eloquently of participatory democracy. Participatory democracy must mean more than the Prime Minister or his ministers lecturing the people of Canada. Surely, it means that the people of Canada have the right to express their views and to feel that those views are known and shared by others. I can see no reason, Mr. Speaker, why the former minister or the present minister should object to my motion which would require the government to table letters about this matter which were received by the minister from organizations of the type I have listed.

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the motion introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) reads:

> That an order of the House do issue for a copy of all letters received by the Postmaster General from churches, professional organizations, trade unions, co-operatives, credit unions and private organizations, indicating that as a result of the increase in postal rates they intend to discontinue or curtail their publications.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North introduced an identical motion, No. 85, on March 4, 1969, during the first session of the twenty eighth parliament. When the motion was called in the House on March 26, 1969, the following reply was given:

> This notice of motion asks for a copy of all letters received by the Postmaster General—

I need not repeat the exact wording of the motion. I continue reading the reply:

• (5:20 p.m.)

> If this motion were adopted it would be necessary to make a review of hundreds of files because letters were not segregated on the basis of whether or not they suggested an increase in postal rates would result in either the discontinuance or curtailment of the publication. Such a review would be costly. In view of this fact, perhaps the hon. gentleman would be willing to withdraw his motion.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North refused to withdraw the motion and it was transferred for debate according to Standing Order 48(1). The matter was never debated, and therefore with the end of the first session it was dropped.

In the second session, the hon. member for Winnipeg North introduced a similar motion and the following answer was given when that motion was called on December 10, 1969:

> The motion is not acceptable as the information requested would necessitate a review of over 5,000 files. It is estimated that several hundred man hours would be expended in drawing files and searching for desired correspondence without taking into consideration time expended in copying such correspondence. The expense of such a project is not considered warranted.

Again, the hon. member for Winnipeg North did not wish to withdraw the motion, and again it was transferred for debate. It was never debated, and therefore with the end of the second session it was dropped.

The hon. member came back with this motion on November 4, 1970, on which occasion I replied in the House as follows:

> I think this is the third time this motion has been presented and the reply to it will be the same as on the last occasion, namely, that the motion is not acceptable as the information requested would necessitate a review of over 5,000 files. It is estimated that several hundred man hours would be expended in drawing files and searching for the desired correspondence without taking into consideration the time expended in copying such correspondence.

The hon. member again refused to drop the motion, which was transferred for debate, and now we are debating it. Basically the situation has not changed. It would be very costly to produce the required papers. The time involved is estimated as 544 man hours, more than a quarter of a man year, at an estimated cost of $2,025. In addition to the answers previously given, Mr. Speaker, we have great reservations about how meaningful the results would be to the hon. member if we spent the time and money to locate the requested information.

I would like to inform the House on how this question of the birth and death of publications was dealt with in a couple of studies. The first is the Royal Commission on Publications which reported in 1961, and I quote:

> Births and deaths of magazines are a general indication of the profit—or lack of it—in the magazine-publishing field.

The Mass Media Report, or Davey Report of 1970 reads:

> It has been suggested that a number of publications in Canada expired because of the postal increases. Although this may be true, it is just as likely that this incremental cost was simply the straw that broke the camel's back; they might have died in any case for any number of marketing or product reasons.

Now, I wish to give a few figures that will show the number of new publications that were registered as second class mail, and those that ceased to be published from 1967 to January, 1971, according to our own records. However, we have no record of association papers which may have ceased publication after April 1, 1969. Since that date these publications have not had to register as second class mail, because they do not have any special rate.

Before the rate adjustments in 1967-68 we had no record of the total number of publications that were authorized, but the total number of publications that ceased publication was 358. In 1968-69, still before the rate adjustment, the total number of new publications authorized was 614, and the total number of periodicals that ceased publication was 287.

After the rate adjustments, in 1969-70 the total number of new publications authorized was 92, and the total number of periodicals that ceased publication was 41. From 1970 through to January, 1971, the total number of new publications authorized was 128, and the total number of periodicals that ceased publication was 91. Judging from these figures we can reasonably say that it would be totally unfair to conclude, every time a paper ceases publication, that this must be attributed mainly to the April, 1969, adjustments in second class mail rates.

We also made some inquiries of our own and talked to publishers to discover their attitude. As a result, we can report that there was no conclusive evidence that the recent rate increase caused the death of many publications. The principal response appears to have been a reduction in the frequency of issue, and the end of a widespread distribution of complementary copies. For these reasons we do not feel that an estimated cost of $2,000 to produce the information requested is justifiable. Moreover, the results would not be conclusive.

There is no way to find out if these publications really ceased to be published other than to make further research. Even then, we would have to study their financial statements to see if the postal increase was the real reason for their death.

[Translation]

I merely want to say that even if we do all this searching through our files to locate letters informing us that if we increase postal rates or move periodicals from second to third class some of them will discontinue publication, we have no way of establishing whether those periodicals have really disappeared or whether they are still being published. That would require investigation carried out outside the department since the periodicals no longer have to be registered, as they are no longer second-class material.

Therefore, whether the investigations are carried out or not I do not think hon. members would gain anything thereby and I can hardly request incurring expenses of $2,000 in order perhaps to find letters stating that if we increased postal rates some periodicals would cease to exist, when it is not known whether they have or have not discontinued publication.

We sympathize with the hon. member for Winnipeg North. The discontinuation of certain publications which, in most cases, provide a service to a certain category of Canadians, is unfortunate and we don't like to see them disappear. But between this and saying that they have disappeared only because of an increase in rates, there is a wide margin.

[Mr. Côté (Longueuil).]

I must suggest that whenever there is an increase in postal rates, whether for first, second or third class mail, there are always people who are affected by such a measure. Indeed some people will pay more if we want to get more revenues. If there is an increase in rates for first class mail, it will be said that certain agencies which provide essential services to citizens will suffer from it, because these organizations will make the average citizen bear the burden of this new expenditure, thus adding to his cost of living.

If we increase second class rates, some will say that it is detrimental to publications. If we increase third class rates, some will say that it is detrimental to some other publications. Some suggest that we should increase third class rates because this class includes a great deal of unsollicited mail. But at the same time, third class mail also includes publications and Christmas cards.

For instance, this afternoon I received a delegation requesting that third class rates not be increased, on the grounds that its organization would be enormously affected by such an increase. So would also be such organizations as the War Amputees Association, groups who sell Easter or Christmas seals and who are concerned with the health of many citizens.

Of course, each time there is an increase in postal rates, some people are affected. But the fact remains that a department such as the Post Office cannot afford to accumulate deficits of hundreds of millions of dollars a year. If we tolerated this situation, many people would say that we are really subsidizing the big customers of the Post Office who are often the companies and that instead of making users pay, we are collecting more taxes.

Whatever our course of action, we will always be criticized but we must act. If we do not do so and if we let yearly deficits of more than $140 million accumulate, we will obviously have to find the money somewhere and it is the taxpayer who will bear the brunt of it one way or another.

During this fiscal year, we must try to be as fair as possible. I think that today's motion might have been of some avail before the 1969 increase. Had all these letters been available, it might have been possible to have a better discussion about the problem when the increase was enacted in 1969. The motion might have been more useful at that time, but as it is before this House for the third time I think that it is useless and it would certainly not serve anybody's interest if we were going to spend unnecessarily $2,000 or so.

• (5:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House this afternoon in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) calls on the House to issue a copy of all letters received by the Postmaster General from churches, professional organizations, trade unions, co-operatives, credit unions and private organizations, indicating that as a result of the increase in postal rates they intend to discontinue or curtail their publications.

I was interested to learn from the Postmaster General (Mr. Côté) that this subject has been raised three times. I am somewhat surprised at this. I am sure that when the original debate on this subject took place in the House most hon. members were bombarded by communications from all these organizations about the possible effects of the new legislation. I would be surprised if any such organization or non-profit group which found it was being forced out of business had not communicated with the Postmaster General or another cabinet minister and sent a copy of that correspondence to certain Members of Parliament. I am sure that such organizations would send copies of their correspondence to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who occupies a strategic position which in matters of this kind enables him to put embarrassing questions to the government during the question period.

I believe the Postmaster General has fully explained the reason why these documents were not revealed to the hon. member. Principally, it is a question of cost and common sense. Surely all hon. members of the House have received a list of the names of most of the organizations which were severely affected by that legislation. This matter boils down to a question of cost. The minister indicated that it would be necessary to search 5,000 files, which would take about 540 hours and cost over $2,000. Surely this is reason enough for not producing the documents.

[Translation]

Mr. Prosper Boulanger (Mercier): Mr. Speaker, having listened very carefully to the hon. minister and heard the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), we are now sufficiently informed about the question and we might proceeed to the vote.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Is the House ready for the question? All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Orlikow: On division, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): I declare the motion negatived.

Motion negatived.

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Do hon. members agree to call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): In view of the very light attendance in the House, and because I have not had much time to prepare a few remarks, I shall not abuse my powers of poetic licence at this time.

At 5.40 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

NATIONAL SECURITY

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE ON LEGISLATION TO DEAL WITH EMERGENCIES CAUSED BY LAWLESSNESS OR VIOLENCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner, Ottawa-Carleton (for the President of the Privy Council):

That a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons be appointed to examine, inquire into and report upon the nature and kind of legislation required to deal with emergencies that may arise from time to time in the future by reason of lawlessness or violence in Canadian society and that endanger the existence of government or the maintenance of the peace and public order;

That twelve members of the House of Commons, to be designated by the House at a later date, be members of the joint committee on the part of this House;

That the committee have power to sit during sittings and adjournments of the House;

That the committee have power to report from time to time, to send for persons, papers and records, and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee;

And that a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours thereof.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a few comments with regard to the acceptance of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams). I would willingly give up the opportunity to speak at this time if the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) would give a binding agreement to this House that the concerns expressed in the amendment will be covered. We could save a great deal of time if the Minister of Justice would give that assurance. Without that assurance it would be more appropriate to discuss the legitimacy of the motion rather than the legitimacy of the amendment.

I understand that it is one of the unwritten parliamentary rules that we do not engage in hypothetical discussion in this House or in committee, yet in the motion before us we have such a hypothetical situation. The main question that should have been considered prior to debating the acceptance of this amendment is whether the motion is in order.

We are being asked to consider emergencies which might arise from time to time in the future, but the motion does not suggest the form these emergencies might take except for a reference to lawlessness and violence in society which might endanger the existence of government. What government? Federal government? Provincial Government? Municipal government? And what jurisdiction does this Parliament exercise over governments other than ours, except in certain circumstances—for example, those reflected in the Criminal Code? It seems to me one of the reasons my hon. friend put forward his amendment was to give the motion the substance which is necessary if the committee is not to find itself up on cloud nine.

I think the amendment amounts to a very appropriate extension of the motion. I find it almost impossible to conveive that this House would instruct a committee to talk about something which might happen in the future without defining the time or the situation in specific terms. After all, there is no limit on the future; the future has a quality of infinity about it. Unless the motion is amended in some way so as to define more specifically the task of the committee, it will become engaged in an unrealistic and hypothetical discussion. As it is, the terms of reference are so vague that any report the committee might make based on those terms would be totally unsatisfactory.

If the amendment is found unacceptable, I submit that some other form of motion will have to be introduced in order that the committee may be given concrete terms of reference, in the absence of which the motion before us and the discussion arising from it are indeed a sham.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) proposed his amendment this afternoon the Chair sought the assistance of hon. members on the procedural aspects of the question. I wish to thank those who assisted the Chair in that respect.

As I indicated in my opening remarks, this is essentially a question of whether the amendment introduces a new or substantive matter or whether it is an extension, an amplification of the motion which now stands before the House for debate. I also pointed out that the Chair has to take into account parliamentary jurisprudence covering this situation, and that unless an amendment is framed in such a way as to make clear that it does not introduce a new or substantive matter it is difficult for the Chair to accept it.

Before making my ruling I would refer to a citation in Beauchesne's, an authority which all hon. members will recognize and which must be taken into account by the Chair. It is citation 291, which reads as follows:

> When the House is considering a motion of which notice has been given for the appointment of a select committee a member cannot move to amendment that the committee be given wider powers than those which are set out in the notice.

The question for the Chair to consider is whether the amendment proposes to give wider powers to the committee, whether in fact a new and substantive question is raised or whether it is an extension or amplification of the motion before the House for consideration. If it is a substantive motion, then of course notice would be required and it would not be acceptable from a procedural standpoint.

[Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).]

The hon. member for Calgary North, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) have argued very forcefully that the amendment does not put forward a substantive matter; that it is merely an extension or an amplification of the motion. This is the question the Chair must decide.

It might be helpful if I were to read the motion which is now before the House. I shall read only that part which is pertinent to our consideration at this time:

> That a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons be appointed to examine, inquire into and report upon the nature and kind of legislation required to deal with emergencies that may arise from time to time in the future by reason of lawlessness or violence in Canadian society and that endanger the existence of government or the maintenance of the peace and public order—

In amendment thereto, the hon. member for Calgary North proposed the following:

> That the motion be amended by adding at the end of the first paragraph thereof the following:
> "and, for better assuring the purposes of such report with respect to emergencies that endanger the existence of government, inquire into and first report upon all the circumstances anticipatory of and giving rise or purported to have given rise to the proclamation of the War Measures Act on October 16, 1970, as well as all the circumstances thereafter following and thereto related which may have or presently or in future may endanger the existence of any government, whether federal, provincial or municipal."

In his submission, the hon. member for Calgary North argued with respect to Standing Order 47—and the Chair is prepared, on consideration, to accept the argument—that this Standing Order is in itself not an impediment to any decision the Chair may take as to the acceptability of the amendment. I did mention in my preliminary remarks that the parliamentary jurisprudence based essentially on the citation I have quoted is definitive in the matter: if the amendment introduces a substantive or new matter, it cannot be accepted.

I wish to refer to a ruling made by Mr. Speaker Michener, quoting a previous ruling by Mr. Speaker Macdonald, as follows:

> I could give the hon. member many more citations and rulings by Speakers. There is one by Mr. Speaker Macdonald which appears in Journals for April 4, 1951, at page 243. He ruled "An amendment cannot be moved giving the committee wider powers than those which were set out in the Notice of Motion. Then, there is another ruling of Mr. Speaker Macdonald's on November 2, 1951, as contained in the Journals at page 67. He said, and I quote: "I might say at this time that if the minister himself proposed an amendment which would widen the terms of the resolution I could not allow it to stand unless with the unanimous consent of the House."

The Chair would have some difficulty if the argument were put—and it has not been so presented—that the motion could be considered in an abstract manner. It would seem to me that the motion now before the House is one which must be considered in relation to events of the past.

The hon. member for York South put forward a very forceful argument. He referred to events in Canadian history. I think he referred to the Riel rebellion, and the Winnipeg strike of 1919 in the context of the events referred to in the amendment moved by the hon. member for Calgary North.

• (8:20 p.m.)

The Chair has the responsibility of deciding whether the amendment now before me for a ruling on its procedural acceptability is one of substance or is an extension or a direction within the confines of, or is relevant to, the motion to appoint a committee. In my opinion, the amendment of the hon. member for Calgary North is in fact an extension or amplification of the main motion. It seems to the Chair that the committee could not be asked to consider the main motion in an abstract form without reference to events in Canadian history, whether it be the events described in the amendment of the hon. member for Calgary North or events such as those referred to by the hon. member for York South.

Having come to the decision that it is in fact not a substantive motion but a motion that extends or amplifies the main motion, I am of the opinion that it is procedurally correct and I am prepared to put the motion. The hon. member for Calgary North, seconded by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. McCutcheon) moves:

That the motion be amended by adding at the end of the first paragraph thereof the following:

"and, for better assuring the purposes of such report with respect to emergencies that endanger the existence of government, inquire into and first report upon all the circumstances anticipatory of and giving rise or purported to have given rise to the proclamation of the War Measures Act on October 16, 1970, as well all the circumstances thereafter following and thereto related which may have or presently or in future may endanger the existence of any government, whether federal, provincial or municipal."

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I think the ruling you have just given makes an important difference to the motion before the House. If the government party will have the sensitivity to support the amendment so that the committee is given the necessary power to make some kind of intelligent investigation of the reasons that make special legislation necessary, then the committee might have a job to perform that will be meaningful. But I have a strong suspicion that the government will not support the amendment, that the government is not in favour of any investigation of the reasons for invoking the War Measures Act, that the government is not in favour of such investigation because even it now knows that the invocation of the War Measures Act on October 16, 1970, was a shameful overreaction followed by the deliberate creation of hysteria and panic throughout the country.

Because the government now knows that that is the case, it has not the courage to permit a parliamentary committee to call before it witnesses and to inquire into the actual things that happened last fall. I cannot under any circumstances support the motion on the order paper because it is based on the assumption that special legislation to deal with possible future emergencies is necessary. The motion before the House does not say, as it might have, that the matter will go to a committee for decision whether or not special legislation is necessary. It might give the committee an opening to look into that if the amendment moved by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) is accepted by the House; but as I am certain it will not be accepted by the Liberal majority in the House, what we are left with is an instruction to a committee that starts with the implicit statement that special legislation is necessary and so all the committee has to do is decide what kind of legislation this House should pass.

It is also significant to note that the motion before us does not make the slightest reference to individual liberty and individual rights. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) quite properly said that he had to weigh the relationship between national security and public order and individual liberty and individual rights. It is very nice to say that but I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the motion to set up this committee ought to say it. The motion ought to say to the committee: Please inquire into the question whether or not special legislation is necessary, and when and if you consider legislation please keep in the forefront the preservation of human dignity and liberty in Canadian society.

Therefore, I ask myself why the government is making this motion. Why is a government that did not hesitate to bring down the War Measures Act on October 16, 1970, and did not hesitate to bring in the public order act at a later date, now wanting to establish a committee when it has already made up its mind—and the Liberal majority on the committee will be so instructed—that there must be legislation? Why does the government send this matter to a committee? I have a suspicion that the government already has some draft legislation or clauses that will find their way to the committee via a member of the committee, that the government already knows what it wants in the legislation. So why does it not produce a bill?

The minister said this afternoon that he wants the people of Canada who are interested in civil liberty and in this kind of question to appear before the committee. They could appear before a committee that was considering a bill just as readily as they could appear before a committee considering this motion. Why, then, is the government presenting this motion instead of taking the responsibility of and having the courage to present a bill to this House? I have no hesitation in finding an answer.

An hon. Member: Even you don't believe that.

Mr. Lewis: I do believe it. Knowing the feeling across this country about the way in which Canadians were taken in last fall, the government does not have the courage to present a bill on its own but wants the subterfuge umbrella of a parliamentary committee. In order to make certain that the government gets out of the committee what it wants to get out, it made the committee a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons.

Mr. Jerome: Would the hon. member permit a question? Is the hon. member—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The parliamentary secretary may ask a question if the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) is prepared to entertain it.

Mr. Lewis: I do not intend to do so more than once, Mr. Speaker; but since the parliamentary secretary seems unable to sit still I will listen to his question.

Mr. Jerome: Is the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) saying that he would prefer the government to send a prepared text of a bill to the committee instead of simply giving the committee a resolution? Is that what he is now saying?

Mr. Lewis: I am saying to this House—and the parliamentary secretary is intelligent enough to know what I am saying—that I am opposed to the bill and I am opposed to this motion.

Mr. Jerome: What bill?

Mr. Lewis: I am opposed to any kind of special legislation; and I am opposed to this motion because it underlines the need for special legislation, something that I do not accept. I am saying that if the government wanted special legislation, it would have been more honest and more helpful if it had produced legislation it wanted directly, instead of taking the subterfuge approach of establishing a committee to do it. It is perfectly obvious to me that this underlines the weakness of the position of the government in stating that special legislation is needed.

• (8:30 p.m.)

The Minister of Justice in his brief remarks today tried to place this whole subject in an historical and theoretical context. He talked in somewhat airy terms about our living in an era of confrontation and violence. There is some violence across the world. My reading of history tells me that there is probably no more today than there has been throughout history. I suggest that in every era there has been a response to injustice which was not always logical, democratic or peaceful. There is nothing new, as so many people suggest, about the modern era and confrontation or violence on the streets.

If the members of the House or the people of Canada are to consider the question of public order in the context of violence, then I suggest two things. I suggest, first, that it is important to try to understand the reasons for that violence. It is important to try to understand what produces the frustration that results in violence. Second, it is important to try to understand whether repressive legislation ever did any good.

Having regard to the first, I suggest that one of the major reasons for the prevalence of violence throughout the western and eastern world today—and I am not talking about wars—is the fundamental disappointment of peoples all over the world at the way in which our democratic process functions; the deep disappointment which people all over the world have felt since the end of the Second World War because the hopes for which Hitler and Mussolini were defeated have not been fulfilled. I refer to the hope of the young in particular that the end of World War II would mean more stable, lasting and untroubled peace.

On almost every continent in the world there is war or the threat of war, and over the entire world hangs the threat of nuclear destruction. I suggest the reason for this violence across the world, particularly in democracies, is that when the Second World War ended there were peoples around the globe, particularly the young, who hoped that the end of that war would also end poverty in the world, degradation, racism and discrimination. The opposite is the case. Young people all over the western world see continuing degradation, poverty, racism and discrimination. They see that the democratic process functions with shamefully disappointing slowness.

That is why you have violence and the threat of violence. The reason is that we have young people in Canada who finish school and are thrown out into the world where they cannot get jobs. Across this country we have university graduates, most of whom cannot find jobs. This is the kind of world our capitalistic, democratic system is producing. This is the kind of world in which violence grows.

I say now what I said on October 16, that this government is merely showing another aspect of its reactionary attitude toward society. It does this by dealing with possible future outbreaks through another piece of repressive legislation which will destroy civil liberties in Canada. It cannot succeed in this way. Whether it is in Quebec or anywhere else, as long as you have the amount of unemployment we have in Canada today, as long as you have a program of regional expansion that is not making the slightest dent on regional inequalities in this country—in spite of what the minister said this afternoon—as long as you continue to have one-quarter of the people in Canada living at or below the level of poverty, and as long as you have young people frustrated about their future you lay the seeds of violence; and no repressive legislation will end that situation or even cure it in the slightest.

If the minister is going to place this question in an historic and philosophic framework, he is talking shallow words, unless he places it in a framework such as I have suggested, I am sure somewhat inadequately. Does repressive legislation accomplish any purpose? I say to the members of this House and the people of Canada, if I may with humility but with emphasis, those of us who expressed our views on October 16 that the invocation of the War Measures Act would simply assist the forces of disunity in this country were, unfortunately, right.

I re-read the speech I made on October 16 and the speech I made on November 5 last, and I am not happy. I am unhappy to find that the words spoken then have proven to be right. Separatism in the province of Quebec has been assisted by the actions of this government. Since the fall I have met literally hundreds of young Quebeckers in various parts of that province, who have pointed to the invocation of the War Measures Act and the injustices that were carried out under it and the new public order act as reason for no longer having any faith in Ottawa, for no longer having any trust in the federal government, and as reason for no longer wanting to be governed in such a way.

An hon. Member: That was an excuse.

Mr. Lewis: When the hon. member says, "That was an excuse", I say to him that many of the people who have spoken to me in this way are not separatists but are against separatism, and they are heartbroken about the way in which the province of Quebec suffered as a result of the actions last fall of this government. I suggest that any other repressive legislation put on the books to replace the Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act, even when not used, will merely be an encouragement to the forces of disunity in the province of Quebec and in the whole of Canada.

Mr. Woolliams: And a disservice.

Mr. Lewis: And a disservice to our people. What has happened since the fall? The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) spoke fully and eloquently on this subject. Permit me to spend a few minutes on it. We had a tremendous threat of apprehended insurrection, as far as the government was concerned. I will come back to that in a moment. We had all the powers under the War Measures Act and we had all the powers under the public order act. The total number arrested was about 500. The total released was about 440. About 60 people were charged, and most of the charges were laid under the Criminal Code.

Where was this tremendous threat of insurrection? Where are the 1,000 to 3,000 members of the FLQ the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) so shamelessly spoke of on the radio in Vancouver? Where are these people who have infiltrated every aspect and form of Canadian life, as the same minister shamelessly suggested in this House? We let loose the RCMP, the provincial police, the municipal police and we had thousands of soldiers on the job. What did they do? They caught about 490 people, 440 of whom were completely innocent.

What kind of apprehended insurrection was that? What kind of dishonesty was this government guilty of in making the people of Canada believe there was an apprehended insurrection in the province of Quebec? Then we were told there were weapons all over the place, that there was dynamite all over the place and that there were machine-guns. Then there was all this power of search. The police searched everybody they felt like searching, as dossier Z presented to a recent meeting of journalists showed. What did they find? They found, if I remember correctly—I can be corrected if I am wrong—some 30 weapons including a couple of hunting knives, a rusty rifle and a few hundred sticks of dynamite.

Either the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the members of the government were telling falsehoods, or the entire police force, including the defence forces, were totally and absolutely incompetent. I prefer to believe the first is probably the truth. I do not believe that the RCMP, the Quebec police, the municipal police and the armed forces are totally incompetent. I do believe, however, that the government acted in panic for a reason I shall mention in a moment, and that they built a scenario to justify their action which could not be defended by truth and fact.

That is what happened last fall. Why did they act last fall? I shall repeat what I said at the time. These statements are not based on fiction or on a scenario; they are based on legitimate, valid and logical conclusions from things said inside and outside this House. What was said to justify the statement that there was an apprehended insurrection? It was said that there were 1,000 or 3,000 members of the FLQ. Obviously that was an exaggeration beyond compare. It was said there were tons—these are not the words actually used—of arms all over the place. Obviously there were not. That was an exaggeration beyond compare. It was said there was dynamite lying around everywhere, to blow up everybody. That was obviously an exaggeration. We were told, as the Minister of Justice then put it, that there was erosion of will in Quebec. The Prime Minister said there was confusion in the province of Quebec. The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion said that FRAP was a dangerous organization.

Mr. Stanfield: There must have been an apprehended insurrection of the government.

Mr. Lewis: These are the things we were told. Then the government got a real bonanza. It learned of a conversation in the offices of Claude Ryan of Le Devoir. It learned that a few editors and other people had been sitting in a room discussing in a theoretical way the possibility that Bourassa's government was weakening and what would happen if it should fall. That immediately gave the government an opportunity to spread another rumour in innuendo in order to support their unsupportable purpose. Two ministers—I said this in the House last fall—two at least among the people directly concerned, told me about the spreading of the rumours, one at a cocktail party and one somewhere else, to the effect that there was an attempt in Montreal to provide an alternative government.

The Prime Minister acted with a kind of cunning for which I admire him more and more, although I admire him less and less for what he is doing to this country. With a kind of cunning, he never denied the rumour. He knew it was not fact, he knew what had happened; but he never denied it. On the contrary, as recently as the other day when he was interviewed for "Weekend"—the interview, I understand, is to appear this coming Sunday—he repeated the innuendo. In answer to a question on this subject he replied that there were people in Montreal seeking to establish an alternative government.

The number of times the Prime Minister when attending universities in Canada, England or elsewhere, when sitting around chatting with students, talked about this, and the number of times the Minister of Justice at a university in Canada, or at Oxford, talked about this when discussing the state of the country and what would happen if the government fell and what the alternative government should be, was legion. They probably are still doing it. This goes on all the time.

The Prime Minister and the members of the cabinet knew perfectly well it was a wrong rumour, but they never stopped it. The Prime Minister repeated it the other day and ministers of his cabinet helped spread the rumour. Why did they do that? I say now, as I said last fall, that they did it deliberately. They knew that if the people of Canada read some headlines suggesting that a group of men in Montreal were discussing an alternative government, they would naturally come to the conclusion that it was a group of members of the FLQ plotting to overthrow the government of Quebec.

It has been this kind of dishonest, misleading social context for which this government was responsible last fall, and now it comes to this Parliament and says that in its opinion there should be special legislation and asks that a committee of the House tell it what kind of legislation there should be. The members of the government know what they want, and they will get it before the committee in some under the table way. Their members in some way will tell the committee what they want in the law. But they want the people to believe that it is not the government's idea but the idea of a parliamentary committee. So far as I am concerned and so far as the members of my party are concerned, inside this House and outside this House, we will not be a party to this kind of dishonest misrepresentation of an important situation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: If anyone wants further proof that what was done last fall was shameful, I suggest he read the book by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier). I read it some weeks ago before I could obtain a copy of my own; I borrowed a copy from a member of the press gallery. What does that book add up to? The Secretary of State will have an opportunity to disagree with me if he wishes to do so. I read the book carefully from cover to cover. It adds up to this; that there was never a threat of a popular insurrection. What the Secretary of State meant by using the word "popular" instead of merely "insurrection" I do not know, but it is this kind of semantics which confuses the situation a little. He states clearly that there was no danger of a popular insurrection. That is what he said, I believe word for word, or at least that is the effect of it.

Then he goes on to pile up the escalation of the FLQ activities over seven years and the dangers thereof. The dangers are those of marches on the streets of Montreal which might have resulted in riots. That is all there is in that book. That is all there is as an explanation of the invocation of the War Measures Act. All that is fact, instead of fiction, in that book is that there was a danger of marches, particularly by students and other young people, on the streets of Montreal which might have ended up in violence and riots. That was reason enough, Mr. Speaker, to invoke the War Measures Act; that was reason enough to take away personal liberties from people or to incarcerate 440 Canadians, innocent people, for days on end!

[Mr. Lewis.]

Some of these people lost their jobs as a result and many of them are still suffering from the ignominy of having been in jail and of being associated with violence and the FLQ, by reason of the fact that they were in jail. I say that this could not have justified anything and that the only thing which made this government do what it did last fall was the obvious danger that the Liberal government of Quebec was not keeping together.

• (8:50 p.m.)

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Lewis: The obvious danger for the Bourassa government was in being divided within itself on the question of negotiating with the kidnappers or not negotiating with the kidnappers. The War Measures Act was invoked for no other purpose but the ignoble one of saving a Liberal provincial government from going to the dogs. That was the erosion of will about which the Minister of Justice talked. That was the confusion about which the Prime Minister talked, for there was no other in the province of Quebec at that time.

As a result of that, as I have said, some 440 innocent people suffered great injustice and there was a worsening of the situation with regard to the fragile unity of our country.

An hon. Member: The Prime Minister would call you a bleeding heart.

Mr. Lewis: The Prime Minister might call me a bleeding heart, but I have not hesitated to tell the Prime Minister what I think of him, so we are even-Steven.

Mr. Speaker, I should like now to spend a moment dealing with some misunderstandings which have also been spread among the people of Canada. If you put a thing in a certain way, then the facts disappear and something that is not fact becomes fact in the public mind. The art of communicating carefully wrapped non-facts so that they look like facts is an art in which this government, and particularly its leader, are expert. Every time the Prime Minister speaks about what happened last fall, he says something to the effect that there were two kidnappings and there was one murder, so obviously they were right in invoking the War Measures Act. He never tells his audience that the unfortunate, the brutal, the unforgivable murder of Mr. Laporte came after the invocation of the War Measures Act and not before.

An hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Lewis: He never tells his audience that the War Measures Act was invoked at 4 a.m. on Friday, October 16, and that Mr. Laporte was not murdered until some time on Saturday, October 17, 1970. I say, Mr. Speaker, that it is more logical to see a causal connection between the invocation of the War Measures Act and the murder of Mr. Laporte than it is to put to the people of Canada what happened in October last in such a way as to make them think that the War Measures Act was invoked as a result of the murder, when the murder occurred perhaps as a result of the invocation of the War Measures Act and certainly after that took place.

There is another way in which the Canadian people have deliberately been made to see something that is not a fact, as a fact. The Prime Minister did it again in the interview to which I have referred when he said, "We needed the War Measures Act; we needed the soldiers and all the police in order to meet the threat in Quebec". Never is the audience told what is the fact, namely, that you do not need the War Measures Act to get the armed forces to assist the civil authority.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Never is the audience told the truth, namely, that the armed forces were sent into Montreal on the Wednesday and Thursday of that week before the War Measures Act was invoked.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Never are the people of Canada told that. Never are the people of Canada told by this government that there is in the National Defence Act a provision which makes it obligatory on the Minister of National Defence or on the officers concerned to give assistance to a civil authority if the attorney general of a province demands it.

All the things I have referred to this evening, Mr. Speaker, have been carefully woven together into a piece of fiction in order to defend what was done last fall. I am delighted to see, as I was certain would happen, that in the course of the last few months the people of Canada saw that it was a piece of fiction, that they had been taken in. The Gallup poll which gave this government 59 per cent last fall has now dipped to 42 per cent. I am not referring to the additional numbers that the Conservatives have or the additional percentages that my party has gained. What is of immense significance to this Parliament and to Canada is that the people of Canada are seeing through this government, and that this government is now at one of the lowest levels of popularity in its history.

Mr. Woolliams: I hope they do not only see through it; I hope the government is through.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I think my time is about up, but I say to the Minister of Justice and to the government that they will have to prove to this Parliament and the people of Canada that special legislation is necessary before anyone in Parliament who has any concern at all for human dignity will vote for this motion or for any legislation that may follow. In my view, the Criminal Code has ample provisions to deal with the situation. When the Minister of Justice said this afternoon—if I am wrong, he will correct me—"the Criminal Code is not sufficient because it is concerned with apprehending the criminal", I say to him that he knows better than that.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is not what I said.

Mr. Lewis: If it is not, then I am glad. I say to the minister that the Criminal Code does not merely provide for the apprehension of a criminal; it provides for preventive action to avoid crime just as readily and importantly. The Minister of Justice nods his head.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Certainly.

Mr. Lewis: Fine. In the Criminal Code we have a widely-worded provision about seditious conspiracy—"sedition is," "libel is," and all the rest of it. We have all the Criminal Code provisions about conspiracy and provisions about unlawful assembly and riot which would have been more than ample to deal with the street riots which the Secretary of State feared in his book. You do not need any special law to deal with that.

There is in the Criminal Code provision for the prohibition of offensive weapons, and the Code provides for search without warrant for offensive weapons anywhere except in a private home.

There is provision in the Criminal Code that gives the Governor in Council authority to define what an offensive weapon is, so that the cabinet can define anything that it believes to be an offensive weapon as such. Not only are there all these, but there are provisions in the Criminal Code that give to police and peace officers the right to arrest without warrant if they have reasonable grounds to believe that a crime is about to be committed. The Code also gives them the right to enter a house without a search warrant if they have reasonable grounds to believe there is someone in the house who may have committed a crime, is about to commit a crime, or if there are people on the premises whom they may have reasonable grounds to believe are conspiring to commit a crime. There are all these provisions in the Criminal Code to prevent the commission of a crime as well as the apprehension of the criminal.

The Minister of Justice discovered the Criminal Code for the first time the other day when he said that when the public order act dies, membership in the FLQ will still be a crime because they are guilty of criminal conspiracy. I interjected then, and I repeat what I said on October 16 or November 5, I forget which, when I was booed by members of the Liberal party. I said then that as far as I was concerned, in view of the stated objectives of the FLQ, stated in every piece of paper that they have distributed since 1963—the stated objective of using violence, the stated admission of having used bombs, having stolen, having robbed, having derailed trains, and so on—anyone who is a member of the FLQ is a member of a criminal conspiracy under the ordinary Criminal Code and you do not have to make the FLQ illegal by special law.

I believe that the Criminal Code is adequate. In my respectful submission, this Parliament ought not to take a single, solitary step, even the smallest step, in the direction of curtailing civil rights and liberties. The history of humanity is full of statements by reactionaries and dictators all over the world that the reason they were introducing repressive legislation or repressive action was to preserve or restore order. Hitler said it, Stalin said it, Mussolini said it, Peron said it, Salazar said it.

No member of this government is in that kind of company; I am not suggesting that. But I am saying that the words of the Minister of Justice, who undoubtedly is as concerned about liberty—or at least will claim he is—as the rest of us, sound exactly the same as the words of those people. No repression of civil liberty has ever been undertaken by any government except on the excuse that it was restoring or preserving the social order, and it does not sound any better in this House of Commons than it sounds in any other Parliament in the world whether democratic or otherwise.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I cannot support this motion. There has been no evidence put before Parliament or before the people of Canada that special legislation is in fact necessary. The committee, as the minister wants it, will have no authority to enter into any inquiry about events in the past to show the direction in which we must go. It is a motion based on the panic of last fall and on literal insanity in the spring of 1971.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, the motion under consideration reads as follows:

That a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons be appointed to examine, inquire into and report upon the nature and kind of legislation required to deal with emergencies that may arise from time to time in the future by reason of lawlessness or violence in Canadian society and that endanger the existence of government or the maintenance of the peace and public order;

Mr. Speaker, before getting to the core of my topic, I should like to say that we of the Social Credit Party are in favour of civil liberties and respect for the individual and I think that no other speeches are necessary to inform the House of our views on civil liberties.

However, we are also opposed to anarchy, and those who were living in the province of Quebec last fall know better than anyone else what had happened to our civil liberties and what point anarchy had reached. Those who do not live in Quebec may talk through their hat on behalf of civil liberties, but they don't know how close we were to anarchy then.

First of all, we are in favour of antiterrorist, antidisorder and antiriot legislation. We would hope—and this is why we are blaming the government—that the legislation be permanent and national. We voted against the Public Order Act because it affected particularly the province of Quebec. Since we do not like the idea of a special status, we have decided to vote against that measure.

Mr. Speaker, the act, which should be national and permanent, could be implemented in the extraordinary circumstances involved.

I must therefore say that we will not sit either on the committee which the government intends to establish. We will not allow them to laugh at us once more. Last fall, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) sent a letter to all party leaders asking them suggestions in order to guide the government as to the policy to follow concerning the war measures, but even before our suggestions reached him the proposed legislation was already printed. People laughed at us on that occasion and we certainly will not allow the government to do so again in a special joint committee.

Later on, the right hon. Prime Minister bragged about having consulted all the parties of the opposition. He did, but the bill was already printed before he examined their views.

If another committee is to be set up in order to make the Canadian people believe that the government, through a committee of the House, has consulted parliament, we will refuse to be part of it. We will let the government assume their responsibilities and introduce a second bill similar to the one they have passed, behind our backs, after having asked for our advice.

Mr. Speaker, even if we have not experienced—contrary to the opinion expressed by the hon. member who preceded me—the October crisis, the federal government should propose legislation that would be applicable not only to one province but to the whole country and that would be permanent.

Mr. Speaker, one does not wait until the city is on fire to think about organizing a fire brigade.

We know, in any event, that confusion is rampant in Canada. I agree with the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) that the economic problem is the fault of governments that are financially paralysed, and this leads to confusion, disorder and anarchy.

The communist conspirary, which is attempting to establish its own system throughout the world with the complicity or through the stupidity of governments, is another cause of this problem. This is yet another threat to public order in Canada. Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote statements by Communist leaders which prove that this threat does actually exist.

• (9:10 p.m.)

This is what Lenin once said, and I quote:

Co-existence with other nations is a must until such time as we become powerful enough to assert ourselves through world revolution... We are no pacifists. Conflict is inevitable. Major political issues cannot be resolved but by means of violence... Co-existence of Communism and democracy side by side in this world is unthinkable. The one or the other is bound to perish.

A little further, Lenin added:

It matters not that three quarters of the world should perish so long as the surviving quarter is Communist.

With an overwhelming majority of forces, a frontal attack may succeed. But with inadequate forces, one may have to resort to roundabout ways, periods of waiting, zigzags, retreats.

Well, Mr. Speaker, we began experiencing such zigzags in the province of Quebec last fall. Lenin also said:

Promises, like pie crusts, are made to be broken.

Mr. Speaker, we did not need Lenin to tell us that. Politicians have been giving ample proof thereof for the past 100 years. And here is what Khrushchev told American diplomats in 1956:

We will bury you.

That is clear enough. Is that not a threat, Mr. Speaker? In 1959, he said:

> We cannot expect to see America making a sudden leap from capitalism into Communism, but we can help the elected leaders give the Americans small amounts of socialism until they wake up only to find that they have Communism.

Mr. Speaker, the October crisis served also another purpose, that is the publicity of this government that took advantage of public threat, fright, fear and disorder to play politics. It still wants to carry on this game and to use other possible crises to its own ends, while the public would be left unprotected, as it is the case now, by means of a permanent statute; then, if there is an impending danger, the government may look as if it were running to help the people, in order to line them up better behind itself.

The government does not want to have a permanent, serious and national statute. It wants us to forget its incompetency and its failures, by making use of any trouble to make us forget its sins in order to further its re-election. This Liberal government—perhaps you will regard me as a prophet some day—intends to use the FLQ as a scapegoat to win the next election.

If the FLQ does not do anything spectacular, the Liberal party will arrange that easily, because it has always done so on the eve of elections. We were able to ascertain that he used a similar trick on the occasion of the last Quebec provincial election.

If ghosts are needed the Liberal party will provide them. Afterwards, like Don Quixote, it will hurry to rescue the people. Mr. Speaker, I can forecast that the Liberal party will take advantage of fear to win the next election, thereby creating panic so that people will forget the just society it promised and never implemented.

Mr. Speaker, the government would like to appoint a committee of the Senate and the House to examine a bill to replace the emergency measures. As I said earlier, that is absolutely absurd.

Why should members of the Senate sit on this committee? They have not been elected by the people of Canada and they are not responsible to them. The senators will only slow down the business of the committee and delay its report. The task of that committee will be to examine—not to draft—a piece of legislation for the passage of emergency measures.

Mr. Speaker, when our electors voted for us they thought they were electing parliament members, not students. Now the Prime Minister wants to compel us to study in committee without giving us any power to prepare a legislation.

The establishment of that committee has no other object than to disguise the lack of responsibility of this government which is afraid of assuming its responsibility and does not bother about protecting the people, for another crisis like that of October could break out tomorrow. The people will have nothing more than before the crisis to protect themselves. The repeal of emergency measures by the government helps only anarchists and revolutionaries.

Mr. Speaker, emergency measures do not move me, do not scare me, do not trouble me, do not interfere with my family, do not upset my way of life. What people can be harmed by emergency measures? If individual freedom is respected, we cannot prejudice the civil liberties of an individual following the path of duty. Those whose background was above suspicion in October or November, were not unduly bothered.

However, I know some people who were bothered in colleges or elsewhere and whom the police had reason to question. I even know some teachers in my own city who were fired because they were teaching revolution to our children instead of what the program required. They had committed no indictable offences; nevertheless, the education they were giving our children was of questionable quality. One of my daughters who attends a CEGEP, and I knew almost every day, every weekend, what kind of education they were trying to give our students. Our children were not requested to plant bombs, but it was sought to give them an education which would correspond 100 per cent to the views of the so-called liberators, also known as revolutionaries.

The Prime Minister would have people believe he wants to protect them while permitting revolutionaries to better organize themselves for a second offensive. Why wait for the passing of emergency measures? Why wait one year for a committee report when we know all we need to know? We have been informed of all the facts. Even if we are not aware of some facts, even if we were to adopt emergency legislation tomorrow, even if we do not need it, this would harm nobody. But should the fire of revolution would break out somewhere, there will be no need for Parliament to meet and for us to argue and persist in finding some method to fight it.

Double playing, the government thought of setting up a joint committee composed of a sufficient number of talkative members to waste time while a revolution is being organized.

Mr. Speaker, one has to be quite naive to think that everything is over and belongs to the past because the revolutionaries are still at work. Killers are still at large. In fact, this is the only true freedom.

Underworld prosperity is its reward and the result of contributions to election funds. Cursory examination of newspapers published these past three months provides ample evidence that more murders than ever are being committed in the province of Quebec, particularly in Montreal.

• (9:20 p.m.)

The government, the New Democratic Party and some other members do not want anything to change in that regard because apparently they want to take the road leading to socialism, the dream of our Prime Minister. In a moment, I shall give facts that show that his dreams have not changed. But until his socialistic dream comes true, the Prime Minister runs with the hare which represents the people, and hunts with the socialist and revolutionary hounds, and finds it possible to make right-wing speeches on television advocating harmony and discipline. On the other hand, the Prime Minister's friends from the time of Cité Libre will be allowed to work undisturbed at the building of the socialist society they dream about and which they are today in a position to achieve and which they are, in fact, achieving very well.

The double game of using right-wing talk and letting revolutionaries take the initiative, is merely to be a man of the right in one's words and a man of the left in one's actions. That is why he must be careful not to reinstate, right now, these emergency measures, in order to better allow anarchists to come to Canada, and particularly to Quebec.

The Prime Minister wants to play for time and, to this end, he is hiding behind the ineffectual and verbose democracy of a committee which he controls.

The death penalty is no more, and the underworld is happy about it. Emergency measures are no more; so, the anarchists are shaking hands and congratulating themselves, shouting: Long live Liberty! They are now free to set up another crisis, undisturbed, and when they are well organized, we will set the police and the Army after them, at the last minute. And there we are! That is it! We asked for revolution? We have got it. We have left them all freedom and latitude to organize; then, we will face them, at the last minute.

The government does not need any task force to tell him what to do: Let it take its responsibilities. It has the required majority: Let it act. Its platform during the last election campaign was based on the principle of a majority government. Well today it has a majority, so let it resort to action! It has the responsibility for governing the country: let it propose a bill to the House after consultation with the opposition parties.

The government was warned by Messrs. Drapeau and Saulnier from Montreal. It sneered at their advice. The appointment of a royal commission to inquire into the activities of the Company of Young Canadians had been requested, but the political game was played and therefore the inquiry requested by the mayor and the chairman of the executive committee of the City of Montreal did not take place. The government did not wish to take the necessary measures to prevent the anarchists from going into action in Quebec and on account of this gross carelessness we had the October crisis. The Prime Minister is not willing to pass permanent legislation in order to keep under control the Canadian anarchists, especially in Quebec. It is rather strange to see who are the accused summoned before the courts and what is the past of some of them. Up to now, those people have endeavoured to destroy our society and, when they are quite organized, they will be successful, because the emergency measures will have been passed too late.

I have here some statements which in my opinion are rather important. There is in Canada a new organization directed by Mr. Jean-Louis Gagnon. The federal government should be more cautious about him that it has been up to now.

The hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Béchard) can say that we are witch hunting. He can speak as he pleases; he is free to say what he wants in the House, but it is unfortunate that he does not speak more often so that we may know his inner thoughts.

The Director of Information Canada stated the following:

[English]

"I haven't got a drop of national glory in my veins, but I have a lot of hot red blood that demands vengeance—

"I believe that revolt is the law of the slave, and one must die according to his law—but I do not believe anymore that there are races that are born to reign or to dominate—

"Nationalism leads to useless wars; class struggle leads to the liberation of the oppressed . . . the class struggle is a liberating factor—"

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this letter was written not too long ago. I have another statement which is from a distinguished American criminalist and which reads as follows:

[English]

People who won't believe in the conspiracy theory of history are the very ones who make it possible for conspirators to go on making history.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I could quote other statements to show that in Canada, as in other countries, the federal government has a right to be concerned about its own security. It is not when disturbances are at our doors that it is time for the government of a country to get organized. We are here to pass preventive legislation, and it should be passed as soon as possible since after the October events we cannot be so naive as to think that everything is back in order.

If we passed legislation enabling some agencies to inquire into what is happening in our province and elsewhere in Canada, we should have an excellent preventive measure to avoid a recurrence of disturbances similar to those we had in October.

That is why the motion introduced by the government is stupid and absurd. This motion is designed to fool Canadians even more, to get them to swallow that the government is studying the problem and will take some action, while it has all which is necessary to draft a bill and introduce it in the House. Those members who are concerned with national security and individual freedom instead of anarchy could then vote in favour of the bill.

That is why I suggest that this government in delaying the passage of a permanent and national act is failing in its duty. Such a law could be useful. It is essential that this government discharge its responsibilities but obviously it is procrastinating so as to be in a position when the elections come to play politics on the FLQ's back.

[English]

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, as we proceeded through the month of April knowing that the Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act was about to expire, I was one of those who felt that we should not continue the public order legislation. I was also one of those who felt that we should consider new legislation to deal with situations such as we had last fall, but that this legislation should be considered by a parliamentary committee and by Parliament as a whole in consultation with the people of Canada.

When I heard the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) state this evening that this resolution was a subterfuge and hoax, that the government had a bill under the table and that it would instruct us what to do at the proper time, I was extremely disappointed in him. The hon. member for York South, the new leader of the New Democratic Party, is very quick in this House to accuse others of arrogance. He did that this afternoon with regard to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

I do not know whether it should be called arrogance or something else when a member rises in this House and presumes that when another member makes a decision on an important issue it is because he has been instructed by somebody else. He presumes that the members of his party will not be instructed by somebody else, but categorically suggests that the members of this party on an issue that is very important—especially to me because I am from Montreal and represent people in that city—will be instructed by the government as to what to do when a committee studies this issue. I say to the hon. member for York South and other members that I was not instructed what to do on any of the votes last October, and I will not be instructed what to do on this matter.

The type of resolution now before the House is the kind of solution I look to in order to deal with this type of problem. My reason is as follows. Now that the situation in Quebec has become quiet, we can deal with this matter at greater length and without passion. Because this is a question of suspending civil liberties in certain situations it must have a proper consensus rather than being in the form of a bill brought in by a government party or a majority in Parliament. We need the type of legislation to which all parties have contributed, as if they had to deal with the situation which confronted the government last fall.

I visualize the committee hearing from civil liberties groups, bar associations, mayors, police representatives, judges and all who administer the law in order to find out whether the law as it stands is adequate. The committee may find that no changes in the criminal law are necessary. I accept this as a possibility. I do not know. All I know is that last fall we were confronted with a situation in which the ordinary law was not adequate. I shall deal with this aspect later.

I wish to turn now to some of the arguments put forward by those who say we should have continued the public order legislation. I was completely opposed to doing so. I believe the goals we sought to achieve last October through the use of the War Measures Act, and later through the Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act, have been achieved. Quiet and peace has been brought to Quebec. There have been no serious incidents in the province since October. The strong and prudent action taken by the government then has served as a deterrent to those who thought they could change the social or political order by violent means. In the circumstances, the government had a duty to encourage a return to normality in Quebec. Had we sought to prolong the public order legislation, our action could have been taken as indicating a lack of confidence in the return of normal times to the province.

The Prime Minister of Quebec recently visited Europe and New York to encourage investment in the province. He has tried to convince potential investors that normal times have returned. We ought to second that type of approach. The best way of doing so was to discontinue the public order legislation after it expired in April.

It is fitting we should reconsider the criminal law to determine whether it is adequate to deal with situations of the type encountered last October. I would be opposed to the government bringing in a bill directly on this subject. When the suspension of civil liberties is in question there ought to be a broad consensus in the country as to the type of legislation which should be permitted—broader than can be shown by a simple majority in Parliament. We should endeavour to stimulate as many people as possible into thinking about this subject and grappling with it.

Of course, the government could have brought a bill forward. There would have been the usual opposition and bickering in Parliament by one side against the other as to its merits. By putting the issue before Parliament in the way now proposed, by inviting witnesses to give evidence before the committee and enabling all parties to deal with the question, we shall be in a better position to assess the situation and determine the type of legislation which may be necessary.

I repeat, under the terms of this motion I consider it a possibility that the committee might find that no changes are necessary. I reject the insinuations contained in the speech of the leader of the New Democratic Party, that we are dealing here with a subterfuge or a ruse and that we have all been instructed on these benches as to what we must do. Such a suggestion almost justifies a question of privilege being raised. However, I shall not pursue the matter.

In my opinion, the major question the committee should deal with is whether the rules with respect to appearance and arraignment within 24 hours of arrest are not lacking in circumstances where it is necessary to arrest a large number of people, where it is necessary to assess evidence and prepare charges against a great many people. In other words, the committee should consider whether in certain circumstances it might not be necessary to allow the Crown a longer period in which to examine evidence and prepare charges.

Mr. Woolliams: Will the hon. member permit a question? In the case of Laporte, the persons accused were arrested and charged with offences under the Criminal Code—kidnapping or murder. Would anyone accused of such crimes be released on bail in normal circumstances? Would he not be held in custody to give the Crown precisely the time the hon. member was talking about?

Mr. Allmand: Yes, in cases where those arrested are suspected of murder. But where crimes of violence are widespread, situations could arise in which the normal rules with respect to arraignment might have to be modified and the period allowed for preparation of prosecutions extended. One might have to consider whether the law with respect to search and arrest ought to be changed. I make no judgment at this point, however. This is a matter which should be considered by the committee. We should talk to the police forces, the bar associations and everybody concerned—

Mr. Woolliams: Call the Prime Minister.

Mr. Allmand: As for declaring the FLQ illegal, I personally do not see how it can be done effectively. It could be done last fall because there was a group in existence then who called itself the FLQ and had done so for a long period; its members had committed criminal acts, including murder and bombing, and I think it was appropriate under the appropriate regulations to declare it illegal. As I say, I do not see how we can do it when bringing in new legislation but that, too is open to discussion.

The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) presented an amendment which in my opinion is nothing more than an attempt to use the select committee as a tribunal to judge what Parliament decided last fall.

Mr. Woolliams: Nonsense.

Mr. Allmand: It would be a tribunal to judge whether the action taken by the government in introducing the regulations under the War Measures Act and the public order legislation was right or wrong. This is another attempt by the opposition to make political, partisan capital if they can out of a most serious issue. This type of re-examination of what Parliament did last fall is pointless. I suppose one could argue about it for months or years.

• (9:40 p.m.)

There had been an escalating situation. If the government had not taken the measures it did under the War Measures Act and then replaced the act with the public order act, no one can speculate what would have happened. Consequently, we have to look to the future and not to the past. I do not think anything can be gained by using the proposed committee as a tribunal. All it would end up as would be a lot of political partisanship and an attempt to rejudge what has already been done.

In his speech the hon. member for York South spoke as if the situation in Quebec last fall had been caused by the introduction of the War Measures Act.

Mr. Woolliams: He did not say that at all.

Mr. Allmand: Well, he seemed to say that. But many of us in Quebec had the impression that the FLQ had kidnapped two men, that they had threatened the government of Quebec and all Canada by asking for the release of certain prisoners, by demanding $500,000 and other things. We had the impression that these things happened first and that the government, which had been very patient for a long time, was concerned with civil liberties and with trying to solve the problems under the ordinary provisions of the Criminal Code, acted with great hesitancy when it introduced the regulations made pursuant to the War Measures Act. The government acted after the threat to life and liberty issued by the FLQ.

In his remarks the hon. member for York South continually spoke as if all the problems in Quebec were caused by the government bringing forth the War Measures Act. He said he had spoken to people in Quebec who said that the situation got worse because the government did what it did, and so on. The problems in Quebec were not caused by the government taking measures to protect the population. These problems have been created over a period of seven years by a group called the FLQ, which has attempted to disrupt, and has disrupted, society by many forms of violence.

The hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald), the hon. member for York South and the hon. member for Calgary North, indeed all members of the Conservative and New Democratic parties, continually ask: Where was the need for bringing forward the laws the government brought forward last fall—as if nothing had happened. I should like to quote an article written by James Stewart of the Montreal Star in which he wrote the following:

> Hardly anyone was prepared for the quantum jump in terrorism that electrified Quebec and all Canada in October 1970. Perhaps we should have been prepared. If you write down, one after another, all the deeds and declarations of the Front de Libération du Québec over the past seven years, you compile a catalogue of violence that recognizes no conventional limits.
> But it would be no more than a catalogue, a selection of half-forgotten products of seven years of blasting, robbing, and raiding by the FLQ in the name of Quebec independence and the global socialist revolution: seven people dead, many injured: a bomb planted, on the average, every ten days.

