Mr. Loiselle: Let me remind my friend that in 1965 the Liberal government increased the minimum wage to $1.25 per hour.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. While the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) did not say so, I take it he was rising on a point of order in respect of whether the hon. member for Saint-Henri (Mr. Loiselle) was relevant in his remarks. I think the hon. member for Saint-Henri may have been straying from the confines of the bill. With respect, I suggest that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre led him a little further astray. I suggest that both hon. gentlemen return to the context of the bill.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It was easy to do.

Mr. Loiselle: It is always easy to do that in this place, Mr. Speaker. In any event, I will tell you the story later because you are the one who is bothered by the situation. I will not take much more time because I know other hon. members have something to say about this matter. Let me repeat my earlier statement. Instead of suggesting an additional statutory holiday, members of the opposition should make constructive suggestions in order that the government may assist the unemployed and those with low incomes. I remember when I was a young lad that I was happy to be in school. This was true of the young generation then. When I grew up I had to make a living and went to work.

Why should we have a holiday on August 1, at a time when the employees of most companies are in fact enjoying their annual vacations? Most employees take holidays in July and August. If August 1 were declared a holiday, these people would come back from two weeks' vacation and find themselves with another day off and nothing to do. What is the use of giving a holiday to those who have already been on vacation?

We have urgent problems facing workers that must be solved. The government has shown it wants to do something for the workers by increasing the minimum wage to $1.75 per hour. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre suggests the minimum salary should be $2 per hour. If the government had suggested $2 per hour, the hon. member would have suggested $2.25. That is exactly what happened in 1965 when the government increased the minimum wage to $1.25 per hour; the hon. member suggested it should be $1.50 per hour. Now, when we suggest it should be $1.75 per hour, he suggests it should be $2 per hour. Members of the opposition will always suggest an increase that is above the government's proposal.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, this is a very well-intentioned bill, I am sure, but for the life of me I cannot understand how one can pick a day out of thin air and call it a national day of a day of special significance which merits being made a holiday. It makes me wonder about the purpose behind suggestions which encourage us to manufacture a holiday in order to get another day off.

To my mind, the words "the first Monday in the month of August" represent a nameless, pointless, meaningless and purposeless day. I cannot see how we could support a bill, even one to name an additional day under the Canada Labour (Standards) Code, such as this. If we want another day off for federal government employees, then let us give them a day off under the general provisions of the federal code. Surely it is not necessary to go through this terrible travesty.

I say this with all respect to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) because, as I said earlier, I am sure his intention is good. What we would be doing here would be adding another day to the general holidays of New Year's day, Good Friday, Labour day, Thanksgiving day, Remembrance day and Christmas day which for hundreds of years have become meaningful to people. We would be saying that there is another great day in Canada, which is the first Monday in the month of August.

I do not see how I could support this bill. I wonder whether the bill would qualify if we accepted it as one of Robert L. Ripley's Believe-it-or-Nots by saying we have the longest name for a holiday in the world, called "The first Monday in the month of August."

Mr. Francis: Call it "Knowles day".

Mr. Aiken: I suspect the hon. member thinks we might do that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There are two of us.

Mr. Aiken: There are two, and maybe that makes it doubly unjustified.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Aiken: Yes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is the hon. member aware of the fact that the first Monday in the month of August is already a civic holiday in many parts of Canada and is a day which many people would like to have off?

Mr. Aiken: Yes, I am aware of that. That was my final point. The first Monday in August is a civic holiday. A civic holiday has always been a day on which municipal councils have authorized the mayor of the town to declare a holiday as a civic matter. This is accepted in some places and not in others. I believe it would be wrong for us, firstly, to move in on this civic holiday and make it a national holiday because I do not know how we could justify it. It certainly would not be easy to make a municipal day a national day. However, if the hon. member had this in mind, I ask him now why he did not say so when he drafted the bill.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit another question?

Mr. Aiken: Certainly.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Does he not realize that this bill does not declare a national holiday in the way the Victoria Day Act and so on do, but simply states that on this day anybody employed under federal labour jurisdiction will get a holiday with pay? Does he not realize that a civic proclamation does not provide holiday for employees of the railways, the banks, and so on, which come under federal rather than municipal jurisdiction?

Mr. Aiken: Yes. I accept the hon. member's point there also. In the beginning I said that if we are to provide an extra day off, I see no purpose in putting it in this particular bill and making a travesty of the national holidays we already have. That is the reason I could not support the bill in this particular form, although it is possible when the labour bill comes up that something along this line could be included. I am merely objecting to breaking the long-standing precedent of national holidays which we have in this country by including this suggestion in, if I may say so, so clumsy a form.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I hoped I would have a minute or two to add a few words. I listened with particular interest to what my colleague, the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen), had to say on this matter. He dealt with two aspects of the bill. I agree with him that in respect of the naming of the holiday we should take a hard look at the question. I feel another approach should be considered.

I agree with my friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), in respect of his objectives although I wonder whether he would consider this aspect. I believe he has chosen the wrong time of year for the holiday. The gap in the season now between New Year's day and Easter is too long. A generation ago everyone enjoyed the summer and the assumption was that in fine, balmy weather, such as we have today in this fair city of ours, is the time a holiday is needed. That was true at one time. However, the need now is for a winter holiday to break up the three-month or 3½-month period between New Year's day and Easter. There is no holiday on the calendar in that period.

Many people enjoy winter holidays for the purpose of skiing, winter sports, snowmobiling, and so on. There has been a change in our generation. On many occasions we can enjoy a weekend or three-day holiday in the winter just as much as we can in the summer months.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Let us have both.

Mr. Francis: What is an appropriate holiday which would fit the schedule? The suggestion of a flag day for the first week in February is a very good one. This was the time our flag was unveiled for the first time. I am looking at the hon. member who moved this motion. He was with me, I believe, on the day in February, 1965, when our flag was first unfurled on the Peace Tower. That was a memorable occasion. That, surely, is about the time of year when a holiday is needed. A civic holiday is fairly generally observed in those parts of the country where it can be observed. As mentioned by the hon. gentleman who just spoke, this is the general practice.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The time provided for private member's business has expired.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

POST OFFICE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING STAMP AGENTS' COMMISSION, LETTER MAIL PREPARATION ARRANGEMENTS, EXTRAORDINARY SERVICES, MEMBERS' MAIL, ETC.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Côté (Longueuil) that Bill C-240, to amend the Post Office Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. Robert P. Kaplan (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I intend to support the bill that is before us. I agree in principle that the postal services should be efficient and modern. Indeed, I agree with the principle that the user should pay and I hope that the Post Office can achieve that objective.

I am rising to ask the minister some questions which I hope he will answer either in summing up the debate or when the bill is before the committee. I should like to begin by quoting what the minister said yesterday when speaking in this debate:

> The Post Office is relying heavily on marketing principles to determine the needs of customers and to tailor services to meet these needs.

I wish to tell the minister about a need which is not being met by the Post Office and about a service which is needed. It is one within my own constituency, in the community of Thorncliffe Park which now contains 14,000 people. If they lived alone and not in the heart of Toronto, the lack of attention which is being given to their needs might be considered scandalous. I suggest that the problem is all the more serious because they are located in the heart of an important city.

These 14,000 people have no postal services whatsoever. I should like to tell hon. members something about their history. Until about a year ago they were served by a postal substation. Then the substation was closed because it was too crowded, in view of the demand, to provide the kind of service that was required. It was not able to do the job—everyone agreed that this was so—particularly at Christmas, but all year round it was too busy and too crowded to do its job properly. Therefore it was closed.

It was replaced by two stamp machines. At first there was one stamp machine. It was inadequate because it would run out of stamps every few hours, that is to say, it required servicing more than once a day. So a second stamp machine was added. These 14,000 individuals, for whom marketing principles are being studied to determine the needs of customers and to tailor services to meet their needs, now have two machines which contain enough stamps for nearly one whole day.

In the speech to which I have already referred, the minister said:

> We have long-range plans to replace inadequate mail . . . facilities in major cities with up to date plants.

I hope there is a short-range plan to replace these two stamp machines with an adequate facility to cover the needs of 14,000 people. There is a range of innovative services about which the minister told us.

He referred to the Fairview mall boutique, a postal boutique which will provide government departments and agencies with an opportunity to disseminate information. I submit it is most unfair that the Fairview mall, which is not greater than Thorncliffe Park, should have a postal boutique which provides a wide range of services when the 14,000 people of Thorncliffe Park have only two stamp machines which run out of stamps before the end of the day.

Recently the minister indicated that work was being done to try and provide better facilities for Thorncliffe Park. In fact, for over a year there has been a search for a new location for the post office. But a year is too long. Physically, this is a small community. The number of alternative locations is quite limited and it should not take a year for a decision to be made, for negotiations to be concluded and for a post office to be provided.

A few months ago I tabled the following question in the House of Commons:

> Has the government established any deadline for obtaining a post office facility for Thorncliffe Park?

After the question had lain on the order paper for several months, the answer I received was a very simple one. It was "no"—one word.

[Mr. Kaplan.]

In his address yesterday the minister indicated that a program to improve the services and appearance of small post offices is scheduled to get under way in July. Here we are, looking to July to improve the appearance and services of existing small post offices. I would like to close on this note and remind the minister that the 14,000 people of Thorncliffe Park are not waiting for an extra stamp machine, they are not waiting for a boutique or for services and facilities based on marketing principles: they are simply waiting for a post office and I submit they should have one.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take a few minutes to speak on the legislation now before us.

The minister is seeking passage of a bill providing that postal rates for first class mail be increased from 6 to 7 cents, effective July 1, 1971, and from 7 to 8 cents, effective January 1, 1972. This increase is about the only concern, or at least the main one, of this government, which sponsors the legislation now before us. It is not very much concerned, however, about services to be provided to mail users.

What the people require of the Post Office is fast and efficient service. It seems that since 1954 especially, postal rates have increased periodically and as they go up, the service gets worse.

I do not know exactly what is wrong, if influences outside the postal administration interfere with its operation, but the fact is that the postal service is not efficient right now.

In fact, I have heard from time to time in the House some members convey to the minister complaints made by their electors to the effect that the mail is moving slower and slower. The minister then replied: If you bring specific cases to my attention, I shall investigate and we shall attempt to correct the situation.

Now, I have in my hand an article which I sent to one of my constituents. I admit that it was no first class correspondence but, nevertheless, according to the House of Commons post-mark the item was mailed May 6 at 4 P.M. and reached Authier on May 18, 1971. I think this is much too long to dispatch an item from Ottawa to a community in Abitibi. What is the reason for such a state of affairs? I think that once I have expressed this complaint to the hon. minister in a moment, if his officials want to take the trouble to do so they will find the cause of this delay.

This is not the only case. I believe that if an inquiry is made at the level of city regional offices, we shall find there the main reason for the inefficiency of the postal service. It is not up to me to criticize the employees of these big offices, but it is obvious that if postal workers in small towns or villages worked in the same spirit as those in the large post offices, we simply would not have any postal service.

I think there is much room for improvement in this field. Why are those workers not more efficient? Is it on account of low morale, or because their training officer did not do a good job?

We could compare this to a recent incident that occurred within the Canadien hockey team. At one time, there were complaints that if the team was not as efficient as it should be, it was due to the coach who did not have the knack to get the best out of his players.

I wonder whether it is not the same with postal workers and whether, at a given time, there was not a lack of leadership to boost and support their morale.

At all events, the fact remains that services have been considerably downgraded in spite of constantly increasing rates, labour and machinery costs and raw material requirements. We are therefore justified in asking what is wrong and what can be done.

A few years ago, the former Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) called on K. P. Warwick and Company to conduct studies on ways and means of improving the postal service. The company carried out 15 studies within the 12 months ending on November 1, 1969, at which date it submitted a report. It called on the services of six consultant firms in order to seek solutions to be applied to the problem. Apparently, however, the conclusion was that the Post Office Department should be transformed into a Crown corporation in order to provide efficient service on a self-sustaining basis. Indeed, the minister mentioned in the statement he made upon introducing this bill that if the postal rates were not increased this year, the deficit would add up to some $113 million for 1971-72. Aslo it is said in the report on the study that if changes are not made before 1975, the deficit could well reach $500 million.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know to what extent the cabinet has considered the report submitted by this firm nor what conclusions were arrived at, but, in any event, this report would deserve careful examination to determine whether it would be wise to make the corrections that are mentioned, since those experts which have studied the question certainly did not make their suggestions merely to have them ignored. The suggestions should be considered very carefully to see whether it would be desirable to make such changes, in order not to ensure a profit but to avoid a deficit.

According to the estimates in this report, it could happen that we shall have to pay 12 cents for a stamp in 1980 and 21 cents in 1990 in order to keep revenues at a sensible level corresponding to increasing costs.

According to the experts who have studied the matter thoroughly, it seems that this service will be more and more expensive yet without any guarantee of efficiency.

In his opening remarks the minister told us that it was necessary to increase rates for users of postal services so that those who do not use them do not have to subsidize them. The minister said that industries, tradespeople and businessmen accounted for 80 p. 100 of the volume of mail and the rest of the population for the other 20 p. 100.

I understand both the position and the purpose of the minister. However, he knows very well that if postal rates are increased for industries, tradespeople and businessmen, the increase will be reflected in their cost prices and the consumer will be once more paying for it. The consumer always pays in the end for any increment. Whether he does so through public funds or higher consumer prices, the effect is nearly the same.

The increase of postal rates will only bring temporary relief and will not really solve the problem, because I expect that the administration costs of the postal system will continue to increase as those of any other system and even if the department were turned into a Crown corporation, it would be confronted with the same increases or the same requests for increases.

In my opinion, the government should try to find some practical and effective procedures to dispatch as quickly as possible the mail from a point to another, in order that the people who need those services to communicate with each another will quickly obtain them, otherwise they will resort to other means of communication. The rates will then be increased and the users will be tempted to use other means of communication.

I do not think the bill now before us brings the changes the public is expecting. It will do nothing more than ease the financial situation of that department trying to finance itself. We should not be more demanding of such a service as far as profitability is concerned than of any other department. The Department of External Affairs, the Secretary of State or the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation are not required to pay their own way, so why should we ask the Post Office Department to have no deficit?

Even if public funds must make up a few deficits, the people will not care too much about it, but we must first of all try to give them the satisfactory services they want.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to begin my remarks in French since we are discussing a department which is now under a French-speaking minister and I think you can get along better with him in French than in English, although I notice he is wearing his earphone.

The bill now before us aims at raising postal rates. We are being told that the minister wants to do something which should have been done long ago. He has delayed raising the commission to be paid to agents selling postage stamps in small sub-offices. As much as 5 per cent will be paid in commission for some stamp sales.

Those people will take advantage of the opportunity and doubtless many people will want to sell stamps. Often one has trouble obtaining stamps, especially when they are sold through machines offering 24 cents' worth of stamps for 25 cents. Now, what is the minister going to sell the public since the cost of stamps will be increased to 7 cents? Will we get only three 7-cent stamps and three 1-cent stamps? What stamps will the booklets contain?

[English]

However, Mr. Speaker, various items are provided for in this bill. I have no great cause for complaint in my relations with the Post Office Department. I must say, though, that I join with hon. members who feel that for the last two or three years, particularly under the minister's predecessor, there has been a myth to the effect that the Post Office Department should show a profit regardless of the level of service.

The postal service, Mr. Speaker, was never founded to provide a profit. We have seen the paradox of rapidly escalating letter and parcel postage rates and charges for special services, and a decline in the quality of general services. Almost all members have complained about the time lapse between picking up and delivering mail. One does not rely any more on such things as overnight service. That service used to be provided as a natural course of events, but it is not any more. There was a local rate for overnight service, but now there is no local rate: instead there is poorer service.

I would refer to the time of the passport muddle. Never did one section of the government service join more in what I frankly fear were the inefficiencies of another department than did the postal service, particularly with regard to registrations. At that time, once a passport had left Ottawa in a bulk billing under registration it could end up in Timbuctu and nobody would be any the wiser. This happened in many instances. Passports went astray and were never found simply because there was no way of backtracking under the bulk billing.

I was promised that there would be some sort of improvement in the services in order that items could be followed up, but it would be at an increased rate and not at the registered rate. Services that had been standard before, or had been standard in certain communities where bulk billings did not apply, were to be upgraded, but we were also to upgrade the charges.

That was pure and absolute nonsense, Mr. Speaker, and was not justified under any circumstance. We know that items started out in small communities as registered items, then came to a main postal station, a distributing point and disappeared. If a letter were sent, say from a small town in Alberta to eastern Canada, it would reach Edmonton then join a bulk billing and disappear. It would be gone. Unless they searched the postal stations from the roof to the basement, the item could be gone forever: it was just lost. Yet we were being charged the same rate by the post office.

I have not heard of any new, improved service although it is possible there is one. The passport division has improved its efficiency and therefore we are not bound to search for passports as we were wont to do on previous occasions when it was always wise to send out the registration number because that, at least, was half a clue.

Then one runs up against certain regulations in the postal service. Some think, Mr. Speaker, that these regulations were written on the same tablets as those on which Moses put down the commandments of God, so sacred are they. They are treated with the greatest of reverence by postal officials. When you talk to postal officials about these regulations you learn that they assume that Parliament has considered and approved them. Of course, we know that is totally false.

The regulations are made at home for home use and for the benefit of home, that is, for the benefit of those administering the regulations. That is surprising. I have talked with some of the senior people in the department—I do not mean here in Ottawa but across the country—and laid it on the line that the Post Office provides a service for the public and that the word that must be underscored three or four times is "service". The public does not exist for the benefit of the Post Office, although a great number of Post Office personnel operate on that basis. Many of them feel that the great, unwashed public is there for their personal benefit and gratification, on the basis of the regulations.

It is not pleasant to say these things, and I know that many of the minister's officials are listening. I would tell them the same thing face to face. I have said it many times over the telephone. The one cardinal rule that you must apply, not only in the post office but in other departments of government is the rule of service to the public. The regulations should be designed to provide service; they should not be made to inhibit service. There must be that degree of flexibility which will permit service to be extended. Let there be none of this business: You happen to be 50 feet beyond a certain boundary line and therefore we cannot deliver mail to your door. That, Mr. Speaker, is one of the self-serving regulations made for the benefit of those at home within the department.

I know that within its administration the department must also deal with groups of employees who come under collective bargaining but who have forgotten the word "service". As a matter of fact, the leader of one of these groups the other night said he could not care less about service or about the efficiency of the department; his interest lay merely in getting more money for his men. That type of demagogy just will not do. This is a service department. It is organized not for the benefit of administrators and employees but for the benefit of the public. And who are the public but the people of Canada? This is a service for the people of this country.

If everyone within the department adopted the same attitude toward service that has been exhibited by some of the men whom we have seen performing in the last couple of years, this would indeed become a sad, sad country. Unfortunately, there is an attitude of: Forget the women and children. Cast off the lifeboat because I'm in it. I could use much more, shall we say, crude expressions to illustrate the same attitude. That attitude is not right. It will not do to say: I'm all right; cast off. Forget about the others.

One point I would make to the minister is that right from the top of the organization under his jurisdiction there should be a re-examination of the motivation behind the regulations. These should be designed to give service with maximum efficiency and more than just a modicum of courtesy.

What are the public concerned about? They are concerned about the little things—rudeness and curtness and the fact that they cannot pick up their mail. A Member of Parliament provides the crying-towel for many of these complaints. These people are not going to make the complaints to their local postmaster, regardless of the size of town. They do not know the postmaster; he is a man in a back office. Timid little ladies or young persons who are not used to facing up to situations are not going to complain. Usually a strip is torn off them or someone indicates that they are soreheads. They usually come to their Member of Parliament to complain.

It is great to listen to these things but it is a sad reflection on what should be one of the jewels in the crown of services which the government provides. That is where the postal service should be. Of all the services the government can provide with almost daily repetition, the postal service should be uppermost; but unfortunately this is not the case.

For the second time in four years the public of Canada is faced with an increase in postage rates. This increase will be made pretty well across the board; it will affect the majority of the public. There were famous, or infamous incidents in 1967 or 1968. There is a rather sad history of a certain night here. I am sure the minister will always remember that. But there has not been an improvement in service. The only plea I make is insistence upon service. I will repeat it as often as is necessary. We cannot expect the public to come to us just because the postal services are there. If you have a service, you have to sell it by your attitude, courtesy and efficiency. In this way you have a much more successful and happier operation.

Some of the measures adopted have been gifts laid at the foot of the altar of efficiency. They have been appalling because they have not succeeded. There may appear to be some efficiency. But ask John Q. Public what he thinks! Although he pays more, he does not get his mail any quicker. I realize that salaries, and so forth, have escalated. One wonders when the demands are going to stop. However, equipment and productivity have increased. There may have been a case for an increase at some time, but at the moment the minister has not demonstrated an absolute need. It is incumbent upon the government to prove their case for an increase in postal rates.

There are clarifications of the law with regard to postal services that will be available to members of this House. There are some idiosyncracies in this respect. There is one provision of which I fully approve because I have seen abuses in the past. The franking privileges of members will cease ten days after dissolution of Parliament. In the past almost whole political campaigns have been launched from Ottawa. This was handy for members who had a geographical advantage. That is not fair. I think this provision will be much better for everybody. I fully approve of the limitation to be imposed on this service for Members of Parliament.

It is up to the minister to make his case with regard to the increase in rates, not merely quoting grandiose figures. I want to see something demonstrable in the case of improved services. Will there be an improvement? To use a current phrase, I am still very much "out to lunch" with regard to the numbering code in Ottawa. Frankly, I receive very little mail from Ottawa which includes this code. The reason is that it is too complicated. It may be very simple for those who are in contact with the plan, but I have to stop and think very hard whether I have the letters and digits in their proper sequence. I even have to ask myself what they are; there are many combinations.

We must remember that these codes are not printed; they are written. One which I recall is K1H 5S8. When they are handwritten, the "5," "S" and "8" look very much the same. I think a sorter would have to make a triple examination of the 5S8 because of their similarity. These are some of the practical difficulties. Most of my neighbours put the notice which they received into a drawer. They found it too complicated to bother with it. They were quite happy with the postal zone they used before.

There many be some theoretical advantages in this system but unless the public is persuaded that it will be used generally and is to their advantage, it is of no use. I admit that perhaps more testing is required. It might be necessary to send out a few more reminders to the public. Very nice kits with little stickers were distributed. There are two cabinet ministers who live on my street. I wonder how many of those stickers are still in desk drawers in their homes. I cannot persuade my wife to use them. She says that she cannot remember the code. The same applies to my neighbours. Theoretically, this plan may be perfectly good but greater effort has to be made to sell it. At the moment, I must confess it is a bit of a non-starter. It may be all right in government offices.

When letters go out from our offices on Parliament Hill to our constituents, we use the new postal code. My correspondents have asked me what these symbols mean because they have not heard about them. I know they have been publicized in the press here and perhaps mention has been made of them in the press generally, but how many people remember that sort of thing? I would have to write a special letter to each of my correspondents in Edmonton and ask them please to use the code number, and I just cannot do it. I put it on my letterhead in correspondence from my office but I have only seen one or two replies bearing the number. This is a job for education.

Again let me say I do not think the minister has demonstrated the need for these increases in postal rates. This afternoon I voted to postpone second reading of the bill for six months, and unless there is a great change in the bill this will be my attitude when the vote is called on second reading.

Post Office Act

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to speak this evening since I spoke last night on the amendment to give the bill a six months' hoist. But having checked some of the speeches I feel that there is information which the minister should make available to members of the House when he winds up the debate on the bill some time this evening.

One thing that disturbed me was a statement the minister made in which he did not give certain facts; at least, they are not in Hansard. The minister was talking about the deficit the Post Office will have in the fiscal year 1971-72 unless there is an increase in postal rates. As reported at page 6217 of Hansard, he had this to say:

> It is with this in mind that the deficit for 1971-72 is estimated at about $113 million, a reduction from last year, which is encouraging. This is the deficit we expect without any increases in the postage rates. Obviously, we must look to such increases if the gap between revenues and postal costs is to be narrowed significantly.

What was the deficit last year? The minister is saying that it was more than $113 million. Was it $120 million? The minister nods his head; therefore I presume we are talking about an operating deficit last year of some $120 million. Now I have established that, there are one or two things I should like to leave with the House because they disturb me immensely. A little over two years ago we in this House passed amendments to the Post Office Act which raised the rates on all second and third-class mail. Hundreds and hundreds of little newspapers and publications were put out of circulation simply because they could not afford to pay the increased postage.

We were told at the time that the increase in rates would help pull the Post Office out of the red and bring it to the point where it could manage the deficit it was incurring. On checking the record I find that the following occurred during the last three or four years, and I have taken this information from the accounts that are given members from time to time. In 1968-69 the revised net operating deficit was around $90 million. The full effect of the increases we made just over two years ago brought the deficit in 1969-70 down to $52.9 million. The following year, namely last year, the deficit rose from $52.9 million to a whopping $120 million.

Much has been said about Post Office management, but the minister now comes back to the House and to the public of Canada for approval to take another big bite out of the public purse in terms of first-class mail rates. One month from now the minister will raise the postage on a first-class letter to 7 cents, and six months later, on New Year's Day of 1972, as a bonus from this Liberal government the rate will be increased to 8 cents. This represents an increase of one-third over the present rate.

With regard to the income received from first-class mail, according to my interpretation of the minister's speech he said he expects to pick up this year about $37 million as a result of the increased rate. The next fiscal year will be 1972-73, and the revenue derived from the increase will amount to $80 million. The point that interests me most is that two years ago we did an "axe job" on the postal system of this country. We talked then about bringing down the deficit and holding it at a certain level. It was suggested at that time that we would not need another major increase in rates. Yet lo and behold, we find that the increase in the deficit during the last fiscal year jumped to $120 million.

Mr. Rose: Mismanagement!

Mr. Harding: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I think much of it is due to mismanagement. I think this House and the country is faced with deciding whether the Post Office Department is to be run as a service to the Canadian people or made to pay like a business organization. I have no doubt at all that the Post Office must be run as a service to the Canadian public and that we should expect to have deficits. If we are to supply service to outlying areas and to rural parts of Canada, in many instances it is simply impossible to make the service a paying proposition. I would be the first to admit that rural areas deserve small post offices and postal services because, after all, these people have pioneered this country and are entitled to some of the amenities of life. If we have to operate such services at a loss, as we do in many cases, I submit there is absolutely nothing wrong with doing so.

When the minister closes this debate I would also ask him to outline to the House exactly what are his plans, not just for next year but for the next few years. Where are we going, and where are the rates going to stop? Is the minister trying to put this department on a paying basis in order that it will show figures in the black every year? If this is the desire of the department it should let members of the House and the people of the country know what to expect. So far we have not been given the complete picture by the new Postmaster General or his predecessor.

Le me refer again briefly to the point I raised last night. The post office box rental charge to residents of rural areas is unjust. Let me make it crystal clear that as a result of studying postal revenue sources for 1970 in Canada as reported in the annual report of the Post Office, I found that $4.9 million were collected from post office box rentals, mainly from people living in rural areas. Again I suggest to the minister that when people living in rural areas are charged this amount for the rental of post office boxes they are being discriminated against by the government.

I have my mail delivered to my apartment in Ottawa. It is slipped through the door and I pick it up in the morning. People in rural areas should be assured that the mail delivered to small post offices can be picked up if necessary some time after the post office is closed, and without cost. They should be in a position to receive mail on a general delivery basis. They should have exactly the same service which people in the cities receive. Our Post Office is not giving these people this service.

I make this point as strongly as I can and suggest it is rank discrimination against the people living in rural areas. The department is suggesting to them that they must accept this kind of service charge because they have chosen to live in rural areas rather than in larger centres. There is no rhyme or reason in the philosophy of the Post Office Department which maintains this discriminatory practice. Let me again remind the minister that this charge amounted to only 1.1 per cent of the total revenue of the department in the fiscal year 1969-70. By changing the system, the department might increase its deficit by a small amount but this should be absorbed by the system if the department intends to deal fairly with people who live in villages and rural areas.

I do not intend to continue my remarks because we will have an opportunity to talk about this situat on after the bill has been sent to committee and reported back to the House. I trust that when the minister closes the debate he will tell us where the Post Office Department is going and how it will get there.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few remarks on Bill C-240 as regards the hike in postal rates and certain services which are likely to be provided to hon. members should this measure be adopted.

I find it highly regrettable that the minister in charge of the Post Office—for whom I have the greatest respect—is the sponsor of a bill whose chief purpose is increasing postal rates.

However, no matter how imaginative one may be, one cannot find any improvement in postal services which would warrant this boost. I am referring more specifically to the services which should be improved and which have not been since the last raise.

Honorable members will recall that when the former Postmaster General introduced a bill to increase postal rates, we warned the government that such a measure would bring about an increase in the dailies' subscription rates. The government replied that there would not be any direct effects on subscription rates to daily newspapers. And yet, it is exactly what happened in the rural areas and as we had been telling the government all along, in the long run, the small taxpayer had to pay for it.

However, everyone knows now that it is precisely what happened and the daily papers, at least those in my area, now cost twice what they used to cost and the newspaper owners are saying that the increase is due to the high cost of delivery by mail.

It will also be remembered that, at that time, the president of Le Soleil of Quebec City was sending us, every day, three feet long telegrams. I even measured one, and it was 38 inches long, in which he asked us to oppose that measure.

At that time, it was the hon. members who had benefited the most from free publicity in that newspaper during the 1968 election campaign who were supporting the bill. As a matter of fact, they were supporting it because of the party line, as, deep down, they were not in favour of the bill. On the other hand, those who were against it, the hon. member for Bellechasse among others, were those who got the least out of that free publicity. Those hon. members opposed the measure not because they had obligations or through gratitude to the press, but because they knew beforehand that it would be the "small people" who would pay for the increase.

There is another thing we deplore, but unfortunately it is too late to do anything about it. If today we could be assured that the Canadian people would get a better service, we would certainly be confident and probably would support the increase because we would be convinced that in so doing we would give to the government and the Post Office an apportunity to offer a better service to the people, thus giving them a satisfaction they deserve.

We have now reached the point where we think twice before sending out bulk mail and figure on a 10 day delay to make sure it will be delivered on time. And we find that even if we allow for the necessary delays, delivery is still late.

I found out once that 50 per cent of the notices for a meeting were delivered two days after the meeting was held. I then asked the Postmaster General, following complaints from my constituents, if there was any possibility of making an inquiry to determine why those notices were not delivered on time. The Postmaster General, through his officials, authorized the investigation and they reported to me.

I must say I was happy with the way the investigation was carried out and also with the officials' performance of their duties, since they reported to me. I was just waiting for an opportunity to remind the Postmaster General—or rather his predecessor, that we express criticisms and suggestions only after having thoroughly gone into the matter—to use the words of a great one who has passed away—in order to cause prejudice to no one and not to make unjustified criticisms.

In such circumstances, when deliveries are not on time, the sender is dissatisfied, and so are those who are to receive the communications, both sender and addressee are discontented.

As representatives of the people we must, on occasion, report on the situation and try to call for improvements. The way things are, no wonder the public loses confidence in the postal service. The Minister is right being concerned about it. He is frank enough to say it publicly as he did yesterday in this House, as may be seen from page 6216 of Hansard, and I quote:

> ...one which concerns me greatly is the loss of public confidence the Post Office has experienced in recent years. As I have said before, this confidence must be restored if the Post Office is to be able to continue its vital role in Canadian society. To this end, we are moving to improve services through major reforms.

I am convinced that the minister is well meaning, that he wants to make major reforms, but these should not merely consist in raising postage rates. It would be necessary, indeed, to improve the postal service so that it might regain public confidence and be more widely used because, on the whole, when I was younger, I considered this service as a sacred one. When we mailed something, it could reach its destination without any concern. If any item got lost, it was possible to find it without too much difficulty by filing our complaints to the postmaster or the authorities.

The minister also said, and I quote:

> Government has to decide if the taxpayers of this country should subsidize services whose main users are business and industry. Approximately 80 per cent of Post Office volumes are in fact derived from business and industry. Given this, the principle of successive operating deficits, to be supported by general taxation, would appear inequitable.

Mr. Speaker, even if the main users belong to the business and industrial sectors, the fact remains that under this procedure, in the field of business and industry, costs increase to the same extent and the consumer ends up footing the bill. If I were in business, if my operating costs increased because of higher postal rates, as a businessman, I would have to put in the expenditures column, higher expenses, so that these could be added in the end to my income. This would also apply to the manufacturing cost if I were in the industrial field. I would indirectly ask the consumer to cover them, which is normal.

Although it is said that 80 per cent of the mail is sent out by business people and industries, it is however the population that indirectly pays for it. If I were convinced that the increase mentioned in the bill would provide towns of about 1,000 people with the services of a post office, I would perhaps be more favourable to this legislation.

I would like here to appeal to the minister and make several requests that I have expressed before and which he has understood very well. However, he is unable to answer members' requests concerning the building of new post offices. If I were quite sure that those increases would finally be used to enable the minister to meet those rightful demands, I would have, in all fairness, to trust him and give him the support he needs under the circumstances.

In addition, the minister referred—and rightly—to the purchasing power of the dollar to justify that increase and I quote:

> In terms of the purchasing power of the dollar, the basic increase of seven and eight cents is actually lower than the four cent rate which came into effect in 1954.

I am quite pleased to read what the minister said in that connection, Mr. Speaker. He takes into account the increased cost of living, the depreciation of the dollar to justify increased demand as far as the postal service is concerned. However, the same factor should also be considered with regard to families and old people. When we used that argument to ask the government for amendments to the legislation authorizing payment of family allowances or pensions to the disabled and the old, we were laughed at.

It will be recalled that in 1945 when family allowances were established, the dollar and the cost of living were not what they are today. If it is fair to advocate a postal increase on the basis of a higher cost of living and depreciation of the dollar, I ask the other ministers of the government, the Minister of Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) for instance, to invoke the same reason when a study is made of the legislation concerning family and welfare allowances, etc.

Mr. Speaker, if it is logical to consider such factors, it should have enabled ministers and members to provide for improvements in other fields that are as justified as the one we are asking for today.

Bill C-240 is a kind of little omnibus bill, which puts me in a somewhat conflicting position. As a matter of fact, it contains changes, two of which are necessary.

First, it provides for an increase in the commission to agents selling postage stamps. Indeed, I can understand that postmasters selling stamps to the public deserve a pay increase; after all, the pay they get from the Postmaster General is not always proportionate to the work they have to do. I can also understand that it could be very difficult for the minister responsible for the postal service and officials to establish standards that would be absolutely fair for all postmaster across this country. That is why whenever I happen to talk with postmasters who ask me to appeal to authoritiees in order to get them a pay increase, I always make it a point to find out the total number of their customers, their turnover, etc. so as to be sure that their request is justified.

Second, this bill provides for collective mailings free of postage in the case of members of Parliament. I believe I am justified in saying that I should support that provision had it been put forward separately.

A few weeks ago during the debate on Bill C-242, I pointed out to the government the needs of Parliament members for services and this service was precisely one of those, we wanted so as to have an additional tool to better serve the people.

I will not repeat what I have already asked and this is why, in my opinion, this is a kind of a small omnibus bill which contains both good and bad things. Therefore, we must determine whether the pros outweigh the cons.

This is why I have analyzed as objectively as possible all the provisions of the bill and taken it upon me to give my opinion during this debate.

I would like to conclude by asking the minister in charge of the Post Office when he closes this debate to enlighten the House about the printing of stamps. Are they still totally or partly printed by the British American Bank Note Company Limited? Are they still totally or partly printed by the Canadian Bank Note Company Limited with all its equipment? Are they partly printed by the British American Bank Note Limited and partly by the Canadian Bank Note Company Limited? I would like the minister to tell the House why the printing of stamps is done by those two companies and what is the approximate annual amount paid to them, because, in the absence of information to the contrary, I always thought that the government did not buy the stamps sold to the public, but had them printed. In fact, I believed that the Queen's printer did the job, but according to the information obtained, it is entrusted to the two companies I have just mentioned.

Therefore, I would like to be told, as accurately as possible, what it costs to produce those stamps and how much the government gets out of it, which would allow hon. members to study the situation seriously and to make suggestions to the minister on how to finance that department and improve the service to the public.

I shall conclude with those remarks, since I consider them essential to the guidance of hon. members. I am convinced that the minister will in due course do his best to provide us with the information I am now requesting.

[English]

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, there has been a good deal of discussion on this bill and several of my colleagues have covered the points which seem to me to be of great importance. There is only one major point with which I would like to deal tonight. I know it has been touched on by some hon. members already, but I would like to emphasize it.

When speaking yesterday the minister indicated that the rates for second-class mail would not be changed at present because an in-depth study was being carried out. But then he went on to deal with third-class mail, indicating that the loss on that category of mail this year was expected to be about $38 million. Then he said that this category covers printed materials of various sorts, such as advertising circulars and catalogues, Christmas cards and small packages of merchandise which do not weigh over one pound.

The point is that the minister did not include what to me is a very important kind of mail which is classed as third-class mail, that is, mail put out by voluntary, charitable health and welfare organizations and other such groups which give out information to their members on a non-profit, voluntary basis. I think that the minister should not lump third-class mail, profit-oriented, junk mail with the voluntary mailings of health and welfare and other charitable organizations which come under this category.

The hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) made reference to the fact that the last time raises were made in postal rates back in November, 1968, the process killed hundreds of little magazines giving out educational, church and charitable information because publishers of these papers could not cope with the increased cost in the mail rates. This is a shameful thing indeed, as my colleague remarks. He has added a few other such groups, being of a helpful turn of mind, such as ethnic, religious and other groups who have suffered from this increase in postal rates, so that by extension the whole Canadian population has suffered from them.

Now, apparently the minister is proposing that third-class postal rates for this type of publication be increased again. He is evidently preparing for the slaughter of more organizations which would come under this category. I think that this should not be done. Not to leave these organizations faceless, I want to remind the minister of the group that came to see him on May 13 with a memorandum. These groups are well known to us all across Canada. There were three of them: the Canadian Rehabilitation Council for the Disabled whose best known activity is the Easter seal campaign, the Canadian Tuberculosis and Respiratory Diseases Association which every year conducts the Christmas seal campaign across this country, and the War Amputees of Canada with their key-tag service.

All these groups are non-profit and all of them are in a precarious financial situation. All of them are doing a necessary and valuable service to people, and all of them will be menaced by something which should apply only to junk mail under this new rate increase. If the minister is proposing to defer increases in second-class mail rates until he has made an in-depth study, why in the world is he not proposing to do an in-depth study of third-class mail which would divide junk mail from mail sent out by voluntary health, welfare and other non-profit groups?

Why does the minister not do what these organizations asked him to do, namely, establish a special category of mail for organizations such as those which run the Christmas seal and Easter seal campaigns and the key tagging service? Why should they be lumped in with junk mail? The minister promised these organizations that he would consider their request and that he would make an announcement before the new mailing rates come into effect on July 1. So far I have not noted any announcement by him on this subject and I am worried lest it be overlooked.

The representatives of these organizations pointed out that the last 66⅔ per cent increase in mailing rates made it very difficult for them to carry on operations, and that if they were again taxed by an increased postal rate the funds they would have available for welfare and public health purposes would be cut drastically, or they would have to reduce the number of mailings which would also have the effect of reducing the funds they could collect for their operations. To make these organizations pay increased mailing rates would be exceedingly short-sighted. It is estimated that in 1970 the postal revenue generated by these three groups, the Canadian Rehabilitation Council for the Disabled, the Canadian Tuberculosis and Respiratory Diseases Association and War Amputees of Canada, amounted to $1,004,000. They point out that if another increase is imposed on them it will very likely reach the point of no return and instead of generating more revenue the Post Office will lose revenue from them. That is just like killing the goose that lays the golden eggs.

If these organizations continue to be treated like the commercial purveyors of junk mail and as a result are unable to continue their work, government departments will have to undertake that work and another burden will be thrown on the taxpayer. These organizations object, I think rightly so, to being classed with the profit-oriented, commercial concerns which operate on the basis of junk mail. Junk mail concerns can increase the price of their goods and services but organizations such as those I have mentioned provide their services on a voluntary basis.

These organizations made two requests to the minister. The first was that he consider—in effect, that means come through with—the establishment of a special category for non-profit, voluntary organizations providing health and welfare services and, second, that he set up standards or criteria under which organizations like these could qualify for a special mailing rate. I think the minister should reply to these requests tonight. He should separate the profit-making, junk mail artists from organizations that are doing a real service to the Canadian public.

This is the point on which I wished to speak tonight. We should not indulge in any more slaughtering of voluntary, non-profit groups such as occurred in respect of numerous publications when the previous postal increase came into effect.

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to delay the passage of this bill but I have a few words to say about it.

Mr. Speaker, we are faced with an increase in postal rates which had been announced quite a while ago. We are aware of the fact that the Post Office is getting deeper and deeper into deficit and that it will keep sliding down unless something is done to correct the situation. According to the figures I have here, the Post Office deficit presently amounts to $113 million and it will get even worse in the years to come unless we regain control of the situation.

I wish to express my admiration for the minister who did everything he could and cannot be held responsible for these increases and for the problems facing the Post Office. The minister did a good job, with the means available to him, to correct quite a number of anomalous situations and we appreciate his work. For all he has done, we express our admiration, but much remains to be done.

Mr. Speaker, if postal services decrease and costs increase, there surely is something wrong somewhere. The people are getting less and less service. I shall not dwell on the subject at length for my colleagues have already spoken about it.

With regard to those services, I mailed letters in my riding that were delivered three weeks later. Like the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) I too asked for a report on the matter, and received good ones. I can only praise the postal employees who, in general, perform their duties well, but the mail took two or three weeks to cover a distance of roughly 300 miles. That is not normal. There is certainly something wrong. I blame the delay not on the carelessness of the minister but rather on certain civil servants who do not do their jobs properly, who do not take their responsibilities seriously where mail delivery is concerned.

But there are other responsibilities, of much greater significance, which are far from being properly assumed by civil servants, and this tends to increase operating costs and hence the cost of living generally. As for senior officials, I have something to say about them and I think I have already told the minister. Now I am not criticizing the minister, but I suggest he should consider straightening out the situation. Inquiries should be made because senior officials are terribly expensive to the Post Office.

Some officials are not discharging their responsibilities by a long shot. This I am saying quite frankly: they are wasting public money. I will give hon. members evidence of it, but without going into details for it would be too lengthy and would cause a public scandal.

In my riding, for instance, they first closed down the post office four years ago before building a new one. Floor space was rented elsewhere to house the post office. Since then, plans were made, tenders were called and withdrawn, in short, they changed their minds about seven or eight times. The fact remains that the post office building is closed. It could have been kept open to the public. Therefore, for the last three years, we have had to pay rent to house the post office elsewhere. It is terribly costly to the department and even if there were three or four sets of plans made and as many calls for tenders, none was accepted, all have been rejected to consider something else again.

That issue has been pending for three years now and has probably cost thousands of dollars to the department. It is not really the Post Office Department that is responsible, but the Department of Public Works, because the latter is responsible for the construction of buildings. Delays of this sort, for one reason or another, are inexcusable. Then, when information is asked for, one is told that bids will be called next week. This has been repeated for two years. One is told: They will be called next month; you can announce it in the newspapers, it is certain, the decisions have been made. But three years later, the decisions are still pending.

Therefore, I blame the civil servants who do this sort of thing, or the Department of Public Works, as this increases the operating cost of the postal service. We are debating today a proposal for an increase in the postal rates because of all sorts of things of this nature. I could say a lot more on the subject.

I know many other things, but I shall not say more tonight. I would not want a public scandal.

All kinds of factors contribute to increase postal rates and hence the cost of living. And this is done everywhere. If it is done on a national scale in Canada, you can imagine how much it costs.

So, I ask the minister to work in co-operation with the Department of Public Works responsible for the construction of post offices. So the minister can certainly act, and ask for investigations. There are certainly some way to save, so that the people will pay reasonable rates. I repeat that senior officials are not serious, and do not fulfill their duty as they should, that is honestly and fairly. I do not condemn in any way the minister for this increase of postal rates.

As a conclusion to my remarks, I shall not go into details, because many other speakers have done so. I only meant to ask the minister to conduct serious investigations so that these abuses may end some day, that we may have more justice, and that the department might offer a reasonable postal rate. It is desirable that services be paid for as long as there are no abuses. It is possible to find some solutions to this problem so that the minister might save as much public money as possible. The public can then expect better services, because if it is possible to reduce expenses, better services can be provided even though the Post Office Department should not be considered a national bank or the Bank of Canada.

Before closing I would like to say how much I admire the minister because he does his work well. I obtained answers to all my requests, and was given all kinds of assurances. He told me the truth and I admire him for it. He is fair and we can trust his word. He is not to blame for mistakes or nonsense which originate in other quarters. I ask him once again, with all due respect to him and the government, to do us justice, because it is not easy to understand some of the things that are happening.

[English]

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I gather that the House wishes to conclude the debate shortly with the remarks of the soon-to-be Postmaster General, so I shall be very brief. I should like to make a suggestion to the hon. gentleman. He need not reply tonight but perhaps he and his officials would consider it and an answer could be given when the matter comes before the committee.

The one specific complaint that I have about this legislation is that it would add to the financial burden of charitable organizations which raise much of their money by solicitation through the mail. While the amount involved may be small, some of the views that have been expressed to me, and no doubt to other members, indicate that for these organizations it is a pretty serious problem. I suppose an increase of even 10 per cent in the cost of raising money could put a tremendous strain on them. While the third-class mail rate normally applies in such cases, perhaps the time has come to adopt a more flexible position toward these charitable organizations because of the important work they do.

Perhaps the minister or his officials could think of some other designation for charitable organizations which raise money through solicitation by mail. I offer this as a suggestion to the minister, and perhaps after consulting his officials he will be able to give a considered reply when the matter comes before the committee.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose everything and anything the minister may suggest or propose in the form of a bill to increase first-class mail rates. It has already been said that first-class mail breaks even or makes money. Junk mail has also been mentioned. I suggest to the minister that if he is really concerned about reducing the deficits in the Post Office Department there are a couple of areas he should consider. I do not know if they have been mentioned already because I have not heard all the speeches in this debate.

The minister might consider the $1.5 million used to subsidize Time and Reader's Digest, those great "Canadian" publications with all their Canadian content. He might consider raising their mailing rates to reduce the deficit of the Post Office Department. As a good Canadian, as one who is concerned about the welfare and good order of the postal service in Canada and who is primarily concerned about reducing the deficits of the Post Office Department or reducing the cost to the public, the minister should pick up this $1.5 million quickly because he can do that without antagonizing the people of Canada or the members of the House.

There is a second item that the minister might consider. Let him look at the $3 million or $3.5 million cost to the postal department of Canada occasioned by the imbalance in mailing services as between Canada and the United States. This mail is carried under an international agreement many years old. The volume of United States mail crossing into Canada, in terms of number of pieces of mail, is much greater than Canadian mail handled by the United States postal department. This has resulted in an imbalance or a net cost to the Canadian Post Office Department of $3.5 million a year. If the minister wants to find another $3.5 million with which to reduce the deficit, he need only look at all the crap that is sent here from across the border.

An hon. Member: That's unparliamentary.

Mr. Benjamin: If he cannot negotiate better terms with the post office department of the United States to correct that imbalance, it is obvious and logical that the treasury of Canada should pick up the tab and not our first-class mail senders. I am wondering if the minister has considered that little piece of cake. We brought it to the attention of his predecessor but he pooh-poohed the idea.

If the minister is wondering why he has not been able to get the floor before ten o'clock, I will tell him. He has not listened to our suggestions. We might take another couple of nights and the minister still would not get the floor before ten o'clock. Unless he indicates to the members of the House and the people of Canada that he has considered the matter, he may not get the floor before ten o'clock in the next two or three weeks. That is not a threat, it is a promise. Has he looked into that situation yet? If so, what will he do about it? Here is a matter involving Time and Reader's Digest where $1.5 million could be saved. On the imbalance in postal deliveries between Canada and the United States, another $3.5 million could be saved. That is five million bucks, Mr. Speaker. It is five times C. D. Howe's expression. What is the minister prepared to do about these matters?

If the minister wants to get off the backs of the people, if he wants to cut net costs in the Post Office Department and for those who perform some kind of social service or function for their fellow citizens—here I am referring to the weekly newspaper and to charitable, social or paternal organizations such as the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) mentioned—he should not allow Reader's Digest to send their junk through the mail asking me to buy a book or a record every month. That is costing us money. If he stops it, he will not hear any argument from members of this House.

He should make that magazine pay more for bothering the Canadian people with stuff they do not ask for and do not want. The magazine sends out second, third and fourth reminders. They even send you a card with a number on it and tell you you have won a prize. We want the minister to say, "We will put up your mailing rate and make you pay whatever it costs the Post Office Department to handle all the junk that you send out." If the minister wants us to stop talking and allow him to get the floor and close the debate before ten o'clock, we will not do it, Mr. Speaker.

Mailing rates are to increase another cent for first-class mail on July 1 and another cent on January 1 next, bringing the rate up to eight cents. The rates for these magazines will not go up, yet each day they take up the time of the post office and the time of the community. The effort put out by the Post Office Department on these magazines is far out of proportion to what they are entitled to when one considers what they do.

I wish to cite another example. I recall that a publication was put out by the metropolitan Toronto policemen's association. It was a mimeographed, monthly newsletter, Mr. Speaker, and the association used to spend between $300 and $500 a year on postage. Their rate has now gone up by 400 per cent, so they do not send out the publication any more. Here was a perfectly legitimate, non-profit communication sent to a group of Canadian citizens who belonged to the association as a result of their occupation, and the minister "upped" their mailing bill. He did not "up" the mailing bill for Time and Reader's Digest. Those magazines must be candidates for social welfare because the Post Office Department still lets them get away with murder.

Unless the minister can come up with similar exemptions for publications such as I have mentioned, and until the treasury can pick up the deficit resulting from the imbalance in mail as between the United States and Canada, he need not ask us to hold still while he seeks to increase first-class postal rates. If you divide two into 42 you get 21. If old age pensioners send 21 additional letters, that will take up the 42 cents the government gave them when it increased the basic old age pension. How can the minister expect us to listen and wait with bated breath while he increases the first-class mailing rate? Until we have an assurance that the minister will say something about the items which have been mentioned, and until we have an assurance that he will deal with them seriously, we will hold up this bill.

An hon. Member: Until when?

Mr. Benjamin: Perhaps until July or August. This just does not wash, Mr. Speaker. You cannot justify an increase in first-class mailing rate so that we can pick up the tab for freeloaders who deal with the Post Office Department. You cannot justify an increase in the first-class mailing rate for people who have lost their rural mail delivery and their rural post offices and who now get mail once a week instead of three times a week. You cannot justify an increase in the first-class mailing rate until you have corrected some of the deficits we have mentioned.

What we have tried to say, and what I have said in the last few minutes, has been said several times by other hon. members during the last three years. No minister in charge of the Post Office has dealt with these issues. Until the minister deals with them we will not permit him to get away with increasing the first-class mailing rate. It is as simple as that. Why should the first-class mailing rate be so high when Time and Reader's Digest are sending out brochures asking people to buy more books, more records, and are offering prizes?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

HOUSING—DECISION RESPECTING ROCHDALE COLLEGE, TORONTO

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, the record will show that I have been attempting for many months to obtain a full and satisfactory answer from the minister responsible for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation on the question of an outstanding CMHC mortgage on Rochdale College in Toronto. In fairness to the minister involved I have taken into account the fact that during that period there were extenuating circumstances in the Rochdale account which have tended to complicate the matter. There is the fact that Rochdale masquerades as an educational institution and these institutions normally receive preferential or at least less rigid treatment from lending institutions.

However, the complications in the Rochdale account have been due largely to the attitude of the minister rather than to any points of law or any regulations with regard to amortization of CMHC loans. I submit to the minister that if the Rochdale loan had been made to me instead of to the college, the loan would have been foreclosed many months ago, the Canadian people would have their money back and they would have a building to cover the defaulted principal and interest payments.

I have watched the proceedings with respect to the Rochdale College loan over a period of many months and am deeply concerned over the way in which a loan of such magnitude has been permitted to fall 14 months in arrears. I am concerned that the minister has of his own will and accord chosen to view Rochdale College in a way that is inconsistent with the regulations under which CMHC is required to operate and totally inconsistent with sound business and management practices. If all Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation mortgages were serviced in a like manner it would not take long for an overactive imagination to conjure up a vision of complete and utter chaos in Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation operations.

By way of background I would like to read into the record—the specific figures of the Rochdale College mortgage. The approved loan was in the amount of $4,884,-165.90, a princely sum of money to risk on an experimental educational project to be run by its own students. The interest rate on the loan was very attractive at 5⅞ per cent per annum. As of April 30 this year the loan was in default by 14 months for a total of $359,853.37. During all my years in business I have neither seen nor heard of anything quite like it. I therefore feel justified in asking for a full explanation of this apparent disregard for the sanctity of the public purse.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Scott: One of my reasons for indulging in the past the minister's reluctance to answer my questions is that Rochdale is called a college and as such has been wearing a mantle of respectability that is totally undeserved. I have been, and am now, prepared to bend a little to accommodate educational institutions, but it has been evident for some time that Rochdale has been sailing under false colours. Almost from the day it opened, Rochdale College has been the symbol of everything that is wrong in our society. In the files of the Toronto police department there is evidence that Rochdale rivals Yorkville village as a haven for drug users and pushers, hippies and yippies, deviates and social misfits of every type and description.

There are recorded cases of underage, runaway children being lured into Rochdale and kept there for the depraved satisfaction of so-called students some of whom are as much as 35 years of age. By way of further clarification, to qualify as a student at this so-called college simply means that you can afford to pay the $80 per month single, or $50 double occupancy rate. There are no course requirements, no attendance requirements, no professors and no system of examination or grading.

I would like to make just a couple of brief, additional observations before I conclude. The first concerns an item in the Toronto Globe and Mail of May 21, 1971, wherein it was stated that Rochdale College accepts welfare cases from the city welfare department, some of them families with small children. I ask my hon. colleagues in this House, does this sound like a college? In days gone by it would have been called a flop-house and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, or any other government agency would have laughed at the thought of supporting such an institution with public funds. A few days ago the Toronto police department raided Rochdale College—not for the first time—and confiscated a quantity of marijuana, hashish and chemical drugs while arresting three students. As the police left the college they were pelted with eggs and refuse and subjected to verbal abuse.

In conclusion, I would like to assure the minister responsible for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation that I am not asking him to assume the role of protector of public or private morality. However, I do expect the minister to exercise proper judgment in deciding who qualifies for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation mortgages. Rochdale College is a rabbit warren where anything goes, and the more anti-social and uncivilized the better. I call upon the minister responsible for the Rochdale mortgage to recover the money involved and to put it back into the public coffers where some better use for it can be found.

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in August, 1966, a loan of $4,844,165 was made to Co-operative College Residences Incorporated to assist in the construction of a students' residence, now known as Rochdale College, on Bloor Street in Toronto. The administration of Rochdale College has experienced great difficulty in generating sufficient revenues to pay all the operating costs of the building, including the National Housing Act mortgage. Up to the present time arrears in mortgage payments have accumulated to the extent of $340,000.

If the problem of Rochdale College were simply a mortgage problem, the solution itself would be a straightforward matter, involving action by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to recover the public investment in Rochdale and to assume responsibility for the management of the building. The problem of Rochdale College involves considerations other than a mortgage in arrears.

While many of the negative aspects of its administration have received the greatest attention, some of the more positive aspects of their program have not been established or understood, including the role that Rochdale plays in the lives of many young people in metropolitan Toronto. There are, therefore, both social and financial implications to consider in dealing with Rochdale College.

Nearly two months ago an interdepartmental committee was formed at the request of the minister responsible for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to consider and assess alternative courses of action by which the public investment in Rochdale may be protected. The committee is under the chairmanship of the president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and includes representatives of the Privy Council office, the Department of National Health and Welfare, Secretary of State, Solicitor General and the Department of Finance.

In carrying out its work, the committee is considering all aspects of the Rochdale situation and in addition to the interested departments of the federal government the committee has met the council of Rochdale, representatives of the metropolitan Toronto corporation, the city of Toronto and departments and agencies of the Ontario provincial government. It is expected that the committee will report its findings through the responsible minister shortly.

YOUTH—CAPITAL ASSISTANCE FOR PROVISION OF YOUTH HOSTEL FACILITIES

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the Minister without Portfolio in charge of citizenship programs (Mr. Stanbury) the following question, as reported as page 6207 of Hansard:

In view of the large numbers of young people now travelling in Canada, is the government considering a program to provide capital assistance for youth hostel facilities?

I went on to explain that I asked this question owing to the fact that the current program is restricted to operational assistance. I was very much surprised when the minister answered my question in three words, namely, "No, Mr. Speaker". I should like briefly to review some of the factors involved in this brief exchange.

Over the last two or three years there has been a very sharp increase in the number of young people travelling across Canada and using a variety of means of unconventional travel, one might say. In particular, many young people are hitch-hiking their way across the country during the summer months, in this way seeing their country. One of the reasons they have taken to the roads is that they have a great deal of difficulty obtaining any sort of suitable employment, indeed any sort of employment at all in many cases.

Last year the government responded with its program of assistance for facilities for overnight accommodation for many of these travelling young people. This was of tremendous assistance for the most part. I understand use was made of government facilities such as armouries. This year a somewhat different tactic was adopted in respect of this program. A program was established to provide assistance to various communities and groups but the government decided to rely more heavily on local community initiative in the establishment of various facilities providing accommodation for young, travelling people.

One feature of the grants provided by the federal government under this youth hostel program is, as I indicated earlier—I refer now to a government statement issued by the department which was kindly supplied to me—that grants can cover salaries and operating expenses but cannot cover capital expenditures. That is a flat prohibition in respect of assistance for capital expenditures.

The reason I asked this question was not because I had any expectation the government had a program ready to announce yesterday, today or tomorrow, but because it seemed to me perfectly reasonable to expect that the department would now have looked at this problem from a long-range point of view. It is obvious that this new phenomenon is going to continue. It will be with us for some time and the department should be looking at it from a longer-range point of view.

I also want to make it clear that I am not suggesting we have to rely entirely or even primarily on government assistance or initiative for the establishment of permanent facilities for travelling young people. It seems to me the government does have some responsibility and could provide a very useful service if it took the initiative now in studying this matter and carrying on discussions with interested groups and people in order to arrive at a method whereby the federal government could provide assistance and encouragement to groups and communities who wish to establish permanent facilities and accommodation for young people who are travelling, particularly during the summer months.

I hope the minister will indicate tonight that his department intends to look at this matter with a view to developing some means to encourage discussion among communities across Canada and the development of means to provide stimulus for and encouragement of community efforts in the provision of satisfactory facilities.

I also asked a supplementary question concerning alternative means of assistance this year toward the provision of facilities in communities where difficulties have been encountered in obtaining approval from municipal authorities. The minister indicated there are a number of ways in which assistance can be provided to communities in this regard. I hope the department and the minister will take advantage of every possible opportunity to encourage communities to provide these facilities, and that they will in fact develop other possible means of communication with communities across Canada in order to arrive at satisfactory arrangements. I include MPs in this category.

I draw to the minister's attention that my colleague, the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin), and myself issued a statement last week in which we indicated our unhappiness with certain developments in the city of Regina regarding a planned program there. Unfortunately, with regard to my own city the council saw fit to react on a short-term basis, with a short-run view of the situation in response to a request regarding the establishment of a local hostel. It seems to me that a little leadership by the council and interested parties could have been given to overcome the fears of the local citizens. In this way a satisfactory program might have been established which would in fact have benefited these young people. This could have been a credit to the city of Regina and Canada as a whole.

Thus, I hope the minister will look at these programs in terms of continuing the assistance undertaken over the past couple of years. I hope he will take a long-range view of this matter.

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for raising this matter which is of considerable concern to me and to the citizenship branch. As the hon. member mentioned, last year the federal government for the first time undertook to assist communities to cope with the presence of transient youth and also to help young people travelling across our country find accommodation wherever they might be. This year we have doubled the budget for that kind of assistance, but we do not yet feel we have enough funds or enough information to launch a program of capital assistance. I hope, as I think the hon. member does, that some day Canada will have a national system of hostels, although not necessarily sponsored by the government. I hope, rather, that it would be in the hands of voluntary organizations as I believe is usually the case in European countries.

I feel, however, that those Canadians who seem to jealously guard the boundaries of their cities against the alien hordes of other young Canadians for elsewhere in Canada seem sometimes to have a sort of double standard. Very often these are the same people who are proudly sending off their own spunky children to hike about Europe.

Mr. Burton: That is right.

Mr. Stanbury: It has been our experience that the successful operation of a youth hostel or other service to travelling young people is in large measure dependent upon the attitude of the local community. For this reason our summer hostel program this year is one of response to local initiatives and one which attempts to involve as broad as possible a range of community groups. Naturally, we are interested in the attitude of the municipal councils although this is not the only criterion on which community initiatives can be judged. Through our regional offices we try to maintain close liaison with voluntary groups and municipal and provincial authorities in assessing local needs and developing our response to them.

We want to assist in every way possible in responding to the requests of local authorities and voluntary organizations. We are prepared to do that in Regina as elsewhere. I hope the people of Regina and their elected representatives will be able to make arrangements to accommodate the young Canadians who will be in Regina this summer, as other communities are doing in other parts of Canada.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HARDING—INCORRECT GLOBE AND MAIL REPORT RESPECTING VOTE ON PROPOSAL TO DEFER MEMBERS' PAY RAISE

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege. A news report in today's Globe and Mail indicates that I voted against the proposal to put off a pay raise for Members of Parliament until the next election when in fact I voted in favour of it. The record is correctly shown in Hansard on page 6258 and lists me as having voted for the proposal to defer.

WELFARE

ESCALATION OF COST TO MUNICIPALITIES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. This urgent matter arises because the federal and provincial welfare ministers meet next week in the midst of a welfare crisis which has grown so great that some municipalities in Canada are driven to strike single unemployed men from their welfare rolls. The House has been unable to get assurances from government spokesmen that this problem will be discussed at this closed conference. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard):

In view of the agonizing choice which municipalities in all regions of Canada must make between assuming the impossible financial burden of the unprecedented escalation of welfare costs due to the inequitable welfare cost-sharing arrangements and, on the other hand, refusing welfare payments to increasing thousands of deserving unemployed victims of the government's unemployment and inflation policies, this House urges the government to place this welfare crisis on the agenda of the federal-provincial welfare meeting next week, recommends that in addition to the federal Minister of National Health and Welfare and the provincial welfare ministers there be present those other federal government ministers who are charged with responsibilities related to welfare and employment, representatives of the Federation of Mayors and Municipalities, and representatives of the National Welfare Council, and declares that the primary objective of the conference must be to construct a crash remedial program which the three levels of government can put into immediate force and effect.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member under the terms of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the motion will not be put.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, could I ask which "no, no" said no?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

OIL

PROPOSED WEST COAST TANKER ROUTE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion under Standing Order 43 which I believe could be passed without debate. The view expressed in my motion has been stated by spokesmen for all parties in the House and I believe it would be useful for it to be formally recorded. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert):

That the House express its opposition to the proposed oil tanker route from Valdez, Alaska to Cherry Point in the state of Washington, and that this decision of the House of Commons be transmitted to the United States government through official channels.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Kootenay West. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

Questions

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CONTENTS OF EFFLUENT FROM PULP AND/OR PAPER MILLS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Question No. 388—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

1. Since May 8, 1970, has the government any data concerning the contents of effluent from any pulp and/or paper mills in British Columbia and, if so, with respect to each such mill, by name, what is the daily quantity of each chemical, by name, that is contained within the effluent from each such mill?

2. What evaluation exists of the toxicity to (a) fish (b) other animal life (c) plants (d) humans of each such chemical referred to in Part 1?

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): 1. The Government has compiled a mass of data concerning the effluent from the pulp and/or paper mills of British Columbia. Data relating to chemical constituents of the effluents have been regularly forthcoming from four mills and are tabulated below by name:

Average Daily Chemical Discharge in Pounds

Company	Sulphides	Mercaptans	Resin Acid Soaps
Prince George Pulp and Paper Co.	30	270	330
Intercontinental Pulp Co.	29	320	950
Northwood Pulp Co.	260	750	1130
Kamloops Pulp and Paper Co.	Trace	Trace	96

2. (a) The sulphides, mercaptans and resin acid soaps listed above are among the constituents of pulp mill effluents known to be toxic to fish, but bioassays carried out on effluents from the mills indicate that they are not present in high enough concentrations to produce a toxic effect. (b) Studies conducted by B.C. Research and the International Pacific Salmon Fisheries Commission on invertebrates in the Fraser River have shown that the numbers of species and relative abundance of each of the species are not different above or below pulp mill effluent discharges. Such changes are one of the most subtle indicators available of environmental deterioration, when they can be detected. (c) Studies conducted by Kamloops Pulp and Paper Company and the Salmon Fisheries Commission have noted no difference in the plankton population of Kamloops Lake as a result of pulp and paper mill operations. (d) The Government is not aware of any report of toxicity to humans of pulp mill waste in water.

NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE—MINISTERIAL GRANTS TO ORGANIZATIONS IN CALGARY

Question No. 1,272—Mr. Schumacher:

1. During the fiscal year 1970-1971, was a special ministerial grant made by the Department of National Health and Welfare to any organization or organizations in the City of Calgary and, if so (a) what was the purpose of each grant (b) have the purposes of each such grant been accomplished and, if so, in what manner?

2. What is the purpose of each organization?

3. (a) Have any provisions been made for the auditing of the books of such organizations (b) have audits been made and, if so, by whom?

4. What are the names and positions of the executive members of each organization?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. The Department of National Health and Welfare awarded a demonstration project grant to the Calgary Welfare Rights Society in the City of Calgary. (a) The purpose of the grant is to demonstrate whether welfare recipients can achieve a greater degree of independence and improve their ability to manage their own lives and solve their own problems if they are enabled to have a meaningful role in the identification of their own problems and needs and a say in how assistance and services are provided to help them cope with their problems and needs. (b) The demonstration is in progress, consequently it is not possible to determine whether the objectives of the demonstration have been accomplished.

2. The purpose of the organization is to promote participation of poor people in programs developed to meet their needs; to act in an advocacy role for welfare recipients; to promote self help activities among welfare receipients.

3. (a) Yes. (b) Interim audits have been undertaken by the Audit Services bureau, Department of Supply and Services, in conformity with the terms and conditions of the National Welfare Grants Rules.

4. Executive members of the organization are: President, Daphne Davison; Vice Chairman, Shirley Fyke; Recording Secretary, Linda Mullins; Correspondence Secretary, Charlotte Rasmussen; Treasurer, George Sandilak; Directors, Ted Flakman, Alec Tiermeu, Bob Cox, Judy Todd, Bill Best and Alan Knowles.

NEWFOUNDLAND—FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TOWARDS COST OF PROPOSED GENERAL HOSPITAL

Question No. 1,340—Mr. Carter:

Has the Government of Canada received an application from the Government of Newfoundland for a capital contribution toward the cost of the proposed new General Hospital and, if so (a) what was the date of the application (b) for what amount (c) what is the present status of the application?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No application was received as of this date from the Government of Newfoundland requesting federal financial support under the Health Resources Fund program towards the cost of the proposed new General Hospital in St. John's.

CANADA MANPOWER MOBILITY PROGRAM—APPLICATION OF MR. T. R. WALLACH

Question No. 1,408—Mr. Aiken:

1. Has an application by T. R. Wallach of Ancaster to the Canada Manpower Centre at Hamilton for a moving and resettlement grant in June, 1970, been refused and, if so (a) what jobs, if any, were offered to Mr. Wallach between the time of registration in February, 1970 and the time of application in June, 1970 (b) did the Canada Manpower Office at Hamilton secure a job for Mr. Wallach in Bracebridge, Ontario and is he still so employed (c) for what reason?

2. In June, 1970, what employment in the sales field was available in Hamilton or area, for which Mr. Wallach was qualified and suited?

3. If an applicant for assistance under the Manpower Mobility Program has a firm employment offer in a new Manpower area, how long is he required to continue to look for employment in his home area before qualifying for assistance?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Yes. (a) None, although had Mr. Wallach been willing to accept employment as a commission salesman in Hamilton, he could have been referred to a number of positions, one being with the same firm with which he is now employed in Bracebridge. (b) (i) No;(ii) Yes. (c) Mr. Wallach was refused a mobility grant because suitable local employment was available.

2. Six employers had listings of vacancies in Mr. Wallach's registered occupation.

3. The first condition of eligibility for a grant under the Manpower Mobility Regulations is that an unemployed, about to become unemployed or underemployed worker must have little or no prospect of obtaining suitable employment in the locality in which he resides. The Canada Manpower Centre concerned is responsible for making appropriate enquiries to determine whether or not the client satisfies this condition at the time he requests a mobility grant. This can usually be done the same day that the request is received.

MOISTURE PICK-UP CONTENT OF BROILER CHICKENS

Question No. 1,453—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Is the moisture pick-up content of broiler chickens processed for the retail market in Canada controlled and, if so (a) what limits of moisture are allowed (b) what department or agency is responsible for the enforcement of these regulations?

2. Have any charges been laid with respect to the breach of these regulations and, if so, what was the disposition of each such charge?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Yes. (a) The percentage increase in weight over the weight of the bird prior to washing for chickens five pounds and under can be eight per cent. For chickens over five pounds the gain in weight can be six per cent; (b) The Department of Agriculture is responsible for the enforcement of the Regulations made pursuant to the Canada Meat Inspection Act.

2. No charges have been laid with respect to a breach of the relevant section of the Regulations.

*MEADOW LAKE, SASK.—INCENTIVE GRANT FOR PULP MILL TO BE CONSTRUCTED

Question No. 1,472—Mr. Burton:

Has the Department of Regional Economic Expansion dispatched a letter of offer with respect to an industrial incentive grant for a pulp mill to be constructed in the special area located at Meadow Lake, Saskatchewan and, if so (a) on what date (b) to whom?

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The answer is yes. The answer to part (a) is May 17, 1971, and to part (b) it is the Hon. D. G. Steuart.

NEWFOUNDLAND—TENDERS FOR COST-SHARING FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL PROJECTS

Question No. 1,012—Mr. Carter:

1. Have public tenders been called for all cost-sharing federal-provincial projects in Newfoundland since 1965 and, if not, what projects were excluded and for what reasons?

2. Are tenders opened publicly?

Return tabled.

PEI—FEDERAL EXPENDITURES UNDER DEVELOPMENT PLAN 1971-72

Question No. 1,099—Mr. MacLean:

What are the estimated expenditures to be made by the federal government under the Development Plan for Prince Edward Island in the 1971-72 fiscal year?

Return tabled.

PUBLIC SERVICE—DESIGNATION OF EMPLOYEES IN MANAGERIAL OR CONFIDENTIAL CAPACITY

Question No. 1,193—Mr. Francis:

As of March 1, 1971, in that portion of the Public Service represented by Treasury Board as an employer, how many employees were designated as persons to be employed in a managerial or confidential capacity (a) in each of the 73 occupational groups (b) by sub-head for each occupational group as described in section 2 (u) of the Public Service Staff Relations Act?

Return tabled.

Motions for Papers

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call Notice of Motion No. 154?

BLUE WATER BRIDGE AUTHORITY FINANCIAL RECORDS

Motion No. 154—Mr. McCutcheon:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid off before this House (a) a copy of all reports of receipts and disbursements filed annually by the Blue Water Bridge Authority since May, 1964 pursuant to section 19(2)(a) of the Blue Water Bridge Authority Act (b) a copy of all auditors' reports and statements relating to every audit of the accounts of the Blue Water Bridge Authority, including any report or statement of the Auditor General of Canada (c) a copy of all cheques or other papers covering reimbursement out of the revenues of the Authority to each of the several Canadian members of the Authority for travel, living and other necessary expenses.

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the requirements and responsibilities of the Canadian government, certain financial information, mainly with respect to tolls, has been submitted to the government by the Blue Water Bridge Authority under the provisions of the Railway Act. No additional request for financial information has been made to date under the enabling authority contained in the Blue Water Bridge Authority Act, section 19(2)(a). Therefore parts (b) and (c) are not applicable. Under the circumstances I would ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary secretary has really only read an answer to question No. 415. The request for papers, etc., under Notice of Motion No. 154 has not been answered, and I cannot agree to his suggestion.

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate. Shall the remaining Notices of Motions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the parliamentary secretary if he would look into motion No. 234 which is a relatively simple motion to deal with? I have had some discussion with the department and I introduced this motion in substitution for one which I withdrew from the order paper. I would also ask the parliamentary secretary to look into motion No. 232 which was approved by the House on May 19 but which has not yet been tabled.

Mr. Jerome: I have made a note of those numbers, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Francis.]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

MANUFACTURERS' INVESTMENT INTENTIONS FOR 1971—GOVERNMENT PLANS FOR ENCOURAGEMENT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance with respect to the expectations of manufacturers regarding investment in light of the government survey showing that for the year 1971 there would be a decrease of 6 per cent from 1970, the survey having been completed in December. Has the minister had any more recent surveys made of the investment intentions of manufacturers and, if so, what do such surveys show?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, these are ordinarily done through the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I will inquire and provide the information.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, since the Minister of Finance has no such information showing any improvement with regard to the investment intentions of manufacturers, does he propose to announce any plans, or has he any plans, to encourage investment by manufacturers which, of course, has a very important bearing on the employment outlook for the remainder of 1971?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, the intentions of the Department of Finance on fiscal matters will be made known in my budget when it is presented.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, we will look forward to something really constructive in that area.

REGIONAL DISPARITY—DECISION ON ATLANTIC PROVINCES DEVELOPMENT COUNCIL RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question I would like to ask the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion whether he is now prepared to give a favourable answer to the requests put forward by the Chairman of the Atlantic Development Advisory Council, Professor Smith, with regard to an appropriate federal policy to fight regional disparity? I ask him that question particularly at this time in view of the dissatisfaction expressed recently by the people of Nova Scotia in this regard.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the recommendations of the Atlantic Advisory Development Council presided over by Mr. Smith are generally accepted by the department and we intend to carry out its general recommendations.

[English]

SUPERVISION BY PRIME MINISTER OF PREPARATION OF BUDGET

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. As the DBS report referred to by the Leader of the Opposition also shows that business failures are up very sharply over a year ago, and instalment financing, farm cash receipts and bank loans are down equally sharply over a year ago, giving further evidence of the serious state of the economy—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: —is the Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member kindly ask the question?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I am just telling the Prime Minister what has been going on in his country while—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member might want to do this on another occasion but he cannot do it during the question period. He should ask a question.

Mr. Hees: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is the Prime Minister giving personal supervision to the preparation of the budget, because of the factors I have mentioned and the serious state of the economy, to make sure it is an expansionary budget that will give some stimulus to the economy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the considerations in preparation for the budget are discussed in a cabinet committee, and I am a member of that committee.

Mr. Hees: As a supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: —will the Prime Minister show more intelligent—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN NOVA SCOTIA—ASSISTANCE IN BRINGING COLLIERY INTO PRODUCTION IN SYDNEY AREA

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Because of the particularly high unemployment level in the province of Nova Scotia, a short time ago I asked the minister if he would look into the possibility of bringing a particular colliery into production in the Sydney area and he said he would do so and report back to the House. Would he now comment on what he has discovered?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I will be in the House again tomorrow and I think I will be able to give an answer then.

Inquiries of the Ministry

UNEMPLOYMENT—PROGRAMS TO ASSIST UNIVERSITY GRADUATES TO FIND JOBS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the Technical Service Council's calculation that job opportunities for new graduates are down by 30 per cent and the number of graduates is up by 17 per cent, can the minister inform the House what measures are being undertaken to encourage industry in this regard and, more specifically, what programs the department presently has under way to provide assistance, whether in terms of incentives or other measures, to help these graduates now on the full-time labour market to find positions?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister's reply, if he decides to reply to the question asked by the hon. member for Egmont, should be brief. I suggest he should not attempt to give a general statement at this time.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): As a further supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members will notice that there are a number of members seeking the floor to ask supplementaries on this subject. I suggest to the House that we should go on to the next subject very soon and return later to hon. members who have indicated they wish to ask supplementaries, but for the moment the Chair has recognized the hon. member for Egmont.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration is either unwilling or unable to answer, perhaps I could put a similar question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of regional estimates which indicate that career hiring of new graduates is down 82 per cent in the Atlantic region, can the minister inform the House if there are any special measures being planned, or ready to be implemented, to alleviate this serious situation?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Are you referring to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I am referring to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and inquiring about what steps his department is taking with regard to the abnormally high incidence of unemployment among graduates in the Atlantic region right now?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, the various programs in effect in the Atlantic provinces—whether it is F.R.E.D., ARDA, the development programs for designated areas or industrial incentives—are all meant to create more economic activity and employment in the area.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Egmont is rising on a point of order. Order, please. I will recognize the hon. member in a moment, but I invite hon. members not to take up too much of the time of the question period with points of order. Very often I find that points of order really are used to ask supplementary questions. It might be preferable if hon. members awaited the opportunity to be recognized a second time. The hon. member has the right to seek the floor on a point of order and I have recognized him.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some problem of communication. Perhaps it would be worth while for Your Honour to check whether the hearing devices are working on the other side of the House as the Minister of Manpower and Immigration was unable to answer and then the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not a point of order; it appears to be a point of disorder—disorder of the system. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT DECLINE PREDICTED BY MINISTER OF FINANCE—DATE OF ACHIEVEMENT OF MORE TOLERABLE LEVEL

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the statement attributed to the minister in yesterday's issue of the Toronto Telegram to the effect that unemployment figures will decline, may I ask if he is prepared to make a statement on this matter in the House and can he tell us by what date unemployment figures will be down to more reasonable and more tolerable levels?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will be presenting a budget to the House of Commons very soon and shall discuss this particular problem at that time. I am sure my hon. friend would join me in indicating a belief that unemployment figures will decline in the country, even though this displeases the opposition.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister in a position to announce the target date he has in mind for a reasonable reduction in the unemployment level?

Mr. Stanfield: 1975.

Mr. Benson: As soon as possible, Mr. Speaker, and hopefully immediately.

[Mr. Speaker.]

THE BUDGET

INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF PRESENTATION

Mr. Colin D. Gibson (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister of Finance indicate on what date the budget will be introduced in the House?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Apparently the minister has a very important statement to make.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as Your Honour seemed to imply by his cancellation of an invitation to a party, it will be on June 18, I believe, at five o'clock.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): I should like to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Finance. Would the minister inform the House whether his newfound responsiveness to policy suggestions as caricaturized on the CBC television program "Operation Chicken" last Sunday night is the real thing or is it simply a modern day fairy tale of Scrooge and the Christmas Carol?

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Minister of Finance if he got his information about unemployment improving from now on from the same source that made him say at the beginning of the year that we had rounded the corner on unemployment?

FINANCE

FINANCING OF CONSTRUCTION OF MOSCOW SUBWAY—DEVELOPMENT OF PUBLIC SECTOR PROJECTS THROUGH BANK OF CANADA

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

While in Russia, was the Prime Minister given an opportunity to visit one of Russia's wonders, the Moscow subway, 70 miles long, and whose construction was made financially possible, interest-free, through the National Bank of Russia?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think that the hon. member's question could easily be put on the order paper.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member might put his question on the order paper.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question which could not very well be put on the order paper.

If the Prime Minister knows of this method of financing, would he not be tempted to do the same with regard to the development of the public sector of the Canadian economy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did not visit the Moscow subway on my last visit because I had already seen it in 1952, several years before the hon. member. However, I visited the Leningrad subway which was financed the same way as we have financed the dredging of the St. Charles River, Expo '67 and several other undertakings, namely, from federal funds.

AIRPORTS

TORONTO INTERNATIONAL—CONTRACT TO EXPAND TERMINAL 2—PLANS FOR SECOND MAJOR FACILITY

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport, whose day it is to be in the House, may I direct my question to the Prime Minister. As a $13.5 million contract to expand Terminal 2 at Toronto International Airport in a major way was announced yesterday, can the Prime Minister assure the House that the government has not abandoned plans for a second major airport in the Toronto area?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this contract which was announced recently has to do with a decision the government took a couple of years ago to expand the present facilities in Toronto. It has nothing to do with our plans for a future airport in the Toronto region.

Mr. Ryan: Does the Prime Minister still expect that the second Toronto area airport will be ready for the year 1975, as originally announced by the Minister of Transport? If not, when may we expect it to be finished and in operation?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As soon as possible.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, on the timing I think I would have to refer the matter to the Minister of Transport who could answer more precisely the hon. member's question. I know that the minister has been involved in discussions with the Toronto authorities and the authorities of the province of Ontario for many, many months now in the hope that we would reach agreement on the site of that airport. However, I would say that if agreement is not reached rather soon the traffic will not go to Toronto in 1975 but will go to Montreal, provided the Ste Scholastique airport can get off the ground.

An hon. Member: No wonder Givens quit.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Will the same cost-sharing arrangements for capital costs involving such items as sewage, pollution, water, etc. be entered into with the province of Ontario as were entered into with respect to the airport at Ste Scholastique, Quebec?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the details of the discussion which is proceeding now between the department and the Ontario authorities.

Inquiries of the Ministry

IMMIGRATION

EFFECT OF LAW ON WORK OPPORTUNITIES FOR CANADIAN PERFORMERS

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. It concerns the employment, or rather the unemployment, of Canadian artists and performers and is currently a matter of urgent consideration because the Pacific National Exhibition grandstand show for our British Columbia centennial year is going to employ mostly American performers. I asked on February 5, 1970, if the Minister of Manpower and Immigration was doing anything about making our immigration laws such that they would offer more protection to Canadian performers. I was told at that time that discussions were going on. Can the minister tell us if any decision has been made between the government of Canada and the government of the United States regarding the lack of reciprocity with respect to the immigration laws of the two nations?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, no decisions have been taken but the matter is continuing to be reviewed. We are, of course, conscious of the important relationships between the United States and Canada in the total field involving the temporary movement of people across the borders. It is in this light that the matter is being discussed.

Mr. Rose: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. This will be a much shorter question. The then minister replied: "If these discussions fail I believe we will have to consider some alternatives." That was over a year and a half ago. Would the minister be kind enough to tell the House what alternatives he is considering?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Mackenzie.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VALIDITY OF RUSSIAN VERBAL ASSURANCE RESPECTING PURCHASE OF CANADIAN WHEAT

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Will the verbal assurance the Prime Minister had from Premier Kosygin that Russia will give preference to Canadian wheat be any more binding than the written agreement which according to some interpretations is not worth the paper it is written on inasmuch as Russia has not lived up to it and has not picked up the 52 million bushels of wheat?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this is an argumentative question as to which is more binding—

An hon. Member: It is the Speaker who rules on that.

Mr. Trudeau: Thank you. I will let him do it.

Mr. Korchinski: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Prime Minister felt that the verbal agreement was more binding than the written agreement which the Russians have not lived up to? Can he give us that assurance at this time?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is repeating the question he asked in the first instance.

POSITION OF SOVIET UNION ON CURTAILMENT OF FISHING OPERATIONS OFF EAST COAST OF CANADA

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. The International Commission for the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries at its meeting in Halifax has confirmed that heavy exploitation is destroying the Atlantic fisheries. In his private talks with the Russian leaders did the Prime Minister obtain any indication that they were aware of the need for conservation measures on our offshore banks and did they inform the Prime Minister what efforts would be made by the Russian state-owned fleet to curtail some of their fishing operations?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): If the member will refer to my statement of last Friday, Mr. Speaker, he will see that I dealt with this question.

CANADIAN PROPOSALS TO ICNAF NATIONS RESPECTING FISHERIES QUOTAS

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Has Canada made any proposals to the ICNAF nations concerning quota systems and will the Prime Minister table such proposals in the House?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Concerning what systems, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Comeau: Quota systems, as announced by his minister.

Mr. Trudeau: I still do not understand what systems, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Comeau: You don't know about fish?

PROPOSALS TO SOVIET UNION RESPECTING OPERATIONS OF RUSSIAN FISHING VESSELS IN CANADIAN COASTAL WATERS

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Will the Prime Minister indicate to the House whether the government plans to make any formal proposals to the Soviet Union, following the informal discussions he had with Premier Kosygin, in order to try to ensure the withdrawal of the Soviet fleet to a certain extent from the waters off our coast or at least the placing of a ceiling on the technology they apply to the east coast fishery?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): As I said last Friday, Mr. Speaker, we agreed that both sides have the same long-run interests, and it will be necessary to have further meetings to try to convince them of our point of view.

[Mr. Korchinski.]

Mr. Lundrigan: Can the Prime Minister tell the House whether the government plans to make any formal follow-up to the informal discussions he had in the Soviet Union with regard to quotas, to which the hon. member for South Western Nova referred, the closing of certain areas and other kinds of conservation measures?

Mr. Trudeau: We signed the protocol in order that we would have this frequent and regular contact with the Soviet authorities. I told the House that I intended to have this subject followed up. Therefore that is what we will do.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Since the minister took part in the Monday election in Trois-Rivières and was responsible for it, can he indicate whether he intends to see to it that the ladies of the Trois-Rivières constituency get the hot pants promised to them by the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Bélanger) if the Liberal candidate was elected?

[Later:]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): While I am up, Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer the hon. member for Shefford.

I do not know whether the member for Mercier made those kind of promise, but they certainly would make more sense than the promises made by the Social Credit members.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

ATTITUDE OF PROVINCES REGARDING REALLOCATION OF POWERS RESPECTING SOCIAL WELFARE, MANPOWER, AND UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a question for the Minister of Justice. As a result of the minister's discussions with the provincial Attorneys General and other provincial officials, can the minister advise whether any of the provincial governments are prepared to adopt a new section 94A of the British North America Act containing a reallocation of powers dealing with such things as social welfare, manpower and unemployment insurance?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I cannot answer that specifically, Mr. Speaker, except to say it was one of the prime subjects of discussion.

Mr. Baldwin: In its dealings on this subject, is the federal government prepared to accept such a reallocation of powers?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The whole issue remains to be determined by the first ministers in Victoria.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF AGENDA

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question.

Following discussions between the Minister of Justice and the provincial Attorneys General, an agreement has been reached on the subjects to be included on the Victoria conference agenda. In the interest of the Canadian public, will the Prime Minister reveal, before the conference, the agenda to be discussed by the premiers and the federal government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Of course, Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday we shall divulge the agenda as soon as the participants have all approved it. I explained to the House yesterday that I had not received written replies from all the premiers. My staff is getting in touch with those who have not yet answered at least to obtain an oral approval. As soon as this is secured, we shall make the agenda public.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Can the Prime Minister tell the House when he intends to make that statement about the Victoria conference agenda?

Mr. Trudeau: As soon as the premiers of the provinces have reached an agreement, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

NATURE OF DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND BRITISH OFFICIALS—PROVINCIAL AGREEMENT ON AMENDING FORMULA

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. When the minister was in Britain discussing the patriation of the constitution, did he assure the British officials at that time that he or his government had an agreement with the provinces with reference to the veto part of the amending formula? Was that part of the discussions he had with the British authorities?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): When I was in London last week I discussed with the Lord Chancellor of the United Kingdom and the Attorney General the details of any possible patriation of the Canadian constitution—if there were—any successful conclusion of the discussions between the first ministers at Victoria. During these discussions, therefore, the ministers and officials of the United Kingdom knew that what we were talking about depended on a successful conclusion of the negotiations in Canada.

Mr. Woolliams: This brings me to the second supplementary that I directed to the Prime Minister yesterday. Maybe the Minister of Justice can give us the answer. In his discussions with the provincial premiers of the Prairie provinces, did the Minister of Justice receive the assurance that they agree to the veto formula at this time and will agree to it at the conference in Victoria?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I do not accept the description that the hon. member chooses to place upon the formula. At Victoria the first ministers will decide whether or not they will accept a formula for amendment of the constitution, patriation and other important elements that will be part of the same discussion.

Mr. Woolliams: One further supplementary. This should clear up the matter. Whatever the Minister of Justice calls it, a veto formula or a formula for amendment, have there been objections from Premier Thatcher or any other prairie premier with regard to that particular amending formula at this stage?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I had the privilege of discussing the formula for the purpose of obtaining a consensus for amendment with all the first ministers of Canada. Mr. Thatcher made his views known to me. I hope he will be able to attend the conference or, if not, be represented in Victoria so that the views of Saskatchewan can be expressed in the discussion.

CRIMINAL CODE

LOOPHOLE RESPECTING OFF-TRACK BETTING—REPRESENTATIONS BY ONTARIO

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): My question is for the Minister of Justice. Has the minister been contacted by the Attorney General of Ontario or any of his officials with regard to doing something about the loophole in the Criminal Code with regard to off-track betting? If so, what does he intend to do about this?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): As a member of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs the hon. member knows that I gave an undertaking to that committee to discuss the question of off-track betting, placing bets through paramutual windows, with the provincial Attorneys General. I fulfilled that undertaking to the standing committee. I discussed the issue with all the Attorneys General in Halifax last July. There was not a consensus among the Attorneys General at that time. I am again writing to all the Attorneys General to ascertain their current views on the subject. I do not intend to bring the matter back to the House until I have those opinions.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—ASSURANCE THAT CHARGES WILL NOT BE LAID AGAINST PERSONS TAKING MIGRATORY BIRDS FOR LIVELIHOOD

Mr. R. J. Orange (Northwest Territories): I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the renewed enforcement of the Migratory Birds Convention Act in the Northwest Territories by game officers and others following a three-year moratorium, can the minister say whether he is prepared to undertake the necessary discussions with his cabinet colleagues to ensure that no charges are laid against those who depend on the taking of migratory birds, particularly at this time of the year, for their livelihood?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): I thank my hon. friend for bringing this question to my attention. I was not aware of this situation but I will be happy to look into the matter and make sure that the northern people do not suffer from that situation.

TRANSPORT

REVIEW BY GOVERNMENT OF FERRY RATE INCREASES IMPOSED BY CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS IN MARITIMES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, this question is directed to the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister prepared to give an undertaking to the House, especially to hon. members from Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, that the government will review the inflationary and unwarranted increases in ferry rates imposed by Canadian National Railways recently?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will take notice of the question on behalf of the minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon members who are seeking to ask supplementaries, but those hon. members who are now seeking the floor on supplementaries must have looked around the House and seen that there are between 25 and 30 members who are still seeking an opportunity to ask questions. Perhaps we should try to limit supplementaries and ask shorter questions and, hopefully, have shorter replies.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): When the Prime Minister is looking into this matter will he ask the Minister of Transport to consult directly with the provincial governments to ascertain their views on this very important question?

Mr. Trudeau: I will also ask the minister to take notice of that question.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): I should like to direct a question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport. Is he now in a position to respond to the request earlier this week that the new rates be set aside until their probable consequences and, indeed, their constitutionality, have been assessed?

Mr. Gerard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker. On the contrary, we expect that as a result of the construction of new vessels and terminals the ferry traffic in that district will increase. The rates have been established after very profound study.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Egmont and the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate are seeking the floor to ask further supplementaries. I again appeal to them to give the Chair an opportunity to enable other hon. members to ask questions.

Mr. Lundrigan: I will co-operate, Mr. Speaker.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I would not exaggerate the extent to which the Canadian government can settle this problem of refugees over the heads of the governments of India and Pakistan, but I would gladly entertain constructive suggestions from the opposition as to what might be done.

Mr. Macquarrie: Would the Prime Minister tell us, before that stage is reached, what his government is doing in this connection?

Mr. James Hugh Faulkner (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker, but to give the full and complete answer which the hon. member requests would be difficult during the oral question period. The minister has promised to issue a statement. Is he prepared to arrange for a public hearing so that members of the band may present their case?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, at the very request of the members of the St. Regis band, we have referred this problem to the Department of Justice and we have asked the officers of both my department and the Department of Justice as well as the Indians' legal adviser to co-operate in trying to solve this problem in a satisfactory way.

The conclusions of the study show that Loon island did not belong to Indian territory and they have been advised accordingly. If they have any more suggestions to make at this time, we shall gladly take them into consideration.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: Had the Department of Justice received representations on behalf of the Indian band before this decision was made and, if not, is the minister prepared to give an assurance that a full opportunity will be given to the band to be represented by counsel in presenting their case?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I myself arranged a meeting with the St. Regis band and this problem was discussed. NATIONAL DISASTERS

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO SAINT JEAN-VIANNEY VICTIMS

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the Saint Jean-Vianney tragedy which caused 30 casualties and several million dollars in damage, I would like to know whether the Quebec government has formally requested federal assistance and whether Ottawa is prepared to provide assistance of some form.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the Hon. Gérald Harvey, the Quebec Revenue Minister, has filed an application with the federal government through the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, and that discussions between the two parties are underway as to the extent of federal assistance to the population which has been through so many hardships and on behalf of which the hon. member has made such pressing representations to the government.

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Can he tell us now how much the federal government will pay to Quebec for assistance to the victims of the Saint Jean-Vianney disaster?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): It all depends on the assessment of work to be carried out at Saint Jean-Vianney, Mr. Speaker. I can therefore give no reply at this time.

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

Could he tell us if, according to some recent reports, in cases like that of Saint Jean-Vianney, assistance would be granted under certain conditions by the federal government and if so, what would these conditions be?

Mr. Trudeau: Of course, Mr. Speaker, there are conditions. If the government were to spend arbitrarily the taxpayers' money, I am convienced the hon. member would be the first one to criticise. Every month, every week, in all parts of Canada, there are opportunities to help people who are suffering from one thing or another and the federal government has set a number of conditions when help to afflicted areas that are not in aposition to help themselves is warranted. Those are the conditions which we are trying to apply with maximum equty. On every occasion, throughout this country, when there are special cases, Mr. Speaker, we try to settle them as such.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for—

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

PROVISION OF SAFE CONTAINERS FOR HAZARDOUS PRODUCTS

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs which has to do with the tremendous amount of publicity he has given recently to hazardous products. According to his own admission the people most affected are children. When does he intend to bring in regulations requiring hazardous products to be put in safe containers and bottled properly?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the publicity dealt with hazardous product containers rather than hazardous products themselves. The Food and Drug Directorate, under my colleague, has already asked pharmacists to prescribe prescription drugs in safety containers. We are now working on and are on the verge of announcing a standard for a safety enclosure for liquids which, when it is perfected and meets the economic tests that must be applied, will be provided for by way of regulation.

REGULATION OF TELEVISION ADVERTISING DIRECTED AT CHILDREN

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs when he proposes to do something tangible by way of legislation in respect of regulating advertisements on television directed at children?

Hon. Ron. Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I was hoping the hon. member's private bill on the subject might come up for debate.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the minister would talk to the government House leader—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

POLLUTION

ESTABLISHMENT OF SINGLE AGENCY TO DEAL WITH OIL SPILLS

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry I should like to direct this question to his parliamentary secretary. Have any further plans been made for the establishment of a single agency or department, with the necessary manpower, equipment and cash, to deal with oil spills in Canadian waters in accordance with the recommendation in the third instalment of the report of the operation oil task force?

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to take that question as notice on behalf of the parliamentary secretary.

BILINGUALISM

REFUSAL OF BRITISH COLUMBIA TO ACCEPT BILINGUAL LABELLING

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

In view of the fact that a conference of the provincial ministers in charge of consumer protection took place last week, and as British Columbia stated that it refused categorically to implement the bilingual labelling policy, would the minister be ready to indicate whether he is going to respect the decision taken by British Columbia, or if he will invite the province to respect the policy already announced by the federal government?

[English]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I announced a policy in the House in December relative to bilingual labels under the federal labelling and packaging statutes. That policy still stands and we are in the process of implementing it.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RENOVATION OF RESIDENCE OF CANADIAN AMBASSADOR IN MOSCOW

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Has the present Canadian ambassador in Moscow recently requested, as a condition of extending his stay in Moscow, a complete renovation of his residence facilities at an approximate cost of $150,000?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I missed part of the question because of noise down to the right, but I know of no request of the general nature of what I was able to understand. If the hon. member cares to repeat his question I might be able to assert more—

Mr. Paproski: Has the present Canadian ambassador in Moscow recently requested, as a condition of extending his stay in Moscow, a complete renovation of his residence facilities at a cost of approximately $150,000?

Mr. Speaker: I will, of course, allow the Prime Minister to reply to the question. Had I heard the question correctly in the first instance I might have suggested to the hon. member that it be placed on the order paper. As the hon. member went to the trouble of asking it twice, perhaps he is entitled to an answer. While the matter is being considered I will recognize the hon. member for Simcoe North.

[Later:]

Mr. Paproski: My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Will he advise the House why the government is contemplating a building program in Moscow amounting to $10 million?

Mr. Trudeau: Never heard of it, Mr. Speaker.

HEALTH

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF NATIONAL COUNCIL

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It is based on a recommendation of the royal commission which submitted a report seven years ago outlining certain goals to be attained. Seven years later there is still no national science policy for health in spite of the fact that 6 per cent of the gross national product is devoted to health services. When can we expect the appointment of a national council on health?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do not agree at all with the premise to the hon. member's question. He must be aware of the national health science policy as reflected in the activities of the department, including food and drugs, the national health grants and the Medical Research Council. If he looks at them he will see the direction in which they are all going in terms of a national health science policy.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, the minister apparently did not grasp the significance of my question. I asked when a national council on health would be appointed. If he cannot answer we will debate it at ten o'clock.

Mr. Munro: That was not the question the hon. member asked.

Mr. Speaker: Obviously we will have a ten o'clock debate.

BANNING OF IMPORTATION OF BEEF CATTLE WHICH HAVE BEEN GIVEN GROWTH HORMONE, DES

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Will he indicate whether Canada is one of the 21 countries that have banned the importation of beef cattle which have consumed the growth hormone, DES?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I am not aware of this, Mr. Speaker, but I will check into the matter.

Mr. Skoberg: In view of the fact that the United States is aware of the situation that exists, and the fact that the Common Market has banned the import of beef cattle from the United States because of the possibility of causing cancerous growth in man, will the minister immediately act on this matter?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Bellechasse and the hon. member for Edmonton Centre on a supplementary. We will then have to proceed to orders of the day.

FINANCE

QUEBEC—ALLEGED UNEQUAL TREATMENT RESPECTING STUDENTS LOANS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance.

In a very recent release from his department with regard to the federal government's expenditures under the student loans program, mention is made of the amount allocated to each province, and I note that, in spite of the fact that Quebec—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member should ask his question as quickly as possible, because the question period is over. He has a few minutes' grace to ask his question quickly.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thought it was better for me to explain, but, at any rate, here is my question: How is it that, under the federal-provincial agreement concerning student loans, Quebec only received $5,350,000 in 1970 and came in fourth place, when, with regard to population, it ranks second—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that the question should be put on the order paper. If the matter is urgent, it could be debated at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): At ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

THE BUDGET

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF CIRCUMSTANCES OF ELDERLY RETIRED PEOPLE

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Monsieur l'Orateur, ma question est dirigée au Ministre des Finances. Will he assure us that some regard will be had for the circumstances of the elderly retired on fixed incomes in his presentation to us on June 18?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we always do our best to look after the old people.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING MEMBERS' SESSIONAL AND EXPENSE ALLOWANCES, ETC.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council) moved that Bill C-242, to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act, and an act to make provision for the retirement of members of the Senate, be read the third time and do pass.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I listened to a bit of comment on CBC radio this morning and heard one of our press gallery friends make a rather cynical remark about the debate scheduled for this afternoon on this bill, third reading of which has now been called. The remark was to the effect that it is a foregone conclusion that this bill will be passed and wrapped up in no time because, after all, the members are anxious to get the money that will be provided when it is passed. I realize, Sir, that it is quite routine for us to regard remarks by friends in the press gallery, which may be cynical, as their view of us whether or not it is justified. I suggest, however, that in this instance it might be well for us to pause for a moment and realize that maybe that cynicism reflects a view held by a very large number of Canadians. I certainly know from my correspondence there are many Canadians who are offended by what the government has placed before us in Bill C-242. Even though it may be routine for this bill to be debated on third reading and passed by this House this afternoon, some of us feel we must still rise and state our very strong objection to it.

I may put members slightly to rest by saying that I have just five things to say. When I have only two or three things to say it can take me 40 minutes, but when I have five things to say I can do it in a lot less time. The first thing I want to say is that I am fully aware of the problems many Members of Parliament face in trying to balance their budgets on the amount of money they now receive as salary and expense allowance. I doubt if there is anyone in this Chamber for whom this is the only income who is not having difficulty, and I am included in that group. But, Mr. Speaker, we are here as representatives of the Canadian people and most Canadians when they have trouble trying to balance their budgets, have to sharpen their pencils and find ways to cope with reality. They do not have the opportunity just to vote themselves the necessary increase. I think, in the light of what most Canadians are coping with today, we should not give this offensive example of voting ourselves this substantial increase at this time.

The second thing I should like to say is that we are living at a time, in a Benson-type economy, when our people are being urged to practice restraint. We have guidelines of one kind or another. Trade unions are told they must not ask for too much money. All down the line the preachment is restraint. Since we are part of the parliamentary, and in that sense the governmental section of this country, it seems to me the maxim applies that we should practice what we preach. If restraint is being proclaimed as something others should follow, I suggest we should follow it ourselves. In my view, we are not showing restraint when, in one fell swoop, we raise our total income from the present $12,000 salary and $6,000 expense allowance, which is a total of $18,000, to $18,000 salary and $8,000 expense allowance for a total of $26,000. That is my second reason for once again rising to oppose this bill. Since we are preaching restraint we of all people should practice it.

My third reason for opposing this bill is that I do not like the elements of special privilege contained in it.

There are two in particular. One is the fact that the increase to be provided by this bill is to be retroactive to October 8, 1970. Like other members of this House, I have a great deal to do with workers in the private sector and in the public sector who try to get increases and try to get some retroactivity. But how seldom they get it! I am also aware of the fact that the Canadian Legion and other veterans' organizations asked that recent increases in veteran's pensions and allowances be made retroactive a year or at least a few months. But, no; when the legislation was brought in there was no retroactivity in it. The same is true about old age pensions and about many of the things we provide for others. We provide no retroactivity for all these other groups, but in this bill we take for ourselves the special privilege of making this very large increase retroactive to October 8, 1970.

The other element of special privilege in this legislation is the continuing in effect of the principle of a portion of our income being called expense allowance and being made tax free. The one thing in the Beaupré report which had wide approval was the recommendation that the special privilege of a tax-free allowance should end. Instead of ending it, this bill entrenches it by raising the tax-free amount from $6,000 to $8,000 a year. I suggest if we continue in this direction it will be even more difficult, if ever Parliament wants to do it, to abolish that special privilege. My third reason for opposing this bill is, as I have said, these two elements of special privilege that are contained in it, retroactivity and freedom from income tax. I have had letters from persons who, whether I agree with them or not, expressed no objection to an increase in the salaries of Members of Parliament, but all of them object most strongly to our providing ourselves with freedom from income tax on what is part of our income, especially since no such privilege is granted to them.

The fourth thing that I wish to say—and it is something that I have had occasion to say on a number of times in various debates in the House—is that in my view the problem that besets our society the most is that of inequality and of wide differences between the living standards of those at the bottom and those at the top. This is a problem in our Canadian society and it is a problem in our world. My fear is that this is the kind of thing that could bring down our society and that could tear our world apart. I believe we must move in the direction of greater equality in living standards; we have to level things up. One does not level things up by following this percentage rule and always providing bigger increases for those at the top than we provide for those at the bottom. We boast of the fact that welfare standards and minimum wages are higher today than they were a few years ago, but the living standards of those at the top are so much higher, the gap is so much wider, that in a psychological sense the poverty of those at tne bottom is even worse.

This applies, as I said, in the world at large, and it applies in Canada. I think that the effort to level things up and to achieve some sort of equality has to begin with some of those at or near the top. It is not good enough just to tell those down at the bottom that they must be satisfied with a minimum wage of $1.75 an hour. It is not good enough for us to tell those who sit at the collective bargaining table that they must be satisfied with lower wages than they want, all of this being said in the name of restraint and in the name of keeping the economy going. If we believe that there should be some sort of approach toward equality, toward solving the problem of wide differences, those of us who are up the scale a bit are the people who should say so. I think we should be giving a lead, and I think this responsibility rests upon us as Members of Parliament even more than it does upon the professional and the business community, because we are the people who have come here to be the representatives of the Canadian people. We are the people who should be giving a lead. Therefore, I think we should say no to the proposed boost in our take home pay which this bill provides.

The fifth and final thing that I want to say may perhaps be somewhat personal. It is something that I had occasion to say in the standing committee to which this bill was referred, but I feel I must say it again. A good deal has been said about the comparison between our salary levels and the salary levels of senior public servants, of executives, of deputy ministers, and so on, and the argument is made—and I understand and respect the argument—that our salaries should somehow be comparable to theirs so that our working relationship with them will be an appropriate one. I do not accept the premise of that suggestion, namely that we have been hired to do a job. We hire public servants for that purpose and we pay the rates that attach to those jobs. But we come here rather as representatives to speak for the people whom we represent. To put it in the plainest language that I can, even though it may be somewhat personal, I am far more concerned about my relationship with the people whom I represent than I am with my relationship with the deputy ministers or the senior public servants who may, in a sense, be sitting across the table from me.

Of course, the argument can be won for a pay increase if you trot out comparisons, at least if you trot out comparisons with senior public servants. You cannot win that argument if you mention figures in relation to what we have done for old age pensioners, for people on the minimum wage, for war veterans, and so on. But speaking for myself may I say that it means far more to me to have the people in Winnipeg North Centre feel that I am their representative, that there is some relationship and some rapport between them and me, than it does for me to have enough salary so that I can say that I am the equal of some level in the federal public service. I do not need money to be their equal, but I do want the feeling that I do represent the people who sent me here.

Therefore, for these five reasons, if I may recapitulate them, having kept my promise not to take my full 40 minutes, I am opposed to this bill. I think in the first place that, like others, we should sharpen our pencils and balance our budgets rather than just vote ourselves an increase. I believe we should practice what we preach, and we are preaching restraint. I insist that we should deny ourselves such special privileges as retroactivity and freedom from income tax. I think we should give the lead in the battle to level up the standards of living of those who are down, and the place where that should start is with some of us who are at or near the top. I believe that we should be concerned, not with our monetary relationship with the people who are high in the public service, but with our relationship with the people that it is our privilege and our honour to represent. Therefore, I intend to vote against the third reading of this bill. If in spite of my opposition it carries, I shall govern myself according to my vote.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I did not have the opportunity during the debate on the motion for second reading to make comments on Bill C-242. I shall try not to repeat the arguments put forward on the motion for third reading.

I agree with most other hon. members that it may be embarrassing to vote in favour of an increase of our salaries and allowances, especially when there are in Canada thousands of unemployed who are not getting any pay.

That is why we think it is not the proper time for us to increase our salaries and allowances, particularly in view of present economic conditions in Canada.

We should not be compelled to tolerate the blunders of the present government, but since the people generally judge Parliament by its achievements, we refuse to support the economic policy of the government and be blamed for having been in favour of an increase of members' indemnities, while Canadians are experiencing such deplorable economic conditions.

Mr. Speaker, when an employee asks for a raise, the boss immediately checks his performance record in order to see how efficient he is. Any good boss, once he has determined that the employee's work is satisfactory, will readily grant him a raise.

In our case, we have to vote ourselves higher indemnities and allowances, but on the other hand, if we believe in democracy, the people are still the boss. We know at the present time that the Canadian people—and we had proof of it last Monday in the four by-elections—are altogether dissatisfied with the economic policy of the government. That is one of the reasons why we are inclined to vote against this bill.

Our position, so far, on the increase of pay and allowances for members of Parliament, is as follows: We would have preferred, because of the present economic conditions, unemployment, the great number of welfare cases, income tax and other taxes, that all people must pay—not to mention the threat of new taxes in the soon to be introduced budget—the provision of services for members in their ridings. We are quite serious about it, especially since we have to put up with the policy of this government and, when we go back to our ridings, we have to meet 40, 50, 60 or 75 people struggling with problems of welfare, unemployment insurance, taxes, jobs, industrial development, forms to fill and telephone calls. In fact, telephone calls average from 35 to 40 on Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays, and from 60 to 75 on Saturdays and Sundays. On the other hands, our wives at home must act as secretaries, calling welfare offices, organizing meetings, going to city hall, phoning the mayor because people consult us about municipal problems and receiving people who trust their respresentative and ask him to give them a hand or to solve their problems.

We deplore the fact that the government did not take into consideration the recommendations of the Beaupré committee in that regard. I would like to ask the sponsor of Bill C-242, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) if, tomorrow morning, I hire a secretary in my riding to help me in my work, will her salary be deductible from my income tax and will I be able to give her a T-4 slip.

So far, I have not read in the regulations or in the speeches of those who preceded me that an hon. member had the right to hire an employee whom he would pay out of his salary and to deduct that amount from his income tax.

We must also take into account the work of the member's wife, who does at least as much in her home answering inquiries from constituents, from 8 in the morning until 10 or 11 at night seven days a week, as any secretary working in Parliament. However, this work is not acknowledged by the general public.

I am not saying the wife should be paid, but that we should have a secretary, male or female, to spare our wives the work they are called upon to perform when we are away; because, when an elector has a problem, he does not ask himself whether the member is at home or in Ottawa, especially in urban areas where 60 per cent of the people can be reached simply by dialing a telephone number. That is why some members like myself get at least 50 telephone calls on days when we are away, and twice as many on Saturdays and Sundays when we are home.

The problem is serious and also explains the fact that many wives come to hate politics; they become aware of the problems of the public in general, and it happens that they do not like to be overworked, especially when they have to look after a family.

This time I would like to bring another matter to the attention of the government: every time the Créditistes propose in the House social measures such as increasing the old age security pensions or family allowances, the government never fails to say: Where shall we get the money? However, when it comes to increasing members' allowances and expenses, the question does not seem to be raised. I know very well that this is not a problem for the government as the latter will take the money from new taxes that sooner or later it will ask Parliament to vote.

Mr. Speaker, there was another comment published by a Vancouver paper, The Province, on May 6, 1971, and it is as follows:

• (3:20 p.m.)

[English]

Some people think that you can get better members by giving them much larger salaries. I don't agree because you have to be a "yes" man in order to get anywhere in the party.

You can elect the best Liberal in Canada, wealthy, influential, clever, but he will never get anywhere if he bucks the Prime Minister too often. A good example of "yes" men are Minister Sharp and Ex-Secretary of War Cadieux. A year ago both of these cabinet ministers came out strongly against any reduction in the NATO forces.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we regret that the minister responsible has not introduced an amendment to this bill in order to comply with the recommendations of the Beaupré committee. Before the bill is passed on third reading, I do wish to receive the assurance that those hon. members who are going to hire a secretary in their ridings will be able to supply him or her with a T-4 slip and deduct his or her salary on their tax returns.

[English]

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to speak on Bill C-242, an act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act, and an act to make provision for the retirement of members of the Senate. At the outset, I would like to say that I fully endorse the remarks made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I think he has pretty well put the case for those of us who intend to vote against this legislation.

However, I would like to point out that when the bill was before us for second reading, just about a month ago, I opposed it at that time and urged that some changes be made to it in committee. We find that the bill has come back to the House without alteration. Yesterday, there was an amendment moved by a member of our party which suggested that the increases should be delayed until the next election. I voted for that amendment and I still feel that something of the sort should be included in this legislation.

There are one or two other points I should like to make, Mr. Speaker. While the bill will give adequate increases to members of the House of Commons and the Senate, it does not solve the problem of dealing with our remuneration in the future. This is one of the major weaknesses of the legislation. I had hoped that some kind of formula would be established to take care of future increases, and surely this is what we should be aiming for instead of passing amendments which will give lump sum increases. I feel that there has not been a sincere attempt to evaluate the job done by Members of Parliament. Really, it is not too different from any other job in industry, so it could and should be evaluated and have a remuneration attached to it.

When I spoke on second reading of this bill, I suggested that there should be some niche in the civil service to which the work done by Members of Parliament would be comparable. The remuneration could then be set at a commensurate figure with an annual increment or an increment every two years, as is the case in the civil service. The matter should be taken out of our hands. We should not be placed in the position of coming here every five or six years to vote for an increase in our salaries. I believe that the failure of this legislation to evaluate the job is an indication that it is not good legislation.

There are several other points I should like to make, Mr. Speaker, to show why I am opposed to this bill. For the past 2½ years members of this House, government ministers, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and those who advise the government on the economy, have been preaching restraint. There have been guidelines which industry, business and the labour unions have been urged to follow. Up until this year, the guideline indicated that we should not have more than a 6 per cent increase in salary in one year and this past year the guideline was set at between 4 per cent and 4½ per cent. The House of Commons has been giving this advice to the people of Canada. Now, we come here and take a 50 per cent increase on our salary, plus a 33⅓ per cent increase in our taxfree expense allowance. If we expect others to follow our advice and have some respect for what we say, we should at least follow the restraints we set for others.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harding: It seems to me that there are many reasons why Members of Parliament should not have this increase at this time. I have mentioned them before and I shall mention them again. Four or five months ago members of this House increased the old age security pension by exactly 42 cents a month, or $5.04 a year. We told those on basic pension that this was all that the Canadian nation could afford. However, when it comes to ourselves we take an additional $6,000 on our salary plus an additional 33⅓ per cent or $2,000 on our taxfree expense allowance.

Another of my objections is that the increases have been made retroactive to October, 1970. We have no labour union and so we were not negotiating for a salary increase in October, although something might have been going on behind the scenes. We did not know anything about this bill until April 28, 1971, yet the bill provides for almost a year's back pay. I say this is wrong, Mr. Speaker. We did not give a retroactive increase to old age pensioners—indeed this House even denied them the 2 per cent increase based on the cost of living index. Members of this House had the gall to vote for the proposal that the 2 per cent increase, which normally followed the cost of living index, had to be taken away from those on basic pension. I say it is wrong for us to make our own salary increase retroactive to October, 1970 and I have no hesitation in telling members of this House and the general public that it is wrong.

There are other points which I think should be raised, Mr. Speaker. I feel that the tax free allowance is excessive. I have no objection to members from some of the ridings in British Columbia or other ridings where expenses are very heavy receiving such consideration. We all know that those who represent rural ridings spend a great percentage of their salary in covering the area, and I feel no one would have any objection to special consideration in such cases. However, I feel that most members would agree that a first priority should be the provision of better facilities here in Ottawa. I would have preferred to see the money allocated for salary increases go to research facilities and avenues which would enable members to deal more effectively with the problems of the Canadian people. We are loaded with work, and a great deal of research is necessary in order to deal with it but the facilities and staff are not available for this purpose. When legislation comes before this House, we should be able to research it properly if we are to criticize effectively. If it is our aim to improve the lot of Members of Parliament and the service which they give to the country, then I think this should have priority. I will not say anymore, Mr. Speaker. I think we have covered the bill quite adequately. I say without hesitation that if the bill comes to a vote this afternoon, I intend to cast my vote against it.

• (3:40 p.m.)

An hon. Member: But you will take the money.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, my colleague from the riding of Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) has just demonstrated, as all my other colleagues have done, why the increases involved in Bill C-242 are uncalled for.

I should therefore like to briefly express the views of the majority of the citizens of the riding of Champlain in regard to this increase.

I must admit that the population cannot stomach the discrimination practice by the government by bringing forward such a bill. Telling workers to tighten their belts, businessmen, industry and trade to restrict expenses, advising everyone to avoid escalation of prices, and thereupon increasing salaries and expenses of members of Parliament is unacceptable arrogance.

I do not deny the objective value of our functions. It is difficult to evaluate the vast responsibilities they involve. However, in order to be fair to each member, we could have left the members' indemnity at $12,000 a year and tried hard to find ways to reimburse real expenditures directly related to the profession, or rather to the responsible role that we fill.

It is difficult indeed for the citizens of this country who are the shareholders of this tremendous financial establishment which is the government administration, to agree to higher indemnities and expenditures for their directors, when they find that not only is the establishment not profitable, but it is systematically getting the country into debt if not bankruptcy.

If the country was well administered, it would distribute dividends and then, the shareholders, who are the citizens of this country, would be only too happy to grant their good directors an appropriate salary.

[Mr. Harding.]

But they all know that it is not so. That is why I wanted, in a few words, to illustrate the views of my constituents of Champlain.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to take part in this debate on the motion for third reading of Bill C-242, but before it being put, I should merely like to state the position of the Ralliement Créditiste on this question.

I think that any Canadian will agree to the principle of increased allowances. Nobody is stupid enough to refuse a salary increase. However, considering the timing of this proposal, other considerations should be taken into account. We do object to the timing of this legislation.

I do not feel it is appropriate, at a time when there are in Canada 800,000 unemployed and 1,500,000 students seeking summer jobs, when, as my colleague said awhile ago, the Canadian people are asked to tighten their belts, manufacturers, to reduce capital expenditures, and the provinces, to avoid economic development outlays, to bring before the House a legislation designed to increase the sessional and expense allowances of members.

Some comparisons are likely to be made. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said, not so long ago, that members of Parliament are less paid than some high-ranking government officials. Indeed! But public servants do not have to get elected every two, three or four years. That is for sure.

We do not hear people disparage senior officials, deputy ministers or others earning $30,000 $35,000 or $40,000 a year. We do not hear them criticize hockey or baseball players earning $100,000 per year. That is something everybody admits.

But when it comes to Parliament, things are a little different because the government organization is the one that determines the members' allowance, not hockey or baseball players nor senior officials. We have to make the decision, we have to vote for or against an increase in our salaries and allowances.

Mr. Speaker, the members are in a somewhat ridiculous position and the Créditistes have offered the government an alternative solution. We have suggested a means of helping the members of Parliament without increasing their allowances or expenses.

For instance, we have demanded marginal services, such as those provided to the Quebec provincial members who, in addition to a yearly indemnity of $18,000, as their federal counterparts, have in their riding secretarial facilities paid by the provincial government.

Provincial members who must attend parliamentary committees between sessions are paid $50 per day. In addition, they receive an allowance for the expenses incurred in their own riding. No newspaperman is against that. But, if federal members ask for similar services, we make the headlines.

We should be able to provide those services to our constituents so as to be constantly in touch with them and aware of what is going on in our constituencies. We are in Ottawa from eight to ten months each year, let us not forget it. This would be much more important that what we are about to vote on this afternoon!

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, I ask once again that a secretariat be established in each constituency to serve the population. This would be acceptable to everybody, and the people would be satisfied.

This does not mean at all that we are against any salary increase. For instance, I completely disagree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who said a moment ago that we should level up incomes. Take from the haves and give to the have-nots! The real socialist is the fellow who is prepared to distribute what belongs to others, but never what belongs to him. Not on your life! This is what real socialism boils down to. I hear the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) laughing. This is precisely what they are doing.

Some NDP members make $100,000 a year, but they would not give a nickel. These are the people who come and preach in this House, blame capitalists, small businessmen, those whose yearly profits amount to $10,000, $12,000 or $15,000. They are too big, these fellows. We know some of them who get paid $50,000 and $75,000 a year out of union funds, out of the Canadian taxpayers' money. There is a limit to being gulled by these people. I will not be muddled by this.

Mr. Speaker, we shall refuse to vote in favor of this raise. The other day, someone said: "Of course you will object." Indeed, we are against the timing of this raise, but still we are in favour of the principle just like anybody else in Canada would be in favour of a wage increase.

The labour leaders to start with are being paid more money than the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. He is aware of that, for he himself was employed once by a labour union and since this job meant more money for him that his present job as a member of Parliament, he did not complain.

Mr. Speaker, we support the principle but we are against the timing. That is the reason why we shall vote against it. Some people say: if you get the increase you will accept it nevertheless. My colleagues and myself have often voted against taxes. In fact, we lost the vote, but nevertheless we pay our taxes. If the bill passes, we will use the increase to educate the Canadian people and to give them by means of Social Credit a sound and honest administration which will bring about better justice.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question? I recognize the hon. member for Lotbinière.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make some brief remarks that I wish to direct especially to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen).

Senate and House of Commons Act

During consideration of Bill C-242, entitled "An Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act", the President of the Privy Council stated, in his introductory remarks, that some time in the future he expected to consider the possibility of increasing services to members in their ridings.

Before the committee, he contradicted himself to some extend and equivocated. I know however that he has thoroughly considered the recommendations of the Beaupré report.

We should like, before the end of this debate on third reading, to get from the President of the Privy Council some specific indications as to how soon services may possibly be added to those already available to members in order, as my colleagues said, to provide a permanent type of service to the people in our ridings.

Mr. Speaker, we have to close the gap between democratic institutions and the people, and it seems important to me, while considering this legislation, that the President of the Privy Council, before the end of the debate, give us specific indications and undertake, morally at least, to assure members and the people that the people's representatives will have the required tools to do the work that has been entrusted to them, in their ridings.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. MacEachen) which was agreed to on the following division:

POST OFFICE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING STAMP AGENTS' COMMISSION, LETTER MAIL PREPARATION ARRANGEMENTS, EXTRAORDINARY SERVICES, MEMBERS' MAIL, ETC.

The House resumed, from Tuesday, June 1, consideration of the motion of Mr. Côté (Longueuil) that Bill C-240, to amend the Post Office Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I feel I should enter the debate on this bill because of the number of serious problems presently facing Canada's rural communities in particular. I raise this matter in this debate because it should be obvious that the post office plays a very essential and vital role in the rural communities of Canada. At the present time, rural Canada is going through a crisis. We see farmers leaving the land. They are being forced off their farms. The rural communities in many parts of Canada are disintegrating because of the lack of any cohesive policy designed to ensure the stability and the future viability of rural communities throughout all Canada. I suggest this is a matter of national concern. It is something which should concern all members of this House as well as the people of Canada.

It is perfectly obvious, of course, that in Canada there is a movement of people from the rural areas of the country to the urban centres. This movement has now reached such proportions that many people are wondering what is happening to Canada, and whether in fact the form this development is taking is a healthy one. Some predictions are being made that, if present trends in Canada are continued, we will see a concentration of population in a very small number of supercities in a few locations of Canada. If we are to retain and build viable rural communities in Canada one of the first essential public functions which must be looked at very closely is the postal services. It seems to me the government has failed to do this. It has failed to deal with the problems affecting the post office in the past few years.

I wish to acknowledge that one of the first actions, possibly the first, of the present minister responsible for the post office was to place a moratorium on further post office closures in Canada. I was happy to see this action because it at least brought about a temporary reprieve in respect of the havoc wreaked by his predecessor who closed hundreds of post offices across Canada. I think all of us will recognize that some adjustments and changes had to take place. Of course, many of the problems now facing the post office are the direct result of the political patronage practices of the past. I know the former Postmaster General at least tried to take some of the politics out of post office matters. I want to say I hope the present minister in charge of the post office is following and will continue to follow such a policy. I hope he will take partisan politics out of post office matters.

I acknowledge that some progress has been made in this field in recent years. Of course, the political patronage system is responsible for some of the problems with which the post office department has been wrestling. I heard of a case involving three post offices in a rural area which were within five miles of each other. The three postmasters concerned were not all Liberals. The two on either side, at the extremities, were Liberals and the man in the centre was a Conservative. The two Liberals were appointed when the Liberal government was in power and the Conservative was appointed when the Conservative government was in power. The post office situation in that area was studied and it was found that there was room for one post office. A decision was made to keep the one in the centre, which happened to be the one held by a Conservative supporter. Were the Liberal supporters of that area angry! They knew that some of their privileges of the past had been foreclosed. This is the type of thing which has bedevilled the post office too often in past years.

I have had some experience with the closing of some rural post offices in my constituency. I had no argument in respect of some of them. In a few cases I made inquiries and found there were no objections in the communities, therefore I entered no objections to the closures which were being proposed. However, there were some others the services of which I felt were essential and should be retained. One such case I discussed in this House on a previous occasion. I refer to the post office at Serath, Saskatchewan, located about 60 miles north of the city of Regina on highway 6, and on the boundary between Regina East and Regina Lake Centre constituencies.

Serath is a small rural community removed from the railway lines. It is some 20 miles distant from the nearest railway line to the south and almost 20 miles from the nearest railway line to the north. Also, it is 20 miles from the nearest railway line and post office point to the west. This is a large rural area in which there were a number of small post offices. All these post offices have been closed in recent years, and I have no argument in respect of some of these closures. It would seem to me, however, that there is room for this one last post office located not in some farmhouse or small isolated store, but in a community which has been built up and centered around the post office and a number of other services in the immediate vicinity. Not a very large number of householders were involved—some 48 in number—but once the Serath post office was closed some of them would have to go a distance of 25 miles or more to obtain postal service. Lo and behold, the Postmaster General decided to close the Serath post office along with one other post office in that rural area. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) and I made representations. We discussed the matter with the people in the local community who made it very clear that they wanted to have that post office retained in preference to having the rural route service which was offered as an alternative. In spite of all the representations we made and the interviews we had with the minister responsible, our representations and appeals were turned down.

This seemed to be a strange decision, so I put down a motion for the production of papers asking for all correspondence in connection with this post office closure. I found that the Liberal members for Saskatchewan had become very much interested in this little post office at Serath. Serath had not received as much attention throughout its entire life span. I have, for example, a letter which came from the office of the Hon. Otto Lang, now Minister of Manpower and Immigration. I might say the Minister of Manpower and Immigration is responsible for piloting a bill through the House of Commons, which is now being considered by the Agricultural Committee, and which he claims will be the salvation of the western grain industry and the prairie agricultural economy. What was the role the minister played in connection with this particular rural community? I should like to quote from a letter that came from a research assistant in the office of that particular minister. He was dealing with two post offices, one happened to be close to the Minister's constituency. The one Post Office served only about 40 householders, while the Serath post office served 48 householders, a larger number. He said:

However, there is a proviso and that is that the same people who would prefer the Serath post office to close would firmly support the maintenance of the Esk post office.

This, I suggest, is a sleazy bit of political business.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Burton: Here we have an example of political patronage at its worst in the Post Office. This letter is dated January, 1970, and the minister could go to his files and find this correspondence. This letter shows the role that was played by one of his colleagues in closing out a service that was vital to the people in that rural community. I suggest there are other cases similar to that to be found in the files.

So, this study went on and eventually a letter came from the office of the minister of communications informing me the department had decided that the Esk post office still served a very important function in that community but that Serath did not. The department said Serath did not have any banking facilities, but neither did Esk; that Serath did not have any medical facilities, but neither did Esk. There were a couple of other things, mentioned which neither municipality had. Nevertheless, because there was a political factor involved, because, I suggest, the local Liberal executive in that area wanted to see the Serath post office closed and the Esk post office kept open, the government decided to keep the Esk post office open. This type of thing is not good enough. I think it is the type of thing that simply has to stop if we are to deal satisfactorily with the problems of the Post Office.

What have we experienced in recent years? We have had increases in postal rates from four cents for local delivery and five cents for out of town delivery to eight cents for first class mail. This is a substantial increase. We have had reductions in service of various sorts which have already been mentioned during the current debate. Yet, in spite of these increases in rates, the Post Office Department could not keep little Serath open. When it came to a matter of political patronage, political considerations, Serath was clobbered. That community suffered. I suggest there is a place for a post office in that community which is far removed from other communities. This is the type of thing that I think must be corrected if we are going to see any change of direction in the course of affairs in the Post Office Department.

There is one other matter with which I would like to deal as well, and which I think warrants further investigation. The minister is aware of the fact that a certain event will take place in the province of Saskatchewan which will be of considerable interest to him, I am sure, as well as to all members in the House. I refer to the election on June 23. I have had some contact with some people in various rural communities and I understand they are receiving mail these days, some of it in plain envelopes. There is one item of mail that is being delivered in plain envelopes in several rural communities in north western Saskatchewan, and inside there is a pamphlet put out by the Saskatchewan government information services which describes what a fine job the government is doing about highways. The information I have, which I am not in a position to authenticate at the moment but which nevertheless I feel is reliable, is that the householder mail rate for this particular item was paid by the premier's office. It is not clear whether this payment was made out of the funds of the government of Saskatchewan, by the Liberal party of Saskatchewan or out of the premier's own private funds, whatever they may be. However, it seems to me to be a questionable sort of activity in terms of the way the mails are being used. There are laws against pornography in the mails. Well, I suggest that the type of rubbish and refined fertilizer that is being distributed through the mails from the office of the premier of Saskatchewan at present certainly warrants as much investigation as the Post Office Department has carried out from time to time of mail which has been alleged to be pornographic in nature.

Mr. Rose: I have a question, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Will the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) allow the hon. member to ask a question?

Mr. Burton: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Rose: The hon. member for Regina East made some remarks concerning a piece of literature that is being distributed through the mails, and he suggested that it might be pornographic. I want to ask the hon. member whether he has undertaken any kind of investigation of this literature through the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford), under whose jurisdiction this matter would fall, I believe, under the truth in advertising provisions of the act.

Mr. Burton: I did not suggest directly that this letter was pornographic in nature. Certainly, there might be some elements of indecency in it. I suggested it was refined fertilizer. At the same time, I think the suggestion made by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) is one that merits attention. I suggest that the minister in charge of the Post Office should take this under consideration as well to ensure that the truth in advertising laws are followed with respect to materials such as I have described which are distributed through the mail.

In conclusion, I want to make an urgent appeal to the minister in charge of the Post Office to come to grips with the problems of rural postal service and that he take a different approach than the Post Office Department has taken in the past several years. I want to suggest that there are ways of dealing with problems, which I have to acknowledge exist. I am quite aware that on the basis of the salaries being paid to postmasters, which are set out in certain schedules, and on the basis of the volume of mail handlings, on the basis of receipts and revenues in various post offices, it is difficult to justify the setting up of a full postal structure in a number of communities.

I want to suggest that there are alternatives that could be considered. I would like to suggest that the Post Office further investigate the establishment of sub-post offices in rural areas. This, I might mention, is done in our large urban centres. In my own city of Regina there are around 37 sub-post offices. I recognize that for the most part they do not handle mail deliveries. There are a few of these sub-post offices at which patrons can pick up their mail, but that is not their normal function in an urban setting. They are there to sell stamps and provide the other services which are provided by the post office. Of course, sub-post offices would require a further adaptation to the rural scene if such a system were adopted. But it seems to me that it would make a great deal of sense if we did have regular post offices in main centres in the various rural areas of Canada, while in the smaller centres which are too small to justify a full postal service, there could be established sub-post offices which would be under the jurisdiction of a full-time postmaster. I want to suggest that there are many people who have been or who are handling mail at present who would be quite prepared to undertake such a service.

• (4:40 p.m.)

I might say that the primary consideration of some of the Postmasters with whom I came in contact was not the matter of revenue. Rather it was that he was providing a community service, be it from a garage, service station, store or some other community facility, and operating the post office was one way of rounding out the service that he was providing to his patrons in the community. Of course, it also helped to ensure that people would return to his place of business for other services as well. I hope the minister will take a close look at the suggestion I have made, namely, that where it is difficult to justify a full post office, a sub-post office be established under the jurisdiction of a neighbouring post office and postmaster. I feel this is vital because other elements of government policy being advanced at the present time seem to indicate that the government wants to find ways and means of saving rural Canada, and of maintaining viable rural communities. The provision of postal services has to be integrated in any such proposals. Thus, I commend the suggestion that I have made to the minister.

[Translation]

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to delay the debate on Bill C-240, but I take this opportunity to congratulate the minister for the good service provided so far by his department.

Insofar as the service is concerned, between Ottawa and Quebec City for instance, I can say that it is practically a success. Furthermore, when it comes to first class mail between Ottawa and Quebec City, or any area in Portneuf, it is always a 24-hour service, which means that a letter posted in Ottawa around two o'clock in the afternoon will arrive at its destination at about the same time the next day.

On the other hand, the service between Quebec City and Ottawa is always slightly slower. I therefore ask the Minister without Portfolio responsible for the Post Office (Mr. Côté) whether a little investigation might not help bring about some improvement in that area.

With regard to second class mail, delivery may be a bit slower, but I feel the employees of the department honour their commitments according to the standards set up for that class of mail.

I should like to point out one more thing: I fail to understand why, in a municipality like my own, two contractors should have Post Office contracts to deliver the rural mail and do not work during the same hours. One of them serves 150 homes, every day, in the afternoon. The other, serves 65 homes in another area, during the forenoon, and delivers the newspapers of the previous day. Considering the fact that the people of that municipality, 30 miles out of Quebec City, receive their daily papers only on the following day, I would not be surprised if some of the news had lost some of its interest.

They claim that they provide a better mail service through morning delivery, but most families complain that they get their newspaper the day after although they do not live far from Quebec City.

I have already mentioned the fact to the hon. minister who sent me the following reply on October 14, 1970:

Dear Mr. Godin:

I refer to previous letters about the representations you made to me in order to have mail and newspapers delivered to customers of Rural Route No. 1 in St. Basile Station (Que.) the day they are received at the post office.

An investigation has revealed that the bulk of the mail is received at 8:30 a.m. and for this reason on Rural Route No. 1, St. Basile Station, the delivery is preferably made in the morning. Moreover, the rest of the mail and the dailies Le Soleil and L'Action arrive in the afternoon.

We have also established that out of 64 customers on that rural route, only 12 have subscriptions to the two dailies. Consequently, so as not to delay the delivery of the bulk of the mail, we think we must maintain the morning service and not change it for afternoon delivery.

Another advantage of morning delivery is that it can be made in daytime throughout the year, thus reducing for carriers the risks of accidents which would undoubtedly be more numerous if they had to work after sundown.

Yours truly,
Jean-Pierre Côté

Now, the minister states that there are 12 subscribers to the dailies. It is obvious that they are not interested in obtaining the newspapers of the previous day. We can imagine what would happen if a headwaiter waited until the following day of a wedding to purchase the wedding cake. He would certainly lose some customers! Now 12 out of 64 families receive Quebec City newspapers. It is ridiculous. The service is simply bad, at least in that area. Moreover, the St. Basile rural route which services the other section of Cap-Santé parish—part of the rural route of which is on Highway 10—is serviced in the afternoon and without accident. Therefore if a carrier can service 150 families in half a day without accident in 10 years, I feel that another carrier who must service only 64 users along country roads could certainly do so without accident.

I feel that we must change our methods so as to find the means to give satisfaction to the people of the whole region.

Another matter which, to my mind, should be revised by the department is the present requirements on the minimum number of families for the establishment of home delivery service.

In large cities, there is no problem; everyone gets good service and the people are generally satisfied.

In rural districts where villages are rather small, where everyone can call at the post office for his mail without having to cover too great a distance, things are not too bad.

All rural regions are fairly well served by the carriers who deliver rural mail. But considering that the rural population of Portneuf, the riding that I represent, is only 10 per cent of the total population, some modern small towns get very poor service indeed.

I do not blame the minister for what is taking place now. But I would point out to him that if such is the situation in our modern small towns, an old regulation is the culprit since it stipulates that mail should be home delivered only where population reaches 2,000 families.

Now, to get 2,000 families in an old section of Hull, for instance, at a time when lots sold were not over 40 feet wide, or in old sectors of Trois-Rivières or still in certain parts of Quebec City where houses are as close to one another as boxes in a warehouse, it is rather easy. But today, for the greatest enjoyment and satisfaction of all, town-planning committees have been set up in our smaller towns. Mayors are forward-looking and aldermen are doing their job very well. Wider streets have been laid out. Lot standards have also been established so that everybody may have some space, a front lawn, flowers and trees.

Apartment buildings being very rare in those small modern towns, it follows that before the figure of, for instance, 1,500 households may be obtained, people have to walk or take an opportunity to go to the post office which is sometimes one mile from their homes.

When we ask the minister to establish a sub-post office, he informs us that such a service would be possible in municipalities which already have home delivery.

The point I want to make is that today, the fewer services we have as a result of certain regulations, the less chance we have of obtaining them.

And I repeat that when a municipality asks for a sub-post office, it must already enjoy home delivery service. One does not go without the other.

I think that this is a point really deserving consideration, in order to reach solutions which would bring about some equity.

You take out a newspaper subscription. If the paper comes by mail, the price is the same whether the service is good or bad. The newspaper people cannot do anything about it.

When a citizen mails a letter, it always costs the same price, whether the addressee gets it from the mailman or has to walk a mile to fetch it.

Since the Liberal government has tried to eliminate regional discrepancies, I feel the minister in charge of the Post Office (Mr. Côté) should leave no stone unturned to ensure uniformity of the Canadian postal service.

I should also like to refer to the building of post office buildings which is, I know, a responsibility of the Department of Public Works, whose plans are generally good. It has managed to put up quite luxurious and spacious buildings at not too high a cost. But what is unsatisfactory is the exterior finish of these post offices.

For instance, we know that Portneuf supplies great quantities of granite and stone for the building trade. I still remember quite clearly that a post office had been built at Saint-Marc-des-Carrières, where all the stone used for the Parliament buildings in Ottawa came from. At present, Portneuf still supplies stone to Montreal and Toronto.

Moreover, a quarry at Rivière-à-Pierre, another community in Portneuf, also ships most of its granite production to Italy and to several other parts of the world. It also happens that some of it comes back to us from New York and even from California. It is rather strange, but that is what actually happens. We export our raw material to other countries and they come back to us as finished products.

However, what is even more strange is that when the department recommends the construction of a post office in a community, specifications call for a finish of imported artificial stone.

I realize that the Postmaster General is not completely responsible for this situation, but again, I feel that he should bring to the attention of his colleague, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing), the situation I have just mentioned with regard to the construction of post offices in the Quebec area, especially in Portneuf.

I know that as a rule, plans are mass-produced. I also know that artificial stone manufacturers make enough profits to promote the sale of their products. However, the minister will agree with me that whether it be wood or stone, an imitation can never match the real thing. A fine and well finished wood is always an eye-pleaser. The same goes for stone and granite. One does not need to be an expert to know that granite is durable, and will keep its colour. And, since the granite found in Rivière-à-Pierre comes in several colours, I urge the minister to advise the architects of the Department of Public Works to get in touch with the managers of the quarries in Portneuf, so that our post offices may be built with good and cheap materials that, above all, will not lose their colour.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, when most politicians begin to speak they say, "It won't be long, will it?" I shall only take a few minutes before the minister responds to some of the observations made in the discussion of Bill C-240.

When appearing before the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, the previous Postmaster General made it very clear that there would be no further closings of post offices in this country until a thorough investigation was made of the social and economic conditions in the areas affected. I should like to remind the Acting Postmaster General, no doubt soon to be the fully-fledged Postmaster General, that this commitment was given and I hope that he will honour it. I hope residents of affected areas will have an opportunity to present their views.

Not too long ago a statement was made before the committee that the Post Office Department intended to take every possible measure to reduce the deficit and to arrive at a balanced budget within a few years. Unfortunately, at that time the words "reasonable" and "social" were left out of the commitment. It must be realized that the postal service in Canada helps unite the country from east to west and that this is very important. Vast distances must be contended with and we realize that this adds considerably to the cost of the postal service. If the cost of moving mail across the continent is to be met, then of course we must expect bills such as this to appear several times a year.

Not too long ago at a meeting of the Transportation Research Forum in the United States the question of postal pricing policy was dealt with. A paragraph in the report of that forum deals with one of the problems we face in this country, and reads as follows:

> Postal service is international and domestic. Postal services are not limited to the concentrated business community and the highly populated city and suburban residential areas. They are available to every rural community and farm, to every outpost no matter how isolated. Postal services are not, nor can they be, limited to those services and coverage which are economically feasible.

I am sure the minister realizes that in this country as well, postal service must be provided to people in the outposts, to the rural community as well as the densely populated urban centres.

About a year ago a statement was issued by the Post Office Department to the effect that new facilities would be built, particularly in Montreal and Toronto. I hope it is realized that the smaller centres are entitled to the same type of service and the same consideration as large urban areas. I believe that when governments engage in a business activity it is because of a desire to encourage the growth of the nation and I am sure that is the case in this instance. However, concern for the welfare of the nation must take into consideration cost increases which will affect the people directly. I think it is disgraceful that we were not able to deal more favourably with those citizens who live on a fixed income. We failed to allow for an escalator clause in the Old Age Security Act yet bills such as this make extra demands on that fixed income. True, only pennies are involved today but the welfare of the nation is affected.

I can appreciate the fact that the government would like to operate the postal service on a break-even basis, but it must be remembered that Canada is one nation from east to west, entitled to a uniform postal service. I have the highest respect for the former Postmaster General, but I believe he was used as a hatchet man by some people in the government. He was brought into the picture to make changes in the postal service but at the same time was told that it must operate on a break-even basis. If the present minister has been given the same set of instructions, he is being used as a hatchet man as well. The whole social picture requires more than this if we are concerned about people in all corners of the nation.

It is well known that in situations such as this the government hires consultants. In my opinion, these consultants often forget about the social sciences. When the minister hires consultants, I strongly urge him to hire them on the basis of competitive tenders and not on the basis of selective invitation. Also, when he hires consultants I hope he will make sure that they are social scientists and that sociologists are included among them. It seems to me that we have become primarily concerned about economics without worrying about the social consequences of our course of action.

Post Office Act

I, personally, believe that the so-called pork barrel approach to filling post office positions across the country has come to an end in most places. People generally realize that post office vacancies must be filled according to ability, and the people in the area best suited for the jobs have filled vacancies. I hope we will never return to the pork barrel era in politics in filling these positions. If we do, without question the credibility of our post office will suffer, as it has suffered in the past. I hope the minister will have something to say about that when he responds in a few moments.

We are absolutely opposed to increasing the first class mailing rates at this time. Our position is that all types of mail, parcel post included, should share in the increased burden. Also, we do not believe that special concessions should be given to vested interests. The minister is obligated to explain to this House and the people of this country why certain vested interests have obtained special concessions with regard to postal rates. Unless he does that, he will not convince the people of this country that they are not being made to pay the shot for those vested interests outside this country that are being given great privileges to which they are not entitled. I hope that these privileges will stop and that all mail will be treated equally. In short, we do not want to hinder the ability of our people to communicate with one another across the nation. If we hinder them, it will mean the end of the road for Canada. I think we are concerned about Canada and concerned about the country's welfare. I think we want to make sure that people can communicate with one another at a reasonable price. If the incomes of people now on fixed incomes were to be increased, we might argue differently. However, on the one hand the government has stabilized the basic old age security income whereas, on the other hand, it has increased the cost of living of these people without considering that, in so doing, it is doing a disservice to them and to the people of this nation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I ought to advise the House that if the minister speaks now, he will close the debate at this stage of the proceedings.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, during the debate on the Post Office estimates and on the amendments to the Post Office Act, the same remarks keep recurring nearly all the time. This is probably the way things were being done one hundred years ago and the way they will be done a hundred years from now.

During such debate, the postal service is generally criticized and, very often, there is an hon. member who takes this opportunity to deal with items which are particular to his riding. This is normal. I must add that if on the one hand the Post Office Department has been criticized rather severely, on the other hand there have been attempts made both on the opposition and the government sides to be as objective as possible. Several members have even commended the department for the efficiency of its service. I want to thank all those who participated in this debate.

Mr. Speaker, we must be realistic and we cannot expect wild cheers for a legislation aiming at increasing the postal rates on any class of mail. Hon. members cannot be blamed for taking this opportunity to criticize the minister in charge.

In my remarks on the motion for second reading, I will not be able to reply to all the questions and to all the remarks. The committee which will study this bill will be in a better position to do it and if I cannot reply at the committee stage, I will personally get in touch with members who have raised specific problems.

In his remarks, the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales) said, and I quote: "I had a public relations job to do." I can assure him that I will appoint nobody from the opposition to do this job.

If all the department's clients were to read what the members have said during this debate, it would be enough to discourage them. However, most of our clients have a better opinion of the Post Office than some hon. members.

It is true that our postal system is not perfect and that we have much to do to improve the department's reputation. We can accept these critics but we can keep our heads high since, in spite of all the difficulties the department has been meeting and is still meeting, we have maintained a kind of service which compares favourably with any postal service in the world. The steps and decisions recently taken will significantly improve this service.

It has been said and repeated in the past—before 1963, if my memory serves me right—that the department was making profits. Perhaps this was true in the books but if the account system had been the same then as it is now, those profits would have turned into deficits. In fact during those years, the department did not have to pay rent and the fringe benefits of the employees were not paid by the Post Office Department but by the Treasury Board.

Today those expenses remain in our accounting books and the bill now before us will also fill in another gap, as it will require other departments to pay all their mailing expenses.

Some people wonder why, and rightly perhaps, after a rather substantial increase in postal rates in 1968, we had a $120 million deficit in 1970. As I already said, it is because of a tremendous decrease in mail volume, mostly due to transportation disruptions in Montreal, in the spring of 1970, and to rotating strikes in the summer of 1970.

Several members during this debate ask us to cut our expenditures. But how could it be done when practically all the costs incurred are for workers salaries and transportation expenses? People seem to forget very quickly, Mr. Speaker, that changes were long overdue in the department.

Have we already forgotten the Montpetit report on the working conditions in the Post Office Department? We could certainly save some money, but I hope we shall never go back to the system under which employees worked for starveling wages in outmoded buildings.

Mr. Speaker, a visit to certain offices where all improvements are not completed yet would show that no public servant from any other department would work in our buildings. Even though postal workers have the reputation of being militants, I feel they have shown great patience in some cases.

As far as our buildings are concerned, a five-year renewal and building program was undertaken in 1970. Its total cost is more than $300 million and it will take care of more than 800 post offices across the country.

In the city of Montreal only, the program providing for the construction of new post offices will cost about $60 million, whereas in the city of Toronto, a similar program will cost about $75 million. Moreover, as an essential tool for the planned updating of the Post Office, a five-year mechanization program of postal operations was recently approved by the cabinet.

The total cost of this program will amount to about $80 million. The mechanization of postal operations will ensure a much faster service. In certain cases, it will speed up mail delivery by several hours.

Finally, in order to offer its clients improved services, the department has decided to lauch new programs. I have already mentioned the assured mail program. No doubt, it is effective. It is not merely a publicity gimmick, as a member suggested.

We expect from this program a dependable postal service on which the Canadian people can rely. This program, launched last winter in Toronto, has since been implemented in four cities of western Canada: Winnipeg, Calgary, Edmonton and Vancouver. It will be established very soon in the Ottawa-Hull area, and in the city of Montreal, next July. It will progressively extend to practically all Canadian cities by the end of 1972.

Mr. Speaker, until this system becomes fully operative and because our whole transportation system and our pricing methods must be changed, it may be that in some cases our service will be far from adequate. People are of course impatient.

Another program designed to hasten mail deliveries is known as the "Postal Code". It has been initiated here in Ottawa on April 1. By the beginning of 1974, the Code will be a permanent part of every Canadian postal address. This Code, which is an alpha-numeric combination, has unparalleled accuracy. It contains a great deal of information and it can even designate a single building in the case of a large apartment of office complex containing many units.

The new service, Mr. Speaker, reflects the concern of the Post Office to better serve Canadians. When I announced certain changes such as re-establishment of wicket service on Saturdays, we were applauded for that step. My announcement that the door-to-door delivery had been resumed in some cities, a service that had been frozen in 1968, was again applauded. The announcement that we would not close any more small rural post offices except for extraordinary reasons got the same response.

Of course, since those announcements, the service has improved some. This is only a brief idea of the re-organization of the postal service.

In all fairness, it must be recognized that the program represents the biggest effort of a government to update the postal service. It is understandable that, as the minister in charge of the Post Office, I feel so proud. Never has the Post Office Department had so much money to spend in all its history to give the postal service the efficiency Canadians deserve. When all this is achieved, Mr. Speaker, we will have the most automated and fastest postal system in the world.

[English]

The post office is also investigating a number of new services which will supplement and complement the existing range of postal services. These are planned for introduction in late 1971 and 1972. One program being tested at the moment will provide mailers with the opportunity of bulking their mailable material in bag lots between major points at substantial savings. We have given this new service the name "Postpak", and you may expect to hear more about it.

We are also looking into an entirely new type of superfast service for letters, documents and business information within and between major cities or wherever a suitable market exists. This service will operate on the same principle as assured mail except that the mailing deadlines will be substantially later, with guaranteed over-night delivery. Naturally, the price charged will be commensurate with the service offered, but will provide businesses and individuals with a service capability that does not presently exist. As I have already said, we have lost some business in the post office during the past few years. We are going to get that business back and we are going to give much better service.

The hon. members for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau) and Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. Thomson) have raised questions about delegation of the powers of the Postmaster General, as proposed in clause 1, subclause (3) of the bill. First, let me point out that the power to delegate is being sought for the purpose of making field management in the postal service more effective by enabling it to respond quickly when the need arises in a particular situation. Such authority will be delegated by the Postmaster General personally, on the basis of need, and confidence in those to whom authority will be conferred. Furthermore, the Postmaster General will continue to be accountable for the postal service. Those to whom authority is delegated will exercise that authority in his name and he will be answerable for any action taken.

When delegated, the authority will be exercised within policy guidelines established by the Postmaster General. The sole purpose of the proposed delegation of authority is to enable us to derive the full benefit of decentralized administration, by making it possible for field managers to deal promptly with problems that arise, without the necessity of awaiting decisions from headquarters. No powers which are not already delegated to the deputy minister will be delegated to other persons.

Members have raised the question of what happened to the studies that were conducted from September 1968 to November 1969 by the firm of Kates, Peat, Marwick and Company. Their findings were published in the book "Blueprint for Change" on November 1, 1969. This report was tabled in the House of Commons on December 11, 1969. Since that date the feasibility of converting the post office to a Crown corporation has been, and continues to be, the subject of active consideration by the government. Given the country-wide effects of such a change, it is not a matter to be entered into lightly.

A number of representations have been made on the subject of charges assessed to rural box holders. At the present time, customers in towns and villages not having letter-carrier delivery are entitled to free general delivery service across the counter at their local post office. If they wish the additional convenience of a locked box, a charge is made. In cities and town where letter-carrier delivery is provided, locked box service is also available but at a charge which is about twice that made to rural residents. Nevertheless, we are examining this general situation and are reviewing our entire policy with respect to locked boxes and the relative scale of charges assessed to both rural and urban residents. Our objective will be to achieve the greatest degree of equity possible, making allowance for differing conditions and needs.

An hon. member, I think it was the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales), has raised the question of delays in the delivery of unaddressed householder mail. I am pleased to inform the House that following consultations with the unions delivery time for householder mail has been reduced from seven consecutive delivery days to five for magazines or the catalogue type of mail and three delivery days for the flyer, card or envelope type of householder mail. This improvement in service took effect as of June 1.

It is the intention of the Canada Post Office, I might add, to establish appropriate delivery specifications for classes of mail other than first class, once the assured mail program has been implemented across Canada. Other classes of mail will not receive the same type of priority in handling and will not as a rule be carried by air. This is one of the reasons they are cheaper. Nevertheless, we believe reliable delivery specifications can be provided which will emphasize regularity and consistency, rather than high speed. The quality of service and the cost of providing the service justify the substantially lower rates which will apply to these classes of mail. As in the case with the assured mail program, the quality assurance program will measure results in relation to specification, on a continuing basis.

Comments have been made concerning the imbalance of foreign mail, and the cost of handling this mail. In discussing the costs incurred by the Canada Post Office in the handling of incoming foreign mail, reference was made to a universal postal congress which would take place on July 1, 1971. The last congress of the Universal

Division

Postal Union took place in Tokyo in 1969 and the next will not take place until 1974. However, the new Acts of the Universal Postal Union Congress will become effective July 1, 1971 and the new convention will contain provisions for compensating postal administrations, like Canada, which receive more mail than they despatch. The compensation rate authorized by the Tokyo Congress is 8 cents per pound calculated on the imbalance of traffic. This rate is far too low to cover actual costs, but it is under review in the Universal Postal Union and hopefully will be set at a more realistic level by the next congress in 1974. These provisions will also apply to our imbalance of traffic with the United States. I can add that some officials of my department will be in Washington on Monday to discuss the question of the imbalance of traffic with the United States with their counterparts in an effort to obtain a new agreement in this area.

Now, a word about what has been happening with respect to those groups and associations which have asked to be excluded from the effects of the increase in third class rates on the ground that this is so vital a matter to them. They appreciate the problem involved, but think a solution can be found. They also realize that a similar problem is being faced in the United States with respect to this class of mail, and that the post office there is looking for a way of reducing these losses. But I will have an answer for these people before the end of the debates which are now taking place.

In closing, I want to say that in my department priority is being placed on service and I believe we are now giving Canadians the kind of service they deserve.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Jerome: Perhaps I could give the business of the House for Friday, which had originally been agreed upon to be an opposition day. Since that agreement has been changed, Friday will be a government day. We will commence on Friday with The Canada Development Corporation, followed by the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act and subsequently the Judges Act. This will be the schedule for Friday. Subject to a further meeting of

House leaders which will take place early next week, there have been consultations concerning an order in the following terms on which, I understand, there may be unanimous agreement of the House: that on Mondays, June 7 and 14, and Tuesdays, June 8 and 15 and Thursdays, June 10 and 17 of this year, the ordinary hours of sitting of the House shall be from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m.; 2 p.m. to 6 p.m. and 8 p.m. to 10 p.m., and that, when any such day is designated as an allotted day for the consideration of the business of supply under the provisions of Standing Order 58, the proceedings on that business shall be interrupted or disposed of no later than 6 p.m., in order that government business may be considered from 8 p.m. to 10 p.m on such day and that the daily adjournment proceedings shall not be set aside by virtue of the operation of this order; that for the purposes of section (5) of Standing Order 58, the number of sitting days allotted to the consideration of business of supply in the period ending not later than June 30, 1971 shall be fixed at ten, provided that an additional three sitting days shall be added to the total number of days allotted for the consideration of the business of supply in the period ending not later than December 10, 1971; and that the order of business and procedure set out in section (10) of Standing Order 58 shall apply to the tenth allotted day in the current period and to the eighth allotted day in the next ensuring period.

Business of the House

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, the statement made by the parliamentary secretary represents the agreement which was arrived at by the House leaders, and we in this party give unanimous consent for it to be made an order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The statement of my hon. friend is also correct, and we also agree.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: We were at the meeting, Mr. Speaker, and we agree.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I have to assume that there is unanimous consent, since I have not heard from the independents in the House. Is there unanimity?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I understand there is unanimous consent and it is not necessary for me to repeat the terms of the order suggested by the parliamentary secretary.

It is agreed and so ordered.

It being six o'clock, I now leave the chair. This House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HEALTH

STATEMENT ON PRESENCE OF TYPHOID ON LIBERIAN FREIGHTER "BIRTIE MICHAELS"

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a brief statement to the House concerning a confirmed case of typhoid aboard the Liberian freighter Birtie Michaels which is presently berthed in Thunder Bay, Ontario.

The United States Public Health Service authorities have informed my officials that a suspected case of typhoid contracted by the wife of a crew member has been confirmed. This occurred at Chicago, Illinois, and following a full health inspection the vessel was cleared for passage to Thunder Bay. On arrival at Thunder Bay on the night of June 1, the Birtie Michaels was held at anchor pending a full investigation by federal, municipal and provincial health authorities.

On the morning of June 2 the ship was boarded by federal and municipal health officials, the crew medically examined, and the food, water, eating and sanitation facilities thoroughly checked. None of the crew were found to have symptoms or signs suggestive of typhoid. However, two crew members with minor symptoms not specific to typhoid have been removed to the Port Arthur General Hospital for observation.

Following the examination the ship was allowed to proceed under strict surveillance to its berth to load its cargo. The crew are confined to the ship and are being medically examined daily, and will not be allowed ashore until released by federal and municipal health authorities.

I wish to assure the House, the people of Thunder Bay, and indeed all Canadians that every necessary measure is being taken to ensure the safety and health of the crew of the Birtie Michaels and of all Canadians. At the same time I would like to acknowledge the assistance and co-operation of the U.S. Public Health Service, the Ontario Department of Health, and the local hospital, medical and harbour authorities in Thunder Bay.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the brief statement by the Minister of National Health and Welfare concerning the confirmed case of typhoid aboard the Liberian freighter Birtie Michaels which is presently berthed at Thunder Bay, Ontario. According to the statement, it was reported by the U.S. Public Health Service that they had discovered a case of typhoid in the wife of a crew member. This occurred at Chicago, Illinois, and after a thorough investigation the vessel was cleared for passage to Thunder Bay.

My understanding is that this boat came from Spain, having sailed on May 7, 1971, with a crew of 24. On May 19 the ship arrived at Montreal where the woman was given treatment by a physician but she was still ill when the ship was passing by Detroit. At Chicago she was placed in hospital and is being treated there for typhoid fever.

The necessary checks on food and drinking water on the boat were done. Rectal swabs were taken and no symptoms or signs of typhoid were discovered. The boat was allowed to proceed to Thunder Bay where it was again rechecked thoroughly by the Canadian authorities, provincial, municipal and federal, and the ship is still being kept under surveillance.

This would appear to be a case where the infection was picked up on or before the boat left Spain and presents a minimum of danger to the Canadian people. It is, however, a little disturbing to note that references to typhoid fever are creeping more and more into the news when proper sanitation and vaccination can control it.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

AGREEMENT ON SECURITY OF WEST BERLIN AS PREREQUISITE TO CONFERENCE ON BALANCED FORCE REDUCTIONS IN EUROPE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the right hon. the Prime Minister a question relating to our position during the discussions in Lisbon regarding NATO. Is it still a prerequisite to the holding of a European security conference as far as Canada is concerned that a security arrangement must be made with regard to West Berlin? Is this still a prerequisite in the view of the Canadian government, as it was last December when the NATO council took this position?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can only attempt to answer the question in the very same terms that I answered it a few days ago: it is not a prerequisite in the sense that we do not feel that the Berlin question must be settled finally before even sitting down to discuss mutual and balanced force reductions in Europe. However, we do feel that before a conference on European security can usefully be held we will have to know that there are conditions for progress which have been achieved. One of those conditions for progress is that we should know there is some palpable and possible solution to the Berlin question.

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question for the purpose of clarification. Then it is no longer the position of the government of Canada that there has to be a security arrangement regarding West Berlin before a European security conference would be appropriate?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I should like to know if the Leader of the Opposition is asking whether the Berlin question would have to be settled finally in every way before we would sit down to discuss other questions with the Soviet Union.

Mr. Stanfield: No, Mr. Speaker. What I am asking the Prime Minister is whether the position of the government of Canada and the position to be taken by the Secretary of State for External Affairs at the NATO conference is the position that Canada took last December along with our NATO allies or whether this position has been changed, as I believe the Prime Minister has just indicated to me that it has been changed?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the answer is that it has not been changed.

CANADIAN RECOMMENDATION THAT RUSSIAN MUTUAL TROOP REDUCTION PROPOSALS BE INVESTIGATED BY NATO ENVOY

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister on a related matter. Is the Secretary of State for External Affairs recommending to the foreign ministers at NATO that an envoy be sent to eastern Europe to investigate Russian proposals for mutual troop reductions?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the view has been expressed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs that such an envoy should be sent.

WELFARE

CONSIDERATION OF JURISDICTION OVER SOCIAL SECURITY AND WELFARE AT FORTHCOMING MINISTERS' MEETING

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare arising out of various speculations that have taken place. Can the minister inform the House whether the question of jurisdiction over social security and welfare is on the agenda of the meeting of welfare ministers to be held next week, particularly in view of the demands of some provinces that they have full jurisdiction in these fields?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The matter of social policy is on the agenda Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would guess that the meeting of ministers of welfare would discuss social policy; that would not be very revealing. I asked the minister whether the question of provincial or federal jurisdiction in the fields of social security and welfare is on the agenda in preparation for the constitutional conference?

Mr. Munro: The jurisdictional aspect of social policy is not an item on the agenda, Mr. Speaker. We will be talking in terms of the various policies we have enunciated in the white paper and the suggested and proposed changes we might have to offer to meet some of the views advanced by the provinces and other people generally.

JURISDICTION OVER SOCIAL SECURITY AND WELFARE—DISCUSSION WITH PREMIER BOURASSA OF INCLUSION ON CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCE AGENDA

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Did his recent discussions with the Prime Minister of Quebec with regard to items to be discussed at the constitutional conference touch upon the question of jurisdiction in the fields of social security and welfare and, also, will the Minister of National Health and Welfare be accompanying him to Victoria on whatever date the conference may now be held?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer to both questions is yes.

DISCUSSIONS WITH PROVINCES OF FURTHER FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO CITIES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of reports that cities in various parts of Canada, because of the financial squeeze in which they find themselves, are cutting back on the categories of people who can get welfare, will the government discuss with the provinces the raising of the percentage which the federal government pays under the Canada Assistance Plan to meet the costs of welfare?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are coping with that in other ways. I must remind the House that the meeting in Victoria is to be primarily a constitutional one and that the meeting of ministers of health and welfare previous to it has been asked to report to the constitutional conference. The discussion in Victoria will revolve mainly around constitutional matters. What will be discussed between the welfare ministers would be, I think, couched in those terms.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

In order to facilitate the task of the delegates to the conference which will soon be held in Victoria, could the Prime Minister ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare to state clearly the views of the federal government on the Castonguay report dealing with powers in social matters before the conference or could he make that statement himself on behalf of the government?

Mr. Speaker: I suppose that the hon. member is suggesting to the Prime Minister or to a government representative that they should make such a statement before the conference. That statement could not be made at this time, but rather on motions.

[English]

PRELIMINARY STUDY OF CONDITIONS BY MINISTER PRIOR TO MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether, in preparation for the conference with the provincial ministers next week, he has conducted any preliminary studies himself as to welfare conditions across the country and as to the adequacy of welfare programs, and has satisfied himself of the extent to which Canadians may be suffering as a result of inadequate welfare programs?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, yes, I have looked at all those matters mentioned by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Several hon. members are seeking to ask supplementary questions. Before returning to the subject and recognizing, among others, the hon. member for Fraser Valley West, the hon. member for Charlevoix and the hon. member for Oxford, the Chair will first recognize the hon. member for Portneuf.

AGRICULTURE

CANADIAN MINK BREEDERS' ASSOCIATION—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Agriculture.

Did the Canadian Mink Breeders Association make representations recently about its financial difficulties and in the affirmative, does the minister intend to make a statement to the House soon to announce the measures he is considering to help it?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I believe representations were made by this association but not recently. I believe they were made about five or six weeks ago. I do not intend to make a statement in the House soon.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

REQUEST FOR POSTPONEMENT BY PREMIER THATCHER—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Will he, as announced in this morning's papers, be taking into consideration the request by the Premier of Saskatchewan for postponement of the Victoria conference?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I shall certainly be taking that request into consideration, but I am not sure I can accede to it. I have initiated consultations to establish whether it can be done, but it now seems it would be quite difficult at this date to alter arrangements agreed upon concerning the Victoria meeting.

Finally, after my consultations, I shall send a reply to Premier Thatcher and I shall be glad to communicate it to the House.

[English]

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): A supplementary question. Can the Prime Minister say whether the premier of Saskatchewan was aware of the date of the constitutional conference before he called the provincial election?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member is not expecting a reply at this time to the question he has asked.

WELFARE

ADDITIONAL FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO PROVINCES BECAUSE OF LAPSE OF SEASONAL UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that seasonal unemployment benefits ran out at the end of May and this will involve additional heavy welfare costs for the provinces, is the government considering at the present time giving special assistance to the provinces to meet these extra welfare costs because of the seasonal benefits having expired?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government's position has not changed since the Minister of Labour dealt with that question some time ago.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RESETTLEMENT OF REFUGEES FROM EAST PAKISTAN NOW IN INDIA—CANADIAN INITIATIVE WITHIN COMMONWEALTH OR UNITED NATIONS

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): My question is for the Prime Minister. What initiative is Canada taking within the Commonwealth or the United Nations to bring to a successful conclusion the very serious problem in Pakistan with reference to the possible resettlement of the many millions of refugees now flooding into India?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Beyond saying that the matter is under very active consideration, that we have had reports from our High Commissioner in Pakistan, that the department is doing what it can, and that the government has indicated its willingness to assist in solutions when they are found, there is nothing I can add of a more positive nature at this stage.

Mr. Macquarrie: May I ask the Prime Minister if the government intends to take the matter before a Commonwealth body or an appropriate United Nations body hopefully to bring about a settlement?

Mr. Trudeau: I cannot answer at this time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): A supplementary question. Can the Prime Minister tell the House whether consultations are being undertaken with the United Nations, through United Nations agencies or with the government of the United States and the United Kingdom with a view to the political settlement of this tragic affair?

Mr. Trudeau: I am afraid I cannot answer that question either, Mr. Speaker. I will refer it to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

TRADE

POSSIBLE ADMISSION OF GREAT BRITAIN INTO EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET—CONDITIONS FOR ENTRY OF CANADIAN PRODUCTS INTO BRITISH MARKET

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): My question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the imminence of Great Britain's entry into the European Common Market and as the only assurances that have been made public regarding the continued entry of Commonwealth products into the British market have dealt with those of New Zealand, will the minister take the first opportunity on motions to outline to the House what assurances he has received regarding conditions of entry of Canadian products into the British market once that country enters the ECM?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Good Lord, Mr. Speaker, I have talked about that on such a number of occasions! The hon. member for Calgary Centre asked me for a global report. I have promised this to him. I might well do so on the budget debate and intend to give a full account of these matters, but I cannot—I know you are about to stop me, Mr. Speaker—discuss the whole issue in one minute.

Mr. Hees: I asked for a statement on motions. The minister has obviously not given any answer at any time. I have a supplementary question. The monthly breakdown between crude, semi-processed and manufactured products is normally made available about a week earlier than this each month and is now almost impossible to obtain. Is the holding up of that report due to the fact that exports of manufactured products have fallen off during April even more than in the sharp fashion they did in the early months of the year?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think that answer might be given by the minister when he makes a statement on motions or whenever he makes a statement to the House, as he indicated when he replied to the original question.

Mr. Hees: Would the minister not take the first opportunity on motions to do this, that is, the next time he is in the House, rather than waiting for the budget debate or some time next fall, next spring or next year?

Mr. Pepin: I will find the reference in Hansard, but I gave this information about 10 or 15 days ago. I reported that for the last month about which I was talking at that time, probably April or March, the percentage of manufactured products in our exports had gone up to 40 per cent.

YOUTH

SUGGESTED PROVISION OF ACCOMMODATION FOR TRAVELLING STUDENTS IN MOSS PARK ARMOURY, TORONTO

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the fact that many students will be visiting Toronto this summer, thereby creating a serious accommodation problem, would the minister contact Toronto city officials and indicate that the federal government is willing to help these young people to find accommodation by making available the Moss Park Armoury?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): We have received no indication from the Toronto authorities that there is any need for the Moss Park Armoury. I would have to check to see whether or not, as last year, the facilities will be in use in connection with the student summer militia program.

AIR CANADA

PROVISION OF MAXIMUM EMPLOYMENT TO CANADIAN INDUSTRY IN PURCHASING AIRCRAFT

Hon J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): In the absence of the Minister of Transport I would direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In light of the fact that the board of directors of Air Canada has postponed its decision with regard to the purchase of Tri-Star aircraft until June 10, can the minister assure the House that these directors are fully aware of the importance of making the purchase in a way which will provide the maximum of employment in the Canadian air industry having regard to the high rate of unemployment in the industry at the present time?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I am quite sure they are aware of that, Mr. Speaker.

THE CENSUS

POSSIBLE PROSECUTION OF PERSONS REFUSING TO COMPLETE FORMS IN UNFAMILIAR LANGUAGE

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Can he tell the House whether legal action will be taken against the persons who refused to fill out the census form because it was received in the official language with which they are not familiar?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, indeed, that question is important. The Commissioner of Official Languages took up the matter with us and, last Friday we published a communiqué from which I would like to quote the following extract, if I may:

—those persons who have been unable or unwilling to fill out the questionnaire because they received an English form instead of a French one, or vice versa, need not fear that they have broken the law. A census representative will visit them after June 1 if the form was not returned. The householder will then be given a form in the official language of his choice.

INFORMATION CANADA

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT ON SECURITY CHECK ON JEAN-LOUIS GAGNON

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I address my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister assured the House that he would have a security check made on Jean-Louis Gagnon, the head of Information Canada, but has never informed the House as to the findings, would he consider tabling for the information of hon. members the comprehensive report which was made for the cabinet following this security check?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): There was no such comprehensive report made for the cabinet. This was a report made just for myself. A question was asked on the subject more than a year ago, I believe, and I replied that I had checked, and that a security check had been made and I had been assured that there was nothing in this case to look at with alarm.

Mr. Thompson: I asked the question only because it had been brought to my attention that such a confidential report was prepared very recently. I should like to know whether we could not have the same assurance as the right hon. gentleman has given to members of the cabinet, even though he says no report has been made.

Mr. Trudeau: I can assure the hon. member, although I might perhaps be divulging cabinet secrets, that this matter has not been discussed in cabinet for more than a year as far as I can remember, and there has been no report of the nature the hon. member has suggested.

GRAIN

BARLEY—ALLEGED HIGHER PRICE TO EASTERN FARMERS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the hon. minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board.

On May 26, the minister took notice of the question I was asking him and part of which read as follows:

The Canadian Wheat Board is said to have recently sold for export 100,000 tons of feed barley at a price of 93 cents a bushel, F.O.B. Churchill, and my question is: Why do Eastern Canada cattle farmers always have to buy their feed barley at a price higher than that set by the Canadian Wheat Board for export purposes?

Is the minister in a position to answer that question today?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): As I informed the House when I answered this question on a previous occasion, it is not customary to comment upon the particular prices of transactions between the Wheat Board and any buyer. This is information which is confidential to the buyer and the seller. But I also indicated there was automatically a wide differential between prices in the St. Lawrence ports and in Churchill because of the difference in transportation costs. I have no information which suggests to me there is any alteration in prices as between one area of destination and another. As far as I can tell, prices of feed grain moving out of Churchill and of feed grain leaving the St. Lawrence area reflect differentials which are justified by the difference in the cost of transportation.

IMMEDIATE IMPLEMENTATION OF TRANSITIONAL ACREAGE PAYMENT APART FROM STABILIZATION LEGISLATION

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I have a question for the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the fact that an overwhelming preponderance of the evidence advanced by witnesses representing western farm organizations before the Standing Committee on Agriculture this week during the sittings in connection with Bill C-244 was to the effect that the proposed $100 million transitional acreage payment should be made at once, rather than awaiting the passage of the complete package of legislation because of its controversial nature, would the minister consult with his cabinet colleagues with a view to making this emergency acreage payment at once?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me the hon. member is bringing before the House the substance of a debate which took place when the bill itself was before us. He is also bringing before the chamber deliberations which are proceeding in the committee on agriculture, and I wonder whether a question in those terms is in order. However, since the question has been asked, perhaps the minister might reply briefly and we will then go on to the next subject.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): As indicated previously, the various parts of Bill C-244 are all related and the $100 million will be paid out to farmers as soon as that bill, with all its provisions, including the provision for the repeal of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, becomes law.

AGRICULTURE

SALE OF FERTILIZER BY IMPERIAL OIL AT LOWER PRICE IN UNITED STATES THAN IN CANADA

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Has his department investigated the reasons a plant owned by the Imperial Oil Company, which has received a $10 million grant under the government's incentive program, is selling fertilizer in Plentywood, Montana, at $86 a ton while selling it in Canada at $106 a ton? If not, will the hon. gentleman undertake to have such an investigation carried out?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): If the hon. member will give us some evidence of this, I will be glad to look into the matter.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

EFFECT OF FIRE AT MOOSONEE ON BASE

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence whether any damage has been done to the air base at Moosonee by the recent fire? Would the minister also tell us in what way troops have been deployed and used to protect the municipality?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): As I understand it there has been no actual damage, at least up the present time, to any of the facilities at Moosonee. The principal participation of the Department of National Defence there has been to fly in a bulldozer from Petawawa and firefighting equipment from North Bay to assist the local authorities to extinguish the fire.

Mr. Peters: May I ask whether the fire is now contained? If not, is there an imminent danger to the base at Moosonee?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The last report I received was that the fire appears to be under control. We have been watching the situation very closely because of the proximity of the fire to the radar base.

IMMIGRATION APPEAL BOARD ACT

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENTS TO COPE WITH BACKLOG OF APPEALS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Since there are now some 6,000 appeals pending before the Immigration Appeal Board, does the minister intend to bring in the promised amendments to the Immigration Appeal Board Act before the end of this session, or must we expect to see this continuing sore get bigger over the rest of the year?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): In view of the heavy legislative load before the House I have some doubt about our ability to deal with this matter before we adjourn, as things stand at the moment.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will allow a supplementary, but I invite hon. members to be as conservative as possible in regard to supplementaries because we will soon be running short of time.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, it is rather difficult for me to comply with your request but I shall attempt to do so. My supplementary is to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Would the minister introduce the legislation prior to the adjournment so that we may study it during the summer?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I think we might give consideration to that. The alternative, of course, is to hold it in order to make any last minute improvements to it; but I will certainly give the matter consideration.

Would he investigate a copy of a brochure produced by Air Canada, and appearing on the front page of at least one Canadian newspaper today, which indicates in no uncertain terms that Canada begins with French-speaking Quebec in the east and ends at Vancouver in the west? As a matter of fact, I am getting a little fed up with this.

INCOME TAX

REPORTED PUBLICITY CAMPAIGN FOR REFORM BILL

Mr. Murray McBride (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of reports that the Department of Finance will launch a $1 million publicity campaign in support of the new tax reform bill, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the government plans to undertake such a public relations campaign?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is no intention to have a public relations campaign to support, as I believe the newspapers put it, the budgetary measures of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fairweather: A million dollars would not be enough for that.

Mr. Trudeau: After the bill has been discussed and hopefully passed by the House and becomes law there is provision not for the Department of Finance but for the Department of National Revenue to conduct a campaign to explain to the taxpayers how the new tax law—

Mr. Fairweather: Explain to the taxpayers how to make out their tax forms.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, I see the opposition is not interested in knowing how the taxpayers' money is spent.

Mr. Crouse: Neither are you.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

JURISDICTION OVER SOCIAL SECURITY AND WELFARE—UNDERSTANDING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND PREMIER BOURASSA FOLLOWING DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister with reference to the question of the constitutional jurisdiction over social security and welfare. Can the Prime Minister say whether in his discussions with Premier Bourassa he and the Prime Minister of Quebec have come to any understanding?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can truthfully answer that question only after the event. I cannot say now whether there will be an understanding reached in Victoria or not. I hope that as a result not only of my meetings with the premier but the meetings of the Minister of Justice of Canada with the premiers and Attorneys General of all the provinces in the past several months there will be an understanding in Victoria.

TRANSFER OF FORD FOUNDRY OPERATION AT WINDSOR TO FLAT ROCK, MICHIGAN

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce; it is not the same question that was dealt with on Tuesday. Has there been any discussion between his department and Ford Motor Company of Canada with regard to the phasing out of their Windsor foundry and the transfer of this work and the jobs to their new plant at Flat Rock, Michigan, and is his department discouraging such a move?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, an explanation was provided by the company about the move and I reported on that very shortly in the House the other day.

Inquiries of the Ministry

YOUTH

OVERSEAS STUDENT EXCHANGE PROGRAM—APPLICATIONS RECEIVED AND APPROVED

Mr. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration a question relating to the international student summer employment exchange program. Can the minister inform the House how many student applications have now been accepted under this program following the information he gave the House on May 17 that only 1,000 out of something over 3,000 had then been accepted?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to get another up to date figure.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—BREAKDOWN OF GRANTS BY PROVINCES

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Secretary of State whether any breakdown of the moneys under the Opportunities for Youth program has been made on a provincial basis? If not, will such a breakdown be made and will it be made public?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Obviously, Mr. Speaker, every time a project is approved and a subsidy is granted to its originators, we take into account some criteria as to the distribution across the country and we record those figures. However, I intend to inform the House of this distribution when we reach the end of the funds earmarked for this program so as to avoid any misunderstanding; the House will thus be in a position to assess the balance of this distribution according to the criteria set up when this program was initiated.

[English]

Mr. Lundrigan: In view of the fact that once action has been taken no representations can be made by members of the House of Commons or by provincial governments in regard to the provincial distribution of the budget, would the minister undertake to make available now figures regarding what amounts have in fact been spent provincially? Surely to goodness that is not too difficult for the minister. Would he do it now?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I have been misunderstood by the hon. member. I indicated that all the funds had not been spent so far while he assumes they have. I said I would give—

Some hon. Members: Ah, ah.

Mr. Pelletier: Then I must be the one who did not get it.

[English]

Mr. Lundrigan: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me there is some difficulty in communication at this time between the minister and the hon. member. I hope that the question can be asked and answered briefly because, as I suggested a moment ago, we are running short of time.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State is guilty of selective misunderstanding. May I ask him whether he will now make available to the House, today or within the next couple of days, the actual amounts of money expended in the form of a provincial breakdown of the expenditures.

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I fail to appreciate the hon. member's innuendoes, particularly since they are unfounded. I answered his question, whether he liked the answer or not is none of my business.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

POSITION OF GOVERNMENT RESPECTING STATEMENT BY PREMIER OF ONTARIO

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister.

Would he indicate his reaction to the recent statement by the premier of Ontario to the effect that it is the socialist philosophy of the federal government which has brought the Canadian economy to a standstill and that it is about time that the citizens be given a chance to work? Have the Prime Minister and the government found a way to reply to the charges made by this high authority?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the best answer I can give is to send him back to back with the leader of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I thank you.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

INTENTION TO DISCONTINUE OTTAWA-TORONTO PASSENGER TRAIN SERVICE

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport and it arises from recently published railway passenger policy. Has the Department of Transport taken note of the recently reported intention of Canadian National Railways to discontinue all of its Ottawa-Toronto passenger train service, and of the damaging nature of such action to economic and social interests and to services to the general public?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cardigan.

TRANSPORT

RESTORATION OF SUBSIDY TO NORTHUMBERLAND FERRIES LIMITED IN LIGHT OF INCREASE IN FERRY RATES

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Transport but in his absence I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary, or to the acting minister, or even to the Prime Minister. Is it the intention of the government to restore the government subsidy to Northumberland Ferries Limited, the removal of which a short time ago resulted in a very substantial increase in ferry rates between Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia?

BROADCASTING

PROPOSED SALE OF CABLEVISION INTEREST IN QUEBEC—POLICY ON ISSUANCE OF LICENCES TO AGENTS OF CROWN IN PROVINCES

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of certain statements yesterday about the proposed sale of cablevision interests in Quebec, has there been any change in federal policy prohibiting the issuance of broadcasting licences to agents of the Crown in the provinces?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I do not believe the sale to which the hon. member refers is in any way an encroachement upon those policies as they presently exist.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Secretary of State. In view of the cabinet directive of June 4, 1970 pursuant to Section 27 of the Broadcasting Act, which prohibits the CRTC issuing licences to Her Majesty in right of any province or to agents of Her Majesty in right of any province, I wonder whether the Secretary of State has recommended to the cabinet a change in this directive so that educational radio and television stations in Ontario, Alberta and Saskatchewan which were affected by the directive can now apply and perhaps obtain similar licences?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): We are studying this question, Mr. Speaker, and we discussed it with two of the three provinces concerned. One has yet to be consulted and after these discussions we shall perhaps indeed find it advisable to bring suggestions to the attention of the Cabinet, but this has not yet been done because these discussions are still in progress.

PROPOSED SALE OF CABLEVISION INTEREST IN CANADA —DISCUSSION BETWEEN FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL MINISTERS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State.

With regard to the proposal which the Quebec government, through the General Investment Corporation and several companies, must make to the CRTC on June 28, would the minister indicate whether he has discussed this particular question with his Quebec counterpart and if not, is he in a position to say that the federal government does not object to this project?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, my Quebec counterpart has asked me not to reveal the specific questions which we discussed this morning. He wants our conversations to remain confidential until they are brought to an end. I would simply indicate that according to the terms of the transactions in question, if we are talking about the same ones, no controlling interests of a provincial agency are involved, and as far as I know, the provincial agency will not file an application with the CRTC at the end of the month, but I repeat that this is only from what I know about the project.

BRUCK MILLS LIMITED—POSSIBLE CLOSING OF MONTREAL PLANT

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the hon. Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Could he tell us whether Bruck Mills Limited have advised his department of their plans to shut down their plant in Montreal, a situation which would involve in some way or other 250 people now employed there?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of a previous action by Bruck Mills Limited but not of the one referred to in the hon. member's question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question.

Is the hon. minister aware of the fact that this company has already received incentive grants totalling over $800,000 from the Department of Regional Economic Expansion for modernizing their plants and that this has all the appearances of an assault on the public purse?

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Since there has been considerable discussion of the proposal that the smaller provinces should unite to form more viable political units, is the government intending to discuss this proposal at the upcoming constitutional conference in Victoria?

DEPARTMENTAL POSITION ON HIRING OF STUDENTS

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Did the minister's department stress that students, if available, be hired for census-taking and did this recommendation go out from his department to those in charge of the hiring of census workers?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have already answered this question. Census-takers could be students. There was no objection to that. But I have already pointed out it was for a very short time and many students were not interested in view of that fact. I have also reported to the House that a number of students will be employed during the summer in putting together the information obtained by the census.

REQUEST BY CANADIAN-UKRAINIAN COMMITTEE RESPECTING LIBERATION OF VALENTYN MOROZ AND SVIATOSLAV KARAVANSKI

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Prime Minister. I would ask the Prime Minister whether he replied to the request of the Ukrainian "Set Them Free" committee regarding the liberation of the historian Valentyn Moroz and the writer Sviatoslav Karavanski?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure if that is the name of the committee that asked to meet me but I am meeting with a committee representing the Ukrainian Canadians on Monday when I will take the occasion to repeat to them what I said both on radio and in the House on the matter of the Ukraine.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. In view of the Prime Minister's cosy connection with Kosygin and the latter's forthcoming visit to Canada, will the Prime Minister intervene personally to request the liberation of these two intellectuals from unjustified imprisonment?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, I did not intervene during my recent visit to the Soviet Union. I would have to hear a great deal more representations—perhaps that will happen Monday—from the official representatives of the Ukrainian Association of Canada before considering such representations.

POLLUTION

DEADLINE FOR CLOSING OF E. B. EDDY PLANT

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister in charge of housing. Now that it appears the minister will be carrying the ball on the question of Eddy's, after three government ministers have already fumbled, can the minister say whether he is going to stick to the 1975 deadline?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, there never has been a 1975 deadline officially endorsed.

Mr. Bell: Will the minister say, deadline or not, whether he is going to close down Eddy's or just clean up the river?

[Mr. Paproski.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I would make no such statement at this time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have run out of time. I believe the hon. member for Red Deer is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to rise on a question of privilege in the absence of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs but in view of the statement the Prime Minister made during the question period and in view of the great concern of many Canadian people with regard to the security of this nation I must inform the Prime Minister that I have a letter in my hand dated March 12, 1971, over the signature of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs which reads in part:

I would like to point out that as a member of the government—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hope the hon. member can indicate what his question of privilege is. I have pointed out to hon. members on a number of occasions that their suggested questions of privilege are rather far from being legitimate questions of privilege. The hon. member has the floor for one purpose at the present time and that is to indicate to the Chair that there is a question of privilege. I would hope he can indicate this as soon as possible.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege is simply that I think the House deserves an explanation tomorrow because of the fact that the Prime Minister can hardly be expected to do so today, but I must quote one sentence from this letter in order to point out why I ask this. The key sentence in this letter is:

For this reason—

That is the allegations which have been made in regard to Mr. Gagnon.

—a comprehensive report was drawn up for the use of cabinet only—

I hope you will understand that I cannot release this material, for the same reason that security checks on all people remain secret. It would be an invasion of privacy and against the principles of this government if we were to give out information on such reports.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether that is the one sentence to which the hon. member referred. The hon. member is reading the letter and making a speech. Again, this is not a question of privilege. I suggest to him that we will all be here tomorrow and if he wishes to pursue the matter he can ask questions to try to elucidate or clarify the apparently difficult situation to which he refers. But I do not think that that constitutes a question of privilege.

Mr. Thompson: My question of privilege relates to the fact that there was obviously misinformation given to the House today by the Prime Minister. I am only asking that he clarify this tomorrow, in the realization that he cannot be expected to give this type of information today in the absence of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. That is my question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: That is not a question of privilege. If I am required to make a ruling, I suggest to the hon. member that he has perhaps a very legitimate question which might have been asked today or could be asked tomorrow. It might have been asked today if I had had an opportunity to recognize the hon. gentleman on a supplementary question. Perhaps it would have been easier. If the hon. member had caught my eye, I would have recognized him. He has now asked the question and he can assume he will get a reply in due course.

Mr. Trudeau: Perhaps I can answer the question in part today.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps this is the wish of the House. However, I have made a ruling that there is no question of privilege, and we have gone beyond the question period. I think that this could wait until tomorrow.

Mr. MacLean: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member for Malpeque but I believe there is another question of privilege or point of order, or some point.

Mr. Alkenbrack: I also rise briefly on a question of privilege to point out that the roster system, as established by the Prime Minister—and I wish to make this point while he is still in his seat so his attention will be directed toward it—is inoperative and defunct. I asked a question originally intended for the Minister of Transport, who was unavoidably absent from the chamber, so I directed the question to his parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Quebec East. Apparently he is not present either, so I received no response to my question which was one of vital and national interest to all members of the House, and particularly to many members on the government benches.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alkenbrack: Similarly, my colleague, the hon. member for Cardigan, asked a question concerning marine transport and ferry service. There was no one present to answer his question. My question related to the reported cessation of the CNR passenger service between the capital and Toronto. Both questions are of vital interest to many members. The roster system, as proven, is not giving us service.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: This might be a legitimate grievance, but again I hesitate to say that there is a question of privilege. Perhaps it is more of a point of order or a grievance which might be raised by the hon. member at the appropriate time. But I suggest to the hon. member that this is not a question of privilege.

Business of the House

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. MacLean: Before orders of the day are called, I would ask the acting government House leader whether he would make the usual statement regarding government business for the week ahead.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, no, not that again.

Mr. Bell: Here goes the summer.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It is obvious that I have returned by popular request.

Now that I have the lively interest of hon. members, may I draw their attention to yesterday's Hansard at pages 6314 and 6315 which incorporate a special order with regard to the sittings of the House commencing next week and for the two following weeks.

Mr. Lewis: One following week.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes. The business will be as follows: tomorrow, next Monday, Tuesday evening and Wednesday, if not passed before, we will take government order No. 53, the Canada Development Corporation, government order No. 71, the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, and government order No. 75, amendments to the Judges Act.

Under the order just mentioned, Tuesday will be an opposition day under the auspices of the NDP, culminating in a confidence vote at or about 6 p.m., and on Thursday, and on Friday, again if necessary, we will take government order No. 61, the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Mr. Crouse: I wonder if I might ask the acting House leader whether the real House leader is just having a well earned rest after the defeat in Central Nova.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED FAILURE OF THE GOVERNMENT TO ESTABLISH PROGRAMS TO PROVIDE FULL EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova) moved:

That this House records its deep concern upon reviewing the government's continuing repudiation of its duty to establish full employment programs, and the consequent failure by the government to establish programs and policies which will give young Canadians the opportunity to enter the labour force.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) was not in the House when the motion was read. I had hoped he might come back, although I think he has gone for a smoke behind the curtains—

An hon. Member: May he burn.

Mr. Stanfield: And he disappeared in a cloud of smoke.

Mr. Comeau: Any government that is so insensitive to the economic needs of Canadians should follow the normal course, that is shrug its shoulders and resign so that others may bring help to this country. For the past three years we have given this government a chance, we have tried to make suggestions to them. However, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of Finance and their colleagues have blindly stumbled on bringing more unemployment and more inflation to the economy of Canada, thus bringing the country to the brink of ruin.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Comeau: As has been stated before, the economic policies of this government are inhumane, inefficient and completely incomprehensible to a small backbencher like me.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, today's motion draws attention to this problem in a rather formal way. I am deeply concerned about the fact that thousands of Canadians are unable to find jobs.

According to the April statistics—the most recent available to us—more than 280,000 young people were looking for work, this total represents 42.3 per cent of all the unemployed.

Even if, by themselves, those statistics appear alarming, the situation is worse still, because they do not take into account, for instance, the students and family heads, aged 25 or over, who wish to provide for their families.

[English]

The economic problems of this country related to employment bear repetition. This is why I have no hesitation at all in moving the type of motion that I have today. Maybe the government will realize the situation and give some humble consideration to the unemployed when it presents its budget on June 18.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Right now let me warn those Liberal backbenchers who will partcipate in this debate, who will be looking for plums within their own party and who will tell me that, even though I am the mover of this motion, I have made no suggestions to correct the problem, that I am quite humble in my approach. I do not have the capability to present proper suggestions for the government to follow simply because I do not have behind me all the public servants upon whom the government can rely to propose the type of suggestions that should be proposed. With the thousands of public servants that it has at its disposal, I suggest the government should have been able to do something about the problem by now.

An hon. Member: What about your research staff?

Mr. Comeau: Somebody asks about our research staff. I point out that Liberal members also have a research staff, but I suggest that if Liberal backbenchers do not start speaking out on the needs of the country, then after the next election they, too, will find themselves unemployed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Comeau: The leader of my party—

An hon. Member: Where is he?

Mr. Comeau: Where is the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)? Oh, I see him here. I am glad he is here. But where is the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson)? Where is that great philosopher? The leader of my party—

Mr. Mahoney: Where is he, anyway?

Mr. Comeau: I hear the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) yapping again. He is one of those who is suggesting to the Minister of Finance the kind of policy that we are following. We are in complete chaos because of the suggestions that the hon. member sometimes makes.

Members of my party have made suggestions that the government should establish full employment programs, but the fact is that nobody in the government listens. It is my job to point out the difficulties faced by Canadians and it is the job of the government, not mine, to govern the country accordingly.

An hon. Member: The Prime Minister is leaving.

[Translation]

Mr. Comeau: Mr. Speaker, I hope he will come back.

[English]

Oh yes, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance will speak later in the debate, and I am sure the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) will participate. The Minister of Finance will say, "Look, my suggestions will come before you on June 18." He will tell the country on that day how he is going to save it from the current economic crisis. But the thing that bothers me most is that the government absolutely does not want to listen to anyone. Prime Ministerial word games have replaced serious discussions about unemployment. The Minister of Finance represents nothing more than the king in his counting house counting out his money, while he tells the peasants to live on $30 a week.

There is one fact that needs to be stated time and time again. It is that Canada needs full employment and a budget which will restore a healthy growth to our economy. Without economic growth, we will not be able to provide jobs for our young people, for the university graduates who are coming into the labour force. What has the government offered in the past three years to expand the economy? It made some money available. Forty-two cents have been given to our old age pensioners, the equivalent of seven postage stamps now but soon to be the equivalent of only six. The government has offered absolutely nothing to the unemployed family man who is between the ages of 25 and 65 years, and nothing to the young executive who came out of university, worked for a company, and now finds himself unemployed.

[Translation]

Nothing at all, Mr. Speaker. The government offered nothing to these thousands of people except the 10 per cent increase in unemployment insurance benefits last January. The government has not even been willing to help the municipalities offer more welfare benefits to these people; now, cities are cutting their aid programs.

[English]

According to the 1961 census 50 per cent of all Canadians are below the age of 25 years. What has the government offered these people? What has it offered students looking for work in order to raise enough money to enter university in the fall? Finally, the government made a revelation. One fine day, on March 16, the Opportunities for Youth program was divulged. Five ministers called a press conference and told us what they were going to do for young Canadians.

Mr. Béchard: Sixty-eight million dollars.

Mr. Comeau: Sixty-eight million dollars, the man says. Some of my colleagues will talk about that $68 million later and show the ridiculous way in which some of it has been spent. Included in that $68 million mentioned by the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Béchard) is the expenditure for the European Exchange program, subsidized tours for those who can afford the fare there and back. Kiosks are being opened along highways so that our transient youth can gather information and travel leisurely. There is also an athletics scholarship program applicable to a very special 600 or so, and after consultation with the provinces, or supposed consultation with the provinces and municipalities, hostels are to be provided where transient youth may find accommodation. It is becoming obvious such consultation did not take place because we are finding that municipalities have no funds for these hostels.

Then, to offer our young Canadians a boost and give them an incentive, the government has made $25 million available to be administered by the Department of the Secretary of State. I do not want to deal with it at length. Other members of my party will put that program in proper perspective, but so far as I am concerned it is nothing but a political program. It has very grave political tinges to it. I submit it is not administered objectively at all, and consequently is not helping young Canadians who may need this type of program most.

The answer to all this should be clear, Mr. Speaker. You cannot help a group of people, a certain age group, until you have a full employment program, such as I referred to a few minutes ago. In the type of economy that we have these days, you cannot merely put $68 million into a program and expect that will solve the problems. In a similar vein, you cannot expect to do anything about regional disparities unless the economy is growing at a reasonably rapid rate.

We know that growth is not an end in itself, but that it must be pursued in order to solve our grave social problems. It is economic slack which makes it difficult to pursue pollution abatement programs. Everybody, and particularly our young people, are upset about pollution. But we cannot deal with the pollution problem unless we have the money to deal with it, and in order to have the money to deal with it we must have the proper growth programs. Pollution abatement programs are expensive. This is particularly the case, as has been highly publicized, in the pulp and paper industry. Economic slack forces people to disrupt their way of life and neglect their higher goals in order to search for employment. If the budget which will be presented by the Minister of Finance fails to expand the economy properly, the government will argue that its policies are designed to return the economy to its potential gradually to avoid the risk of more inflation. A quick return to full potential is dangerous, but the government's apparent concept of gradualism is surely inadequate. First, we need an economic plan which will produce a growth rate which is higer than our potential so that the economic slack will be taken up and sufficient jobs created to absorb the large influx into our labour force. Then, and only then, can a gradualist policy be introduced.

What has happened since the Prime Minister took office? The Liberals have set out to curb inflation by creating mass unemployment. This policy, regarded as nonsense by many economists, might be justified by its results if inflation had been cured. But it has not. The inflation spiral is back and the unemployed have never left us. The Prime Minister has failed where he should have succeeded, on the inflation battlefield, and has succeeded only in creating a great army of unemployed.

In December, 1970, the Prime Minister announced that unemployment had become the foremost problem facing the country:

> ... we have won last year's victory, the one against inflation. It is obvious from the statistics of the past two months that inflation no longer exists in Canada.

Some victory! As has been stated previously, inflation in Canada during the first quarter of 1971 soared upward by 1.2 per cent, the largest advance for this quarter in over a decade. Unemployment remains uncomfortably high at 6 per cent; it has stayed above the 6 per cent mark for 11 months.

[Translation]

Problems are increasing day after day. There is no indication that the economy of the country is developping to its full potential. The level of unemployment is still at 6 per cent and the cost of living is ever increasing. The number of workers is rising rapidly and requires the creation of more new jobs. By 1975, the number of jobs needed will go from 1.3 to 1.4 million. In order to develop the economy to its full potential, that increase must run to about 6 per cent.

[English]

Where do we go from here? Many suggestions have been made and there will be others. The Progressive Conservative party advocates an immediate espousal of the economic goals enunciated by the Economic Council of Canada. We demand immediate action to return the Canadian economy to a path of full employment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Comeau: What does the Prime Minister propose to solve the problems created by the mushrooming labour force? On his recent Niagara Peninsula tour the Prime Minister announced that in a free society people had to be prepared to accept trade-offs, and consequently the emphasis should be on getting jobs for Canadians who want to work, a shorter work week, much earlier retirement, delays in young people entering the work force, and less pressure to get women working. Such a theory is in glaring contradiction to the present practices of the government. Consider the unemployment insurance legislation to provide unemployment benefits for pregnant women as an incentive to them to return to their jobs! Obviously, the Prime Minister is not laying a basis for new government policies, but rather is using scare tactics to convince the public that the weapons he ultimately chooses to fight employment are the only desirable means for combatting the problem. The essence of such a ploy is that it admits of only the extremes, and implicitly rejects the possibility of any middle ground.

It is not possible that a lesser degree of unemployment and a low degree of inflation could co-exist in a free society? All kinds of suggestions have been made in the last couple of years about how this objective could be achieved and I do not need to repeat them. I only need to point out to the Minister of Finance that if he would listen and try a different course every now and then he may find that the results would not be worse than the results of some of the policies advocated by the government. Such a course might be worth while.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Comeau: There are many respectable economists who think that such co-existence is indeed possible, and who also maintain that the Prime Minister's economic policies up to the present have been as disturbing as these new scare tactics. In its zealousness to get Canada the first prize in the 1970 international competition against inflation, the Liberal government pursued policies that earned for Canada the international booby prize for unemployment and also one of the poorest records in reaching potential gross national product.

Something has to be done, Mr. Speaker, and in view of the fact that the budget is to be presented within a couple of weeks, I hope this debate today will indicate to the Minister of Finance and the government that it is time to try something new, something that will give this country full employment. Canadians will not settle for anything less. Students who are graduating have been told along the way, "You go to university and we will take care of you". Now, they find that we are not able to provide for them. The situation is frustrating to Canadians of all ages, those over 65 and those in the middle age group. Within the last couple of years, we have passed legislation forcing Canadians to retire at 55 years of age. These people are forced out of the labour force and cannot come back because of the situation that exists. Just last night there was a program on television about executives in the 35 to 50 age group who cannot find employment in their line of work, or in any other line for that matter.

We cannot go on talking about the constitution forever. We cannot blame everything on the constitution. We cannot go on being academic, pretending that we are living in a university or that we are lecturing to university students. As politicians in this country we have to be practical, and we have to face the problem.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Comeau: There is no need for me to review the events of the last two or three years, Mr. Speaker. We only have to look back at the legislation that has been passed. The Criminal Code has been amended about 150 times; we have talked about this constitution; we have talked about many things, but the government has not once listened to suggestions for getting the economy moving and getting people back to work. I hope the Minister of Finance will not be too proud to admit his failures, but will want to listen and, when he presents his budget on June 18, will want to take the measures necessary to correct the injustices that have been caused by this government in the last couple of years.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Other members of my party will talk about different aspects of this subject. Some will deal with—

An hon. Member: With the facts.

Mr. Comeau: —the opportunities for youth program. Others will talk about university graduates, the labour force and so on. I end by repeating what I said at the beginning. We need full employment so that we may offer Canadians generally, including our young Canadians, a chance to make a decent living in this country. I have not participated in debates on the economy for some time. I have tried to give this government a chance. The situation has become more and more frustrating. I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I, as a private member, and my party cannot condemn this government enough for the policies it has followed in the last three years.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the motion moved by the hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau) and to offer my congratulations for his forceful and frank speech. It was needed. It was a speech that presented the problem faced by this country in a very adequate fashion indeed.

The single most important source of discontent and disunity in this country today is that presented by the current levels of unemployment. In recent weeks there has been, throughout Canada, a mounting criticism of welfare spending, a mounting criticism of spending in education and an increased criticism directed at the proposed new levels of unemployment insurance benefits. There has been in recent days, as indeed there was today in this House, an implicit criticism of the increased amounts of federal money going to the province of Quebec.

It is important to note that all this criticism being heard in our country is not coming from the traditional conservative sources alone in Canada. It is not simply coming from the lawyers, doctors and professional people in general. It is now emerging from those who may appropriately be called the ordinary people of this country. Professionals and businessmen have always opposed the significant use of public capital, either to redistribute income or to create new public enterprises, and especially have they been critical of all forms of welfare assistance. However, it is a new phenomenon in Canada that significant numbers of ordinary people have joined in this criticism. We are now hearing criticism from miners, auto workers, loggers and farmers—in short, as I said, from the majority of the people of our country. I suggest this is a profoundly important development. It could lead to much more internal conflict and disunity in the country than the supposed forces of separatism within the province of Quebec could generate.

What is the reason for that, Mr. Speaker? Cynics like to say that the true selfishness of the average man in society is coming to the fore and being revealed at last. That is the reason behind this criticism, they think. I think that view is wrong. Ordinary people in Canada, as well as ordinary people elsewhere in the world, harbour a real concern about the well-being of their fellow countrymen. They are truly concerned and want to make sure that their fellow countrymen do not suffer. Average people do not resent some welfare burden and some education costs. What they resent, and resent increasingly in Canada, is the scale of that burden and the scale of those costs. They resent the fact that they work long and hard, yet must finance the tax rolls which are required to assist not a few but hundreds of thousands of their fellow countrymen.

Welfare costs, Mr. Speaker, are skyrocketing. Cities across the country from Vancouver to Halifax are experiencing increases in their welfare costs ranging anywhere between 100 per cent and 300 per cent. Education costs are increasing because of the large proportion of relatively young people in our population. Consequently, property taxes on homes often owned by working people have increased; certainly, the income taxes that such people pay are going up to pay for these needed expenditures. They are continuing to go up. As a consequence, disunity of serious proportions is a real possibility in this country. If unemployment is not reduced to the 3 per cent level very soon in Canada we could experience one of the greatest social crises in the history of our country. I do not say this in any loose fashion. Workers in Canada will be pitted against fellow workers. English-speaking Canadians will be pitted against French-speaking Canadians. I say this not in any "scary" fashion. I say this because I am concerned about the real consequences, social and political, of such a crisis which would affect the unity of this country and the viability of a federal government.

Many speakers in debates during the past few months who have spoken from this side of the House and, particularly, who have been members of this party have made positive and general criticism of the government. They have suggested that its preoccupation with inflation is economically insane and socially irresponsible. I do not intend to repeat their arguments. I should like to suggest a couple of concrete steps which might be taken now to reduce unemployment levels in this country.

First, if this government is really concerned about unemployment, it could propose what might be called a housing charter for Canadians for the 1970's. It should make such a commitment now, saying that by the end of this decade no Canadian in any province of this country will be without adequate housing. By the end of this decade it should be the case that every Canadian will regard housing as he now regards secondary education. It should be the case that housing will become a social right, and a legitimate and real expectation, of every person in this country. A citizen should come to regard housing, in short, as he now regards secondary education. We look on secondary education as a matter of right; if there is an increasing need in education, all we do is expand our present facilities. We do not, I repeat, we do not permit any youngster in this country to do without secondary education. However, we now permit many of our citizens, indeed, they number in the millions, to do without adequate housing.

The government could make such a commitment. It would involve expenditures that are in the billions; I candidly concede that cost. This is not an Utopian scheme. I am not saying that within one or two years all the housing needs of our people should be overcome. I am saying that by the end of the decade the problem ought to be overcome. The government could consider both housing and unemployment and solve both problems.

What would be the effects of such a commitment on unemployment? First of all, the obvious effect would be that bricklayers, painters, carpenters, electricians, plumbers and all the unskilled workers involved in house building would be given work. The less obvious consequence is that steel, aluminum and plastic workers who make products which go into houses would find jobs. It would also affect truck drivers who deliver products and assembly workers in plants across the country involved in making prefabricated housing of all sorts. They would also find employment.

The third category, perhaps the least obvious beneficiaries, would be auto workers, store workers and owners of movie houses. In short, virtually every other category of worker in this country would benefit because his goods and services would be purchased as a result of people being employed in the building of houses. For a long time, economists have said that if you really want to employ people and get the maximum output in terms of men employed for input of dollars, put your money into housing because it has a marvellous economic spinoff effect on the whole economy.

The government has said that it wants to do something about employment and that it is really concerned. Why does it not get involved in serious deficit financing? Why does it not commit itself to spending millions of dollars in the next decade to co-ordinate house building programs in Canada which would create employment? This would simultaneously achieve two important social objectives. It would provide a needed social entity, housing, and an equally important social benefit, employment for men and women who want to work.

Specifically, I would like to emphasize certain areas in the housing program. First, we need a major increase of funds going into public housing. Public housing is needed and will continue to be needed in the foreseeable future by pensioners, single parents and unorganized workers who cannot, under any circumstances, afford to purchase homes. Second, we have to make housing available to average workers at low interest rates, both of the single dwelling and condiminium types, at interest rates that do not exceed 3½ per cent. This is what the government of Nova Scotia, a Liberal government, has recently done. They acted upon what we have advocated for a number of years. They decided to subsidize interest rates and have discriminated in favour of average and poor people. They have guaranteed homes for the average people in Nova Scotia, and are doing this by providing all the capital or cash needed above the 3½ per cent interest to pay for single dwelling units for working people.

There is also a marvellous prospect for the imaginative use of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation funds in the housing field. I see no reason why we cannot indulge in a little variation of how we rebuild the cores of our major cities. Some time ago a very imaginative proposal was presented to interested people in the city of Hamilton. It was suggested that in urban renewal projects, instead of demolishing the centre of the city, rooting the poor people from their homes and communities and shifting them to the suburbs, the government make a colossal loan, in comparative terms, for a complete city block. If CMHC provided money to a new co-operative enterprise which would involve all the people who live in that block, home owners as well as shopkeepers, these people would be allowed to retain their present dwellings in many cases. Through this loan, dwellings could either be rehabilitated or new ones built. The local store could be maintained. This would be accomplished through one loan, not a gift, from CMHC. With this kind of approach, we would provide homes, accommodation and maintain a sense of community in our large cities. This would be an imaginative use of public funds.

These are a few examples of where and how the money should be spent. I remind the government that there is one province that has decided to move with public funds, deal with unemployment and housing. I refer to the province of Manitoba. At least the cabinet ministers know that. This year the government of Manitoba will spend $770 million on housing, up 18 per cent over last year. In public housing alone, it will spend $33 million, up 154 per cent over last year and, incidentally, up almost 1,000 per cent over 1969 when that government replaced a Conservative government in that province.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

Apart from providing homes to the people of Manitoba who need them, the major economic consequence which affects that whole province is that it now has the lowest rate of unemployment in Canada. Unemployment has been increasing in every other province. In the province of Manitoba, it has been decreasing. Manitoba now has a 4.8 per cent level of unemployment, the lowest in this country. There are many reasons for this, but the main reason is that it has a government that is committed to using public money for public purposes, particularly at times of high unemployment. I see no reason why this government cannot take a few lessons from one of the provincial governments.

The last specific suggestion I want to make is with regard to the manpower retraining program. I am pleased to see the minister in charge of retraining in the chamber. There is a lot of talk about students and junior executives who are unable to find jobs. I am concerned about them, but I remind hon. members that most people in this country are not students or junior executives. They are ordinary people such as farmers, steel workers and fishermen whose educational level is not that high. They constitute the vast majority of people in this country. Our emphasis should be directed primarily toward that group and, with respect, not toward the minority who happen to be university students.

What happens in terms of our manpower retraining program? I am sure that all hon. members, including myself, have been involved in this in recent weeks, particularly because of the level of unemployment. I have been involved in discussions in my constituency about the effects of the manpower retraining program. I have discovered, and this has been corroborated in conversation with many other members, that the kind of effective co-ordination of planning required between the federal and provincial governments to have an effective manpower retraining program simply does not exist.

About one year ago I brought to the attention of the House and a committee of this House a critique of the existing manpower retraining programs from the point of view that no effective planning in terms of training people for jobs that are going to be available actually existed in this country. The critique came from the Association of Colleges of Applied Arts and Technology in Ontario, a group made up of teachers and administrators which is certainly not allied politically with any group. They said and I quote:

The Canada manpower centre and the local educational facility operate, as had been said, in administrative vacuums, with little or no constructive consultation at either the policy formulation level or in the day-to-day administrative routine. Apparently the federal department feels its prerogatives are better protected with things this way, making the erroneous assumption—we would presume—that education and retraining can be purchased in the same perfunctory way the housewife buys her weekly groceries.

The major criticism in this report, and it holds true today just as it did a year ago, is that the forecasting, planning and training arrangements are grotesquely inadequate. For this, the minister must bear the responsibility. There is no effective co-operation between the federal government, which is responsible for the executive and financial aspects of the training, and the provincial goverments which provide the facilities. In short, there is no integration of planning. The result is that countless Canadians are being trained for jobs which do not exist, while jobs which do exist go unfilled for lack of trained people. The result is we see in our ridings hundreds of unemployed people entering courses to be trained as plumbers, or electricians or bricklayers in the full expectation that when they complete their training they will be able to find jobs. But no jobs exist for them because the economic forecasting has been inadequate; the planning has either been non-existent or carried out in a slipshod fashion.

I should like the minister to provide the House with some information enabling us to compare the efficacy of our manpower training program with those of Sweden and Japan, for example. I should like him also to produce figures relating to the economic productivity in those countries as compared with our own. I believe, then, he would be able to appreciate the solid advantages of an effective manpower training program. The point is that manpower retraining represents no net cost to the people of Canada in the long run because it leads to a more productive labour force. There have, of course, been some good results flowing from manpower retraining—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret to have to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

An hon. Member: Carry on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Does the House give permission to the hon. member to continue his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Broadbent: I thank hon. members. The point I was making initially was that the general economic direction the government is taking is bad, that it is a major source of disunity in this country, that it could lead to clashes between worker and worker, between French-speaking Canadians and English-speaking Canadians. This danger should not be under-estimated. I tried to show that if the government were to seize on one major economic objective to provide a large number of jobs and simultaneously deal with a serious social concern, it should embark on a housing program the like of which this country has never seen, one which would result by the year 1980 in housing having become a social right just as secondary education is now assumed to be a right.

I look forward to hearing the observations of whichever ministers intend to take part in the debate. I shall be curious to see whether they are prepared to meet the challenge which lies before us or to follow the example of two of their former colleagues who recently decided that, because of their interest in these matters and their concern for the average Canadian, they ought to leave the ministry.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, this motion proposed by the opposition once more points out how important it is for the government to solve the unemployment problem, to find solutions for the economic and financial problems facing us. Thus we have an opportunity to express in the House the more and more widespread dissatisfaction among the Canadian people, especially in Quebec, and particularly in my own area of the St. Maurice valley.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot insist enough on the urgency of that situation and we cannot stress enough how pressing it is to find not palliatives but final solutions for these problems which affect our people.

Through what we read in newspapers and hear and see on radio and television we notice that everybody deplores the present situation. More and more frequently newspaper headlines point out the seriousness of the situation: "Nine thousand additional unemployed" proclaimed a headline some weeks ago. "The biggest increase in unemployment in 13 years". "Quebec still leads", wrote another newspaper later. "23,000 more unemployed in the province in 1970."

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, how far this is from the promises made in the spring of 1970 by the present premier of Quebec!

In a newspaper, one could read: "17,000 Montrealers laid off in 1970."

In its January 13, 1971 issue, La Presse published an article headlined "Only 10,000 new jobs last year."

For the past few months, Mr. Speaker, newspapers have been full of this type of headlines.

In the face of this situation, what argument has been advanced, what were the solutions advocated?

A Canadian Press feature on May 8, 1971 stated regarding unemployment: "Trudeau admits failure."

Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to quote this excerpt from the Canadian Press:

The Prime Minister, Mr. Trudeau, said last night that unemployment had been the most serious failure of his government during its three years in office.

The Prime Minister, interviewed on the C.B.C. television program "Format 60", admitted that unemployment was partly due to the fight against inflation which his government waged last year and won, in his opinion.

"The fight against inflation has been a success but it has contributed to the unfortunate increase of unemployment," he said.

The Prime Minister, who was interviewed by reporters, maintained that the government however had to check inflation to attain the objectives of the just society.

According to him, it is generally the small worker, the widow, the mother, the welfare case who are the victims of inflation since they get less for their dollar then.

He added that, given another chance, he would no doubt act in the same way, but there would be less unemployment.

He recalled the appeals for co-operation addressed to all social levels by his government last year in the thick of his fight against inflation and said that he did not get the co-operation he had anticipated. "Voluntary co-operation was not a great success", Mr. Trudeau said, adding that should another inflationary thrust occur the population, both workers and employers, might co-operate better.

Mr. Speaker, that quotation from an article shows that far from being about to find solutions, we see them becoming increasingly remote since we admit that nothing can be done. That is hardly encouraging for the population which, in the meantime, continues to stagnate, to have a hard time making both ends meet and to complain about its administrators.

And yet, Mr. Speaker, this government does not want to recognize that this problem does exist. They say there is no solution.

But when we of the Social Credit try to oblige, if necessary, the government to consider potential concrete solutions, we just cannot accept—and our constituents are becoming increasingly dissatisfied—that the government brush away the solutions we are suggesting, that is increasing the purchasing power through easier credit and providing easier credit terms for industries. We claim that this would be very well received among the population and that this would also be a long-term solution to unemployment.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to point out that if we wish to arrive at full employment several solutions are required. One of these days we will have to admit that the benefits of modern scientific progress, of automation, of technology, should be orientend toward the well-being of the population.

Having recognized the fact that we should not frown on progress, if the machine replaces man we will have to consider increasingly the development of programs to create a society with more and more spare time and less and less work.

Therefore, if we wish to reach full employment, we should seriously consider the possibility of reducing the working hours of each worker, while providing him with a sufficient income so that he may enjoy a minimum of well-being if not of comfort.

Mr. Speaker, this could be done immediately. I would like to give quite a striking example, that of the Post Office Department. We know that a great number of people have been complaining about slow mail deliveries for a year or two. Everybody is wondering why with such a high unemployment rate we are unable to obtain at the Post Office, for example, a sufficient number of jobs to avoid the present delays.

It is absolutely abnormal, for example, that a letter from Ottawa to the Champlain constituency 200 or 300 miles from here would take a week, 10 or 15 days to reach the addressee. We are given as a reason that some mail services do not operate on Saturdays and Sundays.

Mr. Speaker, if this is due to a lack of employees, enough should be hired by the Post Office Department to give a constant and continuous service, even on Saturdays and Sundays, precisely in order to promote a very good postal service while increasing the number of jobs.

If some people are against working more than 40 or 44 hours a week, and I certainly understand them, so much the better! Let us give others the opportunity of working during the remaining hours of the week. For instance, it might even be advisable to aim at having 200 people work 20 hours a week instead of having half that number work 40 hours.

All those possibilities should be considered but sooner or later—and of course I prefer that it be sooner than later—we shall have to find real solutions. We shall have to reach the true causes of this situation.

We shall only find them when we analyse the real potential of the country, based on all kinds of natural resources and on our potential of human intelligence.

Mr. Speaker, when we realize that we are one of the richest countries of the world, with a population of 23 million people spread out over an area greater than Europe where there are 600 million people, and that Canada is bigger than the United States with their population of 200 million, it is inadmissible that we should meet poor people while, theoretically, they are the richest in the world.

But, in order that this unheard of wealth may really be put to use for the citizen, one must reach the very logical proposal that it is a matter of making financially possible what is physically possible. Some have said and continue to say that it is merely a slogan but on the contrary, Mr. Speaker, it is a sensible and economically logical principle. And if ever this principle were to be applied, with all the raw material that we possess, the manpower that we have—and nobody can deny that because the most serious problem in Canada at the present time is that too many workers are chasing too few jobs—we would be surprised at the results. Since we possess all that, Mr. Speaker, what else do we need to put to use and develop these natural resources that are now available? The only thing we are running short of is money to finance these projects. Then why not take time and see that all those things that are physically possible become financially possible?

I have said time and time again that bridges, roads, hospitals, or anything else for that matter, are not built with bills and coins but rather with materials, labour and engineering. With these three elements, why bring in the money element? Piles of dollars cannot support a bridge; this is not the way to do it, Mr. Speaker. Better to use concrete, steel, for these materials are much more appropriate. Is that what we are short of? We have the world's richest iron ore mines in Northern Quebec. We have the human resources ready to go to work, thousands of unemployed people who ask nothing better than to work for the well-being of all our population.

There is no lack of it. Therefore, the only thing missing is the firm will to give the individuals of this country the opportunity of putting their intelligence, their strength, in short their potential at the service of all their fellow-citizens.

And this, Mr. Speaker, can be done. This is no utopia, this is no dream; it is merely coming back to a sound economic policy, an economic policy of pure common sense. And we shall settle these problems of full employment and unemployment only when one and all will finally be able to contribute to the production of what this country needs, because it is perfectly ridiculous to accept blindly the principle that if we cannot produce at a lower cost than the United States, Europe or other countries of the world, we should not produce at all but buy from these countries.

If we were to follow this theory to its logical conclusion, Mr. Speaker, we would end up living on U.S. welfare for we all know that it is difficult to keep up with U.S. productivity in many areas of industrial activity, even if we take only prices into account. Thus, if automobiles are less expensive in the U.S., let us stop building them here and buy them across the border instead.

If textile products are less expensive in Japan or in Europe, let us close down all our factories and import these goods!

If a pound of butter is cheaper in New Zealand, we should penalize our own producers and buy the cheaper butter down under.

With this sort of reasoning, Mr. Speaker, Canada would stop producing anything in a few years. It is a nefarious theory and prices are only relative. What counts is the product we can get for the money we have.

The absolute value of money does not mean but its relative value does since we can buy goods with it. That is why a sound economy must return to sound basic principles, principles that are logical. And those are that money should serve all the citizens, the whole society.

When unemployment reaches frightening proportions, and we are stuck with it, it should not be tolerated, all the more so when we realize that we import a significant amount of our consumer goods. If Canadians made those products, part of our unemployment problem would be solved. But when our policy is based exclusively on ups and downs, on the mathematical acrobatics of the relative value of the American dollar, the Canadian dollar, the French franc or the German mark, in short, when we are concerned about exchange rates before caring about the possibilities and the production potential of this country, that is when we talk about inflation, unemployment, and come to incomprehensible economic dilemmas, knowing all along that Canada does not lack anything.

Mr. Speaker, of course there are solutions; there will come a time when it will perhaps be less necessary to find them than to accept them—since some have already been suggested—and we will support without reservation any measure which would help our citizens, which would spark their spirit of initiative, which would help all those who can to improve the production and which would at the same time help the consumer buy that production through increased purchasing power. That is the solution, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret that I must interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Matte: One minute more and I could be through, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Does the House agree to let the hon. member finish his comments?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Matte: I thank my hon. colleagues, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to add, in concluding, and this will only take a few seconds, that the famous unemployment and full employment problem is serious especially when we note that our young people are particularly affected. The problem becomes urgent and cries for a solution when we find that thousands of young people enter the labour market not only for the summer months but also after they graduate and that they cannot find any work. If this trend continues Mr. Speaker, catastrophe will obviously follow, because the 20-, 21-, or 25-year-old will no longer accept to be patient and he will not admit that his country's government can lead him to such a dead-end. He will not admit either that, with his initiative, with the potential existing in this country, he can be unemployed.

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the resolution which has been put down for debate today deals with the problem of unemployment among our youth in particular, and suggests the failure in some ways of the government to deal, with this problem as well as some repudiation of responsibility by the government in connection with this problem. I should like to note, first of all, that while the resolution deals with unemployment among our youth, a great deal of the time of the members was spent on the economic situation generally and unemployment generally, and was not essentially related to the resolution. This, of course, was a consistent performance on the part of members opposite in this House who have chosen once again, each in his own way, to express their gloom and doom views concerning the state of the Canadian economy and where it is going.

I understand why they wanted at this time to put down this resolution once more. It is of course, only a short number of days before the budget will be presented, a time when the government can more fully indicate its assessment and its prediction about the economy of Canada as well as its view about what should be done at this time consistent with that assessment and prediction. This is probably also the last opportunity the opposition will have to take a kick at that particular cat because of the increase in employment in this country which is taking place in the current days and which will be revealed when the next figures are released. At that time they will turn their attention to other issues or different aspects of this issue. This same group, of course, not many months ago, treated inflation as the single most serious problem facing the government and, indeed, the government itself agreed.

Employment Programs

The resolution puts its finger, in a couple of words, on one very interesting point which hon. members opposite have blurred over very badly, and that is the question of what a government must and can do and what this federal government in particular can do and is doing about the economic climate, about the total aspect of the situation which influences employment and unemployment in this great country of ours. The government in Canada can and must do something to attempt to create the kind of climate with a long term impact in favour of stability and growth. It was a recognition of this responsibility which led the government to recognize that, unmindful spending and unmindful increases in the money supply which did not take into consideration their serious impact upon the economy and therefore the serious threat to our whole future, must not go on endlessly. We have gone through a period, probably due to minority government, when more of this has gone on than ought to have gone on. It is true that even then it did not reach the nearly disastrous heights of recklessness which had been reached by the previous Conservative government, but it was serious enough to create conditions and attitudes which had to be overcome.

The important thing which this government can and must do is to create an economic climate which is responsible, and which creates as much stabilizing effect as possible, so that those great free enterprise sectors of the economy will seize every opportunity to invest and to develop the growth in this country which is possible. It is with this view in mind that the government has considered both the problems of inflation and the problems of unemployment, and will continue to do so. It is in this light that the government must make a responsible assessment of what can be done in terms of fiscal and budgetary policies, in terms of increasing the over-all money supply, in a responsible way.

The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) urged what he called serious deficit financing. Of course, the government in Manitoba, which he lauded so much, has, as I understand it, a slight surplus budget. But what I suggest the government must engage in, and has engaged in, is a responsible policy of deficit financing, responsible having regard to the amount of money which can be made available in a budgetary and non-budgetary way to meet the situation of the moment.

It is interesting to note that all three hon. members opposite who have spoken joined together in adopting what is essentially a social credit policy that somehow or other there is an unlimited amount of money, without regard for the impact upon the economy of having that money available. The fact of the matter is that there is available in Canada a significant amount of potential consumer spending. There is a significant amount of credit available for investment, and what is needed above all is a determination on the part of the great private sector to go forward on the basis of its confidence that the government will continue to attempt to create an atmosphere which is as stable and responsible as possible to assure the growth which this country requires.

It is that kind of policy which has led this country to a performance which in almost every way is better than that which one finds in the United States, although our economies are almost inextricably linked in terms of the cyclical impact of changes in the development and growth of that great economy to which we export so much and from which we import so much. Every small change, therefore, in the large economy has an impact upon our economy. The atmosphere of growth really presents a great challenge to the private sector, and it is one which I hope will be taken up very soon in developing a climate of employment about which hon. members opposite spoke so much.

The resolution deals specifically with the problem of unemployment among our young people. This government has been very concerned indeed about the factors in the present logistical situation in Canada which creates greater problems of unemployment for our young people. These factors have been drawn to the attention of hon. members before, but they bear repeating. The rate of growth of the labour force in this country has been accelerating at a faster pace than in any of the countries examined, all of whom are members of the OECD. For instance, during the 1957 to 1970 period, this rate of growth has averaged at 2.7 per cent per year, compared to the next highest rate of growth acceleration of 1.7 per cent for the United States. This has resulted to a significant extent from the very sizeable group of young people between the ages of 14 and 19 at the beginning of the period and the ages of 20 to 24 in the latter part of the period. The result has been that from 1957 to 1970 our the United States has grown by less than 25 per cent, and the United Kingdom by approximately 5 per cent.

This is a result in particular of the growth in the labour force among the young people. It is true of course that as a result of this fact the participation in unemployment of our younger people, of those under 24, has grown in recent years. In 1961, for instance, of the unemployed —and I remind hon. members opposite that when the Conservative government was in power at that time unemployment was very high indeed—64.8 per cent that year were in the 25 to 64 age bracket. In 1970, 53.1 per cent were in the 25 to 64 age bracket. To offset this decrease, the bulk of the increase took place in the 14 to 24 age bracket, and this was a direct result of the fact that this group had increased so rapidly in the intervening years, at a more rapid rate than in any other country. This has created and does create serious problems in that the economy has to absorb in its ordinary patterns of growth increased numbers of persons entering the labour force. These factors are to some extent approaching a levelling off area so that the challenge to the economy in the years ahead may not be so great. But it does remain true that there are serious issues here of what sort of education, and the extent of education which should be offered to our young people, the system through which it should be offered to them, and the basis upon which training and programs should be made available to them.

We do, of course, offer a great deal of training to our young people in the manpower training and retraining programs. In the 1970-71 year preliminary figures indicate that of a total of full-time trainees benefiting from the program of 275,118, 250,000 were persons under the age of 25 years. It is, of course, a serious challenge to our nation as a whole to know how best to adapt the training to the needs ahead. In our retraining programs we try in every possible way to examine the employment needs, the job prospects, and to relate the programs to these. Of course we do not do as hon. members opposite might seem to be suggesting, turn the tap on and off quickly and automatically whenever any apparent or slight surplus seems to occur in one particular area. We have viewed the longer term needs, and have tried to adjust the labour force and the training programs according to those longer term needs.

I would like to say to the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) in this connection that the general level of co-operation between the Department of Manpower and Immigration and the provincial governments in connection with planning for training is very good indeed. There have been some areas of difficulty in this matter of co-operation, but progress is being made step by step in developing better reaction to the needs of the future. There is no doubt in my mind that we must continue to expand and improve the information we have available about the job opportunities, the labour needs, the technological forecasts, and their future implications, and that we must try to give this information as much as possible to the individual person seeking it in order that he may choose his own career.

I suggest this as the logical approach in a democratic country, but also perhaps as a logical place for the federal government to attempt to find a role where education is generally within the field of provincial governments. I am really suggesting that it may not be possible to develop any perfect over-all plan centrally which leads to particular kinds of training for our young people for specific job opportunities, but rather that by giving the best possible kind of information they themselves may exert their demands on institutions that lead to appropriate training and education as a result. Indeed, it is true that has been the ordinary way of development of educational patterns in this country, that is to say, a responding to demand for training places rather than any broad and comprehensive thinking by individual institutions about their role in the country's over-all employment pattern.

In the present period, not only do our training programs attempt to serve the needs of the young people but, of course, we have developed special services in terms of placement offices in an attempt also to deal with their special needs. Indeed, while the motion deals with the special problem of employment of young people, hon. members opposite quite naturally in effect ran away from that basic part of the motion because in response to the special needs of this group, recognizing the special size of the group entering the labour force, this government has mounted very important special programs to deal with the problem.

I refer to the total of perhaps about $68 million which is being devoted to their special employment needs during the course of these summer months alone. There is a narrow line here of judgment about how much should be done or can be done for a particular group, a narrow line which finds hon. members opposite still urging us to do more, but a narrow line I know we could have so easily crossed in their view, so that they would have criticized us for over-emphasizing services to this group rather than under-emphasizing.

Hon. members opposite have referred to housing as a special category of activity which can be emphasized. They do this, of course, in the face of figures which show that we may be having an excellent year indeed in terms of housing and housing construction in this country. It is a serious problem, a need to be filled, and it is also a serious challenge and opportunity, in terms of employment and indirect employment throughout the economy.

Again, in the field of public housing, this government has been doing a tremendous amount to improve the availability of housing to those who need the housing so very greatly and for whom previous programs were not adequate. In the last two years more in the way of public housing will have been done than in the whole previous period of the program. This represents a very clear concern for the needs of the people of this country, and particularly of those who may be less fortunate than those people who can control and claim from society a higher and higher share of the available goods. I am speaking, of course, about this chronic and constant problem of those with power in this country who can claim in the way of compensation for their services, whether for labour or for capital, more than they ought to claim on reasonable grounds, and who therefore contribute to the inflation problem which has to be overcome in other ways.

In the examining of employment figures, Mr. Speaker, and figures of unemployment it is popular to compare figures for one period with another, and figures for one country with another, and this is done frequently without very much precision about what has changed or what is different in the comparisons. Between countries in particular very frequently the thing being examined is different. The questions being asked in terms of unemployment and employment are different. In terms of periods of time, even within this country of our's, there is a great deal of change in any three year, five year, or ten year period, in terms of the demands and the attitudes of the people of the country. These things must be borne in mind in comparing periods of unemployment with previous periods of unemployment.

Without much doubt there is a greater tendency today for many members of families who might not, in a previous decade, have sought to enter the labour force, to do so. This reflects itself in the fairly revealing analysis of families with unemployment problems, or families in which there is some unemployment. If in April, for instance, there were 529,000 family units in which an unemployed person was to be found, in 318,000 of those units some one, two or three other members of the family were at work at the same time. This represents perhaps a change in the nature of the demand for work in our society, and it also represents some significant difference in the way in which that employment or unemployment burden falls upon the people who are involved.

There is no doubt that in dealing with the economic situation generally we must continue to do what we have been doing in terms of watching the economy very closely, in terms, as of the last 12 or 13 months or so, of turning around this situation very dramatically by something like $2 billion in total additional infusion of capital into the economy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Comeau: Do you think you're in the circus?

Mr. Lang: Hon. members opposite laugh. I know that the hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau) has conceded he knows nothing about the subject, and has no experts to advise him, but I believe hon. members opposite generally share that view. They seem to ignore—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair feels that hon. members should allow the minister to complete his remarks and also permit other hon. members to listen. The Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang).

Mr. Lang: It is very surprising, Mr. Speaker, to find that hon. members opposite still do not choose to recognize the important effect upon the economy of several billions of dollars of turnaround in fiscal and monetary policies in the course of the last 13 months or so. The hon. member for South Western Nova admitted his inability to offer very many positive suggestions to solve the problem. He says he cannot because of his lack of resources but of course this will not stop him or his colleagues from proffering elaborate criticisms of whatever is done in the next several weeks when a further statement will reveal what this government considers should be done in an attempt to continue to move in a responsible way toward growth in the economy.

We must maintain in our sights the responsible development of policy in order that the growth of this country and the attitude toward growth be established for the future. It would not solve anything to simply turn back to those nearly disastrous days of spending without regard to the impact upon inflation. This is not in the long-term interest of the country and does not reflect the attitude of those people who must make the decisions. We must re-establish a belief in the responsibility of government, not seeking short-term political ends but seeking to do those things which are economically sound. In the development of this country, we must not only think of today or the political consequences which hon. members opposite are so concerned about, but we must think of the long-term benefit.

We must continue to do better than some of our neighbours and some of those economies which influence us very greatly. We can and will create an atmosphere for growth in this country, notwithstanding the gloom and doom so popular among hon. members opposite which attempts to inhibit the progress of those who make the decisions. I say to them that this is a time to have confidence in this country, confidence in those who make the decisions for the investment that will provide jobs for the great numbers entering the labour force. This is a country of which we can all be proud and of which most Canadians are proud; it is a country which will grow and develop and these short-run problems will be dealt with by programs which are right for the short term and also for the future of this country.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I think we have all been interested and entertained when listening to the Alice in Wonderland speech just delivered by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang). When listening to him one would think that we were living in a country where the economy is booming, where the government had great foresight and was conducting the affairs of the country in a first class manner. Instead, we are, in fact, living in a country where unemployment today stands at 7.8 per cent of the work force, where inflation has been rising during the last three months at an annual rate of 7.2 per cent, where taxes are the highest ever known in this country, where the Dominion Bureau of Statistics has described the economy as being at a virtual standstill, and where the government is obviously at a complete loss to know where it is going or how to deal with the problems facing us.

As we all remember, at the beginning of the year the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and other ministers advised us that unemployment had turned the corner and that inflation was licked. Obviously, these ministers have no idea where they are going, where they have come from or what they ought to do next.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: The minister made one statement with which I completely agree and I am sure we all would, so I jotted it down. He said, "The government must create confidence to stimulate the private sector." Of course, that is what the government must do, Mr. Speaker, but in the next few minutes I intend to show that the policies followed by this government have been doing exactly the reverse.

The principal reason that the economy of this country has not been expanding fast enough to come anywhere close to absorbing our rapidly increased work force is a lack of confidence in the future of the economy in the minds of the businessmen of Canada. This lack of confidence has caused them to put off the decisions which they otherwise would have made to expand their operations, thereby increasing production and increasing employment. Why has this lack of confidence developed? The reason is exactly the same as that which caused the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) and the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans) to resign. Incidentally, they are the only two members of the government who ever owned and successfully operated their own businesses and thus have an idea of the practical realities of practical economics. What caused them to resign is exactly the same reason that is causing this lack of confidence in the minds of businessmen across Canada today. I refer to the increasing conviction that the ministers of this government responsible for economic policy have no idea what policies are needed to enable business to expand, to increase sales, to increase production and thereby increase employment.

Businessmen in the business community generally have become disenchanted in several fields and the first is the determination of this government to continue to fight unemployment by increasing public expenditures instead of lowering taxes, thereby putting more money in the pockets of the people to enable them to buy more of the things they need and in this way stimulating sales, production and jobs. We have been urging the government not to follow this policy for a very good reason: that we had some experience with this policy several years ago when we were the government. In June, 1957, when we took office we inherited an economy that had been running downhill for a full six months—

Mr. Olson: Tell us about 1963.

Mr. Hees: —and already had considerable unemployment which was rising at a sharp rate. We tackled this problem by the accepted method of the day, Mr. Speaker, the same method the government is using today to try to fight unemployment.

Mr. Lang: In four years you hit a new low.

Mr. Hees: We found out, and they will find out, that although this method of trying to combat unemployment by increasing public expenditures is a satisfactory one for creating jobs in the short run, it is completely unsatisfactory in the long run for two very good reasons. The first is, as we found and they will find, that the capital cost of creating a single job is so high that it is impossible to employ more than a relatively few people for any long period of time; the second is that once the public works which are sponsored in this way are completed, you are right back where you started with the unemployed people still on your hands.

We found, Mr. Speaker, that the only practical way to combat unemployment was to stimulate the economy. The simplest way to do that, Mr. Speaker, of course is by lowering income taxes, putting more money into the hands of the Canadian people to buy the goods that they need and thereby increasing sales, increasing production and increasing jobs on a permanent and growing basis at no cost whatever to the treasury of the country. To make such a program of tax reduction effective, I believe that the Minister of Finance, in the budget that he will present on the 18th of this month, should be prepared to bring in a deficit of up to $1 billion. He ought to bring in a worth-while tax reduction so that the economy may be stimulated in an effective, important and worth-while way.

These tax cuts, Mr. Speaker, will pay for themselves many times over in the years ahead in three ways. First of all, considerably more people will be working and paying income tax instead of drawing unemployment insurance or direct relief. Secondly, there will be considerably greater amounts of products sold, thereby making possible a far higher intake of commodity taxes. Thirdly, increased production which will result from lowering these taxes will reduce overhead per unit of production. This will make possible more profits to tax and also make possible higher corporation taxes.

Another reason for this lack of confidence that is holding back the economy today is the fear of the implementation of two proposals in particular contained in the white paper on tax reform. The first of these is the proposal to cancel the 21 per cent tax rate on the first $35,000 of profits and to replace that with a flat 50 per cent rate. This measure was introduced a number of years ago and has been maintained by all governments since, and for the very good reason that it is extremely useful to small businesses from two points of view. The first of these, Mr. Speaker, is that it makes it possible for small businesses to obtain the capital they need for expansion out of profits. If they have to pay 50 per cent or 50 cents on each dollar from the first dollar that they earn and are not able to accumulate capital as they did, the only alternative will be for the businesses to go to the marketplace and borrow money at a very high rate of interest. The rates of interest will be high because those businessmen will not have been in business long enough to have acquired a good credit rating. As a result, they will be charged very high rates of interest in the money market. People in small businesses today fear that the Minister of Finance will implement this proposal in his budget. That has been their understanding for quite some time and that has had a very marked effect on the production of jobs in the country.

The other reason that the 21 per cent tax rate is important to small businesses is that the rate is very helpful in persuading young men to take the important step of leaving the comparitive shelter and security they enjoy in working for an established firm and going into business for themselves. Our country, or any country for that matter, needs many new businesses to be created each year by young and aggressive men with drive, determination and perseverence. If those young men who are considering going into business for themselves, and leaving the shelter and security of the firm for which they have worked, realize they will have to pay in tax 50 cents on every dollar from the first dollar they take in, they will be far less interested in making this very risky move. They may not make a success of the venture, they may have to go through a number of years of lean picking and they will have to go through the usual trials and tribulations connected with a business establishing itself, so this tax rate will cause them to hesitate. If they decide they will not go into business for themselves, there is nothing we can do about it. They just will not start new businesses. That has happened today in a very large number of cases. It was with these considerations in mind that this 21 per cent tax rate was first introduced. It was realized that if owners of new businesses could keep 79 cents of every dollar, up to the first $35,000, they would have a good chance to accumulate capital, to expand that business, to make good profits and to make a good livelihood. Therefore, this slowdown in the creation of new businesses is very serious. That slowdown has produced a slowdown in the creation of new job opportunities, which is very serious indeed.

The second item that the Minister of Finance is proposing in the white paper which is causing a great deal of alarm is the proposal to tax unrealized capital gains. That proposal, Mr. Speaker, is so unworkable, so unrealistic and so unfair that it hardly deserves to be considered in a serious place like this chamber. Consider this: the Minister of Finance has told the people of Canada that he will name "V Day", which is Valuation Day. Then, on that mysterious day, everyone in the country, whether he be a businessman, farmer, storekeeper or anyone else, will be investigated by a great army of valuators. Where they are all to come from I do not know. This will be a mysterious procedure. Everything we own will be valued. Then, five years later this army of locusts will descend on us again and look over everything we own. Then, they will sit down and say, "Your holdings are worth so much now; they were worth so much less five years ago. You owe the government some money as a result of the increased value of your holdings." Of course, those gains may not have been realized; the people who are to be charged for those gains will have nothing with which to pay those taxes, and so I say that that proposal is completely unworkable, unrealistic and unfair.

Mr. Hees: This kind of thing has caused people generally, and people in the business community particularly, to lose confidence every day in the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and in all those around them as men of business sense and practical, economic knowledge. This is a very real reason for losing confidence.

In order to restore confidence, the Minister of Finance should announce that he intends not to introduce these two proposals either now or in the future. This would be of great help in restoring the confidence of the business community. However, Mr. Speaker, that is not the government's plan. The government's plan is quite different. The government plans to make this coming budget of June 18 an election budget.

Mr. Hees: You watch it, Mr. Speaker. When it comes down on that night, only attractive items will be included in the budget and all the unattractive things will very conveniently be left out until a later date. I will have something to say about that later date in a moment. You will see in that budget tax improvements for the people who earn up to $9,000 a year. In order to pay for those tax improvements, the minister will introduce a capital gains tax on realized capital gains. That has been expected for quite some time. But there will be no mention of any tax increase for people in the middle income brackets. There will be no mention of replacing the 21 per cent tax on the first $35,000 of profits with the 50 per cent flat levy. There will be no mention at that time of the proposal to tax unrealized capital gains.

Why is that, Mr. Speaker? I say that the government's plan is simply and strictly a political plan. They have no reason to believe from what their economists have told them—and I know this to be a fact—that next winter is to be any better from the point of view of employment or inflation than was last winter. Probably it will be worse. They have no intention of going through another winter such as the last one and endure the battering they got from the opposition and citizens of Canada, and hold an election next spring.

Here is what they are going to do. During the summer they will have this high priced group of public relations people that has been mentioned this afternoon going around the country and building up the government in every way they can. During the summer the weather is warm; people take holidays; jobs are always more plentiful. Everyone feels better at the end of the summer. At the end of the summer, around about September 1, this government, on some pretext such as that the opposition is holding them up or they want to get some kind of assurance from the people of Canada that the people are in favour of constitutional change, and so on, will call an election. The Prime Minister will certainly find an excuse and he will call an election.

He intends to call an election about September 1, or at any time before the end of October, before the next bad winter sets in. Then the plan is, and this is a fact, for the Minister of Finance to bring in the tax increases for people in the middle income brackets. The 21 per cent tax will go out and the 50 per cent levy will be adopted. The tax on unrealized capital gains will be introduced. The people of Canada will get this entire package after the election, which the government hopes to win. God help us if they ever do. I am convinced that they will not, but if they ever do, this is what they intend. This is the government's plan. There is no question about that.

This budget will be what might be called a window-shade budget. The government intends to pull up the shade for a few months this summer, let in a little sunshine, have everybody happy and, after the election, if by some mischance the government should win, that shade will again be pulled down and the people of Canada will find themselves in the same financial and economic darkness as they are in today.

I would like to spend a few moments speaking about what should be done to deal with inflation which makes our products harder to sell and thereby reduces sales, production and jobs. We have a right to ask what the government should do to keep the inflation within the 2½ per cent increase per year, the average inflation year by year that we have experienced in this country for the past 70 years since DBS started keeping track of that figure. This average 2½ per cent per year permits us to sell our products at prices satisfactory to our customers and to maintain our standard of living.

As we all know, a year ago the government tried to control inflation by means of voluntary guidelines. They failed dismally because no penalties were provided for not observing these guidelines. In order to keep inflation within a 2½ per cent yearly increase, the government must work out a percentage increase above which prices cannot be allowed to rise within a year and a percentage increase above which wages cannot be allowed to rise in that same year in order to make that price limitation possible. These will be the price and wage guidelines for the year ahead.

The government must advise management and labour that if these guidelines are not obeyed, mandatory price and wage controls will be introduced without delay. In order to put teeth into this program, so that management and labour will know the government means what it says, it should now be at work preparing these mandatory controls. It all depends whether management and labour believe that the government has the courage to bring in controls if its guidelines are not obeyed. If management and labour are so convinced, and I know this because I talked to a great many businessmen and labour leaders who have told me the same thing—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I must advise him that his time has expired. He may continue if there is unanimous consent. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hees: Thank you very much. I appreciate the courtesy of my fellow members. I assure them I will only be one more minute.

It is very important that management and labour know that the government means what it says and has the courage to bring in mandatory price and wage controls if there is no adherence to voluntary guidelines. Labour and management leaders across the country have told me that the one thing they do not want is mandatory controls. If they are convinced that the government will bring them in if voluntary guidelines are not obeyed, these guidelines will be obeyed. That is what the government must do.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that there is a great deal to be done to bring unemployment and inflation under control. The government should have started to take these steps a long time ago. We have pointed out what these steps are. We continue to urge the government that they must act now. It is imperative that these steps be taken without further delay.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis)—Manpower—Alleged discrimination against women in training programs; the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe)—Inquiry of the Ministry.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO ESTABLISH PROGRAMS TO PROVIDE FULL EMPLOYMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Comeau:

That this House records its deep concern upon reviewing the government's continuing repudiation of its duty to establish full employment programs, and the consequent failure by the government to establish programs and polices which will give young Canadians the opportunity to enter the labour force.

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, ordinarily one congratulates a member and thanks him for bringing a motion before the House. However, today, the hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau) has to be congratulated on his acting ability. Seldom have I heard so many tired platitudes and trite cliches strung together in such a tone of righteous indignation as we have been treated to by the hon. member.

We have been blessed because the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) has given us a preview of what is likely to happen. Had the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) known that his work was being done for him elsewhere, no doubt he would have been here today. However, the choice of the subject today finds the Minister of Finance very close to a budget and hence, in a practical way, precluded from taking part in this debate.

During the series of debates that we have been treated to on opposition days throughout the winter and spring seasons, various ministers have described the active, effective programs which their departments are conducting to improve the employment opportunities of Canadians generally and young Canadians in particular. These programs are important, substantial, practical and effective, but the fact remains that in our free enterprise country, the major opportunities to solve economic problems, including the provision of more employment, lie in the private sector. There is a distinct limit to the results that government can attain directly.

This is not to say that additional government interventions in the economy would not be possible. Whether they would be effective in achieving the desired results is debatable. What is not debatable is the fact that massive new interventions, as some advocate, would take us closer and closer to a different economic system than the free enterprise system that has, by and large, served us so well and has permitted us to enjoy a standard of living and of personal freedom unapproached by nations practising other economic and political philosophies.

In Canada's free enterprise economy, optimum results do not automatically flow from unilateral government intervention. Rather, they result from a combination of public and private decisions, actions and policies when the public input, the government's contribution, creates and maintains the economic environment within which the private sector can make and execute sound decisions.

Canada's economy is not isolated from those of its trading partners, nor from those from whom it receives capital, but we have shown that we do have an important measure of room in which to pursue independent policies with success. That is not to say that we can have our cake and eat it too, for example that we could pursue more vigorous anti-inflationary measures than other countries while maintaining relatively fewer on the public payroll and have less unemployment then them.

It would be most helpful if we could know in advance the degree of vigour with which other nations are going to pursue their economic policies and the measure of success with which they are going to be content. Not knowing these facts in advance means that we are bound to get a bit out of phase from time to time and there is no doubt that Canada's relatively greater success in executing its economic policies can and has on occasion created as well as solved problems. Nevertheless, we must aspire to a balanced economic policy that is best for Canada and hope that, in the long run, our trading partners will do equally well for themselves and thus for the entire economic community of which we are a part.

I have said before and I do not mind saying again that certainly we have more unemployment than we would wish and that is, unquestionably, a personal tragedy for those caught up in it. That would be equally true if Canada's unemployment, seasonally adjusted or otherwise, were 1 per cent or less. This element of personal tragedy is real and will always be real regardless of all the effective measures that governments at all levels have taken to assist the unemployed and to reduce unemployment.

Employment is high, too, and this is no tragedy. Canada's work force is growing faster than the work forces of most other western countries. This growth rate has been about 3 per cent per year for the last three years—last year it was 321,000 workers, or 4 per cent—which means that a great many new jobs have to be created in Canada every year just to keep the unemployment figure—in numbers, not percentages—the same. Last year, employment in Canada, the number of people working, rose faster than that of any other industrialized nation, the United States among them.

We are accused of deliberately creating unemployment to beat inflation. That is arrant nonsense. It totally ignores the unemployment which would have followed from lost exports had inflation been allowed to continue in Canada. Our 1970 merchandise trade surplus of $3 billion was due in large measure to our superior price performance and by all traditional measuring sticks that meant over 200,000 jobs; over 200,000 more employed Canadians. The inflation problem common to all western nations has not disappeared and Canada must, and will, pursue economic policies designed to maintain our relatively better performance over the long term.

An area in which we are suffering from no shortage of expert advice is that of wage and price controls. We are indebted to the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) for a renewed offering today. It is the main thesis of a number of prominent critics of the government's economic policies that the only way in which inflation can be satisfactorily contained at the same time as an acceptable employment level is maintained, is by the institution of an incomes policy, price and wage controls of some description.

The hearings presently being conducted by the Senate Committee on National Finance certainly provide ample academic and theoretical support for any position one wants to take on this subject. The eminent British economist, Sir Roy Harrod, is reported and quoted as advocating an incomes policy, compulsory if necessary, although he specifically said he was talking about Great Britain and the United States and that he would not like to venture an opinion about Canada. Dr. Richard Lipley, another distinguished British economist presently incumbent at Queen's University was questioning the acceptability and viability of an incomes policy in a free market society, except perhaps on a voluntary basis over the very short term. He also concludes that the incomes policy operated in Great Britian during the late 1960's had, in fact, been inflationary.

Mr. J. Douglas Gibson, an eminent economist from the private sector, sees the answer to be reduced taxes with a consequent increased deficit which he admits would, in itself, be inflationary. He acknowledges that Canada's unemployment problem is different from that of most other countries in that we have rising employment, which is simply not keeping up to the increase in the work force. Mr. Gibson encourages actions which would tend to reduce the exchange rate of the Canadian dollar, while economics professor A. D. Scott of the University of British Columbia contends that the rising exchange rate has neutralized the imported element of our inflation.

It is not my intention to pursue in detail the proceedings and evidence being elicited in the Senate Committee. I have merely cited a few examples to illustrate the diversity of expert opinion available to those who must ultimately decide. Meanwhile we find the Economic Council of Canada advising us that its mandate extends only to medium and long-term matters and constantly reminding us that its comments are directed in accordance with its mandate, to the medium and long-term. All the while they are admonishing and reminding us of their medium and long-term functions, they are being quoted as an authority on immediate and short-term solutions which is precisely what they deny advancing. The Senate Committee proceedings certainly establish that there is ample room for bona fide disagreement on economic policies. Under that circumstance, deliberate distortions of the position of the Economic Council of Canada appear inexcusable, even in the interest of political expedience.

What really concerns me now is not the criticisms of the state of the Canadian economy or of the government's economic policies, but rather the uncritical acceptance of some of the remedies proposed. The danger is not that Canadians will accept the critics' assessments of the state of the economy, because if that is as far as it goes, actual performance will soon prove them wrong. The danger is in going a step further and accepting their prescription—a controlled economy. A controlled economy is what is really being talked about whether it is called "mandatory price and wage guidelines.", "a comprehensive prices and incomes policy with teeth", "selective price controls" or "compulsory and binding arbitration". We find spokesmen of the left who would not for a moment interfere with the right of the worker to get what he can out of the economy by collective bargaining advocating price controls, rent controls, ceilings on interest, limits on capital return and so on. We find spokesmen of the right, who would not for a moment interfere with the right of the entrepreneur to get what he can out of the economy by free operation of the market, advocating compulsory arbitration, labour courts and other state pre-emption of the collective bargaining process.

We find all sorts of people advocating controls of other peoples' prices, never their own. And we see, in the middle, a government which has to ensure that the economic system works, which has to balance the various claims on production, which has to establish and preserve the economic environment in which the fair share of each and every one of those claimants can be maximized by increasing productivity. The real danger to Canada from those preaching exaggerated views of the state of the Canadian economy lies not in their selling those views but in selling the view that exaggerated remedies are desirable, even essential. These suggested remedies will never be desirable. I hope they will never be found to be essential.

Canada operated a controlled economy during the war. We established a Foreign Exchange Control Board whose function it was to control exchange dealings and international capital transactions. Its real job was to advise upon methods and to execute policies to conserve Canada's balance of United States dollars. It found that to make its work effective it had not only to control and manage regular international transactions, but to call upon the government to limit imports ruthlessly, to realize on Canadian assets in the United States and to borrow heavily in the U.S. market. We have heard, in recent weeks, arguments in the House of Commons that because of the current pressure on our dollar as a result of our move into a positive balance of payments position, which is the reverse of the wartime problem, it would be highly desirable for Canada to establish an interim foreign exchange control system.

During the war we also set up a Wartime Prices and Trade Board responsible for the whole field of price controls and consumer protection. It started out with selective controls, dealing only with the necessities of life, rents, fuels and a selection of foods. Within two years it covered all goods and services and was enforcing a price ceiling. For a number of items, prices management alone proved inadequate and physical rationing was implemented to assure a fair distribution at the administered prices. By late 1942, there were, in operation under the Wartime Prices and Trade Board, a wool administrator, a coal administrator, a sugar administrator, a hides and leather administrator, an oils administrator, a rent administrator and some 85 other administrators, complete with staffs of varying magnitude, all concentrating their efforts on the price management of particular commodities and services. I would hesitate to estimate the number of suggestions I have heard in recent months that this, that or the other price, be it bank interest, rent, dividends or particular commodity or service prices should be subjected to ceilings—in other words, that we need selective price controls.

The National War Labour Board, during the war years, started by administering wages and bonuses, but very soon found it had to assume centralized control of all labour policy, not just that which came under federal jurisdiction. In addition to controlling the federal conciliation service and enforcing the federal Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, it controlled provincial labour policy through nine provincial boards under the chairmanships of the nine provincial ministers of labour. Again, I cannot estimate the number of times in recent months that demands have been more for wage controls in particular industrial situations. Needless to say, they do not usually come from the people who suggest rent or dividend limitations.

I have left out of this litany the numerous boards and agencies concerned with procurement and production of weapons and so on, and the various agricultural boards whose main purpose was to supply food to Britain. Their function was peculiar to war. The three I have described—the foreign exchange control board, the wartime prices and trade board and the national war labour board—are the three that dealt directly with the areas where advocates of controls today see those controls as necessary—the external value of our dollar, the prices of goods and services, and wages and other labour costs.

In addition we had an excess profits tax, and that, too, is something frequently suggested today by those who see the need for the government to limit business profits. Another proposal is mandatory guidelines that would limit the profit of business to the long-term capital return actually experienced in a particular industry. One might greet these suggestions with more enthusiasm if one felt that limitation of initiative—a resignation to doing no better than in the past; a static business community—would be in the national interest.

In wartime it was legally possible for the Canadian government to deal with every phase of the Canadian economy. Daily orders in council under the authority of the War Measures Act disposed of the most minute economic details, most of them items clearly within the constitutional competence of the provinces. Today's proponents of controls have religiously ignored the constitutional issue. If they are serious, if their advocacy of controls is in good faith, they have the obligation to answer this question: What is to be the legal basis for the action by the federal government which they propose?

Assuming a legal basis can be found, will controls work? During the war we had a massive national consensus, a will to win, a willingness to sacrifice. Even with that we, and for that matter every other country whose economic experience lay in free markets, had our grey and black markets. Does that national consensus exist today? I think not. If it did, the support for voluntary restraint would have made the efforts of the Prices and Incomes Commission a greater success. Current experience in countries with controlled economies and, indeed, established traditions of controls would tend to confirm that, without the support of a national consensus, mandatory economic controls do not, in fact, work well. Like so much other socialist dogma, the fact bears little resemblance to the theory.

The lesson of our wartime experience is that selective measures very quickly become comprehensive; that continued successful regulation of a given activity depends on the regulation of an increasing circle of decreasingly related activities, that general guidelines breed detailed directives; that simple, broad objectives evoke complicated, detailed controls. The lesson of our wartime experience, if we care to recall it, is that Canada with a controlled economy is a very different Canada from Canada today. It is not one to which those who care to remember would cheerfully return. Let us keep that in mind when aggravation with the uneven operation of our economy tempts us to cry "crisis" and to demand direct state intervention.

The government has not rejected the possibility that specific controls, within its lawful competence may be needed and that particular intervention when collective bargaining processes break down may be unavoidable. I, personally, doubt that controls would produce the benefits that their advocates envisage, but I have no doubt whatever that their cost would be paid in terms of individual freedom. Some unevenness in the operation of the economy is the price that Canadians pay for a great deal of personal freedom in our economic decisions. To date it has proved a price well worth paying. Given the will to make our free economy work, we can continue to enjoy that freedom; but that will must be shared by all sectors, government, business, labour. Immoderate demands on the economy by any sector may very well confront us with a very different economy and a very different way of life than we have heretofore enjoyed.

The Minister of Finance will be bringing down his budget two weeks from tomorrow, on June 18, barring some major unforeseen event. I understand that it is intended that the six day budget debate will commence the following Tuesday, June 22, and, allowing for the St. Jean Baptiste Day holiday, will terminate on Wednesday, June 30. We will, in the budget and ensuing debate, be in a position to discuss the economy in a prospective, rather than retrospective, way.

Meanwhile, we will note with interest any and all responsible suggestions forthcoming from all sides of the House during today's debate, as we have noted and considered those made during earlier debates on economic issues. I do hope, however, that in advancing ideas all hon. members will bear in mind the facts of Canada, including in particular the fact of the fastest growing labour force in the free world; the fact of a free enterprise economic system that an overwhelming majority of Canadians want to see strengthened and preserved, not subverted and destroyed; the fact of our partnership in an international trading community and capital market; the fact that there are legal limits to the legislative power of the federal Parliament and to the executive power of the federal government.

The government cannot, in making its budgetary decisions, divorce itself from these realities. Suggestions that ignore these realities, whatever their credentials in abstract theory, are grossly irresponsible, and the more highly placed their proponents are, or are imagined to be the greater the element of fraud, deceit and political expedience in exploiting them.

Mr. Lundrigan: May I ask the hon. member two very simple questions? First of all, was he speaking for the government in making his remarks? Secondly, has he seen any contingency plans that the Prime Minister and several other ministers, namely finance, labour and external affairs, have referred to nationally? If he has not, perhaps he can say why all of these remarks by these hon. gentlemen about contingency plans for the control of prices and wages were uttered, in view of the speech the hon. member has just made?

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Speaker, I did note in my speech that the government had not rejected the possibility that controls would be required in emergency situations. Certainly, in response to questions here in the House the Minister of Finance has indicated that since these controls have not been introduced, obviously the government does not deem that the emergency they are designed to meet in fact exists.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I should first like to congratulate my colleague, the hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau), for introducing the motion today, one which is very timely in view of the critical situation of student unemployment, to say nothing of unemployment generally. Everyone recognizes that the student unemployment problem has reached critical proportions: almost two million of our young citizens, approximately ten per cent of the population—a portion of our population to which we will look for the future leaders of this country—are denied employment opportunities because the government has not been able to plan to cope with the basic need for employment in our country.

I can understand such a situation arising if an emergency came about suddenly. But since the government was aware in years past that the problem would recur, that this need would arise each year, it should not have failed to provide the leadership to cope with the situation, having been warned by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, the Economic Council of Canada, and especially having been warned by every member of this House of Commons.

As long ago as last September the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) warned the government of a recurrence of this situation when at the last minute the government introduced some makeshift program to provide student employment. Instead of starting to plan at that time for the following year, the government simply hoped that the problem would run away. Instead of consolidating its position, making an assessment of the situation, learning some lessons from its previous errors and making some improvements on the 1970 program, the government was content to rest on its laurels.

In March of this year, it produced another program which was too late to provide an over-all plan to benefit the greatest number. Instead of starting last fall, after the 1970 program was completed, to plan for this year and introducing a program early enough, what has happened? True to form, the government announced its 1971 program on March 16 with deadlines for submission of projects too soon thereafter. As a result, proper communication of information to those areas where the need was greatest was denied. True to form, this government made its usual announcement about how concerned it was about unemployed Canadians, especially students, which sounds wonderful over the news media but produces, in fact, too little too late. The announcement by the Prime Minister was of the usual type. He repeated, as he does too often, the concern his government has for all Canadians in need.

It is worth while repeating some of his words about this government's concern for the almost two million students who would be seeking jobs and the rest who would be in search of other equally meaningful summer activities. It is in the national interest, he said, that the wishes of as many persons as possible in each category be accommodated. He also said that the advantages of summer employment are so obvious, however, in terms of self-support, of broadening of outlook, of acquisition of new skills and experience that every effort by governments to assist is justified. The Prime Minister further said that there is equal justification for assisting students who do not seek work but who want to occupy their summer vacations in undertaking other rewarding and worth-while activities. That may be wonderful speech writing, Mr. Speaker, but there has been little in the way of meaningful action. When these words were being uttered to the country there was not one bit of planning in progress to set up the administrative support to get the program in motion.

Employment Programs

I visited the offices of the Opportunities for Youth program just before the deadline for submission of projects. They were still setting up the offices in a makeshift manner. There was only one telephone. There was no office space and there were no desks. They were running around like a bunch of—well, I don't know what. Only days before the deadline for the submission of projects some Manpower centres were still not aware of the program. Mr. Speaker, there are places in this country where the people still are not aware of the Opportunities for Youth program despite all the public relations experts and the advertising agencies. It makes me wonder what Information Canada has been doing all this time.

As recently as three weeks ago some Manpower centres in this country had no details of the student militia and civilian employment programs. Ever since the program was announced it has progressed by accident rather than design; and the credit for the little progress it has made is due to the staff who have worked under the most trying circumstances because of lack of fundamental preparation on the part of the government. Despite all the fanfare about and expression of the good deeds of the government, the whole point of the problem was missed.

The aim of the exercise is to provide employment opportunities for the students of our country who need money in order to further their education. They need money because financing their education creates hardship for parents who cannot afford it. It is as simple as that. If they can provide the $67 million to finance such a program, all credit to the government. If the money is hard to come by—which I appreciate—and the government cannot provide enough to assure everyone a job, then the solution is again simple. Every last copper of the $67 million should have been directed toward helping those who cannot afford to pay for their education.

It is fine for the government to provide programs whereby students can travel Europe. It is fine to provide moneys for students to hich-hike across Canada to learn about our great country. But when so many of our youth are denied an education in our affluent society because they cannot afford it, then for the love of God let us consider what our priorities are. If the government refuses to recognize the fact that there are five million poverty-stricken Canadians because of senseless priorities, then let us direct our spending to help educate the children first. If we want to teach our youth to stand together and understand together, let us introduce meaningful participatory programs wherein we can use their knowledge and direct their understanding to useful purposes by helping those who are unable to help themselves.

Our great country was built through the hard work of our parents and their ancestors and we have produced some pretty good citizens. Let us continue on that course and give students some responsibility to help us, and not send them on the road because we want to get rid of them, with the camouflaged excuse of believing that they are gaining something which will make them better Canadians.

Employment Programs

One of the most successful programs introduced last year was the student militia program. It was heartening to learn that this year the program would be expanded from 5,000 to 8,000. It was also heartening to learn that this year the program would be expanded to include meaningful civilian employment and leadership training. But imagine how discouraging it is now to find that the program is being cancelled in some parts of Canada, due primarily and utterly to lack of preparation and attention to the support facilities required. I knew, just as sure as I am standing here, that such a problem would arise because I was aware of the lack of support services to cope with the program last year.

To give an example of how much the government listens when someone in the opposition tries to help, as long ago as last March 25 I asked the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) if, in view of the extension of the student militia program to include armouries which are administered mainly by militia units, he would announce as soon as possible the quotas for provinces to ensure that the district headquarters would be able to request logistic support and instructional staff from regular army resources to maintain the training program. The minister replied that he would keep the representation in mind. What happened? About three days ago one armoury in my constituency was informed that its program would be cancelled due to a shortage of instructional staff, and that 25 students would now be denied the opportunity to participate in the program. This, to me, demonstrates an out-and-out lack of regard for representations made by Members of Parliament, let alone lack of regard for our people.

As recently as April 1 I introduced a motion under Standing Order 43 asking the government to extend the deadline for submissions under the Opportunities for Youth program because it was obvious to me that information was not being received by many isolated communities which were beyond the reach of the news media and far away from Manpower centres. As usual, nobody listened to a reasonable request, with the result that many communities submitted projects too late or even now have not heard about the program, although they may finally have heard about their right to equal opportunity. These are the places where students will never get a university education, Mr. Speaker, because they will never be able to afford it and will never get the message of equal opportunity no matter where they live.

As late as March 30 last, as recorded in Hansard and as reflected in a question by the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir), some Manpower offices did not have information concerning the program to pass on to residents. As late as March 24 and 29 I asked the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang), since it was obvious that information was not reaching people in the provinces of highest unemployment, if quotas would be allocated to assure those parts of Canada some portion of the moneys. Again there was a matter-of-fact answer that indicated passive interest.

Upon reviewing the many projects submitted it is obvious that our youth have shown that they have initiative and original ideas. Most of the projects are worthy of commendation. There is also a clear indication that our adult citizens are willing to help the government by showing leadership to students in promoting worth-while projects. It is heartening to note the number of projects for campaigns to clean-up our roads, beaches and riversides, projects to help the poor, the aged, the disabled, the mentally ill and projects to promote youth development and medical centres where there is a crisis because of lack of facilities. This is truly commendable. But what about the disappointment that will be experienced when many projects are turned down because of lack of information or lack of funds? Again, this emphasizes lack of appreciation at the planning stage.

Who will explain to these people why their projects were turned down? Just the other day we received a letter from the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) saying the government would allow Members of Parliament—even Members of Parliament on the opposition side—to pass out the cheques for some of these projects. I do not want to pass out these cheques. I would much rather he told me what I can tell Canadians in areas where unemployment is highest whose projects have been refused, and how I can explain why the Department of National Defence had to cut back on promised projects because of lack of funds. How can I justify making these excuses when they ask me, "How is it the government can spend $7½ million on Information Canada, with a $2 million annual budget, and they do not know what is going on?" Perhaps the government has learned some lessons by now. I am willing to give them the benefit of the doubt and say that they might listen.

The idea of the program is good and I hope the government will make an assessment of the lessons that can be learned from mistakes of the past. The first thing to be done is to ask each project leader to make a report on the advantages gained from the program and their estimation of the faults as well as their recommendations for improvement and new ideas. I think that the government, instead of authorizing polls to be carried out across Canada to see how popular they are, should authorize polls to be carried out to learn the thinking of students to ask for their critique of the program and to ask for new ideas.

The government must as soon as possible draw up a program for next year with a deadline for the output of information. I should like to offer some ideas which I think might be worth while. I suggest that the government should direct more attention to anti-pollution measures beyond the probe stage. They should direct more attention to helping the incapacitated. They should direct qualified students to participate in recreational programs for the really young to help overcome our poor efforts toward physical fitness, which is generally recognized.

We should form teams of students to go across this country to tabulate each and every unacceptable home and to help realistically to direct more funds to housing projects where people who are too poor are living in shameful accommodation. I agree that millions of dollars are being poured into housing for those in the low-income bracket, but a great portion of our population cannot even afford the down payment or cannot afford to take advantage of lower rates of interest to build a home, because they do not have a copper.

We should further expand student training through the militia and mobile command bases to teach leadership and to establish programs oriented toward community participation. We must also think of those who had to cease being students because they could not afford to go to school and who are now walking the streets because they cannot get a job to enable them to go back to school.

There are many questions still not answered although the deadline is almost upon us. I should like to ask the government why the information was so late in going out. I should also like to ask why the government did not stand by their pledge that regional unemployment would be used as a measure. Where do the regionally disadvantaged provinces stand with regard to the allocation of funds? Down at the bottom of the list, as usual. What about the critieria regarding the financial need of students who will be left out in dismay and discouragement, which defeats the purpose of the program? What are the criteria now? They are in bound volumes in offices, and try as we may it is impossible to find out how many projects were submitted from the various regions where the need is greatest. On what basis are projects rejected, cut back or accepted? How do we get the answers for our constituents on the progress that is being made with the projects they have submitted?

I wonder if the government would give members of the House of Commons who are interested and concerned an opportunity to visit the secretariat. We are invited to many meetings and dinners, but I would like us to be invited to the secretariat to see what progress is being made with regard to the projects that are submitted by our constituencies. I do not know whether the government is listening when somebody is trying to be helpful but I hope they will realize that it is most important that they decide on the priorities. This is most important, so that we can ensure the success of our objectives to the most important segment of our society, namely, the youth of our country.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew North): Mr. Speaker, I take pleasure in participating in this debate because some positive things should be pointed out. First of all, we live in the greatest country in the world. We have the greatest potential for the future and we have policies to develop it. The only two countries in the world which have a higher standard of living are Sweden and the United States, and I ask members of the House how many of them would change their positions to become citizens of either of those countries.

Mr. Lundrigan: We are talking of the 650,000 unemployed Canadians.

Mr. Hopkins: I will get around to that subject. Recently a minister resigned from the cabinet. We have heard comments about this from across the floor of the House. He advocated the philosophy that our resource-based industries should be developed at a slower rate, that they should not receive tax concessions in regard to their profits. Hon. members do not seem to realize that these industries are pouring money back into the economy and hence creating jobs. I should like to ask the hon. member advocating this philosophy how he justifies it at a time when many of our mining communities sole source of employment is our natural resources, when economists are telling us that we should be making use of our natural resources for the employment of our people. His concept does not make sense.

What are the policies of the government to create employment? We have greatly expanded ARDA facilities in the last few years, together with the provinces. I am very critical of the way in which ARDA projects are administered. The province of Ontario, like the other provinces of Canada, administers ARDA projects—in this case it is a Conservative government—but on very few occasions are members of the government of Canada invited to participate in the opening of projects or developments in the rural parts of Canada although the federal government provides 50 per cent of the funds.

I should like to cite an example where we provided 50 per cent of the money for an ARDA project in my constituency which is the provincial constituency of Renfrew South. I have received several telephone calls from people who wonder where the ARDA funds are for this project which employed people during the winter months. I telephoned the ARDA people in Ottawa and telephone calls were made to Toronto. To everybody's amazement, it was discovered that the cheque was delivered by the provincial member to the industry concerned. It was taken out of his pocket and handed to the person to whom it should have been sent. It was not even handed to him in an envelope—and it was dated a month earlier than the date it was received.

If hon. members opposite want to refer to the politics in the Opportunities for Youth program, there are cases such as this that can be demonstrated by their counterparts in the province of Ontario. Why should a cheque be a month old when it is delivered to a business which has kept people employed during the winter months when unemployment is extremely high? I repeat that 50 per cent of this money was federal money.

Another thing we must do in the field of education is promote far greater participation by Canadian intellectuals in our universities and in other places of education such as our technical schools. By no means should we encourage people from other countries to come here and take up teaching positions. I support 100 per cent any policy that is aimed in that direction. Another thing which is happening today, largely because of the high cost of education, is the cutting back of teaching staffs which in turn puts a larger number of students in the classrooms. This is creating unemployment at the teaching level. Of course, education is under provincial administration.

We are in an era which probably has the highest number of students in Canadian history. Predictions are that the number of students will decline somewhat but at present we are going through the bulge period. This is why the government has tried in many ways, particularly last year and this year, to provide employment opportunities to students during the summer months. It is difficult to find jobs for all students but there has been more input by this administration into student employment than by any other government in Canadian history.

I also commend the private business sector and the many firms which are employing students during the summer months. We should not give the impression that it is the duty of the government of Canada to employ all our students in co-operation with provincial governments and municipalities. I commend businesses, be they small or large, which have made employment openings in their operations for the youth of the country.

Many commendable student employment programs have been accepted this summer, in spite of the criticism of some. There is always criticism, because no one is perfect in this world. I am extremely proud of one program in my area which is designed to provide recreation for mentally retarded children and adults. When it was first mooted it was suggested the project could not be accepted because it involved bus transportation, but eventually the policy was made flexible enough to include transportation for worthy projects such as this.

I well remember my university days, hitch-hiking along the roads of southern and northern Ontario looking for summer employment. I know on a first-hand basis what this is like. At that time we did not have a student loans program. Hon. members will recall that the student loans program was initiated under the administration of the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson in co-operation with the provinces. It has proven very successful and has been continued with greater support by the present government.

If you are starting a business, Mr. Speaker, you need a great deal of what is known as bridge financing to carry you over the difficult period when there is no income coming to the firm. I think the student loans program is the bridge financing for our youth today, because the government not only pays the interest up to and including six months after a student graduates from university but picks up the tab for those who for one reason or another do not pay back the loans. The program enables students to continue at university and receive an education.

There is one strong suggestion that I wish to make to the government. It is that in order to assist students—as I say, the largest number in Canadian history—over this difficult period when some of them cannot find employment, the government should place more emphasis on guaranteed student loans in order to bridge their being financed through university and in cases where there is real need, where parents cannot contribute, the policy should be made more flexible with the government backing higher loans for individuals, particularly in cases where students have not been able to make much money during the summer months.