Imagine, Mr. Speaker, a bomb planted on the average every ten days over a period of seven years! I wonder how long the hon. member of Egmont would have tolerated bombs being planted every ten days by a group that put forward the idea that they were going to change the political system by violence in his province? It seems to me that in that province, the entire population of which is about the same as my constituency, the usual level of violence is a bit of drunkenness on a Saturday night. I wonder how long the hon. member would have tolerated a bombing every ten days over a period of seven years. Would he still have taken the position he has taken in this House today and over the past several months? These were not random bombings. These were bombings with a message. There were bombings with communication. These were bombings by people who said that they were out to change the social and political systems by violence.

Some hon. members have contended that research and investigation have revealed that only a few men were involved, a few guns, a few knives, a few cases of dynamite, and so on. That might be true. But I submit, Mr. Speaker, that you do not need too many men who are seriously committed to violence, who are seriously committed to the type of urban guerrilla warfare that we are seeing now around the world, to upset society completely. As a matter of fact, you can have situations where one man declares he is going to terrorize a society and who does terrorize society. This was done for a while in Boston by the Boston strangler.

When you have threats made by a group and you do not know how large the group is, and the group carries out its threats by bombing, by kidnapping and by murder, then I suggest it is the duty of the state to take measures to protect its citizens. The government of this country did take measures to protect its citizens, and I think that again this government will take measures to protect its citizens.

I find it somewhat strange that today the Conservative Party want to make the committee stand in judgment upon something for which that party voted last fall. They are now asking that the committee that it is proposed should study this matter stand in judgment upon a vote and a decision that they took last fall in voting for the regulations under the War Measures Act and in voting for the Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act. Now they are doing a bit of a flip-flop. I do not know whether they think the political winds have changed, but it is very difficult to understand their approach. It is my impression, with all the good faith in the world, that they are still trying to make politics out of what is a very serious issue, an issue which in my province is one of life and death.

The number of people that can terrorize a society, as I have said, can consist of a very small group. But I think we must realize that in addition to that small group committed to carrying out violence under the name of the FLQ there were also others who had great sympathy for what they were trying to do. Although they were not using guns, dynamite or other types of weapons, they were ready to assist those who were. Right now there are people on trial for doing just that, people who have helped hide those who were being pursued by the police, who built secret compartments in their homes and apartments and who helped find houses for the FLQ.

I would say that there were probably large numbers of people—I do not know how many—ready to support the FLQ if they were able to go further, and who are sympathetic to their cause. That is an unfortunate statement to make, but I think it is true. We have seen in Quebec over the last few years hatred and violence expressed in the city of St. Leonard, where there were very terrible riots. We have seen this violence at the St. Jean Baptist parades in 1968 and in 1969, where people were injured, property was damaged and riots broke out. We have also seen it at the march on McGill by thousands of people where, again, property and life were threatened.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Mr. Broadbent: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Allmand: Yes.

Mr. Broadbent: If the hon. member knows, will he reflect, in the context of his comments, upon the events that took place last week in Washington when several thousand people decided to virtually bring the government of that country to a standstill? That was the openly-declared purpose of the mass demonstration. The United States government did not declare a war measures act, or say that an insurrection was about to take place, although it might well have decided to do so, being faced with the threat of several thousand people who said they were going to bring the government to a standstill. That government used the normal process of law to arrest 7,000 people, keeping them incarcerated for a brief period of time and then releasing them. Would the hon. member, who is defending his government, compare its action with the actions of the government to our south?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I saw a film of what happened in Washington, and the events that took place there seemed to be peaceful. The men and women who went to Washington did not threaten to use violence. They declared in advance that they would not use violence. I think they conducted themselves in a very peaceful way, and I would have supported them. On the other hand, if you consider the St. Leonard demonstration and the riots that followed, the riots that took place during the police strike in Montreal and the riots that took place at other times in that city—

An hon. Member: All insurrections?

Mr. Allmand: The apprehended insurrection, as I said in my speech on the War Measures Act, constituted threats to carry out violence in order to destroy the constitution of the state—not by the traditional type of revolution with armed revolutionaries in the streets challenging the armed forces but by threatening terrorism, selective assassination, bombings and violence in an attempt to throw society into a state of imbalance in which people could no longer feel free to do the things one can do in a democratic state. Under these circumstances people might cease to stand for public office, cease to speak out as they might like, cease to govern in the province and cease to live in a province in which they were not free to do the things one can do in a democratic society.

You do not need a revolution in order to cause this type of atmosphere. All you have to do is establish a group which publicly declares it is going to assassinate, commit terrorism and bombings. This group in fact has carried out an average of one bombing every ten days over seven years and has caused the death of seven people. We must remember that the group which did this threatened the lives of two important people, one a diplomat and one a cabinet minister. At that time no one knew where the violence would stop. This government took strong action to see that nothing else happened, and I suggest that nothing else did happen because the government took that action.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: As a matter of fact, since last October we have had relative peace in Montreal and Quebec. Because we have had relative peace I was against the prolongation of the public order act. This is why I believe now is the time we should together attempt to deal with this problem.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: I hope that the statements made by the hon. member for Calgary North and the leader of the New Democratic Party are not signs that they will not participate in seeking a solution.

Mr. Woolliams: What do you mean?

Mr. Allmand: I have the impression that the hon. member for Calgary North feels that the committee cannot accomplish anything because everything has been decided in advance. I tell him honestly that is not so. I suppose I could speak in this way for months and for years and never convince the official opposition and the NDP that there was a problem in Quebec. I suppose they might stick to their position forever and a day.

Mr. Bell: Why did you wait so long?

Mr. Woolliams: Why did you take seven years to do anything?

Mr. Allmand: This is the dilemma the opposition finds itself in. When the government does take action because the state is threatened or the threat becomes accelerated to a very high degree, members of the opposition criticize us. At the same time they ask us why we did not take action sooner. I assume they are asking why we did not take action in the way of introducing special measures as a result of bombings and other things. Do I understand from the position they take that they would have invoked the War Measures Act earlier, or adopted special legislation?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: It is difficult to understand the position of the opposition. I might be very happy if the hon. member for Calgary North, the hon. member for York South, the hon. member for Egmont and, in fact, all hon. members of the Conservative and New Democratic parties continue to make speeches of this type. I might hope that they will continue to do so until the next election. I might hope that they continue to press the points they are making today. I know they are sincere and will continue to do so.

I would invite the hon. member for Calgary North to an election meeting in my constituency. I hope he would then make the same type of speech he made in the House this afternoon. I am sure we will then find out who in Montreal and Quebec believe him when he tells them we do not need this type of legislation to deal with this sort of situation. We will discover those who believe him when he says there is nothing to be worried about in spite of the fact there were bombings on an average every ten days over a period of seven years, thefts of dynamite and the kidnapping of two men, one of whom was murdered. I might hope he would come and make this kind of speech, and I would hope that other members of the Conservative party would do likewise.

This is a serious issue. Not all of my colleagues are on the same side of the fence. This is a matter in which Parliament and the people of Canada should be involved. I hope there are enough people of good faith in the House who will look at this issue with a view to bringing forward the necessary legislation. After its meetings, the committee may come forth with the suggestion that our laws do not have to be changed. At least then we will have had a full examination and investigation of the problems and we will have had the opportunity of discussing the results of what happened last fall—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

AIR TRANSPORT—HIJACKING—PARLIAMENTARY RATIFICATION OF HAGUE CONVENTION—AMENDMENTS TO CRIMINAL CODE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, many of us have had a long day today. I posed a question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) regarding the Hague convention which related to illegal interference with commercial aircraft. As I understand the situation, Canada and other nations signed that convention and agreed that some form of law based on that agreement would be adopted by various nations making it a crime to illegally interfere with the normal operation of aircraft.

I asked the Prime Minister why the government had not asked Parliament to approve the convention agreed to by Canada. This agreement has not been presented to nor approved by Parliament.

• (10:00 p.m.)

From time to time I have asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) when he intends to bring forward a bill in respect of hijacking. He has said, frankly, that there are legal difficulties. I ask the Minister of Justice, who is in the House, what are those legal difficulties? My information is that the Prime Minister has never forgotten that he was Minister of Justice, and now that he is Prime Minister he has directed the Department of Justice to do nothing at this time. All I want to find out is who is running the Department of Justice, the Prime Minister or the Minister of Justice.

After one hijacking and one attempted hijacking in Canada surely it is time the government had the Hague convention approved by Parliament. Perhaps a bill could be presented along the lines of my private bill. I should like to hear from the Minister of Justice tonight. I should like him to tell us why he has been vacillating so far as this legislation is concerned. Is he once again to be controlled by the Prime Minister so far as the Department of Justice is concerned?

Canada is a signatory of that convention, and surely having signed it we should approve it and bring forward a bill to protect not only the pilots and personnel of the commercial airlines of Canada but all the passengers who use those airlines. That is the reason I brought forward this matter in the first place and prepared a bill in respect of hijacking. I drew up that bill along the lines of the terms and conditions contained in the convention.

If the Minister of Justice does not intend to introduce a bill himself, perhaps he would allow my bill to receive second reading and be referred to the committee for study. Then we would be able to come to grips with the problem. I make the prediction that if something is not done now, we may have a situation similar to the one we were discussing this afternoon and this evening. Something will happen in Canada, not only to the personnel of the commercial airlines but to the public using those airlines. Why does Canada not take the lead?

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, since Canada signed the Hague convention on December 16, 1970, the text of this new instrument as adopted at the Hague conference has been under study by the Department of Justice, the Department of Transport and the Department of External Affairs with a view to ascertaining what steps, including the enactment of domestic legislation, will be required to enable Canadian ratification. Because Canada will be accepting certain international responsibilities with respect to the treatment of aircraft hijackers when we become a party to the convention, it has been necessary to consider a number of legal implications which will affect Canadian criminal law once the convention comes into force for Canada.

The examination of this matter has shown that we would be in a better position to implement the convention if a specific offence of "unlawful seizure of aircraft"—hijacking—were to be created under the Canadian Criminal Code. This offence would conform to the definition set out in article 1 of the treaty as follows:

> Any person who on board an aircraft in flight:
> a) unlawfully, by force or threat thereof, or by any other form of intimidation, seizes, or exercises control of, that aircraft, or attempts to perform any such act, or > b) is an accomplice of a person who performs or attempts to perform any such act, commits an offence (herinafter referred to as "the offence").

One of the most far-reaching provisions of the convention deals with the question of jurisdiction over hijackers. Section 5A of the Criminal Code gives Canada jurisdiction only over alleged offenders or offenders when the offence concerns a Canadian aircraft or a foreign aircraft which subsequently lands in Canada.

Article 4, paragraph 1(c) and article 4, paragraph 2 of the Hague convention require a contracting state to establish jurisdiction when the offence is committed on board leased aircraft and where the alleged offender is present in its territory—at any time—and it does not extradite him pursuant to other provisions of the convention. In order for Canada to undertake this obligation we must amend section 5(a) to extend the jurisdiction of Canadian courts.

The Department of Justice has under preparation, and shortly expects to introduce into Parliament, a number of amendments to the Criminal Code. At that time the amendments relating to the Hague convention will also be dealt with. When the relevant legislation has been passed, the major step which will enable Canadian ratification of the Hague convention will have been taken. Immediately following the enactment of such legislation, it is expected that the Secretary of State for External Affairs—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the parliamentary secretary, but his time has expired.

Mr. Woolliams: If other members would consent—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no provision in the rules to extend the time. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Stewart).

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, I thought we had ten minutes altogether.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The parliamentary secretary's time has expired. The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) has been gracious in suggesting that it should be extended, but there is no discretion in the Chair to extend it. The hon. member for Marquette.

NATIONAL PARKS—RIDING MOUNTAIN—CLOSURE OF CHURCH CAMPS

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, on May 11 I questioned the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) on the government's decision to force the closure of six church camps in Riding Mountain National Park. I do not understand the government's policy that the leases to these six church camps will not be renewed after 1975. It is as confusing as most of the policies they have established for our national parks, particularly as they affect our parks in western Canada where space is no problem.

The member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) and myself during the Easter recess met with representatives of the six denominations involved in the operation of these church camps. I can assure the minister that they are not happy with his decision after the time and effort that has been put forth in the last 30 years in developing these camps. In choosing a church camp it is extremely important that a location is chosen for urban children to receive the special gift of the revelations of nature; it is necessary for them to be in an unspoiled, undeveloped, isolated area. The present church campsites in Riding Mountain National Park fill this need.

The government will say that they have offered to relocate the church camps in one large, group camp. In view of the fact that the proposed relocation site offered the six denominations is a former prisoner of war camp, surely the government will alter its decision. By giving these six churches one unacceptable alternative the minister knows that he will force the eviction of these church camps from the park. The government will say "Not to worry" because these closures will not take place before 1975, but everybody knows it is impossible to continue operation of the camps under this guillotine.

Surely the government realizes that one of these camps, the Anglican camp, is established as a memorial to those who gave their lives in World War II. Also, I understand that the churches have been advised that they will receive no reimbursement for their present camps and buildings. This is a most dictatorial attitude.

For several years the government has said that public hearings would be held in Manitoba to discuss national parks' policy. When are these hearings to be held? How much longer do the people have to wait? Let the government get the reaction of the people to the closing of these church camps, the proposed closing of the outdoor roller-rink at Clear Lake, the unbelievable increases in commercial assessments at Clear Lake that, through time, will close many businesses, and the many more controversial decisions being made for Riding Mountain National Park. I ask the government not to delay these public hearings any longer, so that the people will know what its intentions are.

The largest area of Riding Mountain National Park is in the federal riding of Marquette. Mr. Speaker, through you I personally invite the minister to be my guest and visit the park. I will show him the church camps he is forcing to close. Let him see first-hand how idiotic are the government's policies as they pertain to this park. A visit like that would give him a better understanding of the situation. I say to the government, allow these church camps to remain in Riding Mountain National Park. They are used and enjoyed by many western Canadians. If you want to establish new policies for national parks, make them effective when new parks are established but leave the present parks alone.

Finally, I would point out that the closing of these camps is another case of one hand not knowing what the other hand is doing so far as the government is concerned. Other departments of government are spending large amounts of money encouraging our youth to travel and see Canada. Youth hostels are being established all over the country. Yet we have the department responsible for our national parks forcing the closure of six church camps which will give our youth guidance and do more good than any government programs to date.

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, six private group camps are operated by church groups in Riding Mountain National Park. Agreements have been renewed with four of the organizations to continue occupancy of the lands until March 31, 1975, and similar renewals will be granted to the remaining two organizations.

At the present time, a number of organizations operate private group camps in our national parks. These organizations established camps in years when there were comparatively few visitors to our national parks. Due to the substantial increase in park visitation, it is no longer possible for us to accommodate all the demands from new organizations which would like to establish camps within national parks. Also, it has become necessary to plan the long-term recovery of parklands previously reserved for exclusive purposes of various kinds, and to make all facilities within the parks available to the general public with no special privileges and no exclusive use by any group or individual.

We recognize the need for careful testing to establish practical routines, procedures and programs for application in departmentally-controlled group camps. We anticipate, and hope to encourage, the interest of many worthy organizations that will be able to take advantage of public facilities which were previously reserved for exclusive use. The department recognizes a special responsibility on behalf of the young people of Canada. Consequently, we want to be absolutely sure that the resources for this purpose in our parks are adequate, properly administered and will in fact make it possible for many more Canadian youth to enjoy our parks now and in the future.

I would also mention that this summer a former army cadet camp in Riding Mountain National Park will be operated by the national parks service as a group camping facility, available to any organization wishing to take advantage of these resources. This project will be very carefully watched to make sure that this test of the proposed policy is as thorough and as objective as possible. While no assurance can be given that the agreements for the existing camps will be extended beyond 1975, there is no intention on our part to phase-out their operations until we are certain that we have a practical alternative that will serve the purposes we have in mind.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for the kind invitation he extended to the minister and I will transmit the invitation to him.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT AMONG YOUTH—INQUIRY AS TO NEW PROGRAMS TO MEET PROBLEM

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question based on the Dominion Bureau of Statistics figures on unemployment among young Canadians, which is now at the rate of 13.6 per cent actual and 12.3 per cent seasonally adjusted. In view of these figures, and bearing in mind the fact they are relevant for a period before the exodus of students seeking summer employment, is it the intention of the government to announce any new programs designed to meet the problem of summer unemployment particularly and unemployment among young Canadians generally?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, that is not our present intention. We never preclude the possibility of the government announcing new programs if and when they appear desirable, but we have no present intention of doing that. I might remind the Leader of the Opposition that some weeks ago we announced we were spending $57 million to meet this problem, which was considerably more than the few millions we had allocated last year, which was more than the zero of previous times. As the hon. member knows, the Secretary of State announced $10 million additional to the $57 million, bringing the total to $67 million for the summer months. We feel that this is a considerable improvement over all past programs.

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman whether the figures that were released yesterday do not in fact indicate a much more serious condition than the government had anticipated, based upon all previous forecasts made by the Minister of Finance, and whether this does not create a new context in which the government ought to consider the problem of summer employment and employment for young Canadians generally?

Mr. Trudeau: It does, Mr. Speaker, and as the Minister of Finance said yesterday we are concerned about the new figures released yesterday. We shall be looking very closely to see whether they indicate a change in the favourable trend that has been established since last September. But I must guard the opposition, who supported not only the $10 million that the Secretary of State announced a few days ago but indeed said the amount should be more, against the danger of concentrating only on the young and failing to realize that there are a lot of heads of families in Canada who must also be thought of. Therefore, with the naturally not unlimited resources of the country we must not only think of spending money on the young people, as the opposition seem concerned to do.

Mr. Stanfield: We will have the figures for longer term employment within a few days and the government has to accept responsibility for them as well as those for our youth. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he would not reconsider the imposition of an additional portfolio on the Secretary of State, who is responsible for implementing the program of summer employment for students? Would he not relieve the minister of that responsibility in view of these alarming figures, or does the Prime Minister believe that the additional responsibilities imposed on the minister will not interfere with the implementation of this program any more than the writing of a book by the minister interfered with the development of the program originally?

Mr. Trudeau: I will certainly consider that, Mr. Speaker, but I wish that the opposition would consider passing the government organization bill which would permit us to name additional ministers.

Mr. Woolliams: That would not help.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not easily see how the opposition can argue, on the one hand, that the government is trying to establish too many ministries, talk about a pork barrel and try to defeat the organization bill and, on the other hand, suggest we should establish today a new ministry for youth, the other day a new ministry for women, and the day before a new ministry—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, as usual the Prime Minister misrepresents the position. He knows that the opposition has offered to co-operate on the government organization bill provided the House of Commons is given the final word. Once that is done the Prime Minister can proceed as fast as he is able to.

Mr. Trudeau: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Is the right hon. gentleman rising on the same point of order?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. That bill has been before the House since the month of December, and I hardly call it co-operating when they stall the passage of the bill until well into late spring.

Mr. Baldwin: That's a lie.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have been told that is a lie. I should like the hon. member to explain.

Mr. Baldwin: I will not withdraw. It is a lie.

Mr. Trudeau: I am not asking you to withdraw, I am asking you to explain what the lie is.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure what the exchange was between the hon. member and the Prime Minister.

Mr. Trudeau: I will tell you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member said it was a lie and that he will not withdraw. All I want to know is what the lie is.

Mr. Speaker: Whatever the hon. member for Peace River said did not come to the Speaker's ear. The right hon. gentleman tells me that the hon. member for Peace River used words which are clearly unparliamentary. I did not hear them so I am not sure whether he said them. It is difficult for me to charge him with having uttered certain words when I did not hear them.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister charged the opposition with certain tactics. The charge is not correct and I said that was a lie. That was the statement I made.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Peace River knows as well as I that he cannot say that. The hon. member holds a very responsible position in the House and I think he has to accept that responsibility. I would say there is a very heavy onus on him to respect the rules and traditions of the House. I should think that the hon. member for Peace River would want to take that into account and perhaps say that the words he used went beyond his thought. The hon. member knows that the word "lie" cannot be used. The matter is as simple as that. If a member of this House who has the responsibility held by the hon. member for Peace River is allowed to use such language, I am not sure whether there is any purpose in going on at all.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I shall withdraw the word and substitute the words "terminological inexactitude".

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member. I was sure he would appreciate the position. The words used now are much better so far as the Chair is concerned and the Standing Orders and the traditions of the House. I have recognized the hon. member for Winnipeg North. I realize there are a number of supplementary questions and if hon. members will be patient they will be recognized in due course.

PLANS TO PROVIDE WORK FOR THOSE UNEMPLOYED MORE THAN SIX MONTHS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister along the lines to which he alluded in his reply to the Leader of the Official Opposition. In view of the fact that the number of people who have been employed for six months or more has risen from 78,000 in April of last year to 152,000 in April of 1971, an increase of almost 100 per cent, is the government giving consideration to new plans in order to find work for these people who are really suffering as a result of the government's policies of restraint?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to what the Minister of Finance and myself said yesterday.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

SIGNING OF AGREEMENT RESPECTING DEVELOPMENT OF EASTERN QUEBEC

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Joliette wishes to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, along the same line, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he would elaborate on the statement made by the Quebec Minister of Municipal Affairs the day before yesterday to the effect that for the past 10 months he had been waiting for the federal government's signature concerning the development program for eastern Quebec?

Because of the unemployment situation now prevailing in Quebec, would the Prime Minister tell the House when the government will be in a position to sign this agreement which might help improve the situation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): If the hon. member would specify which agreement, Mr. Speaker, I shall attempt to give an answer but I am not aware of what he is talking about.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, may I say that I refer to the eastern Quebec development program, cost of which has initially been established at $250 million and which, according to the Quebec Minister of Municipal Affairs would now reach $350 million. Apparently they are still awaiting the signature of the federal government.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there is certainly a mistake. An agreement does exist providing for an eastern Quebec development program, which we signed a little over two years ago. Credits will be available as soon as the province of Quebec manages to agree with the federal government as to the adequate manner of spending the funds.

As far as dates are concerned, information should be requested from the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, who is in charge of that part of the program.

WELFARE

ASSISTANCE TO CITIES TO MEET PAYMENTS—INCREASE IN PAYMENTS TO OLD AGE PENSIONERS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, my question has to do with the cities and the unprecedented burden placed upon them as a result of rising unemployment which has in fact caused the number of people on the welfare rolls to increase at an accelerated rate. Since I understand the Prime Minister accepts responsibility for the high unemployment, is he now in a position to advise the House whether he has changed his mind in terms of assisting the cities and provinces to meet this very significant set of facts?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are still trying to get the opposition to consent to the passage of the organization bill so we can establish a ministry responsible for housing and urban development. I hope they will get on with the job.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether at this particular time the Prime Minister would direct the minister in charge of housing to call at his early convenience a tri-level conference, as was undertaken recently, in order that the cities can come together again with the minister's colleagues from the provinces so they can all sit down together to see whether they can solve the problem in the very near future and place a lot more Canadians back at work?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the Minister without Portfolio is perfectly able to do these things if required without direction from me, but he will do them all the more efficiently if he is provided with the tools to do it by the opposition which has been preventing the passage of the bill.

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the government House leader and I and the other House leaders have been trying to negotiate and discuss ways and means by which this bill can be passed. Certainly these improper and incorrect interventions by the Prime Minister do not assist negotiations of this kind.

Mr. Trudeau: That is a lie.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Témiscamingue.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question?

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member kindly resume his seat.

[Translation]

I apologize to the hon. member for Témiscamingue. I shall recognize him in a moment.

[English]

The hon. member for Calgary North rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, just a few minutes ago an objection was made by the Prime Minister and by you, Sir, with reference to the use of unparliamentary language. Now the Prime Minister has said to the House leader on this side, "It is a lie".

Mr. Trudeau: Right.

Mr. Woolliams: I would think that in his responsible position he should withdraw those words. He has been guilty of other kinds of unparliamentary language for a long time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair, of course, is in the same position at this time as it was a moment ago when the Prime Minister reported that the hon. member for Peace River had used an unparliamentary word and the hon. member for Peace River was gracious enough to recognize that and change his language. As I say, now I am in the same situation. I did not hear the exchange which took place between the right hon. gentleman and someone else, but if the Prime Minister has spoken that word certainly he also is in the same position as the hon. member for Peace River and should alter his language.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I did use the word and I used it in the same sense as the House leader of the Official Opposition used it which, as you know, means something else.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I of course cannot agree.

An hon. Member: That is not a withdrawal.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest, with great respect and kindness to all hon. members and to the right hon. gentleman, that the task of the Speaker is difficult enough and that task should not be made more difficult. We are dealing, after all, with the use of words but there are traditions which must be respected. Again, as I say, the hon. member for Peace River made it possible for the Chair to accept a correction. I think the words he used were "verbal inexactitude". I am not sure whether I am using the exact words. However, there are some words we all know which should not be used because we have to respect the word of every member. It is unfair and unparliamentary and wrong in many other ways—

An hon. Member: Remember there are children in the gallery.

Mr. Speaker: —to accuse any other hon. member of a deliberate falsehood, which is what telling a lie is. I would hope that the Prime Minister would make a correction in the same way as the hon. member for Peace River and other hon. members have done in co-operation with the Chair in the past.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there is no problem at all. I really want to co-operate with Your Honour. When I used the word "lie", I repeat I used it in the same sense as the House leader of the Official Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Trudeau: I understand that he says it is a—I stumble a little over the word—terminological—

An hon. Member: The Prime Minister did not stumble over fuddle-duddle.

Mr. Trudeau: What I meant is that he used the words "terminological inexactitude", Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Baldwin: We understand each other now.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure whether that is exactly what I would have liked the right hon. gentleman to do. I would think he has gone half way, but I would have liked him to follow the good example set by other hon. members who normally are prepared to co-operate with the Chair.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a last supplementary question. I do not intend to become involved in a confrontation with the Prime Minister, but I think he continually drags red herrings into very important topics.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Alexander: I say this seriously.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has the floor at this point but not to make the situation worse. It is bad enough now. I would hope that hon. members would limit themselves to questions. Yesterday there were so many points of order and questions of privilege during the 40-minute question period that a number of hon. members—I noticed the hon. member for Red Deer in particular—did not have a chance to ask their questions. If we pursue these points of order and questions of privilege, we shall again be placed in the same situation. I will recognize the hon. member for Hamilton West for one more supplementary, and then I will recognize the hon. member for Témiscamingue.

Mr. Alexander: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will continue to be responsible.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: Since the cost of living index has been removed as a factor in old age security payments, I wonder whether the Prime Minister, in view of the fact that inflation is continuing and rising and is undoubtedly affecting these payments, would seriously reconsider the removal of the cost of living index factor from these payments in order that we may give some relief to our needy senior citizens?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I apologize, but I missed the first part of the question. I assure the hon. member that I will read it in Hansard and see if I can provide an answer.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

EFFECT OF PASSAGE OF BILL C-207 IN FIGHTING UNEMPLOYMENT—CO-OPERATION OF PRIVATE INDUSTRY IN PROVIDING JOBS FOR STUDENTS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, now that the children have finished playing, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

Since he has been saying for some time now that adoption of the bill enabling the government to create new departments would solve the economic crisis in Canada, I would like to ask him how this would effectively help the fight against unemployment in Canada?

My second question is: Is the government receiving all the co-operation needed now from private enterprise across Canada to find summer jobs for students?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): As regards the first part of the question, Mr. Speaker, I must tell the hon. member that were he less busy making clever remarks, he would have grasped a little better what I said.

As regards the second part, Mr. Speaker, the co-operation of private enterprise was requested and, to the extent it is granted, we are satisfied.

UNEMPLOYMENT—INCLUSION ON AGENDA OF FORTHCOMING FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the original question asked by the hon. member for Hamilton West. With respect to the very crucial problem that faces not only urban centres but the provinces as well, I wonder whether the Prime Minister, in view of his imminent departure, has made any arrangement to meet the requests of the Prime Minister of Ontario and others that unemployment be included on the agenda of the forthcoming federal-provincial conference.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I told the Prime Minister of Ontario, and I propose to put it to the other provinces, that if they wish to prolong the stay in Victoria we are quite prepared to do so and discuss unemployment or any other matter. I want to impress on everyone, however, that the task which we have set ourselves to achieve in Victoria is essentially the constitutional one. I am trying to get agreement that we will give priority to this to make sure that any other subjects we want to discuss will be discussed after the end of the constitutional debate.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

QUEBEC—ALLEGED REFUSAL OF PROPOSED AMENDMENT FORMULA

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question regarding his recent statement concerning the amending formula of the Canadian constitution.

He said he was confident that all provinces would accept the formula, but since Quebec's premier, Mr. Bourassa, said that this formula was unacceptable, would the Prime Minister clarify this situation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is misquoting Mr. Bourassa. I would like to know where he said that this formula was unacceptable.

UNEMPLOYMENT—DISCONTINUANCE OF ASSISTANCE TO PEOPLE MOVING TO CITIES FROM RURAL AREAS

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the high unemployment figures and the low rate of economic development within the Canadian economy, will the government call off, at least for the immediate future, the program of depopulation of the rural sector as set out in the paper "Agricultural Adjustment or Development Policy for Canadian Agriculture" of March 8 this year?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should know that this is not the kind of thing you call off. People have been moving from the rural areas of Canada to the cities for more than a generation now. The aim of the government is to make sure that this movement, this abandonment of certain rural areas, is not met with the hardships it would be met with if there were no government program or assistance to help to do this. It is not the government that decided that the Canadian population should move toward a higher concentration in the cities. As the hon. member knows, this has been happening for generations.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of housing. Has the minister been consulted by his colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, in regard to the impact of the proposed agricultural adjustment or development program on the urban sector of the economy in respect of housing and job opportunities?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's question is not phrased correctly. The hon. member asks whether a minister has been consulted by another minister. That is not a question which is acceptable from a procedural standpoint.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, may I rephrase the question. Is the Minister without Portfolio in charge of housing a party to this total policy, or has he been consulted in regard to this total policy that is under review?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that a few moments ago the Prime Minister was emphasizing that the aim of his government was to avoid undue difficulties for those who have to move from the countryside to the towns, I would like to ask him whether this explains the great efforts he has been making to maintain full employment in the cities?

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, since the latest unemployment figures still show an increase in the number of unemployed, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence.

As war solved the unemployment problem in Canada in 1939 and as the government is unable to fight unemployment, does the minister intend to increase the armed forces for this purpose?

MANPOWER

SPECIAL PROGRAM TO ASSIST THOSE UNEMPLOYED FOR MORE THAN FOUR MONTHS

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that 40 per cent of the Canadians who are unemployed have been unemployed for more than four months and that most of these are middle-aged Canadians still raising families who have not had the technical training needed for the present day and age, is there any special program planned by his department to try to assist these Canadians?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is fully aware of the many programs which are designed to assist these and all Canadians who have unemployment difficulties, including the placement services and the training and upgrading facilities when those are logically the right move for the particular individual in question. These are all available, and of course the manpower offices throughout the country are doing a very full job in attempting to place the available people in the jobs that are available.

Mr. Lundrigan: In view of the fact that officials of the Department of Manpower in the Ontario region and the Atlantic region have described the April unemployment rise "as some sort of a freak caused mainly by the severity of the winter and the lateness of spring," and in view of the fact that spring was at least a month early in the Atlantic region, can the minister say if this is the official position of his department so far as an explanation of the unusual increase in April unemployment is concerned, and was any directive given to these manpower offices to come up with this kind of explanation?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, no direction was given to them whatsoever. This is simply a reflection of their reactions as men who are fully aware of conditions around them. They saw conditions generally in the country improving. Therefore when attempting to explain the figures for the week ending April 17 they noticed, for instance, that the opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway was one of the latest on record, the snow stayed on the ground longer than usual—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: —and in this way many factors may have contributed to the fact that there were only 51,000 new jobs in that month when we ordinarily would have expected many more. We naturally hope these will show up in the next set of figures.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again we have to try to proceed in an orderly fashion. We have about ten minutes left before the end of the question period and we should try to limit supplementary questions to individual members. If the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate will allow me, I shall recognize the hon. member for Annapolis Valley on a supplementary.

COMMUNICATIONS

APPOINTMENT OF PERMANENT MINISTER

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, this question is really related to an answer of the Prime Minister—I was going to ask him the question in another way—to the Leader of the Opposition and his reference to the government reorganization bill being held up and preventing government reorganization. Is it fair to conclude from his remarks that, notwithstanding the fact that we have a Department of Communications and had a Minister of Communications, he is going to wait until the government reorganization bill is passed before he puts a separate minister in charge of the Department of Communications, or is that department going to reside permanently in the hands of the Secretary of State?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

Mr. Nowlan: On a supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will allow the hon. member a supplementary and then try to move on.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister seems to be in a very receptive frame of mind today I am going to be in a very positive frame of mind too. When he makes his trip to Russia, will he investigate whether culture and communications are a positive or negative thing in so far as developing unity in a country is concerned?

Mr. Ryan: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hope the hon. member is not suggesting that he is going to ask a question supplementary to the one which has just been asked. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PROGRAM TO ASSIST UNEMPLOYED HEADS OF FAMILIES—ASSUMPTION OF LARGER SHARE OF WELFARE COSTS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago the Prime Minister said the government must consider not only the needs of unemployed youth but also the heads of families. I want to ask the Prime Minister what the government proposes to do about heads of families who are unemployed. Since well over 350,000 of the unemployed have been unemployed for more than four months and many of them have used up their unemployment insurance benefits, and since the only recourse left is for them to go on welfare, what program does the government have in mind to help the heads of families who are unemployed?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this question was dealt with yesterday by the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, since the Minister of Labour did not deal with the question any more than the Prime Minister has, and since the only alternative for these people seems to be to go on welfare, does the Prime Minister intend, at the forthcoming Prime Minister's conference, to discuss with the provinces the possibility that the federal government will assume a larger share of the welfare costs as long as unemployment is above a stated figure?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member will recall the decision of the February conference he will remember that there was a request by the first ministers to have the welfare ministers report to them at the June conference, and this will be done.

UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON TAX REFORMS AND REDUCTIONS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has talked about his feeling for the heads of families and I have listened to his answers in reference to programs. In light of the increasing unemployment in manufacturing and related industries—they employ, of course, heads of families—is the government going to or is it prepared to make a specific statement of intent with regard to tax reforms and reductions in order to stimulate and expand the economy now?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): This is the kind of thing that is done in the budget, Mr. Speaker, and we will bring it down as soon as we feel it is appropriate.

Mr. Woolliams: With all his feeling for the heads of families, does the Prime Minister feel that they can wait a month for this government to bring in a budget?

STUDY OF NEW FORMULA TO LIMIT DEBATE

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Would he tell us if he has studied the new formula concerning the duration of the debates that the Quebec government has put into effect this week? In order to ensure greater efficiency here in Parliament, would the Prime Minister consider, with the opposition parties, the adoption of a similar measure, which would be in the best interests of Canadians?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe the question is rather timely. However, the hon. member will recall that we tried, over a year and a half ago, to introduce measures restricting the duration of debate with the consent of the opposition parties. I must say that all our efforts to obtain the consent of the opposition parties to limit the length of debates under Standing Order 75 were of no avail.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister and I want to assure him that it is apart from the government reorganization bill. In the proposed cabinet shuffle and the resultant vacancy, can the Prime Minister indicate which department of government will become vacant?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek. Does the hon. member wish to ask a supplementary? The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I will put my supplementary in a way which I hope the Prime Minister will understand. What department of government does the government intend to give to the by-election candidate in Nova Scotia as minister of that department?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question is obviously out of order.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The privilege, Mr. Speaker, comes very close to the word just ruled out when it was made quite clear by Your Honour that the word "lie" is not to be used in the House of Commons. I do not want to use the word "lie" in the sense that I am directing it at any one individual, but I would say to the Prime Minister that it is time he took hold of the Liberal party and stopped them from using the big lie technique of advertising candidates as ministers-elect.

Mr. Baldwin: That is misleading because they will never be elected.

Mr. Trudeau: A terminological inexactitude.

An hon. Member: It will ruin the candidate.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

PURPOSE OF INQUIRY INTO DROPPING OF LITERATURE PROTESTING AGAINST BILL C-176 FROM AIRPLANE

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last I directed a question to the Minister of Justice in the absence of the Solicitor General. I see the Solicitor General in the House today. I wonder whether he could answer the question which was as follows:

> What was the reason or purpose of the RCMP inquiry into the procedure used by western ranchers and farmers of dropping literature from an airplane protesting against Bill C-176 at several rural points in southeastern Alberta?

I hope the minister received that question from the acting minister.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Yes, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member, but I think that the question should be put to the Attorney General of the province involved.

[English]

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, the minister has had time to look into the question. I should like to inquire why it should be directed to the Attorney General of the province? I thought the Solicitor General's department had control over the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, of necessity we have contracts with the provinces in connection with the services of the members of the RCMP, and while those members are bound by contract, they are under the direct jurisdiction of the Attorney General of the province concerned.

I think that the case raised by the hon. member comes under the provincial authorities.

[English]

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Solicitor General to give me an assurance that this inquiry was not originated by the federal government.

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Yes, I can give that assurance, Mr. Speaker.

MANPOWER

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION AGAINST WOMEN IN TRAINING PROGRAMS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was beginning to be afraid I would never catch your eye.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. MacInnis: I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that the labour statistics show that women are bearing a disproportionate share of the increase in unemployment—

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mrs. MacInnis: —will the minister discontinue the present discrimination against women in the training programs under his jurisdiction?

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept that there is discrimination. The programs available in the department are available on principles which apply equally to men and women. In each case an attempt is made to offer training to those who will be most helped by it toward finding jobs which may be available at the end of the training period.

Mrs. MacInnis: May I inquire why it is that so many more men are judged to be helped by training courses than women?

FINANCE

SUGGESTED REPLACEMENT OF DEPARTMENT BY SUPER MINISTRY

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In doing so I assure him that we are all aware that he is as concerned as all of us about the deepening unemployment and inflation crisis. In view of this situation, has the government considered replacing the Department of Finance with a sort of super ministry, for example, a committee composed of successful, experienced, practical people who would be responsible for co-ordinating all economic decision-making in the government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand this is the type of man who is running for the Liberal party in Nova Scotia in the by-election.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond—I believe the hon. member for Lambton-Kent has a supplementary.

[Mr. Goyer.]

Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MacInnis: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I apologize to the hon. member, but the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. MacInnis: They never seem to learn, Mr. Speaker, they keep walking into it. My question of privilege arises from the fact that the Prime Minister has violated the rules of the House by answering a previous question when another member has asked a different question altogether. He took the opportunity to refer to my previous question. I will now ask him to take a good hard look at his cabinet and especially the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and find out from that minister why he is allowing this false advertising to go on.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Lambton-Kent may ask a supplementary, but I point out that there is only one minute remaining in the question period. I will then recognize the hon. member for Greenwood.

Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Prime Minister did not understand my question when I asked him about a committee. I am sure it is not a committee that is running in Nova Scotia.

An hon. Member: You never know; it may be.

IMMIGRATION

REPORTED SMUGGLING OF ITALIANS INTO UNITED STATES FROM CANADA

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Is he planning to investigate or has he investigated the allegations that large numbers of people of Italian origin are entering Canada as visitors and then, at high prices, are being smuggled into the United States to be exploited there?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, of course the question of people entering Canada for a purpose other than that stated at the time of entry and a purpose which is therefore not fully legitimate is always of concern to us. We are always watching the matter and examining ways of improving our procedures in this connection. We also have some special investigations in hand in connection with some recent allegations.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day. Order, please. We have a few points of order before we go on with the business of the House. The hon. member for Hamilton West.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, my point has reference to the answer given by the Prime Minister. He will be leaving the country shortly—

An hon. Member: To Russia with love.

Mr. Alexander: —And I know he is concerned about our senior citizens. Since inflation is eating up the old age security payments to our senior citizens, I wonder whether the Prime Minister would give serious consideration at this time to replacing the cost of living index—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that this is an abuse of the rules of the House of Commons. Since The Standing Orders provide 40 minutes for the question period, an hon. member should not be given an opportunity to ask a question under the guise of a point of order. He should wait until the next sitting day. If on questions of privilege or points of order an hon. member asks a question after the period has expired, it is unfair to other hon. members when they are not recognized. Why should this not also apply to the other five or ten hon. members who have not had an opportunity to ask a question? I really think this is not a legitimate point of order. I respectfully suggest the hon. member that I should not be required to rule on the point in any event.

Mr. Alexander: I rise on a question of privilege. With respect, the only reason I rose is that the Prime Minister indicated he would look at Hansard to see what my question was and then give me the answer. The Prime Minister is going abroad. I did not mean to breach the rules, but I thought I would ask him the question in order to get an answer before he leaves the country.

Mr. Ryan: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I respectfully draw to Your Honour's attention that I have risen many times in my place for three days and have failed to be recognized. I trust that this position will be recognized.

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member. He knows that I have tried to recognize him. If the hon. member will look at Hansard for the past month or so, I feel that he will see that he has had his fair share of questioning time. I believe that very sincerely.

Mr. Lundrigan: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, related to the point raised two days ago in regard to the length of the question period. This morning the Prime Minister was made aware of an official representation that he should discuss the Atlantic fishery when he visits the Soviet Union. The hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe was about to raise that question with the Prime Minister today, but the question period expired before he had an opportunity to do so. As a result, the Prime Minister will not have had an opportunity to respond before leaving for the Soviet Union as to whether he will accept the representation officially made to his office to discuss the Atlantic fishery. In view of the fact that other members have raised a similar question, this is an appropriate time to ask if the House leaders and Your Honour will consider extending the question period beyond 40 minutes, in view of the fact that the serious unemployment crisis is taking up most of the question period, so that members may have a chance to ask their questions.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand the request of the hon. member. He is suggesting that the House agree. But that is not a decision for the House leaders, or for the hon. member or the Chair to take. If hon. members are unanimously agreed to ask questions and receive answers all day, that is their privilege, but it has to be unanimous. That is the only way the Standing Order can be amended. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. As the hon. member knows, this is the only way that the question period can be extended. If hon. members wish to change the rules in order to have a longer or a shorter question period, as the case may be, it would have to be done in the usual way, that is, by a motion after the 48 hours notice as required by the Standing Order, or by means of a recommendation from the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, to which hon. members may want to give some thought. Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PRAIRIE GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

PROVISION FOR PAYMENTS TO WESTERN CANADA PRODUCERS IN YEARS WHEN RECEIPTS BELOW FIVE-YEAR AVERAGE

The House resumed, from Monday, May 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang that Bill C-244, respecting the stabilization of prairie grain proceeds and to repeal or amend certain related statutes, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to present my views on Bill C-244 or what is commonly referred to as the prairie grains stabilization act. Before doing so, I would like to compliment some of my colleagues from western Canada, including the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Downey) and the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski), for their very comprehensive review of this bill. They have expressed many of the opinions to which I would have referred, but I will not bore the House by repeating them.

The proposal to introduce this legislation was first brought to the attention of the House on October 29, 1970, when the minister responsible for the wheat board released a 20 page brief to members and the public entitled "Proposals for a Production and Grains Receipts Policy for the Western Grains Industry". The reception of these proposals by western farmers has been very cool, to say the least. After their experience with the Lift program, the present difficulties which the government is encountering with Bill C-176 on marketing and production, the long, dragged out hearings and amendments to Bill C-175, an act respecting grain, and a further piece of controversial legislation now on the order paper entitled "An act to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act", it is little wonder that farmers are looking with a jaundiced eye at all of the present government's agricultural policies and wondering what is coming next. Bill C-244 is no exception. It leaves unanswered more questions than it answers.

Generally speaking, everyone in Canada should be in favour of a stabilized farm income and a viable farm industry. It has always been a well recognized economic fact that if agriculture, the second most important industry in Canada, is in a healthy state, the whole Canadian economic scene is above par. In reading this bill for the first time, it almost appears that the government's proposals are to stabilize farm income at a poverty level due to the criteria used in the three to five year averages of previous crop years immediately preceding the proposed stabilization payments. One only has to look at the low income of grain farmers to appreciate the point that I am making. Of course, this formula does not take into account the ever accelerating input costs such as high interest, higher taxes, higher living costs, machinery and fuel costs, labour costs, etc., plus the extra financial burden of farm grain storage costs that are bound to arise with the government's proposals for the storage of more grain on the farms.

The original plan of last October was to place this legislation before the House much earlier and to have $100 million in the hands of western farmers early this spring to help compensate for the very low cash income over the past several years due to lower sales of grain at lower prices. The program is quite late. We in the opposition have suggested several times that the $100 million acreage payment, which is so greatly needed, be made available to farmers at once. The House, and representative farm organizations, would then have time to examine Bill C-244 in committee and suggest amendments that would make this a much better piece of legislation; but no, the government would rather use this $100 million as a bribe or political blackmail to try and push this bill, with all its faults, through the House at once. In other words, we should take the bitter with the sweet. The minister responsible for this legislation has already lost credibility by crying wolf just as we started to examine this bill. He tried to accuse the opposition of obstruction in a release to the press.

Many farmers to whom I have spoken feel that the present plan of income stabilization is an illusion or a political mirage. In fact, this is the way Mr. Roy Atkinson, head of the National Farm Union, described the bill. He suggested, as did opposition members, that the $100 million be divorced from the bill and paid out at once to compensate for the recent shortfall of farm income. Then, we could go on from there to examine the bill more closely.

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture presented a brief to Members of Parliament on May 7, 1971, on Bill C-244. After reviewing it closely, I find that it corresponds very closely with my present opinion on the bill. I would like to read some excerpts from that brief. I might say that I do not always agree with the philosophy of the Canadian Confederation of Agriculture as it affects western Canada because this organization is Canada-wide. Sometimes its viewpoint is directed more toward the benefit of other segments of society than the members of the agricultural industry. But in this case it reflects the views held by most western farmers and also the views, I might be permitted to suggest, of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. The Federation of Agriculture has this to say:

• (12 noon)

> Bill C-244, the Prairie Grain Stabilization Act, must be judged and dealt with against the reality of the depressed income position of prairie grain growers and the need for adequate measures of income protection as well as grain receipts stabilization, not only today but in the longer term.
>
> The bill itself must be dealt with in two parts:
> 1. The vitally necessary payments to be made to prairie producers as so-called "special transitional payments" in the amount of $100 million. These payments are urgently required.
> 2. The long term stabilization and storage policies contained in the bill. These require much improvement.

I emphasize the Federation of Agriculture's assertion that these policies require much improvement. The statement continues:

> The federation can in no circumstances view these two parts as conditional upon one another in dealing with this bill. They should not be, and need not be, conditional. We cannot accept the assumption, as a ground rule set by the government, that to get the immediate payment the long term policy must be accepted. It would be highly improper for us to temper our criticism of the long term grains policy in this bill—and we do have criticisms, and very serious ones—out of a feeling of fear and urgency respecting a possible delay of these essential "transitional" payments. It is clearly and unmistakably the federal government's responsibility to ensure that the special payment is made and made soon, while also ensuring that adequate opportunity is given for the consideration, modification and improvement of the long term proposals contained in the bill.

The last sentence in that statement by the Federation of Agriculture is underlined. The statement continues:

> The urgent necessity of immediately supplementing the incomes of prairie farmers is clearly seen in the disastrous figures on farm income recently released by Canada Statistics.
> While official statistics do not separate grain and livestock on a net income basis, there is little doubt that grain growers are operating on a net loss basis or close to it in western Canada. The net realized income, for example, to all Saskatchewan agriculture was $200 million in 1970. In the years 1963-67 it averaged $435 million. If "income in kind" is deducted from these figures the change was from $368 million to $131 million. If you were to allocate one-quarter of the total net ($92 million) in 1963-67 to livestock—a not unreasonable assumption—this leaves a net of $276 million to grain growing. If you allocate the same $92 million net to livestock in 1970—which is likely conservative—you reduce the net from grain growing to about $40 million. In short, grain growers as a group are operating virtually at a loss, and they must in fact try to survive on depreciation and the consumption of farm perquisites (income in kind) valued in the statistics for 1970, at $69 million for all Saskatchewan farmers including livestock producers. The Saskatchewan example is used because it illustrates most clearly the grain grower's disastrous income position, which for grain growers will be the same in the other Prairie provinces.

As a direct result of world market conditions over which he has no control and little possibility of predicting or anticipating, plus heavily subsidized competition from other exporters, the prairie grain producer has undergone, and continues to undergo, this vicious and disastrous shrinking of his income. We must insist that improved support of the level of farm income among prairie producers, and continuing, major support to prairie income from the federal government in face of present and prospective world conditions, is a necessity.

It must be recognized that this bill is clearly designed to place definite limits on the federal obligation to support prairie income, even in the face of chronic income inadequacy.

It is also a policy which has as a major objective the protection of the prairie and national economy—the businessman and the farm supplier—from the impact of sharp income fluctuations. It would be a great fallacy to view it as anything else.

Consider that the likely federal financial obligation under this policy (which includes the termination of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act with no replacement of it by an alternative and better national storage reserve stocks policy with federal sharing of costs) is less than has been undertaken by the government through the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act alone in the course of the last 15 years.

Consider that there is no government recognition or undertaking, as we understand its attitudes, to assume direct responsibility for protecting the level of farmer returns through minimum price guarantees, although some element of such a policy could be introduced in the context of the Act on a two to one federal-producer sharing of the cost.

Consider the consistent refusal of the federal government to introduce an adequate two-price system so that farmers could gain from the domestic marketplace some semblance of an adequate price for grains used by Canadians for human consumption. The federal attitude that such a system could in some sense be regarded as a federal subsidy to the farmer is absolutely false and insupportable.

I should like to repeat those words. The federal attitude that such a system could in some sense be regarded as a federal subsidy to the farmer is absolutely false and insupportable. The Federation's statement goes on:

Consider that in the early years of application of this policy, at least, grain receipts are starting at such a low level that there is likely to be little or no stabilization payment to grain producers to supplement their income. Instead, that level will be further reduced by the 2 per cent levy on their gross.

Consider that unless major and more generous efforts are made to extend crop insurance effectively across the Prairie provinces, the termination of P.F.A.A. will add yet another element of loss and uncertainty to the prospects for many producers.

Consider that inflation can, and probably will, unless special provision is made to compensate for it, continue to erode the income position of grain growers, offsetting and more than offsetting any benefits of the stabilization proposal.

The plan as proposed in the bill goes only a small way to meet the federal responsibilities as we defined them to the Canadian Agricultural Congress in our position paper of that time. Commenting on the initial proposals of the Hon. Otto Lang for a prairie grain receipts stabilization plan we stated these responsibilities to be as follows:

1. The national responsibility for government sharing of costs of adequate reserve stocks of grain to meet market needs.

This is one of the major bones of contention. It is necessary for the welfare of our economy as a whole, and especially of the agricultural economy, that adequate stocks of grain should be on hand at all times to meet world market demands. They should be available for quick movement. This supposes the existence of a positive storage plan, and I do not think the farming industry should be called upon to bear the whole cost of such a storage program. I find myself in wholehearted agreement with the position taken by the Federation of Agriculture. The Federation's statement goes on:

2. The national responsibility to protect the farmers' prices when these are especially depressed as a result of competitive subsidization, and world surpluses in relation to commercial demand.

3. The national responsibility to reasonably protect farmers and the business community from excessive fluctuations in receipts from grain.

4. The national responsibility to compensate farmers for the chronically low level of returns to grain growing as a result of rapidly rising productivity in the industry, and world market conditions.

5. The national rseponsibility to return to farmers a fair price for grain used for human consumption in Canada.

These are some of the recommendations the Federation has to make:

1. The "transitional" payment must be made immediately and not be made conditional either upon acceptance of the rest of the bill as it stands or upon its rapid passage.

2. Aside from the "transitional" payment, the bill is not acceptable as it now stands. While supporting the principle of a stabilization policy, the Federation position is that the following minimum modifications to the policy are required to make it acceptable:

● (12:10 p.m.)

(a) Replacement of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act (which we agree in its present form does not best meet the needs of the marketing system) by a new national grain reserves stocks policy, with federal sharing of costs. We propose the federal government share in the costs of carrying necessary reserve stocks of grain by paying carrying charges annually, for the full year, on about 400 million bushels of all grains, at the rate of one-half cent per month for storage and one half of the interest costs involved in carrying the grain.

(b) A change in the calculation of the stabilization payment by adjusting the five-year average upward by the amount of inflation which took place over the period.

Then follow some tables to illustrate the situation. I shall not bother the House with them but they reinforce my argument.

3. We propose that in view of the present very low level of prairie farm income, and the extreme difficulty grain farmers are already having in making ends meet, that in the initial five-year period of operation of the act at least, at which time review is provided for, that the federal-producer contribution ratio to the stabilization fund be three to one and the producer contribution set at 1½ per cent.

4. We propose that the amount of stabilization payments, in their aggregate, which may be made under the legislation, be included in the calculation of the five-year average of grain receipts. By this we mean that any stabilization payment will be included in the five-year average, attributable to the year on account of which the payment is made.

We think it is consistent with the stabilization objective to include stabilization payments in the grain receipts totals in calculating the five-year average. The stabilization payments received by individuals should not and need not be included in the three-year average calculations.

5. PFAA should not be phased out in any area until availability of crop insurance is ensured. We recommend that provision be made for a more adequate sharing of administrative and premium costs by the federal government, under the crop insurance program, and major efforts be made to ensure general introduction. Otherwise the termination of PFAA will create real additional hardship for many individual producers.

These are very modest proposals in relation to the size of the need for improved income protection, which is very great and will continue to be so. The point must be stressed that the stabilization storage/PFAA policy as it now stands in the bill is an unacceptable package. If not improved as we recommend, the initial impact of the act will likely be for a period to in fact reduce the level of income available to the producer, because of the deduction of the levy and the termination of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. Moreover, the protection afforded to the level of farm income will be altogether inadequate over time.

We would also stress very strongly the need for price protection to the producer, through the initial payment system. We recognize that the present bill does provide in effect that shortfalls in initial payments are paid two-thirds by the federal government. We think that maintenance of an adequate level of prices is in principle a direct responsibility of the federal government because of the helplessness of the prairie farmer in the face of severe and subsidized international competition. We are however inclined not to quarrel with the cost-sharing feature of the proposal. Our point is that initial payments should be used as an income supporting mechanism.

Finally, an adequate two-price system must be made a part of the total policy package with respect to income protection for western grain growers. It is just not right that we should be the only, or virtually only, wheat producing nation that accepts world price levels as an adequate guide to prices that should fairly be paid in the marketplace by domestic consumers. It is a shocking fact that in the entire post-war period since the Second World War there has been essentially no increase in grain prices and therefore no increase whatever in the amount the farmers receive from flour and cereal products sold to the consumer. This must be corrected by substantial increases in the price received by the farmer for grain used for domestic human consumption. The impact on the consumer would in any case be very small. The great bulk of the cost of cereal products to the consumer is transportation, processing and distribution.

I have done some personal research, Mr. Speaker, as a result of which I should like to make the following remarks. Firstly, this proposal is not an income but a receipt stabilization plan. The proposal will not affect the deteriorating net income situation of individual producers and the western farm industry generally. The decline in prices of wheat and the inflation in the cost of such production inputs as equipment and land will continue to deflate the incomes derived from cash receipts.

Second, this proposal will not supplement the income of the producer who does not have generally sufficient cash receipts to sustain a reasonable standard of living or for any additional cost of adjustment. The proposal will only maintain his past level of receipts whether that level was reasonable or not. By itself the proposal will not be of any positive assistance to the poor farmer in rationalizing his production or in vacating the industry.

Third, this proposal will not protect the individual producer from changing market realities and thus retard "adjustment", but, in fact, will exaggerate market pressure on the producer. It provides an incentive to the producer to employ market forecasts to best match his production to anticipated market realities and conversely penalizes the producer who does not. Payments to individual producers will be made in relation to their average marketings for the three years ending in the year in which their payment is made. If an individual were able to keep his receipts up, despite a general decline in the industry, his base on which the payment would be made would be higher and his payment correspondingly greater. Conversely, the producer who was negligent about market trends and made a bad guess—and guessing might accurately describe accepting government forecasts—or who was a marginal producer who could not finance an efficient response to market conditions, would receive a correspondingly smaller payment. Again, Mr. Speaker, this is one of the serious inadequacies of the legislation as it presently stands.