We hear a great deal today from the treasurer of the Province of Ontario who feels that if Ottawa persists in many of its present policies then perhaps the province should opt out of some cost-sharing programs. There is one definite project I would like to see the province opt out of, and it is in the field of housing. At present the federal government is putting up 90 per cent of the money that is being poured into provincial housing corporations across Canada, with the provinces providing the remaining 10 per cent. But at every public housing project you see a notice which reads: This is another housing project by the province of so and so. No mention is made of the contribution by the federal government.

I would gladly agree with the treasurer of the Province of Ontario: let us pay the other 10 per cent and let the people of Canada know that not only is the federal government willing to pay 90 per cent of the cost of this housing but it is willing to pay 100 per cent, and have the program brought under federal jurisdiction. Let us get out of this game of petty politics.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair to resume the same at eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, at six o'clock I was discussing the federal-provincial housing program with which I disagree. To follow up the comment made by the provincial treasurer of Ontario to the effect that they may want to get out of some cost-shared programs, I hope this does not mean that it is his intention to introduce in Canada a policy of economic separation on a provincial basis.

The industrial complexes of central Canada, British Columbia, Alberta, etc. are being called upon and will be called upon in future to hold this country together economically. Wherever the tax base is, that is where the tax dollar must come from to help Canadians in other parts of the country and to keep the country on a sound basis. We must not forget that the have-not provinces use their money to buy goods from the industrialized areas of Canada and therefore deserve some return in the form of the tax dollar.

We have been talking about youth employment and employment in general, but one matter that seldom comes up in debates in this House is that of employment on the farm. We hear a lot of criticism about Bill C-186 from the Conservative party and others in the House.

An hon. Member: It is Bill C-176.

Mr. Ricard: You should learn the lesson.

Mr. Hopkins: This bill provides for the maintenance of employment of young farmers in the rural parts of this country. In a statement in the Ontario legislature in support of this bill, Hon. William Stewart, provincial Minister of Agriculture, said:

> Mr. Speaker, if I may continue, I suggest that had the national marketing legislation now before the House of Commons been in effect, in my opinion the problems we now face across Canada would not have occurred, as far as interprovincial marketing problems are concerned.
> Now as I understand it the national bill, Bill C-176, will be introduced for third reading in the House of Commons in the very near future. I am advised by the office of the Minister of Agriculture of Canada that the bill has passed the Standing Committee on Agriculture stage, has been returned to the House and will be proceeded with.
> When it is passed it will provide the legislative authority at national level, but it must be complemented and supplemented by an exchange of power with the provinces. Here, Mr. Speaker, I wish to assert that I have assured the office of the federal Minister of Agriculture that we in Ontario will introduce the necessary amendments to our Farm Products Marketing Act to bring it in line with the national legislation, to provide for the reciprocal exchange of the necessary legislative powers.

That is the opinion of the Tory party of Ontario, Mr. Speaker, so they disagree with many members of the opposition in this House who have spoken on employment in agriculture. I have many things to say on the subject of regional economic expansion, but there is not time and I shall reserve my remarks on this subject for the budget debate.

There has been a great demand across this nation and in this House for an assessment of future policy on energy and national resources, although certain members obviously do not treat this as a very important subject. On May 26, the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, through the government House leader submitted the following motion:

> That the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works be authorized to study the oil and gas industry in Canada with particular reference to the ecological implications of various modes of transporting the product; and that in the conduct of such a study, the committee be empowered to adjourn from place to place within Canada during the week beginning June 13, 1971, and during the adjournment of the House.

At three o'clock that very afternoon, Mr. Speaker, it was my understanding that we had agreement to go on with these oil and gas hearings and to continue them at a later date with organizations interested in the ecological effects this industry had on the environment. However, at a quarter to six I received word that there was opposition from the official opposition of the House of Commons. I might say—my statement will be backed up by the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Orange)—that on that afternoon we had a conversation with the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams).

• (8:10 p.m.)

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Hopkins: At that time he said it would not be satisfactory to him because he was worried lest the young offenders bill came before the House that week.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is my understanding that the hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Ricard: He may continue, even if he is out of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The suggestion has been made that the hon. member should be allowed to continue because others have been granted extensions. That is entirely up to the House, but there should be unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): For two minutes.

Mr. Ricard: Even though the hon. member has been out of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Ricard) suggests that even though the hon. member is out of order he should be allowed to continue.

Mr. Hopkins: I thank Your Honour and hon. members for accommodating me. As I was saying, the hon. member for Calgary North said, in the presence of the hon. member for Northwest Territories, that he did not want the hearings to go on that particular week lest the young offenders bill should come before the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must say, on reflection, that the aside of the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe was perhaps to the point. The hon. member should take into account that we have a motion before us. This is not a general debate on the budget. It is not a throne speech debate. Hon. members cannot roam all over the field and air, at this time, all their grievances in respect of hon. members on the other side of the House, the government or anyone else. If the hon. member is to be allowed to continue his remarks beyond the time allotted to him, he should adhere to the rules and limit his remarks to the matter before the House, namely, the motion of the hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau).

I did not think the remarks of the hon. member would produce the result they did. I will now recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, as I listened to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang)—

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, I was going to say that in my opinion the gas and oil pipeline industry and the natural resource industries are important employment factors. They are important to employment not only today but in the future. In that way I wanted to relate the matter to this debate. The question of employment is one not only of temporary but of long-term importance. It is a very serious question at this stage. It is a question in which all hon. members of the House are interested. It was in this light that I wanted to put my remarks on record. I apologize to you, Mr. Speaker, if I did not make myself understood.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member does not have to apologize to me. I appreciate the point he was trying to make. I suggested that the hon. member could conclude his remarks with the unanimous consent of the House. I assumed, having in mind the comment made a moment ago, that the hon. member for Renfrew North (Mr. Hopkins) had come to the conclusion of his remarks and that is why I called on the hon. member for Winnipeg North.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, when I listened to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang) extolling this afternoon the good conditions which exist in this country, I wondered in what never-never land he has been living. It is obvious, in light of the heaviest unemployment this country has seen for more than ten years, that when the minister asserts this country is doing well, he is simply ignoring the facts. I feel rather sorry for the minister and cannot help remembering that he is one of those members who, among several others, was elected by a small plurality of votes in the last election.

I hope that he has simply taken leave of absence from his former position as dean of the law school of the University of Saskatchewan because I feel, in view of the government's inability to deal with unemployment and the problems of western farmers, that when the next election takes place the minister will be back in Saskatchewan, hopefully as dean of the faculty of law at the University of Saskatchewan.

In April of this year, the last month for which we have figures, 659,000 people were unemployed, compared with 544,000 during the same month in 1970. That represents 6.7 per cent of the labour force calculated on a seasonally adjusted basis, and 7.8 per cent calculated in actual terms. In April, 1971, unemployment in the Maritimes rose to 75,000 from 66,000 in April, 1970. In Quebec, unemployment rose to 234,000, compared with 203,000 in April, 1970.

An hon. Member: Somebody else has used the same figures.

Mr. Orlikow: I hear an hon. member interjecting that another hon. member used the same figures. I would think that a party with the heavy representation from the province of Quebec which the government party enjoys would be very concerned about there being so much unemployment in Quebec in April, 1971. In Ontario, unemployment rose from 145,000 in April, 1970, to 205,000 in April of this year. In British Columbia, unemployment rose from 58,000 in April of last year to 72,000 in April of this year. In the Prairie provinces it rose fractionally, from 72,000 in April, 1970, to 73,000 in April of this year.

The motion before the House speaks of the deep concern of Canadians that the government's policies are failing to give young Canadians the opportunity to get jobs. If one looks at the statistics in the labour force survey from which I have quoted, one will see that the unemployment situation in respect of young people is desperate. One can see how much more acute the worsening economic outlook has made the problem faced by Canada's young people.

The figures show that in April, 1971, 130,000 people between the ages of 14 and 19 were unemployed, compared with 111,000 in April of the previous year. In April, 1971, 151,000 young people between the ages of 20 and 24 were unemployed, compared with 113,000 in April the year before. Is it any wonder that the people of Canada are incensed? Is it any wonder that a traditionally Liberal constituency like Brant went over to the NDP in the by-election held on Monday of this week? Is it any wonder that the constituency of Trois-Rivières was saved by a hair from going Social Credit in another by-election held last Monday?

The problem of employment for our young people will get much worse before it gets better. Dr. W. R. Dymond, an economist at the University of Ottawa and a former deputy minister in the Department of Manpower and Immigration, has put together an easily verifiable set of figures which make it clear that unemployment will not normalize as the economy revives. According to an article which I have in my hand, he said:

> In particular, youth unemployment seems fated to be a continuing problem unless direct and concrete policies to combat it are pursued.

He brings forward immense and interesting statistics.

> Between 1960 and 1970, Canada has experienced an 11 per cent increase in unemployment over all age groups. But the age group 14 to 19 years has experienced a 43 per cent increase in unemployment; for 20-24 year olds, the comparable increase is 49 per cent.

Dr. Dymond points out, as reported in the article:

> In 1960, 1,400,000 Canadian workers were between the ages of 14 and 24. By 1970, that number had risen to more than 2,000,000.

• (8:20 p.m.)

> Not only are there more young Canadians looking for work, there are more better-educated young Canadians looking for work. The combined rate of increase of post-secondary graduations—that means including community colleges and technical schools—has been of the order of 450 per cent.
> In addition to this, Dymond points out that the increase in professional and technical immigrants has been about 360 per cent over the decade.

We know the plight of students who need to work this summer if they are to return to school, university or community college next fall. We know that a large percentage of the close to one million who will look for jobs will not find a job or will get one for half or less than that of the time they have off between school terms. We know the tragedies being created every day by the failure of the government to firm-up its plans for student employment this summer until a time just over a month ago, so that many who were counting on government programs still do not know today, June 3, whether the projects from which they hope to get work will be approved. That is a disgrace. The delay in planning and decision-making by the government can only be characterized as criminal.

We have to face an even more serious problem. University graduates looking for permanent work are having difficulties which we have not had in this country since the hungry 1930s. The president of the Chemical Institute of Canada reported last week that over 50 per cent of the graduate engineers completing their courses this year have so far been unable to find work. Dr. Dymond dealt with the problem of university graduates in the speech to which I referred a few moments ago. He pointed out that this is one of the most serious problems facing the country. It is not only a problem of students but graduates of universities and community colleges who are looking for permanent work. Dr. Dymond said:

> The overwhelming governmental emphasis on—forestalling summer student unemployment—to the almost complete exclusion of the more fundamental problem of unemployment among graduates, means that the problem has either fallen through the cracks of federal provincial jurisdiction, or that the ordering of governmental priorities is seriously distorted.

This is not the opinion of a person who can be simply dismissed as not knowing what he is talking about, nor is it the opinion of a partisan politician. It is the opinion of a former assistant deputy minister in charge of manpower programs for the federal government. Dr. Dymond further pointed out:

> —the "combined rate of increase of post-secondary graduations —that is, graduates of universities and community colleges— has been of the order of 448 per cent. ... Employment of this group has increased ... about 200 per cent over the decade." ...
> In other words, barring a miracle of sorts, there is no way that all our young graduates are going to find jobs in the near future ...
> —Dymond says that the university graduating class of 1971 is about 75,000, some 7 per cent more than graduated in 1970.

Dr. Dymond pointed out that the community colleges have increased their graduating classes by about 15 per cent over last year. It is virtually impossible for these people to find jobs. I have come across a number of cases in my own city of Winnipeg—I am sure I am not alone in this experience—of people graduating from universities and returning to community colleges for further education. Why? Because there is no work and because the community college will, hopefully, give them a more specifically directed kind of training than they have had. What a perversion of the original objectives of a community college, for some who has received university and postgraduate training, the most expensive training in education by the most qualified people in this country, to return to the community college for further education because they cannot get work! It is a disaster and a disgrace. As I said a few moments ago, it is a crime against the young people of this country.

No country in the western industrial world has the rate of unemployment which we have in Canada. In Great Britain, the rate of unemployment a couple of weeks ago was just over 3 per cent. We know that in the local elections and by-elections which took place in Great Britain last week the British people demonstrated very clearly, by overwhelming victories for the Labour opposition party, that they would not stand for 3 per cent unemployment. I say to the government that the people of Canada will not stand for 7.8 per cent unemployment which we had in April of this year.

The government brought about this high rate of unemployment because of its fear of inflation. This afternoon we listened to the speech of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. He dealt with the dangers of inflation. The government's policies of restraint kept the cost of living increase to less than 2 per cent last year. As we predicted at that time, and as the economists are now telling the Senate Committee on Finance every day, no country can avoid what is a world wide phenomenon, namely, worldwide inflation. In the first four months of 1971 there was an increase in the cost of living in Canada of 1.8 per cent. If calculated for the year 1971, that is an increase of 5.4 per cent in one year. Moreover, there is no indication that the rate of increase in the cost of living is slowing up.

This year we have the worst of both possible worlds, high unemployment and high inflation. Economist after economist appearing before the Senate Committee on Finance has been condemning government policies. Professor Barber, head of the department of economics at the University of Manitoba, in testimony which he gave a few days ago told the Senate committee that last year we lost about $8 billion in production because we were operating with over 6 per cent unemployment for the whole year. I do not know Professor Barber's politics, but he cannot be very anti-government because the government appointed him to head the commission to study the high cost of farm implements.

What can be done? I say to the members of the government that they ought to make full employment the No. 1 priority in Canada for 1971, not full employment two, three or five years from now. A full employment program can be financed by genuine tax reforms. Members who wonder where the money will come from should look at the speech made yesterday by the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans), former Minister of Communications, when speaking to the Canadian Economics Association. This speech was reprinted in full today in the Montreal Star. They will see that in 1968, the last year for which figures are available, according to the calculations of the hon. member for Duvernay the metal mining companies in this country made a book profit of $1,707 million though their taxable income amounted only to $222 million. In other words, they were taxed on only 13 per cent of their profits. Other mining companies showed a book profit of $374 million but their taxable income was assessed at only $120 million. They were taxed on 32 per cent of their profits.

The manufacturing industry paid tax on 64 per cent of its book profits, and the retail trade paid tax at the rate of 90 per cent of its book profits. The money is there so we ought not to hear the story that we cannot afford to do the things which are required in order to create full employment. We need to reform the tax system, but I do not have much hope that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) will propose to do so when he brings forward his budget this month. We need to make those who can afford to do so pay for what is required in this country, the mining industry, the oil industry and the gas corporations which, as I pointed out, do not pay their fair share of taxation.

We ought to pump money into the economy, not by adopting Social Credit theory which the Minister of Manpower and Immigration suggested we were advocating but by increasing the income tax exemption to $2,000 for a single person and $4,000 for a married couple. We should pump money into the economy by increasing old age pensions. The 42 cents-a-month boys opposite are worse than the six bucks Liberals of 1957—and we all know what happened to them. The government should accelerate the programs of public housing and aid municipalities to carry out long overdue projects such as putting sewage disposal plants into proper order; it should aid the provinces to fight pollution.

I wish to close by suggesting what the government should do to help graduates from universities and community colleges who are unable to find the employment for which they have been trained. At the present time we are leaving this problem almost entirely to private enterprise and it may be two or three years before some of these highly qualified graduates are able to find work.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I understand that the hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Orlikow: May I have one more moment, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is seeking leave to continue for one more moment.

Mr. Orlikow: I believe the government should consider taking steps to subsidize the employment of university graduates until they can be absorbed into the economic life of Canada in the regular way. In other words, the government might pay a subsidy to private companies which could not see their way clear to hire the graduates who are now ready. The other suggestion is that the government give consideration to extending tax concessions, not to enable companies to acquire more equipment, as we are now doing, but to take on students for a transitional period, probably a year or two, until they can find the work for which they have been trained at great expense to the people of Canada.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): In speaking on this motion, Mr. Speaker, criticizing the government for allowing the unemployment of our youth to reach such high proportions, I want to put special emphasis on the situation which exists in the Prairie provinces. Although the problem of the unemployment of our youth is nationwide, it has some peculiarities pertaining to the Prairie provinces which I think deserve mention. The situation in the prairie provinces in this connection can only be described as very serious. This summer, the unemployment of students only complicates the difficulties which students from western Canada have been facing for the last five years.

The prairie region is in a state of transition. The poor economic situation has not only been disastrous for the farmer but also for farm-related industries. The effect of this drastic loss of prairie farm income has multiplied, leaving the whole western economy in a state of depression. The demoralizing effect of this situation on the youth of western Canada is obvious. Permanent jobs are hard enough to find, but the opportunity to obtain summer employment, which is vital to so many students if they are to continue their education, is for many non-existent.

Graduates from our universities are unable to find work locally so they must seek it elsewhere. The brain drain which results from this lack of opportunity will seriously hinder the development of the west and of the north. Our highly trained technicians and engineers, our doctors and lawyers, our agricultural and mining experts are forced to leave. The people who are so necessary to the development of the west must have some inducement if they are to remain.

Students wishing to attend universities from the rural parts of the western provinces are faced with very serious problems. All institutions of higher learning are situated in the cities. When a rural student commences university training he is faced with the higher costs of city living. This puts him at a disadvantage compared with the city student who is able to live relatively cheaply with his parents. On-campus living accommodation is usually very limited and for the student who cannot afford to meet such costs there are very few alternatives. Invariably, accommodation which is within reasonable reach of the university is at a premium. Rents are high and there is often a certain amount of unfair discrimination practised by landlords against students. Because of the large numbers of students needing places to live near the university, there is an extreme shortage of suitable accommodation. Students who do not have sufficient financial resources are forced to find accommodation a long way from the campus.

In addition to the practical difficulties facing students there is the problem of adjustment. For the young person who has never experienced city life, to be thrust into an urban environment with no transitional period often leads to disaster. This factor alone accounts for the higher percentage rate of failures among first-year rural students in universities when compared with those from the cities.

The rural student has always been at a disadvantage, but the disadvantages are even greater in a year when their fathers who are farmers can ill-afford to help finance their education. The annual cost for a rural student attending university is at least $2,500. Even with full government bursaries and student loans it is very difficult for the rural student to obtain this sum. Government-founded and financed universities are supposed to be universally accessible in this country. This may be true in theory, Mr. Speaker, but it is certainly not true in fact. Money is the determining factor and, as is usually the case, the student is at a disadvantage. Because of this disadvantage the rural student must earn and save more money than the city student.

In this respect the rural student is also at a disadvantage. Summer jobs for students in the rural parts of the Prairies are simply non-existent. The rural student must seek his summer job in the city or in the northern mining communities. Once again he loses the advantage of living at home. If a student has a four-month summer job he will spend $500 or more of his earnings for board and room. On top of this the northern mines have cut back on student hiring.

Jobs in the cities for rural students are, as I have already mentioned, at a premium. One must come to the conclusion that there is indeed a crisis for the rural student this year if he wants to further his education. Many will have to drop out and some will undoubtedly join the ranks of the permanently unemployed. Once a student has dropped out, he often finds it quite difficult to get back into the university system.

To meet this serious situation the government has made an ill-fated attempt to provide summer jobs for students. The program must be judged a failure because it has not met the basic need of a summer student, which is to make money. Under the Opportunities for Youth program the per capita grant seems to average out well below $1,000. For the rural student who is lucky enough to be a participant, this is a grossly inadequate sum. If the student is able to take advantage of home living this figure might be reasonable, but as one can see by the Secretary of State's releases the vast majority of grants have been to students in urban areas.

The Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) might reply that he has received few applications from rural communities, but I submit that this is the fault of the government rather than of the community. I know of one instance in my home constituency where Manpower did not have the information available for local organizers until four days before the submission deadline. Even at this late date the Manpower officer could not give any specific details. Several rural groups have not yet been notified whether or not their project has been accepted.

Officials of the Opportunities for Youth program have declined to make a province by province breakdown of the funds allotted. Last week in the Globe and Mail one spokesman was quoted as saying that such a breakdown could create unnecessary charges of favouritism, especially in the prairie and Atlantic regions, and he indicated that there were logical reasons for the breakdown. It seems to me that these officials should be made to account for the division of the money spent. Prairie students have just as high, if not higher, a level of unemployment as the rest of the country.

There are drastic faults in the Opportunities for Youth program. The program was announced shortly before the commencement of the spring examinations and the students who were deeply involved in study had little time for detailed development of a program to meet approval. The desired criterion needed for approval of a project was not made known. The Manpower officers were not given the information needed to answer local inquiries. Of course, in Ottawa the office seemed to be under total disorganization. Letters of inquiry went unanswered, officials could not be reached and the telephone often remained unanswered.

However, this government's announcement saved them from a temporary crisis. It put up an illusion of concern and action. Surely another crisis will come in September when thousands of university students find they do not have the cash needed to return to school. The government should prepare for this situation now. We cannot afford to deny this opportunity to our youth to further their education simply because of the government's lack of foresight and imagination.

I have a number of suggestions as to where the federal government might begin. In the first place, the government must take seriously the problems of student unemployment and of aid for financing education. They cannot ignore or shrink from this problem or shrug it off as a provincial responsibility; the federal government must become involved. If in the future the government is going to organize a program such as this year's Opportunities for Youth, the program should be designed to meet certain objectives. The first objective should be to provide the participant with an opportunity to earn enough cash to help finance his education rather than just to provide summer spending money.

The program should aim at being productive in nature. Projects are simply a waste of money if the participant is not doing something useful or if he is not making some contribution to society. Of course, this type of government employment can only be created with long-range planning and a good deal of organization.

The Canada Student Loans Act needs revamping. This act which makes interest-free loans available to students was enacted in 1964-65. Since then the cost of living has increased 30 to 35 per cent and tuition fees have risen correspondingly. It is time for the government to re-examine the $1,000 yearly maximum a student can obtain under the plan. Perhaps it should consider raising the yearly maximum to $1,500 or $2,000 and its total aggregate to $7,500, instead of the present $1,000 and $5,000 levels. It is also time for the federal government to lay down more equitable guidelines for the distribution of these funds. Presently a means test is employed and, as is the case with most means tests, it is greatly abused. Guidelines should be issued to the provinces each year on the administration of the plan. The loans should be graded and increased each year with allowances made to meet the increased cost of living.

The Americans have been experimenting with a new type of loan plan for students which makes allowances to compensate for poor summer jobs and increased costs. It is called the Pay as You Earn plan. This program is not as rigid as the Canada student loans plan and is presently administered in several universities in the United States. I am not advocating that the Canadian government adopt this kind of plan but it is certainly the type of plan that bears looking into.

The program is also unique in that it puts the onus on the student to pay for his own education rather than rely on various bursaries. The program makes available all the money needed for the student to continue his education. Repayment is financed by what might be described as a long-term mortgage, the borrower paying a small percentage of his income for a period of 20 or 25 years, depending on how the plan is worked out. This repayment figure by the student who fulfils his obligation would compensate for those who are unable to pay because of disability or other reasons.

The Americans have found this program very successful because of its flexibility. It would require government administration because of the great initial cash outlay required, but it would be self-paying and could even be profit-making. It is at least worth investigating. I am sure that students would not object to a better-implemented student loans plan. Students do not mind taking out loans if they have an opportunity to repay them. Most students are responsible and will not default on their obligations, but new needs must be met by new loan flexibility. It is to be noted that such a plan in the long run could take the pressure off the taxpayer. More importantly, however, this program would provide the extra funds needed in years of great student unemployment such as this, with the increasing cost of living and other expenses.

We must also, Mr. Speaker, consider the plight of the university graduate in this country. The great increase in enrolment in postgraduate schools is proof of the feeling among graduates that their time is better spent trying to further their education than trying to find permanent jobs. It is estimated by the Technical Service Council that professional openings are down 30 per cent nationally, with a 17 per cent increase in those seeking jobs.

The Atlantic provinces, followed by the Prairies, have the greatest reduction in job openings. To blame this situation on an increase in the number of graduates is ridiculous. The present situation can only discourage those with aspirations to attend university. A developing nation such as Canada cannot afford to discourage its young people in furthering their education. This situation must fall back on the tragic economic position in which the federal government has placed our young people this summer. The class of '71 must be questioning the value of education. For the past two decades a tremendous emphasis has been put on education. Our young people were told that a degree would guarantee them a worth while career and a higher standard of living. Whether or not this is true, it is what they have been told. Now many graduates will tell you that a degree is worthless.

In the last decade the number of graduates has greatly increased. For example, in education and engineering, doctorate degrees have increased by 1,014 per cent and 895 per cent respectively. Those with a doctorate degree face an unemployment problem just as serious as that of anyone else. The plight of the graduate student must be attributed to the slump in our economy. Industry will not hire and train young personnel in the present economic situation. The solution for the graduate is the same as the solution for all unemployed in this country. Our economy must be stimulated and expansion and industrial growth must be encouraged. Until this happens, our educated young will be denied an opportunity to use their newly acquired skills.

So far as the student who is still attending university is concerned, his problem will only be solved with long-range government planning and programs. Government aid must be more flexible to take into account regional disparities and the disadvantages of the rural student. In short, we must strive to make a university education universally accessible. The standard of living and quality of life in a country is directly related to the educational opportunities the country offers its young people. If we fail to provide these opportunities we will surely hinder the development of our industry, our economy and our Canadian culture.

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, the motion before us states that this House records its deep concern upon reviewing the government's continuing repudiation of its duty to establish full employment programs, then it goes on to talk about young Canadians. In the first instance I should like to talk about the word "repudiation". So far as I know, the word means to disown, reject or refuse to admit. In my view, the government certainly has not refused to admit it has any responsibility or duty in connection with creating employment in this country. One might, depending on his political position, I suppose, and his personal view feel that the government has not done enough in terms of creating employment in Canada. I should like to speak to that for a moment and review some of the problems, because I do not think most of them are capable of simple solution as many would have us believe.

This is a big problem. As a responsible government we must begin to look at the problem in its proper context to see the long-run effect of the actions we will take. First of all, when we look at the large influx of new people into our labour force we realize the magnitude of the problem. It is reported in a 15-year projection from 1967 to 1982 that Canada will introduce more young people into its labour force than the total number in Italy, Germany and the United Kingdom. When we bear in mind that the population of these three countries is 180 million people and the population of Canada is 22 million, we realize that we are going to inject into our small labour force more in that period than these three countries combined; we see that we are inheriting a problem which is of enormous proportions which will be difficult to deal with if we only look at that aspect alone.

It seems to me we are reaping a problem resulting from the fact that past governments did not plan in a long-term way for solutions to the problems of our generation.

I am happy to say that I am convinced this government is looking at our long-range problems. It is high time some government did. We began to look at the over-all economic position, at our trade policies and our industries in an effort to find ways of rationalizing them. We began to look at the way our people are being trained and provided with the education necessary to fit them into the work force, and in the meantime we have provided our young people with activities to keep them busy. For instance, this year we are spending $68 million in this area alone. We have slowly begun to solve these long-term difficulties which I defy anyone to solve by some quick, mystical, magical solution. On the other hand, there is the rapid rate of technological change not only in Canada but in the world. We are not unique in this respect. Our country, however, more than many others has had an agrarian economy for many years and we now see a great influx of people from the farms into the urban areas, which places more and more pressure on the industrial side of the work force.

I think we must remember that the Second World War is over and that today we see the results of the baby boom. I do not complain of this but I do not think we looked at the question early enough in an effort to find a solution.

An hon. Member: Who didn't?

Mr. Cafik: The governments which came before us. One cannot really expect this government to be able to find instant solutions to these difficult and complex problems. I do not think we serve the interests of ourselves, this institution or the people of the country when we suggest there are simplistic solutions when there are not. We are indeed living in a very challenging period. We have to consider basic problems such as foreign investment in this country, whether this is good or bad and to what extent it is good or bad. We must rationalize our industrial complex and, if I may digress for a moment, I think the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce through its many programs is doing a great deal to achieve that objective.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Under this government we instituted the auto pact. I believe no one can really doubt that this agreement has been a great economic step forward. I think we must take similar action in other areas and then, hopefully, we will in part find long-term solutions to the difficulties we face. Ad hoc solutions are not really the answer; they will not give us something of real, lasting value. But that does not mean that in the long run we can just sit and look at the unemployment rate as it is in Canada today. We must not do that if we are to fulfil our responsibility as a government in this country. Because of the tremendous psychological effects of unemployment, in human terms, we must none the less take ad hoc measures that will give us some immediate, if only temporary relief until we have determined the root causes and arrived at root solutions to these problems.

Mr. Gilbert: Give us some ad hoc solutions.

Mr. Cafik: I intend to do just that. I do not think it is good enough for us to increase welfare benefits or to increase unemployment insurance payments. These are good and necessary in these times, but I think we must do the only thing that will give dignity to the people who are unemployed, and that is to give them work. We must also arrange our priorities in such a way that this becomes the first order of business for this government in the immediate future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gilbert: Now you are talking. Sock it to them.

Mr. Cafik: It seems to me that if 6 per cent of this country's territory were invaded by a foreign power, we would bring all our resources together in order to bring that land back to this country and the kind of effort that is put forward in wartime would be repeated. Why should we not think that 6 per cent of our population who are unemployed are an equally serious problem, requiring the same kind of urgent solution? I have some suggestions as to what may be done. I realize that I am not an economist. I am simply one who is concerned with the serious and urgent problem that we are discussing tonight.

First of all, we must continue the present course of deficit financing whereby we are putting more money in the economy than we are taking out of it in order to stimulate it. But I do not think that is enough, because we have been doing that for some months and in my simple view it does not seem to be reaping the kind of immediate benefits that many of us had hoped for.

Secondly, we have to assist this course of action by having some meaningful tax cuts in our next budget. In this way we would further stimulate the economy of this country and assist through the private sector those measures which we are taking in terms of government expenditures.

Thirdly, I think we must take steps to end business uncertainty and to give the business community a degree of confidence which I think some of them have lacked in the last year or two as a result, to some degree, of the experiment that we conducted in participatory democracy involving the white paper on tax reform. I think that this government was very courageous in embarking on this novel approach to tax reform. I am hopeful that in the long run the approach that we have used will bear the kind of fruit we hoped from having a good tax reform. But it has had an unpleasant by-product, to some extent at least, in that it has disturbed many very productive people in our economy who are in a position to make the economy go forward or go backward, and it has given them a feeling of no confidence.

I think that in our next budget, when we introduce the bill on tax reform we should settle that problem once and for all. But of course it depends to a large extent on what is in the bill and I hope the minister will bear these factors in mind when the budget is presented, as I am sure he will.

Mr. Gilbert: You are making sense.

Mr. Cafik: We must recognize that we as a government do not control our economy completely.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: First of all, in international terms we are a neighbour of the United States and what they do largely affects us. Even domestically we cannot really supply impetus to our economy unless we have the co-operation and the help of the private sector without which we cannot possibly solve any economic difficulties. So I think it is important that we make clear to the small businesses and the industrial giants in this country that we not only want them and need them but that we solicit their help in this important task.

I am going to make two suggestions, both of which involve the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. First, if we are going to create a condition of confidence in our business community we should set up an industrial development co-ordination and consultation branch. The reason for this is that the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce has many programs to help finance and assist business, but largely they are not well known or understood and many of our small businesses which can do something positive frankly do not have the expertise, the legal help or other assistance required to know even where to go. I believe that we should set up one central body to whom all businesses could go to obtain aid from the government to help them develop their industry domestically and externally. If we set up such a co-ordinating body I think it would serve a very useful purpose and at the same time show we wish to help them.

I also want to suggest that as an ad hoc, short-run and, I believe, effective measure we should set up an Employment Stimulation Fund. I am not an economist but I would propose that it be financed by $200 million cash, with about $800 million in guaranteed loan capital. The object would be to give grants and/or loans directly to the business community in direct relationship to the number of useful jobs they can create.

Mr. Gilbert: This sounds like welfare.

Mr. Cafik: I believe that if we were to encourage small businesses in this manner to hire 10 here and 20 in another place, and this were repeated by thousands of businesses across Canada, very rapidly many of the 650,000 people who are unemployed in this country would be put to work. If implemented this would have an immediate effect. In my view, the kind of action I have suggested would help create a state of confidence and security in the people of this country and a realization that we are doing everything in our power to make this country move ahead. But even more important we will assure ourselves that the kind of free system which we all cherish will survive to serve future generations. I am concerned that if we cannot solve this central problem of unemployment, then this country and our institutions are in for a bad time indeed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the previous speaker. I will not deal with economic problems except to say that about a year and a half ago steps were taken by the government to dampen the inflationary process. The increased taxes that slowed down the economy had a tremendous effect in designated areas, destroying the impact of industrial incentives. The unpleasant truth is that the economy is at a standstill. An increase of 200,000 in the number of unemployed in 1970 cost the economy of the country $2 billion. Profits are down; and, Mr. Speaker, if taxes are not reduced and employment does not increase over the next three months, the outlook is grim indeed.

Now I wish to deal with a special problem, the employment of university students. Three years ago the universities of this country were running at a cost of over $600 million and there were over 300,000 full-time, winter university students. These figures do not take into account the investment in buildings and equipment which runs into billions of dollars. Many university buildings are used only eight months of the year, which is two-thirds of the time. They then stand idle for the remaining one-third of the year, wasting the dollars that are invested in them.

The total cost of education today in Canada runs around 10 per cent of the gross national product. Can we afford the non-utilization of these buildings for one-third of the year? Would it not be much better to pick out the professions where there is a scarcity of trained men and keep the students at school, instead of letting the buildings and equipment stand idle while the students walk the roads?

I will choose the profession about which I probably know the most, the medical profession. There are just over 20,000 doctors in Canada and just over 10,000 of them are general practitioners. Figure it any way you like, we have the worst ratio of any of the countries of the world with our standard of living. The Russians have one doctor to every 500 people, yet Russia is supposed to be backward. Even the United States, our neighbour to the south, has a much better record.

Over and over again the scarcity of doctors and the difficulty people have, if they move from one place to another, to get a doctor to look after them has been brought to the attention of the government. Their only hope is the emergency ward of the hospitals which, generally speaking, are grossly overworked. In the hospitals which have no interns, the doctors must supply someone from the practising doctors. In one small hospital alone they had over 1,800 emergency cases in a relatively slow month. I have heard estimates of how short we are in this field—probably 15 per cent to 20 per cent in the general practice field. Most of the hospitals have no interns yet, Mr. Speaker, 40 years ago hospitals of similar size had two to four interns. Is this progress?

What is happening now is that doctors in many hospitals are overloaded with histories, forms and bureaucratic control. Much of the work could be done by house doctors and interns and so relieve the workload of the doctors. Partially trained paramedical personnel is not the answer. The Feldsher system in Russia, after many years is gradually being phased out because of too many wrong diagnoses and too many referrals. The same thing would happen in this country. The doctor's workload could be cut probably by 20 per cent if red tape, forms and bureaucracy in hospitals did not take up so much of his time. There should be interns in hospitals where they have sufficient patients. But to get the interns they must have doctors, and to get the doctors there there must be medical students and medical schools.

I have asked the federal government to co-operate with the universities, to provide the funds to finance the four months that the medical schools stand idle. In this way a doctor could have the same training in four years that now requires six years. But the government did not move. It turned a deaf ear to the people who cannot get adequate medical attention. Even the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) acknowledged this. He stated his fears at a meeting of the Canadian Hospital Association as follows:

> While the inadequacies in the distribution and delivery of health services must be removed, we must not in achieving this goal create a two-class medical system.
> The variations in availability of health services between the disadvantaged and the affluent in our society must not be perpetuated by making paramedical support available to the lower economic sectors in our population in order that physical specialists may more readily devote their attention to those more fortunate. We must assure that all health care arrangements live up to the expectations of all the sectors of our society.

I agree with the minister 100 per cent. The only thing I wonder is why year after year he promised some action and we had none. He went on to say that we could train some paramedicals who could put in a few sutures, look after simple fractures, colds and flu, which would free 50 per cent of the physician's time. I am reminded of the story of a doctor travelling on an airplane. The fellow next to him asked the doctor what he thought about paramedical personnel and the doctor replied, "I will tell you. I want a fully trained pilot to run this airplane. I don't want the hostess running it. But if I have to take the hostess in his place, then I certainly don't want a committee running it, and that committee would be the government."

There are 5,000 students today in our medical schools. They are all needed. Doctors are in very short supply because community after community is going without a doctor. Yet because of the laissez faire attitude of this government, which brought in medicare, it now refuses to co-operate in providing the medical doctors that are so necessary. Yet members of the government promised quality of care. Now they even talk about deterrent fees. Who will this deter? It will be only the poor, for whom medicare was supposedly brought in to help. Isn't that going around in a circle?

It is a disgrace to keep doctors in short supply and then criticize the service they deliver. This is something that can be cured. McMaster University and Calgary University have three-year courses. They are running all summer. They are doing this with scholarships, bursaries and by other means. Having forced medicare on the provinces, why doesn't the federal government accept responsibility for providing the needed doctors? Here it is, the month of June, and only two medical schools turning out doctors who are admittedly in short supply.

It is seven years since the Hall commission pointed out the increasing need for doctors. We on this side of the House have asked the minister to operate the medical schools all year round until we catch up. Year after year the minister has promised to take this matter up with his counterparts in the provinces, but there the matter stands to date. I have only raised this problem dealing with one of the professions, Mr. Speaker, but I know there are many other problems.

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased with this opportunity to say a few words on this opposition motion which urges the government to balance the economy adequately but fails to advocate solutions to the problem.

We are faced with a catastrophic economic situation, and we have been trying to settle this issue for several years. Nobody ever manged to tackle it, except through bloody wars and revolutions. When 50 to 60 per cent of the population are destroying everything in sight, the others can work. Others can be put to work. But when there is no such thing, it is impossible to balance the economy and nobody, not even the greatest economists, the greatest exponents of the system, those who find that everything is well, who are very well paid, have everything they need and are not faced with economic problems, nobody can find an adequate solution. These economists should be independent and their solutions are hardly worth being adopted or considered, since they do submit such solutions year after year and the situation is going from bad to worse.

Our economy is being gradually upset, our population is dissatisfied and misery is growing worse. Young people are finding it harder every day to find jobs. The more we produce economists and technicians the more our economy is thrown out of balance.

We are certainly not running short of engineers, technicians, economists, nor of Conservatives, Liberals or New Democrats. For years, we have had all these types of people bent on solving this problem but none ever succeeded. On the contrary, it is getting worse than ever.

If we want to solve our present economic problem, we shall have to resort to the same solutions that have been previously brought forward when we tried to solve the economic problem. To do so, governments must resort to deficit financing. Investments must be made through loans. A lot of deficits have to be accumulated to allow the citizens to live a little, or to achieve a kind of economic upsurge, and after going into debt for two, three or four years and creating an economic upsurge of sorts, we are forced to intervene. Financiers come to governments and say: For the last four or five years, you have had deficit budgets but if you are unable to balance the economy or your budgets, you are not good trustees. We will finance the grits if the tories are in power and vice versa, but it all means: Solve the problem. The grits will make people believe that the former administration was bad, that it had accumulated deficits at all levels and that there must be an end to that. In short, that budgets have to be balanced.

So the next government, in order to balance its budget, will increase taxes and create trouble for the population. Within two years, the people will again be steeped in unemployment and an economic slump. They will no longer be able to make investments because of all kinds of restrictions.

In order to balance the budget, the government will bow to all the demands of high finance, permitting it to control the nation's economic blood at will. The government will thus plunge the whole country or the whole world into depression, since the economic system is the same throughout the world.

Mr. Speaker, not one government went out of its way to seek real solutions to the problem, because like causes produce like effects. We have always acted like that and we never succeeded in solving the problem.

The Conservative members blame the government through all sorts of means, but they do not propose any practical solution other than asking the government to show losses, to present deficit budgets in order to enable Canadian citizens to live decently.

The New Democratic Party and the Progressive Conservatives request full employment. In order to obtain full employment, it is necessary to invest money and to invest, it is necessary to borrow money. When a man borrows money he gets into unimaginable debts, for he simply cannot refund more money than he gets in the first place. If we borrow money, we have to repay it, plus the interests which have never been put into circulation—something nobody ever thinks about!

Mr. Speaker, there are interest rates of 9, 10, 15 and even 25 per cent. They are of no concern, they please everyone, and even the NDP is happy with them. They are not considered excessive.

But when financiers go up the financial scale, banks and financial institutions make unbelievable profits. They increase their assets by billions of dollars each time. Unfortunately, they do not pay the taxes they should. Unfortunately, they build up alarming reserves that paralyse the Canadian economy, that paralyse the financial situation of every citizen. Not one Conservative, Liberal or NDP member makes a protest. No one asks that those who do not pay taxes be made to do so. There are two or three tax schedules. There should be only one and everyone should be taxed equitably. If we did this, we would introduce a bit of logic into the settlement of our problems.

When I look at newspaper headlines, I realize that there are 9,000 more unemployed in Canada, which is the greatest increase in unemployment in 13 years. In the field of unemployment, Quebec remains at the top; it had 23,000 more unemployed in 1970. Here is the type of headlines one can read in the newspapers: "Quebec is said to be satisfied with the number of unemployed", "17,000 Montrealers laid off in 1970", "Only 10,000 new jobs created in Quebec in 1970","75,000 new jobs per year must be created in Quebec from now till 1975", "250 employees laid off at Lachute", "Closing down of another plant in Ville St. Laurent".

Mr. Speaker, a while ago I could hear a Liberal member say that the government should establish a type of financial agency to finance industry. But industry needs neither the Liberals nor the Conservatives to lend it money. What industry requires is a means to profitably market its products. If industry finds an outlet for its production, it does not need the help of the government.

On the other hand, if industry does not succeed in selling its products it has to store them in warehouses and call on financial firms with the famous form 88 authorizing loans to industrialists or the financing of industries' stocks or inventories at an interest rate of 12 p. 100.

This increases the cost of products and does not help to sell them. Every warehouse is filled to the rafters and new loans are requested from banks to further boost production; yet the problem does not exist at the production level but in distribution.

Instead of taxing or overtaxing the consumer, he should have more money to spend. Then governments will not need to worry about the operation of industries. Industries are operating as long as consumers have some ready money to buy the products.

If the production of industries is increased but remains unsold, what will happen? At the present time, many industries in Canada have received government grants. They operated during six months, a year or two with those grants, after which they were compelled to close down.

I know one in my constituency which received a $700,000 grant from the federal government. It operated six months, but it is now closed.

What was the use of those $700,000? The industry is unable to sell its products. Warehouses and yards are full of unsold products. Now, what will happen? What is the use of those grants? They are useless.

I would like once for all that we open our eyes and our ears in order to find solutions to the problem.

Solutions are easy to find and enumerate. The cost of living must be reduced, not raised. Products cost too much and do not sell well because there are too many taxes.

Taxes must be lowered, and if that is not enough, governments should issue credits to reduce production costs, give compensated discounts in overproducing sectors. If we cannot sell the products because they are too expensive in spite of discounts, then we shall lower the prices of goods and thus re-establish the true value of the Canadian dollar. Besides, we shall be able to compete with other countries. Otherwise, our products will no longer be competitive, considering our present economic system.

Wages and taxes keep going up. The higher the taxes the more problems there are, and the higher the cost of goods the less you can sell them. The higher the cost of goods, because of increases in salaries and taxes, the less money the taxpayer has to buy what he needs.

There are still needs to be met. But they cannot be met by restricting credit, by levying taxes, by accepting that our governments pay overly high interest rates to financiers who exploit the people. The people are fleeced for ever more, so that the interest can be paid to the financiers. But the people are sent packing!

They say here that we are on the brink of revolution. We know that is true.

One can read this in La Voix de l'Est for January 16, 1971, and I quote:

> In the last few years, it has been said and repeated hundreds, thousands of times that unemployment is the worst evil in Quebec.
> But saying it over and over again will not remedy the situation. Nobody cures an illness by proclaiming from the housetops that he has it. Instead he looks for a medication likely to cure it. The Premier and the Minister of Labour seem alarmed by the crisis through which Quebec is going.

• (9:30 p.m.)

According to the latest figures, unemployment has reached 8.4 per cent, its highest rate since last fall.

Mr. Bourassa does not hide the fact that the number of unemployed has reached a really disturbing level, while Mr. Cournoyer does not hesitate to predict "a revolution" if unemployment keeps on increasing at that rate for a few years.

Mr. Bourassa stated that "Clearly one must not try to disguise the truth."

For a long time truth has been disguised and poultices put on wooden legs, and yet uneasiness continues, in fact it keeps getting worse.

I read further:

The Minister of Labour stated "If the situation is not corrected, the number of revolutionaries will grow. If we do not take all necessary steps and if we do not face up to our responsibilities, I am afraid we shall not have enough policemen to control the behaviour of those who will have suffered under the system."

Mr. Cournoyer's words came as an echo to those of Mr. Fernand Daoust of the Quebec Federation of Labour who had previously stated "it is going to blow up soon if enough jobs are not created".

Those statements are not liable to inspire confidence but rather to encourage opposition parties which have nothing to lose to reject all responsibilities on the government.

You only need to read the explanations given by Messrs Lévesque and Parizeau to get an idea of their objectives. Three weeks before the Chambly election, they have a first class reason to go and fight the government.

It is of the utmost importance that our administrators should become more responsible and settle once and for all this economic problem, for it is high time that we adopt a definite position. Whatever positions we have taken until now have been all wrong and have failed to cause any improvement in the situation. All this medicine that was provided could not prevent the cancer from persistantly gnawing at our economy until its final destruction.

The problem is more serious than is suggested by this motion submitted by the Conservatives. I wonder whether it was brought up merely for the sake of filibustering, but this motion should definitely be one of the most serious ever considered in this House. It should be discussed most seriously and I suggest grudges and party politics be set aside in order to find a genuine solution to the economic problems of the day. These problems are serious and there is not much time left to try and find solutions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner).

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I have been sitting here all evening and have consulted a number of hon. members of this House. Apparently quite a few hon. members have done considerable research into the subject being discussed and are prepared to speak this evening. However, as a result of our limited time they will not be able to do so. This sort of thing happens frequently, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if it is not time to break with tradition and allow hon. members to file speeches that they have prepared for the record, as is done in some legislatures.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member should know that it is within the discretion of the Speaker to recognize an hon. member. The Chair is trying to be as fair as possible in giving various representatives in the House an opportunity to make their speeches. This question cannot be discussed in the House. The only procedure under which the hon. member can raise that point is by moving a motion to be heard in place of another hon. member.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I certainly was not charging the Chair with discrimination or even suggesting that the Chair was discriminating against any party in the House. I believe implicitly in the fairness of the Chair and am not questioning that at all. I recognize that the Chair has a difficult task in choosing hon. members to speak.

I will not attempt to make my speech tonight. I was attempting to suggest that since there is insufficient time for all hon. members who wish to speak to be heard, there might be unanimous consent to allow some of my colleagues who have prepared their speeches and who obviously will not gain the floor tonight to file their remarks and have them printed, as if spoken, in Hansard. There is precedent for that practice even in this House because unanimous consent is granted to parliamentary secretaries and the House leader to file long—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair has listened to the point raised by the hon. member with sympathy, but the rules of the House do not permit him at this time, when the hon. member for Thunder Bay has been given the floor, to make a speech or to attempt to solve a problem of procedure. If the hon. member wishes to solve that problem he should do so by moving a motion or by suggesting to the Committee on Procedure and Organization that the rules of the House be changed. As far as the Chair is concerned, there is no precedent for the hon. member's suggestion and there is no possibility of tabling speeches in this House. The hon. member for Thunder Bay.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Mr. Rose: I rise on the same question of privilege. I do not wish to try Your Honour's patience—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair is not in a position to argue the matter with the hon. member and has no alternative but to recognize the hon. member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, I say to the hon. member that I would be quite prepared to file my speech, but if that is not allowed I will "file it down" so that others will have an opportunity to speak.

It is well known that during the decade of the 1960s there was a period of seemingly uninterrupted and even uninterruptible economic growth. During that period the gross national product increased by 65 per cent in real terms, while at the same time the population of Canada increased by 20 per cent. A substantial real gain in the standard of living took place in the period 1960-69. The increase in gross national product attributable to inflation, however, almost equalled the real growth over this decade. The economy had begun overheating and there was a very dangerous degree of instability. The pressures of international price competition and internal imbalance required deliberate action.

In 1970, the Canadian economy became engaged in a cooling-off process. The severity was in sharp contrast to the preceding decade of growth and prosperity. Talk of breaking the inflationary psychology was coupled with a deliberate monetary and fiscal policy. Set against a stated conviction that relative price stability is a prerequisite for sustainable economic progress, Canadian monetary and fiscal authorities were faced in 1970 with the realities of persistent inflation and regional disparities. Policies initiated in 1969 to relieve inflationary pressures were, as we unfortunately know, reflected in higher unemployment rates and a general economic slowdown, particularly in the second half of 1970.

Despite the abundance of economic advisers both within and without the government service, we have not yet learned how to exercise fiscal and monetary policies in a satisfactory manner. I do not mean this to sound arrogant or disrespectful, but if some of our very bright economists had experienced a little hunger, or if they had undergone the insecurity of being without a job, they might have been able to break through that mental barrier which seemingly militates against the utilization of new, creative and, above all, effective economic policies.

I do not pretend to have the answer to that complicated problem, but certainly the repeated swing from inflation to high unemployment is not the way to run the economy. If government economic advisers do not have the answers to these difficult and awkward questions, they should be relieved of their duties or given other tasks, and perhaps some of our graduate students who are without work should be given a chance to resolve this dilemma or at least to make an attempt to do so. I return to the situation as it now exists. The slower pace of consumer spending and rising unemployment led federal government authorities to initiate a fiscal policy of moderate and selected expansion in 1970. Total expenditures of the federal government were increased by about three-quarters of a billion dollars directed toward regions of slow economic growth and high unemployment, toward housing and manpower training.

As the trend of more moderate price increases became established a series of expansionary fiscal policy measures were gradually introduced in the third and fourth quarters of 1970. Additional funds were directed to the provinces for social insurance, the student summer employment program and housing projects for moderate income families and relief of regional unemployment. The forecast of a budgetary deficit of $320 million for 1970-71 instead of the originally planned $250 million surplus dramatically demonstrates a reversal of the federal fiscal stance. The expansionary effects of this fiscal policy have not yet had the anticipated impact but there are hopeful signs of an upbeat economy.

Many economists are certain, and I share their optimism, that the Canadian economy is in a good position to take off during the second half of this year. For example, they predict an 8 per cent surge in the gross national product, 5 per cent of it real growth. In view of quite recent statistics, that appears to be somewhat overly optimistic. However, if they are anywhere close to being right it is cause for cheering.

A report on Canada in a recent issue of Business Week stated that from Vancouver to Halifax businessmen see Canadian consumers loaded with cash and poised to start spending. They say the result could be a buying spree that would lift Canada's economy to near boom levels by the end of 1971. For many, the money is certainly there, although unfortunately not for all. Wage settlements averaged 9 per cent last year while inflation was held at 3.4 per cent. An enormous increase in the number of women in the labour force has significantly boosted family incomes. Last year, 25 per cent of all Canadian households boasted incomes of more than $10,000. That statistic rather astounded me but I think it is accurate. That is up from only 2 per cent in that category just a decade ago.

Seven per cent of personal income is going into bank accounts, double the rate of eight years ago. As a result, banks bulge with nearly $17 billion in savings. Economists expect Canadians to break out those nest eggs soon for everything from homes to automobiles to televisions sets. Some retailers already report signs of the change. One adviser to the Canadian Bankers' Association predicts that consumer outlays in general will jump 8 per cent or more this year. Stepped-up government spending and the prospect of another record year for exports add to the rosy glow. Canadian businessmen anticipating the rebound plan to boost plant and equipment outlays by at least 10 per cent. If the forecasters are right, Canada will bounce out of the business doldrums faster than the United States. The pile-up of funds in the banking system has eased the money pinch. Mortgage rates have dropped and housing outlays are expected to jump 15 per cent this year. Heavy industry is getting ready to expand. Canadian oil men look forward to a bubbling year.

Complementing this brighter domestic outlook are strong export prospects. Canada's 1970 exports of $16.7 billion, double those of five years ago, ranked Canada as an exporting nation ahead of France and a little behind Japan. Farm products and raw materials racked up the largest export gains last year and may do so again. The world is still short of nickel. Sales of the 1970 grain crop were worth $878 million. Estimates for the 1971 crop will likely top that by $400 million and perhaps by as much at $500 million. Farmers are planting 20 million acres this year compared with only 12 million last year.

Canadian exporters are continually seeking out new markets, and doing rather well, I might add. The United States still takes 65 per cent of our exports but this figure has declined from 71 per cent in 1969. By contrast, exports to Britain rose by 33 per cent last year, exports to Japan by more than 25 per cent and to the Common Market by more than 40 per cent.

I doubt if there is anyone today who would seriously suggest that we should leave the economy to the so-called natural forces of the marketplace. In the interest of building a sound and healthy national economy, there must be government planning and involvement. What concerns me is the fact that bureaucratic tinkering with the economy is often so inept, so lacking in expertise. There is a desperate need for new methods of regulating and controlling the economy in the best interest of all citizens, not to the detriment of some, particularly those who find themselves unemployed or who are obliged to live on small incomes, and to the undue advantage of others. My plea is that the government should continue to seek ways of making the economy work for the well-being of all, to make it buoyant and, above all, to keep it steady.

To this end, fresh approaches are desperately needed and a heavy obligation falls upon those who are propounding economic theories and suggesting ways by which monetary and fiscal policies can be exercised by government much more effectively than has been the case in the past.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the greatest service the government could do for the youth of Canada would be to bring under control as quickly as possible the problems arising from unemployment, inflation and the value of the Canadian dollar on the international market.

Governments at all levels are spending hundreds of millions of dollars to educate our young people. They, in turn, are giving up many years of their lives in the belief that having benefited from advanced training and education they will be able to find a meaningful role in our society. The alarming fact is that many young people are failing to find an appropriate place in our society. Hence the motion before the House today. I suggest it is because the government, despite its mass of advisers, has failed to solve the fundamental economic problems affecting our society.

We are faced with one overwhelming issue at the moment. An attempt has been made to assure us that at a given moment the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), with the help of his advisers, will bring about a new era of prosperity. Apparently that era is to begin on Friday, June 18, soon after five o'clock when the minister tables his long-awaited budget in the House. Many knowledgeable people in the financial community fear he will seize this opportunity to introduce monumental changes in our taxation system.

I maintain this is a very risky time to be introducing monumental changes into our taxation system. The Canadian economy is ill-prepared to meet such changes. The prospect that these widely debated white paper proposals on taxation are to be translated into legislation covering 1,000 pages is causing unease in our financial community.

Employment Programs

Unemployment is very high; the figure of 7.8 per cent was mentioned a short while ago. The minister was hard pressed to find a reason for its failure to decline in April, when it should have declined, and finally told us the weather was responsible.

Then there is the burden of inflation. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said last November that inflation had been licked, but this is far from being the case and this year's figure could well reach 5 per cent if the present trend continues. Another factor to be taken into account is the strength of the Canadian dollar, which has created problems for the pulp and paper industry and for agriculture in western Canada; grain prices have been effectively discounted by 10 per cent or more.

It would seem the government intends to give the Canadian public, particularly the industrial and financial community, the summer months during which to digest the material which has taken government experts years to prepare. It is, of course, only to be expected that the government will seek to make its package as broadly attractive as possible by removing 750,000 to one million Canadians from the tax rolls by increasing basic tax exemptions. By this means they hope to convince people less able to meet the burden of taxation that, since taxes have been cut for them, the measures which will inevitably be directed against the private sector of our economy are justified inasmuch as they would enable the government to avoid a deficit which would otherwise be incurred.

The proposed legislation is far-reaching and there has been little consultation with the provinces. To my mind this is one of the greatest weaknesses in the government's approach. The proposals the minister has in mind will downgrade the role of private capital, downgrade the role of the smaller businesses, so vital in our far-flung rural areas remote from large cities, and downgrade the role of the provinces. They will increase the importance of the public sector of the economy, particularly that part of the public sector which is controlled by Ottawa. The proposals have been opposed by a number of the provinces including Ontario and, latterly, Quebec. Ontario, Alberta and Quebec are insisting upon the right to function fully within the jurisdiciton granted them by the Constitution, the right to get out of shared-cost programs and other projects which they believe are too costly to be undertaken.

I say with all deference to the Minister of Finance that the economy will be badly served by the introduction of massive changes in our taxation system at a time when it is suffering under so many other difficulties. The provinces surely deserve and require prior consultation before such measures are proposed. This is particularly important in view of the growing and rightful insistence by our larger provinces on opting out of shared-cost programs as one means of decentralizing and neutralizing the effects of a massive, entrenched bureaucracy in Ottawa. All the evidence suggests that Ottawa is a very long way from knowing what is best for the economy, and we can only share the misgivings of the provinces.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

MANPOWER—ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION AGAINST WOMEN IN TRAINING PROGRAMS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, one of the worst things about sex discrimination is that it is so prevalent it is never noticed unless you are a woman and come up against it. Because the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang) a short time ago refused to accept my assertion that there is discrimination against women in the manpower training program, I wish to take this occasion to draw certain examples to his attention.

First of all, and most obviously, it is the name of the program—manpower training. It is just as though it were reserved exclusively for humans of the male gender. It completely ignores the fact that one-third of the labour force is composed of women.

In the second place, the legislation establishing the program is discriminatory, such as the provisions of the occupational training act to not permit full-time household responsibility to be equivalent to participation in the labour force in so far as eligibility for training allowances is concerned. The report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women calls for an amendment to the act to make this possible. I have had a bill on the order paper for two sessions, to the same effect. Surely the minister should lose no further time in bringing forward such an amendment, which would do much to cut down the discrimination against women as far as manpower—and womenpower—training is concerned.

Third, the status of women report states on page 197 that "occupational segregation by sex is being perpetuated in the occupational training for adults program" and gives a table to show clearly that manpower offers the bulk of women trainees low-paid work like hairdressing, clerical and sales jobs and trains few, if any, in management courses. No doubt Manpower is up against the traditional attitudes of employers who take it for granted that men should be the office managers and women the filing clerks. But instead of accepting these discriminatory and old-fashioned attitudes. Manpower should be trying to influence employers in the new direction of accepting individuals according to their ability and not according to their sex.

When the discrimination of age is added to the discrimination of sex, the result is catastrophic for a woman. Here is a case from Vancouver involving a sole-support mother, the kind that would be called the head of the family if we had a more enlightened census form. She is 38 years old with three children, the youngest seven years old. She has a grade 12 education. She has been registered with Manpower since 1969. They phone her every three months asking if she is available for clerical work. She is, but the six-week brush-up course they gave her was not enough. Every time she talks to the Manpower counsellor she is advised to stay on social assistance. She wants to work.

Another Vancouver sole-support mother has several teenagers. She wants to train as a practical nurse. But the Manpower course would require her absence from home for three weekends out of four. Quite properly, she feels that she cannot abandon the teenagers for that length of time. She considered taking a medical clerk's training course but found that it would keep her away from home from three o'clock in the afternoon until ten o'clock at night—again requiring a long absence from her teenagers, this time during the period of their homework and bedtime. Obviously, these Manpower courses are not planned with the needs of women in mind, and yet a great many perfectly normal women have children whom they must support and care for. In neglecting to plan for their needs, Manpower is practising discrimination of a real and cruel kind.

Women make up almost 35 per cent of the labour force, yet last year 80 per cent of the people trained by Manpower were men; only 20 per cent were women. To overcome this discrimination I would suggest to the minister that he involve women in planning courses more adapted to their needs than is the case at present. If he did so, it would not take him long to find there is a necessity for arranging for part-time courses and hours that fit in with the responsibilities of caring for a home and children.

He would discover that sole-support mothers with children could be a tremendous source of part-time work in human services such as school aides, information centre aides, child care centre aides, part-time workers in recretational centres and a host of other jobs that society requires urgently today. Future job fields like these could take such women and their families off social assistance and allow them the right to stand on their own economic feet and to contribute their abilities to the community. And not only sole-support mothers: mothers with small children should be enabled to take courses which would allow them to retain their skills in their pre-marriage occupations so that when their children are grown and have left home they can resume their work in the community.

This sort of thing is what I believe Manpower should be working at under the heading of "unfinished business". Until it does so, it is open to the charge of discrimination on grounds of sex.

Mr. Charles L. Caccia (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the points raised by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) can hardly be dealt with in the short time allocated this evening. If the hon. member has some alternative suggestions for renaming the present Manpower services, we would be interested in examining her ideas.

With regard to the three-year clause, the hon. member has a very valid point which the department has made an object of study. Something ought to be done about assisting women who wish to re-enter the labour force after having performed a very valuable function in society at home.

With regard to occupational segregation by sex in Manpower training courses, this could not be ascribed to wilful discrimination by the department. There must be reasons of an educational nature or of a practical nature. However, if the hon. member wishes us to investigate whether there are ways to improve the training courses she has in mind, and the possibility of offering other types of courses to women trainees, we will be glad to do so. But basically, when on May 14 the hon. member inquired why so many more men are judged to be helped by training courses than women, the answer is that it is because there are many more men who apply at Canada Manpower centres for assistance and training courses. Approximately 67 per cent of all those who apply at Canada Manpower centres are men, compared with 33 per cent who are women.

This alone gives an indication of the greater utilization of Manpower centres by men. From this follows the fact that the number of men referred for training represents 74.5 per cent, compared with 25.5 per cent for women. Again, this is a reflection of the clientele breakdown between men and women. The present figure of 25.5 per cent is an improvement over the figure of 22.7 per cent in 1968-69.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the parliamentary secretary, but his time has expired.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, as reported on page 5856 of Hansard for May 17, 1971, I asked the Acting Prime Minister the following question:

Considering the lack of balance of our economy, could the minister who has a great experience and knowledge of economic matters tell us if we are at the beginning of a new period of economic expansion or if we are faced with an outlook of unduly long economic decline?

Mr. Speaker, we have an unbalanced economy and the people of Canada, especially businessmen, are disoriented. They do not know any more what they are heading for. Every time I meet businessmen, they ask me: Do you know where we are going? Do you know whether we shall experience a new economic start, or whether this will keep on? We are ready to give up, we cannot carry on anymore. We are overburdened with taxes of all kinds and we have to support workers, pay them unemployment insurance benefits, provide them with pension schemes.

The manufacturer and the businessman who employ workers are forced to pay for all these things, beside health insurance for these people. This is terribly costly and boosts production costs. Their production costs must decrease.

I know some industrialists who sell their production at less than 15 years ago and who have to assume those tax increases and the various charges imposed by our economic system, in order to provide their employees with some guarantees. This increases production costs. We must reduce production costs on account of the mad competition prevailing on the market place. In such circumstances, several manufacturers went bankrupt and gave up, and we are aware of several others who are on the brink of quitting, because they can no longer make it. Therefore, they want to know whether there is any hope. They get in touch with administrators to find out whether they should give up tomorrow, lay down their arms or stand fast a bit longer. For the layman, I for one, it is rather difficult to provide a reply, because we do not hold the reins of administration, and we see the government carry on while debts, taxes and unemployment rates go up all over.

Some industrialists still believe in exports but if we export we must import for practically the same amount, so that does not change anything. Instead of selling Canadian products, we are selling Japanese products and that, on account of trade exchanges with other countries. Some intelligent manufacturers will say: What good are exports to us? Will the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) solve the problem through exports, now that we are in a bad position to export? As a matter of fact, our products are too expensive; labour and the cost of living are too high. Salary raises in keeping with the rise in the cost of living, affect production costs. Therefore we cannot compete with industrialists in other countries because our prices are too high.

How can we solve that problem?

That is one of the reasons why I asked that rather general question, to which nobody replied. That is the reason why I am asking it again tonight and I am asking the Parliamentary Secretary to the minister what kind of a solution he could suggest that the citizens could find bearable.

Should we let them nurse some faint hope by saying that the economy will start up again, that the problems will be solved and that they will be able to keep on operating their firm? The current trend is toward centralization and private firms disappear at an alarming rate.

Industrialists are leaving the private sector with much difficulty. It is hard on them. Centralization is more and more necessary and private firms are disappearing even though—and there is supporting evidence—they can certainly produce at a cheaper cost than the public sector.

Never will a state enterprise produce as cheaply as the private sector. Many Quebec people—I do not travel much in the other provinces—are against centralization because it does not solve the problem but only increases production costs.

And to create employment two or three workers will be needed instead of one. Where one man can now do the work, after everything becomes centralized three men will be needed to do the same amount of work.

Those are the questions industrialists and businessmen are asking themselves and they would like to know if they can rely on some sort of protection because the private sector is dying.

[English]

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government and the Bank of Canada inaugurated an expansionary period in the Canadian economy in March, 1970. The effects of this stimulus began to show in the rates of seasonally adjusted unemployment last September, and while there have been minor fluctuations since then the unemployment trend has been downward, and notwithstanding the surprising jump in April it is expected to continue downward throughout the year. There have been three other occasions since the present labour force survey began when the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate took a sharp upward jump. On all three occasions the following month's figures fell back and the improved trend continued.

Seasonally adjusted unemployment figures are an important economic indicator but they are not the only one. Housing starts, manufacturing shipments, new orders, chartered bank general loans, industrial production, seasonally adjusted retail trade figures and exports are among the indicators that support the contention that we are not just beginning but are, in fact, well into a period of economic expansion.

The hon. member referred to a lack of equilibrium in the economy. I am not too sure what he means by that and I am afraid his comments did not clarify the implications of the term. However, Canada's is a free enterprise, not a controlled economic system. As I said in the debate this afternoon, a certain unevenness in the functioning of the economy is the price Canadians pay for a great deal of personal freedom in their economic decisions, and to date it is a price most Canadians have felt has been worth paying.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.19 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN SPEAKER'S GALLERY OF PROVINCIAL SPEAKERS ATTENDING CANADIAN AREA COUNCIL MEETING OF COMMONWEALTH PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

Mr. Speaker: I am delighted to bring to the attention of hon. members the presence in the Speaker's Gallery of a group of delegates attending the annual meeting of the Canadian Area Council of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association.

At this moment in the gallery there are seven provincial Speakers. Later during the day it is expected that all of Canada's provincial Speakers will be in attendance, representing all of our Canadian Legislative Assemblies. On behalf of hon. members I extend to them a hearty welcome to the mother of Canadian Parliaments.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

TABLING OF REPORT ON PRICES OF OIL REFINERY PRODUCTS

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the Prices and Incomes Commission report on the prices of oil refinery products, in the two official languages.

AUDITOR GENERAL

TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT FOR YEAR ENDED MARCH 31, 1970

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table today, on behalf of the Minister of Finance, copies in both official languages of the report of the Auditor General to the House of Commons for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1970. The Financial Administration Act requires this report to be laid before the House on or before December 31 or, if Parliament is not then in session, within 15 days after the commencement of the next ensuing session. The Auditor General has asked that his apologies be extended to the House for the lateness of this report which was caused by circumstances beyond his control.

GRAIN

ANNOUNCEMENT OF SALE OF WHEAT TO SOVIET UNION

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I should like to report to the House upon an event which occurred about an hour ago and was witnessed by my colleague the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) and myself along with Mr. M. R. Kuzmin, First Deputy Minister of the Ministry of Foreign Trade of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. This was the signing of a contract between the Canadian Wheat Board and V/O Exportkhleb, the Soviet grain trading agency, for the sale of wheat to the Soviet Union totalling approximately 130 million bushels and valued at approximately $235 million. Delivery of the wheat will begin this month and continue throughout 1971 and 1972.

The sale involves two separate contracts. The first is for approximately 38.4 million bushels to be shipped during 1971, completing the outstanding portions of the agreement which was signed by the Canadian Wheat Board and V/O Exportkhleb on June 14, 1966. The second contract covers an additional sale of 2,220,000 metric tons, of which 970,000 metric tons will be shipped this year and the balance in 1972. Of the total quantity, 350,000 metric tons will be shipped in the form of flour.

In addition to this the buyer has the option to purchase a further 250,000 metric tons for shipment during the period May-July, 1972.

Shipment of the wheat will be made from both Pacific and eastern Canadian ports, with the buyer having the option to ship a portion from Churchill during the 1971 navigation season. Grades to be delivered during 1971 are Nos. 2, 3 and 4 Manitoba Northern and No. 1 Canada

Wheat Sale to Soviet Union

Western Red Spring Wheat—13 per cent protein. The buyer also has the option of taking No. 3 and/or No. 4 Canada Western Amber Durum Wheat as part of the over-all purchase contract. This contract, of course, in taking up the balance of the outstanding contract and a new portion, carries out the comments made by Mr. Gromyko to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and myself a year ago and most recently repeated in the Soviet Union to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that the Soviet Union would turn to Canada when they next needed wheat.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, no news could be more welcome to Canada than news of the sale of wheat. I must say that there has been a big change since a sign, 12 feet long and eight feet high, was erected by the Liberal party in my district on the only occasion when any Prime Minister—I refer to Mr. Diefenbaker—has ever visited the town of Westlock, saying that his major crime was the sale of wheat to Communist China. I am delighted that at last the present administration, whether it is on the road to Damascus or the road to Russia, is making sure that any breakthrough in international relations is followed up on each and every occasion.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, the same challenge which caused the Premier of Saskatchewan to ask for a postponement of the constitutional conference has robbed me this morning of all the wheat experts in my party in this House. I am therefore glad to rise as leader of this party to congratulate the Wheat Board on this sale and to express our pleasure, without any reservations, that it has taken place. I notice that no credit was given to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for the sale as a result of his visit to Russia, perhaps in order to be consistent with the statement he made some time ago that it was not his business to sell wheat, and it was important not to break that record.

We are glad that this sale has taken place. I would merely add that there are other countries in the world which need Canadian wheat. The proposal we have made many times should be given consideration by the government, namely, that we should provide the developing countries that require wheat, flour and bread, and whose people are hungry with the necessary long-term credit so that they may buy our wheat, and thus improve the situation of Canadian farmers as well as feed the hungry people of the world.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, in my turn I wish to say that I am satisfied with that transaction which will certainly please the western wheat producers who will benefit from it. I think that similar transactions should be made with other countries which, as stated earlier by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), would need Canadian wheat.

This sale is made up of two separate contracts; one for the balance of 9 million tons of wheat which the Soviet Union had undertaken to buy in 1966 and the other for a new sale.

[Mr. Lang.]

In addition, in his statement the minister pointed out and I quote:

> As in previous contracts with the U.S.S.R., the terms of the sale call for payment in cash at the time of delivery.

Mr. Speaker, Russia will not pay us in Canadian dollars or rubles, but in gold ingots at world market prices of $35 an ounce, when it costs $16 an ounce to produce. It means that the price paid will in fact be half of what the farmers expect to get.

I wanted to point that out to the government and at the same time to congratulate it on this successful deal.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ECONOMIC POLICIES TO BE DISCUSSED AT CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCE—REQUESTS BY ONTARIO AND QUEBEC

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In consideration of the statement made yesterday by Prime Minister Davis of Ontario that he intends to bring forcefully to the attention of the federal government at the Victoria constitutional conference his province's concern over federal policies which create economic hardship, can the Prime Minister now tell the House if Mr. Davis has indicated the specific economic areas he would like to discuss? If so, what are they?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I must confess I am not aware of what Mr. Davis had in mind. The House will recall that he requested some time ago that an additional day be added to the constitutional conference to discuss economic matters. However, since the federal budget and tax reform will be brought down after the conference, it is my understanding that he has now suggested that this additional day be not added to the conference and that economic matters, particularly those relating to the budget, be discussed some time later, presumably at a finance ministers meeting in the month of July.

Mr. Ritchie: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As the Quebec Minister of Welfare, Mr. Castonguay, has suggested that Ottawa's policies are the cause of Quebec's poverty, has that province indicated to the Prime Minister the areas of economic policy which it wishes to be discussed at Victoria?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker. That seems like a very general statement, such as the opposition often makes.

CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES ON PENDING TAX CHANGES

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, have the provinces indicated to the federal government that they are satisfied with the consultations that have taken place up to the present time on the pending tax changes?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the provinces do not know any more than the opposition knows about what the tax changes will be which are to be announced in the budget and therefore the provinces cannot fairly comment on something they do not know about. They are being asked to comment at the meeting of finance ministers later.

INDUSTRY

BOOK PUBLISHING—REPORTED REFUSAL OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT TO ASSIST FIRM OF McCLELLAND AND STEWART

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I have a question for the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister inform the House whether the provincial government of Ontario has asked the federal government to give some assistance, together with the province of Ontario, to the publishing house of McClelland and Stewart and has the federal government refused to participate in such assistance, as I am informed the premier of Ontario announced in the legislature this morning?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I did not see that announcement, Mr. Speaker, and I am not in a position to contradict it. I know the Secretary of State brought the matter to the federal cabinet some time ago and that we discussed it and a decision was taken. This decision was to be communicated to the Ontario authorities by the Secretary of State. I would prefer to have the Secretary of State say exactly what he communicated to them rather than comment on it myself.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister has informed the House that the matter was brought to cabinet and that a decision was taken by the government, surely as Prime Minister he is able to inform the House. Will he be good enough to say whether the decision of the federal government was to participate in assistance to McClelland and Stewart or not?

Mr. Trudeau: The decision was that the Secretary of State should communicate some information to the Ontario cabinet.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister had made no answer to my question that, of course, would be his right. However, I suggest that when the Prime Minister says the government has taken a position on the matter and as the matter was discussed and I have brought it to his attention, surely it is his duty to inform the House what the decision was of sloughing off the question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that is hardly a point of order. It is debate between the right hon. gentlemen and the member for York South.

Mr. Lewis: May I rise on—

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to rephrase the question?

Mr. Lewis: I want to ask the Prime Minister whether the following statement which is reported to have been made by the Secretary of State some time ago was government policy, namely, that publishers in need of working capital should be able to borrow under special terms and conditions and that it is the role of the provincial and federal governments to assist such industries which are essential for the country and which cannot survive on their own resources. I ask the Prime Minister whether this statement by the Secretary of State was government policy and, if so, did the government agree to participate in assistance to McClelland and Stewart as a result of that policy?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I was trying to be helpful to the member and forthcoming to the House in saying it had been discussed in cabinet, but I see it would have been simpler to have just taken notice of the question and said that the Secretary of State will answer the question when he is present.

TRADE

ACTION TO INCREASE SALE OF MANUFACTURED PRODUCTS TO JAPAN—SURVEY OF POTENTIAL MARKETS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the statement yesterday in Vancouver by the chairman of Mitsubishi Corporation, Japan's largest trading company, that Canadian businessmen have not been aggressive enough in trying to sell in Japan and if they would expend just a little more effort they would probably be amazed at the results, will the minister take the first opportunity on motions to outline to the House what steps his department is willing to take in the immediate future to send additional trade missions of Canadian businessmen to the Japanese market, over and above anything that has been done in the past or is being done now, so that we may take full advantage of opportunities to sell, in particular, labour-intensive manufactured products in that market?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Hon. members will observe, Mr. Speaker, that the remark was made about Canadian businessmen, not about the Canadian government. If I were to deliver a statement each time my friend asked me for one, I would be on my feet almost every day. I will gladly write to the hon. member to give him a better idea than he already has of the efforts made by the Canadian government to develop trade with Japan.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Hees: When the minister is making the statement in the House I have asked him to make for the information of all hon. members, will he also outline the steps he is willing to take to arrange for an immediate survey by his department of all traditional and potential markets throughout the world to make sure we are not missing out on important potential sales in other parts of the world as we are obviously missing out in Japan?

Mr. Pepin: There was a good example this morning of the sales the Canadian government has encouraged and is making. I believe that a growth factor of 13 per cent last year on exports is a good indication of the efforts that are being made.

This point raised by that Japanese businessman about the activities of Canadian businessmen in Japan is debatable. If you look at the increase in exports to Japan in the last year—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the minister but I suggest we are now embarking upon a debate between the minister and the hon. member. Perhaps we might return to the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings in a short while if he wishes to pursue the matter further. In the meantime, the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Hillsborough.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROVISION OF MILITARY TRANSPORT AIRCRAFT TO ASSIST IN MOVEMENT OF EAST PAKISTAN REFUGEES—INCREASE IN FINANCIAL AID

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Noting that the United States is sending four large military transports to assist in the movement of refugees from Pakistan, now in India, could the minister tell us whether any request for similar assistance has come to the government of Canada and whether the government is looking with favour upon the granting of such aid?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): I would have to confirm this, but at the moment I do not believe we have received a specific request for material assistance such as could be provided by Air Transport Command. As the hon. member will recall, the command was of some assistance in East Pakistan earlier this year, and of course we stand ready to provide as much assistance as we can should there be such a request made.

Mr. Macquarrie: I direct this question to the Prime Minister. Noting, also, that the United States is increasing substantially its financial aid in connection with these refugees, may I ask whether the government of Canada is giving consideration to granting more assistance to these suffering people?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The matter will be discussed when the Secretary of State for External Affairs comes back from his conference in Europe.

[Mr. Pepin.]

EAST PAKISTAN REFUGEES—PROVISION OF EMERGENCY MEDICAL SUPPLIES

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): In view of increased reports of shortages of medical supplies needed to combat epidemics rampant among the East Pakistan refugees, I should like to ask the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs whether Canada has received a request from any country or international relief agency for emergency supplies? If not, has Canada offered such assistance to this unfortunate part of the Commonwealth?

URBAN AFFAIRS

ONTARIO DECISION TO SUPPORT PUBLIC TRANSPORTATION RATHER THAN EXPRESSWAYS—FEDERAL FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR RAPID TRANSPORT FACILITIES

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I address my question to the Minister without Portfolio responsible for urban affairs. I should like to ask whether, in light of the historic decision of the government of Ontario to transfer its financial support to public transportation from the building of expressways, the government of Canada will review its policies in the field of urban transportation and undertake to give financial support for the building of rapid transport facilities in lieu of expressways and thus encourage a form of transportation more sensitive to the real needs of the people living in urban areas?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that the question is perhaps more than that. It seems to me it is a suggestion or proposal he is making to the government. However, the minister responsible for this part of the administration might like to reply.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): I think I have answered similar questions before. I shall simply say I will give every consideration to the hon. member's representation.

RESEARCH

APPROPRIATION OF FUNDS TO FIND SUBSTITUTE FOR INTERNAL COMBUSTION ENGINE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a related question to the President of the Treasury Board in his capacity as minister responsible for science matters. In light of the historic announcement from Queen's Park yesterday, can the minister say whether the federal government has considered appropriating sufficient funds for massive research into the possibility of getting rid of internal combustion engines on our highways before they get rid of us?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): There is already a considerable effort going into seeking satisfactory alternatives to the present gasoline-powered internal combustion engine, either by using other sources of energy than gasoline or by not using an internal combustion engine at all. This question is being dealt with by a number of departments but there will, of course, be a special interest shown by the new department of the environment.

HEALTH

PRINTING OF WARNING OF DANGER TO HEALTH ON CIGARETTE PACKAGES

Mr. Oza Tétrault (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I would have addressed my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare but in his absence I direct it to his parliamentary secretary. Following government pressure in Great Britain, tobacco manufacturers agreed to print "Smoking can damage your health" warnings on cigarette packages. Can the minister say if Canadian manufacturers were approached to have a warning printed on each package of cigarettes sold in Canada?

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of the question on behalf of the minister.

URBAN AFFAIRS

DISCUSSIONS WITH PROVINCES ON PLANNING OF CITY GROWTH TO AVOID NECESSITY OF COMMUTING BY AUTOMOBILE

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the President of the Treasury Board a question which is supplementary to the one to which he has just replied. Have there been any discussions between the federal government and the provinces, or any requests made by the provinces, regarding research into a logical way of controlling and planning city growth so that commuting by automobile on costly highways to and from suburbs will not be necessary in the future?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, this is perhaps a special part of the consideration of the whole environmental problem being given by the minister responsible for urban affairs and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. This is a field of sociological research into which considerably more effort has been put in recent years than in the past, but I think we are still some distance from finding the answers.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Following the speech in Alberta yesterday by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, has the Prime Minister issued a directive that all speeches of cabinet ministers be submitted to his office so as to make sure there is nothing anti-American or anti-Russian in their content?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will realize that the question asked in those terms is not in order.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

TRANSFER TO PROVINCES OF JURISDICTION OVER SOCIAL SECURITY—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question.

Regarding a question I asked yesterday, would the Prime Minister make a statement on motions before the Victoria Conference about the suggestions of the Castonguay report on the distribution of powers over social security?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question regarding the conference. Will the Prime Minister be making an effort to talk to Premier Davis before the conference in the same way as he talked to Premier Bourassa so as to try to get some of Ontario's ideas ironed out?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I will do my best to iron out any Tory ideas in Ontario, but it is very difficult.

POLLUTION

ACTION TO REMOVE THREAT OF OIL SPILL FROM GROUNDED TANKER, "TRANS PACIFIC"

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday I asked a question of the Minister of Transport, which was taken as notice, with regard to the motor vessel Trans Pacific which was aground off St. Pierre Island and was posing a threat to our shores. I am wondering what action the department has taken in regard to preventing any threat to our shores from oil pollution?

Mr. Gerard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the latest information on the status of the Trans Pacific is that there is no longer any pollution threat because the cargo was salvaged a number of days ago.

PENITENTIARIES

COLLINS BAY—REPORTED RIOT—USE OF PROVINCIAL POLICE IN CASE OF DISTURBANCES

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Solicitor General whether he has a report to make on the riot that is reported to have taken place in Collins Bay penitentiary on Monday of this week. May I also ask the minister whether it is now the intention of the department to use the Ontario Provincial Police or the provincial police in other provinces every time there is a disturbance at a federal penitentiary?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, a convict at Collins Bay has actually hit a guard. Since that constitutes an assault, we have asked the Ontario Provincial Police to investigate. I think that the best way to discover the truth is to use inside penitentiaries those agencies which make investigations outside them.

STATEMENT OF FORMER MINISTER OF COMMUNICATIONS —CALLING OF GENERAL ELECTION

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

The former Minister of Communications stated in St. Johns, Newfoundland, I believe it was yesterday, that there would be a resurgence of inflation in 1973-74. Was the former minister, who is still a Liberal member, then reflecting the government's opinion?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that this question is out of order. The statement was made by a former minister, and not by a current minister. This is why the question cannot be asked in the terms used by the hon. member for Témiscamingue.

Mr. Caouette: With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the government and not the former minister a supplementary question which is quite relevant.

Is the Prime Minister considering calling a general election before inflation recurs?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): This would be quite a good idea, Mr. Speaker.

INFORMATION CANADA

SECURITY REPORT ON JEAN-LOUIS GAGNON—REFERENCE IN LETTER OF MINISTER OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and arises from an answer given by the Prime Minister to a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Red Deer. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister stated that no comprehensive security report was prepared for cabinet use on the director of Information Canada, in order to clarify some correspondence received from the minister's office, especially in view of his penchant for credibility in advertising and many other things, could the minister explain to which comprehensive report he was referring in letters dealing with this matter to constituents in his riding?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the letter to which I think the hon. member refers was intended to indicate that security procedures had been followed in this case, which is the information that the Prime Minister gave the House over a year ago.

Mr. Nowlan: Is it fair to assume from the minister's answer that the specific statement in the letter that "a comprehensive report was drawn up for the use of cabinet only" is incorrect?

Mr. Basford: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

STUDENT MILITIA TRAINING PROGRAM QUOTAS AND COURSES

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister advise the House whether the quotas under the student militia training program have now been reached?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): I will take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Marshall: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As the minister is taking notice of the question, would he investigate the reason why, despite an expansion of the program from 5,000 to 8,000, some provinces' quotas have been seriously reduced, and would the minister also investigate why some courses have been cut out or cancelled at armouries where applications had already been made?

FISHERIES

SUGGESTED SUSPENSION OF RIGHTS GRANTED TO UNITED STATES FISHING VESSELS ON PACIFIC COAST

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Prime Minister might be able to give me an answer today to the question I asked him on June 1 arising from the refusal of the United States coastguard to admit Canadian fishing vessels to ports in the state of Washington, and what action the government might take in light of this situation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I remember referring this question to, I believe, the Secretary of State for External Affairs. This is not a day on which the department is answering in the House, but I understand that there is a minister to my left who is able to supply an answer to this question.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I understand that an investigation is being carried out into that subject. The Secretary of State for External Affairs wants to remark, however, that there is no contractual obligation with respect to this situation, that the whole matter is dealt with under customary international law, not written law. If there are reasons to believe that injury was done to international law in this case, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is willing to discuss the matter with the United States government.

OPPORTUNITY TO DEBATE PROPOSED AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND UNITED STATES RESPECTING LOWER GREAT LAKES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry but in his absence I will direct it to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the concern over pollution, will Parliament be given an opportunity to debate proposals concerning a possible Canada-United States clean-up agreement for the lower section of the Great Lakes?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe there is a meeting on the tenth of this month which will be attended by a Canadian minister. When he returns I will consult with him on the opportunity of making a statement to the House.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. May I ask the Prime Minister whether he has looked out of his bedroom window since he got back and noticed the massive pollution in the Ottawa River—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: —as an example of the fact that the government is doing nothing across the country to deal with pollution?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member has seen the light and will recognize that he is out of order.

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Minister of Transport but, in his absence, I will direct it to his Parliamentary Secretary. In view of the fact that our seats are not very far apart, I dare hope that my question will reach the minister very quickly.

Is it the intention of the Minister of Transport to urge the Canadian National Railways authorities to stop making things difficult for the public and to give up the idea of closing their office at 70 Sparks Street whose services are absolutely necessary?

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

OIL COMPANY PRICE INCREASES—ACTION RESPECTING ALLEGED EXCESS PROFITS

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It is in connection with the report he tabled today from the Prices and Incomes Commission which indicates that Imperial Oil, Shell Canada, Texaco and Sun Oil increased their prices in a manner which resulted in revenues increasing to a greater extent than costs, and that the commission has met with these companies in an attempt to convince them to take remedial action but has not been successful and has therefore brought this matter to the minister's attention. May I ask the minister what action he intends to take in the face of this excessive profit-taking by the oil companies?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): As indicated in the report, the amounts involved were generally small in relation to the total revenue. Nevertheless, I certainly regret that the companies were unwilling, apparently, to take any sort of compensatory action. As a result we are examining a number of alternatives that arise from the report and which will be announced in due course.

Mr. Saltsman: Can the minister say whether one of the things he is examining is the report of the Alberta government made to the minister in 1969 which recommended that the government intervene in order to restore freedom of enterprise to service station operators? Is he considering taking action as recommended by Alberta?

Mr. Basford: I have already indicated that that report and a similar one from British Columbia and also one from Nova Scotia are being considered by me in terms of revising the Combines Investigation Act.

STEEL PRICE INCREASES—INVESTIGATION BY PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact that Dofasco estimates that its latest price increases will add about $10.50 to the steel cost of a family car, 62 cents to the steel cost of a refrigerator and 64 cents to the cost of a stove, has the minister asked the Prices and Incomes Commission to investigate this inflationary price rise, or could he tell the House what effective action he plans to take to deal with it?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The effective action is the first course of action the hon. member suggested.

NOVA SCOTIA-NEWFOUNDLAND FERRY RATE INCREASE—INVESTIGATION BY PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, perhaps my question is more of a related question. Will the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs undertake to refer to the Prices and Incomes Commission the extravagant increases in fares imposed by Canadian National on the gulf ferries between Newfoundland and Nova Scotia?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): That question has already been asked of my colleague, the Minister of Transport, and has been dealt with in the House.

Mr. McGrath: May I point out with great respect that the question was not put to the minister. I again ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who is responsible for the Prices and Incomes Commission, if he will refer the extravagant increases by the CNR which average about 80 per cent on the gulf ferries between Newfoundland and Nova Scotia to the Prices and Incomes Commission?

Mr. Basford: I believe that the Prices and Incomes Commission is examining these fare increases but I believe, although I may be wrong, that these questions were also asked of the Minister of Transport who reports to the House for the CNR relative to fare increases and that answers were given at that time.

Mr. McGrath: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member rises on a point of order. We will have to go on to another question after the hon. member has indicated what his point of order is.

Mr. McGrath: My point of order is to set the record straight. The Minister of Transport left on an official trip to Europe the day before the increases were announced by the CNR.

Mr. Duquet: I also rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I answered that question last Wednesday.

An hon. Member: What did you say?

INDUSTRY

DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES AND AUTOMOBILE COMPANIES TO IMPROVE CONDITIONS FOR CANADA UNDER AUTO PACT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce concerning the auto pact. Assuming that the minister has read the auto pact since the bizarre answer he gave the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville the other day, can the minister inform the House whether or not the government has in recent months approached the United States government and the automotive companies with a view to improving the conditions for Canadians which currently exist in the auto agreements between Canada and the United States?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): There has been a constant flow of conversations between the—I see by the face of the hon. member or by the noise made by him that he does not agree with what I am about to say. I wonder why he does not agree.

Mr. Hees: Just give the answer.

Mr. Pepin: I repeat then that there has been a constant—

Mr. McGrath: You are not supposed to lip read.

Mr. Pepin: I was saying very politely that there has been a constant flow of conversation between the governments of Canada and the United States on the subject of the auto pact in the last months, and the industry has been made aware of those conversations by myself.

Mr. Broadbent: I do not doubt that there has been a constant flow of conversation. What I am interested in is whether there have been any results that the minister can report to the House.

Mr. Pepin: When results are reached I will communicate them to the House in a very polite way.

FINANCE

SOFT LOANS TO THIRD WORLD COUNTRIES—EFFECT OF DELAY IN PASSAGE OF UNITED STATES FOREIGN AID BILL ON CANADIAN PLEDGE

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): I have a polite question for the Prime Minister. In view of the concern, referred to in the New York Times this week, of the international development section of the World Bank about soft loan pledges for third world countries, will the Prime Minister reassure us that Canada's pledge of $50 million is unaffected by the hold-up of the foreign aid bill in the United States? Second, to prevent a supplementary question, would the Prime Minister ask the Minister of Finance if he would be agreeable to making a statement on motions on this whole matter which is of some concern to the countries involved?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I think this is the type of polite question which the Minister of Finance would be able to answer it asked of him. I am not aware of any change in the government's plans as a general proposition, but I must say that the fact that a bill might be held up in Congress does not seem to me to be a sufficient reason for Canada to change its aid plans.

GRAIN

FORECAST OF TOTAL WHEAT SALES THIS YEAR

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): My question is directed to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. In view of his announcement this morning of the sale to Russia, which is the first announcement of a wheat sale of any consequence for a considerable period of time, I should like to ask him whether other wheat sales are being contemplated to bring the total of wheat export sales this year up to the 500 million bushel figure that he has been quoted as expecting?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there have been constant reports of sales of wheat, for instance, not long ago to Brazil, and so on, and there is every prospect still that our exports for this year will hit record levels. Of course the sale announced this morning, like some of the other sales, relates particularly to the next crop year and so begins to lay the foundation for a very rapid movement of grain into the next crop year as well.

Mr. Murta: Can the minister inform the House what total wheat sales are up to this point for this crop year?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, it is not customary to be too precise about the sales figures, but I did indicate in answer to a question this morning that the likely total export sale of wheat for the 1970-71 crop year, which ends on July 31, will be within the range of 430 million bushels to 470 million bushels.

APPROXIMATE PRICE OF WHEAT SOLD TO RUSSIA

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. It refers to his statement earlier this morning with respect to the large sale of wheat to Russia. Can the minister indicate what the approximate price in this sale was, and if the wheat was in fact sold at a price per bushel that would compensate the Canadian wheat producer?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Well, Mr. Speaker, the exact selling price is also confidential information between buyer and seller. However, recent Wheat Board listed prices have been in ranges which have been approximately at the minimums under the International Grains Arrangement.

TRADE

STATISTICAL BREAKDOWN OF PRODUCTS EXPORTED—REASON FOR DELAY IN PRODUCTION OF REPORT

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I was asked a question yesterday by the very energetic and distinguished member for Prince Edward-Hastings—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: I cannot help but agree with that.

Mr. Pepin:—about the monthly breakdown of exports, and the information it usually provides on the degree of fabrication of exports. I have inquired, and I presume that a number of people in DBS have stayed up overnight. The explanation is that computer programming is encountering scheduling difficulties, for the first time in recent history of this set of statistics.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: However, DBS officials having worked overnight I have some preliminary statistics, subject to further auditing and possible revision.

Mr. Hees: Which I am sure they will get.

Mr. Pepin: These statistics, which I am very keen to show to the hon. member, show that preliminary tabulations of the data indicate that the proportion of end products to total domestic exports was higher in April, 1971 than in April, 1970, and the same is true for the first quarter of 1971 compared with the first quarter of 1970. So I know the hon. member will be delighted to receive this information.

BRUCK MILLS LIMITED—POSSIBLE CLOSING OF MONTREAL PLANT

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I also want to reply to the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe who inquired from me yesterday about Bruck Mills Limited, in Montreal, which would be on the eve of shutting down their plant.

He is right about the main point only. One hundred and thirty-five employees and not 250 are involved. Some of them will be hired by a research and development laboratory which is being built by the company in Montreal. Others will obtain employment in the same sector—knitting—in the Montreal area and the company points out that it will hire another 250 employees in the Sherbrooke area.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate.

Mr. Hees: On a supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order. We are running short of time. I would suggest that the matter might be pursued at the next sitting of the House. For the moment the Chair has recognized the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate.

PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

CONTINUATION OF LEGISLATIVE POSITION BEYOND DECEMBER, 1971

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I would not object to the hon. member responding to that statement on motions, but in any event I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I would like to know if there has been a special meeting recently between himself and the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission, and if the discussion involved the continuation beyond December, 1971, of the legislative position of the Prices and Incomes Commission?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what the hon. member means by a special meeting. We talk about matters quite regularly and constantly, and there is no such thing as a special meeting.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, may I have an answer to this question—

Mr. Hees: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member rises on a point of order.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, you have pointed out quite rightly to the members of the House how a great deal of time is wasted in dissertations between ministers and members, just as we have had this morning, but may I point out that this is because the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and many others simply refuse to give straight answers and we have to keep pounding at them in order to try to get some kind of answer out of them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North.

POLLUTION

EXTINGUISHING OF SPRINGHILL MINE DUMP FIRE

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Is he in a position to report to the House on what progress is being made in extinguishing the mine dump fire at Springhill, Nova Scotia, following his meeting with the Minister of Mines from Nova Scotia regarding this matter?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have not been brought up to date in the last day or two on this question, but I will be glad to take it as notice and report to the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member for Marquette has a supplementary to a previous question, and he will be recognized now.

WHEAT—ASSURANCE THAT PRICE IN SALE TO RUSSIA NOT BELOW COST OF PRODUCTION

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister who reports for the Canadian Wheat Board. Can the minister assure the House that the wheat sale to Russia was not made at below production costs to western farmers, as has been the case with barley sales recently?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I take issue with the hon. member's statement that barley sales recently have been made below the cost of production. In answer to a question a moment ago I said that the actual prices are not revealed but that the most recent prices being quoted by the Wheat Board are public knowledge, and the hon. member can draw his own conclusions.

IMPLEMENTATION OF PUBLIC HOUSING GUIDELINES—MEETING WITH PROVINCIAL AUTHORITIES

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the minister in charge of housing. When will he be meeting with his provincial counterparts to discuss the implementation of the public housing guidelines which were issued by him about a year ago?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, there have been several meetings since that public housing guidelines statement was issued. There has been considerable progress toward implementing many of the suggestions we made at the federal level. Some have not been accepted by the provincial governments. This is a matter of constant discussion between the provincial housing authorities and CMHC.

TRANSPORT

FERRY RATE INCREASES IMPOSED BY CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS IN MARITIMES—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport. In view of the serious cost to the economy of the Atlantic provinces as a result of the increased CNR ferry rates, would the parliamentary secretary bring all the grievances and protestations already made to the minister's attention and ask him to make a statement on motions when he returns to the House?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would again like to repeat that the increase in ferry rates does not contravene the terms of union with the province of Newfoundland which refer to the movement of freight. The increase was made after a very close study of the matter. Further, the minister will be in the House on Tuesday and he will certainly be glad to answer any questions put by hon. members.

Mr. Marshall: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary secretary has not answered the question. It has nothing to do with rail freight rates. It has to do with ferry rate increases between the provinces of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland.

MICRO DRUG COMPANY—REQUEST FOR FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It is in connection with the letter sent to the minister from Micro Drug Company. Was that request for assistance met by his department, and what was the conclusion of his department's investigation into the situation of Micro Drug?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure to which letter the hon. member refers. If it was a request by Micro Chemicals because of certain difficulties they were having, that letter has been responded to and the matter of financing Micro under the PIDA program was referred to my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who has been answering questions on the subject in the House. He and his officials are examining whether Micro Chemicals would be eligible for a loan under the PIDA program.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. McGrath: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport interjected on a point of order during the question I directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to say he had already responded or replied to my question, which was to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to refer to the Prices and Incomes Commission the inflationary and extravagant increases by CNR in the ferry rates. Upon examination of Hansard I find that the parliamentary secretary did not respond to this question, and I suggest to the hon. member that he should get his facts straight before he interjects in that way.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT, OBJECTS, POWERS, CAPITALIZATION, ETC.

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-219, to establish the Canada Development Corporation, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before the motions are called in connection with the consideration of Bill C-219, an act to establish the Canada Development Corporation, the Chair might be allowed to make some suggestions about the way in which these motions might be considered.

The first suggestion I should like to make is that motions Nos. 1 and 2 be proposed together to the House, that they be debated as a single question and that if there is a negative vote on motion No. 1, that vote will also dispose of motion No. 2; second, that motions Nos. 3. 4 and 5 might be grouped for the purpose of debate and should there be a negative vote on motion No. 3, that vote will also dispose of motions Nos. 4 and 5; third, motions Nos. 6 and 7 could be grouped for joint consideration and here again a negative vote on motion No. 6 would dispose of motion No. 7; fourth, motion No. 8 might be considered and disposed of separately. Motions Nos. 9 and 10 could be grouped for the purposes of debate but a negative vote on motion No. 9 should dispose also of motion No. 10.

I suggest to the House that motion No. 11 might well be defective in that it would appear to go outside the scope of Bill C-219 in attempting to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act. This motion is submitted to the consideration of the House by the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart). However, before making a decision in that regard the Chair is prepared to hear argument when the motion is called for consideration in due course. Lastly, it is suggested that motion No. 12 be considered and disposed of separately.

If the suggestions of the Chair are acceptable to hon. members, the Chair is prepared at this time to put motion No. 1 and motion No. 2 to the House. Before doing so I should be pleased to hear the suggestions, comments or advice of hon. members.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I was looking at the grouping proposed by Your Honour and I find some difficulty in establishing the relationship between motions Nos. 9 and 10. Motion No. 10, relating to clause 39, deals with the acquisition of shares, in whole or in part, of certain Crown corporations whereas motion No. 9 deals with an entirely different clause and an entirely different matter. I find it somewhat difficult to see—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member does not have to argue the matter too strenuously. As I indicated I am quite prepared to make changes. It is sometimes not too easy for the Chair to interpret some of the motions proposed by hon. members. When an argument as logical as the one just made by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) is submitted for the consideration of the Chair, I have no hesitation in accepting the suggestion and motions Nos. 9 and 10 will be considered separately.

Hon. members know that suggestions made by the Chair are just for the convenience of the House. If hon. members take exception to the situation for serious reasons, there is no difficulty in agreeing with hon. members who make such suggestions. I would, therefore, agree that motions Nos. 9 and 10 be considered separately.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, if I may comment on the ruling you have made with respect to the 11 motions that have been submitted by members of this group, I may say that the suggestions you have made, taking into account the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), are quite agreeable to us. In other words, there will be seven different proposals, seven different debates and perhaps seven different votes. The only comment I would like to add is that in those cases where Your Honour said if there was a negative vote it would take care of other motions, I suppose it follows that if there is an affirmative vote in some of these cases then we will reassess the situation.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's suggestion is hypothetical, but it would be considered if there were an affirmative vote. I note the hon. member's suggestion that a negative vote indicating that certain matters would be done is equally hypothetical. I had in the back of my mind that perhaps one was just a little more hypothetical than the other.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Speaker, I certainly agree with the suggestion of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) that Nos. 9 and 10 be separated. However, it seems to me that amendment No. 9 is consistent with Nos. 1 and 2 in that it is basically directed at making the Canada Development Corporation a Crown corporation and taking it out of the private sector. Some consideration could properly be given to including motion No. 9 with Nos. 1 and 2.

Mr. Speaker: That might be complicated. I suggest to hon. members that if we try to change this grouping too much we will be here for two days trying to make new groupings and new regroupings. I am not suggesting that the proposal made by the hon. parliamentary secretary is not logical, but in view of the fact that the suggestion has been made now that Nos. 1 and 2 be considered together and that we are prepared to proceed with them, I suggest we do this unless there is unanimous agreement that No. 9 be taken with Nos. 1 and 2.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No.

Mr. Speaker: There is obviously no such agreement. I would hope that hon. members would agree with the suggestions made by the Chair at this time. We will now call motions Nos. 1 and 2.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): I move:

That Bill C-219, an act to establish the Canada Development Corporation, be amended by deleting from clause 2 all the words following "corporations" in lines 9 to 12 on page 1.

That Bill C-219, an act to establish the Canada Development Corporation, be amended by deleting from clause 4 the words "together with such persons as are shareholders of the company from time to time" in lines 34 to 36 on page 2.

In proposing motion No. 1, I should like to point out that as the clause now stands it is misleading and perhaps unintentionally dishonest, but nevertheless dishonest, by virtue of the language used. Line 11 indicates that the establishment of a corporation will provide "greater opportunities to invest and participate in the economic development of Canada". We have to realize that in some ways this corporation will provide less opportunity rather than greater opportunity. One of the proposals in this legislation is that more wholly owned Crown corporations and one partially owned Crown corporation be put into the hopper, which means in fact that the four corporations now owned by all Canadians are going to be put into one corporation that will be owned only by some Canadians. This seems a very regressive step, so it seems to be enormously misleading and dishonest to say we are providing opportunities to invest and participate in the economic development of Canada.

The greatest opportunity to invest and participate in the economic development of Canada is provided by doing what we have done in the past, by establishing wholly owned Crown corporations in which every Canadian can participate. To take away these Crown corporations that have been built up for good reasons over a number of years and to turn them over to a limited number of stockholders, is to sell out the interests of the vast majority of the Canadian public.

In September, 1968, a study was carried out by Professor G. R. Conway, of the faculty of administrative studies of York University, Toronto. It was commissioned by the Toronto Stock Exchange and called, "The supply of and demand for Canadian equities". The study comes to a number of conclusions and gives some interesting facts. I should like to read briefly from page 8. There is a reference to the number of Canadians owning shares. Right now, every Canadian is a shareholder in a Crown corporation but not every Canadian will be a shareholder in CDC, considering the provisions under which that corporation is being incorporated. It is interesting to discover who the new shareholders will be and what percentage of Canadians they will represent. We may gain some insight into this by examining the number of Canadians who now own shares and the number of Canadians who are in a position to own shares.

Let us be clear, Mr. Speaker. Most Canadians would like to own shares. If you ask any Canadian whether he would like to own shares he would say, "Of course, I should like to own shares in a company." To buy shares in a company you need surplus purchasing power, and that surplus purchasing power is not available to all Canadians, especially since almost a quarter of our population is living at or below the poverty level. When we talk about opportunities for buying shares, we are talking about a very limited portion of the Canadian population. The report I am about to refer to mentions that limited portion. May I now quote from the report, under the heading, "Number of Canadians Owning Shares":

The proportion of Canadian taxpayers receiving dividends has been increasing, from 5.3% in 1955 to over 7% in 1965—up about 30%. This increase is relatively more significant than it appears as 13% more of the population filed tax returns in 1965 than in 1955. In the United States the percentage of taxpayers receiving dividends in 1965 was 17%, reflecting the higher average incomes in that country.

If it can be assumed that tax returns filed are a reasonable indication of the proportion of the population over age 21 that receive dividends, then the proportion of all Canadians receiving dividends has increased from 2.7% in 1955 to 4.2% in 1964—an increase of about 55%. Projecting the figures to 1965 would mean an increase from something under 300,000 adult equity holders in Canada in 1955 to well over 500,000 adult equity holders in 1965.

There has been an increase in the number of Canadians holding equities and in a position to buy equities. Yet the absolute number or percentage of such Canadians is very, very small. In a country with a population of slightly over 21 million, slightly more than half a million adults are in a position to buy equities, or roughly 7 per cent. Let us assume that the advent of $5 shares in Canada Development Corporation will open up more opportunities for equity investment; that is to say, that the corporation will be able to attract a larger number of Canadian investors than has been the case previously. Even assuming that this corporation takes over corporations like Polymer and Eldorado, the equities of which are 100 per cent owned by the Canadian people, and that 7 per cent or 9 per cent or 10 per cent or even 15 per cent of the people—which is double the present number—are able to hold equities in the corporation, that does not mean, as clause 2 suggests, that there will be greater opportunities for investment, because actual opportunities to invest are being withdrawn from the vast majority of Canadians.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that the examination in committee of the Canada Development Corporation was not the finest hour of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. My criticism does not arise as a result of any change in the membership of the committee, and I am not suggesting that the committee did not work hard enough. I would not wish to leave that impression, because I have a high regard for the members of the committee and for the committee chairman. The point is that the government has so confused and befuddled the issue of Canada Development Corporation that no one, including the witnesses, knew what the heck the whole thing was about. Almost no intelligent criticism was possible with respect to this amorphous kind of thing that the government has produced.

I ask, why was this exercise necessary? Why did the government bring in Canada Development Corporation or an entity that looks like a Canada Development Corporation? It really is a big "nothing". It does not satisfy those who feel that there should be greater emphasis on government participation in the economy—we see the necessity for government participation in the economy—and who feel that our economy has gone so badly down the drain because of the failure of private entrepreneurship in Canada that the only real solution lies in greater public participation and public enterprise. This does not satisfy us at all. The corporation is to make profits. Its objectives are not compatible with national objectives and national purposes. The government is hamstringing the corporation from the beginning. It is hoped to interest investors by offering shares at $5; yet, after all, a man invests because he wants a return. If he does not get a return he will sell his stock. The objectives of the corporation cannot be reconciled with the national interest. Nobody can understand this measure. That was obvious in the committee hearings. The witnesses before the committee said, "If the bill means this, then we should do that; on the other hand, if it means something else, then we should be doing the other thing."

No enthusiasm has been displayed for Canada Development Corporation; certainly, there has not been the kind of enthusiasm that a good Canadian development corporation ought to deserve. After all, we have been waiting for this sort of corporation for seven or eight years. We have wanted a Canada Development Corporation. We have waited with great expectation and hope for the establishment of such a corporation. Yet the government has brought in this "fizzle", this great nothing, and does not seem to know what it wants to do. It is significant that one of the most telling criticisms of the government proposal has come in a brief submitted by the policy committee of the Toronto and District Liberal Association.

Mr. Saltsman: It is all very well for members opposite to say hear, hear. I want to see whether hon. members opposite will support the ideas of this brief. Are they going to say to those who submitted the brief, "You are nice boys, now go away; we are not paying any attention to you." A lot of intelligent thought has gone into this brief. It was brought to my attention by the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Kaplan). I read it with great pleasure. I will not say that the Liberals have stolen our ideas. I do not care where the ideas came from; that is not important. It does not matter whether we originated the ideas or whether they did. The point is that this group makes sense in a way that the government does not.

The government does not listen to us. They have a hangup about taking ideas from other people, unless absolutely compelled to do so. Why do they not adopt some ideas from their so-called grass roots? There is a good deal of talk these days in the Liberal party about new policy objectives, about how that party is making its conventions more democratic and about how the party is asking for inputs from around the country. Once in a while the party talks about participatory democracy. Where is it, I ask? Certainly, no attention was paid to this brief from the Toronto and District Liberal Association. I shall read from the brief, which is already on the committee on record, and the points it makes are very good. With reference to the subject of the amendment that stands in my name, page 3 of the brief reads:

The question should be asked whether a small group of investors who happen to have some surplus cash should profit from this government action, while the vast majority of Canadians would not profit.

There is a great deal more in this brief, but I just wanted to quote that part. They also say in their brief, and I quote:

We believe that CDC must not sell shares to Canadian public. We are at fundamental disagreement with the objective to sell shares in CDC to the Canadian public. We do not see the role of CDC as a sort of publicly sponsored private investment company.

One has to ask why the government brought in this strange kind of animal, the Canada Development Corporation. Perhaps the government is thinking of an election this fall and has to offer something more than the sorry performance we have seen in the past three years. They may need something glamorous so that they can go to the people and say that we now have a Canada Development Corporation. Perhaps the government does not want to do anything, and this is the way to take the heat off what is obviously a growing concern in this country about foreign ownership. This concern was expressed in the brief from the Liberal association and has been expressed by almost everyone in Canada except the members of the stock exchanges. This provides a clue.

In the study to which I referred earlier, "The Supply of and Demand for Canadian Equities", one of the conclusions reached is that there is a great need for publicly traded stocks in Canada. In other words, there is not a shortage of investment money in Canada. There is a great deal of investment money in Canada, but it is not being invested in this country because the stocks are not available. I think the figure used is that there is twice as much money available as there are stocks. I quote from page 40 of the brief:

> If their present rates of asset growth continue, and if the proportion of their total assets invested in equities increases, then the three major financial institutions—pension funds, life insurance companies and mutual funds—could be looking to invest over the next few years, an average, about $1 billion a year in equities.
> This estimate of potential demand excludes any net new purchases by other Canadian financial institutions, by Canadian corporations, or by Canadian individuals. It also excludes any consideration of net changes in the portfolio position of non-resident direct or portfolio investors.
> If the equity holdings of Canadian individuals increased at half of the rate of growth of gross national product, if other financial institutions just increase their Canadian equity portfolios at an annual rate of 3½% (approximately the average annual rate of growth in real terms of gross national product over recent years) and if there is no net change in the holdings of non-residents, then there would be an additional demand for an average of $300 million a year in equities. Again this figure includes possible demands for all equities, Canadian and foreign, and is based on constant dollars.
> The total average annual demand for equities in Canada would, therefore, be in the order of $1,300 million a year over the next few years. This projection may well be assuming too high a rate of growth—

It is obvious that the investment people need a place to put their money. The government is very conveniently taking away the investments of the people of Canada in their Crown corporations and, in many cases, people are embarrassed by a surplus of investment funds. This is very nice for the life insurance companies, banks and trust companies. It may even be nice for a few Canadian investors, but is not going to be good for the people of this country. It is going to be a wide step backward instead of forward. The Canada Development Corporation we had hoped to see is going to be used as an instrument for wrecking some of the proud corporations we have been able to build up over the years.

During the course of the committee hearings, the minister appeared as a witness. We asked him on what basis this form of privately oriented corporation had been developed, if other development corporations around the world had been studied by him and his committee, what they learned from those studies and whether papers had been prepared to back up their reasons for developing this kind of corporation. The answers were always vague. When the minister felt terribly accommodating, he would smile between puffs on his pipe and say "you believe one thing and I believe another", or words to that effect—In other words, we have ideological differences. At no time was there an adequate explanation of why this corporation was set up with so-called public shareholder participation as against a wholly owned corporation responsible to the people of Canada. The reply was based on ideological grounds. The minister felt that our position was ideologically oriented. Hon. members are far too concerned about the Canada Development Corporation to go to the wire over what form it is going to take. We are prepared to examine many different kinds of forms, but we want to be assured that the form in which it is developed will enable it to do the job it is supposed to do.

After asking questions about what corporations had been examined and the experience in other countries with development corporations, we were supplied with a 20 page summary of other development banks studied in connection with the Canada Development Corporation bill. I am grateful for this, although it is not research or a study in depth, but at least it is a study. The table of contents lists the various corporations studied. They are as follows, General Investment Corporation of Quebec, the Development Corporation Act (Manitoba), Australian Industry Development Corporation, Industrial Development Corporation of South Africa, Industrial Reorganization Corporation (Britain), Institute of Industrial Development (France), Nacional Financiera (Mexico), Institute for Industrial Reconstruction (Italy) and the Japan Development Bank.

With the exception of the General Investment Corporation of Quebec, none of these corporations in countries as diverse as South Africa, Italy, Mexico and Japan, have public participation. There is no prototype. There is no experience in developing this kind of corporation. On the contrary, all the experience that exists indicates that if you try to include the small investor in the picture with the national interest, as the government claims it is trying to do, it does not work.

The one example we have, the General Investment Corporation of Quebec, started out to do a job which was much needed in Quebec. In many ways, it has been a failure. This is the one example where an attempt has been made to sell shares to the public and match the national interest as well. It has been a failure. The price of the shares has consistently dropped because there has been no public demand for them. The corporation has tended to be immobilized because it does not know which master to serve, the stock market and the shares or the public interest of Quebec. It cannot do both. It is asking too much of a corporation to give it terms of reference of that kind. Maybe in the case of the General Investment Corporation Quebec did it in this way in the hope it would work out. I believe most people who have studied the GIC now say it will not work.

Why, then, does the Government of Canada pick as its model the financing program of the General Investment Corporation rather than the model which is common in almost every country in the world which has had some experience of investment corporations? Why did they pick a failure? It is because they want the CDC to fail. They have a death wish. This applies to every government corporation they bring into being; it is their ideological hang-up. They hate public corporations, public enterprise, so much that even when they themselves set up a public corporation as their own child, they want to say: You forced us to do this, but we told you it would never work; that is socialism; public enterprise can never work. Mr. Speaker, they make sure it never works. They deliberately destroy the very things they set up and no better formula for the destruction of the CDC could be devised than the one which appears in this bill, an attempt to combine the public interest with the needs of the stock market.

It might be argued that Canadian investors are citizens and that they are entitled to be considered, that there are not enough stocks in Canada in which they can invest. But the solution to that is simple. Walter Gordon proposed it a long time ago. If there is a shortage of stocks in Canada and if Canadians cannot invest, then stocks could be made available by changing the law, by insisting that branch plants of United States corporations make a proportion of their shares available to Canadian investors. If the object is to satisfy the needs of Canadian investors, it could be achieved. This was done in connection with the Mercantile Bank. When a government is forced to act, it can act quickly. There is no need for a CDC to ensure that the stock markets of Toronto and Montreal are kept happy. We need a corporation to do what it is supposed to do, that is, develop the country, and the CDC cannot do that in the form in which it is proposed.

In Manitoba they have not made the same mistake. We in this party are proud of Manitoba, justifiably so, I think. This is one of the first development corporations whose administrations said they did not propose to give money away though they are prepared to assist. I think they have been very helpful to industry. I think they have gone out of their way to reassure industry that there is a place for it in Manitoba, that there is a welcome in Manitoba from the government of that province. But they have participated in an intelligent way. They have taken some equity in corporations because if the people of the province are to be asked to bring in finance and take risks, then surely they are entitled to some reward if those risks turn out well.

In Australia, which is experiencing the same problems as we have here in Canada in connection with foreign ownership, the Australia Development Corporation does not provide for public participation. The Industrial Corporation of South Africa is also set up in this way. One of the corporations which was brought to our attention was the Industrial Reorganization Corporation of Great Britain. The first thing which becomes apparent is that it is wholly owned by the people of Britain. They do not have shareholders from the public, and on the whole its work has been very successful. It has been one of the most successful corporations that the British government has established. It has encouraged mergers and industrial reorganization and although it has been subject to criticism, the one thing which has been said about it is that it has shown flexibility and initiative and encouraged industry to tackle some of the deep-seated problems of the country. I do not think anyone will be able to say that about the Canadian Development Corporation as it appears in this bill.

If all they wanted to see was an open-end or closed-end investment fund, surely we could have encouraged that in the private sector. We did not need a government corporation to do that because really what the government has created is little more than the sort of thing we already have in companies like Power Corporation. Power Corporation and companies like that are doing a reasonably good job in their field. There is no need for the CDC to get involved in that. But Power Corporation cannot do a good job in many other areas, and it is in these areas we needed the CDC. We needed a CDC which would be responsive to government policy, which would be flexible, which would not be hamstrung and which could act on behalf of the Canadian people rather than on behalf of a limited number of shareholders.

This government does not learn from anything. A few years ago they decided to set up the TELSAT corporation. Again, the objective was worthwhile. The hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Kierans) was then the minister responsible and his nationalism, his pride and his vision of the future came through very strongly when he appeared before the committee. He argued in favour of setting up a Canadian satellite system but one could see how uncomfortable he was when he proposed that this system be established not as a Crown corporation, not as something wholly-owned by the Canadian people, but under a troika arrangement—one-third of the shares would go to the common carriers and another one-third would go to the public. The public shares have never been issued, and they have never been issued because the public would not buy them. In order to induce the public to buy them it would be necessary to destroy the whole TELSAT concept; the corporation's profits would have to be guaranteed. The Government started off in a vague way, in a bad way, and they realized they could not go to the public for the financing of the corporation.

In a way, I am not too worried about what this legislation contains, though I am worried enough to argue about it, to try and get the government to change its mind. I know one thing. The kind of corporation which is being set up today does not have any great possibilities for success. It will not accomplish the purpose that many of us, including some of the supporters of this bill, are hoping it will accomplish and the bill will have to be changed very substantially before any benefit will come to the Canadian public.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I hope hon. members will consider some of the arguments I have placed before them in favour of amending this legislation so as to make sure that this corporation becomes the property and ultimately the pride of the Canadian people, rather than the special hunting ground of a relatively few affluent citizens.

• (12:40 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair sees the hon. member for Edmonton West hurrying to his seat. Now he is there I will recognize the hon. member for Edmonton West.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the House but the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) did not flash the "minute signal" and I was expecting the parliamentary secretary to reply to the amendment moved by the hon. member. This is an amendment that was moved either by the hon. member or one of his colleagues in committee, and following a good deal of discussion of it the amendment was turned down.

Personally, I am opposed to the amendment; not that I have any favour at all for this bill. We intend to propose no amendments, to support no amendments and to support nothing in the bill. I feel this bill is such a bad job that there is no way we can try to flush out a cadaver. To use another simile, I have said many times that I believe the Canada Development Corporation is strictly a non-starter; that there is no way this particular form of corporation as proposed in the bill can be improved so as to make it a viable proposition. One would have to start again from the ground up, and given the shape of the bill it is impossible to do that.

However, the amendment of the hon. member for Waterloo does give the House an opportunity to discuss some of the principles of the bill. We referred to them in the second reading debate. I have before me Hansards for last January when the bill was debated on the first instance on second reading, and a goodly number of members participated in the debate from time to time. There is no question that the original debate displayed a certain flavour of concern about foreign ownership and so on; but as hon. members gradually realized that there was no question at all that in this or any other form the Canada Development Corporation would affect the nature of foreign or Canadian ownership of companies, the debate came back to a discussion of the particular form of corporation that was proposed.

Your Honour will remember that initially there was considerable debate about whether the government had brought in the bill in the right way. A procedural question was raised and a ruling was made. Although I have some reservations about the reasoning behind the ruling, the ruling is there and one must abide by it. Nevertheless, I hope the officers advising the Chair would review the material on which they based their decision, because as I say—and I say this respectfully—some of the reasons for the decision are somewhat suspect on a logical basis. I admit this is a new form of corporation and a breaking of fresh ground, but I do have some reservation about that particular decision.

In any event, the amendment moved to this clause by the hon. member for Waterloo reveals the difficulty that was expressed in the majority of briefs that were presented to the committee, even the brief presented by the Liberal Association from the Toronto area. They called into question the sort of paradox that exists in this particular bill. This was illustrated as well by the minister and his parliamentary secretary, in what has been interpreted as the widespread demand on the part of the Canadian public for participation by the more modest investor in a corporation that would assist in the development of Canadian industry and business and the maintenance of Canadian control, when both the minister and the parliamentary secretary said that it would be five years—in reply to a question at one time it was said that it might even be ten years—before the corporation had established what was called a track record in regard to earnings that would justify the government in deciding that the shares of the corporation should be offered to the public.

We are being asked to buy a real pig in a poke so far as response to public demand is concerned. We know it is there. The public is exercised about the degree of participation by Canadian investors in Canadian corporations and Canadian industrial and resource development. But the answer of the government has been to erect a two-headed monster, each of the heads opposed to the other in principle. First of all, the white paper on taxation made such investment more difficult and discouraged Canadians from owning and participating in Canadian business, particularly in competition with United States and foreign neighbours. It was not a case of Canadians being placed in an equal or more favourable position; the white paper, with its chaotic idea of equity among taxpayers, made investment even more difficult. I must say in parenthesis that I am absolutely astounded at the theories put forward by the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans), formerly a cabinet minister, who wants to give strength to what I consider one of the two heads of this monster.

The second head was the Canada Development Corporation in which no opportunity will be given for public ownership and public participation for at least five or ten years, after being used as a sort of closed-end mutual fund and having established a kind of track record. This operation was to be based on four government Crown corporations and was to be established, on the one hand, with a view to public ownership. On the other hand, clause 6(1) provides that the corporation—> —shall be carried out in anticipation of profit and in the best interests of the shareholders as a whole.

Where does one reconcile public interest with the interests of the shareholders as a whole? What a classic example of the dilemma that is faced by a corporation such as this that is charged with acting in the public interest. There is nothing wrong with charging a corporation to operate in the public interest. Certainly, if it is the public interest the Canada Development Corporation must serve then, to turn around and say that "there shall be carried out in anticipation of profit and in the best interests of the shareholders as a whole", is to negate the public interest in many instances.

Let us look at a smaller version of the Canada Development Corporation. Its shareholding structure is different but its purpose is the same. I refer to La Société Générale de Financement of the province of Quebec and its recent experience with the lumber and plywood operations up at Maniwaki in the organization known as SOGEFOR. Initially, La Société Générale de Financement bought two or three lumber or woodwork operations that were going concerns which were making a profit. This is the sort of thing that the Canada Development Corporation should get into, something that has a potential for growth, some experience, and is in the public interest. But there was a changing situation; the market was not as good either for lumber or plywood. There were changes in the lumber permit, and this made it much more difficult to assure these woodworking operations of a steady supply of suitable wood. We found then SOGEFOR facing an entirely different situation of rather astounding losses.

But the town and district of Maniwaki were entirely dependent upon these industries. It was in the public interest to maintain regular employment for the bulk of the population. It was not in the public interest to let these men out and to place them on welfare. There is no other industry around, but la Société Générale de Financement, whose shares would be from $10 to $103 if they are ever quoted on the market, could not possibly absorb these continuing losses. So the company went to the market; the SOGEFOR operations were to be sold either to Canadians or to Americans. We saw there a classic example. La Société Générale de Financement, a company set up for the advancement and development of Quebec industry and Quebec control of industry, when the operations were losing money, was quite prepared to sell out to a New Jersey concern in order to get out of the situation.

Fortunately, that aspect is now academic and after some sort of almost Gilbert and Sullivan operation the Montreal syndicate that bought the concern have taken it over. Employment is much reduced, but the operation is continued. This is a very sad spectacle all around, and I have gone into this in detail to point out the immediate problem that would be faced by the Canada Development Corporation if it invested in any Canadian concern where the total of its participation and that of the others exceeded $1 million and it turned sour. The directions are that they shall be operated on the basis of profit and in the interest of the shareholders as a whole, but what about the public interest? Are the people who are working for this particular concern to be thrown out, put on the dole and the operation dismantled, or is it to be sold to the highest bidder who may be an outsider who can provide more capital and perhaps more expert management? Is that to be the role of the Canada Development Corporation? Nonsense, that is not what the operation will do. At that point we have departed from the principal idea of a true Canadian development corporation.

My party, after examining the proposals contained in the legislation, and without going into the details of the bill, finds it somewhat difficult to see how the government is going to get competent, interested people who will be able to take over this corporation and breathe life into the legislative bones that will be created through the adoption of this bill. I find this exceedingly difficult to believe. I find it exceedingly difficult to consider what would be the situation if Polymer or Eldorado or the Eldorado subsidiary, the Northern Transportation, but to a lesser degree, or Panarctic, should fall upon difficult days when the operations are not profitable. There might be a requirement, in the public interest, for the provision of further capital, the building up of reserves or that it should not declare dividends. In other words, there might be a requirement that it not be operated for the benefit of shareholders, notwithstanding the fact that this bill has the gall to say that the shareholders of the Canada Development Corporation will be those able to qualify under investments or insurance companies or trust and loan companies. That to me is the height of—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do leave the Chair.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, there is very little of my allotted time left, and I would just like to indicate that my comments up to this point have been concentrated on what appears to be the paradox in the directions given by the government to the corporation through this legislation, that it should have some public interest but that its primary interest shall be for the benefit of the shareholders, and that it shall be based upon the profit motive.

I reiterate for the benefit of hon. members that they should refer to the evidence given before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, to the briefs that were presented by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Bar, and other bodies and private individuals, although I must say not by a great number of people. In the light of what we had been given to understand was great public interest in having a Canada Development Corporation, and notwithstanding the wide advertising by the chairman of the committee about the reception of briefs and the possibility of presenting personal testimony, I was surprised that in large part the response by the public was a big yawn. To me this indicates a complete lack of concern about this particular type of corporation.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that we will not accept these NDP amendments because they are trying to impose upon the corporation a much too narrow type of operation. If the amendments were adopted it would become a sort of public finance operation. This whole series of amendments is designed to make the Canada Development Corporation merely a government investment corporation, with no private interest in it. In other words, the members of the NDP disregard entirely any interest that the public might have as individuals in participating in the corporation. I think there is a role for the private individual in a development corporation, but it should have an entirely different structure from this. We will go into that on some other occasion. For the present, I say that we cannot support the amendments, and we certainly cannot support the bill.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, on rising to speak on this amendment standing in the name of the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman), I would say that he has drawn attention to the dichotomy of this bill, and while I cannot support his amendment I think he has pinpointed what is wrong with the bill. In my opinion, the Canada Development Corporation is destined to be another of the government's great failures. I have observed the results of other endeavours which have been poorly conceived, and I think the Canada Development Corporation bill falls in that category. There are at least three conceptual errors in the proposed structure and mandate of the corporation, any one of which in itself would be sufficient to preclude the realization of its presently envisioned aims.

The corporation's orientation is clearly nationalistic, as set out in clause 6(1)(d) of the bill. The adoption of this amendment would make it even more so. We come, therefore, to the philosophical enigma of what constitutes our national interest. I think we have only to examine the present scene to see the lack of unity amongst Canadians as to what is in the national interest. As a western Canadian, I note part cularly that many Canadians in the two central metropolises, Toronto and Montreal, are coming more and more to be exponents of the view that foreign investment in Canada is no longer as essential to our economic well being as formerly, but rather now constitutes a serious threat to our sovereignty. In contrast, we in western Canada, and I am sure the same is true for people in the north, see foreign investment capital as the only hope of developing our great natural resources, and relieving our dependency on eastern banks and financial institutions to provide us with the development capital without which the northern and western regions of our country can never reach economic maturity and diversity.

For my part, Mr. Speaker, I believe that where there is a broad consensus throughout our country that a certain industry or segment of our economy should remain under Canadian control, this consensus can best be served through the formation of government owned organizations of the kind represented by the Polymer Corporation. Moreover, I do not believe that such organizations when formed should seek financial participation from the public sector as the Canada Development Corporation proposes to do. I think there are a number of excellent reasons for separating private and public ownership. I believe that combinations of these have too many inherent difficulties which inhib t the resolving of disputes involving conflict between the profit motive, which is of necessity such a dominant concern in the private investment sector of our economy, and the concept of the public good or national interest wh ch government agencies are expected to use as their principal guidelines in making management decisions in the running of public utilities or other holdings.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, it is not sufficient for Canada to become increasingly preoccupied with what the board of directors of the Canada Development Corporation might define as our national interests when we are so vitally dependent upon global interest for our economic survival. Let us for a moment examine the concept of national interest in reverse and suppose that the United States government decided for certain reasons that it was in their national interest to repatriate American owned automobile plants and related subsidiaries of them in Canada. What would happen to the industrial heartland of Ontario in such a situation? Conversely, is there not the very real danger that the existence of the Canada Development Corporation will dampen, or deter external participation in our economy because potential investors from abroad may fear they will be subject to take-overs or other hazardous action from the Canada Development Corporation at any time when the corporation's board of directors deems it to be in the national interest to move in on them?

The belief that the Canada Development Corporation will be a vehicle to enable the small Canadian investor to participate in the financial benefits of ownership in important and profitable Canadian companies is, at best, a spurious assumption. No evidence has been presented to show that there is a significant body of small investors in Canada who cannot find satisfactory or attractive opportunities under existing conditions.

I share fully the views expressed by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce during committee study of this bill. They were entirely dubious of any extensive participation in the Canada Development Corporation by the small investor. This amendment would indicate that this would be the result. Surely, Canadians with modest resources have no interest investing their few dollars in iron ore projects in Ungava or some other endeavour with benefits that are likely to be far too distant to appeal to them. Moreover, inflation, increasing levels of taxation and the creation of the welfare state are factors which all contrive to discourage people with limited means from saving. For them, the world of today and the satisfaction of today's desires are of much more interest than participation in ventures whose concepts and relevance to our national development are matters beyond their understanding or interest. The idea of the five dollar investor being one of the mainstays in the public offerings of the Canada Development Corporation is not, I suggest, something which should be taken seriously. This, then, leaves the question of who will find investment in the corporation attractive.

It seems to me to leave two potential groups, aside from the government itself which will be under strong pressures of self-justification to participate in the corporation. In listening to testimony in committee on this bill by individuals knowledgeable about the investment habits and patterns of medium sized investors and the large institutional investor, I was not at all convinced, nor were many of these witnesses, that such investors would regard the Canada Development Corporation as the type of highly sophisticated, strongly profit oriented, conglomerate which could best serve their needs.

The principal reason for this reservation appears to be the spectre of governmental control which will always lurk over the management of the corporation. Investors will rightly wonder about the basis on which large financial commitments are to be made. Let us take the case of a province which is urgently in need of several hundred million dollars to develop a natural resource industry or a hydroelectric project and which is encountering difficulty in raising the money on the open market because of interest rates or exchange difficulties. It is not difficult in this situation to imagine the pressure which a province could bring on the federal government to have the Canada Development Corporation provide the needed capital through the purchase of provincial debentures, although such an investment might not be in the best interests of the shareholder of the corporation.

It is all very well for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) to cite the provisions of this bill which enable the government to dispose of up to 90 per cent of the shares in the corporation, thereby reducing its participation to as little as 10 per cent. The fact of the matter is that this situation will be a long time coming, if ever. Even if it should come about, the government has provided further against its loss of effective control over the corporation by limiting the ownership of any other investor to 3 per cent of the share capital of the company, which at its maximum capitalization of $2 billion, represents an upper limit of $60 million of participation by any single company or individual.

In a normal public company, a shareholder who is dissatisfied with the management of the company is free to seek voting support for his position amongst other shareholders, but this will not be the case for an investor in Canada Development Corporation. Shareholders are specifically forbidden to vote in concert to express their disapproval with the corporation's policies or management. I cannot imagine why a sophisticated, large investor, of the type which the corporation will need to attract if it is to operate as envisaged by the government, would ever consent to placing his interests in such an unfavourable position when there are so many other excellent and truly democratic companies in which he can place his assets. I submit that the government has simply failed to look at this aspect of the Canada Development Corporation's operations realistically. While I can understand some of the reasoning behind the government's position on this particular question, I believe it merely serves to confirm the inherent difficulties of attempting to set up a huge conglomerate that will be responsible at the one and same time to political interests represented by governmental participation in it and private interests seeking the maximum return on their investment regardless of whether this comes from ventures with a high content of national interest.

Having seen and studied various socialistic economies, I remain an adherent of the free enterprise system. When a government enters a major area of economic activity, it seems always to do so on a far more costly basis than when the matter is left to private enterprise.

Let us consider the costs and quality of medical care in Canada, particularly since the introduction of a national medicare system. Can anyone really state seriously that the quality of medical care has risen proportionately—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I have been following the hon. member's remarks very carefully. He is making an important contribution to the debate, but I suggest with respect that he may be ranging a bit wide of the subject. The House has before it for consideration the first group of motions. It seems to me that the question with which these motions deal is the question of public corporations, such as Crown corporations, and corporations in which there would be private investment. With respect, I think the hon. member should not range into medicare and other matters.

Mr. Ritchie: I just wanted to point out that the high cost of medicare is an example of the cost of the type of large bureaucracy which this bill could well set up, Mr. Speaker. On the subject of administrative costs, I think we can easily imagine the size and type of administrative empire that will quickly spring from the existence of the Canada Development Corporation. If this amendment is passed, it will make this a completely government dominated corporation. It will be the largest single conglomerate in Canada, even before it becomes fully capitalized. When one sees the size of departments of government in Ottawa which operate on much smaller budgets, one cannot but shudder to think of the army of economists, research assistants, investment advisers and portfolio managers, policy developers, department heads, secretaries, typists, clerks and others who will be assembled to operate the levers and wheels of such a behemoth.

The Canada Development Corporation, Mr. Speaker, represents to me the continuance of the pattern of the present government of extending its powers further and further into the private economic sector of our society. The present bill is its boldest approach yet in this direction, and many important members of the private sector are understandably alarmed over its implications. There are, in my view, other places than the bedrooms of this country where the state does not belong. The free enterprise system is one of the most important ones.

I believe it is the duty of the government to provide a fiscal and monetary climate which enables and encourages orderly and vigorous growth in our society. I do not believe that the government, including its agents, has any role to perform in the day-to-day management or operation of the private sector of the economy. Such a path is the path to state ownership of the means of production and distribution, and that concept of government is not acceptable to the Canadian people. I will vote against this amendment and I also intend to vote against this bill at third reading.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on motion No. 1 in the name of the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman). As hon. members will recall, it was agreed earlier today that the question will be put on the first motion. The Chair will put the question only on that motion at this time pursuant to that order. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say, yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say, nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11) the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

In accordance with the order made earlier today the Chair will now put motions 3, 4 and 5. First, we shall take motion No. 3.

The hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) moves:

That Bill C-219, An Act to establish the Canada Development Corporation, be amended by deleting from Clause 6 lines 34 to 36 and substituting the following:

"and shall be carried out in the best interests of the people of Canada."

Next we will take motion No. 4. The hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) moves:

That Bill C-219, An Act to establish the Canada Development Corporation, be amended by deleting paragraph (b) of subclause 2 of Clause 6.

Lastly, we shall take motion No. 5. The hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) moves:

That Bill C-219, An Act to establish the Canada Development Corporation, be amended by substituting in Clause 7(1) paragraphs (d), (e) and (f) the words "Canadian nation" for the word "company" in lines 9, 19 and 23 on page 5.

[Mr. Ritchie.]

If hon. members are in agreement, it seems to the Chair that the three motions ought to be amended. I think the record ought to show that Motion No. 3 was moved by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), for the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman), and seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). With respect to Motion No. 4, the record should be amended to show that the hon. member for York South moved the motion for the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) and that it was seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. With respect to Motion No. 5, the record should show that the motion was moved by the hon. member for York South for the hon. member for Waterloo and that it was seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to move these motions on behalf of the hon. members whose names are on the order paper, partly because I was unable to participate in the debate on the second reading of the bill and partly because we, in our party, consider the issue now before the House as of extreme importance. This bill might have been one of the most important bills that this House has considered in over 100 years. Instead, in our view we have been presented with a bill which is a shameful distortion of an important and imaginative idea.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lewis: It is a further sellout to private enterprise in this country and will destroy the possibility of control of the Canadian economy being regained not only by Canadian investors but by the Canadian people. My party made the suggestion for a Canada Development Fund. The idea was later developed into the Canada Development Corporation. The suggestion was first made and included in our first program at our founding in 1961. We made the suggestion because we felt that Canada was faced with four fateful and related problems. We were faced, first, with overwhelming foreign ownership and control of our economy, a problem that had to be solved. We were faced, second, with an unequal development of our economy across the country. We knew that there were areas in Canada which did not keep economic pace with the average development in this country. They were areas such as the Atlantic provinces, major sections of Quebec, parts of Ontario and, indeed, parts of other regions in this country. In a very real sense, in a sense that is true for countries in Africa and elsewhere, regions of this country are underdeveloped in relation to the rest of this country, with very serious consequences for the standard of living and well-being of people living in the Atlantic provinces, in parts of Quebec and in other underdeveloped parts of Canada.

We were faced, thirdly, with an economic problem in this country arising out of the fact that the foreign ownership of our manufacturing industry produced in Canada a branch plant manufacturing industry which was relatively inefficient, which produced duplication and which was not specialized, as a manufacturing industry ought to be in a relatively small country like ours.

We were faced in this country, fourth, with the fact that Canada was almost entirely dependent on multi-national corporations for its research and development, the result being that the development in our own country of technology could not take place without reliance on General Electric or General Motors or any of the dozens of large, multi-national corporations that now control this country's economy. We faced these four major problems among many others. They were to do with the foreign ownership of our economy, the unequal development of the economy in Canada, the inefficient branch plant manufacturing industry and the lack of research and development in this country. We therefore faced the economic and, eventually, the political dependence of Canada on countries like the United States and, eventually perhaps, even Japan, those being the countries from which these multi-national corporations came. We are faced at this time in western social history with a new phenomenon, Mr. Speaker, that of the multi-national corporation which straddles the world, which literally straddles the globe and which has developed new techniques.

The multi-national corporation does not use methods as crude as were used by the old style imperialism, under which you took over a country physically and militarily. They take over a country now in a much more efficient and refined way. They do not bother taking over a nation physically; they merely take over the means by which the nation lives, knowing perfectly well that if you take over the means by which a nation lives you exercise effective control over the life of that nation. This is what the multi-national corporation means in the 1970's as it meant in the 1960's. It is a dangerous thing for the fate of freedom and the world.

I recently visited the city of Helsinski, Finland, where I attended the conference of the Council of the Socialist International, in which the NDP is represented. One major matter concerned the leaders present, including the chancellor of Germany, the chancellor of Austria, the prime minister of Sweden, the prime minister of Norway, the prime minister of Israel and men and women who were either in government, had just been in government or expected to be in government in a very short time. The major concern of these men and women from Europe, Asia and Africa was the evil result of increasing control of the world economy by multi-national corporations, centred mainly in the United States, but also centred in Japan, West Germany and in other highly developed industrial countries.

Canada, which is right beside the powerful United States of America and whose economy is to a large extent controlled by that economic giant, has a very serious problem to overcome. It must reduce and, if possible, eliminate or at least control foreign ownership and foreign domination of the economy of this country. This was one of the major purposes we saw in the Canada Development Corporation. We believe very strongly that the time is very short for Canada to become independent economically and, therefore, fully independent politically. No Canadian, regardless of what party he belongs to, can help but be seriously distressed at the attitude of this government and the ministers of this government if his mind, eyes and ears are open.

It is sometimes said that the Americans have taken over Canada. I have stated across this country and I want it on record in Hansard that I do not blame the Americans. For a century, Canadian business and political leaders have gone to the United States and begged the Americans to come into Canada and take over our resources. They pleaded with them to come and build manufacturing plants in our country. They told them, with that lack of self-respect and self-reliance which is typical of the continentalists and disastrous for this country, that we not only want and need them, but they are indispensible to us. This is what was said to the Americans. Because the governments of this country were not willing to make profits for the Canadian people, nor did the business men in this country have that objective, we were taken over in very large measure.

We said in 1961, and we have stated ever since, that there is only one way of making certain that we gain more control of the economic destiny of this country; that is to set up a mammoth, massive development fund under the control and management of government and Parliament. The funds would come from the undistributed profits and retained earnings of all financial and other large corporations in this country. By law, they would be required to invest a large proportion of their undistributed profits, retained earnings and reserves in this Canadian development entity for the development of this country. Instead government has produced this puny bill which we are now discussing and which is a distortion of a good idea. It has produced this abortion after seven years of gestation. I remind hon. members that Walter Gordon promised us the Canada Development Corporation in 1963. After seven years, this government has produced this stillborn, meaningless, mindless kind of legislation that has no place in our society, cannot accomplish anything.

What is it expected to do? It is to be a private corporation, not a Crown corporation or a public corporation. It is to have exactly the same objectives as any other private enterprise, namely making of profits. This will be its major consideration and motivation. It is to have exactly the same objective as every other private corporation in Canada with respect to a return to its shareholders. Only 7 per cent of Canadians have any money to invest in a corporation. The other 93 per cent are not investors. This is another bill which serves the interests of the private corporation and the interests of, at most, 7 per cent of Canadians who have enough money to make an investment.

What is the purpose of this bill? It is not going to repatriate any part of our economy. It is not going to deal with investment in the undeveloped parts of this country. It will not deal with rationalizing, specializing of manufacturing industries so that we can become a much greater force in the markets of the world than at the present time. It is not going to make funds available for research and development. Why in heavens name is it on the order paper except for the government to seek to fool the Canadian people into thinking that the government is doing something about Canadian ownership which, in fact, it is not doing? There is no other explanation for this deformed, mental aberration which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) has produced on behalf of this government. It will do nothing except create another agency to help the private corporations which, God knows, need no help from this government or, if they do, receive enough help.

Some time ago I calculated the grants that are made to the private corporations of Canada out of the public treasury through the various programs. Most of these corporations are foreign owned. I calculated that over $1 billion a year of Canadian taxpayers money is paid to these large, poverty stricken corporations which we constantly help with incentive grants, capital grants, research grants, development grants and every other kind of grant imaginable. The government is putting $250 million into this agency for the purpose of giving more assistance to the large corporations, most of them foreign owned, which already control and in most cases choke the independence of Canada on the economic front.

Mr. Boulanger: What did they do for the country?

Mr. Lewis: They do not do anything that the country could not have done for itself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: There is a myth which the Liberals and Conservative accept, that is that Canada needs foreign investment. The hon. member who made the interjection has not made a statistical computation. If the Minister of Finance, who knows better, were honest with Parliament and the people of Canada, he would tell us the truth. In the past few years, we have had a net loss as a result of foreign investment in this country. We shipped out of this country in profits, interest, management fees and licence fees more than is invested in direct investment from outside of this country. It is true that the foreign owned corporations are able to expand their control and they do, but they do that with Canadian money, not foreign money.

• (2:40 p.m.)

Recently, the Ryerson Press was taken over by an American firm. We lost it. Where did the capital come from to take over this Canadian company? It was not from New York or Chicago, but the money markets of Canada. Every dollar borrowed was borrowed on the Canadian money market to enable Ryerson to become a publishing house controlled by a large United States publishing firm. This is what has been happening in Canada. This nonsense about our needing foreign investment is a myth, a story which is told across this country by people who know better and which is innocently spread by people in this country who ought to know better. We do not need foreign investment any more. We generate the largest proportions of savings of any other western industrial nation. If those savings, and the investments which could be made with them, were channelled in the right direction and used in accordance with a public plan for the welfare of the Canadian people this terrible dominance of foreign capital would disappear in the course of a very few years. If at any time we were to require additional money from outside we should pass laws insisting that this money come in as loan capital, not as equity capital.

I would remind members of this House that Canada is the only western nation which has permitted foreign investment without limit, without rules, without permit. Every country in Europe, and even countries in Asia like Japan, have established rules with regard to foreign investment which require the investor to obtain a licence or a permit. We have instituted some rules in the fields of banking and communications but, generally speaking, we have permitted foreign investment to go on in the absence of any rules or permit requirement. The amendments I have the honour to move on behalf of my hon. friends from Waterloo and Regina East go to the heart of this legislation. We are, basically, advancing a proposition that this bill, poor though it is, that this corporation, amorphous though it is, be made to serve the interests of the Canadian people and not the interests of the shareholders and the profit-makers of this country. This, in essence, is what these amendments propose. I suppose the plea which we are making will go unheeded but I warn the government that recent events, electoral if you like, in Brant and elsewhere, recent indications in Gallup polls, show that a much greater awareness exists on the part of the Canadian people as to the economic situation of this country and a much greater determination to take control of our economic destiny.

I say to hon. members of the Conservative party from the west that there is no part of this country, west, east or centre, in which there are not thousands of Canadians growing daily more distressed by the continuing exploitation of this country by foreign-controlled interests. This is the first issue which the CDC should have been able to confront. But it will have no power to do anything with regard to repatriating any part of Canada's economy. The natural resources of this country will continue to be owned by foreign corporations, and those resources will continue to be shipped out in a raw or semi-raw state; and with that kind of export we export jobs, leaving the Atlantic provinces and parts of the west and northern Ontario with communities which are not viable, which cannot thrive. And when the non-renewable resources have been exhausted, when they have been taken out of the ground and shipped all over the world, the communities concerned become ghost towns. I have seen such places all over the eastern provinces and elsewhere in my travels across the country.

What will this corporation do to lessen the economic inequality in this country? Again, nothing. One of the reasons we proposed a Canada development fund in 1961 was our conviction, and it has proven more accurate every day, that the under-developed parts of Canada will not witness the economic development they require on a basis which will serve the interests of the communities affected except the federal government be ready to invest directly in those areas and build industries which will be related to the lives of those communities, to the skills possessed by the people of those communities, to the welfare of those communities generally rather than, primarily, to making profits for shareholders. We have not done that for more than a hundred years. For over 100 years, and in 1971, we have been trying to attract private corporations, most of them foreign, to these under-developed areas by handing out carrots in the form of tax incentives, incentive grants, job grants, capital grants and so on. I repeat what I have said on the floor of the House on previous occasions: five, ten or twenty years from now we shall see a Canada just as unequal as it is today; we shall find the Atlantic provinces and parts of Quebec and Ontario and the West just as poverty-stricken as they are now, their citizens living in conditions as unfair as they are today, unless during the next decade or so we have the imagination and the courage to stop this candy-giving to private corporations, to stop this carrot-attraction of private corporations who in any case, will not stay unless they can make profits. Instead, there must be a plan for the development of the Atlantic provinces in particular, as well as of other parts of Canada, based on funds made available through public investment and subject to public control.

It was our notion that the Canada Development Corporation would join private enterprise, not replace it, in developing industries in the Atlantic provinces and other parts of the country; that it would be empowered to make direct investment in those areas and bring about a real change in the lives of the people in the Atlantic provinces and elsewhere. But this bill will do nothing to make such things possible. The corporation is not equipped to do anything about them. It is not intended to do anything about them.

The third objective we had in suggesting a development fund was to provide a means of assisting manufacturing industries to introduce specialization so that we could really become an effective country in certain areas in the export world. No power is given to the corporation under this b ll to do anything to help bring about the necessary rationalization. There is no intention to give it such power. If we are to rationalize the manufacturing industry, someone must have the power to step on the toes of foreign-owned corporations, the power to say some plain words to private enterprise, the power, the authority and the w ll to act on behalf of the people of Canada without kow-towing every day of the year to the corporate elite.

No modern economy can develop satisfactorily an area such as Northern Ontario, for example, along the lines with which we have become familiar in the past.

To use Northern Ontario as an example, large deposits of natural resources have been found there and still others w.ll be found in the future. The mining, the extraction, ought to be the least of the activities. One contemplates at once the development of smelting and refining of the ores, and then comes the development of manufacturing industries based on the natural resources of the locality. No country can develop that kind of community unless it has control of research and development within its borders and the kind of technological know-how and potential that Canada does not have except in the hands of the multinational corporations that control our economy. We will never be able to deal with these communities in Canada in a way that will make them viable communities, or be able to build secondary or even tertiary industry and develop the tourist industry in the Atlantic provinces, in Ontario, in eastern and northern Quebec and right across the country, unless this know-how is under our control instead of the control of foreign corporations.

This bill enables the Canada Development Corporation to do absolutely nothing in th's field. As the hon. member for Waterloo and other members who have taken part in the debate on this bill have indicated, we do not understand why the minister has brought the bill forward. I have often said, and I repeat, that the most important characteristic of the Trudeau government is a kind of technocratic neatness. Since this measure was mentioned in the throne speech in 1963 and has been repeated in every succeeding throne speech, this is why the government felt obliged to bring in a measure of some sort so as to make sure that the graph on the wall could show an x against this item indicating it had been been dealt with.

What other explanation is there for this misadventure entered into by the Minister of Finance and which this Parliament and the people of Canada are contemplating at this time? In all fairness, I see not one single objective that this bill can fulfil that private enterprise has not fulfilled, and has fulfilled well from its point of view but fulfilled badly from the point of view of the welfare of Canadians. This corporation will do exactly the same thing that private enterprise in this country has done for over 100 years. As I said earlier, the government is fooling the Canadian people into believing it is doing something to enable it to take control of Canada's economy.

The parliamentary secretary has been extremely kind to and co-operative with me this afternoon. May I return the kindness and co-operation by telling him before he speaks in the debate that if he repeats what the Minister of Finance said, that this bill would enable us to control our own economy, then he will be just as misleading and his argument will be just as fallacious as was the minister's. Because the corporation created by this bill will do nothing of the sort. It will not take us one single, solitary step toward controlling our own economy. This bill is an attempt to fool the Canadian people into believing that something is being done about foreign control of the Canadian economy, and this is a shameful thing to do with what might have been an important instrument of government and national policy.

The only other reason I can think of for this bill being brought forward is that the government is determined that if there are areas where private enterprise might not be as ready to enter because profits will not be large enough, the taxpayers of Canada will make enough funds available so as to guarantee profits for those private enterprises which this corporation will assist. This is a shameful betrayal of the interests of the Canadian taxpayer.

I suggest to the members of this House, without making any apology for doing so, that it is this kind of legislation that shows the real difference between our party and other parties in this House. To people who shout at me: "You want a socialist Canada", my answer is that indeed I do; I want a democratic socialist Canada. If they think that by saying that to me I am going to be frightened and run away, let me say that the only reason for the existence of the New Democratic Party is that it is trying to persuade the Canadian people—and more and more is doing so—that they cannot have the kind of humane and decent society to which they are entitled to or make the kind of humane and decent contributions to the welfare of hungry peoples in the world that a rich country like Canada ought to make, unless our economy is based on foundations different from the present ones.

Our economy must be planned in the interests of the welfare of all Canadians, indeed the welfare of the whole world. We must realize that the natural resources that we are fortunate enough to have in such abundance in this country belong not only to one province but to the people of Canada; indeed, they belong not only to Canada but in some respects belong to the people of the world, and will enable us to build a peace based on genuine economic co-operation and social progress.

I make no apology for saying that we saw an instrument such as this as a Canada development fund into which large amounts of money were put by the requirement of law by large corporations out of their reserves. We saw an instrument such as this controlled and managed by Parliament through its necessary agencies. We saw an instrument such as this as an essential part of the planning machinery of this country, as an essential part of repatriating our economy, as an essential part of developing the underdeveloped areas of Canada. We are heartbroken and angry beyond words with this government for the shameful way it has done everything domestically since the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) came to power. It has again destroyed an instrument that might have been of immense good to the people of this country and has again shown its complete reliance on a partnership with the most selfish interests that exist in Canada, indeed in the world.

[Translation]

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. Lewis: Of course.

Mr. Cyr: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member just stated that he wished a socialist democratic Canada, for the well-being of the people. Would he say if he would invest part of his savings in the Canada Development Corporation in order to insure the well-being of Canadians?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I did not understand everything the hon. member said.

Mr. Cyr: Mr. Speaker, I asked if the hon. member would invest part of his savings in the Canada Development Corporation in order to insure the well-being of Canadians?

Mr. Prosper Boulanger (Mercier): Why don't you put in some of your own money?

Mr. Lewis: Yes, yes, I understand

Mr. Speaker, the answer is simple. If the investments of either a corporation or an individual have made profit their sole objective, then such investments will not be in the interest of the Canadian population.

Any investment that is aimed at assuring the welfare of the Canadian people is the kind of investment that has as its objective the production of consumer goods required by the people, such as housing units, for instance, where profit could be one but not the prime objective.

That is my answer. I see no use in investing money as the hon. member has suggested, merely because we know it is private economy, as we have known for years, that has caused and is still causing unemployment, housing shortage, poverty and disparities all over Canada, and I do not want this type of society in my country.

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I shall say a few words about the motion brought forward by New Democratic Party members and also about the projected corporation. We have a great deal to say in this respect, Mr. Speaker.

I believe myself duty bound, before broaching the matter, to say that the corporation will not perform the services anticipated. Canadian citizens do not need such a corporation for the development of their economy.

The aid of the corporation, Mr. Speaker, is to increase production, to organize major industries for the purpose of constantly increasing production. We are now witnessing the effects of the problem. We have no production problem and the Canada Development Corporation will assist only companies having no financial problems or able to find elsewhere the capital they require. In fact, the government will assist firmly established and viable companies, or it will create new corporations with an enormous amount of capital which will be supplied by Canadian people who are already in need of it.

Earlier, the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) said that only 20 per cent of the people could save money. If we are to establish this big corporation, we are going to take the savings of those who were able to put money aside, and we will take money from small industries which need it. In fact, this will be the end of small firms, because big concerns are going to control everything. They will be involved in every aspect of production because of their huge amount of capital and they will destroy small and average concerns.

Mr. Speaker, we are now witnessing the collapse of the small and the medium-sized companies. Among the latter, some are no longer able to survive, because they have too many debts, they are over-taxed and they are not allowed to sell shares to finance themselves. They must borrow needed capital and those loans must be paid back, at which time they are said to be profits. So, they have to pay taxes on reimbursements, contrary to the big corporation which never has any reimbursements to make. The big corporation will win out in competition with the small company because it will have every facility to obtain capital, by taking it away from the small companies already in need of it.

I am not dead against the establishment by the government of this corporation which should be an agency with new capital to be used only for new ventures. For the good of the people these new investments should be made available to institutions at administrative costs. This would bring prices down and we would have corporations able to produce and compete with any other country in the world. However, these big corporations should only produce goods that small companies cannot produce, because it is too hard for them. There would then be one or more different corporations, and all current capital or savings would be left to the small and medium enterprises.

The federal and provincial governments, or at least several of them, have set up similar corporations that wheedle what little savings there are, thus depriving those who need that money. That is why we are witnessing the disappearance of small and medium industries: they cannot find the capital they need.

Mr. Speaker, the citizens prefer buying shares in government organizations rather than private industry, because they have more guarantees. Indeed, the state centralizes, takes over control, and causes the small industry to disappear, although it too has the right to exist.

Since the corporation will be used to draw all existing capital and take it away from small concerns, we will have to vote against the creation of that huge state corporation which will gain control, even if it is said that it will finance private enterprise or help firms already in existence. However, the companies which the government wishes to assist have the means to find capital through the issuance of shares and bonds, while small concerns are unable to get listed on the Stock Exchange.

In the province of Quebec for instance, since the Bombardier Company has become powerful enough to become a member of the Stock Exchange, its problems are over as it can do anything. No company of that kind experiences financial problems. Therefore why set up corporations to finance such businesses that have no financial problems? People who really want to help others help those who are in need not those who are well off.

Small businesses are the ones in need. To be logical, they are the ones the government should help. It should guarantee to those businesses the purchase or sale of their production. If the government did that, we would get all the necessary production out of the small and medium-sized businesses.

Now there is a lack of balance, jugglings, bankruptcies of all kinds, small and medium-sized businesses are vanishing because they have to deal with the victims of a systeb they are unable to pay.

A good number of citizens are unable to pay. So they buy without paying and they go bankrupt. Therefore industry has to put up with all those losses. It is a victim of the system.

The government must give industrialists the guarantee that there will not be any more victims of that kind, it must guarantee the pay the same way it guarantees exports, which would enable the industries to operate. Should production be needed, the only thing to do would be to specify the kind of products we want as the industry is organized.

We have all the technology we need to enable those businesses to operate and the state is there also to provide that technology. If we have too little of it in Canada, we have as neighbours the United States, which have at their disposal numerous technical resources on which we can rely at any time.

If we are short of it, we can import technical capital from the United States, to help us develop our industries. But we are not short of it, for we have at hand all the products we need in Canada. We have all the engineers, technological data, labour force and means of transportation that we need. We are only short of capital funds and we should avoid making them available to large centralized industries.

Such centralization leads to socialism and to the elimination of small businesses. None of our large state undertakings are able to produce at the same cost as private enterprise. Experience teaches us that public enterprise costs much more than private enterprise, since people do not assume the same responsibilities in one or the other.

In private enterprise, people take their responsibilities more seriously, whereas, in public enterprise, they could not care less. And when repairs call for shut-downs, the doors are simply shut down until completion, which means that production suffers and the cost of the products increases. I do not believe that the minister can convince us that public enterprise is in a position to manufacture products at a cost as low as that achieved by private enterprise.

The large private firm can do better than its public counterpart. There are small and large private firms and we should—and this must be sacred—first, help the small firm by all means available. If the funds available for the establishment of large corporations designed to increase production were allocated to the private sector, the results would be ten times better. It has been said that this will not be a state enterprise but a private firm; we shall begin by helping corporations which can fend for themselves and which need no help to prosper. After that, we will look after state enterprises because, owing to taxes and levies, no private firm can succeed in reimbursing the taxed capital and paying for the fringe benefits which it must provide to its employees.

The small enterprise, the small manufacturer is facing all the conomical problems. It has to finance all the plans and programs which the government is forever coming up with.

I am pleading in the name of the small enterprise which has a right to exist. It should enjoy all possible consideration from the state before it can mesh with larger socialist organizations and large centralized enterprises. We must decentralize and guarantee to the small firm the outlets and the capital required. We will thus get better results than these giant corporations which will finally eat up the small ones.

[English]

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Canada Development Corporation has received considerable public attention over the years and particularly concentrated attention in recent months. The government has listened closely to the discussion and has prepared a bill which reflects this informed deliberation.

The concept of the bill was discussed informally as long ago as 1963. The bill before us received first reading in this House on January 25 and second reading on March 3 after a very thorough and comprehensive debate. The public was then invited to submit briefs to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. The committee received numerous briefs and letters and heard a number of witnesses including the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and representatives of the Investment Dealers' Association of Canada, the Canada Chamber of Commerce and the Canadian Bar Association, as well as several private individuals.

There is no question that there is broad public support for the Canada Development Corporation. Equally, there is no question that almost everyone has his own personal vision of the Canada Development Corporation. As the amendments before us and the speeches supporting them from the NDP indicate, that party has quite a different vision of the Canada Development Corporation from that of the government. I might say that the official opposition appears to have no vision of it at all, the Social Credit party, with its own firm belief in certain cures for all economic ills, has a view of its functions that do not accord with those of the government.

Constructive suggestions were received in the briefs and made by the witnesses appearing before the committee, and further comments were received directly by the minister. Government officials have discussed the bill with concerned persons including representatives of the stock exchanges. The government was able to take all these views into account in supporting amendments made at the committee stage. I shall return to these in a few moments. Notwithstanding all the public discussion there are still some widely held misconceptions about the CDC, misconceptions obviously shared by hon. members opposite. I would like to restate briefly the government's position on a few of the major issues in the hope of clearing up some of these m sconceptions.

It has been suggested that the objects of the corporation are too vague and that its board of directors will lack direction. Hon. members will appreciate that the CDC as proposed in the bill will be a statutory corporation and that its objects can be changed only by act of Parliament. The CDC will operate, with few and necessary exceptions, under the Canada Corporations Act and will be competing with other corporations in the private sector. The objects of the CDC are deliberately broad. Restrictive terms would hamper the CDC's mandate to fulfil its purpose as set out in the bill. The directors must be free to establish new policies to meet new situations. In this respect the CDC will be on all fours with other successful Canadian corporations.

Some critics of the bill question its timing. They say the CDC should operate within a framework of defined government policies on industrial development and foreign ownership, and should not be created until such policies are defined. The government is not presently planning to make an over-all, embracing statement on industrial policy.

Existing government programs establish the government's interest in developing, among other things, a strong manufacturing sector, a distinct Canadian communications industry, and in encouraging resource development, particularly in remote regions of Canada. These programs provide ample definition of our industrial policy. I expect that the government's statement on foreign ownership will be issued before the CDC is operational. However, the CDC's Canadian orientation is quite clear from the bill itself.

The primary role of the corporation will be to help shape and secure the future rather than to recover the past. In the words of the bill, the corporation will "help develop and maintain strong Canadian controlled and managed corporations in the private sector..." The corporation will take into account this objective in considering its various investment opportunities. Whatever our foreign ownership policy may be, the CDC will not be a buyer of last resort. The CDC is a positive step in promoting a greater Canadian presence in industry by pooling capital and entrepreneurial skill, and by encouraging the rationalization of Canadian industry.

Much has been said in and out of Parliament about the danger of conflicts between the national interest and profitability. Others seem to feel that the two are irreconcilable. The government rejects that contention. It is said that the board will tend to be influenced by the former at the expense of the latter, by national interest at the expense of profitability. As a statutory corporation, the directors of the CDC are obliged to pursue the objects of the corporation which, as the bill states, "shall be carried out in anticipation of profit and in the best interests of the shareholders as a whole."

A dynamic private sector in which there is a greater Canadian participation is clearly in the national interest.

Through the CDC, Canadian entrepreneurs, investors and managers may significantly influence the future development of Canada for their benefit and the benefit of all Canadians. I was indeed gratified to have the confirmation of the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) that in fact a great deal of Canadian capital exists and is waiting for good investment opportunities. The CDC will surely be one of those.

Some critics of the CDC concept believe that any government participation in the corporation will be synonymous with interference in its operation. The best protection against such interference is a strong and independent board of directors chosen from the private sector. The bill explicitly contemplates their independence. I am confident that as soon as the CDC is incorporated a strong board will be readily formed and will assert its independence.

Initially, Mr. Speaker, the government will be the sole shareholder, and it will always be the largest single shareholder. Because of the significant role that the corporation has been given by its purposes and objects, the government will want to show a continuing interest in it and it is expected that the government will always want to hold at least 10 per cent of the voting shares. It is also likely that the government will always have some elected or appointed directors on the board. Thus, it will always be in a position to exercise the degree of influence on the over-all policies of the corporation appropriate to its shareholding. However, to underscore the importance that the government attaches to achieving the maximum possible degree of ownership of the CDC by the Canadian public, the corporation will have the right to reduce the government's holding of voting shares down to 10 per cent.

As I mentioned previously, the government recognized the merit of suggestions brought forward at the committee hearings and through other channels and certain amendments were introduced during the committee's clause by clause study of the bill. For example, clause 16 of the bill, which deals with eligibility and declaration requirements of shareholders to ensure that voting shares would be held only by Canadian citizens or residents and that the shares would be widely distributed, was amended to privide greater ease of sale and transfer of shares among the public. The Canadian Chamber of Commerce and the Investment Dealers' Association of Canada in their briefs called attention to the need to ensure that these shares would be readily traded.

Legislation now before the House in Bill C-193, an act to amend the Northern Canada Power Commission Act, proposes that the commission's rate structure should only produce a revenue which is sufficient to meet expenses and maintain a contingency reserve fund. The commission will, therefore, not have a profit orientation and will not be a suitable investment for the CDC. Reference to the Northern Canada Power Commission has therefore been deleted from clause 39 of the bill.

Paragraph 2 of schedule II of the bill was revised to provide for quarterly net asset valuation rather than daily valuation as originally proposed. It had been pointed out that daily asset valuation would be an unnecessarily onerous task for the corporation. On the other hand, quarterly valuation of the corporation's assets is in keeping with good disclosure practice. Other amendments moved in committee tidied up clauses to help ensure their clarity, and yet others take into account amendments to the Canada Corporations Act which came into effect on March 31. The government appreciates the effort and concern that went into the preparation of the briefs submitted to the committee, as well as the contribution of the committee members in improving the bill.

Reference was made in the debate today to institutions in other countries which some hon. members deem to be parallel to the CDC. Just as every Canadian and certainly every Canadian political party has its own vision or lack of vision, as the case may be, in respect of the CDC, so every country has its own particular needs in its own financial institutions. One that was mentioned was the Italian body, the Institute for Industrial Reconstruction. That was a body created to restore bank liquidity. Italian industry had been heavily financed by bank loans, and when the industrial recession of the mid-1920s hit Europe bank liquidity was badly impaired and accordingly the Italian government constituted the Institute for Industrial Reconstruction, which really performed the functions of long-term lending institutions that were lacking in Italy and that had hitherto been performed by the commercial banks.

Similarly, in Japan the origin of the Japan Development Bank lies in the reconstruction period immediately after the last war when long-term credit was needed to rebuild heavy industry in that country. Today, the Japanese Development Bank still concentrates in the area of heavy industrial development and does not perform a function parallel to that conceived for the CDC. Another one mentioned in the debate was the Australian Industrial Development Corporation. Again, the need for that institution was peculiar to Australia. There was no long-term debt money available in Australia commensurate with the needs of Australian industry and the institution was created specifically to go out of Australia, with government credit, and borrow money that might be available for investment in Australian industry. Foreign debt capital just was not coming into Australia, again not comparable with the Canadian situation.

In the case of the General Investment Corporation of Quebec, which has been cited by members of the official opposition as an example of why the CDC should not be proceeded with, and on the other hand the objectives of which have been cited by members of the Social Credit party as those which the CDC should pursue, we had a situation where investments were made by that corporation for what were regarded as national or social priorities in the province of Quebec. The experience of that institution is one of the reasons why the Canada Development Corporation will be placed in the hands of a very independent board of directors, because when social or political objectives intervene in business decisions, business judgment suffers.

Canada Development Corporation

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, the Canada Development Corporation will provide a unique, important, major new financial institution in Canada. The need for it is recognized by most Canadians, the government is confident that the concept is right and that the kind of people necessary to make it work will be very readily available just as soon as Parliament creates the corporation.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I listened with considerable interest to the parliamentary secretary as he spoke about development organizations in other countries. There is one point on which I agree with the parliamentary secretary, that every country has unique problems and therefore tends to develop corporations to take those problems into account. No one suggests for a moment that the problems of Australia, South Africa or Mexico are the problems of Canada. If we look at other development corporations we find that in some ways they were organized to deal effectively with the problems in their particular countries.

Our criticism of this legislation is that the Canada Development Corporation is not designed to take into account the problems of Canada. We are not saying that the CDC should be organized like the others; we are saying that in fact it will not deal adequately with the problems which exist in Canada. The only problem it would seem to deal with—the parliamentary secretary referred to this—relates to the fact that savings will be available for investment opportunities and the government will satisfy the desire of Canadian investors to have a place in which to put their money. It would seem that the government is going to take the corporations which are now Crown corporations, owned by the people of Canada, and give them to the CDC to satisfy this investment urge. This is a pretty shoddy kind of objective for a development corporation. One would think that is the only problem facing Canada. If it were, perhaps the CDC would make some sense.

The greatest problem facing this country, as far as investment and development are concerned, is the high proportion of foreign ownership. Yet the terms of reference of the CDC say it is not there to buy back control of Canadian companies or to deal with the problems of foreign ownership which the government says it will try to deal with in some other way. So it would appear that the CDC is not set up to deal with the problems we face.

Another problem is that of industrial inefficiency. I see the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) turning a rather baleful but, as always, friendly eye in my direction as if he wonders what I am going to say next. The minister knows as well as I do that we have one of the most inefficient industrial structures in the world. We have infinitely more capital at the disposal of our workers, but we are 30 per cent less efficient than the United States. The inefficiency arises, not because Canadians do not work as hard or because there are not enough brains here but from what is essentially a bad industrial structure through less specialized plants. The branch plant approach of the Canadian economy, with tariffs and the desire of American international corporations to locate here, has forced upon us an industrial structure that is not suitable to our economy nor our population.

In many speeches both inside and outside this House the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has pointed out the difficulties facing Canada in terms of rationalization of the chemical industry, the rubber industry, the white goods industry and many others. These are industries with heavy investment from foreign corporations; almost every one is characterized by foreign ownership. That is one of the great problems that we have in Canada.

Mr. Pepin: Not necessarily.

Mr. Saltsman: No, not necessarily; but I will come to that later. The point is that with the exception of the resource-based industries—which is a horse of another colour—most of the industries characterized by this inefficiency are essentially foreign-owned. If we believe that this is a problem, and I think the minister admits that it is, how are we to correct it?

One statement made in connection with the CDC is that when it is set up it will be in the business of forming new companies either through mergers of existing ones or starting from scratch. One of the few successes in this approach has been the British approach to rationalization because it has not attempted to get public investment participation. In order to accomplish such mergers you must have a very free hand, enormous flexibility, and not have to answer to the stock market or the investors in the corporation. If you have to answer to the profit motive, you cannot carry out your purpose.

This is an area that is crying for attention in Canada, an area which is acknowledged to be difficult by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and others. Yet the corporation set up to tackle this problem will not be able to do it unless the national interest and the profit interest coincide. There may be a situation where a merger could be put through to provide the kind of profitability called for by this bill, but it is not possible in the majority of cases. To limit the activities of the Canada Development Corporation in such a critical area is foolhardy and is an enormous disadvantage to this country.

The hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger) interjected earlier in this debate. He is not in the House now. I wish he were because I have something to say to him. I have known him for a long time and I am very fond of him. We served together on the Standing Committee on Transportation and Communications and in the course of its hearings we toured western Canada together. I have a great deal of respect for him, but he interjected in the most inane way in this debate when he asked, "What will we do without foreign ownership?" Mr. Speaker, that is typical of the thinking of people on the other side of the House—reasonable, intelligent people in some cases and I think even reasonably well-intentioned people. They have been brainwashed by their own silly philosophy and actually believe that we cannot exist without foreign capital, despite all the evidence to the contrary.

On one occasion when making a speech out west even the former Prime Minister, Mr. Pearson, said that if Canada tried to do without foreign capital, the price would be a 25 per cent to 30 per cent lower standard of living. That was absolute nonsense, but it has been adopted by the other side of the House. Where is the evidence to suggest that we cannot manage without foreign capital? The suggestion from the other side of the House that some countries which have done much better than Canada, in terms of economic growth and development, have done so with foreign capital is not true. The countries that push us into third place in terms of standard of living are characterized by an absence of foreign capital. Those countries are Sweden and Switzerland. If foreign capital is so vital to development, surely there should be evidence that large amounts of foreign capital were poured into Sweden and Switzerland in order to improve their economies. No such evidence exists.

An hon. Member: Remember, those two countries did not suffer because of the last two wars.

Mr. Saltsman: As I say, no such evidence exists. And remember, Mr. Speaker, that both those countries have far less in the way of natural resources, far less in the way of power potential and far fewer natural advantages compared with other countries.

An hon. Member: Those countries did not suffer in World War I or World War II.

Mr. Saltsman: Let us consider a country that was involved in World War I and World War II. It was certainly involved in World War II. I am speaking of Japan. Japan has fostered a most successful rise in the development of its economy by deliberately excluding foreign development.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): And by excluding foreign products.

Mr. Saltsman: And by excluding foreign products, perhaps. Development in that country is far in excess of development in this country.

What are the really efficient industries in Canada? Of which industries are we most proud? Which industries require the least amount of tariff protection? Leaving aside the resource industries for a moment, you will find that the most efficient industries in Canada are those developed either by private or by public Canadian entrepreneurship. The steel industry, which is largely Canadian-owned and remains in Canadian hands, is among the most efficient industries in the world. Our beer industry, which has remained in Canadian hands, is among the most efficient of its kind in the world.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question? The hon. member has referred in praiseworthy terms to the Japanese example. Does he feel that the kind of labour movement that has existed in Japan since the last world war is one that he is prepared to commend to Canadians and to those who support his party?

Mr. Saltsman: I do not understand the point of that question. The hon. member seemed to draw the inference that the Japanese are in some way oppressed. The Japanese economy is badly misunderstood. The level of wages in Japan is not so low when you take into account all the fringe benefits that are given to their workers. Japan has not prospered through paying its workers low wages. It may be true to say that wages in Hong Kong are low. To imply that Japan's success rests on low wages is nonsense.

The Japanese rise has come from technical excellence. They have developed some of the most efficient industrial structures in the world. They do not depend on cheap labour; that is not the basis for their growth. I am not suggesting that we adopt Sweden, Switzerland, Japan or any other country as a model. I say that you cannot automatically equate foreign investment with growth. That is what the Liberal party has tended to do. I am merely saying there is no evidence to support that argument. On the contrary, foreign investment has probably reduced our standard of living. I see hon. members shaking their heads. They are victims of the kind of mythology that is espoused by the Liberal party.

Mr. Saltsman: They find it impossible to have confidence in the Canadian people. They do not think that we can develop this country unless foreign investors do it for us. We are one of the richest countries in the world, and in a most shameful way hon. members suggest that we should say to foreign investors, "We cannot develop our industries and the resources that nature gave us. Would you please tell us how it should be done?" That is ridiculous. There never was any need for it. Perhaps some of our industries have got off the ground a little faster through being helped by foreign investment. Nevertheless, in the long run the intrusion of foreign investment in Canada has lowered our standard of living. It will destroy our economy unless we do something about it. That is what we ought to be concerned about.

Let us consider what we do well in Canada. First of all, many efficient industries in Canada are under public ownership. Let us compare these industries in Canada with their counterparts in the United States. Compare our medical services and their availability in Canada with those in the United States. There is no comparison because we are so far ahead. In hospital services we are far ahead of the United States. Provinces which have introduced no-fault insurance or publicly-owned insurance schemes are the envy of people in the United States; Americans come here and tell us that.

Let us consider the CBC. Although we criticize the CBC—and it is far from perfect—the United States wishes to set up a similar body. They are talking about a similar kind of broadcasting system because they are dissatisfied with the crassness of their commercial system. They know that the CBC is good. Look at Polymer Corporation. That is an ideal model of a Crown corporation. Originally begun in wartime to satisfy a specific need, it went on to stand on its own feet and justify its existence.

Another company that may be taken over by the CDC is the Northern Transportation company, another model of its kind. It has not raised rates for years; it provides substantial profits to the treasury and gives good service in the northern areas, service that could not be provided by others. Look at our transportation system. One of the built-in difficulties in this country stems from a relatively small population spread over vast distances. I have criticized our railways; I think a great deal is wrong with them. But when you compare our railways with those in the United States you will see there is no comparison. Ours do a better job. This applies particularly to the publicly-owned railway. Despite our criticisms, it has operated in the public interest to a far greater extent than has the CPR, and certainly to a far greater extent than have the American railways.

Air Canada is another example of which we can be proud. We took over this airline because private industry did not want it, although once we proved that a national airline could be profitable, private industry began clamouring for a piece of the cake. We do not require Canadian Pacific Airlines. There is no need for it. Air Canada is one of the finest airlines in the world. It has an outstanding record. Although this year, after a long time, it has shown a loss, the loss is insignificant compared with losses being shown by United States airlines which are in serious trouble under private ownership.

I am trying to show that many of the most efficient industries in Canada are under public ownership and those areas of endeavour have remained to a large extent under Canadian ownership. Somebody said what we need today is a C. D. Howe rather than a CDC.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Saltsman: Some of the efficiency of the steel industry can be attributed directly to C. D. Howe's insistence on its expanding and developing. Polymer Corporation stands as a tribute to his foresight and imagination. We need more of that today. I regret to say that foresight and imagination are qualities seriously lacking on the government benches. Those attributes were seen briefly in some on the government benches but are seen no longer. The hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans) had to resign from the cabinet in order to speak of some of the truths that he saw.

Earlier in the debate the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Cyr) asked my leader whether he would invest in the CDC. He put the question in a way which implied that Canadians were breathlessly waiting to invest their $5 in a corporation such as the CDC and that was the only opportunity they would have for investing. I find it difficult to understand why an intelligent man would assume that. What does he think we have been doing for 100 years? We have all been investing in Canada. Everyone of us who pays taxes invests in Canada. The corporations I described earlier are all investments in which I and millions of Canadians have participated.

It is a great joy to me, and I am sure this is true of other hon. members, to welcome students and others from my riding to this beautiful building, this magnificent House of Commons of which we are all so proud, and to say, "This is your building; it belongs to you. All these carvings belong to you. All this represents the investment of my generation and of previous generations, and your generation will continue the investment in these things." All who pay taxes and contribute through productive work make an investment in this country. We do not have to wait for the Canada Development Corporation, with its five bucks, to be reminded that there are investment opportunities in Canada. Rather than trying to distort a development corporation, we should try to induce people to invest in the most unselfish of all motives, and at least give the Canadian investor the opportunity to invest as in the past, although there has not been as much investment as I would like to have seen.

The way to do this is to ensure that the Canada Development Corporation is a Crown corporation which is answerable to Parliament and is owned by all the people of Canada. In this way, the chances we take with the Canada Development Corporation and the benefits which accrue therefrom will be for all Canadians and not just a small group.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon we have had the delightful experience of listening to the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman). Based on the last few minutes, this could be called an interlude of fairy tales on a Friday afternoon by Max Saltsman. We have heard unsubstantiated observations with regard to the performance of the Canadian economy. The hon. member for Waterloo made such statements in committee, but when we start pinning him down the statements become unglued, we do not see the same assurance and bravado.

The amendments are with regard to the objects of the corporation. The first amendment suggests the elimination of any question of "profits and in the best interest of the shareholders as a whole." I shall not try to get into the laboured reasoning of the parliamentary secretary when putting forward the view of Department of Finance officials. He said that if we are working in the best interests of the shareholders, we are working in the best interests of the nation. That is really stretching it. What we are looking for in this clause is what this company will be able to do. Its purpose is to assist in the creation of the development of business, resources, property and industries in Canada. This is a litany of pious hopes of what it might be able to do.

It reminds me of the objects of a company in a memorandum of agreement or letters of incorporation. They sound very nice. They go far beyond the operations of the particular little company that is being established. When looking at the objects of the average small corporation you think you are looking at a corporation such as MacMillan Bloedel which is one of Canada's most successful operations. As the hon. member stated, one thinks it is a corporation like the Steel Company of Canada. Many large companies have the same objects as small companies.

In this clause we have the same grandiose language. It is true that these provisions must be expressed in broad terms in order to permit the company to function in a certain way, but the operative part of clause 6 is what the hon. member for Waterloo seeks to amend. The operative part of the clause reads:

—and shall be carried out in anticipation of profit and in the best interests of the shareholders as a whole.

The hon. member seeks to eliminate that part. By its elimination one would suppose that the hon. member's argument is that it should not be run for profit, or that it could be run for a loss. This amendment suggests that "in the national interest" has the same meaning as "anticipation of profit and in the best interests of the shareholders as a whole." If I had authorship of such an act I would lay out the objects in much the same way as at present, but with some variations. I would place greater emphasis on the national interest and use the method of operation in the way that the Alberta Gas Pipeline was spawned and started. That is the sort of operation in which a development corporation should be able to participate, not in this way, having it the sole source of money. There is no public participation at the beginning. The public is not invited to come in at the appropriate stage.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I will terminate my remarks, Mr. Speaker. I will not be here next week; I will be out of town with the constitution on committee. I wish to reiterate the opposition's dislike of the amendment. We will not support it and we will not support the bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It is the understanding of the Chair that there is general agreement to allow the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) to move the second reading of and concurrence in the amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-180. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CONSUMER PACKAGING AND LABELLING ACT

PROVISIONS RESPECTING PROHIBITIONS, LABELS, STANDARDIZATION, INSPECTION, ETC.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-180, respecting the packaging, labelling, sale, importation and advertising of prepackaged and certain other products.

He said: Mr. Speaker, there has been consultation in the usual way with the hon. members for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) and Compton (Mr. Latulippe) to call the Senate amendments to the packaging and labelling act and deal with them at this time. I appreciate their courtesy in allowing this matter to come forward.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Basford: I am not sure whether hon. members want an explanation. There are two amendments, one to clause 3, to make it read very simply that subject—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Carried.

Mr. Basford: I take it that hon. members do not want an explanation and I thank them very much.

• (4:00 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. McGrath: It would be helpful if a short explanation of the two amendments were on record. I think the minister should be allowed to finish.

Mr. Basford: It will take just 60 seconds to explain them. Clause 3, which was of concern to hon. members, will now read:

Subject to subsection (2) and any regulations made under section 18, the provisions of this act which are applicable to any product apply notwithstanding any other act of the Parliament of Canada.

Clause 11 was amended to make it mandatory, as was my intention anyway, to seek the advice of at least one organization of consumers and one organization of dealers in relation to the preparation of any regulations to standardize the shapes or sizes of containers of prepackaged goods. These are the two points which concerned the committee. We have been able to propose wording which I believe deals with the objections which were raised.

Motion agreed to, amendments read the second time and concurred in.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills and private bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

THE SENATE

SUGGESTED SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE ROLE AND POSSIBLE REFORMATION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should give consideration to the appointment of a special committee of this House which shall have the power to hold hearings in various parts of Canada, take testimony and hire experts, with the following terms of reference: That it shall examine the role of the Senate within Parliament and in its general constitutional functions and report with recommendations on whether the Senate should continue as it has been and is, or whether it should be abolished (and if so, by what means) or whether some form of reformed Senate is worthwhile (and if so, what reforms).

He said: Mr. Speaker, it will come as no surprise to hon. members that I am personally of the view that the Senate plays no useful role in the political life of Canada and that it ought, therefore, to be abolished. However, in light of experience, in light of the attitude taken by both the Liberal and the Conservative parties, I recognize the complete futility of proposing a resolution or putting forward a bill which would simply call for the abolition of the Senate. It is for this reason I am proposing the establishment of a committee to look into the role of the Senate, to study what part it plays in the political life of Canada and try to arrive at conclusions. If the evidence showed that the Senate presently plays no really useful part in the life of Canada, the committee might recommend ways in which it could be changed or reformed so that it could play a useful role.

I do not believe that a committee which looked at the question objectively could reach the conclusion that the Senate as presently constituted serves a useful purpose in Canadian life. I am so convinced that the Senate ought to be abolished that I believe a step in the right direction would be the establishment of a committee to study the question.

One of the leading experts on the constitution of Canada, one of the leading students of the place of the Senate in the last 25 or 30 years, is Professor Eugene Forsey. In a memorandum which he prepared in the late fifties when he was research director of the Canadian Congress of Labour, Mr. Forsey had some interesting observations to make on the role of the Senate. I should like to place some of these observations on record and discuss some of the conclusions reached. Professor Forsey said in his memorandum:

The Canadian Senate is one of the most thoroughly undemocratic bodies in the world, and has far larger powers than many Canadians suppose.

Senators are appointed, not elected. They hold office for life. They cannot be removed, except by the Senate itself.

The Senate can amend any bill whatsoever, including a money bill, and go on throwing it out, as often as it likes; ten, twenty, fifty, a hundred, a thousand times. There is nothing in Canada corresponding to the Parliament Act in Great Britain.

He then drew attention to some of the limitations which have been placed under the British Parliamentary system on the power of the House of Lords, the chamber under the British system which is analogous to our Senate—limitations which make it impossible for the House of Lords to prevent bills passed by the Commons becoming law. Since Professor Forsey prepared his memorandum further limitations have been placed on the power of the House of Lords under the British parliamentary system, but no such limitations apply to the Senate of Canada. The Senate has virtually equal power with the House of Commons in the enactment of legislation. Aside from the limitations which have been expressed in the law of Britain curtailing the power of the House of Lords, Prime Ministers of Britain have for many years enjoyed the right to recommend the creation of as many members of the House of Lords as they felt desirable.

Sixty years ago a Liberal government in which Lloyd George, later Prime Minister of Great Britain, was a leading cabinet minister proposed sweeping social changes. When it appeared that the House of Lords would prevent the legislation from passing into law, the government made a public declaration that if the House of Lords were to prevent the passage of legislation implementing promises on the basis of which the government had been elected, the Prime Minister would recommend the appointment of sufficient members to the House of Lords to ensure that the legislation was enacted and that the will of the people was implemented.

This could not happen constitutionally in Canada because in this country the Senate has the absolute right to veto any legislation proposed by the Commons. True, it has not happened very often. It is possible that a government elected by the people of Canada on a program much more radical than we have had up till now would be blocked by the Senate. It is for that reason that Professor Forsey in the late 1950s proposed that the Senate be abolished.

In abolishing the Senate we would be following the process of democratization that has taken place in many countries. At the time of confederation five or six provinces of Canada had a second chamber, the members of which were appointed in much the same way as Senators are appointed at the present time. Since confederation, all the second chambers in Canada's provinces have been abolished. I think the provinces learned from experience that the second chamber played no useful role, and it was for that reason that Professor Forsey was so strong in his support of the proposal that the Senate be abolished.

It has been argued that the Senate can and does play a useful role. In the last half dozen years in particular a number of quite young people in their thirties and forties have been appointed to the Senate, instead of those in their sixties and seventies who had been appointed for many years in the past. A number of Senate committees have undertaken some quite important studies into matters of policy that are of tremendous importance to Canadian citizens. Let me mention a few of them. There was the committee headed by Senator Croll which studied in depth the problem of the aged in Canada and made a report that had considerable merit. In their report they made a number of very useful proposals as to what should and could be done to improve the lot of the aged in this country.

The committee headed by Senator Davey studied in depth the condition and role of the media—the press, magazines, radio and television—in this country. I think it did an excellent piece of work. A large number of recommendations made by the Davey committee are useful and are ones that I think the people of Canada could support. A Senate committee headed by Senator Lamontagne looked into science policy and carried out the most in-depth survey of scientific research ever undertaken in this country. A tremendous amount of useful information was gathered by that committee. Their first report is interesting and contains a number of valuable suggestions.

We now have the Senate finance committee, which is headed by Senator Everett, one of the younger Senators from my own province, looking into the state of Canada's economy. I notice the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Mahoney) is in his seat. I wish he would read the testimony that is being given to that Senate committee. I have not been keeping an exact scorecard but I am willing to bet the parliamentary secretary a dinner in the parliamentary restaurant that 90 per cent of the economists who have been appearing before the committee are opposed to the economic policies of the federal government. I think Senator Everett's committee is doing an excellent job.

Mr. Mahoney: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The parliamentary secretary is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would take time out from reading the Senate reports in order to read the speech I gave yesterday in the House, he would find not only have I read that evidence but that I quoted from it.

Mr. Orlikow: Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I not only read the parliamentary secretary's speech, I heard it, and a more selective choosing of so-called evidence I have yet to hear. The only quotations he made were of the one or two economists who happened to agree with government policy. There was not a word about what Professor Barber or Harry Johnson said, or what was said by the vast majority of those who disagree with the government.

So as I say, Senate committees have been doing a very useful job. But, Mr. Speaker, what happens to the recommendations that are made? Have any of the recommendations made by Senator Croll's committee on the aged been implemented into legislation? Of course not! What has happened to the recommendations made by Senator Davey's committee on the mass media? Have any of these been implemented? If they have, then I do not know about it. What about Senator Lamontagne's committee's recommendation on science policy? They are gathering dust, like the thousands of pages of evidence given to that committee.

We know from the speech made by the parliamentary secretary yesterday and also the speech made yesterday by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang) how much attention they are going to pay to the evidence given before the Senate committee headed by Senator Everett. Perhaps the government will be rescued from its own folly by the Senate committee, in that the Senate committee will ignore all the evidence given by the experts they have heard and will endorse the economic policies of the government in its report. But if the committee does this it can only do so by ignoring the evidence of the experts that the committee itself chose to testify before it.

I say quite seriously that these kinds of studies could be much better done by parliamentary committees, task forces and royal commissions. No government, not even this government, could ignore reports and recommendations made by task forces and royal commissions appointed by it, or the recommendations of parliamentary committees staffed by members the majority of whom came from government benches, as completely as the present government has ignored the recommendations of the Senate committees I have just mentioned.

Other suggestions in regard to the Senate have been made, such as that the Senate's composition ought to be changed, that there ought to be Senators appointed on the recommendations of the provinces. Personally, I cannot think of a better way to hamstring the running of this country than to give the provinces what is virtually a veto power over what is done by a Senate which, as I have already said, has power equal to that of the House of Commons.

Some have suggested that Senators should be replaced by representatives of various occupational groups. Again, I do not know who would decide which occupational group should be represented or in what proportion the representation should be. One thing that could be said of that kind of Senate is that it could not possibly have more representatives of business than the present Senate. Neither could it possibly have more representatives from one political party than the present Senate. But in my opinion such a Senate could create just as many difficulties and problems as the Senate we now have.

As I said when I rose to introduce this resolution, knowing as I do that there is such hostility on the part of government members and most, if not all, of the members of the official opposition to a proposal to abolish the Senate, I feel that we should either abolish the Senate or give the Senate a useful role to perform. I also make the moderate suggestion that we should appoint a parliamentary committee with power to employ staff and adjourn from place to place to hear witnesses and evidence and decide whether there is a useful role for the Senate.

There has been some indication as a result of hearings over the years that the overwhelming majority of Canadians believe the Senate plays no useful role and should be abolished. I do not think members of this Chamber are prepared to take such a position. I am sure members realize there would be difficulty if such a change were made, particularly in respect of the British North America Act.

At this time, the role of the government and the Senate is becoming increasingly difficult. As the situation changes in the world, the role of the government in this House and in the other place becomes very difficult. In closing I should like to state that the Senate should be considered from a democratic point of view. Can it be designed to properly perform a purposeful function? For that reason I have proposed the establishment of a committee to consider its function and responsibility.

Mr. Deachman: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member be willing to answer a question?

Mr. Orlikow: Yes.

Mr. Deachman: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. gentleman be willing to add to his motion a request that the committee determine whether the House of Commons is worthy of retention?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman) is serious, but I suggest to him there is no comparison between the Senate and the House of Commons. Every member here, including the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, is expected by the general public to be doing the kind of job hon. members ought to be doing.

An hon. Member: He is the best member from British Columbia.

Mr. Orlikow: He may be the best member from British Columbia, but that is a sad commentary on the people of British Columbia. I do not accept that. We only have to look at the results of the elections since 1957 to realize that most of the members who sit in this place have not been here very long. I do not think we need worry about the people of Canada deciding who should sit in this place and what should be done with the Liberal government. I suggest no one could look after the functions of the Senate better than the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra. Perhaps he is looking for a call to that place, but most people appointed to the Senate are not there for very long.

An hon. Member: Until they are 75.

Mr. Orlikow: Senators are appointed for life and can elect to retire at 75.

Mr. Speaker: Order please. I must interrupt the hon. member because his time has expired.

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I commend the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow); not so much for his view of the upper chamber but for giving members of this House the opportunity to speak about the Senate and what it means to Canada. I am happy to take part in this debate for the opposite reason which the mover of this motion has in mind. He wants a committee to study the value of the Senate, favouring its abolition. I want to strengthen the Senate.

Under the present Constitution of Canada, Parliament consists of the Queen, represented by the Governor General, the Senate and the House of Commons. Whatever arguments may be advanced against this parliamentary structure, against the monarchy or against the Senate in its present form, the fact remains that this is the existing system and, therefore, the point from which we are obliged to start. It follows that in any consideration of the future role and composition of the Senate, or of the question of its abolition, the Senate itself should have a voice. There is some force to the argument that it would be constitutionally improper for one House of Parliament to consider the composition, functions and future of the other place without any reference to that chamber.

The Senate is part of the Canadian structure of government, whether one likes it or not, and therefore has a right to be consulted on any matter of direct concern to it. If the Senate had a record of irresponsible or obstructive behaviour, if it could be demonstrated that it was a totally useless body, if it had been a consistent hindrance to progress, then perhaps one could make out a case in favour of the objective contained in the motion under discussion. Since nobody could claim, however, that the Senate poses a threat to Canadian democracy or that it had never done anything useful, it would be difficult to justify an investigation of the Senate from which the Senate itself was excluded.

It is quite possible that among those best qualified to advise on the future role of the Senate are Senators themselves. They are the people with direct, practical experience of the work of the Senate. They are presumably as much aware of the strengths and weaknesses of the Senate as anybody and are certainly well placed to measure its success or lack of it. It is not inconceivable that they might have some good ideas as to how it could be improved. Before any final decisions are taken it would surely be only just and reasonable to hear what the Senators themselves have to say.

Another argument against the motion is that Senate reform is only one aspect of constitutional reform, and constitutional reform as a whole is a subject which is currently engaging the attention of the federal-provincial constitutional conference. The consideration of the future role of the Senate and one of the pros and cons in respect of its abolition should only be made in conjunction with other constitutional considerations. Piecemeal reform of a constitution can lead to dangers and inconsistencies.

The future role of the Senate is likely to be crucially influenced by other constitutional decisions which will have to be taken. While the federal-provincial constitutional conference will be devoting its attention to the entire question of constitutional reform, it would seem quite inappropriate at this stage to appoint a committee charged solely with making recommendations in relation to the Senate without any regard to the constitutional conference which is scheduled for the fourteenth of this month.

The conclusions of the third working session of the constitutional conference of February 8 and 9, 1971, give an important indication of the conference's current thinking. These conclusions registered agreement in principle on a number of important issues, including patriation of the constitution, a formula for constitutional amendment, federal and provincial constitutions, fundamental rights and language rights. In any one of these areas it is important to recognize that the Senate could well play a very active and crucial role. Moreover, the constitutional conference envisages that the Senate would be involved at the very outset of the constitutional reform process.

Reference to the Senate by members of the NDP as an old-age home for the party faithful is a cynical statement which reflects the negative attitude of the hon. member's party in general toward an institution which is part and parcel of the government of Canada and performs a very useful duty. The hon. member who proposed the motion asks in effect: Why a second chamber? I wish to point out to the hon. member and to those who think like him that the second chamber relieves the pressure of work on the House of Commons which, in these days of intense governmental activity, becomes overburdened. As everyone knows, it acts as a reviewer of legislation, providing a brake on rasty or ill-considered legislation.

Hon. members who were here in March of 1961 will remember that the government of the day imposed legislation giving the Minister of National Revenue the final decision with respect to tariff changes, without right of appeal. The resolutions read:

> That goods be deemed to be of a class or kind not made or produced in Canada where similar goods made or produced in Canada are not offered for sale to the ordinary agencies of wholesale or retail distribution or are not offered to all purchasers on equal terms under like conditions—

In other words, the minister was to assume the dictatorial power to impose tariffs at his discretion, without giving the importer a chance to state his case. The then Minister of Finance suggested that it was a small resolution, but in reality it was one with big implications extending to the fundamental principle of parliamentary control over taxation, giving the Minister of National Revenue the power to decide, without any review or appeal. Needless to say we, the Liberal opposition at that time, fought tooth and nail against the measure in an effort to get the government to amend the resolution to provide reasonable protection against any arbitrary action by the minister. In summing up the case for the official opposition, Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson said:

> We claim that the rule of law is involved in this resolution as an issue. It is not simply a matter of the preservation of the substance of parliamentary authority and rule. We will have nothing to do with the granting of powers vastly in excess of need. Supreme over any all powerful executive, in our view, must stand the authority of a free, sovereign and independent Parliament.

After days of debate the resolution came to a vote and the government, having 208 members against the Liberal is 49 and the CCF's—forerunner of the NDP—eight members, it carried the day in the House, but not in the Senate where Liberals were in the majority. That body refused to approve the legislation and thus saved Canada from one of the crudest autocratic pieces of legislation ever put forward by a Canadian government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Senate Reform

Mr. Badanai: Had we not had an upper chamber an unpopular and undemocratic piece of legislation would have been written into our statute books. This is just an example that the Senate can check any tendency on the part of the House of Commons to abuse its power. It also safeguards the interests of the provinces, which was envisaged at the time of confederation.

The idea that the upper house is trying to take away the power of the Commons is absurb. As the load on Parliament grows to enormous proportions and the House of Commons can no longer cope with the demands on members, the Senate moves in to shoulder more of the burden. The investigation of such broad and urgent problems as those of the aged, poverty, science policy and the mass media are important examples of the work which the Senate has been able to perform through its committees' system. To abolish the Senate would remove a considerable potential for Parliament, all the more so in view of the pressures imposed upon the standing committees of the House of Commons.

Senator A. W. Roebuck, one of the brilliant minds of our upper House, once said:

> In my opinion the strength of the Senate lies in the independence of its members. In our modern form of cabinet government, the Prime Minister and his ministerial colleagues have absorbed, first, the powers of the Crown, and second, many of the former functions of parliament. Parliament is still boss whenever it assumes that role, but ordinarily, and in the course of the multifarious details of government, the House of Commons is the pliant creature of the cabinet. So too the cabinet is the boss of the civil service, but more and more as the detail and complexity of government grows and multiplies, the cabinet becomes the instrument of the civil service.

But not so the Senate. The members of the upper chamber are not dependent on either the government or the civil service. Senators are not seeking promotion or anything else. They have nothing to hope for and nothing to fear. They are as secure in their positions as judges on the bench. The ever-increasing responsibilities of modern government, extending as they do into almost every sphere of public activity, serve as a good reminder of the need of a second chamber.

The House of Commons is always overburdened because of the vast amount of government business with which it has to deal. The criticism is sometimes heard that many matters of national importance receive scant attention. Without a Senate to relieve the pressure, many matters would receive even less attention, perhaps none at all. There is no doubt that the second chamber, properly utilized—and I am convinced that such is the case—helps to relieve the burden of work in this House.

As to the suggestion that the Senate should be an elected body, this view is not generally accepted. The Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, addressing the Commonwealth Speakers' Conference on September 9, 1969, said the following about this question:

> The members of the elected house have a certain moral and political authority by reason of the very fact that they have been elected. If the members of the upper House are also elected, they thereby acquire a measure of moral and political authority which could prompt them to challenge the authority of the lower House and thus make a conflict between the two Houses more likely. Moreover, the upper House needs to be something different in kind from the lower House, and not a pale reflection of it.

I am sure that most Canadians will agree with this assessment of the value of an elected upper chamber equal in power to and which would become a rival of the House of Commons. Fundamental to this discussion is the question: What should an upper House do? Since this matter is being discussed in relation to Canada it will be assumed that it would not be desirable to set up a body equal in power to and which would become a rival of the House of Commons.

Theoretically, the Canadian Senate shares equal power with the House of Commons except in respect of financial legislation, since these powers have never been curtailed by statute as have those of the British House of Lords. The relatively passive role which the Senate plays in the legislative process today has resulted from its own prudence and its acceptance of the fact that power should lie with those who have been directly elected by the people. Former Senator Ross MacDonald, presently holding the position of Lieutenant Governor of Ontario, speaking at the time of the change of government in 1957 when he was leader of the opposition in the Senate, said:

The overriding responsibility of the Senate is to make the constitution work—The Canadian constitution, like all constitutions based on the British tradition of parliamentary government, is a finely-tuned and delicately-balanced instrument. Accordingly, we do not propose to assert our legal rights and prerogatives to the prejudice of common sense or reason, or to the sacrifice of the proper functioning of our constitutional machinery—The Senate was expected by the Fathers of Confederation to act responsibly at all times, and I am confident that it will continue to do so in the new Parliament. We should not—automatically resist every government measure which comes before us. To do so purely out of party considerations would be to hamper any effective government of our nation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret very much to interrupt the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai), but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member leave to continue his remarks for a few moments?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Badanai: I thank hon. members for their indulgence. I shall shorten my speech and take only a few more minutes. The thought to bear in mind is that the abolition of the Senate would not strengthen the House of Commons. On the contrary, it would tend to add to the authority of the establishment, the cabinet and the top officials of the civil service. Thus, the abolition of the Senate would end by losing the scrutiny of the parliamentary system as we know it. In the Senate today sits a man who at one time was leader of the CCF, forerunner of the NDP, whom I heard speak in this chamber on more than one occasion in favour of the abolition of the Senate but who, speaking in the other place, as reported in the Senate proceedings of March 17, 1970, said:

Although a committee of the House of Commons in 1969 recommended a Commons Committee on statutory instruments, the motion before the Senate seems to be the government's response to the important recommendations of that committee. The honourable leader—hon. Mr. Martin—was careful to point out that he was not making that assertion. However, it would seem to be quite logical that his action should flow from the recommendation of the House of Commons committee. The Senate will be undertaking the very important work of this committee.

The government leader presented this motion to the Senate in a very eloquent manner, and I think once again he has demonstrated, in his capacity as leader of the government in the Senate, that he is determined to give the kind of leadership that will result in important activity being undertaken at all times by this chamber. With this kind of leadership the Senate will make a valuable contribution and will be an enduring part of the Canadian Parliament.

This member, far from being opposed to the value of the Senate has become one of its champions. It is worth noting that most of the countries of the world which one would regard as democratic have two chambers. In the Commonwealth these include Canada, Great Britain, Australia, India, Ceylon, Malaysia, Jamaica, Trinidad and Tobago, Barbados, Bahamas, British Honduras and Bermuda. Outside the Commonwealth they include the United States of America, France, Western Germany, Italy, Belgium, Holland, Switzerland, Norway, Iceland, the Irish Republic and Japan.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that a second chamber can relieve the pressure of work on the lower House, which in these days of intense governmental activity easily tends to become overburdened. It can act as a house of review and thus provide a brake on hasty or ill-considered legislation. It can secure for the country the services of men and women who may be unable or unwilling to engage in the political campaign necessitated by an election. It can check any tendency on the part of the lower House to abuse its power. It can represent interests not otherwise represented in the lower House. In short, in a federal state it can safeguard the interests of the component parts of the federation.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have just a few remarks to make on this motion. My colleague from St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) also intends to make a few remarks in view of the fact that for some time he was employed in the Senate. But neither of us will make a long speech.

I feel it is something of an insult to the Senate that a committee of the House of Commons should be set up to investigate its activities and usefulness. If there has to be a committee at all, I think it would be much more reasonable if we were to propose the setting up of a joint committee. The two Houses are part of the legislative process of Parliament. In spite of the fact that we occupy different parts of the building, we do work in concert on many joint committees which points up the fact that there is a mutuality of interest.

I am quite sure that members of the other place are well aware of the shortcomings within the Senate and of the improvements that could be made in appointments, operation and so forth. I do not believe that they are lacking objectivity and could not look at this question fairly and come to a conclusion. I am quite sure they know where improvements can be made in the operation of the Senate. For that reason I think the hon. member's motion should have been to set up a joint committee and to take care of the House of Commons portion of it so that there would be a joint effort to look at the legislative processes of Parliament. We cannot separate them because at the moment and from time to time during the session there are bills which go from this House to the Senate. Sometimes they are amended, as one was today, and come back to this House for reconsideration.

Mr. McGrath: That was a good amendment today.

Mr. Aiken: As my friend from St. John's East says, it was a good amendment to the legislation. For this reason I think we should work together and look at the joint legislative process rather than using this motion to beat the other House once again for its shortcomings. We have a few ourselves. We often pass bills here after days or weeks of consideration and anguished debate and send them to the other place, expecting them to deal with the matter in an afternoon—and some of it is very important legislation. I think members of the Senate have cause for complaint about the way we treat them.

As has been pointed out, very effective work is being done in the other place both in originating legislation and in financial affairs. As generally happens, the hon. member from the New Democratic Party who introduced this motion took the opportunity to whack at the Senators for financial and business interests which might be inconsistent with their legislative capacity and for the fact that the Senate is sometimes considered a retirement house for old politicians. I do not think we can be too critical in these respects. I believe some benefit derives from the Senate. We must remember that the effective power in Parliament is in this House and not in the Senate, by reason of the presence of the cabinet within this House and the fact that we are an elected body. We cannot say that the power of legislation rests equally with the Senate and the House of Commons.

The fact that some Senators had or have business interests and connections is not a bad thing. Sometimes it is of benefit to have knowledge of what you are talking about. Many of the things that the other House considers effectively pertain to business, financial and economic matters. They make good amendments and have worthwhile discussions. As far as the question of retired politicians is concerned, a quick look at the membership of the Senate, particularly those who are doing good work, will show that most of them have some political background.

Of course, some improvements could be made to the Senate. The point was raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) that there should be a limit on the length of time the Senate can delay legislation. I agree with that; there should be no right in the other place to hold up legislation indefinitely. This is one of the weaknesses which should be corrected and in this case we have been delinquent.

There are many other things I should like to say, Mr. Speaker, but time is running out. I merely wish to express my reservations on the motion, first because there should be a joint committee of both Houses and, second, because I could not agree to the abolition of the Senate. For these reasons I cannot support the motion in its present form.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to talk out this motion but I want to make one comment. In my opinion it is a very immoral thing indeed to have a law-making body in a country that calls itself democratic if part of that law-making body is not subject to election and recall at the proper time by the electorate. That is all I want to say.

Mr. Murray McBride (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it is a delight to have an opportunity to say at least a few words on the motion before us in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Orlikow). It is my conviction that the Senate suffers from not reflecting very accurately what the electors might expect. We are all aware that bills may originate in either House and that they must pass both Houses and receive royal assent before they become law.

By means of the ballot box, the House of Commons, hopefully, does reflect the will and wish of the public. I think it might be accurate to say that we have "do it yourself" government in this country where no person or persons govern by any divine or preordained right or privilege. This means that we are here because the people of the country want us to be here and we function as the people want us to function. It therefore seems to me that the upper House, which is appointed, cannot really be justified today when we have a very highly-educated populace and people want to participate more fully in the decision-making process. I count myself amongst those who believe very strongly—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hour assigned for consideration of private members' business has expired. It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until eleven o'clock Monday morning, pursuant to special order of the House made earlier this week.

At five o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order.

FISHERIES

STATEMENT ON ATLANTIC SALMON FISHERY AND LIMITATION AGREED TO BY DENMARK

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, the Atlantic salmon fishery, as many hon. members know, is in difficulty. Stocks have been declining for many years and pollution, together with overfishing for this unique species, has caused the Canadian government to introduce special measures for the protection of salmon runs on Canada's east coast.

One of the causes for a decline in stocks has been increased catches by foreign nationals. The development of a major commercial fishery off the west coast of Greenland is a case in point. Beginning in the early 1960's, and with increased effort through to 1969, fishermen from Denmark, Norway, the Faroe Islands and Greenland itself took large quantities of Atlantic salmon many of which originated in this country.

The highest reported catch of Atlantic salmon off west Greenland was in excess of 2,000 metric tons in 1969. This was equivalent, in that year, to the total Canadian commercial catch on the east coast of Canada.

The Canadian government has protested this increase in fishing for Atlantic salmon. It made its views known both to the individual countries involved and at the annual meetings of the International Commission for Northwest Atlantic Fisheries.

This summer, for the first time, a limit will be placed on the total fishing effort by Denmark. It has agreed, officially, to limit the number of vessels involved to that reached in 1969. This is the official position of the Danish government. However, it should be noted that the total number of Danish vessels engaged in the Atlantic salmon fishery off Greenland fell from 15 to 13 in 1970. The forecast for 1971 is now a maximum of ten, three of the largest vessels which previously engaged in this fishery now having been converted to other fisheries.

When I was in Denmark last week, the Danish Minister of Fisheries, who is also the Minister for Greenland, told me that his government was concerned about the supply of Atlantic salmon and was adopting three measures which, taken together, could affect the size of the Danish fishing fleet in future years. They are: 1. The introduction of a tax on the quantity of salmon caught; 2. Government loans to enable salmon fishing vessel owners to convert to the taking of other species such as sharks and shrimps; 3. The launching of a special research program, aimed at discovering additional species which could be taken by these vessels in other waters.

I therefore expect that the Danish catch, off west Greenland, will decline. I expect that the catch by the Norwegians and also by the Faroese will decline. They will decline, also, because salmon quotas off Norway, in the northeast Atlantic, are being reduced and vessels which, until recently, have participated in both the northeast Atlantic fishery and off Greenland now have a much shorter season in which to try to recover their costs.

I should add, Mr. Speaker, that developments with respect to the Common Market could largely eliminate our problem. If Denmark follows the United Kingdom and joins the European Common Market its commercial fishermen will no longer be able to operate within the 12-mile limit off west Greenland. The same applies to Norway and the Faroese. The west Greenland inshore fishery, in other words, will be reserved mainly for the native peoples living in Greenland. And if we succeed in getting the United Nations to accept a high seas ban for salmon fishing at the Law of the Sea Conference in 1973, then the only Canadian salmon taken off west Greenland will be caught within 12 miles of Greenland itself.

I do not wish to imply, Mr. Speaker, that all our problems are solved. The Danes, like the Norwegians and the Faroese, will continue to fish off west Greenland in 1972 and 1973. Denmark, officially, is also holding its 1969 level of effort. However, as I said earlier, the forecast is for a reduction in vessels making the trip to west Greenland and the offshore catch of Canadian salmon should be reduced accordingly.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House welcome the announcement made this morning by the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry with regard to efforts that have been made to conserve Atlantic salmon.

I should first like to thank the minister for the courtesy he extended to the official opposition by delivering a copy of his statement to my office about 15 minutes prior to the opening of the House.

While we welcome any move that will result in the conservation of our declining fisheries resources, it is somewhat regrettable that the best agreement which could be reached with Denmark at this time on the conservation of Atlantic salmon is one that limits their catch this year to an amount similar to the take in 1969. I point out to the minister that a limit on the number of vessels that will be used in the fishery really has no bearing on the take of salmon by the Danes. All that is required under an agreement of this type is for fishing activity to be speeded up, and with a declining number of vessels, the Danes can still take as many or even more fish than were taken in previous years.

The minister has stated that in 1969 the reported catch off west Greenland was in excess of 2,000 metric tons, which was equivalent to the total commercial catch off the east coast of Canada in that year. This is a large quantity of salmon. As a result of the huge take of salmon on the high seas our salmon stocks have declined all along the east coast until today this species is rapidly becoming one of the extinct species off our coast. We simply cannot sustain this amount of fishing activity.

There has never been a period in the history of our fishing industry when our over-all fisheries resources have been so sorely threatened. This point, which has been made time and again, was made very forcefully by representatives of the industry when they held their 26th annual meeting in Ottawa between May 2 and May 5. At that time, one of the resolutions put forward by the Fisheries Council of Canada called for recognition of the concept that anadromous species of fish such as salmon were the rightful property of the country of origin and other countries should therefore refrain from catching them.

It seems that this concept has not been put forward forcefully enough by our representatives and our spokesmen in the Department of External Affairs when attending international meetings on this problem. There has been little or no change within the last decade in fishing operations carried out in international waters. It makes no sense whatever for Canada to spend approximately $2 million annually on the development of salmon stocks and in restoring salmon runs if other nations adopt the attitude that high seas fishing can be continued without regard to the source of the salmon.

We welcome this announcement as only a very small step in the right direction. I cannot urge too strongly upon the minister the need for securing agreement at the 1973 International Conference on the Law of the Sea on the concept that anadromous species such as salmon belong to the country of origin.

I understand that at the present time a congressional investigation is being held in the United States on this matter. It may be advisable for the minister to bring the subject before the fisheries committee, composed of members of this House, for consultation on this important matter. Nothing short of a total ban on the catching of salmon on the high seas is acceptable to the members of the official opposition.

[Mr. Crouse.]

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, our group welcomes the announcement by the minister. I regret that I did not have an opportunity to study his remarks. The copy of his statement was sent to the member of the fisheries committee who usually responds for our party.

The information that we have come to some kind of an agreement with Denmark on the conservation of the Atlantic salmon fishery is of great interest, I am certain, to all hon. members, especially those who live on the east coast. However, I point out to the minister that while overfishing by the Danes has been the cause of most of our trouble with regard to the depletion of Atlantic salmon, pollution has also been a cause. In numerous rivers on the east coast where the salmon have normally spawned pollution has prevented them from going up these streams to spawn. This is another aspect which the government must study if we are to obtain any real benefit from the agreement with Denmark. We must do something with regard to our streams in Canada to ensure that spawning areas are available when these fish come to the east coast to spawn.

I have attended several meetings of the fisheries committee. There have been repeated warnings by individuals who have appeared before that committee with regard to declining stocks of other species of fish off the east coast of Canada. Along with the hon. member who has just spoken and other hon. members, I urge the minister to do everything possible to carry out the investigations which are necessary to ensure that this vital and valuable fishery on the east coast of Canada is retained and expanded in the years to come.

We certainly welcome this announcement and hope it is one of the first of many steps to make sure that we conserve our fisheries for all time.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, we are all aware of the difficult situation in which our east coast fishermen find themselves and we appreciate all measures taken to improve their lot.

That agreements be entered into with other countries, that is good. But, if the government dealt with the pollution problems of both the east and the west coasts of Canada, that would be of great help to the fishing industry which is surely of value to the country. I say it again, any measure to help east coast fishermen will have the support of my colleagues, especially the Social Credit members. I am happy to hear the minister inform us this morning of the measures presently taken to help the fishing industry in eastern Canada.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

COST OF ADVERTISING FOR CNR IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Question No. 892—Mr. Peddle:

1. What was the total cost of newspaper, radio and television advertising by CNR in Newfoundland in 1962, 1963, 1964, 1965, 1966, 1967, 1968, 1969, 1970?

2. What were the media and amounts paid to each in each year?

3. What is the anticipated expenditure for 1971?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian Railways advises as follows: 1, 2 and 3. Advertising of the various services offered by the company is done in accordance with what is considered to be the requirements of the market. Expenditures covering advertising are controlled through an annual budget which is also made in accordance with considered requirements. The placing of advertising is a matter of internal management and it is not the practice to disclose the information on a territorial breakdown basis.

CONVICTIONS FOR POSSESSION OF MARIJUANA

Question No. 895—Mr. Peddle:

1. How many convictions for possession of marijuana were registered in Canada for each year since 1960?

2. What were the penalties imposed in each case?

3. What were the ages of the accused in each case?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. 1960, 15; 1961, 12; 1962, 11; 1963, 30; 1964, 27; 1965, 40; 1966, 109; 1967, 453; 1968, 1,078; 1969, 2,313; 1970, 5,399.

2 and 3. To obtain the information requested would require a manual search of records which would be prohibitively expensive and for which funds are not available. For this reason, it is regretted that the information cannot be provided.

POLICY OF AIR CANADA ON BILINGUALISM

Question No. 993—Mr. Fortin:

1. What is Air Canada's policy on the distribution of French newspapers on its flights?

2. What is Air Canada's policy on the use of French at the Ottawa Airport?

3. What is Air Canada's policy on bilingualism?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. It is Air Canada's policy to board French language newspapers at points of publication on flights where there is an anticipated demand, in a quantity proportionate to the total number boarded. Where French language newspapers are not published, but are in demand, a supply is flown to the departure point to be boarded as appropriate. French language magazines are boarded on all Air Canada flights.

2. Services to the travelling public are provided in both official languages.

3. To provide bilingual services to the travelling public in Canada and elsewhere wherever there is a significant and regular demand. The matter is under continuing review.

AIR CANADA—YARMOUTH AIRPORT

Question No. 1,000—Mr. Comeau:

1. Since the recent reduction of personnel at Yarmouth Airport, by Air Canada, have any flights been delayed and, if so (a) how many (b) by what length of time?

2. What is the normal ground time for Air Canada flights at Yarmouth?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. During the period February 21 to March 18 inclusive ten flights were delayed for periods ranging from two to fourteen minutes as a result of unusual heavy freight, accommodation of late arriving passengers, and minor technical difficulties.

2. Flight 330, 35 minutes; flight 331, 25 minutes.

WHEAT BOARD GRASS SEEDING PROGRAM

Question No. 1,005—Mr. Thomson:

1. Is it the intention of the Wheat Board to continue the grass seeding program as it was under Operation Lift in 1971 or beyond and, if so, will payments remain the same?

2. Is it the intention of the Wheat Board to continue to exempt land seeded to grass from grain quota?

3. How many acres were removed from quota acreage by the removal of grassland from quota?

4. What was the total decrease in quota acreage resulting from quota changes under Operation Lift?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. The Federal Government is continuing to offer a $10 an acre payment under the Prairie Grains Policy Forage Program to farmers who switch production from grains, oilseeds and other crops to forage. To qualify for payment farmers must increase their net forage acreage by at least 25 acres and decrease their net crop and summerfallow acreage by a corresponding amount in order to qualify for payments. There is no maximum for the individual farmer nor are there any restrictions on the use and harvesting of nurse crops. The incentives will apply for three years or on 4 million acres of land, whichever limit is reached first.

2. In the 1971-72 crop year land actually seeded to perennial forage (up to a maximum of one-third of the total of land in summerfallow, in the six quota grains and in miscellaneous crops) will form part of a producer's total assignable acreage base.

3. 5,396,065 acres.

4. 13,777,952 acres.

Questions

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE TIMES OF CNR TRAINS, TORONTO TO HAMILTON

Question No. 1,214—Mr. Sullivan:

1 What were the scheduled times of departure and arrival for CNR trains from Toronto to Hamilton from the period of March 12 to March 22, 1971 and what times did the said trains actually depart and arrive?

2. In the case of each late arrival, what was the reason?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: As listed on Page 14, Table 30 of the company's System Timetable issued effective February 1, 1971, the following trains operated between Toronto and Hamilton during the period in question: 637 Lv. Toronto 0915, Arr. Hamilton 1002; 641 Lv. Toronto 1720, Arr. Hamilton 1810; 651 Lv. Toronto 2305, Arr. Hamilton 2347. On nine occasions late departure from Toronto resulted from delay in arrival of incoming connecting trains or loading of passengers and on three occasions resulted from equipment problems. Late arrivals at Hamilton occurred on 18 occasions and resulted from the foregoing and because of slow orders which were in effect on sections of the track.

RENTAL OF PIERS IN HALIFAX BY NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD

Question No. 1,281—Mr. McCleave:

1. What piers in Halifax are rented in their entirety by the National Harbours Board (a) to whom (b) on what terms?

2. What piers in Halifax are rented, by the Board exclusively, as to portions thereof (a) to whom (b) on what terms?

3. Has the Board received complaints that small companies are not able to obtain rentable space from the Board and, if so, what is being done to answer such complaints?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows: 1. Pier C Container Terminal excluding area of dock approximately 1800 feet and 50 feet back from the face of dock. (a) Halterm Ltd. (b) As per Heads of Agreement between NHB and Halterm Ltd.

2. None. (a) N/A. (b) N/A.

3. No complaints received by the Board.

DELIVERY PERMITS ISSUED BY CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

Question No. 1,307—Mr. Mazankowski:

How many delivery permits were issued by the Canadian Wheat Board in the crop years 1968-69 and 1969-70 to producers for the delivery and sale of wheat?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): In crop years 1968-69 and 1969-70, 190,606 and 190,004 Canadian Wheat Board delivery permits, respectively, were issued to producers.

COST OF QUEBEC BRIDGE

Question No. 1,363—Mr. Godin:

1. What was the initial cost of the Quebec Bridge?

2. What was the amount of interest paid?

[Mr. Lang.]

3. Has the total amount been paid and, if not, how much is still owed?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. The total capital cost of the Quebec Bridge including expenditures up until 1927 is shown in the Public Accounts of Canada at $21,706,664.49.

2. Nil—The Quebec Bridge was entrusted to CNR for management and operation by authority of order in council P.C. 115 of January 20, 1923.

3. Not applicable.

REPAIRS AND ALTERATIONS TO DORVAL INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Question No. 1,372—Mr. Coates:

1. What was the total amount of repairs and alterations effected to the Dorval International Airport since July 1, 1970, and what will be the final estimated cost of these repairs and alterations?

2. What is the reason for the repairs and alterations that are being carried out?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. The total cost to the Department of Transport of repairs and alterations at Dorval since July 1, 1970 until May 12, 1971 was $2,042,287. The final estimated cost is $9,307,231 and includes road and carpark construction begun before July 1, 1970. The major part of these funds is allocated to the provision of interim terminal building facilities.

2. These repairs and alterations are necessary to accommodate the B-747, L-1011 and other wide-bodied aircraft and provide increased capacity until Montreal II Airport is expected to be operational in 1974. Work is also necessary on the runways and taxiways which will accommodate these large capacity aircraft.

LOANS GRANTED UNDER THE CANADA-QUEBEC AGREEMENT ON SPECIAL AREAS

Question No. 1,384—Mr. Rodrigue:

1. For the period December 1, 1970 to May 1, 1971, how many loans were granted to the Province of Quebec under the provisions of the Canada-Quebec agreement on special areas?

2. How many loans were granted from the signing of the agreement to December 1, 1970?

3. What is the duration of each loan?

4. What is the interest rate for each loan?

[Translation]

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. Fifteen.

2. Seven.

3. All loans are for a duration of 30 years, except one, which is for 15 years.

4. The current rate, as established by the Department of Finance, is:

Repayment Period	Rate
15-19.99 years	$6\frac{3}{8}\%$
20 years or more	$6\frac{15}{16}\%$

GOVERNMENT CONSIDERATION OF STOL AIRCRAFT AS FEEDER PLANES

Question No. 1,388—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. What consideration is being given by the government to the participation in the development of STOL aircraft as feeder planes to areas of high population?

2. Has consultation been initiated with private companies with regard to the implementation of such a programme and, if so, which companies?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Consideration and study are being given to all applications of STOL air transport systems in Canada. These applications include: (a) city-centre to city-centre; (b) regional, that is a service to improve transport and communication in less heavily populated areas; (c) feeder, including service from small centres to major urban centres and service connecting various centres to major airports, and (d) applications unique to northern areas of Canada. The announcement of a program to establish a demonstration service made on 13 May, is for a city centre service. Other applications will continue to receive examination and where it proves efficient and economical services may be introduced appropriate to these applications.

2. The Minister of Transport has met with groups from the Air Industries Association of Canada (AIAC) to discuss STOL programs and to hear the industries' views on a National Major Program. The AIAC represents most of the manufacturing companies in Canada who have an interest in STOL.

CNR HOTELS IN CANADA OPERATING AT A LOSS IN 1969-70 AND 1970-71

What CNR hotels in Canada operated at a loss during the fiscal years 1969/70 and 1970/71?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: Hotel Bessborough, and Hotel Macdonald.

P.E.I. DEVELOPMENT PLAN BUDGET

Question No. 1,441—Mr. McQuaid:

1. Has a budget been submitted by the Province of Prince Edward Island to the Government of Canada with respect to moneys required for the fiscal year 1971-72 under the P.E.I. Development Plan and, if so, what are the details?

2. Has the whole or any part of the submitted budget been approved by the federal government and, if so, what are the details of the projects approved?

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. The Province of Prince Edward Island does not submit a budget to the Government of Canada. Program proposals within the plan are developed jointly.

2. All the proposals are not yet final. When they are, the program expenditures will be made public.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

1971 CENSUS OF AGRICULTURE

Question No. 1,248—Mr. Yewchuk:

1. For the 1971 Census of Agriculture (a) how many questionnaires will be used (b) how many questions will be asked?

2. How many and which rural areas were chosen to test the draft agricultural questionnaire in the Fall of 1968?

3. For the Agriculture quality check program (a) what percentage of all census-farms will be re-enumerated (b) what will be the area sample (c) what will be the questions?

4. For the 1971 Census of Canada will the government hire university students as enumerators and, if so, how many?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

FEDERAL POSITION ON CHANGES TO INCREASE PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION OVER SOCIAL SECURITY PROGRAMS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he has agreed in principle that the federal government will accept constitutional changes increasing provincial jurisdiction with regard to income support and social service programs, or at least enlarging the area of the priority of provincial legislation in these fields?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, no agreement has been reached with any of the provinces concerning any constitutional amendments beyond those which were mentioned in the communiqué of the February conference. Of course, as the Leader of the Opposition knows, there has been discussion by some provinces of amendments they would like to see made to the constitution, particularly concerning social security matters.

Mr. Stanfield: Is, therefore, the position of the federal government with regard to federal and provincial jurisdiction in the areas of income support and social service programs and the respective priority of federal and provincial jurisdiction in those areas the same as that set forth by the government of Canada in its working paper submitted several federal-provincial conferences ago?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, this is still the position of the federal government. As the Leader of the Opposition says, it was published in a white paper that we tabled at the conferences. I should add that at the request of one of the provinces we have asked the other provinces to consider an amendment to section 94A. This was done by the Minister of Justice in consultation with the various provinces as much, I believe, as two months ago. None of the provinces has yet indicated agreement, nor has the federal government; but the Minister of Justice did bring this amendment to the attention of the other provinces. We have no final position from the other provinces on this as yet.

Mr. Stanfield: Am I to understand from the Prime Minister that his government is not prepared to accept the proposed changes to section 94A, and that the government of Canada will go to the conference in Victoria taking precisely the same position in regard to income support and social services jurisdiction as was expressed in the working paper presented at a prior federal-provincial conference?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. In reply to the second part of the question, we will repeat the position we took in the working papers to which the hon. member refers, but we will discuss with all the provinces the possibility of this amendment to Section 94A that I mentioned a moment ago and which was brought to the attention of all the provinces. I do not know what the consensus of the conference will be.

NATURE OF PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO SECTION 94A—MAINTENANCE OF NATIONAL STANDARDS IN SOCIAL SECURITY PROGRAMS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. Would he indicate to the House what kind of amendment was requested? While I am pleased to know that the Prime Minister has had a conference with the Prime Minister of Quebec, would he also indicate to the House whether he has had direct discussions with the premier of any other province on this matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the latter question, I have had, of course, direct discussions with other premiers regarding the June conference. In reply to the first question, I cannot give the exact text of what was suggested, though it has been submitted to all provinces, because we did agree that the documents for this conference on June 14, 15 and 16 would not be made public. Therefore I do not think I should make the substance of it public.

Mr. Lewis: Could the Prime Minister at least inform the House, if he feels free to do so, whether the approach taken would remove from the federal Parliament any jurisdiction in this field, or would it be a divided or concurrent jurisdiction? Does the Prime Minister feel free to tell us in what direction the amendment would go?

Mr. Trudeau: Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I do not feel free to answer that question; to do so would be to reveal the substance of the amendment. I hasten to add that it is merely to make the negotiations more hopeful that we are taking the position that no province will publish its position on negotiations that might have taken place since the February consensus.

Mr. Lewis: Can we have from the Prime Minister, even at this stage, an assurance that the federal government will not agree to any amendment to the constitution that would destroy any possibility of national standards, that, even though some province or provinces may have particular responsibilities or additional powers, national standards in the area of old age security and other social security measures will not disappear from the scene in Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: That indeed is the position we have taken in our working papers. I probably would not want to go even as far as the leader of the NDP when he says even though some provinces might have—I forget his expression—some special powers. We are not taking this position. As I said to the Leader of the Opposition, we are taking the position of our working paper, which is known to the public. However, we are going to meet in Victoria to negotiate and discuss, and the provinces and the federal government will have to make up their minds as to what they are willing to agree to by way of amendment, if we are going to reach any agreement at all. As the House knows, there will be no binding agreement imposed on Parliament. If any agreement is reached in Victoria it will of course be discussed in Parliament to see whether or not we have its approval.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

Everyone knows that the Prime Minister took a constitutional in company with the premier of Quebec yesterday afternoon. Was Section 94A of the Constitution then discussed? My second question is as follows: will whatever is granted to Quebec be also made available to other provinces?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, as for the other questions, I do not want to go into the detail of the discussions. But as regards the question asked by the Social Credit leader, I may say that should there be a constitutional amendment the position of the federal government is to insure effectively that all the provinces receive the same treatment.

I would like to add that the difficulties with regard to the amendment which the hon. member has mentioned are as follows: the federal government feels—and I believe that this touches on the question raised by the leader of the New Democratic Party—that it should continue to redistribute the wealth to the poor of our country. It should have certain powers in the fiscal and social fields, as otherwise only the rich provinces would be able to assist their needy people and the less wealthy provinces would see their income reduced because they would receive no assistance under federal programs.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize one last supplementary on this subject and then go to the next subject.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I put this supplementary question to the Prime Minister. When he referred to the government's working papers by which it intends to stand, do these papers include the white paper on income security for Canadians which was tabled in the House last December and which implies a considerable degree of federal involvement in the maintenance of income security?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is the paper, indeed, in which we made our position most clear and to which I was referring in answer to the Leader of the Opposition. It is in that paper that we indicated it is in the national interest, particularly of the less-favoured Canadians, that the federal government maintain jurisdiction in these areas. If it does not, the provinces will not be able to follow national standards and we will have the richer provinces helping their people to a greater degree than the poorer provinces will be able to do. That is why the federal government has taken the position that it is not a question of trying to keep power for ourselves, it is to keep power for the federal government in order that we will be able to redistribute the wealth across the country to individuals who need it.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EAST PAKISTAN REFUGEES—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION TO RELIEF AND POLITICAL SETTLEMENT

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister or the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs, if such a person is in the House. In view of the gravity of the situation in East Pakistan and West Bengal, will the Prime Minister or the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs make a statement tomorrow on motions dealing with the whole situation and, in particular, with Canada's contribution to the massive humanitarian relief required and to the political settlement which is essential?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I could discuss the possibility of a statement with the department, although I could perhaps satisfy hon. members by answering questions. The Secretary of State for External Affairs will be back in Canada from Europe on Friday, I believe. Perhaps at that time he will want to make a statement as he did on May 28, but there is little to add to that statement. The figure of $2 million was given to the House as the amount which has been offered to the High Commissioner for Refugees at the United Nations. There have been various other bodies in Canada which have contributed generously to the relief of the plight of the East Pakistanis. The federal government has indicated a willingness to do even more if such moneys were needed.

Mr. Brewin: Can the Prime Minister tell the House what consultations, if any, are going on with other countries such as the United States, Britain or India with a view to united pressure of the world community to bring about the political settlement which is surely essential to dealing with the problem?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I know there have been discussions of this problem among various countries, but I cannot answer as to what results seem to be forthcoming. We do realize that, apart from the medical and other relief aspects, it is necessary to come to grips with the political problem, but we are not waiting, of course, for the latter to stand in the way while we are helping the refugees in every way we can.

EAST PAKISTAN REFUGEES—ADDITIONAL EMERGENCY MEASURES TO COPE WITH PROBLEM

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, while the $2 million to which the Prime Minister referred dealt with the situation as it obtained some time ago, in view of the fact that a new emergency has arisen, with some five million refugees now in India and the outbreak of cholera in Calcutta which could have disastrous consequences, is the Canadian government taking any immediate emergency measures in addition to the supply of vaccine, which I understand is being flown there today, in order to help India to cope with this monumental problem which has suddenly been thrust upon it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are working through the World Health Organization and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees who are co-ordinating relief assistance with the Indian government. I repeat that the federal government indicated it was prepared to assist to the tune of $2 million. The way in which this will be spent depends on the co-ordination possibilities which are required. It is apparently and obviously a very difficult task to co-ordinate relief on such a scale and under such political conditions, but we are doing it through the United Nations agencies.

Canadians have also been very helpful. OXFAM has contributed $10,000 for general relief expenditure and has indicated its intention to provide up to $140,000 for a field medical unit. Canadian Mennonites have provided $30,000 and an additional $35,000 has been pledged. The United Church has contributed $25,000 and the Anglican church $10,000 for field services.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I appreciate that the information is of interest to the House but perhaps this is the kind of detailed information which might more appropriately be provided to the House on motions.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the enormous problem that appears to exist and the very distinct possibility, if not probability, of a tremendous calamity taking place, is the government of Canada taking any steps in conjunction with world organizations to really assess what needs to be done there to prevent a catastrophe of astronomical proportions taking place? Will the Prime Minister not agree that while the approaches he has mentioned are very estimable, something on a much larger scale in the form of a much more highly co-ordinated world-wide effort must be organized if we are to face our responsibilities as citizens of this world?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Thank you very much.

Mr. Hees: That was not for you, Pierre.

Mr. Bell: You are not on a trip now.

Mr. Trudeau: The government has indicated to the government of India that it has experts available if it needs experts to help, as the Leader of the Opposition just said, assess the situation. But the opinion of everyone is that the situation now at this stage has been fairly well assessed and for the moment the needs are well known. It is a matter of meeting these needs, and Canada is contributing in meeting these needs in co-operation with others in the way I have just said.

QUEBEC—FINANCIAL DIFFICULTIES OF SOMA—BANKRUPTCY OF AUTOMOBILES MANIC LIMITED—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL AID

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of economic development.

Considering the difficult situation in which the Soma plant—la Société de Montage Automobile Soma Inc.—finds itself as well as the bankruptcy of Automobiles Manic Ltée—maker of Canadian cars—has the minister been consulted, or has he been requested to provide financial assistance to prevent the closure of this company or to improve the situation in which the Soma finds itself?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the name of my department is the Department of Regional Economic Expansion.

There have been discussions between my department and Manic company and we have awarded them an extremely generous grant. Unfortunately, they still have financial problems. I know that the provincial government is especially interested in that case and I hope there will be a solution. As for me, I can hardly do more regarding financial assistance since there would then be disparity in relation to the invested capital.

As for the Soma plant, Mr. Speaker, I shall inquire about its present situation.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

OIL COMPANY PRICE INCREASES—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO REQUIRE COMPLIANCE WITH RESTRAINTS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the report handed to the government some time ago by the Prices and Incomes Commission to the effect that four major Canadian oil companies have been in violation of the government's price restraint program, is it the intention of the government to take steps in the near future to require these companies to comply with these price restraints?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of this question on behalf of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. As this report was made to the government, not to the minister but to the government, some time ago and obviously has been discussed, according to all reports, extensively by the cabinet, can the Prime Minister not give a report to the House now in view of the fact that the government's action or lack of action in this regard will have a considerable effect on any possible price restraint program the government may have in mind for controlling the present inflation?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the report was made to the government, but the minister who answers to the House in this regard is the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and in this government we like to share our responsibilities.

Mr. Hees: You like to duck your responsibility in reporting for the government and you know damn well you do.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON NATO FOREIGN MINISTERS' MEETING

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question. Considering that the NATO council discussions have concluded and as the Secretary of State for External Affairs is not due back in the House for a week, will we be having a statement on motions about the meeting of this body which some of us consider to be rather important?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I apologize, but in the hubbub I did not get the consideration of the question. I do not know what body the hon. member is referring to. Perhaps he would assist me by telling me the body he is talking about.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry he is so detached about NATO which is a fairly important world organization. In light of the fact that the minister is not due back in the House for a week and since the meetings are concluded, will there be before the minister's return a statement in the House on those discussions and Canada's role therein?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DIFFICULTY OF FISHERMEN DISCHARGED BY ACADIAN FISHERIES IN OBTAINING BENEFITS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I had a question I wanted to ask the Minister of Labour but perhaps in his absence I could direct it to his parliamentary secretary. It has to do with the fisheries union situation in the Maritimes. Why have such a large number of fishermen who were fired by Acadian Fisheries prior to the end of March experienced such unusual and prolonged difficulty in establishing benefits at the Unemployment Insurance Commission office in Nova Scotia?

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): On the contrary, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the parliamentary secretary can answer the question briefly he will be allowed to do so, but the hon. member has asked a question in a form which I suggest is not acceptable. He is asking the government to explain why certain things have happened, and a question in those terms is not normally acceptable. Normally it should be replied to by way of a general statement on motions. However, as I have suggested, if the parliamentary secretary can answer briefly he will be allowed to do so by the Chair.

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Speaker, the Unemployment Insurance Commission found claims for 35 workers in this particular matter. Of these, four went off claim, six qualified for seasonal benefits, three qualified for regular benefits, nine qualified for year-round fishing benefits—draggers—and 13 did not qualify because of insufficient contributions. There is a very lively interest on the part of the Unemployment Insurance Commission in seeing that full justice is done these men.

CHEMCELL LIMITED—MEASURES TO PREVENT CLOSING OF MONTMAGNY PLANT

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Would he say whether special steps have been taken to prevent the impending closing of the Chemcell plant in Montmagny which would result in the dismissal of some 200 workers?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I have learned, as the hon. member, of the eventual closing of the Chemcell plant in Montmagny. The company itself has made no request for assistance either to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce or to my department. And the main reason for the shutdown would be a market trend toward knitwear rather than fabrics.

So, Mr. Speaker, since the company has not requested any assistance, I do not see how I could run after it to give it assistance that it has not requested.

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—BREAKDOWN OF GRANTS BY PROVINCES—JOBS CREATED

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. Since the selection of summer programs under the Opportunities for Youth program has now been completed, can the minister tell the House the amount of funds allocated to each province under the program?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have already said that as soon as the complete list of all projects to be approved is ready, it will be tabled here, including the figures on distribution by regions.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Is the minister now in a position to tell the House how many jobs have been created under the program to date?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, once again it would be an approximation since the figures will not be known exactly before the list is completed. Even then we shall not be able to tell how many jobs were created as a secondary effect of the program. But as for the jobs directly created, we shall give figures as precise as possible when I table the complete list of approved projects in the House.

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Would the minister tell us whether the people have been advised in some way that their projects had been approved?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, there are very few approved projects whose approval has not been communicated to their initiators. However, there are a few because, as I have already informed this House, we had to maintain some sort of a "cushion" in order to be able to meet unexpected requirements or situations. Therefore everything has not been completed, but I can say that there are very few projects concerning which the promoters have not been informed.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Montréal-Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary.

If there are few projects left at this time, could the minister say when he expects tabling the final report in the House?

Mr. Pelletier: Very shortly, Mr. Speaker.

BROADCASTING

POLICY ON ISSUANCE OF LICENCES TO AGENTS OF CROWN IN PROVINCES

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, June 3, I asked the Prime Minister whether there had been any change in federal policy on the issuing of broadcasting licences. In view of the Prime Minister's earlier reply to a question this morning relating to social and income security policy, to the effect that all provinces should be treated equally, can the Prime Minister explain the difference and distinction between federal policy in the issuing of broadcasting licences to agents in right of a province, and how that licencing policy applies to educational institutions compared with cablevision stations?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again the Chair will allow the Prime Minister to reply briefly to the hon. member, but when the hon. member invites a member of the government to explain why such and such a situation exists he is really inviting a statement which normally ought to be made on motions. The hon. member at that point is not seeking information but is rather inviting a debate or argument back and forth between himself and the minister responsible. I always hesitate to make these interjections because they take so much time. It might be easier to say nothing and allow the Prime Minister to reply. However, I have again tried to make the point, and I suggest to the Prime Minister that he might reply briefly to the hon. member's question.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is referring to the situation he described in his question some days ago, I understand that the purchase was not by any government, but mainly by insurance companies. Therefore it is a private purchase. As to the matter of licence and permit, there has been none issued. Of course they will appear before the CRTC, as everyone else does, and then we will see what the decision is.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your earlier admonition about argumentative questions, but on a point of order before I come to my supplementary may I point out that questions do become argumentative when answers are perhaps not responsive to earlier questions—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not a point of order, and the hon. member could not know what the reply would be when he asked the question.

Mr. Nowlan: Oh, yes, I did.

[Mr. Pelletier.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nowlan: I did know.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member, in any event, return to the matter and ask a question rather than rise on a point of order.

Mr. Nowlan: I will return to the supplementary, but I know the answer to the question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should understand that he is given the floor for the purpose of asking a question. If we get involved in points of order and questions of privilege we lose quite a bit of time. However, I have no objection to the hon. member asking a supplementary.

Mr. Nowlan: On a question of privilege before I come to the supplementary, Your Honour implied that I was perhaps being a little facetious in saying I knew the answer of the Prime Minister before he gave it. In my original question I deliberately referred to the answer of the Prime Minister on June 3 when he said, among other things;

> I do not believe the sale to which the hon. member refers is in any way an encroachment—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will not allow the hon. member to continue further on a question of privilege or point of order. It is as simple as that. He has been recognized for the purpose of asking a question. He has the same rights as all other members of the House. His right at the present time is to ask a question, and supplementaries if he wants to. I would be quite prepared and delighted to allow him to ask supplementaries.

Mr. Nowlan: I will not pursue the matter at this moment but I thank Your Honour—Your Grace—for the privilege of asking a supplementary. Without trespassing too far, but because this is a most important question which could have been raised on the constitutional issue—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: This is my question, if some of those opposite will listen including, I hope, the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State.

An hon. Member: We are on pins and needles.

Mr. Nowlan: In view of the application now before the CRTC as of May 31, set out in part as an application by Caisse de Dépôt et Placement du Québec—I guess that is the Quebec Deposit and Investment Fund—which under section 4 of the act is set out as an agent of the Crown in the right of the province. Will the Secretary of State please explain to me or to the House how the Prime Minister can say that there has been no encroachment on federal policies on the issuing of broadcasting licences when the directive of his government on June 4, 1970, says that no such licence shall be issued to any agent of the Crown in the right of a province—and I can read the regulations?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I do not see how there could have been any encroachment on the order in council mentioned by the hon. member since no licence has been issued. There has been a private transaction whereby some American interests were purchased by a group of Canadian interests. No licence has as yet been issued. The CRTC merely told the new group of owners it would process their application at the end of June and decide whether a licence will be issued in their favour. There has certainly been no encroachment, since no licence has been issued.

[English]

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the answer of the Secretary of State does the Prime Minister intend to modify or amend the cabinet directive of June 4, under section 27 of the Broadcasting Act, prohibiting the issuing of broadcasting licences to agents of the Crown in right of a province, which it was declared on June 4 could not be done?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, why should we amend it, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Nowlan: On a supplementary, Mr. Speaker, partly because of the answer of the Prime Minister who stated earlier that all provinces should be treated on a basis of equality, by this directive of June 4, 1970, education institutions in Ontario, Alberta and Saskatchewan were eliminated—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member will recognize at this point that we are debating the issue as between the hon. member and the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State, and this is what I was humbly trying to suggest earlier should not be done. If the hon. member has a supplementary he might ask it now, and then I will have to go to other hon. members who are seeking the floor.

AGRICULTURE

SEIZURE BY QUEBEC INSPECTORS OF EGGS FROM OTHER PROVINCES

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of reports of action taken by government inspectors in Quebec who have raided food stores and removed eggs from the shelves which they alleged were imported from other provinces, has the minister been in consultation with the Minister of Agriculture of Quebec in order to discuss this action which is rather unprecedented?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have not discussed with the Minister of Agriculture of Quebec the legality or otherwise of this action. What I have discussed with him and with other Ministers of Agriculture are ways and means by which we can avoid this happening again, or indeed escalating. I would hope the House would find it possible to respond to the request that has been made in that regard.

Mr. Gleave: In view of these new developments in the chicken and egg war, is the Department of Agriculture undertaking a crash research program in order to develop a new type of hen that will lay eggs identifiable as to the province of origin?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Olson: No, Mr. Speaker.

AUTOMOBILES MANIC LIMITED—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO USE OF FEDERAL GRANTS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the hon. Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Having told me earlier that generous grants had been paid to Automobiles Manic Ltée, I ask him whether he intends to investigate the matter any further in order to determine whether some unscrupulous persons might not possibly have "pocketed" these federal government grants?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): No, Mr. Speaker, because had this occurred the matter would by now have been brought to court. We did investigate but not concerning problem such as that.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

NUMBER OF APPLICATIONS IN APRIL

Mr. Colin D. Gibson (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour. As the matter of unemployment is urgent, can the energetic and able Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Horner: I'm glad you woke up, Rip Van Winkle.

[Translation]

Mr. Gibson: You could perhaps understand if you would listen.

[English]

Can the parliamentary secretary inform the House if applications for unemployment insurance increased or decreased in the month of April?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have a short reply to this question. Official figures have not yet been released but indications are that there were approximately 40,000 fewer claimants on benefits at the end of April than in the month previously and a marked reduction in initial claims received.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Later:]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour. Can he tell the House how much of the 40,000 reduction in those getting unemployment insurance benefits was due to people going back to work and how much was due to the fact that people ran out of unemployment insurance benefits?

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, the official figures have not yet been released—

Mr. Hees: Just the political figures.

Mr. Perrault: —but of the encouraging reduction in total of 40,000 fewer active claimants very few of them at that time of the year, could be expected to be off benefits because their benefits had been exhausted. There is an encouraging reduction in the number of initial claims received. Indeed, I know the opposition—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that this is debate between the parliamentary secretary and the hon. member asking the question.

FISHERIES

ACCEPTANCE OF CANADIAN POSITION RESPECTING BAN ON TAKING SALMON ON HIGH SEAS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. The minister has stated that the government has made known its views on deep sea salmon fishing at the annual meeting of the International Commission for the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries. Would the minister indicate whether all countries, except Denmark, accept Canada's position on banning the taking of salmon on the high seas?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, we requested a 20 per cent annual reduction in the Danish catch. Four countries finally voted against maintenance of the Danish vessel quota including the United States and the U.S.S.R.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister tell the House whether Canada's position, as placed before the ICNAF meeting in Halifax, on general conservation of the Atlantic fisheries resources met with any degree of success?

Mr. Davis: I would say yes, Mr. Speaker. We are certainly hopeful that the next law of the sea conference in 1973 will produce a total ban on all high seas fishing for salmon.

BOOK PUBLISHING—FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO FIRM OF McCLELLAND AND STEWART

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. Last Friday I asked the Prime Minister to give Parliament information on whether the federal government was invited to participate in financial assistance to McClelland and Stewart, the publishing house. The Prime Minister informed us that the Secretary of State brought the matter to the federal cabinet some time ago—

An hon. Member: Pierre Berton is going to buy them out.

Mr. Lewis: —and later said he would prefer that the Secretary of State tell us what he communicated to the provincial government of Ontario. Perhaps the Secretary of State could do that now.

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have informed the Ontario government that the matter was under consideration by the federal cabinet and that no final decision had yet been reached. This is the only information I can give the hon. member today, because I think the decision will be taken only this week.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Could the Secretary of State inform the House when the invitation from the Ontario government was received, how long the cabinet has been stewing over this relatively simple although very important problem and how soon, before McClelland and Stewart goes underground or is sold to Americans, the federal government may reach a decision?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I shall be very happy to provide the hon. member with a complete schedule when I have had time to draw it up. It will be difficult, however to define what advising the federal government is, and if this can be done just by a phone call or if a more formal letter must be expected. But I also wish to point out before resuming my seat that the whole problem of Canadian book publishing was examined by the federal government and by my department in particular when we met publishers from across the country as early as January. But I think that the hon. member will not quarrel with me over my statement that a policy cannot be established on so sensitive a matter in a few days.

OVERSEAS STUDENT EXCHANGE PROGRAM—APPLICATIONS RECEIVED AND APPROVED

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether he can now answer the question I asked on Thursday as to how many applications have actually been approved by the countries concerned with regard to the international student summer employment exchange program?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I am obtaining that figure for the Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT, OBJECTS, POWERS, CAPITALIZATION, ETC.

The House resumed, from Friday, June 4, consideration of Bill C-219, to establish the Canada Development Corporation, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose on Friday, motions Nos. 3, 4 and 5 were under consideration. Is the House ready for the question on motion No. 3?

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, the amendment we are discussing at this stage of the bill will result in the deletion of paragraph (b) of subclause 2 of clause 6. It is a rather interesting amendment and the reason our party has proposed it is the fact that the clause now in the bill indicates that the Canada Development cannot invest in any company with less than $1 million worth of capital. The deletion of this paragraph would allow the corporation to invest in corporations with less than $1 million worth of capital. We think this is rather important.

To begin with, we feel it should be at the discretion of the directors to check into any operation. I point out that frequently these operations start in a small way and have trouble getting off the ground. They might not have $1 million in capital when the CDC is ready to invest. We feel that this restriction should be withdrawn. There is no doubt that small companies need help most of all and we will find quite frequently that if we cannot get assistance for them from the CDC they will probably remain small or even go under. It is in this particular field that the CDC could do a great deal of good. If these small operations cannot get some assistance from the Canada Development Corporation, where are they to get the money to expand?

I point out to the House again that the amendment also bars the CDC from starting a new industry based on a particular resource. I think this is wrong. One of the main objectives of a development corporation should be to look into the resource industries of this nation and see if it is not possible to have more fabrication of raw materials take place within our own country.

At this time I should like to refer to one or two instances in my province of British Columbia. There is a fair amount of copper mining in the province, yet we find that all the copper concentrates are shipped out of the province. It seems to me that this is an opportunity for the CDC to investigate and to see if there is not some possibility of having more fabrication of this particular raw material take place within the province of British Columbia. It seems ridiculous for these concentrates to leave Canada. Most of them go to Japan where the job-intensive industries are based as far as the fabrication of copper concentrates is concerned. It appears that the clause now in the bill would bar the setting up of an industry based on this particular source of raw material.

I have made this point before and I will make it again. For every job made available for a Canadian worker in the extraction of copper ore, the raw material necessary for the concentrates, many jobs are made available in those industries which undertake the fabricating of the raw material. It would help if we could even establish a copper smelter. There is sufficient ore in British Columbia to justify the establishment of a copper smelter. That, I believe, is where emphasis should be placed. We ought to reach into this field and provide more jobs for Canadian workers. We need only look at the unemployment figures in this nation to see the trouble we are in through our lack of secondary fabricating industries. We must take a more positive attitude toward the processing of resources within our own country.

Why should we stop at a copper smelter? Why not fabricate copper ingots in this country? There are tremendous sales potentials in Canada for copper wire which is relatively simple to manufacture. Here, again, is where the CDC could enter into the economic picture of Canada. It ought to move into this field and encourage the setting up of industries similar to the ones I have suggested. For example, it should encourage the manufacturing of copper wire which, as I said earlier, is relatively simple to produce. It could also become involved in the manufacture of copper pipe and related products. The farther down the line you go the more job intensive these industries become. That is the sort of emphasis we want to see with respect to an organization such as the Canada Development Corporation. We think it ought to invest in developments of this type.

May I draw to the attention of hon. members another raw material, again found in British Columbia—asbestos. There is a whole region around Cassiar where asbestos is found. However, every pound of asbestos mined is shipped from British Columbia to various countries throughout the world. Some of it even goes to countries in Africa which some of us say are backward. African countries fabricate some of the asbestos that we ship from British Columbia. This is utter nonsense. If other countries can fabricate materials for their own use and for sale elsewhere, it is obvious that asbestos products ought to be fabricated in British Columbia and in other parts of Canada where the raw material is produced. Here is a role which the CDC ought to attempt to fill.

This is why we urge that paragraph (b) of subclause 2 of clause 6 be deleted. We feel this would eliminate a very unfair provision which seeks to limit investment by the corporation to firms with more than $1 million in capital. The two examples I have cited to the House, copper and asbestos, show what can be done if we have the will to do what is necessary and the determination to insist on the setting up of small or medium-sized industries in Canada to fabricate some of the raw materials found in our own country. I contend, and the members of my group have been pressing this point for a long time, that unless we insist on more fabrication within Canada, there will be a large mass of unemployed with us for many years to come. I urge hon. members to take another look at this clause and to accept the amendment we have offered to the House for the deletion of that particular paragraph.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the amendment proposed by my colleague on Friday. It seems to me that this bill has had a longer period of gestation, a longer period of pregnancy, than any bill which has been considered in the history of the Canadian Parliament. The proposal to establish a Canada Development Corporation was brought forward by the Liberal party in the election of 1962. It was included in virtually every throne speech that has been made since that time. Nothing was done to bring down the bill and nothing was done to implement the idea despite promises contained in throne speeches and in the speeches of men like Hon. Walter Gordon, the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), former Prime Minister Lester Pearson and the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). As I say, nothing was done to implement the idea, for reasons that are fairly obvious to anyone who has thought about the question. Nothing was done because the Liberal party and the Liberal government did not believe that such a corporation was necessary.

The Liberal party has indicated in speeches, in its policies for development and in its tax programs that it believes in the principle of the continental development of Canadian resources. If the objective is a policy involving the continental development of resources, be they oil, gas, copper, zinc, nickel or asbestos—the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) referred to asbestos—it does not matter whether the companies developing these resources are owned by Canadian, American, German or Japanese corporations. It does not matter whether these products are taken out of the ground and shipped in their unrefined state to some other country or whether the processing of the copper, nickel, zinc or iron ore, or of gas and oil through the establishment of a petrochemical industry, is undertaken in Canada. As I say, that does not matter, and that is why there was a hiatus of almost ten years between the idea of a corporation and the implementation in this form of that idea.

We of the New Democratic Party first proposed the establishment of such a corporation or of such a fund, if you like, at the founding convention of our party in 1961. We did not propose the establishment of such an organization simply because we wanted another mutual fund—and I will talk about that later. There are already some very successful mutual funds in the country. We thought of this organization in terms of it using Canadian money to develop the resources of Canada in such a way as to provide jobs for Canadians. We wanted it to develop Canadian resources, particularly in traditional slow-growth areas such as the Maritimes, parts of western Canada and eastern Quebec where, for a variety of reasons, the people have not benefited from the substantial and rapid development of Canadian resources and Canadian industries. We proposed the establishment of such an organization because we believed that only a publicly-owned corporation could bring the benefits of such developments to all the people of Canada.

All our reasons for proposing this kind of development are being consciously or unconsciously ignored in the proposals made by the government. From reading the bill and listening to the government spokesmen, all that is really proposed is another massive giveaway to Canadian and, more important, foreign corporations that have benefited so much from the wealth of Canada which ought to belong to all Canadians.

The Canada Development Corporation, as proposed by the government, will not accomplish any of the ends it ought to accomplish. The minister has repeated ad nauseam that it will be required by law to invest in companies which make a profit. That being the case, it will not be able to invest in the establishment of industries in slow growth areas where the chances of making a profit are smaller than in the area from Windsor to Hamilton and Toronto. By government direction, there will be a further infusion of funds into those areas which have had the highest and fastest rate of growth in the past 25 years. As these companies are required to make a profit, the corporation will not help the slow-growth provinces. I am not too critical of what the slow-growth provinces have done. In their desire to improve employment opportunities, these provinces have invested large sums of money in companies which are likely never to make a profit. As they are not likely to make a profit, the Canada Development Corporation will not be able to invest in them.

I wish to give one example in my own province. Under the aegis of the former Conservative government of Manitoba, there was a proposal to establish a pulp and paper mill at The Pas, Manitoba. The corporation, Churchill Forest Industries, was established. To date more than $100 million has been invested in that company. In order to induce that company to come to Manitoba, tremendous concessions were made. The company was given the right to cut timber in a very large percentage of the total area of Manitoba. They were given this right with the condition that the fees they would pay for cutting timber would be substantially less than those which any other company in the province has had or will have to pay.

This company is not yet fully in operation. The bulk of the $100 million which the company has received has come from the people of Manitoba, through the government of that province, by direct grants and loans at subsidized rates of interest. Hon. members who question my judgment should read the book recently published by the associate editor of the Financial Post, certainly not a very radical organization, which deals with the ramifications of this development and others. It is likely that this company will never make a profit. The losses will be carried by the people of Manitoba who have put up all the real capital which has gone into the corporation. If, on the other hand, there are profits, and this is very unlikely, these will go to the promoters who, according to the associate editor of the Financial Post, have not put much, if any, cash into this project.

This is one of half a dozen illustrations which the associate editor of the Financial Post deals with in his book. I have used it to show that the prospect of this company making any profits is so small that, by the terms of the bill, the Canada Development Corporation will be precluded from investing any money in it. Despite the social benefits to be derived by the people of Manitoba, particularly the native people of northern Manitoba of whom there are a large number in the vicinity of The Pas, the government and the people of Manitoba will not be able to get any money from the Canada Development Corporation because it is not likely that this will be a profitable corporation.

When speaking during the debate on second reading of this bill I used the example of the steel mill at Sydney. This mill consistently lost money when it was privately owned. It was taken over by the government of Nova Scotia. With a high rate of unemployment in Nova Scotia, the government could not contemplate closing the mill with the consequent loss of several thousand jobs. There has been a fantastic change since the government of Nova Scotia took over this mill. The steel mill is making money. It is manufacturing products for which there is a ready market in Canada and other countries. The company is now employing more people than when the Conservative government of Nova Scotia took it over. However, the provision in this bill, which requires that a company in which the Canada Development Corporation invests must either be making a profit or show that it can make a profit, would preclude the Canada Development Corporation from investing in this steel mill which was taken over from Dosco and is being operated as a publicly-owned corporation.

There is another serious defect in this bill. We now have a large number of profitable Crown corporations which are very important to this country. I wish to mention some of them: Polymer Corporation, Eldorado Nuclear Corporation, Northern Transportation Corporation, Air Canada and the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation. These corporations which belong to the people of Canada earn profits that accrue to the benefit of all the people of Canada, and what the minister is proposing, what is implicit in the bill before us is that some or all of them should be turned over to the Canada Development Corporation.

The government also proposes that the corporation shall be a joint enterprise carried on between it and private enterprise. To the extent that private capital is invested in the corporation and to the extent that private investors will derive benefits in the form of dividends or earnings which are plowed back into the corporation, the benefits derived from existing Crown corporations or others which may be taken over in the future are removed from the people of Canada as a whole. In other words, a gift is made of them to that very small number of Canadian citizens, estimated at 7 per cent, who will be able to invest in the Canada Development Corporation. Again, what the government proposes to do is to help those who have already profited most from the development and expansion of this country.

Not only does the bill discriminate against the people of Canada generally in the way I have shown, but it discriminates specifically and directly against the small businessman, against the new, aggressive, young entrepreneur who has an idea for developing an industry which might provide employment. It discriminates directly against that kind of person because it provides that the corporation shall not invest in companies which possess assets amounting to less than $1 million. Surely the kind of person to whom I have referred is the man we should be seeking to encourage by providing capital where necessary and where such a course is justifiable. Surely we should help to get him established. But what the government says in this bill is that people who really need help may not be helped. What this bill sets out to do is to assist the giant corporations, Canadian and foreign, which have already benefited so greatly from our policies in terms of investment and in terms of tax concessions.

I hope the government will give fresh consideration to what it is proposing to do even at this late date in light of the speech made to the Canadian Economics Association by the former Minister of Communications, the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans). I refer to the speech he made last week in St. John's, Newfoundland. The Toronto Star reported that when the hon. member for Duvernay concluded his speech to some 300 or more of the top economists in the country something almost unheard of happened—he was greeted with a standing ovation, something which economists do not usually accord to speakers. I assume that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and his parliamentary secretary have had an opportunity to read that speech. I do not believe I was the only Member of Parliament who received a copy of the speech in his mail box. The subject which the hon. member raised concerned taxation and the manner in which our tax system works. I realize this is not a budget debate, Mr. Speaker, but the conclusions which are drawn—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have to interrupt the hon. member, his time having expired. He may continue his remarks with the agreement of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Orlikow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly do not have time in which to put on record all the many important points the hon. member for Duvernay made in his speech, but I should like to draw attention to some of the figures he cited which were derived from government publications, from reports made annually under one of our laws which requires both labour unions and corporations to file with the government detailed information on their financial operations.

The hon. member for Duvernay pointed out that in the years between 1965 and 1968 inclusive the metal mining industry in this country recorded book profits of $1,707 million while the income on which it paid taxes was only $222 million. In other words, it paid taxes on only 13 per cent of its profit. I would remind hon. members that these figures relating to profits were submitted to the government by the industry itself, so they are certainly not exaggerated in a way which would bring shame on it. The mineral fuels industry recorded a book profit of $775 million and the income upon which it paid taxes was only $45 million. It paid taxes on 5.7 per cent of its profits. Other mining concerns showed book profits of $374 million and paid tax on a taxable income of only $120 million, 32 per cent of their profits. Manufacturing industry as a whole showed book profits of $12,745 million and paid taxes on $8,052 million, or 63 per cent. Look at the difference—only 13 per cent for metal mining and 63 per cent for manufacturing. The retail trade recorded profits of $1,620 million and paid taxes on 90 per cent amounting to $1,445 million.

If we look at book profits and taxable income by size of corporation we notice some very significant things. Companies that had profits of less than $1 million in 1968 had book profits of $809 million and paid taxes on 76 per cent of those profits, namely on $612 million. Companies that had profits of $5 million to $25 million had average book profits of $1,265 million and paid taxes on only 64 per cent of those profits, namely on $810 million. Companies that had over $475 million profits had book profits of $4,145 million and paid taxes on only 47 per cent of their taxable income, namely $1,960 million. In other words, our taxation system is already designed to benefit the larger corporations which more and more are foreign owned.

What do the Minister of Finance and the government of Canada propose to do with the Canada Development Corporation? This is a bill which again benefits in the main the large corporations since corporations with assets of less than $1 million are excluded from its provisions. Once more money invested by the people of Canada will in the initial stages, as a result of deliberate government policy decision, go to those corporations that already have benefited so markedly from Canadian taxation policy.

It seems to me that this cannot be justified on the basis of equity, on the basis of justice, or on the basis that it is an attempt to deal with large-scale unemployment in this country. Surely we ought to be trying to encourage the smaller companies in Canada which, as the hon. member for Duvernay pointed out in his speech, are much more labour-intensive rather than the larger companies that are so markedly capital-intensive. We should be helping the smaller companies who need help the most. For the money they receive they will employ more people than the large companies, which already have the money that they need, are largely capital-intensive, and as a result do not employ as many people.

I suggest that we should reverse our direction and direct, either by law or by regulation, that the bulk of this money should go to public investment, either in co-operation with the provinces or the municipalities, or with co-operatives or small private companies. If we adopt the proposals of the government we are doing the exact opposite of what we ought to be doing. Our amendments Nos. 3, 4 and 5 are designed to reverse the order of priority and to put the emphasis where it ought to be put, namely, in the public sector, with small businesses rather than large businesses. I therefore urge hon. members regardless of party to vote for the amendment proposed by this party.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words regarding the Canada Development Corporation and the amendments that are before the House. Never before have we seen a bill about which so many people have so many different ideas and concepts regarding what the bill will and could do. Some people see this legislation as the way to buy back Canada. Some feel it is a way for Canadians to invest in Canada, as if there were now no other way available. Others feel it is a way for the Canadian government to help some of the small industries and smaller corporations. Still others feel it is a way in which we can further develop our mining industry and the secondary manufacturing industry that springs from the mining industry.

We have had on the books for a long time now the legislation setting up the Industrial Development Bank which is prepared to lend money to industry anywhere in Canada at the going rate of interest in order to help and encourage development of industries within Canada. There has been in operation now for the last three or four years the Regional Development Incentives Act under which grants are given to encourage industry in various regions of Canada. Significantly the Department of Regional Economic Expansion does not draw the line regarding who will get these grants; it makes grants to any company that feasibly can apply, be it an American, Belgian or French corporation, and in some cases it may be a small Canadian concern. However, in most cases the money is lent to foreign concerns who wish to develop manufacturing industry in one form or another in Canada.

If we as Canadians really want to see Canadians take a greater part in the development and ownership of Canada, the onus is on the government to direct all its energies to this end instead of presenting legislation that encompasses the idea and concept of ownership but very little else. For Canadians wishing to invest there is CPI, Canadian Pacific Investments, which is encouraging investment by Canadians in Canada. I am sure there are many other large firms that are, in essence, conglomerates spreading their investment portfolios over many aspects and sectors of the Canadian economy.

We are told that the Canadian government wants to ensure there will be resource development. The government wants to see a strong manufacturing sector and Canadian identity connected with our communications industry. How will the Canada Development Corporation establish and maintain these objectives? As I have pointed out on a number of occasions, the Canada Development Corporation idea and concept is not a new one. In 1963, in his budget speech to the House, the then Minister of Finance proposed the idea. It was soundly thumped, one could almost say, by the investment corporations throughout Canada and the then Minister of Finance dropped the idea. I think he dropped it at that time because at the same time he also brought in some penalty clauses regarding investment in foreign companies and in foreign companies operating in Canada. These he had to withdraw, so at the same time he dropped the idea of a Canada Development Corporation, feeling, I suppose, that Canadians would be reluctant to invest in a company designed, perhaps, to buy Canada back, to be a buyer of last resort. Or perhaps he felt it might be taken as being a buyer of last resort.

We are told that the Canada Development Corporation will not be a buyer of last resort, that it could hardly have helped out in the case of Dosco in Sydney, Nova Scotia. In that case the provincial government, with the help of the federal government, stepped in as a buyer of last resort and took over a failing steel industry. The takeover, according to latest reports, has been quite successful. But the Canada Development Corporation would not have done this because its main objective will be, we are told, to make a profit. It is actually well understood that if it does not make a profit it will not induce or encourage very many Canadians to invest. In the initial stages the Canadian government is to be the major shareholder, and we are told will no doubt remain the major shareholder throughout the life of the corporation. It may reduce its percentage of investment to 10 per cent, but it will not likely reduce it further.

The idea or concept is for the Canada Development Corporation to create a pool of capital and of entrepreneurial skill to encourage Canadian interest. How successful will this be? Will it be influenced by national interests to purchase Canada back and maintain a place for Canadians to invest in Canada, or will it really be guided by its interest in making a profit at the expense perhaps of not being a buyer of last resort?

It is interesting to debate this question with people across the country who have great hopes and aspirations for the CDC. Many of them actually view it as a buyer of last resort and as a corporation which will allow Canadians to invest in Canada, thus maintaining a high degree of Canadian content in our industries. It is interesting to note what the Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Finance said as recorded at page 6391 of Hansard for June 4. He was referring to shareholders and directors who will be appointed from the public sector. He said, meaning the government:

> Thus, it will always be in a position to exercise the degree of influence on the over-all policies of the corporation—

What will be the government's wish? Let us suppose this corporation does not get off the ground too efficiently and the directors find they must invest in an enterprise that is not wholly Canadian. Let us suppose they want to invest in some other area which is not readily going to maintain Canadian content, or that they would not buy a company which in essence was failing. Canadians across the country might well get into the field of politics and apply this particular question to these great hopes. Then the government would have to exercise its influence on the Canada Development Corporation. The corporation would then have to invest in a failing company, whether it be McClelland and Stewart of the publishing industry or a manufacturing company in another part of Canada.

We can foresee a great deal of difficulty keeping the Canada Development Corporation out of the political sphere and solely in the investment sphere. If it is not kept out of the political sphere, shrewd Canadians will be reluctant to invest in the Canada Development Corporation which may have to bend to the wishes of the people prior to an election and use Canadian investors' money in an area which will not show a satisfactory profit.

I should like to think Canadians are shrewd investors and want to place their money where it will bring the highest return. The Canada Development Corporation does not lend itself that readily to fulfilling every aspect of that idea. It will be tied down by a heavy investment influenced by the Canadian government through directors. It will then be driven out of the private sector. As the Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Finance said, the government will always be in a position to occupy a degree of influence over the policies of the corporation. This will make the corporation inoperative in the sense that it will really never have the opportunity to make Canadian investments. The government will always maintain dominance in respect of investment capital in the corporation.

There is another aspect of the bill which is distasteful in many respects. The corporation is to invest in companies which already have $1 million in capital investment. This is a young country with great potential. If one looks at the corporation registries across Canada one will see that approximately 82 per cent of our corporations have a net taxable income of less than $35,000. This gives some idea of the large number of small corporations in Canada. Some of them are very sound and could use a great deal more capital investment.

I do not know why, when the sponsors of the bill were so anxious that the Canada Development Corporation should invest in and encourage investment in Canada they should limit investment to corporations with $1 million or more in capital. We must remember that our manufacturing industries, our communications industries and, for that matter, resource industries started out with a lot less than $1 million in capital investment. It is beyond me why this corporation should be so limited. If the directors possess sound investment knowledge and use as their sole measure the amount of profit to be made, the corporation should be in a position to invest in smaller companies. Many Canadians feel that the corporation will in fact be a buyer of last resort. If the corporation is to be geared to create Canadian content, it should be able to invest in companies no matter what their financial size.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): One o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair. The House will resume at two o'clock this afternoon.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, before the adjournment at one o'clock, I was dealing with some of my fears about the Canada Development Corporation which Bill C-219 would set up. I should like to deal with one more point before I conclude. The Canada Development Corporation, as I understand it, will be a Crown corporation which will be in competition with private industry. Yet, it will be run and managed by directors appointed from the private sector who will be knowledgeable, I would assume, about investments within Canada. I wonder whether the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) or his parliamentary secretary could inform the House where they will find unbiased, neutral and knowledgeable people in the industrial world who will direct the Canada Development Corporation without any tendency to slant the direction toward their own particular interests.

Such people may be directors of half a dozen other companies. If one studies the directorship stratosphere within our society, one can readily see that a director of a chartered bank in Canada can also become a director of Canada Packers, one of the largest meat packing companies in Canada, and half a dozen other companies. Naturally, a bank has a tendency to lend in the direction in which its directors would perhaps encourage it to lend. How will the Canada Development Corporation be run in competition with private enterprise when its directors are appointed from the private sector and are more than likely men who either directly or indirectly have investments in large corporations which are operating in Canada? It is obvious that not only will the Canada Development Corporation be prohibited by the act from investing in small corporations but will also tend to make investments along the lines suggested by its directors and along the lines of investments with which they may personally be directly or indirectly involved. I say that without doubt, for this reason, the CDC will be enticed into investing in large corporations, not small corporations, which may not be in dire need of additional investment capital. When I say "dire need", I mean need which could not be met by other means.

Under the Income Tax Act, 82 per cent of the corporations operating in Canada are classed as small corporations. Many of them are in need of investment capital but will be prohibited from receiving any investment by the CDC. Will a Crown corporation operate more efficiently in a conglomerate field than a private concern? I doubt whether it can. This will be nothing more than a Canadian mutual development fund, and sometimes such funds run into heavy costs hiring professional and entrepreneurial skill.

For these and other reasons, I believe many Canadians will be sadly disappointed at the over-all effect of the corporation in attempting to promote a strong manufacturing sector and encouraging strong resource development. They will even be sadly disappointed at the lack of success in setting up a truly Canadian communications industry. I believe all these things could be much more readily and easily accomplished through better taxation policies which would encourage Canadians to invest in Canada and which would leave Canadians with some surplus profit to invest in Canada.

The taxation and economic policies of today and yesterday have deprived many Canadians of the resources they otherwise might have had to invest in their country. They have resulted in large scale unemployment. People have little money to invest in the manufacturing sector. This is a cause of much of the unemployment. This legislation, and the proposed CDC will do little to rectify it.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I support this amendment because one must assume that if the CDC is to do an effective job and contribute to the real growth of the Canadian economy, this clause as it stands inhibits any real choice of action on the part of the corporation. One factor which we should consider with respect to such a corporation is the importance of research and development.

Recently, I talked to an engineer who is also a scientist. I have no reason to doubt what he told me when he said that the reason for the lack of employment opportunities for many university graduates is that we do not have research and development establishments in Canada to give scope to their knowledge and training, incidentally training in which we have invested a great deal of the taxpayers' money. Unless we have trained people who spend their time on new developments and innovations, we will not share properly in the technological advance which is part and parcel of the developing societies of the world. Who is to say that all of these innovations, all of the action will take place in corporations which have, let us say, $1 million or more invested in them? I recall that Canadian Co-operative Implements in Winnipeg started with a great deal less money than that. It developed a farm machinery industry which was peculiar to Canada, in fact peculiar to western Canada. It developed machines that were suitable for use in western agriculture. I could name other such firms in Yorkton, Saskatchewan, in Calgary and in Regina.