Four, the plan is really aimed at stabilizing the cash receipts of the yet undefined viable-sized farm unit. Excess cash receipts will not be stabilized and inadequate cash receipts will not be supplemented. Clearly, the government is interested in protecting an optimum unit of some sort as the cornerstone of the grains industry.

Fine, for normal times it appears the government leans toward the principle that this receipt stabilization plan should be self-financed by producers. Producers' contributions will be paid as a regular deduction from receipts from sales, while government contributions will be made as grants whenever the payments to producers exceed the accumulated producer contributions. Government grants will not be repayable from future producer contributions.

Six, since we have not received a schedule of payments or contributions for an individual producer, it is not possible now to be certain of their incidence. However, the plan appears to be based on neutral insurance principles. There is no principle in the plan that suggests either a progressive or regressive intention regarding the burden of contributions or the effect of benefits to the individual producer. Again, receipt stabilization is its focus, not income maintenance or income supplementation.

Seven, this proposal will not inject "more than $100 million" into the grain industry for 1970-71. The government will save almost that amount by terminating the storage payments for wheat under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. For the 1969-70 crop year that plan cost the federal government $66.3 million and likely would have cost more for 1970-71. As with the Lift program, the real contribution will be far less than the initial suggestion. On looking closely at the bill, it appears there are one or two technical deficiencies. For that reason I intend to conclude my remarks by moving an amendment. To clarify the objective and reason for the amendment, I should like to make the following remarks. Because of the inconsistencies in the principles of this bill, I propose to move an amendment to the motion before the House.

• (12:20 p.m.)

You will have noted, Mr. Speaker, that this bill proposes an expenditure of public funds and is therefore based upon the recommendation of His Excellency that public funds be appropriated to particular purposes set out in the recommendation. The provisions of the bill must carry out the purposes of the recommendation.

The Governor General's recommendation is printed opposite page 1 of the bill. One of the purposes set out in that recommendation commences on the fifth line from the bottom and reads:

—to provide that all moneys remaining in the Prairie Farm Emergency Fund be credited to the Prairie Grain Stabilization Account.

That statement is clear and unequivocal. That, however, is not the way this purpose appears in the bill. Clause 34 purports to amend the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. On page 21, subclause 3 of clause 34 provides that a new section is added to the Prairie Farm Assistance Act to provide that:

All moneys remaining in the Prairie Farm Emergency Fund immediately prior to the repeal of this act shall be credited to the Prairie Grain Stabilization Account established by the Prairie Grain Stabilization Act.

The words "immediately prior to the repeal of this act" are qualified by subclause 4 of clause 34 which provides:

The said act is repealed effective on such day after December 30, 1973, as may be fixed by proclamation.

In other words, there is no provision in this bill which carries out the recommendations of His Excellency that all moneys remaining in the Prairie Farm Emergency Fund be credited to the Prairie Grain Stabilization Account. On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, there is a definite prohibition in subclause 4 against making such a transfer of funds before December 30, 1973. After that date, there is a discretion in the Governor in Council to repeal the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. He may or may not repeal it. The Fish Inspection Act was on the statute books for the best part of 20 years before it was proclaimed. Part II of the Narcotic Control Act, which was enacted by Parliament in 1960-61, has yet to be proclaimed by the Governor in Council.

An authority given by Parliament to the Governor in Council to proclaim the coming into force of a bill is a grant of discretionary power. The grant of power is discretionary in two aspects. The Governor in Council has a discretion as to whether he will exercise the power at all and, if he decides to exercise it, he has a discretion as to when he will do so. The restriction on his discretion in this bill is not upon the discretion to exercise or not exercise the power; it merely provides that if the Governor in Council does exercise the power he shall not do so before December 30, 1973.

The Governor General, by his message to this House, has recommended that the funds in the Prairie Farm Emergency Fund be credited to the Prairie Grain Stabilization Account. The government asks this House to pass a bill that does not give effect, indeed, may never give effect, to that recommendation. The official opposition must oppose a principle that where His Excellency recommends the use of public funds to a particular purpose that recommendation is carried out by delegating to the Governor in Council a power to implement that recommendation if and when the Governor in Council so pleases.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Cadieu):

That all the words after "That" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

Bill C-224 be not now read a second time but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture to consider the principle expressed in the message and recommendation of His Excellency that the measure "provide that all moneys remaining in the Prairie Farm Emergency Fund be credited to the Prairie Grain Stabilization Account" and the opposed principle expressed in clause 34 of the bill, lines 13 to 23 on page 21, that such moneys be so credited on such day after December 30, 1973 as may be fixed by proclamation.

Mr. Speaker: I have listened to the hon. member's presentation and argument in favour of the proposed amendment. I am prepared to make a ruling as to whether the amendment is procedurally correct. I have some strong reservations about the form in which the amendment is proposed. The hon. member, as well as other hon. members in the House, admit that this is a novel form of amendment. I am open to suggestions from hon. members on either side of the House who might wish to enlighten the Chair. I will listen to them with pleasure.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, my comments will be very brief. I recognize the difficulty under which Your Honour labours. I know that we are groping toward working out a type of jurisprudence in the House based on certain changes in Standing Orders, adapted as far as possible to precedent and practice of the past. We have had this trouble for a long time, ever since the new Standing Orders became effective.

The government, in its recommendation from His Excellency, has seen fit to insert, as coming from the Governor General, certain particularized and detailed recommendations. Then, as I see it, all too often there is no attempt to bring about any conformity between the recommendations and the bill itself. The opposition is in a very difficult position because we cannot interfere with the recommendation. Time after time these details in the specific recommendations being brought down and attached to bills consistently contain variation. We are faced with the kind of problem confronting the hon. member who has moved this amendment. I have recognized this problem in the past when trying to convince Your Honour of this.

If Your Honour should rule against the amendment, and I hope you will not, I urge you to include in your remarks at least some obiter dicta to the effect that there should be a responsibility on the government to bring in a recommendation in simple form. I have urged this before. I would state simply that His Excellency recommends to the House a bill dealing with certain general matters. That would cover it. We would then have the bill as an extension of the recommendation. The government attempts to limit certain specific items in a recommendation, but time after time there is no conformity between that and the bill.

The members of the opposition, in attempting to see that the Standing Orders are complied with and that the rules of financial responsibility are lived up to, are faced with this sort of difficulty. I simply limit my remarks to suggesting that Your Honour look upon the responsibility of the government to see that this situation does not arise. I have urged that as strongly as I can, because this is the sort of situation which prompted the hon. member to move this amendment.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member for the opinion he has expressed and the advice which he has given the Chair. As he and other hon. members of the House know, we have had the same argument on a number of occasions since the rules have been changed. The problem to which the hon. member refers is a very real one. I am not sure that it has been compounded to any extent by changes in the rules.

The general procedure, as it affects amendments, has not changed that much. The rules, precedents and practices of the House as they apply to the form of amendments have remained substantially the same over the years, even after the rules were changed. In my view what the hon. member is attempting to do is amend a part of an act, and I would think in this way he anticipates a later stage in the proceedings on a bill. It may well be, that this kind of amendment or the idea behind it might be achieved by an amendment at the committee stage or at the report stage, but I do not think it can be done at this stage of our proceedings. Such an amendment could be either that the bill be not now read but that it be read six months hence, which would be an acceptable or reasoned amendment, or it could be an amendment which would object to the principle of the bill. However, this amendment is neither; it is a combination of the two. The hon. member does not object to the principle of the bill but objects to the principle in clause 34.

If we allowed amendments on second reading based on this premise, we would become involved in considerable difficulty because I would think it would be difficult to imagine a bill of 20, 30 or 40 clauses which would not contain a number of specific clauses with which hon. members would want to take exception. The amendment they would wish to propose would be a reasoned amendment in respect of one specific clause. I suggest to hon. members that in this way the amendment would not be in order.

The hon. member has suggested, that in the form of an obiter dictum, the Chair suggest to the government that we should look a little more closely at the form of the recommendation. I have done that before. The hon. member knows I have on a number of occasions expressed an opinion about the form of the Royal recommendation. As a result—and this is strictly obiter dictum—I do feel that perhaps what should be done is that there should be a very general recommendation, say, to the effect that His Excellency has looked at this measure and this is the measure he recommends. Then, in my view, this offers many difficulties. This is the argument suggested by the hon. member for Peace River, but I have heard other hon. members, even on his side of the House, argue just the opposite. They say that His Excellency should have a recommendation which is very detailed and that we should not go beyond what is specifically recommended to us by His Excellency. There are obviously two sides to the question. My sympathy, however, is with a simple recommendation to the effect that His Excellency the Governor General has looked at a measure and, in so far as its financial provisions are concerned, this is what he recommends to this House. Any amendment which would go beyond the terms of the bill itself, or try to impose an additional charge on the treasury, would then be out of order but anything which would be within the recommendation of His Excellency would be acceptable from a procedural standpoint.

I therefore confirm that I am in sympathy with the hon. member for Peace River in his approach to the problem. I have expressed that view before to hon. members. I am not sure whether it has been expressed to the hon. member in his capacity as House leader for Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. I will do this in due course, and perhaps he might use his influence a bit in that capacity to see that this new procedure is adopted by His Excellency. Perhaps the hon. member in his very important capacity might be able to influence His Excellency, a former Speaker of the House of Commons, to change the form of his recommendation to the House of Commons. I am not sure whether I gave a conclusion in these rambling remarks, but the conclusion the hon. member will have suspected at least is that the amendment cannot be put.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, while I am not a member of the Agriculture Committee, I do represent a constituency that is basically an agricultural producing area. I am compelled to participate in the debate at this time on the grain stabilization plan because of the tremendous concern that many people in the farming community have relating to this particular bill and the over-all program of grain price stabilization. I believe it is well that we remind ourselves of the fact that Canada is an agricultural nation. I believe it is fair to say that one hundred years ago, basically, agriculture was the most important industry in this country. Three-quarters of our people at that time were involved in agricultural production or distribution. This picture has changed in the intervening years. Today, basically Canada is urban. While it is true that now the greatest part of our population do not live in agricultural areas, agriculture is still vitally important. In fact, I think the production of food is still the basic industry of Canada.

My fear, so far as some of the measures the present government is introducing relating to agriculture, is that this very important industry might be damaged to such an extent that the whole wellbeing of the nation might be affected. Certainly, it is not just the livelihood of those engaged in agriculture with which I am concerned. I am also concerned with the more than 21½ million people who are the consumers of food. Recent statistics tell us that Canadian consumers spend over $8 billion a year on food alone. This amounts to something like $400 per person or about 21 per cent of all personal expenditures which can be designated for goods and services. Perhaps, in this age of urbanization, in this age of convenience food, the close relationship between agriculture and food is easily forgotten. It has been said that Canada has the most efficient agricultural industry of any country in the world. I believe this is true. Therefore, while we must remind ourselves of the importance of the agricultural industry and the production of food, it is also very important to understand that there is a limit to the level of efficiency the agricultural industry can reach.

We are dealing now in this bill particularly with the production of grain. But, in order to have an idea of the handicap which the producers of grain in Canada have, we might compare the income received for, shall we say, a bushel of wheat in the United States where there is a heavy federal subsidy and the income the Canadian farmer receives for a bushel of wheat. In the United States at the present time the combined domestic and export price under their modification of a two-price system gives the United States farmer $2.83 a bushel. Yet in the year 1969, we find that the Canadian farmer received $1.50 a bushel for wheat that is exported and $1.95½ a bushel for wheat consumed on the Canadian domestic market. We are still expected to compete, in respect to the standard of living with a nation like the United States where the farmers receive nearly double the amount our farmers receive for the same bushel of wheat. This illustrates the problem the average farmer faces today in respect of the production of grain.

• (12:40 p.m.)

More than that, I believe the grain farmer—we will limit our remarks to the grain farmer at this particular time—has had to face a price-income problem which has not been faced by any other industry in this country. Certainly, no other segment of industry, whether producing manufactured food, implements used in agriculture or goods used either personally or in the area of clothing and shelter, would produce at below cost. You cannot do that if you expect to survive. Yet we are aware today that the income of Canadian grain producers as well as the income of agricultural producers in general has gone down each year for the past eight years, although the cost of living has gone up. It is tragic that the farmer is not able to do anything about this. The manufacturer of clothes will not sell his clothes for less than the cost of production; neither will the manufacturer of a tractor sell that tractor for less than it cost to produce. He will try to recover its cost of production and distribution and make sure that he has something left over, or else cease operation. That is not true of the farmer in these circumstances. He cannot do that.

In its recent submission to the government, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture said that while statistics do not separate grain and livestock production on a net income basis, there is little doubt that grain growers are operating on a net loss basis, or close to it, in western Canada. The net realized income, for example, for Saskatchewan agriculture was $200 million in 1970. In the years 1963 to 1967, the annual income averaged $435 million. If income in kind is deducted from these figures, the change was from $368 million to $131 million, or a decrease of $237 million. To be exact, the farmer's income has gone down by 65 per cent. That illustrates the magnitude of the problem the farmer faces. He cannot control it and can do little about it.

I want to be fair to the government and to the minister responsible in this area. I hope that the government's motivation in bringing forward this grain stabilization bill is to help farmers overcome their problems. I hope that its function will be to bring some degree of financial equity to the farmer. Having said that, may I now say that I do not understand how the provisions of this bill will do that. Some farmers in my constituency, in particular, are particularly concerned about certain provisions of the bill.

The government states that this program is designed to establish policy with an initial, interim payment of $100 million to western farmers for the current crop year. That is its short term objective. It is also basically designed to hold cash farm grain receipts at a predetermined level. That is my understanding of the program, Mr. Speaker. The program is to be based on a two to one ratio, the government contributing 4 per cent of total receipts for each year and the farmers contributing two per cent of their totals, up to an average cash receipt of $15,000. This will mean that the maximum that any one farmer will end up paying in any year is $300 to the stabilization fund. The plan would pay to grain farmers who hold Canadian Wheat Board permit books, in a year for which the payment would be made, an amount equal to the difference between the total eligible farm cash receipts for the crop year and the average of such receipts for the preceding five years. The total payable would be divided among the eligible permit holders on a proportion of each individual's average eligible cash receipts for the preceding three years.

This sounds all very well, Mr. Speaker, but I want to emphasize something that previous speakers have referred to. It is of great concern to me. The government contends that it is giving $100 million to the farmers. That is not the case. The $100 million which, in the short range aspect of the program, will be provided to the grain farmers and to the agricultural industry is not for the most part new money. Rather it has been obtained by the elimination of two other programs which over the years have put considerable money into the agricultural and grain industry. I am, of course, referring to the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act and to the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. Although $100 million is to be paid out by the government this year, the cost to the federal treasury will be considerably less than that. I think it is necessary to make that fact clear, and I propose to do so. For example, let us look at the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. We know that the Prairie Farm Assistance Act program, in the 30 years it has been in existence, has collected over $207 million and paid out to the farmer over $383.5 million. In 1969, the last year for which there are records, a total of $5,281,000 was paid out. I understand that the PFAA assistance program will be replaced by the grains stabilization program, when it takes effect.

The second program to be eliminated when this legislation is implemented will be the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act program. That will be entirely lost to the farmers. At present that program covers, basically, the cost of storage. In the years 1968-69, of the $101 million paid for storage, $22.3 million was charged to the producer and $79.7 million to the Treasury. This program will be eliminated altogether, and in that regard real difficulties will be created for the farmer, because in future the farmer will have to pay the whole shot for storage.

The government is planning basic changes with regard to general transportation and storage matters, the net result being that farmers will incur greater costs for transportation with the establishment of regional terminals across the wheat producing area. The program will not only mean that the farmer will pay increased costs for storing grain; he will also pay increased costs for transporting grain. Whereas in the past he may have had to haul grain five, 10 or 15 miles, he will, after this storage program has been introduced, need to haul his grain 20 miles, 30 miles, 50 miles or even farther. That will create greater difficulties and greater expense for the farmer than he experienced in the past. Thus, I am greatly concerned about that aspect of Bill C-244.

In looking at and considering the over-all problem that is before us, we must consider it against the reality of the depressed income position of prairie grain farmers. There is a need for adequate income protection for farmers as well as the stabilization, in the longer term, of their receipts. This bill stabilize their incomes at a minimal level which, at today's prices, I submit is below the cost of production. Farmers must be induced to produce food, at a locked-in price level and I submit that farm incomes ought to be stabilized at a higher level and not at starvation or minimum levels. That, to my way of thinking, shows another fault in this program, and I am concerned about it. If we were talking about an ordinary industry, let us say, of the sort that produces farm implements, clothing or shoes, the matter would be altogether different. You might argue that you do not need new tractors or new implements this year. But food must be produced. While we can take satisfaction in the fact that Canadian farmers can produce more food for more per capita than probably any other farmers in the world, the fact remains that food production is something that we must maintain not only for our own needs but also for world needs.

In recent years there has been a great deal of talk about what we should be doing with our surpluses. Mr. Speaker, we have an obligation to our own people, but it seems to me that in an ever-shrinking world we have an obligation that goes much further than that. It is not just a case of exporting know-how but of building up reserves that inevitably will be needed by hungry people, whether they live in Canada or elsewhere. It is my concern that we are looking at this from the view of the short-term approach.

We can go back to scripture, to a man who became a great agricultural expert in his day even though he himself was not a farmer. This was Joseph, who worked as prime minister for the Pharaohs of Egypt, who was wise enough to accumulate a great storage of grain in the good years in order that there might be sufficient food during the bad years. That story from biblical times in the Middle East is not too different from the pattern of things as they happened in the generations since then. In this regard, I have to agree with the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and its statement with respect to the vitally necessary payments to be made to prairie producers, special transitional payments of $100 million. These are very important, but basically the long-term stabilization and storage policies contained in the bill are of questionable value and must be considered from the long-range rather than the short-range aspect.

I would like to say just a word in regard to world market conditions. The farmer himself has little ability to control, and little possibility of even predicting or anticipating what the world market situation will be. But what the Canadian farmer does face, as I mentioned earlier, is a competitive situation from a very heavily subsidized agricultural program in other food producing areas of the world, which places him at a very serious handicap.

I am not advocating that we should follow the American pattern, which is one of heavy subsidization by the federal treasury through various agricultural programs. But while saying that, and being convinced it is true, this does not mean that we can eliminate the responsibility we have toward the agricultural industry in Canada. The fact remains that the farmer himself cannot survive unassisted in the face of the subsidized competition that he meets from other countries. Therefore, while I agree with the principle of the bill, I think its provisions leave something to be desired.

Certainly the vicious and disastrous shrinking of income faced by the western grain producer is something that cannot continue. Again I refer to a comment made by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture:

> We must insist that improved support of the level of farm income among prairie producers, and continuing, major support to prairie income from the federal government in face of present and prospective world conditions, is a necessity.

In this regard, Bill C-224 is designed to place definite limits on the federal obligation to support prairie income, even in the face of great chronic income inadequacy. Therefore, while agreeing with the principle, it seems to me the philosophy behind the bill is wrong if we desire to have a viable agricultural industry and to continue the production of food.

So, Mr. Speaker, I bring these points to the attention of the minister responsible, and to those of us who are vitally interested in agriculture, because it is in these areas that I see the basic problem of food production so far as agriculture is concerned.

Now, I wish to say just a word in closing with reference to the situation so far as farming units are concerned. Whether it be from the short-term approach in this $100 million interim subsidy program or whether it be on the basis of the long-term program, I believe that the answer to our agricultural and food needs in Canada does not lie just in building industrial farms. I think there are many examples throughout the world today which prove that industrial farming, or big corporate farming, is not the answer to a viable agricultural industry.

There has been a great deal said, and I am concerned about the attitude of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) in this regard, that it is inevitable that the family farm unit will disappear, and the larger economic unit will take over. This is not the answer. If this is the reason the government, particularly the Minister of Agriculture, is moving to centralize authority in the hands of the federal government—and this refers to Bill C-176 as well as this program, the two being inseparable—then I think it is wrong.

There must be an approach whereby the growing of living things can roll with the punches, can meet the various crop conditions and various market conditions in such a way that the farm unit itself is not destroyed. It may be a cliche, and it may be in the minds of some a reactionary approach, to say that just because the farm unit has been the secret of our farming efficiency and our ability to produce food in the past, it does not follow that it must be so in the future. Yet, Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that a real, viable agricultural industry in Canada can only come about when the basic rights of the family farm unit are protected vis-à-vis the industrial or farm approach.

Certainly Russia, with its corporate farming approach of communal farming, has illustrated this fact. It is a most interesting fact that in spite of all modern equipment and efficiency the actual per capita production of grain in Russia was more in the so-called incompetent and corrupt time of the Czars than it is now through communal farming. This is why the Russian agricultural pattern is changing back to individual units, or at least reversing itself in a very definite way, and it is evidence of the fact that the Russians have not found the answer in communal or corporate farming.

My concern, not only with respect to this bill but with respect to Bill C-176, with respect to the various utterances of the minister responsible for the marketing of grain and of the Minister of Agriculture himself, is that this whole philosophy of building up federal control is a wrong approach which will cause irreparable harm to our agricultural industry. It is wrong for the federal government to think it knows the agricultural situation so that it can tell the farmer when he can sow, what he can grow, when he can harvest and what he can market. This is the trend facing the farmer today, and that is why I am so much concerned with regard to the grains stabilization program set out in Bill C-224.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock I do now leave the Chair.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, prior to the commencement of consideration of this bill today this House had already spent two days in debate on it. We are now on the third day of debate and I think, for a number of reasons, it is entirely proper and necessary that the House give some close and careful consideration to the legislation.

The first reason is that the problems facing rural Canada are very closely integrated with some of the fundamental economic problems facing Canada which have been under debate in the past two days, in particular the new unemployment figures. The fact is that there is a malaise in the Canadian economy. We see it demonstrated in the urban sector of the economy with the unemployment figures which are well known to all hon. members. We also see that malaise in the rural sector of our economy and our society. I suggest there is a relationship between those two sectors, and the malaise that exists in each countributes to a further accentuation or intensification of the problems facing each of the major sectors.

The second reason is that rural Canada is in a crisis situation. A process of disintegration is under way that could result in its complete destruction. Parliament has a responsibility to stop that destruction and to take steps to help construct a healthy rural society.

Bill C-244 will have an effect on the future of the Prairies. It is not clear whether the effect will be a healthy one. This bill contains a permanent plan which the government now intends to rush through Parliament, using the transitional payment of $100 million as a carrot and a stick—a mighty big stick. For that reason, I think we need to consider very seriously just where we are going with respect to this legislation. The minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, who introduced this legislation, has insisted that the two aspects of this bill be considered together. In terms of the power available to the government he, of course, has a right to persist in that course. I suggest to him, however, that he is being too clever by half in some of the schemes that he tries to foist on the prairie farmer and on this House. I think it is time he started to think of the interest and the future of the prairie farmer, rather than his own political future when dealing with these problems.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (2:10 p.m.)

Mr. Burton: The problems are too great and serious to be fooled with in the way the minister has demonstrated in dealing with this legislation. It is reprehensible that the minister chose to issue a press release last Friday concerning the debate that had taken place in the House on a previous piece of legislation. Before making his own speech in the House on this particular bill, he issued a press release accusing the opposition of filibustering the stabilization bill. This illustrates an element of authoritarian outlook on the part of the minister. The minister has the attitude that he, and only he, knows best. This reminds me of those spoiled children who say, if you don't play the game my way I will run home to my mommy and cry. This attitude is possibly exemplified by the other saying, I will go home and take my bat and ball with me. If the minister went back to his law school, many western farmers would be better off.

This plan is a permanent one and has far reaching implications. The minister does a disservice to western agriculture when he tries to blackmail Parliament into approving this bill because of the transitional payments. The $100 million in transitional payments provided in the bill are urgently required. They should be higher. I will deal with this later in my remarks. This is the reason my colleague, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave), moved an amendment earlier this week. The amendment was ruled out of order by Your Honour. I do not propose to take issue with that ruling. I simply want to point out that the motivation behind the amendment was to try to find a way of getting this money into the hands of the farmers quickly, and to allow time for adequate consideration of a permanent piece of legislation.

We have to relate our consideration to what is happening at the present time to the agricultural economy. Farm income in Canada has dropped at a disastrous rate. The income for 1970 was $1,198 million or 23.9 per cent lower than the 1969 figure of $1,595 million. The 1970 income was approximately 30 per cent lower than the 1968 figure of $1,714 million. 1970 net farm income in Saskatchewan was $202.7 million, a drop of almost 50 per cent from the 1969 figure of $402.9 million and a drop of over 55 per cent from the 1968 figure of $462.3 million. The transitional payment of $100 million provided in Bill C-244 only represents one third of the drop in farm net income in the Prairie provinces from 1969 to 1970. In one year, Prairie farm income dropped by $296 million. In Manitoba, it dropped by $39 million; in Saskatchewan, $200 million and in Alberta, $57 million.

The plan before us is based on gross cash receipts. Every farmer knows that these do not count for much. The farmers are handling a great deal more cash today than 10 or 20 years ago and, in some cases, five years ago. What does count is what the farmer has left after he has finished paying his expenses and other costs. The plan before us, based on gross cash receipts, bears no relationship to farm net income. A plan related to farm net income would take account of the rising costs of production. We can expect that these costs will continue to rise. This fact has been demonstrated by some indicators announced this week.

I do not know whether we can expect any firm action by the government to reverse this trend or bring it to a halt. One example I can cite is the lack of action on farm machinery prices as a result of the Barber commission report. This bill goes as far as charging wheat board deficits against the fund. It should be fairly obvious to all hon. members that when the board or the government makes a miscalculation in its initial payments, and this could conceivably happen in an election year, it is the farmer who will pay the shot. In the long run, the farmer will pay for the mistake out of moneys that should be available to him.

What we have in the plan before us is part and parcel of the philosophy of the task force on agriculture. The basic approach of the task force on agriculture was to get the government out of agriculture and out of its commitments, particularly its financial commitments to the agricultural sector of our society. Such an approach and philosophy ignore the realities in the world today. The government is now accepting the philosophy of the task force. On the basis of its actions, one is forced to conclude that the government is writing off agriculture in Canada. We should take note of the consequences of these actions, because what we are witnessing today is the destruction of our rural society. There is no question about the fact that rural society has to change. The rural economy must change and adjust to keep abreast of changing times and conditions.

We are witnessing the destruction of our rural society and economy. What is the government doing about it? It has come up with this plan which means a far lesser commitment to agriculture by the federal government than what it has done to now. I suggest that when the government speaks piously about wanting to do something for rural Canada, action speaks louder than words.

Let us examine what has already happened. The present government abandoned farmers to the mercy of the world grain markets through the process of the International Grains Arrangement and the International Wheat Agreement negotiations. The government is now repealing the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act which meant an average of approximately $40 million per year for the farmers over the past 15 or 16 years.

We should compare the plan presented to Parliament in Bill C-244 with the recommendations of the task force on agriculture. I do not intend to go into this in detail, but it is important to note two fundamental differences in the plan before us in this bill and the plan proposed by the task force on agriculture. The task force on agriculture presented its own ideas and recommendations. I want to make it clear that I do not necessarily hold a brief for the recommendations of the task force on agriculture. However, they pointed out some factors that should have been given greater consideration by the government in making its decisions. I quote from page 119 of the task force report:

> The Task Force believes that the marketing of the grain must be separated from the general income issues of Prairie agriculture if a highly competitive system of grain marketing is to be developed.

This statement has a good deal of validity when dealing with the world marketing situation as it exists today. The plan presented to us by the government fails to adequately separate the marketing component of the situation from the income component, certainly with respect to gross cash receipts.

What are the two factors involved in gross cash receipts? One is the actual physical volume of grain which is marketed. This is where the marketing aspect comes into it. The second is the price received for the grain. These two components make up the total package involved in the definition of gross cash receipts. One is a price factor which is related to income; the other is more directly related to marketing considerations. The minister and the government have failed to adequately separate the marketing factor from the income factor which must be paramount in any plan presented to Parliament.

• (2:20 p.m.)

The second factor that should be noted is the recommendation of the task force that such a plan should be voluntary. The task force on agriculture also recommended that there be a wheat diversion program and that incentives be provided for it. Of course, the minister might say the government base Operation Lift on that recommendation last year. The minister shakes his head in the negative. The task force did recommend a diversion plan but in each case they made it clear that such a plan would be voluntary. When we take into account the limited commitment the government has made in terms of the stabilization bill before us, it is difficult to justify the compulsory feature. I would be prepared to acknowledge that valid argument can be advanced on both sides as to whether or not a stabilization plan should be voluntary or more comprehensive and, therefore, compulsory. The implication of deciding on a comprehensive plan is that there must be a greater commitment by the government in terms of its contribution to the plan. We have before us a plan under which the government's commitment is limited. The prospects are, in fact, that in the long run there will be a further reduction of its commitment to contribute. Under this plan it appears farmers will be asked to contribute about $15 million. The government, on the other hand, will contribute about $30 million.

The prairie farm assistance legislation is being discontinued, a program to which intermittent government contributions were made in various years. The government contribution to the grain industry will diminish after the transitional payment has been made. This will give hon. gentlemen opposite time to get through the next federal election. In my view, the transitional payment ought to be in the order of $250 million. This party has called for transitional and emergency payments at that level. Every major farm organization has called for emergency assistance to prairie farmers of that order. What do we find? A limitation on the extent of assistance the government will give to western farmers.

It must be recognized that not all of the money being provided through the transitional payments is new money. It is proposed to drop the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, and PFAA will be phased out. I should also like to call attention to the situation with regard to Operation Lift, which not long ago the government said would be the salvation of western Canada. First, it was stated with a good deal of publicity that this could mean $140 million to the farmers of western Canada. In fact, only $100 million was voted for the plan, and according to an answer tabled in the House a few days ago, not more than $53.7 millions have been paid out to farmers up to the present time, though there is a small amount yet to be paid out under the forage aspect of the program. The minister expressed himself as being very satisfield with this result. I asked him the other day in the House why he could not add the unspent portion of this money to the amount he is proposing to spend by way of transitional payments. It seems to me this is a reasonable proposition. It would not bring the fund up to the level we would like to see, but in my opinion it is the very least the government should consider doing by way of bringing assistance to western agriculture. Publicity having been given by government spokesmen to both the $100 million and the $140 million, this is another example of hon. gentlemen opposite misleading the people of Canada in connection with the extent of assistance being provided to prairie agriculture. Most of us cannot fail to recognize that the measures the government has brought forward are totally inadequate. There is a need for $250 million, and even this sum will not match the drop in farm income on the Prairies during the past year.

The minister has insisted on including the transitional emergency payments in the same package as the permanent plan to which we ought to give great attention. This is bound to result in a good deal of resentment in western Canada; the people there will not like the idea of this bill being rammed down the throat of Parliament and of western farmers. The government should be prepared, on its own initiative, to accept the proposition which has been put forward by a number of hon. members, that is, to divide the bill and deal with each part in turn. We recognize that certain features may be part of a general policy package. The minister has talked about a policy package from time to time that is broader in scope, yet he has been able to deal with different aspects in different bills. There is no reason why the proposals before us could not be dealt with by way of two bills.

Turning to the stabilization plan as set out in this measure, may I say we approve the principle of stabilization but we do not approve the plan which the government has produced. In my view, it contains four basic defects: First, it has the effect of stabilizing poverty. A plan designed to stabilize cash receipts at current levels assumes that the income level of the past five years is an adequate base. This is obviously not good enough; second, it does not take into account increasing costs of production. A plan to stabilize cash receipts is of little value in the face of sharply rising costs; three, there will be many inequities resulting from the application of an industry-wide formula for stabilization to individual farm situations. This could have the effect of discrediting the plan before it has really begun. A wide variety of crop conditions across the Prairies that varies from year to year will make a shambles out of the plan; four, the plan is designed to limit the government's contribution to the grains industry. It would appear that the government contribution to the stabilization fund will approximate $30 million a year. Offsetting this contribution will be the elimination of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act which has meant an average of $41 million a year to prairie agriculture since its introduction, and the elimination of PFAA which has involved a government contribution in some years.

When new problems arise in future years, the government will have an easy answer ready: "We're helping through the stabilization fund." In addition, a decrease in farm numbers as planned by the government for future years will further reduce the degree of government involvement. The problems of prairie agriculture cannot be solved by the government withdrawing major commitments to the industry. If it does, it is out of touch with the world of reality. What justification is there for such a severe limitation on the government's contribution to the prairie grain economy, some $30 million a year, when the government is, on the other hand, contributing millions of dollars a year to help private industry through its regional development program and many other similar programs designed to assist private industry? In addition, multimillion dollar tax concessions to resource industries, which are going to be continued, far overshadow the government's stingy contribution to the prairie grain economy.

There are also other aspects of the bill to which we object. One question I should like to ask is, why the 90 per cent level of stabilization? What rationale or justification is there for this? I think it demonstrates a skinflint attitude on the part of the government. The result will be that when the stabilization plan comes into operation and farmers receive payments, the highest possible level of payment they will be able to receive will be in the order of 98 to 99 per cent of the previous five years' average. At no time will the total gross cash receipts for the year in question, together with the stabilization fund payment, reach the 100 per cent level in terms of the previous five years' average.

I notice that the government is even cutting out whatever margin may exist under one per cent. If there is less than a one per cent difference between the gross cash receipts for the year and the five year average, the payment will be cut out. I suppose there is administrative justification for this, but why could it not have been added on to a future year in order to give the farmers greater benefits than they would otherwise receive from the fund? I should also like to know why the 2 per cent levy. What rationale is there for a 2 per cent levy? Why is the government taking this approach? Can the farmers stand a 2 per cent levy against their gross cash receipts? I suggest that with the information available to hon. members, as well as to the government, it can easily be demonstrated that farmers are operating either at a loss or simply marginally; that that 2 per cent levy will in many cases push farmers into a deficit position for their year's operations. I notice that the task force on agriculture said there should be a 1 per cent levy when presenting its recommendation for this particular form of stabilization plan.

Another objection I have to the bill is that the government is charging off Wheat Board deficits against the stabilization fund. This is an arbitrary action and indicates that the government does not want to spent any more than it has to on assisting the grain industry of western Canada. Past experience has shown that seldom has there been a deficit on Wheat Board accounts. It is true that there was a substantial deficit for the 1968-69 crop year, but this was certainly an exceptional case and was far from the normal course of events.

I think we should ask the question: When is there likely to be a deficit on Wheat Board accounts? There are two basic situations when there may be. One is if somebody makes a mistake, say either the Wheat Board, the government or whoever it is. The second is when there are disastrous market conditions resulting in a sharp drop in price such as that experienced during the past several years and which was largely responsible for the deficit in the 1968-69 crop year. Considering these two basic reasons, when a deficit does occur should the government not be the agency that picks up that deficit? That is the least it can do. I suggest this added feature of the plan is an unnecessary burden on the farmer and makes the plan even more unworkable.

This legislation also provides some opportunity for manipulation. Even though the minister would deny this—and I accept his word as such—I suggest there will be a very grave suspicion in western Canada that this is the case.

In considering the bill we also need to take careful note of the statement issued by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture on May 7. Surely, this statement was a sharp rebuke to the minister. If the minister ignores the representations made in this statement, he will demonstrate a total lack of sensitivity and responsiveness to the situation and problems that we are discussing. A careful look is required at what the Canadian Federation of Agriculture had to say on behalf of Canadian farmers. I should like to quote briefly from their statement, and I shall try not to duplicate those sections quoted a short while ago by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Southam). Among other things, they had this to say:

> Bill C-244, the Prairie Grain Stabilization Act, must be judged and dealt with against the reality of the depressed income position of prairie grain growers and the need for adequate measures of income protection, as well as grain receipts stabilization, not only today but in the longer term.
> The bill itself must be dealt with in two parts:
> 1. The vitally necessary payments to be made to prairie producers as so-called "Special Transitional Payments" in the amount of $100 million. These are urgently required.
> 2. The long term stabilization and storage policies contained in the bill. These require much improvement.
>
> The federation can in no circumstances view these two parts as conditional upon one another in dealing with this Bill. They should not be and need not be, conditional. We cannot accept the assumption, as a ground rule set by the government, that to get the immediate payment the long term policy must be accepted.

They go on to say this:

> It is clearly and unmistakably the federal government's responsibility to ensure that the special payment is made and made soon, while also ensuring that adequate opportunity is given for the consideration, modification and improvement of the long term proposals contained in the bill.

Then, the Federation of Agriculture pointed out the urgent necessity of immediately supplementing the incomes of Prairie farmers, which is clearly evidenced by the disastrous figures on farm income which were recently released by Canada Statistics. The brief continues:

—there is little doubt that grain growers are operating on a net loss basis or close to it in western Canada. The net realized income for example to all of Saskatchewan agriculture was $200 million in 1970. In the years 1963-67 it averaged $435 million. If "income in kind" is deducted from these figures the change was from $368 million to $131 million.

Then, the Federation summed it up in this way:

The Saskatchewan example is used because it illustrates most clearly the grain grower's disastrous income position, which for grain growers will be the same in the other Prairie provinces.

There is a reference, then to the helplessness of the farmer in dealing with some of these problems:

As a direct result of world market conditions over which he has no control and little possibility of predicting or anticipating, plus heavily subsidized competition from other exporters, the prairie grain purchaser has undergone, and continues to undergo, this vicious and disastrous shrinking of his income. We must insist that improved support of the level of farm income among prairie producers, and continuing, major support to prairie income from the federal government in face of present and prospective world conditions, is a necessity.

It must be recognized that this bill is clearly designed to place definite limits on the federal obligation to support prairie income—

I would draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that what they call for here is not just stabilization but additional support for prairie farm income; and certainly this is one part of the picture that we need to consider. The brief continues:

• (2:40 p.m.)

Consider that the likely federal financial obligation under this policy (which includes the termination of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act with no replacement of it by an alternative and better national storage reserve stocks policy with federal sharing of costs) is less than has been undertaken by the government through the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act alone in the course of the last 15 years.

The federation goes on to call for a two-price system and for changes in the formula in respect of grain stabilization. Their basic recommendations are that transitional payments must be made immediately, and not be made conditional either upon acceptance of the rest of the bill as it stands or upon its rapid passage. The second recommendation is that aside from transitional payments the bill is not acceptable as it stands. The federation then states that while it supports the principle of a stabilization policy, there are certain changes which must be made in the bill.

In this bill we are dealing with the principle of emergency payments to prairie farmers. We are also dealing with a permanent stabilization plan which the government proposes to introduce. I think I made it clear in my remarks that we consider the transitional payments or emergency payments to be totally inadequate. The provisions of this bill are not going to rescue the prairie farmers from the morass in which they are at the present time.

I have also made it clear that we regard the stabilization plan as being not good enough. It is, in fact, totally inadequate. It does not do the job envisaged by the government or by the task force and is not a plan acceptable to the western farmers. Thus, we feel that further consideration does need to be given to this matter. Therefore, I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That Bill C-224 be not now read the second time but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this House the said bill should be withdrawn and that the government should consider introducing a new bill that would increase the amount of the proposed special transitional payments to $250 million and that would relate the proposed grain stabilization plan to an adequate level of farm net income which takes into account increasing costs of production.

I recommend this amendment to the House as being one which would, in fact, achieve some positive results for the farmers of western Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members have heard the amendment moved by the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton). The question the Chair has before it is whether it may be accepted from a procedural standpoint. If it is acceptable within the precedents and practices of this House, the Chair would be anxious to make that ruling. I have to express an initial concern and ask hon. members whether they would like to assist the Chair in its consideration of the amendment. My concern relates to the well established practice that a reasoned amendment, which this purports to be, must oppose the principle of the bill. It would seem to me that this does not oppose the principle. The hon. member, in his closing remarks, referred to what he felt were the two principles of the bill. It seems to me this amendment might extend one of them but does not, in fact, oppose either. I would invite the assistance of hon. members on the procedural point.

Mr. Burton: I appreciate the point Your Honour has raised in respect of my proposed amendment. I submit that it is in order because, as you have pointed out, this is a reasoned amendment and does in fact propose an alternative which opposes the principle of the bill as it is now before us. There are two major points I should like to make.

First of all, I would draw Your Honour's attention to the fact that this bill provides for the expenditure or allocation of moneys. The bill does involve the government's responsiblities and the power of government initiative in dealing with money matters. There are very limited ways and means available to the opposition to make its point of view known in respect of moneys it feels should be allocated for whatever plan is finally devised. I am suggesting that, while it is not possible for us to move directly that there be additional moneys spent, in fact what we are proposing here is a resolution expressing the opinion that the government should consider an additional expenditure of money and an additional commitment for the purposes outlined in the bill.

Second, I would submit to Your Honour that in the amendment as I have framed it, there is an alternative which is opposite or in opposition to the principle of the bill as it is now before us. As your Honour has mentioned, there are two basic features of this bill. There is the feature dealing with emergency payments and the feature dealing with the stabilization plan. The emergency or transitional payments portion of this bill provides for the expenditure of $100 million. We have proposed that consideration should be given to increasing that amount to $250 million. I suggest, in fact, there is some difference in principle between suggesting two figures of a totally different scale or magnitude. The bill proposes $100 million and we are suggesting that $100 million will not do what the government thinks it will do. We are proposing a much larger figure which we think will be adequate to achieve the purpose the government has in mind in making transitional payments.

In respect of the stabilization plan, and this is really the key part of my submission, the government in Bill C-244 is not just asking Parliament to approve the principle of stabilization as such. It is not just asking Parliament to approve some guidelines for the expenditure of a certain sum of money. It has laid out very specifically, and in great detail, a particular plan it would like to see in effect. It has spelled out the formula to be used in the application of that plan. This is all spelled out in this legislation. What we are suggesting is that the plan proposed by the government is not adequate. We are suggesting guidelines and the principles which should govern the government in bringing in a new bill which we feel would be more adequate in achieving the objectives hoped for in this piece of legislation.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with only two points in submitting that the amendment is clearly not in order. A reading of the amendment indicates that its basic sympathy is for the kind of bill now before the House, rather than being opposed to the principle of that bill. The suggestion that an additional amount of money is in opposition to the principle ought not to be taken seriously.

The other matter is likewise a matter of detail, and suggests a variation of a proposal in the bill. The amendment is not in opposition to the principle. I refer Your Honour to citation 389 of Beauchesne's in relation to anticipating amendments which could properly be brought before the committee. I recognize the hon. member's problem regarding the amount of money in the recommendation, but suggest that is a problem he has here as well as in the committee.

As far as the other details of the amendment are concerned, they are such that they can be raised in the committee.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Mr. Douglas: Your Honour expressed some concern as to whether the amendment opposes any principle in the legislation. It seems to me that the principle contained in Bill C-244 deals with a stabilization plan which is based on cash income over a period of years and which represents, in the opinion of those of us who support this amendment, really a redistribution of poverty and the setting of prices at levels which are completely inadequate. We are suggesting here a totally different plan. Rather than a stabilization plan, we are suggesting an income support plan which would take into consideration the increased cost of production and which would deal with net farm income rather than gross farm income. It seems to me there is a vital difference in principle. Whether one calls one a stabilization plan and the other a farm income support plan would seem to me to make a great deal of difference in respect of the principle contained in the bill on the one hand and the amendment on the other. For that reason, I believe there is a very different principle in the amendment as compared to the bill itself.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I should like to thank hon. members for their assistance on the procedural point. I am prepared to rule on it. For the benefit of hon. members, and for my own information, I should like to refer to the proposed amendment of the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) which I appreciate is an amendment at the second reading stage. The amendment is as follows:

> That Bill C-244 be not now read the second time but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this House the said bill should be withdrawn and that the government should consider introducing a new bill that would increase the amount of the proposed special transitional payments to $250 million and that would relate the proposed grain stabilization plan to an adequate level of farm net income which takes into account increasing costs of production.

The Chair did express initial concern and asked hon. members to assist it on the procedural point. I thank hon. members who have done so. My initial concern was that the amendment, at first blush in any event, did not seem to oppose the principle of the bill.

Hon. members know that the rulings and authorities in relation to reasoned amendments which may be accepted as procedurally correct by the Chair are well set out in the authorities which guide us in these matters. I might refer to the 17th Edition of Erskine May, at the bottom of page 526 and the top of page 527. I shall quote:

> "Reasoned Amendment."—It is also competent for a Member who desires to place on record any special reasons for not agreeing to the second reading of a bill, to move what is known as a "reasoned amendment." This amendment is to leave out all the words in the main question after the word "that" and to add other words; and the question proposed upon the amendment is, that the words proposed to be left out stand part of the question. A reasoned amendment is placed on the paper in the form of a motion and may fall into one of several categories.
> (1) It may be declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principles, policy or provisions of the bill.

I think that is the relevant part of the citation. There is one other part that might relate to the problem before us. I refer to the second example which is given:

> (2) It may express opinions as to any circumstances connected with the introduction or prosecution of the bill, or otherwise opposed to its progress.

I wish to confirm my initial thought on the matter which I expressed to hon. members. The proposed reasoned amendment does not, in fact, oppose the principle of the bill. The hon. minister has argued this point. As I indicated in my initial remarks, I have to come to this conclusion. The hon. member who moved the amendment and the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) argued the other side of the coin. With respect, however, I feel there is not opposition in principle expressed in this amendment. As I understand it, the principle of the bill relates to the proposition that there should be a transitional payment of an amount of money to the people who will benefit under the bill and that a fund should be established for further stabilization. With respect, I suggest that the amendment does not oppose the principle of the transitional payment.

The amendment asks that the bill be withdrawn and that the government consider the introduction of a new bill to increase the amount of the proposed transitional payment to $250 million. In other words, what is proposed is an increase rather than an objection to that part of the bill. The proposed amendment would provide further that this new legislation would relate the proposed grain stabilization plan to an adequate level of farm net income which takes into account increasing costs of production. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands has argued very forcefully that this is opposed to the principle of the stabilization plan and is another plan. I really cannot agree with him because on the plain wording of the proposed amendment it is requested that the new bill would relate the proposed grain stabilization plan to an adequate level of farm income. It would seem to me there is nothing in the proposed amendment which expresses opposition. It suggests a change in the grain stabilization plan but not opposition to the principle of the plan itself. Therefore, for those reasons, and under the authority I have quoted, I feel I must regretfully say I cannot accept the amendment from a procedural standpoint.

Mr. A. C. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, in taking part in this debate today, may I say I feel this is a very important piece of legislation. I hope the minister will not see fit to run back and cry "wolf" on the Prairies as he did a week ago when we were debating a very important bill in respect of advance payments on grain. I should like to quote from a press release issued by the minister:

> The Honourable Otto Lang today charged the opposition with deliberately working against the interests of prairie farmers by deliberately delaying passage of important new grains legislation.
> "It is simply a filibuster, and for no apparent reason," said Mr. Lang, who is Minister Responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. "If it continues, it could cost the western farmers 100 million dollars this year."

That is a ridiculous statement. Does the minister think that members of the opposition should sit here and let the members of the government railroad through anything they want. I should like to place on the record what would have happened here just a year ago had it not been for the official opposition. Bill C-197 would have been law had it not been for the official opposition. This is the bill which is now known as C-176, in respect of which hundreds of thousands of protests have arrived in Ottawa in the past two weeks.

We can imagine what the situation would have been if that bill had become law overnight, as would have been the case had the official opposition not taken the very active part it did in opposing that legislation. Perhaps last year we were damned for our action, but today people understand what we were doing and why we did it. We objected to that legislation for perfectly good and sound reasons. This is evidenced now by the strong protests which are rolling in from western Canada in respect of this terrible legislation which would have been on the statute books today, covering cattle, hogs and everything else which the farmers certainly do not want, if the opposition had not opposed it.

I also say, Mr. Speaker, as has been said previously, that the minister is not even playing smart politics in suggesting that we must pass legislation like this forthwith. Surely it would have been better if he had come forward with an interim payment for farmers so they might have had the cash which they badly need. The minister could have called for an interim payment and produced this money for farmers, instead of attempting to throttle the opposition with the threat that if they did not permit this legislation to pass no money would be paid out.

People out west are no longer serious about this minister. One year ago he came up with the Lift program. I am sure that all hon. members remember that initially he suggested that $140 million would be paid out under the program. Then he reduced the figure to $100 million, and finally the government paid out $53.7 million. I am still getting letters from poor little farmers who feel they have been gypped because they have not been getting what they are entitled to. So people out west do not think we in the opposition are crying "wolf". The people out there feel that the minister has come up the easy way in life and has never gone through the hardships that some of them went through. They will not be too hasty in climbing down somebody's throat when they think that we are working in their interests.

The farmers of western Canada badly need this money. Recently, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture presented a brief, a copy of which went to most hon. members. That federation is a responsible organization. They said in their brief:

> Bill C-244, the prairie grain stabilization act, must be judged and dealt with against the reality of the depressed income position of prairie grain growers and the need for adequate measures of income protection, as well as grain receipts stabilization, not only today but in the longer term.

That shows what we are up against. If the minister has not read the brief, he should do so, because I think it would do him good and would give him some idea of just how short cash is in the west. The brief reads on page 2:

> While official statistics do not separate out grain and livestock production on a net income basis, there is little doubt that grain growers are operating on a net loss basis or close to it in western Canada. The net realized income, for example, to all of Saskatchewan agriculture was $200 million in 1970.

In the years 1963-67 it averaged $435 million. If "income in kind" is deducted from these figures the change was from $368 million to $131 million.

Those are some of the factors the opposition must consider. Surely the minister has some responsibility in this area. Instead of trying to force a bill of this magnitude through the House and threatening us with withholding payment to farmers unless it is passed quickly, why did the minister not suggest an interim payment for farmers and for grain growers whose needs are dire and pressing? If there had been an interim payment we would have had time to thrash out this bill in committee and in the House and bring down good, sound legislation.

This program will not operate for just one year; the stabilization plan will operate for a long time and we ought to arrive at good, sound legislation. If the minister had been a smarter politician he would have put a little money into the pockets of farmers and Ross Thatcher could have called the election that he is holding up for want of cheques. Perhaps the Liberal party could have found a candidate in Assiniboia for the by-election if the government had put money into the pockets of the farmers of western Canada. As it is, Mr. Thatcher is trying to hold off an election. He wants to know what the federal government will pay to the farmer. Mr. Thatcher knows that unless the western farmer has money in his pocket he will be in trouble.

Only yesterday I met a boy from Weyburn. He came up from the riding of the late Ab Douglas. This lad said to me, "Mr. Cadieu, who is representing Mr. Douglas's riding? I know Mr. Douglas is no longer here." I said, "I don't know. The government has only Mr. Lang representing a constituency out here, and he is pretty busy right now. Somehow, I don't think he will be back here after the next election."

An hon. Member: That's wishful thinking.

Mr. Cadieu: I said to the lad, "Possibly I can help you." I took him around and tried to get him the information he was looking for.

I could talk a great deal about this important legislation. Many farm organizations have presented good briefs on the subject. Surely the minister could have utilized the research staff in his office and come forward with a suggestion under which we could get an interim payment into the farmers' pockets. Farmers out west badly need this money. The minister should have done that, instead of fiddle-daddling in this manner. Instead of bringing before this House legislation that he knew would not be acceptable to members of the official opposition or of other opposition parties, he should have done as I have suggested. I think it is high time we quit this fiddle-daddling around.

Let us stop playing hide-and-go-seek with the farmers of western Canada and people in all walks of life. I am sick of seeing this kind of monkey business going on, because the minister seems to be saying, "Either you pass this legislation right away or the farmers of western Canada will not get the money. You are holding up the money which is to be paid to these farmers." It is high time we got away from that approach and got down to business.

Mr. Lang: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cadieu: It is no use suggesting that only in the last month or two farmers have been placed in a straitjacket; they have been in it ever since this government took office.

Mr. D. R. Gundlock (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, may I begin by quoting what somebody has said about the government's prairie grains policy:

—until there is a more definite understanding by producers of the program proposed by the government or until it is implemented and its effectiveness can be assessed, it appears prairie grain producers will continue to express apprehension and concern about these policy changes which ultimately will not only affect the grains industry but everyone in Canada.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I express very strongly the need for price protection for the producer through the initial payment system. On page 8 of the brief of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture we find the following passage:

We recognize that the present bill does provide in effect that shortfalls in initial payments are paid by the federal government. We think that maintenance on an adequate level of prices is in principle a direct responsibility of the federal government because of the helplessness of the prairie farmer in the face of severe and subsidized international competition. We are however inclined not to quarrel with the cost-sharing feature of the proposal. Our point is that initial payments should be used as an income supporting mechanism.

• (3:10 p.m.)

This afternoon we heard about the $100 million. We heard about it a year ago, Mr. Speaker. What was put in the hands of the prairie grain producers? It wasn't $100 million. May I ask the minister what the exact figure was?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member can ask the minister a question, but if the minister replies he will have the floor and—

Mr. Gundlock: I don't think—

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member resume his seat? He wishes to ask the minister a question. If he does, then I say that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Gundlock: Mr. Speaker, we considered a sum of $100 million last year. I want to ask how much found its way to the prairie producers.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows the rules of the House. The hon. member now has the floor. If he asks a question and the minister answers, the minister will close the debate. The hon. member should make his speech, and presumably when the minister replies he will answer the hon. member's question.

Mr. Gundlock: I appreciate your ruling, Mr. Speaker, and I fully realize I should not be doing this—but as a matter of fact I rather enjoy it. When the minister is replying to the debate I hope he will provide us with the exact figures.

I quote from Hansard of February 10, page 3265, as follows:

—we have the highest rate of unemployment in the western world.

We still have the highest rate of unemployment in the western world. In this situation I do not see how the House can accept this bill. How can we, when we are looking forward to a budget and to a new tax bill?

About three weeks ago I was in Three Rivers, where a quarter or half of pork was being sold at 19 cents a pound in the store and beef was selling for 39 cents a pound. How do we relate this $100 million to that? What happened to the $100 million last year? I am a producer, and I did not get any part of it. There was not $100 million then, and this $100 million will not be paid out either.

I hope that when the minister replies he will give us an honest answer, because it is time we had an honest answer in this House. When I raise a pig I may be able to sell it for 29 cents a pound. What does the fellow who raises a pig in Three Rivers get, if pork is being sold at 19 cents a pound in the store? He must be getting about 5 cents a pound. None of the $100 million was spent in Alberta, and none of it in Quebec. I look forward to the minister's reply.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I will not detain the House because I see the minister is anxious to close the debate. Obviously, it will take him at least the time remaining between now and four o'clock, and probably several hours more, to answer the serious charges that have been laid against the government and himself in connection with this legislation. Therefore, I wish to give him every opportunity to answer our questions before the bill goes to committee, as I assume it will.

We do not like the bill. We think it is bad legislation. We think there is a very faint glimmer of light and hope that there is a principle involved in it which, with adequate surgery and changes, might become legislation of some value to the farmers of western Canada. So our inclination is to register our opposition to the bill in its present form and let it go on division, but to make it abundantly clear to the minister and the government that unless they are prepared to accept good amendments in the committee or at the report stage we will feel free to vote against it on third reading.

I want to make this quite plain. In our view, this bill is one of the legislative and administrative proposals advanced by the government which constitutes a form of economic genocide against the small farmers of this country and in particular the small and average farmer of western Canada. There is no doubt, in spite of what the minister said, in spite of what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said, and in spite of what the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) said, that this government has charted a firm and definite course which can only result in depopulation of rural areas, with fiscal and other devices of this kind compelling people to move to the cities. I am not going to debate that issue, but I think the policy is wrong. Our party has taken a constant position against this kind of program. We think it is part of the legislative scheme, part of the device which the government has outlined and which it is in the process of putting through this House in order to achieve its objective.