Recently we spent a lot of money on the Barber Commission investigating what could or should be done to lower farm machinery costs, and as a result lower production costs. One of the recommendations made by the commission was that we should import farm machinery that had been manufactured more cheaply in countries outside Canada, indeed in countries outside the North American continent. In Canada, we have a grain production area which, on occasion, has been labelled the breadbasket of the world. Does it not give one pause to wonder why we have to import machines to do the cultivation and the harvesting of the crops in that area? Ever since the Prairies came into production at the turn of the century, we have been producing food in that area. Does it not tell us something about the lack of capital, the lack of development and of research in that area when today we are told we should import the machinery to produce that food? If the people in charge of this development corporation are to do something about this situation, they must be willing to assist small businesses that are prepared to go ahead and develop farm machinery manufacturing within Canada.

I expect there is some reason for this clause, but surely this government agency must be prepared to take the same risks as are taken by individual businesses. In the development of a new product or new methods, nothing is certain; sometimes you succeed and sometimes you fail, but if we are to develop this kind of corporation we must take the risk of success as well as failure because both attend upon the endeavours of human beings.

We can look beyond the farm machinery question to developments in other parts of the country and, I am sure, find the same need for innovation. New concepts can be carried to completion giving Canadians a larger share in the ownership of the manufacturing industries and in the development of the country. This should surely be the prime objective of a Canadian development corporation, to increase the productivity of Canada and the share of ownership of these companies by Canadians. If it is to be a corporation to gather together what is already here without providing initiative, its success is questionable; we could even ask whether it should be done at all. We do not need to spend time and effort gathering everything we have already developed into one package so that those in charge can say, "Look how much we have done." It is in the area of new projects and new ideas of development that the Canada Development Corporation would be able to make an important contribution to the economy.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I have my doubts about the suggestion that we in this Parliament should form a Canada Development Corporation. I have doubts for five specific reasons which I shall now state. Since I do not propose to make another intervention in this debate, I hope that if my argument takes me a little past the time allotted my colleagues will be kind enough to remember that I am not really long-winded but would like to state my argument in one piece.

My first reason for being against the concept of the Canada Development Corporation as set forth in the bill before us—I want to make it plain that I am not against another bill that might accomplish the Canadianization of our development—is that conglomerates are not likely to be profitable. We have been told over and over again that profitability is one of the objectives of the Canada Development Corporation. It is not going to prop up ailing industries or take cripples under its wing; it is going to plow ahead with those Crown corporations that have proved successful, not those that have proved over the years that they need money to keep going. I shall advert to this point later.

I think we should consider the successes and failures of conglomerates in our times. When Professor Edward D. Maher of the University of New Brunswick appeared before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs he made reference to an article in the May 9, 1970 issue of Business Week which reads in part:

> Conglomerate managers are now obliged to produce earnings growth from existing operations, and it has become quite obvious that the shrewdness, imagination and gall that make a man an empire builder do not necessarily make him a skilled manager.

I refer anyone who is interested in this question to the longer exposé in Business Week. It simply proves how many disparate things one can gather under the same roof in order to try and run a successful and viable conglomerate, but this may not prosper as much as if the parts were run separately. This leads me to suspect that managerial ability might be found if you can find managers of things in which they have expertise, but that ability is not likely to be found if you suggest that they administer the whole world. My point is that conglomerates are not likely to be as profitable as industries broken down into individual segments.

One of the purposes of this bill is to lump three or four industries under the Canada Development Corporation right from the start. Experience alone should suggest that we in this Parliament exercise great care in voting on this bill. Interesting studies are being carried out by professors and other learned people in universities—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member. He is making a very useful contribution to the debate, but it seems to the Chair that he may be going a bit further than he is entitled to under the particular amendments that are before the House. The hon. member knows that we are at the report stage of the bill and at the present time there are three motions before us for consideration. I might refer to them very quickly. The effect of motion No. 3 would be to change the objectives of the company in the respect that it:

shall be carried out in anticipation of profit and in the best interests of the shareholders as a whole.

The amended clause would read:

and shall be carried out in the best interests of the people of Canada.

The next motion would delete the subclause setting out the objectives of the company which as it stands now has the effect of requiring an investment of at least $1 milion or more. The third motion before the House would change the word "company" to "Canadian nation". While the latitude allowed is fairly wide, I know the hon. member will keep this in mind.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, I thought that my remarks were directed toward the question of whether the objective of the Canada Development Corporation should be profitability and I was dealing with that particular point. If I have misread the three amendments, I have no recourse but to halt my speech right on the spot but it is the one speech I had planned on making. This speech will seek to deal with the question of whether this particular conglomerate Crown corporation, if I may use that expression, is to be profitable or not. I invite Your Honour's direction. If I am not to question the profitability of the corporation or the motives that will lead people to invest in the corporation, I will not say anymore. I am trying to do what I gather my friends to the left were trying to do, question the matter of the profitability of the corporation. That is not the point that should be relevant when considering a corporation of this type. If I am wrong in that, then my speech is over. If I am not wrong, may I quickly come to my first point. Studies suggest that merely because you become larger as a corporation does not mean that you are apt to become more successful.

My second point concerns voting privileges attaching to private shareholders who will venture with the government of Canada and Canada Development Corporation. In this regard, may I quote from the evidence given by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) on May 4, to be found at page 29 of Issue No. 38 of Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. The hon. member for Etobicoke (Mr. Gillespie) asked him whether a 10 per cent government holding would result in effective control. The minister replied:

That is a matter of how one mobilizes the votes. One is in a fairly tenuous position controlling a corporation on 10%, if there really is dissatisfaction with the way the corporation is running. So long as a corporation is running well it might be possible to control a corporation as vast as this on 10%, but if the corporation is messing things up then it is much more difficult, because the other shareholders will mobilize or somebody will mobilize them.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

Paragraph (2)(i) of Schedule I of the amended bill as reported by the Standing on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs reads:

both shareholders are parties to an agreement or arrangement, a purpose of which, in the opinion of the Board of Directors, is to require the shareholders to act in concert with respect to their interests in the company;

The preamble to that subparagraph reads:

For the purposes of these statutory conditions, a shareholder is, except as provided by section 5 of these statutory conditions, deemed to be associated with another shareholder—

I am saying, Sir, since we could not get satisfactory evidence about what the words "act in concert" mean when we were dealing with the problem before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, that we were left up in the air, so to speak. I am afraid, and I think other members of the committee are also afraid, that if shares are sold to the public and any two major shareholders were to go to a meeting and suggest that they were going to question the appointment of directors, the appointment of a president, the appointment of a managing director or of anybody who is really supposed to make the corporation work, they could be met with the objection from the very person they were trying to judge that they were acting in concert. He could say to them, "Aha, you people are acting in concert. You have come here with one particular purpose in mind, and therefore you are out." They would be out of order according to the wording of the schedule.

I do not think anybody would want to associate himself with an enterprise into which he had put money if it were possible for him to be met with that kind of objection. It would not do for people who might raise any objection at all, whether it is valid or not is not material to this argument, to be told that they are out of order because they are acting in concert. For instance, people might raise objections in three specific areas: that they do not like the colour of the chairman's eyes, that they do not like the balance sheet and that they do not like the choice of office boy. Then, because they would be acting in concert on those particular points they would be out of order. I am making that point simply and humbly. The Canadian Chamber of Commerce emphasized it even more, as is indicated by a reference to page 3 of their submission.

Under the heading "Marketability Of Shares" the Canadian Chamber of Commerce submission reads:

Successful public distribution of CDC shares, in the Chamber's view, will depend largely on minimizing the special provisions and restrictions that relate to these shares. It is maintained that provisions of the Bill relating to the acquisition, holding, voting,—

And that word ought to be spelled in capital letters.

—transfer and redemption of shares may constitute insurmountable impediments to satisfactory marketability.

That, Mr. Speaker, is exactly what I think will happen. There will not be so much an abhorence as a great reluctance on the part of the public to invest in CDC shares, especially when they realize that the government has weighted everything in its favour in this bill. I think that I have made my case as strongly as I can with regard to that particular point.

I now come to point No. 3. In his submissions to the committee, the Minister of Finance referred to the taking of chances. he precluded the likelihood of chances being taken, I suggest, by saying:

> Finally, I would like to say a few words about the objective of profitability. Clearly the CDC must operate in a way that will make it an attractive investment vehicle for Canadians. A major objective for the corporation is that its shares should eventually be widely held by Canadians. This objective would soon be undermined if the CDC were expected, in the national interest, to subsidize certain activities for the achievement of essentially social goals.

In a way, I agree with him and in a way I disagree. Suppose, for example, CDC were considering whether to take over Air Canada or Canadian National Railways or the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. CDC would then have to decide whether the objectives of those orgnizations to be taken over would put the corporation into a non-profit position. For instance, that position might be brought about because it was necessary to develop an airport at Yellowknife, or to develop a radio or television service to Labrador, or the like. You can see the awkward position in which the CDC would be put if it were tied forever and a day to the concept of profitability. In this regard, I am sure that I am giving my friends to my left all the comfort in the world. The minister says that, no, the corporation cannot do that because it must make profits. That statement may have hamstrung Canada Development Corporation forever and a day. It may suit the objectives of the corporation to do certain things in one half of a decade, and not to do them in another half of a decade, the consideration being how the economic winds blow. Sir, for that reason I do not think that CDC, under its present set-up, will succeed.

May I put the objections that will preclude the taking of chances in another way. May I quote from the brief which the Toronto and District Liberal Association submitted. That submission, surely, should be gospel to those on the government side of the House, despite the defection of the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Ryan), the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) who at one time was Minister of Transport and the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans) who was Minister of Communications. I quote from page 4 of the original submission:

> What government can go into an election with shares in the national corporation biting the dust?
> —The financial community is inherently skeptical—perhaps with justification—of the concept of a $5.00 widow—and—orphans stock. The CDC should most emphatically not be a pseudo mutual fund. There are already many good Canadian based mutual funds, for the private investor.

The rest of the brief deals with points of esoteric Liberalism that I am sure would be dear to your heart, Sir, and to the hearts of many people in this chamber. Point number three, precluding the taking of chances, means that the corporation would never be able to operate as a viable entity, that is to take chances over a short period in the hope that in the long run it would be able to operate.

I said earlier that I had five objections. I will now deal with objection number four, that is that the aims of the corporation are not really established in the legislation. In this regard, I will quote several witnesses. The first quotation will be from a brief submitted from Mr. D. P. Thomas of Collier Norris and Quinlan Limited. This firm is a member of the Toronto, Montreal and Canadian Stock Exchanges. Their address is 800 Dorchester Boulevard West, Montreal. I quote from the brief submitted by Mr. Thomas:

> It is probably fair to assume that the Government should have at least average success in attracting people of competence. But if the Corporation is to be something of real consequence in Canadian life, then those who are anxious for its creation should establish its philosophy and policies, and not just hope that good managers will do something good with it. Certainly Bill C-219 leaves the whole operation wide open not only in the briefly stated purpose, but also in the statutory powers. Even the best of managers, reading through the Bill would be hard pressed to say exactly what it is he should be doing.

The same point is made, although in a different way, namely, what are we trying to cure, in a brief submitted by Brown Farris and Jefferson Ltd., financial counsellors. I quote from the brief:

> We therefore believe there are opportunities for the CDC to fill now lacking gaps in the Canadian financial scene by
> (a) being a source of large-scale capital for new ventures and expansion purposes as is not presently available in this country other than from foreign sources,
> (b) improve the availability of venture and expansion capital for smaller projects—

That, of course, is ruled out by the clause which deals with the $100 million floor.

> —for which the present sources are either inadequate or are located such that they are unaware of many of the good opportunities outside Eastern Canada or do not have the means of ready contact.
> (c) perform functions often associated with merchant banks, such as the fostering of public issues and providing a non-conflicting underwriting source, and take the lead in providing Canadian financing in an attempt to persuade other Canadian and foreign venture capital institutions to take substantial positions.

One could say "amen" to all of these suggestions. That brief comes close to illustrating one of the problems which we have in Canada, the development of a truly merchant banking system.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I must advise him that his time has expired. The hon. member may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McCleave: I thank my colleagues, Mr. Speaker. My speech will not be half completed, thus necessitating continuing at a future time. I will not abuse the privilege afforded to me.

The point to which I have just referred is contained in a brief submitted by D. Wm. Carr & Associates Ltd.

They suggest that there should be recommended fields of study to determine what should be done and what is being done at the present time. In the six points which they make, they deal with the gaps in the financial structure. I quote:

(i) Study the preconditions for sustained and successful use of venture capital in the structural development of an economy.

(ii) Possible extension of the foregoing study to cover the role of venture capital in capital export for aid and development (precluded by CDC legislation as now drafted).

That refers to the CDC legislation as it was then drafted.

(iii) Study of the present role of the investment company in the Canadian economy; the achievements and problems of Argus, Power Corporation, GIC, Charterhouse, etc.

(iv) Assessment of the present gaps in financing and developmental enterprise which a CDC can fill.

(v) Assessment of the potential impact of a CDC upon the magnitudes and patterns of savings and investment flows within the Canadian capital market.

(vi) Extension of the foregoing study to cover flows of capital into and out of Canada.

Essentially, we are dealing with the problem placed before us by Canadians and Canadian institutions, namely, to determine whether or not we are dealing successfully with the situation by having the CDC.

I wish to read two more quotations from people whose views bolster the point which I have just made. The first is from Ervin John Doak, Ph.D., of the department of economics at Saint Mary's University, Halifax. This is a quotation from comments made on the program "Viewpoint":

—I suggest that the bill presented to Parliament last month to establish the CDC is far too vague to come into law, that it should be improved, first, by establishing explicit goals for the institution, second, by developing explicit criteria for appraising its operations and, third, by establishing procedures that will lead to constant appraisal of its operations.

My fifth and final point is whether Parliament and the public servants of Canada will be able to run an operation as diverse as the CDC should be. In this respect, I quote from the brief submitted by Lafferty, Harwood & Partners Ltd., members of the Montreal and Philadelphia-Baltimore-Washington Stock Exchanges, 110 Beaver Hall Hill, Montreal. This is one of the most interesting submissions which the committee received. This brief quotes from the book "Human Action" by Ludwig von Mises, published by the Yale University Press. The role of the entrepreneur is discussed at page 867 of his treatise. I quote:

Entrepreneurial judgment is one of those things that cannot be bought on the market. The entrepreneurial idea that carries on and brings profit is precisely that idea which did not occur to the majority. It is not correct foresight as such that yields profits, but foresight better than that of the rest. The prize goes only to those dissenters who do not let themselves be misled by the errors accepted by the multitude. What makes profits emerge is the provision for future needs for which others have neglected to make adequate provision.

Before I read the final quotation, I suggest if one looked at the figures of history he would see how well that sort of concept would fit all of them. I quote:

There are no true entrepreneurs in the civil service because they would be frustrated by an environment that necessarily has to respond to a regulated pattern and system.

[Mr. McCleave.]

• (2:50 p.m.)

We surmise there are not true entrepreneurs in the House of Commons—

Imagine that, Mr. Speaker.

—because the entrepreneur does not have the temperament or attitude to work collectively on legislation or matters of broad public interest.

The concept of the Canada Development Corporation on paper is very rational in terms of engineering and planning concepts. However, if you examine carefully the different organizations which have been set up by provincial governments to directly intervene in the economy to foster industrial development, you will see that the entrepreneur has moved against these organizations because it is a natural action for him to take. He knows that they cannot respond to the changing environment and therefore they provide him with a means of offsetting his risks. Once he recognizes the motivating characteristics he will anticipate their future moves and derive the benefits from so doing.

So, Mr. Speaker, for these five reasons I must say I shall have to oppose the philosophical concept of the Canada Development Corporation as it is now presented to us, and I shall vote against the bill accordingly.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In accordance with the special order made on Friday, I will put the third motion, that which stands in the name of the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman).

All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75 a recorded division on the proposed motions, group 2, stands deferred. Motions Nos. 4 and 5 stand deferred with motion No. 3.

In accordance with the special order to which I have referred I will now put together, for the purpose of debate, motions Nos. 6 and 7.

Mrs. MacInnis (for Mr. Burton) moved:

That Bill C-219, An Act to establish the Canada Development Corporation, be amended by adding subclause (2) to Clause 12 as follows:

"(2) Directors shall be appointed with regard to providing an adequate representation of different interests in Canadian society including labour and consumers."

Mrs. MacInnis (for Mr. Burton) moved:

That Bill C-219, An Act to establish the Canada Development Corporation, be amended by deleting from subclause (3) of Clause 12 line 12 and substituting the following:

"All members of"

She said: In order to avoid confusion I might explain that our proposal for a new clause 12, would leave the first part where it is, so that the entire clause would read:

(1) Subject to section 86 of the Canada Corporations Act any Canadian citizen is qualified to be a director of the company if he otherwise qualifies under such bylaws as may be made in that regard.

And we propose to add:

(2) Directors shall be appointed with regard to providing an adequate representation of different interests in Canadian society including labour and consumers.

The immediate purpose of that clause is to make sure that there would be on the Corporation a much fairer representation of the different interests in society than this bill would provide. The intent of this bill would be to have such a corporation represent all the economic interests which have been accustomed to deal with these matters in the past. It is our strong feeling that a wide spectrum of Canadian interests should be represented in the Corporation because our long-range aim would be to change the direction of such a Corporation from that which the present bill envisages. We believe that as long as the terms of the present bill are left as they are there would be no change in the direction the Corporation would take.

Our interest in this bill goes back to the occasion on which we introduced the idea at our founding convention ten years ago, the idea of a Canada development fund which later became the Canada Development Corporation. We had definite objectives in mind and it is in line with these objectives that we are putting forward amendments today. We want to see a Corporation definitely planning for the economic and social development of the under-developed parts of Canada. People who live in the Province of Ontario are not unduly worried about development in the rest of the country because they feel that as Ontario goes so goes the rest of Canada. But if you live in parts of Canada other than Ontario, you realize there is uneven economic development in this country and the greater development of Ontario makes for an imbalance not only in trade, in income, and opportunities of various kinds but in our whole social fabric. This results in a lop-sided development which is causing increasing concern as time goes on. We want to see a development corporation planning the development of the economic life across this country because we know this would mean a much more even opportunity for Canadians no matter where they happen to live.

In the second place we want to see a Canada Development Corporation in which the federal government would join with private enterprise in helping to develop industries in the undeveloped parts of this nation in a planned way. We do not hold with the system which the government has carried on for some time of making large subsidies and concessions to large private corporations and hoping for the best. I do not think the best will result. The best may result from the point of view of the corporations but certainly not from the view of the Canadian people surrounding them or the growth of the Canadian people from coast to coast. This is another reason we propose this amendment. We want to see a much better balance in the make-up of the directorate of this corporation.

Another reason we had for advancing our proposition was to help manufacturing. We want a corporation which can help manufacturing industries introduce specialization and help make up for the greater economies in volume which other places in the world have, and particularly some of the large corporate enterprises in the country to the south of us. Instead of this Canada Development Corporation, which we visualized ten years ago when it was not even a glint in the eye of the government, we find that the government, as they so often have done, took the label "Canada Development Corporation" that was on the package and threw away the contents, substituting something very much more to the taste of corporate business in this country. The government is now finding that even corporate business is a little dubious whether this legislation will work to their advantage, but at all events the government is trying to tailor the legislation to the taste of corporate business in this country. Instead of planning to redress the inequalities in this country, we find the government proposing to set up an organization, not a Crown corporation or a public corporation but one under the aegis of private business and which is assisted by the federal government.

We find that the same old narrow motivation of profit making by private shareholders remains intact. In spite of all the changes that are sweeping across the country and causing concern to people in all walks of life, the government is going ahead with the outmoded and increasingly unworkable proposition that the sale motive should be profit making by private shareholders in this country. Worse than that, we find the government, through this bill, throwing in Crown companies under the collective ownership of the Canadian people as an initial nest egg for the Canada Development Corporation. Corporations such as Polymer and others that have been helping the taxpayers of the country are being stolen from the Canadian people and placed within this wholly private company, the Canada Development Corporation.

We are very much opposed to that, Mr. Speaker, particularly in view of the fact that over 90 per cent of the Canadian people have no money at all to invest. I think to be accurate 7 per cent of the Canadian population only will be able to invest in this Canada Development Corporation. For a government that alleges to be looking after the welfare of the Canadian people and which should be planning not only for the immediate period but should be redressing the balance across the country in order properly to develop the underdeveloped areas of the country, and the unequal opportunities which are provided in these underdeveloped areas, we do not consider this legislation good enough.

Other people are also concerned about leaving the CDC entirely in the hands of big business concerns. My leader said the other day he had calculated that the government is paying out in the form of tax concessions to large private companies about $1 billion a year by way of incentive grants, capital grants, research grants, development grants and so on. Once the people in this country get it through their heads what this arrangement means, they will not be happy about it.

I should like to quote the former Minister of Communications, the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans), who made a speech in reference to these tax concessions. I see you are rising to your feet, Mr. Speaker, and I want to assure you it is quite relevant.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member says this quotation is relevant, but I should like her to indicate how it is relevant to the two motions under debate. I ask only because I interrupted an equally excellent speech of the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave), which was really not relevant to the motions under debate. If the hon. member can find relevancy here, I shall be pleased to hear her.

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I shall be delighted to explain the relevancy. I am trying to give reasons for my support of this amendment which proposes that the board of directors shall be composed of people who are representative not merely of the corporate sections of Canadian life but also of consumers, farmers, labour unions and so on. I do not see how I can explain my reasons unless I indicate why we want this amendment. The reason we include other sections of the Canadian economy is to indicate that under the present arrangement the return to the Canadian people from such a corporation would be very lopsided.

I trust I have explained the relevancy to your satisfaction. I think it is of the highest importance to explain why we feel this amendment should be accepted so that sectors of the Canadian economy other than just the business community are included. I shall give my quotation and Your Honour will be the judge of its relevance. The hon. member for Duvernay said:

> Tax exemptions are not easily given up. Large and powerful lobbying groups exist precisely to maintain and expand tax privileges and immunity. But we are not living in 1799 when Pitt introduced the income tax and listed mining and quarries as second on the list of those qualifying for exemptions, after the stipends of ecclessiastics. Nor are we living in 1927 when the U.S. Congress authorized a depletion allowance against a corporate tax rate that was very low. At today's rates, such privileges are grossly discriminatory and lead to overinvestment in the favoured industries and misallocation of resources, as Carter noted.

If Your Honour does not think that relevant, I should like to read something that I know you will regard as completely relevant. This is the very marrow in the bones, as it were, of the argument why we want to change the composition of the board of directors of the CDC. The hon. member for Duvernay went on:

> If the quality of living in Canada is to improve, an increasing proportion of total income should be used to satisfy the social and private needs of Canadians as consumers, not as investors. This expanding demand, with a money supply growing more evenly than in the past, will provide all the incentive that private investment needs.

If we leave this board of directors strictly in the hands of the business community, what hope is there of making sure that an increasing proportion of total income is used to satisfy the social and private needs of Canadians as consumers and not as investors? According to the government's proposal, the board will be composed of people who know how to make sure that the operations of the CDC are conducted in a way to give a return to the investors as such, and that is all. If we are to bring about a result different from this we must see to it that there are other people on the board besides those who represent the investors' point of view. I believe I have proven relevance to the hilt; in fact, I should be very pleased to be shown where I have not been relevant, but it would not be fair to draw Your Honour into a procedural argument at this stage.

The hon. member for Duvernay is not the only one who accepts the motion that we need to plan now for the future as well as the present needs of the people of this country. We need planning to be done by more than the narrow sector of the business community. If we leave it strictly to the business section of the community to do the planning across the country, we will get nothing more than what we have had. We will have little economic development in areas where unemployment is extremely serious, and in which opportunities are very unevenly divided now.

I would point out that the Economic Council, which years ago would have been composed only of economists with perhaps a few government people thrown in, has begun to realize the necessity of including other groups of people in the community. The Economic Council now includes people from organized labour. It includes representatives of organized farmers, of organized consumers and a good many representatives of other sectors in addition to those from the business community or from the academic world.

It has already been shown to this government that in planning, it is a good idea to consider economic measures for Canada by including people in addition to businessmen and those merely interested in bigger dividends for their shareholders. This is true of other sections of our government at the present time. In the Department of National Health and Welfare, you have a minister who has set up a National Council of Welfare. I give him credit for wisdom in this regard. He has seen fit to include representatives not only from the business community but social workers and other representatives from sections of the country who are concerned with low incomes. You might ask what people on low income have to do with welfare. They are the recipients of welfare and probably in the very best position to know something about it. The people who give out welfare and make the legislation, very rarely, if ever, have been on the receiving end of welfare or know anything about it from a practical standpoint.

If the Department of National Health and Welfare has reached the point of actually including people from the low income groups on the council, perhaps it is time we started thinking in terms of including representatives from the relevant sections of the community in every government enterprise. We are still working on the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. He has included representatives from the business community on his consumer council. There is no danger of ever forgetting these people. They are the first appointed. I understand this consumer Council also includes, consumers and representatives of small businesses. One of these days I hope we will persuade the minister to include someone from the low income group. The minister indicates he has one on the council now, but as far as I am aware this is a fairly well paid salaried civil servant. In no way is he a representative of the low income group.

I am not very much in favour of the Senate as such, but even it amended our packaging and labelling bill so that the minister must, before making changes in the regulations, consult with representatives of both the business side of packaging and labelling and the consumer side. If the Senate can see fit to counsel the Commons to put that sort of provision in legislation, it is time to take another look at a bill as important as this which sets up the Canada Development Corporation. I am sure this is one of the important points in this bill. We want to see this provision in order that directors can and shall be appointed who will give adequate representation to the different interests in Canadian society. We would have included a good many more people than representatives of labour and consumers, but we do not wish to burden the House with those details at this stage.

The government would do very well to consider this point because, whether it likes it or not, sooner or later it will have to recognize the fact that in the whole of this operation, not just the Economic Council, National Health and Welfare, Consumer Affairs and one or two other of its many working operations, it will have to include representatives from every single sector of the Canadian society. If Canada is to be a viable country, and this is more important than whether this government is successful, we will have to appoint representatives from the business community, the commercial sector, consumers, farmers and other groups. They must have their share of the say in planning every piece of legislation that goes through this House.

In respect of the Canada Development Corporation, the least the government can do to give some confidence to the Canadian people that it is considering something besides the business community is to accept this amendment. This would provide for the inclusion of the broad spectrum of other Canadian interests and would indicate that the corporation is to be the servant of Canadians at large, rather than merely another pasturage for the business community in this country.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, one of the points we have been trying to make throughout this debate is that the bulk of the commercial activity in this country will probably remain in private hands. Perhaps a great deal of it should remain there, but there is a growing and important role for the government as well. We also argue that the government's role should be distinctive and different. There is not much point in the government merely trying to duplicate what the private sector is doing, and if it is doing it well it should be left alone.

The role of the government lies in those areas where the private sector is not able to perform or where innovation is called for and the private sector is not prepared to take the risk. We can point to a number of examples of this type of area where the government should lead the way. It should be the pathfinder and the trail blazer. This has been the case in respect of minimum wages and in various other forms of legislation adopted by this House of Commons.

In moving the two amendments that have been combined, we are really arguing that if the CDC is to be something different from what exists now in the private sector it should take into account not only this economic role but also its administrative role and, perhaps in some ways, its social role. It should play a different kind of part than that played by ordinary business corporations. The government itself recognized that the CDC should be somewhat different. We do not believe the government is going far enough, but it does claim that the CDC, although it is profit-oriented, has additional terms of reference relevant to public interest. In this way it has indicated it envisages this corporation as being somewhat different. When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) is challenged that this is merely another investment corporation or the establishment of a mutual fund, he recoils in horror and says it is really something different.

What we are asking the government is whether, in fact, it does believe the CDC is different. If it does, then the CDC should behave in a somewhat different fashion than that manifested by ordinary corporations. Let us first of all refer to ordinary corporations. They are totally profit-oriented and have in the past been very loathe to become democratic or to take into consideration other factors in the consumer or national interest. They have always argued that they cannot operate that way. Surely, the CDC cannot accept this point of view. Surely, we can be assured that although the CDC intends to be somewhat profit-orientated, it will follow some precedence for having representatives from different industries in the Canadian society, including labour, consumers, farmers and other organizations, as members of the board. It may be that the government will not have to reach outside those who hold dividends or stock in the Canada Development Corporation.

But we are saying that when it comes to appointing a board, some additional criteria should be established because generally a board is appointed on the basis of who holds the most shares. It is quite obvious who will hold the most shares. It will be the banks, the trust companies and finance companies in Canada who hold the most shares in everything else. So, the CDC board will look like any other board in this country. That is not what we want. We feel that farmers should be represented if the CDC finds that a wide proportion of such people hold shares or perhaps workers. We believe some regard should be shown for this kind of representation and that, if necessary, the CDC should go outside the shareholders of its own stock in order to find representation.

I think it might be an admirable idea to have a representative from the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs on the board because increasingly—and I am glad to see this—the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is starting to have some effect on the economy. People are beginning to see that this department means business in some areas, such as the area of misleading advertising, corporate disclosures and so on, and is colliding in many instances with business corporations. I believe it would be unthinkable to have the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs place an injunction against the Canada Development Corporation simply because it pursued the profit motive. This, from the public point of view, could be very bad in my opinion. A lot of difficulty could be headed off at this time if in fact there were some representation from the department or some representation from some consumer groups. The time surely must have passed when we say that corporations are responsible only for profit, and I include corporations outside the CDC in the private sector. I think many business corporations have begun to realize they have a role beyond the simple imperative of making profit. They know that business survives only by public consent, and that business has to justify itself in the eyes of the public interest and the national interest.

The day is over when the private business sector can take the attitude, the public be damned. They know now they must have other objectives. We say to the government that it can assist the business community by writing into the Canada Development Corporation legislation the need for the corporation to be representative and the need for it to respond to these various interests in our society rather than the profit motive alone. As I read the amendments so ably discussed and defended by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), it seems to me there should not be any objection to including this kind of directive in the Canada Development Corporation legislation. It can only help to strengthen the CDC. It cannot weaken it. It may give it a little of the lustre it so badly needs, and which is so utterly lacking in the bill which has been presented to this House.

I shall leave my comments on that point because there is another motion to which I wish to refer briefly, No. 7 which reads:

That Bill C-219, An Act to establish the Canada Development Corporation, be amended by deleting from subclause (3) of Clause 12 line 12 and substituting the following:

"All members of"

As a result of this amendment, rather than containing the words "the majority of the members of", the subclause would read as follows:

All members of the Board referred to in section 11 shall at all times be residents of Canada.

I can see no reason for the government objecting to this particular amendment. Again, it would seem that it would considerably strengthen the position of the Canada Development Corporation. As the bill stands without this amendment, the reference to a majority of the members leaves it open to very wide abuse. We have had experience in Canada in respect of industrialists who, for one reason or another, have retained Canadian citizenship but have been domiciled elsewhere. Usually, the reason was related to tax laws. In my view such a situation would be unthinkable in this connection and I would hope it would be unthinkable in the view of the parliamentary secretary or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), namely, that this corporation would have a number of directors who would reside outside Canada.

It surely is not too much to ask that the directors be residents of Canada. First of all, they would be much better attuned to Canadian problems. They would certainly be more able to assess the proper decisions of the CDC if they were residents of Canada rather than of some other country. I believe they would exert a greater influence on the board if they lived in this country, and were tuned in to our activities. After all, you cannot find out what is happening in Canada on the golf courses of Bermuda. You may be able to find out on the golf courses in Canada. I see very little reason for any government opposition to Motion No. 7. I would sincerely hope the parliamentary secretary would give it some thought and listen to some of the arguments we have put forward, then say that this particular motion and the one preceding it, No. 6, are acceptable to his government.

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, motion No. 6 is one of a group of amendments presented by particular members opposite with a view to amending the Canada Development Corporation bill to create a Canada Development Corporation in the image they wish to see it rather than as the government wishes to see it. I spoke at length on this on Friday in connection with the debate on the previous package of amendments, I believe amendments Nos. 3, 4 and 5. I do not intend to reiterate my comments. Motion No. 7, however, stands on its own. The purpose the government had in mind in permitting some of the directors to be non-residents of Canada was that, hopefully, it might take advantage of Canadian managerial and other business skills which might be available, even though the particular person might not be a resident of Canada. The government also envisaged the situation, with the mobility of top management today, of a director who had through his other business connections been required to give up his Canadian residence for a period of time but fully expected to be back again.

Other provisions in this bill do, of course, require by implication that all directors be Canadian citizens. Subclause (2) of Clause 12 specifically provides that a person ceases to be a director if he ceases to be a Canadian citizen. However, the government feels there is some positive advantage in the CDC being able to avail itself of the services of non-resident directors. Perhaps the provision in the bill that a majority be residents is arbitrarily chosen. Perhaps some other proportion would be as acceptable, but the government cannot accept the amendment as proposed which would require that all members of the board be Canadian residents.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair will put the question on motion No. 6 in accordance with the special order. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 75 (11) the recorded division on the proposed motion No. 6 stands deferred.

Motion No. 7 will also stand, pursuant to the order made on Friday last. The Chair will now put Motion No. 8, and, as hon. members will remember, this motion is to be put by itself.

Mr. Max Saltsman (for Mr. Burton) moved:

That Bill C-219, An Act to establish the Canada Development Corporation, be amended by deleting Clause 18 and substituting the following:

"18. Except for those common shares of the company issued and allotted to the government which shall entitle the government to one vote for each share held, each shareholder who holds common shares of the company is entitled to one vote without regard to the number of shares held."

He said: Mr. Speaker, this amendment is one further attempt by my colleagues and myself to persuade the government to handle the Canada Development Corporation in a somewhat more progressive and forward-looking way than has been indicated up until now. The purpose of the amendment is to inject an element of corporate democracy into what is something other than that at the moment.

Through this particular amendment, we are trying to change the corporate structure in much the same way as democratic and political structures were changed a few centuries ago. As hon. members know, at one time in order to qualify as a voter one had to have property qualifications, and very often the amount of property owned permitted one to cast a larger stone into the political pool than would otherwise have been the case. As a matter of fact, in some cases if a person had enough property he could buy himself a rotten borough, and in effect be the only stone in the pool. Our society has progressed a long way from that.

We realize that this is not the way in which a democracy can function, and that the right to vote should not be dependent on the wealth of the individual. We realize that the opinion of each individual is worthwhile and important. So we have developed a democratic political system with this idea as its cornerstone. Now, we think that we should be moving in that same direction so far as corporations are concerned. We believe that when a new corporation like the CDC is being formed, when what is essentially a new experiment in corporate life is taking place, some thought should be given to the reorganization of the voting pattern within the corporation.

We have excluded the government from our proposed pattern because probably at the very best the corporation will have fewer than 10 per cent of 15 per cent of the Canadian population participating directly in it. Therefore, the government should have more say than individual investors because it represents the remainder of those Canadians, who are not members of the corporation by direct investment means. With respect to the other investors, the effect of our amendment would be that where an investor holds a block of shares that give him a 3 per cent financial interest in the corporation, and where another investor holds one single share which may represent an infinitesimal percentage of the financial interest of the corporation, each should have equal voting rights. This is a radical and sharp departure from what has been the "norm" in voting in corporations, but we believe it is something the House should consider, and of course it is something that we commend to hon. members.

We have expressed our concern that the CDC rather than becoming, as the government claims, an instrument whereby the small Canadian investor could have a considerable say in the development of his country, will fall under the control of the large financial and other corporations of Canada. This situation must be avoided at all costs. If this amendment is accepted, we can make a substantial stride in that direction. We can insure that no matter what the financial involvement of a single investor may be, or of a large group of investors may be, when it comes to voting on corporation business that person or group will have no more power, no more votes than any shareholder who holds only one share. This is really democratic corporate control. At least it is a step in that direction, and I think it is a step the government and the House should endorse. With these few comments, may I commend the amendment that stands in the name of the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) and which I have the honour to move on his behalf.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Pursuant to Standing Order 75 (11) the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Max Saltsman (for Mr. Burton) moved:

That Bill C-219, An Act to establish the Canada Development Corporation, be amended by deleting from clause 36 (1) paragraphs (a) and (b) and by substituting the word "condition" for the word "conditions" in line 3 on page 25.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this motion No. 9 is to strike out paragraphs (a) and (b) and substitute the word "condition" for the word "conditions". In effect, it would leave paragraph (c), and take out certain language.

• (3:40 p.m.)

If I might read clause 36(1)(a):

(a) the aggregate amount that the government of Canada may at any one time have invested in the company or be committed to invest in the company by way of investment in the shares of the company shall not exceed two hundred and fifty million dollars at the purchase price thereof plus the amount of any shares or securities of the company acquired pursuant to a sale under section 39;

And then it goes on:

(b) if the total number of voting shares of the company held by Her Majesty in right of Canada, any agent of Her Majesty in right of Canada and any persons associated with such agent, within the meaning of the statutory conditions, exceed in number ten per cent of the total number of issued and outstanding voting shares of the company, the company may at its sole option redeem for cancellation such number of common shares of the company as equals the number of voting shares held by Her Majesty in right of Canada in excess of ten per cent of the total number of issued and outstanding voting shares or any lesser number thereof, at the net asset value of the common shares so redeemed;

To the extent that my ability to comprehend permits me to understand them, I believe that those are limiting paragraphs. The one paragraph limits the amount that the government can invest to $250 million, while the other paragraph limits the government to holding 10 per cent of the total number of the outstanding voting shares. We think these are bad clauses to have in legislation governing an organization as important as the Canada Development Corporation. We see no reason why such limitations should be imposed upon the Crown and we have, therefore, moved this amendment in order to have that change effected.

We live in an era, Mr. Speaker, in which everything is gigantic. International corporations, mostly American, have been able to conquer many countries in a way which would have been unthinkable even to Genghis Khan. They have done it without military forces and they have done it because of the power and size of their corporate organizations. In a world where technology is expensive and is highly dependent on large organizations, only the large organization can survive and can profit. Canada suffers from the presence of international corporations more than any other country. Except in a few areas, there has been no real attempt made to exclude their influence. It could be argued that in some cases they provide benefit but on the whole we have seen Canada being virtually taken over, its policies dominated and its culture subverted by the need to satisfy the organizational requirements and the profit requirements of this new phenomenon, the giant corporation.

How are we to tackle the situation? One of the ways, not the only one, in which we hope the situation can be met is by making the CDC into an organization large enough to combat this particular new form of imperialism. I call it imperialism which is a harsh word, but unpleasant as it may be this is what is happening whether it is done with kindness or not. We need our own giant, if you will, to combat the influence and distortion of the international corporation. For that reason, the Canada Development Corporation will have to become the largest corporation in Canada and will have to operate in a manner which we can hardly conceive at the moment, but its size should not be limited. It should have the flexibility to move and expand and accomplish those things required now and in the future as this trend toward "giantism" continues.

We think it is a grave error to place any limitation upon the CDC. For that reason we have submitted the amendment presently before the House, and amendment that we commend to all hon. members.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The question is on motion No. 9 (Mr. Burton).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Carried.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) (for Mr. Burton) moved:

That Bill C-219, an act to establish the Canada Development Corporation, be amended by deleting clause 39.

He said: In the absence of the hon. member for Regina East it becomes my pleasure to move this motion No. 10 which asks that clause 39 of Bill C-219 be deleted. Clause 39 of this bill is the one that would permit the sale to the Canada Development Corporation of four corporations already in existence which are government owned. The four are: Polymer Corporation Limited, Eldorado Nuclear Limited, Panarctic Oils Limited and Northern Transportation Company Limited. I referred to the four as being government owned; there is of course the qualification that in the case of Panarctic Oils Limited there is a consortium of which the government is a member.

We feel very strongly that this clause should be omitted from the bill because this very provision brings into focus the thing that we regard as essentially wrong with Bill C-219. Polymer Corporation and Eldorado Nuclear Limited are very successful corporations wholly owned by the people of Canada. They are not run for the purpose of private profit but because of a need for the products they produce. If they were sold to the Canada Development Corporation we would regard it as a regressive step; instead of being publicly owned in their entirety they would be owned in part by the public and in part privately. That would bring them within the general purpose of the Canada Development Corporation which is to make a profit rather than to serve the interests of the people of Canada as a whole. That is why we do not like this provision in Bill C-219. We pointed this out in the debate on second reading and we have pointed it out repeatedly throughout discussions on Bill C-219. As I have already said, we feel that this clause brings into sharp relief the difference between our view of a Canada development corporation and the view that the government has placed before us in this legislation.

I am well aware of the fact that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance has not felt that he had to reply to two or three of the debates that have taken place today on amendments, but I hope he realizes that this one is very important. He has an obligation to demonstrate any reason, if there is one, why clause 39 should remain in the bill. From our point of view it should not be there and that is why this amendment is before the House.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, in some remarks I have made about public corporations in Canada I have noted that the Liberal government seems to harbour a death wish with regard to almost every public corporation it has established. That party is so ideologically bent—twisted perhaps is more appropriate—to the idea of free enterprise that when they operate as a government they operate most inefficiently. It seems almost as if they want the entities they create to fail. After all, their ideology is that only the free enterprise system and only the profit motive have merit, so everything government does is bad. It almost seems as if they want this scheme to fail in order that they can say, "See, we told you everything governments do is bad. Whatever governments touch does not work out." Actually, almost everything this government has touched has not worked out for the above reason. I do not say that the government does this consciously, but the effect is the same. They seem to set out to destroy the very things they create in the public sector.

The Liberals have sought, from the beginning, to dismantle certain entities. I am talking about entities like Polymer Corporation, Eldorado, Northern Transportation Company, and so on. This does not hold true so much for Panarctic Oils, which has been a recent development. The Liberals tried to get rid of Polymer, but there was such a public uproar that they abandoned the attempt. Why in the world would you want to get rid of organizations like that which have more than proved the point that public enterprise can be successful and which have more than demonstrated how valuable government intervention in the economy can be. It almost seems as if the existence of such organizations is a condemnation of the particular liberal philosophy the Liberal party espouses. The organizations stand there as symbols of success. They show what government can do, and that is more than the Liberal party can stand.

If the Canada Development Corporation idea is good in itself, why must the government take successful Crown corporations and throw them into the CDC pot? The suspicion inevitably arises that without these public corporations CDC will not be successful and will not be attractive to investors, that the government hopes to induce people to invest in CDC by taking corporations which are now the common property of all Canadians and turning them over to a small group of private investors. That idea, Mr. Speaker, is shameful. There is no evidence to support the notion that Polymer cannot function well and effectively on its own, without the CDC. This is equally true of Eldorado and the Northern Transportation Company. Look at the financial statements of these corporations. You will find that Polymer has consistently returned a profit to the Canadian public, that it has built up a substantial reserve and that it has been of great benefit to everyone in Canada. The corporation now has sufficient money to enable it to acquire other businesses, which it is in the course of doing. There is no evidence that Polymer needs the CDC but there is considerable evidence to indicate that the "nonsense" corporation this government calls the CDC needs Polymer very badly.

I am very interested in Polymer. I admire the company. It has served Canada well. In terms of its relationships with its employees, it has tended to perform better than other corporations in our society. Recently Polymer had to lay off employees and it handled those lay-offs in a way that was infinitely better than the way other corporations handled that problem. There was a genuine attempt to ease the plight of employees. They were provided with severance pay and there were attempts to provide other employment opportunities for those the corporation was letting go. I suggest that the corporation has been so responsible partly because it knew that its behaviour was under public scrutiny; and although hon. members could not question Polymer directly, they could question the minister responsible for the corporation who would have to answer in the House of Commons for the behaviour of the corporation in the market place. Polymer will be less responsive to the public need if it ceases to be a Crown corporation and becomes part of Canada Development Corporation, which is to be governed by the idea of profit making alone. It would be a mistake to transfer Polymer to CDC. The suggestion that that be done makes us very suspicious of the entire concept behind CDC.

The history of the Northern Transportation Company is interesting. It was begun to provide service in the north that could not be provided in any other way. The company has proven its value in the sense that it has not been a burden to the taxpayer and everyone acknowledges that it has more than adequately met the needs of northern transportation. The same could be said about Eldorado. Are we now to take these corporations of proven merit, corporations that have proven how valuable they are to the Canadian people, that have given the lie to those who suggest that public enterprises cannot operate efficiently and turn them over to CDC so that Liberals need not be reminded of the imperfections and paucity of their own philosophy?

It is for this reason and for the reasons given by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that we have moved this amendment. If the amendment is not accepted, the suspicion will inevitably arise that the government's chief reason in setting up CDC was finally to liquidate the corporations which have served the Canadian people so well.

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) quite correctly observed that I have not commented on some of the motions before the House because, as I indicated earlier, I regard them as a package designed to convert CDC to the type of CDC the New Democratic Party would create if it were in the position to form the government.

An hon. Member: That is impossible.

Mr. Mahoney: It is not in that position and this party is; therefore, the bill we are considering is a bill to create a Canada Development Corporation that is in accord with the approach and philosophy of the party forming the government. Nevertheless, the specific provisions of Clause 39, which this amendment would seek to delete from the bill, are an equally profound demonstration of our differences in approach and philosophy. That is unquestionably so. It is fundamental to the bill. The government cannot agree to or accept the amendment.

It should be noted that that clause gives the government the authority to initiate the sale of these specified Crown corporations, and, in the case of Panarctic Oils, a Crown investment, to the Canada Development Corporation. Whether or not such a sale will actually occur will depend on the willingness of CDC to purchase the Crown investments and the payment of a fair and reasonable price as a result of negotiations between the government and the management of CDC. In these negotiations, the federal government will be representing the taxpayers who currently own the Crown corporations or investment. The federal government will fully protect the taxpayers' interests in these Crown corporations and in the Panarctic investment by ensuring that a fair and reasonable price is obtained for them.

The investments listed in the bill are ones that seem to be possible candidates for sale to the CDC at the present time. It is possible that at a later date other corporations or Crown investments will be added to the list or, in a future review, circumstances might change and dictate that it is undesirable to conclude the sale that would be permitted under the authority of this clause. These were selected because they are Crown investments that are operating in the private sector and are or have the potential of earning competitive rates of return on investor capital. They are corporations which will provide the Canada Development Corporation with ready access to expert knowledge and management in certain key sectors of the economy.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, the enabling of the government to attempt to negotiate this sale is central to the CDC act as conceived by the government and this amendment is not acceptable.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a brief reply to the parliamentary secretary. He is entirely correct in saying that clause 39 represents a profound difference in philosophy between that adopted by this party and that adopted by his party. What I failed to hear in his remarks was any justification, in terms of any sort of philosophy, for having a publicly owned corporation which has operated with a great deal of success for the benefit of the people of Canada, the general shareholders, handed over to some still untried aggregation of capital. We do not know what it is going to do or why that should be done. This is clearly a retrograde step. We will continue to oppose it.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak briefly on this amendment. As the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) has just said, the philosophy of our party certainly is not that which the parliamentary secretary has indicated is the philosophy of the Liberal party.

The four crown corporations which the government intends to take over have certainly been paying propositions and the future prospects are extremely bright. Up to 1969, the government investment in the Polymer Corporation has been approximately $30 million. In the past 10 years, Polymer Corporation has paid $39 million in dividends to the government of Canada. It has certainly served the purpose for which it was established. It has done a tremendous job. It has expanded and now has plants in other countries. There is no doubt that the financial picture of Polymer Corporation is one of which any government could be proud. For example, in 1969, Polymer Corporation paid a $6 million dividend. At no time in the past decade has the profit of Polymer Corporation dropped below the $3 million mark.

As has already been indicated, Polymer Corporation is 100 per cent Canadian owned and controlled. Let us keep it that way. Let us keep it under the present administration which is doing a top-notch job of handling it and let the CDC expand into other areas where expansion is needed. The CDC should invest its money in some other resource industries. This is the kind of expansion that Canada needs now. Why start picking on corporations that are already Canadian owned and controlled and, more important, returning a profit to the Canadian people?

I now want to deal with another of these corporations. They are all very important. Eldorado Nuclear was created in 1944. The objects of creating it were to look for, mine and refine uranium. The picture of Eldorado Nuclear has been excellent as far as returns to the Canadian people are concerned. From the time it was created, up to the end of 1969, it has paid over $30 million in dividends to the Canadian people.

An hon. Member: What about taxes?

Mr. Harding: Over the same period, it has paid $30 million in taxes. What more do we want? That is an excellent record. The main objects of establishing this corporation were to look for, mine and refine uranium, one of the key sources of energy in this country. I submit that it has certainly done an excellent job.

In 1969, Eldorado Nuclear had a loss of just over $1 million. It will probably have another loss this year because of the depressed market for uranium. We must not kid ourselves or the Canadian people into believing that the future of uranium is not bright. We need only look at the potential energy resources of this country to see the desperate need for uranium in the future. For this reason, Eldorado Nuclear which controls this key energy source should be retained as a Crown corporation, 100 per cent owned and controlled by the Canadian people. I see absolutely no validity in the suggestion of the parliamentary secretary that we do not need to amend this bill, but throw this Crown corporation into the pot so that it can be controlled by a corporation which certainly will not be entirely Canadian.

I am not going to deal with all the corporations listed here. There are two more. Everyone of these is paying a profit to the Canadian people. Even more important, they are now Canadian controlled. What is the Liberal party going to do? We now have 100 per cent control. What more do we want? Let us start by having the CDC go into other aspects of the economy which we have lost. This is the objective of Canadians today and this is the objective of our party. We are urging members of the House to accept this amendment, and to give direction and thrust toward gaining control of the Canadian economy for Canadians by retaining these corporations as they are now and using the CDC to get into other aspects of the economy where Canadian control is desperately needed.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): I should like to say a word on this amendment. The last two speakers from the New Democratic Party used arguments with considerable merit when they criticized the government's attempt to bring under the jurisdiction of the CDC four Crown corporations, a move which, if successful, would have the effect of changing the management of these Crown corporations as well as government policy with regard to them. The CDC is, in essence, to be a Crown corporation, yet other Crown corporations are to be placed under its directorship. It is true the major shareholder will be the government, but the directors are to be chosen from the private sector. Polymer, Northern Transportation, Eldorado and Panarctic will be directed by people from the private sector, not necessarily those who are at the present time directing the management of these four successful Crown corporations.

Why is the government so set on the idea that these Crown corporations should be handed over to the Canada Development Corporation? Is it an attempt to entice the unsuspecting Canadian investor, to lure him into investing money in the CDC? If he does so and these ventures turn out to be less profitable from here on, the management not so dedicated or not as capable, then the difficulties of those Crown corporations will begin. Within the last few years, Polymer has invested in a large plant in Europe. If it were placed under the CDC would it continue to possess the independence it has enjoyed up to now, and would it be able to invest in the tire business as it has done recently by investing in a tire manufacturing plant in Europe. One cannot be certain, particularly when one reads the words of the parliamentary secretary as reported at page 6391 of Hansard to the effect that the directors will be chosen from the private sector but that the government would remain the largest shareholder and thus would always be in a position to exercise a degree of influence over the policies of the corporation. Will this in fact have the effect of limiting the freedom which these Crown corporations have enjoyed? Every one of them is in competition with similar industries within the private sector, except perhaps for Northern Transportation which some time ago bought out its competitor.

In any case, Eldorado, Panarctic and Polymer are all successfully competing with the private sector. In order to continue to do so they must remain flexible; they must be allowed a degree of freedom so as to meet the demands which competition places upon them. This House and the country need a better explanation than they have been given so far as to why the CDC should be permitted to start off with four such corporations. Why is the CNR not being brought within its scope, if the concept is that Crown companies should be allocated to the CDC? Are only the successful ones to be handed over? Surely, we could take a look at Air Canada, the CBC and a number of others with a view to letting the CDC look after them, too. All in all, the House should be given better reasons than it has been given so far in favour of placing the four corporations I have mentioned under the control of the proposed development corporation.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question? The hon. member for Waterloo.

Mr. Saltsman: I was just getting to my seat, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Saltsman: The only point of order is that I was getting to my seat rather than rising with the intention to speak.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question on motion No. 10 in the name of the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton)?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Speaker: Those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Can't we ever win?

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section (11) of Standing Order 75, a recorded division on the motion will stand deferred.

I will proceed to motion No. 11 stating in the name of the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart), but first I should ascertain from the hon. member who is to be the seconder of the motion.

To be fair to the hon. member, perhaps, while he is looking for a seconder, or waiting for the return of a seconder, I might remind hon. members that the Chair has expressed some reservations as to the acceptability of the proposed motion. Is the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) rising to second the motion?

Mr. Francis: I was rising on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I was in the process of saying that a point of order had been raised by the Chair to the effect, there was a possibility that the motion might not be in order. I would be prepared to hear argument in support of the acceptability of the motion or against it before we proceed further.

Mr. Stewart (Cochrane): On Friday, Your Honour suggested the proposed amendment might go beyond the scope of the bill and I intend to confine my remarks strictly to that point. I do not believe the amendment goes beyond the scope of the bill. In fact, it does not really add substantially to its provisions because it merely says that Members of Parliament shall not be excluded from appointment to the board of the proposed corporation.

Clause 40 (1) merely states that the Governor in Council shall appoint not more than four of the members of the Board of Directors. It could be argued that among the persons so appointed could be Members of Parliament. They are not excluded by the terms of that clause. My amendment merely adds a subclause which will make it clear that Members of Parliament are not to be excluded. It does not go as far as the provision in other bills which stated categorically that Members of Parliament might be appointed to certain boards. The amendment would simply call to the mind of the government the fact that it would be possible for them to appoint Members of Parliament as directors.

The whole question of providing for some degree of accountability to the people of Canada is one of great importance and one which should in my opinion be considered even more seriously than my amendments suggests it ought to be. The people of Canada do not seem to have any say about what goes on in government, particularly in the conduct of Crown corporations. In the following clause those who drafted the bill, the bureaucrats, made certain that they were included even as ex-officio directors. The power that lies in the bureaucracy is far too great now, and the people of Canada do not have enough say in this regard. I suggest there has to be more of an input on the part of those of us who represent the people of Canada, who through their taxes are paying for these corporations.

I should like to cite a provision in the International Development Research Centre Act which, in my opinion, provides a precedent in this regard. When the House passed this legislation establishing the centre on February 20, 1970, clause 10 (3) provided as follows:

> Two of the governors, who are Canadian citizens, other than the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman, may be appointed from among the members of the Senate or the House of Commons; a member so appointed shall not be paid remuneration but shall be eligible for expenses and, if he is a member of the House of Commons, shall not, by reason of his being the holder of the office or place in respect of which such expenses are payable, be rendered incapable of being elected, or of sitting or voting as a member of that House.

I suggest that this is a precedent that goes further than my amendment would go. Therefore, I submit my amendment should be found in order and should be voted upon accordingly.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, the mover of this amendment has argued his case, as he has previously, for Members of Parliament to be allowed to sit on the boards of directors of Crown corporations. The issue is not the merits of such a step; the issue is whether the particular amendment before us is in order. I do not dispute the general claim that the hon. member has put forward. Indeed, on previous occasions I have supported the merits of what he is now endeavouring to accomplish by this particular amendment. As the hon. member pointed out, he has previously moved a whole series of amendments to bills before this House which you, Sir, in consultation with various authorities, ruled out of order and which the hon. member withdrew following discussion.

The issue today is very simple: Does the matter before us place a burden on the treasury and violate the prerogative of the Crown with regard to expenditure of funds? With all respect, I do not think that the wording of the clause the hon. member seeks to amend is as direct as previous wordings that we have considered. I think the clause is either unnecessary or attempts to do indirectly that which cannot be done directly. The wording of the amendment appears to provide that Members of Parliament shall not be excluded from appointment which, presumably, means that they shall be considered for appointment. If Members of Parliament are to be considered for appointment to boards of directors under clause 40(1)(a), then we have to face the problem whether or not the bill is contemplating two classes of directors, one paid and the other unpaid. Certainly, there is nothing before the House to suggest that that type of provision is implied or should be implied.

The precedent quoted by the hon. member is very interesting. It speaks very clearly of how members could be appointed to the board of an international agency of the sort to which reference has been made. It very clearly provides that they may not receive remuneration, and obviously there has been care with the wording. But the wording before us is not the wording the hon. member cited a few moments ago but very different wording. As I read it, it attempts to place Members of Parliament in the position of being eligible for appointment on the same terms and conditions as other directors contemplated by this legislation. If that is the case, then I think it clearly violates the terms of the Senate and House of Commons Act and would be subject to all of the strictures previously referred to by Your Honour in other circumstances in connection with previous amendments moved by the hon. member. I submit the amendment is out of order.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member for Cochrane for his enlightening remarks, and I also thank the hon. member for Ottawa West for his comments for the guidance of the Chair. I had indicated previously when this motion was first put to the House that I had serious doubts about the procedural aspect of the proposal submitted by the hon. member for Cochrane. I was under the impression that this amendment was rather in the form of a substantive proposition that went substantially beyond the terms of the bill that is now before us.

That is still the objection which I have to the hon. member's amendment. Somehow, I have the impression that the argument he has submitted in support of his claim that the motion should be accepted and put to the House strengthens my view that what he has proposed for our consideration is a substantive motion that goes beyond the terms of the bill before the House.

The hon. member's proposed motion would provide that in making appointments to the board of directors, the governor in council may appoint Members of Parliament to the board. While the motion does not use that specific language, the appointments the motion proposes could be made notwithstanding the provisions of the Senate and House of Commons Act. That is the point that was made by the hon. member for Ottawa West.

I suggest to the hon. member for Cochrane that his proposed motion is either a nullity, in the sense that it would produce nothing in practice, or, in effect, it is an amendment to the Senate and House of Commons Act, which is not now before the House. I suggest to hon. members that it is not open to them to propose a motion, following the procedure suggested by the hon. member for Cochrane, that amends an act that is in no way before the House and which bears very little relationship to the bill that is before the House at the present time.

Section 10 of the Senate and House of Commons Act provides that:

> —(a) no person accepting or holding any office, commission or employment...to which any salary, fee, wages, allowance, emolument, or profit of any kind is attached... is eligible as a member of the House of Commons—

To my way of thinking, the argument is not whether public money might accrue to a member; rather the question is whether any member can be nominated by the Crown, or by an officer of the Crown, to an office to which an emolument or financial benefit attaches. In effect, the proposed motion removes the provision in the act that excludes members from such an office when the nomination is made by the Crown.

I recognize that the hon. member for Cochrane has a very strong point when he says that the International Development Research Centre Act was amended in terms very similar to those now proposed in the amendment of the hon. member. I must say that, in my view, if that amendment had been submitted to the Chair for consideration it would in all likelihood have been declared out of order. As the hon. member knows, this amendment was introduced at the committee stage and came before the House as part of the bill that was reported by the committee and was adopted with the other clauses of the bill. Therefore the point was not submitted to the Chair for consideration. In looking at the bill at the time the amendment was proposed, I had very serious doubts as to whether it was in order and whether the act could be reconciled with the other statute it in effect amended without saying so. For those reasons, I must conclude that the motion proposed by the hon. member should not be put to the House.

I have reservations also in that the whole matter to which this amendment refers is now still before the Committee on Privileges and Elections. In any event, there has been no report as far as I know on that reference to the committee. The hon. member was kind enough to agree to a suggestion made by the Chair some time ago that the bill he proposed be withdrawn and that the subject matter thereof be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. That matter is still before the committee and I doubt very much whether there should be an attempt made at this time to settle the matter through an amendment to an act while the matter is still under consideration by a committee of this House.

For all those reasons I regret very much having to conclude and rule that the hon. member's motion cannot be put at this time. We now go to motion No. 12 in the name of the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton).

Mr. Andrew Brewin (for Mr. Burton) moved:

That Bill C-219, an act to establish the Canada Development Corporation, be amended by substituting the words "five per cent" for the words "three per cent" in subclause (3) of Clause 2 of Schedule 1.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment to the schedule is to enable the provincial governments or the legislatures of the provinces on behalf of the provincial governments or the Crown or Her Majesty in the right of the provinces to acquire in the case of each province 5 per cent of the number of voting shares of the corporation rather than the present figure which appears in the schedule. The schedule provides that the holdings in the right of Her Majesty, in the right of the province or agents of Her Majesty shall not exceed three per cent of the total number of the issued and outstanding voting shares. The legislation recognizes, I think quite rightly so, that Her Majesty in the right of the various provinces may well be and should well be interested in being participant shareholders, participants therefore in the direction and control of the Canada Development Corporation. The purpose of the amendment is to remove the restriction which is fixed at 3 per cent, increasing this to 5 per cent.

We in this party have tried to make it very clear that we believe in government equity in publicly financed projects, and we believe in direct control by Parliament. The proposal made here is to encourage a partial approach toward that objective. We think as much as possible of the financing of a corporation such as this should be out of public funds so Canadians can benefit. In this way, any interested province can invest in this development corporation. Thus, Canadians who happen to be in those provinces are investing in this fund.

We believe this is a form of co-operative federalism that makes sense. Provincial governments are deeply concerned in the development of Canadian resources. They have the planning machinery to advise the corporation and assist it in determining what investments it shall make in the resources of Canada. They have responsibilities in that particular field. The more the provinces can be induced to step into the field of developing Canadian resources through this Canada Development Corporation the better.

Our leaders, and I mean the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of the country and the other prime ministers and premiers of the provinces, have made it perfectly clear that in their view one of the basic purposes of Confederation is to iron out the regional disparities which exist in this country, and to remove regional disparities by whatever means are available. It seems to me that the existence of this corporation, participated in by the various provinces, can and should be used as a major tool in ironing out these regional disparities.

To attempt to do this without the co-operation and participation of the provinces might well turn out to be a great mistake. Someone has suggested there is a danger if all ten provinces take up their five per cent in that 50 per cent of the capital would be owned by the provinces. First of all, I think it highly unlikely that all ten provinces would join together to become participants to that extent in this corporation. If they did, I think it would be an excellent thing that such a result was brought about. If all ten provinces, in a sense, were partners with the Canadian government through a Canada corporation for the development of the resources of this country, that would be highly beneficial to the country. I have no fear that this result will actually happen, but if it did I have no fear that it would be anything but beneficial.

I do not know the rationale behind the three per cent limitation. Why put a limit on provincial participation? The purpose of the measure is to establish a corporation that will help develop and maintain strong Canadian controlled and managed corporations in the private sector of the economy which will give Canadians bigger opportunities to invest and participate in the economic development of Canada. Why should not provincial governments be encouraged to participate as fully as they are willing in this effort? They would be participating on behalf of the citizens of their province. I think it would make it a much greater and more effective Canadian venture if this amendment were accepted.

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we do indeed hope and feel that provincial governments will find investment in the Canada Development Corporation a desirable objective for their own purposes. However, the basic concept of the measure is that majority ownership in the CDC should ultimately rest with the private sector. There is a provision in the bill that federal participation may be reduced to 10 per cent, and that is as low as it can go. There is another provision under clause 3 of schedule II that an agent of Her Majesty in the right of Canada and the associates of that agent can own another 3 per cent, so there is provision in the bill for 13 per cent of the voting shares being owned or controlled directly or indirectly by the federal government. In order to retain the basic concept that majority ownership shall ultimately rest with the private sector, the 3 per cent for each provincial government is necessary.

Four per cent times ten provinces would be 40 per cent, which would mean the public sector might own 53 per cent. The suggested amendment here could raise the number of voting shares owned in the public sector by both federal and provincial governments to 63 per cent. That is the rationale of the three per cent figure; it relates directly to the basic concept that the majority control of the voting shares of the CDC, as envisaged by the government, should rest with the private sector. For that reason, the amendment is not acceptable to the government.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the words of the parliamentary secretary as he stated the government's position respecting some of the amendments we have presented to the House. The only conclusion one can come to is that there is no debate. We are asking why the government has done these things in the hope that we might have some explanation, perhaps receive some explanation with which we might agree, or acquire some understanding of the government's motivation. Instead, all we get is a reiteration of the government's position and a statement that there is a difference in philosophy. We know there is a difference in philosophy. This is one of the things this House is all about. This is not good enough. It is not good enough for the parliamentary secretary to say the government feels one way and we feel another way, and that this is the reason it is being done in this way. We want genuine debate on the matter. We want the government to defend its position and explain why it places its reliance on the private sector by insisting on a majority interest being maintained for the private sector.

We received no information except a statement that this is what the government has decided. In a matter as important as the Canada Development Corporation, one would have thought the government at least would have had the courtesy to explain to the House its reasons. My friend the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) has given a most lucid explanation and argument concerning why there should be greater provincial involvement. I would have thought the merits of his case were obvious, and that the amendment as described and presented by the hon. member for Greenwood would have commended itself to the government which would have seen this as an opportunity to have participation by the provincial and federal governments. Instead of replying to the arguments which have been presented, the parliamentary secretary has simply restated the government's position. The government has decided to do it their way. At no time has there been any explanation from him of the reasons. We can do little more than express our great disappointment that the government has not been able or willing to either make a case or present it to this House.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question on the motion now before us? It is motion No. 12 standing in the name of the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Again, pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion will stand deferred. Since discussion on all motions has now been completed and all votes have been deferred, I should like to inquire of hon. members whether it is proposed that the vote be taken now or be held over until later.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Speaker, I believe you will find agreement in the House to defer the recorded votes on all these amendments until eight o'clock tomorrow evening. As I understand it, tomorrow is to be an allotted day and under the special order government business will commence at eight o'clock tomorrow evening. Accordingly, I believe there is agreement that the votes be taken at eight o'clock tomorrow evening, at which time we may be able to proceed immediately to third reading.

Mr. MacLean: That is agreed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, Mr. Speaker, that has been agreed. I refer to both suggestions, that the vote be deferred until eight o'clock tomorrow evening and that if the government wishes to do so it may call the bill for third reading.

Mr. Speaker: There is apparently unanimous consent to the procedure suggested by the parliamentary secretary. As it is agreed that the votes will be taken at eight o'clock tomorrow evening and following the voting there will be consideration of third reading of the bill, is it so ordered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

PRAIRIE GRAIN ADVANCE PAYMENTS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING RATE PER BUSHEL, EMERGENCY PAYMENTS, EXTENSION OF APPLICATION TO RYE, FLAXSEED AND RAPESEED

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-239, to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has studied the motions proposed under Bill C-239 to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act and I should like to suggest for consideration of hon. members the following procedure which might well be followed. I would suggest, first, that motion No. 1 should be put and disposed of separately. Then, motions Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5 might be grouped for purposes of debate and a vote on motion No. 2 would dispose of all the said motions. Motion No. 6 might be considered and disposed of separately. Motion No. 7 might create procedural difficulties because at least at first blush there would appear to be financial implications. The Chair, however, would hear argument when motion No. 7 is called. If hon. members are in agreement with the suggestions I am making now, these motions will be put and considered as now suggested.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What about motions Nos. 8 and 9?

Mr. Speaker: It is brought to my attention that motions 8 and 9 should also be referred to at this time. The suggestion I should like to make to the House is that they be considered and disposed of separately.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, subject to any procedural discussion we might have on motion No. 7, the proposal you make regarding these amendments is satisfactory.

Mr. Speaker: We will now consider motion No. 1.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration) moved:

That Bill C-239, An Act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, be amended by striking out lines 34 and 35 on page 2 and substituting the following:

"grain of any kind to the Board in a crop year under"

He said: Mr. Speaker, the main purpose of this amendment is to restore the cash advance legislation, as we will hope to see it after passing the current amendment, to the basic pattern which has existed since the inception of prairie grain advance payments some ten years ago; that is to say, when an advance has been taken upon grain, all grains upon which an advance can be taken, when it is delivered by a farmer, will be subject to deductions in respect of repayment. The bill, as it stands at the moment, after having been referred back from the committee would have the difficulty of seriously impeding or interfering with the security of the cash advance system by possibly limiting the recovery of money for advances to that portion of the grain upon which the advance itself was taken when that portion of the grain cannot, in the ordinary course, be identified. It would, therefore, have the effect of virtually destroying the cash advances system if the bill stood as it was reported back.

• (4:50 p.m.)

A question of principle is also involved, namely, whether when an advance is taken on wheat, the barley and oats grains delivered by the same producer should be taken into consideration with respect to deductions for the advance. It is the feeling of the Wheat Board that to do otherwise might interfere with the delivery of grain, and lead to some choices by farmers not to deliver certain grain at certain times. Accordingly, the amendment to restore the situation to the pattern that has existed since the law was first enacted is proposed.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): I find it strange that all of a sudden the minister should say this change must be made in the bill or the cash advances system will be ruined. Actually, Mr. Speaker, this clause was changed in the committee, and the ministers' amendment would merely restore it to its original wording. I think there is a very neat point here with regard to the worth of committee work.

[Mr. Speaker.]

The purpose of referring legislation to committees is to allow the committees to call knowledgeable witnesses to discuss the intent of the legislation, and whether or not the wording is sufficiently clear to carry out that intent. If this committee in its wisdom, following the advice of the experts, agreed that certain words should be deleted and others added to a particular clause of the bill, I would like to know how the minister, out of the blue, can come forward with the suggestion that the amended version of the bill is incorrect, and that the original wording should be restored.

The amendment proposes the restoration of the words "grain of any kind." The amendment moved in committee by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) suggested that those words be struck out and that the words "grain to the Board on which an advance has been taken" be added. As recorded at page 41 of Committee Proceedings No. 53, the minister had this to say:

Frankly, I do not know that the words "of any kind" have any additional significance. I presume the draftsman introduced them to make absolutely clear that wheat, oats and barley were all involved in the repayment...

At the bottom of the same page, the minister is recorded as saying:

My opinion is that the removal of those words would not change in any way the legal effect of the clause.

At that time, the committee had the power to call the draftsman before it. It had the power to call witnesses from the Wheat Board. It had the power to inquire from them whether the change really meant anything. I repeat that the minister said:

My opinion is that the removal of those words would not change in any way the legal effect of the clause.

If the minister felt the way he does now, he should have requested representatives of the Canadian Wheat Board to appear before the Agriculture Committee. Mr. Speaker, I think it is shocking that the full contingent of members of the Canadian Wheat Board has not appeared before the Agriculture Committee, even though recently we have been dealing with three major pieces of farm legislation, all related to wheat and other grains. On one particularly short day of committee hearings one spokesman for the Canadian Wheat Board appeared. On three different occasions he replied that questions were not pertinent to the legislation and therefore he would not answer, or that he did not have the figures with him.

The amendment moved by the hon. member for Mackenzie was accepted by a vote of 13 to nine in the committee. It is a well known fact that the combined forces of the opposition muster only 13 votes in that committee, and that on that particular occasion a number of government supporters voted for the amendment.

Further, as recorded at page 41 of Committee Proceedings No. 53, the minister said:

With the words in I think the draftsman thought the clause was clearer than with the words out, but I believe that the same effect would hold true, because the words "of any kind"—

This is the important point I want to make. Just a few minutes ago the minister told us that without his amendment being accepted, the cash advance system would be destroyed, but on that occasion he said in the committee:

—I believe that the same effect would hold true, because the words "of any kind" did not apear in the previous act...

Cash advance legislation has been on the statute books since 1957. The words "of any kind" did not appear in the original act. Now, the minister says, and we are supposed to believe him, that we should use the working he suggests. Excuse me, Mr. Speaker, I see it is five o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie)—External Affairs—Solution for problem of refugees from East Pakistan now in India; the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—Unemployment—Effectiveness of Manitoba deficit financing program in decreasing unemployment—Suggested consultation; the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave)—The Budget—Request for consideration of circumstances of elderly retired people.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

AIRPORTS

SUGGESTED CONSTRUCTION OF NEW REGIONAL COMPLEX FOR NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint-John-Lancaster) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of giving immediate consideration to investigating, surveying, planning and constructing a new regional airport complex in New Brunswick which would take into account new transportation patterns and provide (a) national and international jumbo jet facility, (b) transit for export and import air freight (c) a link with the new containerization services at Saint John and (d) for the full development of the agricultural and fisheries potential of the entire Province.

• (5:00 p.m.)

He said: I will be brief in introducing this motion, Mr. Speaker. Last year it had moved into position for debate but I avoided moving it because we were waiting for a report on air transport in the Atlantic provinces and we also thought there was a chance that the regional air policy of this government might be clarified. Since then we have the report referred to. It is inconclusive, to say the least, and as everybody in the House knows, regional air policy is still indefinite.

I make no bones about raising this matter even though it is of a local and regional nature. There is no other avenue for bringing it forward. It is not a matter that could be tackled by a committee of the House. It is not like Montreal and Toronto: when they want an airport, the government jumps. The question involves many divided responsibilities at different levels and sections of government.

I hope the motion will provoke discussion, and not only in the narrow context of the resolution which advocates a regional airport for southern New Brunswick. Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, no location is mentioned. I hope it will also provoke discussion on the matter of regional air carrier policy which, because it has drifted, is causing serious deterioration in all airports of Atlantic Canada.

I shall deal briefly with the problem and the history, and my proposal to help solve it. Saint John airport, which is my main consideration, has a very difficult weather problem for four months of the year, as everyone knows, which diminishes its usefulness. I feel it should be tied into a southern New Brunswick proposition. Air Canada has been involved in the service there for many years and would be able to provide a much better service. Other regional carriers, such as Eastern Provincial, could be included. I have no complaint with Air Canada's past record of service, but due to their unsettled policy and the fact that we are moving into larger planes and all the other problems, the service has seriously deteriorated. Each year is bringing a further reduction in service to Fredericton and Moncton as well as to Saint John.

The history of the Saint John airport is interesting. It was not taken over by the federal government until about three years ago. We always hoped that by remaining independent we could fit into the Canadian Pacific or some other route that would have shown us consideration such as we have with rail and sea, but that was not to be. The next event of significance was the Atlantic Provinces Air Transportation Study—APATS—of 1969. This report was released just a few months ago.

I quarrel with two of the propositions in this report which, incidentally, advocated that the New Brunswick airports of Moncton, Saint John and Fredericton remain as they are. I quarrel with the report that deals with the mileage, the service and the time taken between the various cities. I do not agree with the proposition that if there were a central airport, even though passengers would increase threefold there would not be three times better service. It is stated that there probably would not be any more flights out of the central airport because Air Canada might use larger planes. If there is any merit in this proposition, Air Canada should be jumping up and down with glee. These are two weak spots in the report. If we hoped for a broad, bold move into the future, this report is most pessimistic.

Recently, Mr. Baldwin, president, and Mr. Pratte, chairman of the board of Air Canada have made public statements. In Saint John, Mr. Baldwin promised that Air Canada would participate in a survey of that city to determine the future of Air Canada. We welcome this but feel that not only Air Canada should be included. I have confidence in John Baldwin—he had a good record as Deputy Minister of Transport—and I feel that in the profit and loss statement of Air Canada the almighty dollar might not be his main consideration. Mr. Pratte has quarrelled recently with the regional air policy of this government and has said there should be greater clarification.

Another question is whether STOL aircraft might be used in intercity communication, considering the unique problem we have between these three major cities. Cutbacks have been severe. In the last three years the Air Canada service has deteriorated. They are bringing larger flights and there is no intercity communication. I do not know what the future of Air Canada is or should be. The larger planes have a different load factor for air cargo and this is seriously hampering the air cargo business in Saint John. These are the questions raised.

My proposal is that in view of the different studies, information and reports available there should be a fully co-ordinated review conducted by the Department of Transport. This should take into consideration the future of the Saint John airport in relation to the whole air picture of southern New Brunswick. It should include an assessment of the regional air carrier policy at all levels of government, provincial and federal. It should take into account the responsibilities of Air Canada and EPA and any other individual regional air carriers in existence.

These are my ideas, Mr. Speaker, and I do not apologize for bringing this matter forward. I hope it will at least provoke discussion about regional air policy. I have mentioned the history of the matter and our problems in southern New Brunswick, but I have not mentioned a particular location. I feel this is the only way we will take a step into the future of the fast-moving, jet age. There must be a need for specialized service and the other propositions outlined in my resolution.

I hope hon. members will show interest in this question and that there will be a favourable reply from the government indicating their interest and an assurance to the House that they will move on this problem that is adversely affecting our airports which do not have all the ingredients of some of our larger cities.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I should like in the first place to congratulate the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell) for having introduced a motion providing that the government should consider the advisability of setting up a new regional airport in New Brunswick.

It is quite difficult to speak about transportation in New Brunswick without referring to the Gaspé peninsula, eastern Quebec area, including the area north of the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

Several committees have made studies in the past and presented reports on the means of transport in the Maritimes and have always referred to the needs of eastern Quebec and the Gaspé peninsula.

During the few minutes at my disposal, it would be quite difficult for me to consider all the aspects of the problem of air transport.

[Mr. Bell.]

Transport plays a quite important role in the economic development of a remote area and for New Brunswick as for the Gaspé peninsula, the air transport system will have very important direct effects on regional economic expansion.

Any investment in or any improvement of the air transport system in eastern Canada would certainly and necessarily result in an increase of regional production and creation of new industries.

The infrastructure is the basic element of the system, for without it, most, if not all, of the means of the transport cannot operate. Whether certain means of transport exist or not, regional producers and consumers will be more or less capable of having their goods carried.

The lack of modern air transport may result in a producer or manufacturer being forced to use an inadequate means of transport. Furthermore, when a monopolistic situation exists, this can incite the carrier to profit by the market that he controls, and to increase the rates that he charges his customers.

It is with this in mind that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) must see to it that a regional airport system is developed in New Brunswick and in the whole of eastern Canada, including the Gaspé region.

It would be useful to know to what extent the presence or absence of infrastructure affects the cost of transportation and, eventually, the economic development of a region.

When roads are bad, truckers may be tempted to raise their prices, either because the upkeep of their vehicles becomes more costly or because they use other routes which makes their trips longer and more expensive.

There is a relation between traffic density and the conditions of the infrastructure.

Not only should the existing airports be improved but the possibility of building new regional and local airports should be considered.

Because of its relation to all economic activity and the real part it can play in the economic development of a region, air transport constitutes one of the sectors that governments may readily use within the framework of their regional development and economic expansion policy.

That, Mr. Speaker, is why I am suggesting to the Minister of Transport that those policies should have positive effects both on the organization of the transportation system and the economy of the region.

Should an illustration of the benefits a region can derive from an airport be needed, the following should be sufficient. Ten years ago, an industrial complex was set up near the airport in Manchester, New Hampshire. It is almost 100 per cent occupied. They are now looking for other available land. There has been investments of $10 million, and hundreds of jobs were created for the city because of the availability of a regional airport flanked by an adjacent industrial complex.

And if New Brunswick, like the Gaspé peninsula, lacks adequate airports, what then?

Obviously, those regions will finally fall into oblivion, and be passed up by industry in favour of other cities in Canada and North America in general to which planes have easier access.

Why? Because industry relies increasingly on air transportation and tends to locate in areas served by airports. The same is true of tourists traveling by air, who will first visit areas immediately surrounding airports.

The establishment of industries in the vicinity of airports should be encouraged because the use of the land for building airports and contiguous industrial parks is highly practical from a physical, social and economic point of view.

The integration of a well-planned and well-organized industrial area close to an airport can in the long run be most beneficial to the area by solving some difficult zoning problems and allowing compatible uses of the land close to the airport.

Mr. Speaker, this House knows that businessmen rely increasingly on air transportation because of the time-saving element and because of its readiness in serving remote centres.

Airplanes travel faster and faster and the industrial empire of a corporation may expand in proportion provided its plants are located in the vicinity of an airport and if possible a regional airport.

In an area as vast as the Gaspé region, a regional airport should be established, such as the one which will be established in New Brunswick, as well as "subregional" and intermediary airports, in order to provide an adequate air transport service around this peninsula.

In his motion the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster mentions the establishment of a regional airport in New Brunswick. I wish to inform the House through you, Mr. Speaker, that if Parliament acts on this request, the Gaspé area is part of a vast region bounded in the north by the Gulf of St. Lawrence, in the south by the Fredericton-Moncton-Charlottetown axis. These two limits which converge toward the Montreal-Quebec complex are two much frequented air corridors.

The survey requested by the hon. member on air transportation and a new regional airport in New Brunswick should also cover the whole airlines network in eastern Canada.

It is necessary to make a survey of the airlines' system on a regional basis, and to group all the needs of an area such as that of Fredericton, but that unit must be fitted into the present structure, as built on the axes I have just mentioned.

That is why I congratulate the new member for having moved this motion.

[English]

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I note that other hon. members wish to say a few words and therefore I shall not be very long. I commend the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell) for introducing this motion. I know he is interested in proper transportation facilities for New Brunswick. As was explained earlier, this motion was placed on the order paper last year but was not discussed because the hon. member felt that the report on air policy, made public a few months ago, probably served his purpose. Since that report was not complete inasmuch as it did not deal with the subject raised by the hon. member's motion, the hon. member felt that this question ought to be discussed.

Mr. Bell: The report dealt with it a bit, so to speak.

Mr. Comeau: The hon. member informs me that the report did deal somewhat with the subject matter of his motion.

Mr. Bell: But not exclusively.

Mr. Comeau: But not exclusively, as the hon. member says. The whole problem is that all kinds of studies have been made concerning Atlantic transportation policies. Prior to my coming here—and I have been here for three years—many such studies were made, but none of them have been to the satisfaction of the general public in the Atlantic provinces. The motion deals with transportation policies for air carriers, particularly in the Atlantic provinces. The hon. member specifically mentioned New Brunswick, but this is the type of study that should be carried out once and for all draw up an effective transportation policy for the Atlantic provinces.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Since I have been here questions have been asked and representations made by the Atlantic provinces transportation committee, boards of trade of various cities and towns, and many organizations. As a matter of fact, there is no transportation policy for any region in this country. The air transportation policies which we now have only satisfy the main centres of this country. They do not take into consideration regions such as the Atlantic provinces, northern Ontario and some parts of western Canada. There is no effective, sound transportation policy for Canada.

Approximately six months ago I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) when a regional transportation policy might be established. For two years I have been trying to determine the policy with regard to air transportation, particularly for the maritime provinces. The minister stated that we do not have a regional air policy. He said that if someone makes an application, it is looked at and ruled upon. This is not the way to run air transportation in this country. It is all the more reason for accepting this type of motion which calls for an investigation into and establishment of an air transportation policy for the Atlantic provinces, particularly New Brunswick.

The hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster stated that some of the recommendations contained in the report released a few weeks ago, are somewhat pessimistic. I agree, because the report does not take into account all the factors dealing with air transportation in the Atlantic provinces. For example, recommendations were contained in the report with regard to Yarmouth airport. This points up the fact that there is a need for more study of this matter. The report which was issued two, three or four months ago touched upon several centres in the Atlantic provinces. In one instance it dealt with Yarmouth, which I know well. The members of the committee did not even visit Yarmouth to make a proper assessment. This is how policies in this country have been drafted. A serious study has not even been made of situations, particularly in the Atlantic provinces.

Regional carriers such as Eastern Provincial Airways do not know what their role is in the development of transportation policy for the Atlantic provinces. They do not know what they are supposed to do. We do not know the plans for Air Canada. The motion calls for a study, particularly in the province of New Brunswick. Such a study could be expanded, because when we talk about an airport in New Brunswick we must take into account what is happening in Halifax, Charlottetown and St. John's, Newfoundland.

An hon. Member: And Bathurst.

Mr. Comeau: The hon. member says Bathurst. I say Yarmouth. These matters must all be taken into account. A study must be made of our airports and the way that airlines are operating in the Atlantic provinces. Such a study should determine once and for all what our policy will be, the direction in which we are going and how the airlines, Air Canada and the regional carriers, fit into the picture. It is time the government made a decision in this regard. If this type of study does not commend itself to the House and if the motion is not accepted this afternoon, I hope the government will make such a decision. Perhaps they already have enough expertise and have made a study of the problem. I hope the government will tell us what areas the carriers in the Atlantic provinces are to serve.

I listened carefully to the deliberations in the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications when the estimates of Air Canada were being considered. This deliberation has not yet been completed; I gather that Air Canada officials are still to appear before the committee. Many members complained about the deterioration of service and unco-ordinated efforts by the carriers. It is up to the government to tell the carriers what is in store for them and what areas they are to service.

The chairman of the board of Air Canada said he was not happy with the policies which have been established for the Atlantic provinces. In particular, he was not happy with the policies of the government with regard to regional air transportation. I presume that he is not completely happy with the relationship between Air Canada and EPA. He does not know exactly what will happen in the future; he does not know what to do about Yarmouth. Nobody knows anything. The people in that area do not know what is in store for them. Service has deteriorated and there is lack of proper planning.

A study should be made to determine international patterns for exports and movement of freight into and out of the Atlantic provinces. The flight schedules are getting worse. In many cases there is no co-ordination. It is my hope that a study will be made to determine a transportation policy not only for New Brunswick but for all the Atlantic provinces. I hope the government will accept this motion and determine proper air transportation policies for the Atlantic provinces.

[Translation]

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to take part in the debate, particularly since I was preceded by the hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau) who somewhat found fault with the regional air transportation policy of the government.

The hon. member said at the outset that he would deal with the report of the technical study submitted to the minister two or three months ago. However I am not surprised to hear that he is not satisfied with the report because, after all, it was prepared by experts such as himself whose work is always criticized. Perhaps he will be able to go back to his riding and tell his constituents: If you are not happy with the report, you may say so. Besides, I have read the report myself with a great deal of interest and I will come back to it later.

However, I think it is my duty to straighten out the facts because the hon. member for South Western Nova mentioned certain things which lead me to believe that he was not serious or that he only wanted to please his friends in the opposition. For instance, he said that the government had given no reply and had not acted on the representations made by Maritime associations concerning the transport policy in the Maritime provinces.

Mr. Comeau: I never said that.

Mr. Breau: Either the hon. member was not serious.

Mr. Comeau: I never said that.

Mr. Breau: I can even quote what he said in English.

[English]

Nothing was done to respond.

Mr. Comeau: Read Hansard tomorrow.

[Translation]

Mr. Breau: Very well, we will wait and read Hansard tomorrow.

I am glad to hear the hon. member acknowledge that the government has done much in the field of transportation—

Mr. Comeau: I did not say that either.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should make up his mind and tell us what he said.

I am glad to hear the hon. member agree with me that the government has taken a great deal of initiatives relating to transportation in the Maritimes. I can mention a few which will make my hon. friends from St. John's

East and Saint John-Lancaster (Messrs. McGrath and Bell) happy.

For instance, I will mention the case of an operation subsidy granted to certain regional air lines, among which Eastern Provincial Airways, in the Maritimes. Some highways have been subsidized from this grant.

In New Brunswick, a particular highway which serves part of my constituency has also benefited from that subsidy. I can mention for instance the extraordinary development of EPA in the Maritimes for the past two years. It certainly has been the result of the air transport policy of the government.

An hon. Member: It was EPA's.

Mr. Breau: I hear an hon. member say that it was EPA's. Members of the opposition are always ready to blame the government when things go badly, but when all is well, they never give the government credit.

The hon. member mentioned a few moments ago that the government took no initiatives on the matter of air transport in the Maritimes. How can he substantiate this statement when in Charlottetown only, for instance, the government started from scratch to establish a twice-daily jet service during the summer. Such is the concrete result of the air transport policy of the federal government. This policy provides that the Maritime provinces will be protected for Eastern Provincial Airways, Quebec for Quebecair and central and western Canada for other companies.

So, as a direct result of such a policy, EPA, for instance, was able to get jets and provide a much better service to the Maritimes, especially to Newfoundland, so that my friend from St. John's East is quite proud of the federal government's air policy. In fact, his province is enjoying a better service.

Now, to get back to the study that my friend criticized earlier, I must say that I have read it with a great deal of interest, since I had hoped that it would give the federal government and to the minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson), a much larger and much more accurate view of transportation problems.

And once again, as many experts and teachers do, they suggested another study, if not two. For example, they hardly paid any attention to the northern part of New Brunswick, which means that in future it may have to be served by a highway connecting it with Moncton, Bathurst, Chatham, Charlottetown, Quebec City and Montreal.

Without making too many recommendations, they simply said: It will be necessary to conduct a study about it. So, once again, I must tell my hon. friend that they are academic experts like him, and this is how they claim that they will solve problems. They say: This is one of the suggestions, it will be necessary to find others and to make another study.

Mr. Comeau: Your minister is like that.

Mr. Breau: Yes, he is, but at least, unlike the opposition, he does act.

Suggested New Brunswick Airport Complex

Mr. Speaker, I have one criticism to make about the Maritimes transport policy. Unlike that of the opposition, my criticism will be constructive and concrete. I think that there is a lack of co-ordination in decisions and in the policy regarding the various transportation systems.

For instance, we are told that the federal government may pay from $3 to $5 million a year to railway companies only for passengers in the Maritime provinces. On the other hand, Air Canada or EPA do try to give air service to the Maritime provinces in order to bring about a transport policy.

Consideration must be given to airport sites, population density and distance to Montreal because the latter is the closest and the most important metropolitan area.

Therefore, before setting up any kind of policy, all those factors must be taken into account.

Furthermore it seems that at the government or the Canadian Transport Commission level there is no organization that decides anything once and for all. If we are willing to spend $3 or $5 million in grants to the railways, the CN for instance, or if we spend so many millions with EPA to service Moncton, Charlo, Chatham and Montreal, how could be use that money and build airports that would be situated in more strategic centres and decide in what way the money will be spent, because if it is true that from $3 to $5 million—the latter figure is the most probable—are spent in subsidies to rail transport in New Brunswick solely for passenger service, I am concerned, because I am not sure that Maritimers receive the best transportation service for those $5 million.

As far as I am concerned, it is not exaggeration to say that people prefer air transport to trains because, obviously, they want to get to the metropolitan centres more rapidly for about the same price. In the Atlantic provinces airlines are most aggressive; in fact EPA is more aggressive than Air Canada. EPA is not only aggressive, but it wants to improve its service. However, the federal government subsidizes the CNR to help the people of the Atlantic provinces to go to Montreal. Indeed the help is granted to the people not to the CNR. There is no coherence, no administration that says: Well, instead of spending $5 million for that, we shall instead give $1 or $2 million for the construction of airports in the northern part of New Brunswick. In providing the citizens with better air service we shall reduce the subsidies to the railways. That is, generally speaking, what I criticize about the passenger transport policy of the government and I hope that before long this matter will be looked into throughly and that coherent and co-ordinated decisions will be taken.

To come back to the motion introduced by the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster, I must say that it is difficult for me to oppose an initiative by a member from my province. However, the study mentioned by him and by other members is of a technical nature and reveals interesting facts. It reveals, for instance, that the Moncton airport should not be deprived of aid as it brings in more revenue than it costs the government for its administration.

Furthermore, the Commission report shows that the Saint John airport is far from being unprofitable.

The report also shows that the Federicton Airport, on account of its location near the capital, is a necessity.

It seems to be that the reasoning behind the report findings is sound. It is good reasoning. The philosophy that a central airport would be preferable to three small ones is not necessarily true. It also struck me when I heard of it a few years ago. I thought we could close certain small airports and have a bigger one. But if we consider the figures quoted in the report, it is very interesting to note that the service provided by Air Canada at Saint John, for instance, as well as at Fredericton and Moncton, was not at a loss. Perhaps it is not as efficient as it should be, as the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster put it, but at least it justifies itself.

Being in the centre of the Maritimes, Moncton airport is used by many private aircraft. The same applies to Fredericton. If this airport's importance and traffic were reduced, it would not be beneficial to either the people or the government because there might perhaps be a loss in revenues.

Moreover, as to whether there should be an international airport in New Brunswick, it seems to me that the factors to consider are clear and obvious. It is a matter of determining whether international traffic would justify it, and members of the opposition who have participated in this debate have not indicated any study which would justify it. I would like to know, because I am sure that members are responsible enough not to suggest the construction of international airports without making sure that there is a sufficient demand.

Consequently, Halifax is setting up an international air service. It seems to operate well enough. There is at least one flight from Halifax to London three or four times per week. Now, traffic and demand would have to be determined and thereafter a decision on the opportunity of building an airport would have to be taken. I am sure, as I stated a moment ago, that members are too responsible to suggest the construction of airports merely for the sake of building them, because if it is so, the northern area of New Brunswick would need some.

The citizens of Bathurst and of the Campbellton area maintain that the Charlo airport should be further developed.

Now, before making expenditures for the establishment of such infrastructures in New Brunswick, they should be justified.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words in support of the resolution which is an annual one put forward by my colleague from Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell). I am not as well acquainted with transportation difficulties in that province as is the hon. member and the hon. member who has just resumed his seat, but no one who travels to the maritime provinces and has occasion to pass through the province of New Brunswick could come away without being impressed with the need for a new airport, especially one that would serve the cities of Moncton and Saint John and the population in between. Airports in the province of New Brunswick, like most of the airports in the Atlantic provinces, are small, inefficient, have inadequate terminal space to cope with the present traffic and do not come near meeting the demand that will be placed upon their facilities by the traffic anticipated in the future.

The resolution also avails me of the opportunity to say something about air transportation problems with which we in Newfoundland have to cope. In my own city of St. John's, which has a population of 100,000, we are almost totally dependent on air transportation. The airport in St. John's serves a population in excess of 150,000 people. We rank second in the list of major airports in the Atlantic provinces in terms of number of passengers handled per year, but rather interestingly we rank a very poor third in the amount of terminal space available to handle that passenger traffic.

Perhaps a few vital statistics would illustrate this problem. I should like to quote from a parliamentary return to a question that I placed on the order paper in February of this year. This question asked for the total number of passengers handled in each of the major airports in the Atlantic provinces for the past five years. The figures for St. John's, Newfoundland, indicate that the traffic has risen from 145,000 passengers handled in 1965 to 189,500 in 1969. This figure compares with over 500,000 at Halifax airport, which is by far the largest airport in the Atlantic provinces since it is also an international airport in terms of international and trans-Atlantic flights. The number of passengers handled at Moncton has been rather stable for the past five years and this traffic in 1969 stood at 133,600. Passengers handled at Saint John, New Brunswick, in the same year amounted to 123,000.

I should like to apply these statistics to the situation at St. John's, Newfoundland. The airport there has a record which shows that an increasing number of people are using air transportation as a means of travelling and an increased demand is being placed on its very limited facilities. The 189,000 passengers handled in 1969 had a passenger terminal space of 9,320 square feet, compared with 39,000 square feet at Gander which has the lowest number of passengers of the major airports in the Atlantic provinces—69,000 in 1969. There are 43,000 square feet at Halifax airport, which makes St. John's, as I say, the second busiest airport in terms of number of passengers handled, through it has the third smallest amount of terminal space available. This is an indication that the facilities at the airport at St. John's are taxed to the limit, especially during the peak travel months of June, July and August when tourist traffic is at its height and people are travelling to and from the mainland and other points in the world for vacation purposes.

The airport terminal at St. John's was one of the first new terminals to be built. It was built in 1958 and very few modifications or changes have been made since it was opened to traffic, with the exception of a minor addition to provide increased restaurant space and additional service accommodation. The accommodation available at St. John's for passenger traffic is virtually the same today as it was ten years ago, notwithstanding the fact that passenger traffic has shown an annual increase over the last 15 years. Consequently, Mr. Speaker, a case can be made for additional terminal space. Indeed, I think the time has come when the Department of Transport should take a long, hard look at the whole situation of terminal passenger accommodation in the Atlantic provinces with a view to meeting the demands of the travelling public in New Brunswick as set out in the resolution put forward by my hon. friend and with a view to building new facilities to replace the old, outmoded ones which exist in St. John's, Newfoundland. Certainly a case can be made for a new terminal in St. John's. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson), who uses the airport probably more than any other person I know, should be very much aware of this situation. I hope when he is planning for the next fiscal year he will take this fact into account.

If we are to participate in the advances of air transportation by the use of jumbo jets and air buses we will need additional terminal space. This brings another point to mind, and that is the tendency on the part of Air Canada to reduce the frequency of service by the use of larger aircraft. Of course, the use of larger aircraft such as the stretched DC-8, which is now operating out of St. John's, taxes the limited terminal facilities to the point where it is difficult if not impossible to get out of that terminal in one piece. It would be far more practical on the part of Air Canada to make more use of smaller aircraft such as the DC-9. Instead of two stretched DC-8s going into St. John's, which is the case now, they could increase the number of direct flights from Montreal and Toronto; then instead of having two direct flights we would have four. In addition to those direct flights we still have the Vanguard service which is a local shuttle service operating from St. John's to Toronto. We now have a limited DC-9 service to Boston with connections in Halifax for western Canadian points. I feel a case can be made for increasing the frequency of service.

The statistics I have placed on the record, measured next to the existing frequency, would indicate that we are not getting our share of the service or the service that is available to other airports in the Atlantic provinces. I suggest there is greater frequency of service, for example, into the city of Saint John and greater frequency of service into Halifax, yet Saint John and Halifax are not as totally dependent upon aircraft as is eastern Newfoundland. There is no other way to get out of Newfoundland unless you take the CN bus across the province and run the risk of being crippled for life as a consequence of being seated in a seat that is much too small, being made for small people, for a period of 14 hours. Anyone who wants to risk that unpleasant journey has my sympathy. You will find that very few people do so. Consequently, the only way out of Newfoundland is by air transportation and hence it is much more important to Newfoundland than the other maritime provinces. Accordingly, I believe a case can be made for improving the frequency of service beyond that which now exists, by the use of small aircraft and through additional terminal facilities. The latter can only be accomplished, in my view, by building new terminals because present facilities are totally inadequate.

A word should be said about regional air carriers. I am one of those members who is convinced that Eastern Provincial Airways is perhaps one of the finest regional carriers in North America. Certainly the service it provides to Atlantic Canada and parts of Labrador is unexcelled anywhere on the continent. Its in-flight service could stand as an example for Air Canada. The type of equipment used is superior to any of the equipment presently being used by Air Canada, in that EPA uses the Boeing 737 which is much better, in my humble view, than the DC-9. EPA is performing a tremendous service. In order to fulfil its long-term projection and adequately plan for the future, it should be told exactly what the situation is in Canada in respect of the government's regional air policy.

I have just been reminded by my colleague that I am running the risk of talking-out the resolution. I would be the last one in the House to do that, so I will resume my seat.

Mr. Speaker: Do hon. members wish the Chair to call it six o'clock, or shall I put the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Montréal-Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I must first of all congratulate the hon. member for St. John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell) who presented the motion now under study.

Listening to the member very carefully, I learned far more about the need for a regional transport policy, the problems caused by the weather in the Maritime provinces, and the report of the Air Transport Commission in those provinces than about the purposes of the motion.

The hon. member suggested very few solutions, and he said he would give other members the opportunity to take part in the debate. I listened to those who did, amongst others, the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Cyr), who gave us an account of the economic results, the implementation of a regional policy could have in that area. I agree with him that there should be a regional policy that would facilitate air transportation, mostly in the eastern part of the country.

The hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau) asked quite vigorously that studies begin.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has expired. I do now leave the Chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PRAIRIE GRAIN ADVANCE PAYMENTS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING RATE PER BUSHEL, EMERGENCY PAYMENTS, EXTENSION OF APPLICATION TO RYE, FLAXSEED AND RAPESEED

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-239, to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, before private members' hour at five o'clock I was dealing with the minister's amendment and the effect it has in directly reversing the wishes of the committee. I want to make abundantly clear that the bill, before it was amended and after receiving second reading in the House, was sent to committee and clause 4 subclause 2, line 34, at that time read as follows:

—the applicant delivers and sells grain of any kind to the board in a crop year under the permit book specified in the application or any permit book—

The committee did two things to that particular sentence. First, it struck out the words "of any kind"; second, it added the words "on which an advance has been taken". In other words, the application shall be verified by affidavit and shall include an authorization by the applicant stating that the applicant delivers and sells grain to the board on which an advance has been taken in a crop year under the permit book specified in the application or any permit book issued. The applicant now applies for and receives an advance and must deliver grain of the kind specified in his application. What does this all mean? I spelled out clearly before supper that the removal of the three words "of any kind" makes no difference whatsoever. The minister, as recorded at the bottom of page 41 of Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence No. 53 of the Standing Committee on Agriculture, said:

My opinion is that the removal of those words would not change in any way the legal effect of the clause.

So let us do away with the concept of the removal of the words "of any kind" being detrimental to the operation of the cash advance legislation. Let us consider the addition of the words "on which an advance has been taken". What is the true meaning of the addition of those words? As recorded at page 38 of the committee's proceedings, the mover of the amendment said:

I move that clause 4(2) be amended by striking out the words "to the board" and substituting therefor "on which an advance has been taken".

In the final drafting of the clause the words "to the board" were left in and the words "on which an advance was taken" were the only words added. The mover went on to say, as recorded at the top of page 39:

I feel that since an advance can only be taken on wheat, oats and barley, that this particular proposed subsection should apply only to those grains.

• (8:10 p.m.)

The mover, the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski), said that he believed if someone takes out an advance, the form provided for the elevator agent should specify on what grains the advance can be taken and on what grains it can be repaid. In other words, if a farmer took out an advance on wheat, oats or barley he would have to repay it on wheat, oats or barley. As long as the affidavit the farmer signs states that the advance will be repaid in essence on those three grains, the hon. member for Mackenzie has no objection, as can be clearly seen from his comment as recorded at page 39 of committee proceedings No. 53 as follows:

I feel that since an advance can only be taken on wheat, oats and barley, that this particular proposed subsection should apply only to those grains. What I have therefore done is to confine your advance to those grains on which an advance can be taken, and worded the subsection in such a way that we remove "delivers and sells grain of any kind to the board," and substitute "on which an advance can be taken".

In the committee the minister acknowledged that to do away with "of any kind" makes no difference to the legal interpretation of the clause and the concept of adding the words "on which an advance can be taken" means that the act remains as it was in the past—in other words, that the advance could be taken on wheat, oats and barley. "Of any kind" was not included in the original act, and as recorded at the bottom of page 41 of the committee proceedings the minister stated clearly:

—I believe that the same effect would hold true, because the words "of any kind" did not appear in the previous act—

The words "of any kind" have not appeared in the legislation since it was enacted in 1957. Then why was the hon. member for Mackenzie concerned about the addition of "of any kind"? It was because this bill includes provisions covering rye, rapeseed and flax, and grains "of any kind" would include those three grains. The minister has assured the country that in no way will these three grains be taken into consideration by the Wheat Board except according to the expressed wishes of the producers of those grains. In respect of this amendment will he assure the House that the cash advance legislation will in no way be affected by the inclusion of the words "rye, flaxseed and rapeseed" in the bill? "Of any kind" does not imply those grains which are not under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board.

What I am really saying is that the cash advance legislation will not be affected by rye, rapeseed and flaxseed until the majority of the producers of those grains have indicated that they want them brought under the Canadian Wheat Board. When they have indicated that they want them brought under the board then, and only then, will the cash advance legislation be drawn up or amended to apply to them. I am not sure of the number of the clause but I believe it is stipulated in clause 7 that rye, flaxeed and rapeseed may be brought under the cash advance legislation but will only be brought under it when they are included in the provisions of the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

By his amendment which trying to undo the committee's work the minister is endeavouring to allow the elevator companies, or the Wheat Board, to claim money from deliveries of rye, flaxseed and rapeseed on a cash advance taken from oats, wheat and barley. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister, is this really what he is trying to do? If it is, he should at least acknowledge the fact. He never acknowledged it in the committee; in fact, he went out of his way to assure the committee that the opposite was correct. If the opposite is true, then the amendment moved by the hon. member for Mackenzie in the committee is correct in every way. This is what that hon. member said in the committee, as recorded at page 40 of committee proceedings No. 53:

> All right, if this is the point of friction, then perhaps we can leave in "to the board". But "of any kind" simply implies that I have to commit all grain that I sell to the board when in fact I may have taken an advance on one or two specific grains.

The hon. member for Mackenzie is directly on the point. He is saying that if we leave in "of any kind" we are including all grains, but all grains are not available for a cash advance; under this act the cash advance is concerned only with wheat, oats and barley.

An hon. Member: Keep on reading.

Mr. Horner: Somebody suggests that I keep on reading. I suggest that he get up and make his own speech. He will have ample time, but my time is limited. The hon. member for Mackenzie is pointing out that under the legislation cash advances are available with respect to wheat, oats and barley and not with respect to other grains, but the inclusion of the words "of any kind" means that repayment might be claimed on other grains with respect to advances taken on those three grains.

Through this amendment the minister seeks to replace the original words in the bill and undo all the good work of the committee. I emphasize that the committee called experts before it. One of the strong arguments for sending bills to committee is that in committee experts can be called and examined and the examination of experts can guide the committee to the correct interpretation of legislation and to correct amendments to move. But here the minister is saying that the experts are wrong, that the hon. member for Mackenzie is wrong, and he wants the bill returned to its original wording.

If that is the case, the minister has to answer this crucial question: Will sales of rye, rapeseed and flaxseed be used to repay cash advances made on wheat, oats and barley? If the minister replies, "no, under no circumstances," that is fine and the correct interpretation of "of any kind" is immediately understood.

In the committee discussion the hon. member for Mackenzie went on the state clearly that he had no objection to wheat, oats and barley being used to repay a cash advance that had been made, but that he did worry about some of the other all-inclusive clauses of the bill. I think these questions must be answered before we blindly do away with all the good work of the committee.

The amendment moved by the hon. member for Mackenzie was passed in the committee by a vote of 13 to 9. It is a well known fact, Mr. Speaker, that the government has 17 supporters on the agricultural committee. That vote was taken on Thursday, May 27, a day when the House did not sit. Hon. members were not occupied in this chamber; They were supposed to be dutifully occupied in committees which were sitting, so there was no real excuse for government supporters being shorthanded in the agricultural committee. I can only conclude that after close examination of the witnesses who were before the committee at that time the majority of the committee members wished clause 4(2) to be amended. Members of the committee did not vote on party lines on this particular issue; they voted according to common sense.

When the minister rose to introduce his amendment he was allowed 40 minutes in which to speak, according to the rules of the House. He spoke for about seven minutes and gave no real reason for undoing the good work of the committee. If that is the way committees are to be treated, if they are merely to occupy the time of hon. members, if the work of committees is held in such low regard, and if the government thinks committees do no good perhaps it would be better if we reverted to the old system and considered bills in committee of the whole. Then at least deputy ministers and those involved with different aspects of the department would come to the House, hon. members could direct questions to the government and elicit answers and bills would not pass until satisfactory answers were given. Silence in many respects may be golden, but in dealing with legislation silence on the part of the government is not.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Horner: I hear the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) interjecting. The hon. member and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board have remained silent while I have been making my point. The minister has failed in any way to defend his reversal of the committee's work. The committee worked for long hours—

An hon. Member: Be careful now.

Mr. Horner: —in hearing the testimony of experts who appeared before it.

Mr. Boulanger: I hope the hon. member is not being carried away.

Mr. Horner: If that is the way the work of the committees is to be treated, let me make this point. I notice the House leader is in the chamber. This happened on May 27, when the House was not sitting in order to allow committees to do their work. Hon. members dutifully attended committees instead of attending this House. The vote on the amendment in committee was 13 to 9. There was no reason for the shortage of government supporters; it was not their duty at that time to be in the House. The House did not meet on that day for the express reason of allowing committees to be manned so that bills and other matters before them could be dealt with. Apparently the committee did not deal with this particular clause in the way the minister wanted it dealt with.

Some hon. Members: Now, now.

Mr. Horner: I only regret that the minister, who appeared before the committee, could not be more influential with his colleagues. On page 41 of the committee proceedings the minister is reported as having said:

—I do not know that the words "of any kind" have any additional significance.

He went on to say:

My opinion is that the removal of those words would not change in any way the legal effect of the clause.

What has happened to the minister since that time? Did he not know the legislation when he presented it to the House? Was he neglectful of his duty? Was he not aware of what was in the bill?

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Horner: Or was he attempting to hoodwink the committee into accepting his word that although flax, rapeseed and rye are included in the bill they will not be specifically affected until an Order in Council specifically brings them under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. I hope we obtain an answer. It is not good enough for committee members who have dealt with facts and examined witnesses to be presented with this situation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I do not understand the purpose of the amendment and cannot understand the minister's reasons for bringing it forward. Clause 4(2) of the bill as amended in committee provides:

An application shall be verified by affidavit and shall include an authorization by the applicant stating that, where the applicant delivers and sells grain to the board on which an advance has been taken in a crop year under the permit book specified in the application or any permit book issued—

One would think this was sufficient security for the grain on which an advance had been taken. It is, of course, open to the Canadian Wheat Board to specify the kinds of grain on which an advance can be made. It can be clearly stated in the permit book on what grains an advance can be made. Once they are specified and set out, surely when the grower delivers the specified grain on which an advance has been made the elevator agent can proceed to collect whatever is set out in the act. He can collect the amount than properly can be deducted.

Why substitute for that idea the words, "grain of any kind to the board in a crop year"? I cannot understand it. It sems evident in the bill as amended in committee that the Canadian Wheat Board can say: Wheat, oats and barley are grains delivered to the board. If subsequently the act is changed to include rye, flaxseed or rapeseed as grains delivered to the board, then those will become grains on which an advance could be taken.

If the committee had been remiss in its responsibility there would be reason to correct what the committee did through an amendment in the House. The previous speaker said that witnesses were called before the committee. One witness from the Canadian Wheat Board testified briefly. Nevertheless, there existed the opportunity to obtain the evidence of such witnesses. I do not think enough explanation has been given to this House to justify the rejection of the committee's position. If decisions which committees make are to be so easily set aside, perhaps it is not worth the committee's while to go to all this work and trouble.

I think that the bill as amended sets out more specifically the obligations of the producer and the rights of the board. It sets out the obligation of the producer to pay and the right of the board to collect. That obligation is set out in a more specific way than is set out in the amendment. This type of obligation should be spelled out in detail. A cash advance is a contract between the producer and the Canadian Wheat Board, and the more explicit it is the better will be the relationship between the grower and the Wheat Board.

I do not think the proposed wording, "grain of any kind to the board in a crop year," and so on, makes for a clear and precise definition. The way the act was amended and reported to this House does this much better than the proposed amendment.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I do not like to let this opportunity pass without taking advantage of a few moments to express some of the concerns already expressed so eloquently by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) with respect to the amendment introduced by the minister to Bill C-239.

I am not going to cover ground already on the record of the committee proceedings during study of this bill or the amendment which the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) introduced in the first place. What concerns me is what the minister is doing to the committee system. It seems to me that if we spend time reviewing legislation and bring in an amendment in the Standing Committee on Agriculture and a vote is taken, after thorough debate, which indicates that the majority support it, the minister is then reversing the process if he seeks a further amendment. This undermines the whole political fabric of the committee system. We should ponder what we are doing here. It confuses members of the committee and will confuse people who read the committee proceedings. They must wonder what we accomplish.

The hon. member for Crowfoot has elaborated on the concern felt by western members in particular with respect to this bill and the amendment introduced by the minister. Surely it is using the back door to bring into effect the enabling legislation in Bill C-238 and the amendments to the Canadian Wheat Board Act. This would make it possible at a future date, by Order in Council, to bring rye, flaxseed and rapeseed under the jurisdiction of the bill. It seems to me to be a back door approach to the implementation of a supposedly long-term plan which exists in the mind of the minister. If that is so, why does he not say what he has in mind?

I am sure this situation must leave questions in the minds of members of this House so far as the committee system is concerned. We have had other examples of how it can break down. There was the unanimous report brought in by the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development with respect to declaring sovereignty in the north. Only after a motion was brought before the House to adopt this report was it finally brought to our attention and by a ruling of the Speaker a vote was allowed. There was a similar situation in the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. That committee came to certain conclusions regarding the defence policies of this country, and before the report was considered the government had gone off on a tangent and established its own policy.

With these few remarks, Mr. Speaker, I emphasize that I think the minister is doing a great disservice to the Standing Committee on Agriculture, the members of this House and the whole parliamentary system.

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Listening to today's debate on this subject, Mr. Speaker, confirms my belief that the government does not care for committees unless it is to use them as working housewives use day-care centres—it is a nice place to send the boys while the executive runs the country; it will keep the boys out of trouble.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCutcheon: As far as Parliament is concerned, Mr. Speaker, the main purpose of the committees as presently structured and administered by this government is to act as day-care centres chiefly for government members who might be a little restive. The reason is clear. For instance, in the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence 27 members voted to remain in NATO, three Socialists voted to leave but before the report was even considered the government had made its decision and was withdrawing troops from NATO. So I say again that the government has no intention at all of listening to committees; they are just day-care centres.

Another example is the committee which considered the Canada Water Act, which obviously meant to do the best job it could for the country. Clause 20, I think it was, was accepted by the committee, but their opinion was reversed by the government. Apparently it just depends on whose ox is being gored. If the committee report does not follow the lines laid down by the executive, this government almost acts like a crocodile—it would eat its young.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that basically and fundamentally the Canadian Wheat Board just wants to take three more products under its mantle. What we are about to witness is more control over the poor old farmer; three more of his products are to come under a socialist-controlled marketing scheme. If the Wheat Board could claim to improve marketing there might be some excuse, but I recall that the minister said this would not be necessarily the case. What we are discussing tonight is just another case of the arrogance of the executive of this government and complete lack of consideration for hard working committee members, while the agricultural industry of western Canada is burdened with more bureaucracy.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Pembina): Just a few days ago, Mr. Speaker, I spoke on Bill C-238 and indeed begged that rapeseed not come under the control of the Wheat Board. The Wheat Board has not had a good record in securing sales in the markets of the world despite the assurances we had the other day about the large sale of wheat to Russia. It should not be necessary to exaggerate the benefits of that sale. I notice that it has been very cleverly hedged. The people of Canada think we have a new, $235 million wheat sale when in fact, if we are dealing with honourable people in Russia, the sale was made over a period of some years. What they are doing is picking up the backlog of at least one-third of that total sale.

While on that subject, perhaps I did not make it clear when I said that the Prime Minister visited northern Alberta. I was referring to the then Prime Minister, the right hon. member for Prince-Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), not the present Prime Minister. Only a short time ago it was considered a great crime to sell wheat to the Communist bloc. It was a very strong plank in the platform of the Liberal party, at least in my district, to say that a man who was broad minded enough to deal with the Communist bloc should not be elected. I am consistent; I have always considered it honourable to deal with anyone who wants to buy grain.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Bigg: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the minister rising on a point of order?

Mr. Lang: No, Mr. Speaker. I wish to ask the hon. member a question.

Mr. Bigg: I would be delighted to answer it.

Mr. Lang: I wonder if the hon. member is conscious of the fact—it does not seem so from his remarks—that the first sale to any country in the Communist bloc must surely be the sale to Russia which was made in 1956 by a previous Liberal administration.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may answer the question but I suggest to the minister and the member that we are getting away from the amendment under discussion. When the hon. member has answered the minister, the Chair requests that he confine his remarks to the amendment under debate.

Mr. Bigg: I am delighted that the minister in charge of the Wheat Board is taking his job seriously.

Mr. Horner: Only momentarily.

Mr. Bigg: I assure the minister that I have followed the sale of wheat for nearly 60 years. I am not casting any political aspersions. I tried to make it abundantly clear that sales of wheat are a virtue at any time in western Canada. I am merely saying that I hope sales of wheat to anywhere in the world will never become a political football. The more wheat sales which the minister, the Wheat Board or the administration make, the more delighted we are in western Canada. I merely remind the minister to be consistent in this matter and not to make political hay when we sell wheat. I am not casting aspersions on the government, the minister or any former administration for doing that.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): You are doing just what Jack told you to do. He is the leader.

Mr. Bigg: Unless the hon. member, who has sat in this chamber for 13 years, wants to advertise himself as an idiot, he will realize that I have never taken orders from anyone or anything except my own conscience. I represented the will of the people of Athabaska for 10 years, now the district of Pembina. I am not a little dog running at the tail of anyone. I will not lower myself to accuse those who have interjected from their seats that this is a case of the pot calling the kettle black.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) is rising to ask a question. He may do so only with the permission of the hon. member.

Mr. Bigg: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): The hon. member just made the statement that he does not take orders from anyone. Does this also apply to the leader of his party?

Mr. Stanfield: Sure.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I plead with the hon. member who has the floor and with hon. members on my right. We are not doing justice to the debate. We have a particular amendment before us for consideration. I do not want to prejudice the hon. member who has the floor because he has been asked a question. He is entitled to make a reply. Following his reply, I ask him to please return to the amendment before the House.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. This is exactly why I asked the question. I feel that opposition members have not been speaking to the bill. If they would obey the order, we would also.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has asked hon. members for order. With regard to the point of order raised by the hon. member for St. Boniface, it does not help the Chair if hon. members to my right ask questions which are out of order. If the hon. member who has the floor is out of order, I suppose he is inviting questions which are out of order. I make no decision on the matter but I plead with hon. members for order.

Mr. Bigg: I will answer questions which are directed to me, although that was not my purpose in rising. I am not responsible for the actions of my leader. I am sure he accepts suggestions from members of this party and from people in his constituency. Although my remarks may not impress the hon. member who just spoke, I ask him to bear with me for a few moments. I am making these remarks in sincerity. I am talking about Bill C-238—

An hon. Member: C-239.

Mr. Bigg: —because this matter intimately concerns me. Both bills are connected with orderliness in agriculture. In my opening remarks I want to show the relevance between the two bills. Unless these bills improve the situation in agriculture, particularly as they relate to sales of not only wheat, oats and barley but rye, flaxseed and rapeseed, there is not much point arguing about this bill. I raised the matter of Bill C-238 because it is definitely connected with Bill C-239.

I said that rapeseed in particular is one of the few remaining cash crops for western farmers. If this commodity and the other two commodities which are closely connected are brought under the control of the Wheat Board, it will be much more difficult for farmers to earn a living. That is why I am here; my constituency is mostly rural. I want to try to make it possible for farmers to pay their bills and repay the government for any cash advances which they receive. I do not see how Bill C-239 can be passed by rural members until it has been properly explained.

The committee has been probing for answers to this question. At present I am not a member of the Standing Committee on Agriculture. This is largely due to the fact that we are somewhat limited in number. However, I follow the proceedings of that committee very carefully and I am worried about what I hear. I presume that this amendment to have the principle behind clause 4(2) of the bill clarified is important or it would not have been introduced by the minister and the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski).

If the phrase "of any kind" does not mean anything, why is it necessary to amend the bill by including it? I think this point is very relevant. In the past we have been too prone to pass bills which have not been completely understood. I think we are displaying far too much innocence by signing blank cheques for everything. We have signed enough blank cheques around here. We want to know, now, what the small print means. If the expression, "grain of any kind" means nothing, why does the minister not cause to be written into the bill exactly what he does mean? Let him tell us precisely on what grains the government proposes to place a lien when a farmer goes into debt for a few thousand dollars in order to carry on his expensive operations.

We would be delinquent if we did not insist that this important question be straightened out. The hon. gentleman should be consistent. When his colleague the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) was faced with just such a problem as this, why did he not move an amendment to Bill C-176 excepting cattle and calves from that socialistic, all-embracing piece of legislation? He faced exactly the same problem as the minister in charge of the Wheat Board is facing today. If this is what should be done, why do not all ministers of the Crown act in the same way, particularly when they are all nicely tied together as members of a smoothly working administration, free of criticism of one another, loyal to the top and dedicated to the service of those at the bottom?

There is nothing partisan about this. We are all, I presume, on both sides of the House mindful of the welfare of the western farmer. The committee system is supposed to be an improvement upon our usual antagonistic procedure. We meet in small groups in the presence of expert witnesses. We are supposed to avoid acting like prima donnas and get down to the nitty-gritty in a situation where farmers hear from grain experts and members of the Wheat Board, where ministers talk man-to-man over the bargaining table so that it is not necessary for the prima donnas to get into the act. The committee system does not work unless there is frankness, and I must say that this evening I see no evidence of the frankness one would expect.

It should be extremely easy for a well-meaning minister to let us know exactly what grains are to be the subject of liens. There is no need for double-talk. If there are things to be assumed in the bill, there should be no necessity for assuming anything. Grains of all kinds means rye, rapeseed and flaxseed. They are to be included in the bill, otherwise I can see no reason for mentioning them. If there is to be no change, why talk as though there is to be a change, and if there is a change we have the right, nay, the duty, to find out what these changes are to be.

We keep in constant touch with the farm population. They ask various questions of us and we would look foolish if we were unable to explain to them or their representatives the legislation which purports to straighten out the problems of agriculture. Most of the members from western Canada have a working knowledge of agriculture and we should be able to explain to those who sent us here exactly what we are doing; and if we are not, we should be able to seek advice and assistance from the minister and from his 40 PhDs sitting in the ivory tower. They should be able to translate these proposals into simple, effective English, or French as the case might be, so that we could go back to our constituents and say that not only are we alert to their problems but that we have the benefit of assistance and advice from the vast civil service repository of wisdom which is to be found here in Ottawa.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Horner: May I direct a question to the minister?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member has already spoken, but he may direct a question for clarification.

Mr. Horner: Would the minister state clearly that a cash advance taken on wheat, oats or barley could in no way be paid off by deductions with respect to rye, rapeseed or flax?

Mr. Lang: I am glad to say again to the hon. member, as I did in committee, that rapeseed, rye and flax are in no way included in the operations of the agency at this stage although there is a possibility that at some later date, in certain circumstances, including the full support of the producers, they could be involved.

The legislation before the House would only require that if an advance were taken on wheat, repayment could be effected when wheat, barley and oats were delivered, and no other grain; and similarly for barley and oats, when wheat, oats and barley were delivered, but no other grain. The difficulty in the committee was not in relation to whether the words "grain of any kind" were in the amendment but, rather, in the words "upon which an advance has been taken" which, as I pointed out, might have restricted the advance to the very kernels of grain on which the advance had been taken and that would have required a totally different administrative procedure.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Horner: On division.

Motion No. 1 (Mr. Lang) agreed to on division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This might be an appropriate time for the Chair to advise hon. members of further reflections with respect to the procedural acceptability of the motions with which we are to deal later. I wish to do this now in order that hon. members may have an opportunity to reflect on those observations and in anticipation of a point of order which may be raised with respect to the motions which are to be proposed at the report stage.

After closer consideration of motion No. 6 in the name of the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, I have misgivings as to the procedural acceptability of the motion. It seems to the Chair that it may go beyond the provisions of Bill C-239. The position of the Chair in regard to that motion might affect consideration of the comment made by the Chair earlier today with respect to motion No. 7 in the name of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave). It seems to me—I make this observation so that hon. members will know that the Chair has these doubts—that motion No. 6 would amend the act rather than the bill now before us.

Having made these comments I would welcome any submissions which hon. members care to make on the point. In any event, if motion No. 6 is in fact defective from the procedural standpoint, this decision, as I have indicated, can only be made following argument if hon. members desire to assist the Chair. It seems to me that a consensus could be reached by hon. members on the matter: if it is in fact defective it could, of course, be cured by unanimous consent. Therefore, in accordance with the special order made earlier today the Chair will now put motions Nos, 2, 3, 4 and 5 which are grouped for the purpose of debate.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the House would be agreeable to standing these at the moment and to proceeding with the one in the name of the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), No. 9.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members have heard the suggestion. Is there unanimous consent that we now proceed to the consideration of motion No. 9? My notes indicate that earlier today there was a special order made regarding motions Nos. 8 and 9, which might be considered and disposed of separately; in my view that there is no conflict with other motions is confirmed. Does the House agree to consider motion No. 9?

Mr. Gleave: On a point of procedure, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether you are prepared to give an opinion on No. 7 as well as No. 6? If I recall correctly, I believe that when the order of business was given to the House this afternoon the question was also raised as to whether motion No. 7 was acceptable to the Chair, and this would influence my attitude to the bill to a very great extent. I wonder whether you would be prepared to give an opinion at the present time on motion No. 7 as well as No. 6.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair did not make a ruling regard ng motion No. 6. I was anxious merely to indicate to hon. members that there is some doubt in the mind of the Chair as to the procedural acceptability of motion No. 6. As hon. members will recall, earlier today the Speaker indicated that there was some doubt in the mind of the Chair as to the procedural acceptability of motion No. 7. I think that the point taken by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar is a very good one. Although I have not made a decision in this regard, it does seem to me there is an interrelationship between motions Nos. 6 and 7. Without deciding the matter, it does seem to me that if motion No. 6 is defective it can be cured by unanimous consent, if hon. members so wish.

Without suggesting what hon. members might like to do, it seems to me that if motion No. 7 is defective it can be cured in the same way so that hon. members have the benefit of debating both motions and making a decision upon them. For the present the Chair does not take a position on either mot'on. The purpose of my remarks regarding motion No. 6 is that in view of further reflection on the remarks made this morning in relation to motion No. 7 it did appear to the Chair that motion No. 6 might also be defective. So I think they could be dealt with en bloc.

Mr. Gleave: I trust Your Honour will excuse me if I do not understand, but am I correct in saying that you are deferring your decision until a later time?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes, the hon. member understands me correctly. I should like to defer a decision on motions Nos. 6 and 7 till a later date. My remarks on motion No. 6 were only to put hon. members on notice that the Chair thought it might be defective procedurally, as it was indicated earlier today that motion No. 7 might also be defective procedurally. When those motions are reached, the Chair will invite suggestions and assistance on both motions from hon. members.

Mr. Horner: Then may we take motion No. 9, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There was a very helpful intervention regarding motions Nos. 6 and 7. I will ask hon. members whether there is unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of motion No. 9.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot) moved motion No. 9:

That Bill C-239, an act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, be amended by adding the following words immediately after the word "interest" in line 34 at page 11:

"to be set at one per cent above the average rate paid by the Canadian Wheat Board on its borrowing, this rate"

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would gladly not speak at all if I felt that the House were in a mood to accept this amendment. However, having had no such indication I should like to try and persuade the House that all hon. members should view this legislation in a non-partisan manner and be prepared to pass it with the farmers' interests at heart. Surely that was the initial purpose of this particular piece of legislation. No other piece of legislation had the farmers' interests more at heart than the cash advance legislation that was brought before Parliament in 1957. It was not put before Parliament at that t me as a grandiose scheme, as a cure-all for all the ills of agriculture in western Canada. It was brought forward for a specific reason, namely, to help the farmers out of the difficult position in which they found themselves at the time, with huge amounts of grain on hand and no cash.

There was a long debate on the application and feasibility of giving cash advances on grain stored on farms. Many members of the House at that time argued that it was not feasible to do this. Many members of the Liberal Party argued that it just could not be done, that it was an infeasible step, that chaos would develop, that the Canadian Wheat Board would be wrecked, and so on and so forth. History has proved them wrong, because the cash advance legislation has been on the statute books now for something like 14 to 15 years and has worked rather successfully. It was used in the years when large amounts of grain were in the hands of the farmers and deliveries were rather late. In such times farmers were in dire need of cash and they took their cash advances under this legislation. A couple of years ago the legislation was amended and this in essence put the farmer in a very difficult position so he could hardly repay his cash advances.

May I briefly summarize the point that I am attempting to make. The initial cash advance legislation was based in theory on the fact that a farmer could get 50 cents per bushel of wheat, or 50 cents on the dollar. He got a cash advance that was repaid at the rate of half of the value of the wheat he sold, and such a scheme was quite feasible. The farmer did not sink himself further and further into debt and if grain deliveries were at their relatively normal position he was able to repay his cash advance at the end of the year.

However, three years ago we found great changes taking place in respect of cash advance legislation. The government was then warned this would drive farmers further into debt and they would find it very difficult to repay the cash advances they had taken on their grain. You might well ask why this was so. Two things were done three years ago. The amount loaned to the farmer on his grain as security was doubled, and the rate of repayment was left the same. One can readily understand how this would put the farmers in a position of being unable to repay unless deliveries doubled. This was the only thing which would give them a chance to repay cash advances: deliveries had to double, and that has not been the case. In fact, deliveries have been lower than normal in the last few years. I refer to wheat. What is the story? It can be found in committee proceedings No. 51, at page 17. I asked a question of the representative of the Canadian Wheat Board and Mr. Earl replied:

In the current crop year which is perhaps not too good an example, Mr. Horner, there are 46,675 outstanding accounts.

I should like to emphasize that figure—46,675 outstanding accounts. I am not sure that members of this House are fully aware of the number of permit holders in the three prairie provinces. There are just less than 200,000. This gives you some concept of the number of outstanding accounts at the time of this committee hearing. This 46,000 represents something like 25 per cent of the farmers engaged in the growing of grain. Mr. Earl went on to say:

It was 46,675. A better example, perhaps, would be the last crop year, the one that ended on July 31, 1970. There were 40,044.

This gives one a concept of the importance of the legislation now before us. It involves 25 per cent of the permit holders who find it physically impossible to repay the cash advances they received. The initial concept of the cash advance legislation was to make cash available to farmers actively engaged in the growing of wheat, interest-free. I emphasize the words "interest-free". This was the concept in 1957 and again in 1968 when the act was amended. However, Bill C-239 changes all that. There will not be an interest charge on all accounts in default. We have 46,675 outstanding accounts at this moment, but they are not necessarily all in default. At page 17 the evidence continued, following my question:

When you say "outstanding", do you mean loans that have been made that maybe are not due yet or are due?

MR. EARL: They are due, but as you mentioned a little earlier, the repayment schedule got out of whack—

That is a complete admission by the Canadian Wheat Board that a repayment schedule got out of whack with the rate of advance. Mr. Earl went on to say:

The effect of that was that it caused us a problem inasmuch as we had some difficulty putting the provisions in the statute into effect—

MR. HORNER: Because the farmer could not deliver enough.

MR. EARL: That is right and we did not have a sufficient quota level that would permit him to discharge his advance. However, within the authority under the statute we in essence waived the default proceedings and simply let the accounts run.

What I am saying is very pertinent, because we have 46,000 cash advance payments due and they have waived the default proceedings. The next question is: When do they cease to waive the default proceedings? The explanation in that regard can be found in committee proceedings No. 53, at page 78. This was after a long series of questions by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) and the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave). The hon. member said:

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this at best is superfluous and I do not think it is legally very good, because with that amendment it would simply read that: "in the opinion of the board", that is, maybe I should read the whole thing:

"(a) within twenty days after the date on which the board mails or delivers or causes to be mailed or delivered a written notice to him—

That is the producer:

"—stating that he has, in the opinion of the board, had adequate opportunity to discharge his undertaking—and requesting him to discharge his undertaking by delivery of grain to the board or otherwise"—

I could perhaps find a clearer passage in the committee proceedings, but it is clearly stated that within 20 days when the board feels the producer has had ample opportunity to discharge his undertaking these accounts are due and are then in default. That is when the interest rate applies. Now we get to the crux of my amendment. I pointed out vividly that when the legislation came into being it was intended to help farmers suffering a severe cash shortage but with grain on the farms. In the initial instance cash advances were made interest free. Through no fault of the farmers the government put the repayment schedule out of whack. That is admitted clearly and simply by Mr. Earl, a spokesman of the Canadian Wheat Board, when he stated on the page from which I quoted that the repayment schedule got out of whack.

We now have 46,675 accounts due. Within 20 days' notice by the Canadian Wheat Board every one of those accounts would be in default. I do not suggest they will be, but they could be. Then the government would immediately charge interest. What interest rate should be charged? Let me emphasize that when this legislation was brought in there was no interest but the farmer was driven into debt and put into a position where he could not repay, through no fault of his own. This occurred when the repayment schedule was changed with the adjustment in 1968.

What interest rate is the cruel, mean government going to levy? Is it going to levy all the market will bear? I would hope not. Section 13 of the act says that in prescribing the rate of interest payable on cash advances made during the crop year for which the interest is required by this act, it has to be paid on the advance payments, so it does not spell out what the interest rate will be. No formula is given concerning how the interest rate is to be calculated. Is that fair in respect of legislation to help out the farmer, under which originally advances were interest free? The government, in its ill-advised wisdom, has introduced shameful legislation to drive the farmer into debt. Members on this side of the House advised the government that the net result would be that the farmer would be driven into debt. In respect of the repayment schedule, Mr. Earl, as recorded in committee proceedings No. 51, at page 7, said:

• (9:20 p.m.)

They are due, but as you mentioned a little earlier, the repayment schedule got out of whack with the rate of advance.

How could anything be more clear? Those are the words of the spokesman for the Canadian Wheat Board before the agricultural committee. So the repayment schedule got out of whack through no fault of the farmers. Notice of 20 days is to be given before the 46,000 farmers may be charged interest. What has been in other agricultural legislation with regard to setting the interest rate? In almost every piece of agricultural legislation presented to this House the interest rate or the formula for arriving at the interest rate has been clearly spelled out. The Farm Credit Corporation is one example. The formula in respect of the interest rate is clearly spelled out as being one per cent above the prime government borrowing rate.

In the Farm Improvement Loans Act the formula in respect of the interest rate is clearly spelled out. In the initial concept cash advances were interest free, but now no attempt is made to spell out the formula under which interest will be arrived at. In essence, it will be all the market will bear. One becomes pretty leary about this government when it seeks the power and the right to charge farmers for whatever service they receive. I have long since come to the conclusion that this government is bent on trying to get back every dollar it has paid out in the field of agriculture. The government is trying to remove itself from every obligation which may cost it money.

Bearing that in mind, one might ask what motivates the government. One cay say the government is being abusive in charging interest because when this legislation was first devised and introduced cash advances were completely interest free and worked quite sucessfully until the government changed it and put the repayment schedule out of whack. Now there is to be an interest rate. One could readily say it should be no higher than 5 per cent, the rate charged under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, a nominal fee for the use of money paid out on grain as security which is in the farmer's graneries. The feeling is that a rate of 5 per cent would be rejected out of hand because the government increased the 5 per cent rate on farm improvement loans by 2 per cent, which is about a 40 per cent increase.

It is no wonder Mr. Barber in his report on the cost of farm machinery commented on that matter. Let us look at other legislation. When the old farm loans organization was changed in 1958 to the farm credit set-up there was heated debate inside and outside this House concerning the interest rate that should be charged. Five per cent was the figure arrived at. The government changed that and it is now 7¼ per cent, or in that vicinity.

We wonder what the government would charge under clause 13 when no formula is given and no rate is prescribed. We are being asked to leave it to the government to set a rate when it declares a portion of the 46,000 loans to be in default and due. Mr. Speaker, that is not good enough for me. I would be less than honest with the people whom I represent in this House if I did not attempt to have written in an interest rate formula. Most of my constituents will accuse me of writing in a formula which is too high. I expect that accusation because I believe it is too high. However, I wrote it in as one per cent above the average rate charged the Canadian Wheat Board on its borrowings because I wanted the government to accept this amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I have just a few more comments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Does the House agree to allow the hon. member to conclude his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I acknowledge the gracious attitude of the Chair and the House, but I believe the mover of an amendment has 40 minutes. I do not believe I have spoken for 40 minutes. In any event, I shall not ask the Chair for a ruling on that touchy subject.