There is a weakness and lack of pressure in connection with international wheat agreements. This government has a sad and sorry history on this issue. The minister may refer to agreements being made with this country and that country, but we must have sales of grain at an adequate price and under agreements honoured by the countries involved which will have the effect of producing sufficient revenue for the farmers of this country.

The minister was not very helpful when he followed the lead of the Prime Minister in suggesting that there was a filibuster on this bill. As he knows, when the government introduces good legislation we support it. We have not had much occasion to do this. But when the government introduces legislation which is not sound, and this party or my friends to the left feel it is bad, we will oppose it. We will oppose it to the length necessary to acquaint the people of Canada with its weaknesses and defects. This is when the government screams "filibuster" and "obstruction".

Does the government not think that we have a duty as an opposition party or as private members, whether on this side of the House or the other side, to point out the weaknesses and defects in legislative programs? Have we not a responsibility to point them out long enough so that the amber light will be flashed in the country and the people will know that they are approaching a dangerous situation brought about because of bad legislative proposals made by the government?

Let us consider the statement made by the minister when he introduced this bill. He outlined it in a comprehensive manner, dealing with the entire legislative proposal, dealing with the amendments to the Wheat Board Act which are coming in, dealing with the amendments to the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, and so on. The minister says that these are part of the whole program, that put together they are all good. I repeat, and I hope he is listening, that the government is planning a form of economic genocide for the small farmers of this country.

In order to judge the government's conduct today and its proposal for the future we must look at its record in the past. The minister talked about rapeseed and legislation coming in to deal with this question. On the question of stabilization of farm income this is tremendously important, but what is the record of this government and the Liberal party in regard to rapeseed as a means of stabilizing farm income? During the last war the then Liberal government introduced a program to encourage the growing of rapeseed in those parts of Canada suited to it. It was grown as a substitute for a marine lubricant not then obtainable in Canada because of wartime conditions, and the price was fixed at six cents per pound.

A great many farmers, including many in my area of Peace River, grew rapeseed as a means of stabilizing their income. But what happened when the war ended? The materials for which rapeseed was a substitute were brought in. Mr. Ross, a former member of the Liberal party, and some of the farming community attempted to establish rapeseed as an additional crop in western Canada. Mr. Ross sought from the Liberal government of the day an agreement that rapeseed would be brought under the Railway Act at the Crowsnest Pass rates in order to encourage people to grow it. An attempt was made at that time to persuade the Department of Agriculture to develop other uses for this crop for the sake of farmers in western Canada, but the Liberal government of the day rejected these proposals out of hand.

After the 1958 election, with a number of hon. members from this House, including Mr. Rapp who was at one time whip of this party, I attempted to persuade the government and the then Minister of Agriculture, now the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Harkness), that there was a future for rapeseed in western Canada. We felt that it would have an effect in establishing farm income, which is the objective of the legislation we are now considering. We took the initiative, and with the encouragement of the government appeared before the then Board of Railway Commissioners as witnesses. Eleven or twelve Members of Parliament from western Canada fought this case before the board in an attempt to secure a judgment that rapeseed was a grain within the meaning of the Railway Act. The few Liberal members from western Canada who were around at that time made no attempt to join us in this project. We lost the case but we did excite the interest of a great many people.

With the further encouragement of the government, the hon. member for Calgary Centre, then Minister of Agriculture, and the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees), then Minister of Transport, the Railway Act was amended and rapeseed was declared to be a grain. The Department of Agriculture then launched a program which has since led to greater and more effective use of rapeseed as an alternative and additional source of revenue to stabilize farm income in western Canada. The Liberal party, then the official opposition, did nothing to assist in this program. I point that out, Mr. Speaker, as an illustration of the fact that as far as the Liberal party is concerned western Canada can expect very little in the way of intelligent assistance.

• (3:30 p.m.)

An hon. Member: That is not right.

Mr. Baldwin: The refuge of weak minds is to say "That is not right." The hon. member does not know what he is talking about. If he did, I would engage him in debate. I simply leave it at that.

The minister is attempting to say to the opposition that when the government brings in legislation dealing with agriculture, because the Liberal party brought it in it must be good and we should accept it. During the period 1959-61 agriculture in western Canada was faced with a crisis. The then Prime Minister, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), and the members from western Canada formulated a proposal for acreage payments. We did not need to have legislation as a means of bribing the farmers, as is the case here. The minister shakes his head. Political bribery is the middle name of the Liberal party; they are experts at it. I do not approve of the procedural practice that was followed at that time, but in that case it was essential. An item was inserted in the estimates and the acreage payments were made quickly and simply. Subsequently, other sound, useful agriculture legislation was introduced. I suggest a little humility and learning to the minister. He should study history. If he examines what the Conservative party did when in power with regard to farmers in eastern and western Canada and with regard to agriculture, there may still be some hope of his becoming a good minister.

My colleagues dealt extensively with the defects of this legislation. I hope the minister will deal with some of the objections which have been voiced. In spite of what has been said, I hope that he will show that he has the kind of flexible mind which is necessary in connection with legislative proposals and that he will entertain amendments.

Instead of a program of farm stabilization which, as stated by my colleagues, stabilizes poverty in western Canada, we need a program which will improve the position of the agricultural community in the west in order to persuade the farmers to stay on the farms as useful and active members of our society. I hope the minister will be prepared to examine amendments which are offered and will not turn his head against them. I ask him to be reasonable in his approach. If that happens, there is a possibility that this bill, bad as it is, may be improved to an extent that will make it acceptable to this party.

If that is not the case, Mr. Speaker, I must tell the minister that there will be very strong opposition. There will be amendments to again indicate in a formal way what our objections are and what can be done to improve the legislation. I call the minister's attention to hon. members' proposals. I have talked about rapeseed. Surely there is a case to be made for a means of stabilizing farm income by providing facilities for processing rapeseed in various places in western Canada.

As has been suggested by my colleagues and members of the New Democratic Party, there is a case to be made for the immediate payment of the $100 million which has been referred to and which the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Cadieu) suggested may be the stumbling-block before the Premier of Saskatchewan calls an election. If he wants an election, that is fine. If he wants $100 million for that purpose, that has nothing to do with me. I am interested in seeing that the best things that can be done for the western farmers and the farm communities are done.

In closing this debate I hope the minister will engage in the same way as members of this party did in putting forward their case. I hope he will indicate his willingness to accept amendments so that when the legislation comes back at the report stage we will have a better bill that will do something for the people of the west.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the minister speaks now, he will close the debate.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I wish to express to hon. members of this House my appreciation for the expeditious way in which they have allowed this very important legislation to be dealt with on second reading and to go to committee. I have been very disturbed by the tactics of some hon. members in connection with the legislation previously before the House. I was concerned that was some indication that they would hold up legislation without regard to the good of the farmers in western Canada. However, I thank them for now allowing this bill to go forward. The indication from the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) that we might expect the same kind of co-operation in committee leads me to hope that we may soon see this measure move forward into law for the great good of prairie agriculture and Canadian farmers generally.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: In the course of my opening remarks I said, and I repeat, how firmly this government holds to the view that it is very important to assist farmers in every way possible who intend to remain in farming and who want to be sound farmers by giving them an opportunity which allows them to give their children a decent livelihood. This government wants to help these farmers in every way. I continue to urge all members opposite to recognize this firm view of the government and not to add to the troubles of farmers who are in difficult enough circumstances by indicating to them some broad and malicious intent abroad directed against them.

A great deal has been said by certain farm leaders and people in politics which is most regrettable. It is along the lines which only causes fear to farmers who want to make a success of farming. It is our intention to help them in every way possible by putting the system into the best possible state.

Much has been said about the nature of the stabilization plan before us. These expressions seem to slur the scheme as stabilizing income at low levels. As I pointed out in my opening remarks, this scheme assures that income will not fall below certain levels. It in no way puts any hindrance or dampening upon the prospects which we see ahead with regard to rapeseed, to which the hon. member referred, and the other basic crops on the Prairies and the prospect of ever-increasing sales and an ever-growing share of international markets for Canadian grain.

We see a rising income prospect through aggressive competition in the world markets today with regard to wheat and coarse grains. With regard to coarse grains, the name of the grain may be barley today and another day it may be something quite different as experimentation and development make for better grains, better feed per acre and a better total income for the prairie farmer.

This plan assures us against drastic downturns in income which have so terribly afflicted the prairie farmers each time market conditions, climate conditions and our probable buyers and competitors cause a serious downturn in world trade. The farmer is cushioned against that by an assurance of being brought up by a payment out of the stabilization fund to the average of the previous five years. I will certainly be glad to talk to the farmers about whether that five-year period is the right one or not. This is not an outrageously low point from which to start, though some have suggested it is.

When we begin the first year, the five-year average will be based on what will be our best and our second best grain receipt years on record and on what probably are, in the case of the other three, our seventh, tenth and eleventh best years. So we are not near the bottom point. We expect that rapeseed sales, as well as sales of barley, will increase. The plan does provide in principle that over a period of time a farmer's receipts from grain will be 104 per cent of what they would have been but for the plan.

A good deal has been said about the fact that 2 per cent of a farmer's gross income is a very significant amount, much higher than 2 per cent of his net income would be. But I would point out that the government has a commitment to double that amount by paying into the scheme 4 per cent of the gross. If 2 per cent of gross income is a significant proportion of a farmer's income, surely 4 per cent as the amount added to farm income represents a contribution of even greater significance. We should bear this in mind as we consider the legislation in detail.

I should also emphasize that the government's approach to prairie grain involves a specific and definite commitment to prairie farmers. Reference has been made to the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, to the fact that under it significant sums were paid to prairie producers. But it was leading to an improper use of the handling system and this was costing the farmers money. Twice as much barley was delivered and went through the system at the same cost as half as much in previous years.

The same was true of wheat. The act was producing an amount of wheat in storage at a cost to farmers which was excessive. With the new need for the system to handle barley and rapeseed there was no way in which we could keep the former amount of wheat on hand and continuation of the act would have meant little to the farmer anyway. We have replaced it with a scheme which will put into the hands of farmers 4 per cent of their gross income, representing a sum in the order of $40 million in the immediate future and a rising figure thereafter.

I should like to refer to other things the government has done in increasing its commitment to western agriculture. I could refer to all the items in this area, which total about $300 million. Compare that with farmers' net income and appreciate that their net income, almost in total in the Prairie region, results directly from action taken by this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: Reference has been made to approximately $60 million which has been paid out under the Lift program. An hon. member noted that this was not as much as farmers could have obtained if they had taken greater advantage of the scheme. We knew the Lift program was a difficult plan and that it made unusual demands upon farmers, but we were also aware that it was a means of placing additional cash income into their hands. We hoped this would amount to about $100 million, though in fact the amount disbursed was in the neighbourhood of $60 million. I would remind hon. members that $40 million has now been set aisde in connection with a forage incentive program. Opposition speakers ignored this completely when considering the commitment of the government to agriculture.

I should also remind the House of the $10 million per year set aside for market development, confirming our view that market development is the key to future solution of most of the problems of prairie agriculture. We do not know at this time the circumstances in which farmers may find themselves in years ahead. We shall always have to watch the situation carefully and we cannot rest on the assumption that any particular plan or set of plans is in itself adequate.

I have pledged that we will continue to watch the income situation. We must first of all promote sales in every possible way and then judge to what extent the pursuit of sales may have helped farmers to better their position. On the sales front, this year exports of grain have totalled 442.2 million bushels, 60 per cent higher than the 280.8 million bushels at the same time a year ago. Wheat exports are 29 per cent up, sales of barley are at record levels and exports of rapeseed have doubled. New records have been set in each case. This is not just a matter of comparing one year with the previous year; there is every prospect that this year exports of grain will reach an all-time record level.

We do not know at this stage how prairie farmers will stand as to income if for some years we can maintain or expand this kind of selling picture and allow producers to be as effective as they know how to be, but were not able to be as long as grain was not moving.

I was particularly perturbed by the misleading statement made in this House at the beginning of the debate by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), who I regret is not in the chamber now. Referring to a Wheat Board report, he indicated that many of our customers were in default on their commitments to buy grain from us. So serious is this kind of misstatement—many similar misstatements have been made in the course of this debate—that the Wheat Board found it necessary to put out a correction, drawing attention to the fact that, as was made clear in the report, only one of our customers was in default and that the others were taking grain in accordance with the agreements signed. The board was most concerned lest misleading statements of this kind might damage our position in the eyes of buyers and potential buyers. Such a statement should surely not be made before the facts have been determined.

Proposals have been made to the effect that net income should be taken as the basis for determining contributions to the stabilization fund. The difficulty here lies in finding a formula which would determine net income fairly and determine it with all the variations which exist from farm to farm, from district to district, from individual to individual. It is impossible to determine net income in a way which would not penalize the good farmer as compared with the average farmer. The truth is that the gross receipts basis in one which allows the individual farmer who can do better in terms of his farming operations to do better, as well, in terms of the marketing operation and the stabilization fund.

This is a principle which will, I think, commend itself to the free enterprisers on the Prairies, the farmers who are in fact maintaining, at some income cost, their ability to stand on their own feet and be their own masters. I look forward to this important measure finding speedy passage through the committee as it has through the House of Commons, so that we may take this significant step as part of our total package of proposals to help the interest of the prairie grain farmer.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Baldwin: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, if we might call it four o'clock, there has been agreement that in private members' hour today we will proceed with Bill C-47, which stands in the name of the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg). If the House agrees, we could call it four o'clock and commence private members' business.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, we would be willing to call it four o'clock. I am sure that the minister who will be opening the debate on the next bill is exhausted after his efforts to muster argument to support the last bill, so we would be prepared to let it go.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, if agreement is arrived at I take it you will be seeing five o'clock a little before five o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: It is so agreed. Private members' business will extend for one hour from this moment.

It being four o'clock or less, the House will proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, notices of motions, private bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

RAILWAY ACT

PROVISION FOR REPORTING EQUIPMENT OR ROADBED DAMAGE TO CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION AND MAKING REPORT PUBLIC

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw) moved that Bill C-47, to amend the Railway Act (notice of accidents), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am sure many members of the House wonder what similarity there could possibly be between the debate that has just finished and the bill before the House now, but I am sure they will agree that there is quite a similarity between the grain stabilization bill and this bill. All hon. members realize that whenever there is an accident on the railway, the rail pipeline is blocked. This means that the customers who use the rail pipeline are affected directly. Up to this time, all too often situations have arisen where the railway pipeline does become blocked, yet nobody knows why or just what actually caused the accident. Hence I am moving this bill.

The main provision of the bill requires railway companies as soon as possible, and immediately after the head officers of the company have received information of a collision, derailment, or other accident resulting in death or injury to any person or damage to equipment or roadbed, or whereby any bridge, culvert or viaduct or tunnel on or of the railway has been broken or so damaged as to be impassable or unfit for immediate use, to give notice thereof with full particulars to the Canadian Transport Commission.

Subclause 2 deals with notice by employees and provides:

> The conductor or other employee in charge of the train, place or structure in connection with which such accident occurred, shall as soon as possible after such accident notify the commission of the same by telegraph.

The purpose of this bill is to make it mandatory that all accidents to equipment or roadbed, the damage to which exceeds the amount set in subsection 3, be reported to the Canadian Transport Commission. In the past, accidents involving damage to roadbed other than bridges, tunnels, viaduct or culverts were not required to be reported. The further purpose of this bill is to deny the commission the right to declare accident reports and investigations privileged material. It is felt that the public interest is much better served when there is full public disclosure of all accident reports.

It appears that whenever an accident occurs on the railway, the Canadian Transport Commission has the right to determine whether or not an investigation into the accident will be considered privileged. I contend that whether or not such accident is due to mechanical failure or human error, it is in the public interest to disclose the reason for the accident in order that all concerned are made completely aware of the cause. The public has the right to know the reasons for and causes of railway mishaps, in the same way as they learn of the cause of air and sea accidents through the medium of public inquiries. All members of the House realize that in many cases public inquiries are held into air and sea accidents but seldom, if ever, do we hear of a public inquiry being held into a rail mishap.

I am especially pleased that at the present time the Canadian Transport Commission is holding a public inquiry into the general safety of rail operations. The chairman of that commission, Mr. Jones, is to be congratulated on the way he is conducting the inquiry, an all-extensive inquiry which I hope will make recommendations. Recently there was a rail mishap in the Fraser canyon and three men lost their lives through no fault of their own but as a result of the negligent maintenance of the roadbed, thus endangering not only the operating employees but the travelling public.

I am strongly opposed to any general order or act giving the Canadian Transport Commission the power to declare the extent to which information concerning accidents given by the railways may be privileged. If a veil of secrecy surrounds an accident, everybody usually assumes the worst. It also appears to me that privileged information can only be justified when matters affecting our national security are concerned. It cannot be said that our national security is in jeopardy by making public the cause of and responsibility for railway mishaps. The Canadian Railway Labour Association have consistently urged that this type of inquiry be made public; that it is in the public interest to ensure that there will not be any privileged material held back by the Canadian Transport Commission or the railway companies if in fact hazards to safety are created by operations of the transportation system.

Let me just refer to the situation in the United States. The National Transportation Safety Board, which was created by the United States Transportation Act, 1966, came about as a result of the kind of thinking that has been expressed here and similar conditions to ours which exist in the United States. The safety board determines the cause of accidents through direct investigation and public hearings, and although structurally located within the department of transportation it is an autonomous agency.

I suggest that a similar type of agency should be set up within the present framework of the Canadian Transport Commission for which the Minister of Transport would have responsibility. The establishment of a similar board or agency in Canada at the earliest possible moment is a most important consideration in order to bring before the public the cause of accidents instead of leaving the public in the dark. As hon. members of the House know, the rate of accidents on the Canadian railroads today is a high one. Almost every week we pick up a paper and see a report of an accident somewhere along the system. We all know that we never really find out the cause of such accidents.

Railway Act

• (4:00 p.m.)

I refer to a bulletin issued in 1969 by Canadian National Railways. It is addressed to all section foremen in the southern division of the Saskatchewan area. I am sure what is suggested here in respect of the CNR is applicable to the CPR and other railroads operating in Canada. It states:

> Following has been received from regional engineer in connection with derailments:
> "As you are no doubt aware, the increasing number of derailments account track conditions is a matter of grave concern throughout the railway industry as a whole. This concern is becoming more apparent, not only in the United States, but in Canada as well."
> The incidence of derailments at switches has recently shown a sharp increase and would suggest that switch maintenance is being overlooked due to other work. With the increasing number of heavy loads, long trains, larger cars and locomotives, switch maintenance is of extreme importance and I would suggest that you give this matter your closest attention.

It is signed by the various roadmasters of the CNR for the southern part of the Saskatchewan area. I think there is a story behind that kind of bulletin. We know there are reasons for the derailments that are taking place. Until the most recent public inquiry being conducted by the Canadian Transport Commission there was not a public inquiry to determine the cause of derailments. It is imperative that we have public inquiries into individual situations throughout the railway system in Canada in order to offset the increasing number of derailments and wrecks.

I am sure we all know the reason for the wording of section 288 (3) of the Railway Act. It provides:

> The board may by regulation declare the manner and form in which such information and notice shall be given and the class of accidents to which this section shall apply, and may declare any such information so given to be privileged.

I sincerely urge that there should be an amendment to this act so that no information can be considered privileged. I realize that in many cases people will say human failure was involved and in the interests of protecting the individual this information should not be divulged to the public. Information is made available under the Public Inquiries Act in respect of any accident at sea or in the air. If a human failure is involved in an accident, this information is made public. I am positive that investigations have shown beyond doubt that cutbacks in manpower on the railway systems can be directly related to an increase in derailments and accidents. The bulletin I have read would indicate a need for additional manpower to look after switches on the system. I am sure that practical railway men realize that cutbacks in the number of maintenance of way employees have been responsible for part of the increase in derailments.

At one time maintenance of way employees rode the tracks in various types of vehicles. They were able to see what was going on, the condition of the trackage and its surroundings. They were able to observe a back-up of water and determine whether there might be a flood in the area resulting in a wash-out. Thus, they were able to prevent accidents. In many cases these maintenance of way people, on the instructions of the companies, travel in motor vehicles on the highway. You cannot possibly maintain proper track surveillance by observing conditions from a highway some distance away. You might see a wash-out, but that is after the fact and perhaps after a train has been derailed.

It is necessary for this House to consider the situation and improve the act. In view of the fact this is a private member's bill, I am sure it will be talked out. I suppose that is the law of the land to which we have become accustomed. Somewhere along the line a bill such as this should be sent to committee for consideration. Perhaps the government should take it upon itself, because of the seriousness of the situation, to send a bill such as this to committee for study. In this way, groundwork could be laid to avert derailments and the tragedy such accidents cause families of the injured.

We saw an example of this in the Kootenays recently. We must also consider the economic loss as a result of the stoppage of service on a section of the system. Surely government members realize there is a need to amend the present legislation. Perhaps we could adopt new regulations to correct some of the problems that now exist. Regulations of this type would also bring about better morale on the part of railroad employees. At the present time investigations are conducted by railway officials. They do not divulge the information relating to mechanical failure. The only time they are concerned is when there is human failure. It is in this area that we need change. Whether the cause of an accident is the result of human failure or mechanical failure, the resulting tragedy is the same.

I urge the government not to talk out this bill so that it will be dropped when private members' hour ends, but to give it an opportunity to go to committee where a proper debate can take place. Witnesses could then be called and amendments could be suggested, so that in future there will be public disclosure in respect of causes of railway derailments.

[Translation]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the amendment to the Railway Act and particularly to Section 288 moved by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) certainly has much merit and is received with kind appreciation not only by the members of the House but also by the general public.

If we read the explanatory notes appearing opposite page 1 of Bill C-47, we find a rather complete summary of the purpose the hon. member for Moose Jaw had in mind in proposing the amendment before the House.

Therefore, what is the purpose behind the introduction of this bill by the hon. member for Moose Jaw?

In my opinion, he is seeking three important changes: first, the broadening of the meaning of the word "accident", by the inclusion in it of the term "equipment"; second, an increase of the powers of the Canadian Transport Commission, so as to exempt the employees of any railway company from the responsibility of reporting to the Commission any accident to equipment or property, the damage to which is assessed at less than $1,500; third, to deny the Canadian Transport Commission the right to declare privileged information that it may have obtained on circumstances surrounding a railway accident.

In addition of the word "equipment" may not raise considerable or apparent difficulties, and it seems to me that the Minister of Transport would be prepared to agree with this principle.

• (4:10 p.m.)

However, allow me to point out that the addition of the word "equipment" could give rise to some complications in the eventual interpretation of the legislation, because it does not give any definition nor provide any amendment to clause 2 listing the definition of various terms of the Railway Act.

I agree with the sponsor, when he suggests the abolishment of the obligation for railway employees to report to the Commission any accident resulting in material damage under $1,500. At the present time, the limit is set at $750 and the department is seriously considering its abolishment, due to the insignificance of such damage and the present worth of assets.

It is true that under the present legislation the Commission is not required to divulge some of the information obtained after the accident or from the inquiry that followed.

Since we live today in a society where the government system, that is the state, is increasingly involved in the daily life of individuals through enactment of numerous welfare measures, it is normal to seek more and more information and to want the suppression of the confidential and secret nature of the information the government and its agencies have. I totally agree on that point.

As everyone knows, a privilege is an exception to the general rule, but some groups cannot understand or interpret the expression and try to give it the wrong meaning. There is a tendency to consider the privilege as an instrument in the hands of authorities to hush up the worst, to hide scandal, in short, to deliberately leave the people in the dark about facts they should know. If ever it has been the case, it was an exemption.

Indeed, hon. members know full well, and especially lawyers, that the principle of the privilege exists; the best example is found in the Canada Evidence Act, which grants anyone called upon to appear as witness before a court of justice the guarantee that his testimony will not be used against him in subsequent proceedings, criminal or civil. In that case, the privilege is recognized by law.

Another well known example is that of the relations between a lawyer and his client; all their contacts, information and discussions are privileged and cannot be divulged in court. I do not mean to learn you something about this, Mr. Speaker, as you are an expert in the legal profession.

In my opinion, this is the sort of privilege to which section 288 of the Railway Act refers. It relates mainly to communications between railway employees and their superiors in case of accident. These communications are privileged and cannot be disclosed in court, not because they were made on a confidential basis, but for the benefit of the legal advisors of the corporation, namely, the railway. Railway accidents often involve damage claims and as a rule company lawyers must be entitled to a complete and honest statement of facts so as to be able to decide correctly and resolutely on a course of action, and the opposing party can also have access to this same information in order to establish responsibility.

The Commission itself does not have the required jurisdiction to establish responsibility in a case of railway accident. Its duty is to know the facts in order to determine the causes of an accident and to prescribe the means to prevent the recurrence of such unfortunate and tragic events.

True, the public and the Railway Labour Association in particular do not appreciate that privileged situation, but I think that what matters here is to protect railway employees themselves against any retaliation that could result from their too great talkativeness. Furthermore, confidence at various levels in the company would be dangerously eroded and the efficiency of the employees would be greatly jeopardized, and the passenger service as well.

After listening to the explanations of the hon. member for Moose Jaw, I note that the basic principle of this bill is public protection against the increasing number of railway accidents in Canada. I can only commend the hon. member for not so long ago in Quebec we knew such tragical situations which, on one occasion, claimed the lives of thirty youths near Montreal. In my riding, several accidents killed five or six persons at the same time.

The bill introduced by the hon. member aims mainly at protecting the public and the member must be congratulated. The Canadian Transport Commission and the railways must continue improving their accident prevention system so that passengers may be assured of travelling with the greatest degree of safety possible.

[English]

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) for periodically bringing to the attention of this House matters which are particularly pertinent to the railways of Canada. Having been born and raised in a railway community, I appreciate the problems faced by both management and employees in our great national railways as they go about their way of life.

I can well remember some very tragic accidents which occurred in the town of Palmerston during the period in which I lived there. However, one of the greatest tragedies that ever occurred in the town of Palmerston, which used to be an outstanding railway community, was when Canadian National Railways saw fit to withdraw all passenger service from the area. I believe this was a retrograde step in view of the fact that this area is and will be developing over the years and it will be necessary to provide an alternative transportation service.

After the hearings in that area which allowed the railways to withdraw passenger service from the area north and west of Guelph, I was particularly disturbed that the highway service to be provided, which was supposed to be commensurate with the railway service, did not prove to be adequate to meet the needs of the many communities in the area. Therefore I welcome this opportunity to speak on the matter of railways and accidents.

As I have said, I remember many tragic accidents on the railroad. As I did during the hearing before the committee, I object to the secrecy in respect of rail line abandonment hearings which allows the railways not to disclose full and complete information. The essence of the legislation before us is to correct this situation and I congratulate the hon. member for bringing it forward. We know that he has had many long years' experience in railroading at the grass-roots level, and he should be an expert in the field.

Many of us have felt that the facts of many accidents have not been divulged, and if they had been made known it is possible that further accidents could have been prevented. In his initial remarks the hon. member said that railroads have downgraded the servicing of tracks to such an extent that the possibility of accidents has increased. Even though there have been tremendous technological changes and improvements with respect to railway operation and maintenance, the human element still comes into it. People must still check lines. They must watch and look after railway lines. This is necessary if we are to prevent more serious accidents.

I think most of us are aware of new processes and programs which have been introduced by the railroads. We all know that large amounts of money have been spent. Here I am thinking of developments like the turbo train which was to operate between Toronto and Montreal and which has been so accident prone. I sometimes feel that if reports about accidents were not considered to be privileged material, members of the general public could add something to the investigations that are supposed to take place.

May I say here that when some of us appeared at inquiries held with regard to the abandonment of passenger services we were not given the opportunity to examine all the facts. We felt that relevant facts were withheld. I feel, as does the hon. member who introduced this bill, that there should be full and open disclosure by railroads and organizations such as the Canadian Transport Commission with respect to railway accidents, in order to make sure that the public knows the reasons for these accidents.

Sometimes accidents are blamed on the railway operators themselves, sometimes on track management personnel, and sometimes on those in higher-up management. It is time we were able to pinpoint the causes of accidents and lay the blame where it belongs, so that action may be taken in future to prevent the recurrence of accidents. The facts are not made public and are sometimes covered up in court proceedings. The public, therefore, is not made aware of what is going on.

[Mr. Howe.]

I agree with what the hon. member has said. The public interest would be much better served if there were full, public disclosure of all accidents. Since Canadian National operates at a considerable deficit that must be made good out of the public treasury—without this help the railway could not operate—I feel the company ought to be required to make full, public disclosure of facts surrounding accidents, to make sure that the public interest is being properly served.

Rail safety, Mr. Speaker, affects the lives of many Canadians. I feel that this type of disclosure would ensure that certain accidents would occur only once. I think that with public discussion the causes of such accidents would be eliminated much more quickly than might otherwise be possible. Some of the facts relating to accidents are kept secret. We hear that public disclosure is not possible in some instances because other, private railway lines are operating in the same area and it would not do to let competitors know the facts. That argument, I think, has been overworked. People in business know most of the time what their competitors are doing or they would not stay long in business.

I think the bogey that so many hide behind, that it is not in the public interest to make full disclosure of facts because they might assist competitors, is just that—a bogey. After all, we know that Canadian Pacific Railway does not breathe deeply without the CNR's knowledge. We ought to ignore this bogey that says there ought not to be full public disclosure because a competitor might take advantage of it. That, in my view, is a wrong attitude. I think that the facts surrounding accidents should be made public. All relevant information should be made available to those who are interested, in order that the public cause may be served.

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in recent months the question of safety on our railroads has assumed more serious proportions, especially in western Canada where a number of lives have been lost and where a great deal of tragedy has ensued. There have been accidents which have resulted in death. Not long ago I received a letter from a Mrs. Penner. It is not marked "Personal" and I can therefore read it to the House. It reads in part:

> Nothing short of rock sheds and better patrols, or re-routing of the track in the area of mile 118.9 on the Ashcroft sub. will prevent another accident such as took the life of my husband and Mr. Dougan and Mr. Barry.
> I trust this will not end up a dead issue with no improvements made. It could be a passenger train as easily as wheat cars at the river bed. Lets not have such a tragedy.

The letter was signed by Mrs. Penner and her two youngsters. We must be concerned not only about letters of this kind from a lady who has lost a husband and father to her children, but about the possibility of other, similar letters of this kind coming to us in future; and they may come to us if we do not take a stand as members of the House of Commons and make sure that Canadian railroads are as safe as it is possible to make them.

The idea advanced by the hon. member who proposed the bill and who has had considerable experience as a railroadman should certainly be given consideration. The idea he advances should not be ruled out merely because the idea emanates from the other side of the House. If it is a good idea, it ought to be considered by the government.

No occupation is immune from danger, and we shall never achieve a situation in which accidents can be eliminated totally. However, we can work in all areas in order to minimize accidents. Certainly, safety for the work force is a concern of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) and all those associated with him in the Department of Labour. Although this matter under debate, as the hon. member knows, is not the immediate responsibility of the Minister of Labour, the minister certainly is concerned about safety, as is everyone working in the Department of Labour.

A few weeks ago I became involved in some of the negotiations involving members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. It was apparent from the very outset of discussions that the issues were far from being purely economic in nature. Other issues emerged, not the least of which was the matter of safety and working conditions. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, no one could have been unimpressed with the weight of the arguments advanced by some of the men who have to bring trains with as many as 150 cars through the Canadian Rockies and down the dangerous Fraser canyon. Those who maintain that the dispute was all a matter of economics, of how much of an increase per hour the engineers would receive, simply do not know the facts.

Those who have travelled across the country aboard Canada's two railways—and despite some of the problems they have had, I think we have been well served by our railroads and the people working on them—know the terrain which has to be traversed. Even the unpractised eye can detect some of the slide conditions that exist along the Fraser canyon. A few years ago when they had steam engines, the maximum number of cars the railroads could haul with an engine was 59. But year after year Detroit has been creating evermore powerful diesel units. The technologists have produced these "wonder" diesels, and now they have developed diesel locomotives which haul as many as 150 cars. However, the question is whether the technology of safety has advanced at the same rate as the genius of Detroit has advanced in designing these new and powerful engine units.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that safety has not made the same improvement, and I think the hon. member would agree with that. When you talk to some of the men who are faced with the problem of bringing these massive trains out to the Pacific coast, they tell you it is a dreadful feeling to know that it is almost impossible to stop such a unit in time, to know that you are going to hit a rock obstruction on the tracks and in a few minutes will have 150 cars "crawling up your back," which is the expression they use.

The hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) has pointed out that the Canadian Transport Commission has a study under way of general safety conditions on the railroads, and I agree with him that the activities of the commission are to be commended. Next week, because of the efforts of the chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission and of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson), a special study is going to be made of safety conditions in the Fraser canyon. The study is the result as well of various representations made by hon. members of this House. I repeat that on the eighteenth and nineteenth—that is next week—a study is going to be made of conditions along the Fraser canyon, and as a member from a British Columbia constituency I commend the CTC and the Minister of Transport for acting so quickly in response to recent requests for an investigation. I hope that from this survey we will find some of the reasons for the number of deaths which have been occurring in the canyon.

In my view we need improved slide detector devices. In the case of the recent canyon crash, which resulted in the dealth of Mrs. Penner's husband and of the other two men, it is alleged that the slide detection devices had been out of operation for a full month prior to the crash. We have to get answers to that; we must improve detection devices. Perhaps it was impossible to keep them in operation because of snow conditions. To me it seems incredible that we have not apparently achieved any basic improvement in slide detector devices throughout the past 25 years while all diesel technology has been putting heavier units on the tracks. Surely if we can provide a magnificent system of radar at international airports and can equip ships with sonar devices, we can put something in the cabs of locomotives which will be able to provide a more adequate warning of track conditions ahead—perhaps an in-cab television device, an adaptation of radar, or some kind of sophisticated way to determine whether or not there is a slide on the tracks. We are still living in the nineteenth century with respect to some of these safety devices and I repeat that we have to develop more advanced slide detector devices. The improvement of safety conditions is one of the first things we must undertake to assist those who must earn their living with the railroads of Canada.

In conclusion, I wish to make a few remarks about the general safety of railway employees. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the majority of railway employees are employed in the non-operating sector of the railway industry which is subject to the provisions of the Canada Labour (Safety) Code. Employment, safety and health regulations covering such diverse subjects as machine guarding, hazardous substances, materials handling, noise, lighting, sanitation, electrical safety, and soon, have been developed to the final draft stage and are currently under legal review by the Department of Justice.

The regular safety inspection of federal work places, including maintenance shops and other railway facilities, has been under way for more than a year. In the past year—this is an indication of the minister's and his department's concern with respect to safety for railway employees—some 19,000 such inspections were made of enterprises subject to the safety code. In addition, approximately 500 special surveys and 17 comprehensive assessments of company accident prevention programs were completed.

These comprehensive assessments of safety audits include, in addition to an assessment of working conditions and work practices, a critical review of a company's safety policy, its education and training program, the attitude of management and employees to safety, the in-plant safety inspection system, accident investigation and reporting procedures, etc., wherein lie the root causes of most safety problems.

Development of a national system of accident statistics is now well under way and is expected to produce valuable information for the prevention of accidents in the near future. The National Film Board is presently producing a film which will be used in training accident investigators in the proper investigation of accidents. A second film on the conduct of safety inspections is now in the planning stage. In so far as it lies within the area of responsibility of the Minister of Labour and his department, every effort will be made to improve the conditions under which workers on Canadian railroads must earn their living. I thank the hon. member for bringing a bill of undoubted merit to the attention of the House.

Mr. Len Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) for bringing the attention of the House to the subject of railway accidents through the introduction of Bill C-47. I know that other hon. members want to participate in this debate, so I will not speak at length. However, I want to express my general support for the principles contained in the bill.

I was not in the House when the hon. member began his remarks, but I understand he mentioned the accident which took place on February 15 and caused the death of three outstanding people who happened to come from the city of Kamloops. The loss of the lives of these men caused a great deal of anguish and concern throughout Kamloops and the surrounding communities. Indeed, this particular accident caused a great deal of concern across the country. I met with officials of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and the United Transport Union on this important subject. One of the big complaints that all these gentlemen had was the lack of information available to families, workers and the community as a whole.

I commend the hon. member for bringing in this bill. I do not know what its fate will be, but the general principles involved are sound and I hope that something along the lines suggested by the hon. member can be done by the government in the near future.

• (4:40 p.m.)

My good friend from Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault) spoke of railway safety and his remarks are very pertinent. In this age of technology, with men going to the moon, literally anything can be achieved. We know that 90 per cent to 95 per cent of the scientists who ever lived, live now—so we are in the greatest age of technology that man has ever known. Certainly these kinds of accidents do not need to happen. Surely we can find some means of detecting them well in advance: they do not need to happen.

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): I am pleased to stand in the House today, Mr. Speaker, and say a few words on Bill C-47, because I feel that I can support some of the proposals contained in this most reasonable of bills.

[Translation]

This bill, entitled: "An Act to amend the Railway Act (Notice of Accidents)", is sponsored by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg). During the first two sessions of this Parliament, I have had the opportunity to sit, with this hon. member, on the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications and I know that his intentions are good and that he is guilty of no partisanship in submitting this legislative proposal. I am therefore happy to support him objectively and in a spirit of co-operation, for the essential purpose of serving the interests of the Canadian people.

The last time I spoke in this House on the subject of railways, the provincial press, and to a certain extent the national one, got somewhat excited and concluded that some of my statements constituted an attack against the government. If somebody is to be blamed, it is, indeed, the railways authorities which do not care at all, occasionally, for public opinion and the criticism expressed strongly enough in this House by the people's representatives. But I will forget that for the moment, and I will speak about the bill.

As regards its provisions about notices of accidents, I am not against them. I commend the intent of the sponsor of this bill and I leave it to more knowledgeable members to discuss its legal aspects or its practical consequences.

I think that this is a solid, well-thought out bill which should have been introduced long ago. Why do I take a special interest in this bill? Simply because I am permanently interested in the activity of the railway company which serves my province, and more particularly, my region.

I have the interests of railway employees at heart. An hon. member just told me that there is no railway service in my riding. In fact there was one and although there is not much left of it, I want to discuss it just the same. I have at heart the interests, the security at work of railway employees, and even though we do not have many opportunities for direct intervention in their favour in the House, I would be reluctant to miss this one.

My father who was a railway employee, worked as a roadman—as we say here—with pick and shovel, in fair weather or foul for 42 years. I also wielded pick and shovel at his side on the railroad, in summer under a blinding sun and in the intense cold of winter. I know the occupational hazards, I know what I am talking about. It amuses me to hear Canadians, some of them my constituents, tell me sometimes: "You are a member of Parliament, you have a job in Ottawa, you have no problem. How can you understand our needs?"

Mr. Speaker, if I spring from some kind of establishment, let it be from a class of people who have always lived by the sweat of their brows, and I am not forgetting it. That is the reason why I am interested in Bill C-47.

At different times during previous sessions, I have put on the order paper a certain number of questions on CN train derailments. Each and everytime I have been provided with incomplete and absolutely unsatisfactory answers. Therefore, it is with pleasure that I welcome the suggestion contained in this bill to the effect that all accidents involving damages amounting to $1,500 or more to equipment and tracks be made the subject of compulsory reports to the Canadian Transport Commission.

With the implementation of new railroad technology in Canada especially during the fifties, the railway companies have done away with some of the supervisory and checking practices which were considered elementary during the steam-engine era. I do not mean by that there were fewer derailments in the past, I just say that they had apparently better means of control and more adequate and more human methods to prevent accidents.

The machines have replaced men in many ways, but they are not perfect. I especially recall some Christmas holidays in the early fifties when my father had hired me to shovel snow and check tracks which I did walking alongside of a full-time employee. For a week the thermometer must have registered some 20 or 30 degrees below zero and we had to cover a distance of three miles in order to survey each track, each joint, to ascertain that the cold had not caused any damage which could impede traffic.

• (4:50 p.m.)

To my knowledge, this is not done anymore, although it might be better otherwise.

Some railway employees in my riding were telling me that every winter they fear to go on board when it is cold. They feel the rolling stock and the roadbeds are not under adequate inspection, therefore, derailments often occur.

Excessive heat obviously can also twist the tracks. There is among railway employees a feeling that a larger staff should be detailed for the inspection of the rolling stock and the roadbeds. Surely, Mr. Speaker, considering the high unemployment we are experiencing at the present time, the railway companies of this country should be hiring more staff in order to satisfy the security requirements.

My colleague, the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin), who also agrees with us on this matter, had asked a series of questions and he received answers which show that closer inspection by an additional number of employees would help reduce derailments and other accidents.

I will quote a few figures regarding the Chaleur area of CN on derailments. In 1967, derailments caused considerable losses: $25,000 at Saint-Quentin on January 2, $14,000 at Monk on February 19; a smaller incident at Caraquet nevertheless cost $2,000. A much more serious derailment at Monk on March 4 resulted in damages to the extent of $150,000. On March 18 of the same year a derailment at Napadogan cost $319,000.

And I think those figures cover only losses in rolling stock or in railway tracks. They do not include losses of goods or working days.

A mere look at the situation shows that it is serious and I hope that in the near future the necessary steps will be taken to improve our protection system for railway men and also for the equipment which they must handle.

The principle of the bill is most acceptable. There always seems to be a difficulty for members when it comes to referring a bill to a committee. In this case, I would certainly be willing to refer the matter to the committee so that it may be discussed more openly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order. The hour set aside for consideration of private members' business has now expired. As it is five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday at 2 p.m.

[English]

This beautiful week we have had of sunny weather, buds, greenery and beautiful tulips leaves me in only one position. I must recall at least a few lines of one of the greatest and earliest poets. Possibly a few members remember John Milton of the seventeenth century, who wrote:

Hail, bounteous May, that dost inspire
Mirth and youth and warm desire!
Woods and groves are of thy dressing
Hill and dale doth boast thy blessing,
Thus—we salute thee with our early song,
And welcome thee, and wish thee long.

I wish all members a very happy weekend. I hope they will enjoy the tulip festival by walking through our parks and along our riversides. I hope they will not only enjoy health but the satisfaction of a good time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the government House leader to confirm that the business for the beginning of next week will be the same as announced yesterday. In other words, will the first order of business on Monday be Bill C-238, an act to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

Mr. Francis: Yes, Mr. Speaker; I think the hon. member has correctly described it. The business will be as stated at page 5777 of Hansard.

At five o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

PROVINCIAL BORROWINGS FROM $160 MILLION LOAN FUND

Question No. 877—Mr. Comeau:

1. How much money has been borrowed by each province out of the $160 million loan fund provided to finance job-creating public works?

2. How many jobs are being created in each case?

3. How many of these loans have been refused on the basis that the province involved has not submitted a proposal which is sufficiently job-creative?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. As of May 3, 1971 all provinces except Ontario and Saskatchewan have applied and received approvals for loans to the full amount of their allocations from the Special Loans Program in the following amounts:

Newfoundland	$ 6,300,000
Prince Edward Island	1,000,000
Nova Scotia	4,000,000
New Brunswick	5,000,000
Quebec	70,300,000
Manitoba	8,000,000
Alberta	6,400,000
British Columbia	37,000,000
Total	$138,000,000

Questions

Saskatchewan has advised it does not intend to use its allocation of $5,000,000. Ontario has announced its intention to borrow its allocation of $17,000,000 for distribution on a loan basis to its municipalities, but no application has yet been received. Actual loan disbursements to date total $21,800,000, all to the Province of Quebec.

2. The additional direct employment being created has been estimated on the basis of information received from the provinces as follows:

	Man-Years
Newfoundland	774
Prince Edward Island	98
Nova Scotia	477
New Brunswick	286
Quebec	6,515
Manitoba	575
Alberta	864
British Columbia	2,661
Total	12,250

It is also estimated that the indirect employment being created nationally from the purchase of materials, equipment, supplies and engineering services will total about 16,900 for a direct and indirect employment effect of 29,150 man-years. No estimates are available as to subsequent employment multiplier effects.

3. None.

FORMER EMPLOYEES OF G. LAPALME LTD.

Question No. 936—Mr. McBride:

1. Is the privilege of parking on Parliament Hill extended to every citizen or group of citizens and, if not, for what reason has such privilege been extended to former Lapalme employees?

2. Has the Government of Canada at any time offered employment to those former employees of G. Lapalme Limited and, if so, on how many occasions?

3. Has the government or any officer of the government met with those employees in order to make a fair presentation of the government position with respect to their grievance in relation to direction given them by their union officials?

4. Is it the government's intention to assign a specialist in communications to assure that these men understand what action the Government of Canada has taken to secure their employment?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. This matter is the responsibility of the Speaker of the House of Commons and inquiries should be directed to him privately.

2. Yes, twice.

3. Yes, the Hon. Charles Mills Drury on April 14, 1970.

4. No.

WYNYARD, SASK.—PUBLIC HOUSING PROJECT

Question No. 997—Mr. Burton:

1. Did the Town of Wynyard submit an application for a public housing project under Section 35(a) of the National Housing Act and, if so (a) on what date (b) how many housing units were requested in the application (c) what was the estimated cost of the project?

2. Was the project approved by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and, if so, on what date?

3 On what date was participation in the project approved by the Government of Saskatchewan and on what date was this approval communicated to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation?

4. On what date was the Town of Wynyard informed of the approval for the project and who communicated this information?

5. What is the estimated cost to each governmental authority involved?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): 1(a)(b). The Town of Wynyard made application to the Province of Saskatchewan in 1969 for the investigation of a 38-unit public housing project under Section 35A of the National Housing Act. The Province requested approval from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in September, 1969. A study was then undertaken by the Province to determine the relationship of the communities of the area. This study was completed and on October 20, 1970, the Committee of the Partnership agreed to a recommendation for the construction of 10 units, subject to the concurrence of the Provincial Minister. (c) Cost did not form a part of the application at this stage.

2. On September 16, 1969, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation approved an investigation to determine the need for a housing project.

3. The Minister of Municipal Affairs, on behalf of the Province of Saskatchewan, approved construction of 10 housing units, and this approval was received by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation on February 12, 1971.

4. The Minister of Municipal Affairs, on behalf of the Province of Saskatchewan, advised the Town of Wynyard on February 10, 1971, of the approval of a 10-unit project.

5. The estimated costs are not yet known. A technical committee made up of representatives of the three levels of government are selecting serviced lots for the project and, when negotiations are completed and the sites determined, an estimate of costs will be prepared.

PUBLIC SERVICE—INTRODUCTION OF FOUR-DAY WEEK

Question No. 1,088—Mr. Yewchuk:

1. Prior to the expenditure guidelines which reduced or froze positions in the Public Service, did the government consider, as an alternative policy, the introduction of the four-day workweek?

2. Has the government calculated the possible cost to the country if a four-day work-week were introduced in the Public Service and, if so, how many employees in the Public Service would not have been dismissed or positions frozen?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): 1. No. Collective agreements with employees provide for a five day week. The employer did not consider such a course of action.

2. No.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A VOLUNTARY FINGERPRINT BANK

Question No. 1,187—Mr. Coates:

Has the government given consideration to the establishment of a voluntary fingerprint bank that would be available to those people who desire to have their fingerprints filed in case of the need of possible identification at some future date?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of The Privy Council): No.

DOUGLAS POINT NUCLEAR POWER PROJECT

Question No. 1,220—Mr. Coates:

1. Has AECL or the government amortized the construction cost of the Douglas Point Nuclear Power Project and, if so (a) on what basis (b) over what number of years (c) at what interest rate?

2. How much of the $89,637,000 that the power project cost has been repaid?

3. What was the total operating cost for the Douglas Point Nuclear Power Project in the years 1967, 1968, 1969 and 1970?

4. (a) How much power was generated in each of the years 1967, 1968, 1969 and 1970 (b) of that amount in each year, how much was sold to the Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario and at what return in dollars?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1. Douglas Point Reactor is a prototype station and no amortization of construction cost has been recorded by AECL or the Government.

2. The agreement with the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario provides for purchase of the station after it has been established to be a safe and dependable source of power.

3. Operating costs, including commissioning and training of staff for committed stations, are recorded on a fiscal year basis as follows:

(Millions)

1967-68	1968-69	1969-70	1970-71*
$3.6	$6.4	$6.0	$7.8

*Eleven months actual plus one month estimated.

4. Net power generated is sold to the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

(a) Net Power generated (millions of kilowatt hours)

1967-68	1968-69	1969-70	1970-71
270	689	393	933

(b) Revenues on a fiscal year basis are as follows:

(Millions)

1967-68	1968-69	1969-70	1970-71*
$1.6	$3.9	$2.4	$5.3

*Eleven months actual plus one month estimated.

Questions

STUDIES RELATING TO CORRELATION BETWEEN JOB OPPORTUNITIES AND EDUCATIONAL QUALIFICATIONS

Question No. 1,232—Mr. Southam:

1. Has the government established a study to decide on the actual correlation between job opportunities and educational qualifications e.g., the value of a B.A. in business?

2. Is it the intention of the government to establish such a study?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. The Department of Manpower and Immigration carries out a number of studies related to this correlation between job opportunities and educational qualifications. Regular publications entitled "Supply and Demand of New University Graduates" and "Requirements and Average Starting Salaries" contain sample results on the labour market status of new university graduates. Projections of requirements for Managerial, Professional and Technical classes are contained in the publication "A Projection of Manpower Requirements by Occupation in 1975". Another publication "Canada's Highly Qualified Manpower Resources" indicates the education and employment patterns of scientists and engineers.

2. No.

PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES UNDER FEDERAL MEDICARE PLAN, 1971-72

Question No. 1,237—Mr. Harding:

1. What is the estimated total cost to the government of payments to the provinces under the federal Medicare plan for the 1971-72 fiscal year?

2. What provinces, to date, have come under the federal Medicare plan, and what is the estimated payment to each for the 1971-72 fiscal year?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. The total estimated cost of federal payments to the provinces, under the Medical Care program, in the fiscal year 1971-72 amounts to $576,480,-800.

2. All provinces and the Northwest Territories are now participating under the federal Medical Care program, and it is estimated that federal payments in the fiscal year 1971-72 will be as follows:

Province	Payments

Prince Edward Island	2,888,100
Nova Scotia	20,646,000
New Brunswick	16,158,600

Manitoba	26,766,300
Saskatchewan	25,510,200
Alberta	44,994,700
British Columbia	60,027,100
Northwest Territories	914,400

Questions

*CBC—USE OF SATELLITE TO PROVIDE TELEVISION SERVICE TO NORTH

Question No. 1,266—Mr. Fairweather:

1. Does the CBC plan to use a satellite to provide television service to the people of the North and, if so, in what manner?

2. Will the programs be the same as those now broadcast or will programs be especially prepared to meet the tastes and needs of the people of the North particularly the Indians, Eskimos and Metis?

3. Will such programs be made in the North by the people living there including the native peoples?

4. Have the people of the North, particularly the native peoples, been consulted about the kind of television programs they would like to receive by satellite?

5. Are there any plans for a television production centre in the Northern Region similar to the centres existing in all the other regions of CBC, which would produce programs for satellite transmission?

Mr. James Hugh Faulkner (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. Yes. The Corporation plans to use the Telesat satellite to transmit CBC English and French network services for ground reception and broadcasting by existing and planned stations in the north.

2. The full live network service will be transmitted, instead of the four-hour program package now available on a delayed basis. There are no present plans for programs especially prepared for northerners, but it is possible that such a regional service could be developed in the future for scheduling in time periods when national network service is not scheduled. Work is being done with this objective in mind.

3. Not initially.

4. Yes. The views of people who live in the North were expressed at a Conference on Northern Communications held at Yellowknife in September 1970.

5. At present there are no plans for such a TV production centre in the north.

*AGREEMENT BETWEEN FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AND QUEBEC RELATING TO TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

Question No. 1,282—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. When was the first agreement between the Government of Canada and the Province of Quebec entered into in relation to the construction of the Trans-Canada Highway (a) what were the nature and terms of the agreement (b) has it been renewed and, if so, in what year and when does it end?

2. What was the federal contribution to the Province of Quebec during 1970?

3. Has the Government of Canada received a request from the Government of the Province of Quebec to extend the Trans-Canada Highway agreement and, if so, what was the reply?

4. What amount does the government intend to grant for this purpose?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have the reply to this question and it is rather lengthy. I wonder whether there might be unanimous consent that it be tabled and that it be printed in Hansard as though it had been read?

[Mr. Munro.]

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: The abovementioned answer reads as follows:]

1. October 27, 1960. (a) The Trans-Canada Highway Agreement provided that Canada would contribute to the cost of construction of an equivalent two-lane highway on the basis of 50 p. cent of the costs on 90 p. cent of the mileage within the province and 90 p. cent of the costs on the remaining 10 p. cent of the mileage. It also specified the termination date of construction as December 31, 1963, that is, work done to and including this date would be eligible for federal contributions. (b) The second Agreement was executed on March 31, 1965, which extended the termination date of construction to December 31, 1967. The third Agreement was executed on September 18, 1967, which extended the termination date of construction to December 31, 1970.

2. The estimated federal contribution for the fiscal year 1970-71 is $13.6 million.

3. Yes. The reply stated that the federal government's decision to terminate the Trans-Canada Highway program was based on a number of factors, one being the extended length of time the program has been in force. The original legislation was enacted in 1949 and participation under it was available to all provinces since the first Agreement was offered to the provinces in 1950, with termination at that time being 1956. A number of extensions were granted by subsequent legislation to the December, 1970 date, thus providing a 21 year construction period. Other factors were the rapidly rising costs to the federal government, particularly by assistance to the provinces in the fields of health, education and regional expansion.

4. There will be no federal contributions under the Trans-Canada Highway program for any work carried out after December 31, 1970.

INFORMATION BY REGION ON OUTSTANDING BANK LOANS AND MONEY SUPPLY

Question No. 1,286—Mr. Fairweather:

Is it the intention of the Bank of Canada to publish, on a regular basis, information on the volume of bank loans outstanding in the various regions of Canada including the Atlantic Provinces and estimates of the total money supply in each region as recommended by the report of the Atlantic Development Council on a strategy for the economic development of the Atlantic Region, 1971-1981?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): In so far as the Bank of Canada is concerned: The regional domicile of the bank loans and bank deposits of nationwide enterprises which deal with nationwide banks is not meaningful; loans arranged in one region are frequently drawn on for us in other regions, and similarly deposit balances carried in one region may arise from operations in, or be destined for disbursement in, other regions. Consequently, collecting or estimating figures for total money supply and bank loans on a regional basis would not provide information useful for the analysis of regional economic problems.

Question No. 1,306—Mr. Mather:

What was the amount of money paid as (a) Old Age Security Pensions (b) Family Allowances to residents of the Province of Quebec in 1970?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): (a) $458,573,498 (This figure includes Guaranteed Income Supplement payments). (b) $240,-029,289.

PIPELINE RESEARCH

Question No. 1,319—Mr. Harding:

1. Is the government involved in any aspect of pipeline research being conducted in the study at Inuvik by Mackenzie Valley Pipeline Research Limited and, if so, to what extent?

2. Is an ecologist taking part in this study?

3. On what date can the results of such study be expected?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development as follows: 1. No.

2. There are several ecologists involved in the study.

3. The results of the study are scheduled for completion by the year end.

LOANS MADE BY FARM CREDIT CORPORATION TO ASSIST INDIAN GROUPS

Question No. 1,398—Mr. Yewchuk:

For the years 1969 and 1970, how many loans were made by the Farm Credit Corporation to assist Indian groups or individuals in the Provinces of (a) British Columbia (b) Alberta (c) Saskatchewan (d) Manitoba (e) Ontario and (f) Quebec?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): The Farm Credit Corporation advises that the following loans were approved:

	Fiscal Year 1969-70	Fiscal Year 1970-71
(a) British Columbia	8	4
(b) Alberta	12	5
(c) Saskatchewan	16	10
(d) Manitoba	10	2
(e) Ontario	6	1
(f) Quebec	1	1

• (2:10 p.m.)