I was saying I did not attempt to write in the lowest rate of interest I felt should be charged. I did not attempt to write in a rate of interest which I felt might result in my being accused of writing in one that was too low, because I felt in that case the government would callously disregard the amendment. I endeavoured to write an amendment which the government would find acceptable. In the committees, members of this House are supposed to be non-partisan. I see, Mr. Speaker, that you have found the authority in respect of my suggestion. I can assure you I shall not take my 40 minutes. As I was saying, I tried to bring in a formula in respect of an interest rate which would be adjustable with varying conditions and varying times in the Canadian grain industry, and not in an industry unrelated to cash advances.

Through this amendment I am attempting to write in a formula that is acceptable to the grain industry. I hope the farmers will forgive me for putting the rate so high, but at least if accepted the government could not put its rate higher. Knowing the government's desire for putting interest rates higher. I felt that somewhere, somehow an amendment could be written in or a formula could be devised setting interest rates under this legislation, rates which would not penalize the farmer who is in default through no fault of his own but simply because the government made a mistake and put the repayment system out of whack.

I hope that my words have not fallen on deaf ears. I hope the government will come to understand the initial intent of the cash advance legislation. Cash advances were to be interest free. Now the government feels it must charge interest on loans that are in default. But surely it has enough feeling for the farmer who is in deep trouble that it will write in a formula so that the farmer will know exactly what the interest charge will be, so that he will know whether to borrow money from the bank under the Farm Improvement Loans Act or from the Farm Credt Corporation, instead of taking a cash advance on the grain that he has in storage.

Under the terms of this legislation he may take a cash advance in the fall and he will not know if he is in default until the following spring or summer and at that stage he will be charged the interest rate. This is not fair ball, considering the original intent of the act. I hope the government will give this amendment serious thought and will not callously reject it.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, this or a similar amendment was discussed fairly fully in the committee. The interest rate, of course, will be fully known to any farmer before he takes his cash advance. Prior to the crop year the interest rate, in case of default, will be known.

I should like to point out again that this interest rate does not in any way change the basic principle that cash advances are interest free. Interest is charged only when a loan is in default and it should be borne in mind that placing a farmer in default is something that is exercised with great care by the Wheat Board. Only those farmers who did have repayment opportunities and did not take advantage of them are put in default, and only in respect of them is interest applicable. Last year we extended additional cash advances to farmers at a time when they were badly needed. Now as a result of other programs there will be less need for this type of assistance.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): According to Standing Order 75 (11), this vote stands deferred.

Mr. Lang: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think it might suit hon. members better if rather than proceeding with motions Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5, at this point we take motion No. 6 which stands in my name. In that connection I would like to observe that a few moments ago a point was made that there might be considered to be some procedural difficulty in connection with this motion. However, I think from the discussions in the committee there might be a general disposition to allow it to be put notwithstanding that observation, since it seemed to receive support on all hands. Therefore I would be glad to seek unanimous consent to put motion No. 6 at this time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The House has heard the suggestion of the minister as to the possibility of the House, by unanimous consent, agreeing to study and examine motion No. 6. Unless hon. members have any comments to make on that suggestion I will ask the House if there is unanimous consent.

Mr. Horner: I would like to cemment on this matter. Mr. Speaker. The previous occupant of the Chair suggested that motion No. 6 was really an amendment to the act and not to the bill that is before the House. I think it would be remiss if the House spent some time dealing with an amendment which in essence is out of order. I would not want to be party to establishing the precedent that we spend an hour or half an hour debating an amendment which in essence is out of order. I think we should have a ruling whether it is in order or out of order. If it is in order, I would be perfectly agreeable to our dealing with it now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I must remind hon. members that the present occupant of the Chair was not in the House at the time that point was raised and it would be very difficult for me at this time to make a ruling on the acceptability of motion No. 6, not having heard the arguments that were made previously. I think it would be unfair for the House to expect me to make a ruling now. May I suggest that if the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) is ready, we might go back to motion No. 8.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar) moved motion No. 8:

That Bill C-239, An Act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, be amended by deleting the following words from subclause (1) of clause 11 in lines 35 to 38 at page 10:

"or has, otherwise than by delivery to the board, disposed of all or part of the grain in respect of which the advance was made,"

He said: Mr. Speaker, I moved this amendment in committee and I am moving it again now mainly because

I do not think it should be a part of the duty of the Canadian Wheat Board or the practice of the board to become a sort of snooping agent, to go around and see what a farmer had done with his grain. When this matter was discussed in the committee the minister, in answering a question that I asked, said:

—the difficulty with this amendment is that it would hamstring the board in one very important type of case where it comes to its attention that the person has, in fact, disposed of his grain.

I then asked the minister:

In what manner does this, then, come to their attention? Does an elevator agent inform them that the farmer sold his grain or does somebody else tell them? How do they know?

The minister answered:

Any possible number of ways. The farming community is sometimes aware of what is going on in regard to the neighbouring situation and if it is concerned about it, it may very well draw it to the attention of the board.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Are we to assume that neighbours are watching each other and slipping around to the Canadian Wheat Board saying, "I think Joe Blow has sold the grain that he got his cash advance on"? Does the Wheat Board then send someone out to Joe Blow's place to see whether he still has any grain on his farm, and if they do must they have a search warrant or do they just go on a sort of snooping expedition?

Mr. McCleave: Snoopocracy!

Mr. Gleave: Yes, snoopocracy. It seems to me altogether wrong to put this phrase in an act and to charge the Wheat Board with finding out what an individual did with a certain amount of grain. They probably have not the means of finding that out. Having made the cash advance, it seems to me the Wheat Board has a clear responsibility to recover the money by whatever means are open to it. If it doen't get it this year it will probably attempt to get it next year, and that is quite proper. After all, the farmer borrowed the money and gave an undertaking that some time in the future, as quotas opened, he would deliver grain and pay what he owed.

As the bill is now drawn, the Wheat Board is charged with responsibility to find out if the farmer, in the words of the clause——has, otherwise than by delivery to the board, disposed of all or part of the grain in respect of which the advance was made.

In most cases they cannot do this. At what point in time will they undertake to find this out? Will it be before the account is due? They have no right to inquire before it is due. Will it be after the account is due? If so, what does it avail them? Are they any better off after the account is due if they find out what has been done with grain which in effect they had a lien on by reason of the cash advance? When the bill was before committee I inquired about this but did not receive a satisfactory answer.

If there is to be a system of inspecting farms to find out where the grain has gone, it should be a regular system. The minister or other witnesses should be able to tell the committee what machinery is to be set up for inspection, how it will operate and what its powers are. The limits of that power should also be known. Nothing could bring the Canadian Wheat Board into disrepute more quickly than for it to be generally understood that they had inspectors in the country snooping to find out what had happened to certain amounts of grain. This is just not a workable system. It is for this reason, Mr. Speaker, that I have moved this amendment. I sincerely hope the House will give it serious consideration and remove this objectionable phrase from the bill.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, as indicated in committee the words in question are important because they relate to some instances where fraud may occur in connection with the cash advance system. While snooping is not intended, if fraud should come to the attention of the authorities it is appropriate that they should have the power to take immediate action. This seems to me to be quite legitimate. It is important to the maintenance of the cash advance system. I therefore urge hon. members to oppose the amendment.

Mr. Horner: I should like to speak briefly on this amendment, Mr. Speaker. I well remember when the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) brought this aspect of the legislation before the committee. At that time I agreed that it was not clear how this clause should be interpreted. It reads as follows:

or has, otherwise than by delivery to the board, disposed of all or part of the grain in respect of which the advance was made.

Mr. Lang: That is the way it appears in the present bill.

Mr. Horner: You are quite correct. I read it from the present bill.

Mr. Lang: It is in the present act.

Mr. Horner: I remember that the minister also said that in committee, but prior to the present act we did not have 46,675 outstanding accounts, so one has to look at this matter in a different light. We did not have the interest rate.

Mr. Basford: What was the dollar value?

Mr. Horner: I think it was in the neighbourhood of $51 million, but don't hold me to that. The point I am making is that it is a lot of money and represents a great many permit holders. We have to ascertain how the loans will be paid back.

It was learned in committee that from 300 to 600 cash advances were repaid in cash. In other words, when a loan or cash advance was taken on grain and the grain was not delivered it could be fed to livestock or sold to a feedmill or a feedlot at a higher price and the farmer could then repay the elevator man or the Canadian Wheat Board in cash. I wondered how many people did that, and in committee we were told from 300 to 600 and that is not surprising.

At the moment the average price for barley sold in my area through the Canadian Wheat Board is about 72 cents a bushel. Just the other day the minister stated that he did not think a final payment would be made on barley, but if one were calculated it would be so small that it would not be worth while attempting to pay it. So the farmer receives 72 cents for his barley in the elevator but he can take it down the road to a feed lot and get 80 cents, so naturally that is what he is going to do. Although he may have taken a cash advance he is not inclined to deliver it to the elevator and lose 8 cents a bushel. Instead, he attempts to repay the cash advance in cash because this is more beneficial to him.

Some farmers attempt to repay cash advances partly through sales of grain and partly by cash. According to evidence given to the Standing Committee on Agriculture, approximately 15,000 farmers repay their advances partly in cash. On page 49 of committee proceedings No. 53 the minister gave the exact figures. When dealing with agricultural legislation one must be careful to quote accurate figures to avoid being accused of using misleading figures. The minister said:

> I am told that the figure of producers paying off their advances totally in cash has ranged between 300 and 600; paying off partly in cash has ranged between 13,000 and 15,000.

That answer clearly spells out the number of farmers who repay partly in cash as well as those who repay all their advances in cash. This amendment deals with another aspect of the matter. The Wheat Board may take it upon themselves to ascertain whether a farmer has actually sold the grain, against which he took the advance, to a feed mill or feed lot or whether he sold it to a neighbour for a seed grain. If the board's informants discover that the farmer no longer has the grain, the board can attempt to foreclose, declare the cash advance overdue and attempt to collect it—and interest may be charged. One witnesses under this government a creeping increase in the use of bureaucracy.

An hon. Member: It is galloping, not creeping.

Mr. Horner: There is a creeping extension of the use of bureaucratic power within the structure of government. The minister has said that the powers referred to were included in the old act. Certainly they are in the old act, but there were not 46,000 producers behind in payments and whose payments were due. Under the old act the government did not attempt to snoop into the lives of people engaged in various sectors of our economy. These powers may have been available to the bureaucracy but they were not used.

Mr. McCleave: Now there is to be snoopocracy.

Mr. Horner: I hear a new word, snoopocracy, in connection with this bill. The snoopocracy of an overzealous government will attempt to pry into the financial and economic affairs of individuals. When I said that we are witnessing a creeping extension of the powers of bureaucracy, an hon. member interjected by saying that the extension is galloping, not creeping. More and more Canadians are becoming aware of this fact and are afraid of the trend.

Canadians recently returned their census forms. Most of them are hypersensitive to the idea of bureaucratic empires being built up and directed by the government. I am not criticizing the civil service and I hope that civil servants will not misinterpret my remarks. These powers have long been available to the civil service but have not been used. That is true of many other pieces of legislation. Now the civil service is being asked to use its power and to develop its talent for snooping into the private and economic affairs of farmers. I underline the phrase "economic affairs". Although the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that the government has no business in the bedrooms of the nation, it seems clear that it believes it has some business with the pocketbooks of people of this nation. It is concerned about the farmer's ability to repay. I see the minister nodding his head in the affirmative. I appreciate his being so co-operative and candid. Farmers are losing their ability to repay.

I would not mind if a farmer were placed in a difficult position through actions he himself took. But the farmer has been placed in this position as a result of government action. No matter how many wheat sales are made, the government has placed the farmer in this position against the advice the opposition gave at the time. They have placed him in this position by bringing the repayments under this legislation and by putting out of whack, to use Mr. Earl's words, the farmer's ability to repay. I regret, to see this happening in the field of agriculture. I regret that the minister seems to be taking this in his stride. He seems proud that he will be the big boss of the new snoopocracy which is to operate under the Canadian Wheat Board.

I regret that the government has resorted to this action in the field of agriculture, particularly since agriculture is encountering greater and greater complications with regard to the quota system and the delivery system. I regret that the snoopocracy and the threat of intervention by the snoopocracy will affect the qualify of life of the farmer and the freedom he has enjoyed until this time.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—SOLUTION FOR PROBLEM OF REFUGEES FROM EAST PAKISTAN NOW IN INDIA

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, on June 2 I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) what steps the government was taking to promote a long-range solution to the crisis in India and Pakistan. With the sardonic flippancy which so often characterizes his utterances about matters domestic or foreign, the Prime Minister sought to score points rather than convey information. I hope that the tragic events since last Wednesday have convinced him that this is one of the grave international problems of our time and not the subject of smart aleck debating gambits.

It seems to me there are two aspects to which we should give our earnest attention and concern. The humanitarian problem is assuming massive proportions. The stories coming in daily of disease, suffering and death among the hopeless millions of refugees should move all of us to compassion and the government to greater action. I have commended the grant of $2 million; but surely in the face of such an immense tragedy it is time to look at the question again and to seek new avenues for translating the concern of the Canadian people into action by their government.

The United States has increased its financial contribution; it has sent large military transport aircraft. I asked the other day what this country planned. The director of Oxfam, Dr. Pierre Cournoyer, has been telling the people of this country some stirring things about the problems in Calcutta and the depth of the human tragedy being played out in the area.

I hope that the government will not delay or procrastinate on this matter but will assist all non-governmental organizations desirous of helping and able to help. I hope it will use its resources to ameliorate the suffering. I believe there will be a disposition in all corners of this House to support increased efforts to help in a case where it is so painfully obvious that much help is needed.

The other aspect of the case, and naturally it is related to and indeed antecedent to the other, is the political question. This is not now a domestic matter. One country, India, has received millions of citizens of another land. It cannot be assumed that India, with its own grave problems, can assume this burden. Some way must be found whereby the millions of East Pakistanian refugees will return to their homes. This will require from the Pakistan government some attitudes and adjustments which have not yet, so far as we know, been apparent.

The existing situation threatens not only the economy and poverty of India but the peace of the world. It is incumbent upon all friendly states to do their part to help further a solution. Canada is a member of the Commonwealth. India and Pakistan are fellow members. Can this body not be used?

The United Nations, of which we are charter member, has various organs and procedures for taking up matters which constitute a threat to world peace. Why does Canada not take some initiative in having the matter considered by the UN? Surely some kind of UN presence should be put into being to look carefully into the serious and threatening situation. The world cannot allow another large group of refugees to be cast adrift for years. Surely the experience of the Palestinian refugees should jolt us out of complacency and stir us into action. Something must be done soon. I ask the government not to hesitate in giving leadership. It is for such leadership that I call once more.

[Mr. Macquarrie.]

Mr. Barnett J. Danson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) is as deeply concerned about this tragic situation as is the government.

The government is acutely aware of the problems created for India and for the stability of South Asia by the influx of refugees from East Pakistan. As we all know, the origins of this problem lie not in India itself but in East Pakistan and in the breakdown of discussions between the government of Pakistan and the Awami League. In common with other governments, Canada has urged on the government of Pakistan the need to resume the search for a political solution and to establish conditions which will permit refugees from East Pakistan to return to their homes. We have also offered relief assistance to East Pakistan. Beyond that, Mr. Speaker, there is little that outside governments, no matter how well disposed, can do in a situation of this kind where the contending parties would be understandably sensitive to any attempt to prescribe, much less impose, a solution.

Pending a political settlement, the problem of caring for the Pakistan refugees in India is one which is receiving the urgent attention of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the World Food Programme the League of Red Cross Societies and other international organizations. A number of countries have indicated their intention to share some of the burden thrust upon the government of India. It is clear that the amount of aid for relief purposes will depend not only on the number of refugees now in India but on the rate of influx, the length of time before a settlement is reached and the willingness of refugees to be repatriated at that time, together with a large number of additional factors which cannot be determined at this time. Every effort is being made to obtain the information on which an assessment of future requirements can be made and all appropriate governmental, intergovernmental and private organizations are being consulted in this process.

Having said this, I can assure the House that we are in close and constant touch with the United Nations family of organizations with a view to assisting, in so far as we can perform a useful and desired role, in bringing about an accommodation which will provide the greatest equity for those directly concerned. Canada is a member of the Aid to Pakistan consortium and is taking an active role in the consideration which that body is giving to the situation in Pakistan. Within the International Bank of Reconstruction and Development and within the International Monetary Fund we intend to explore with other interested groups the means whereby appropriate arrangements for the future well-being of all concerned can be assisted.

Officials of the Canadian government are in close contact with the government of Pakistan and other countries which share our interest in reaching an appropriate program. It is our view that through close collaboration with other countries we can contribute most effectively to creating conditions in which a political settlement will be possible. The ultimate responsibility for reaching that political settlement necessarily rests with the contending parties.

UNEMPLOYMENT—EFFECTIVENESS OF MANITOBA DEFICIT FINANCING PROGRAM IN DECREASING UNEMPLOYMENT —SUGGESTED CONSULTATION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): On May 13, Mr. Speaker, I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) whether in view of the fact that unemployment in the province of Manitoba was reduced steadily in the three months between February and April, in contrast with what happened in the rest of the country, he would give consideration to discussing with the Minister of Finance of Manitoba the process by which the government of Manitoba had been able to achieve that happy result.

In May of 1971 we were able to get the figures for unemployment in Canada during the month of April. They showed that 567,000 people were unemployed, 6.7 per cent of the labour force, calculated on a seasonally adjusted basis. This represented a sharp increase compared with the same month in 1970—the rate of increase had risen steadily up to the month of April. By contrast, in Manitoba unemployment in February amounted to 22,000; the seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment was 6 per cent. In April, unemployment had dropped to 18,000 and the seasonally adjusted rate was only 4.8 per cent.

Manitoba is, I think, the only province in which such a decrease took place. It was not an accident. The provincial government realized as early as 1970 that unemployment would be serious in the winter of 1971. It felt the federal government was overreacting to inflation and that its policies of restraint would likely cause widespread high-level unemployment, as it has done, throughout the winter of last year and probably for the rest of this year.

More than a year ago, therefore, the government began to make plans to deal with unemployment to the extent that a provincial government can. It set aside $32 million in its capital supply estimates for special public works and construction projects which could be started quickly if, as they suspected and feared, unemployment became much more serious. In addition, they provided a further $70 million for public works and housing projects. Beginning as early as October last year a whole series of projects was undertaken. Construction of schools in 26 centres, costing $34 million, was announced in addition to six regional, vocational secondary schools costing $21 million. This cost was, of course, shared with the federal government. Norway House schools, where the population is almost entirely Indian, were begun. University construction amounted to $4 million and there was public housing amounting to almost $12 million, the cost of which was shared with the federal government.

This was in October, 1970, and in November the Manitoba government announced a greatly accelerated public housing program to be initiated by the provincial government and financed jointly, of course, with the government at Ottawa. However, the provincial government has taken the lead and this year there will be 2,200 public housing units built in Manitoba, an increase of more than 100 per cent over the number of public housing units built in 1970 and an increase of more than 1,000 per cent over the number of public housing units built by the former government.

In December the government of Manitoba announced an expanded public housing program which was not as large as they wanted because Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation would not agree to share the cost to the extent proposed by the government of Manitoba. Nevertheless, the Premier made it clear that he was clearly dissatisfied with the fact that, during the period 1968 to 1970, of 25,000 new dwelling units built in the province of Manitoba only 1,000 provided accommodation for people with incomes of under $5,000.

The Premier made it clear that the government of Manitoba would do everything it could to change this situation and to provide, as I have said, for a much larger percentage of housing starts in the province being devoted to public housing accommodation for people in the low-income brackets. The government of Manitoba has set a goal for the years 1971-75 of building about 4,500 units for elderly persons' housing in view of the steadily increasing number of senior citizens in Manitoba, as in other provinces.

This is the kind of program that the goverment of Manitoba has implemented, not just because it is required but because the government felt very strongly that at a time when unemployment is so prevalent and growing so rapidly governments must take the lead in providing, through necessary and worth-while projects, increased employment opportunities for the people of Manitoba. I suggest that the federal government follow the same line in its policies.

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the unemployment rate in Manitoba, as published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, declined from the January peak of 6.5 per cent to 4.8 per cent in April. However, contrary to the information the hon. member has, these figures are not seasonally adjusted and therefore do not accurately show in the unemployment trend because the unadjusted rate usually falls by about 1.5 per cent over the first four months of the year. Also, the Manitoba unemployment rate is classified by DBS as an "f" statistic and according to DBS this category of statistics is their second least reliable.

The impetus to increasing employment and reducing unemployment in that province is coming from the housing sector and from new capital expenditure in primary industries and construction industries where 1971 investment intentions indicate that expectations regarding new capital outlays are for an increase of 15.5 per cent after a decline of 13.6 per cent in 1970. New capital outlay intentions for housing are up by 23.8 per cent in 1971 following the 5 per cent drop in 1970. Housing starts in the fourth quarter of 1970 rose by 54.2 per cent over the fourth quarter level of 1969, compared to the 45.2 per cent rise for Canada as a whole. The provincial government expenditures rose by approximately 25 per cent in the 1969-70 fiscal year. However, the 1970-71 expenditure increase is not as expansionary and should increase by roughly 12 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, the Prairie region of which Manitoba forms a part has been considerably less affected by unemployment than other regions of Canada. The seasonally adjusted rate for the Prairies for April was 4.3 per cent, compared to 6.7 per cent nationally, 8.1 per cent for the Atlantic region, 8.4 per cent for Quebec, 5.7 per cent for Ontario and 7.6 per cent for British Columbia.

While we would certainly not minimize the efforts of any provincial government toward the reduction of unemployment, we are constrained to note the very favourable trend existing in Manitoba which also pertains to the other provinces in the Prairie region where governments do not admit to the hon. member's political persuasion. All these governments are to be congratulated.

THE BUDGET—REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF CIRCUMSTANCES OF ELDERLY RETIRED PEOPLE

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, June 2, I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) the following question:

> Will he assure us that some regard will be had for the circumstances of the elderly retired on fixed incomes in his presentation to us on June 18?

The minister replied:

> Mr. Speaker, we always do our best to look after the old people.

Faced with an answer like that, any sensible person would be frightened to death. I could only do one thing and that was to go for the jugular, which happens to be this inspired part of the evening on the late, late show. Here we are, and I am rising to suggest—I hope this question will be received by the parliamentary secretary—that one is frightened about discrimination against elderly people. I have in mind those who are not able to tackle inflation by the sweat of their brow, so to speak, because they are no longer at the point where they can effectively work and earn that extra wherewithal to deal with inflation.

I know of a situation which is really only partly the fault of the Department of Finance. It involves an old gentleman in his mid-eighties who was receiving the old age guaranteed supplement and also war veterans allowance. Thanks to the computerized formula, he receives $5 less per month although he and his wife receive a little more income. This is how things work in the computer age. When you are in your mid-eighties you will find yourself taking home less pay to feed yourself and your wife even though the family income is greater. This is a blight on the human spirit. This gentleman is quite depressed about how the computer age has treated him. I just draw that matter to the attention of the parliamentary secretary.

My main point this evening is an argument for higher exemptions in two different directions. The mail I get, like the mail which I believe is received by other hon. members, suggests that if there is one area of tax reform which we should look after it is higher exemptions for those on fixed incomes, particularly old age pensioners. I do not think there is any question about this. Out of every 10 letters I receive on the subject, nine are in that vein. The tenth usually deals with an esoteric subject such as capital gains.

If my experience is typical, and I have reason to think it is, this is the area in which the minister has to do his work well on June 18 or we will face some kind of a revolution by the aged of this country. There must be lower taxes for the fixed income, retired group. This can be done in several ways. There could be increased exemptions for all. I have argued previously—I note this in passing since my time is running short—that there should be correlation of a pretty relevant kind between increased exemptions and the poverty level, probably a double exemption for each individual.

The second point is that we should give an increased exemption to the elderly, say in the amount of $1,000 instead of the $500 they now enjoy, because they have expenses which most of us who are younger do not have. They have expenses in respect of medicines, diet, furniture and accommodation because some of them are in wheelchairs and cannot live in walk-up accommodation. I believe these two points should be borne in mind.

Finally, as my third point I would say it may be there should be a combination of an extra exemption for everybody and an additional exemption for old age pensioners. I place this upon the shoulders of the parliamentary secretary who I know will draw my point to the attention of the Minister of Finance. In brief, because I am dealing with the elderly since they have extra costs and are not able to fight against insidious inflation, I would hope the Minister of Finance on June 18, when he stands in his place in a House much more full than it is at the present time, would convey good news to our older citizens.

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is very well aware that questions regarding the content of the forthcoming budget cannot be answered at this time. Representations in this particular area have been received and the minister is aware of the various points of view and representations, including those expressed by the hon. member. I am afraid no further response is possible at this time.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS AND STANDING ORDERS

CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Victor Forget (Saint-Michel) moved that the second report of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders, presented to the House on Thursday, June 3, 1971, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Victor Forget (Saint-Michel) moved that the third report of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders, presented to the House on Thursday, June 3, 1971, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: If I understand correctly, the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) would like to move a motion under Standing Order 43. We have already completed consideration of motions but, with the consent of the House, we might revert to motions so as to enable the hon. member for Bellechasse to move this motion. Does the House agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

INDUSTRY

CLOSING OF CHEMCELL LIMITED MONTMAGNY PLANT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I should like to move a motion concerning a case of urgent necessity.

In fact, the President of Chemcell Limited has announced that they will be closing down their Montmagny plant in the autumn of 1971, due to market requirements and primarily to foreign competition. This will result in the lay-off of more than 300 workers and will affect 2,000 persons, thus worsening the already acute economic situation in the city of Montmagny.

Therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Dionne), I move:

That the House give unanimous consent that this important matter be deferred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, in order that this committee may study ways and means to prevent closing down of the plant and report to the House as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Bellechasse under the provisions of Standing Order 43. It cannot be put without the unanimous consent of hon. members. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put to the House.

TRANSPORT

INCREASE IN NOVA SCOTIA-NEWFOUNDLAND AND PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND-NEW BRUNSWICK FERRY RATES

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to move a motion under Standing Order 26, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That this House do now adjourn for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the large and unexpected increase in rates charged on ferry services operated by the Canadian National Railways, connecting the provinces of Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island with the mainland of Canada.

On a question of privilege, perhaps I might be allowed to add that since notice of this motion was given I believe the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) has issued a statement to the effect that the increase on the Newfoundland service will be partially disallowed. However, the principle to which I object still stands.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Malpeque has given the Chair the notice required under the terms of Standing Order 26 and I have given the matter serious consideration.

As hon. members know, the Chair is bound by the Standing Order to take into consideration not only the importance and urgency of the matter but also the opportunity for debate in the foreseeable future. As hon. members know, in the days ahead there will be many opportunities to discuss matters as important as this one.

The question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Malpeque, that is, the point he made that having given notice of this motion an announcement has come from the office of the Minister of Transport, takes some of the urgency out of the proposal submitted by the hon. member for Malpeque. The hon. member says that he still objects to the principle. I suggest to him and to the House that, if it is the principle that is suggested for discussion, the circumstances to which I have alluded assume special importance in that there will be many occasions in the days ahead to discuss the substance of the motion raised by the hon. member for Malpeque, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

WELFARE

POSSIBILITY OF PROVINCES OPTING OUT OF CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN AND RECEIVING FISCAL EQUIVALENT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government has agreed to or proposed for consideration the possibility of any province opting out of the Canada Assistance Plan and adopting in lieu thereof a program such as a guaranteed annual income and receiving from the government of Canada the fiscal equivalent of what it would have received had it continued to operate under the Canada Assistance Plan?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. As the question has been asked, especially in the context of fiscal equivalents, there has been no suggestion by the government of Canada to that effect or agreement thereto—no suggestion by us or agreement to any suggestion of that nature.

Mr. Stanfield: Has the government of Canada proposed, or agreed to, a province opting out of the Canada Assistance Plan and receiving any form of alternative fiscal reimbursement?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker. But as I said in reply to questions yesterday, this matter, like others, is being discussed and the position of the federal government on these various matters, particularly with regard to shared-cost programs such as the Canada Assistance Plan, has been made known in our papers to former constitutional conferences, and we continue to take that position.

Mr. Stanfield: Has the federal government proposed, in the course of the conference now being held between the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the corresponding provincial ministers, any increase in the contribution of the federal government under the Canada Assistance Plan and, if so, what increase?

Mr. Trudeau: I am being prompted, but I am afraid—

Mr. Bell: Watch it!

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, I will watch it. Thank you very much.

Mr. Bell: Watch the source.

Mr. Hees: Don't get all fuddle-duddle.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I think this is a question of great importance to the members of the House and I would ask the Prime Minister not to be too sensitive but to try to give us an answer.

AIDE-MEMOIRE PRESENTED TO CONFERENCE OF WELFARE MINISTERS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the Minister of National Health and Welfare presented an aide-memoire or a memorandum to the conference of health ministers which began yesterday, and whether such aide-memoire was a statement of government policy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer to both questions is yes. It has been presented with the authority of the government though we do not know what agreement will flow from it. It has been made quite clear by the minister that any suggestions along the lines of the aide-memoire or along lines that might be of interest to the Leader of the Opposition were conditional upon agreement on the over-all package that we will be discussing in Victoria.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, this matter is of interest to the Leader of the Opposition but it is also of interest to the people of Canada and to all members of the House. Would the Prime Minister undertake to table or to have the Minister of National Health table the aide-memoire and in the meantime inform the House of the proposals that the federal government made to the provincial ministers in relation to sharing under the Canada Assistance Plan, to use its formal name, and would he also inform the House whether the question of a guaranteed annual income will be a federal or provincial matter?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I cannot undertake to table such aide-memoire because agreement was reached between the provinces and the federal government that neither side would make public documents relating to the conference which is now going on. We have exchanged points of view. They are conditional upon reaching a further and final agreement in Victoria. There has been no unconditional suggestion for change by the federal government nor, as far as I know, by any of the provincial governments. Therefore these documents are purely for purposes of discussion. They do represent the position of the government of Canada if agreement is reached. As I say, they are not unconditional suggestions for change by the government of Canada, and therefore it would not be in the public interest to put them forth as such.

Mr. Lewis: In view of the crucial importance of all these discussions not only to those who happen to be leaders of governments at this time but to all the people of Canada and to future generations, would the Prime Minister undertake at some point to inform Parliament and the people of Canada as to the suggestions made and accepted or rejected, so that we may fully understand the discussions that are taking place?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, at a point following the Victoria conference.

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he can justify operating in such an aura of secrecy in matters of such importance to the people?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that this is argument.

TRANSFER TO PROVINCES OF JURISDICTION OVER SOCIAL SERVICES

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Considering the different views held by the Quebec Health Minister on the powers of the provinces with regard to social services, would the Prime Minister tell the House if the responsible federal minister, who is presently taking part in the conference, has been authorized by the government to negotiate the transfer to Quebec of some jurisdiction over social services, and if that province was assured that it would get fiscal equivalence?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, according to the federal government, the conference now in progress is not a constitutional conference but one where the health ministers are trying to improve the general situation of the people of Canada within the framework of their respective social legislation.

I know that Quebec as well as other provinces have submitted some proposals. Furthermore, as I said in reply to a previous question, the Minister of National Health and Welfare is mainly involved in expounding the position of the federal government, which is derived from proposals included in the white paper which the minister tabled a few months ago.

As regards constitutional matters, I hope they will be decided upon in Victoria, but we do not intend to settle them at the conference now under way.

MANITOBA SUGGESTION THAT FEDERAL GOVERNMENT'S SHARE UNDER CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN BE INCREASED

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the government is giving consideration to the suggestion made by Manitoba, as reported in the press, that the federal government's share under the Canada Assistance Plan be increased to 65 per cent?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am sure we will consider all suggestions made by any province, Mr. Speaker, but I cannot say more than that. This particular suggestion has not been made by the federal minister to the cabinet. Therefore he is not authorized to agree to it.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

Since the ministers which are now gathered in Ottawa are discussing the problem of social security or social services, I would like to ask him whether a report on this meeting will be tabled at the conference of first ministers which will be held in Victoria next week?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The conference which began yesterday and will continue today has been convened following the suggestion of the first ministers who thought in February that the conference should be held and that indeed a report be submitted to the Victoria conference. This report will be presented next week.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the House that perhaps we might set aside the additional supplementary questions a number of hon. members want to ask and go on to the next subject.

ENERGY

PANARCTIC NATURAL GAS DISCOVERY—AREA FARM-OUT AGREEMENTS WITH OIL COMPANIES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the fact that Panarctic Oils, of which the federal government owns 45 per cent, is now in possession of one of the most important gas finds on the North American continent, may I ask him whether any of the Panarctic area has been farmed out to the Imperial Oil Company and are any other companies being granted farm-out agreements by Panarctic Oil?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, in the normal course of business, it is customary for agreements to be reached with other companies whereby research projects are farmed out to them by contract. That is the kind of agreement Panarctic Oils Limited entered into with Imperial Oil Limited a few weeks ago.

[English]

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact there are some 600 million acres in the Arctic and only 55 million are under the control of Panarctic Oils, may I ask the minister why it is necessary to farm out any of that comparatively small area in relation to the total?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but it seems to me he might appreciate, with me, that asking the minister why it is necessary to take such and such an action involves a question which is essentially argumentative. The hon. member might like to ask the question in other terms.

Mr. Douglas: In addition to the farm-out to the Imperial Oil Company, is it the intention of the government to allow farm-outs to other companies and, if so, to what extent is the area now controlled by Panarctic going to be alienated?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, these decisions are made by Panarctic Oils Limited and not by the government, and as I said a few moments ago, it is a practice of the oil industry to subcontract the exploration of oil in certain areas. I must tell the hon. member that most Arctic islands are controlled by Panarctic Oils Limited. I do not believe that concluding such contracts with some companies will be detrimental to Panarctic.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a very serious question to the Prime Minister.

I note that the former Minister of Communications has been given a seat at this end to the House. Is this to bring him closer to the Social Credit theories?

TRANSPORT

FERRY RATE INCREASES IMPOSED BY CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS IN MARITIMES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. What action has he taken with regard to the outrageous increases announced by Canadian National Railways in his absence with regard to the CNR ferries operating between Newfoundland and the mainland and Prince Edward Island and the mainland?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, immediately on my return last night I issued instructions that the schedule was to be withdrawn in the case of the Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island services. The rate increases to which I have agreed will not exceed $1 per adult, $2 per automobile and $1 per berth on the Newfoundland service and not more than 15 cents per passenger or 50 cents per car on the Prince Edward Island service.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister if he can assure the House that no further arbitrary increases will be announced by Canadian National or approved by the government without first consulting with the two provinces?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. In fact I am examining now the possibility of finding some mechanism through which such rate increases in the future can be submitted perhaps to the Canadian Transport Commission or some other agency so there can be an assessment of them in advance.

WOOD ISLAND-CARIBOU FERRY SERVICE—ACTION RESPECTING INCREASE IN RATES

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport what action he proposes to take with regard to the doubling of the rates on the Wood Island-Caribou service, operated by Northumberland Ferries, because of the reduction in the subsidy by the federal government?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it was not a reduction of subsidy. The subsidy figure is likely to be as high or higher than in the past. It was in an effort to prevent an increase in the subsidy. As the hon. member knows, the Canadian Transport Commission, unlike the Borden-Tormentine service, has authority in the case of the Wood Island service. I communicated with the chairman of the CTC this morning to advise him of the action that had been taken with regard to the ferries coming under my authority and he has indicated that his water commission will be meeting today to discuss what steps they might take.

SUGGESTED EGG BUYING PROGRAM BECAUSE OF DEPRESSED PRICES

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the extremely depressed prices being received by egg producers, particularly in the provinces of Ontario and Manitoba, I wonder whether the government would immediately initiate an egg buying program under the farm products act?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have initiated a program of this kind and it is hoped to have the call for tenders ready this week.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

OIL COMPANY PRICE INCREASES—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO REQUIRE COMPLIANCE WITH RESTRAINTS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs which I asked yesterday of the Prime Minister who said he would take it as notice and that the minister would reply today. In view of the report handed to the government some time ago by the Prices and Income Commission to the effect that four major Canadian oil companies are in violation of the government's price restraint program, is it the intention of the government to take steps in the near future to require these companies to comply with these price restraints?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the report dealt with violations of the pricing criteria for 1970 and, as I indicated in the House the other day, we are examining a number of alternatives in light of the commission's report. I may say to the hon. member that it is somewhat difficult, of course, as I have explained, to deal with policies in respect of only four oil companies rather than the industry as a whole.

Mr. Hees: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I have asked the minister if the government is planning to take steps to require these four companies to comply with the government's restraint program—yes or no?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, the report to which the hon. member refers related to 1970, not 1971, and so the question he puts is not entirely in order. We are endeavouring, however, to see, in light of the report, what could be and should be done. If there is an announcement it will, of course, be made in the usual way.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, is it not apparent from the minister's answer why the minister has become the worst minister in the government within a very short space of time?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

SHIPPING

ACTION TO IMPLEMENT REPORT ON COASTING TRADE

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the urgent need for immediate and long-term opportunities for employment by Canadian seamen, can the minister tell the House what government action we can expect to flow from the recommendations of the Darling commission on the coasting trade?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I answered a somewhat similar question the other day. The tabling of the report and the publicizing of it were designed to generate as much comment as possible from interested parties. I think it is fair to give a reasonable length of time so that the various interests can make their views known on the report. Just as soon as we have these views, government policy will be formulated along these lines. I would hesitate to give a time frame, but perhaps by the autumn of this year might be a reasonable expectation.

SOFT LOANS TO THIRD WORLD COUNTRIES—EFFECT OF DELAY IN PASSAGE OF UNITED STATES FOREIGN AID BILL ON CANADIAN PLEDGE

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to reply to the question raised last Friday by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal relating to the financing of the International Development Association. The government is aware of the delay being encountered by the United States administration in obtaining Congressional approval for its contribution to the third replenishment. This may have the unfortunate consequence that the agreement will not become effective on July 1, 1971 as originally envisaged. In order to avoid an interruption in IDA lending activity, the Minister of Finance has informed Mr. McNamara that Canada would be prepared to make available its first payment of $50 million in United States funds in November, 1971, even if the agreement is not yet in effect. This offer is contingent upon parliamentary approval of the estimates now before the House. The government has expressed its expectation that a number of other donor countries would follow Canada's initiative in this matter.

AIRPORTS

PROGRESS OF PLANNING FOR NEW TORONTO INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—COST-SHARING ARRANGEMENTS WITH PROVINCES

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the understandable concern in Ontario that there may be some undue delay in respect of the development of the new international airport at Toronto, can the minister say whether the progress of planning is normal and satisfactory or indicate if there is any reason for the delay?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I think the reason for the delay, as I attempted to explain in the House on several previous occasions, is the complexity of the negotiations with the province of Ontario. I do not say that in any critical sense. There is a great deal of data and documentation to be studied. I would hope that within a week or ten days I can meet with the responsible minister in Ontario to determine what areas are still uncertain in his mind with regard to federal participation and that we can move ahead from that point. I want to say categorically that there is no intention on the part of the government to retard in any way this particular development. It remains our determination and our intention to create in southwestern Ontario an additional airport facility at the earliest possible time.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Transport whether he has offered the Ontario officials the same cost-sharing arrangements that were offered the province of Quebec with respect to the new airport at Ste. Scholastique?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, the question, with respect, is hypothetical at the moment. I have indicated we are prepared to talk about participation at the federal and provincial level, that is, what input each would provide, but before that kind of discussion can be meaningful it is necessary to know the particular site that is to be employed because the costs will be determined largely by the site. I have communicated this to the province of Ontario and I will reinforce it in meetings within a week or so, I hope.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Transport. Has the minister studied the remarks made by the Prime Minister with regard to the potential airport that is to be built?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, I have. I concur with what the Prime Minister has said in this regard in that if there is delay beyond 1975 there is no question that it will have an effect upon the division of air traffic within Canada, but I am confident we can meet that obective because it is our intention to keep Toronto a very important part of the aviation complex.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary for the Minister of Transport. In saying that he agrees with the Prime Minister does he realize that puts him in the hole with the Prime Minister?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS—EXTENT OF DEFAULTS AND SEIZURES

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance. In view of reports of pressure on farmers, particularly in western Canada, by the banks for payment for farm improvement loans where the security is a lien on the machinery purchased, would the minister inform the House whether he has inquired of the banks concerning the extent to which default has occurred on the part of farmers and seizures made by the banks, or how many of these loans have been transferred by the banks into other loan categories?

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I will have to take that question as notice.

CHEMCELL LIMITED—MEASURES TO PREVENT CLOSING OF MONTMAGNY PLANT

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Could the minister tell the House whether Mr. Malone, president of Chemcell Limited, has informed him of the project for closing this company's plant in Montmagny during the next few months?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, my department is aware of this proposed closing of the plant. We discussed it with Chemcell to try and find a solution, unfortunately without success. I want to point out that we are now examining the possibility of assisting workers affected by the closing, under the textile products act passed recently by this House.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Bellechasse wish to ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Yesterday, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, in his answer to this House, asserted that this company had not filed any application with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce for a grant to modernize its plant or make some improvements needed to stay in operation.

Mr. Pepin: I am aware of that, Mr. Speaker, and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion was absolutely right. We have here a kind of rationalization decided upon by the company with the hope of remaining competitive on both the domestic and the international levels.

APPLICATION FOR RAILWAY PASSENGER SERVICE ABANDONMENT AS PREREQUISITE TO REQUEST FOR SUBSIDY —SUGGESTED AMENDMENT OF STATUTE

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Since the present legislation requiring the railways to first apply for abandonment of passenger service as a prerequisite to a subsidy application is causing needless anxiety and concern to the Canadian public, has the minister given any consideration to amending the legislation to allow the railways to apply for a subsidy without going through the presently required ridiculous procedure?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, not on that particular point because, without getting argumentative about it, I am not sure how you could determine the size of the subsidy or whether or not it was warranted without having a hearing. But I will be glad to examine the matter.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): Since the minister has already indicated in reply to a previous question that he is studying ways of reviewing freight rate increases before they are put into effect, does this mean that there might be some important changes in the National Transportation Act coming before the House soon?

Mr. Jamieson: I do not anticipate that it will be soon, Mr. Speaker.

INTENTION OF CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS TO DISCONTINUE OTTAWA-TORONTO PASSENGER TRAIN SERVICE

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I merely want to point out to the hon. member and to all hon. members that we will be running short of time and we should try for the next few minutes to limit supplementary questions as much as possible. But the Chair has recognized the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

Mr. Hees: With regard to the application of Canadian National Railways to cut off passenger service between Ottawa and Toronto, would the minister advise the management of the CNR that that railway exists to serve the Canadian public and that it is not in the public interest—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: —to cut off the passenger service between the capital and one of the two largest cities in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not a question but a submission. The hon. member has to assume that it will be taken into account. We have to go on to the next subject.

PENITENTIARIES

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON SHORT TERM POLICIES RESPECTING REFORMS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): My question is directed to the Solicitor General but before doing so I should like to commend the minister for doing away with the numbering—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should ask his question.

Mr. Gilbert: I will, but I would first like to suggest that he should be commended for doing away with the numbering of prisoners' garb in penitentiaries. It indicates that he is not attempting to treat the prisoners—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Hillsborough.

[Later:]

I believe the hon. member for Broadview had a supplementary statement to make to the House.

Mr. Gilbert: I will put my question now. In view of the progressive measure which the minister has taken with regard to prisoners in penitentiaries, would he make a statement on motions in the next week setting forth his short-term policies concerning reforms in penitentiaries to ease the tensions that prevail in these institutions?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, we will announce from time to time the reforms we propose to make.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Hees: If you conned them into believing what you were trying to tell them.

TORONTO—DEVELOPMENT OF CNR-CPR METRO CENTRE COMPLEX—EFFORT OF ONTARIO DECISION TO STOP CONSTRUCTION OF SPADINA EXPRESSWAY

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): My question is for the Minister of Transport. Will the decision of the Ontario government to stop construction on the Spadina Expressway hamper or prevent the development of the CNR-CPR complex known as the $200 million Metro Centre in Toronto?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I am afraid that is much too technical a question for me to answer immediately. I will be glad to look into it. I might add that the decision which was made by myself, along with Mr. Campbell of Metro Toronto and the provincial government, with regard to the commuter railway study apparently becomes considerably more important now, and we will speed up that study in light of what has happened.

THE CENSUS

COMPLETION OF LONG QUESTIONNAIRE BY PERSONS IN OLD PEOPLE'S HOMES

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Are the census authorities still insisting that persons in old people's homes and occupants of other institutions of that sort complete the long census forms and send them in, or is the short form being accepted in lieu thereof in those situations?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I do not know how the census could be valid unless the proper procedure is followed. The sample method can only produce good results if it is properly implemented. It would make it impossible for proper statistics to be compiled if people were to exchange long and short census forms or if people refused to answer the long questionnaire but agreed to answer the short one. I do not think the system would work if this were done.

REPORTED REFUSAL OF WINNIPEG ENUMERATORS TO SEND IN FORMS BECAUSE OF INADEQUATE PAY

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the eleven o'clock CBC broadcast this morning on which we were told that Winnipeg census enumerators have refused to turn in the census forms because they feel that the pay they are receiving is inadequate, what steps does the minister propose to take?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industries, Trade and Commerce): I was in the House at eleven o'clock so I could not listen to the news program. I will have the information checked. If it happens to be true, I will express the greatest resentment because these people were quite well acquainted, before accepting the work, with the salary which they would receive. Their action would be most unwelcome in view of the importance of the documents that they are now holding in their hands, if this news item is true.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the House knows, Canada has been extremely active in the establishment of agreements barring armaments from outer space and from the seabed. I am sure that through our representative in New York, Ambassador Beaulne, and our representative in Geneva, Ambassador Ignatieff, Canada will again participate actively in reaching agreement on such a subject if indeed it has been brought forward.

PROVISION OF NATIONAL SALARY SCALE FOR NURSES

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I should like to address a question to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that the federal government has not adopted a national salary scale for nurses, although it has done so for every other profession, and in view of the fact that some nurses with families to support have had to ask for welfare assistance, will the government reconsider its policy with a view to removing the discrimination against these employees in a profession largely female in content?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in commenting on the question let me say that the federal government is active in trying to eliminate discrimination against females in any place it can be found. I cannot accept the premise of the hon. member that the federal government has brought about or imposed a national standard covering all other professions.

Mrs. MacInnis: Will the government indicate its willingness to reconsider this policy in time to avoid this matter going to arbitration and thus restore the confidence of the 2,200 nurses in the federal public service?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is asking me to acknowledge that the technique of the bargaining process, including the arbitration element, is unsatisfactory and that we are prepared to shortcircuit it. As the hon. member knows, I have a continued objection to negotiating in this way across the floor of the House.

Does the minister have the answer now?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I find on checking that the quotas have been filled as follows: a total of 6,000 in student militia training; in the naval reserve, 900; first year 3,250, second year 1,850—that is in militia training. I should explain that last year's militia program was 7,850 and not 5,000 as mentioned by the hon. member. The total this year is 8,000, combining 6,000 in militia training and 2,000 civilian leadership candidates. The total program in armouries is limited to 4,150 as compared with over 7,000 last year. The remainder of the programs will be conducted in combat group training areas. I hope this is the information sought by the hon. member.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct my question to my favourite member, that is the Prime Minister.

[Mr. Marshall.]

Regarding the Victoria Conference, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he can assure us that the amending formula will be discussed only after the negotiations about provincial powers are completed?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I tabled the agenda yesterday, and unless the provinces should want to modify it, it will remain as it is, that is to say that first the Constitution, and then social security will be discussed. But I think that it was agreed that no final decision will be taken on any item on the agenda before it has been discussed as a whole. And the federal government does not intend to exhaust an item and to exclude any possibility of bringing it up again.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to the order about to be called. When the special order for today was passed it was provided that this debate would be interrupted at six o'clock and the vote, if one is called, would be taken at that time. That is 15 minutes later than would be the case under the ordinary rules and it would cut into the dinner hour. There is also the fact that we will have more votes at eight o'clock. I think you will find there is agreement among the four parties that the debate today be interrupted at 5.45 p.m. so that with a 15-minute ringing of the bell the vote can be taken promptly at six o'clock.

While I am on my feet may I say that we are not suggesting any change in the order so far as time limits on speeches are concerned but we do suggest that no one ask for overtime.

Mr. MacLean: The suggestions of the hon. member are acceptable to the official opposition, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—GOVERNMENT AGRICULTURAL POLICIES—IMMEDIATE PAYMENT OF $100 MILLION TO WESTERN FARMERS

Mr. David Lewis (York South) moved:

That this House condemns the agricultural policies of the government which have severely reduced the income of western farmers and threaten the future of Canada's entire rural community, and, in view of the financial crisis of western farmers, calls on the government to consider the advisability of an immediate payout to them of a minimum of $100 million without conditions and in addition to other farm assistance programs.

• (12 noon)

He said: Mr. Speaker, we have placed this motion before the House at this time because my party believes that it is essential to take careful stock of government agricultural policies which are developing clearly in the direction of depopulating Canadian rural communities within the next number of years. We have placed it on the order paper, Mr. Speaker, because we believe that this policy carries with it fateful consequences not only for the entire farming population of Canada but also for all of Canadian society. I also believe, and I say this frankly, Mr. Speaker, that the discussion of this subject and a vote on the motion may be necessary at this time because of the provincial election in the province of Saskatchewan. The electors in that province have the right to know clearly where each of the parties in this House stands on the issue raised in the motion I have had the honour of moving.

The subject placed before the House is also urgent for another reason. It is urgent because of the financial crisis in which western farmers now find themselves, and there is an urgent need for an immediate injection of large amounts of cash into the prairie grain economy.

As hon. members know, farm organizations such as the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the National Farmers Union and other spokesmen for the farmers have insisted that the minimum amount required to enable western grain growers to get out of their financial difficulties is at least $250 million. My reading of the statistics relating to the plight of western farmers suggests, even though I do not claim to be a farm expert, that the demand for a $250 million injection is fully justified. In my motion I have limited the amount to $100 million because that seems to be the amount which the government is ready to make available to western grain farmers. It is ready to make that amount available, however, only through a form of blackmail directed at the western farmer and western farm organizations. The government has attached this pay-out of $100 million to another kind of policy, its policy, so-called, of stabilizing the farming industry. That is a policy which farmers oppose and the details of which as presented by the government every farm organization opposes.

I make no bones about the fact that this motion is related to the provincial election in Saskatchewan. I say that before someone else says it. It is necessary for hon. members to see whether the Liberal members of this House are prepared to vote for or are determined to vote against the demand that $100 million be paid out immediately, without condition and without the loss of any other farm assistance programs.

I have studied over the last little while, and since assuming my new responsibilities in my party I have done it to a greater extent than I did before, the various aspects of farm policy and the suggestions for agricultural policy that have been made to the country in the last few years. If you put together the Lift program of last year, the report of the task force on agriculture, some statements made by the minister in charge of the Wheat Board and other statements issued by the Department of Agriculture and spokesmen for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, as well as the legislation presently before the House, it seems to me that you can clearly discern a complex and composite of policies which are deliberately designed to induce farmers to leave their land, to hasten the demise of the independent Canadian farmer, to make farming the preserve of powerful corporations—in short, to tear the very heart from western Canada and to chase farmers into overcrowded and polluted urban centres. This, to us, appears to be sheer madness and shows the typical attitude of this government to every aspect of our economy. It is an attitude that is concerned purely about statistics and figures of growth and which to a large extent ignores the human beings involved in the policy and in the economic area concerned.

When you look at statistics showing what has happened to western grain farmers in the last few years and note their starkness, you will see that they are truly distressing and shattering. Calculations have been made showing that in 1970 the total, net realized income from farming operations of more than 180,000 farmers across the Prairies was $174 million, less than $1,000 per farm. This is a decline of $700 million from 1969 and of $830 million from 1968.

The government of the province of Manitoba has calculated that the net, realized income from some 40,000 farms in the province was $31 million in 1970, which represents a net income per farm in that area of only about $800. Studies show that you must go back to the depression and drought year of 1936 to find comparable net farm incomes. That was the situation in what everyone agrees was a year of considerable growth, although accompanied by considerable unemployment in this country.

If you look at Saskatchewan, the same situation is revealed. The net realized income of all farmers in Saskatchewan, and there are about 75,000, was $200 million in 1970. In the five years 1963 to 1967 that income averaged $435 million. These figures were presented by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture in its brief to the government some time ago. In 1970, in other words, the net income of farmers was less than half their average income in the five-year period 1963 to 1967. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture added in its brief that if you deduct from this amount income in kind, which is included in the figures from which are calculated total income, the figure would change from $368 million to $131 million, and would become about one-third in 1970 of the average figure for the five years 1963-67.

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture went on to point out something we all know, that there is a considerable number of cattle-producing farms on the Prairies. The federation shows that if you allocate to livestock a quarter of the total of the net income, or $92 million, over the five-year period 1963-67, and the federation presents evidence showing that that is not an unreasonable assumption, the net income left for grain growers in the five years 1963-67 averaged $276 million. However, the figure relating to cattle raising and cattle producing on the Prairies remained the same or was larger in 1970 than in the five-year period I have mentioned. If you allocate the sum of $92 million to livestock production in 1970, which is likely to be a conservative figure, you reduce the net from grain growing to about $40 million in Saskatchewan. That represents only about $500 per farm in that province in 1970.

As a rule, I am not given to citing statistics in speeches I make in the House or, indeed, outside the House because they are usually a little difficult to follow. I have done so this time and I will cite some other statistics. As a member who represents a central Canada constituency, is well acquainted with the urban centres in all parts of Canada and, I hope, acquainted with the farm communities across the country, I feel it is important for all the people of Canada to realize that the conditions of the western grain farmer in 1970 and, indeed, in 1969, have been really desperate.

As a group, grain growers have been operating at virtually a loss. They must survive on depreciation and using whatever farm produce they can for their families. The disastrous income position of the grains growers is one of the reasons for introducing this motion. I submit that it highlights the very real problem facing Canadian grain farmers and Canadian agriculture generally and the need for all members of this House, regardless from what part of Canada they may come, to pay careful attention to the future of this essential industry in Canada.

We who live in central Canada, including, for example, the workers in my constituency, all of metropolitan Toronto and Brantford, which is represented by the new member whom I had the honour to introduce this morning, are concerned about the widespread massive unemployment which this government has inflicted upon this country. We are concerned about the overcrowded and impossible living conditions in our large urban centres. But we must not be so self-concerned about our position in these centres as to ignore other areas.

As we in this party have always suggested, we must begin to realize that the western farmers, the western grain growers in paticular, are in precisely the same kind of desperate situation as the unemployed workers in the cities. For literally 35 years, as a member of this party, and with the honour of now being its leader, I have said to the people of Canada than when there is an economic difficulty in this country it is never limited to either farmers or urban dwellers. It invariably hits both sections of the Canadian community just as severely.

This is one of the reasons why I cannot but deprecate deeply and feel very strongly distressed at the continuing attempts in this country—an attempt is now being made by the premier of Saskatchewan during the present provincial election campaign—to divide the farmer and the worker, to say to the farmer that the industrial worker is in some way his enemy and to say to the worker in the city that his high cost of living is due to what the farmer is getting for his produce. I say to the industrial workers in this country that this is not so.

The farmers in Canada have been receiving incomes that are all out of proportion to their efforts and investment. The increase in price which the farmer has received over the years has been minimal compared with the actual increase in price in the retail store which the industrial worker visits and where he spends a great deal of his money. Much of the increase in food prices has gone to the large packing corporations, the large processing corporations and the middle men along the way. In all areas of farming, only a little trickle has gone to the farmer.

The grain grower is in a difficult and desperate situation, as is the hog producer. When I visited Saskatchewan a couple a months ago, I was shown an actual invoice by a hog producer. For a 300-pound hog he received a net of $2.47. I think he received three cents per pound in that particular instance and after all the various deductions had been made he was left with $2.47.

I wish to emphasize that the point I am raising is not a matter only of agricultural policy nor a matter which concerns merely the farmers of Canada. It is a matter which concerns the entire Canadian society and impinges on the entire Canadian economy. I want the city folk of this country, including myself, all my friends in the unions, unorganized workers, the employed and the unemployed, to appreciate that the policies of the government have not been harmful only to the industrial workers. They have placed the Canadian farmers, the western grain farmers in particular, in a position every bit as desperate as that of the unemployed in this country. The government has been consistent in its mismanagement of Canada's economy, whether agricultural or industrial, whether in the east, centre or the west.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: If you look at the farm situation from the point of view of cost you get some understanding of what has happened. While the gross receipts and the net incomes of the farmers have been fluctuating, and have been steadily dropping in the past while, farm expenses have been rising at a steady pace. The cost of farm machinery has increased. The cost of farm labour has also increased as it should have. The costs of all the things that farmers use have been steadily rising. There is no reason to think that farm expenses will begin to decline because there is no reason to believe that the cost of anything in Canada is likely to decline. On the contrary, in over 200 years of history we have learned that there is a steady rise in prices in our kind of society.

The so-called stabilization plan, which the ministers concerned have introduced into the House and which is now before a committee of the House, makes no mention of the question of farm expenses. It makes no suggestion about the need to stabilize or in some way make up for the continuing increase in farm costs. In round figures, Mr. Speaker, farm expenses and depreciation charges relating to crop production on the Prairies rose from $500 million in 1950 to $1,300 million in 1970. Perhaps it will be a little more meaningful to state that in 20 years the cost rose from $8 per cultivated acre to $18 per cultivated acre, more than double the cost per acre.

The facts which this House must be concerned with are the desperate financial situation of the farmer, the continuing rise in farm costs, the everlasting squeeze in which the farmer finds himself as a result of the international market, and the continuing rise in farm expenses. I emphasize the fact that I do not pretend to be an expert in this area. However, over many years I have tried to understand it and perhaps do understand it to some extent at least.

The orientation of this government toward agriculture, as indicated by the various documents to which I have referred, is the same as the technocratic orientation of this government to every other sector of our economy. It is an orientation toward business consideration, an orientation toward the dollar, an orientation toward the balance of payments, an orientation toward exports. At no point is it an orientation toward farm people or toward the welfare and future of the rural communities of this country.

Everyone who has studied the matter at all is fully aware that there are in Canada some marginal and uneconomic farms which, possibly, can never be made viable. Their position requires special consideration. But these are not the farms, and they are certainly not exclusively the farms, toward which the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang) in charge of the Wheat Board has directed his writings that I have read. He has directed it toward the entire agricultural economy. He has directed it toward the concept that very large farms integrated with choking agribusiness will be more efficient in terms of the dollar. That may well be so. But at what cost to Canada and to the rural communities in particular.

Without wanting to sound sentimental or maudlin, I say, as a city feller, that I believe, as I have always believed, that the rural life of Canada is an important and integral part of Canadian society. The rural communities are important to our welfare as a nation. What does the government want to do, I ask. It seems to me that what the government wants to do is rationalize western farming to the point of making them into factory farms run mostly by foreign-owned food corporations.

Mr. Lang: Nonsense!

Mr. Lewis: It is not nonsense. It is a fact. This is what the task force on agriculture means. It cannot mean anything else. If he wants to take two farmers out of every three off the land, that is the eventual effect of the policy upon which the hon. gentleman and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) have now embarked; that will be the effect envisaged in the statements he has made and the writing he has produced and which I have read. They want to turn our rural communities into ghost towns. They want not only to throw farm folk off the land but to close up local stores and service industries, because that will be the result of the policies which are being pursued.

Mr. Lang: That is malicious nonsense.

Mr. Lewis: It is not malicious nonsense. It is the truth of what the minister is doing, and the arrogance of his denial is evidence of the fact that what I am saying is right.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Every step the government has taken, every step the government has proposed, leads inevitably in that direction, whether or not they have had the courage to state it publicly. They have not, but it leads inevitably in that direction. What is at stake, therefore, is the welfare of farm families and the communities which serve their needs. What is at stake, briefly, is the rural lifestyle in our society, something which these technocrats opposite are determined to reduce to a factory assembly line. We believe this to be destructive of Canada's future.

One word, Mr. Speaker, about farm efficiency. Again I address myself to my own constituents, to the constituents of central Canada and those of industrial centres in the east and west.

When Canadians think of technological change or advance they think primarily of industries located in the urban centres and of the resource industries in the forests and underground. The fact is that technological development in the agricultural industry has been immense in the last number of years and the agricultural industry in Canada has for years shown the most dramatic productivity compared with other areas in our economy. For example, the rate of productivity increase for all commercial industries in this country has been estimated at about 3.5 per cent per year since the end of the war. The growth rate for productivity in agriculture during that time has been the highest in the country at about 5½ per cent per year. So no one has the right to talk disparagingly about farm efficiency because if there is one industry in this country which is increasing its productivity through technological change it is the agricultural industry. Farmers have learned modern farm management to an extent they have never done before. They have concentrated on maximum production and good farming such as impresses one every time one visits a farm community in this country.

So we have no right to question farm efficiency at this time. It is our duty to pay homage—not to every farmer, of course; there are exceptions in every sector of our society—to our farmers generally and particularly to the grain growers for the immense advance they have made in productivity, an advance which they have made possible frequently at the expense of mortgaging not only their own future but the future of their children and their grandchildren for years to come.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Suggested Payment to Western Farmers

Mr. Lewis: In such a situation, what is the problem? As I see it, the problem is not that there is no need for the food Canada produces. It is trite to remind members of this House that there are hundreds of millions of people round this globe who go hungry to bed every night of the year and who have an immense need for the grains and other food we produce.

The problems of Canadian farmers are, by and large, the same as those of farmers around the world. They derive from the vagaries of the weather and from the vagaries of the international market. They arise, in other words, out of circumstances over which the farmer and the farming community have no control whatever. This is why it is the duty of government and of Parliament to make sure that farmers receive the net income to which they are entitled.

Whenever we talk about assisting farmers everybody in the country, it seems to me, particularly in the urban centres, gets worried. Let me remind members of this House and the people of Canada that we do not bat an eyelid—certainly those technocrats across the aisle do not bat an eyelid—when the government makes available to large corporations, most of which are foreign-owned, an amount in the order of $1 billion annually. Yet when one asks for $250 million to help western Canadian farmers, the government reduces the amount to $100 million, whittles it down still further, and then attaches it to a form of blackmail which the government knows the Canadian farmer is unhappy with and finds unacceptable. We believe this is total nonsense. We believe a new approach must be taken by Parliament and the people. We believe the government should stop its present treatment of family farms in this country and assist young people to set up in farming should they wish to do so.

In my opinion the subject we have introduced today is of great importance not only to the agricultural industry and the farmers who engage in it but to Canadian society as a whole, both in its general aspect and the demand for an immediate pay-out, without conditions and without blackmail, for at last $100 million to the western grain growers.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish at this point to participate in the debate but I should like to raise a point of order that I would ask you to take into account. It is related to whether or not we can have two debates on the same subject running concurrently before the House. I waited until the hon. member for York South had completed his remarks, but I should like to ascertain whether or not the $100 million and the conditions and so on that he talked about in his motion are the same as the $100 million and the alleged conditions contained in Bill C 244. I take it that is the intent of the motion.

If that is the case, then if we speak about the other points that were made with respect to the purpose of the motion, having a vote in the House on this $100 million, and indeed on the so-called conditions attached, before the election in Saskatchewan—though that is not important to my point of order—and we argue the reasons for the other parts of Bill C-244, then I suggest that we will be paralleling a debate on a subject that has been initiated in the House and is currently before a standing committee of the House for disposition and report back to the House. Therefore I find it difficult to respond to the wording of the motion unless we are allowed to trespass upon a matter that is already before the House in Bill C-244.

Mr. Lewis: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I point out that the motion was very carefully drawn—I know that is the case because I participated in drawing it—so as to make clear that it was not to be a duplicate debate. We are asking for the immediate pay-out of a minimum of $100 million without conditions and in addition to other farm assistance programs. I point out that Bill C-244 not only proposes payment of $100 million but also proposes to eliminate from present assistance programs, if I remember correctly, the legislation dealing with storage payments and also—

Mr. Olson: Now you are duplicating the debate on that bill.

Mr. Lewis: —eliminate PFAA. It is proposed to eliminate certain farm assistance programs, and the $100 million provided in that bill is intended to take their place.

I suggest to the Minister of Agriculture that this does not impinge on the other legislation precisely because of the wording of the motion. I could take the time to indicate very briefly that, as I understand Bill C-244, the result of it would not be to pay out $100 million additional to the grain growers of western Canada but would result in the paying out of no more than $40 million or $50 million additional to these farmers. This motion very clearly calls for a pay-out of a minimum of $100 million.

The Minister of Agriculture may find it difficult to speak to the motion for a number of reasons. He may even have some conscience about the subject.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Would the hon. member please resume his seat. The Chair is ready to hear comments on the point of order but it cannot allow hon. members to debate the position taken by other members; that can be done when we debate the motion. The remarks of hon. members should be related directly to the point of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I trust that the Minister of Agriculture will forgive me if I suggest that he was not entirely clear as to the point of order he was raising. Perhaps he was raising two points of order, and, if so, I should like to comment upon them. If he was raising a point of order as to the validity of the motion, then I suggest he is half an hour late. The Chair put the motion and no questions were asked at that time. I suggest that to question the validity of the motion at this point is hardly appropriate. On the other hand, if that is not his point of order and he is accepting the validity of the motion but is asking that hon. members speak to the motion rather than debate some other bill, then I think this is a hypothetical point that should be raised if and when members transgress and speak about another bill instead of the motion.

In my view, the hon. member for York South was not doing this. If any member does so, then the minister can raise a point of order and object. I suggest that the Chair has already put the motion—I am now speaking about the first of what I think were two points of order—so it is before the House and therefore no point of order is appropriate at this time. If hypothetically hon. members do transgress and veer from the subject before the House, then it is up to the Chair at that time to ask members to speak to the motion before the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the minister rising on the point of order?

Mr. Lang: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The point raised by my colleague the Minister of Agriculture is very pertinent, particularly in view of the manner in which the leader of the New Democratic Party framed his remarks in dealing with the $100 million. The hon. member for York South suggested that his motion was very carefully drafted, and presumably he meant to have it both ways. On the one hand, he drafted the motion in terms that would allow it to be put; on the other hand, it was also drafted in terms that would allow him to discuss matters which, if they were actually put in the motion, would not have permitted debate. It is clear that the $100 million is exactly the same as the $100 million in the other bill in view of the fact that that pay-out would also be $100 million without conditions, unless of course we regard the manner of paying, the acreage base and so on, as conditions, which I submit would not be ordinarily construed to be such.

I submit that the two amounts are in effect the same and in that sense the motives for the motion were clouded. These motives have now been clarified by the hon. member in whose name the motion stands, and it seems to me that the defect relates back to the beginning.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak on the point of order that has been raised. I have followed the debate extensively on Bill C-244 and I was listening behind the curtain to a great deal of what the leader of the New Democratic Party said when he put this motion forward. I suggest there is a similarity. I should like to draw to Your Honour's attention the fact that the motion before the House condemns the agricultural policies of the government which have severely reduced the incomes of western farmers and threaten the future of the entire rural community in Canada.

This aspect is not dealt with in Bill C-244. At the present time discussions are going on between the Minister of Agriculture and the provincial Ministers of Agriculture regarding government action that would drastically reduce the farm population of Canada from 480,000 farmers to 150,000, which is the goal of the government. The minister's department has issued a 20-page document dealing with how that program can be achieved with the co-operation of the provinces.

This is the heart and soul of the motion before the House: Are we going to eliminate the farmers? If we do, will we also do away with the rural communities as we understand them? If this is the case, then can urban society as we now know it accept another 300,000 farmers who are untrained for other work, unprepared, and who do not want to live within an urban society? I repeat, this is the heart and soul of the motion. I suggest to the Minister of Agriculture that it is a very worthwhile motion and that the minister should take heart and listen to it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair appreciates the remarks made by all hon. members on the point of order raised by the Minister of Agriculture. Some of the remarks bring us right to the problem itself, namely, that it is not permissible to allow speeches in one debate to relate to another piece of legislation already before the House or before a standing committee of the House. The Chair is also aware of that fact but, as mentioned by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, the motion was already put and it is before the House at this time. The Chair feels there was ample time to raise the point of order and that it should have been raised at the first opportunity.

• (12:40 p.m.)

On the other hand, in looking at the motion it appears that the main point is not directly related to the $100 million. In the opinion of the Chair it is related to the situation facing the farmers of Canada. This situation could perhaps be solved in many ways by spending money. In addition, the Chair did not find it difficult to accept the presentation by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). I feel that his remarks were within the confines of the motion and did not impinge on the rules of the House, nor did they relate to Bill C-244 which is at present before the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

In the circumstances the Chair feels the motion is acceptable and will allow the debate to continue.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to participate in this debate. To some extent I am glad the motion as drafted was challenged because we will now have an opportunity to clear the air and find out what is at the heart of government policies as they have affected western Canada. I find it rather strange that the New Democratic Party would introduce a motion of this sort prior to an election with the hope that the government's policy for the payment of $100 million might somehow save them. That is rather awkward reasoning, to say the least. If anyone had anything to gain, it would be those who would be inclined to support the government in this regard.

Mr. Lang: Would the hon. member permit a question? I am wondering whether he might agree that the explanation for them moving this motion is perhaps because of their embarrassment over the fact it is well known in Saskatchewan they are blocking the other piece of legislation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is hardly a question.

Suggested Payment to Western Farmers

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I am sure there will be other speakers from that party during the course of the day who will provide their own explanation.

Mr. Lang: Oh, come on.

Mr. Korchinski: I fully subscribe to the suggestion that the effect of past, present and future government policies has been to put western economy in a depressed position. Perhaps the government is somewhat embarrassed over the thought that provincial reaction will ferret out weaknesses in the government's plans and people will have an opportunity to discuss them at some length.

Let us consider the situation in respect of railway stations now scheduled for closure. I do not have any major cities in my riding, but I do have some communities of a fair size such as Preeceville and Carrot River with populations of between 2,500 and 3,000. They had substantial economies but as a result of government policies over the years the railway companies came to the conclusion these stations had to go. I see nothing on the horizon to indicate that the government will attempt to intercede on behalf of these communities. The remaining smaller communities in terms of population have all been abandoned so far as rail service is concerned. One can travel 50 or 60 miles without finding a railway station in my constituency. This is proof of what we are going through as a result of government policy or the lack thereof.

I wonder why the motion is drafed in terms relating simply to $100 million, because I find this unacceptable. If we attempted to bring the western agricultural economy back to where it was and make it a viable area which might survive for some time, we would have to adopt a number of the policies suggested by the task force. There is a need for a greater injection of cash into that economy in one form or another. Only this morning at a committee meeting we were told of an amount of approximately $250 million paid out under a plan. These are figures arrived at by the department. In these terms $100 million is very unacceptable considering that the results of some of the government's policies mean a complete abandonment of government responsibility.

I have in mind the stockpiling of uranium, assistance to the gold mining industry and assistance to companies such as Ford of Canada. These are industries which came to the government and received assistance. I cannot comprehend why the government is today abandoning its responsibility toward the farming industry. This is obvious in view of the relatively small amount it is prepared to pay and the large amounts being spent on other programs. Some of these programs are not new but represent an abandonment of existing programs which had in fact been serving a purpose.

I suppose there does come a time with all legislation introduced into the House when amendments and changes are required, but I do not understand how the government can abandon a policy which has had the result of a cash infusion into the western economy. Certainly there has been a need for this infusion in the last three or four years, far more so than in the previous five or six years.

[Mr. Speaker.]

I remember that three years ago we had a severe crop failure as a result of frost damage. The grain was damp and farmers had to make additional expenditures to dry the grain. This meant that in addition to the lower returns because of low grades there was the added expense of drying and storing the grain. At that time we pleaded with the government for some measure of assistance to help us out of a very awkward situation. Moreover, we suddenly found that because of bungling here and there ships were waiting at ports but could not be loaded. There was not enough grain and some ships were turned away. This all resulted from government planning.

Last year was a 15-year low in terms of grain sales. That also added a depressing factor to the western economy. This year with a few grain sales one must think about the result. People are inclined to make comparisons and when they read about grain sales they think in terms of quotas. We have heard the minister refer to the question of quotas. He tells us we will have an eight-bushel quota. But when one thinks in terms of quotas today the eight-bushel quota on grain is equivalent to a five-bushel or six-bushel quota years ago. Today we have an entirely different basis on which to calculate the amount of grain.

We also went through the period of the Lift program. At that time the government immediately batted about —and this is a game the government plays—the suggestion that it would represent something like $140 million. The government asked what the farmers were complaining about because they would get $140 million. The net result after a fairly long period under the program is a pay-out of approximately $53 million.

The government is now in the midst of introducing several other bills. It hopes, for example, to pass Bill C-244. There will no longer be an initial quota. It is interesting to note that there was a pay-out in 1968-69 of over $100 million. That was an actual pay-out from the consolidated revenue fund. This year, as was amply pointed out by the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis), when one calculates the result of the loss on storage it will amount to something like $40 million.

It is rather confusing to talk about $100 million in respect of this motion and the other legislation when in actual fact the amount of money to be paid out will be far less and probably in the order of $40 million. In addition, for years to come we will have a further complication in respect of storage facilities. In the planning stages there have been discussions by the elevator companies concerning the possible elimination of certain storage facilities, because the government no longer feels that grain in storage in itself is an asset. The farmers in an effort to make as much money as possible or, if you like, save as much money as possible will also be seeking to reduce their storage. The government in this regard is abdicating its responsibility and the net result is we have lost stations in many communities and will lose many elevators which will further complicate the situation in that it will increase the cost of production in those areas. This is all part and parcel of the government's planning.

We have heard so much about Bill C-176. This is part and parcel of the bureaucratic planning on behalf of the industry. It is supposed to do great things for the industry. Without going into the ramifications, I might say that when one talks to farmers one is frightened by their reaction. In the initial stages when this bill came before the House I was somewhat impressed by the fact that at that time the government felt it was in the interest of the industry. To some extent even our NDP friends shied away because it was part and parcel of the national marketing idea they had batted around for years. At various stages of the discussion of the bill they were reluctant to show any opposition to it as a plan which they thought was acceptable to them. Part of their philosophy involves government bureaucratic planning and they consider this the only way to solve some problems.

The government's consolidation program on which the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) touched is another program with a far-reaching effect. What does consolidation mean? It simply means a small farm is added on to another farm. This means the eventual elimination of farmers. I do not see how we can consolidate and still have as many farms. In addition there are bound to be fewer producers. When the agricultural committee was studying the whole question of farm machinery prices the president of what was then Massey-Ferguson came before us and waved a headline. That was in 1961 or 1962. The headline announced a large sale of grain. He was happy because this meant they could increase the price of farm machinery. That is exactly what happens. There are many people who are willing to help relieve the farmer of any income he obtains. It is almost as if they have the first claim on his income. As one goes through the country one notices the new offices and facilities the banks are building. All these things are paid for by the interest payments made in and around those communities.

As a matter of fact, we end up with the credit unions and banks in competition when everything else is falling apart. When other businesses fall apart the banking fraternity seems to be able to increase its facilities and services. We have reached the point where everybody is involved in mortgages.

This brings to mind the situation which existed in Cuba. The reason for the Cuban revolt really was that the people wanted to have a piece of land that was really theirs. Whether it is a large corporation or the government which owns the land the net result is—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have to interrupt the hon. member. Since it is one o'clock I must now leave the Chair. The House will resume its work at two o'clock.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

Suggested Payment to Western Farmers

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, when the House rose at one o'clock, I was suggesting that the government's policy with regard to farm consolidation is unacceptable in the light of present circumstances, as well as in the light of the past experiences of some other countries. I was remarking that in Cuba, where some land was owned by landlords, the Cubans took it upon themselves to change that system, perhaps in a more violent way than one would care to see in this country. They felt that consolidation was unacceptable in view of unemployment. We in Canada find ourselves in a similar situation, and if the present trend is continued by this government it will eventually lead us into an unhappy situation. As farms are consolidated into larger and larger holdings, the unemployed who are massed in urban areas will ask why the land holdings have to be so large, regardless of whether these holdings are private property, government holdings or those of the Farm Credit Corporation.

This government policy will lead farmers to say that they do not care whether or not they own the land. The government is already in the business of confiscating some of this mortgaged land. That will be unacceptable from the point of view of production. I have had an opportunity of visiting some of the communist countries, such as Poland and Russia, where I found that production was very poor. The explanation provided by most people was that individuals lacked incentive. In the case of Poland, the government of that country had to turn over part of the land that was state owned to private individuals. This provided greater incentive for production, and the net result of the reversal in their policy was increased productivity.

Surely, we should learn a lesson from these countries. We do not want a situation where violence would be almost necessary. On the other hand, we do not want efficiency to be decreased. I pointed out previously that the redistribution of some of the wealth may be necessary. The government's proposal, as set out in one of the bills, would indicate that whereas in the past the infusion of government money into the western economy was in the order of eight to one, at present the ratio is one to one; in other words, the amount deducted from the producer himself is equivalent to the amount contributed by the government. This fact was amply demonstrated in the Prime Minister's speech on June 2, 1968 when he outlined what was then the Liberal policy. This policy has resulted in the effort to consolidate farms rather than have a government infusion of cash. It is true there is a time when one should put on the brakes, but there is also a need to see that the lives of these people are not disturbed to the point that they become so disappointed they simply walk away from a life's work and effort. On three occasions another administration, then headed by—

• (2:10 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but I must do so in order to advise him that his time has expired. The hon. the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson).

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy that we have an opportunity to discuss some of the matters raised in the motion before the House this afternoon, as well as an opportunity to deal with some of the arguments made in relation to that motion.

I must agree that some very severe problems are associated with the decline in the gross receipts from any commodity, particularly when that commodity looms as large in our total agricultural economy as does grain. It is a fact that there has been a decline in receipts in the latest year for which full statistics are available, that being 1969-70, from some of the years in the recent past, particularly during the prior five years. That fact brings along with it some of the problems referred to by hon. members with respect to the amount of net farm income that these producers receive. Certainly, while there has been a decline in demand for these commodities in world markets, there has not been a corresponding decline in costs of production. I am the first to admit that this is the situation we have faced in the last two years or so.

Canada is not alone in this situation. I do not think that any member of this House will disagree that in dealing in an international market, where many countries have to compete in the price and volume associated with that market, comparisons with such countries are valid. As hon. members know, the crop year transcends the calendar year to some extent and as far as Canada is concerned between 1969 and 1970 gross cash receipts declined from $4,192 million to $4,166 million, or some $26 million, a very small percentage. I acknowledge that there was a larger decline in the grains sector than in over-all agricultural commodity sales. In some sectors of the agricultural economy, there was actually an increase between 1969 and 1970.

As I said a moment ago, we need to draw comparisons. For example, Australia also has a very large interest in international markets as far as her grain production is concerned. I am sure hon. members present will agree that perhaps Australia is the country with the greatest relevance for Canada. Over 50 per cent and even as high as 75 per cent to 80 per cent of that country's grain production goes into the international market; that is about the same as Canada. We need to make these comparisons with countries having a relevant situation. In Australia, the total cash receipts for 1969-70 declined from $1,050 million to $890 million for 1970-71. What we are talking about here, of course, is a very difficult situation of over-supply in relation to the effective demand in the international grains market. Canada's farmers had some difficulty with that, but they were not alone.

I should like to move on to the next step which I think is important, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, a federal government such as we have in Canada has some responsibility to be helpful in that type of situation. In 1969-70 the federal treasury transferred into the grains economy $66.3 million through the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, about $12 million under the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act—that was only for the payment of interest on this money—$57 million under the Wheat Acreage Diversion Program, $6 million for the payment of interest on credit sales, about $73 million went into the purchase of food aid from this sector of our agricultural economy and $1.1 million under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act for a total of about $215 million during that year. Although some amount of this was paid in the first part of the year, I am not going to argue that this $215 million fully compensates for the difference in the gross cash receipts that farmers received in years from 1963 to 1968. These years registered the highest in terms of total cash receipts that farmers ever received from the sale of grain. I think we have to agree that this went some distance in attempting to alleviate what was recognized as a very difficult situation for the farmers.

I hope my colleague, the hon. minister from Saskatoon-Humboldt, will intervene later in the debate and deal with some of the other specific programs that we have undertaken to relieve this situation. In the event that he is unable to participate, or that his time will be occupied in another very important agricultural debate taking place in one of the committees, I should like to point out briefly that since the end of the period for which these statistics are available there has been a marked improvement in the international situation as far as our volume is concerned. We expect that the export of all grains in the current crop year, and this started over ten months ago, will equal and indeed exceed the previous record of 685 million bushels established in the crop year 1963-64. For example, barley and rapeseed exports will reach an all-time record level and wheat exports will be the highest in history, excluding the three exceptional years from 1964 to 1967.

We have to take these things into account. We also have to consider whether the action of the Canadian government and the agencies involved in selling grain to the international market did, in fact, assist in improving the market. It could be argued pretty successfully that the Lift program and the reduction in Australia and the United States, led us to the present situation where the marketing prospects for this grain look substantially better. Whether it will be maintained for X number of years or months no one can tell, but that has been the history of the grains industry as far as Canada is concerned. We know very well that not only in the grains sector but in other agricultural commodities we now possess the production technology and land resources to overproduce almost any commodity we wish in a very short period of time. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, we can overproduce all commodities at the same time if we apply this production technology to all of them. Hopefully, future results will be considerably better than they have been in the past.

Since our time in this debate is limited, may I turn to a number of other matters. One of those matters other hon. members have referred to relates to the efficacity of the Canadian farmer. I agree, as I have said many times, that the efficiency of the Canadian farmer has been demonstrated. Since world war II, the increase in productivity with respect to agricultural products has been almost twice as high as the increase shown by all other sectors of the Canadian economy. Unfortunately, the benefit of a large part of this increased productivity has been passed on to others; some say to the middle man, others to the consumer. It is certain that the primary producer has not received the benefit of all that increase in productive efficiency during these past few years. There are some additional steps that we ought to take for the purpose of claiming for the primary producer some of the results of this increase in efficiency. An important element in this is the need for farmers to have greater influence and input with respect to marketing arrangements for farm products.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Olson: We have proposed a bill to parliament that would set up a structure under which that could be done. We believe that it is essential for us to proceed with provisions for marketing arrangements that will be acceptable to the producer and that will also be in concert with the wishes of provincial governments which have some jurisdiction in this field. I cannot predict this afternoon how soon we may reach the position in which farmers themselves will become more directly involved in the marketing of their products. All I can do is repeat what we have done and express my hope that this goal will be achieved soon.

May I say this, too. Simply passing the marketing legislation that is before Parliament now will not solve the whole problem. The legislation will merely provide the legal framework on which we can negotiate with the provinces and with producer representatives in order to find a way that will increase the farmer's influence and, hopefully, the return to the producer as a result of that action. I hope that we can proceed on this matter. I repeat what I have said many times across the country: In my opinion, since our farmers are now possessed of the advanced production technology I have referred to, the greatest return to the producer and the best way to enhance his position is through the establishment of marketing techniques as opposed to other methods. Government subsidies, transfers out of the treasury and that sort of thing ought to be used from time to time for helping the producers of a particular commodity over some rough spots in the marketing of their products. No member of the House sincerely believes that that course is a panacea that will help agriculture over a long period of time.

A great deal has been said this afternoon about the small farms adjustment program that we have been negotiating with the provinces for some time. I think it would be useful for me to say a few words about that program so that there is no misunderstanding in the minds of hon. members or of farmers who may be affected by this program as to what is being proposed. In the first place, Mr. Speaker, may I say what this program is not. May I talk about its negative aspects first. First, this program is not designed to force any farmers into accepting the options that are being made available under the program. The farmer will make his own choice. If you look at the history of small farm units and the degree of attrition that has taken place with respect to the total number of farm units—most of the units involved are small farm units—I think you will agree that this attrition has been brought about as a result of advancing production technology and efficacity. These trends will probably continue.

The farmer, no more than any other worker in our society, likes to be in the position of not using his talents and his time to full advantage. He does not like to use 50 per cent, 40 per cent or 30 per cent of his capability. All people like to use their full time and their full talents and energies in the occupation in which they are engaged. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we must recognize that fewer and fewer people will be required to produce the total food requirements for our domestic use and for those markets available to us in the international field. So, we have come up with a small farms adjustment policy or program that offers three options to farmers who will qualify. When I talk about qualifying, I am sure hon. members will expect us to start at the bottom end of the scale and take those farmers in greatest difficulty, with the smallest units in relation to the size of economic units needed for the production of the particular commodity they raise. We should begin there and work up through the system as rapidly as funds will permit and as quickly as farmers wish to participate in that program.

We have suggested, therefore, that we start with farm units with a value of $20,000 or less. On a unit of that size, Mr. Speaker, we do not believe a man and his family can make a living or sufficient income to provide a decent living. The three options we are offering are these: first, for the particular farmer in that position who is either near or at retirement age, there is a program that we are suggesting under which he could make use of the assets he has acquired in this farm unit plus some subsidy. These, put together, would form a retirement package that would allow him to withdraw from agricultural production with some dignity and security. That is one option. The second option we are offering under the program—

Mr. Lewis: How much a month would he get?

Mr. Olson: That would depend on the amount of his assets plus the subsidy. I could go into some of those details, although there is not time for that now. I am prepared to send my hon. friend the 20 or 22 page explanation of what is involved in that program.

Mr. Lewis: I have read it and the monthly payment is pretty low.

Mr. Olson: The second option that we are offering to those farmers who are younger,—

Mr. Lewis: It is about $100 a month.

Mr. Olson: —and whose farm units are also too small to produce a reasonable return for themselves and their families is this: We are suggesting that a farmer in that position use the assets and equity he has in the farm unit, together with some subsidization from the federal treasury, in order to give him sufficient resources to obtain some skill and enable him to provide for himself and his family during the transitional period of withdrawal from agriculture. He may undertake the necessary retraining and acquire skills so that he can find a place for himself in society in an occupation other than farming.

There is a third option suggested for other farmers who are not old enough to be near retirement and who want to continue in farming. In that case we are suggesting that some counselling and farm management service be provided. In addition, special credits should be provided so that he can acquire other small farm units and consolidate them into a unit which is large enough to provide him and his family with a decent living after expenses have been paid.

We think all three of his options should be considered together. Certainly, if some farmers are to retire and others are to withdraw from farming to go to other sectors of our economy, we need some people to pick up these small farm units and consolidate them into units large enough to provide a decent return. It may be, and this would be a very small part of the over-all program, that we may wish to use the land contained in some of the small farm units that are located in the areas of marginal or sub-marginal capability in so far as the soil is concerned for some other purpose. A number of suggestions have been made. Reforestation has been suggested, as well as using some land for recreational and other purposes. I do not want to get into the details of those suggestions. There may be some in that category.

It is essential that we make arrangements with the provinces in advance as to the disposition of this kind of land. This is one of the aspects we are discussing with the provinces at the present time. Certainly, we in the Department of Agriculture do not wish to become landlords of great numbers of farm units. I want to make it very clear that if there are any transfers for other purposes, these will be or at least ought to be made after a transitional period with the co-operation of the provinces.

There is one other important area of this ajustment program. We do not wish to enter into a program and set up all of the administrative machinery that is necessary if any part of it is going to duplicate what the provinces are already providing. For example, in those provinces where there are counselling and farm management services available, these services should be used. They should be co-ordinated with this small farms adjustment program so there is not a duplication and, even more important, that there is not a competition between various levels of government in offering these programs.

I hope hon. members will discontinue the argument that we are trying to drive these people out of agriculture and that we are going to set out on a policy that will force a reduction of perhaps 50 or 60 per cent in the number of farmers in this country. We know that the total number is now being reduced. This program is designed to give some assistance in being helpful to people in those situations who may want to choose one of the options we will be offering. I see that my time is rapidly running out. Before I conclude, I want to say a few words about some of the other commodities. I have been dealing with those commodities with which there have been the most difficult problems during the past few years.

Typically, all members who have participated in the debate so far have concentrated on these commodities rather than mentioning some of the other commodity groups where there has been an improvement from last year to this year and, indeed, a gradual improvement for the past four or five years. For example, beef looms very large in the total of the agriculture production in Canada. One year ago, Mr. Speaker, choice slaughter steers were selling on the Toronto market for 33.5 cents a pound. For the week ending May 29 this year, they were selling for 34.5 cents a pound. I remind hon. members that the price was substantially less than that three years ago. During the same week last year, they were selling on the Winnipeg market for 33.3 cents and at 34.25 cents in 1971. In Calgary the price increased from 32.4 cents to 33.4 cents. While this is not a large increase, it indicates that there has been sufficient to cover the increased cost of production during the past year.

The dairy sector is one area where there has been a remarkable, almost a dramatic improvement in the marketing situation during the past 12 months. About one year or perhaps 18 months ago, we had great quantities of skim milk powder and some other dairy products. Attempts were made to sell very large quantities in the international market at prices less than half of our support price in Canada. At that time, our support price under the Canadian Dairy Commission was approximately 20 cents a pound for skim milk powder. About a year and a half ago, we were getting six to seven cents in the international market. This was partly because of the supplies that Canada had on hand and partly because of the large supplies of this product that were available in a number of other countries, particularly inside the European economic community.

A year ago we embarked on a very difficult change in the dairy policy of Canada. We substantially increased the holdback on shipments that were made in excess of quota. I know there was some criticism, but as a result of that and other changes in the international market, we now have a much better situation. As a matter of fact, twice during this year we have increased the returns to producers on dairy products in the industrial sector. On February 8, we increased the product prices, in the case of skim milk powder from 20 cents to 24 cents and in the case of cheese from 47 cents to 51 cents. This increased the value of the milk being shipped to the producers by aoout 32 cents per hundred. Almost all, in fact 29 cents, was passed on to the producer by the processor.

On June 1, I announced that we were lowering the holdback for these producers, again increasing their returns to some extent. All this comes about because of an improvement in the international marketplace and a reduction in the cost of surplus disposal into that market. Although you cannot predict these things forever, as far as we can see, which is several months down the road, it looks like we will have even more improvements in this sector because we have recently been making some sales of skim milk powder in the international market with no subsidies at all. Indeed, it was sold at 24 cents a pound. We have sold some cheese. In fact, for several weeks we have been selling cheese in the international market, although not in great quantities. Some of these sales have been with no subsidy or, in other words, above our support price of 51 cents per pound.

In conclusion, total cash receipts for farmers in 1970 were down a little from the 1967 receipts, from $4.192 million to $4,166 million. This was almost entirely due to the difficult grain marketing situation. On the other hand, there were many areas where the total cash receipts were up. They were up in the Maritimes, Saskatchewan and British Columbia from levels a year earlier. There is a reason for that. The total cash receipts for Saskatchewan had been affected much more profoundly by the grain sales in the year before. Receipts from sales of livestock and products rose from $2.5 billion in 1969 to $2.624 billion in 1970. Receipts from sales of cattle and calves, hogs, dairy products and poultry were all higher in 1970 than in 1969. Then again, receipts from particular commodities such as rye, flaxseed, rapeseed, soya beans, potatoes, many vegetables and tobacco were all higher in 1970 than in 1969. The Wheat Board's net cash advance payments figures were, of course, down from $157 million in 1969 to $105 million in 1970. So it is not fair or just or accurate to say, as did the leader of the New Democratic Party, that income receipts were down in respect of all commodities in all areas. That is simply not so.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the Minister of Agriculture but I must do so in order to advise him his time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the remarks of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) concerning the situation of Canada's farmers.

He said for instance that the government had decided to encourage an increase in farm acreages in order to ensure higher incomes for farmers. This is not a new policy. There were attempts in the past to group a number of units for a farmer who had to increase his income, but these experiments were not too successful in most instances.

Agriculture in both eastern and western Canada is in such a mess that farmers can hardly live on the income from their land. Is it not a fact that we are witnessing an exodus of our young farm people toward the cities, toward other centres where they expect to earn an income which will allow them to keep their farms since actually the farm can no longer afford a living to the farmer?

Suggested Payment to Western Farmers

Mr. Speaker, the NDP motion is specific enough and it reads as follows:

That this House condemns the agricultural policies of the government which have severely reduced the income of western farmers and threaten the future of Canada's entire rural community, and, in view—

—and this is very important—

—of the financial crisis of western farmers, calls on the government to consider the advisability of an immediate payout—

—whether there is production or not——to them of a minimum of $100,000,000 without conditions and in addition to other farm assistance programs.

It means that over and above whatever is now granted to western farmers, $100 million must be paid out to them immediately because they are going through a severe financial crisis.

Mr. Speaker, since there will be a provincial election in Saskatchewan on June 23 next, I wonder whether copies of the speech made by the New Democratic Party leader, the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), will be distributed in Saskatchewan in an effort to collect votes in favour of his party's candidates out there.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the leader of the New Democratic Party is forgetting that Saskatchewan has already amply enjoyed government by his party for the past 17 years, a government which has allowed citizens of that province to migrate to Alberta, British Columbia, Manitoba—

Mr. Lewis: That is not true.

Mr. Caouette: The hon. member for York South is hiding behind the curtain and says: That is not true. But official statistics reveal that Saskatchewan is the only province in western Canada where the population decreased, under an NDP government. Why did that government after 17 years in power fail to get re-elected in Saskatchewan? Why? It was defeated by a former CCF, Mr. Ross Thatcher, who was here around 1945, 1947, 1948 and who has become the Liberal premier of Saskatchewan in 1964.

I do not blame the hon. member for York South, whom I highly consider, for being interested in politics since there will be an election in Saskatchewan on June 23. For the whole of Canada, the member for York South introduces a motion requesting that $100 million be distributed immediately to the Western farmers who are going through a severe financial crisis. I went there and met some farmers: it is true that they are having a hard time.

But the western farmers, those of Saskatchewan, are not the only ones who are having a bad time of it. In fact, the first organization to have severe financial troubles is the federal government: it cannot meet any demand. The farmers out West are no worse off than those of eastern Canada.

Barely two weeks ago, I met some eastern farmers. I also met some of the employees of Massey Ferguson in Brant, where just the other day an NDP member was elected, not because the people are socialists out there, but because the personality of the candidate impressed the voters in Brant. That is why the New Democratic party won the constituency of Brant, and I advise the hon. member for York South accordingly.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, the financial crisis is widespread. We have just learned that in Quebec, the Manic Automobile Company Limited, which has received many thousands of dollars in federal subsidies, has nevertheless decided to declare itself bankrupt. The Soma plant, which assembles the small Renault cars, is about to close its doors, if deficits keep on growing. Textile plants at Lachute are closing, and the same will happen in the Eastern Townships, in the Saint-Maurice region, in October 1971, and at Montmagny as well. Those are facts relating to the industrial field.

Agriculture is also facing a financial crisis. Money is lacking, not intelligence or good will, for the 800,000 unemployed want to work. The 1,500,000 students who are now seeking summer jobs would like to be part of Canadian society, but they are told: We have no money. Credits of $27 million were voted to help our young people. What does it represent? A mere drop in the ocean!

If a war broke out tomorrow, those 1,500,000 young people would be drafted. It would no longer be a matter of $27 or $50 million; billions would be found to give them decent food, clothes and shelter. Ways would be devised to finance their integration into the Canadian armed forces. Yet, we do not seem able to work out ways of making them part of society in peace time. That is what is wrong with the system.

There is the same problem throughout the country. Corn producers in Ontario complain they are facing a financial crisis. Everywhere from east to west, we are told the same thing: There is a financial crisis! Instead of getting directly at the source of the financial crisis, the government is pitting one region against the other. Western farmers tell me: "If we do not have enough, it is because Ottawa is giving too much to the East". When I am in the Maritimes, I am told the same thing: "If we do not have enough it is because the federal governement is giving too much to western farmers".

The hon. member for York South is well aware of the squabbling which exists in Canada and which is destroying Canadian unity. This is well known. Why? Because nobody is trying to get to the root of the evil.

The roots of this evil, Mr. Speaker, are not to be found in the pockets of millionaires. I hear members of the New Democratic Party saying: "Down with exploiters, down with big business, let us get at the rich and help the poor". If we were to collect $200 million a month from the rich and distribute the amount among the population, what would they get? Ten dollars each. Would we make them rich? No! We would thus make the rich poorer by $200 million. We would have more poor and this would increase the consumers' wealth.

[Mr. Caouette.]

The deep-rooted cause of the problem lies with the financial system. We will at long last have to make up our mind to correct its faults and use our national financial institution, the Bank of Canada, in a rational and effective way. In fact, nothing keeps us from doing so. But so long as we do not do that, we shall be beset by a lack of unity, quarrels, and current problems in Canada. The hon. member for York South knows what he is talking about, to be sure.

About one year ago, I was in Winnipeg where a convention of the New Democratic Party was being held in view of the recent convention at which the hon. member for York South was chosen as party leader. One evening, I was watching a news broadcast on television about the New Democratic Party convention and I heard the hon. member for York South repeat what he says quite often in this House. He was speaking against the Americans, both fists raised, and he said: Our economy is controlled by the Americans. It has to stop. A New Democratic government would put an end to any abuse and control of our Canadian economy by the Americans. The young people as well as the others were shouting their satisfaction in the arena where the convention was taking place. Everyone was happy to hear such statements from the hon. member for York South who seemed quite sincere.

In Manitoba, it just happens that the New Democratic Party is in power. The premier, the Hon. Edward Schryer sat here, as the member for Selkirk, I think. During the Winnipeg convention, the hon. Mr. Schryer spoke to the delegates. Well, the next evening, after having heard the leader of the New Democratic party on the radio, I heard the Minister of Finance in the NDP government of Manitoba who had just returned from a visit to United States—a country of exploiters who want to control the Canadian economy—say: I was exceptionally well received by the Americans who rolled out the red carpet and granted us a loan of $50 million for the construction of a power-station in Manitoba.

Mrs. MacInnis: Why not?

Mr. Caouette: The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway asks "why not", when we are, at this very moment, fighting against American control of our natural resources!

Either the hon. member for York South or the Minister of Finance of the new NDP government was lying the following night. One does not want any American control, while the other seeks it in order to develop the natural resources of Manitoba.

Mr. Speaker, it does not mean that the NDP government is worse than the Quebec government. The Liberal premier of Quebec went to the United States to borrow $75 million at 9 per cent interest for 25 years. Nine per cent interest for 25 years. Did the Quebec premier return from New York and Washington with whole sackfuls of American dollars? No. He came back with a slip of paper on which was written $75 million, signed by Robert Bourassa endorsed by the Province of Quebec.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Not a single five cent piece left the United States but Mr. Bourassa came back with a slip of paper worth $75 million.

A few days later, Premier Bourassa went to Germany, France, Italy, England to borrow money. Did he come back with whole sackfuls of German marks, French francs, Italian liras and English Pounds? No, he came back again with slips of paper with figures on them.

Why was Premier Bourassa not allowed to have the figures printed by the Bank of Canada instead of by American and German bankers allegedly because we must diversify our loans in order to help farmers and all other people in Quebec?

How could we cause greater inflation by having $75 million produced in Canada, by the Bank of Canada instead of going to Germany, Russia or the United States? The difference would be in the interest that must be paid to others.

And while Premier Bourassa was borrowing money everywhere, in Europe, in the United States, Mr. Paul Gérin-Lajoie, lackey of this government, who is working for the agency giving assistance to underdeveloped countries, was in India, granting interest-free loans for 50 years! Do you think that Paul Gérin-Lajoie left Canada with whole sackfuls of Canadian dollars? No, he went with a little piece of paper bearing the words $40 million interest free for 50 years and that, while Premier Bourassa was in Europe to borrow money bearing interest at 8 and 9 per cent. Such logic!

This can be said to the Liberals while the member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) comes to my constituency to say that I am opposed to interest-free loans to foreign countries. If it were permitted to say that he is a liar I would say so but since it is forbidden I will not. However—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. Although I was not in the House when the member for Temiscamingue began his remarks, I am wondering how he can connect them with the motion and I invite him to conclude his digression as soon as possible.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, while helping the western farmers with $100 million, we are going as far as helping at the same time the farmers in India with an interest-free loan of $40 million. Therefore my remarks were not so irrelevant. Money is found to help others and we should also be able to find some money to help not only western agriculture but all the other sectors of our economy.

This problem does not concern agriculture only: it is general throughout the country. When I give as an example the action of people who try to introduce a motion for purely political purposes and because an election is to take place in Saskatchewan, I think I am saying something pertinent.

In any event, this motion will not solve the problems of the western farmers. The Minister of Agriculture is well aware of the solution. If he were still a Créditiste he would speak as we do, as he used to do a few years back and he would find where the problem lies because he could find it some years ago when he was a member of our party.

He would accept to tell the government exactly what he thinks. However, at the present time, he is caught inside the cabinet: solidarity prevents him from speaking his mind. He smiles while listening to us; that reminds him of happy memories, when he spoke exactly as we do, some years ago, while he stood up for the farmers—

Mr. Olson: I still do.

Mr. Caouette: —as no hon. member had ever done before. Today, he supports the farmers by telling them: Be happy with what you have, we are doing our best.

Mr. Olson: No.

Mr. Caouette: When asked: What are you doing?, they reply: Not much, we are doing what we can. But what are the results? There are none yet, but there will be some. We are going to dispossess two, three, four or five farmers, in order to establish a collective farming unit or a larger one designed for two farmers who will get into debt over their heads. Nobody will ever see their ears again as long as they live because they will be so deep into debts.

The Minister of Agriculture considers such a solution excellent for helping the western farmers. Even if $100 million or $200 million were granted, that would not be the proper solution. The only solution to get agriculture back on its feet is to allow consumers to buy products suited to their needs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I must say I was somewhat intrigued when the minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) started out by telling us how badly off the Australian farmers were and that the Canadian grain farmers were no worse off.

Mr. Olson: No, I didn't. I started with Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Gleave: He wound up by giving us figures to show that the Canadian farmers were really quite well off. When he compared the Canadian farmers to the Australian farmers, he reminded me of the story of a chap who felt badly because his hogs were sick and dying. He went over to see if his neighbour knew anything about the disease. His neighbour said his hogs were sick and dying as well. The first farmer said: "Well, it ain't as bad as I thought it was". This story came to my mind as the minister was talking.

The minister then took our first speaker to task for his attitude and what he said about the adjustment program. I say to the minister he should not be surprised by the conclusions which are drawn with regard to this program. If one goes back to the task force recommendations, he can draw the clear conclusion that this consolidation program was recommended by the task force. Let me read the final paragraph on the production of a grain receipts policy for the western grain industry, as set out by the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. Under the heading "Encourage adjustment of farm units to more efficient sizes", I read:

> The problem of farm consolidation is one which is not peculiar to the prairie region and which, perhaps, is less critical in this region than in other areas of Canada. It is therefore believed that it would be inappropriate to propose programs for the prairie region to deal with the consolidation issue in advance of the availability of programs to deal with this problem in Canadian agriculture generally. Such a general plan is in preparation.

The report refers to a consolidation program which is under way. It does not say anything else. Let me read from page 6 of the minister's own document put out on March 8 regarding policies required. Time does not permit me to read it all, but I will read what I think is the operative paragraph.

> The second main group of policies involves several subsets of policies designed to control the direction and rate of these adjustments in line with the needs of the market. These include policies to increase economic incentives to shift, for example, from wheat to forage, from dairy to beef, or from farm to non-farm employment. They depend for their operational efficiency on the effectiveness of the first set of programs—those designed to increase the mobility of resources and to grease the wheels of the adjustment process.

That is what is said. Neither of these documents suggest these policies are designed for the people. The first I quoted said the policy is designed to consolidate farms and the second one refers to the direction and rate of these adjustments in line with the needs of the market. I grant the minister that there is a reference to a retirement option and so on, but if the government really expect us to believe what the minister said a few moments ago it should get some new writers. These writers should be instructed to put down the words the ministers want to use. What we read in these documents causes us concern and that is why we have put forward this type of motion today. We want to emphasize the agricultural situation in western Canada, and if as a result the minister or others responsible clarify their position, redirect it and get someone else to put in writing what they want to say, then this debate has been helpful.

I think it might be useful to take a look at some of the reasons we have reached this point. We might go back to 1966 when farmers were asked to grow all the grain they could. I do not particularly fault the minister responsible at that time. It has become almost a practice of governments to claim credit for any wheat sales that are made and then, when conditions are not so good, to duck for cover until sales pick up again. This is not an unusual process. Following the negotiation of the International Grains Arrangement, we had to contend with a decline in price and in sales volume. The two came together. I could quote Canadian Wheat Board figures to show the twin trends, but I do not think it is necessary to do so. Later on, we had the devaluation of the dollar which was government policy. This was another factor in the decline of the actual gross income of grain farmer.

But now, at that point in time, what was the government's answer? Well, the first action by the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Wheat Board was to initiate a new cash advance program. At that time we told the minister there was an income crisis in western Canada as a result of the situation which existed in respect of grain. That was known. No one questioned the facts of the situation. So, the minister said he would bring in a new cash advance program under which the amount the farmer could borrow would be doubled. The net result was that the farmer sold the next year's crop in the present year, in an attempt to obtain some income. This process went on for two years, but did not put extra cash in the hands of the farmers. The minister can talk about the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act and the PFAA, which was an established program, but at the present time there are proposals to completely eliminate these programs. The net result of the cash advance program was that the farmer faced even greater difficulty.

Mr. Olson: Did he not get the money?

Mr. Gleave: Sure; he got the money.

Mr. Olson: And he got into deeper difficulty by getting money; I do not understand that.

Mr. Gleave: I am surprised. The minister is a rancher, a farmer and a businessman, but he never heard of a farmer borrowing enough money to get into difficulty. I am very surprised.

Mr. Olson: This is not a loan. It is an advance on grain held on the farm.

Mr. Gleave: All right. I am just putting on the record what the government proposed, and what the minister in charge of the Wheat Board who is not now in the House brought forward as policy. It did not work very well. In fact, the minister is back this week redrafting the whole policy, as well as the cash advance legislation because it was a failure.

Mr. Olson: It needs improving, that is all.

Mr. Gleave: All he did was restore the original provisions of the legislation.

Mr. Olson: No.

Mr. Gleave: The farmer can now be charged interest, and that is a pretty standard improvement for these people who are in power. They can now charge an interest rate which they could not do before.

Mr. Olson: And give loans on other grains also.

Mr. Boulanger: You are playing Saskatchewan politics. Be honest. Do not be a socialist all your life.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand why those people across the way seem to think I am concerned with Saskatchewan politics. If I were concerned about Saskatchewan politics, I would be in the same category as the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board.

Mr. Boulanger: Don't say anything more.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, would you mind asking the hon. member across the way to cease interrupting until I have finished.

Mr. Boulanger: He does not understand your English.

Mr. Gleave: Speaking about politics in Saskatchewan, I note a newspaper report in the Ottawa Citizen in which there is the following reference to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board:

> He added with a smile that he was confident Premier Ross Thatcher would be bringing the wheat sale to the attention of Saskatchewan voters during the next few weeks.

Earlier in the same article we find the following:

> Mr. Lang suggested the large sale had been expedited through Prime Minister Trudeau's recent visit to the Soviet Union.

Well, I say to the boys opposite that they sure take the prize for timing, so do not start kidding me about politics in Saskatchewan.

I wish to come back again, Mr. Speaker, to the programs the government has initiated. After the cash advance program, they came along with the Lift program and said they would pay out $100 million. Somebody the other day said that more than the $100 million was committed, but that was denied. So, the government came along and said it would pay out $100 million. According to the figures the minister gave a few minutes ago, the amount that was really made available was somewhere in the area of $60 million. You know, Mr. Speaker, the farmers are still trying to collect the remainder of that money. It is past seeding time for this year and they started collecting this money away back in the previous year.

Another of the minister's answers to the situation was to tell the farmers not to grow any more wheat and not to plant any more land to barley or rapeseed. In effect, he told them to close down shop. Fortunately for the government, the farmers did not really follow his advice. They did plant some barley and some rapeseed. They planted a fair amount of acreage in both. They continued to plant some wheat. Had they not done this, the sales of rapeseed and barley the minister is bragging about would never have occurred. Had the farmers taken the advice of the minister without portfolio in charge of the Wheat Board, the sales the government is bragging about could not have been made because the grain would not have been available.

You know, Mr. Speaker, one can trot out figures and say a number of things. However, these are the facts of the matter. The programs the government undertook have caused a real disruption in farming practices. It is a lucky thing we did not have a windy spring because then I do not know how large the disaster would have been. Then, the government comes along and hits the button again. Back in October 1970 there were proposals in respect of the cash receipt policy for the western grain farmer. There are a number of proposals now, which the minister has said will eventually be put into legislation. One of these proposals was the payment of $100 million to help out in respect of the shortfall which it was known existed. That proposal was made in October 1970. Mr. Speaker, that $100 million has been dangled before the eyes of the farmers since that time. I could go on all through the piece.

In October, there was the announcement concerning certain proposals. Then, on March 1, there was the announcement to the House of Commons regarding initial payments on wheat, oats and barley. On March 9, there was the final revision of the grain policy proposals which were tabled in the House and were to be completed within the next two weeks. On March 15, there were the revised proposals, and again legislation was to be considered. Finally, on April 29, the government came along with definite proposals.

Now again, we see the repeat of the carrot and stick method which was used in the Lift program. On the one hand they said, "We think it would be in your interest to accept the Lift program", and on the other hand they said, 'If you do not, you will suffer under the permit system which governs your privilege to deliver grain". Under this program, they say "Yes, we have $100 million, but before you get it we have another program which will decide your future for years to come. Before you get that $100 million you will have to sign on the dotted line". All this time the farmers have been promised $100 million. Is it any wonder that when one goes back to one's constituency, people ask when this acreage payment will be made? Is it any wonder that we receive letters asking when this acreage payment will be made? All that one can reply is, "Whenever the government is ready to do so."

The minister has accused the opposition of holding up the payment. I spoke of the time it took him to get the legislation before the House. He could have released this money at any time the government was agreeable after October 29, 1970 when he announced these proposals. All that our motion requests is that the government now do what they said they would do. Nobody is asking them to develop new proposals. All we are saying is that we want the government to do immediately what they said they would do because there is a need that it be done immediately. I suppose it is too much to hope that the government will agree to do it. If they do, then it will certainly be welcomed by farmers in western Canada.

The minister stated that the situation is not that serious. I have farmers who are under pressure to pay back farm improvement loans, which they cannot do because of lack of money. I have farmers who have had to ask the Farm Credit Corporation to allow them a delay because they did not have enough money to pay back the loans. These are not irresponsible people, they are ordinary well established farmers.

Suggested Payment to Western Farmers

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to participate in this debate, since I have had the pleasure of offering my co-operation to the Committee on Agriculture for nearly three years. I have read carefully the motion which was introduced today, and I have had the opportunity of listening to a few speeches.

The motion reads in part as follows:

—condemns the agricultural policies of the government which have severely reduced thee income of western farmers and threaten the future of Canada's entire rural community,—

It is very easy to condemn the government but, in all objectivity, we must be true participants and make certain suggestions.

And I am not one of those who believe that government policy alone is responsible for the difficulties encountered by western farmers at the present time. Demanding the unconditional payment of an amount of $100 million is surely unacceptable to me since we must admit that the wheat markets we had a few years ago are inexistent today and some of our customers have become competitors.

We must nevertheless admit these facts and I was quite pleased to listen a while ago to the hon. minister responsible for the Wheat Board, who spoke as much as possible on the methods that the government has tried to implement for three years.

Charges leveled by various people have been refuted, but as the leader of the Social Credit (Mr. Caouette) has also said, I do have reservations about these $100 million being granted exclusively to the western farmers.

We know very well that some western farmers are in trouble. Certainly these $100 million would be welcome in view of the Saskatchewan election. Some might say that this motion has a definite political objective, but I am too kind to make such a charge.

I should perhaps consider the time we have spent discussing agricultural measures involving especially the western farmers since I came to this House. It made me aware of the problems of the grain producers, but does the full responsibility for those difficulties lie with the government? I shall be more objective and honest than that, and certainly I shall not blame the government alone.

As I said earlier, some circumstances made it easier for us to sell our wheat, but we know very well that nowadays we have to compete with other countries.

But I also think that, even though it is said in this motion that the income of farmers have decreased, we should have been more practical in the House and set a limit to some debates in order to save time. We could earlier ensure some grants to these farmers.

May I give an example. We could easily have improved incomes for some groups of farmers, not only in western Canada but also in the East—

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker—

[Mr. Gleave.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member for Joliette, but the hon. member for St. Boniface is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I should like to call your attention on the fact that those who proposed the motion now before us, namely, the members of the New Democratic Party, are all absent from the House.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Joliette.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for St. Boniface for his remark. Apparently his few words have proved efficient since already an NDP member is seen entering this House.

I was just saying, Mr. Speaker, that a matter of money is at the root of all policies but, unfortunately, the simple matter of politics is also there. Would granting $100 million to the farmers of western Canada be considered as a temporary solution? In my opinion, the government is responsible for setting down a long-term policy and the motion we are now debating which tends to claim these $100 million is still acceptable since it is also aimed at requesting that some conditions be fulfilled. I do not believe the government can deliberately grant $100 million to a certain group because of the difficulties they are experiencing. I can well imagine that tomorrow morning the government would be faced with further requests for grants of the same kind.

I particularly want to stress how much time we are spending on the study of different measures, more particularly the one now before us.

• (3:30 p.m.)

I said we could have increased the income of farmers, not only in the West but also in the East, had we been a little more practical about Bill C-176. The motion involves the income of farmers. I know there is much opposition in that field. We have been waiting over a year. The passage of this bill would improve to a certain extent the income of western farmers. I believe the government has made a commendable effort in the last year. We have played too much politics about this bill instead of emphasizing for instance, the mandate we have been given in this House.

In comparatively less time we could have improved the income of some farmers for example by introducing a bill to ensure the distribution of our products and the setting up of price averages which would have directly affected the farmers. But, on the contrary, we spent much of the time of the House opposing the proposed measures because we fear too much control. I believe control has become necessary if we talk of planning—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I think I should remind him that he must as much as possible stick to the motion now under consideration. Apparently the hon. member wishes to review the discussions held in the House in connection with another specific bill and he referred to those which may have been held on that bill in the Committee on Agriculture. I do not think that it is advisable to resume those discussions when the House is dealing with a general motion concerning the agricultural conditions in the country.

Moreover, the hon. member will recognize that the point has already been raised by the Chair when it was suggested earlier during the debate that the motion could give rise to a discussion on another bill. The Chair then suggested to the hon. member to stick to the motion and not to initiate another debate on a bill concerning agriculture which is now being considered either by the House or a committee.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I was simply trying to show how much time is wasted in this House when we consider an urgent piece of legislation dealing specifically with an increase in the producers' income. I had thought that hon. members would not have to restrict their remarks to western producers, in the light of the difficulties experienced by the whole country.

In any case, I want to comply with the request of the Chair and restrict myself to this motion, but I cannot help reminding the House that it is not appropriate to waste time while we are discussing bills. In fact, I think that the amount of $100 million mentioned in the motion has been discussed for some weeks in the Committee on Agriculture, where, more and more, the contributions only result in delaying the passage of this legislation likely to provide immediate assistance to producers.

I only wanted to react against the tendency to extend too often the proceedings in order to gain time and to enable some hon. members to make the headlines. I dare believe that every member has the duty to suggest the best solutions. A vote will eventually be taken, but we already know how it will turn out.

I think we should strive to save time as much as possible in the House by suggesting concrete solutions, by making haste so that producers may take advantage of the legislation brought before the House. Of course this is no way prevents hon. members from taking part in the debate and making suggestions.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that we shall be more practical than ever, considering the interests not only of the farmers but of all Canadians.

On reading the motion, one finds that it is a question of planning. Some co-ordination is required with regard to this production and, if we speak of planning, in a system directly affecting wheat producers, we must also be ready to do some planning in the House.

How can we continue to speak about planning within government organizations if we refuse, at the start, to do some planning here in the House so that our debates may be more efficient?

I ask the question because it must be asked. The thought occurred to me because I know from three years' experience in the House that we have greatly neglected to put order into our work.

We must take greater care of the categories of people affected by the bill I mentioned. Therefore, I dare hope we will be more practical about these measures.

Suggested Payment to Western Farmers

In my opinion, the motion before us is unacceptable since it simply asks for a $100-million subsidy to be given unconditionally and exclusively to western farmers. We very well know that they are not the only farmers in difficulty. I must admit that the government has made some efforts and that several bills will be introduced. I hope my colleagues will be practical enough to adopt promptly the measures that will benefit eastern and western farmers.

[English]

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): As usual, Mr. Speaker, I welcome this and every opportunity to take part in debates relating to the economic welfare of the agricultural industry. I have to support the no confidence motion introduced by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), the new leader of the New Democratic Party, as it appears in today's order paper. The motion reads:

> That this House condemns the agricultural policies of the government which have severely reduced the income of western farmers and threaten the future of Canada's entire rural community, and, in view of the financial crisis of western farmers, calls on the government to consider the advisability of an immediate payout to them of a minimum of $100,000,000 without conditions and in addition to other farm assistance programs.

I must say that I became somewhat concerned about the sincerity of the hon. member's motion when he related it to the Saskatchewan election, slated for June 23. Western farmers in particular have been watching the new Leader of the NDP very closely. They want to see what policies he will advocate relating to agriculture, inasmuch as over the year, as a high priced labour lawyer, he, together with his party, seemed to be more concerned about organized labour than about agriculture. On occasion, when labour unrest and west coast and seaway strikes threatened our grain market economy, our friends in the NDP were strangely silent.

An hon. Member: That is absolutely correct.

Mr. Southam: Another example I could cite is the debate in the Saskatchewan legislature relating to the slowdown and strike of rail workers this spring. The grain trade stated that this cost us about $50 million in lost grain sales. In that debate, the Saskatchewan NDP members were forced to support the Saskatchewan Liberals in condemning the strike, while the federal NDP members kept quiet. However, Mr. Speaker, I want to advise the hon. member for York South that, regardless of his motivation, he cannot leave the impression that he and his party are the only ones who are seriously interested in the welfare of agriculture. It seems that our chief concern is ever decreasing net farm incomes and ever increasing production costs. Again, we see the spectre of the cost-price squeeze looming its ugly head.

I have never been one of those to take a negative approach in this House in any debate, particularly in the area of agriculture. We ought to look at the problem of declining farm incomes, a problem which is serious at the moment and will be serious in the days ahead. According to statistics and reports at hand, the situation is serious. I have before me some statistics that were given to us recently in the Standing Committee on Agriculture. They relate to the Manitoba farm scene. May I quote from these statistics. In 1968, farm cash income in the province was $364,816,000. In 1969 that figure was $351,941,000. The 1970 figure shows a decline to $341,957,000. Now, let us look at farm net income figures. They are what this debate is all about. In 1968, farm net income in Manitoba was $162,666,000. In 1969 net income had declined to $117,090,000 and in 1970—listen to this—had further declined to $78,631,000. There has been a decline of over 100 per cent in three years. I do not have the figures for Saskatchewan at hand, although I questioned one of our witnesses before the committee, and he said that net farm income in Saskatchewan had decreased last year by $200 million.

If you go back to the period 1962-63, when we developed policies to move western grain to world markets, you will find that Saskatchewan farmers, as well as prairie farmers in general, enjoyed an average net income of about $4,800. Last year, according to figures at hand, the net income of our farmers declined to about $1,000 per farm. That means, of course, that some farmers earned more than that; nevertheless, a large number of farmers did not enjoy any net income at all. That is precisely why we have no alternative except to wholeheartedly support this plea for an emergency injection of $100 million into the farming economy at once.

We passed through a similar emergency just before the party I support took office in 1957. There was a very serious farm problem at that time, too. All kinds of grain was piled up in every elevator, in skating rinks, in farmers' bins, in terminals and so on. We were not selling enough grain and, consequently, the farmer was caught in a serious cost-price squeeze. We met that emergency by doing something similar to what is suggested here. We pumped $45 million into the farm economy. There was another temporary emergency in 1959, and we again put another $43 million into that economy. The same thing happened in 1961 when there was a drought, and another $45 million was pumped into the economy, to tide farmers over the emergency while the government went about developing long-term policies relating to trade as well as the selling of grain.

We entered into trade agreements with countries like Japan involving textiles and with other countries, Poland, Czechoslovakia and countries in South America. We sold wheat to China in 1961 on a long-term credit basis, and this put our agriculture into a viable economic position. Liberal governments followed those policies for several years and rode along on the economic band wagon which had been created without developing new policies.

Then, the International Wheat Agreement collapsed in 1968. Actually, that collapse was heralded in the spring of 1967, when it was agreed that we would come up with a new grains arrangement on July 1, 1968. That arrangement did not materialize. I wish, in that connection, to cite some other statistics and figures which were presented before the Standing Committee on Agriculture this morning. They relate to the total value of all marketings and go back to 1949-50. From 1949 on the picture became progressively better until 1952-53, after which a decline set in which, according to the figures, continued until 1956. There was a slight increase in marketings in the period 1960-61 when my party took over, and these figures began to improve. By 1960-61, as a result of trading policies we instituted, we were able to increase incomes with respect to all grain marketings to $708,570,000. Those incomes increased until, in 1966-67, they reached $1,353,172,000. Then began a decline, and in 1969-70 those marketing values were down to $855,210,000.

Those figures support what I have been saying. Gross farm income and, particularly, net farm income has been declining. The picture will get worse because, as a result of the Lift program of last year, farmers were coerced into reducing wheat acreage by 12 million acres. If you accept a nominal figure of, say, 30 bushels of grain grown per acre and consider that that amount was not grown on the acreage taken out of production, you will see that about 360 million bushels of grain that could have been produced were not produced. If that grain were sold at $1.50 per bushel, a minimum price, it would mean that the farm economy would have received over half of $1 billion. It has not received that amount.

I do not think anyone in this House can ever say that we have thrown grain into the ocean or been forced to sell it at fire sale prices. It seems that mother nature enters the picture; there is an upset in conditions in other parts of the world and the result is that we can find markets for our grain. In any event, the potential income from grain sales in western Canada has been reduced by half of $1 billion. This loss we can never regain. It is only reasonable that, in the face of emergencies, we should take steps such as have been suggested this afternoon and inject $100 million into the farm economy. We should then develop an over-all agricultural policy that will put our agricultural industry into a viable position and give hope to our farmers. We must create an optimistic outlook for the future.

Bearing all those things in mind, I should like to relate to the House a few facts. First, what is the problem? Canadian agricultural policy must be related to the business of agricultural recovery. National economic policy has been guided by five goals. They are full employment, a high rate of economic growth, a reasonable stability of prices, a viable balance of payments and an equitable distribution of rising incomes. From this point of view, Canadian agriculture has been a leading achiever and contributor. However, today it is in deep trouble and its problems relate to the quality of Canadian life and the horizons of Canadian development. Last year, Canada became a net importer of food products. Approximately two-thirds of Canada's farm families live below the poverty line. The sale price of farm products is not keeping pace with the increasing costs of food production. The net income of the farming industry continues to decline.

To overcome this trend, we should have a goal. The skill of our farmers, the generosity of our land, and the real and potential value of agriculture to the whole economy means that we must remake agriculture as a vital industry. Our goal must be a properous industry in all respects; achieving effective domestic and export markets and successful competition for manpower, capital, land and transportation facilities needed in agriculture.

The framework within which we must accomplish this goal includes: First, the ready adoption of new technology and new dynamics in marketing and processing; second, the establishment of a system of domestic marketing of agricultural goods which will facilitate the freest possible movement of goods between the ten provinces of Canada; third, the continued development of viable communities; fourth, the security of a minimum level of income. There has been a lot of debate in the House and in committees recently about the minimum level of income. This level of income cannot be established at a poverty level. It has to be based on a net income so that the farmer can have an economic position which will compare with other sectors of our economy. The fifth point is the lowering of the costs of production and marketing in order to compete effectively with other producers; sixth, the stabilization of input costs in order to achieve net income stability and reasonable prices to the consumer; seventh, the freer movement of persons between sectors of the farming and non-farming community.

Most important, the framework must take into account the human dimension. The Progressive Conservative party believes that government mechanisms of control, regulation and limitation must be viewed with caution. To control supply and regulate prices would inhibit the adoption of new production techniques to the ultimate detriment of the whole economy. There must be room for flexibility and individually—for freedom—in pursuing broad goals and humane rates of change.

To accomplish this, Mr. Speaker, I have several guidelines I would like to set out. For us, agricultural adjustment is the process of correcting the inequalities in incomes and imbalances of resources that are constant dangers in a dynamic economy. Government agriculture policies have left approximately two-thirds of our farm families below the poverty line. In other words, about 200,000 Canadian farmers face drastic adjustment problems. The challenge of adjustment, of premeditated change, must be the fundamental concern of agriculture policy. As a first step, we would construct a Canadian agriculture development design to permit national development and revitalization of this industry within the framework of regionally integrated and highly flexible national planning. This will not be a design for coercion or retrenchment. It will be a strategy for equitable and constructive growth.

The present government's policy of farm management is not acceptable. For us, an agriculture policy which presumes to have the power to move people out of agriculture, and to pull resources out of agriculture, is doomed and rightly so. The most efficient adjustment will rest on a program designed to help the individual farmer act to satisfy his own particular goals. The federal and provincial governments, together, must develop a national information system designed to provide the individual farmer with the information needed from farm and non-farm sources in a format acceptable to individual farm decision-making. This system would provide information on future prices of both inputs and products, information on institutions affecting individual farm operators, such as credit institutions, insurance and marketing arrangements and information on non-farm employment opportunities and non-farm living conditions, including training and retraining opportunities.

Such an information system would build a field staff whose primary purpose would be to concentrate on major adjustment decisions and farm management advice. It should ensure expanded capability in university departments of agriculture economics to train the people required for this field staff. It should start training and retraining programs for all who want to become better farmers and farm workers, or to qualify themselves for non-farm jobs. Manpower training programs have been less available to rural than urban people. Perhaps mobile manpower units should be introduced to rural areas. Retraining programs which do not depend on the individual leaving his rural community must be established. Programs in tourism and farm labour are needed and could be invaluable for existing communities and income improvement.

In the field of marketing, this government's policy is supply, rather than market oriented. Yet the greatest potential for improving the state of our industry is in charting the most profitable direction for expansion, rather than contraction, of our agricultural and food industry. I repeat, yet the greatest potential for improving the state of our industry is in charting the most profitable direction for expansion, rather than contraction, of our agricultural and food industry. New guidelines are required to develop programs to assist producers through extended market and technical information, and develop programs to achieve a stronger domestic and international orientation in the agriculture industry. A marketing policy should draw together all facets of the agricultural and food industry to develop co-ordinated strategies to move the maximum volume of produce at the best possible return.

The choices we must now face are related fundamentally to these conditions. For example, an objective of our foreign aid policy is to encourage developing nations to become agriculturally self-sufficient. In terms of ecological balance, is it appropriate to assist India to sear her soil to feed her people while Canadian soil, with greater and safer capacity, is being taken out of production? Only with a view to optimum global development and population and ecological planning can the parameters of our nation's trading goals be constructed most fully and responsibly.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Suggested Payment to Western Farmers

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, the motion before us today is in the name of the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). In essence, it calls for two different things. It calls for an immediate injection of cash into the western economy, an injection that is unconditional—and will go out to the western farmers immediately. Second, it expresses concern about what is happening in western Canada today to the rural way of life or, as it is called, the life style.

This is a no-confidence motion in the government. It is very valid. There are many areas where the government is not fulfilling the job of governing the way it should. One of the most important is with regard to farmers and agriculture, particularly the grain farmers in western Canada. To prove my case, I need only quote only a few statistics from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics that have been released by the federal government. Net farm income in Saskatchewan fell by about 56 per cent between 1968 and 1970. In terms of dollars and cents it fell from $462,348,000 in 1968 to $202,718,000 in 1970. This represents a decline of some 56 per cent in net income for grain farmers in the province. This is a startling figure even to those who know nothing about the western economy. It is startling that any industry or group of people should suffer a decline in income as severe as that in two years.

Throughout Canada generally, farm income has dropped severely in the past two years. In 1968, when the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) assumed power, net farm income was $1,714,470,000. In 1970 it was $1,198,400,000. As the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Southam) said, the net income the prairie farmers is getting on an average after expenses have been met is about $1,000 a year. If this does not convince even people who know nothing about agriculture that farmers are facing a severe problem, then nothing will. Almost all the grain farmers in western Canada are today living below the poverty line despite the fact that they know how to manage their farms, despite the fact that agricultural productivity has increased at a faster rate than in any other industry. These statistics alone show that something should be done immediately to get more cash to the farmers so that they can carry on production.

The motion before us calls for the immediate injection without conditions of $100 million into the economy of western Canada. Most farmers will agree with us in this regard. The government may say: We have a bill before the House, Bill C-244, under the terms of which $100 million will go out to the farmers. Mr. Speaker, the $100 million mentioned in that bill is tied in with a stabilization plan to which all three major farm organizations are opposed. We are faced with an attempt to blackmail the farmers into accepting this stabilization bill before they can get—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have to interrupt the hon. member. Members who have taken part in the debate until now have respected the suggestion made by the Chair that we should not inject into this discussion the issues raised by Bill C-244, which is before the House. To do so would involve repetition of a debate which has already taken place, which is proceeding in committee and which will be resumed in the House in due course. I would think the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) would want to follow the good example which has been set for him to emulate during this debate.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Nystrom: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I shall be guided by your words of wisdom. The motion before us calls for the injection of $100 million into the western economy as well as expressing the concern which is felt by the whole rural economy of western Canada. A whole western way of life is being threatened. The future of the family farm and the rural community are in doubt. Anyone who travels around western Canada as I have done in the last couple of months finds that many farmers have been forced to leave the land because of their failure to make ends meet. Many of those who are left are living below the poverty line.

It is not only the farmers who are in serious trouble. Many of the western towns are rapidly becoming ghost communities. The Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang) said this morning that such a statement was nonsense. It is not. One can go to many towns on the Prairies where business places have closed down because farmers are no longer able to buy the commodities they used to buy in the small towns and cities. People are unemployed, people are moving out. We are told that last year more than 30,000 people left Saskatchewan. Most of this migration was due to the sharp decline in farm income. The situation in western Canada amounts to a real emergency and this is why we must take immediate action before more farmers are forced to leave the land. Today, the new member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) took his seat in the House. Hon. members who go to Brantford will find many unemployed people there; they lost their work because of the shutdown of farm machinery plant in the city. This is one example of the effects of the severe cutback in income which the western farmer has suffered.

What we see out west is a threat to a whole way of life, a threat to something we should be preserving and stimulating. Instead, we are permitting it to be destroyed before our eyes. What happens to the individuals directly concerned? What happens to farmers who are forced off the land or to businessmen who are obliged to close down their businesses in rural areas? Many of them find their way to the large cities where they find it impossible to get jobs and eventually find themselves on welfare rolls. What type of life is that for them and their families?

A few years ago the late President Jack Kennedy called for a study of urban violence in the United States. It was reported that an important source of violence in American cities was people moving from rural areas to urban centres, people unable to find employment who felt alienated and out of place. We should not allow this to happen in Canada; we should not encourage such consequences by expediting the movement of people from the rural to urban sectors.

We who come from the west are sad to find these communities closing down, little towns whose populations are full of despair, towns in which there seems to be no life whereas formerly there was bustle and activity. What must be done to start the economy rolling again? I was very happy about the announcement that a large wheat sale had been negotiated with the Soviet Union. This underlines once again the value of the Wheat Board and the orderly marketing of grain. Outside of this, two or three things must happen. A short-term injection of cash is needed if western farmers are to be saved. The farm organizations are calling for $250 million. I do not think they are being too greedy. They need this money in a genuine and sincere way. I should like to see us put this much money into the economy of western Canada this month and during the summer, so that many of these farmers who are otherwise going to be forced off the land can stay in business.

If we cannot accept this proposition, then let us accept the terms of this motion which seeks to inject a minimum of $100 million into the western economy. This would greatly help many farmers across the Prairies. But this is not the whole solution; it is merely a short-term solution, and it is about time the Department of Agriculture and other departments discussed the long-term ramifications of agriculture.

A task force has been studying the agricultural industry in western Canada and two or three of its recommendations terrify me and many others in the west. For example, the task force suggests that two-thirds of our family farms should be eliminated, mainly in the name of efficiency or of making larger profits faster. This is not the type of path that we should follow, and it is one reason that our party has moved the motion it moved today, which underlines that the life style of western Canada and the rural communities is being threatened severely.

The task force also talks of there being less government involvement in the agricultural field, and I do not think this should be the case either. I think the farmers of western Canada and across the country must be helped in a more meaningful way if they are to survive. To do this we must make important decisions immediately. The longer we wait, the faster the owners of smaller and middle-sized farms will be driven off the land. If we simply allow the recommendations of the task force to be implemented and continue in an unplanned way, as we are at the moment, then I forecast that in 25 years there will only be a few large corporate farms in western Canada, with the towns and villages becoming giant service centres for those farms. I do not want this to happen. As I said before, there is a quality to rural life. Our farmers are making a tremendous contribution to Canada. Our cities are too over-populated and polluted now, so why this rush to push everyone into large cities?

The first important decision that we must make as a country, as a government and as a Parliament, is that we must save and stimulate the family farms in the rural communities. This would represent a reversal of government policy. During the last few years, I think the government has intentionally been trying to drive the smaller producers off the land and into the cities. We must decide to preserve and to stimulate family farms and the rural communities that go with these farms. Not only are family farms disappearing, but rural post offices are being closed down, station agents are pulling out, elevators are being shut down here and there across the prairies, and rail services are becoming less and less frequent. Our whole rural way of life is being severely challenged.

If we are to make any meaningful, long-term headway I suggest the government must think very soon about really significantly supporting agriculture in Canada, as agriculture in many other countries around the word is being supported. We must be prepared to give support to a guaranteed price for certain agricultural commodities, and a good example of this is hog prices. This morning my leader spoke about an invoice that a farmer had shown him. I was with him on that occasion and this invoice was given to us by a farmer near Prince Albert. It showed that he had received only $2.90 for a fully grown hog. This sort of thing should not be permitted and there is no reason why it should occur. There is simply no reason why the farmers must bear the brunt of price fluctuations that occur in the market. They should be given a guaranteed price so that in the spring they will know what sort of income they can expect in the fall. This sort of thing is being done in other industries and there is no reason why it cannot be done in agriculture.

We must also soon accept the fact, as all farm organizations have, that there should be a two-price system for wheat in Canada if we are to help those on small and medium-sized farms. This can be done with hardly any extra cost to the consumer. The price of bread does not depend on the price a farmer receives for a bushel of wheat. With a guaranteed price and a two-price system for wheat, many farmers would be in a much better position than they are under government policies today.

We must also do something about the high cost of production and farm machinery. In this regard, I would suggest that we implement some of the long-term recommendations made by the Barber commission regarding the cost of farm machinery. There is no reason why the price of farm machinery should be so high or why the profit margin of farm machinery corporations is so excessive, a point made by the report of the Barber commission. This does not have to be the case, and it would not be the case if we had a government that made sure farmers could buy machinery at lower prices.