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Question No. 540 has been on the order paper in my name since November 26. It was also on for several months during the last session. It is a very simple question and in my opinion should only take about five minutes to provide an answer. I am wondering if and when I will get an answer, whether I should remove it from the order paper, or what I should do.

An hon. Member: Give up.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, questions are always simple but it turns out sometimes that replies can be unduly complex. We are trying to keep the average above 80 per cent, which we have been able to achieve to the present moment. I will look into this question to see whether we cannot answer it as soon as possible.

UNEMPLOYMENT—EFFECT OF APRIL FIGURE ON 1971 FORECAST BY MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Finance has now had an opportunity to reflect upon the unemployment figures issued last week and no doubt has had consultation about them, I should like to ask whether these figures have changed in any way his forecast of a steadily diminishing rate of unemployment throughout the year?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, I think this will happen over the whole year. The seasonally adjusted rate will show a decline on the basis of the whole year from the fourth quarter of 1970.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, may we assume from what the minister has just said that his estimate in the budget he will present in June as to the appropriate fiscal stance of the government for the balance of the fiscal year will be based upon his previous forecast and will not make any allowance for the possible significance of the figures released last week?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, of course the budget will depend upon all the figures we have seen, including this figure, up to the time the budget is produced.

PROVISION OF SHORT-RANGE ECONOMIC FORECASTING ORGANIZATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he is now prepared to act upon the recommendation made many times by the Economic Council that a short-term economic forecasting unit be established with the assistance of the government in order that the minister can be prevented from acting on wrong forecasts which could have serious effects for the country with respect to the budget? In addition, such an economic forecasting unit might prevent the minister from making a fool of himself.

An hon. Member: It would take more than that.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the latter might be difficult to do, as is the case with my hon. friend. However, I would say there are units in Canada doing economic forecasting. I am sure my hon. friend knows of the one at the University of Toronto where economic forecasts for the year are substantially the same as those of the government.

UNEMPLOYMENT—EXPLANATION FOR APRIL INCREASE

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, when the figures were given the other day indicating an abnormally high increase in the unemployment rate the minister expressed his surprise and his ignorance as to the causes of that increase. Has he had a chance to consult with the people in his department and has he found an explanation for the extraordinary increase in the unemployment figures?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the explanation can be found in the figures produced by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

Mr. Saltsman: Since there does not seem to be any explanation there at all, will the minister consider providing an explanation rather than making phony excuses to the House?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INCOME TAX CHANGES—REQUEST FOR EARLY INTRODUCTION OF BILL

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance whether, when he introduces his budget in June, he will introduce a full-fledged tax reform bill rather than a collection of intentions as to tax reform in the form of another white paper?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated, the tax reform to be introduced in June will be in the form of legislation.

Mr. Lundrigan: In order to try to reduce the uncertainty in the economy at the present time, will the minister consider introducing at the earliest possible date, hopefully in the next few days, a tax reform bill in lieu of the budgetary statement in the middle of June?

Mr. Benson: No, Mr. Speaker.

REGIONAL UNEMPLOYMENT—CONSULTATION IN LIGHT OF FORECAST DECLINE IN BUILDING PROJECTS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance whether officials of his department or of the Department of Manpower have been in consultation with the various regions in which there is particularly high employment, such as the Maritimes, concerning the prospects for the coming months because, according to reports, less building is projected there for the coming months than in recent years and therefore—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the minister might be allowed to reply briefly, but when the hon. member asks a general question in which he invites the minister to make a forecast about the situation in a particular part of the country I doubt whether he should be allowed to do so at this time. However, the minister might be allowed to reply briefly and then the Chair will recognize the hon. member for York South.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the question might have been more properly addressed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration who has offices all over the country. I would like to state that the April housing figures, if extended, show 250,000 housing starts which is the highest in Canada's history.

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP—COMPLETION OF CABINET STUDY—POLICY STATEMENT—PUBLICATION OF REPORT

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Acting Prime Minister. I know that the question has been asked on previous occasions, but I should like to know whether the Acting Prime Minister can tell the House if the Cabinet has completed or almost completed the study of the report by the Minister of National Revenue on foreign ownership and whether the House may expect a statement of policy on that important question before the end of June?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of National Revenue has not yet submitted a report to cabinet.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether he can give the House any idea as to the timetable in the government's mind with regard to the receipt of the report and the statement of policy to follow it?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the Minister of National Revenue has threatened to keep the cabinet busy all July discussing this question.

Mr. Baldwin: God help the country.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that both the Minister of National Revenue and the Prime Minister have stated that this report of the Minister of National Revenue is a cabinet document and will not be made public. If my understanding is right, may I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether reconsideration of this decision is likely to be made by the cabinet and, if not, whether the cabinet will consider the question of publishing at least the information contained in the report of the Minister of National Revenue, if not the policy suggestions?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I think what the public has a right to expect, and it is our intention to supply it, is a statement of government policy in this area. I will take under consideration and refer to my colleagues the suggestion that some of the background information might, with profit, be published.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

QUEBEC—CONTINUATION OF AGREEMENTS RESPECTING AID TO INDUSTRIAL CENTRES

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Could the hon. minister tell the House whether aid for industrial economic expansion of major centres will be continued, extending the agreement due to expire within a few months?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of which agreement the hon. member is referring to as there are several. Could he be a little more explicit?

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, I understand there are agreements with major centres, such as the City of Montreal, for instance, expiring within a few months, covering aid for industrial economic development of such centres. That is what I am inquiring about.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, the decision was taken when it was announced in this House that the aid program would be for a two-year period only and that it would then be discontinued.

Mr. Latulippe: I should like to put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Could the minister tell the House whether he is considering the possibility of maintaining the aid granted to industries, through some conditions established under a decentralization program which could serve as incentive to designated regions outside metropolitan areas?

Mr. Marchand: I suppose so, Mr. Speaker.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—REINTRODUCTION OF VOLUNTARY GUIDELINES—OTHER MEASURES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. As the cost of living has increased during the past three months at an annual rate of 7.2 per cent, showing that inflation has not been licked but is growing at a steadily increasing rate, is it the intention of the government to have the Prices and Incomes Commission reintroduce voluntary guidelines, as it did 18 months ago, or does the government have some other plan in mind for checking this rising inflation?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I think that if my hon. friend looks at his figures again he will find that the year to year increase up to the end of April was 1.9 per cent, not 7.2 per cent. What he is doing is making the obvious error he often makes of taking the three months figure, multiplying it by four and saying that this is the annual figure, which just does not happen.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Is the minister not aware that the cost of living has been rising at an annual rate of 7.2 per cent a year during the three months period, a very important part of the year, and has been steadily increasing month by month for the past three months? What is he going to do about it? Is he going to continue doing nothing?

Mr. Benson: All I can do is to say that my hon. friend is wrong again.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I have a final supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that this will be a supplementary question. The second question asked by the hon. gentleman was substantially the same as his first question. Certainly he has a right to ask a supplementary and will be recognized for that purpose.

Mr. Hees: My supplementary question is on behalf of the Canadian people. Are the minister and the government going to do something to try to check inflation, or does the minister, like the Prime Minister, consider that it has been licked.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance very seriously—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: I think it is important that we know, Mr. Speaker. Is it the view of the Minister of Finance that inflation is licked?

Mr. Benson: It is nice to have a serious question from the opposite side. I do not think that inflation can ever be assumed to be licked.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ALLEGED CONTINGENCY PLAN FOR PRICE AND WAGE CONTROLS—OPPORTUNITY FOR DISCUSSION

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. It has now become public knowledge that the government has a contingency plan for price and wage controls. Can the Acting Prime Minister indicate whether the nature of this plan will be made public and also if in fact it has been made known to the provinces so that proper discussion can take place at that level?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): I do not know what the authority is for my hon. friend's preamble to the question. We have of course been studying the question of price and wage controls if those should become necessary. The implication of the question is that we have a cut and dried plan for this purpose. This is not so. There are various alternatives that could be employed if the circumstances arose.

Mr. Baldwin: A new government would help.

Mr. Lundrigan: Perhaps I might have prefaced my question by saying that the Prime Minister made this public last evening on the national television network. The Acting Prime Minister might be looking for a job when his boss returns from Moscow.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should not make a statement before asking his supplementary; he should ask the supplementary question.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, you have got to inform these ministers. May I ask if the contingency plan which was made public knowledge last evening by the Prime Minister will be sprung on the country like the War Measures Act, or will some means of consultation be brought about so we can talk about the plan?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INFLATION—PRICES' FORECAST FOR 1971

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance perhaps an even more serious question. To follow the line that we have been following, I wish to ask him whether he or his advisers have made the kind of study that would give them a notion of the forecast of the likely curve of prices in Canada for the remainder of 1971? Can he inform the House what they anticipate happening, from all the evidence they have now, in the next six or seven months?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will be doing exactly that in my budget.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ASSISTANCE TO EAST PAKISTAN REFUGEES NOW IN INDIA

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. In light of reports that a million and a half refugees have crossed from East Pakistan into West Bengal and India, and that the number of such refugees is estimated as likely to rise to five million, and in view of the impossibility of the government of India coping with this influx, has the government of Canada communicated or, if not, will it communicate at once with the government of India and offer relief in the form of cash, relief materials and urgently needed transport facilities, to be administered by the Indian government or by such agencies as the International Red Cross or Oxfam of Canada so that this immense tragedy can be alleviated?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have been in touch with the Indian government. Indeed, this morning I received the High Commissioner of India, who once again brought to our attention the great tragedy that has taken place in that subcontinent. I indicated to him, as I have to the House, that the Canadian government is prepared to offer assistance in the care of these refugees.

However, it is my understanding that at the present time the Indian government is directing its requests for assistance primarily to multilateral agencies. The United Nations high commissioner for refugees is visiting India to assess the nature and extent of the refugee problem, and we are awaiting a report.

Mr. Brewin: Has the government communicated with the United Nations high commissioner in charge of refugees and intimated its willingness to make practical assistance avialable?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, our general attitude is known to all of the international agencies. We have already offered token help through the Canadian Red Cross. We indicated to that organization that this was simply an indication that we are prepared to help as soon as we have requests indicating how we can best provide assistance. I want to assure the House, and I am sure that in this the government has the support of all hon. members, that we do stand ready to help substantially in this great tragedy.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question regarding the offer of assistance through the International Red Cross. I believe the Canadian government offered some $50,000. I also understand that the International Red Cross has not been able to operate in Pakistan. I now want to ask the minister how that money is going to be used, and through what agencies?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I said, and if I did I would like to correct it, that we have made any assistance available through the International Red Cross. I understand that agency has not been operative in the area. We made our assistance available through the Canadian Red Cross. It is clear that the national Red Cross societies will be able to be effective, but not at the moment the International Red Cross.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the minister if the Canadian Red Cross is operating in East Pakistan, or for that matter in West Pakistan, and whether or not the Canadian government intends to increase the amount of money which it is prepared to make available for refugee work in that area?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, as I reported to the House the other day, and as those who have followed the exchange of correspondence between the Secretary General of the United Nations and the President of Pakistan will have noted, the government of Pakistan has not yet indicated the extent of the need in Pakistan itself but has indicated that if any relief is to be distributed it is to be distributed through the Pakistan government itself. The help we have offered so far, and which was referred to by the previous questioner, is in relation to the refugees situated in India. This is the kind of relief on which everyone is concentrating at the moment.

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—ONTARIO PROTEST CONCERNING INFRINGEMENT OF JURISDICTION BY LEGAL AID PROJECT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice if he has received a complaint from the Attorney General of the province of Ontario protesting that certain projects under the Opportunities for Youth program constitute an intervention into exclusively provincial matters and that there has been no prior consultation with the provincial government or its agencies?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I have received a letter from the Attorney General of Ontario, Mr. Speaker. I am aware that some grants have been made by several federal departments and agencies to individual groups, involving legal aid. I recognize also that this involves the question of federal-provincial relations and the issue of the appropriate controls to be exercised over students participating in neighbourhood legal aid services. I am in the course of writing to all Attorneys General of all the provinces for the purpose of exploring what role the federal government should assume in the matter of legal aid. The letter received from the Attorney General of Ontario will be dealt with within that context.

OPPORTUNITY FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—APPROVAL OF PROJECTS BY QUEBEC

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State. Can the minister advise if he has an arrangement with the province of Quebec whereby all such projects which involve exclusive provincial jurisdiction within the province must first be approved by that province and/or its agencies before they become effective?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am not sure that I have understood the question, Mr. Speaker. Is the hon. member referring to the Opportunities for Youth program?

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pelletier: In that case, Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes.

STEPS TO MAINTAIN EXEMPTION FROM INCOME TAX OF WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE RECIPIENTS

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that our war veterans who are entitled to receive war veterans allowance are exempt from income tax but effective April 1 this year they are expected to receive the major portion of their payments as old age security pension and guaranteed income supplement, both of which are taxable, what steps is the minister taking to ensure that our veterans will continue to enjoy the exemption they have so justly merited?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I am considering a recommendation made to me by the Minister of Veterans Affairs, Mr. Speaker.

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN INCOME TAX EXEMPTIONS FOR SINGLE AND MARRIED PEOPLE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the concern of the average working person and the proposals put forward by many people, when bringing down his budget will the minister give consideration to increasing the exemptions from income tax for single and married people?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this was a proposal in the white paper we brought forward over a year ago.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION

PROVISION OF NEW OFFICE IN CUMBERLAND COUNTY, NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Can the minister inform the House if the Unemployment Insurance Commission is giving consideration to establishing offices in addition to those now available in Nova Scotia, and will one of those new offices be located in Cumberland County?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the re-organization of the Unemployment Insurance Commission will necessitate the opening of about 60 to 65 new offices across Canada, five of which I think, from memory, will be in the province of Nova Scotia. The instruction to the Unemployment Insurance Commission is to establish them in those centres where the maximum good can be done for the public and not to take into consideration political partisanship in the least.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

USE OF PORTION OF REVENUE FROM ALCOHOL TO COMBAT ALCOHOLISM

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Having in mind the action taken recently by two provincial governments, Prince Edward Island and British Columbia, is any consideration being given at the federal level to earmarking a specific portion of the tremendous revenue received from the sale of alcohol to be used to combat alcoholism and promote temperance in the country?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that the hon. member's question is very general in scope and that it is the kind of question which normally ought to be placed on the order paper or it could be discussed at the time of adjournment or considered as a representation to the minister.

EDUCATION

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION COURSES

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In light of the importance of business and managerial skill to the independent and technological development of the country, is the government, by way of the Gray report or otherwise, going to take a position on federal assistance and encouragement for business administration programs or courses in the universities and in industry?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member knows, we now pay half the operating costs of all higher education in Canada.

Mr. McCutcheon: Accepting the fact that education is a provincial responsibility, will the government meet with the provinces and industry with a view to improving the number and quality of business administration courses?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it is the aim of the Canadian government, of course, to increase the efficiency of business enterprise. I am sure that my colleagues who are more concerned with these matters do try to support, in one way or another, the schools of business administration. I am sure my hon. friend would agree that one of the best ways we can do this is by continuing the policy we have now of paying half the cost of such schools.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION

OPENING OF NEW OFFICES—STAFF REDUCTIONS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, my question has now changed to a supplementary to the Minister of Labour about the new Unemployment Insurance Commission offices. In view of the fact that some cities, such as Saint John, New Brunswick, will have a serious reduction of staff, when will the minister be making a formal announcement so that we may judge whether some of these reductions will bring about a very serious decrease in facilities for the public?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I do intend to make a full report in a few weeks time. Proof of the fact that re-organization will be done on a non-political basis is the fact that there will be an office in the riding of the hon. gentleman who raised the question earlier.

Mr. Bell: Will the minister give an assurance that there will not be any changes or transfers of staff until the announcement is made?

Mr. Mackasey: I cannot give the assurance that there will be no change in staff, Mr. Speaker, but I can give the hon. gentleman the assurance that the UIC staff is being kept informed through its representatives in the trade unions and every protection is being given to the present staff. There will be no diminution in the size of the staff but it would be naïve to assume that there will not be some disruption. We will expect some of the staff, in light of our desire to make our service more effective, to accept movement from one office to another.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Labour. In the absence of the Prime Minister, would he use all his influence on his cabinet colleagues to give the unemployment situation in this country top priority inasmuch as he can substantiate his argument very well by the fact that he has announced the opening of 65 new unemployment insurance offices across the country?

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

STEPS TO PROVIDE ASSISTANCE TO PERSONS WITHOUT BENEFITS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I have a question for the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday I asked the minister if he would announce at the latest by Tuesday what plans, if any, the government intends to implement to compensate for the cessation of seasonal unemployment insurance benefits and he said he would have something to announce by Tuesday. He will not be in the House tomorrow so I wonder whether he is prepared to say something today or will he be prepared to make an announcement on Wednesday?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): I should prefer to make it on Wednesday, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman has no objection in view of the fact that he first brought the question to the attention of the House.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NUMBER OUT OF WORK MORE THAN FOUR MONTHS WHO ARE RECEIVING BENEFITS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Labour. When the minister makes his statement with regard to unemployment insurance, would he give the House an estimate of the proportion of the massive number of 348,000 Canadians reported to have been out of work for more than four months as of the middle of April who receive unemployment insurance benefits and those to whom such benefits are not available?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): I shall try to be as factual as possible on Wednesday when I make the statement, Mr. Speaker.

MANPOWER

SUGGESTED TRANSFER OF STAFF FROM IMMIGRATION TO MANPOWER

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the great number of people seeking employment through manpower offices across Canada and in view of the decline in the number of immigrants coming to Canada, which means less work and overstaffing in the immigration offices, does the minister intend to transfer some staff from immigration to manpower offices to help with the extremely heavy load in those offices?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we are, of course, constantly examining the best location of the staff available to the department as a whole. Although there has been some decline in applications for immigration, this certainly has in no way reduced the load to the point where we can seriously consider reducing staff to any significant extent.

In view of the complaints received by Information Canada that in some cases tax information for new Canadians has not been available in English, will the minister say whether this has been brought to the attention of the Department of National Revenue?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister without Portfolio): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt whether that question ought to be addressed to the minister responsible for Information Canada. If we were to follow the lead given by the hon. member, perhaps all questions might be directed to the minister in his capacity as Information Canada. PROPOSED TRANS-ALASKA PIPELINE SYSTEM—ACTION FOLLOWING MEETING OF UNITED STATES AND CANADIAN OFFICIALS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister in his capacity as Secretary of State for External Affairs regarding the discussions which were held some two weeks ago between officials of his department and officials of the government of the United States concerning the danger of ecological damage arising out of the TAPS program. Have any decisions been taken as a result of this exchange of opinions, and what initiatives does the Canadian government now intend to take following these discussions?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, so far as I know no decisions have yet been made in the United States on whether they will proceed with the TAPS program. I will be visiting Washington on June 10 to meet with my counterpart, the Secretary of State, in order to discuss the general question of pollution and I will be following the matter up at that time.

Mr. Douglas: Although the minister has made several protests in the House and on Canadian television, has he made any formal representations to the United States government regarding Canadian concern about the proposed TAPS route? Would he also be prepared to table such a letter of protest, if one exists?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I reported in the House at some length on the representations made by the Canadian government to the United States government recently and I set out there exactly the position that we took with respect to the dangers of ecological damage arising out of the building of that line.

LEVEL OF CANADIAN DOLLAR—BUDGET ACTION TO RESTORE COMPETITIVE POSITION OF EXPORT INDUSTRIES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the statement made by the Prime Minister last night on the television program "Weekend" that "the Canadian dollar is so strong indeed that it is hurting our export trade because people are finding it cheaper to import goods and more difficult to sell them abroad," is the government planning to take action in the forthcoming budget to restore the former competitive position of, in particular, our labour-intensive export industries?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, for an answer to that question I think my hon. friend will have to wait for the budget. The question of the value of the Canadian dollar is a very complicated one, as he well knows.

Mr. Hees: Can the minister now advise the House when the budget will be brought down? On what day?

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Has his department been conducting any advertising campaigns indicating the availability of jobs in the fruit picking industry and in the mines?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will have to look into the question of exactly what advertisements are used in regard to each of these. In a general way, of course, we bring to the attention of potential workers openings which generally exist in mines and specific agricultural opportunities. I am not sure of the openings existing at the moment beyond the ones in our own offices.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, again I should like to get up to date figures for the Leader of the Opposition. In a general way the program has been oversubscribed for most countries, but I would have to ascertain up to the moment how many students have been accepted by host countries.

Mr. Stanfield: When the minister gives that information the next time he is in the House, will he also advise the House whether the program will get off on schedule and whether there have been any changes in its administration?

FORECAST UNEMPLOYMENT RATE FOR 1971

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the statement made on Thursday by the Minister of Finance that the government is going to achieve a rate of real growth for 1971 of between 5 and 5.5 per cent, can the Acting Prime Minister tell the House specifically what unemployment rate the government anticipates for the same period, 1971?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has indicated that he expects there will be a decline in the rate of seasonal unemployment throughout the year—

Has the government taken any position regarding this mooted dam? If so, what is the position of the government?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Because this very large dam would be built on an important salmon river which is also navigable, I am sure the federal government would be concerned about its construction.

Mr. Rose: Can the minister tell us whether he or his department has entered into discussions with the government of British Columbia concerning this matter?

Mr. Davis: We have appointed several of our officials who are knowledgeable in these matters to work with the British Columbia Energy Board on studies involving the development of all of the Fraser River system, including dams at various sites, such as the Moran Dam.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

POSSIBLE WAGE AND PRICE CONTROLS—ASCERTAINING OF VIEWS OF PROVINCES AND GENERAL PUBLIC

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. Perhaps he could take it as notice. Could the hon. gentleman ascertain, and report to the House tomorrow either on motions or during the question period, what plans the government has to elicit a response from the general public and the provinces concerning the contingency plan the government has in mind in connection with wage and price controls in order that it will not be sprung on the Canadian people in view of the very great concern today about over-involvement of government in the economy?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I do not think it would be appropriate to hold consultations of that kind at this time. The provinces could, of course, at any time, if they wished, establish price or wage controls. They have the constitutional right to do so. The federal government can only operate in this field, I should think, during periods of some emergency. I therefore do not believe consultations of the kind suggested would be appropriate.

Mr. Lundrigan: Have the provinces been advised of the option, with any suggestion that they should impose price and wage controls?

Mr. Sharp: The provinces are very well aware of their constitutional authority.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

FAILURE TO HIRE SASKATCHEWAN WELDERS FOR PIPELINE CONSTRUCTION PROJECT IN PROVINCE

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker. It is based on the practice of hiring pipeline welders in Edmonton or Winnipeg only for a Trans-Canada construction job in Saskatchewan, a practice which effectively prevents the hiring of welders from Saskatchewan. Would the minister investigate such hiring procedures and determine whether Saskatchewan welders are not entitled to a fair chance of such job opportunities?

[Mr. Davis.]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): I am not sure if this is a question I can answer adequately. Perhaps it should be directed to the Minister of Manpower. But it seems very likely to be a problem coming within provincial jurisdiction since it concerns hiring arrangements.

Mr. Skoberg: Could I ask the Minister of Manpower if he has any indication whether any Saskatchewan welders could be hired for work on this project?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DETERMINATION OF PAYMENT FOR WHEAT—EXTENSION OF APPLICATION TO FLAXSEED, RYE AND RAPESEED

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration) moved that Bill C-238, an Act to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

He said: The bill before us contains a number of items designed to take account of certain changes and special situations affecting the grains industry.

The Canadian Wheat Board is, of course, experiencing a very successful year in sales and in the movement of grain to export markets with the co-operation of all sectors of the agricultural community. Sales figures are extremely heartening after several years of difficulty, largely as a result of the world market situation. Trade was reduced and the exports of many countries were affected. Special difficulty attached to Canadian grain exports, particularly of wheat, because of the desire on the part of the Wheat Board, in full consultation with the producers of western Canada, to lend stability to the international market in the hope that the International Grains Arrangement now coming to an end would be ratified and would be fully effective. In the end, this attempt to secure this objective, one in which we very strongly believed, came to nought, and it was necessary for the Wheat Board to move vigorously in competition with our fellow exporters to obtain a greater share of the world wheat market, as well as to gain a share of the course grains market larger than we had enjoyed previously. These attempts are now proving successful and we see our grain exports achieving levels which tend to show promise of a record year in terms of total bushels of grain exported.

The changes proposed in the bill have to do with a number of special issues arising from developments which have been necessary to keep our grain competitive and our system operating as effectively as possible. We have, of course, seen changes in the Canada Grains Act which permits Canadian wheat to be sold in markets abroad on a protein graded basis. These resulted in the basic grades for wheat being changed as of the beginning of the next crop year from the former Canadian No. 1 Northern, No. 2 Northern and No. 1 Hard to the new grade, No. 1 Canada Western. This necessitated changes being made in the Act to allow the initial price for wheat to be set on the basis of the new grade instead of on the basis of the previous standard grade. In order to deal with the possibility that from year to year in the future modifications may have to be made to the grading, or a new grade introduced in response to customer requirements, the bill before us will allow more flexibility in determining which grade of a particular grain shall be used as the hallmark for the initial price in a particular crop year. In addition, the bill recognizes the changes in the grading system which are taking place.

In the last few months the Wheat Board has outlined to producers a new quota system under which the producers themselves may assign their eligible acres to the grain of their choice for sales purposes without relation to planting practices. This measure of additional flexibility is recognized in the small changes the bill proposes with regard to the quota system.

The bill also contains a proposal under which, in certain circumstances, the crop year could be extended for the purpose of receiving grain, principally to equalize delivery opportunities as between producers. Some difficulty has arisen in the past with regard to this. Though desirous of extending the crop year with respect to the delivery of certain amounts of grain we found our hands tied by the law as it now stands. In these circumstances, the price in the subsequent crop year had to be applied to the balance of the grain delivered. It will now be possible to extend the crop year under arrangements which would allow the current price to continue for the balance of the amount outstanding. This provision will, I am sure, be recognized by hon. members as introducing additional equity to the quota system.

The bill before us also proposes some improvement in regard to the penalties applicable under the Canadian Wheat Board Act. It is of interest to every producer that the rules which are set out in the act, and which are designed essentially to provide equity between producers, be adhered to. It is a disadvantage to any producer if these rules are broken at his expense, in the interests of some other person who is trying to obtain a greater share of the market or otherwise and who thus ignores the principle of orderly marketing. Producer organizations have generally requested this improvement, this strengthening of the act, in terms of enforcement, and we propose to do this in the bill.

At the same time, it is proposed to allow for some summary procedures to be used in those cases where, as so often will happen, the producer has no interest in disputing his liability or his breach of the regulations. In such cases, without the formality of court procedures it will be possible to complete the process of enforcing the appropriate penalty. To safeguard the rights of the producer and his interests in case he should protest his innocence or otherwise want to defend himself against allegations made against him, he will be able to transfer the case into one of the kind we have known before, namely one where the full protection of the court and of due process will be available to him.

While I do not want to spend a great deal of time talking about the bill and the general changes that are made in it, perhaps I should say a few additional words about one further change in the bill, one that has received a good deal of attention. This is the proposal to permit at some later date, should it become desirable, an extension of the act to one or any of the crops of rapeseed, rye and flax.

When the Canadian Wheat Board Act was before Parliament some years ago, such extension was allowed for barley and oats, and later on the act was extented to them. In placing the power to so extend the act before Parliament, I do so recognizing that there are some fairly strong feelings on both sides of the issue throughout the prairie region. There are many who become much excited at the very suggestion of an extension. There are others, I must say including most of the major producer groups, who have asked for some years now for the extension of board marketing to these grains.

It is my view that a good deal of discussion and an increase in the amount of information available about the impact of the marketing systems is required before any final decision can be taken on this very important question. Once again, I want to emphasize the fact that these enabling provisions contained in the bill do not indicate any intention one way or the other in regard to changing the marketing system; they are simply in the bill in order that, if a decision is taken, one that has the full support of the producers, we will be in a position to act on it thereafter in orderly fashion.

Producers are concerned about a number of things in the existing marketing system. One problem that they have always had before them, I think, is price changes from day to day in the non-board marketed grains. Frequently, producers express the desire to have an average price or pooled price available to them. In discussion with the producers the question has arisen whether this can be obtained in any one way or whether in fact there are a number of ways of providing for a pooling solution to what they consider to be a problem.

The other serious problem that afflicts some of these non-board marketed grains is whether the price is set in a manner that is fair to the producers or whether some returns are retained elsewhere in the system at their expense. This is a further question that requires constant study and consideration.

Concerned about the marketing of oil seeds in particular, last year I appointed a committee to study the question and report back on an appropriate marketing system for oil seeds. The committee was composed of distinguished representatives of the rapeseed industry, including two well-known farmers who themselves were growers of rapeseed. This committee reported in June of 1970 and indicated that, in its view, not enough information was available to producers at the present time upon which a final or appropriate decision could be made about the kind of marketing system that should be applicable to these grains. The committee suggested that once sufficient information became available to the producers, the producers should be given the chance by means of plebiscite to determine the best possible system. The immediate challenge that this posed to us was the obtaining of additional information for producers; and we have proceeded by asking the same committee to continue its work in an attempt to develop the appropriate information. It was with this background that the enabling sections were placed into the act.

At the same time, my concern about the rapeseed marketing system in particular led me to have frequent discussions with the Canadian Rapeseed Association and the Winnipeg Grain Exchange regarding the problems that existed, or seemed to exist, in the futures market and the spreads that could exist between the price received by the farmer and the apparent end marketing price.

I should like to pay tribute to these two organizations for the co-operation that they have given in attempting to locate difficulties in the market system and pricing mechanisms as they affect the individual farmer. I also thank them for the action they have taken in gaining the co-operation of all sections of the industry in putting into place a number of improvements to the marketing system. This kind of co-operation is certainly welcome, is very much in the interests of the producers, and should be known and understood by them.

In dealing with the legislation before the House, it is my hope that what we will try to do is to continue to give to the producers the maximum amount of information about the difficulties in the various marketing systems; that we will continue to maintain an atmosphere where the emphasis is on information rather than recrimination on trying to understand the merits of the systems that may be available. It is my clear view that no change in regard to any of the grains should be made without the fullest producer consent. Indeed, it would be folly to do otherwise. Sections of the trade other than the producers would not want any such change made, and I do not understand why anyone would want to make a change except with the fullest consent and understanding of the producers. Certainly, I would be happy to make clear my view that the consent of the producers should be obtained in the clearest possible fashion before any change is contemplated. I might also say that my view is that the very fact that we want to talk about finding the best possible system of marketing should in no way lead one to the judgment that the system is going to be changed.

I think the changes contained in this bill will improve the ability of the Canadian Wheat Board to continue its strenuous efforts to maximize the return to the Canadian producer by obtaining, in the most effective way possible, the best price and the best-sized market available to him in the world. I urge hon. members to give their support to these amendments and to assist in seeing that they become law in order that the Wheat Board is thus given additional ability and power to help the Canadian farmers. I, therefore, have the pleasure of moving the adoption of this bill on second reading and its referral to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

[Mr. Lang.]

• (3:10 p.m.)

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I think I can join with other members of this House, particularly those in the official opposition, in welcoming the introduction of this measure to the House of Commons. Anything that can be done to enhance the economic welfare of the agricultural industry is always welcome. The government has introduced Bill C-238, an act to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, today for second reading and, as the minister says, referral to the committee for further study.

In introducing this bill in the Commons for first reading on April 21, the minister responsible for the Wheat Board also tabled a statement as to why certain changes should be made in the act. His statement started off by referring to the fact that the changes take into consideration the introduction of protein grading. This is good as the farmers and the grain trade are all in favour of the protein grading of wheat as outlined in our new Bill C-175, an act respecting grain.

The next part of his statement refers to the possible extension of the board system of marketing to rapeseed, rye and flaxseed. This suggestion, as farmers and members of the grain trade know, has stirred up another hornet's nest as this government seems prone to do from time to time, and I will have more to say about that matter a little later in my remarks. The minister went on to outline several other reasons for amending the act, including the fact that the quota delivery base has to be adjusted to the assignable acreage feature in the new quota system.

With the introduction of a pre-seeding announcement of minimum quota levels for an ensuing year, it has become necessary to make allowance for those years in which the minimum quota levels may not be achieved and it may be necessary to allow farmers to deliver the balance of the announced quota levels after the crop year has ended. This is an area that can become somewhat complicated and frustrating to our farmers. However, this government seems good at that.

The final area of concern in the minister's April 21 statement in relation to this bill dealt with the producers having stressed the desirability of the effective administration of the act with regard to grain deliveries. To this end, it was considered desirable to revise the penalty clauses in the act.

I think it would be proper at this point to suggest that it is my opinion, and I believe the opinion of a great many farmers and people connected with the grain trade, that it is high time we had a debate in the House of Commons on the present status of the Canadian Wheat Board; its record, what can be done to improve its functions in relation to Canada's very important grain industry and, in general, to defend the Wheat Board against some of the unwarranted attacks made against it in recent months. Like private industry, federal or provincial governments, the field of education and so on, we have to take stock periodically as to whether policies, functions and general administration in each of these areas are meeting with approval of the public and providing the service that is necessary in this very competitive world.

Crown corporations such as the Wheat Board should be no exception. So, it was with a great deal of general satisfaction, I believe, that the public responded to the statement of the board some time ago that they would welcome a committee being established to do a complete survey or analysis of the present operations of the Wheat Board and come up with suggestions for improvements. This committee was set up on the initiative of the Canadian Wheat Board and was headed by Mr. Merril W. Menzies, one of the most knowledgeable men in the grain trade. Mr. A. T. Baker of the Alberta pool and Dr. J. L. Liebfried of the Canadian Wheat Board were two more of the committee members and, just to give it an international scope, two other experts, one from the United States and one from Europe, were added to the committee. The committee known as the Canadian Marketing Review Committee was established in July, 1970 and brought down its report in January, 1971.

Several of the main recommendations of the committee were that the Canadian Wheat Board should continue to be an integral part of our Canadian grain marketing system, that a permanent grains policy group should be established with the chief commissioner of the Wheat Board as vice-chairman, with producer appointed members making up the majority of membership in this group. The report went on to emphasize protein grading, which has already been established and which came into effect April 1, this year. Other suggestions of course dealt with improvements to our transportation, of grain storage, and related matters too numerous to mention here. Suffice to say it was not a whitewash job, as some critics of the Canadian Wheat Board are prone to think, but a very comprehensive but belated study and review of the whole grain marketing situation.

I should like to interrupt my general remarks at this point to quote from an article which appeared on the editorial page of the Western Producer for May 13, under the heading "Report on Canadian grain marketing". It reads:

> For a number of reasons, the recent report of the Canadian Grain Marketing Review Committee which was considered in a general way in this column in a recent issue merits more detailed appraisal. Perhaps first among the reasons is the fact that this review of Canadian grain marketing was really the first public examination of this important subject since the Canadian Wheat Board was established in 1935. The six-man review committee took its assignment seriously and subjected the many aspects of Canadian grain marketing to a piercing examination and produced a report which is both frank and challenging.
> In this and subsequent issues The Western Producer intends to discuss the review committee's report under four headings: the importance of the Canadian Wheat Board, the development of Canadian grain policy, grain quantity and quality, and fiinally, salesmanship.
> The assignment was "to evaluate Canada's system of selling grain under changing world conditions." The committee itself put the assignment in a more detailed way in the first paragraph of its 52-page report when it said: "The Canadian Grain Marketing Review Committee was established to make an extensive examination of Canada's grain marketing system with special reference to wheat, and to recommend specific changes designed to increase the effectiveness of Canadian grain marketing, starting from the premise that the Canadian Wheat Board system of centralized selling would continue in effect".

The article goes on in a laudatory manner to support the premise of this report on the Wheat Board. I might say, in looking around the Commons, that I am disappointed there are not more members on the government side to listen to and take part in this debate regarding one of our most important Crown corporations.

Mr. MacEachen: You have just six on your own side.

Mr. Southam: It should be mentioned in passing, Mr. Speaker, that, going back over the years, the Canadian Wheat Board has been one of the main cornerstones in the general structure of the marketing of farmers' grains. The prairie pools, the private line elevators, the Winnipeg Grain Exchange, and last but not least the practically now defunct International Wheat Agreement being the others.

It must be said that the Canadian Wheat Board's measure of success is actually no better or worse than the government's policies that are established in the area of international trade, because it has to be remembered that Canada has to export roughly 75 per cent of her average grain crops in order for farmers to survive, and at a price that should be commensurate with the cost of production. The current lapse in the International Wheat Agreement has caused untold grievous harm to our grain farmers in this respect.

The Wheat Board was first established in the early thirties by the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett's Conservative administration with a lot of opposition from the private grain trade. When the Liberals took office under Prime Minister Mackenzie King they threw out the Canadian Wheat Board. However, such a hue and cry went up from farmers that it was quickly re-established.

It is very interesting to note however that over the years, and with the change of governments from time to time, it seems in reviewing the history of the board that it ran into most trouble when the Liberals were in office. For instance, in addition to the instance I mentioned a moment ago when the Grits tried to disband the board early in its history, I believe it was about August 1, 1946, the then Liberal government signed a British preferential wheat agreement, to last over a four-year period, under which Canadian farmers were asked to take roughly a dollar per bushel less than world market prices. This cost our grain industry approximately $600 million. The government of the day tried, under the late Hon. James Gardiner, to pacify farmers by putting a token payment of $65 million into the annual pool. However, the reaction among farmers was bad and this did not enhance the Canadian Wheat Board image in any way. Furthermore it was felt, as expressed by the United Grain Growers at the time, that the farmer, to a much greater extent than other interests, contributed both toward keeping down the cost of living in Canada and providing cheap food for Britain. A payment much larger than $65 million would have been necessary to offset this undue $600 million contribution by our Canadian farmers.

Canadian Wheat Board Act

• (3:20 p.m.)

Following a prairie-wide campaign in 1949, oats and barley were brought under control of the Wheat Board. However, there were still grave problems in the international grain market and, after some 12 years of discussion behind the scenes, the International Wheat Agreement was consummated bringing together between 50 and 60 importing and exporting nations in grains marketing. This was a major breakthrough and worked very successfully for 18 long years until it was allowed to lapse in the spring of 1967. Again, a Liberal government had a part to play in the lapsing of this agreement.

From 1949 to 1954, when the Korean War came into the picture, the Wheat Board did not experience too much trouble. However, Canada began to build up wheat surpluses amounting to some 850 million bushels by 1957. At this time in history it was fortunate that the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker took over the reins of government and our party immediately set to work to relieve the situation, much to the gratification of the Canadian Wheat Board, by establishing a positive trading relationship with Japan, particularly in the field of textile import quotas. Then came the major breakthrough into the Chinese market as a result of the government policy of establishing large credits to the Chinese government over a three-year period. The first major sale of wheat in this instance amounted to $428 million.

By stepping up sales to other countries through better trading relations, by the new international wheat price agreement of 1961 which raised the price of wheat by 12 cents per bushel, and by the Conservative policy of revaluing the Canadian dollar which gave the farmer another 15 cents per bushel, the Canadian Wheat Board was able to pay the western farmer the biggest final payment in Wheat Board history in 1962, and also get the quotas wide open for the first time in ten years.

From 1963 to 1967 things went along more or less smoothly in grain marketing under the Board with the present government cashing in on our trade and credit policies. However, the big catastrophe came in the spring of 1967 at Geneva when our government, in conjunction with the U.S.A. and several other major exporters of wheat, decided to allow the International Wheat Agreement to lapse for 11 months, allegedly under the pretense that a gentleman's agreement had been reached that oats, barley and rye would be brought into a new International Grains Arrangement along with wheat on July 1, 1968.

I might interject here to mention something of interest. In the early part of this year, I believe in February, when the Federation of Agriculture for Canada was meeting at the Skyline Hotel, one of the guest speakers was Mr. Tony Dechant, President of the United States National Farm Union. This is one of the most responsible farm organizations in the United States. During his address to our Federation of Agriculture, he finally admitted that following the Geneva Conference in 1967 it was the United States which first broke the gentleman's agreement and set the pattern for the downward trend in pricing in world markets, especially in respect of wheat. This was very interesting. I mention it because I feel, as a result of following this very closely as a member of the Agriculture Committee, that our friends across the way were responsible not only for damaging the general wellbeing of Canadian farmers but also farmers in other major exporting countries. I am not suggesting we should be anti-American, but I do suggest that this is an area in which the Canadian government, through the intervention of some of the cabinet ministers, should have held discussions with their counterparts in the United States such as President Johnson, the Secretary for Agriculture in the United States and others, with a view to curtailing the price cutting. Canada has been in trouble ever since and the loss to our Canadian grain farmers has been a sad, sad story.

Going back to February 1965 the Wheat Board, under the direction of the Hon. Mitchell Sharp, the minister then responsible for the Board, ran into difficulties when he ordered it to cut wheat prices in competition with the United States cuts, thus causing our farmers a loss of some $90 million in the annual pool returns.

Coming up to 1969, in April, the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) was forced to advise the Canadian Wheat Board to cut prices to compete with our U.S. neighbours. Canada still continued to lose out on sales, and quotas went down from six bushels to five, then to four and, in some cases farmers were only able to deliver three bushels. All during this period of time since 1967, the present government, instead of taking the blame for the mismanagement of grain selling, has allowed resentment in the farming community to grow and has allowed those who are seemingly not too familiar with the situation, or their own Liberal supporters who are only too ready to find a scapegoat, to continue to take pot shots at the Board rather than coming to the Board's defence as they should. Sure at times the Board may have been smug and a little careless perhaps, but by and large it had done a remarkably good job in spite of this government, and I trust this bill will assist them in doing even a better job.

Coming back to one particular section of the bill, namely the provision to allow rapeseed, flax and rye to be brought under the jurisdiction of the board at this time, I may say this is a very debatable provision. It is my humble opinion, Mr. Speaker, that the government should give serious consideration to holding a plebiscite among the grain producers of western Canada on this issue. There have been far too many occasions in the past when this government has jumped in with various proposed policies relative to agriculture without first getting an authentic consensus. Illustrations of this point would be the Lift program, the present debate over the grains stabilization program under Bill C-244 or, the most aggravating of all, Bill C-176. If a vote were taken among bona fide producers, I am sure it would quickly settle the argument and take the government off the political hook at the same time.

There are many conflicting opinions about the control of oilseeds in the market place at the moment. Mr. E. K. Turner, President of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, and Mr. J. O. Wright, Secretary of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, seem to favour the six major grains being brought under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. On the other hand, Mr. Walter Nelson, President of the Palliser Wheat Growers Association, an organization in the middle of our Saskatchewan pool area, takes a dim view of rye, flax and rapeseed being brought under the Board. He states that it would be a discouraging step in the wrong direction.

I must say that many farmers feel these are special cash crops over which they should have control in order to supplement their other annual income from time to time. Personally, I believe the government is in a bind on this issue since, because of its proposed grain stabilization policy, it may feel it is necessary to force the farmers, one and all, to place these grains under the Canadian Wheat Board for administration of the stabilization program if for no other reason. As I suggested earlier, I feel this issue should be settled by a plebiscite. There are many more comments I could make in respect of this bill but I am sure there are other western members, and my colleagues in particular, who will want an opportunity to discuss this piece of legislation in the House before it goes to the committee.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I think some of the things proposed in this bill are of a routine or housekeeping nature. For example, there are the changes in grades to accommodate the new procedures which are made possible under the new grains act, if that is the right term and I believe it is. These changes would make it possible to put in place a pricing mechanism which would fit in with the new grading procedures under the new act. Of course, this was to be expected.

I should like to say to the minister, through you, Mr. Speaker, that I am glad he is proceeding expeditiously in this regard so that maximum advantage may be attained. I think we will have to wait and see how the new pricing system, the opportunity to be more flexible, will work out. I do not think we can say at this point whether this will be a bad or a good thing. This has been done to some extent in that we have changed the initial price of a particular grain in mid-year to fit circumstances which were not foreseen at the beginning of the year. If the flexibility helps us to sell and reflects fairly the value of the grain, then surely that is the objective of the pricing system, whether it is operated by the Wheat Board or by the Winnipeg Grain Exchange. The yardstick by which you measure such an operation is how effectively it works and how fairly it reflects the demands that exist within the market to which we have access.

We will have to wait and see how the changes in the quota system work. I can foresee some difficulties when farmers try to adjust to this new system, when they try to decide in the spring what they will deliver, and when they try to establish the base upon which they will deliver during a full crop year. There might be some difficulty and some hardship, unless at some point in time the farmer can review his position. If the crop does not turn out as he expected, he will have to try to adjust to the circumstances in which he finds himself. Sooner or later, that fact will have to be recognized under the new quota system.

The extension of the crop year is a possibility which should be considered; in fact, it has been done before officially. In this way, the needs will be recognized. I hope we can attain the objectives which we have set for ourselves in this regard. Again, this bill will permit us to do what has to be done. A really difficult provision is the one regarding penalties under the Wheat Board Act and the manner in which those penalties are assessed. There is no question that if we are to have a quota system under the Wheat Board, this system must be observed because if it is not observed by the total community it will not work. If enough people break the rules and refuse to abide by them, we will have to go back to the old catch as catch can system and we will find ourselves running around with a truckload of grain from one elevator to another. If we do so, we will spend as much time trying to deliver grain as we spend on planting, which would be an unfortunate situation. I think that the penalties proposed by the minister are designed to forestall this possibility. I do not think any of us want to see them applied too severely, but again I say that we must do the job that must be done.

The bill also provides for the inclusion of flax, rye and rapeseed, but I do not know at what point in time. The minister is very ambivalent in this respect. He says in one breath that he will do it and in the next breath that perhaps we had better wait a bit and think that over. Perhaps some of the discussions which he had in Winnipeg with officials of the trade may have had some effect on his attitude. In the last press release the Minister issued in May, he stated:

> There have been producer representations made on this subject and it was for this reason that the enabling clause was included in the amendment to the act.

But he also said:

> But I repeat, the government has no immediate plan to change the marketing system for these grains. And I assure producers that before any such change is contemplated there will be thorough discussions with everyone involved.

I wonder what effect the minister thinks the stabilization program will have on the income of the individual farmer when a large part of his income will actually not be taken into account in the Wheat Board figures. One can see that this plan might work, although rather badly, when wheat, oats and barley are included, since these crops are pooled and since every farmer is going to receive the same price during the crop year. However, this situation will not necessarily apply to other major grains such as flax and rapeseed. In fact, the probability is that there will be a wide difference in what each producer receives. I, personally, have seen the price of flax fluctuate $1 a bushel between September and January or October and November of a given year. Rapeseed moves in the same fashion. As a matter of fact, the Vancouver future price moved between $3.41 a bushel and $2.87¼ a bushel between April 1 and April 2 of this year. The minister has never quite explained to the House how equity will be established under the stabilization plan between farmers who caught the high point of the market and ones who caught the low point of the market.

When the minister brought in this proposal, I thought one of his objectives in bringing these grains under the Canadian Wheat Board was to equalize the returns of farmers under the stabilization plan. This is the only real justification for a stabilization plan. But on May 11, he assured us that he had no intention whatsoever of doing it for that reason. I almost hesitate to ask him if he is introducing this proposal as a threat against the grains trade, so that some time in the future he can say to the companies involved, "Look, boys, if your price to the producer is not fair, there is a provision in the legislation which I can use." Is this a fair assumption to make?

In a press release on April 28 Mr. Atkinson, President of the National Farmers Union, said it had been the practice of grain companies dealing in rapeseed to take a premium at times of 25 cents to 50 cents a bushel, in addition to their regular commission. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I think Mr. Atkinson is a little extravagant in that statement. Last winter I made a rather thorough investigation. In November, I started to keep careful track of prices paid to producers and to the futures market. Of course, one cannot come up with an exact figure, but I have come to the conclusion that the figure involved here is around 30 cents. As I say, I think Mr. Atkinson is a bit high, but still 30 cents is a pretty good bite. As I say, Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult to get an exact figure because you do not know when an importer is buying in Vancouver against future delivery, whether he is buying the near future, the next future, or so on. But I would agree with a statement made by one of the commentators on the farm broadcast last week that those companies which will have to produce figures of their earnings of this particular crop at the end of the crop year will show rather handsome earnings. In fact, I think they will be somewhat embarrassed when they are reporting to their own producers.

I thought the minister was concerned about two things in connection with this proposal. The first one was to create proper conditions for the stabilization plan, and the second was his concern about the method of pricing. But I want to tell him that he should not really be concerned if the Wheat Board, as sole marketer, takes over the pricing of rapeseed and flaxseed. Some people may think that these grains should be left on what we might call an open market, but I have received a letter from the Winnipeg Grain Exchange in which they informed me I was wrong to assume that the Exchange set the prices for rapeseed. They said this was quite erroneous in that street prices are established by a committee. I am not going to name the companies concerned because I do not believe I am at liberty to do so, but I am at liberty to say that the prices for this particular grain are set by committees of grain companies. The grain companies meet in committee and agree on what will be paid to the producer.

If Mr. Atkinson is right and the grain companies have been picking up this kind of margin in addition to their normal commission for performing a service to the producer, then the minister should be concerned. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the minister was concerned, because some time ago I asked him a number of questions about it. The minister had to write to officials in the trade, but I will not bother to quote that correspondence. However, these officials assured him that there were, shall we say, some inadequacies in the system and that they would do their best to correct them. I do not know how the minister will be able to determine whether they have been corrected, unless he intends to tell the trade, "Boys, these grains are now under the act so you had better stay in line."

There have been some marvellous spreads between the Vancouver market that is the near future, and the prices paid to the farmers. I can pick one date when the future price was $3.26 and the cash price was $2.92. In fact, I could quote the figures for many dates, but someone in the Grain Exchange could well reply, "We were not working on the near future, we were working on the one for the next month." In that way, one can sure get a lot of different answers. Really, all we can do is wait until the end of the crop year when some of these grain companies produce their reports. Then, we will know the answers.

I did some digging to find out how the grain companies set the prices they are going to pay the producer. I came up with a figure of about 36 cents a bushel. This was the amount they figured they needed to get a bushel of rapeseed from a point in Alberta into the hands of a buyer out on the west coast. I thought 36 cents a bushel was a pretty nice margin, considering that the freight cost runs around 16 cents. The other 20 cents is made up of elevation charges, and various other charges.

The grain companies included one item which I found rather intriguing. It was half of one cent for invisible losses. I think an invisible loss is a lovely thing. Whoever thought up that term should be given an extra dollar or two by the companies. I asked members of the Board of Grain Commissioners when they appeared before the committee the other day if they knew there was supposed to be an invisible loss. They replied, no, they did not think there was supposed to be any invisible loss. Of course, every grain company that buys grain is legitimately entitled to take a shrinkage allowance to cover loss in shipment whether through handling, in grain elevators or in freight cars. That allowance has remained stable over a great many years, and it has been agreed between the producers and the grain companies that it is sufficient. But these people thought they needed compensation for an invisible loss in order to get at this 36 cents. They charged for weighing and inspection and they charged the farmer for the liner they put in the boxcars. They did not miss a trick. They charged for hauling the dockage out and they then sold it to somebody else.

• (3:50 p.m.)

When the Board of Grain Commissioners appeared before the committee I asked how many cars they allowed to individual shippers, but they could not give me the answer then. I know that under the block system producers have difficulty getting individual cars, and this is inherent in the system. I am sure the minister would agree that we must see to it that the individual shipper has some assurance of rights to boxcars under the block system. I think that both the Wheat Board and the Board of Grain Commissioners are willing to work this out. This is a factor which makes this matter we are talking about extremely important, Mr. Speaker.

If during the crop year a farmer could walk into a station and say, "I want a boxcar for my rapeseed or flaxseed as I am going to ship it to the head of the lakes or the west coast", then he would have an alternative to any pricing system set up by the grain companies. This is an important point. He could consign his produce to Thunder Bay or Vancouver and instruct his agent to get him the spot price at that point. This price would cover what it actually cost to move the grain and would be related to what the importer would pay.

I do not necessarily get starry-eyed about any particular method of doing anything, Mr. Speaker, but I insist that the producer has a right to the highest price that the market will stand and I do not think that is what he gets. I would have been much happier if the minister had said this afternoon that, regardless of the type of system used, the farmer would receive the highest price that the market would stand; but he did not say this. Through the correspondence which he made available to the House he knows that, during the last crop years, the pricing system has not been working to the satisfaction of the producer. He knows that and I know it, because I took the time and trouble to document it. That is what we are really looking at in the final analysis.

If the people responsible for the grain exchange operation tell me that they are not responsible for the street price that is set or for the elevator system today, I am prepared to accept that they are not. If what you may call the free and open market is not going to be a mechanism for setting the price the farmer will get in the market place, then I say to the minister that, under those circumstances, it had better be the Wheat Board. As a farmer I am prepared to accept, and over the years I have accepted, a marketing system which works and which I am confident will bring me a return equal to what the market will stand. I am not prepared to accept a marketing system which will not do that, which is subject to manipulation, subject to a little bit off for invisible losses and all that sort of thing. Who do they think they are kidding?

Perhaps the minister will reply at the end of this debate and be a little more specific. If he wants to hold a plebiscite or ask the farmers to hold a plebiscite in order to find out what they want, I can tell him it would not be the first time that has been done. It is a democratic way of approaching the problem. However, when he says he really does not know if he will do anything at all, then he will have to answer for the situation that exists in this crop year. He will have to answer for that situation or divorce himself from responsibility for marketing those particular crops. I do not think the minister can stand aside as an observer. He cannot say that it is no concern of his and it is up to the farmers and the companies to see that the inequities and malfunctions of this system are corrected. I think it has to be one way or the other.

The "Pool Broadcast" of April 28, 1971 reads in its opening paragraph:

> A bill that may extend the Canadian Wheat Board marketing system to include rye, flax and rapeseed was introduced in the House of Commons last week.

Then, somebody got Mr. E. K. Turner, President of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool before a microphone and he said:

> Well, the legislation is certainly not dangerous because it doesn't do anything. It just makes it possible to do something, and, of course, their concern is that it will remove from them the opportunity to make handsome profits on the sale of these grains.

That is the assessment of the Saskatchewan pool, that it is not dangerous because it does not do anything. They probably have come to the conclusion that it does not intend to do anything.

Perhaps the minister will have something further to say on these two points: first, if the stabilization program is to have any chance to actually reflect the average income of farmers for three years, then in a year when the minister decides there is a shortfall in the industry, for two grains as important as rapeseed and flaxseed, the percentage paid will have to relate to what the producer received for them. I do not see how the minister can achieve this unless there is a pool price. If he is not going to do this he should take these three grains out of the stabilization fund and only attempt to operate it on the grains on which he can establish a price, unless he is not interested in the farmer but is only interested in stabilizing the economy. The alternative is to consider ways and means of ensuring a stable price for the producer.

I heard the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) talking about rapeseed as an important product. It is an important part of our agricultural industry, and I agree with him. For many years, Mr. Speaker, I have been growing rapeseed. At one time you could not deliver it to the elevators, because the elevator companies could not be bothered with it. You could only sell rapeseed if you grew enough to load a boxcar and shipped it yourself. I have sold it under contract, as the hon. member for Peace River described. I have handled it often enough and marketed it through enough channels to have some idea of what is involved. I am sure that the minister has advisers in his group who like to tell him about these things. We have not seen the recommendations of the oil seeds groups. I think the minister should make these available to us when the bill goes before the committee. If the report is available, I have not seen it. It ought to be available to enable us to make an intelligent judgment about what should be done. I know some of the members of that committee. They should be able to come to grips with the problem that is involved here.

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, this bill incorporates housekeeping amendments to the Canadian Wheat Board Act. It changes some terminology and some regulations. Instead of talking about Fort William and Port Arthur, we are now to talk about Thunder Bay. With respect to clause 4, we are told that the amendment would allow the board, in special circumstances, "to authorize the delivery of grain after the end of the crop year, for inclusion in deliveries for the expired crop year." I think there is considerable merit in these proposals, especially when we take into consideration some of our experience in the past with deliveries and transportation, when it was not possible for all quotas to be equalized over the year.

I think the basic concern that most of us will express when speaking on the bill relates to the possible inclusion of rapeseed, rye and flax under the selling authority of the Wheat Board. I think it is fairly well accepted that, by and large, the Wheat Board up to now has done a good selling job. Nevertheless, there have been indications in the last few years that some of their selling methods should be reviewed. I think they are being reviewed at present. When you consider the board's past performance, I think you could say that some of the board's programs have not worked out as well as they might have, largely as a result of government intervention. That is why their performance in the sales field has been less than spectacular in recent years. The majority of producers feel that until there is adequate proof that the board is doing the best possible job selling the grains that come under its authority at present, the three additional grains mentioned should not come within the ambit of the board.

A few years ago, possibly, more producers were in favour of including these other grains under the board. Now, in view of what has happened and in view of the decline of the percentage of world trade held by Canadian grain producers, there is some doubt on this. I think that before flax, rye and rapeseed are put under the authority of the Wheat Board, a plebiscite of producers ought to be taken. I think a fairly simple plebiscite might be held, possibly through the agency of the elevator companies. It could involve permit holders coming under the Wheat Board. We need an indication from producers that they want this to be done. I should hate to see these grains coming under the ambit of the Wheat Board if this positive indication is not given by the producers.

It seems to me that the association of private entrepreneurs involved with rapeseed has been doing a pretty fair job in the marketing of that commodity. May I quote a few words from the Edmonton Journal of Thursday, April 1. Mr. Hamilton, former chief commissioner of the Board of Grain Commissioners, said in part:

> Rapeseed—our most successful crop—is the one that has had the least government control and interference; that should cause us to ponder. I have watched with growing concern Ottawa's determination to become associated with the rapeseed success story of Western Canada.

[Mr. Gleave.]

He talks about private and public relations in the field of international selling, and says:

> The best public relations job I've seen for Canadian grain? When a Farm Union group from Canada visited China several years ago. I was in China about one year after this group and they had certainly paved the way for us. I am sure this is one of the best ways to promote Canadian grain in such markets.

The Leader Post of February 25, 1971, carries this report on the successful merchandising techniques of the rapeseed industry:

> The rapeseed association has been so successful selling rapeseed and rapeseed products that it staggers the imagination.
>
> In his report to the rapeseed association's annual meeting in Edmonton recently, Mr. McAnsh discussed six areas where association rapeseed staff has been active—Japan, Taiwan, Europe, Mexico and Latin America.
>
> 'Within the first year or so of its existence,' he reported, 'the association mounted an eight-man mission to go to Japan—
> 'The prime interest of the mission was to promote the use of rapeseed meal in animal feed formulations, in order to obtain a share in a very large market in Japan for feeding stuffs.'
>
> A two-man team was sent to Taiwan in June, 1969, for consultation with oilseed processors. Shortly after, Taiwan bought 1.8 million bushels of Canadian rapeseed.
>
> Early in 1970, a rapeseed mission visited Holland, West Germany, Italy, Spain, France and the United Kingdom.
>
> 'It soon became apparent that hesitancy on the part of animal feed formulators to include rapeseed in their mixes was a barrier to the sale of rapeseed.'

The article goes on:

> The association sent a four-man mission in January to visit Mexico, Ecuador, Peru and Chile. On the heels of this mission came a second of three men to visit El Salvador, Costa Rica,—

And other countries in the area. We can see the kind of job that the rapeseed growers are doing in promoting the sale of rapeseed internationally.

The Globe and Mail of April 29 reported the views of Mr. A. M. Runciman, chairman of the Canada Grains Council. According to the article:

• (4:10 p.m.)

> Mr. Runciman said that in its 35 years of existence the Canadian Wheat Board had never experimented with the opening of overseas offices. "So we are simply looking at the possibility of establishing a non-profit, non-government trade agency for the grain industry."

In my opinion, our present diplomatic staffs and missions ought in many cases to be replaced in part, at least, by sales-oriented personnel and organizations.

I should like the House to consider how effective some of these government marketing agencies really are. We were fortunate enough on Tuesday last in the Finance Committee to be given the benefit of the firsthand knowledge of a gentleman who is himself engaged in the export field, a Montreal exporter by name of Mr. George Schäfer. I should like to read from the brief which Mr. Schäfer presented to the committee since it illustrates exactly what we are getting into. This is to be found in issue No. 40 of the proceedings of the committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

> This year, after a world wide decrease in production versus demand, there is a shortage of milk powder and the E.E.C. has abolished dairy products subsidies. Knowing that Mexico needs this year wheat as well as milk powder, we suggested that they buy both from Canada. On April 6th we informed the Canadian Dairy Commission of this.

We had solid indication that Mexico was ready to pay more than $200—higher per ton for milk powder than the February price of the C.D.C. but $12-$17 less per ton for the wheat than the cheapest available from Canada.

In other words, they were willing to pay $200 per ton more for milk powder but $12—$17 per ton less for the wheat. The brief continued:

As an independent commodities trading company we felt this called for a combination deal in such proportion that Mexico would buy both from Canada—at least ten times the quantity of wheat—for the good of the country as a whole. But the Canadian Wheat Board sells only through its own agents. The CDC proceeded to sell the milk powder below the price the Mexicans were ready to pay and without selling one ounce of wheat.

The CDC's chairman no doubt feels pleased with himself when, not through his own merit but due to advances in world prices, he obtained a higher price than last year even though this price is below that which Mexico already paid to France the week of March 29, and it does not move any grain.

A typical example of the way State Enterprise operates. At the same time it takes away the livelihood of private firms by excluding them from the actual sales.

In the end, the Dairy Commission did not negotiate and sold the milk powder at less than they might have obtained. No attempt was made to get together with the other selling agency, the Wheat Board, to work out, for instance, an arrangement under which both agencies might have received an equitable return. To continue from Mr. Schäfer's submission:

If I were sitting in your place, I would move to abolish the CDC's power to transact export sales.

Government Agencies, Boards and Commissions should handle market regulation, the arrangements for shipping the merchandise, and paper work, but all sales should remain the domain of private enterprise; not the other way around. Sales must be negotiated by private firms not government officials. It does not create a healthy, vigorous, aggressive private sector if the agreements are already handed to them. This is part of the trouble with our grain sales.

This is not an isolated example. We put in years of pioneering effort to promote the sale of milk powder to the Mexican government purchasing organization, CONASUPO. In 1968 they wired us an invitation to their tender for 55 million pounds of milk powder. The Canadian Dairy Commission refused to give us a quotation, wishing to offer one themselves. The CDC refused even after we received a second telegram urging us to participate in the tender. The CDC did not get the business for Canada—it went to the U.S.A. The CDC ended up selling the surplus milk powder at almost half the price we had indicated to them we could reach in Mexico.

Again, the CDC sold the product at half the price the Mexicans had indicated they were willing to pay.

The following year, when we were finally able to participate in the tender, we secured the business for Canada.

Do you think this State Enterprise was able to tell us what merchandise in its inventories met the buyers' requirements? No, gentlemen. We had to employ surveyors to go to more than ten different warehouses and open sample bags from many lots to find the types the buyers wanted at considerable unnecessary expense. Can you imagine a private firm going after a contract from one of the world's largest buyers not knowing where in its inventory is the merchandise that the buyer wants?

So, in one year the CDC would not permit a private firm to handle the contract, and in the next, when the private firm finally secured this business, the CDC did not even know where to find the particular types of product the Mexicans had requested. This is a typical example of what is going on in connection with the sales of our farm products abroad. There is no denying the facts I have put on record. The minister can check the details with the firm of George R. Schäfer in Montreal and corroborate their accuracy. He can ascertain for himself the inefficiency of our state enterprises in this field, particularly of our international sales agencies. No attempt is made to co-ordinate sales policies.

• (4:20 p.m.)

For this reason, I say we should be extremely cautious before bringing three more grains within the ambit of the Wheat Board. At least we should not do so until the Board has mastered the selling of the products currently under its jurisdiction. The government is attempting to force too many of its projects on producers at the present time. Bill C-176 is an example. As we went across the country hearing evidence from organizations and individuals concerned, it was difficult to find out who had actually requested this type of legislation. To be sure, there were some people who wanted it. People engaged in the poultry industry, for example, felt strongly about it. Perhaps they could and should have had the legislation had the government seen fit to exclude from the ambit of the act those who wish to be excluded. We should not try to force producers into a situation with which they totally disagree.

It seems to me that if these grains are brought under the control of the Wheat Board, the government would be getting into agriculture more and more. We have had ample evidence given during the stabilization bill debate last week that, unfortunately, the government is becoming more and more involved in the regulation of agriculture and less and less involved in financial support. In other words, the government wants to control agriculture even further but is withdrawing its financial support.

I suggest the minister cannot deny that when the stabilization program does go into effect, with the withdrawal of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, PFAA and other measures, and with the government's non-support of deficits in grain pool accounts, it is obvious, the government is withdrawing its financial support and increasing its regulatory control. If this course is pursued, in the long run the agricultural segment of the population will, be under the thumb of the government. We shall return to a feudal system where the farmers are serfs of the state. Ample evidence that this is the situation in which people find themselves exists in many of the countries that have completely socialized their industry and agriculture. It soon becomes evident to these countries that workers do not work for the state in the same way that they work for themselves. A prime example of this fact can be found in Russia where Russian peasants produced more per acre from their own garden than they did on the great communal farms. As a result, I suggest we should be very cautious in allowing the government to dominate agriculture in this country.

Canadian Wheat Board Act

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, since the changes in this legislation are largely designed to reflect in the Canadian Wheat Board Act principles and changes that have already been brought forward in other legislation that has come before the House both in this session and in the previous session, I do not feel particularly moved to go over all the changes in great detail. Their substance has been debated at considerable length on other occasions.

When I mention that this is largely a housekeeping bill, I do so not in criticism of it but simply to explain why my remarks will be largely restricted to one topic. Before I get to that topic, may I mention in passing my approval of the provisions of this bill that allow for extension of the crop year under certain circumstances. I think this provision will meet with the universal approbation of the farming community.

What I do want to spend some time on are the provisions permitting the marketing under the Canadian Wheat Board Act of flax, rye and rapeseed. I am a little disturbed that, after three years in office, the government has not yet discovered a way to determine the will, in this area, of the farming community. I think it is necessary that we end speculation in the matter of pricing farm products if we are to bring any stability to the incomes of Canadian farmers. The bringing of flax, rye and rapeseed within the regulations of the Wheat Board will do this, in effect, for three very important commodities.

The legislation before the House, as the minister pointed out in his remarks, is only enabling legislation. He has left the House somewhat in doubt whether it will ever be employed and, if so, under what circumstances. The minister suggested to the House that there is no information yet available to him, and to the people who will be affected, to enable him to make a rational decision regarding bringing these grains within the control of the Canadian Wheat Board.

The three major pools, the National Farmers Union and the Federation of Agriculture have for some time been expressing their opinion that each of these grains should be marketed through the Wheat Board. This is a very substantial indication of opinion within the farming community. Indeed, short of a plebiscite I fail to see how the minister could expect to obtain a much more definitive indication of the will of the farming community.

I hope that when he brings this debate to a close the minister will give the House some more precise indication of the tactic that he intends to employ to determine the will of the people who produce these commodities, since the minister did indicate that he wanted such information before he finally decided whether to employ the power to market flax, rye and rapeseed under the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

If it is the intention of the minister, through this legislation, solely and simply to have a club to wave to overcome some of the major problems associated with the current system of marketing flax, rye and rapeseed, then he is not engaging in a particularly good legislative practice. Legislation is intended to be used. If we do not intend to use it, other means are available to us to influence groups we want to influence. Simply putting legislation on the books to use as a weapon to ensure good behaviour is not a practice I should like to see followed in Canada.

We should like the minister to give the House an indication how he intends to obtain the opinions of the farming community as to the value of proclaiming this particular part of the bill; what procedures he intends to use to obtain either consent or denial; when he intends to attempt to obtain this consent or denial; and when we can expect a final statement from him indicating one way or the other whether he is going to use these provisions. It is very important that we obtain this information from the minister before the bill goes to committee so that commodity groups coming before the committee have some idea what they are talking about. As I say, I do not like the idea of leaving this whole section of the bill in limbo so that nobody knows just what is going to be done with it. Judging from his remarks this afternoon not even the minister knows. This kind of ambiguous situation should be ended as soon as possible, and I hope the minister will give us a clear indication of his intentions when he concludes this debate.

I think I need say nothing more than that, Mr. Speaker. We in this party have advocated for some years the inclusion of flax, rye and rapeseed within the regulations and that these be marketed by the Canadian Wheat Board. We hope that the minister's final decision will be to use these provisions which he has placed in the bill. We hope that this decision will be reached after consultation with the commodity groups concerned before the beginning of this crop year. I should like some assurance from the minister that he is moving rapidly in this direction and that he can expect to receive the information which he considers necessary for that decision before the beginning of this crop year.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak to the amendments to the Canadian Wheat Board Act, I should like to say at the outset that until a few weeks ago I could have supported the general terms of these amendments proposed by the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. That was before these amendments included flax, rye and rapeseed. I cannot in any way, shape or form support this kind of an inclusion. By bringing flax, rye and especially rapeseed, under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board, the government and the minister are completely disregarding the wants, the needs and the feelings of the majority of producers and others engaged in this segment of our agricultural industry.

I should like to say that over the past few years, with the exception of some years of crop failures in other parts of the world, the Wheat Board's handling of the grain industry has been incredibly inefficient. For the most part, attempts to sell our grain on the international market have not been aggressive enough. We have not been selling grain in world markets and the Wheat Board has not been looking for new markets we should have found years ago.

In the last two or three years, Canada has lost a great many markets and customers because of the lack of aggressiveness on the part of the Wheat Board to seek markets for the Canadian grain produced in western Canada. A constant supply of a quality product is what the market demands, and it has been seen that if we cannot supply this product other countries will do so. As a result the farmers in western Canada have taken home less in their pockets.

The government must also realize that farmers have a right to a reasonable margin of profit if they are to share in the national wealth. With the surplus of wheat and incentives last year not to grow grain, I find it difficult to comprehend why buyers would be turned away because of a lack of supply. This has happened at a time when the prairie economy is in need of every possible dollar from sales to bolster the sagging incomes of grain producers.

It has been said that the prairie region continues to be like a sack of grain tied at both ends, one end at Thunder Bay and the other at Vancouver. The strings are in the hands of the people who regulate the supply, while the grower usually pays the bill. We cannot continue to leave the producers' lifelines in someone else's hands. I, for one, am an advocate of less government control in this segment of agriculture, and less intervention by the government in the affairs of western producers. I see this as a necessity before we will really become efficient and able to compete in the marketplace with other countries of the world. Unfortunately, this government sees fit to move the other way. Through revisions to the Canadian Wheat Board Act, although in part they are good, the Canadian Wheat Board is becoming more of an extension of the arm of the government or of the minister responsible for the Wheat Board.

In the matter of the Canadian Wheat Board and grain policy, I believe if we are going to become more progressive and a more constant supplier to our export sources we must start thinking in terms of enlarging the storage capacities of the terminals in our export ports, and also possibly in ports such as Rotterdam and in Asia. This is something the government must begin to consider. The fact that we are proposing to hold down our grain stocks is in part, commendable. I believe this will enable a greater throughput through the so-called grain pipeline. On the other hand, if strikes are called, and we have to be realistic and assume that they will occur, we will be caught as we were a few months ago with an inadequate supply of grain to meet our export commitment. Once we cannot fulfil our commitments we will lose markets and they are very hard to recover. As soon as we lose them some other country picks them up.

New terminals have been criticized by some people as being too costly. They may well be expensive but the question we should ask ourselves is, how much would it cost not to build new terminals? Perhaps we did not need the Lift program as badly as we needed an improved marketing system. In the 1960's we learned how to produce, and in the late 1960's our traditional markets became saturated. In the 1970's we found more new markets and now, at times, ships sit in the harbours because we cannot move our product to the marketplace. As I see the situation right now, one of the greatest problems facing the grain industry today results from the lack of a fully integrated system to convey grain from the field to the boat.

One of the most welcomed developments to come along in recent years was the inclusion in this legislation of the protein grading system. It is true that Canada was late in implementing such a system. It has been long overdue, and I think it will be generally welcomed by agricultural producers and people in the grain trade across western Canada. Countries no longer buy grain on straight grades, but because of new refined processes in milling, such as a Chorlywood process, countries now buying our grain must know and want to know the protein content of that grain in order to mix it with other substances to make acceptable loaves of bread in other countries, particularly the developing countries. The importance of guaranteed protein content to be included in wheat grading under the new Wheat Board Act regulations becomes very obvious in light of bread and milling developments throughout the world.

In the latest copy of the Free Press Weekly dated May 15, 1971, there appeared a short article regarding Germany's wheat need. It states that a guaranteed protein content of not less than 13 per cent is required. To sell them wheat with a lower content is an impossibility. They are not interested in it at any price because they must support the price of their local wheat. Apparently the local wheat is used to mix with our grain. The lower the protein the more the need for the mix, so they want northern spring wheat of a high protein type. That is the kind of wheat we produce in western Canada. The importance of protein grading being included in a wheat grading system cannot be underestimated. The wheat that is used will have to be of a guaranteed protein quality or these countries will not buy from us. A case in point is that article regarding the requirements of Germany.

The revision of the quota system does have some merit for the over-all movement of grain. It does enable the proper kinds of grain to be hauled at various times under a non-cumulative quota and then moved out to export positions as the Wheat Board sees fit. This will get us away from the disastrous plug-ups we have had in our grain handling system at various times in the past few years. I believe in 1968 and again in 1969, we had a glut of grain in the so-called grain pipeline.

The non-cumulative quota will, on the other hand, be more difficult for the producer. The producer could very conceivably, through no fault of his own, be locked out of a certain quota system for grain. We could take the example of an area such as the Red River Valley of Manitoba. Because of a late fall, and this area quite often has a late fall because of wet weather, if there were a quota for barley in August the producers would lose their quotas as a result of being unable to harvest their crops. This is also going to be unsatisfactory for producers who have to go to granaries and haul a one or two-bushel quota in the middle of winter instead of waiting until a satisfactory quota is obtained, making it worthwhile opening the granaries and going to the work and expense of hauling that grain.

• (4:40 p.m.)

At this stage in the debate I wish to say that I am in general agreement with the revision of the quota system and also protein grading, although I believe this locks the producer into a segment of his industry. I also believe, as I mentioned before, that this would make the Wheat Board more an arm of government rather than an agency for the producers as it should be. In dealing with this kind of legislation, I believe we must weigh the merits of what would happen to producers under these changes against the need to streamline our grain handling and grain exporting system.

Then, we come to the amendment which has been included in the past few weeks by the minister responsible for the Wheat Board to which I am totally opposed. I refer to the inclusion of flaxseed, rye and rapeseed under the Canadian Wheat Board. I believe the legislation provides for the extension of the Wheat Board marketing system in respect of flax, rye and rapeseed without the usual safeguards, including the benefit of public debate and decision making, especially by the producer segment of the agricultural industry which will be most directly affected.

In his opening remarks this afternoon, the minister mentioned he would not apply such legislation unless it should be needed. The minister may have very good intentions in this regard, but I suggest that another minister responsible for the Wheat Board or another government might feel differently, and since the legislation would be on the books it could be used at any particular time. If we are to consider such legislation, I believe some form of a producer plebiscite should be contemplated before the matter goes to the committee so that we might know whether or not the producers really want this form of legislation. If this were done afterward, it might be too late because possibly the damage would be done. The minister responsible for the Wheat Board has never really clarified his own position on the subject. I hope that sometime during this debate he will tell the Canadian people, the Canadian grain producers and rapeseed producers just where he stands on this subject. He said this is to be enabling legislation that would not necessarily be used. Then, he turned around and said to the rapeseed producers or rapeseed associations that the marketing of rapeseed is generally in good hands and that he sees no need for change. If this is the case, I would ask the minister why this provision was ever included in the legislation.

The main fault I find with the inclusion of rapeseed under the Canadian Wheat Board is the fact that rapeseed will not be marketed through the futures market by our grain exchanges. Mr. J. J. Danfield, the Executive Vice President of the Canadian Rapeseed Processors, who is also President of the Canadian Rapeseed Association, said:

> It is absolutely imperative that the futures market trading be continued to permit our company to continue operations allowing processing and marketing of oil and meal products both for domestic consumption and export.

He also said that if rapeseed is included under the Canadian Wheat Board, they will have to cancel negotiations in respect of a 30,000 ton export of rapeseed meal. I believe the placing of rapeseed under the Canadian Wheat Board would mean the kiss of death for a crop which could be and has been very beneficial to western Canadian farmers. From my talks with various people in the Canadian rapeseed industry there would seem to be a strong feeling that the motive behind the minister's amendment is to try to recoup some of the heavy deficit incurred by the board in its operations in respect of the wheat, oats and barley pool. In other words, the rapeseed growers who have been selling at a profit would be charged with the losses in respect of other crops by being included in this legislation.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question.

Mr. Murta: Certainly.

Mr. Lang: I wonder whether the hon. member realizes that under the existing legislation the grains are kept separate so that his suggestion would not be applicable in any case.

Mr. Murta: Well, from talking to various people in the trade my understanding is that if this provision, were enacted there is a strong possibility that could be the result. On the other side of the coin is the fact that the importers of rapeseed, rapeseed oil and meal around the world repeatedly have warned that they would not be interested in Canadian rapeseed unless grain exchange facilities are available to enable them to hedge their purchases. I believe that if rapeseed were brought under the Canadian Wheat Board, this possibility would be denied to the importers in other countries. It is interesting to note that a leading British importer of oilseeds, and a leading authority on marketing, estimated that in the next ten years Canada could probably build an export market for 500 million bushels of rapeseed. That is as much rapeseed as the total amount of wheat we have exported this year. The potential of this crop is terrific. He also warned that this could be accomplished only under an open market with grain exchange facilities.

I believe that before the minister's amendment concerning rapeseed, flax and rye is passed he should explain to the rapeseed growers in Canada why he thinks the board would be better able to market their crop. With an open market, the grower can elect to sell his rapeseed crop for cash to an elevator company or to seed crushers without incurring storage charges or paying indirectly the interest charges that the Wheat Board would have to incur in buying his crop. He can also load a car of rapeseed, ship it to a terminal and sell it on track for the going cash price of the day. These options which will be closed to the producer if the crop is placed under the board. He will have to assume the cost of storage, interest on borrowing, demurrage charges, charges in respect of the operation of the Wheat Board and so on. In addition, the board does not have any merchandising facilities or the personnel to move a sophisticated crop like rapeseed.

It has been mentioned previously this afternoon that the Wheat Board is heavily bogged down with regard to selling the grains for which it is now responsible. I believe we would be making another mistake by bringing rye, flaxseed and rapeseed under a Wheat Board that is already loaded with responsibility. No one really needs Canadian rapeseed. Edible oil and meal producers in Canada supply only a minute part of the world's needs. Other oils could easily fill the gap. Only through tough bargaining, good promotion, knowledgeable merchandising and open markets can we maintain and expand Canada's position in the oil seed market. The mere threat of having this crop controlled by the Wheat Board has created uncertainty in our export markets. Total inclusion would leave the crop stranded in elevator storage and there would be a further deficit to be borne by the federal treasury.

As I mentioned before, I wonder why this legislation has been introduced. If it was introduced in order to sound out public concern on the issue, then it was certainly successful. I believe, however, that the same reaction could have been brought about by a lot less drastic method. The minister responsible for the Wheat Board, in effect, has asked that Parliament pass the amendment and has given the assurance that the question—and I quote—"has been under study and consideration, both by farm organizations and by a group under my direction for some time, but certainly there is no imminent inclusion in this regard." Then, he added the surprising afterthought that the rapeseed market has, in fact, been working rather well in its existing shape. Since Canada's rye crop is comparatively small and unimportant, and since flaxseed appears to have caused little concern under the present marketing system, it must be presumed that the whole issue revolves around rapeseed which has been of increasing interest to prairie farmers over the past few years. It promises to be an even more important crop in the future. When you consider the results that would flow from the possible sale of 500 million bushels of rapeseed, you can certainly see that this is well borne out.

One thing which I would like to stress at this point is that there is a wide spectrum of opinions on the whole matter of extending board controls. Since this is the case, it would appear to be a dangerous move to approve the amendment to the Canadian Wheat Board Act as it now stands. Since there is such a valid controversy over the extension of the powers of the Wheat Board, I suggest to the minister that he withdraw this amendment until such time as a plebiscite of rapeseed producers is held to find out whether they want to have their grain included under the Wheat Board. If this is the case, then the idea of including this legislation under the Wheat Board is a valid and practical solution.

I would, once again, like to stress the importance of the futures market in the distribution of rapeseed. This is of great importance when we talk about the inclusion of the three crops under the Wheat Board. I would like to quote from a letter from James Richardson and Sons Limited, one of the foremost exporting firms in Canada. It reads:

> . . . that the futures market has been one of the most important factors in the development and fantastic growth of our rapeseed production. Until trading in rapeseed futures was instituted, many years ago the producer had little or no knowledge of what the crop was worth. In the last several years of progressively greater production the producer has been able to market his crop at generally very good prices providing him with much needed cash when other grains were depressed and generally in a mess. To the best of our knowledge, the Rapeseed Association of Canada, all the provincial and rapeseed associations representing producers, and all crushers in western Canada are against the Wheat Board taking over the marketing of this increasingly acceptable oilseed; in addition, Japanese exporters and crushers —our most important market—are emphatically opposed and while we are sure that these facts are known to Mr. Lang, why he should include it in the amendment is beyond our comprehension.

In summing up I should like to say that some changes to the Wheat Board Act are acceptable. I am thinking now in terms of protein grading and, to a lesser extent, the noncumulative quota that is also being introduced by the minister. But I think, in light of the fact that the government's intention is to introduce legislation to put rapeseed, flax and rye under the Wheat Board, we should either buy the whole package or none at all. I will not be able to support this kind of legislation. I hope the minister will see fit to withdraw the latter part of the legislation and possibly let us deal with it at some future time when we are sure what the industry really needs.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): In view of the fact that we are very close to five o'clock, I wonder if it might be agreeable to you, Mr. Speaker, that we call it five o'clock and continue afterwards.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Is it the wish of the House that we call it five o'clock?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Thompson: I really do not mind speaking two times on this bill. In fact, it gives me a second opportunity to catch my wind because I think this bill is not only one of the most unnecessary pieces of legislation as it relates to the growers of what we classify as edible oil seeds, but it is one which has caused great concern to the western farmer. Furthermore, I regard this legislation as potentially dangerous to the growing segment of the agricultural industry producing edible oil seeds, particularly in the west. I must express my protest against this type of bill, although the part of the bill which relates to routine amendments to the Wheat Board Act is acceptable. I would go along with the previous speaker in supporting those parts of the bill.

However, that part of the bill which would place rapeseed, flax and rye under the Wheat Board auspices is completely undesirable. I fail to understand why the minister responsible for this piece of legislation should have introduced the related amendments which are before the House now. It is interesting to note that since this bill was introduced, the minister responsible for the Wheat Board has clearly said that the present marketing systems for these grains are not to be included under the Wheat Board now. To quote him specifically, he said:

...if it should be deemed desirable at a future date.

This is what he said outside the House in answer to the questioning of the press. I fail to understand why he has been motivated to include these amendments if he does not consider it necessary at this time to include these grains under the Wheat Board. It has been indicated that a number of farm organizations have been asking for legislation which would bring these particular grains under the Wheat Board, but I fail to hear this kind of request from the producers themselves. In fact, the other day the president of the Palliser Wheat Growers Association said something far different from what the minister said to justify his action. He said on April 25, in Regina:

The Board's sales record in the last decade has not been good in a competitive world market. It's been a record of lost and declining sales in an increasing market—a history of costly storage and interest charges and unsold wheat amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars, while the Americans forged ahead in record breaking exports of wheat and in farm income.

Surely these facts are sufficient to question the Board's ability as a sales agency.

On the positive side, he said:

All efforts should be concentrated—

Referring to the government.

—on incorporating proper incentives and business management into the board to save the fast-drowning wheat industry, rather than attempt to pull the buoyant oilseed industry down with the drowning wheat.

The statement that farm organizations want flax and rape on the CWB does not necessarily reflect the desires of flax and rapeseed growers. Some of those in favour are obviously elevator companies who speak for the syndicate at the top and not for the average producer.

I can only agree, Mr. Speaker. May I call it five o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—Public Service—Clyne Committee recommendation for withdrawal of right to bargain collectively from certain employees; the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland)—Manpower—Measures to assist science and engineering graduates to obtain appropriate employment—Stimulation of research and development; the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton)—Grain—Wheat—Addition of unused portion of Lift program funds to transitional payments.

[Mr. Thompson.]

• (5:00 p.m.)

[Translation]

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private member's business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions.

[English]

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF TRANSIT AUTHORITY

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should give consideration to the expediency of entering into discussion with the Governments of the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec on the terms under which a National Capital Region Transit Authority could be created and incorporated by federal charter bearing in mind (a) the inadequacy of public transportation facilities in the National Capital Region (b) the restriction by charter of transit services, both publicly and privately owned, to municipal boundaries (c) the need for long-term planning of an integrated system of rail rapid transit, bus and other means of urban transit (d) the crises developed by the unfair competition provided by public subsidies on behalf of private vehicles (e) the contribution by an efficient, low-cost public transportation system to the balanced economic and social development of the whole National Capital Region.

He said: Mr. Speaker, what I have to say will be brief. The last time this motion was presented there was an excellent debate in the House which can be found in the Hansard report of March 6, 1970, pages 4494 to 4504. At that point I indicated the reasons for the motion, what I hoped could be achieved, and argued that within the area which we hope will be designated, by an amendment to Article 16 of the Constitution of Canada, as the National Capital Region to include part of the province of Quebec and part of the province of Ontario, we could use the authority of the federal government, in co-operation with the provinces of Ontario and Quebec and of the municipalities affected, to develop a rational pattern of public transportation for a growing and important metropolitan area.

There have been a few developments since that time which I will just briefly set on the record. One is the announcement by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) that Ottawa and Montreal are to be chosen as the first places in Canada for experimentation with the short take off and landing, the STOL, type of aircraft. This is a product in which Canada hopes to specialize, and which we hope we will develop for a world market. We hope there will be a demonstration between Ottawa and Montreal of the practical feasibility of this type of transportation between two large urban communities. Of course, if we can solve the problem of moving people between communities it is all the more important that we come to some rational means of solving the problem of the movement of people within a metropolitan area.

The second development to which I call attention is the decision of the government of Canada to create a more important presence in the province of Quebec, and particularly in the city of Hull.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I am sorry my colleague from Hull (Mr. Isabelle) is not here at this time, because the last time we discussed the problems of urban transit, he made a very interesting speech.

[English]

I am very pleased, however, to note the development, and I am sure all hon. members—

[Translation]

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

I should like the hon. member for Ottawa West to explain why the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle) is not present in the House, that the public might not get the impression the member for Hull is no longer interested in this matter. Would my hon. colleague therefore tell us why our colleague from Hull is not here right now?

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, I particularly noted that what our colleague from Hull had said then was most interesting. At this time, he is representing Canada to the World Health Organization in Geneva, but I had no intention of leaving the impression that he did not have a good reason to be absent. On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, it is well known that he has been interested in that matter for a long time.

[English]

The third reason I think we have to consider this matter is our increasing concern with pollution. It is absolutely imperative that in one of the larger cities of North America a lead be given to finding other means of bringing large numbers of people to the central work area than by the private automobile. The private automobile clearly is an inefficient and costly means of moving people. But in addition to that, it contributes through the oxides which go into the air compounds which come from lead fuels, all of it very toxic material which creates very serious problems of pollution. It is clear that the answer to this has to be found in other means of transportation. A great deal of research has to be done. I note that my colleagues who spoke on the previous occasion mentioned the work of the Canadian Transport Commission and the interest that the chairman of that commission is showing in conducting research in this area.

With these three brief comments on the development of the STOL aircraft program, the increased federal presence across the river creating even greater hazards of movement between the two cities, and our increasing concern about air pollution in this region, I think the motion I have the honour of presenting to the House, and which was debated in March, 1970, is even more important today than it was then. I hope hon. members will be able to support it.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, since the hon. member has mentioned the STOL aircraft, I want to take the opportunity of putting on the record a question that for the last couple of days I have been wishing to ask of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson). I do not expect an answer now. I just want the minister to see the question so that he will know it is coming one of these days when he is in the House.

I want to know if there was full research done by the Department of Transport in connection with this whole STOL operation. I would like to know what percentage of the population will benefit from it, what percentage of the population will be the potential users of this projected service between Ottawa and Montreal. I also want to know if there are good results from it will it bring about reduced fares for other members of the travelling public, those who use the conventional airplanes.

As a final question, I am just wondering if the minister can project the future for service between Toronto and Montreal. Will there be similar services provided in Toronto and Montreal? These are my only comments with respect to this motion.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, from the brevity of the speeches thus far, I get the impression that there may be a disposition to let this motion come to a vote. I hope that is the case. I also hope that if this does take place it will be a pattern to be followed on other occasions.

I would like to indicate my general support for what the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) is asking through this motion. Even though his remarks were brief, I think he made a good case. This is the national capital. I think it is inportant that we solve the problems of transportation and pollution in this area, otherwise what ought to be one of the finest and most beautiful urban areas in Canada could be spoiled. Let us keep it a place of which we can be proud as a nation from coast to coast. We will not do that if we let problems such as congestion, a confusion of transportation and pollution overtake us. For the sake of this area itself, therefore, as the capital of Canada I think that this kind of problem should be given the serious consideration suggested by the hon. member in his motion.

I want also to support the argument that he used to the effect that this is a problem confronting all our cities. We must start somewhere and I think there is no better place than right here. If we can find solutions to these problems in this urban area, then perchance we can apply some of those solutions to the same problems in other urban areas in Canada.

I commend the hon. member for bringing this motion before us. I commend him for the brevity of his remarks. We are all following suit and I hope this means that the motion will be passed and that the request contained therein will be placed on the desk of the government.

Mr. D. Gordon Blair (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it is a great joy for me to rise again this year to support this motion of my friend, the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis). I entirely agree with the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that we should not kill this motion by praising it too much or too long.

Since the motion was presented last year, the problem of urban transportation in this area has worsened. The public concern and awareness of this problem has grown and developed. I thought it might be of interest to the House to know that one survey has been conducted in Nepean township, which I represent, which lies to the south and west of Ottawa.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A very important area.

Mr. Blair: A very important area because some very distinguished members of this House live there. This township has literally no public transportation. There are more than 60,000 people living there and the need for proper public transport is great, if only to satisfy the convenience of the residents and their economy. There are other reasons, however, which have been mentioned by my hon. friend from Ottawa West. There is the problem of responsible planning and the problem of pollution which make the development of an integrated transport system in the capital area of a very high priority to all of us.

Last May and June the young people who were members of my political association, on their own initiative, undertook the task of calling on every home in Nepean township to discuss with residents the problem of pollution which exists in our society. One of the problems they discussed with the citizens, which was widely remarked upon in the amazing number of replies I got from residents in the township, was that of urban public transport. The point that I can make now with absolute certainty as a result of this survey is that there is great public support, great public demand and a real desire for the development of proper urban transport facilities in the total capital area, and particularly in that part which I represent.

One of the people who replied to the survey stated that the automobile was a 3,400 pound piece of tin which carries one person 15 miles per gallon. The conclusion reached by this survey was that we must deglamourize the private automobile and look for alternatives. The only alternative, of course, is the provision of a proper system of urban transport. It is not sufficient to make arbitrary rules against the automobile and its use unless at the same time proper facilities are provided for public transport and an educational campaign is undertaken to ensure that the public will use a new transport system. The encouraging thing about this survey is that the people understand the problem and are prepared not only to support urban public transport in this area but to make the necessary adjustments in their life style and habits to make that public transport successful.

Much more could be said, Mr. Speaker, but I share the desire of all hon. members that this matter be brought to a vote. I think it might be of assistance to hon. members who represent areas outside the capital region if I referred to the brief submitted by the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities to the government of Canada on April 26, 1971. This brief dealt with a number of municipal and planning problems and a substantial section of it was devoted to the planning and development of transportation. A striking conclusion advanced in the brief may be of interest to hon. members, and I shall quote from page 9:

> As a positive gesture toward dealing with Canada's urban transportation problems we recommend that the federal government express its commitment to share in the funding with the provincial and local governments concerned of a number of experimental transportation projects involving a variety of sizes of communities. We suggest that the federal government agree to having the choice of the location of the experiments and the cost sharing arrangements decided by the participants at the forthcoming tri-level conference.
> Such a project would be of immeasurable benefit to all communities with transportation problems since it would provide tangible and practical results in a context assuring that all aspects of transportation planning in these experimental cases would be reported nationally. Let us capitalize on our problems by dealing with them experimentally rather than engage in debate over the validity of untried alternatives.

That is the end of the quotation, Mr. Speaker. I can think of no better place in the whole of Canada for a proper experiment to be undertaken in the development of urban transport than in the national capital region. It is for this reason also that I urge hon. members to support the motion.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Carried.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to delay the passing of the measure should the majority of members so desire. I intend to make a few comments only.

The hon. member who proposed this motion is no doubt aware of the fact that Quebec provincial authorities have appointed a Commission last fall to inquire into the public transportation problem in the Outaouais regional community. I hope that the federal government will decide to consult Quebec and Ontario authorities on the studies which have been completed or which are underway. If I am not mistaken, a study of public transportation on the Quebec side of the Ottawa River had already been conducted by the Dorion Commission.

There is no doubt in my mind that a reform of the public transportation scheme in the National Capital area is required. Hon. members know that the National Capital area does not include only the municipalities on the Ontario side but also those on the Quebec side; it also includes part of the constituency which I have the pleasure to represent in the House. Should the federal government decide to finance out of public funds a survey of public transportation in the National Capital area, I am sure that work already performed will be taken into consideration.

As far as I am concerned, I do not see why I should not support the motion from my hon. colleague from Ottawa West.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, could we not move to something else, carry it, and do a really good day's work? Could we not take Motion No. 13 on page 27 of the order paper?

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Do hon. members agree to call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): I have not much to say. I have been taken by surprise. Having listened to a debate on transportation, I am still of the same opinion as I was the other day. If you want to enjoy life and satisfactory transportation, go on foot.

At 5.25 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DETERMINATION OF PAYMENT FOR WHEAT—EXTENSION OF APPLICATION TO FLAXSEED, RYE AND RAPESEED

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang that Bill C-238, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, it would seem to me that if the minister responsible for the Wheat Board really meant it when he said that rapeseed, flaxseed and rye would only be brought under the jurisdiction of the Board when it was deemed desirable at some future date, why he would not have omitted this provision from the bill altogether. By making the statement he did, he admitted it was not advisable at this time, unless of course he was trying to placate those who are opposing this part of the bill. It disturbs me that this approach should be taken, seeking authority for the government in its own time to implement what this bill would allow without even consulting the producers of these grains on whether they wished such a course to be followed.

There are aspects of the bill one can readily support. The legislation takes account of changes in government policies which have already been put into effect. It updates the whole procedure of grading grain, linking grades with protein content, and it provides for different qualities of grain within specific grades and for varying rates of payment. However, since amendments of this type are coupled with the much more doubtful proposal to which I referred earlier, we find ourselves in a very difficult position. We are, in effect, being asked to support propositions which we agree are reasonable at the same time as we are asked to support other policies with which we cannot agree. It is this omnibus approach to legislation on completely different aspects of particular subject matters that makes it very difficult for us to support what is of a positive nature and at the same time constructively to oppose that with which we cannot agree.

If rye, rapeseed and flaxseed compared in any way to the wheat situation, I think the minister would have some justification for bringing in this legislation. But these three grains are in an entirely different category. When we talk about flaxseed and rapeseed we are talking about products of the edible oils industry. From these grains most edible oils are obtained, at least as far as Canadian agricultural production is concerned.

Even though our export sales of wheat in world markets have declined in recent years, Canada still retains a substantial portion of the world wheat export market, perhaps as much as 20 per cent of that market this year. The situation is entirely different for edible oils; we have only a very small fraction of the world market. In fact, total production of edible oil seeds in Canada represents only 1.8 per cent of world markets. Approximately half of the edible oil seeds produced in Canada are consumed in the home market, and thus rapeseed and flaxseed represent only 0.8 per cent of world exports. In other words, we have only a minute fraction of the total world market for edible oils.

We have learned from our most substantial market, Japan, that the Japanese are not interested in dealing with a government agency like the Wheat Board with regard to rapeseed exports. They have found it necessary as purchasers of Canadian edible oil seeds to ask for the same facilities as the grain exchange offers, and this they will not have if these grains are brought under the control of the Wheat Board. We are told in no uncertain terms by some of the major export consumers of Canadian edible oil that if they have to contend with the type of marketing that would of necessity be that which the Wheat Board uses when it sells wheat, they will go elsewhere for their supply of edible oil seeds.

I should like to ask who is kidding whom. It seems to me that if the government really wanted to help this part of the agricultural industry, it would seek ways and means of protecting the edible oils industry from imports of U.S. soybeans into Canada by seeking to bring about a reciprocal tariff arrangement. The United States ship a great deal of soybeans into Canada and, after all, soybeans are but another source of edible oils. These soybeans come into Canada free of duty.

On the other hand, when our edible oil seeds, which basically are derived from rapeseed and flaxseed, are shipped into the United States they are subject to heavy tariff restrictions imposed by the United States government. If the Canadian government had more concern about working out a reciprocal agreement between our two countries in regard to this type of agricultural product, I believe the industry would be helped much more positively than it is being helped by the negative approach taken in this legislation.

Why not correct this inequitable situation? There is no question that if some arrangement were worked out on a more satisfactory basis, probably all the edible oil seeds that Canada could produce would be consumed in the U.S. market even for a long time to come. But as the situation rests today, we cannot do this. Some may say—indeed, the minister himself might make this claim—that it is impossible to make this arrangement with the United States government. I might point out that Canada is a huge importer of United States agricultural produce and it seems to me we have a strong bargaining position when it comes to making the situation regarding the export of our edible oil seed to the United States more equitable than it is at the present time.

I believe the rapeseed associations—I am speaking about rapeseed only at this point—have done an excellent job of marketing. The western farmer certainly is not dissatisfied with the present situation. Just as a satisfactory price is being received both for cash sales and for rapeseed sold on the futures market, the government comes in with its big club and threatens to take the rapeseed industry over by making a marketing arrangement that the farmers do not ask for and do not want.

I would remind the minister that rapeseed and flaxseed have become a very important cash crop in the diversification of western agriculture. At the present time Canadian wheat production is much greater than wheat sales on the export market. Therefore the Department of Agriculture is advising farmers to diversify. Rapeseed and flaxseed have been two viable crops in this diversification, as evidenced by the fact that many farmers are selling their rapeseed and flaxseed directly on the market for the cash price of the day, giving them the cash income that they do not get for the sale of their wheat marketed by the Wheat Board, part of the payment for which is made in the future. This is why it seems to me that this particular aspect of the bill is not only unnecessary but potentially dangerous and is something that the producer does not want.

I am concerned about the numerous statements that are being made both by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) and the minister responsible for the Wheat Board in regard to over-all government policy. On April 27 the Minister of Agriculture spoke to the Canada Grains Council in Winnipeg. Without attempting to quote him at any length, I believe it is fair to say that the gist of what the minister said was that it is the primary objective of the government in Ottawa, where the central decision will be made, to take over control of the agricultural industry on the basis that it is necessary to have centralized control in order to have a more effective way of saying what shall be grown and how it shall be marketed.

To this extent it seems to me it is the apparent policy of this government to put itself in a position where it will be able to tell the farmers of Canada what to grow, when to grow it and how it shall be merchandised. It is very obvious that the government feels this type of central decision-making is the answer to the agricultural problems that exist in Canada. If this is the policy of the government, as reflected in the different pieces of legislation regarding the agricultural industry before the House at the present time, then I think the future of agriculture in Canada is pretty dim. If this is the intent and the policy of the government, it disturbs me no end; and I believe that the placing of rapeseed, flaxseed and rye under the control of the Wheat Board is an indication that this is the policy of the government.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I cannot give my support to Bill C-238. If I represent the voice of the farmers of my constituency who are producing a great volume of rapeseed at the present time, then I have to say no, the farmers do not want this bill, they do not need it. Further, I am afraid of what might be the end result if the government is authorized at this time to implement the provisions of this bill.

I oppose the bill on the basis that these three grains—rapeseed, flaxseed and rye—are brought within the marketing provisions of the Canadian Wheat Board and I oppose it on that aspect alone. This bill would bring these three grains under the marketing scope of the Wheat Board. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the minister will listen to what the industry has to say and will allow amendments to be made to the bill when it reaches committee. Appropriate amendments would delete this aspect of the bill and thus we could take a more positive attitude, giving the bill the support it truly needs from this House of Commons.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last we were treated to an exchange in the House of Commons between the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the opposition about getting work done and the important bills that are not being passed. I suggest to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board that this is a bill one part of which at least could well have been left in abeyance. I refer to the part concerning rye, flaxseed and rapeseed. This provision is not necessary and should not be passed until much more consultation is carried out with the trade, the farmers and the overseas buyers. This policy has created a great deal of confusion, particularly in the rapeseed market and forward sales up to November have dropped drastically. Until the situation is made clear exporters are reluctant to put themselves in a risk position: they do not know what will happen to rapeseed or what the situation will be this fall.

This is the only part of the bill that is controversial, and it could well have been left in abeyance. Had that been done, we might have passed this small bill without too much trouble. With regard to the announcement of the possibility of putting rye, flaxseed and rapeseed under the jurisdiction of the Wheat Board I refer to James Richardson and Sons' Grain Letter No. 10 dated April 22, 1971. It reads in part:

—a bombshell hit the trade this week when the federal minitser responsible for the Wheat Board the honourable Otto Lang announced in the House of Commons that he would introduce an amendment to the Wheat Board Act which would give the board jurisdiction over the sale of flaxseed, rye and rapeseed. Later on, the minister assured the grains industry that any consideration of changing the system of marketing rapeseed would be subject to thorough discussion with all parties concerned before any action was taken, and that the government at this time has made no decision to change the present marketing system. This, in our opinion, is far from reassuring and of little consolation to the industry as, once this amendment is passed and on the statute books, either this government, or any succeeding government, can implement it when and if they choose by Order in Council and without reference to Parliament. If Mr. Lang had considered the damage this publicity has already caused our image in the international markets for oilseeds, he would have consulted the industry before introducing this measure.

Speaking specifically of rapeseed, we believe—and the Winnipeg Grain Exchange have issued a press release to this effect—that the futures market has been one of the most important factors in the development and fantastic growth of our rapeseed production. Until trading in rapeseed futures was instituted, many years ago the producer had little or no knowledge of what the crop was worth. In the last several years of progressively greater production the producer has been able to market his crop at generally very good prices providing him with much needed cash when other grains were depressed and generally in a mess. To the best of our knowledge, the Rapeseed Association of Canada, all the provincial rapeseed associations representing producers, and all crushers in western Canada are against the Wheat Board taking over the marketing of this increasingly acceptable oilseed; in addition, Japanese exporters and crushers—our most important market—are emphatically opposed and while we are sure that these facts are known to Mr. Lang, why he should include it in the amendment is beyond our comprehension.

The same story may well apply to flaxseed which has been marketed through the open market for as long as this writer can remember except for a brief period after the Second World War when the Wheat Board took it over with dubious results. In all these years the crop has been marketed very efficiently through the open market, with cash returns to farmers generally very satisfactory, subject to the supply and demand picture as all markets ultimately are. The rye crop is a small one and unimportant in the over-all picture with much of it disappearing on the farms and we are sure that nothing would be gained by putting this crop under the control of the Wheat Board.

The reaction to the announcement to bring rye, flaxseed and rapeseed under the Wheat Board at this time has not been good and it prompted the minister to issue a press release dated May 11, 1971, which reads in part as follows:

"Because cash advances will not be available on rapeseed, flaxseed and rye in the near future, the government does not plan any action to bring the marketing of these grains under control of the Canadian Wheat Board at this time," the honourable Otto Lang, minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, said today.

If the minister did not intend to bring these under the Wheat Board at this time, what was his purpose in introducing this disconcerting amendment which has caused such consternation in all quarters? The minister's press release continued, in the last paragraph:

"But I repeat the government has no immediate plan to change the marketing system for these grains. And I assure producers that before any such change is contemplated there will be thorough discussions with everyone involved," Mr. Lang said.

Perhaps we should look at what the Wheat Board has been able to do in the past few months, keeping in mind what might happen if this amendment is passed and eventually put into effect. There have been predictions by the minister that there will be record grain sales this year amounting to 700 million bushels, of which he has estimated 500 million bushels could be wheat. This seems to be a little optimistic. The grain export figure to April 24 was estimated at 423 million bushels, or an average of 12 million bushels per week. With 16 weeks to go in the crop year, based on the average to date our grain exports would total around 600 million bushels of which approximately 400 million bushels would be wheat. At the end of the 1970-71 crop year there would still be an estimated 750 million bushels in storage.

We had a very late shipping season on the Great Lakes. An estimated 25 million bushels to 30 million bushels less than what would normally have been shipped have been bandied about.

Mr. Lang: It is going to be a record.

Mr. Ritchie: There is no evidence yet that there will be record grain shipments. With the Lift program, which provides 10 million acres more of summerfallow than we have ever had in western Canada, we can expect to produce 10 to 20 bushels per acre more than stubble would have produced. This means we will be faced with 200 million bushels more than we might have expected without the Lift program. In many ways the minister has pushed the surplus ahead one year by this program.

Let us consider what the Wheat Board is doing. It has fallen on bad times. In the crop years 1967-68 and 1968-69 the board's financial position deteriorated substantially. In the 1968-69 crop year there was a $40 million deficit. The policy of holding grain cost $102 million, with $79 million being paid by the taxpayer and the balance being charged to the farmer. This came about as a result of the unfortunate policy forced on the Wheat Board of holding wheat in order to comply with the International Grains Arrangement at a time when our competitors did not comply. This means that the board, which originally had been in an independent position, is controlled not by the producers but by the government, since the government has had to stand behind it.

It is to be hoped that the autonomy of the Wheat Board will be restored if and when it finds itself in a better position. One might ask what the future of the Wheat Board is to be in respect of the relationship between grains, particularly rapeseed and wheat. There has been a prolonged dry season in Oklahoma and Texas. This might mean an increase in wheat sales. The United States, however, has been selling as much as 100 million bushels of wheat to Japan, compared with 30 million bushels sold by Canada and less than 30 million bushels sold by Australia, which by many is not considered to be a large contender.

Then we have the China problem. We have been selling wheat to China. Our recognition of Red China in a diplomatic way should increase our sales there, but we must remember that the United States and Peking have been warming up and it would seem quite likely that the United States, which has embarked upon a strong agricultural drive in respect of exports with a goal as high as $10 billion, could seriously intrude into this market and some of the sales to China might be taken away from us.

Then in respect of the Soviet Union we are talking about a country which has had a record crop of wheat estimated at 98 million tons, which is an increase of 600 million bushels in the past crop year. Therefore the Soviet Union, to whom we have sold wheat, will be prepared to sell wheat in western Europe, particularly in West Germany, Britain and France. It would seem unlikely that we will be selling much wheat to the Soviet Union, which was one of our main markets in the 1960s. Even the sales of flour to Cuba may not continue.

Rye, flaxseed and rapeseed should not be included in this legislation until all interested parties have been heard. So far rapeseed has been moving very well, with an estimated record crop of 62 million bushels as of August 1. Forty-seven million bushels have been delivered up to the present, which represents about 75 per cent. In respect of flaxseed 46 per cent has been delivered out of a record crop for last year. Sales this year have not been very good. In respect of rye, there was a small crop which is hardly significant.

In respect of flour milling, the report of the grain marketing review committee submitted to the Canadian Wheat Board on January 12, 1971, stresses the difficulties of the flour milling industry which has been a voice in the wilderness. The report met with a deaf ear from the federal government and the Wheat Board. The industry now feels that the board will take some action on its own committee's recommendations, which were as follows:

> It is regrettable that the Canadian flour milling industry has been at a serious disadvantage in competing for foreign flour markets quite apart from subsidies granted by other exporting countries. This is the practical result of the present rigid rules governing purchases by Canadian mills for export.
> Existing rules regarding wheat purchases should be amended so that flour millers would be able to obtain wheat for later flour export at the board's export prices. Millers should also be eligible for discounts, bonuses, deferred pricing, credit, or opportunities to sell in local currencies when any of these devices are being used in connection with wheat sales, and when flour sales would probably be additional. Millers should have the opportunity to take positions in the wheat markets even though no actual flour sales have been made, provided the position taken in wheat is turned into actual exportation of flour within a reasonable time.

[Mr. Ritchie.]

Mr. Speaker, this is an indication that we must have action and that the Wheat Board has its hands full, without having forced on it the added problem of how to deal with rye, flaxseed and rapeseed. What about the situation in so far as marketing of rapeseed is concerned? In an article entitled "More control on prairie grains?" the Winnipeg Tribune of May 13 has this to say:

> Ottawa is considering whether to remove rapeseed, flaxseed and rye from the open market to give the Canadian Wheat Board a virtual monopoly on prairie grains. The board now has control of wheat, oats and barley in the Prairies. All these grains must be marketed through the board.

It continues:

> Oil seeds, however, are in a different league than the grains now controlled by the Wheat Board. It's a more complex and volatile market. Rapeseed represents only 2 per cent of the oilseed production in the world. It is in competition with many substitutes and requires quicker response to the market. It is entirely different than wheat, which has static markets.

Rapeseed oil is in competition with animal fats, marine oils, soybean oil, groundnuts and with many tropical oils such as coconut oil, and so on. In respect of sales, the record of rapeseed has been quite good. Only three years ago sales were in the neighbourhood of 17 million bushels. Last year the figure was 35 million bushels. It is estimated that this year 70 million bushels will be produced. So far this product has been moving at a very good rate and has provided much needed cash on the farms when other grains have not moved very well. It is expected that this year 40 million bushels will be exported. Much of the credit for this phenomenon, I believe, belongs to the private grain trade and the rapeseed producers themselves who have developed the market. It is not clear how the Canadian Wheat Board will sell rapeseed, whether the Winnipeg Grain Exchange futures will be continued or whether they will use other futures markets around the world, possibly the Chicago market. The rapeseed market follows the soybean market very closely and a movement in the soybean market is reflected almost simultaneously in the rapeseed market.

From the farmer's point of view, the marketing of rapeseed, rye and flaxseed under the Canadian Wheat Board has been a bone of contention. It has not been all black and white. In my experience most of the complaint seems to involve farmers being caught in the quota system because the capacity of the elevators and the transportation system to move rapeseed quickly has been reduced due to too much grain, particularly wheat, being in the system. It has happened that the quota given a producer in one area is different from that given in another area. This, however, is mainly due to the defects in the transportation system and not in the selling system to which rapeseed has been subjected.

The following possibilities seem to be open for selling rapeseed. One is to continue an open market under the Winnipeg Grain Exchange. Another is to close the market and to have the Wheat Board take over all sales. The Wheat Board would then be charged with the duty of selling rapeseed and it would have to develop its own sales force. It seems doubtful that it could use a futures market. In any case, before anything is decided it would be wise to know what sort of selling mechanism the Wheat Board will use to dispose of rye, flaxseed and rapeseed. There is another system which would involve pooling, whereby the Wheat Board would allow selling on the open market and would give an average price to the farmer.