If we are to do something about saving and stimulating the rural economy, the farmers must have the power to control their own destinies. After all, this is what democracy is all about. Democracy is not simply electing a government and allowing it to do everything it wants for four years, then having another referendum. Democracy brings all groups in our society into a position of real power and authority. I do not see why our farmers should not have some say about the price they receive for a bushel of wheat or any other commodity. After all, other sectors of the economy have this say. They are able to set prices and determine income received, either through collective bargaining or by setting their prices in a certain manner. But our farmers can only have such say if the government trusts them to make important decisions that affect their own lives.

Our farmers must also have a say about the price they pay for their supplies and be able to control the cost of their production. For example, why cannot farmers negotiate the price of farm machinery or have some say over what they pay for what is needed to produce a bushel of wheat? I suggest the government should start listening to the recommendations that farm organizations are making. If these were implemented, we would have a much stronger rural economy in Canada. I plead this point sincerely, not just on behalf of our farmers but for the entire country. If we have a viable agricultural economy we will have a much more viable and strong economy across the land. We would not have lay-offs in Brantford or in other eastern Ontario cities where farm machinery is manufactured. We would not have so many people across Canada looking for a purpose in life if there were jobs for them. One way of providing these jobs is by having a viable rural economy.

I suggest to the members of the government party that this is a very realistic motion and represents the very least we can do for western farmers. If it were adopted, we would not be giving them a handout but making an investment, an investment not just in the farming communities but in Canada as a nation. Indeed, far from being a handout, this money is something the farmers deserve. They receive less now per bushel of wheat than they did in 1946. I do not think there is any other sector of the Canadian economy that can make that claim. Yet this is a harsh reality, and the government party should be very ashamed of it. I shall be very interested to see how government members, especially those from western Canada, vote on this motion, since they know as well as I that western Canada is in very serious financial trouble. If some of the suggestions I have made go unheeded, the family farm and our rural life style as we know it will cease to exist before too many years have passed.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (St. Boniface): I want to assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I will not be speaking about farm machinery but will stick to the motion before us. I have to agree immediately that there is a problem regarding farmers' cash receipts. I am very concerned about some of the comments which have been made in the House this afternoon. Many times while I sat here as a backbencher I wondered what it would be like if I were on the other side trying to criticize the policies of our government which benefit the Canadian people. Never in my life would I ever paint a picture such as has been painted this afternoon by some members of the opposition, then go back to my constituents and try to convince them I was representing them properly in the House. All I heard this afternoon was doom and gloom. There was not a good thing that could be said in respect of any of the policies that have been implemented in the past to the benefit of farmers in western Canada. I am equally as concerned as hon. members who have spoken regarding western Canada, its unemployment and other problems. When a dreary picture is painted of everybody deserting the farms, as we have heard, I say to the hon. member he should go back west as often as some of us do to make sure what is going on in his area.

Another thing I am concernerd about in speaking to the motion is that it is very broad and not realistic. This is not a problem which has come up overnight, but has been in existence for some time. If the socialists had really wanted to speak for the people by moving this motion, they would have had their researchers make a thorough study in order that they would have been able to make some suggestions regarding rules, regulations and procedures for the distribution of this $100 million. The manner in which the motion was drafted just goes to prove that it was not intended to go any further than it suggests: Let us give the farmers and agricultural people in western Canada $100 million and this will solve all their problems. This will not solve all the problems.

Mr. Nystrom: We didn't say so.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): You had a chance to speak and you can get up again.

An hon. Member: You implied it.

Mr. Nystrom: I never said it.

Mr. Boulanger: Don't start any trouble now.

Mr. Horner: Nothing we can't finish.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I should like to suggest that in some of the legislation we have proposed, without naming any of the bills, there are rules and regulations which would help to solve some of the problems the farmers face. In this way, sudden drops in gross receipts could be avoided in the future. Some of this legislation would form part of the stabilization program, and if such a sudden drop occurred payments would be made.

The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) made reference to the net income of farmers and quoted DBS figures. He suggested they are only getting 56 per cent of what they used to receive. One of the things he has overlooked is the fact that over $200 million was transferred from the Treasury Board to the grain economy. This is more than has ever been paid out by any government in any one year before.

Mr. Boulanger: They know that, too.

Mr. Horner: Where did it go?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I also agree with the references hon. members made to grain sales, namely, that the latest sale is the biggest of any one year. Grain sales this year may prove to be the best yet, because this year is far from being ended. The largest grain sale ever made was the sale of 685 million bushels, and we could very well sell more. I am not a minister, but I suggest that we will exceed that this year. I am sure hon. members will have to agree with me before the year is over.

Mr. Horner: Don't stick your head out too far.

Mr. Boulanger: Don't be so socialistic, Jack.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I believe the government is really concerned with the problems of the farmers.

Mr. Nystrom: Tell that to the farmers.

Mr. Olson: We have.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I am not one of those who believe—

Mr. Horner: What do you believe?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I am not one of those who believe, like some hon. members over there, that this motion involves a real issue. I would even question their sincerity when they use delaying tactics, whether in the committee or otherwise. I should like to say that this government, through its present and proposed policies, will prove in the future to have been one of those most concerned with agriculture problems. Statistics will show that this government has provided more money than has ever been given out in any one year.

When some of the members of the opposition are discussing the needs of western Canada, why do they not at the same time suggest a way to bring in the moneys being spent and that the government contemplates spending? In that way I am sure the contributions could be increased and the farmers would get more than is suggested in the motion.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the leader of the NDP referred to himself as a "city feller" and explained that he did not wish to appear to be misrepresenting himself as an expert on farming. Of course I, too, have to confess that when it comes to the complexities of making a crop grow, I am strictly an amateur, although I should point out, with some degree of reality, I have had some modest success as a gardener. While the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) draws the line at calling himself a "city feller", I might be inclined to go a little bit further and describe myself as a bluenose by birth with a green thumb by practice.

Like the leader of the NDP, I feel it is imperative that all Canadians in all walks of life take an active and concerned interest in the affairs of Canadian agriculture today, not only from an economic point of view but from a human point of view as well. I have tried to follow what I think is good advice in this regard. I had the good fortune of growing up in a small town which was the centre of an agricultural community. I was well aware from the start of the contributions that farmers make to the general community life, the general provincial life and the general national life. Unfortunately, I have also been able to follow rather closely the many problems that have developed throughout the years, including problems of adjustment.

Suggested Payment to Western Farmers

In my original part of Canada, the Atlantic provinces, there were problems which one could follow through Quebec, Ontario and into the west. There has been a tendency on the part of this government to write off the farm. It might not be strictly accurate to quote the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) as asking: "Why should I sell your wheat", but this was pretty indicative of the attitude displayed in the west, and that cannot be denied.

I have had an opportunity to visit some farms in the west and I was very struck by the qualities of these people, their capacities and their problems. I had the opportunity of living on one farm for a while last September. I was very struck by three aspects. First, there was a very strong feeling on the part of the farmer for his farm. You could almost feel the attachment between that farmer and his farm. Secondly, I was impressed by the extent of the efforts which had been made by that farmer and other farmers in his area—and this is substantially a grain farming area—to diversify. I know many people in the east think that the western farmer simply grows wheat and expects it to be sold. It was an eye-opener to me to realize the extent of the diversification which is taking place, even on what are basically grain farms in the west. I had an opportunity to visit an elevator there. I was shown samples of crops which had been delivered up until a couple of years ago. I saw the great range of crops now being delivered to that elevator. I believe it is very important that people in the eastern part of Canada realize the extent to which the western farmer has attempted to diversify and the extent to which he has worked to try to solve his own problems.

The third thing which impressed me—and this obviously was an exceedingly well-run operation in respect of which great efforts were made toward diversification—was the size of the investment in the farm. The farmer showed me his accounts, as audited by the people in the minister's own Department of Agriculture. The size of the investment was striking. It was very clear that this man was living on the depreciation of his equipment. He was hanging on. I could not help but ask myself how long this situation could continue. I believe this was a typical example of an excellently run farm. I could not help but wonder how much more difficult it must be on smaller farms which are not in as fortunate a position. Here, we had a substantial operation, fierce determination, hard work, a love of the soil and a tremendous pride. I could not help but think how important the person who operates such a farm is to Canada.

I knew something about farmers in the east. I had not had such close contact with farmers in the west before. I realized how much these people mean to Canada, how terrible it would be if they went under and how important it is that they be helped, not in the sense of things being made easy—that is not what they expect—but in the sense of being assisted so that they are able to work out their problems. We have heard references to figures in this House today, and at other times, concerning the drop in net farm income in the west. This does not apply merely to the west, although the difficulty there is perhaps more striking than in the rest of the country. What we must bear in mind is that this drop in income does not affect only the farming economy. As the minister knows, it also affects the whole economy of the west and the rest of the country. It affects the suppliers, the merchants and the whole basis of our economy. It is important to bear in mind that we are really talking about a subtantial segment of the whole economy. The farmers have been having a bad time with increasing debts and with an inadequate program as well as a very inadequate attitude on the part of the government.

This is not the time to talk about the adequacy of the government's programs and the switch from a storage support program to an inadequate grain stabilization program. But it is the time to emphasize the importance of helping farmers and encouraging them to move ahead. This is the reason I wished to take part in this debate today and to say something as fiercely as I can. Clearly, the passing of this motion today would of course, in a sense, simply be a palliative. Certainly, it would not really solve anything. I do not pretend that the payment of $100 million to the farmers would in itself solve their problems, although I believe it would give them a real lift. I want to emphasize the need for a different and wholehearted approach rather than the hesitant approach to farming and agricultural policies this government has adopted. What is shocking and revolting to me is that after three years under the present government, years in which there have been no major natural catastrophes, we are being forced to consider a motion of this kind in this House.

This all points up the fact that this government in itself is a catastrophe from the point of view of the worker, the businessman, the hundreds of thousands of unemployed who are walking our streets and the farmer. With this government in the saddle there is no need of a natural disaster. It seems to carry its own disasters with it wherever it goes. That is why there is a need for this motion or one like it. After three years of rule, or rather misrule, this government has dragged down agriculture just as it has dragged down the economy as a whole. Three years ago promises were made of a just society and of prosperity ahead. Just like other people in Canada—the city dweller, the small businessman and all others who made the mistake of believing the slogans or who even if they did not believe them were forced to live with them in any event—the farmers have been losing their confidence in a government which has clearly lost its way. This is not confined to western farmers. This is a feeling which unites farmers from the east and from the west.

Certainly, there has not been unanimity among farmers. Certainly there are differences between regions and between producers of various kinds of farm produce. But one reason for these problems surely is the failure of this government, after three years, to come up with any sort of arrangement that is acceptable to the agriculturalists and the livestock producers of this country.

An hon. Member: What do you suggest?

Mr. Stanfield: They seem to be in trouble over there, Mr. Speaker. I do not know whether it is their consciences we are hearing from now. Instead, the solution of this government has been to divide, the better to rule; to divide the farmers among themselves and to divide them from the men and women who live in the cities and who curse the high cost of living, often unfairly blaming the producers of the foods they are buying. The guiding principles of the government in relation to agriculture are expressed time and time again in terms such as "viability" and "rationalization". It is bad enough that their jargon is based on economic pessimism. But it is infinitely worse that this kind of lingo totally ignores any humanistic approach to agriculture as a way of life.

Surely, the report of the government's task force on agriculture is one of the most pessimistic pieces of literature ever authored. It should have been entitled "grim expectations". I think the Minister of Agriculture might very well take a look to the south of him; he might take a look at the attitude of the United States government towards agriculture and its determination to sell. I think the effort on the part of this government to get out and sell has been very limited compared to the efforts of the United States. The record of the United States indicates that there is an opportunity for success if the government, when it has things to be sold, would only get at it.

We cannot let the government get away with this sort of thing any longer. We have to point out to the men and women who are suffering from economic recession in the cities that the farmer, too, is suffering. The point cannot be made too often. The policy of the government for the cities and towns has been, of course, to slow down the economy. In the country, on the other hand, it is rather difficult, even for this government, to slow down the growing season, so it has just decided to weed out the farmer instead.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) denies that the government intends to drive people off the farms, whether or not they are efficient. All I can say is that if he does not intend to do this, he had better look pretty quickly at the policies that he is pursuing because that is the effect that these policies are having. If that is not the intention of the present government, then what we have is just another example of sheer incompetence and blundering by this government.

Some hon. members: Hear hear.

Mr. Stanfield: This is a government that is going blindly along, crashing into pothole after pothole on a journey into nowhere, a case of pothole luck for people whom it is dragging along. I hope, as the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) said, there will be great grain sales this year. I hope that all sorts of new records are set and that this government and its agencies will really go out and sell. But this government tells us it is not driving people off the farms. Will it kindly tell us what it is trying to do? There is no evidence of a clear policy leading in any direction. Once again, in the field of agricultural production, we have a government that seems to be proceeding without a plan but trusting blindly to luck. This is not good enough, and that is why I endorse this resolution wholeheartedly to call attention to the need for this government to get going, to move ahead and to help the farmers who want nothing more than to be in the position to help themselves.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I see that the agricultural problem is not settled, as it is discussed even in Parliament on many occasions with a view to helping the government to the greatest extent possible in finding the proper solutions to promote the agricultural industry, not only in one area but all over the country.

I feel that the motion before the House shows that a really difficult situation exists particularly as regards the western farmers. However, the intention of the sponsor of this motion was to emphasize a situation which may be to the disadvantage of the eastern farmers. The mover has therefore proposed as a solution that the farmers be granted an amount of at least $100 million over and above the farm assistance programs.

In taking part in the debate on the motion now before the House, I should like, once again, to suggest to the government that its agricultural policy is not entirely fair to farmers, and that the farmers' net income is not high enough to enable them to get their fair share of the national product. I do not mean by this that the government is not doing anything, that the whole of his policy is to be condemned, but that not enough is done to give farmers, who devote their life to tilling the soil so as to feed mankind, a chance equal to that of citizens who work at other activities of the Canadian economy.

I should like, in this debate, to suggest some solutions which may perhaps seem ridiculous, because some will feel that the time has not come to put them into practice, but, frankly, I consider that means must be taken, other than the present ones, to solve the problem.

In the summer of 1970, after having visited several areas in the Prairie provinces, and after having talked with many farmers, I finally understood that several of them are in very difficult financial circumstances. They have a hard time finding help for the farm; this forces them to get more equipment, of the most modern and expensive type, which plays havoc with their budget and increases the cost of production.

During my trip, I noticed some modern equipment in farm yards, and while speaking with the farmers, found out that they had to use more modern means to do their work at a reasonable cost, because they found it next to impossible to get farm hands.

The farmer, who for that matter is not responsible for price increases, is nevertheless penalized for he must pay a higher interest on his loans. He must also pay more and more for the components of his production, without getting more for his products. Therefore the cost-price squeeze becomes tighter, which contributes to make life more and more difficult.

On the matter of interest, I am convinced that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) will announce in due course a reduction of interest rates. I would welcome such news. The opinions we voiced when interest rates were raised have finally been heeded. Interest rates must be lowered even further. This will automatically help farmers to operate at lower cost.

There are farm problems in all Canadian provinces. That is why the provincial and federal governments must co-operate fully so that Canadian agriculture may flourish as much as possible.

There is a grain surplus in the prairies and in order to reduce stocks on hand, the government promotes pork meat production, which results in competition between eastern and western farmers, in short by pitting them one against the other.

As for me, I cannot blame the western farmer who finds himself unable to sell the grain stored on his farm and raises hogs to use up his production. But when that production appears on the market, there is a clash between western breeders and farmers because the latter cannot produce on a competitive level. In fact eastern pork producers are not in position to match the low costs posted by western producers since even with current subsidies for feed grain transportation—which are not high enough—the eastern producer is producing with a disadvantage of $3 to $5 per hog. The purpose of the current government policy is therefore to pit the regions one against the other and this is unfortunate.

Let us see now what is going on in the field of eggs and broilers where, because of farm surpluses which in fact are not actual surpluses, underconsumption prevails. This situation is described in the reports of the Economic Council, so this is not something I dreamed up. The Council stated that many Canadians have inadequate income and are underfed. Let us call a spade a spade. Instead of mentioning surpluses we should speak of underconsumption. In fact a great many families are living in privation because they cannot buy what they actually need. I do not mean luxury but things essential to life.

We are currently witnessing a continued decrease in the purchasing power of low income families. In fact, in Quebec, it has been found that by virtue of the implementation and the interpretation of the new legislation which was enacted November 1 and which permits the state to help needy people, the level of these pensions is generally lower. I receive many letters from people who complain, most often rightly, that their pension has decreased. Moreover the unemployment rate keeps rising, which results in a reduction of the purchasing power of low income people.

I do not think that the pensioners and the unemployed have spent $30 per week to feed their families, as indicated in a report from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, which I should like to quote in part:

AVERAGE FOOD BUDGET OF $28.80

In 1969, each Canadian family spent $28.80 per week for food, as shown by an inquiry carried out by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

The largest amount ($31.70 per week) was spent in the urban centres of the province of Quebec, and the lowest ($21.40) in the rural areas of the Prairie provinces.

According to a per capita computation, the highest figure ($7.40 per week) for the rural sector was found in British Columbia, and the lowest ($6.03 per person) in the Atlantic provinces.

Such data prove that consumption is directly linked to economic conditions, in other words, to the take-home pay, and the family spends more or less accordingly. I now resume the quotation:

As for the cities, Ontario ranks first ($8.83 per person) whereas the Atlantic provinces come last on the list ($7.31 per week).

This is the first such survey made by DBS for the past twenty years—

So, this is not new.

Every dollar spent on food can be broken down as follows:

Red meat, poultry and fish, 28 cents; fruits and vegetables, 13 cents; cereals, bakery and confectionery products, 10 cents; dairy products (including butter), 13 cents; food oils and other fats, 2 cents; eggs, 3 cents; frozen foods, 1 cent; miscellaneous, 13 cents; foods prepared, bought and eaten outside home, including board, 17 cents.

This means that in order to bring consumption to the required level, we should increase income in a different way than it has been done to date. We shall have to use new methods if we are to meet this objective and put the Canadian economy back on its feet, so that all Canadians be treated in a fair way.

And to increase the farmer's income, the greater part of our domestic market would first have to be reclaimed in order to dispose of our farm products. This would become possible in part by providing for a direct increase in consumer purchasing power, and for a guaranteed minimum income at all times during the year. Such steps would help maintain a better economic balance and would result in a more regular consumption on Canadian products, whether they be foodstuffs or anything else.

This guaranteed minimum income should also be available to farmers. Then, whatever the prices, the rural people would also be assured of a guaranteed minimum income and instead of having to cope with major difficulties which get worse from year to year, they would at least hopefully look to a guaranteed minimum income.

For this guaranteed minimum income to be paid, we would have to do the opposite of what is now being done when social benefits are allowed to the various classes of our society. When people are taxed, they find themselves in a difficult situation. Indeed, two years ago when the government moved to boost old age pensions, we did expect a new levy to cover the costs involved. We were in a very embarrassing position. We were in favour of higher pensions for old people but, on the other hand, we did not want any new taxes or an increase in those already existing.

Lest we be accused of being against old people, we had to accept new taxes. That is why, in my view, we should find new formulas to finance the assistance programs based on the production potential of Canada.

If our country is unable to produce enough goods to meet the demand of Canadians, it would be useless to pass social measures providing for higher income if Canadians were unable to purchase the goods they hope to get in order to satisfy their needs.

In order to meet the costs of this guaranteed income, the government should resort to the Bank of Canada. There will again be people to say: The Creditistes are always talking about the Bank of Canada. Indeed they do and they are going to talk about it. The government talks about taxes and we put up with that! Let us do the same then when we honestly advocate reforms. We have to use the Bank of Canada. We use it to other ends. Why should we not use it to such noble ends as the solution of the farmers' problem, by giving them an opportunity of selling their products and by increasing the income of the consumers in a logic and fair proportion?

The Bank of Canada would then be authorized to issue new credits as national production, based on the work of Canadians, increases. Without production, there would be no new credits!

In any event, there would surely be an increase in purchasing power, and this recall of new credits would have to be done through taxation when production drops, in order to strike a balance as much as possible between production and consumption.

This has long been the objective of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and of economists: to try to strike a balance between production and consumption so that the Canadian economy will be sound and people, in all sectors, well-off.

It is very important to make a careful appraisal of the total cost and of the advantages of a new welfare and guaranteed income policy, even from the standpoint of agriculture, because it is in that area that the voice of those who are really in need is less often and less loudly heard.

The motion now before the House suggests that the government should pay out $100,000,000 in subsidies, without conditions, and in addition to other farm assistance programs. This may seem a large amount but if it is spread over the last ten years when farmers were having problems, it only represents $10,000,000 a year.

In concluding my remarks, I wish to point out to the government that Canada is one of those countries which are not very generous toward agriculture. The United States are doing much more for their farmers and the Common Market countries are getting more liberal with their money, in fact, $3 billion were voted by them for farm assistance.

I therefore urge the government to do more for farmers so that they will cease to be victims of an obsolete system and will get their just share of the national income.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) —Health—Inquiry as to appointment of national council; the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis)—Health—Alleged use of stalling tactics to prevent abortion application being dealt with; the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan)—Broadcasting—Policy on issuance of licences to agents or Crown in provinces.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—GOVERNMENT AGRICULTURAL POLICIES—IMMEDIATE PAYMENT OF $100 MILLION TO WESTERN FARMERS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lewis:

That this House condemns the agricultural policies of the government which have severely reduced the income of western farmers and threaten the future of Canada's entire rural community, and, in view of the financial crisis of western farmers, calls on the government to consider the advisability of an immediate payout to them of a minimum of $100,000,000 without conditions and in addition to other farm assistance programs.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure to take part in this debate on a subject very close and dear to my heart, life in the rural communities of Canada as we presently know it. The motion before the House condemns the agricultural policies of the government which have severely reduced the income of western farmers and calls on the government to consider the advisability of an immediate payout to them of $100 million.

This motion was moved by the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis). I am pleased to see the NDP supporting the concept of acreage payments. I do not want to be political, yet I can remember that when the government of the day in 1959 proposed acreage payments, the hon. member's group ridiculed the idea. The leader of that party said the amount to be paid was peanuts. Let me say quickly, Mr. Speaker, and one need not be a mathematician to arrive at this conclusion, that $40 million in 1959 about equals $100 million in 1970 if one takes into consideration the effects of inflation. In any event, it is pleasant to see the NDP supporting acreage payments, a concept well known to and firmly accepted by western Canada. It is regrettable that the government has tied its proposal regarding the $100 million payout to the provisions of Bill C-244. I do not believe that Bill C-244 mentions, nor did the minister in charge of the Wheat Board in the statement made on October 29 mention, that $100 million.

Mr. Olson: The hon. member should look at the bill.

Mr. Horner: You will see many other things in the bill. I see the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) mouthing some words.

Mr. Olson: Look at the bill. That is what I said.

Mr. Horner: He is not as good at mouthing as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I cannot understand what the minister is mouthing. It was a shame to see the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) rise and paint a picture of gloom and doom. He complained that the opposition was too severely criticizing farm legislation.

Mr. Olson: The hon. member's party was painting a picture of gloom and doom.

Mr. Horner: It is terrible that the government has to offer a bribe of $100 million in order to get a piece of legislation accepted. Surely, if the legislation has merit it should stand on its own feet.

May I deal with another aspect of this motion, an aspect very dear to my heart, that relating to our present day rural communities. I have before me a copy of the Manitoba Co-Operator of May 20, 1971. An article in it refers to the "Adjustment Program For Canada's Farms". It reads in part:

Details of the proposed agricultural adjustment or development policy of the federal government have been revealed in a paper prepared by the Canada Department of Agriculture. The paper said the federal cabinet has given approval in principle for the development and operation of a set of adjustment policies and programs of the general type outlined in the 20-page document.

The article goes on to outline these policies, and states that they come under three major headings:

—the first main group of policies will be designed to improve the ability of farm people to make adjustments required to increase the attainments of their personal goals.

Under the plan the individual farmer and his family would be provided with information and counselling services—

That is the first of these policies. The article continues:

A second sub-group of policies is designed to increase the mobility of land resources to facilitate outmigration of people from agriculture and the consolidation of farms within agriculture.

Some time ago the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, who is not present in the House, rose with all the indignation he could muster when we, in the opposition, charged the government with attempting to put farmers off the land. That was not the case at all, he said. If that is so, why has the program outlined in the 20-page document referred to been approved, and what is the meaning of "policies... designed to increase the mobility of land resources to facilitate outmigration of people from agriculture". If those words do not mean that the government wishes to do away with small family farms, I do not know what they mean. You know, the more I read the more frightened I become of this government and its bureaucratic manner of doing things.

At this time may I welcome the minister in charge of the Wheat Board who has come into the House.

Mr. Paproski: He will not have difficulty hearing you, Jack.

Mr. Horner: When you speak of the devil, he is bound to show up, as the old saying goes. That happened on this occasion.

Mr. Lang: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I should like it to be known that the hon. member can be heard in the West Block.

Mr. Horner: That is not a question of privilege, that is wasting time. I hope your Your Honour will not deduct the wasted time from the time available to me. I regret that while we were debating this subject this afternoon the Standing Committee on Agriculture was discussing another piece of legislation related to this question. That legislation does not deal with quite the same point the motion deals with, but there are similarities in the objectives of the motion and of the legislation, as the Minister of Agriculture acknowledged earlier today.

Mr. Olson: If that legislation had passed, the hon. member would not be speaking in the present debate.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand what the Minister of Agriculture is mouthing. He ought to take lessons from the Prime Minister. At least he is understood.

Mr. Olson: I said, pass that legislation.

Mr. Horner: I continue quoting:

A third sub-group would increase the availability and control of capital through various forms of credit and through various contractual arrangements used in the acquisition and control of land and other capital.

So power hungry is this government that it wants to control not only capital, but land as well. I hope the minister will not try to say that the government does not want to drive the owner of the family farm out of farming.

The article continues:

It was understood that planners in the agriculture department have been told that the adjustment in Canadian agriculture must take place within this generation, or within 15 years.

So, the small farmer is given 15 years to live, then he must move to the city and go on welfare. What will happen to all the small communities, to the small grocers and the curling rinks and to all the people who live in small communities? Fifteen years is all those people have been given. I will not read all the article, but this part reads:

One spokesman for the federal department said the "utopian condition" would be to reduce the farm population in Canada to 150,000 people by the final stage, but it was realized that this might not be achievable.

[Mr. Horner.]

Well, they are holding out a 10 per cent chance for the small farmer to survive; that's mighty big of them. I continue quoting the article:

The paper sees three major thrusts within Canadian agricultural policy.

I want hon. members to bear with me because this is important:

The first has to do with marketing, market development and trade.

We know all about that.

The second deals with the adjustment of individual farms and of the agricultural sector as a whole.

The third has to do with the stabilization of incomes . . .

The minister admitted, when we discussed this matter in committee this afternoon, that "stabilization of income" is a bad expression. They will have to change the wording in that 20-page document.

An hon. Member: It means, stabilization of poverty.

Mr. Horner: As has been pointed out, it means stabilization of poverty. The minister did not like that expression. He said it was a bad expression. How are they going to accomplish this? I continue quoting from the article:

• (5:10 p.m.)

—It concentrates on increasing the mobility of the land resource, enabling some farmers to increase the size of their farming operations and enabling others to get their assets out of farm real estate so they can take advantage of non-farm income, employment or retirement opportunities.

It involves a package of four programs as follows:

A listing service to provide the relevant information to prospective buyers and sellers.

Incentive grants to encourage prospective vendors to sell.

Special credit facilites to encourage prospective purchasers to buy.

Mr. Olson: Read that one over again.

Mr. Horner: I can read it over again. The present government has created a need for credit facilities because they have increased the interest rate from 5 per cent to 8 per cent on loans granted by the Farm Credit Corporation. They are not doing much for the prospective buyers of land, either. The article continues:

Authority (for the government) to enter the market directly to purchase and resell farms as the needs arise.

The bureaucrat is moving into the real estate business. I should not be warning the small farmers, I should be warning the real estate men across this country that they will have opposition. The government is going to move in. It has the ultimate power to buy and sell land. The government is going to collect it all because they are going to be marketing the farmers' products under this two-headed monster that is responsible for agricultural policy today. If one reads this complete article, he will realize where we are headed. I quote:

The second set of programs is comprised of:

A rural counselling service required to assist the farmer and his family make the basic decision—

A farm management service—
An agricultural adjustment information system—

I wonder whether this system will come under Information Canada which is going to set up stores across Canada. One can clearly see the bureaucratic drive going forward in the Department of Agriculture. One has to really study that. What are they attempting to gain by it?

We hear a great deal of discussion today about the standard of living. Does it really satisfy the people? We hear discussions about the quality of life. In my opinion, the quality of life is highest on the small farms across Canada. It should be the goal of politicians to strive to give people a high quality of life. They should encourage the small farmer to stay on the farm and not drive him into the city. I will tell you why I believe that.

In order to enjoy a high quality of life, one must reach some degree of contentment with himself and his community. He must have peace of mind and the knowledge that the food and shelter are his and will be there. He can acquire that on a small farm. In order to reach that contentment, he must have the satisfaction that he is making a meaningful contribution to his family, community and country. He can do this most readily in the agricultural rural community. Above all, in order to have contentment, he must have a sense of security and freedom. This can be most readily acquired in a rural community or on a small farm.

What is happening in other segments of our society? A fear is developing. A headline in this morning's Gazette refers to the inroads of the mafia. If we look at the crime that is developing in our major cities, we see that it is difficult for an individual to reach a degree of certainty. It is not good enough to merely lock the door. In nine out of 10 homes in rural communities across Canada, they do not bother to lock their doors at night. Ninety-nine out of 100 farms are not locked at night. They have a sense of security on the farm. The cities are reaching a point where they cannot offer the same high quality of life.

Other things happen to the environment when men are grouped too closely together. There is a high crime rate. Frustration builds up from a lack of contentment. It drives people to violence and crime. What about the concern for the pollution of our air, water and land? The concentration of the automobiles in major cities contributes something like 62 per cent to the air pollution. This is not the case in the rural communities which the government is deliberately attempting to destroy with a plan that is set out in a 20 page document which they are trying to sell to the provinces. This program is deliberately destroying the highest quality of life that Canadians can hope to enjoy. What about pollution of our land and water? When men are grouped together in close confinement, it is very difficult and costly to maintain a high quality of life.

Let us take a quick look at what we really want to do. Above all, we want to build our country. We also want to protect our past. If you take an extreme example, a farmer realizes that he has inherited his land from somebody who farmed it before him and he must protect it for somebody who will follow. He develops a love for the past and a deep sense of protection of the environment for those who will follow. This feeling is not acquired in the city. In the city, people acquire a sense of frustration which leads them to knock down huge buildings to get them out of the way so that the air will be pure and clear. It is different in the rural areas. The farmer has a deep desire to protect the land which he has acquired. He believes he has to protect it for his life, family, community and country. This is the type of country he wants. We want a person to enjoy a high quality of life. We want him to have a sense of freedom.

If we follow this adjustment program which the government has laid down in this 20 page document, will these people still have a sense of freedom? The government will help these people decide whether they go left, right or in the middle. I do not mean that in a political sense. There are three choices. The government will help an individual make a decision. As far as the government is concerned, that will be his first and last decision. He will have no freedom. He will have to march down the road to the end of time.

One must have a sense of freedom to judge his own actions and freedom from the effects of the actions of others. Where can this best be found but in the rural communities where there is freedom from the actions of one's neighbours. Above all, in rural life there is freedom to acquire a sense of co-operation. There is freedom to build a community and to co-operate with one's neighbours. There is a sense of building a better community and country. As politicians, we have to do much more than just espouse a high quality of life in the political speeches we make from time to time. It must be our goal and objective to give more and more people the opportunity to enjoy a high quality of life.

This afternoon I have tried to spell out what is encompassed within a high quality of life. Many of these objectives are quite attainable for a person who lives in an area that is not too densely populated. The more we group ourselves together, the more the quality of life diminishes. This government is deliberately attempting to destroy the quality of life that many Canadians in our rural community enjoy.

I wholeheartedly support this motion. I do not think that the payment of $100 million will reverse all the intentions of this government. I hope the government is continually bombarded with the theme that they alone are responsibe for this 20 page document which they are attempting to sell to agricultural ministers across Canada. This 20 page document will bring about the ruination of one of the best ways of life we have enjoyed to date.

• (5:20 p.m.)

For these reasons I support the motion. I hope the $100 million can be paid out quickly to help farmers make the necessary adjustments and judge the programs which are to be brought forward. If farmers are not worried financially about tomorrow's bread and butter, they might have time in which to assess fairly bills such as C-244 and C-176, and reject—

Suggested Payment to Western Farmers

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, on rising I should like to emphasize once again that nobody in this House has a better appreciation of the importance of farming and of farm life than the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), and I assure once again, not members opposite who either do not hear or do not choose to hear but the agriculture community generally that everything we do in this government is designed to improve the basic position of farmers generally.

We shall, of course, attempt to offer special help, to develop special measures such as adjustment programs for farmers who are in a situation different from one they would choose for themselves. We in this government have been working very hard on measures to improve the agricultural situation in the long term. We have done so with firm convictions about the underlying strength of our agricultural industry and in the firm belief that with farmers and the government working together we can find an improved place for agriculture in this country.

What have we found from members opposite in these circumstances? We have found the doom and gloom boys once again at work, going across this land trying to suggest evil motives on our part, putting the worst possible light on every situation.

Mr. Paproski: We wouldn't do that.

Mr. Lang: They have added to the grave difficulties which do exist by attempting to increase the frustration and the hopelessness of farmers across this land, and for that they must stand indicted now and in the future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: It will be up to us in the government and in this party, and up to many other people across this land to attempt to counteract this doom and gloom and depict what the real possibilities are in order that men may work their best, not in the spirit of hopelessness which hon. members opposite have tried to instil but in the spirit of facing difficulties realistically and trying to overcome them.

I am happy to note that in the prairie region there are many who are trying to lead farmers to understand that difficulties can be overcome. I think, for example, of the Palliser Wheat Growers' Association, I think of the rapeseed associations of Manitoba, Alberta, Saskatchewan and the Canadian association particularly, not to ignore some of the others. These organizations have in recent days again emphasized the importance of marketing and of what can be done with our productive acres in the western region if we go after world markets with vigorous determination and a conviction that we can as a result claim those markets and benefit from an ever-growing share of income for the prairie region. It is men like these whose help we shall need, not just in describing the programs we have put in place but to overcome the attempt by members opposite to spread gloom and despair.

[Mr. Horner.]

I think hon. members can do no worse in relation to agriculture than continue this attempt in which they have persisted for so long. I could point to the tremendous efforts which have been engaged in recently to bring some order and sense into the quota system, to remove programs which biased the system in favour of one grain or another. I could point to the large sums of money made available for diversion programs, the forage incentive program, and so on; programs which are directed to helping prairie agriculture and which are justified because this industry is in real difficulty and farmers have real cash problems in trying to make adjustments which they themselves know to be desirable.

Opposition spokesmen have drawn no attention to such things as federal efforts to place more cash into the hands of farmers by emphasizing wheat sales in our total world program. We have placed important emphasis on market development. The $10 million a year we have committed to market development is designed as seed money to produce much greater sums in the future. It is a tremendously positive attitude in respect of what our agricultural acres can do and where the future of agriculture may lie.

My colleague the Minister of Agriculture has recited how grain producers in many countries are now or have been in serious difficulty in recent years. Canadian producers have shared those difficulties to the full. In recognition of this, the government of this country has stood ready to expend large sums on behalf of the farmer. Members opposite talk about the net income position in the grain industry and how low it is. They do not pay attention to the $300 million which went from the treasury essentially to the grain producing area in 1970-71 in a totality of programs which in 1964-65 produced for the farmer about $92 million, a change of $200 million in additional money put out for the grain industry in recognition of its difficulties.

They do not recognize the other market developments and efforts which have been so important in the over-all planning, the extensive credit facilities which in the crop year ended July 31 made possible the export of some 150 million bushels of wheat and flour. That is about one-third of the total exports for that period and, significantly, it represents approximately the amount by which our exports of wheat this year may be above what some experts said would be the amount Canada would be able to sell in the world market. The government has at the moment outstanding liabilities of approximately $300 million in respect of loans in support of the sale of wheat where the federal government stands as guarantor. Hon. members choose to ignore this important contribution, again. On the market development side, the most positive side, looking to the development of better markets and improved cash position for the farmer by the sale of his own goods no matter what the treasury may do in relation to the farmer, the bulk of his income over a long period of time comes from the proceeds of sale of his own products and this is where the emphasis must be.

The results already this year have begun to be evident. We will have exports of grain which will be in record proportions. We have already exported as of May 26, 1971, compared with the year before, and my figures are for May 27—

Mr. Horner: Would the minister permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member knows he cannot ask a question of the minister unless the minister accepts it.

Mr. Lang: I will accept the question toward the end, if I may, Mr. Speaker, since my time is limited. Total exports of grain for the crop year to May 26 were 522.8 million bushels compared with 335 million bushels the year before. Let me give the individual figures to hon. members so they will be satisfied. In the case of wheat except Durum, exports were 285.3 million compared with 234.3 million bushels. In the case of Durum, exports were 33.7 million bushels compared with 14.9 million. In the case of oats, exports were 10.2 million bushels compared with 1.4 million bushels the previous year. In the case of barley exports were 135.6 million bushels compared with 49.3 million bushels. This 135.6 million bushels compares with the all-time previous record for an entire crop year of approximately 122 million bushels.

In the case of rye the figures are 6.3 million bushels compared with 3.1 million. In the case of flaxseed, exports were 15.3 million bushels compared with 14.8 million bushels. In the case of rapeseed—a great potential crop for the future; one on which to base a good deal of optimism—exports were 36.4 million bushels compared with 17.2 million bushels for the previous crop year. These are figures that are beginning to result in record movement of grain out of the prairie region and which will shortly do a significant amount of good in that region.

An hon. Member: Tell that to the farmers.

Mr. Lang: Hon. members say I should tell it to the farmers. Let me tell them other people in this country recognize that the $300 million which was paid out by the treasury is a significant amount of money, even if hon. members opposite do not appreciate it.

In the serious difficulties encountered in 1968-69 and 1969-70 the cash advance payments program was available and provided interest-free money to farmers to tide them over their difficulties. As a result, by the end of the last crop year a total of 122,110 cash advances had been taken for the year, for a total of $272,777,316. I should like to remind hon. members of the importance of this program to the extent that interest-free money is provided to farmers to tide them over the limited cash flow they experienced in the area of grain shipments.

I should like to illustrate how things are different this year. As of June 4, which will be approximately the end of the period for this year for cash advances, 51,353 cash advances have been taken. This compares with the previous year when 122,110 farmers took cash advances. The 51,353 taken this year represent a total of $91,105,330.

Mr. Horner: But how many are outstanding?

Mr. Lang: In the same period, the amount of cash advances outstanding has gone down very significantly. Increased deliveries of grain have to a very large extent reduced this indebtedness, or the amount of advances on future sales of grain, and the farmers are in a far better position in terms of grain sold than they were before. Advances made to farmers by the end of this crop year may be down by over $80 million compared with the previous year. As a result of further sales such as the recent one totalling $130 million to the U.S.S.R., and with the kind of aggressive marketing we have on the part of the Wheat Board, our farmers can begin to look ahead.

Mr. Lewis: That was an old sale, not a new one.

Mr. Lang: Our farmers have cause to be optimistic about a better future.

Mr. Horner: That is so far from the fact that it is not recognizable.

Mr. Lang: Hon. members opposite do not like to be reminded of this because they are so happy listening to their own cries of doom and gloom. The present motion before the House calls for an immediate payment of $100 million. This is exactly what would happen, of course, if hon. members opposite would co-operate and pass some of the legislation that is before the House.

I suggested to the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) when he spoke that the motives of the NDP in moving this motion were largely political, having regard to their embarrassment at being accused in the election campaign in Saskatchewan, and quite rightly so, of obstructing the payment of this $100 million. A member of the NDP from this House said in Saskatchewan that he would ensure that this money would not be paid out to the farmers until the election was over. I do not have any similar analysis for such people as the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), but he needs no motive for obstruction in this House; he obstructs automatically.

I suggest, and it may help hon. members opposite to be more co-operative and attempt to assist the parliamentary process by bringing the question to a vote, that the New Democratic Party has probably accomplished its objective because it may be impossible to make this payment now before June 23. Although they may be happy, they will be held responsible for this delay in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Lewis: Come on, cut it out.

Mr. Horner: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) is rising on a point of order.

Suggested Payment to Western Farmers

Mr. Horner: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I am not concerned about the NDP; my question of privilege is that the minister directly accused me of obstructing any and all things in the House of Commons, particularly Bill C-244. Let me point out to him that the proposals in this bill were first announced on October 29 and we never saw them again until a month ago. So it is the minister's own fault that he has not had the bill passed before June 23.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair is of the opinion that the hon. member for Crowfoot has a question for debate, not a question of privilege.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, since the hon. member for Crowfoot has raised such an interesting point I should like to remind him that we followed a practice that I think should be applauded by the producers. That is to say, when we made this proposal we enunciated it in late October, discussed it with the producers and producer organizations for a number of months. This was the basic framework of what we intended and wanted to do for the producers of the region and these proposals were known to the House, even if some hon. members opposite did not see them. Then in March we announced the result of our discussions and the improvements and changes that were made to the program. Following that, the legislation was brought forward.

If we had brought the legislation forward earlier, the hon. member for Crowfoot would have said we did not seriously mean to discuss it. He cannot have it both ways. I think he has very little ground for saying that we are trying to do nothing for the farmers except on the basis of his own understanding that bit by bit and gradually the farmers on the Prairies are beginning to understand that we are doing our very best and working very hard in an attempt to meet their situation now and for the future.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the minister in charge of the Wheat Board has complained that members of the opposition have been creating hopelessness among the farmers of western Canada. I point out to him that the hopelessness which hangs like a pall over western agriculture is due to the policies and the fumbling and bungling of the minister himself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas: The fact that this minister last year could only offer the farmers of Western Canada the Lift program to take their land out of production was a counsel of despair and an announcement to the farmers of western Canada that the government had no policy to dispose of their produce and no policy to maintain their income. The fact that this government pursued policies that resulted in the farm income on the three prairie provinces dropping last year by $296 million over the previous year and $481 million over 1968 is what has caused the hopelessness.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel).]

The fact that the minister had to tie his $100 million hand-out to a bill which is designed to put the farmers of western Canada in an economic straightjacket, so they will have to live with substandard prices for the rest of their lives, is what has caused the hopelessness. If there is hopelessness today on the Prairies, this government must accept the responsibility. Most of all, that hopelessness is caused by the attitude of the government itself.

I have in my hand a copy of the document to which the hon. member for Crowfood (Mr. Horner) referred, the Agricultural Adjustment or Development policy for Canadian agriculture. Unless anyone should not think it is official, it says on page 7 that "the federal cabinet has given approval in principle for the development and operation of set adjustment policies and programs of the general type outlined below," and it sets out in detail a program in relation to a farm adjustment and mobilization resources plan. This is a chart for the dissolution of the family farm in western Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It being 5.45 o'clock p.m., pursuant to order made earlier this day it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and forthwith put every question necessary to dispose of the motion now before the House. The question is on the motion of Mr. Lewis, seconded by Mr. Knowles, Winnipeg North Centre.

All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Call in the members.

At 6.05 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT, OBJECTS, POWERS, CAPITALIZATION, ETC.

The House resumed, from Monday, June 7, consideration of Bill C-219, to establish the Canada Development Corporation, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will now proceed to the recorded divisions, pursuant to Standing Order 75 (11), in respect of motions to amend Bill C-219, an act to establish the Canada Development Corporation.

The question is on motion No. 1 standing in the name of the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman). Call in the members.

The House divided on motion No. 1 (Mr. Saltsman) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost. Hon. members will be pleased to note that we have now disposed of all motions at the report stage.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-219, to establish the Canada Development Corporation, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Benson moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: This speech is going to be good when I get going.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Now that all the preliminaries are over, Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this bill to outline why the government wishes to establish and how it intends to operate the Canada Development Corporation. I have slowly and reluctantly come to the conclusion that this corporation will be the most costly fiasco which ever has been jammed down the throat of the Canadian people.

I am very disappointed this is the case because originally, before the government actually presented its bill, I had become convinced that this would offer an excellent potential for enabling Canadians to own and control more of their development. I believed that there were excellent possibilities presented for persuading Canadians, who do not now invest their savings in the stock market because they are unfamiliar with how it operates and therefore unwilling to trust their savings to it, to switch part of their savings to investment in the Canada Development Corporation.

However, because of the outline by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) concerning how the government intends the Canada Development Corporation should operate, I have reluctantly become convinced that the CDC will simply never get off the ground. I have come to this conclusion because of the method outlined by the Minister of Finance for raising the capital with which the corporation will operate. As we know, the government plan is that the corporation will raise 90 per cent of its capital—that is, $1,080 million—by selling shares to the public. In order for this to be possible it is obvious that the public must be willing to buy these shares. If the public is to buy these shares, the people must be convinced that investing in the CDC is a more desirable way for them to invest their savings than the method they are now using.

Let us examine the potential areas from which this capital can be raised. Most of the savings in this country are invested in two broad fields. The first is the stock and bond market, either through individual issues or through mutual funds. The second is the broad field of life insurance, savings accounts and Canada Savings bonds. Those who have been investing in the stock and bond market, either in individual issues or through mutual funds, have a wide variety of issues from which to choose. They are able to assess the possibilities for future growth and future dividends from the reports which companies make available periodically for the information of the public.

These people are satisfied with the method they are now employing for investing their savings and believe they are playing their part in helping this country finance its development. It is very unlikely that any of these people will be inclined to switch their savings from this type of investment to investment in CDC shares. The group which offers the real potential for switching its savings from the present form of investment to investment in the CDC is the second category, which includes those who have been investing their savings in life insurance, savings accounts and Canada savings bonds.

The combined savings of this group approaches $1½ billion a year. I am convinced this group could be persuaded to switch part of its savings to investment in the CDC if an appeal were made to the people in it to help their country own and control more of its development. I believe something in the order of half a billion dollars a year could be switched from this group. In order for these people to be persuaded to switch part of their present investment to investment in the Canada Development Corporation they must be guaranteed the same kind of security and return on investment they are now receiving, which is very real and very attractive to them. They will not switch until they are assured of receiving at least the same security and the same return on investment.

The Minister of Finance recently announced that no such guarantee either of security or return on investment will be made by the government. I have discussed this matter at great length with people in the investment community. These are the people through whom sales of Canada Development Corporation shares would have to be made. They are unanimous in their opinion that unless the government gives such a guarantee to the people there will be no investment by the public in CDC shares.

Why are they so sure this would be the case? They will tell you the people are aware of what happens to business operations which are controlled by the government. They know very well what happened to the 14 companies that were operated by the late CCF government in Saskatchewan in the forties. We all remember the very interesting description given a few years ago by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) when he rose in this House and told us in chapter and verse what happened to each of the 14 companies operated by the CCF government at that time. He outlined how long each company lasted under the government's direction and what the loss was to the people of Saskatchewan in each case.

Mr. Speaker, a former leader of the government of Saskatchewan, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), was in the House at the time and all he could do was smile and sink a little lower in his seat as the right hon. member for Prince Albert continued to describe the fiasco for which the hon. member's government was responsible.

The people of Canada are also familiar with the operation of Quebec's General Development Corporation which came into existence in the mid-1960s. This General Development Corporation is exactly the same kind of corporation the government intends the CDC to be. It was brought into being as a means of enabling the people of Quebec to participate in the development of industry of their province. In the same way, this government claims the CDC will enable the people of Canada to participate in the development of the Canadian economy.

The people of the business community in particular, the people of Quebec in particular and the people of Canada generally are aware that the shares of the Quebec General Development Corporation were placed on the market at $10 each. That was the highest point those shares ever hit. They have been going down gradually and steadily ever since and today they are offered to the public at $3.50 a share, with no takers. The reason for the sad experience of that corporation is the same as the reason for the sad experience of government-operated business enterprises in Saskatchewan. That reason is two-fold. The first is government interference, and the second is lack of managerial ability.

• (9:10 p.m.)

Without a government guarantee of security of investment and a return on investment, the people of Canada will simply not participate in the financial operation of the Canada Development Corporation, and anybody who thinks they will is completely out of touch with the thinking of the business community and, in particular, of the investment community on whom the government would have to rely 100 per cent to market these shares to the Canadian people.

People in the investment community will tell you that they simply cannot sell CDC shares unless there is a guarantee of security and return on investment. The government think that by appealing to the nationalism of the Canadian people, particularly the group that has savings and has never invested in anything in the nature of development, and by appealing their patriotism, they will achieve their goal. People in the investment community will tell you that without them there would simply be no investment by the public.

It shows how far out of touch with the business community the Minister of Finance and this government are if they think that their pipe dream of selling unsecured CDC shares to the public could be made a reality. It simply could not. All you have to do is ask any person in the investment community if this is not so and he will tell you that of course it is. When you mention CDC shares to the investment community, people simply laugh and the few that do not laugh, cry because it has become a very sad and a very sick joke among them. It is simply too ridiculous for words.

Because of these facts, because of the interference by the government if this corporation becomes a reality, because they know that the public will not participate in the financing of the corporation, more than 20 top businessmen in this country who have been approached to take on the job of president of the CDC, at a salary which I am told is about $75,000 a year, have turned down the proposition. They have turned it down cold because they know that this corporation will be a failure and top-flight businessmen do not like to be associated with failures.

That is why, also, the very large number of businessmen who have been approached to take on the job of general manager have turned it down. Businessmen do not like to be associated with failures and that is the reason this government will not be able to get a first-class businessman, a second-class or even a third-class businessman to take on the direction of the corporation. It will have to rely upon a political hack who has not been able to make a go of his own business and who would like to receive that large salary even for the few years that the corporation might be allowed to operate before it folds up like a $2 suitcase.

[Mr. Hees.]

Finally, let us look at the use to which the corporation would put the $200 million of the taxpayers' money which the government intends to invest in the operations of the CDC. To get the answer let us ask ourselves first of all why, when the Canada Development Corporation lay dormant and unwanted for eight long years from the time it was first introduced by the then Minister of Finance, Hon. Walter Gordon, late last fall when the CDC legislation rated No. 74 on the government's list of legislative priorities suddenly it was elevated to No. 1. The bill was rushed into the House and now it is being put through in great haste.

The simple answer is that there is no economic reason for it; in fact, every economic reason is against it. It is a 100 per cent political reason. The reason is that the organizers of the Liberal Party suddenly saw in this proposal a first-class election gimmick. This corporation will be paraded on every Liberal platform in the country as a means by which anything that the people in the riding wish to take place in a business way will be promoted and accomplished. The CDC will be promised on every Liberal platform as the means by which companies which appear likely to fall into foreign hands will be taken over. It will be put forward as the means by which any company which is faltering and looks as though it is going under due to bad management or obsolescence of plant or machinery will be taken over.

People are not interested in a product which is obsolescent. The people in the area will be assured that the CDC will take over these companies, will put them on their feet and will put in all the money needed to keep them operating. Then if the government should have the good luck—which would be bad luck for the rest of the country—to be re-elected, which we hope to heaven it never will—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: —you can count on the IOUs being presented to the government, and the parade to Ottawa of people from the ridings requiring that the government make good its promises will be really something to see. The Minister of Finance will try to withstand the storm, he will try to put them off, but there will be tremendous political pressure brought to bear which will make it impossible to withstand most of the pressure, and ridings that could be lost the next time around will be looked after very well indeed. If this legislation goes through and the CDC becomes a reality, we will see this corporation operating the greatest number of flops that you have ever seen. They will be operating companies that would make the 14 companies which failed in Saskatchewan in the 1940s look like very profitable and successful operations.

The trouble with the Minister of Finance, the government and its socialistic advisers is that they do not realize that for a company to be a practical success it must be able to produce a product at a price and of a design and quality which appeals to the buying public of this country as well as to the export market, because most Canadian companies rely upon making sales in the export market. To do that a company must be relatively close to the source of raw materials. It must have cheap power, it must have the proper technology and it must have a market that wants its product and is willing to pay for it at the price that is asked and with the quality and design that is offered.

Most of the socialistic planners believe that all one has to do is put up the bricks and mortar, get the machines in and name a manager and somehow or other the company will be a success. That is the reason government-controlled business operations always fail. The public of Canada knows this of publicly-owned corporations of this kind and that is why it will not touch the CDC's shares unless security and return on investment is guaranteed: they will not touch them with a ten-foot pole.

• (9:20 p.m.)

So, Mr. Speaker, we will have on our hands a corporation that I am convinced will be the greatest flop since the Edsel. The Edsel is coming down the assembly line at the present time, and in the near future when the government's majority jams it through the House and makes it a reality, as it will, it will be operating on a gas tank that is only 10 per cent full. There are no drivers willing to direct the operations of the corporation because no first-class or second-class businessmen are willing to take it on. They are making that very clear. More than 20 top businessmen have been approached and every one has turned it down cold. No one will touch it because they do not want to be associated with a colossal failure.

Like its predecessor in this country and other countries, after costing the taxpayers many millions of dollars this corporation will be withdrawn. This has been the case in many instances. That, Mr. Speaker, is why I and members of the official opposition intend to vote against this measure on third reading.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, in some of the euphoric moments when the New Democratic Party looks at the bankruptcy of the Liberal party and of the Conservative party, we say to ourselves, "Surely the Canadian people will recognize this and elect us to office." The question then arises of the kind of CDC we would institute and who might be the manager of such a corporation. As you know, Mr. Speaker, we have in our party the Waffle group and occasionally I hear one of them suggest the name of the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees). They say, "George Hees would be a good manager for the CDC." After the speech the hon. member made tonight I am afraid his name might have to be scratched.

Some of the comments of the hon. member rather surprised me. He sees the CDC as having some significance or force in the private market. I do not see it in that light at all. I am rather disappointed in some of the statements made by the hon. member in another sense. When he was Minister of Transport and Minister of Trade and Commerce when his party formed the government, he was said to be a very imaginative and aggressive minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: I don't want to miss this, Max.

Mr. Saltsman: He used his office as minister for the good of the people of Canada and ran his department in an efficient manner. Surely that must put the lie to some of the statements he made this evening to the effect that a government corporation cannot be run efficiently. We can expect this kind of talk from Liberals who do not have faith in corporations or government and are cynical about what can be done in the public sector, but I had hoped for something more from a former Minister of Trade and Commerce.

The Canada Development Corporation bill before us is disappointing in the extreme. It is unimaginative and does not meet the challenge of the crisis in Canadian development. And we are in a crisis. We are facing a situation where we cannot find employment for our people. We have the highest level of unemployment in the western world and have not been able to meet this problem despite the fact that we have imported so much foreign capital that the country has virtually been taken over.

The hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans) has been criss-crossing Canada pointing out the serious consequences of the policies pursued by the government. He fees that far too much money from outside Canada is going to natural resource industries which do not provide benefits to Canada, do not provide us with tax revenues and employment opportunities and will in the long run destroy the ability of this country to survive.

The public senses that this is a phony bill. There has been almost no interest in it in representations before the committee despite the wide circulation of invitations to groups to appear before the House of Commons committee to present their points of view. The Canada Development Corporation has been met with a great big yawn. That is the kind of reception the government's CDC bill deserves. It is a nothing.

This bill is based on the false and unworkable premise, Mr. Speaker, that it must be a profit-oriented corporation and that is the only way to handle it. We have many profit-making corporations in Canada, so why are we in the sad state in which we find ourselves? Why is our economy virtually wrecked by foreign ownership? It is not because of the absence of a profit motive. We find ourselves in this state today because we have concentrated exclusively on the short-term profit motive; there is such thing as long-term profit. We have concentrated on giving away our resources and we have invited people to come in and virtually do as they please with our economy.

It will take more than this corporation to meet the chalenge of our times, Mr. Speaker. The bill is immoral in the sense that it attempts to take what is now the common property of all Canadians and convert it to the ownership of a few people. Corporations like Polymer have consistently returned a profit to the Canadian taxpayer as have Northern Transportation and Eldorado. It is wrong to take them away from the Canadian people to whom they now belong and turn them over to a relatively small group which has money to invest.

After all, Mr. Speaker, only about 7 per cent of the Canadian population invests in equities at the moment. Even if more invest in the future, we will still be left with probably no more than 10 per cent and certainly no more than 15 per cent. This means that the minority of Canadians will be taking over the assets of the majority, and there seems to be no reason for this. If there is any justification at all for the CDC as the government sees it, it should stand on its own without having to be sweetened by taking public property and throwing it into the pot.

When we look at this bill we ask ourselves why the government has brought in such an emasculated, anaemic and meaningless piece of legislation and we come to a number of conclusions. The first is that they have been desperately trying to get rid of Crown corporations. The success of Crown corporations like Polymer apparently has been an embarrassment to them. We think they failed to get rid of them in the past because of public pressure, but think they can do it now by establishing the CDC and throwing Crown corporations into that combination.

Another reason is the paucity of equities for Canadian investors. I pointed out in a previous speech that a study conducted at York University indicated that there was a great deal of money in Canada looking for equity investment and it just was not available. Instead of taking action that would have been more appropriate under circumstances of this kind, as suggested by a former Minister of Finance, and insisting that branch plants of international corporations make their shares available in the Canadian market—after all, there is a shortage of equities in this country because of the high degree of foreign ownership of our corporations—the government chose to take the common property of Canadians and say, "You can now invest in these companies." That does not change the problem of foreign ownership. Actually, it makes the situation worse because we shall now take wholly-owned Canadian corporations and put them into a corporation which we are not sure will remain wholly under Canadian control.

• (9:30 p.m.)

The third reason is, I think, an entirely political one. In this I agree with what was said by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings. The government has political reasons for introducing this bill. It has promised to introduce the Canada Development Corporation for eight years. The failure to introduce it became embarrassing, so much so that the government felt it had to do something. This bill is that something. The CDC will not perform any real function. It does not seem to serve any significant purpose. However, since it has been promised in many throne speeches the government has introduced it. They will go into the next election and say, "You wanted the CDC. There it is."

I am afraid that the Liberal party is in for a rude awakening. The public of Canada is far more sophisticated than that party thinks. The public will see through this kind of fraudulent approach. It will see that the corporation is a nothing, that it is not what it purports to be. What the Liberal party may think is a political asset for them may turn out to be the greatest liability they have been burdened with for a long time.

The government's concept of CDC almost totally ignores the much wider problems facing Canada. The terms of reference of the corporation are not designed to help regional development; on the contrary, they will work against regional development because the idea behind the corporation is that it shall be profit-oriented. It is to be set up in anticipation of profits, as has been said.

The clause stipulating that the corporation cannot invest in businesses with capitalization of less than $1 million will work against the possibility of its becoming involved in regional development. The terms of reference of the corporation are the same as those governing companies in the private sector, and the private sector has failed miserably to meet the challenge of providing opportunities for Canadians wherever they may live in this country. The CDC will do nothing to come to grips with these disadvantages.

Instead of pouring millions and millions of dollars into regional development programs in the fond hope that private investment will somehow find its way to the underdeveloped parts of Canada and help in some undefined way, it would have been better if the money had been put into a development corporation which could have been established to bring about positive development. Such a corporation could have introduced a plan, in co-operation with the provinces, for the economic development of the underdeveloped parts of Canada. In that way we could bring proper development to those parts of the country which need industry and development.

The returns on the millions and millions of dollars being poured into the government's regional program are uncertain. On the other hand, by putting this money into a true development corporation we could do a great deal more and we could do it with the certainty that the money would be well spent and the results would be beneficial for areas which we are seeking to help. The government's regional development program is under an enormous cloud. It has become apparent that despite the department's vast expenditures almost no good has been done in the areas it has tried to help. A much better way of helping must be found if we are to solve the problem of regional development.

The CDC, as the government sees it, is to be entirely a short-term proposition. It is to take short-term profits but is not to be concerned with the long-term interests of the country. There is a long-term interest, if I may use that phrase, Mr. Speaker, which needs to be met in this country. For instance, one of our great problems is that we need to rationalize our industry. Foreign investors have foisted an inefficient industrial structure on this country. I want to make it clear that this has not happened merely because investors have been foreign.

Some foreign investment can be advantageous. Most foreign investment in this country, particularly in the manufacturing sector, has been of a kind to benefit the international corporation which is investing. Much of it has not benefited us because foreign corporations did not set up industries which were indigenous to Canada and would have made sense in the Canadian economy. Actually, they set up a Dinky toy representation in this country of the American economy. They foisted on this country a miniature replica of the industrial pattern of the United States. Although that pattern may make sense in the United States, it does not make sense in this country. We may have modern plants; however, because they are not specialized and because many of them duplicate the activities of competitors, much of their production in Canada has proved uneconomical.

I think everyone acknowledges that there is need for an intelligent rationalization of our industry. Although the terms of reference of CDC talk about rationalization, they hamstring the corporation with the basest of motives and the narrowest of objectives. Therefore, the kind of rationalization which ought to take place will not take place. That ought to be a prime function of a development corporation of any kind.

Another of our social and economic objectives has to do with the fair distribution of wealth in this country. However, instead of more widely distributing the ownership and the wealth of Canada we are narrowing that ownership, under this bill, to shareholders of CDC only. As I said earlier, we are taking corporations like Polymer which belong to all Canadians and putting them into the CDC. Thus, we are taking away ownership opportunities for Canadians and concentrating wealth in the hands of those who can invest in the CDC. Surely this is a retrograde step. We ought to be moving in the other direction and ensuring much wider ownership of our resources through the public sector so that all our people could participate in the investment, instead of narrowing the field by taking companies out of the public sector and putting them into the private sector.

If it is not intended that CDC shall come to grips with the question of foreign ownership and the government has carefully reminded us that it does not intend the corporation to do that, then what is the point of it? If it is not to come to grips with foreign ownership, why do we need it? The government says that other government policies are to tackle that problem. We have not seen any evidence of those other policies and in light of experience such statements must be treated with a great deal of suspicion. If there are such other policies, we had the right to be made aware of them before the CDC legislation was brought down, and the terms of reference for setting up CDC ought to have meshed with the aims of such policies instead of being in their present form. We do not know what those policies will be. We do not know what tax policies will be introduced. We do not know what the government's foreign ownership policies will be. We do not know what the policies relating to competition will be.

Surely the kind of development corporation required would depend to a great extent on government policies. It has been our view that CDC should be an instrument of government policy. Instead, CDC as presented to the House is to operate in the private sector. It is to act on its own, to follow the profit motive, and so on. There will be no guarantee that CDC will consider the public interest to a greater extent than any other corporation in the private sector.

The concept of a Canadian development corporation is particularly important to the New Democratic Party. After all, long before the government talked about this corporation our founding convention had dealt with the idea of such a development corporation. We felt it most important that there be such a corporation in Canada. It is for that reason our disappointment is so keen respecting what we have been presented with in this bill. It is also for that reason that we moved a large number of amendments, as it turned out in a vain attempt to change the bill in a way that would make it more acceptable and better adapted to serve the interests of the Canadian people. Every one of those amendments was turned down. It leaves us no choice but to vote against what my leader has called this emasculated version of a Canada development corporation. This is not a Canada development corporation in the sense that we wanted it to be. It is a name, and only a name. For that reason we cannot support the measure.

When we asked the government why the bill was presented in this form instead of a more flexible form that would be more responsive to Parliament and the Canadian people, we were told it was just a philosophical difference between our party and their party and that we see things differently. They did not even have the courtesy to make their arguments to show philosophically why their point of view was valid. They never even attempted to defend it; they simply dismissed our point of view as an ideological difference.

A study of other development corporations was put before the members of the committee. The study showed that no development corporation in any country had been set up in the form of the Canada Development Corporation. In other words, the government has not learned anything from what has gone on in the rest of the world or from their examination of the Canadian economy. There is hardly a country in the world that has not at one time or another actively intervened in its economy. This is even true of the United States which has the greatest hang-ups about government intervention in the economy. In each case they have intervened for different reasons. In Canada there is a most compelling reason why the government must play a more active role in the economy. The reason is that private entrepreneurship has failed the nation. We are in our present state because private entrepreneurs have failed us. That failure must be compensated by public enterprise. It is for this reason that we feel the Canada Development Corporation is of such importance.

It is always sad to participate in a committee hearing when the captains of Canadian industry turn out to be the strongest supporters for continuing foreign ownership. People come before the committee, the representatives of the public, and say they do not want laws against foreign ownership. Their reasons are quite simple and clear. Laws of that type would restrict the opportunities to sell to a wider group of people and might restrict their profits. It is this mentality, coupled with the mentality of continentalist thinking and a government that has given us the highest degree of foreign ownership in Canada, that has made Canadians enormously insecure about their future and their ability to survive this kind of intrusion.

As I listened to the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings I could not help wondering what the founder and first leader of his party would have thought of his speech. After all, Canada was built by public enterprise. The Conservative party more than any other party should be aware of this. This country was opened up by public, not private, enterprise. The Prairies were opened up by building the railroads. They were built at enormous expense to the public and tremendous involvement on the part of the government. Ontario Hydro was established by a Conservative government because it felt that businessmen could not function and would not be able to produce efficiently unless there were cheap power. This was not established by Socialists, although perhaps the reasons were socialistic. It was established because businessmen could not develop the industrial potential of Ontario unless cheap power were available. There was no reluctance at that time to bring about this kind of intrusion in the private sector.

Education, which is the infrastructure and backbone of any industrialized nation, is in the public sector. Even our culture is being preserved by the CBC and various grants and assistance to the arts in Canada. If it had not been done in the public sector it would not have been done at all. We would not have anything in Canada but American radio, television, newspapers and books. Banking started out as a private corporation in which all the banks participated after a great debate. After trying to operate in this way for a short time, in 1932, I think it was, it eventually became part of the operation of government. Today we can be proud of the Bank of Canada that we have. We are not proud of all its recent decisions, but on the whole the Bank of Canada is a wise institution. It is under public operation.

Those things in which Canada can take the greatest pride are under public operation, such as health, hospitals and the Canada Pension Plan. I have spoken to Americans who have visited Canada and seen what we have done in these areas. They envy the progressiveness of our public corporations and what they accomplish. I see that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) is in the chamber. We are sometimes very unhappy about our railroad system in Canada. There is a great deal that is wrong with the policies of our railroads. However, when you compare the railroads in Canada with those in a country such as the United States, our railroads stand out in startling contrast, particularly when we recognize the tremendous difficulty of transportation in this country.

Our air transport system is infinitely superior. The Americans are talking about doing some of the things which we did a long time ago. Instead of spinning off another company and injecting CP Air, it would have been much better to have made this the prerogative of Air Canada, a Crown corporation. This does not only apply to Canada. In Great Britain, Chamberlain and Birmingham were not Socialists, yet many civil matters in the public sector had to be handled in a public manner. They were not reluctant to do so. Churchill, who would not like to have been called a Socialist, was responsible for bringing the railroads under public ownership. The telegraph operations came under public ownership at the time of Gladstone. I could go on. In the United States, people like Lincoln Steffens pointed out that you could not get rid of corruption in the public utilities until they came under public ownership.

The hon. member for Prince Edwards-Hastings made some remarks about Saskatchewan.

Mr. Gleave: Has he been out there?

Mr. Saltsman: I think he has been reading some fairy tales. He does not know anything about Saskatchewan. One of the things of which Canada has been most proud will be the achievements of the government of Saskatchewan.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Back in the thirties.

Mr. Saltsman: Back in the thirties from the very day they started. The hon. member chooses to ignore this little province with its relatively small population. Though not the wealthiest province in Canada, it pioneered virtually every social reform which is now universally accepted.

Mr. Hees: Would the hon. member not agree that I was referring simply to the unfortunate experience of the provincial government in taking over 14 companies all of which collapsed within a very short space of time? I said nothing about the province of Saskatchewan as a province or about the government as a government.

Mr. Douglas: Name the 14 companies.

Mr. Lewis: Name seven.

Mr. Hees: My right hon. friend from Prince Albert named every single one, and members over there sank lower and lower in their seats.

Mr. Lewis: Name seven; never mind 14.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair would appreciate it if hon. members would give the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) a chance to continue.

Mr. Saltsman: I am sorry the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) is not here. The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings has nothing else to go on except possibly the memory of misreading what he may have seen in Hansard.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Saltsman: He talks about the failure of corporations in Saskatchewan. It just is not true. Losses of less than one per cent were experienced in capital investment in the province, a rate far more remarkable than any I have known in the field of private corporations. The hon. member chooses to ignore many of the industries which are being continued by a government which is obviously hostile to the previous administration. They dare not dismantle those industries in Saskatchewan. Saskatchewan is the proudest jewel in the Canadian crown and it will be long remembered.

Mr. Hees: Why did the people of Saskatchewan turn the government out?

Mr. Douglas: They did not put a Tory government in.

Mr. Hees: Answer that simple question. Why is this great government not still in power?

Mr. Lewis: Why was Diefenbaker defeated?

Mr. Hees: Trickery!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The Chair finds it difficult to follow the presentation of the hon. member for Waterloo. I would remind hon. members that if they want to speak in this debate, ask questions or raise points of order they should address themselves to the Chair. They should not make all kinds of interjections, otherwise we will make no progress. I call upon the hon. member for Waterloo to continue his remarks and at the same time I ask for the co-operation of hon. members.

Mr. Lang: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Saltsman: The hon. gentleman will have to get in line. There are too many Tories trying to rise at the moment and I can only answer one Tory at a time. I shall be very glad to deal with the minister's question later. The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings knows that if you take a chance in business there are bound to be some failures. I am sure he would not argue that everything in Saskatchewan was bound to turn out successfully. It would be surprising if that were so.

An hon. Member: Like the heavy water plant in Nova Scotia?

Mr. Saltsman: It is not fair for the hon. member, and I know he is a fair man, to distort things in that wildly imaginative way of his, particularly when the chances taken by the government of Saskatchewan were taken for the most excellent of reasons. There are times when a government has to lose money. There are times when a government has to make a choice between profit in a ledger and the lives of people, the social environment of a community. In these circumstances, if a sum of money is lost is a government to be condemned on that account? Is the hon. member saying that every government decision has to show a balance in a ledger?

Mr. Hees: I never said that.

Mr. Saltsman: No; but if we are to discuss this subject in a proper context and if there is to be an intelligent debate on public ownership he has to bear some responsibility for telling the whole story.

Mr. Hees: The right hon. member for Prince Albert did that.

Mr. Saltsman: And the former Premier of Saskatchewan had a complete answer to the statement of the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

An hon. Member: Diefenbaker lasted for four years, but the government of Saskatchewan—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, this is degenerating into a debate.

Mr. Gilbert: Give Otto a chance.

Mr. Lang: Would the hon. member not agree that a great deal of the tremendous success in Saskatchewan over that period in its history was due to the quality of its people? Many of the other factors might have been due to some of the things mentioned by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

Mr. Saltsman: Certainly it was due to the quality of the people, but it was the quality of the people marshalled and directed by an intelligent government. That makes all the difference. There is a great deal of quality among the people of this country generally at the present time, but that potential is not being realized because of the stupidity of government policy.

An hon. Member: That is why Saskatchewan is going ahead now.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Douglas: You were not here this afternoon.

Mr. Saltsman: I do not know how that moan will appear in Hansard, but the hon. member evidently does not know whereof he speaks. Nothing can go ahead if you give everything away. In Saskatchewan they have given everything away. They have virtually destroyed the potash industry. What the present government has done is a disgrace. The province might have supported two or three mines but they have invited close to ten, none of which is making any money, none of which pays taxes, none of which pays wages. Is that intelligent government?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

HEALTH—INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF NATIONAL COUNCIL

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I asked the minister in the House last week whether consideration was being given to setting up a national council of health to correlate the various facets of research. As the situation is now, the ground is continually shifting as provincial and federal governments argue about who shall pay for the nation's health needs. Meanwhile, those in charge of medical education live a hand-to-mouth existence. The federal government brought in medicare. They based it on the findings of the Hall commission report which recommended that doctors, drugs and hospital beds must be available for all regardless of economic status. The report stressed that an immediate, all-out effort should be undertaken to increase the number of medical schools in order to train the increased number of doctors who would be required. This, of course, meant that money was needed, so the government set up what was called a health resources fund. It was established to help the province provide new schools, new equipment, scientist-teachers and the doctors required for research teaching and medical care.

• (10:00 p.m.)

What happened, Mr. Speaker? One of the first acts of the government was to cut back on the money it had promised and agreed to provide the health resources fund. It is interesting to note that the present Deputy Minister of Health, Dr. LeClair, who has had a good deal of experience as dean of the medical school at the University of Sherbrooke and received training at the Mayo Clinic, one of the outstanding clinics in the world, is quoted as saying:

> Research and medical education is not something you pump for two or three years and then let the pump go dry.

It just does not work in that way; there has to be a steady increase in education on which you can count. I could quote other deans of medical schools in Canada who have expressed similar opinions to the effect that long-term planning is an essential of any health measure as well as short-term projects. Many of these projects were left unfinished when the health resources fund was cut. Incomplete buildings were left for the provinces to finish or to lie as a stark monument to the folly of government policies. The result has not only been a slowdown in the training of doctors but the quality of teacher-scientists has diminished. The priority of equipping and training doctors has been seriously impaired.

As a result, Mr. Speaker, we have people today who have no doctor. Entire areas are without medical care. At overworked outpatient departments of hospitals people wait, often for hours, for an overworked doctor to treat them. The doctor image is being destroyed because of lack of time for proper communication and owing to the swamping of the doctor's time to fill in forms and papers, and red tape of this kind.

Drug care was to be a supplement to medicare so that the poor patient of limited resources would not only have his doctor's bill paid but also his drugs. Not a thing has been done in this regard. I raised this question in the House on a motion and government speakers who replied were in total agreement in principle with the motion. But what has been done to implement it? Paramedical services have been neglected. The poor people still do not know who is going to pay their bills. Individual doctors who are doing research are denied funds for clinical research purposes. This, then, is the reason we need a Canadian council of health. We need to set down priorities that will be followed and which will obtain the maximum result for the taxpayers' dollars.

Dr. John C. Beck, physician and chief director of McGill University's clinic at Montreal's Royal Victoria Hospital, has stated that although seven years ago national goals were defined by the Hall commission report on health services there is still no national science policy for health. Dr. Beck stated that a national health policy would seem to be of the very highest priority when costs are escalating and taking 6 per cent of the gross national product, $7 billion.

Federal and provincial governments have not stated their policies or their plans for health services systems. They have not stated their policy on financial support for the training and necessary research for such systems. Instead, we have unco-ordinated expansion of facilities and excessively expensive arrangements for the delivery of health services, and the cost is much higher than it ought to be.

We have been unable to formulate and implement planned programs for developing health manpower, for recruiting staffs to the health science centres and for carrying out good scientific research. Dr. Hollenberg, professor and chairman of the University of Toronto school of medicine, states that Canadian medical scientists are experiencing considerable uncertainty over the national effort on medical research. There is a slowing rate of growth in the budget of the Medical Research Council of Canada—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Rynard: I did not start right on time, Mr. Speaker. I have another minute.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It is not for the hon. member to decide. The Chair allowed 30 seconds for the presentation of the adjournment motion and it feels that this is sufficient to compensate for the time lost. I am positive the hon. member has received his seven minutes by the rules of this House and I now call upon the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Mahoney).

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) stated in reply to the question of the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard), we do not agree with the hon. member's premise that there is no national health science policy. Health science is the responsibility of the Minister of National Health and Welfare and he carries out this responsibility through his department and through the Medical Research Council. These bodies are continually co-operating on matters of science policy and, as a matter of interest, are at this time reviewing together the entire question of health science research. In addition, the Minister of National Health and Welfare and officials of his department co-operate closely with federal, provincial and municipal authorities and with universities and health science associations.

The concept of a national council on health is not new. It was considered in depth at the November, 1970, meetings of the Dominion Council of Health and the ministers of health. The department is looking into this matter now but the minister has asked me to remind the hon. gentleman from Simcoe North that the creation of such a body has widespread implications and consultation on a large scale is necessary.

HEALTH—ALLEGED USE OF STALLING TACTICS TO PREVENT ABORTION APPLICATION BEING DEALT WITH

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to be able to raise this matter again just when the Medical Association has registered its opinion that abortion is justified on non-medical social grounds. On May 20 I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) about a complaint by Dr. Byron Hyde, a general practitioner on the staff of the Riverside Hospital in Ottawa, that stalling tactics are being consistently used by those in charge of the hospital to prevent abortion cases from coming before their review board. I asked the minister if he would consult with the minister in charge of hospitals in Ontario to see what could be done about this dangerous and indefensible roadblock. The answer was silence, complete and unbroken silence.

I do not think this is good enough. The Minister of Justice is in charge of the Criminal Code which legalizes abortion where the life or health of the pregnant woman is in danger. The minister is fond of quoting the definition of "health" given by the World Health Organization:

> Health is a state of complete physical, mental and social well-being and not merely the absence of disease or infirmity.

Evidently certain hospitals like Riverside refuse to accept this definition when it is applied to abortion. They refuse to accept "social well-being" as an essential part of a woman's health; and they crack down on it so efficiently that women are obliged to leave their own doctor and shop around other hospitals in Ottawa or elsewhere, including the state of New York. Meanwhile the nine-month time clock keeps ticking away relentlessly.

Obviously no hospital is going to acknowledge that it is deliberately undermining the law of the land by openly throwing up roadblocks in the way of legal abortions. But equally obviously, many hospitals like Riverside can organize their abortion committees effectively to prevent legal abortions. To quote Mr. Jackson Bryan, Riverside's administrator:

> If there was any emergency, Dr. Hyde could have applied to the Civic or Grace Hospitals.

To quote Dr. Hyde:

> The fact is, every unwanted pregnancy is an emergency. Can Mr. Bryan's statement mean anything other than that Riverside is not available for consideration of therapeutic abortions? ... The fact is, the Riverside Hospital, like many Ontario hospitals, takes the federal law and adds its own riders to make the law unworkable. The abortion law is part of the federal Criminal Code.

I am convinced that it is time now for the Minister of Justice to put an end to this chicken and egg war. If the Criminal Code is such that provincial hospital authorities can add riders to it to suit their own prejudices, let the minister meet with the appropriate provincial authorities to see that the law is applied equally to all citizens. Right now the abortion provisions are gambling with the lives of women who are so unfortunate as to live where hospital authorities are determined to flout the spirit of the law, if not its letter, to keep them out.

A few days ago Lore Perron, founder and president of ARCAL, the Association for the Repeal of Canadian Abortion Laws, showed reporters a copy of a letter dated March 20 to A. B. R. Lawrence, Ontario health minister. It pointed out that of six general hospitals in the Ottawa-Hull area three have no abortion committees because they are administered by religious organizations. And at the Riverside Hospital the chief and the assistant chief of obstetrics and gynecology oppose abortion because of their religious convictions, as do other members of the abortion committee. That letter said that for health reasons, mental and physical, they will not grant abortions, which leaves the Ottawa Civic Hospital carrying the load for at least four of the major hospitals.

Mrs. Perron made the very just and sensible comment that doctors obviously prejudiced against abortion should not be appointed to abortion committees. She also stated the following and I would like particularly to draw this to the attention of the minister:

> Hospitals receiving public funds, whether or not they are being administered by religious organizations, should be instructed by the province that they must permit doctors who have privileges at a hospital to use its facilities.

This, of course, would permit Dr. Byron Hyde to perform an abortion on a patient at the Riverside Hospital even if the chief and the assistant of obstetrics and gynecology were opposed to the idea of abortion. As Dr. Hyde himself remarked:

> Riverside Hospital physicians who support impediment of the federal law are remnants of another era, and they have their counterparts in hospitals across the land.

It is time for the Minister of Justice to assure himself and the rest of us that the law will be applied with even-handed justice.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. lady very well knows, the provisions of the Criminal Code are in the first instance prohibitory insofar as abortion is concerned, and then provision is made for certain exceptions. The manner of qualifying for those exceptions is clearly set out in section 237 of the Criminal Code and is a matter which is entirely within the jurisdiction of the people named therein, who are the Minister of Health, the board of an approved or accredited hospital, a qualified medical practitioner and, if a hospital chooses to establish one, a therapeutic abortion committee. With respect to the practice in any particular hospital and the exact manner in which any application for abortion is processed by the people who are lawfully entitled to consider it, this is not a matter which should concern the Minister of Justice.

BROADCASTING—POLICY ON ISSUANCE OF LICENCES TO AGENTS OF CROWN IN PROVINCES

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I am here tonight on the adjournment motion debate because of a few loose remarks by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). On Thursday June 3, as recorded at page 6324 of Hansard, I asked the Prime Minister if there was any change in federal policy prohibiting the issuance of broadcasting licences. Among other things, the Prime Minister said that there is no encroachment upon the policies of the federal government. Later, on June 7, and again in reply to a question to the Prime Minister on the proposed sale of the assets of National Cablevision Limited to a consortium of interests, the Prime Minister said as recorded at page 6412 of Hansard:

> I understand that the purchase was not by any government, but mainly by insurance companies. Therefore it is a private purchase.

Mr. Speaker, it may be all right for the Prime Minister to go to Russia and issue either naïve or simplistic statements about the federal institution in Canada or about the status of Ukrainians in Canada, but when it comes to a question as basic as federal power in broadcasting, for example the issuance of broadcasting licences, I suggest it is time he should be held accountable for his words.

A quick review of some of the regulations and of the legislation of the Prime Minister's government would show, first, that the issuance of broadcasting licences is an encroachment on federal policy and, second, that it is not a private matter, a matter of a sale between insurance companies, because the proposal filed on May 31 before the CRTC is for the sale of controlling interests of National Cablevision Limited to, among others, Caisse de Dépot et Placement du Québec, the Quebec Deposit and Investment Fund. The controlling interests of the Quebec Deposit and Investment Fund amount to 30 per cent, which under section 29 of chapter 23 of the Statutes of Quebec of 1965 is the maximum that the fund can hold in any company, and that is the controlling interest in the proposed application. Section 4 reads:

> The fund shall be an agent of the Crown in right of the province.

[Mrs. MacInnis.]

Yet the Prime Minister stands in this House and says that this is a private matter and is not an encroachment on federal policy. A directive of his government issued on June 4, 1970, pursuant to section 27 of the Broadcasting Act says, among other things:

> The Canadian Radio-Television Comission is hereby directed that, on and after the 4th day of June, 1970, broadcasting licences may not be issued—

The following people are named. Section 2(a) reads:

> Her Majesty in right of any province and agents of Her Majesty in right of any province—

Section 3 reads:

> For the purposes of this direction, "agents of Her Majesty in right of any province" means any agents of Her Majesty in such right and includes a municipal or public body empowered to perform a function of government in a province or any corporation empowered to perform a function or duty on behalf of Her Majesty in such right.

Therefore, I submit that it is clear, on the face of the Prime Minister's directive issued by his own cabinet pursuant to the Broadcasting Act, that no licence can be issued under the present broadcasting policy to an agent in right of a province, which is what the Quebec Deposit and Investment Fund is, pursuant to section 4.

My question to the Prime Minister was whether there has been or will be a change in federal policy. He pretended to be frivolous or facetious and suggested that there was not to be any change. Later he said it was a private matter. When there are serious constitutional discussions in Victoria on the shape and size which Canada is to take as we move into the 1970s, I suggest that it is contempt of Parliament for the Prime Minister to treat such a serious matter in this frivolous way.

It may be all right for the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier), who is charged with the responsibility of answering for the CRTC to this House, to say that he is joyful now that the minister responsible for broadcasting in the province of Quebec has worked out a particular deal with the federal authorities so that the impasse or dispute on cablevision can be resolved, and I am not suggesting that it may not be an adequate and proper method by which the federal and provincial governments can work out their difficulties; but I suggest in all seriousness that it is close to contempt of Parliament to say that there is not to be a change in broadcasting policy.

If the policy on June 4, 1970, had any application or relevance, then there has to be consistency with what has been suggested by the Prime Minister. If there is to be a change, let the government admit it. If there is not, then the CRTC should not even be charged with considering the application which it has on file.

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary-Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the case to which the hon. member is referring represents a private contract for transfer of shares in cable companies between two groups, one of which is selling and is now controlled by American interests. This is one of many such transfers to Canadian-controlled companies as a result of a directive of the government to the CRTC.

An application has been filed, according to usual procedures, with the CRTC and will be heard at a public hearing in Ottawa on June 28, as was stated yesterday or the day before. It is the responsibility of the CRTC in reaching a decision to interpret the Broadcasting Act and the directives received from the government. Such interpretations have been made in very many decisions involving foreign ownership. The act sets out adequate legal procedures if in one's view a decision represents an incorrect interpretation of the Broadcasting Act or of the directives of the Governor in Council under Section 22.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.24 p.m.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCE

ATTENDANCE OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, with the unanimous consent of the House I rise to propose a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Next week a conference takes place in Victoria on the most important questions of patriating the Constitution and devising an amending formula. Additionally, other substantial constitutional questions will be discussed. The meeting will be in closed session. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has refused the request of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) that the opposition parties be permitted to send observers. The Joint Committee on the Constitution has held more than 100 meetings in 40 cities and towns throughout the 10 provinces and in the Yukon and Northwest Territories, and 1,000 Canadians have voiced their opinions in 5,641 pages of evidence. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale):

That this House is of the opinion that the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on the Constitution should be permitted to attend the Federal-Provincial Conference on the Constitution being held next week at Victoria as an observing body and that the committee should be permitted to give the conference the benefit of the knowledge accumulated by the committee at tremendous expense to the taxpayers of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Cardigan. This motion is proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43, and requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

TABLING OF ARDA AGREEMENTS WITH CERTAIN PROVINCES

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 41(2) I wish to table copies of agreements signed recently between the federal government and the governments of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, Manitoba and Saskatchewan within the framework of the ARDA program.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: On a point of order, the translation system was not working when the minister was speaking.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I am tabling the ARDA agreements with Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec and a few other provinces.

Mr. Speaker: I hope the translation system was working this time.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

MONEY RECEIVED BY PERSONNEL ENGAGED UNDER OPERATION LIFT, SASKATCHEWAN

Question No. 1,175—Mr. Skoberg:

With reference to the return made to question No. 779 on February 10, 1971, how much money did (a) Edgar Lewis Cook, Birch Hills (b) Peter Demong, St. Benedict (c) Joseph Gorieu, Reynaud (d) Ward Jo Heffernan, Birch Hills (e) John Markowsky, Wakaw (f) Regis Arthur Reynaud, Reynaud (g) Dominique Rocher, St. Brieux, all in Saskatchewan, receive?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Cook, E.L., Demong, P. B., Gorieu, J. G., Heffernan, J. W., Markowsky, J. A., Reynaud, A.R., Rocher, D.M., employed as part-time inspectors, receive the standard rate of $16 per day plus travel expenses for the period August 1, 1970 to July 31, 1971 on an, as and when required basis, in accordance with the terms contained in order in council P.C. 1965-1/2020 of November 16, 1965 and para. (2) of order in council P.C. 1964-1/1508 of October 1, 1964.

HIJACKING—AMENDMENTS TO CRIMINAL CODE AND EXTRADITION TREATIES

Question No. 1,284—Mr. Fortin:

1. At what stage are the studies concerning amendments to the Criminal Code making the hijacking of planes a crime?

2. At what stage are the negotiations concerning amendments to the extradition treaties to include the hijacking of planes?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): 1. The studies are well advanced.

2. Negotiations for amending the Canada-U.S. Extradition Treaty are already underway. Officials of the Canadian Department of Justice and the Department of External Affairs held discussions on this matter in Washington last March. Further discussions are scheduled to be held in Ottawa in June.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE, QUEBEC CITY—EMPLOYEES' GRIEVANCES

Question No. 1,356—Mr. Godin:

1. Since 1965, have any grievances been made by employees of the Department of National Health and Welfare, family allowances and old age security division, in the Quebec City office and, if so, (a) on what dates were they made (b) on how many occasions?

2. How many classification officers have investigated and how many employees have been personally consulted on the matter?

3. Is the report of the investigations available to (a) interested employees (b) Members of Parliament?

[Translation]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Yes, since 1965 grievances have been received from employees of the Department of National Health and Welfare, Family Allowances and Old Age Security Division in Quebec City. (a) Departmental records show that these grievances were submitted in November 1968, December 1968, July 1969, March 1970, September 1970, February 1971, March 1971. (b) Departmental records show that 65 grievances have been submitted.

2. Three classification officers have investigated these grievances and 12 employees have been personally consulted.

3. (a) The reports of the investigations are confidential internal documents and are not available to the public. (b) The reports of the investigations are confidential internal documents and are not available to Members of Parliament.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD—PRESENTATION OF JOHN DE VISSER'S "NEWFOUNDLAND"

Question No. 1,362—Mr. Peddle:

With regard to the National Film Board photographic presentation of John de Visser's "Newfoundland" on April 15, 1971

[Mr. Olson.]

(a) is Mr. de Visser a Canadian (b) in the use of the name of the Province, both on the official invitations and in the background display at the Photo Gallery, for what reason are the letters F and L capitalized (c) since Newfoundland became the tenth province over 22 years ago, for what reason was the opening of the photographic presentation presided over by the Associate Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the National Film Board as follows: (a) Mr. de Visser, foreign born, became a Canadian citizen in 1952. (b) Letters F and L were capitalized as a design technique. (c) Mr. Paul Tremblay, Associate Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs, presided in his capacity as a Member of the Board of the National Film Board.

POSSIBILITY OF CLOSING OF AIR STRIPS IN JASPER AND BANFF NATIONAL PARKS

Question No. 1,366—Mr. Woolliams:

Is it the intention of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to close down the air strips in Jasper and Banff National Parks in the near future?

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. It is National Parks' policy to end the use of established airfields in national parks as alternative airports are established outside park boundaries. The question of the Banff and Jasper airfields was included in the recent public hearings on the provisional master plans for these parks. No decision on the future of these airfields will be made until the submissions made at the public hearings have been thoroughly reviewed. Therefore, it is not the intention of the department to close these airports in the near future.

STORAGE OF CANADIAN ECONOMIC DATA IN U.S. DATA BANKS

Question No. 1,380—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. To the knowledge of the government is economic data on the Canadian economy stored in data banks in the United States.

2. Does the government provide this information?

3. Is this data available to the Canadian government?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1, 2 and 3. Public data may be stored by anyone.

REDUCTION IN PAYMENTS UNDER WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE ACT

Question No. 1,450—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. What was the total reduction in payments made under the War Veterans Allowance Act, in lieu of the increases in the old age supplement and the guaranteed income supplement, during the fiscal years 1969-70 and 1970-71?

2. What is the projected reduction in such payments for the fiscal years 1971-72?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. Nil.

2. The reduction in war veterans allowances and civilian war allowances expenditures has been forecast at $5,375,-000 as indicated on page 29-14 of the Blue Book on Estimates for the year 1971-72. However, because of recently approved increases in rates and income ceilings, individual war veterans allowance and civilian war allowance recipients who are also in receipt of old age security pension and guaranteed income supplement will benefit from a higher income than they did in previous years.

INCENTIVE GRANTS TO REMBOURRAGE INDUSTRIEL KÉBEC, INC. AND POLYÉTHYLÈNE KÉBEC INC.

Question No. 1,465—Mr. Caouette:

During the past three years did the Department of Regional Economic Expansion make any grants to (a) Rembourrage Industriel Kébec Inc. (b) Polyéthylène Kébec Inc. and, if so, in what amounts?

[Translation]

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Parliamentary Secretary of Minister of Regional and Economic Expansion): As listed in the report on the operation of the Regional Development Incentives Act for the month of April, which was tabled in the House of Commons May 11, 1970, accepted offers were: (a) $125,000 (15% of approved capital cost and $1,000 per job); (b) $321,000 (16% of approved capital cost and $1,000 per job).

GOVERNMENT INTENTION REGARDING DOLLAR EXCHANGE RATE

Question No. 1,474—Mr. Yewchuk:

Does the government intend to (a) maintain a floating exchange rate (b) return to the fixed exchange rate before January of 1972 (c) experiment with a new de facto parity, with a wider band of permitted fluctuation before January of 1972?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): The government's intentions in this regard would be announced in the normal manner.

CONSIDERATION OF REMOVAL OF EXCISE TAX ON TELEVISION SETS

Question No. 1,510—Mr. Robinson:

Will the government consider the advisability of removing the 15% excise tax on television sets?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): This is a matter of government policy. If the government should decide to make any change in the taxation of television sets, it would be announced at the appropriate time.

Orders for Returns

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

TAX ON ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES, 1960-70 INCLUSIVE

Question No. 896—Mr. Robinson:

1. What is the total amount of tax on alcoholic beverages obtained by the government in each year 1960 to 1970 inclusive?

2. What amount of money has been utilized by the government toward the problem of alcoholism in each of the same years?

Return tabled.

APPLICATIONS FOR CANADA COUNCIL DOCTORAL FELLOWSHIP GRANTS

Question No. 1,321—Mr. Rose:

1. For each of the past five years, how many first applications have there been for Canada Council Doctoral Fellowship Grants in Category I for each Canadian University by main discipline of study?

2. For the same period of time, how many new applications have there been for Canada Council Doctoral Fellowship Grants in Category II (b) by main discipline of study?

3. How many applications in each main discipline of study were accepted in Category I and II in each of the past five years?

4. What per cent of the income available for grants in each of the five years went to Category I and Category II (b) doctoral fellowship grants?

Return tabled.

GRANTS THROUGH DEPARTMENT OR AGENCIES OF SECRETARY OF STATE

Question No. 1,323—Mr. Paproski:

What grants, in what amounts, have been authorized since April 1, 1970, to organizations and associations through the department or agencies for which the Secretary of State has responsibility?

Return tabled.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, question No. 79, which has been on the order paper since the first day of this session, asks for information about consultants hired by the Prime Minister's office. Can the parliamentary secretary tell me whether I can expect an answer shortly or, if there is to be no answer, can the hon. gentleman so advise me in order that I may seek the information I want by other methods?

Mr. Jerome: The preparation of the reply to that question is not under my personal supervision. Accordingly I am not able to make any statement of the kind requested at the present time.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you be so good as to call Notices of Motions Nos. 214, 215, 216, 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228 and 229.

Motions for Papers

COPY OF STUDY OF NORTHERN MINERAL EXPLORATION ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Motion No. 214—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the study conducted by the Development Analysis Section of the Northern Economic Branch of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development on the evaluation of the operation of the Northern Mineral Exploration Assistance Program.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I notice that 13 motions in the name of my hon. friend from Skeena are being called today, namely, this one and 12 more. If by any chance the answer is to be the same to all of them, perhaps we could have it just once. If they are being refused, I would ask that they be transferred for debate individually.

Mr. Jerome: The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is here to give the answer, but I believe the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has anticipated the situation correctly. It might be we could save a lot of time by following his suggestion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May we at least have the statement of refusal?

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the study referred to in motion No. 214 was prepared for internal use only and as such it is considered confidential. I would therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If that is to be the answer to all 13, may I ask that all 13 be transferred for debate?

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

COPY OF STUDY OF MINERAL DEVELOPMENT OPERATIONS OF ANVIL MINES LIMITED

Motion No. 215—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

Transferred for debate.

COPY OF STUDY OF MINERAL POTENTIAL OF ECHO BAY MINES LIMITED

Motion No. 220—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the study conducted by the Development Analysis Section of the Northern Economic Branch of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development on the evaluation of the mineral potential of the property of Echo Bay Mines Limited.

Transferred for debate.

COPY OF STUDY OF MINERAL POTENTIAL OF VENUS MINES LIMITED

Motion No. 221—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the study conducted by the Development Analysis Section of the Northern Economic Branch of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development on the evaluation of the mineral potential of the property of Venus Mines Limited.

Transferred for debate.

COPY OF STUDY OF PROPOSED EXPLORATION PROGRAM OF SELWYN EXPLORATION LIMITED

Motion No. 222—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the study conducted by the Development Analysis Section of the Northern Economic Branch of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development evaluating the proposed exploration program of Selwyn Explorations Limited.

Transferred for debate.

COPY OF STUDY OF MINERAL POTENTIAL OF ARCTIC MINING AND EXPLORATION LIMITED

Motion No. 223—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the study conducted by the Development Analysis Section of the Northern Economic Branch of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development evaluating the mineral potential of the property of Arctic Mining and Exploration Limited.

Transferred for debate.

COPY OF STUDY OF MINERAL POTENTIAL OF CASSIAR ASBESTOS CORPORATION LIMITED

Motion No. 224—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the study conducted by the Development Analysis Section of the Northern Economic Branch of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development evaluating the mineral potential of the Clinton Creek property of Cassiar Asbestos Corporation Limited.

Transferred for debate.

COPY OF STUDY OF MINERAL POTENTIAL OF NEW IMPERIAL MINES LIMITED

Motion No. 225—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the study conducted by the Development Analysis Section of the Northern Economic Branch of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development evaluating the mineral potential of the property of New Imperial Mines Limited.

Transferred for debate.

COPY OF STUDY OF MINERAL POTENTIAL OF CANADA TUNGSTEN MINING CORPORATION LIMITED

Motion No. 226—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the study conducted by the Development Analysis Section of the Northern Economic Branch of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development evaluating the mineral potential of the property of Canada Tungsten Mining Corporation Limited.

Transferred for debate.

COPY OF STUDY OF MINERAL POTENTIAL IN CANADA CEMENT COMPANY LANDS

Motion No. 227—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the study conducted by the Development Analysis Section of the Northern Economic Branch of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development evaluating the mineral potential in Canada Cement Company lands adjacent to Banff National Park.

Transferred for debate.

COPY OF STUDY OF MINERAL POTENTIAL OF CTR LANDS

Motion No. 228—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the study conducted by the Development Analysis Section of the Northern Economic Branch of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development evaluating the mineral potential on CTR lands in Banff National Park.

Transferred for debate.

Mr. Jerome: May I ask that the remaining Notices of Motion be allowed to stand?

Mr. Speaker: It is the wish of the parliamentary secretary that No. 229 in the name of the hon. member for Vegreville be allowed to stand?

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a question of privilege concerning Notice of Motion No. 211 which asks that the letter from the Prime Minister of Quebec to the Prime Minister, and the response thereto, dealing with the extension of the Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act be laid before the House. Since these letters have already been published, in effect, by the Prime Minister's office, I cannot understand why the government does not show me the courtesy, as a Member of Parliament, of tabling this correspondence in a proper manner in accordance with my motion.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I might return to motion No. 229. A moment ago I inquired whether it was the wish of the parliamentary secretary that this motion stand.

Mr. Jerome: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. It is not. The reply to that Notice of Motion will be the same as the reply to the others which have already been dealt with. I would assume the result would likely be the same.

Mr. Woolliams: What does the distinguished member mean by "the same"? Does he want us to withdraw it? I do not follow him.

Mr. Jerome: Perhaps it would be simpler to withdraw it.

CORRESPONDENCE PERTAINING TO OPERATIONS OF ELK ISLAND NATIONAL PARK

Motion No. 229—Mr. Mazankowski:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the Canadian Wildlife Service and the Parks Administration of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, pertaining to the operations of Elk Island National Park, relating to all research studies and recommendations with respect to the maintenance of a healthy and viable wildlife animal population balance, taking into consideration such factors as climatic conditions, availability of natural food supplies, artificial feeding program, predators and all other factors affecting the proper population of animals and management of same in relationship to their habitat.

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): The study referred to in this motion was prepared for internal use only and as such is considered confidential. I would therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Woolliams: I have never heard of such nonsense. We will have to debate it.

Mr. MacEachen: Transfer for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate. Shall the remaining motions stand?

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, I raised what I regard as a legitimate question of privilege. Either I am a representative of the people and must be given certain rights in this place or I am not. If the government feels it can release correspondence completely oblivious of this Notice of Motion that I put on the order paper, perhaps we should be asking what we are here to perform. I put his motion on the order paper in good faith on April 5, 1971. There has been no response whatever to it except by the left-handed action of releasing the correspondence in some other fashion. As a Member of Parliament I think I am entitled to the courtesy of some response from the government to what is a serious Notice of Motion.

Mr. Speaker: About the only answer that the Chair can give the hon. member at the moment is that I will look into the matter and see whether there is any way the Chair can, through its interest in this question, obtain redress of the hon. member's grievance.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

SOCIAL SECURITY

ALLEGED FEDERAL OFFER TO PAY HALF OF COST OF COMPREHENSIVE PROVINCIAL PROGRAMS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I do not know whether he has found it necessary to flee the capital, but in any event I will address it to the Acting Prime Minister who is very knowledgeable in the field of welfare. Has the federal government offered to pay half the cost of comprehensive social security programs, along the lines being advocated by the province of Quebec, to any province adopting such a program and, if so, would the government now table the proposal in view of the leaks that have already taken place?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I had an opportunity to discuss the question of the conference with the Minister of National Health and Welfare last evening and asked him what it would be possible to state respecting the discussions that took place yesterday. As a result of that discussion I must advise the Leader of the Opposition that it was understood that the discussions and points of views expressed at the conference yeterday were confidential among governments and that a communiqué had not even been issued in view of the private nature of the discussions. For that reason, I regret that I cannot throw any further light on the question that has been raised by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, this really makes one wonder what Parliament is for, but I will put my question in a way that I hope will enable the minister to answer. Is the government of Canada prepared to offer to pay half the cost of such a program adopted by any province? What is the position of the government with regard to that, regardless of what may have been said at the conference?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the details of the government's policy respecting the whole field of income security have been outlined in the minister's paper. As the Prime Minister stated only yesterday, I believe, that document was the main basis for discussion with the provinces at the conference yesterday. There is nothing I can add to that particular statement today.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, is the minister saying that the position of the government of Canada is the position outlined in the white paper presented in the House last December? Is he making the assertion that this is still the position and that the government has not made a different proposal or adopted a different position from that outlined in the white paper tabled in the House? In other words, is the government just playing games with the House?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman will appreciate that it would be difficult for me to disclose the discussions that took place yesterday because of the understanding that was reached at the conference. What I did say was that the basic document in the field was the document put forward by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Obviously there will be discussions centred around that proposal and points of view will be put forward by the provinces at the conference.

[Mr. Speaker.]

MAINTENANCE OF RIGHT OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AND PARLIAMENT TO SET NATIONAL STANDARDS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister. Will he assure the House that in all of these dealings and discussions with the provinces over social security and other matters the federal government will not bargain away the right of the federal government and the federal Parliament to set national standards in the field of social security?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there may be various interpretations as to the precise definition of "national standards", and I do not want to debate that point. But I really want to repeat what the Prime Minister has already stated, that the position of the federal government is not to bargain away the jurisdiction it already possesses in this field.

INAUGURATION BY PROVINCES OF GUARANTEED INCOME SCHEMES UNDER CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my second question is a supplementary to the other part of the question asked by the Leader of the Opposition. Can the minister tell us if the provinces have been advised whether they cannot already under the Canada Assistance Plan inaugurate guaranteed income plans in respect of which the federal government would pay 50 per cent?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that is a slightly different question to the one put by the Leader of the Opposition. I am not aware that any official advice has been given to that effect by the minister. I am simply not aware that that advice has been conveyed.

[Later:]

MANITOBA SUGGESTION THAT FEDERAL GOVERNMENT'S SHARE UNDER CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN BE INCREASED

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the government is giving further consideration to the proposal of the government of Manitoba at the conference yesterday that in view of the very sharp increase in provincial payments under the Canada Assistance Plan as a result of increased unemployment the federal government should assume 65 per cent of the cost of Canada Assistance Plan programs?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Prime Minister stated, and this is still the view of the government, that all suggestions made by the provinces in respect of changes in the Canada Assistance Plan would be considered, but no decision regarding additional sharing by the federal government has been undertaken up to the present time.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCE

SUGGESTED DEBATE BEFORE COMMENCEMENT OF MEETINGS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary I wish to direct to the Acting Prime Minister.

Since all parties are deeply interested in the Victoria Conference, would the Acting Prime Minister be willing to invite House leaders to agree on the holding of a debate on constitutional matters tomorrow or Friday, in other words prior to the Victoria Conference?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the position of the government on this point has already been discussed and stated in the House by the Prime Minister.

REQUEST THAT JOINT COMMITTEE ON CONSTITUTION BE PERMITTED TO ATTEND

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, in view of the motion today under Standing Order 43 by the hon. member for Cardigan, will the Acting Prime Minister see that some consideration is given to the seating of the constitutional committee of this House or a subcommittee, at the constitutional conference in Victoria? Otherwise their work will be completely taken out of their hands.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we might go on to the next subject at this point.

ENERGY

PANARCTIC NATURAL GAS DISCOVERY—AREA FARM-OUT AGREEMENTS WITH OIL COMPANIES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development arising out of his answer to a question I asked him yesterday in which he confirmed the fact that Panarctic Oils have made a farm-out agreement with Imperial Oil Company. In view of the fact that the government of Canada has a 45 per cent equity in Panarctic Oils and the Canadian people therefore have a vital interest, may I ask the minister if he would be prepared to table these farm-out agreements setting forth the terms and conditions under which these farm-outs have taken place?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I could table this agreement. Personally, I have no objections. I shall ask the companies involved for their permission. I understand that this is a perfectly normal agreement in oil operations and I should even be ready to discuss it before the Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

[English]

Mr. Douglas: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the company is disposing of property, part of which belongs to the Canadian people, can the minister tell us what compensation is being paid by Imperial Oil or what share of any finds it makes will accrue to Panarctic Oils in the event of oil or gas finds in the areas farmed out?

Mr. Chrétien: From memory I think Panarctic will keep a 50 or 60 per cent interest if there are any finds on those lands.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister if what he is saying means that a 40 per cent equity will be held by other companies in any finds they make, and is this principle to be applied to all farm-outs by Panarctic?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, there is a difference depending on the land made available to the contracting companies. As to the negotiations between Panarctic Oils Limited and Imperial Oil Limited as well as other farm-outs, these are agreements whereby Panarctic Oils Limited reserved for itself generally 30 to 60 per cent of the potential of the wells.

FINANCE

INTEREST RATE ON LOAN TO MARINE INDUSTRIES LIMITED RESPECTING SHIPBUILDING CONTRACT

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is absent, I should like to put my question to the Minister of Finance.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce stated last night that Marine Industries Ltd. had landed a $123 million contract for the construction of cargo ships for two French companies. The Minister added that the federal government would award a $21 million grant to Marine Industries and that the French companies would benefit from a $82 million loan at a low interest rate.

Is the Minister of Finance in a position to say what is the interest rate that will be paid on this $82 million loan to the two French companies?

[English]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would have to take this question as notice.

Inquiries of the Ministry

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

FACTORS ON WHICH PREDICTED UPWARD TREND BASED

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Last evening the Prime Minister expressed confidence that the economy is embarked on an upward trend and will gather momentum throughout the balance of 1971 and in 1972. Could the minister please indicate to the House the specific factors on which the government's confidence is based, mindful of what has occurred in the recent past?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question of course is a very interesting one, but I would suggest to him and to the minister that the information sought should normally be given to the House by way of a statement on motions. The question in those terms would not be in order.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Speaker: It is difficult to ask a supplementary to a question which is not in order, but the Chair will recognize the Leader of the Opposition.

DECLINE IN INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION IN APRIL

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Thank you very much for your leniency, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether the decline in industrial production in Canada for the month of April of 0.8 per cent, as reported by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, is something that has been foreseen by the Minister and is simply some kind of seasonal fluctuation, or does the minister intend to take any action with regard to what appears to some of us to be a rather disturbing development?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): The April fall of 0.8 per cent for the durable goods manufacturing group was due to a sharp drop in automobile production. The Ford Oakville plant was shut down for a week because of a strike at a major United States parts supplier. Excluding the auto group, durable goods manufacturing actually rose by 0.6 per cent.

[Later:]

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I would like to provide the Minister of Finance with an opportunity to reconsider the answer he gave me a few moments ago when I asked him about the decline in the adjusted index of industrial production in Canada, issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, which according to my information showed that all divisions shared in the decline.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I will stand by the answer I gave.

[Mr. Benson.]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA—EAST PAKISTAN REFUGEES—PROVISION OF CANADIAN NURSES

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): I should like to address a question to the Acting Prime Minister. It has come to my attention that a number of graduating nurses are willing to go to India to assist in the refugee and cholera emergency, and I am sure there are many more who are anxious to help. Does the government intend to make a survey of how many would be willing to go and immediately make all financial and other arrangements to make this possible and, if so, when?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): I will be happy to draw the suggestion of the hon. member to the attention of the Secretary of State for External Affairs for his consideration on his return, I hope later today. From my knowledge I believe there has been no request yet by India for personnel from Canada.

Mr. Rynard: Since modern medicine does not even seem to have the resources to provide the known preventive for this terrible disease of cholera on time, is the government willing to initiate an investigation of what are the present priority global medical needs and to make suggestions about how medicine can more effectively meet those priorities when they arise as emergencies?

Mr. MacEachen: The effort in this situation is being co-ordinated by the World Health Organization, and Canada is participating actively in WHO, as my hon. friend knows. The point that has been made by the hon. member will be, as I stated, drawn to the attention of the minister.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): I have a supplementary on the very important matter that has been raised, and I should like to address it to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Would the minister use the Manpower offices across Canada to make an immediate survey to find out how many registered nurses are unemployed and would be available for such work?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I am sure that if the question of sending expert assistance arises there will be no difficulty in finding available manpower.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR DECISION ON ABORTION BY WOMAN AND DOCTOR IN LIGHT OF POSITION OF MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the decision of the Canadian Medical Association favouring the removal from the Criminal Code of the provision for approval of abortions by a hospital committee of doctors, thus making abortion a matter of decision by a woman and her doctor, will the government reconsider soon introducing the necessary amendments to the Criminal Code to bring this about?

Some hon. Members: No.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): We are studying a number of resolutions that were presented and passed by the council of the Canadian Medical Association to analyse the total impact of those resolutions. The Prime Minister stated yesterday that there will be a day set aside for a debate on this matter in the House of Commons but probably not until after the summer recess.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ORIGIN OF ARMS FOUND AT ASCOT, ENGLAND

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Considering the proclamations of Canada on the whole matter of the sale of arms and military equipment, is he able to advise the House whether or not an investigation has unearthed the information that it was Canadian arms that were found at Ascot yesterday?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the report to which the hon. member refers, but we have no confirmation that these were in part Canadian arms.

Mr. Macquarrie: Since the minister, being a fellow Scot, would not want us to be involved in an Irish affair, perhaps he would look into it very carefully.

[Later:]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, may I clarify an answer I made to the hon. member for Hillsborough in reply to his question about arms. I said we had no information that would confirm that any part of these arms were Canadian arms. At the same time I should say I have no information denying the same. We are seeking information.

OIL

REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ON ADEQUACY OF SUPPLY FOR EASTERN CANADA IN EVENT OF EMERGENCY

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): In the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources I will direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. When does the government expect to table information showing that Canada has a secure supply of oil to supply eastern Canada adequately as well as to maintain export commitments to the United States if an emergency arises in regard to the supply of Venezuelan oil?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The matter of the availability of supplies in Canada is constantly under study by the National Energy Board and from time to time reports are made. I will bring this specific further request to the attention of the minister.

Mr. Thompson: My question was, when is the government going to make such information available to members of the House, and what about the oil export arrangements with the United States in the case of an emergency? It seems to me that the government has a responsibility to the House.

Mr. Lang: These matters are continually studied and from time to time reports have been made. As I said, I will bring the matter to the attention of the minister in the event that further reports are available now or in the immediate future.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD

ALLEGED LACK OF FUNDS TO HIRE STAFF TO PROVIDE INFORMATION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I should like to ask the President of the Treasury Board the following question. In view of the fact that the National Energy Board has alleged that it does not have sufficient money to hire enough staff to give the information to which the Minister of Manpower and Immigration referred in replying to the hon. member for Red Deer, would he look into the matter and provide the National Energy Board with sufficient staff to supply that kind of information to Parliament?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): I will be glad to look into the matter.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST THAT PRESENT LEGISLATION AFFECTING RELATIONSHIP WITH GOVERNMENT BE REVIEWED BY COMMITTEE

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): My question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Would the minister consider referring in the next session the legislation which deals with the government's relationship with its public servants to a committee of the House for review, with power to recommend changes?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): We will certainly give consideration to that. I think there is no doubt that any legislative proposals which the government would put forward would go to a parliamentary committee.

Inquiries of the Ministry

POLLUTION

LAKE ERIE—DISCUSSION WITH UNITED STATES OFFICIALS —AGREEMENT WITH ONTARIO RESPECTING CANADIAN COMMITMENT

Mr. Charles Turner (London East): My question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Is the minister going to Washington tomorrow to discuss pollution of Lake Erie and, if so, has a firm agreement been reached with Ontario to honour the Canadian commitment to clean up our side of Lake Erie?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): The answer to both of those questions is yes, Mr. Speaker. The Secretary of State for External Affairs and I will be in Washington tomorrow to discuss the recommendations of the International Joint Commission. We are going there with an understanding in principle with the government of Ontario that we on our side of the international boundary line will carry out all commitments, including the construction of the capital works necessary to meet the high standards which the IJC has set for all of the Great Lakes.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

ACCEPTANCE BY SASKATCHEWAN GOVERNMENT AND COMPANY OF OFFER OF GRANT FOR PULP MILL

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): My question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Can the minister indicate whether the government of Saskatchewan and the participating company have accepted the offer of an industrial incentive grant for a pulp mill north of Meadow Lake, Saskatchewan?

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I know that the offer has been made but I do not know whether it has been formally accepted. I will inquire and advise the hon. member at a later date.

FINANCE

EFFECTS OF DECLINE IN CANADIAN DOLLAR EXCHANGE RATE

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance.

Could he advise the House whether the recent drop in the value of the Canadian dollar augurs well for Canadian business or whether it will have an adverse effect on the domestic market?

[English]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I think that with regard to an analysis of what has been happening to the Canadian dollar my hon. friend will have to wait for my budget speech next week. The Canadian dollar has moved down marginally in the past couple of weeks. This, of course, is a boon to Canadian exporters. It helps Canadian exporters.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Benson: On the other hand, of course, it increases the price of imports—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister should not make the budget speech now.

MEASURES TO RELIEVE EFFECT OF FREEING CANADIAN DOLLAR ON PULP AND PAPER INDUSTRY

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance.

We learned this morning that Price Bros., of Kénogami, will suspend its lumber operations before the end of the year, which will put 245 people out of work. This company also intends to close its plant for a month, thus laying off 1,200 employees. Of course, the situation of the Canadian dollar is blamed for that.

Since several pulp and paper companies are in the same circumstances, I would like to ask the minister whether he will take the necessary steps to assure the survival of those companies, when preparing his budget.

Mr. Speaker: I take the liberty to point out to the hon. member that his question must be interpreted as being a suggestion which the minister should take into consideration when introducing the budget.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, could I rephrase my question?

Mr. Speaker: We will return to it in a moment.

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker: I believe that the hon. member for Charlevoix wishes to put, in a different form, the question that he has asked a short while ago.

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, in view of the difficult situation in which the pulp and paper companies find themselves, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he will consider this situation in his budget so as to readjust the financial situation of the pulp and paper companies which, from day to day, face difficulties and are forced to lay off workers precisely because of the unpegging of the Canadian dollar?

[English]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I disagree with the conclusion reached by the hon. member. Of course we will take into consideration all submissions when preparing the budget. I would say, however, that the pulp and paper industry throughout the world has overcapacity at the present time. In the United States its profits went down by 33⅓ per cent in the first quarter.

GRAIN

FINAL PAYMENTS ON WHEAT, OATS AND BARLEY IN CURRENT CROP YEAR

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. Can the minister indicate whether in fact any final payments will be made to farmers for wheat, oats and barley in this crop year from the Canadian Wheat Board account and, if so, when?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the question as it relates to the current crop year is rather premature in view of the fact that the pools are all still open and active. In the case of the previous crop year, as the hon. member knows, the wheat pool is in the process of being finalized and the final details will be made known before very long. In the case of barley final payments have already gone out.

INCREASE IN WHEAT QUOTA FOLLOWING SALE TO RUSSIA

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the wheat sale to Russia announced last week, can the minister say whether the wheat quota will be increased in excess of the proposed eight-bushel quota which was mentioned earlier?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is not anticipated that the quota will move beyond eight bushels in the current crop year.

INFORMATION

APPROVAL OF ADVERTISING PROGRAMS RESPECTING CENSUS AND TAX CHANGES BY INDEPENDENT BOARD OF ADVERTISERS

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of Information Canada. Were the recent advertising and public information programs implemented by the government with respect to the census and the proposed expenditures with respect to taxation changes approved by an independent board of advertisers as recommended in the report of the government task force on information?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister without Portfolio): No, Mr. Speaker, but the report did not recommend any such approval.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I am referring to the report recommending the establishment of Information Canada, the usefulness of which I would not want to debate now, but can the minister tell the House when the government is going to implement the second recommendation in that report with respect to advertising, which does in fact set out that an independent board should be established to recommend policies to the government on whether contracts should be let and/or how much should be spent?

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Speaker, when the policy has been established it will be announced in due course.

CRIMINAL CODE

REQUEST THAT AMENDMENTS BE INTRODUCED AND OPPORTUNITY PROVIDED FOR STUDY

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the excellent practice he established in June last year when he presented the bail reform bill for first reading and allowed time for the purpose of it being studied by organizations and persons across Canada, would he do the same thing with regard to his proposed amendments to the Criminal Code, in particular the amendment proposing that criminal convictions should not be imposed on young persons who have been found guilty of offences that are not serious?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to do that with respect to certain proposed amendments to the Criminal Code.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCE

SUGGESTED ATTENDANCE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE AND LEADERS OF OPPOSITION PARTIES AT VICTORIA MEETINGS

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the government House leader. In view of the great amount of time and money spent on the work of the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution, and the stress placed by the government on the importance of the work of that committee, can the hon. gentleman assure the House that that body will be represented at the discussions in Victoria next week?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the joint chairmen of the Special Committee on the Constitution have been invited to attend the conference as observers, but that is information I would like to check.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that one of the joint chairmen of the Special Committee on the Constitution is a Liberal Member of Parliament and the other is a Liberal Senator, would the government House leader reconsider his position and permit the leaders of the opposition parties to attend the constitutional conference in light of what he has just said, or is this to be a Liberal cesspool?

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Greenwood.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is along similar lines. Would the government consider sending to the conference not simply the representatives of one party but the steering committee of the Special Committee on the Constitution so that all parties might have representation there?

NATIONAL DEFENCE

MONTMAGNY—USE OF ARMOURY DURING SUMMER

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Minister of National Defence, but as he is absent I shall direct it to the Acting Prime Minister.

Representations were made this afternoon in order to point out that the Montmagny armouries which, in recent years, accommodated some fifty young cadets during the summer, are not yet open. May I ask him if the Department of National Defence intends to keep these armouries open during the summer months?

Mr. Speaker: Once again, that is a suggestion or a representation made by the hon. member. He must assume that it will be considered. Maybe, in due time, the minister could answer the question.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT COUNCIL RECOMMENDATIONS—DISCUSSION BY MINISTER WITH MARITIMES' PREMIERS AT CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion if he plans on meeting with the four Atlantic premiers at the constitutional conference in Victoria to discuss with them the recommendations and strategy proposed to the government by the Atlantic Development Council?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): I will surely meet with them, Mr. Speaker, but I do not have any agenda at the moment.

Mr. McGrath: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister if the federal government has decided on a position with respect to the recommendations of the Atlantic Development Council?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think I mentioned in the House previously that my intention was to meet with the premiers, and on the next possible occasion I am going to do so.

[Mr. Speaker.]

CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCE

SUGGESTED ATTENDANCE OF LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION AT VICTORIA MEETINGS

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question relates to an earlier question on the constitutional conference. To remove the pollution or the cesspool part of the question, I would like to ask the President of the Privy Council, in his capacity as house leader, this question. If the joint chairmen of the constitutional committee are to be invited to the conference as observers, surely an invitation could be extended to the Leader of the Opposition, who is one of the main officials in the whole parliamentary process in Canada, to be there also as an observer. Will this be given just consideration in the just society?

Hon Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. gentleman on a number of counts, namely, the importance of the role of the Leader of the Opposition, and I believe that importance has been recognized by the government with respect to the constitutional conference.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I have not received an invitation to attend anything except the open sessions. May I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the joint chairmen of the constitutional committee are being invited to attend all sessions of the conference or simply the open sessions?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the joint chairmen have not been given any opportunity greater than that which would be accorded to the Leader of the Opposition. I am sure that would not be the intention of the government. It was because of the importance that we attach to the Leader of the Opposition's role that the invitation has been extended. My hon. friend may be just a little bit impatient. The opportunity to participate fully may come in some distant time for him.

An hon. Member: After the next election.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, since the President of the Privy Council in his answer to the Leader of the Opposition referred to the respect and honour in which the Leader of the Opposition is held and the position of the Leader of the Opposition at any conference and his position in the parliamentary process, may I ask whether this participation is to be a one-way street? Is the Leader of the Opposition to hear but not speak and really not see the conference which is at hand?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the hon. member for Calgary North has a supplementary.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to hear some clarification. I did not really understand what the House leader said. Are the joint chairmen to attend? If they are to attend the conference, will they be left out on the porch or allowed in the conference room? Let us have the facts.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the minister might like to reply to that question, but I point out that there are only a few minutes left before the end of the question period and perhaps we should go to another subject immediately after the minister's answer.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I think it ought to be made clear that this is a conference among governments, the federal government and the governments of the provinces, and the full representatives of all those governments will participate in the conference.

Mr. McGrath: Including a leader of an opposition party.

Mr. MacEachen: The conference is closed to all persons except the representatives of the governments. That is the rule of the game. The fact that others who do not happen to be members of any government are not included is not intended to be a slight on any of them. My hon. friend should understand that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but in view of that answer I must ask a further supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the Leader of the Opposition. I suggested a moment ago that, in view of the limited time left at our disposal, we ought to go to the next subject. However, the Leader of the Opposition will be recognized.

Mr. Stanfield: Does the Acting Prime Minister mean to imply that if a provincial government brings with its delegation someone who is not a member of that government, someone who is, for example, the leader of the opposition party in that province, he would not be admitted to the conference?

Mr. McCleave: That is what the minister said.

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker. I made no such statement.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, as it is important for all points of view in this country to be represented at the conference so that there may be an opportunity to hear the discussions, and as some of the provincial delegations will include opposition members, if it is decided to allow provincial representatives of legislative assemblies to sit in on the closed sessions, does the federal government intend to invite the Leader of the Opposition and the leaders of the other political parties also to sit in on the closed sessions at the conference in Victoria?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I believe I stated that the Leader of the Opposition had drawn an unwarranted conclusion, or had stated that I had stated something I had not stated. My hon. friend has, on that unstable premise, built another question which is as far from reality as the original observation of the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Bell: Explain.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have just about reached the end of the question period. Perhaps we might take up the last minute or two with supplementary questions on this matter.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, the premise of my question was not based on anything that was said by any previous questioner. I have attended some of these conferences and I know—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member kindly ask his question, because we have run out of time.

Mr. Douglas: As some of the provincial delegations made up of representatives from various political parties are to be allowed to sit in on the closed sessions, will the same principle apply to the representatives from this parliament who will attend the conference in Victoria?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I would have to check. I am not disputing—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: The minister has told us four different stories today.

Mr. MacEachen: —the factual statement made by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. It is not my statement. I have stated the position of the federal government. It is that the conference is a conference between governments. It is not a public conference. I am not speaking on behalf of any provincial government as to the composition of its representation at the conference. I am not answering the final point because I have not the knowledge as to what decision might be taken by the conference on the point raised by the hon. member.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, the President of the Privy Council has answered in part the supplementary question that I wish to put to him. Could we have an assurance from the Acting Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, that the Leader of the Opposition in Ontario will be in no better or higher position than the Leader of the Opposition in the Parliament of Canada at the Conference?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I should like to give that assurance to my hon. friend.

Mr. Stanfield: The minister would like to.

Mr. Nowlan: But would he?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that we are coming close to the end of our time, but this is a very important question. Will the Acting Prime Minister in the Parliament of Canada give us that assurance and not his desire to give it? Would he make the affirmation and say affirmatively that he will give it?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly satisfied to see both of them where they are at the present time.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day. Is the hon. member for Churchill rising on a point of order?

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege respecting the rights and privileges of Canadian citizens living in smaller communities and particularly in the community of Lynn Lake, Manitoba. My question of privilege arises as a result of the tremendous amount of publicity and advertising which has been distributed to Canadian householders with respect to the census now being taken.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member kindly resume his seat. He will appreciate that the only privileges he can claim at this time are his own parliamentary privileges or the privileges of this institution. He cannot rise at this time and claim the floor to claim the privileges of the citizens of Canada or of individual citizens. Parliamentary privilege is the privilege of the hon. member, individually. I assume that this is what he proposes to indicate to the Chair.

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Smerchanski: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We will have one question of privilege raised at a time. The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Churchill.

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Speaker, my point of privilege arises from the fact that I am also a Canadian citizen living in a small community.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows very well that parliamentary privilege has nothing to do with the statement which the hon. member is making now. He says that as a citizen he has privileges and he is attempting to claim those privileges now. That is not a point of parliamentary privilege, which is the only privilege the hon. member can claim and the only privilege he can put to the Chair at this time. Perhaps the hon. member might come to the point and indicate as quickly as possible what his point is.

Mr. Simpson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I was trying to bring to your attention and the attention of the House the advertising that the government is putting out in relation to the census. I have in my hand a letter originating from the office of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce outlining the method by which the census will be taken. In the letter it is explained how the census will be taken, and it says that there is one—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether the hon. member has considered that under the rules he has to give notice to the Chair. I have received no notice of the question of privilege which he now proposes to bring to the attention of the House. A question of privilege can be raised for the consideration of the House and the Chair without notice if it relates to a matter which arises as a result of current or immediate debate; at that point an hon. member may rise and state that he has a question of privilege. But this question relates to facts which to my knowledge did not arise earlier this day as part of the debate.

I cannot see how the hon. member can rise at this point and raise a question of privilege without giving notice to the Chair. I am anxious to be as lenient as possible in allowing the hon. member to state his point briefly, but it seems that he is getting farther and farther away from a legitimate question of privilege.

Mr. Simpson: I will be very pleased to give notice and bring this matter to Your Honour's attention tomorrow.

Mr. Smerchanski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I notice that the seating plan for the third session of the twenty-eighth Parliament is somewhat confusing. I would like clarification as to whether I occupy seat No. 167 or No. 168. I do not represent the constituency of Nickel Belt; I am the member for Provencher. There seems to be some confusion in this corner of the chamber about where the Liberal members are seated according to the numbers under the present seating arrangement. I would like clarification of this matter.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT, OBJECTS, POWERS, CAPITALIZATION, ETC.

The House resumed, from Tuesday, June 8, consideration of the motion of Mr. Benson that Bill C-219, to establish the Canada Development Corporation, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse).

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair was under the impression that the hon. member was rising on a point of order or a question of privilege. The hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) had the floor when the debate was adjourned yesterday.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, in trying to assess the reasons for the government's injecting the profit motive into the Canada Development Corporation as its primary operational motivation I noted three explanations. The first was to get rid of Crown corporations which have been an embarrassment to the government by virtue of their success. The second was the necessity of satisfying the investment interests of corporations in Canada which have funds they want to place somewhere. This would take care of both the first and second objectives. They could take the common property of all Canadian Crown corporations, such as Polymer, and turn it over to private investors. The third reason was to do something, after waiting around for eight years, so that the government would not be subjected to the embarrassment of having to put this matter in the next Throne Speech.

There seems to be a fourth reason. The fourth reason for having the profit motive in the Canada Development Corporation is really a form of political cowardice. It gets the government off the hook. If the Canada Development Corporation makes a decision that is not in the national interest and which is not approved by Parliament, the government can say that the objective of the CDC is to provide profit and therefore we cannot fault the government. The government is looking for an invisible hand to guide the Canada Development Corporation rather than to guide the objectives of national priority as determined by the Parliament of Canada. Judging from experience, this kind of political cowardice is not going to work. The government may get away with it for a little while, but it is not going to work.

We have had a similar experience in this respect. The government tried to operate the regional development program on this basis. Initially the program had hard and fast rules as to which areas would be entitled to assistance. The reason for adopting rigid formulas was to take the government off the hook with regard to making decisions as to the kind of development that should take place in various parts of Canada. That program had to be changed because it was too inflexible and did not work in the way that was promised. The government has now moved into a new area in respect of regional development. It exercises a much higher degree of discretion in terms of to whom grants shall be made and where development shall take place. When that change in the legislation was introduced in the House we pointed out that the government was embarking upon a dangerous policy. However, it was at least a policy that offered some form of success. The program has been notably successful. This area of discretion has given it any measure of success to which it can lay claim.

The same will happen to the Canada Development Corporation. It cannot be operated on a profit motive. You cannot avoid political responsibility when establishing a national development corporation. The government will learn this as the situation progresses. In discussing the Canada Development Corporation, one of the arguments of government members has been that to have the CDC under the jurisdiction of the government and subject to scrutiny by Parliament would be politically dangerous. They argue that people will exert political pressure on the government for development in certain areas and to support some industries which are not viable, suggesting that social problems be looked after rather than economic problems.

What is Parliament for but to tackle problems of this kind? Surely if a proposal is put to the government that it does not feel is justified or viable, it can deal with the situation. The government does not have to buckle under every kind of political pressure. No government and no Parliament has buckled under all kinds of political pressure to which this Parliament must be responsive. We cannot turn over the responsibility of Parliament to something that is profit motivated, namely, the Canada Development Corporation. That is what Parliament is all about: it must be responsive to the political pressures of our society and not evade them as is being attempted through the Canada Development Corporation. This is what it really is, political cowardice and an evasion of governmental responsibility. It is an attempt to have a profit-motivated body do the thinking which the government is refusing to do on behalf of the Canadian people.

This debate is drawing to a close; we are summing up our positions. Those of us who have fought hard and long for a Canada Development Corporation are disappointed with the dishonest approach the government has taken in the creation of the CDC. We are certain the Canadian people will understand this and that eventually the kind of CDC our party advocates will stand in place of the emasculated thing that the government is presenting to this House.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak on third reading of Bill C-219, an act to establish the Canada Development Corporation. Back in the beautiful and fabled province of Nova Scotia there is a story told around an area called Mahone Bay. In the days of the privateers a ship named the Teaser was being pursued. It sought refuge in Mahone Bay, where it was blown up by one of its crew who did not wish to be captured. Legend has it that today if you are in that area on a stormy and foggy night you can still see the ghost of the Teaser sailing before the wind with bare spars burning brightly in the fog. This is a ghost. Bill C-219 reminds me of the ghost of the Teaser because it has been around for a long time. Now it would appear that its skeleton has taken on some form and it has come back to the Commons.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Away back in 1963 the Speech from the Throne stated that the government planned to introduce a measure to establish a Canadian development corporation. Nothing happened during that session, however. In succeeding sessions the measure was mentioned but it was never introduced in the House. Finally, in 1971, a bill providing for the establishment of a large private corporation under government control has been introduced in the Commons. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) describes the corporation in these words:

> It will help develop and maintain strong Canadian-controlled and Canadian-managed corporations in the private sector and provide greater opportunities for Canadians to invest and participate in the economic development of Canada.

According to the Minister of Finance, the corporation is supposed to help shape and secure future Canadian development. It is to be a large-scale source of capital to create major new enterprises. It will join others in acquiring and rationalizing existing companies where competitiveness may be improved by merger, amalgamation or other corporate arrangements. These changes, the minister says, will reduce the risks of an undesirable degree of foreign control of the enterprises concerned.

The Minister of Finance states that the activities of the corporation will involve close relationship with the business and financial community. Able and experienced entrepreneurs will direct the corporation's operations to areas of critical importance in economic development—to high-technology industry, to resource utilization, to northern-oriented companies and to industries where Canada has a special competitive advantage. Generally, the CDC will not seek to exercise direct operating control of the corporations in which it invests and these corporations will not normally become CDC subsidiaries. Shares are to be sold to the public in competition with those of all other investment vehicles, and the bill specifically directs the CDC to invest for profit in the best interests of the shareholders.

The Canada Development Corporation is to have an authorized share capital of 200 million common shares without nominal or par value, and preferred shares amounting to $1,000 million with a nominal or par value not exceeding $1,000 each, divided into any multiple of $5. According to the minister, in order to enable the corporation to begin its operations without delay once the bill has been approved, the government will make $250 million available to it by undertaking to purchase its shares either directly or as an underwriter. Under this arrangement the government will subscribe $100 million in the first year and $75 million in each of the following two years. In addition, the bill provides authority for the government to lend up to $100 million to the corporation.

Again according to the minister, the Governor in Council will be given authority to sell to the CDC at a fair and reasonable price its interests in certain Crown-owned corporations such as Polymer Corporation, Eldorado Nuclear Limited, Panarctic Oils and Northern Transportation. The board of the CDC is to consist of between 18 and 21 directors, and until government holdings have been reduced to less than 50 per cent of the total issued and outstanding working shares the deputy ministers of the Department of Finance and of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce will also be members of the board.

CDC shares will count as authorized investments for insurance and loan and trust companies, subject to existing federal law. The CDC will not be an agency or a Crown corporation responsible to Parliament, but because it is created by an act of Parliament any change in its capital structure or in the powers of the corporation will require approval by way of a resolution passed by both Houses of Parliament.

In retrospect, we see that it took the government eight years in which to prepare this bill and present it to the House. I cannot help wondering why it has chosen this point in time to present the measure, bearing in mind that there are so many more pressing matters confronting us. Obviously, the government chose to wait eight years because it did not consider the establishment of the Canada Development Corporation essential to the economic development of the country. At the present time, when unemployment is high and inflation is still with us, it seems to me the bill provides a good diversion from the real problems of the day.

I cannot but wonder how many jobs will be created by the CDC. Where will it invest? How will it help curb inflation? The government gives the impression of being concerned about the economic development of the country, but it is by no means certain that the proposed corporation will be an instrument of such development. At the outset of its operations it will acquire four corporations, two of which are profit making, namely, Polymer and Northern Transportation, one which is losing a lot of money—Eldorado—and another, Panarctic, which is not yet making a profit. So much for development!

The assumption appears to be that an investment company established under government control will promote the creation of more capital for investment in Canada. I challenge this assumption on the basis that the government does not create capital. From my study of economics I conclude that additional capital can be created only by marshalling savings which would not otherwise be organized.

It is said the corporation will provide increased opportunities for Canadians to participate in the economic development of their country. I would remind hon. members, Mr. Speaker, that there are in Canada today many institutions which provide excellent opportunities for the small investor to participate in the economic growth of Canada. I am referring to the mutual funds. These funds are the custodians of sums exceeding the $2 billion proposed for the CDC and they are without exception eager to sell more shares to the public and enlarge their own investment operation.