This is a very important bill dealing with these three grains, but particularly with regard to rapeseed. It seems most important that farmers, especially rapeseed producers, be heard and that our exporters be heard. There is evidence that the Japanese have seriously questioned our ability to sell in this way and have indicated that they view it with considerable alarm. In any case, the action on the market in the last few weeks since the minister made his announcement has not been favourable to the trade, and unless a good system is evolved we may well lose sales and some of the advantages we have gained over the years in respect of this product.

Therefore, before this amendment becomes law—once it is implemented there will be no further opportunity for consultation with the rapeseed producers or the trade—I think it is most important that widescale hearings be held. I hope an amendment will be introduced in the committee whereby this portion of Bill C-238 will be deleted until further study is carried out and it is ascertained that the placing of these three grains under the Wheat Board will be advantageous to the producers.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say, first, that I am sure many of us paid great attention to the letter from James Richardson and Sons which was read by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie). When I think of James Richardson and Sons criticizing the placing of rape, flax and rye under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board, I wonder whether we should not be concerned about who is going to be raped by whom in this regard.

It seems to me it is only proper that we consider the people and organizations which have expressed opinions regarding placing these grains under the Canadian Wheat Board. I would quote the most recent article in the pool broadcast of April 28 suggesting that "it has been a long-stated request by farm organizations for many years, and while the legislation itself does not mean that automatically these grains will come under the Wheat Board, it is a necessary first step to allow this to happen." It continues:

> In the past we have been concerned about the marketing of these grains based only on the futures market, because this does not tend to lend stability to price or assure a continuity of supply to purchasers, and in discussions that we have had with importers of Canadian rapeseed in particular, namely the Japanese, they have requested that we bring more stability into the marketing of that grain and have urged us to adopt a system similar to that used for marketing wheat. So, I believe, that this step is a useful step in developing long-term markets for rapeseed.

It appears to me that whether or not we agree that rapeseed, flax and rye should come under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board, this legislation spells out a permissive attitude by placing these grains under the jurisdiction of the Wheat Board. At the same time we have to find out whether there is any orderly marketing of grains of the kind we should expect in this country.

I believe that one of the concerns with which all of us here have been confronted in the last three years deals with the auctioning of grain at various auction marts across the country. Not long ago I wrote a letter to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) asking whether he was aware that grain was being auctioned off at various auction marts across the country. I asked whether it was permissible under the Canadian Wheat Board's regulations to accept wheat or other grains as part or full payment for such items as were listed in a sales notice which I enclosed with my letter. The sales notice was from an area of western Canada which accepted grain in trade.

In reply the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce indicated that there was nothing illegal in the acceptance within the province of origin of wheat or other grains in full or part payment of goods sold. He said that the Canadian Wheat Board Act authorizes the Canadian Wheat Board to control prices for grain delivered by the producer to country elevators. In this context, other than for grain sales from country elevators there is no provincial or federal legislation controlling grain prices for sales within a province.

At that time thousands of bushels were moving from province to province, and thousands of bushels were being sold at fire-sale prices throughout western Canada because people had to sell their grain and obtain dollars in order to survive. They were compelled to do so. However, I am sure that most hon. members realize that this cannot be considered an orderly marketing of grain. This matter should be seriously considered if we are concerned about the producer receiving a fair return for his grain. We do not want to put him in the position of having to sell his grain at less than the cost of producing it, in order to buy a loaf of bread.

Some time later another situation came to my attention regarding an advertisement which appeared in a newspaper in western Canada. It read:

> Required immediately, 1,000,000 bu. No. 2 hard wheat. Will pay 17 cents cash per bu. Delivered to nearest elevator.

In reply to a question of mine in the House, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) said he would appreciate my sending him a copy of the newspaper advertisement, which I did. I thought it was in order for the minister to ask for it at that time. In his reply he suggested that he had been in touch with the Wheat Board regarding the advertisement and wrote:

> —they advise me that they made a full investigation immediately it appeared. They state that in so far as they are concerned there is no evidence of any illegal activities involved in this offer.

I saw the wheat being delivered into storage in reply to this advertisement and I saw the hundreds of trucks heading for the Alberta border and going into Alberta with grain at fire-sale prices—grain which was being moved from province to province. At that time many questions were asked in the House about the policing that was being carried out in order to discover whether grain was being moved illegally from Saskatchewan to Alberta. The reply which we received from the government was that they had investigated the situation and found that nothing illegal was happening in regard to the movement of grain. We knew differently.

That is why we now see provision being made for the orderly marketing of this type of grain in the legislation before us. It seems to me too many statements have been made in the House condemning the Wheat Board for its failure in the field of orderly marketing. In my humble opinion the board has not been given the right to go about the orderly marketing of grain in such a way that the producers in western Canada can receive a fair return on their investment.

In this connection, Mr. Speaker, it is ironic that I wrote a letter to the Minister of Agriculture just about two years ago, in May, 1969, on this subject. I believe it was on May 17 of that year and I think it will be of interest to hon. members if I quote the letter that I addressed to him. I wrote:

I have received many letters requesting the placing of feed grains, rye and flax under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board.

I believe you will agree that this is a matter of serious concern, particularly in view of the fact that there appears to be an increase in the acreage of rye, flax and rape.

It would be appreciated if your department would give serious consideration to this developing situation, as the farmer is finding himself in a precarious position.

Thanking you for the consideration shown in the past.

Many hon. members have suggested in this debate that the sale of rapeseed and flaxseed should not necessarily be placed within the responsibility of the Wheat Board, but I point out that two years ago these grains were becoming a surplus on the market, to the extent that I wrote the government asking that it take action to bring about orderly marketing of these grains. On May 22, 1969, the Minister of Agriculture replied to my letter as follows:

I have your letter of May 21 pertaining to the placing of feed grains, rye and flax under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board.

Fundamentally, the Canadian Wheat Board is a producers' marketing board, operating under federal legislation but overcoming the constitutional problem of jurisdiction by the enabling legislation passed by the provincial governments. The acts passed by Manitoba and Alberta cover only wheat, oats and barley. Thus it would not be possible for the Wheat Board to add the other grains to its coverage without legislative action by these provincial governments.

Even if the niceties of the legal side were satisfied, there is still the question of how much better off the producers would be if these other grains were brought under the jurisdiction of the board. There is evidence that less of each would be sold, and I understand that the board believes such might well be the case. Indeed I am sure that you have heard the increasing clamour to have even oats and barley regulations relaxed in order to move more of these grains. Marketing experts believe that while a pooling operation such as the Wheat Board's works well for a commodity like wheat, it is not suitable to Canadian oilseed crops because of their vulnerability to the competition from other oil seed crops produced in abundance throughout the world. The cost of marketing specialty crop grains through the Wheat Board could lower the returns to the producer.

Many western farmers insist on having access to a cash crop market, and count on their sales of rye, flaxseed and rapeseed for cash income when the regulated market for wheat, oats and barley is closed to them. With all grains under the Board a situation could easily arise where producers would not be able to make any deliveries at all. You can easily guess what the result would be.

It is unfortunate that these grains have to use the same transporting, handling and sorting facilities as do the Board grains. Because this is the case the Wheat Board must regulate their movement through the system by means of delivery quotas, arbitrary stock levels, etc. This, to my mind, provides the major basis for producers in their demands that the board merchandise these grains for them. It is a problem that I would hope the Canada Grains Council will be able to tackle and solve, soon.

These are some of my thoughts on this matter. I try to review them periodically so as to not to become stuck with outmoded ideas, but so far I am not at all enamoured with this notion that rye, flaxseed and rapeseed marketing belongs in the Wheat Board orbit.

[Mr. Skoberg.]

Mr. McIntosh: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) has quoted from these two letters, I wonder if he would now table them.

Mr. Speaker: Our Standing Orders do not provide for the tabling of documents by private members.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Speaker, if there were unanimous consent I would be only too pleased to table them. In any event, hon. members can read them in Hansard tomorrow. It appears that the Minister of Agriculture has moved from the position he adopted two years ago and has not remained stuck with an outmoded idea. But it is strange that two years ago when these grains were in a surplus position he did not have great concern for the situation. I think the minister in charge of the Wheat Board has an obligation to explain this to the House in his closing statement. Perhaps he will tell us if the Minister of Agriculture was somewhat outmoded two years ago.

The fact remains that there is a feeling throughout the country that these grains should not have to come under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. I hope the minister in charge of the board realizes he must consult directly with the people involved in the marketing and producing of these grains, to see if they can make a living as entrepreneurs in the present laissez faire system surrounding the marketing of them.

I would be highly suspicious reading anything from James Richardson and Sons that would indicate they were very excited about futures so far as the three grains in question are concerned. As the hon. member for Saskatoon- Biggar (Mr. Gleave) said earlier today, it will be interesting to see at the end of the crop year how the futures market has operated in the selling of these grains and whether producers who sold in the futures market were, in effect, raped by that type of trading. As the National Farmers Union and the pools have indicated, time will provide the answer.

A year ago, Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to tour Central and East Africa and in Lusaka met the President of Zambia and some of his ministers, in particular his Minister of Agriculture. I asked him what he thought about the prospects for agricultural exports from Canada. It was disheartening to find out that we did not have any exchange of missions with Zambia, and we still do not have such an exchange. The Zambian Minister of Agriculture said his country would be only too pleased to do business with Canada. We are recognized in that part of the world—as a matter of fact, throughout the Commonwealth—as one of the most trustworthy partners in the Commonwealth. But, Mr. Speaker, we do nothing to improve our export of grains to those countries. There is a way to bring about a proper exchange of missions but to date we have done nothing about it.

• (9:00 p.m.)

In the Montreal Star of July 20, 1970, there was an excellent article which spelled out where we stand in relation to United States markets. In part it reads:

> An example frequently used is the United States. With 20 times the population of Canada and thus many more mouths to feed, that country exported 75 per cent more wheat than Canada in 1968.
> The U.S. has climbed from a pre-war period of practically no wheat exports to become the largest exporter in the world. The 1968 figures show the U.S. cornered 33.2 per cent of the world market while Canada had 19 per cent.
>
> Wheat Board officials argue that this does not mean the Americans are better wheat salesmen. A large percentage of U.S. exports are made under aid programs and are government subsidized to varying degrees. The U.S. grain trade is also allowed to buy on the domestic market on an almost daily basis.

Further on it reads:

> The board says its reason for using exporting firms in the sale of wheat is because the firms are well established in the business and have contacts throughout the world. The private traders also have control of some shipping and because they are competitive the cost per bushel is small.

I think this is a clear indication that Canada has fallen down on concessional sales. In the publication "North American Agriculture in the New World," put out by the Canadian American committee in March, 1970, it is spelled out that Canada lost world markets by not entering into concessional sales. The United States immediately moved into concessional sales and, of course, commercial sales followed. This is a complete break from the type of salesmanship that the Canadian Wheat Board could have entered into if the government had allowed more concessional sales. It would follow that we could have picked up more commercial sales, but we did not.

About a year ago Canada finally moved into more concessional sales, but only time will tell whether we can pick up lost ground. In the meantime the agricultural producer of this country suffered tremendously both socially and economically through having a government that was not concerned about allowing concessional sales along the lines of those the U.S. government made at that time. In fact, it appears that at that time the United States had a 2 per cent interest. All they wanted was the concessional sale with the commercial sale. History will show that this is what happened regarding Canada's loss of sales.

If this country goes into long-term credit, Mr. Speaker, I am sure we will be able to regain markets, but we will not regain them in the agricultural economy unless we go into that type of salesmanship as other countries have done. We know that we could establish a line of credit with a number of countries. We know that many countries would do business with Canada if they could do so in their present economic situation. Unfortunately, it appears that we can think of many other areas that do not concern the basic industry of Canada where we can grant large concessions, whereas agricultural concessions to these countries could be of the utmost importance.

We should look at some of the local problems, Mr. Speaker, and if you will permit I shall become very very parochial. Today I received a letter about a simple situation. The elevator men at this location were concerned because they could not receive the market quotations broadcast which was available to others. Apparently because of their location there was a problem of fade-out. I ask the minister through you, Mr. Speaker, to look at this market quotations service which is supplied throughout the western provinces and to make sure that it is available on all networks. We have had complaints about people in various departments getting "hung up" on radio and television broadcasting and ignoring newspaper advertising when it comes to letting the people of the country know what is going on. It is necessary that the broadcasting of market quotations be made available to elevator people so that they may know exactly what is going on.

Another area that requires attention is in connection with deferred delivery and over-delivery. Not long ago we asked the minister and the government to institute deferred delivery of grain based on the previous crop year's prices. I hope that the legislation before us will provide for over-delivery or deferred delivery. If the elevator space does not permit delivery in the crop year, then the farmers should receive the same price as for the grain they were able to deliver. I hope there is provision for this in the legislation. The minister should take this matter into consideration because it is most important to the people of western Canada.

In Canada there are a number of inland terminal elevators. They are located at Moose Jaw, Saskatoon, Lethbridge, Calgary, Edmonton, Prince-Rupert, Churchill and Vancouver and have a combined capacity of 19,350,000 bushels. It appears that these elevators are not being used to full capacity. I realize that many of them should retain a little space, but as inland elevators it is difficult to see why any appreciable amount of space is left. Less than two years ago there was an emergency on the west coast with No. 2 Northern grain. Moose Jaw was filled to capacity with it, but no trains were moving at that time. Finally, a debate in this House resulted in trains moving out of that terminal hauling No. 2 Northern to ships that were waiting in Vancouver. Surely this situation should not be allowed to exist while we have the inland elevators. Surely they should be used to full capacity. They could be used for drying grain, which was necessary less than two years ago, and for other purposes. The main thing is that they should not be standing empty when farmers are without the means of storing grain on their farms.

I understand there has been a change at the ports, and if the minister is responsible for it then it is only proper that he should be congratulated. In conversation with people at the port of Vancouver I found out that they are now leaving cars in blocks of 50. The track will also be able to switch-out the cars. They move the cars in and change the waybills at a later date. Why could this not have been done earlier? All it will require is putting the grain in, unloading that particular grade of grain and exchanging the waybills or bills of lading. If we had used this method in the past two or three years we could have unloaded a great many more bushels of grain. I hope that this type of operation at the port of Vancouver will prove to be successful. I understand it will be a success. I hope the government will provide more storage at Vancouver and other ports, because it is absolutely necessary.

• (9:10 p.m.)

Some of us think that the powers of the Canadian Wheat Board should be widened to give the board jurisdiction not over Canadian grain but over the operation of all grain handling facilities. These should come under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. This is necessary if the board is to operate successfully in this day and age. We think that the cost of storing all grains should be paid by the federal government. Under this legislation, under previous legislation and under legislation still to be introduced—here it is hard to say which came first, the chicken or the egg—the farmer will still get the thin end of the wedge.

We do not hesitate in saying that the Canadian Wheat Board can do a good job in this area. The Wheat Board is facing difficulties because we are telling them, "You must do the job," at the same time we are telling international brokerage firms, "You do the job." As one speaker said, some of these firms also have an interest in shipping companies. In no way, I suggest, is it possible for international brokerage firms with an interest in shipping companies to be greatly concerned about the shipment of Canadian wheat. They will ship from the countries where their ships are at berth.

Therein lies one of the problems still facing our agricultural economy. It affects the orderly marketing and movement of grains from our shores. The international brokerage firms want their cut of the farmer's income. They want to make sure they get their slice of the pie. They have an interest in ships, and they sell grain to various countries. I assure you that if a ship belonging to an international brokerage firm were in Australia, the firm would rather fill that ship with Australian grain than send it empty to Canada in order to move our grain to Japan or wherever it may be.

As I say, this is one of the great problems besetting our agricultural economy. I hope the minister will look at the situation and make sure that if the Canadian Wheat Board is to do a job in this area it is given the tools with which to do it. Let us not give somebody else a slice of the pie in that manner. If we are truly concerned about this situation we must make sure that there is complete and orderly marketing of the kind that has been referred to. That involves, of course, the selling of grain, the placing of fresh grains out on futures and the handling of grains by international brokerage firms. Also, the Canadian Wheat Board must be responsible for the full operation of the western prairie producer.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I rise merely to ask a couple of questions about Bill C-238. I notice that it is designed to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act. Actually, there are two amendments in the bill. The first had to do with the grading of grain and the other with the inclusion of rapeseed, and so on, under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. Many hon. members have talked about this matter.

Mr. Benjamin: Is the hon. member in favour of that, or not?

Mr. McIntosh: I will tell the hon. member that I am not in favour of his party; that is certain.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McIntosh: The people on my left speak one way here, and when they go out to the Prairies they speak differently. I am not afraid to take up the challenge thrown out tonight by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg). I will certainly challenge the Wheat Board if they are not doing the job. I have been doing that ever since I came here. The one job they are not doing today is selling grain.

Mr. Benjamin: Why does the hon. member say that?

Mr. McIntosh: I will tell the hon. member why.

Mr. Benjamin: I think I know why.

Mr. McIntosh: No, the hon. member does not. They are not selling grain.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question. Does the hon. member appreciate that this year their total sales of Canadian grain may achieve a record?

Mr. McIntosh: Yes.

Mr. Horner: Is it "may" or "shall"?

Mr. McIntosh: I am very pleased that the minister asked me that question. I had intended referring to some of his statements along that line. I was amazed when he rose in the House while another hon. member was dealing with this matter and said that this year there have been record sales of grain. May I ask the minister a question? Is he aware of present economic conditions on the Prairies? I say that if this is the best we can do, with conditions as serious as they are on the Prairies something must be drastically wrong with this government's program.

Let me repeat something I said about the government's agricultural program. Its entire agricultural program is based on the reduction of everything—the reduction of production, grain, cattle and even the number of farmers on the farm. They want to take 200,000 of our 430,000 farmers off the farm. That is their entire program. The minister knows that as well as I do. The minister knows as well as any prairie businessman that farming conditions are terrible and that prairie economic conditions are terrible. Farmers cannot pay debts, cannot sell produce and have produce piled up to the eaves, as I said before.

Speaking on an agricultural bill last night, the minister said as reported at page 5835 of Hansard:

> I have been very disturbed by the tactics of some hon. members in connection with the legislation previously before the House. I was concerned that was some indication that they would hold up legislation without regard to the good of the farmers in western Canada.

He is not the only one who is disturbed; he is not the only one who is concerned. If he had listened to the speeches of hon. members on this side of the House, he would know why farmers are disturbed and concerned. We are disturbed as a result of the issue he himself raised. Although he suggests that there will be record sales of grain, the economy of the Prairies has not been at a lower ebb for years and years. I think the minister will admit this.

What is the trouble? I am not criticizing the minister personally. I only wish he would do what he is asking us to do, that is, listen. The minister may say that according to all indications our present grain exporting system is working to capacity and that we are losing sales because we cannot meet delivery requirements. He might go on to say that if we had another $25 million of sales we could not make delivery.

Mr. Lang: That is not true.

Mr. McIntosh: The minister says that is not true. Ever since he has occupied this portfolio the minister has made excuses when we have criticized the government because grain has not been in position on the west coast, or because not enough grain has been in position. At one time it was too cold for the trains to haul the grain. Another time labour was to blame; there was a strike. In any event, the railways did not have the grain in position. There were always excuses. When reading the paper the other day I noticed that they are preparing us for another situation that may develop at the Lakehead. They are now saying that because of the late opening of the Great Lakes, they may not be able to make their promised deliveries during the shipping season.

Mr. Benjamin: God is at fault, too!

Mr. McIntosh: If our system is not adequate, let us start at the beginning and change it. What is the matter? The minister speaks of record sales, yet the economy of the Prairies is at its lowest ebb. Something is radically wrong. Let us all get together and not fight like this.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McIntosh: The minister also told us that a great deal has been said by some farm leaders and people in politics which was most regrettable; these people had only caused fear among farmers who wanted to make a success of farming. It was the intention of the government to help them as much as possible by putting the system into the best possible shape. But he would surely give us on this side of the House, and the farm leaders of whom he was speaking, at least some credit for being disturbed about conditions on the Prairies, otherwise we would not be wasting our time standing up here talking to deaf ears.

The minister should analyse the position further. In a democracy there ought to be a free flow of information. One of the reasons we are standing up asking these questions is that the minister fails to answer them during the day to day question period. If he would look back on some of his answers he would see how political they were. Then he would not get up and make statements like the one I have mentioned. He is not endowed with any more gifts than the rest of us in this House, or than the leaders of farm organizations. He is not the only one who knows what is good for agriculture. Cannot he take advice? Apparently he is taking advice from the wrong people.

If I were in his place I would listen to what his Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said. What is participatory democracy? Are we to participate in it, or not? The first person who used that phrase, as I understand it, was Mao Tse-tung. Does the minister want us to follow that line of thinking? Is that what he is doing by trying to get 200,000 farmers off the land? Is he trying to establish complete control over production and everything else connected with the industry? Some of my friends think this is the case. In other words, he is going further to the left than some of those in the party sitting to my left. He is out-socializing the socialists, and that is hard to do.

This bill actually contains two distinct propositions. The first we shall not quarrel with. We are all in favour of protein grading and we give the minister full marks for bringing in the provisions dealing with this matter. But why was it necessary to include clauses making it possible to bring rapeseed, and so on, under the control of the Wheat Board? Was it to bait us? If so, he has succeeded, because every member on this side of the House who has spoken in the debate so far has criticized those provisions as unnecessary.

If protein grading is what our customers want, we can meet their requirements because we have some of the best protein graded wheat in the world. Had the minister confined the bill to those provisions, the measure would have gone through the House in an hour. But the minister had to make it a package deal. He puts a carrot in it, then he goes on the radio and blasts the farm leaders and the opposition for not going along with him.

Mr. Rose: He is a law professor.

Mr. McIntosh: Did they teach him everything about agriculture?

Mr. Rose: Lawyers are endowed with all the answers.

Mr. McIntosh: He may have sold the CCF on this idea, but he has not sold the Conservative party.

Mr. Rose: Or Mao Tse-tung.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You mean the NDP.

Mr. McIntosh: I just said he was out-socializing the socialists, and that is hard to do.

An hon. Member: Look under your bed, Jack, and there will be Mao Tse-tung.

Mr. Perrault: On with the speech.

Mr. McIntosh: If you knew where I stay, I had better look up than down.

Mr. Rose: I guess he is above you.

An hon. Member: Where are you?

Mr. McIntosh: I don't know. I don't have any place to go from there.

We on this side are tired of the minister's pleas on television and radio. We are tired of his lecturing us as he did last evening. He would get 100 per cent co-operation if he would use his learning as a law professor to analyse the situation which exists and relate the fact that a record amount of grain has been sold to the economic situation on the Prairies.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McIntosh: The farmers on the Prairies cannot eat records: they must have money to eat. The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault) is another who is familiar with the effects of agriculture policies on the Prairies. I do not know the source of his information or knowledge, but he must have been closely associated with the minister at one time or another because their thoughts are very much on the same lines. They contend that farm leaders and others who try to give them good ideas and suggest ways of getting their legislation through the House in an easy manner are raising unnecessary fears.

They know we can support some part of the bills they bring forward, and if we do not support the whole of the legislation they condemn us on radio and television. It is too bad the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) is not here tonight. I say to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board that those tactics are not going over in western Canada. If he does not know it now he will certainly know it shortly, judging by the number of coupons which are coming in to our offices, if they are any indication of the disturbance being created out there by the tactics these people are trying to employ.

Like other members on this side, I commend the minister for bringing in these provisions making changes in the grading system. This is something which has been needed for a long time, something our customers have wanted. But with regard to the inclusion of rapeseed, and so on, I say he would be well advised to listen to the suggestions which have been made to him and drop those particular provisions from the bill. As he says, they are not to be used right now; there is no need for them right now; as long as he is minister they will not be used. Why, then, is such a provision made in the legislation? The minister forgets he may not be responsible for the Wheat Board for very long. Indeed, he may not be a member from the Prairies for very long.

Mr. Horner: According to Doug Fisher.

Mr. McIntosh: That is beside the point. I cannot understand how he believed we would buy a package such as this; how he can tell those who will be directly affected by this legislation that it will never be used. If it will never be used, why put it in the bill in the first place? Why not wait until we hear more from the people concerned? We know there is an argument on both sides, but I do not think anyone can as yet determine whether or not these other products should be under the control of the Wheat Board.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rose to take part in this debate thinking that I would not be recognized, but I should like to give expression to some thoughts that passed through my mind this afternoon and during the earlier part of this evening in regard to just which of the government or official opposition parties is on the side of the angels, and which is not. One gets the impression that they are on both sides.

Clause 5 of this bill repeals section 35 of the act and substitues therefor the following:

> 35. (1) The Governor in Council may by regulation extend the application of Part III or Part IV or of both Parts III and IV to any or all of oats, barley, rye, flaxseed or rapeseed or to all of them.

I gather that means that the minister and his colleagues in the government may or may not bring these products under the sole jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. This afternoon the minister agreed that the major farm organizations representing the grain producers support the provisions of the bill and agree that the Canadian Wheat Board should have jurisdiction over rye, flaxseed and rapeseed. Then the minister proceeded to say that a plebiscite should be held, that there should be a thorough investigation made and all questions that need to be asked should be asked and answers given before we decide whether these three grains should be brought under the jurisdiction of the Wheat Board.

I suggest the minister cannot have it both ways. Neither can the official opposition. Either they are in favour of a compulsory, universal, or whatever you may call it, orderly system of marketing grain or they are not, and I think it is time they said which it is. You can hold plebiscites and referendums all you want. The fact remains that the three prairie Wheat Pools, the Federations of Agriculture, the National Farmers Union and the provincial branches thereof, plus—as an afterthought—the CCF and New Democratic Party since 1935 have been saying that these grains should be under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board.

We have both the government and the official opposition being half-pregnant, and that is not easy. They say there should be a plebiscite on this question. The three prairie pools, the three prairie federations of agriculture through the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, and the National Farmers Union have submitted briefs and resolutions to this government, and to the Tory government before it, asking that these three grains be brought under the Canadian Wheat Board marketing system. They have made this request for the last 25 years, yet both the government and the official opposition are still saying, "Well, let us be careful; let us not rush into this. After all, we have to have a plebiscite to figure out how the grain growers feel about it". They have been putting off the grain growers and giving them the run-around since both parties have tried to take credit for the Canadian Wheat Board Act in 1935. The only difference between these two parties is that when one of them is in, the other is out. Neither has introduced a measure in which the party believed in principle—

Mr. Horner: Would the hon. member permit a question at this point?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member may put a question if the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) agrees to accept it.

Mr. Benjamin: I would appreciate that.

Mr. Horner: The hon. member has gone on at length about what may or may not have been the various positions of the government party and the official opposition, but could he clearly state the position of the NDP on rapeseed, flaxseed and rye being included within the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board?

Mr. Benjamin: I would be delighted to state the position of our party. I think it has been pretty well unequivocal, even though it may have cost us some seats. We have never strayed from the principle of an orderly, public marketing system for our grains. We have never strayed from the contention that parasites have been riding the backs of the grain growers, rapeseed, flaxseed and rye, exploiting the farmers of these three products to this day.

My colleague from Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) was too kind to the minister this afternoon, I think—he wasn't even mean to the official opposition—when he illustrated chapter and verse the kind of margin that exists in the grain trade as far as rapeseed is concerned. I hope either the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) or the minister will explain to the House the reason for a 36 cents margin on rapeseed. Who is getting this 36 cents, and what is it for? I hope the hon. member for Crowfoot and some of his colleagues will explain to the House the mysterious disappearance of rapeseed, with half of one cent going into the private grain trade. I am sure all the rapeseed growers in Alberta and Saskatchewan would like an explanation and would also like to know why there is a 36 cents margin per bushel of rapeseed.

Mr. Horner: Would you believe storage?

Mr. Benjamin: This mysterious disappearance is over and above storage. I have mentioned the three prairie pools, and there are Tories, Liberals and NDP'ers and a few others besides who are members of those three pools, as they are of the National Farmers Union, the federations of agriculture and the various branches. For 25 cotton-picking years they have been unanimous in their request for an orderly, public marketing system for all grains under the jurisdiction of the Wheat Board. Now the minister says he is going to have it both ways.

Mr. Horner: Which way are you going to have it?

Mr. Benjamin: Surely all grains should be under the Wheat Board or none of them should. This is what the minister faces and he knows it. He can drag this question out for another six or ten years, and if he is lucky the Tories will get into power and then they will be able to drag it out for another six or ten years and we will never get the question resolved. This is what has been happening since 1935 when you and I, Mr. Speaker, were just kids.

Mr. MacInnis: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Benjamin: I would love to.

Mr. MacInnis: Would the hon. member draw his remarks, which eliminated any possibility of the NDP ever forming the government, to the attention of his new leader tomorrow?

Mr. Benjamin: That is an assumption that my hon. friend has made. In spite of the fact that they do not grow a bushel of—

Mr. MacInnis: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis) on a question of privilege.

Mr. MacInnis: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. May I inform the hon member that I made no such assumption. All I did was put back on the record what the hon. member himself placed there when he called attention to the fact that only Liberals or Conservatives would form the government.

Mr. Benjamin: The hon. member has a good point there, and I did not make myself clear. I am glad he has drawn it to my attention and I will correct that statement right now. If and when all we are faced with is a Liberal or a Tory government, each will take turns every six or ten years holding plebiscites and trying to be on both sides of the question whether or not we will have a government-operated, producer-represented marketing board in control of the marketing of all grains.

This government has the organizational genius for having it both ways, and their position has been perpetuated by the official opposition. If the three pools to which I have referred, along with the federations of agriculture and the National Farmers Union—I admit there is some duplication of membership there—do not represent something over three-quarters of our grain growers in the three prairie provinces, then I have missed my guess. The minister has talked about plebiscites for how many years? He can count them up. They have asked, demanded and pleaded in briefs and resolutions that these grains be brought under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. Whether it is the Winnipeg Grain Exchange, so to speak, the private grain trade or the grain trade as a whole, including farmers' own companies, none by itself can work in the best interests of grain producers in terms of the maximum price for the product. Only a government-operated board could do this.

The minister has to decide which way he is going to go on this. He is invited to put his proposals to the grain growers in the three prairie provinces, and that is the majority. They have submitted views year after year asking that these grains be brought under the jurisdiction of the Wheat Board.

We hear a great deal about the block system and the switching of cars. I might say for the edification of my colleague, the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg), that the minister finally agreed that farmer-owned grain companies should not be penalized for the spotting of cars that they load on the Prairies to be moved to terminals owned by the private grain trade by not being reimbursed for their costs and given their share of the market. I hope the minister is not trying to tell me that question did not enter the discussions. I hope the minister is not trying to say that was not taken into consideration when the agreement was arrived at to spot cars loaded by the Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba wheat pools at the terminals of private companies. If he does try to tell us that, I am going to ask some of the officials of the three pools to give us their side of the argument.

The grain growers in the three prairie provinces have been asking for the provisions, which are only permissive in this legislation, since the 1940s—and we have had governments of the two old line parties since that time. All these governments have failed to acquiesce to the demands of the grain growers, and this government still fails to do so. The minister can sit there from now until the day he is finished as a minister, however long that may be, and never move the grain in the interests of the producers until it is done under the Canadian Wheat Board. I submit that it would be more efficient and more representative of the grain interests, not only to the producers but also to the handlers of grain, if they were all working under one jurisdiction, the Canadian Wheat Board.

This would save the grain producers money and the minister a lot of headaches. This may not be all that good for those who want to speculate and be parasites; and there are still some hangers-on from as far back as the dirty thirties. They want their day, and want their marbles without doing a day's work. There are still those who want to speculate on futures by being dealers rather than buyers and sellers of Canadian grain.

It seems to me the minister should invite the grain trade and the producers to operate under the jurisdiction of a national marketing grain agency, namely the Canadian Wheat Board. In this way he could prove once and for all that he means business and that this is one area where private enterprise has no cotton-picking business. He could even put his friends in the official opposition on the spot, as they in turn could put the minister on the spot.

We find this situation very amusing at the moment because members on both sides of the House are on both sides of the question. They do not believe entirely in an orderly, public grain marketing system. They talk about plebiscites. Any old line party could organize a plebiscite in relation to the private grain business, the livestock business or anything else. You can put coupons in the newspapers and incite and organize anybody and everybody to write in against something. I wish just for a change one of these parties would organize the people in Canada in favour of something.

It is easy to cook the books beforehand and bring in a red herring such as a plebiscite, as the minister did this afternoon. He has had the results of a plebiscite from the grain growers in the three Prairie Provinces for the last 25 years. This represents the overwhelming majority of grain producers. Some of my relatives who are not members of the NDP are sick, tired and fed up with the old expression—

An hon. Member: They are even more so now.

Mr. Benjamin: You can choose your friends but you are stuck with your relatives. Even some of them are fed up with what is happening in relation to the grain trade, the grain exchange and the industry as a whole. The minister had better make up his mind which way he is going to move. He cannot be for the grain producers on the one hand and against them on the other. I suspect he is even conning his colleagues in the cabinet, who would not know a bushel of anything from their backsides, into going in with him because he has not the nerve to do one thing or the other. He is not the first. All his predecessors in Liberal and Tory governments have not had the nerve to move one way or the other in respect of the demands of the grain producers in the three Prairie Provinces.

The NDP is in the same position as usual in respect of a bill such as this when the government, Liberal or Tory, goes only so far. They are afraid to go the whole way and do what they are talking about. They never do what they say. They talk a good fight and put in all the words that mean orderly marketing. They are all in favour of the Wheat Board. You could not get a Liberal or a Tory in this place to say a word against the Wheat Board. Ask any one of them to give the Canadian Wheat Board the kind of policy that will allow them to function with complete authority in the interests of the grain producers and they will say, "Oh, no. Wait a minute. We have to be careful before we do this. We must hold a plebiscite. We have to think this over some more." My God, we have been thinking it over since 1935. The government said it is not sure yet whether it wants an orderly marketing system. I hope my friends from both of the old parties will come to Regina-Lake Centre or any riding in Saskatchewan and try to sell the half-pregnant idea that they are working in their interests.

An hon. Member: We have been successful for 14 years.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What about Assiniboia?

Mr. Benjamin: The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh) could not find a Saskatchewan Wheat Pool member or delegate anywhere in his riding who would agree with his position tonight. I hope he will make the same speech in his riding and give all that jazz about these three grains not being under the Canadian Wheat Board. I hope the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt (Mr. Lang) will talk the same way in his riding and in mine as he does here. How much longer does the government intend to put off the grain producer? What more do they need than the request from—

Mr. Lang: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. minister rising to ask a question?

Mr. Lang: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I believe the hon. member is willing to answer one. Does he not agree that more rapeseed is grown in my riding than in his riding and the riding of the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek put together? It may make some difference if we know whether the hon. member is talking about growers of rapeseed or just growers.

Mr. Benjamin: That is perfectly true. There is more rapeseed grown in the minister's riding than in the ridings of the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek and mine put together. I do not know what the minister has been hearing from the rapeseed growers in his riding, but I have been hearing from them and the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar has been hearing from them. I do not know whether the minister has quit reading his mail or whether people have just quit writing him. It may be the latter.

This minister displays a stubbornness and arrogance of a kind not known even to Jimmy Gardiner. He has received representations time after time from the majority of producers in the three Prairie provinces, yet he refuses to listen to one thing they have asked. He chickened out on a couple of things in the stabilization program because these producers were so bloody mad that even his own colleagues would not go along with him. He had only one colleague from Saskatchewan, and we really miss him now.

The minister betrays the grain growers and those who side half-way with him or against him by not bringing these three grains under the Canadian Wheat Board. He also betrays the grain producers in the three Prairie provinces. He had better make up his mind, because this is what it's all about. This is what we will point out when we are back home in the hills. The minister cannot have it both ways. He cannot fool the people any longer.

The minister is part of the government. In which way does he want it? He cannot have it both ways any longer. He cannot fob us off with plebiscites. All he need do is take a quick look at all the submissions, briefs and resolutions he has had. I would remind my colleagues in the official opposition to pay a little attention to the grain growers in the three prairie provinces who have been waiting since the end of the Second World War. Then we might have an end to this damned nonsense about the minister may or may not, or the Governor in Council may or may not, put some of these grains under the Canadian Wheat Board.

Why do we need a Winnipeg Grain Exchange? What, in the name of common sense or efficiency or in the name of better returns for farmers, do we need a private grain trade for, jockeying back and forth on prices? That has nothing to do with the welfare and good order of the grain growers. We do not need them. The minister can put representatives of those people on the Canadian Wheat Board if he wishes. Also, he can give the Canadian Wheat Board complete jurisdiction over those three grains. He knows that, but he chooses to be friends to both sides. Well, that is fine; he can try to be friends of those who reside in Winnipeg or occupy the multistoried buildings in that city, but I hope he will come out to Nokomis, Watrous and some of the other places in Saskatchewan and tell the grain producers there about how he brought in legislation which did not fulfil their requests which go back for many years. It will be an interesting exercise to hear him try to explain that. He has not explained it in this House. All he has done is put off the question.

The official opposition now starts the same old hysterical scare-campaign. They say, "Be careful; this minister could almost be considered to be next door to a communist if you are not careful. The very fact that this is permissive legislation might mean that when the bill passes he will place these three grains under the Wheat Board the very next day." Mr. Speaker, to hear them tell it, this guy would make Khrushchev look like a Conservative. Really, most of these outfits would stretch anybody's credibility. To hear them tell it, the minister in charge of the Wheat Board is a wild-eyed, raging left-winger. That ought to send any mild Socialist into hysterics.

The members of the official opposition had better make up their minds once and for all—let us all put our cards on the table—whether they are in favour of a public-controlled or state-controlled, I will use that word because it will suit them better, public marketing system of grains in the territory covered by the Canadian Wheat Board. Let us divide it along those lines so we can see which way the sheep go and which way the goats go.

Mr. McIntosh: You still would not believe it.

Mr. Benjamin: Coming from the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek I probably wouldn't; but I would like to know which way he goes. I am sure the grain growers in Swift Current-Maple Creek would like to know. You see, it is a little easier to get away with the jazz about livestock or hogs, because there are not so many. It is a little easier to get away with that. You can gallop around on either side of the question ad nauseum, but the grain question is a little different. That will be a little tougher for these boys to handle.

If you want a Canadian Wheat Board which has some authority and some policies, then you should not handcuff it. You should allow it to do a job for the benefit of the grain producers of Canada, with the national strength of Canada behind its operation in the international market. You should not diffuse or weaken it by allowing a lot of parasites to get their hands in the till as well. If this is what you want, you will not allow a lot of people who do not do much work on grain production or selling to get a piece of the action. You will preserve this for the grain producers and for the national interest, and you will quit allowing the grain trade in its multiplicity of numbers, or the grain exchange—these parasites who never did an honest day's work in their lives and who speculate on the work and labour of other men—to become involved in this area.

I believe this is where the nuts and bolts of the operation are. I believe there is more to this bill than meets the eye. It is not as nice and mild as the minister would have us think. It is not as the official opposition would have us believe. They would have us believe the minister will bring about state control in respect of all these grains automatically. Mr. Speaker, I would bet that if this bill passes, you and I will not live long enough to see the minister put these three grains under the Canadian Wheat Board, because he does not really mean it. He does not really believe it. I question whether he really believes in a government-operated, producer-controlled, public, orderly marketing system for grains. If he did, he would not horse around with futures markets for flaxseed or rapeseed. If he really believed what he is talking about in this bill, he would not try to kid the official opposition which at least would like to be on one side. He will not let them.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the members from the two old line parties will get up and once and for all say what they stand for, instead of trying to be on both sides of this question. The New Democratic Party has favoured public marketing of grains under the Canadian Wheat Board since 1935. We have never wavered from that. I hope some of the figures the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar threw at the minister this afternoon will give him pause and cause him to think about what is happening to the rapeseed growers and how many cents a bushel they have been done out of in the past three years.

If the minister will think this over a little, perhaps he will say that the bill needs amending in order to make it a little stronger than it is. Then perhaps once and for all the grain producers of the three Prairie provinces will get what they have been begging for for years. They are by far the majority. If the minister wants to have a really good plebiscite he had better call one tomorrow so that those who throw their money, their interests, and their prejudices behind outfits like the private grain trade and the Winnipeg Grain Exchange will not be able to flood the weekly newspapers with misrepresenting half-truths such as we have had in the past few weeks.

I hope the minister will say that the day this bill is passed there will be a plebiscite so that the grain producers can speak without being saturated with a propaganda campaign the like of which reminds me of medicare and several other fights the people of this country have fought for years and years and then had to wait while the old line parties tried to be all things to all people.

An hon. Member: Old Lang!

Mr. Benjamin: Auld Lang parties might be a better way to say it. It is not Auld Lang Syne, although I hope to sing that song to the hon. member. Mr. Speaker, I hope hon. members in the old line parties will say whether or not they are in favour of a government-operated, producer-controlled Canadian Wheat Board with all grains under it. When they do that it will be an edification for all the people of the three Prairie provinces.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

PUBLIC SERVICE—CLYNE COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION FOR WITHDRAWAL OF RIGHT TO BARGAIN COLLECTIVELY FROM CERTAIN EMPLOYEES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, May 11, as recorded in Hansard at page 5688, and on Wednesday, May 12, as recorded at page 5735, I put questions to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) concerning a certain recommendation in the most recent report of the Clyne committee. The recommendation in question is the one to the effect that a large number of senior public servants should be removed from the area of collective bargaining.

I asked the President of the Treasury Board to give the assurance that the government would not support this retrogressive recommendation. On both of the days to which I referred, the reply of the President of the Treasury Board was to the effect that I was asking him to prejudge the study of a committee which is considering the whole question of the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

This matter really goes back to Monday, April 26, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) rose in this House and tabled two or three documents, one of which attracted more interest than the others, namely, the one having to do with increasing the pay of Members of Parliament. I am afraid that because of the attention that was given to that matter, less attention than they deserved was given to the recommendations of the Clyne committee which the Prime Minister tabled at the same time. It seems to have taken some time for those concerned to become aware of the significance of the recommendations of the Clyne committee, but I submit that some of them are very serious and, as a matter of fact, all of them are of significance.

The point I wish to make in support of my pressing again tonight the question I asked on May 11 and 12 is that when the Prime Minister tabled the Clyne committee report on April 26 he picked out one recommendation in it which, he said, the government refused to accept. There was no suggestion that that amounted to a prejudging of the study of the Public Service Staff Relations Act. The government took its position and made it clear there was one recommendation which it refused to accept. There were certain other recommendations which it said it was prepared to accept. There were one or two which it said it had already put into effect. As for this question of removing senior public servants from the provisions of collective bargaining, the Prime Minister said that that could well be studied by the committee which is operating under the aegis of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang).

It is my contention that the government, having identified clearly the portion of the Clyne report to which it was opposed has, by implication, accepted the rest of that report. To tell us that it has been referred for study when it is not willing to take a position on it in public as it did on one matter is, as I see it, to imply a readiness to accept that recommendation.

It is my observation that many public servants in the area affected are quite concerned about this. The organizations that represent them are expressing that concern. This is true in particular of the Professional Institute of the Public Service and the Professional Association of Foreign Service Officers. These two staff associations would be most affected if the Clyne recommendation were carried out. But even though the two organizations most affected are the two that I have indicated, the Public Service Alliance of Canada has also taken the same view. It has come to the aid of its sister associations in urging that the government come clean with respect to this matter.

I submit it is not good enough just to tell us that to ask for a statement is to ask for a prejudging of the recommendation of the special committee. We have been through this kind of thing before. If we sit back and say nothing, the government can well come along and accept the Clyne recommendation and thousands of these senior public servants will be removed from the area of collective bargaining.

Maybe the government is not in a position to say at this point that under no condition will it agree with the Clyne recommendation, but it ought at least to refrain from accepting it in advance; it ought to make it clear that its mind is open on the matter. The impression I get is that its mind is not open, that it has in effect accepted all of the Clyne report except the one point; and that leaves the whole matter in a very unsatisfactory situation. I note that the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gillespie) is here tonight to answer on behalf of the minister. I hope he will have something much more hopeful for us than has yet been given during the question period by the President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Alastair Gillespie (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer the question put by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). As he, in his introductory remarks, recited the circumstances which gave rise to this particular question I do not think it necessary to go over that ground again. I think there were three citations, two questions that he put to the minister, and a third the statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on April 26.

It seems to me that the hon. member is doing two things. First of all he is speculating about what may be in the government's mind, and second he is trying to adduce a certain logic from the position taken by the government. He has stated, in effect, that because the government has accepted a number of the proposals of the Clyne committee and because it has refused to accept one other proposal, therefore in saying that it is going to give consideration to a third, somehow or other it has already prejudged the issue. I would draw his attention to the section of the Prime Minister's remarks when he said:

> The advisory group recommends that the managerial group excluded from collective bargaining should be more clearly identified and enlarged—

Here is the key part > —and the government is prepared to have this matter studied further in conjunction with the review of legislation affecting collective bargaining.

Surely this is clear. The government has said it is a matter it will take under consideration. It is not prejudging the issue. It formed a committee to undertake this particular review and it is assigning this particular recommendation of the Clyne committee to that committee. For the minister or anybody else at this time to state an opinion would be prejudging the issue. For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I regret that I am not in a position to add anything more to what has already been said by the minister on this matter.

MANPOWER—MEASURES TO ASSIST SCIENCE AND ENGINEERING GRADUATES TO OBTAIN APPROPRIATE EMPLOYMENT—STIMULATION OF RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, on April 5 the Science Council of Canada made public a background report which revealed that Canadian graduates in science and engineering are now experiencing, and could expect to continue to experience for some time in the future, considerable difficulty in obtaining employment related to their training. It is absolutely appalling to me that this country is unable to employ the talents of these people. In human terms, how can we say to these people that they have spent four, five, six, seven or eight years acquiring training and talents for which the country has no use? What does that do to young men or women, and how can we accept the necessity to make that statement?

In social terms, the waste represented in not having appropriate employment available for our engineering and science graduates is of a magnitude that makes the Bonaventure debacle pale into total insignificance. The losses, in terms of the employment these people would generate if properly employed and in terms of technological developments forever unrealized, are incalculable. How can we as a society afford to lose the productive capacity that these people, properly employed, would represent?

• (10:10 p.m.)

The Science Council background paper suggested that one of the ways to meet the need to find suitable employment for graduates in science and engineering, and at the same time to provide maximum benefit to society, would be to place greater emphasis on expanding the research and development capacity of this country. A number of suggestions on how such an expansion might be managed were put forward. When I questioned the ministers involved about their intentions with respect to the suggestions, their replies were to the effect that all recommendations would be studied.

My main purpose in speaking tonight is to suggest to the government yet another possible avenue for encouraging the expansion of this country's R and D capacity. In order to place the suggestion in context it might be worth while to devote a few seconds to examining the reasons for our failure to develop an R and D establishment equal to Canadian needs and matching our capability to such activity. Obviously, in seven minutes I cannot touch on all factors but two predominate. Firstly, our industry is dominated by the branch plants of international, especially American, corporations with the result that expansion in our industrial capacity has not meant a concomitant increase in our R and D capacity, as would normally be the case. The bulk of the research and product development for most foreign-owned corporations, predictably, takes place outside Canada. We have as a result, with some all too rare but notable and important exceptions, become copiers rather than innovators in industry.

Secondly, the vast majority of domestically-owned corporations, with a few and obvious exceptions, are too small to support their own research establishments. Presumably, re-establishing Canadian control over our economy would have salutary effects on this situation. Of greater immediate impact, I suggest, would be the creation by the government of a research and development establishment which would make its services and facilities available to Canadian industries on a fee for service basis. Industries not large enough to themselves undertake the development and testing of product improvements and new inventions could then go to the government research establishment, which would possess the necessary capacity, and ask it to undertake research into product improvement and the testing and development of new products. Financing arrangements could be flexible enough to permit either a flat fee, a royalty arrangement or a combination of the two.

The creation of such a government-operated research and development establishment oriented toward industry, toward product development and improvement, toward the market rather than toward pure research could do much to place Canadian industry in the forefront of technological development, improve our export position and at the same time provide appropriate and fulfilling employment for some of our science and engineering graduates.

I hope that in studying the implications for government action in the Science Council background paper the government will give consideration to the suggestion I have made this evening.

Mr. Alastair Gillespie (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in his remarks this evening the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland) has touched on a number of important items covering this vast area of public policy. It will not be possible for me, in 2½ minutes, to do much more than highlight one or two of those items. His suggestions with respect to the improvement of development of innovative capacity in Canada will be well received in government circles, I am sure. I think his concern that the branch plant could discourage Canadian innovative capacity might be overstated. As I recall, studies that have been done in this area indicate that foreign-controlled plants in Canada do as much in the way of R and D as Canadian-owned corporations in Canada. That is not to say that Canadian corporations do as much as corporations in other countries. What I am trying to suggest is that he may be overstating the ownership aspect.

There are three things I want to touch on quickly with respect to the manpower aspect of the hon. member's suggestions. The National Research Council introduced quite recently post-doctoral industrial fellowships aimed at assisting small companies over what might be described as the transitional stage. I am talking about small companies that cannot afford the expense, say, of PhD assistance. The post-doctoral industrial fellowship is a step in that direction. Similarly, the Industrial Research Assistance Program, or the IRA program, is designed to help small companies or those not using R and D to develop R and D capability.

The last point the hon. member talked about had to do with creating new R and D establishments. Perhaps the hon. member knows that the National Research Council at present does some testing. It does some testing on a fee for service basis. It does testing, for instance, on products for the building trades and some that is connected with the mechanical engineering trades. It also does testing in the general area of the National Aeronautical Establishment capabilities.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the parliamentary secretary, but his time has expired.

GRAIN—WHEAT—ADDITIONS OF UNUSED PORTION OF LIFT PROGRAM FUNDS TO TRANSITIONAL PAYMENTS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, on May 12 I asked the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board the following question:

In view of the fact that only $53.7 million of the $100 million voted for Operation Lift has been paid to farmers, and since the minister has expressed satisfaction with farmer response to the program, is the government considering adding the unspent portion of the money voted to the transitional payments provided for in Bill C-244. This would be done, of course, after making allowance for certain payments still to be made.

The minister replied:

—of course the $100 million associated with Operation Lift was an estimated figure of the amount which would be used if farmers took the fullest possible advantage of the program. The amount spent indicates exactly the extent to which they took advantage of the program and the extent to which cash flow increased in the prairie region under that policy.

I asked the further question:

Does the minister then renege on the $140 million figure that he originally gave to the House of Commons?

After a moment or so the minister responded with a question of privilege and said that at no time had he indicated to the House of Commons a $140 million figure, although he acknowledged that it was true that some press headlines had used that figure.

I wish to deal with two aspects of the point raised in my question tonight, Mr. Speaker. The first concerns the transfer of the unspent portion of Operation Lift funds to the transitional payments provided for under Bill C-244. This would then add between $40 million and $45 million to the funds available to western farmers and would bring that sum up to between $140 million and $145 million. This money, I think, is very much required because of the very serious economic conditions facing western farmers which I am sure the minister would acknowledge.

The minister indicated in his answer that that program was set up to achieve certain objectives and that the payment was based on the response of farmers to the program. This, of course, is true. It must be noted, first of all, that the minister on a number of occasions last summer expressed his satisfaction with the response of farmers to that program. Thus, I suggest that he ought to have no objection to transferring the remaining funds to the transitional payment program proposed in Bill C-244.

The minister should also note that when we deal with the amount of money provided under Operation Lift, we are really dealing with money that was voted for the western farmer. People all across Canada have the clear impression that $100 million was paid to western farmers, whereas actually only $53.7 million was paid out to those farmers. Nevertheless, all government publicity as well as the manner in which the program was presented left the impression that $100 million was paid out. In addition, the further impression was left that some $140 million was paid out.

I know the minister has expressed concern on a number of occasions about people in the rest of Canada being under a false impression as to what was being done for the western farmer. Certainly there is a false impression abroad now, because $140 million has not been paid out to the western farmer. There has not been $100 million paid out to the western farmers but only some $53.7 million. This is money which was voted for western agriculture and which is urgently needed at the present time. It would help stimulate the economy in that portion of Canada and would have consequences in other regions of Canada as well.

The second point I wish to deal with concerns the minister's statement that at no time did he say the figure was $140 million. I checked through my records and have to acknowledge I cannot find any instance of the minister using the figure $140 million at a particular point in time, but I submit that on every occasion he dealt with the subject he quoted a set of figures which could only add up to $140 million as being the largest sum potentially involved in this program. That is what he referred to in his first answer to me as reported in Hansard at page 5740—that $100 million would apply, provided farmers took the fullest possible advantage of the program.

In his press release of Feburary 27 he referred to taking 22 million acres of crop land out of production. He referred to $6 per acre which would be paid to farmers. He referred to two million acres which would be eligible for forage payments, and he also referred to $4 an acre which could be paid in respect of the forage program. It was stated that the estimated actual cost of the program was $100 million but that this was not the fullest possible potential of the program. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) was a good deal more frank when he answered a question by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) on March 22, as reported at page 4223 of Hansard of 1970. The minister stated at that time:

If you take the 22 million acres which was seeded to wheat last year and multiply that figure by $6 per acre, and if all of it goes to summer fallow, that will be $132 million; and if you take the two million acres at the $4 per acre we are offering for forage crops, you will find that the $8 million and the $132 million come to $140 million or precisely the figure.

So it is clear that the potential capacity was $140 million, I feel there is no justification for suggestions that only $100 million were involved as the maximum potential figure. The minister's colleague used the figure of $140 million and the figures he used in his own statement add up to nothing else than $140 million. I do not think he will deny that his officials also used the figure of $140 million, and this sum was referred to on many occasions in the press as representing the full potential of the program.

I urge the minister to ensure that the $40 million to $45 million unspent on Operation Lift are transferred to the transitional payments program and added to the $100 million provided for in the bill as it now stands. I suggest he should reconsider his statement about the $100 million being the fullest possible potential of the program as envisaged.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it was clear from the beginning in connection with the Lift program that the number of dollars available to farmers would be paid on the basis of $6 per acre in the case of forage and $10 per acre taken out of wheat and transferred to non-production or forage. When we expressed satisfaction with the performance under the Lift program it was done essentially against a background of gloom and prophesies of complete non-cooperation from farmers which the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) and his hon. friends had been making for many days at the time the program was announced.

Indeed, but for their sowing confusion about the nature of the program and the desirability of farmers participating in it, the amount spent under the program would probably have been higher. It would also have meant greater benefit to the Prairie farmers. Hon. members opposite have it on their conscience when they mislead some farmers into growing wheat instead of either selling their surplus, if they had one, or planting other crops if that was the logical alternative.

In fact, the total amount of money that will be spent under the Lift program when it is concluded will likely be in the neighbourhood of $65 million. Some $57.7 million and a few more dollars has now been spent; $65 million will likely be the total. There was never any promise of money apart from the program, but an amount of $100 million was put into the estimates since we thought it was a realistic figure, though on the high side. Since then we have put $40 million into the program for forage incentives over a three-year period, but the hon. member ignores that. We put $10 million a year into marketing development, as I have indicated. We will put another $10 million a year into marketing development, but the hon. member ignores that.

The truth of the matter is that in every program we devise, we try in every way we know to help farmers of the Prairie region receive more cash for their efforts and to have a more prosperous future.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.28 p.m.

AGRICULTURE

TABLING OF FINAL REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION ON FARM MACHINERY—STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table the final report of the Royal Commission on Farm Machinery in both official languages. This report represents the culmination of five years' study by Dr. Barber and his research staff. The final report presents a very extensive series of recommendations aimed at both federal and provincial governments and the machinery companies themselves. Within the federal government, recommendations fall in the field of responsibility of several departments. For this reason the government has named an interdepartmental committee to consider the recommendations.

As far as those recommendations that lie within the responsibility of the Canada Department of Agriculture are concerned, certain actions have already been taken. These include an increase in the resources allocated to agricultural engineering; emphasis on the evaluation of the machinery in the production system; the development of a proposal designed to assist farm adjustment, and increased operating grants to universities for agricultural engineering purposes. Arrangements are also being concluded for a meeting with representatives of the industry in order to give further consideration to matters of joint interest, including the financing of farm machinery.

In tabling this document the government would welcome the views of all interested groups and individuals and I look forward to receiving these in order that the most useful and most workable policies can be developed.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I am sure we are all grateful that Dr. Barber and the members of his commission have at least produced this final version of their report on farm machinery. We certainly hope that some of the recommendations in the report will provide some help to all farmers across Canada who find themselves in a very difficult position because of diminishing returns and ever-increasing costs of production. I have learned recently that even in Huron County, a normally prosperous agricultural area, some farmers have been unable to pay their electricity bills and consequently their hydro service has been cut off. They are in this plight partly because of the recommendation this government made to the farmers of Canada, when they could not sell their feed grain, to diversify and get into other production. The government ruined the situation for farmers all across Canada. I hope the recommendations stemming from this report will not lead the government to introduce legislation which will create a similar problem for all farmers.

It seems to me to be very plain that there must be something wrong in the farm machinery industry because associations such as the Federation of Agriculture have been importing tractors for two or three years and selling them to farmers at a greatly reduced cost compared with the prices being charged by the regular machinery dealers and large companies. It is high time—and I am very pleased that this report so recommends—that the government and the farm machinery companies of this nation and of the nation across the border got together to find out what is wrong and why our farmers are being gouged in purchasing farm machinery.

I might make a suggestion concerning the financing of farm machinery. Some provinces now subsidize interest rates to a certain extent so that it is easier for farmers to buy the farm machinery they require. I suggest to the government that such a policy might be extended all across Canada so that all farmers in Canada would have an equal opportunity to share in this type of government assistance.

We will look forward to reading the report. I sincerely hope something will come out of it which will help cut the cost of production for farmers and be of benefit to them. We can talk about stabilization of farm income as much as we wish, but if we stabilize the farmer's income at the present level without doing something about increasing his profit the result will be that more farmers will leave their farms and wind up on the welfare rolls of the towns. We know we already have too much of that. It is time the government got busy on a program designed to keep farmers on the farms and prosperous so that they can buy the products produced by the workers in the manufacturing plants and thus bring an end to unemployment. This must be done and the sooner the government gets at it the better.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, we are quite happy to have the final report of the Barber Commission before us. It has been so long since the commission was appointed that some farmers will almost be old men before they even hear what is contained in the report, let alone react to it. We look forward to examining the report in detail. Hopefully, some of the recommendations will be good enough that we can do something constructive about the problems of the farm machinery industry. I hope the government is not as slow in accepting the recommendations or in taking action in connection with the problems exposed by the report as the commission has been in preparing the report.

I suggest to the Minister of Agriculture and the House that farm machinery costs are a very important part of farmers' problems at the moment and unless we take some real action in this connection these problems will continue. I am hopeful that the government will do something constructive about the cost of farm machinery. The government might extend financing to some of the small machinery companies operating in Canada. Perhaps it might consider a method of financing farm machinery on the farm or even extending further financing to countries behind the iron curtain which are selling machinery at greatly reduced prices. We look forward to reading the report and being able to make constructive suggestions.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the minister has just tabled the report of the Barber Commission on farm machinery.

The Commission created by the government took five years to study the high cost of farm machinery sold in Canada. Five years is quite a long time and I think that had there been farmers sitting on the Commission the latter would have found out much sooner why farm machinery is so expensive.

The government announces that following the report it has named an interdepartmental committee to consider the report completed after five years of work. From past experience, I think the committee will take at least five more years to study the report.

When decisions are taken—decisions that we hope will be effective—the conclusions of the report will be out of date and we will have to go through the whole process again.

In his statement, the minister has said, and I quote:

> Arrangements are also being concluded for a meeting with representatives of the industry in order to give further consideration to matters of joint interest—

Will it be matters of joint interest to the industry or to the farmers that will be given further consideration? I think protection should be provided for the farmers' interests before those of the industry and that some means of financing farm machinery purchases should be developed, because there are so very few farmers who can afford to pay cash for their implements. They have to be given the opportunity of buying this machinery at a rather low rate of interest that they may be able to pay. Groups and individuals interested in agriculture are asked in this statement to submit briefs and recommendations to the government. I hope that the latter will seriously consider them.

[Mr. Thomson.]

PROPOSED TRANS-ALASKA PIPELINE SYSTEM—TABLING OF SPEECH BY DEPUTY MINISTER OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table, under Standing Order 41(2), a speech delivered by my deputy minister, Mr. J. Austin, in Anchorage, Alaska, in accordance with my undertaking to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni on May 11. I may say, having now read the speech of the hon. member at his invitation, that I find that taken as read from cover to cover and in context the speech is in accordance with government policy as iterated from time to time.

YOUTH

PHYSICAL FITNESS, SPORTS SAFETY EQUIPMENT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I rise to move a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter requiring urgent attention. The latest unfortunate sports incident resulting in the death of a young boy emphasizes the need for a complete investigation into the use of adequate sports safety equipment by our youth. Further, statistics indicate that Canadians lag behind other countries in physical fitness and support the priority need to examine the area of youth development in Canada. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski):

> That this serious situation and the designation of responsibility in the area of youth development and adequate protection for those participating in sports and recreation, be referred to the Standing Committee on Health and Welfare.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe. The motion, being submitted under the terms of Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. Therefore the motion cannot be put.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

SUGGESTED ATTENDANCE OF LEADERS OF OPPOSITION PARTIES AS OBSERVERS AT JUNE MEETINGS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Acting Prime Minister with regard to attendance as observers at the forthcoming federal-provincial conference in Victoria. Is the government considering inviting myself and the leaders of the other opposition parties to attend the sessions, both closed and open, as observers—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): What will you contribute?

An hon. Member: A hell of a lot more than you.

Mr. Stanfield: —departing from the policy the government has followed in the past in this regard?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand it is the intention of the government to arrange for some observers to be with the federal delegation. I would question, however, whether the meetings would be closed, in the sense in which the provinces would wish, far less the federal government, if observers were to be present during the closed sessions, and so I think the answer I must give must be in the negative on that part of the question.

Mr. Stanfield: As a supplementary question—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Any suggestions?

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, we seem to be getting a certain amount of static from the other side. I am sure the Acting Prime Minister will agree with me that constitutional reform is not the private preserve of the government of Canada. I would therefore ask the Acting Prime Minister, in view of the importance of this meeting and in view of the fact that the government may very well need at least the understanding of as broad a cross-section of Canadians as possible with regard to its constitutional proposals, whether the government will not reconsider its decision to exclude the leaders of the opposition parties as observers from closed consultations? Will the government not reconsider this decision in view of the crucial stage these discussions have reached, and in view of the obvious importance of having as widespread understanding as possible in the various parties with regard to the government's proposals?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear from the way in which the government has made its proposals known to the public as well as to Members of Parliament, and in light of the activities of the parliamentary committee which is now touring the country, that the government wants as much understanding as possible of the nature of these constitutional issues. So I do not think the government lies open to that particular charge. When it comes to the negotiations, before proposals are placed before our respective parliaments and the people I do believe it may be useful—and I think the Leader of the Opposition having been the head of a government himself understand this—and that on occasions it is well to have private conversations.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister why the government of Canada finds it necessary to take a narrower attitude toward the make-up of its delegation than have several provinces in the past, including the province of Nova Scotia, and whether he can justify in any way the exclusion of representatives of the opposition parties?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question is argumentative. The hon. member for Greenwood on a supplementary question.

REPRESENTATION OF MUNICIPALITIES AT JUNE MEETINGS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister if consideration is being given to the representation of municipalities as observers or otherwise inasmuch as the constitutional committee has had many representations of this kind and the Federation of Mayors and Municipalities has also urged that the municipalities are concerned about the future constitution of Canada and should be represented at important discussions?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that would certainly be a decision for the provincial governments. Perhaps, as the hon, Leader of the Opposition has said, provincial governments may be willing to add municipal representatives as members of their delegations rather than just as observers. We would have no objection to this, but some provinces may feel that they can make greater progress in these negotiations if the delegations are not too large.

[Translation]

INVITATION TO JOINT COMMITTEE ON CONSTITUTION TO ATTEND MEETINGS

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister.

Will the Joint Committee on the Constitution, which has travelled throughout Canada to hear the views of the people about the constitution, be invited to attend the forthcoming federal-provincial conference in Victoria, this June?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think this illustrates the problem facing the government. I can understand that some members of the House might have a greater reason to be present during these negotiations than others, but one then opens the question of why all Members of Parliament and all members of provincial legislatures should not be invited. As to the particular question, the committee of Parliament which has been touring the country is free to make a report either in advance of or after the June meetings.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTENSION OF JUNE MEETINGS TO DISCUSS UNEMPLOYMENT AND INFLATION—POSITION OF PROVINCES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Has the government been in touch with the provincial premiers, as the Prime Minister said it would, to find out if they would be willing to spend one, two or more extra days at the conference to discuss questions of the economy, in particular unemployment and inflation? If so what has been the response so far?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not had an opportunity to discuss this question yet. I know that our officials have been discussing the agenda with provincial officials and particularly the item of constitutional reform. I should like to reiterate what the Prime Minister said, that whether or not time is set aside for discussion of these other important matters, first priority should be given to constitutional reform.

Mr. Hees: Will the Acting Prime Minister assure the House that he will inquire from the provincial premiers whether they are willing to extend the time to include this most important matter, and when he has done so will he immediately report back to the House the results of such inquiries?

OBJECTIONS BY PROVINCES TO VETO POWER AND RIGHT TO AMEND CONSTITUTION—PRIOR CONSULTATIONS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): As a supplementary question I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister if he has had to date, prior to the conference commencing, any objections from the province of Alberta or any other Prairie province to the veto power and the right regarding amendments to the constitution?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that if we are going to make progress at these constitutional discussions it would be better if these matters could be discussed at the conference and not be the subject of offhand remarks by anyone.

Mr. Woolliams: Can the Acting Prime Minister advise the House whether he or any other member of the government has had prior consultations with the premiers so that their opinions and objections are known prior to the commencement of the conference?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Preparations are now going on for the conference and federal authorities have visited the provinces to discuss in advance questions that will be raised at the conference.

PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT OBJECTIONS TO ATTENDANCE OF LEADERS OF OPPOSITION PARTIES AS OBSERVERS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether any provincial government has objected to a leader of an opposition party attending these sessions as an observer?

[Mr. Sharp.]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know the answer to that question.

ALTERNATIVE DATE IN EVENT OF POSSIBLE PROVINCIAL ELECTIONS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister if the government has had any discussions with the provinces concerning an alternative date for the conference in the event that one or more of the provinces calls a provincial election between now and June 4?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. The federal government is proceeding to prepare for the date that has been agreed upon.

PENITENTIARIES

KINGSTON RIOT—ALLEGED BEATINGS AT MILLHAVEN—PUBLICATION OF INQUIRY REPORT—REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE INVESTIGATION OF MINISTER'S ACTIONS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Solicitor General arising out of the inquiry into the Kingston penitentiary riot and the alleged beating of prisoners who were moved to Millhaven. Since the inquiry began yesterday and is to be held behind closed doors and since Members of Parliament and the public are interested in knowing the outcome of this inquiry, is the minister now prepared to agree to make public the report of that inquiry when it is placed in his hands?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, after receiving the report and considering it, I will surely make a statement. The recommendations made by the committee should be drawn to the attention of the people. As for the contents of the report, I have read today the statement of the chairman of the inquiry committee to the effect that some evidence would perhaps not be given except under the seal of secrecy. In my opinion, the judgment is valid and if it applies to the chairman of the committee it should also apply to me.

[English]

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the statement of Professor Desmond Morton, who was a member of the five-man citizens' committee that acted as a go-between during the Kingston riot, to the effect that "I put the blame on Goyer", and in view of his contention that the refusal of the Solicitor General to guarantee the prisoners that they would not be mistreated was the prime cause of the sad ending to this riot, would the government be prepared to refer this entire matter to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, since the inquiry headed by John Swackhammer does not have terms of reference that would call in question the competency of the minister himself?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I do not accept that statement as a correct statement of the part played by the Solicitor General.

Mr. Douglas: Since the inquiry will deal only with the incidents in the two penitentiaries and not with the handling of the situation by the Solicitor General, does the government intend to make any inquiry into the conduct of the minister which, according to Professor Desmond Morton, brought such sad and dangerous results?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, quite naturally the Solicitor General will be reporting to his colleagues.

Mr. Baldwin: Will there by any observers when that happens?

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio responsible for the Post Office.

Has he received, or does he still receive, complaints about delays in the delivery of first class mail which takes sometimes seven to ten days to reach its destination?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister without Portfolio): Not of this nature, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, does the minister intend to take soon the necessary action in order to restore the postal service to its former efficiency?

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

INCOME TAX

REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF EXEMPTION GRANTED UNITED STATES PROFESSORS AT CANADIAN UNIVERSITIES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. At this time of year convocations are being held across the country at various universities and one subject of strong argument is the fact that under arrangements with the United States American professors who come to Canada for two years are exempt from income tax. The result is that Canadian PhDs find themselves unable to secure positions. Although the agreement is reciprocal, it only works one way—Americans come to Canada. In order to ensure that Canadians with PhDs stay in Canada and help to build Canada, would the government do away with this provision at once?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, perhaps on the technical point the Minister of National Revenue might answer.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, as the House knows, we have tax treaties with a number of countries calling for reciprocal tax arrangements for professors who come for a limited period and return to their own countries. If I am not mistaken, the government proposed in its white paper on tax reform the renegotiating of these treaties to eliminate this particular concession.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The white paper, I thought, had died a natural death until the minister disinterred it. I ask him why it is that under this particular arrangement, which I do not believe is in the form of a treaty, we are not assured that at the end of two years Americans who come to Canada must return to their own country instead of staying in Canada and thereby creating an impossible employment position for Canadians?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, if I am not mistaken, the arrangements do not call for the return of the professors to their own country. Rather, if they remain, they become subject to the ordinary income tax laws. If I am not correct in this I will so inform the House. In any event, this matter is to be dealt with when next there is a budget presentation before the House.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then it will be dealt with in the budget?

INTERPROVINCIAL MARKETING—CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT TO ENFORCE SECTION 121 OF BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. In light of the admission by the Prime Minister last Monday that Bill C-176 may not constitutionally be able to resolve the chicken and egg war, and in order to clarify the motives behind C-176, is the government going to present, along with other constitutional proposals, a constitutional amendment to enforce the spirit as well as the letter of section 121 of the British North America Act?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is not impossible that some such proposals might be put before the constitutional conference. At the present time it is not contemplated that the division of powers will be a main subject for consideration. The question of bringing our constitution to Canada so that it can be amended in ways that might overcome these problems is our first concern.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Battle River on a supplementary.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, are we to—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Battle River.

Mr. Downey: Has the government canvassed the provinces on this matter or is the government or any province opposed to a constitutional solution to the balkanization caused by the chicken and egg war?

Mr. Baldwin: They do not even recognize it.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, this is an extremely difficult constitutional issue and I hope that the House, in order to advance consideration of this particular problem, if not the constitutional issue, will proceed with the bill now before the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INTERPROVINCIAL MARKETING—GOVERNMENT POLICY RESPECTING FREE TRADE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I interrupted the hon. member for Battle River. I had not heard you recognizing him. I direct my supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister. Is he suggesting that it is the policy of this government to recommend a constitutional change so as to do away with free trade between the provinces of Canada and undermine confederation?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman knows, there are provisions in the constitution today dealing with trade between the provinces.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Unenforced by the government.

Mr. Sharp: As he knows, some problems have arisen as a result of various provincial enactments. It is our purpose in the bill that is before the House to try to deal with the real problems rather than to engage in the much more difficult problem of constitutional reform. I hope the hon. member understands the priorities.

Mr. Baldwin: The problem sits next to the minister.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ALLEGED USE OF ELECTRONIC EAVESDROPPING DEVICES AT MEETING OF MOVEMENT FOR DEFENCE OF POLITICAL PRISONERS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): My question is for the Solicitor General. Has the minister investigated the allegations that electronic eavesdropping devices were employed last Saturday at a meeting held in Montreal by the Movement for the Defence of Political Prisoners?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of that.

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Will the minister investigate the allegations that the RCMP were involved in such an operation, report to the House if this is so and, if so, whether it was authorized by the department?

USE OF RADIO BANDS FOR TRANSMISSION OF LISTENING DEVICE SIGNALS

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. Has any police department, in particular the RCMP, ever requested permission from the Department of Transport to employ specific radio bands for the transmission of signals from listening devices?

Mr. Speaker: This seems to be a rather general question which might be placed on the order paper. If there is an aspect of urgency about it, it can be considered at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Rose: Perhaps I could rephrase the question. Has the Department of Transport set aside any specific radio bands for such purposes?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I will take the question as notice and get an answer as soon as I can.

ALLEGED REFLECTION ON CANADIAN ARMED FORCES BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): I wish to direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. I preface it by saying that I am sure the Prime Minister did not intend to say what he did on television on Sunday night. As his remarks left a very clear implication, does the Prime Minister's office intend to make some form of apology to the Canadian Armed Forces for having compared them with the state militia at Ken State University?

TRADE

ACTION TO RESTORE COMPETITIVE POSITION OF EXPORT INDUSTRIES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): My question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the statement made by the Prime Minister on the television program "Weekend" on Sunday night that said "the Canadian dollar is so strong indeed that it is hurting our export trade because more people are finding it cheaper to import goods and more difficult to sell them abroad", is the minister going to take specific action or introduce specific measures to restore the former competitive position of, particularly, labour-intensive export industries?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have the impression the hon. member asked this question yesterday. He may say he asked it of a different minister. I wonder whether it would be in order for the hon. member to ask the same question on different days of different ministers. The hon. member having asked the question perhaps the minister might reply briefly.

Mr. Hees: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Finance said it was impossible for him to answer the question. I have therefore directed it to the appropriate minister. Might I have a reply?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we regularly introduce programs to increase exports. More recently, for example, we now have a new program to share in precontractual bidding efforts by Canadian exporters. The Export Development Corporation is more active now than it has ever been in history—$200 million worth of financing up to this time. Exports are increasing by about 2 per cent on top of last year's 13 per cent.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: As the minister obviously intends to take no action whatsoever, I wish to ask him a supplementary question. Is the minister aware of the letter sent to the Minister of Finance on March 24 by the chairman of the Canadian Exporters Association outlining in detail the steps necessary to restore the former competitive position of Canadian exporters and put them on the same footing as their foreign competitors? I feel sure that the minister does not know anything about it because this cabinet does not communicate. I will send it across and let him have it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

TRANSPORT

REPLACEMENT FOR STRAIT OF BELLE ISLE FERRY

Mr. Ambrose Hubert Peddle (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): My question is for the Minister of Transport. No doubt the minister has heard the news of the burning yesterday of the replacement for the Strait of Belle Isle ferry. What plans does the minister have to find a further replacement?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that the replacement vessel that had been planned for that particular service did in fact go aground and burn. We have had to start from square one to try and find a replacement. Along with the operator, we are in the process of doing that right now.

Mr. Peddle: In view of the fact that the Fredrick Blair which burned yesterday would have been no more suitable than the Avalon Voyageur which was condemned last week, will the efforts to obtain a further replacement be directed toward a larger, more suitable craft for this dangerous crossing?

Mr. Jamieson: In view of the fact that the hon. member appears to be such an expert on the matter of hulls and their safety, I would be delighted to hear any recommendations he has with regard to a replacement vessel. If the hon. member knows of a vessel or can help us in the search for one that is better, I can assure him we will make use of this information.

POWER

PROPOSED DAM ON SKAGIT RIVER—DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES IN ADDITION TO INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION REFERENCE

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I direct my question to either the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry or the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I will let the Acting Prime Minister decide who should answer. In view of the fact that the reference to the International Joint Commission with regard to the question of the Ross dam in the Skagit Valley, with hearings starting on June 4 in Vancouver, appears to limit the question as to what may be the result of building the dam rather than including the more basic question of whether the dam should be built, can either minister inform the House whether the government has under way with the United States any other initiatives or discussions with reference to this more basic question as to the advisability of building the dam at all?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, there are no other initiatives at the moment. This entire subject is before the International Joint Commission. We expect recommendations from that body this fall.

Mr. Barnett: After the completion of the hearings, does the government intend to follow up the question of negotiating for release from any obligation it may be considered Canada has with regard to allowing the construction of the Ross dam?

Mr. Davis: The staffs of several departments, including the staff of the Department of Fisheries and Forestry, are available to the International Joint Commission. I am sure it will be directing various studies to be made on different aspects of this development, including the legal aspect.

BAY OF FUNDY TIDES—DISCUSSIONS WITH NOVA SCOTIA PREMIER—ASSISTANCE IN DEVELOPMENT IN EVENT OF SALE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): My question is for the Acting Prime Minister in his capacity as Secretary of State for External Affairs. Were any discussions held between the federal government and the premier of Nova Scotia prior to his visit to New York today for talks with interested Americans on the possibility of financing the development of electrical energy from the Fundy tides? If so, will the minister indicate whether federal assistance will be made available for the development of Fundy power in the event the sale of this power can be agreed upon between our two countries?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I would like to take notice of that question, Mr. Speaker.

INCOME TAX

APPLICATION OF CARTER REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

The minister stated lately that several large companies have no financial difficulty and hardly pay any income tax and that 70 per cent of taxes are paid by individuals who earn less than $7,000 a year. Would the minister inform the House whether he will use his influence with the responsible bodies to request the implementation of the Carter report recommendations or whether he would have other proposals to make to the government?

[English]

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I feel certain that the government's tax measures will be forthcoming at the time of the budget as announced by the Minister of Finance and at the time the ultimate tax bill is presented to the House.

FISHERIES

TREATMENT OF UNITED STATES RIVERS FLOWING INTO GREAT LAKES WITH LAMPRICIDE

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. In reply to a question I asked about lamprey control on the Great Lakes it was outlined to me what action would be taken on the Canadian side of the lakes. Can the minister indicate whether the same efforts are being made in regard to the lamprey infested streams and rivers of the United States?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I understand that this is the case. An equivalent amount of money is voted by both governments each year. However, I will have to look into this matter and reply later in some detail.

ATTEMPT BY UNITED STATES COASTGUARD TO ARREST CANADIAN FISHING VESSEL IN HECATE STRAIT

Mr. Paul St. Pierre (Coast Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, my question is either for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry or the Secretary of State for External Affairs. What attitude and action is the Canadian government taking as the result of an attempt by a United States coastguard vessel to arrest a Canadian fishing boat in Canadian waters in Hecate Strait? Anthony J is the name of the boat.

[Mr. Crouse.]

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, Department of Fisheries officials on the west coast have stated in no uncertain terms that the Canadian vessel was in Canadian waters, and representations are being made through the Department of External Affairs to this effect.

Mr. St. Pierre: Will Canadian boats continue to operate in these waters, and have instructions been given to them to continue operating within our area?

Mr. Davis: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

PROPOSAL OF FURTHER QUOTA LIMITATION ON HADDOCK, HERRING AND YELLOWTAIL AT ICNAF MEETING

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I have a related question for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Since foreign over fishing has caused a serious decline in stocks of herring and yellowtail, as well as haddock which has failed to have a good spawning year for the sixth consecutive year despite an international quota and the closure of Georges Bank, is it the intention of the minister to propose a further quota limitation on haddock, herring and yellowtail at ICNAF's annual meeting to be held in Halifax this June?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, the principal purpose of the meeting of the 14 North Atlantic nations at Halifax next week is to consider conservation measures of that kind.

CONSERVATION OF MARINE RESOURCES—DISCUSSION BY PRIME MINISTER WITH GOVERNMENT OF SOVIET UNION

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. May I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the question of the conservation of marine resources will be discussed during the Prime Minister's current visit to the Soviet Union?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding, and it has been confirmed by the Minister of Fisheries, that this is one of the items on the agenda.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

REORGANIZATION OF RIDEAU-CARLETON RACEWAY—ROLE PLAYED BY TRUSTEE AND MESSRS. ARMSTRONG AND FASKEN

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Last week I asked the minister whether he would conduct an investigation into the reorganization of the Rideau-Carleton Raceway to see if any skulduggery was taking place, and the minister said he would undertake such an investigation and report back to the House. I wonder whether the minister has done so and will he now reply to my question?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, without accepting the hypothesis of the question, I believe the hon. member has been informed—if not, he is now informed—that as a result of his question an investigation is being conducted to ensure that the Bankruptcy Act and all its provisions have been observed.

Mr. Broadbent: No, I had not been informed, but to clarify what the minister has just said can he inform the House whether or not the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are involved in this investigation?

Mr. Basford: That would be quite improper, Mr. Speaker.

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—EXTENSION OF FINAL DATE FOR APPROVAL OF PROJECTS

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State I will direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. I believe that May 15 was the cut-off date for approved projects under the Opportunities for Youth program. In view of the list that was circulated today which was seemingly inconclusive, are there more projects to be announced or is the date being extended still further?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will refer the question to the Secretary of State and have an answer tomorrow.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ALLEGED REFLECTION ON CANADIAN ARMED FORCES BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question supplementary to the one I attempted to ask previously or perhaps rephrase it. Again I address my question to the Acting Prime Minister or the Minister of National Defence. A very clear implication was left by the Prime Minister on the television program, "Weekend", prior to his departure—it was a sort of state of the union address—that the Canadian Armed Forces could not be trusted in the streets of Montreal without the over-all blanket of the War Measures Act. I wonder whether the Minister of National Defence would make some comment so as not to leave the Canadian Armed Forces at the level of assumed professionalism on a par with United States national guard units?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that any reasonable non-partisan person would draw any such inference from what the Prime Minister said, and if the hon. gentleman is one of the exceptions to the rule I can put his mind at rest.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PUBLIC SERVICE

ROLE OF TREASURY BOARD IN INVESTIGATING USE OF DELEGATED HIRING AUTHORITY

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. On May 7 I asked him in the House whether he would inquire into the basis of the concern expressed by the Public Service Commission over the manner in which delegated hiring authority is being used and the minister assured me that Treasury Board was investigating the matter. As the delegation of staffing authority is the sole prerogative of the independent Public Service Commission, as specified in the Public Service Employment Act, why is Treasury Board investigating this matter since it is not responsible for the administration of the Public Service Employment Act?

Mr. Speaker: I must indicate to the hon. member that in my opinion this is perhaps an argument more than a question. However, the minister might want to reply briefly and might be allowed to do so.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has indeed made a very good point. Responsibility for staffing and appointments to the Public Service lies with the Public Service Commission. However, Treasury Board is responsible for over-all personnel policy within the government service, and it is in this respect that Treasury Board is looking into the matter, merely to ensure that in fact the over-all policy is sound. But as the hon. member pointed out, the specific question is the responsibility of the Public Service Commission.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REVIEW OF PERMISSIBLE INCOME CEILINGS AND ANCILLARY BENEFIT REGULATIONS UNDER WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE ACT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the fact that in a number of provinces the ceilings on income that may be obtained under social assistance legislation are higher than the ceilings on permissible income under the War Veterans Allowance Act, will the government review the matter of these ceilings so that as far as possible veterans might be provided for under their own legislation?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): This is the case, Mr. Speaker, especially in British Columbia. At the present time we are reviewing the situation. As the hon. member knows, we increased war veterans allowances by 15 per cent in April. British Columbia, as the hon. member stated, has also increased its social assistance, so we are reviewing the situation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the department also review the regulations under the War Veterans Allowance Act, especially those that deal with ancillary benefits made available to veterans who are forced to relinquish their rights under the War Veterans Allowance Act for other reasons?

Mr. Dubé: Mr. Speaker, these regulations are always under review and we try to adapt them to changing circumstances.

MANPOWER

QUEBEC CLAIM RESPECTING CONTROL—CONSIDERATION AT FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Is the Acting Prime Minister going to make a statement on the demand made by a minister of Quebec for total provincial control in the area of labour and manpower, and is it the intention of the government to place this very important matter on the agenda of the upcoming conference?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this question of manpower and manpower offices is a problem that concerns not only relations between Quebec and Ottawa but relations between the provincial governments and the federal government generally. What we are trying to do is to work out arrangements between the provincial and federal authorities to the advantage of the people of Canada in the various provinces. This matter is being discussed in connection with the constitutional review.

Mr. Alexander: In light of the Quebec minister's statement about inflation being a federal responsibility, is the government considering evolving labour and manpower powers to give complete federal jurisdiction in areas of compulsory wage and price controls?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any areas of compulsory wage and price controls.

COMMUNICATIONS

AGRICULTURE—DELAY IN ISSUING BARBER COMMISSION FINAL REPORT TO FRENCH PRESS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture a question.

Since I heard at noon that the English-speaking media were able to get the report of the Royal Commission on Farm Machinery this morning at ten o'clock, could the minister tell the House why the French-speaking press had to wait till two o'clock this afternoon to get it?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, copies of the Barber commission report in both languages were available at ten o'clock this morning. Of course, if they were to receive it prior to the report being released in the House they had to submit to the usual condition of keeping it confidential until 2.30 today.

TORONTO INTERNATIONAL—METHOD OF LETTING CONTRACTS FOR SKYCAP SERVICES

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the report that a United States firm has displaced a Canadian-owned company at the international airport at Toronto, involving the majority of airport skycaps, would he indicate the method by which such contracts are let?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt whether the question as asked is in order. Perhaps it might be considered at the time of adjournment.

PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

INQUIRY AS TO TERMINATION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the obvious failure of government policies regarding both unemployment and inflation, is the government now considering—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member ask a question? He knows he cannot preface a question with a statement of the kind he has just made. I must remind hon. members that we are running short of time.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, in view of some government difficulties in economic matters is the government now considering discontinuing the Prices and Incomes Commission?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think you will find, as a result of discussions which have taken place, that there is general agreement regarding the length of speeches during today's debate. The agreement is that the principal speaker for each party will have 30 minutes, but that all others limit themselves to 15 minutes, and that no one will ask for overtime.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It will be so ordered.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—REQUEST FOR ECONOMIC MEASURES, PLANNED INVESTMENT AND FOREIGN OWNERSHIP POLICIES TO ACHIEVE HIGH EMPLOYMENT THROUGH DEVELOPMENT OF SECONDARY MANUFACTURING

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo) moved:

That this House calls upon the government to adopt immediate emergency economic measures to move the economy to high employment through special programs and more expansionary monetary and fiscal policies, and also to achieve full potential growth through a planned investment and foreign ownership policy and to stimulate the development of secondary manufacturing as the only way of providing the necessary employment opportunities for the hundreds of thousands of Canadians who enter the work force every year.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the importance of taking this day to focus attention on the matter of unemployment is emphasized by the fact that, in spite of all the assurances we have received from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) that the situation was improving, the latest figures show there has been a serious regression. Even on the basis of the figures issued prior to that it was quite obvious the economy was not making the kind of progress necessary.

We are strongly of the opinion that the Minister of Finance does not know what he is doing, that his government has no real policy for curing unemployment and that the minister has been walking over this economy with all the wisdom and grace of a demented, trampling hippopotamus. The Economic Council of Canada has pointed out in numerous statements that even with a steady increase in stimulus from the government, it would take almost four years to restore the economy to where it was. If we are going to get full employment, a far greater stimulus than that now being provided by the government will have to be provided.

Stimulating the economy will cause certain problems and I will deal with them later. If we are to overcome what I think is a serious problem we can do nothing less than bring in emergency economic measures. I am sure everyone in this country, including government members who either do not know what to do or refuse to do anything, will acknowledge that it is a serious problem.

Why are we so concerned about unemployment? Obviously, we are concerned for the people who are involved and about the dislocation, the cost to human life and the loss of wealth which has taken place in our economy. It is estimated we have lost between $3 billion and $5 billion in gross national product as a result of the high level of unemployment each year. Furthermore, we are not going to solve the basic problems facing this country if we continue to have present levels of unemployment. There are other enemies to national unity in this country besides the FLQ. At the moment, the greatest enemy is a government which brings in unemployment policies.

The problems of Quebec cannot be solved by implementation of the War Measures Act. These problems must ultimately be solved by a government which is able to persuade the people of Quebec that they have a worth while stake in this country, and there exists a federal government which is cognizant of their problems. It may be that even with the best economic policies we will not solve these problems. On thing is certain. Unless we make an effort to get rid of unemployment in Canada, and the situation that exists in the province of Quebec, we do not have a hope in the world of doing anything about other problems facing Canadians today. It is imperative that we do something about unemployment. If the price of correcting unemployment is an increase in inflationary tendencies in this country, then I suggest to the Minister of Finance and this House this is the kind of price we must pay. There is really not much of a choice, the breaking up of the country or a somewhat higher rate of inflation than we have experienced.

There are other problems we have to solve. It is obvious the government is developing a policy of moving people off the farms. The government is spending a few hundred dollars to compensate each farmer. I am not convinced this is a desirable policy, but if the government feels some of this dislocation is necessary for the sake of long-term interest in agriculture, then the government has the enormous obligation of providing adequate compensation to the farmers affected. It cannot do that unless we keep the economy rolling.

This is an area in which the interests of the farmers and the interests of industrial workers are similar. If we are going to make payments available to farmers and develop programs to help them, this can only be done on the basis of national prosperity. We will not have national prosperity in a climate of high unemployment and in which billions of dollars in production are being lost. We cannot tackle the problem of poverty in this type of atmosphere. We cannot tackle the problems of economic independence while we are totally preoccupied in slowing down the economy, which has been the government's policy.

The government has slipped very badly in the last two years. It was slipping even before then, but its decline has been more rapid in that period of time. Canada now occupies fourth place in the world in terms of per capita income. Our position has been surpassed by Sweden and Switzerland, and we are well on our way to becoming fifth or sixth. This is not a record in which any government could take pride.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has been playing a strange little game. The keeper of that zoo over there has been aware of the clumsiness of the government. He does not mind everyone being stepped on. He says, we are stepping on you so we will not be stepping on you. In other words, we are creating unemployment so there will not be unemployment. Those of us on this side of the House could perhaps be forgiven for not being able to see the logic of the kind of argument in which the government says, "We are throwing you out of work so that you will not be out of work". It is as though the creation of unemployment today will stop unemployment in the future. This is not something any reasonable person can accept. Not even the Prime Minister of this country, with his swinging charm and new Sir Wilfred Laurier haircut, can obscure the intellectual dishonesty and ill conceived arrogance of this government and of his personal policies in this matter. It is not right for a Prime Minister to make this kind of odious comparison when he talks about unemployment and inflation. He says we are facing the kind of dangers that we faced between the world wars and, then tries to say that the situation in Canada is similar to the situation in countries like Germany where inflation was so rampant that it virtually destroyed that country. If he knows any history at all, he ignores the fact that it was government policy that brought about that situation. The analogy is totally false.

We had a similar analogy in respect of Biafra when the Prime Minister compared that situation with Stalingrad. He goes on making comparisons in his charming way in the hope that people might believe him. However, no one with an ounce of sense will accept the kind of comparisons the Prime Minister has been making. He is not satisfied with that. He has gone on to falsify the position of the opposition. He has gone on to say, "Well, what is the level of unemployment?". He asks what we mean by full employment and whether it is 3 per cent, 3½ per cent or 4 per cent. He says that one member of the NDP gave a figure of 4 per cent and another gave a figure of 3½ per cent. This is simply not true. Nowhere does the suggestion appear that that is the kind of unemployment the opposition would like to see in this country. He takes things and distorts them to suit his own purpose. This does not further the basic debate we must have.

This is not the first time, Mr. Speaker, Canada has experienced high levels of unemployment. This government did not invent unemployment. During the depression in the 1930's we had an even higher level of unemployment than at present. To some extent we might excuse those years by saying there was a certain amount of ignorance or that that was the pre-Keynesian era in which the people did not really understand how to stimulate the economy and did not know what to do with it. Every country in the world lacked that kind of knowledge. Then, we had another period ten years ago when there were higher levels of unemployment. I believe it is quite obvious that at that time we had government policies which were bungling and incompetent. Never to my knowledge, however, have we had a government that managed to be all these things, ignorant, incompetent, dishonest and arrogant at the same time. There is no excuse for this. There is no excuse for the kind of position this government is taking.

The members of this government never listened. It is not that information has not been available to them, and it is not that they had the support of the experts in the field for their position. They have been told repeatedly that the kind of policies they have brought in would not work. Perhaps they have been listening, but if they have they have obviously been listening to the wrong people, such as government advisers who are out of touch with events and who have acquired their own arrogance from being around too long. Perhaps in their insensitivity they have listened to the exporters of Canada, who are concerned not about prosperity in this country but about markets outside of Canada. Some men within the government have shown some courage. A little while ago we had the resignation of the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) who could no longer stomach the government's policies. This was a resignation based on economic policies. More recently the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans) had to walk out of the cabinet in the hope that he could perhaps more effectively do something for his country outside the cabinet rather than inside that particular government.

It is a sad commentary in respect of the people holding power when two of their foremost cabinet ministers have to leave because they feel helpless within the framework of a government which has the power to do things but which frustrates the efforts of its own people. It is not without significance that both these men are business people with considerable business experience. They are not radicals; they are not academics; they are not people without some knowledge of what goes on in the economy. They have to carry their views to the people outside government. Unfortunately, I do not believe their efforts will meet with much success because there is a special characteristic in being a Liberal. Even if one parts company with the government over a very serious measure, there is a tendency to always maintain politeness because one must never forget that the Liberals are the establishment and one must never get them too angry even if one finds that he cannot agree with them any more. We have seen cabinet ministers walk out of other governments with blood on their hands because their anger had no limit, but not in the case of Liberals. They always walk out after having given the matter very careful consideration. They know that doors will be closed if they say too many incautious things. Even given that situation, it is obvious that some of them had to leave.

I would hope there will be others on the benches opposite who will rise and support our position. This morning in the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs I happened to look at a very interesting brief presented by one of the district Liberal associations. I was delighted to see they have been reading our convention papers. This brief was directed at the Canada Development Corporation, and was extremely critical of the government's program, particularly of the level of unemployment it has created. I know there are Liberal associations and Liberal associations, some of which are intelligent and some of which are not intelligent. I wonder why the government always listens to the ones that are not intelligent. The government has a few people who have a certain amount of brains and enough intelligence to look around, find some ideas and listen with an open mind on these matters. It is not too late to take some action. We can still act. There are many options open. Fortunately, we live in a country which is so resillient that even the determined efforts of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) are not sufficient to kill it.

At this time, however, we cannot beat unemployment, improve and humanize our society by the traditional tools of monetary policy. The minister says he has eased off on the monetary policy, that interest rates are declining and that he has expanded the money supply. He should go further and make funds available to municipalities and businesses in addition to stepping up federal programs. There are so many things we could do. We could make money available for pollution control and the improvement of municipal services. We could make funds available for conservation and dams, for the creation of parkland and recreation facilities as well as senior citizens homes and low-income housing. Then, we might make funds available for the establishment of public ownership of land in order to control speculation.

If a municipality wants to control speculation or if a province wants to do this, the federal government's role should be to make the money available. We can establish and improve facilities for the handicapped and for day care centres so that women can move more freely in this world and more freely choose the kind of role they want to play in our society. We do not have enough clinics and hospitals. We should be doing experiments in education, particularly for the handicapped people, and also in the area of public transportation. The encouragement of its use is wide open. There are so many things that need to be done, and by doing them now we can also stimulate the economy. The minister will probably put the tag "spend our way to prosperity" on this suggestion. What is so terrible about spending our way to prosperity? We have done it before. Some countries have spent their way to prosperity by giving money away in foreign aid. It is not a new concept, and at this time it is important that we think in those terms.

The federal government could increase consumer purchasing power by increasing old age pensions and in this way it would redeem itself from its niggardly approach to the elderly. We should be increasing the income tax exemptions of people in the lower income brackets, $2,000 for single people and $4,000 for married people. We should be giving more grants to medical research The list is long. There is no limit to what we can do if we choose to do it. The question arises: are we not going to go off into an inflationary spiral if we do that? Yes, we could, if we did not take some imaginative action. I think we have to be very concerned about understanding what happens under an expansionary policy. But there are measures we can take, and in my view the public is prepared to accept new measures.

At the moment we have unemployment and inflation at the same time. Despite the rather limited success that the government had for a few months in holding down the cost of living, it is now climbing rapidly again. We have kicked away enormous advantages. We have thrown people out of work, we have virtually wrecked the economy for the small advantage of being able to show a marginal success with the rate of inflation. But that is over now, and it is increasing. In my view we need a prices review board to examine price increases as they take place, and then to take measures against them. There are many things we can do short of price control. In some cases we should not be afraid to use some collective price controls. I am not at all convinced that they will not work and that they should not be tried in some areas. We should be dealing specifically with some economic bottlenecks which occur from time to time instead of doing a hatchet job on the whole economy. In some areas there is excessive bargaining power, and we should be dealing with it.

The very fact that we have floated our dollar is a kind of safety valve, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) well knows, because should inflation in Canada be somewhat greater than it is in other countries, it will be reflected in the level of our dollar. At the moment there is an equalization effect taking place. Because we are holding down our inflation rate somewhat below that of other countries, our dollar has crept up and this has created unemployment in our secondary manufacturing industries. This has made it more difficult for them to recover. So there is a kind of balance in the floating dollar that is very valuable. We should be using the opportunity of full employment to do the many things that are necessary in this country.

One of the things that has to be done—and I think the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans) did this country a service in pointing this out—is to stop providing special concessions to the mining and resource industries because that will surely destroy our economy if we continue. When the Minister of Finance brought in the original white paper he was prepared to move against the mining companies, although not as strongly as the Carter Commission had recommended. He was prepared to remove some of their special privileges. However, he lost courage very quickly and has virtually given back all the concessions they had. The evidence is quite clear. They do not pull their weight and they do not pay their fair share of taxes. They may very well be inhibiting the development of Canadian secondary industries because of the vast quantities of capital that are required in their operations. It is very interesting to note the DBS figures which show that it costs at least $100,000 in capital to create one job in a resource industry as against a figure of perhaps one quarter that amount to create a job in a secondary manufacturing industry.

In a country that has almost 300,000 new entrants into its labour force every year, it is not possible to provide sufficient employment for all the people in this country if we continue to emphasize and to encourage the resource industry in Canada. There are special cases where resource industries do provide benefits, and I think where necessary we should assist them. But the kind of blanket over-all assumption that we have made that the resource industry is good for this country and that the more we tear out of our earth and ship away to some other country the better off we will be is not a valid assumption and can no longer be sustained. This is one of the things that the government will have to examine and one of the things about which we will be very concerned when we examine the white paper.

There will be others who will have something to say in this debate, and the deep concern that is felt on this side of the House about the level of unemployment will surely be made obvious to the government, to the front benches as well as to the back benches. We have an opportunity to correct the situation. I know that the Minister of Finance will wish to intervene in this debate. I hope that when he does he will not give us his platitudes and his excuses, but rather will make an announcement that the government intends to correct the terrible tragedy they have foisted on the Canadian people.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I have listened with great interest to the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) and I heard him assert that the economy is wrecked. I think that many other countries in the world would like to have an economy that is wrecked the way the Canadian economy is wrecked. He brought forward a great many suggestions. I thought that in view of his motion he would bring forward new or unique suggestions on ways in which the problem of unemployment in Canada, which I admit is a very serious one, could be solved in the short run. He has not done this. He gave us the same old line that we should spend a lot more money and at the same time cut taxes, as well as aid old age pensioners. I do not particularly like his derogatory remarks with regard to old age pensions. If you take a look at the increase in the GIS that is taking place this month you will see that it is well worth while limiting the general old age pension in order to aid those who need it the most.

The hon. member spoke about a prices review board and said we should do something about controlling people's bargaining power where it is excessive. I would like to ask him how he proposes that we do this. He has indicated that we should not worry about our resource industries in Canada. With that I cannot agree. We have to worry about our manufacturing industries. We also need to worry about development of our resource industries, the basic industries in this country.

In the budget which I introduced in the House last December, I expressed my belief that the Canadian economy would continue to expand at an accelerating pace in the months ahead, as a result of the fiscal and monetary stimulus progressively injected into the system over the course of the last year. But at the very outset, I pointed out that there might be month to month fluctuations from the improving employment trend.

At the same time I warned that the road to recovery would not be an easy one, and promised the House that the government was prepared to adopt further measures without delay if they were required to ensure the healthy growth of the economy. As I pointed out in the budget speech:

> In saying this I have in mind not only progress toward full employment but also continued satisfactory price performance. If we do not achieve the restraint of prices and costs that we must have we shall not shirk from action that may be required on that front.

Since the budget was brought down six months ago, we have continued to maintain the closest possible watch on the course of economic developments. On the whole, these developments have been highly favourable, but as usual the picture is not without its trouble spots.

Over the past four months there has been a significant rise in the cost of consumer goods and services. Some acceleration in the rate of increase of the consumer price index during the early months of 1971 was to be expected. There is, for example, generally a seasonal increase in the price of food during this period. This increase has been compounded to some extent by the easing of the supermarket price war. While the index rose by .7 per cent in April alone this is, as DBS pointed out, about in line with the average increase for this month over the past five years. On a year to year basis, the increase in the consumer price index in April amounted to 1.9 per cent, the same as in March. During the first four months of this year the rate of increase in consumer goods and services, other than food, has continued to slow down, and after averaging around 3½ per cent during 1970 has been running recently at a rate of less than 3 per cent.

Nevertheless, the dangers of renewed inflationary pressures developing in an expanding economy continue to remain very real. These dangers are seriously enhanced by the fact that despite some marginal decline recently, wage and salary increases are still running at a level that is not justifiable either in terms of increased productivity or increases in the cost of living. As I have indicated before, Mr. Speaker, the government is also concerned about the adverse impact on the economy stemming from the continuing high exchange rate of the Canadian dollar. I was rather interested to hear the hon. member say that we can have inflation in this country and that it will all be taken care of by increases in the value of the Canadian dollar. Admitting this could well have an effect on secondary manufacturing industry, he implied that we should not worry. Well, Mr. Speaker, I do worry about this.

Mr. Benjamin: Look at the mess we are in from your worrying.

Mr. Benson: This increase in the value of the Canadian dollar serves to weaken the competitive position of a number of sectors, both at home and abroad. The current level of the exchange rate is a reflection of our continuing strong merchandizing trade position and the climate of uncertainty internationally about the position of the U.S. dollar. As hon. members will be aware, recently I again urged provincial governments and underwriters to restrict to the greatest extent possible the amount of borrowing they undertake abroad in order to minimize upward pressure on the exchange rate of the Canadian dollar from this quarter.

But the matter of the most immediate and pressing concern is the substantial rise in unemployment on a seasonally adjusted basis between March and April from 6 to 6.7 per cent. Let me acknowledge at once that this increase is both perplexing and worrisome. It is perplexing because it represents a major break in the downward trend of unemployment that began last October, and because it is sharp contrast to indicators pointing to the continuing expansion of the economy over the past seven months or so. This increase in seasonally adjusted unemployment in April is worrisome because it understandably raises questions about the strength and durability of the resurgence now under way in Canada.

While the increase in unemployment between March and April is undoubtedly a matter of concern, it would be the height of folly to leap to the conclusion that the economy has moved badly off course and requires a major correction on the basis of one month's change in only one of a series of important economic indicators. The unusually small increase in employment that took place between March and April may well have been caused by a number of temporary factors. Obviously, one of the foremost is that the severest winter in the memory of most of us only slowly gave way to spring in many parts of the country, delaying both the opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway and the quickening of the pace of economic activity that normally occurs in many other sectors around this time of year.

The tempo of the economy already may have picked up sufficiently during the weeks since the last labour force survey to take up all or most of the slack that developed last month, although there are new uncertainties associated with the current U.S. rail strike. Certainly, that was the experience in 1967 when employment in April of that year rose by only 36,000 compared with the average gain of 97,000 for that month in the three previous years. In May, 1967, however, employment rose by more than the average gain for that month, almost completely taking up the slack that developed in April.

Since the budget was introduced last December, Mr. Speaker, it has become clear that the economy began to move forward strongly during the last quarter of 1970 following the slower pace earlier in the year. The Gross National Product in real terms rose between October and December at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 6.4 per cent, in contrast to a decline of 3.4 per cent in the real GNP of the United States during the fourth quarter.

Mr. Stanfield: Real figures?

Mr. Benson: These are real figures.

There is no comprehensive picture yet available of the economy during the early months of this year. On balance, however, and after taking account of short but sharp changes that may occur from month to month in individual indicators, there appears to be every reason to believe that the economy continued to move forward at a healthy rate, while the U.S. economy also began to gain momentum after the reversal of the fourth quarter of 1970.

During the first quarter, the index of industrial production rose by 1.2 per cent above the level in the fourth quarter of last year, when there was in turn an increase of .7 per cent over the third quarter. Retail sales, which have tended to be sluggish, were up by 3.1 per cent in the first quarter over the level a year ago, and I am informed that on a seasonally adjusted basis this is the strongest quarterly increase since the first quarter of 1969.

The general loans of the chartered banks, that is, business loans, have been increasing sharply, rising at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 10 per cent in January, 16 per cent in February, and 28 per cent in March. The number of housing starts in April jumped to 254,000 on a seasonally adjusted annual basis, while in the first quarter housing starts were running at a rate of nearly 204,000.

Although there was some decline in March, during the first three months of this year manufacturers' shipments rose by 3.5 per cent over the last quarter of 1970 and new orders rose by 6.4 per cent.

Mr. Stanfield: Is that real?

Mr. Benson: Real.

Mr. Stanfield: Yes, but is it in constant dollars?

Mr. Benson: Yes, in real dollars.

During the first four months of 1971 exports increased by 1.7 per cent above the very high level of a year ago, while imports rose by 1.5 per cent. The result was a merchandize trade surplus from January to April of $813 million, compared with a surplus of $789 million in the same period a year ago. In the period from September to March, Canada experienced a growth in employment of 3.1 per cent at an annual rate seasonally adjusted. The seasonally adjusted level of unemployment maintained a reasonably steady downward trend from 6.8 per cent to 6 per cent. As I acknowledged before, the increase in the rate in April represents a sharp break in this trend. It is by no means evident, however, that the general downward trend has been reversed. I might point out, Mr. Speaker, that in the United States, the seasonally adjusted rate rose from 5.8 per cent in February to 6.1 per cent in April, despite the substantial pick up under way in their economy.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Valade: Is it adjusted?

Mr. Benson: Seasonally adjusted.

Over the course of the past 14 months or so, both fiscal and monetary policies progressively became more strongly expansionary as the existing inflationary price pressures began to recede. The supply of credit has increased substantially and there has been a marked decline in the interest rates. The federal government has adopted a wide-ranging series of measures to encourage expansion of production and employment in those regions and industries most adversely affected by slow economic growth. There was a swing in the cash requirements of the government during 1970-71 from the previous year of around $1.7 billion, which represents a substantial degree of fiscal stimulus to the economy. A further large boost will be provided to the economy from the fiscal policies of the federal government during the current year. I am informed that the fiscal outlook which I gave last December is much more expansionary than the so-called full employment budget in the United States. In addition, a number of provinces, which together now wield substantial fiscal power, have also adopted more expansionary policies in recent months, thus reinforcing the impetus of federal action.

As members are aware, there are inclined to be long lags between the time that changes are made in the monetary and fiscal policy and the time these changes begin to exert their maximum impact on the economy. I am confident that the measures that have already been adopted will make themselves felt with growing force in the months ahead. Despite the very large degree of stimulus already injected into the economy, members of the opposition have been stridently demanding that we adopt ever more expansionary policies through massive increases in government spending and equally massive cuts in taxation.

Mr. Valade: We want you to reduce unemployment.

Mr. Benson: If we were to adopt the kind of mammoth crash programs being urged by opposition parties in total disregard of the most elementary requirements for sound economic management, we would have every reason to expect that the net result for our economy several months from now would be just that—a crash. Undoubtedly, members of the opposition would happily ignore the results of following their advice and just as happily berate the government for the consequences. I do not blame them—after all, that is the reason for the opposition being there.

Mr. Valade: You mean you are happy about unemployment?

Mr. Benson: In its study of the performance and potential of the economy, the Economic Council of Canada, which has consistently put strong emphasis on growth, warned that:

> —great care must be taken to move in a more gradual way back to potential in order to avoid the excessive surges of inflation-creating demand such as occurred in the mid-1960s and pushed the economy hard against potential.

Trying to push the economy back to its potential growth path too hard and too quickly would, the council said:

> —undoubtedly give rise to serious pressures and instabilities.

The very same warning was sounded by the OECD in its publication, "Economic Outlook", last summer when it said:

> While the likely impact of restrictive action has nearly always been overestimated, there has been a very frequent tendency to underestimate the impact of expansionary action—
> It is not only a question of making proper allowance for the lag between action and the effects of action: account has also to be taken of the resilience of private demand evident in modern full employment economies, especially when inflationary expectations have become entrenched.

There is, I believe, a widespread consensus developing in the country that the outlook for sound growth of the economy in the months ahead is very bright. Both the chairman and vice-chairman of the Economic Council of Canada have in recent weeks expressed confidence that the economy will continue to move forward at an accelerating pace. On the basis of surveys showing a significant upturn in consumer and capital spending intentions, a Financial Post editorial late last month asserted:

> Prospects for 1971 have taken a clear and decisive turn for the better.

The chief economist of the Toronto-Dominion Bank, Mr. Douglas Peters, predicted a substantial business upturn this year. As I have emphasized before, however, the resurgence of the economy now underway does not by itself provide a resolution to the basic dilemma that continues to confront Canada and all other western nations, that of maintaining high and increasingly productive employment and relative price stability.

Mr. Speaker, a background paper prepared for a committee of the other place that is engaged in a study of this particular dilemma warns that it is unlikely the inquiry will discover any single, magic elixir that will resolve this very difficult problem. Over the course of the past several months, we have had a number of elixirs proposed by various parties for providing magic solutions. Given the nature of the problem, however, it is not surprising that the nature of the solution they propose undergoes constant change.

Over a period of several months, for example, members of the New Democratic Party repeatedly called for imposition of mandatory price and income controls to halt inflation, which they recognized then to pose a serious economic problem for a country that is so exposed to the outside world as Canada. In the Commons last March, the then deputy leader and now leader of the NDP, again proposed imposition of price controls but contended wage controls should be considered only in the case of a very small minority of workers gaining excessive pay increases, and then only as a last resort.

During the national convention of the NDP last month, however, delegates were reported to have approved a resolution that said nothing about measures of any kind to contain inflation at any given level and in particular was totally silent on the various forms of mandatory controls advocated by NDP members in this House. It urged only that measures be adopted simply to compensate those who could not run fast enough on the treadmill to keep up with the inflationary spiral of prices.

Early last year, the Conservative party was criticizing increased spending programs adopted by the government to stimulate expansion in slow growing sectors of the economy and contended we should be increasing taxes to fight inflation. By fall, the party had reversed its position, calling for both major decreases in taxes and major increases in spending. The leader of the Conservative party consistently maintained that the dilemma of full employment and relative price stability could be resolved merely by urging Canadians to comply with voluntary guidelines. The Conservative leader has also spoken out vigorously on a number of occasions in opposition to the adoption of any form of mandatory price and income controls.

But a policy paper on economic growth prepared for discussion at the party's meeting this fall makes virtually