The best expert advice and experience are available to serve the small investor in those funds. Shares are available at low cost, and in my opinion it is impossible to conceive an easier way in which Canadians may acquire a share in what the Minister of Finance calls the ownership and direction of business operations in this country. These funds hold enormous, sound investments in Canadian enterprises. Under legislation passed in 1960—I believe I am right in this—operating companies must derive 85 per cent of their gross revenue from Canadian investment sources if they wish to enjoy certain tax benefits.

It seems to me there can be no justification for the government entering into competition with existing business, especially when that business is competently and responsibly serving the public. The use of the enormous power of government in competition with Canadian business cannot fail to undermine confidence and create further uncertainty as to the future. The proposed arrangements for selling the stock of the corporation should be clearly understood.

When the shares go on the market the initial price will be $5 and no doubt all the resources of the government, all the advertising media to which it has access, will be marshalled to spur sales. Sales promotion will be extremely costly. Since the government's prestige will be at stake in the response of the public to the offering of the stock, we can expect the government to use every advantage open to it to push sales. The minister has plainly stated that support will also be sought from a wide variety of Canadian institutions including insurance companies, banks and trust companies. I consider this proposal dangerous in the extreme. I feel the government has no right to press such institutions to subscribe for stock in this new corporation. The government should not have the right to exert pressure on institutions to invest assets which are generally held in trust. There have been times in the past when governments have applied direct pressure on financial institutions to purchase their bond issues when facing difficulties in finding a market. In my opinion this type of tactic should not be permitted to be revived in any form.

The corporation is to provide financing for large Canadian enterprises which might otherwise be led to seek funds outside Canada with a consequent loss of ownership and control to non-Canadians. Just think what this particular clause means, Mr. Speaker. Any enterprise that can scare up a foreign takeover bid can then apply to the Canada Development Corporation and demand a bigger and better price. It seems to me that the corporation will provide a relatively captive market for businesses which their owners are anxious to unload at inflated prices.

It is also to be the function of the corporation to share in financing the initial development or expansion of large-scale industrial projects in Canada. It is said that existing channels in Canada are not adequate to finance large-scale projects, that a new channel must be created for this purpose. In my opinion this is simply not true. The fact that the yield on good equities at the present is around 3 per cent, compared with 5-3/4 per cent on government bonds and 8 per cent on five-year term certificates, clearly shows that Canadians are equity conscious and that existing channels are adequate to meet such needs if the investment is sound. Every experienced financier and businessman knows that the selection of risks is the essence of the success of any enterprise operating in the investment field. Good investments, including equities, are finding markets in Canada today. The riskiest of all would remain to be offered to the Canada Development Corporation.

If these are taken up and the corporation incurs heavy loss in consequence, I ask, Sir, will the Canadian taxpayer be required to bail-out the corporation? One of my concerns is the great pressures that would be exerted upon such a corporation in its selection of risks, that is to say, in the purchase of the capital stock of corporations engaged either in risk development of resources or marginal industrial projects. I can picture Members of Parliament, especially those on the government side, making special entreaties to the corporation on behalf of shaky enterprises in their constituencies. The responsibilities of management under those circumstances will be enormous. I cannot help but wonder where sound, experienced and competent management for such a mammoth corporation is to be recruited. It will certainly take a very long time to set it up with efficient management.

Another matter that puzzles and concerns me is the statement of the minister when he speaks of ensuring the independence of the corporation. The minister says that by selling shares to the public and having the shareholders elect some of the directors, the corporation will stand on its own feet, free of government control. At least the minister appears to recognize the inherent dangers that are implicit in the relationship between the government and the corporation, but the suggestion that the corporation will be independent of government is in my view a fantastic illusion.

It seems to me that if the treasury of Canada is to be called upon to purchase large blocks of the stock of the corporation, if it is required to purchase debentures of the corporation or to make loans to it up to an amount of $100 million, how then can the government and Parliament divorce themselves from their responsibility to the Canadian public for its operations? If Polymer and other Crown corporations are to be sold to the new corporation, how can the government and Parliament ignore their responsibility with respect to the operation of these Crown corporations? These are questions that have not been answered to date. Certainly they have not been answered in any of the debates that have taken place in this House.

In my opinion, neither the government nor Parliament can properly abdicate their responsibilities for such an institution, and the alleged independence of the corporation is a myth. If the day ever comes when this corporation shows a profit, can we be assured that the exigencies of the government, political or otherwise, will not enter into the declaration or withholding of dividends? In light of all these factors I cannot assume that this new corporation will operate independently of government. If the Canada Development Corporation grows to anything like the size pictured by the minister and invests substantially in the stock of other corporations, in my view its tentacles will spread like those of an octopus throughout the entire Canadian economy. When this happens we will be marching on the slippery slope to socialism from which there will be no return.

Another matter that puzzles me is this. Why have we not heard from the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) or the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans) in the debate on this bill? These former Liberal cabinet ministers, when speaking outside this House are loud in their condemnation of the government and its policies, and rightly so. I know that confession is good for the soul, Mr. Speaker, but this chamber is the place to make your voice heard. This is the place to stand up and be counted. So I ask, where are these two former cabinet ministers this afternoon? Why are they not here to speak out against the policies of this government and to stand against the worst government our country has ever had?

There are other objections to this legislation that cause concern to serious-minded Canadians. For example, what kind of persons are likely to constitute the board of directors? It is evident that the government will appoint the initial directors. The minister has indicated that as the sale of the capital stock of the corporation proceeds, the government will retain the right to appoint a small proportion of the directors. Who can guarantee that these men will be appointed without regard to partisan considerations? Who can guarantee that they will not feel obliged to act as representatives and mouthpieces of the government in all the important decisions that are taken by the board? In fact, decisions on the scale to be taken by this board might conceivably at times involve the prestige, even the political life of the present government.

In theory, the shareholders will be free to elect the other directors. But if the policy pursued by the board should be embarrassing to the government as principal shareholder, I ask you, Mr. Speaker, how long can the independence of the board be expected to continue? The stock of this corporation is to be redeemable at any time at the option of the investor. The price paid for common shares will be the closing sale price of the share on the principal stock exchange on the business day immediately preceding the date of giving notice of redemption, or if no bids or asking prices on the exchange are quoted for that business day the last closing sale price recorded on the exchange will be the price paid.

I would point out that to meet redemptions mutual funds are always in a position to liquidate high-class securities. Is this corporation to dispose of stocks in its portfolio on the market to meet redemptions? If so, in my opinion investments of the type that it is expected to hold would in many cases be unsaleable except at substantial loss. I believe that the size of this corporation and its position as a creature of the government will create a significant danger to its market operations. It could by its transactions influence and disturb the market in the most serious manner.

If the corporation purchases large blocks of stock of companies engaged in the development of resources or industries, is it going to be content to accept a minority position in such companies, or will it insist on holding control to protect its investment? In either case it would have to insist on the appointment of some directors, and in light of past performances these will all be Liberal supporters, which will give a political bias to this national corporation.

[Mr. Crouse.]

There are many other points of view which I could put on the record, but I believe I have said enough to indicate the reasons members of my party will not support this legislation when it comes to a vote in the House.

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): Mr. Speaker, having heard the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) and the hon. member who has just sat down, it seems to me that the days we have debated this bill will go down as black days in the House and the Canada Development Corporation will be the most awful thing to reach the Canadian people. If we listen to the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) we realize we have not yet reached the Valhalla their party would wish to accomplish through a Canada development corporation. Then we heard the minister state the government's position. I think it is about time I put forward the Liberal rationale behind this bill.

I direct the attention of the House back to 1962 or 1963 when discussion originated about a Canada development corporation. At that time Mr. Walter Gordon was the man who recognized some of our problems, and they were easily recognizable. One of the problems lies in why Canadian enterprise was not making headway compared with enterprise in the United States and other countries. It did not take long to find the answers. First, Canadian corporate law was not really suited to a wide distribution of shares. In most provinces the laws governing private corporations make it very costly for them to become public; and by and large we find that the market in Canada is speculative—people want to make a buck quickly and get out. It has not been an investment market. In the United States these corporations are under the control of the Federal Securities Exchange Commission and they operate under a definite set of laws. There are avenues through which a private entrepreneur can proceed. They can set up a syndicate and change a private corporation to a public corporation with wide distribution of shares, and at all times the minority shareholders are protected by the law. This was one of our ills.

Possibly the most difficult problem is that Canadians do not have investment capital. It was always presumed that money put away in savings as a result of hard work would be invested by Canadians in speculative or risk capital. It was found this was not so. The reason other countries have had greater success, especially the United States, is that there is a fantastic accumulation of capital, going back to the whaling days, and the investment of that capital has generated more money for risk investment. It was also a different type of investment.

Canadian history of investment in enterprise with public distribution of shares has never been very good. By and large public investment has been in gold and uranium mines. These ventures usually wound up in the hands of a small group in Toronto or Montreal living on Bridle Path or Post Road making a few million dollars and everybody else losing a few hundred dollars. The history of investment has not been bright. That is the reason for the thought behind the Canada Development Corporation, namely, to assist enterprise to develop. Since 1962 we have seen many examples of development corporations. They have existed from the Maritimes to British Columbia, and invariably few have been successful. I am speaking of the Newfoundland Corporation and the Maritime Corporation, among others. Very few have worked out and have been, if not unsuccessful at least not warranting further development.

Now the government has taken a new approach. It wants to develop an "instant" giant corporation. This, again, is not the answer because it loses sight of the original concept. I only intend to speak briefly but I would remind hon. members of some very cruel facts of the business world. A corporation or enterprise is successful because of the greed or selfishness of an individual or a small group of individuals. They want to make money and gain power. They want to gain an equity position in a structure which will be theirs. I put it to the House that corporations which have grown large and have lost control by a small group have usually wound up in bankruptcy.

There is no such thing as a corporation controlled by directors who have nothing to gain. Normally, enterprises work out well if the directors, the president, the vice-president in charge of sales, advertising, and so on, have something coming to them; usually it is share equity. A president is appointed and told that if the enterprise is successful he will be given or will have the option to buy a hundred thousand or a million shares, whatever it may be. The desire for power and gain keeps these corporations growing and becoming successful.

Naturally, a government type of development cannot offer this incentive and unfortunately we wind up with apprehensions of the type expressed here today. We build a mediocre-type corporation which does not do the right thing. Creating an "instant" giant of the four or five Crown corporations which Canada now has will not solve the problem. All it might do is diffuse the ability we now have in this field.

This will be the last chance I will have to advise the parliamentary secretary and the minister that there is still a great opportunity for the Canada Development Corporation if we return to the original purpose, and that is to assist the development of enterprise. When you examine all these problems you find that there are no buyers for shares because the law does not protect minority shareholders. The history of Canadian investment is such that if you guarantee an investor a return on his money, he will buy. Canadians are not too easy with the money they have saved and they will not invest if there is risk.

The position of the Canada Development Corporation could be very strong if it adopted an approach similar to that of Central Mortgage and Housing in the mortgage field. The corporation should work toward a program by which it could examine new or existing enterprises. It could then set a certain premium to be paid by the corporation. The corporation could put its stamp of guarantee on the shares. Then you would find growth.

This is not so strange. What I am really asking is that the small shareholder be put in the same position as large corporations. Many times I have invested money for clients on a short-term basis. I have purchased shares in large corporations. My clients were not willing to take the risk of a loss in the future. I went to a commercial banker and showed him a portfolio of shares which I required to cash six months hence. I asked how much it would cost to ensure the return of that amount of cash. He told me the premium, which I paid, and I was sure that six months later there would be at least that much money available. If there was more because the shares increased in value, my clients prospered: if there was less, the commercial banker took the loss.

What Canadians need, and must have before they invest in small enterprises and in the growth of an enterprise with a wide distribution of shares, is this type of guarantee. In a similar way the Canada Development Corporation could be very successful. It could examine and scrutinize all corporations and then approve some as good ventures. It could give the stamp of approval to sound enterprises which warranted a wider distribution of equity shares. The CDC should state to shareholders that it will give a guarantee on the premium.

If the contemplated approach is used, I do not think the future will be entirely black—but let us face it, it will not help the individual enterprise in Canada grow and there will still be the tendency for Canadian entrepreneurs to sell out to Americans who can do this sort of thing on a large scale. I urge the government to review its position within the structure of the act so that, as I have stated, it will have the power to use the CDC as an instrument to guarantee the shares of companies with a promising and worth-while future.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, at this stage of the bill I intend to be very short, which perhaps will be a surprise to some of my colleagues in this chamber. However, it is possible to be short and still be succinct and relevant.

As I rise to speak on Bill C-219 to set up the Canada Development Corporation there are many mixed thoughts in my mind. But in a philosophical sense, when we speak of the CDC in this day of the abbreviated form, whether it is IBM, GMC, 3-M or ATT—and now CDC—one can almost write a poem about abbreviated forms of iambic-pentameter time according to Shakespeare and everything else.

My concept of the CDC, which differs from that of several of my friends to the left, would be more in the form of another abbreviated phrase. I suggest that rather than "CDC" it could be "4S's". The four S's are "sop, sham and shabby substitute". Without going into detail, I believe the bill we are debating is a real sop to the nationalistic mood in Canada as in our 104th year we Canadians still try to define our national id, our national identity. I have nothing against that, but I question whether the CDC will produce some of the strength for the national identity that we all want.

It may sound fine to some intellectuals who think we are trying to buy back the past or preserve the future, but from the debate we have had we know there is disagreement in this House concerning whether the bill will do all that its backers and opponents would like it to do. It may be fine for the founding fathers of an independent Canada movement to point to the CDC and say it will help us control our economy and the integrity of the corporate enterprise and/or individual enterprise. But having read the bill and having listened to some of the debate in the House I say that because it does not go far enough—like my friends in the NDP—it is a sop to the nationalistic mood of this country.

The second "s" in my equation is that Bill C-219 is a sham to realistic economic planning because it attempts to balance the unbalanceable. It attempts to equate the motive for profit and all the enterprises where profit is the incentive. I am not against profit and certainly not against incentive, but I suggest that in this type of corporation which is supposed to do so much for Canada you cannot have the profit equation on the cash register on one hand and the necessity for development on the other. I suggest they are almost irreconcilable. I do not mean by that that you cannot have, through development, some profit. Obviously you can in the way private enterprise works in Canada, with all the state control we have.

My friends to the left may want more state control. I understand their point of view. I sympathize with it but I do not agree with it on all occasions. Through development may come profit, but you cannot have it the other way around if you are planning for the logical economic development of Canada. If your profit motive is the incentive for what you do, obviously you will remain outside a lot of the barren areas of Canada which need development.

My first "s" was a sop for the nationalistic movement in Canada and all the founding fathers, including Walter Gordon and other notables. The second "s" is that I believe sincerely—I do not like that word very much—it is a sham to realistic economic planning because you cannot balance profit with development. Through development may come profit, but through profit you may never have development. I have listened to the learned arguments of my friend from Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) and all those who have contributed so constructively to this debate, and I say that the last "s" in my 4S's is negative suggestion. That is admitted, but perhaps we in the opposition are cursed because we can only be negative from time to time. My last two "S's" are for the words "shabby substitute". I suggest the proponents of this bill are trying to perpetrate upon the Canadian public a shabby substitute for a relevant and viable vehicle for economic growth.

There is no doubt, as we look around and see all the indices, tables and so forth which are available from the Bureau of Statistics and other places, that we need economic growth in this country. But I question very definitely whether Bill C-219—giving it all the benefit of the doubt, having read all its terms and having heard the explanations of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and his parliamentary secretary—will produce the relevant and viable vehicle for economic growth which we so desperately need and anxiously await in Canada. Here I may differ very much from my friends to the left and perhaps many of my friends across the way who sometimes seem closer to my friends to the left than I am. That may be the case and they will have to live with it. However, my philosophy in the whole question of economic growth is that government should stimulate policies for development, and not develop legislative structures or legislative vehicles like the CDC in an effort to pretend that we have development.

We need over-all economic policies to move us up to the next step on the ladder. No one pretends we have reached our goal, but I suggest that in that step by step process up the economic ladder it is a shabby substitute to perpetuate Bill C-219 for the concept that was developed by the Walter Gordon's of Canada, and to pretend in this chamber that this bill even comes close to what the Walter Gordon's and the Alvin Hamilton's used to say about the necessity for legislation which would allow Canadians to develop our country and invest in Canadian industry.

It is anticipated that we will have a budget on June 18. I do not know why there is not yet an economic, across-the-board policy which would discriminate in favour of Canadians developing Canadian industry. During the life of the twenty-eighth Parliament it has been an accepted fact in committee hearings, because of the white paper, the evidence of the Minister of Finance and of many other Canadian economists, that there should be a capital gains tax in Canada. I am not arguing for or against that question today but I hope to have the opportunity when we debate the budget, depending on what the Minister of Finance does, to express my opinion that in this area alone there is potential for a viable policy for economic growth with a capital gains tax which would discriminate in favour of Canadians.

If I or other Members of Parliament—whether or not we have a pay increase—had any money left to invest after meeting our tax load, which is the same as that of the people in the press gallery and of people outside, although some misguided people might think we are protected, and wished to invest in a Canadian industry and realize a profit, it might be good policy for us to reinvest in a Canadian enterprise and not have to pay a capital gains tax on it. On the other hand, if I invested in an invidious U.S., British or French company I would have to pay a Canadian capital gains tax. In that way I suggest seriously we would be doing more for our economic development potential than is pretended in Bill C-219, which is supposed to develop a corporation to stimulate growth of Canadian industry.

Having said all that, I shall have no hesitation in voting against Bill C-219 because it is a sop to the nationalistic fervour of this country as we are trying to reach out and discover who we are, and I am all for that. However, I say it is a shadow and a pretence to think we will find solace in the CDC. I say it is a sham and it is not realistic economic planning because, as my friends to the left have said so well, especially the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) in his contribution to this debate, you cannot have the profit motive and the development necessity. If you turn them around, you may get some profit, but you will never get development if you use profit as the catalyst. Third, it is a shabby substitute for a relevant economic policy.

For those reasons, which I say add up to "4S's", sop, sham and shabby substitute, I will vote against this bill—and those are better reasons than many others which have been advanced for voting against other government bills. I wonder, in a philosophical way, if the CDC as it will be established under Bill C-219 is not another example of this government's preoccupation with culture and constitutions. I say this advisedly, not wanting to detract from the necessity of defining what Canadian culture is, whatever it may be, and it is an opening process, an evolving process. The culture that we have today is obviously far different from what we had 50 years ago and from the concept of the Fathers of Confederation.

In like fashion, when I refer to constitution I do not refer solely to the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) and his government's preoccupation with an amendment to the BNA Act, with an amending formula or with the division of powers as between one provincial government and other provincial governments and the federal government. All these are very necessary and important—but in so many bills that we have had before us as legislators the government opts for the structure, for the Constitution, rather than for the reality which the Constitution is supposed to maintain.

You only have to consider the farm bill, Bill C-176, which was supposed to set up a framework to bring about a new millenium in agriculture in Canada. The minister responsible for the Wheat Board has contributed in part to that debate and so have hon. members on this side from time to time. But a bill like C-176, which creates a national farm marketing agency, by itself does nothing for agriculture. It is the producers who count in agriculture, and only then is there need for some regulation and control.

In like fashion we have here the CDC. Everyone talks about economic development and about Canadians owning Canada. I suggest that we go about it back to front, which is a kind way to put it, because the CDC by itself, and especially with the restrictions in this bill, will not do much to help the average Canadian to produce and participate in our economic growth. I almost hope I am proven wrong, although I do not think this will be the case. I submit that, for example, a change in the fiscal or the taxation policy could do more with a sweep of the pen than we are doing with all the words in this bill.

The government thinks that the government reorganization bill will make for more efficient government. I question that. But before trespassing too far let me say that I hope I will have an opportunity to make a speech in this chamber on what I mean when I say this government is preoccupied with culture and with constitutions in various forms. Even though I am a member of a party that is opposed to the government, I went through the election in 1968, as the Prime Minister did, with the secret hope that we might accomplish in this chamber and in the country something that he was given a mandate to do. But I suggest that because of his preoccupation with constitutions, with culture and with all the structures that are involved, he has fallen by the wayside. Now he has to rely on sorties to Russia, China and other romantic spots in order to gild the lily. But that is another debate.

So far as Bill C-219 is concerned, I firmly believe the government should stimulate policies for economic growth and not create companies for the Canada Development Corporation to invest in, which is all we are doing here.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, for a long time members of the New Democratic Party and of the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation before that, were in favour of establishing a national organization through which average Canadians could invest some of their savings to develop various segments of the Canadian economy. Socialists across Canada have for years supported that proposition. Now it is a matter of regret to us that the government, which has stolen so many planks from our program, has taken this particular plank and dressed it in such garb that it is unacceptable to those who believe in the principle that it is supposed to espouse.

It seems to me that only those Liberals who believe in political expediency, who believe in a return to themselves, could support the Canada Development Corporation as proposed in this bill. It seems to me that the CDC is unlikely to do much for the Canadian public despite the fact that the government has decided that its investment decisions must be profit-oriented.

I have been listening to the speeches made in this debate. I was particularly interested in the speech made last night by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees). When he was a minister of the Crown he was able to develop the philosophy that everybody in his department should get out and participate in the achievement of its aims and objectives. That was the Department of Trade and Commerce. He gave everyone in it a set of cuff-links inscribed to the effect that they should get off their fannies and go to work. If leadership is given it is well known that it will attract large-scale support. I think this was proven in that case.

I am not interested in a profit-motivated corporation. While I am not experienced in finance, not even to the extent of handling my own finances with any great ability, I was impressed with the remarks of the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) who pointed out a number of important facts. The first fact he mentioned is that the Canadian public only invests in sure returns. Canadians do not want to speculate and, God bless them, I can realize why. For many years I was a miner. I saw Bay Street and James Street sell every kind of moose pasture in northern Ontario, moose pasture that did not have a trace of minerals in it. These people made their sales on the basis of all kinds of promises. I say that the gangsters in Toronto have financed Toronto by selling moose pasture in various parts of the country. Anyone who knew where those moose pastures were simply was not interested in investing money in that kind of game.

Other investors are those who want to invest a buck in a lottery, hoping, on a million to one chance or a hundred million to one chance, to win half a million dollars. The odds are fabulous but they are willing to speculate a small amount of money. But as the hon. member for York East pointed out, most people who invest have saved their money diligently, usually at some cost to themselves, and they put it into long-term, low-interest investments in the United States from which they are sure of getting their money back and are satisfied with a reasonable though low interest return.

I believe there is a new kind of investor emerging in Canada. These are the young people who have not had things so hard in earning their money. Of course, many young people now are having difficulty finding jobs through which to earn money. But young people are interested in the development of Canada, in the development of Canadian industry, in the development of businesses that will employ other young people. They would be willing to invest through a Canada development corporation such as that envisaged by my party.

Comments have been made about the investment of public money in the Maritimes, about particular investments in Newfoundland and in Saskatchewan. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), who is responsible for the development of many fine programs in Canada, told me that the government of Saskatchewan launched many developments through a provincial corporation similar to the CDC, and that less than 1 per cent of its investment was bad. The Saskatchewan investments were not made for the purpose of profit. They were made for the purpose of development. A large number of them had to do with utilities, the development of water, sewage and electricity services on which the return averaged 6 per cent, and on investments other than in utilities the return to the people of Saskatchewan averaged 16 per cent.

It is true that the provincial corporation lost money investing in a shoe factory. Why did it invest in a shoe factory? The reason was that the people of Saskatchewan were paying prices that were a third higher than those charged Canadians elsewhere for shoes. The people concerned admit that the Saskatchewan shoe factory produced a coarse product which did not meet the high standards set by Hart, Dack and other major shoe producers. But within a very short time the price of all shoes sold in Saskatchewan was greatly reduced, so the local factory was allowed to fail. However, through the result achieved it did serve the people of Saskatchewan very well.

It seems to me that any Crown corporation interested in development should have as its first and prime interest not profit but the interest of the people it serves. Are we to get rid of Polymer simply because that corporation, in making money, is performing in a manner that goes against the government's philosophy? The government is not unhappy when the CBC loses money; it thinks that is justified. It is not unhappy when Canadian National Railways do not make money. We forget that we carry the original debt with the original interest and that we did not contribute to the original purchase of CNR. The government carries this debt and is pleased to see that railway lose money. Why, Mr. Speaker? It is a Crown corporation, and Crown corporations are supposed to lose money!

On the other hand, the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse)—who I am sure is more of a Conservative than many of his colleagues—expressed the Conservative position with respect to this bill. He suggested that the government has no business monkeying with the financial development of this country. That, I thought, was a good Conservative position. The hon. member, however, does not remember that one of Ontario's largest Crown corporations was developed by Sir Adam Beck, an outstanding Conservative. He instigated development of a hydroelectric complex and wanted to manufacture cheap light bulbs which would burn forever, if that could be done. They were not to be like General Electric bulbs which will last 200 hours if you are lucky, or which will last 800 hours if you buy the better ones, if you are lucky. The company makes a commercial bulb which will save a man climbing a lamp post every few days because it may last up to 20 years. The hon. member does not realize that many Conservatives believed that people were more important than enterprises, than profits, and so on. They believed that people were the important factor and that governments should be more concerned about people and less about profits, prices or the other considerations that are involved in industrial profits.

The government has hamstrung this corporation. It will not be allowed to invest in corporations with a capitalization of less than $1 million. CDC is to take over and, I presume, operate corporations that are now successful. CDC will not be allowed to enter highly speculative areas and will not be allowed to go into areas of little or no profit. Mr. Speaker, the young people of Canada today believe that we should buy back Canada, that we should get control of Canada, and they do not particularly sympathize with the big companies. I heard a representative from the pulp and paper industry on television last night saying that his industry has done much to control pollution, that this has cost a great deal of money and "nobody gives us any credit".

The Manitoba government is suing a pulp and paper company for about $35 million because the company polluted a river 600 miles away. Sure the industry has done something about pollution. Our young people say to them, "You must either clean up the pollution or close down." They are also saying, "Let's buy back Canada." Many of us believe that this will be difficult. I am sure that even the most conservative person believes that it is possible for private investment to help the development of natural resources in a way that may mean that the returns, if there are returns, are not necessarily in the form of profits.

A long time ago we decided that many public utilities should not be in the profit-making field. Many of us believe that investment in development areas need not be considered as coming within the profit-making field.

I have heard all kinds of nasty remarks about the intrusions of government into the development of industries in the Atlantic provinces. I am an outsider so far as the Maritimes are concerned, although I have visited the maritime provinces a number of times in the past few years. I was in Nova Scotia a week ago and was surprised on visiting the town of New Glasgow, to see the terrific amount of development which has taken place in the area. Of course, the development was not like that of the suburbs of Toronto. The town was not like Calgary. It was not going ahead like Hamilton. But the change that has taken place since I was there previously is remarkable, Mr. Speaker.

It may be that the Atlantic Advisory Council and agencies of government which have participated in the development of industry in the area have not made money from some of these developments. In that way the agencies have not been successful. Nevertheless, in the sense that the community will grow and that industry will develop in future years, those agencies have been successful because the development could not have been possible without their intrusion.

Today a number of questions concerning Panarctic Oils were asked. Panarctic is a corporation 45 per cent owned by the government, the rest being owned by private industry. Why the government did not have the guts to make its share of that venture 50 per cent or 60 per cent, I do not know. They certainly did not take any chances on that investment. There is now a fabulous development on islands off the Northwest Territories, and they have only scratched the surface. This company has been successful, destructively successful. If the company develops the large area it has blocked off, it will be even more fabulously successful and the government will be embarrassed. So what has the government decided to do? The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) indicated today that Panarctic has begun farming out its business to Imperial Oil. Has Imperial Oil ever farmed out anything to Panarctic? Would it ever do that? I will bet they would not. Yet Panarctic is to farm out its business because it has become too successful and the government is embarrassed.

I hope that the investment which the public will make in the Canada Development Corporation will meet with success. The corporation ought to be successful. On the other hand, there ought to be some failures inasmuch as the corporation should undertake development that private enterprise will not touch. The days when you could make a fast buck are gone. You cannot move into a forest, take out 10 per cent of the resources, destroy the rest, pollute the area, take your money and get out. You cannot go into a mine, take out some ore, if you are lucky, then take your money, invest it in another area and get out. Those days are finished. They are not finished by reason of the introduction of this bill. They are finished because our young people will not stand for the environment being ruined. They will not stand for the exploitation in which industry indulges.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that there is a role for a Canadian development corporation. It should develop complexes in various parts of Canada and primarily in the primary resource areas. It should develop our resources, process them in a logical fashion and sell the finished product. Japan, the United States and most of the industrialized countries of Europe will be crying out for any raw materials that we can produce. I am aware that we have a surplus in uranium, copper and perhaps nickel. We certainly have a surplus of every agricultural commodity that we produce. However, this surplus situation is only temporary. Anyone who wishes to project the world demand for industrial development will realize that these resources must come from the countries which have the resources. Canada is one of these. In my opinion, as far as industrial processing is concerned, Japan will buy our iron, steel and other resources that can be developed to a degree. I do not suggest that we go into prefabrication in these areas, but that we finish the materials.

During my recent visit to Nova Scotia I was surprised when asked whether I was interested in subsidizing the transportation of steel to the province for the manufacture of boxcars. I said absolutely not. There is a steel mill in Nova Scotia. It can produce the steel that is required for these boxcars; they have foundry facilities and they can produce steel. If we provide the wherewithal by subsidizing the cost of moving sheet metal from Hamilton to Nova Scotia to prefabricate boxcars, why not prefabricate the boxcars being made in Hamilton?

Canadians are in a position to invest their savings in a corporation that will develop many of the resource-based industries which are desperately needed to provide jobs in areas in which it is almost impossible to create employment. Some of these projects will not be successful. They should not be successful; some should fail. There is no reason why the shoe factory in Saskatchewan should not fail. It does not matter a damn if it fails. It did not matter when the brick factory failed, because it served a purpose for the people of Saskatchewan; it enabled them to get the benefit of a better product at a lower price because the government was willing to develop it even at financial loss. Who carries the financial loss? It is all the people, and they have expressed a desire to do so.

Most of the resource-based development in this country could be developed in a highly successful way. It could be a success for all the people of Canada. It would prohibit buying-out new resource areas and would prohibit their pollution. As sure as I am standing here, no Crown corporation of any description would be allowed to pollute to the degree of the exploiters of the resource-based areas of Canada.

I will oppose the Canada Development Corporation as a matter of expediency. I will oppose the proposition that it must be based on profit. I do so because the Canadian public demand the development of a corporation in which they can invest their money. Despite what is being said about the importation of foreign capital, Canadians invest more in the United States than Americans invest in Canada. Canadians will invest in finance companies, insurance companies, AT&T and other American corporations. On the other hand, American corporations invest very little in Canada. Most of the money they invest in Canada is returned to them in a very short period. The former Minister of Communications, the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans), has said that our tax laws permit a write-off of between $1 billion and $2 billion per year through tax concessions. This means that investors who put their money into corporations in Canada will get their money back right away.

In my area Texas Gulf is being allowed a five-year tax-free period. This corporation will make millions of dollars in the first few years. It will probably be able to pay off its total capital investment with the money which is given to it in tax concessions. We have made concessions to industry and this has not worked. A large portion of Canada is not developed to any extent except in the basic resource development area. In the basic resource development area large sums of capital are being invested. A very small labour content is involved in that investment. In most cases it amounts to between $50,000 and $150,000 per job. I suggest that other industries dependent upon that resource will provide a very large labour content with much smaller investment.

As the Canada Development Corporation develops it must be made a Crown corporation. The government must control the development. This must be a partnership with the Canadian public so they will know where they can invest their money. As the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) pointed out, Canadians should be able to invest their money and get back as much as they invested. Canadians want to invest their money in the development of this country and be able to withdraw it when the need arises. They are not interested in making a huge profit on their investment. I am not talking about the speculators or the buyers of penny football pool tickets; I am talking about people who are interested in participating in the orderly development of Canada. They will participate if they are given an opportunity to have a say in how this country develops. This will not be done at a board meeting; it can only be done through Parliament.

The corporation must reflect the wishes of those who will be investing. These will be the people who wish to invest $1,000 or $2,000 in a corporation which will develop their country. They will do this on the basis of patriotism and the desire to have Canadian financing and, above all, Canadian control over our industries. For this reason they will participate in the development of the corporation. Canadians are not interested in investing in a corporation in which most of the companies have a hand, in which most of the companies will make their maximum investment, in which there will be a large amount of money and where the government will be making concessions so that the corporation will be successful. The only people who will benefit from that kind of corporation are those who have shares and participate as they would in any other company. That is not what Canadians want. They want an opportunity to participate in the development of Canada by Canadians, for Canadians. This is what they want and what they will demand.

If the government, with its majority, passes this bill it will find it will be unacceptable to the public. The public will demand that it be changed to make it their corporation so they can invest and participate in its development. The general public will demand that a corporation of this kind should build a pipeline through the Mackenzie Valley for the transportation of gas. Others would be able to use it on payment of a fee, but the Canadian people would own it. Thus, Canadian institutions responsible to Parliament would decide where the development would begin and where it would end. It would be in a position to control the amount of gas which could be exported. Such a corporation would have an immediate interest in building an oil line from western to eastern Canada so that all Canadians could benefit from the abundance of Canada's western oil and would have no need to depend on the whims of Nixon as to how much Canadian oil should be admitted and what would be traded in return for other concessions.

The young people of Canada are not tied to money as our generation is. They are not tied to the idea of bigness being necessarily good. They do not believe that corporations are bound to be right because they are large. They will be informed in their universities that most of the big corporations are extremely inefficient, that most of the leaders of big corporations are incompetent. We can see this from the names of those appointed to the boards of many of these corporations. There is no need for them to be efficient. They need only be big enough to buy up the competition. Then they can be as inefficient as they wish and still take all that the market will bear.

The new generation of Canadians has a different outlook, different aspirations. If the government is not smart enough to change, it will find that passing this emasculated document which is masquerading as a bill to develop Canadian resources, masquerading in the form of a crusader to buy back Canada, will not serve their interests in the least. If they think this bill will satisfy a much more enlightened electorate than we have had before, they are due for a big surprise.

I oppose this hoax on the Canadian public. I look forward to a day when more Members of Parliament believe Canadians should participate to a far larger extent in their own development by contributing through their taxes and investing their money in this country so they can be masters in their own house. I look forward to that day and I believe it is not far off.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): It is not my intention to take much time on third reading, Mr. Speaker. I fully endorse the speech which my hon. friend has just delivered. He has very ably outlined the position of the New Democratic Party so far as the Canada Development Corporation is concerned.

Needless to say, our group is disappointed that no amendments have been accepted by the government. In the last two or three days we have moved a number of amendments which we believed would improve the legislation, but of course they were steam-rollered down. Unless the economic tactics of the government are changed, the only place in which it will have a majority will be on the floor of this House. The people of Canada are demanding that economic changes be made, and they are not getting these changes: they are not getting them through legislation, they are not getting them through this emasculated CDC bill we are now debating.

The legislation before us is woefully weak and it is deliberately designed to further weaken the small publicly-owned and controlled sector of the Canadian economy. It is a sop to private enterprise and a clear indication that the government intends to do little to arrest the increasing control which foreign ownership is exercising over the Canadian economy. In fact, the legislation proposes to phase out some of our most successful Crown corporations. It is an indication that the fire sale of our best Canadian resources will continue to be the policy of this administration. I have no hesitation in saying this. All the indications of the last three years are that this is to be the program of the government.

The legislation we are considering limits investment by the CDC to the shares of corporations in the $1 million and over bracket. The corporation will not be allowed to invest in smaller companies, to channel money into new resource projects which are needed to bolster our economy. This point has been raised time and time again in the debate. The corporation will be allowed to purchase four of our highly successful Crown corporations, Polymer, Eldorado Nuclear, Panarctic Oils and Northern Transportation Company. These corporations are now 100 per cent Canadian owned and controlled. They are being run efficiently and over the years they have returned substantial dividends to the Canadian people. Yet the government insists that the CDC be given a chance to take these corporations.

The fields which should be tackled are those which are foreign-dominated and foreign-controlled. As my hon. friend from Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) has just said, the young people, the new generation will not stand for this type of nonsense very much longer. Either these changes will be brought about by the House of Commons or they will vote in people who will be ready to make the decisions necessary to bring our economy back under the control of Canadians. Why must we sell these 100 per cent Canadian-owned corporations to the CDC? There will certainly be some investment in the corporation on the part of foreign-owned Canadian subsidiaries. Let us start investing in those secondary industries based on present resource development projects or in those sectors of the economy which are owned and controlled by foreign interests.

In my opinion the government has its priorities in a real mess. Its whole approach to economic problems over the last three years has been a tragedy for the Canadian people. The results of its economic program have been massive unemployment, inflation, a shortage of adequate housing, an environmental crisis and a tax structure which is completely outmoded. There are increasing indications of dissatisfaction with government policies. This is evident from the resignation from the cabinet of the former Minister of Transport and the former Minister of Communications; they resigned because of their dissatisfaction with the government's program and policies. This mood is spreading rapidly and the government should pay heed to it. As an example I would quote from the Toronto Star of June 4, 1971. This article, written about an economist who is disillusioned by the program presented by the government, reads:

• (4:40 p.m.)

Another economist, Max Stewart of the University of Alberta in Edmonton, who supported Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau in the last federal election, said, "I think Kierans' analysis is very sound, sounder than the one the government has."

But "it will have zero impact on Ottawa. They've closed their minds and they're impregnable."

There are dozens of other quotations I could make. The signals are up. Has the government lost all sense of reality that it does not recognize trouble when it sees it?

Mr. Francis: Get to the subject.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I heard remarks to my right to the effect that the hon. member who has the floor might be wandering a little and I think those remarks might have some substance. I would ask the hon. member to remember that we are now on third reading of the Canada Development Corporation bill.

Mr. Harding: I thought I was pretty well on target here, Mr. Speaker. This party has fought for Canadian control of our economy and we hope to bring that about. One of the instruments to bring it about is a CDC along the lines that my colleague has just finished explaining to the House. This is why we are very unhappy with the piece of legislation the government has brought in called the Canada Development Corporation Act. We have pointed out on many occasions that Canadian industry was being bought up by foreign-controlled corporations with the profits they made in this country. We have pointed out how many foreign-controlled corporations were receiving preferential treatment and did not pay just taxation on their returns. It seems that many economists in Canada share this view that was so ably put by the former Minister of Communications—

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Parliamentary secretary is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Mahoney: The hon. member appears again to have left the bill and to have returned to his text.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It seems to the Chair that the hon. member who has the floor was returning to the bill. He was dealing with foreign ownership of Canadian corporations and Canadian assets and this seems to me relevant to the subject of the CDC.

Mr. Douglas: But it is a forbidden subject on the other side.

Mr. Harding: My Liberal friends do not like the views expressed by their former colleague in St. John's. I am just putting some of his remarks into this context in order to show the need for amendment to the bill even at this late stage. I was indicating that the former Minister of Communications, in a speech to the Canadian Economists Association at their annual meeting at St. John's, Newfoundland, six days ago made some very interesting remarks on the subject of taxation, investment, where we as a nation should be going—

Mr. Francis: What has that to do with this bill?

Mr. Harding: It has a lot to do with the bill. This is one of the instruments for getting Canadian investment in Canada, one of the things at which we should be aiming. The former minister was pointing out just where the government was going off the rails. His speech is worth reading and quoting and I congratulate him on speaking out on these fundamental problems, for we must face them if we are to solve the economic problems of this country. Some of the comments on foreign investment made by the hon. member for Duvernay are interesting. He pointed out that he felt investment stimulants or incentives have contributed more than any other single policy to the concentration of U.S. ownership that now exists in Canada. He went on to say:

—it is not what the Americans have done to us but what we have done to ourselves.

In other words, he is saying that it is the problems that we in this House of Commons have created which have caused the economic trouble in which we now find ourselves. He went on to point out that investment incentives apply precisely to those industries where foreign ownership is most concentrated—in the mining, petroleum and manufacturing industries. This is very pertinent to the bill and I should like to quote from page 11 of his speech as follows:

Investment incentives (depreciation, depletion, three year exempt mining income) apply precisely in those industries where foreign ownership is most concentrated, i.e. mining, petroleum and manufacturing. Total sources of funds for American subsidiaries in Canada in 1968 amounted to $2,611 million—

Funds from the United States amounted to $127 million or less than 5 per cent. Within Canada was provided $1,027 million in net income, $864 million in depreciation and $539 million from Canadian financial institutions. Legislation to inhibit further inflows would be useless. Our tax laws are such that increasing ownership, takeovers and control of Canadian firms can be entirely financed from within our own economy.

What the hon. member for Duvernay is saying in simple language is that Canadian resources and industries are being bought up by Canadian money. And he is right. He then suggested remedies that could be taken. He pointed out that in 1968 less than 5 per cent of the funds of Canadian subsidiaries in Canada came from the United States, that over 95 per cent came from within Canada. This was also clearly indicated by surveys made last year by David Belli, an economist with the United States department of commerce who did a survey of U.S. subsidiary operations in Canada. He indicated that about 94 per cent of U.S. subsidiary investments in Canada are effected with Canadian funds, and that is in the records. He also indicated that in 1968 only $127 million were provided directly by parent companies or other United States financial institutions, and the ratio in the financing of U.S. subsidiaries in Canada in that year was about 19 to one in terms of Canadian and U.S. funds. For 1969 the picture is worse than that.

He also spoke about taxation, and this question ties in very closely with the bill since industry must make an adequate return to the Canadian people. The hon. member for Duvernay had some very interesting comments to make on taxation and produced some more than interesting tax tables which bear repeating. He pointed out, as I mentioned earlier, that incentives are provided for investment in certain industries. He also made crystal clear—

Mr. Francis: Again I raise a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, I have tried to relate the hon. member's remarks to the subject before the House. He is now talking about tax tables, tax yields and investments. The budget debate is not very far away. Perhaps the hon. member should go back to his files and pick out the speech that he intended to make in this debate instead of the one he is making at the moment.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has been listening closely to the hon. member who has the floor and is aware that other hon. members feel there might be a question as to whether he is in order. In my opinion the hon. member has in fact been in order. As I understand his remarks, and I may be mistaken in this matter, he has been referring to such things as the accumulation of capital in Canada and the taxation policy which, as he indicated, will have relevance to the amount of capital available for the purchase of assets in Canada. While I understand the point made by the hon. member for Ottawa West, I think this debate is broad enough that the hon. member who has the floor is relevant. Unless I hear other argument I should not want to rule otherwise.

Mr. Harding: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yours are words of wisdom and I appreciate them very much. I felt I had been keeping to the topic because all this is relevant. I was referring to some remarks of the hon. member for Duvernay in connection with foreign ownership. I have one more quotation and then I shall deal with one or two tables. The hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) can relax a little, and he need not be as embarrassed as he should be about the remarks of the minister. I quote from another statement about the results of tax policies in Canada as follows:

> If foreign ownership dominates the mining and petroleum industries, our tax system has clearly invited this concentration. We have not only extended a warm invitation to foreign capital, but we have told it where to go. If you invest in the service industries, we say, you will have to pay taxes on 87 per cent or 90 per cent of your profits. On the other hand, in metal mining you will only have to pay on 13 per cent and in petroleum on 5.7 per cent of your profits. The invitation says in effect, "come and gut us".

There are one or two tables I should like to deal with. They were raised in the House the other day. They are worthy of repeating because they should indicate to hon. members and the Canadian people the trouble we are in as far as resource development is concerned. Table No. 2 given by the hon. member for Duvernay in his speech refers to metal mining. The hon. member pointed out there was a book profit of $1,707 million from metal mining, yet the taxable income was only $222 million. Only 13 per cent of the total book profit was taxable. That was not the total tax taken in; it was the amount of which tax was payable. There were $1.5 billion of book profits in the metal mining industry on which Canadians received no return. It is in this area that we are referring to the CDC and investment in Canadian resources. Some thing like $1.5 billion could not be touched; it went out of the country. And you wonder why people are fed up, sick and tired of the programs and policies this government had laid down over the years. It is not improving on them.

Let me refer to mineral fuels, which include oil. This is a pretty touchy point. There were $795 million in book profits in the mineral oil industry and we only taxed on $45 million. Only 5.7 per cent of the total book profits in the mineral oils industry was used as the tax base. We never received $45 million out of $795 million; the $45 million was the total on which we based corporate taxes. The government calls this a fair share, when other groups of individuals and corporations in the country are receiving a shellacking from this government. No wonder there is an uproar from one end of the country to the other.

Then we come to the category of "other mining." There was a book profit of $374 million. The taxable income was $120 million or 32 per cent. Let me move to the end of the table, where we find the retail trades. This is very interesting. What is the composition of the retail trades? I suggest it is a host of little businesses from one end of Canada to the other. Out of $1,620 million, this industry was taxed on $1,445 million, or 90 per cent of its book profit. There is a big difference. We come to the other end of the scale and find that for mineral fuels, which are dominated by foreign-controlled corporations, the taxable income is only 5.7 per cent. This is the point our group has been trying to make in this House. We are fed up with policies that allow this to go on and we are asking for changes. That is why we raise these issues.

Here we are in this country, with from 600,000 to 700,000 people unemployed in addition to students who cannot find jobs. Thousands of students cannot find even a summer job. I suggest the reason behind this can be found in the resource development programs of this government. We have allowed corporations to come in and get a stranglehold on the key resources of our country. They go into the north, to the mining areas and extract the choice minerals. Almost without exception they are shipped out of Canada without any fabricating taking place. This is the sort of thing we suggest the Canada Development Corporation should change. We should be fabricating these materials. The fabrication of our raw materials should take place within the confines of Canada. This would give jobs to Canadians, in a Canadian setting. The measure before us will not accomplish that objective. The CDC will not go into these fields and return the ownership of the economy of Canada to Canadians.

We take objection to this measure and we are speaking out now. We urge the government to consider some of these clauses and even now accept some of the amendments we have suggested. There is a host of arguments, as my friend suggested, which can be saved for the budget debate. Again I suggest through you, Mr. Speaker, that members of the Liberal government should, for goodness sake, have another look at the legislation. Let us get something in here that will give Canadians the hope that we will start moving into these fields and gradually regain control of our economy for the people who live in this country.

At the rate we are going, so far as investment and resource development programs of this government are concerned we are becoming squatters in our own country. Again, in closing I urge that the government take another look at this measure before we vote on it and it is passed through the House in its present form.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the motion by Mr. Benson, seconded by Mr. MacEachen, that the bill be now read the third time and do pass. Is it the pleasure of the House to accept the said motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Benson) which was agreed to on the following division:

PRAIRIE GRAIN ADVANCE PAYMENTS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING RATE PER BUSHEL, EMERGENCY PAYMENTS, EXTENSION OF APPLICATION TO RYE, FLAXSEED AND RAPESEED

The House resumed, from Monday, June 7, consideration of Bill C-239, to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose on Monday, June 7, 1971, it was considering motion No. 8 standing in the name of Mr. Gleave. Is the House ready for the question on motion No. 8?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Gleave, seconded by Mrs. MacInnis, moved:

That Bill C-239, an act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance payments Act, be amended by deleting the following words from subclause (1) of clause 11, in lines 35 to 38 at page 10:
"or has, otherwise than by delivery to the board, disposed of all or part of the grain in respect of which the advance was made,"

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

• (5:30 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motion No. 8 (Mr. Gleave) negatived.

Mr. Korchinski: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I earlier indicated that I was not prepared to go along with motion No. 8. There are several motions standing in my name on the order paper which according to your earlier ruling, were to be taken as a group. Are these now to be taken?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is quite right. The House will now consider motions Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5 standing in the hon. member's name. Perhaps the Chair could put at the same time all the motions standing in the name of the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) which will be debated at the same time. First, motion No. 2. The hon. member for Mackenzie moves the following:

That Bill C-239, an act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, be amended by adding in clause 5 the words "the type of grain on which an advance was taken" after the word "grain" in line 31 at page 3.

Motion No. 3 is as follows:

That Bill C-239, an act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, be amended by deleting in clause 5 the words " the making of the advance payment" in lines 5 and 6 at page 4 and substituting the following words therefor "the final delivery of grain on which collection was made in repayment of an advance".

Next, motion No. 4:

That Bill C-239, an act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, be amended by adding in clause 5 the words "except where such discharge is by delivery of grain where a deduction is made which is greater than the rate of advance" after the word "payment" in line 15 at page 4.

Lastly, motion No. 5:

That Bill C-239, an act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, be amended by deleting in clause 6 the words "the making of the advance payment" in lines 8 and 9 at page 5 and substituting the following words therefor "the final delivery of grain on which a deduction was made for an advance".

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, the committee of the House of Commons dealing with agricultural matters did what I thought was a fairly extensive and thorough job in bringing in amendments to Bill C-239. To some extent those amendments were necessary simply because a different quota system has been arranged. Therefore, the committee was more or less dealing with a housekeeping chore. At the same time, certain new aspects were introduced to the cash advance legislation. It had previously dealt with the repayment of loans. It was not so much the repayment of loans question that concerned many hon. members, as the interest aspect of the legislation and the method of collection. This aspect of the bill disturbed us.

The government says that interest rates have fluctuated. Following policy lines which had been pursued in the last several years, the government proceeded to amend other items of legislation including the cash advance legislation which to all intents and purposes was intended to provide interest-free cash advances, as its earlier title suggested. However, by way of amendment and the introduction of new clauses to the bill, the minister managed to slip in provisions whereby the government could collect interest from the day on which an advance was first requested. We argued against this proposition. We felt that interest-free cash advances should be continued because cash sales were limited and a requirement for cash existed. A similar requirement for cash was evident two years ago.

When speaking on June 7, the minister told us that $272 million had been taken out on 112,000 advances, if my memory serves me correctly. As I have said, through the amendments there has been introduced a change in the method of collection. Instead of injecting or infusing money into the western economy, the government suggested to farmers that they avail themselves of the cash advance legislation and take out loans. The farmers took out loans. I understand that some 50,000 loans were requested but that only $90 million or $92 million was taken out. While the government was professing that this was a method of infusing money into the western economy, it brought in restrictions or applied impositions with respect to the method by which advances would be collected.

Secondly, the interest aspect reared its ugly head. Although the minister told farmers that the quickest and easiest method for them to obtain money was by utilizing the cash advance legislation, the farmers ran into difficulties. In the last few years conditions have been difficult. A depression was brought on through a crop failure. Then because of wet weather farmers were faced with the added burden of drying their grain. In addition we have record low sales. Last year's sales were the lowest in 15 years. Sales were so poor that farmers, in a desperate attempt to obtain cash advances, may in some cases have overestimated the amount of grain they had available.

One must know the complexities of the grain business to realize that two grain bins of identical volume and size may contain different quantities of grain. The quantity will depend on grade, and so on. Thus, one bin may contain perhaps twice as much grain as another bin of the same size and volume. The grain in the two bins may be of different grades and the grain in one of the bins may be damp. On the basis of past history one would think the farmer could accurately estimate what he had. On delivering the grain, however, he might find that it is out of condition and that the dockage and shrinkage is much more than he expected. It is very possible that farmers legitimately overestimated. He can only work on estimates. There is no formal inspection; the farmer simply signs an affidavit. When this happens, the farmer can be in the position of having overestimated and taken an advance on grain far in excess of what he actually had. In most of these cases the farmers are back in business next year.

• (5:40 p.m.)

The government started dabbling in the cash advance repayment field for their own purposes, to pull them out of a political situation that was very embarrassing. There was a desperate need for cash. The government came out with a double amount of cash advancement. The sole purpose of doubling cash advances was for the government to get the money back into the economy as quickly as possible. In doing so they have changed the rules of the game. In changing the rules of the game the government may have intended to confuse the producers. Now that the producers have availed themselves of these new conditions, the government says, "We have caught you in the act. You had your hand in the cookie jar. You have to start paying interest in a different way than you have been accustomed to in the past."

The method applied was that when a producer committed himself to delivery of a six-bushel quota, if and when the quota was available, he had to deliver in a reasonable time. If he did not deliver when called upon by the Wheat Board, he was told that he was in default and that 6 per cent would be applied on the amount of the advance that was not repaid. The rules have now changed because the government wanted them changed. The government wanted that infusion of cash into the economy.

On June 7 the minister said that the producers had availed themselves of this cash advance program. The government now says that if the producer is in default, even by a very legitimate overestimation, he has to repay the cash advance in the same way as if he had borrowed the money from a bank. The principle is that the government wants to get its money back in a hurry. This is the prime purpose of the legislation. I could see that some parts of the legislation were working contrary to the original intent. I felt that some of it was tying the hands of the producers.

There are three types of grain on which cash advances are made, wheat, oats and barley. If, for example, I had 2,000 bushels of wheat that I could commit to the Wheat Board, I could take a cash advance on it. I may also have some oats and barley for sale. The amount on which I might be able to take an advance would be $6,000. If all I wanted to commit to the board or mortgage, was $2,000 on grain which I was prepared to deliver to the Wheat Board, the advance could be made. If all I am committing to the Wheat Board is my wheat, I should be able to take an advance on only that type of grain. I may have reason for wanting to keep my oats and barley available. The barley could be used as a cash crop.

Under the former practice, if one delivered a load of wheat, half the amount of the sale would normally be deducted in repayment of the cash advance. There may be a quota available and I may want to deliver a full load of barley because of my cash requirement. I may not want the Wheat Board to get its money back immediately. This should not be the prime requisite. The people of Canada should not have to work in the interest of the government. The government should be working in the interest of the people. Our thinking has become twisted somehow.

One of my amendments in committee was to the effect that it should be possible for producers to have a cash crop which they want to deliver. I do not suggest that producers should take an advance on only one grain. My amendment suggested that they should have the option of taking an advance on three grains. The minister said this would disturb a principle. The principle was interest free cash advances. Now it is interest-full cash advances. The original principle was to benefit the producer. The principle now is that the producer should benefit the government because the government is in a hurry to get its money back.

The government says, "We gave you an advance and, boy, you had better give it back tomorrow." This is why the committee, including government members, supported the amendment I made in committee. The minister then said, "What is the matter with you? The people have to work for the government. You are supporters of the government, but you have lost sight of the principle." Over the years they may have had the right slant on what is required of the government and what should be given to the government, but the principle now is that the government comes first. Regardless of what the minister said, I felt it necessary to correct a shortcoming in the amendments presented by the government.

I met the minister half-way in one of my amendments. Under the amendments suggested by the government a producer may have paid back everything except ten bushels and still be found in default. On an advance of $6,000 which you may have taken you could technically be found in default and have to pay interest on the whole amount at the interest rate the Governor in Council might suggest. The minister shakes his head, but technically this could be done. Maybe he would say, "Well, we would bend over backwards in a case like that. It would probably not be worth making a big issue out of it." But technically that is the effect of the amendment the minister introduced.

• (5:50 p.m.)

If a farmer had taken an advance of $6,000, he would still have to pay, even though he had delivered $5,000 worth of grain and had repaid $5,000, interest on $6,000, according to the changes. I have suggested in my amendment No. 4 that when a delivery is made and you have repaid $5,000, from there on in if you are found in default you should be prepared to pay interest. I did not say one should not pay any interest. I was quite prepared to go to the extent of accepting the minister's own suggestion that it should be at a rate which the Governor in Council himself had prescribed. That is bad enough. But I was willing to concede a point and say that from the date the last delivery was made, whether it was made at the end of January—or if you took it in faster, so much the better—or any date, from the date when the final delivery was made on which an advance was repaid I could be called upon and told, "You should have delivered, but you did not. We can legitimately say you have no more grain." If that situation should arise, then interest should be charged.

But what has happened in the past? Even if the final delivery of grain was made in January, and there was no more quota until the end of March and when the quota opened up and the producer did not deliver, the board informed him he had ten days or so in which to deliver. If he did not deliver in that time he was found in default and he paid interest from March. So as a compromise I said, "Let's go half-way." But the minister wants it all. The government is hungrier than some of the people who took the advance because they did not have the money. They do not take an advance unless they have to.

The repayment performance under the old scheme was that only about 1 per cent of the advances were not repaid. And that was only because of some extreme difficulty, changing hands or sometimes fire or loss of grain from flooding, and so on.

Then suddenly the government changes the rules and says, "We have to get away from this. We are a high-interest government, so let's apply the principle all over the place. After all, this works hand-in-hand with our original intention. We will make it a little tougher for the farmer to get an advance. It will not be interest-free. He will have to pay interest." That adds to your cost, and we all know the net result. It's the last straw that breaks the camel's back, and combined with some of the other philosophies projected by this government one finds it easy to understand why they would want these changes. It is easy to understand why they would want to reject an amendment which even some of their supporters felt was necessary.

Mr. Speaker, there was great emphasis placed on the committee system and I, along with many members of the committee from all sides of the House, applied myself to the point where we even sat all night on occasion. Genuine ideas came forward from all sides; government supporters do not have a prerogative in this respect. I have sat in committees where it required the minister to tell his supporters what they should approve and what they should not approve.

This practice makes a farce of the committee system. It frustrates the work of committee members and the work of Members of Parliament who feel they have a contribution to make either on the basis of experience or because of having listened to briefs submitted by people who genuinely think they are doing something to change legislation. Some farm organizations go to great lengths to get the information. They go out into the country and get as much information as possible from individual producers. Then they compile the information, co-ordinate it and work together.

The executive sit around and say; "What is our final position to be? What is our submission to be?" Committees hear representations and some of us, even on the opposition side, can understand what the briefs suggest. We suggest amendments and on the basis of those amendments we think we are helping to improve legislation. But it seems that the government, or a group of civil servants who are hard at work advising the minister—who may or may not understand the situation—what will be good for him, and telling him he had better not accept any more amendments from the opposition, ignores our suggestions. The government accepted two of mine before the dinner recess and then suddenly they held a caucus and—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must interrupt the hon. member because it is six o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Bell: Could I ask the parliamentary secretary to tell us the menu for tomorrow?

Mr. Jerome: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It is our intention in tomorrow morning's supplementary portion of the day to continue with this measure, that is to say, until the luncheon adjournment. Then there is to be a meeting of the House leaders in the morning and the afternoon's schedule will be drawn up from this meeting—the Judges Act, the pilotage bill, or unemployment insurance which was originally announced as being tomorrow's business, and the Canada Labour (Standards) Code.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN SPEAKER'S GALLERY OF FRENCH DELEGATES TO MEETING OF CANADA-FRANCE INTER-PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to bring to the attention of hon. members the presence in the Speaker's Gallery of the French delegation to the annual meeting of the France-Canada Inter-Parliamentary Association. The National Assembly of France has again shown the importance it attributes to the Association by the eminence of its delegates to this year's meeting. I particularly want to note the presence of the head of the delegation, Mr. Lucien Neuwirth, hon. member for the Loire department, Questor of the National Assembly and Secretary-General of our Association.

Mr. Neuwirth and the other members of the delegation come to Canada and to Parliament not only as parliamentary colleagues but also as friends. On behalf of this House, I extend a most cordial welcome to these gentlemen.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 to ask the unanimous consent of the House to consider a matter of urgent and pressing necessity to all hon. members. I move, seconded by the hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau):

That this House do order an immediate and thorough public inquiry into the operations and fund disbursement procedure of the Opportunities for Youth program, with a view to the allegations made by an alderman of the city of Toronto, and with a view as well to the widespread concern about modified criteria of approval, the reticence of the minister to publish statistics about provincial and per capita breakdowns that do in fact exist, and, above all, the failure of the department to have the decency to acknowledge all those applications received or to maintain regional consistencies in the awarding and approval of projects.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Egmont.

This motion moved pursuant to Standing Order 43 requires unanimous consent of the House.

Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore the motion cannot be put.

HOUSING

RICHMOND SQUARE APARTMENT PROJECT, TORONTO—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask the unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion in a case of urgent and pressing necessity.

This matter concerns the potentially tragic situation created by the sinking of the CMHC financed Richmond Square limited dividend apartment house project. This 13-storey, multimillion dollar building has partially sunk into the ground. Floors, ceilings and bearing walls have obviously settled and are perhaps 10 to 20 inches out of line. There are approximately 80 apartments whose windows have popped out. The structure was apparently built on an old creek bed, and when the frost came out of the ground this spring a portion of the building subsided. The building is untenanted but is a hazard—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member cannot make a speech at this point. Will he kindly resume his seat. The Chair has to remind him of the terms and practice under Standing Order 43. The hon. member should indicate what his motion is so the Chair may inquire whether there is unanimous consent.

Mr. Ryan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave):

That the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs forthwith inquire into the faulty construction of the Richmond Square project, the responsibility of CMHC officials in approving and inspecting its site and construction; that the Committee recommend what action must be taken to remedy the existing danger; and that the committee report back to this House before the House rises for the summer recess.

Mr. Speaker: Does the House give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the motion cannot be put.

CANADA COUNCIL

GRANT TO AUTHOR OF "THE TRUE EVENTUAL STORY OF BILLY THE KID"—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask for unanimous consent of the House to present a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. This urgent matter arises from the disclosure that a questionable piece of literature entitled, "The True Eventual Story of Billy the Kid", authored by B. P. Nichol, recently received a Governor General's literary award, and its author was the recipient of a $2,500 prize from the Canada Council.

In view of the fact that many respected reviewers, plus members of this House, have assessed this work as an affront to decency and a discouragement to serious literary effort and that, furthermore, it should be noted that many serious and competent students are being denied research grants—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that he should indicate what his motion is. I suggest to hon. members in a general way that perhaps we have reached the point where the terms of Standing Order 43 ought to be reviewed by the House or by a committee. In any event, the hon. member might indicate what his motion is so that the House can determine whether there is unanimous consent for consideration of the motion.

Mr. McCutcheon: I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave):

That this House expresses its displeasure with the award recommendations in relation to the work entitled, "The True Eventual Story of Billy the Kid", and requests that this matter be immediately referred for consideration by the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts; and further that the Secretary of State, under whose administration such award recommendations are made, be summoned before the Standing Committee accompanied by the selection board who recommended this award.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion which can only be put to the House by unanimous consent. I will inquire whether there is unanimity.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Since there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put at this time.

MOTIONS TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

YOUTH

ALLEGED MISHANDLING OF FUNDS IN ADMINISTRATION OF OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM, TORONTO

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert), to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely the charges of mishandling of funds by the federal government in the administration of the Opportunities for Youth program in Toronto.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has given the Chair notice of his intention to propose this motion under the terms of Standing Order 26. I might say that a similar intention had been indicated to the Chair by the hon. member for Egmont, but there was a slight difficulty in relation to the time of notice and it was agreed that perhaps the motion proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would apply equally to the motion indicated by the hon. member for Egmont.

The Chair has studied very closely the motion proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. With his knowledge of the rules, precedents and practice in reference to Standing Order 26, I believe he will appreciate that it would be very difficult for the Chair to accept the motion at the present time. It seems to me that this is the kind of proposal which should be put to the House by way of a substantive motion for consideration in due course, perhaps by the House itself or by a committee, rather than under the terms of Standing Order 26.

I might suggest that perhaps this is more of a proposal to be put to the House under the terms of Standing Order 43, as was done, rather than under Standing Order 26, but that is a question of judgment, I suppose, or even of taste. One hon. member might prefer to put it under Standing Order 26 and another under Standing Order 43. But I do not believe this is the kind of subject which can be considered by the House under the terms of Standing Order 26.

I must also suggest to hon. members that there is the possibility of debate on other occasions. In fact I have had the opportunity during the last few days on a similar ruling to indicate that there will be many such opportunities during the days ahead to debate these matters. I would assume that hon. members would want to avail themselves of these opportunities to consider the very important matter raised by the hon. members for Egmont and Winnipeg North Centre.

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON CHARGES BY TORONTO ALDERMAN

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister, since the Secretary of State is away.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he or another minister will answer the charges laid by a Toronto alderman concerning the Opportunities for Youth program and if a statement will be made in the House in this connection?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was not aware of those charges and I do not know if they are justified. Anyway, I will inquire and discuss the matter with the Secretary of State.

[English]

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—AUDIT AND VERIFICATION PROCEDURES—PROVINCIAL BREAKDOWN OF GRANTS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might direct my supplementary to the parliamentary secretary. Can the parliamentary secretary inform the House exactly what audit and verification procedures are to be followed by the government and exactly what assistance is being given the young people in dealing with bookkeeping and payroll control?

Mr. James Hugh Faulkner (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I might also in part answer the question raised by the hon. member for South Western Nova. I think the most relevant fact I can produce at this point is that there have been no moneys sent to Toronto yet. The contracts are still under negotiation. We hope to be able to confirm them as soon as possible. The other point that I think is relevant is that the charges made by Alderman Crombie are charges we would like to look into. They are not particularly specific at this point, and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration will be going to Toronto this afternoon to try to find out more specifically what these charges relate to in terms of specific projects.

As hon. members know, the process of approving projects has involved widespread consultations with voluntary agencies, with provincial governments in many cases, with government departments, with citizen's organizations and with the young people themselves. None of the funds will be sent without a series of checks throughout the summer.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the parliamentary secretary. Since concerns similar to those expressed by the Toronto alderman have been expressed by others, particularly in relation to the regional balance and provincial balance in awarding projects, can the parliamentary secretary inform the House whether or not provincial breakdowns of expected expenditures now exist and, if they do exist, when they will be presented to the House so that members will be aware of the administration of this program?

Mr. Faulkner: The Secretary of State has said he will make a statement dealing with this and other questions which have been raised previously, and I would hope that that statement would be made as early as possible because it is understandable that there is impatience in the House on this matter. But it is a matter of all projects being finally approved and, as I think the Secretary of State indicated last week, there are still one or two projects which are not finally approved and any statement prior to that final approval would be premature.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE INQUIRY INTO ADMINISTRATION—ADDITIONAL FUNDS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Secretary of State who according to the roster was to be here today, whether, in view of all the problems that have arisen and the charges of mishandling or mismanagement—the latter is perhaps a more appropriate word—of funds, the Prime Minister will agree to suggest to the Secretary of State that he refer this whole matter to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts so that a full inquiry may be made not only into the criteria which the department has set up but also into the legitimacy of all the projects which have been approved?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker. The Secretary of State is attending a telecommunications meeting in the Maritimes. The parliamentary secretary has presented adequate answers to Parliament. It is obvious that the opposition is seeing a scandal in the spending of money which has not even been paid out yet.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I do not see any scandal in it at all, but if the Prime Minister, instead of being so touchy—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Order.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please. The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Lewis: In view of the anxiety, not about scandal but about the uncertainty whether these programs will produce the results they are intended to produce, will the Prime Minister assure us that there will be a full statement within the next day or two on all these matters? May I also ask the Prime Minister whether consideration is now being given to providing additional funds for the Opportunities for Youth program?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker. When these programs were announced it was said that we would analyse their efficiency and when the summer was over would look at the ways in which the program was successful or in what ways it might have failed in some of its objectives. At that time we will decide if we should continue with them or change them in some form.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on a question of privilege. A moment ago the Prime Minister remarked that the Secretary of State had adequately answered in the House all questions with respect to this program. I should like to state that during the period of the last two months I have had occasion to send both letters and telegrams to the Secretary of State on this important program and none of them have been answered either in the House or directly by mail or telegram.

Mr. Speaker: Of course that is not a question of privilege. I would not think that the matter should be pursued along those lines in any event.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—APPROVAL OF PROJECTS SUBMITTED BY ABITIBI APPLICANTS

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State.

A short while ago, he said that some projects were still being considered. Since some regions have been almost ignored so far, could the Parliamentary Secretary say whether the projects submitted by young people from Abitibi are under consideration, and is it possible that some might be accepted?

[English]

Mr. James Hugh Faulkner (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I would have to look into that. The projects that remain are very few in number. I think they number three and there are specific questions about the three. That is why they still remain unapproved. But I will certainly look into the matter to see if they relate to the Abitibi region.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON DISTRIBUTION OF FUNDS AND TORONTO CHARGES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I have a supplementary question for the parliamentary secretary.

[Mr. Lewis.]

In view of the serious charges that have been levelled against the operation of this program, would he undertake to contact the minister today with a view to having the minister make a statement with respect to the distribution of funds under the program and with respect to the charges that have been levelled in Toronto?

Mr. James Hugh Faulkner (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I must say I am astonished at the position taken by opposition members. There has been a charge made, generally unspecified, by an alderman of the city of Toronto. A parliamentary secretary, a member of this House, is going to Toronto to speak to him on this matter today. It would seem to me that it would be, at the minimum, at least courteous to wait until we find what the charges are. The only figure I have is a figure relating to $12,000 to which the alderman referred. I have looked through the Toronto projects and that refers to an air pollution project undertaken by engineers in the department of chemistry at the University of Toronto. It seems to be quite a respectable project. I think what we should do is wait until we find out what the specific charges are, and if there is a statement to be made it will be made.

Mr. McGrath: Would the parliamentary secretary undertake to contact the minister today to ask the minister to issue a statement today with respect to the distribution of funds under the program?

Mr. Faulkner: Frankly, I do not see the utility of that suggestion. The minister is in the Maritimes and the charges have come from Toronto. I think we will work it out in our own way.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member for Egmont rises on a point of order he will be recognized. The Chair will then go to the next questioner on a different subject.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The parliamentary secretary suggested that the only concerns that have been raised are those raised by one Toronto alderman. I have expressed concern in a number of letters and telegrams which have not yet been answered. I should like to know when Members of Parliament can expect to receive reasonable answers from the responsible ministers in this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

the 24-hour notice period which they have hitherto required with respect to Canadian fishing vessels before entry into west coast American ports?

CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCE

REPRESENTATION OF OPPOSITION PARTIES

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

As the delegations of some provinces to the Victoria conference will include representatives of the opposition parties, does the right hon. Prime Minister intend to invite representatives of the parties of the opposition in the House? We have been invited to the opening of the conference, but—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that question was put yesterday in various ways. In any event, the right hon. Prime Minister might be allowed to answer briefly the question of the hon. member for Témiscamingue.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question was asked yesterday and has been asked again today, but like so many other questions from opposition members recently, it is based on false grounds. To our knowledge, no province will bring opposition leaders as members of its delegation. If the hon. member or other Conservative members say otherwise, I would like some evidence.

Mr. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State being absent, I shall direct my question to the Prime Minister.

Could he tell us if the government has decided to accept the recommendation contained in the Duhamel report to the effect that Quebec should be made a bilingual district?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have already indicated that, according to the report, 90 days must pass before the government may make a decision. This delay has not yet expired. We shall inform the House in due time.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member for Charlevoix a supplementary?

Mr. Asselin: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Can the Prime Minister assure the House that no decision will be taken about this matter before the latter is submitted to an appropriate House committee to enable Quebec associations to come before the committee and express their views on this important question.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, this is a suggestion that I will convey to the Secretary of State. It may have some good points, but I would suggest to opposition parties, and particularly to the Conservative party, that they do not have to wait for such a committee being convened before expressing their opinions. I hope that we will very soon hear the opposition's point of view on this matter.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I think that the Prime Minister should read what I said before when I expressed my views on this matter. So, if the Prime Minister addresses me, I am in a position to answer him.

CANADA COUNCIL

GRANT TO AUTHOR OF "THE TRUE EVENTUAL STORY OF BILLY THE KID"—SUGGESTED CHANGE IN PERSONNEL BECAUSE OF CERTAIN AWARDS

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State. In view of the recent Canada Council grant based on the writing of a treatise relating to the life of Billy the Kid, can the parliamentary secretary say if this is a change of direction from subsidizing Marxism to marksmanship with short guns?

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): As a supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have some doubt whether the hon. member should have a supplementary on this question, but the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Oxford on a related question.

Mr. Nesbitt: Thank you, Your Honour. I would direct a related question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State. CORPORATE AFFAIRS

STATEMENTS BY PRIME MINISTER AND MINISTER OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS RESPECTING BIG BUSINESS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Was the Prime Minister stating government policy when he assured the Canadian Manufacturers' Association in Toronto on Monday night that big business has nothing to fear from this government, and was the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs also stating government policy when he told the Canadian Association of Consumers in Halifax that big business would have to be subjected to government controls?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question could easily be answered if the hon. member would take the trouble to read the transcript of the speech.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As a supplementary question, will the government be introducing legislation along the lines expressed in Halifax by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs so that big business can be controlled, both in Canada and in terms of foreign ownership?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the minister said in Halifax—

Mr. Muir: It was a ho-hum speech—

Mr. Trudeau: —but I do know he intends presenting to the House—

Mr. Muir: Just another speech.

Mr. Trudeau: Pardon?

Mr. Muir: It was a ho-hum speech, something like the one you delivered in Toronto.

Mr. Trudeau: Ah-ha.

HOUSING

RICHMOND SQUARE APARTMENT PROJECT, TORONTO—SETTLEMENT OF FLOORS AND DANGER OF COLLAPSE

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister without Portfolio responsible for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Is the 13-storey, multi million dollar limited dividend housing project in Toronto, known as the Richmond Square project, going to be condemned and demolished because of the settlement of all 13 floors and the menace of its collapse?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice.

Mr. Ryan: In light of this situation and also the tragedy at Saint Jean-Vianney, will the minister forthwith refer the whole question of the design, engineering and selection of sites for both these projects to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs for thorough investigation of the incompetency of his department?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should realize that a question cannot be asked in those terms.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

INDUSTRY

MONTMAGNY—CHEMCELL LIMITED—USE MADE OF FEDERAL GRANTS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Chemcell Company Limited, which announced last week the impending closing of its Montmagny plant, is reported to have received from the federal government the tidy sum of $497,000 in grants for modernization purposes.

Can the minister tell the House whether the project presented by that company to get grants mentions the modernization of the Montmagny plant?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, we have granted incentives to the Chemcell Company for three of its plants. The amount of $497,000 referred to by the hon. member does not relate to Montmagny only. I believe that only a small portion of this amount applies to Montmagny, with the balance for Drummondville and another location. However, I will ascertain whether this grant relates to modernization or expansion of the plant.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary.

Since the hon. minister is well aware of the disastrous situation which will prevail in Montmagny, is he prepared to discuss this question further with the officials of the company with a view to helping them if necessary to modernize their plant and thus avoid its shutdown?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, the problem in this case is that the company has not requested assistance. So we should have to beg them to accept it.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PRESENTATION OF CANADIAN POSITION ON PROPOSED TAPS OIL TANKER ROUTE AT WASHINGTON MINISTERIAL MEETING

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister concerning the Washington ministerial meeting which we were told some weeks ago would deal with the TAPS project. Can he advise if the point of view of the Canadian government on this important matter will be presented today by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and, if so, what is the Canadian attitude?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is referring to the meeting being held in Washington on the pollution question in Lake Erie, the answer is that such a meeting is being held and that the government is discussing with the government at Washington and I believe with some state governments, and with the government of the province of Ontario, ways in which this situation can be met.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, do I take it from the Prime Minister's answer that the earlier intention indicated to the House that the TAPS route would be discussed at the June 10 meeting has been abandoned and that this important subject is not up for consideration today?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it was my recollection that the meeting to which the hon. member refers was to take place on June 3 and not on June 10. I believe he may be confusing the two dates, but I will check with the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

DISCUSSION OF PROPOSED TAPS OIL TANKER ROUTE AND AMCHITKA NUCLEAR TESTS WITH UNITED STATES SECRETARY OF STATE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Prime Minister whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs in his discussions in Washington today with Secretary of State William Rogers will be discussing two important questions of particular interest on the Pacific coast, namely the TAPS program already referred to and the proposed continuation of nuclear testing on Amchitka Island? Will either of these matters be raised at the meeting in Washington today?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker. It is my understanding that the purpose of the meeting is to discuss pollution problems in the Great Lakes area. However, as I said in answer to the previous question, I will check to see if these other matters are also on the agenda.

DISCUSSION WITH UNITED STATES OF OFFER OF UNLIMITED ACCESS FOR CANADIAN CRUDE OIL

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask whether any discussions are to be held today or in the immediate future regarding the offer by President Nixon of unlimited access to the American market for Canadian crude oil and what terms are being proposed with respect to a possible agreement?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I could not say, Mr. Speaker, but I shall refer the question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

DECLINE IN INDEX OF PRODUCTION IN APRIL—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON STEPS TO REVERSE TREND

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, whose duty it is to be in the House today, Mr. Speaker. He was here but has slipped out somewhere; perhaps we can entice him to return and face the music. If not, I shall address the question to the acting minister and ask him to pass it on to the minister. In view of the fact that all components participated in the sharp decline of the index of industrial production in April, as reported by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics yesterday, would the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce take the first opportunity on motions to report to the House what steps his department intends to take to reverse this very serious trend so that the country may begin to experience the upturn in business which the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance have so often told the House—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Malpeque.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member rises on a point of order.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I have asked a very serious question in a serious way, and the Minister of Finance, having some responsibility in this matter, rose to answer. I should like to know why Your Honour considers my question was not in order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I interrupted the hon. member because I thought he was going on to make a speech.

Mr. Hees: No.

Mr. Speaker: If he had reached the point where he had effectively asked the question, certainly the minister may reply.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I answered a similar question yesterday. If one looks at the details, in the durable goods manufacturing group six industries showed gains while only two showed declines. In the non-durable manufacturing group eight showed gains while four showed declines. I explained the particular declines yesterday.

Mr. Hees: As the index of industrial production—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the Minister of Manpower and Immigration is seeking the floor on a point of order.

Mr. Lang: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. In view of the first comment of the hon. member I should like to make it clear to the House, and I am sure the hon. member will be glad to hear it, that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce left the House a few moments ago to meet a Japanese trade mission.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: I would say, thank Heaven he does something useful once in a while; I am very glad to hear that he has gone to this meeting. I should like to direct a supplementary to the Minister of Finance. Does the fact that the index of industrial production rose during the latest month reported on at a rate of 10 per cent a year mean that we are just doing fine or is that the kind of business upturn that the minister and the Prime Minister have been telling us for some months past we are going to have?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member will allow me to interrupt, I would suggest that this is argument and not a question.

Mr. Hees: If that is a win, I would hate to see a loss.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, my question is prompted by a number of answers given to previous questions. I should like to ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration if he has given instructions that remaining stocks of the pamphlet issued by his department some time ago should be retained so that an adequate supply will be readily available for the use of himself and his colleagues on the treasury benches? The pamphlet to which I refer is entitled, "Don't Let a Sense of Failure Throw You".

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ALLEGED SQUANDERING OF MONEY BY ARMED SERVICES IN PURCHASE OF TRUCKS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In light of the information given about extravagant squandering of money in reference to trucks purchased by the armed services and for the armed services at a cost of $4 million, which trucks, either wholly or in part, were not used at all and were later sold for $236,000, would the Minister of National Defence be prepared either on motions or perhaps today to make a short statement giving the House an explanation for such extravagance with the taxpayers' money?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I should point out that the trucks were acquired in the time frame 1951 to 1953 as potential wartime reserves at that particular time. They had been held for a period of nearly 20 years and had become unserviceable just by the passage of time. It is for that reason that these 20-year old trucks were disposed of at the best price that could be obtained on the market.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ORIGIN OF ARMS FOUND AT ASCOT, ENGLAND

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): My question is also directed to the Minister of National Defence, Mr. Speaker. I should like to know whether the government has as yet identified an alleged Canadian military arms cache found in Great Britain and, if so, could the minister inform the House whether these arms had been sold to a foreign government or whether they had been disposed of to private individuals in Canada and subsequently resold?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of the question. The Canadian representatives in London have sought to find out from the British authorities the details of the weapons in question referred to in the news story but up to the moment no information has been received. So far as I can determine from the Department of External Affairs, the Department of National Defence and the Department of Supply and Services, we have had no inquiries whatsoever from the British officials with respect to these weapons. If we did have some specific information we could obviously determine more quickly the circumstances under which, if they are Canadian, they got there, but at the moment we have no information whatsoever as far as I can find out. With regard to possible disposal, I should indicate that there have been disposals of weapons in Europe by the Canadian Armed Forces in years past to the agencies of foreign governments but strictly on the condition that they were to be rendered into scrap. If these conditions have not been honoured, this is another question, but we do not have identification of the weapons yet.

Mr. Forrestall: I wonder if the minister could clarify one other question surrounding this problem and get some information on whether the Canadian Armed Forces have had quantities of machine guns and other arms of this nature stolen from them at any time in the last eight or ten years?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, as I recall, I gave a detailed report on this some months ago in the House. There have been thefts both overseas and at various locations in Canada but nothing near the amount that would appear to be indicated in this news story.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. When the minister referred to the period 1951-53 and the responsibility at that time, can he say who the stupid Deputy Minister of National Defence was at that time who was responsible for this mess?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

COMMITMENT TO PROVIDE WORK AT FORMER AIR CANADA WINNIPEG OVERHAUL BASE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Supply and Services. Has he received a telegram from representatives of the machinists in Winnipeg pointing out that the commitment made by the government that Air Canada and Canadian Aviation Electric would provide enough work at the old Air Canada overhaul base so that employment would be maintained has not been honoured and that there is large-scale unemployment? Does the Prime Minister propose to do anything about the failure of the government to meet its commitment?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot recall whether I received such a telegram but I do know that the matter is being discussed within the government and that the Minister of Supply and Services is looking at it very actively.

Mr. Orlikow: The Minister of Supply and Services has been looking at it for some time. He may have lots of time but the unemployed workers who now number—

May I ask the minister whether he is yet in a position to advise or suggest when the positions of chairman of the board of the Cape Breton Development Corporation and vice-president of industrial development may be filled?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): I hope it will be soon, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Muir: A supplementary question. The minister's reply indicates the callousness he has for the unemployed in Cape Breton also. Is the minister giving consideration or is any consideration being given to having Mr. Tom Kent, his deputy minister, become the senior officer of the Cape Breton Development Corporation?

Mr. McGrath: Silence is consent.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I should like to address my question to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. Is the fact that Bill C-244 has not been passed by the House one of the reasons why the final payment on wheat for the 1969-70 crop year has not been made?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker.

QUEBEC—ALLEGED LOSS OF FEDERAL GRANTS FOR EDUCATION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

During the last weekend, the Quebec Minister of Education stated that his province had lost $300 million in federal grants at the post-graduate level under the fiscal arrangements legislation. May I ask the Prime Minister whether he knows of this statement and whether he intends to establish a policy to enable the province of Quebec to recover this amount of $300 million?

EAST PAKISTAN—REPRESENTATIONS BY PRIME MINISTER TO SOVIET UNION RESPECTING AID AND ACHIEVEMENT OF PEACE

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. During his Russian visit did the Prime Minister at any time raise the question of Russia's participation in providing aid and in seeking peace for the people of East Pakistan? If so, can the Prime Minister state what position was expressed by the Russian government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Thompson: Is it the position of the government that the present military government of Pakistan is the legitimate government of East Pakistan?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that the question as asked is an invitation to express an opinion or to make a statement of policy. I appreciate that it is a little difficult to draw the line. On reflection, it would seem that the question asked by the hon. member is acceptable.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we recognize no other government than the government of Pakistan.

Mr. Thompson: Will the Canadian government consider accepting the refugees from East Pakistan as political refugees?

Mr. Trudeau: The question has not been considered, Mr. Speaker.

MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION

INSTRUCTION TO EMPLOYEES IN KITCHENER-WATERLOO AREA TO ANSWER TELEPHONE IN FRENCH AND ENGLISH

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): My question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Have instructions been issued by his department to manpower and immigration officials in the Kitchener-Waterloo area stating that pursuant to the Official Languages Act employees must answer the telephone in French and English and if the caller starts to speak French the employee will interrupt—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that this question might well be placed on the order paper and that it is not the kind of question that should be asked at this time. If there is urgency, it can always be considered at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Saltsman: There is some urgency to this question as instructions have been issued and there is a danger of the instructions being misunderstood. If I might be permitted to conclude my question, the employee will interrupt and point out that the people in that office do not speak French and ask the caller to repeat the question in English.

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker, I believe the minister was rising to answer my question regarding whether instructions similar to what I outlined had been issued to manpower and immigration officials in the Kitchener-Waterloo area.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there were really two parts to the hon. member's question. The attempt in manpower offices generally is to make available services in the official languages as may be required. While we certainly are not performing perfectly in that regard—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have allowed the minister to reply to the question, but I still believe it is the kind of question that ought to be placed on the order paper. If there is urgency, there is provision in the Standing Orders to have the matter considered later in the day.

MEDICAL ASSOCIATION RECOMMENDATION FOR REMOVAL OF POSSESSION OF MARIJUANA AS AN OFFENCE— INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Justice. In light of the call by the Canadian Medical Association at their recent meeting for legislation to remove the possession of marijuana as an offence under the Criminal Code and to do away with jail sentences and long criminal records for such people, can the minister inform the House whether he intends to introduce legislation in this area, and when?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): The government will want to study the text of these resolutions and we are, of course, still awaiting the final report of the LeDain commission.

REMOVAL OF FLAG OF NATIONALIST CHINA FROM PAVILION AT BRITISH COLUMBIA TRADE FAIR

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): My question is for the Prime Minister. It is in relation to his apparent communist sensitivities and bias as applied to the removal of the flag of Nationalist China from their pavilion at the British Columbia trade fair. In the interests of developing much needed trade and—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not a question. The hon. member is making a speech. The hon. member should ask the question and I will indicate whether I believe it is the kind of question that ought to be asked now.

Mr. Alkenbrack: I was just stating the reason for the question.

Mr. Speaker: That is the point. The hon. member should not state the reason for the question. I appreciate that it is difficult to ask a question without laying down some sort of basis for it, but hon. members should not go too far in that respect.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Will the Prime Minister instruct that the Nationalist Chinese flag be allowed to fly at this fair in the interests of common international courtesy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): It is not really a question of courtesy, Mr. Speaker. We recognize only one China. It would be inappropriate for another government of China that we do not recognize to fly its flag under the guise of being the government of China.

Mr. Alkenbrack: A supplementary question. I ask the Prime Minister whether those conditions apply even where they pay rent?

IMMIGRATION

REASONS FOR DECLINE

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): My question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Will the minister please indicate to the House why there has been a sharp decline in the immigration figures released yesterday?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will allow the minister to reply briefly, but the question as asked certainly invites the minister to make a statement which normally ought to be made on motions. The minister will be allowed to reply briefly to the hon. member's question.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The figures reflect the immigration situation in the first few months, which are certainly down. Some time previous I speculated on the combination of the point system operating in this fashion together with economic conditions in some of the source areas.

CIGARETTE PRODUCTS ACT

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATORY STATEMENT ON BILL

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): My question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Will the minister reconsider and make a brief explanatory statement on the introduction for first reading of his bill with regard to cigarette advertising? With the unanimous consent of the House, perhaps we could revert to motions for that purpose.

STUDY OF NEEDS OF NATIVE PEOPLE

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): My question is directed to the minister in charge of housing. Is the minister's department or Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation making a study or survey of the housing needs of the native people of Canada?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, as I think I already indicated in committee or in the House, there are studies of this nature going on, particularly with regard to the Indian and Métis people in the western provinces.

Mr. Gilbert: Is a firm operated by Bill Lee and Bill Neville, known as Executive Consultants Limited, making a survey on behalf of CMHC?

THE CENSUS

ALLEGED REQUIREMENT THAT LONG QUESTIONNAIRE BE COMPLETED BY ALL HOUSEHOLDERS IN CERTAIN COMMUNITIES

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In his absence I will direct it to the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister aware that in many communities in Canada all householders are being required to complete the long census form and are obligated to have the canvassers fill in these questionaires despite the fact that all the advertising indicated this would be a do-it yourself census?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The hon. member asked me whether I was aware. The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Simpson: Will the Prime Minister make an inquiry into the publicity and advertising which has been issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics to every householder, which he will find is very misleading and in many cases false?

Mr. Trudeau: I will gladly draw the attention of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to that suggestion.

HAMILTON—PROVISION OF FUNDS FOR YORK STREET URBAN RENEWAL PROJECT

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In light of the fact that he visited the city of Hamilton in order to help celebrate its 125th anniversary—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: —and as I understand that some 4,000 children were eager to see him—

An hon. Member: Seven thousand.

Mr. Alexander: Would the Prime Minister, in order to give the people of Hamilton a birthday present, look with great sympathy and understanding upon a request to be made shortly by a delegation which will be coming from Hamilton with respect to the urban renewal problems of that city? In keeping with the atmosphere yesterday, perhaps the Prime Minister might feel himself in a position to give the city a birthday present by allowing it more funds in order to complete the York Street urban renewal project.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock.

Mr. Alexander: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, with all due respect I think the Prime Minister understands the importance of the question, and I noticed he gave every indication of rising.

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): I have a question for the government House leader. Having in mind the introduction this morning by the Minister of National Health and Welfare of an excellent bill which would prohibit cigarette advertising, when may we expect to consider this legislation in the House?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Hopefully it will go to a committee during this session.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. MacLean: I would ask the leader of the House if he has any announcement to make regarding the business of the House.

Mr. MacEachen: We will begin today by considering the bill to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, followed by the amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act. After that we shall take the Canada Labour (Standards) Code, the pilotage bill and the Judges Act.

I should mention that there will be two opposition days next week to complete our round of opposition days for this part of the session, and I propose we should choose Tuesday and Wednesday for this purpose. However, I shall be happy to discuss that item and others with my colleagues later.

Mr. Korchinski: On a point of clarification, Mr. Speaker, may I ask whether it will be necessary to dispose of Bill C-239 before the other items are considered, or are we to proceed with it only until one o'clock as announced yesterday?

Mr. MacEachen: My hope is that we could complete the bill to which the hon. member has referred by one o'clock, or shortly thereafter. We would then go on to the unemployment insurance legislation. But I will review the situation at one o'clock and see what progress has been made.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PRAIRIE GRAIN ADVANCE PAYMENTS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING RATE PER BUSHEL, EMERGENCY PAYMENTS, EXTENSION OF APPLICATION TO RYE, FLAXSEED AND RAPESEED

The House resumed, from Wednesday, June 9, consideration of Bill C-239, to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose last evening it was considering motions Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5 in the name of the hon. member for Mackenzie. The hon. member for Mackenzie had the floor.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, last night toward the end of my remarks I was commenting on the fact that the committee had been studying suggestions made by various farm organizations with regard to the bill now under consideration. I pointed out that these submissions were carefully considered by all committee members. I also volunteered the information that some of us in the opposition understood the submissions which were being made. It seems to me, however, that the government or the executive branch of the government—the minister, if he is to be singled out—has been frustrated either from within or without.

First of all, the minister has to respond to advice by civil servants that certain amendments are necessary for administrative purposes. I maintain that far too much consideration is given to making things comfortable for the administration and far too little for the people who are affected by the legislation we pass. Only second or third grade consideration is given to their convenience. This comment applies not only to the present bill but to every piece of legislation with which I am familiar. I do not say it happens 100 per cent of the time but it happens for far too much of the time, if I can speak from my own experience in this House. Too many things are done to make it easier for those in administrative positions who begin their work at eight o'clock and leave at five; during the summer, during the hot weather, they leave their offices at four o'clock because of the lack of air conditioning and the inconvenience of rush hour traffic. If you talk to a farmer along those lines, he will say: Hot days are best for killing wheat. Provided the tractor does not heat up he is out there working. In this case, only one side of the question is being considered. The government is in a hurry to get its money. It is determined to get it, and the devil take the consequences.

The attitude of the government has to change in favour of people. If we are to serve the people effectively and look after their requirements, the committee system must function more effectively than it is at present. There were great hopes for the new committee system when it was created by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). To some extent we went into it with enthusiasm regardless of the fact that it overloaded hon. members in many cases and regardless of the fact that certain work was being done in other committees to which we would have liked to dedicate ourselves. In terms of committee membership, we tried to concentrate on people who were particularly interested in the subject matter, people who were better informed, if you wish. Being more informed, I was willing to suggest that the government supporters should vote at that particular stage for two amendments I had presented and they accepted one. I thought that the consideration given by the committee would be far more valid than any consideration the House might have given, that is to say, if the committee system is to have any value at all. It was the Liberal whip who appointed government members to the committee and the committee was comprised of members who know something about the subject. The committee decided that in the interests of improving the legislation that this particular amendment should be accepted.

Reversing such a decision made by the committee is an indication that the government has no confidence in its own members on the committee. In view of the flippant attitude taken to the committee I suggest that perhaps the whole system of committees should be disbanded and that we should forget about committees studying legislation. The only thing left to the government is to take authority unto itself by executive order and to state that since legislation is presented by civil servants the government feels it is adequate as such and about any representations that might be made thereon are irrelevant, that people who know something about the subject need not be heard, that any amendments that might be made would be useless, that any opposition in this House of Commons is unwarranted, that any member who dares speak in opposition to the government is wasting his time, and that it is unnecessary to have any elections.

This goes to the heart of what I suspect, and have suspected for some time, we have as a government in this country. This government has gone farther than any of us dared think in its haste to outrun the NDP and their philosophy and the communist philosophy. I do not know whether they are more scared of the NDP than they are of themselves. Let the government listen to some of the criticism that comes from within, because it is more valid now than ever before.

It is becoming more and more difficult to preserve democratic institutions in the western world than ever before simply because pressures against them are mounting. If the committee system has now been changed to the point where its considerations do mean something, then let some of the amendments moved in committee be accepted. Let them not be rejected on the basis that they were moved by members who do not support the government. I have been a member of the House for 13 years and have sat on various committees, interesting myself in many of them. But I feel we have now reached the point where the minister tells his own supporters what amendments to accept and what not to accept. In turn the minister gets his directions from the man sitting beside him, either the deputy minister or the assistant deputy minister.

This is not democracy, Mr. Speaker. What we are now witnessing is an attempt to reverse a decision made by elected Members of Parliament which, if successful, will be a slap in the face for all Canadians and for democracy. If the government values democracy at all, then let it reject the present committee system or else accept amendments made in committee. Simply to say that the fact that my amendment is moved by a member of the opposition makes it invalid is no argument at all. To say the least, I feel very frustrated, as dedicated as I may be to any particular bill under study. Many members of the House on both sides are dedicated, and they too find they are being frustrated because they are given instructions from above.

These members are highly regarded in their communities and many of them were elected to this House because they were experienced men. They are now being told by the minister or by a civil servant that they know nothing about the matters they are considering. I would suggest to the minister that regardless of what value a man places upon himself no man is so all-knowing that the combined opinions of people knowledgeable about a certain matter are of no consequence. For example, industrial conditions are constantly changing, and so that we can change at the same time we have to make amendments. You cannot view the subject from one side alone.

The other day the committee accepted very readily an amendment that I moved. In the afternoon I moved another amendment that I suggest was identical to the previous one. But somewhere along the line the members of the Liberal caucus must have held a conference and said to themselves: "Look, we cannot accept too many amendments from the opposition; otherwise it will be an opposition bill and we cannot have that. We must not give the opposition any more credit than we dare, so we must throw the other amendments out." As a result, my amendment was defeated.

What recourse do I have, Mr. Speaker? All I can do is bring the matter to the House and record it for posterity in the hope that those who read my speech or listen to my words will understand the futility of the whole system. This government, which wants to promote itself and itself alone, is dedicated to only one thing. The government thinks it can get more co-operation from its civil servants by following their line. I suggest that in the interests of building a better country the government had better listen to opposition members. I do not expect, and neither does any other member of the House, opposition amendments to be accepted 100 per cent, but the proposition that an opposition amendment must be rejected because the ideas of the mover are all wrong is absolutely unacceptable today. We do represent an area. As a matter of fact the opposition members in the Conservative party represent a far larger rural area than members of the Liberal party ever did. To suggest at this time that the government has absolute knowledge of the requirements is wrong. It follows logically that somewhere along the line it must listen to somebody.

• (12:20 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but I must do so to advise that his time has expired.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words in respect of the amendments put forward by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) regarding Bill C-239. The four amendments deal at length with the principles to be followed by applicants or farmers taking out cash advances, how they must repay and whether or not an interest charge will be levied against the advance.

It is interesting to note what the minister had to say in reference to the third amendment proposed by the hon. member for Mackenzie. This is to be found at page 61 of committee proceedings No. 53. He said:

> If a man has this money, is not delivering grain, and then is found to be in default, he should pay interest on the whole period that he had the use of the money, because that is in effect converting it to what he did, which is using it as a loan instead of an advance. And I urge this very strongly upon you.

That is what the minister stated and it is perfectly clear what he is trying to do is narrow the scope of cash advance legislation in order to save the government as much money as possible. We heard in the committee that cash advance legislation, being interest free, in essence cost the federal government in the neighbourhood of $3 million. It is quite clear that the main object of this bill is to narrow cash advance legislation and apply interest on part of the advance. The amount of cash advances the government will provide interest free will be reduced. This is the whole theme of this legislation and it fits a pattern this government is following right along in respect of agricultural legislation.

The government has withdrawn all the financial assistance it can withdraw effectively. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) has reduced bonuses for hogs, for land and for wool. He has repeatedly made reductions. The present minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, and I say that because the way the Saskatchewan election is going he may not be in charge very long, has given some indication in Bill C-244, the grain stabilization program, that he intends to withdraw money the government committed itself to in the past. Apparently it will not make this commitment in the future. It is regrettable that all this legislation should be concentrated toward this one objective or goal.

The hon. member's amendments are very pertinent because on many occasions a farmer will take out a cash advance on grain he has on hand for delivery. Let us take last winter or the present time as an example. The price of barley selling at the Lakehead is in the neighbourhood of $1.17. For some reason there is a 12 cent charge per bushel on grain from the Crowfoot area delivered at the Lakehead. That brings the price down to $1.05 per bushel. Again for some unknown reason, when the farmer delivers his grain he receives between 71 and 73 cents per bushel. The farmers wonder what happens to this other 30 cents. Will they receive it in their final payments or is it absorbed by storage costs? Where does it go?

A farmer might want a cash advance on his barley. He is faced with a difficult decision. He must ask himself whether to deliver it to the elevator and accept 72 cents per bushel or sell it to a feed mill or feed lot down the road at 80 cents per bushel in cash. Suppose the farmer takes a cash advance on his grain in storage under this legislation and sells it to the elevator. After doing so the price on the market at the feed mill or feed lot goes up over 80 cents per bushel, much more than he would receive by delivering it to the elevator, and he sells it to the feed lot. He might fully have intended when he took out the cash advance to repay it with the barley. He has a difficult decision whether to sell to the feed lot and pay interest on his cash advance from the time he received it, or deliver it to the elevator.

Even the interest rate he will have to pay is not spelled out. The minister said that the rate would be announced at the beginning of every crop year. I suppose that is better than nothing. In most cases cash advances will be taken out in the fall of the previous year, so the farmer would be taking the advance without knowing the exact interest rate he might have to pay. The minister shakes his head in a negative fashion; he can correct me if I am wrong, but that is the meaning of his remarks as I understood them.

[Mr. Horner.]

To date many cash advances have been taken out and repaid with cash. I forget the exact figure but I think the minister stated that something like 15,000 or 16,000 advances were repaid partially in cash. The minister has stated that if the cash portion amounts to more than $500 the farmer will have to pay interest on the total cash advance. If it is less than $500 no action will be taken and he will not have to pay interest.

In any case the amendment moved by the hon. member for Mackenzie clearly states that the interest on a cash advance taken out on grain should apply only to that grain, and there should be no retroactive action by the government which would in fact penalize the farmer because he made a shrewd decision to sell the grain to another commercial outlet at a higher rate.

I can see a great deal of merit in the four amendments now before the House and for that reason I commend them to hon. members.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply in part to the point raised by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). The interest rate for a crop year will be set prior to the crop year and any default which occurs in connection with an advance, no matter how much later it occurs, will be related to the interest rate for that crop year. So the farmer taking an advance will know his position exactly.

The first amendment of this group really follows a decision taken earlier in the House in favour of an amendment which stood in my name. Amendment No. 3 is difficult in that it would be technically impossible in terms of no interest being payable at all even if no delivery at all was made, because there would be no point or date from which the interest rate could be set.

The point in this—and this applies as well as to amendment No. 5—is that these interest rates are payable only in relation to loans which are in default; that is to say, where the person has undertaken to deliver grain when quotas are available and has failed in that undertaking, has had notice from the board to do so and has still failed in the undertaking. It is only then that interest is payable and it seems perfectly reasonable that it should date from the time of the loan and not from any particular later time.

The technical difficulties with amendment No. 3 include the fact that a person who attempts to misuse the system could avoid an interest payment simply by delivering a single bushel of grain. The technical wording would absolve him from the interest claim. It is important to keep the system of cash advances working well. It is respected; it is well received. Abuses where persons take a loan and never intend to keep their undertaking only bring the program into disrepute. The very great majority of farmers use the system well. They use it when they need the money. They do not even take an advance if they can avoid it. For them we should try to keep the system working as well as possible. This is the point of the original form of the bill.

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Speaker, would the minister also make a comment in respect of motion No. 4, please.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the point of motion No. 4 was really covered in the committee by debate and suggestions which led to an amendment to the bill in committee which is a far better one. That is the amendment which allowed the repayment of up to $500 in cash without any interest being accrued. This one is simply another form of making a cash payment. It would be very difficult indeed to follow it through in any accurate way in the system. It would create some difficulties. This is why the other amendment was moved and accepted in the committee. Not only was that amendment accepted but another one which is next before the House was agreed upon in general even though we had to come back for a recommendation in order to bring it forward.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question on motion No. 2?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the wish of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the said motion please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

An hon. Member: On division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion is negatived on division

Motion No. 2 (Mr. Korchinski) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In accordance with an earlier order the result of that vote disposes of motions Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5.

Motion No. 6 standing in the name of the minister in charge of the Wheat Board is now to be considered. The Chair did indicate in respect of motions Nos. 6 and 7 that there were procedural problems at least in the opinion of the Chair. It was also indicated that when these motions were called the Chair would be very pleased if hon. members would assist in respect of their procedural acceptability.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I indicated earlier when there was some discussion about which motions we should proceed with that we would seek to introduce this amendment as a result of discussion in the committee about the problem dealt with here. In respect of the point that the amendment goes beyond the scope of the amendments I do not think I could argue that point. I therefore wish to seek unanimous consent of the House to proceed with the amendment which could then be discussed on its merits. I would therefore ask if hon. members might give that consent so that we might proceed to consider the amendment.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I agree with your Honour's view that amendment No. 6 is really an amendment to the act and not an amendment to the bill. I am quite sympathetic with the problem but I cannot see how we could proceed in an orderly fashion in the House if by unanimous consent we were to allow ourselves to link together two things which mechanically would not be proper.

If as Your Honour stated at an earlier time this is an amendment to the act and not to the bill we are considering, then I believe this is regrettable, but I believe the minister or the people in the legal department might have foreseen this and have drafted a better amendment which in essence would be an amendment to the bill. For this reason I believe it is regrettable that I am placed in the difficult position of being asked to grant unanimous consent to something which is technically wrong. Therefore I cannot bring myself to give unanimous consent and I urge the Chair to rule concerning whether or not the motion is in order. If it is in order, then we can proceed with it. If it is not in order, I believe it would be wrong to ask the House to turn a blind eye to it. I just could not do that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If there are no further comments from hon. members in respect of motion No. 6, the Chair has before it the question of the acceptability of the motion. I indicated on Monday or Tuesday when this matter was last before the House that there was a problem which I need not elaborate on at this time. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board has indicated that he would not want to argue that it is in fact in order and therefore I would have to rule that motion No. 6 is out of order.

The Chair must now consider motion No. 7. At the same time that I remarked on motion No. 6 I indicated there was some concern in my mind about motion No. 7. I would be pleased to hear hon. members on this point. I might indicate there are two problems here in repsect of motion No. 7. Motion No. 6 has been ruled out and I believe No. 7 in essence, although this is not perfectly clear, should follow motion No. 6. In any event, even if that should not be the case I would have to rule that motion No. 7 involves a charge against the treasury.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we had hoped that somewhere between motion No. 6 and motion No. 7 an accommodation would be found. However, in view of the fact that you have ruled motion No. 6 out of order I guess we will have to lick our wounds and accept the same ruling for motion No. 7.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That concludes the motions on this bill which are before the House. The House will now revert to the deferred divisions on the motions in the order set out by the special order of the House. Call in the members.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion negatived.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration) moved that Bill C-239, to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time, now?

Some hon. Members: Next sitting.

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

PROVISIONS RESPECTING INSURABLE EMPLOYMENT, COMMISSION BENEFITS, PREMIUMS, ADMINISTRATION, ETC.

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-229, respecting unemployment insurance in Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Under the relevant Standing Order, it might be appropriate if the Chair were to suggest a grouping of the motions which are now before the House. Of course, these are only suggestions. I know that hon. members will not hesitate to advise the Chair if they have other suggestions. It is suggested that motions Nos. 1 and 2 should be combined for debate, but voted upon separately. Motion No. 3 is to be considered and disposed of separately. Motions Nos. 4, 5, 7 and 8 should be grouped for debate. A decision on motion No. 4 also will dispose of motions Nos. 5, 7 and 8.

Motions Nos. 6 and 21 should be combined for debate, and a vote on motion No. 6 also will dispose of motion No. 21. Motions Nos. 9, 10 and 11 should be considered and disposed of separately. Motions Nos. 12 and 13 should be grouped for the purpose of debate and a vote on motion No. 12 also will dispose of motion No. 13.

Motions Nos. 14 and 15 to be considered and disposed of separately. Motions Nos. 16 and 17 to be grouped for purposes of debate and a vote on motion No. 16 also will dispose of motion No. 17. Motions Nos. 18 and 19 to be grouped for purposes of debate and a vote on motion No. 18 also will dispose of motion No. 19. Motion No. 20 to be considered and disposed of separately. If hon. members are in general agreement with that—the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I say on behalf of the members of this party that we believe this is a fair proposal Your Honour has made with regard to these motions. We are prepared to accept the groupings you have suggested. Naturally, we would have preferred a vote on motion No. 5 covering motions 4, 5, 7 and 8, but the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) got his motion on ahead of us so we shall accept a vote on No. 4, hoping, of course, that it will be favourable.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Mr. Alexander: Speaking on behalf of the Official Opposition, may I say we appreciate the simplicity Your Honour has brought to the proceedings in terms of considering how best this matter can be expedited. I will only add that there are certain agreements which might perhaps affect the schedule you have proposed, particularly in respect to motions No. 1 and 2. I believe something will be said on that aspect by one of my hon. friends which will clarify the situation. But in any event, this is an excellent way of dealing with a complicated subject.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there general agreement to this arrangement, subject to such other agreements as may be made? If so, we shall proceed on that basis.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps I could make one further observation. Hon. members will notice that if all the groupings are decided on division there will be a total of ten divisions. Notwithstanding the brilliance and the alacrity of our Clerk Assistant—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: —it seems to the Chair we might be overloading him. I suggest, therefore, possibly about half way through this part of the proceedings hon. members might look at the number of deferred divisions, and if they feel the number might be unduly onerous for the Clerk Assistant who calls the names, maybe we could group the various divisions further about half way through.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We would agree to that. The whole process, of course, would be simplified if the government were to accept a number of these amendments.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will now put motions Nos. 1 and 2.

Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971

The hon. Member for Moncton (Mr. Thomas) moves:

That Bill C-229, An Act respecting unemployment insurance in Canada, be amended by deleting paragraph (d) of subclause (2) of clause 3, lines 29 and 30 at page 4, and by relettering subsequent paragraphs accordingly.

The hon. Member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) (for Mr. Downey) moves:

That Bill C-229, An Act respecting unemployment insurance in Canada, be amended by adding the words "or under any municipal authority" in paragraph (e) of subclause (2) of Clause 3 immediately after the word "province" in line 32 at page 4.

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, the present unemployment insurance act defines as one category of excepted employment, employment where the person employed is the husband or the wife of the employer. I have no quarrel with that, but I feel that the provision in Bill C-229 which extends this provision further, making it apply to relatives or dependants of the employer is too broad and could lead to the exclusion of many people from insurable employment. I have therefore proposed an amendment which would, in effect, extend insurable employment to relatives or dependants of an employer. Since I put down my amendment, I have had some discussion with the minister's staff and I believe there is agreement on the part of the minister to accept a compromise. In other words, he would agree to take out the word "relative" but leave the word "dependant" in. That is to say, we would extend coverage to relatives but not to dependants. Because I believe there is general agreement about this, I would seek unanimous consent to change my motion so that instead of deleting the whole clause as originally proposed it would seek only the deletion of the words "relative or". So the clause would read "—employment where the employee is a dependant of the employer."

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): I agree. I think such an amendment improves the clause. It does not make it quite as stringent and it has the effect which the hon. member has pursued with so much diligence during the committee stage.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members have heard the suggestion by the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Thomas) and the minister's comments. Shall motion No. 1 be amended in the terms set out by the hon. member for Moncton?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is so ordered. Shall the motion be adopted as amended?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Carried.

Motion No. 1 (Mr. Thomas), as amended, agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will now proceed to debate motion No. 2 which I have already put to the House.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): This motion, Mr. Speaker, is in the name of the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Downey). As clause 3 presently stands, excepted employment is, in terms of subclause (e) thereof, employment in Canada under Her Majesty in right of the province. This means, in effect, that the province would be in a position to opt out of a scheme presented by the government. Mr. Speaker, the municipalities are extremely concerned about the extra cost they would be bound to incur if measures were taken to include them in this plan. This point has been emphasized more than once by the municipalities who may be affected; as a matter of fact, it has been taken up by the Federation of Mayors and Municipalities. They say that a choice of whether to be involved or not has been offered to one level of government. Now, let me read from the brief which the federation drew up under date of May 12.

> We request that local authorities be given the same option as provincial authorities are given to cover either all or none of their employees.

The municipalities argue strongly that their resources are already extremely strained as a result of fiscal and monetary policies, yet they are faced with extra costs consequent upon the inclusion under the terms of this clause of firemen, policemen and, in particular, of school-teachers—some 250,000 of them. This would mean that the cities would incur an extra cost burden, one which is really related to an increased burden on the taxpayer. Moneys for government purposes, regardless of level, come from the same person. The hon. member for Battle River is seeking to impress upon the government that if this provision is enacted the taxpayer, who is already burdened by heavy taxation for municipal services, will be forced to pay additional taxes consequent upon the inclusion of employees of municipalities in the insurance scheme. You can never calculate the amount, but I do not think anyone would deny that there is an onerous responsibility on any individual now who is faced by taxation from all levels, in all ways and by all means.

• (2:20 p.m.)

The brief goes on to say that, in view of the present unco-ordinated state of tax and spending policies, the very least that each level of government deserves is some measure of choice in deciding on programs and policies within its jurisdiction. I think the minister will reply to the suggestion I have been making because he is concerned about universality. But many municipalities have very extensive coverage of their employees, and in one or two provinces school teachers are direct employees of the province. This creates an anomaly in that in certain cases school teachers will be in the position to say: "I will not have to participate in the plan because I know that my province is not going to be a member". As a result, they will opt out.

In conclusion, if I interpret the intention of the hon. member for Battle River correctly, what he is attempting to say—and I hope I have presented the intent of the motion, Mr. Speaker, in a reasonable way—is that he wants to relieve the taxpayer from the further burden that would definitely occur in the event that the municipalities were brought within the scheme without any possibility of opting out.

[Mr. Alexander.]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my remarks on this amendment will be brief, but I have to make it clear that we shall oppose the proposed amendment. The aim of the amendment has just been stated by the hon. member for Hamilton East; it seeks to give municipal authorities the right to opt out of unemployment insurance, which for many civic employees would, of course, be a retrogressive step.

I appreciate the concern expressed by the hon. member for Hamilton East for the financial plight—

Mr. Alexander: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Hamilton West on a point of order.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I am not attempting to discourage the hon. member from making his usual brilliant contribution, but I would appreciate it if he would refer to me as the hon. member for Hamilton West. The hon. member for Hamilton East is the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton West has made his point of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And I apologize to him as profusely as I can, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I would not want to confuse him with the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

I had started to say that I appreciated the concern of the hon. member for Hamilton West for the financial plight of the municipalities, but I suggest that this is a plight that should be dealt with in some more substantial and direct way. You do not solve this problem just by relieving the municipalities of the cost of paying unemployment insurance premiums; that problem calls for a recasting of the division of taxation revenues in this country among the federal, provincial and municipal levels.

The fact of the matter is that the aim of this bill is to make unemployment insurance coverage as universal as possible. I am in accord with that principle, and I think that any exceptions to it should be only those for which there is an unanswerable argument. As a matter of fact, there are some exceptions that I think should not be here; but as I understand it the reason that provinces are excepted is that there is a constitutional rule—maybe it is a myth but it is such a firmly rooted myth that it is practically the law—that the Crown cannot tax the Crown. In other words, the Crown in the right of Canada cannot pass a law to tax the Crown in the right of the provinces. I understand that is the reason the provincial authorities are excluded from compulsory coverage under the Unemployment Insurance Act, though in the next clause of the bill provision is made for the provinces to be included, if they so desire and thus indicate to the federal government.

No such inhibition obtains in the case of the municipalities. Therefore, I think we should keep the exclusions from unemployment insurance coverage to a minimum. We have to do it in the case of the provinces, but we do not have to do it in the case of the municipalities. There are many thousands of employees who work for government at the municipal level, and their employment is subject to uncertainty as it is in many other areas of work. I think we would do the workers who are employed by municipal governments a service if we kept them under unemployment insurance coverage, and therefore I hope that my hon. friend will not press this amendment.

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) put forward an argument that I have heard many times to the effect that somehow it is not fair for the taxpayer to pay for unemployment insurance premiums as if they were a tax. This argument has been raised by school teachers and others and I want to deal with it for a moment because, with all respect, it just does not make sense.

The fact is that every unemployment insurance premium is paid by the employer and the consumer. If as a consumer I buy goods, I know very well that I am paying for the premiums paid by employers. Certainly, I do not think the employers are for one moment making a gift. In reality, the same ratepayer or consumer pays for both insurance premiums. To put forward the argument that somehow this is an exceptional tax on municipal ratepayers just does not make sense. In addition, the purpose of unemployment insurance is to give a benefit to the employee. That really is the essential element. How can anyone justify the position that I, as an employee of a municipality, will not get the benefit of this legislation—which I say here and now is very meaningful legislation—while the employee of another corporation or private enterprise concern does get the benefit? How long does the hon. member for Hamilton West think that this situation will last? Public or municipal employees will immediately demand that there be an equivalent municipal fund from which they can draw. All you will have is a fragmentation of this scheme. With all respect, I cannot see the sense in this amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I have carefully listened to the arguments of the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander).

I cannot accept them nor approve the motion as put since, to my knowledge, in my region—and I imagine it is so all across the country—municipalities hire workers temporarily, especially during the summer months and lay them off in the fall. If these workers are not protected by some social legislation, such as unemployment insurance, they will have to apply for welfare assistance should they be unable to find employment elsewhere.

Mr. Speaker, were the motion now being considered passed and enforced, the workers would be in a very bad predicament as is often the case in Quebec. A large number of temporary employees of the Public Works and Highway Departments, for instance, are not contributing to the unemployment insurance fund because they are prevented from doing so by the provincial authorities. These people are laid-off in the fall and if they are unable to find employment elsewhere, they have to rely on social welfare which has nothing left but crumbs to give them.

Hence, I think that even if the municipalities find it somewhat constlier, they should nevertheless be required to pay contributions to the unemployment insurance fund, together with their employees so that the latter may benefit from the Unemployment Insurance Act.

The unemployment insurance act is perfect, I know. In fact, I think that if we could have full employment, that would be much more effective.

But as we have to live in such a situation, we have to try and protect the greatest possible number of workers by this legislation, and I believe that municipal employees should be among those.

• (2:30 p.m.)

[English]

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say a word or two about this proposed amendment. I support it for a basic reason. I take strong objection to one level of government taking the attitude that it knows best and then proceeding to act as God in the conviction it is right and therefore knows what is best for everyone.

The municipalities of this country have a segment of jurisdiction which, in my judgment, should not be impaired by any other level of government. It is my belief that an option should be open to municipal governments to decide whether they want their employees under the Unemployment Insurance Act. If the act has all the merits the government says it has, it is obvious what their choice will be. Nevertheless, it is not for us to say that some municipalities might prefer, under perhaps unique circumstances, to not have its employees covered by unemployment insurance and, therefore, as employers not have to pay a tax which is imposed by another level of government.

There should be a right to an option rather than an imposition on one level of government by another level of government. I know bureaucrats and perhaps socialists—I look to the people on my left and I hope they will excuse me for using that term—like to see everything standardized and shoved into neat, watertight compartments. They are everlastingly trying to put Canadian citizens and municipalities into a kind of Procrustean bed of their own choosing. If they are short they like to stretch them, if they are too long they like to chop pieces off. I think this is bad legislation from that point of view and, therefore, I heartily support the purpose of this amendment. It is not intended to cut off unemployment insurance from employees of municipalities who wish to be covered. Rather, it gives municiplaities the same option as the provinces.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I find myself rather intrigued by the extraordinary kind of logic or lack of it displayed by my congenial friend the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean). While I am quite happy to have him refer to me as a socialist, I am not really rising to speak on this amendment as a socialist. I rise to speak on it as someone who attempts to have a practical interest in the welfare of the working people of this country, and to deal with a bill presented by a government which is certainly not prepared to call itself socialist.

This argument that the laws made by one level of government should not impinge in any way on the functions of another level seems to be extraordinary. If one were to follow that through, it would mean the people working for a municipality would be completely exempt from provincial legislation setting minimum wages. In fact, the muncipalities would be separate little feudal kingdoms within a kingdom. I think that if the hon. member would reflect upon this he would realize how absurd his logic is if it were brought to its ultimate conclusion.

I have listened to many arguments in this House, some of them advanced by political colleagues of the hon. member for Malpeque, regarding the matter of the federal government accepting its responsibility to pay municipal taxes on federal property lying within the boundaries of municipalities. This is a position I was prepared to support long before it became the accepted practice for the federal government to more or less automatically make a payment equivalent to and in lieu of taxes.

As far as I am concerned, I do not feel we should stand on these fine points of constitutional jurisdiction. Jurisdiction of each level of government should apply to its own field. I would be quite happy to see this strange constitutional fiction about municipalities not being able to tax the Crown on property just as it taxes any other property in municipalities done away with, but the hon. member for Malpeque and his colleagues, in putting forward this argument, are proceeding in a direction exactly opposite to that of the principle of equity of function among various levels of government.

I submit to the hon. member that despite his eloquent plea his argument is not well founded in principle, nor indeed is the amendment. I certainly would be much happier with the bill if this provision exempting the provinces were not included. I do not want to make an issue of it at this time, and obviously I cannot because I have not put down a report stage amendment in my name to that effect, but my colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) did suggest that perhaps it was only fiction. Inasmuch as federal jurisdiction over unemployment insurance is embodied in the British North America Act, we might have been wiser simply to have said, all employers, either public or private, will be treated the same way under the same circumstances as far as the question of unemployment insurance is concerned.

Now, the amendment suggests we should move into the area of the municipal level. The question of the distinction which might be drawn between private employers and public or semi-public employers is one which has been discussed quite often. In the 1955 review of the Unemployment Insurance Act, the big debate in this area was over the question of hospitals, and whether hospitals as employers should or should not be required to participate in the unemployment insurance scheme. So, I would suggest the amendment is a retrograde step. In some respects I believe the provision in the bill which exempts the provinces is a retrograde step, because if one ties that particular clause to the next clause it becomes apparent that many provincial employees across the country may be worse off than they are now. This is why I should like to say a word in favour of the principle at least of arriving at a point where neither municipalities nor provinces will be listed here as excepted employers.

Certainly, the employees of the government of British Columbia are concerned about the situation because with the provision of the exemption here and the provisions in the succeeding clauses, those who, at the option of the government of British Columbia, have long enjoyed the benefits of unemployment insurance coverage may suddenly be pulled out of a scheme which the minister and others have said is designed to move in the direction of greater universality. My colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, may have another word or two to say on that subject in respect of the next clause. However, in view of the line the debate is taking, I should like to indicate that far from supporting the approach in the amendment we are dealing with I believe we should delete that clause and remove the exemption for both provincial and municipal governments. I believe this suggestion is perhaps particularly apt because the government is taking the position that federal employees should be participants in the scheme. That puts a different complexion on the whole thing than that which existed at the time of the earlier major re-write of this legislation when the government did not take that position.

I hope that, as a result of this bill, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) and the commission will be able to convince the provincial governments of the logic of agreeing that all their employees must be covered on the same basis as private employers will be required to cover their employees.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I should like to support this amendment because I believe it is in line with an option which is already available to the provincial legislatures. We heard in the committee that a province, if it so wished, could exempt its employees from the operation of this bill, presumably through the BNA Act. This amendment, I think, would simply tidy up the situation and allow the municipalities the same privilege. Until this privilege is taken away from the provinces then a certain amount of inequity will be created unless the municipalities are allowed the same privilege. We are dealing with provincial and municipal employees as well as groups of workers who are allied to municipal and provincial jurisdictions. These, in the main, are new workers who are to be taken into the plan. Out of one million odd extra people in the plan, I believe perhaps 400,000 come from these two groups as well as 250,000 from teachers, 400,000 from hospital workers and 50,000 from nurses, plus the armed forces and so on.

I should like to point out that teachers in some provinces are direct employees of the provincial government and in others fall under some sort of quasi-municipal jurisdiction. I believe the teachers, as a group, have strongly objected to inclusion in the unemployment insurance plan, believing the mechanism would be a means whereby if one province decided to carry its teachers this would mean that other areas would follow suit. The teachers point out that their unemployment will occur at the beginning of their careers before they have paid into the plan and that this will make it difficult for them to take advantage of the plan. Indeed, for the teaching profession it would seem these people would have to so organize their lives as to be unemployed in order to take advantage of the plan. If this amendment is adopted it will permit some uniformity in dealing with those teachers in provinces where there is a municipal authority involved.

There is a similar situation in respect of nurses—approximately 50,000—who are employed by municipal hospitals. Generally speaking, these are young people who have a high degree of mobility in their employment. There has been no significant unemployment in respect of nurses in the past 25 years. Indeed, we have scoured the globe to find registered nurses to fill our hospitals. This amendment would allow those nurses, who are municipal employees and who do not wish to be included in the unemployment insurance legislation, to be taken out. I think this would be a means of equalizing the application of the unemployment insurance payments or deductions until at least all provinces agree to participate. In any case, if the unemployment insurance legislation should prove to be so good, there would be a rush of people to be included and there would be no problem in enticing groups to enter.

This amendment would make the principle of universality more flexible and would decrease its application to some extent. I realize that the inclusion of one million workers who have little or no chance of being unemployed will make the statistics look good. I would make an exception in the case of certain hospital workers who, in my opinion, should come under unemployment insurance. There are workers in professions or trades which can make their demands felt, so that at the time of the next pay raise they will get sufficient take-home pay to make up for the deductions they may have lost. I believe it is a good idea that this amendment be adopted. I think it would remove some of the universality of application of this bill which I do not believe is in the best interests of the unemployment insurance principle which we all defend to the best of our ability.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in speaking briefly to the amendment which has been proposed, I should like to indicate I am opposed to it. It would seem to me if we are to have a successful unemployment insurance plan, we must cover as many workers in Canada as possible. The amendment calls for the inclusion of municipalities in the opting-out provision, thus allowing them to exempt their employees from making unemployment insurance payments. I think this is a foolish amendment. There are thousands of municipalities across Canada, some of them with two or three employees many of whom are only part time employees. Are we going to allow some of these small municipalities that might not have too much cash to say "we are going to save a few dollars by not allowing any of our casual employees to get stamps in their books for unemployment insurance benefits in the event they are out of work"? There is no doubt that some of the municipalities hire teachers, but out where I come from the schools do all the hiring. We are not too worried about the municipalities hiring teachers or nurses, but it seems to me to be very foolish to suggest that the thousands of municipalities from one end of Canada to the other be given the right to opt out of the unemployment insurance plan. We will not hesitate to vote the amendment down.

There is one more point which was raised by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) and which I, too, would like to draw to the attention of the minister. It deals with this very section. As I read the bill, it gives the right to the various provinces to be all in or all out. Perhaps I am misinterpreting the bill, but in British Columbia we have 6,000 civil service employees who are covered by the plan. They are casual employees, and the rest of the employees who are not covered are upset. They want to be under the plan. I suggest to the minister that he look at clause 4(e). All we have to do is move an amendment to insert the words "in whole or in part" in that clause. Let the provinces come into the plan in whole or in part. This is the way around the problem, and I suggest that the minister look at it in that context. If the province of British Columbia decided to opt out, there would be 6,000 casual employees who would then not be covered by the unemployment insurance plan and they could get into trouble. I do not think this should be our objective, and I suggest that we find some way of getting around this point.

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): I rise to support this amendment because, over the years, I have had considerable experience with school boards, having served as chairman of one for a good number of years and having, in that time, wrestled with school budgets. I do know something of the cost that will be added to the school budget if and when this program is put into force. We have talked about this from time to time. While the amendment refers to municipalities, let us not be under any illusion that the municipalities will supply the funds to the school boards who will be paying the employer share of the contributions. I should like to put on the record what this will cost approximately. I have a complete table for all the provinces in Canada. I do not wish to take the time of the House by reading it all, but I would like to cite what it will cost the province of Ontario and then to refer to the total cost.

In Ontario we have approximately 103,000 teachers. The average salary in Ontario is approximately $7,767. The teacher contribution per week would be roughly $1.19. This is based on teacher premiums over a four year period, and this table is based on the situation if this act were in full force today. The employers' share for these teachers would be $86.63 per teacher, making a total addition to the school budget in the province of Ontario of $8,922,890. Taken all across Canada, the total bill comes to $22,666,407. This is certainly not peanuts.

All across the country, and particularly in the province of Ontario, people are screaming their heads off about the high cost of education and the share which the municipalities must bear, which in many cases approximates 60 per cent of the municipal taxpayer's bill. So we are not talking about small amounts of money. For this reason alone, I think this amendment deserves the support of every member in the House if he is at all interested in what his local people are having to pay in municipal taxes. I could go on and talk about teachers being drawn into this plan unwillingly, unable and unlikely to benefit from it. The hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie) has already pointed out that the time when the teachers would most benefit from the plan would be the time when they had no equity in the plan, that is when they are at the beginning of their teaching careers. I could argue along that line, but the point I want to make as strongly as possible is the great increase in cost to the municipal taxpayer if this plan is implemented.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): I have listened with a great deal of attention to the various members who have spoken about this proposed amendment. I must say at the very outset that I cannot support the amendment, nor can I suggest to the government benches that we should support it. Of course, members from some of the other parties have indicated the same. The whole concept of unemployment insurance is that we intend to make this plan as universal as possible.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some uncertainty as to what word the minister used. I hope he said "other parties".

Mr. Mackasey: Yes, other major parties. All parties in the House are major. I am simply saying that all enlightened parties oppose the amendment. The point I want to make is that the basic concept that we have proposed, which was accepted by the House on second reading and accepted in the committee, is to make this plan as universal as possible in so far as employees in Canada are concerned.

Our relationship with the provinces has been such that at present, under the old act, the provinces have been permitted, as one hon. member just suggested, to be partly in and partly out. Of course, the consequence of this is that the only groups that have been covered by the provinces in the main have been, what you might call, seasonal workers. This has been unfair to the other people who have to finance the plan, the other employers and employees who do not have the same privilege. It is insuring bad risks as opposed to good risks. One of the features of the existing plan is the option of the province to cover segments of workers. This option is being removed by saying, in effect, to the provinces that if they want coverage for their employees they should cover them all, not just those whom they think it is in their financial interest to cover.

I want to stray from the amendment which deals in particular with the municipalities and get on to the subject of teachers. Under this plan teachers are in, and if this provision is knocked out there will be no plan. We have been engaged in these discussions for several months. We have done all there is to be done to satisfy the teachers. The cost to the school boards has been analysed. I have met with representatives of school boards across this country. They are relatively satisfied, as are the teachers. While admittedly it is an added burden to the school boards to cover teachers, this is true of all employers in this country. However, the savings to the provinces, and therefore to the municipalities, under the Canada Assistance Plan more than offsets it. Because of the lower eligibility and higher premiums, for a period of 51 weeks we are covering people who would normally be forced to go on the welfare rolls of their municipalities. For instance, in so far as the province of Prince Edward Island is concerned the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean) may be interested to know that if we were to extend to the municipalities the same right as we have proposed in the bill for the provinces, over 60 per cent of the municipal employees in P.E.I. who are presently covered might not be.

I think the hon. member who spoke for the Social Credit party quite properly pointed out that many municipalities across the country do what they can for the casual workers, the less fortunate in the community, by providing work for them for six, seven, eight or nine months of the year. These people would be denied unemployment insurance while they were out of work. At present 79 per cent of the employees working for civic governments in Newfoundland are covered by unemployment insurance. The other 21 per cent could be workers in certain categories. They could be teachers working as civil servants, and also they could be employees earning over the $7,500 or $7,800 threshold. These figures run from approximately 30 per cent to 79 per cent, and so this amendment is contrary to the effect of some of the amendments that will be proposed by the same party later to other clauses of the bill.

This bill broadens the concept of universality. The party opposite cannot have it both ways. We stand for universality, and as has been pointed out it would be even more desirable if all the provinces were to fall in line like all other employers in the country. However, I am confident that when this bill is passed the overwhelming majority of the provinces will be glad to enter the plan. Frankly, it is inconceivable to me that any province would stay out, particularly in light of the figures I have quoted which show that the majority of civic employees will now be covered.

This amendment, if adopted, would tend to deny coverage to the municipal worker. The decision would not be made by the worker. It would be made by the civic authorities, by elected aldermen who in some communities may be people who have never known what it is to be out of work. Since they would be worrying about administrative costs they might autocratically, without consulting their employees, decide that municipalities should not be covered by the act.

I suggest that if adopted the amendment would weaken the act rather than strengthen it. It certainly flies completely in the face of the principle of universality which has been the cornerstone of the act. The desire and thrust of all the members of the committee, representing all parties, were directed to making the act as universal as possible, as later amendments will show, and so I would hope that this amendment is defeated.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motion No. 2 (Mr. Downey) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As hon. members will recall, motion No. 3 is to be considered separately.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West) moved:

That Bill C-229, an Act respecting unemployment insurance in Canada, be amended by adding next after subclause (1) of clause 4, following line 35 at page 5, the following:

"(2) The Commission may, with the approval of the Governor in Council and subject to affirmative resolution of Parliament, make regulations for including in insurable employment any business within the definition of "business" in the Income Tax Act."

He said: Mr. Speaker, the minister dealt with universality when speaking with respect to motion No. 2. Perhaps hon. members may think that I am now attempting to do a flip-flop, but having listened to the brilliance and eloquence of the minister's remarks on universality, I wish to give notice that I would like this motion amended. I can advise the House that the government is prepared to go along with this motion, subject to it being amended in such a way as to make it more acceptable to the government, and to strengthen the intent of what we are attempting to do. All that the motion attempts to do is give those in the category of self-employed persons the opportunity of becoming involved in unemployment insurance. We are attempting to open a door whereby those who are sufficiently in need, even though they may be self-employed, can be covered by unemployment insurance.

I refer to certain significant parts of the motion. It reads "the Commission may—". That is a permissive word. Then, it continues, "with the approval of the Governor in Council and subject to affirmative resolution of Parliament, make regulations for including in insurable employment any business within the definition of "business' in the Income Tax Act." Certainly a lot of self-employed people may not want to become involved with unemployment insurance, but on the other hand a lot of others may want coverage. I am appreciative of the government's helpfulness to the opposition in this respect, and I will be seeking unanimous consent to have four words included in the motion in order to bring it into an area of acceptability. In the fourth line of the motion after the word "any" I suggest that the following words be inserted "person employed in a" so that it would read "make regulations for including in insurable employment any person employed in a business within the definition of "business" in the Income Tax Act." I am grateful for the assistance of the government. I am sure that, as a result of this co-operation, this amendment in the long-run will be of some assistance to those who are presently excluded from the act. I also hope that hon. members to my left will see the reasoning behind the amendment and agree to support it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Of course, the hon. member may only amend the motion at this stage of the proceedings if there is unanimous consent of the House. Hon. members have heard the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) state his suggested amendment. Is there unanimity?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion is amended as outlined by the hon. member for Hamilton West.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the amendment as reworded. What this simply reiterates is the power of the Unemployment Insurance Commission to define by regulation employers as employees for the sake of the act. The amendment just makes this a little more specific, giving the commission power to include for coverage at some later date, if necessary, certain groups of people. I think the act would be stronger as a result of this amendment and I am pleased to accept it.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we certainly are prepared to give our support to the amendment to the motion. However, Mr. Speaker, I am a little puzzled that the hon. member has added these words because it seems to me he has departed from his desire to cover self-employed people. The hon. member says he does not think so, but this is a matter that has to be ruled upon at some point. With these words in, it is now allowed to the commission to pass regulations which will include a person who is employed in a business which is defined as such in the Income Tax Act. It is still limited to an employed person, and does not cover a self-employed person. We accept this, but I still hope the day will come when a way will be found to include self-employed persons under the provisions of this act. We have spent a good deal of time on this in committee, and those of us who were there realized the complications and difficulties that exist but it is still a fact that there are many self-employed persons who lose their income just as much for reasons beyond their control as is the case with employed persons. After all, I have just alluded to the reason for unemployment insurance, namely, to provide for the continuation of income of persons who lose their income for reasons beyond their control. We think that should be applied across the board.

While I am on my feet, I will look the minister in the eye and he will know what I am about to get into at this point. Because we are talking about including other classes of people by means of regulation, I should like to suggest either that the act be amended or that the minister tell us that he will have it looked at under the provisions of this amendment, to deal with the question of covering Members of Parliament under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

This has been suggested a number of times, Mr. Speaker, and it has been taken up in two ways. Those of us who have proposed it have done so because we believe in the principle of universality. We think that, just as we are requiring other people to pay into the unemployment insurance fund, we should be required to pay into it ourselves. Other people have taken it in a different light, and indeed some newspapers have suggested that this was just a proposal to add to the many perquisites and benefits that flow from being a Member of Parliament. When we have debated the pensions, salaries and expense allowances of Members of Parliament, I think I have made it pretty clear that we have to exercise restraint. I have said very clearly that we have gone too far in these areas and, therefore, I do not think I can be accused of proposing to add more. I think that some people being brought under unemployment insurance coverage have a legitimate grievance when they say, "You are bringing us under it but you have not brought yourselves under it."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I do not want to interrupt the hon. member, but I have some grave doubts that he is in order in making the suggestion that Members of Parliament should be brought under the act, at this time when we are dealing with motion No. 3. If the hon. member feels that he is in order, he might indicate his reasons to the Chair.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think I am on the fringes of being in order, but I think I can state the case in less time than it would take to prove that I am in order. I will simply say that I hope the minister at some point would get the consent of the House to extend the principle of universality, which is the aim of this motion, so that we will be included. I hope it will be done in such a way that we will not get the benefit of unemployment insurance if we go out on pension and so on, but I hope a way will be found to see that we carry our fair share by paying our premiums into the Unemployment Insurance Fund, as we ought to do.

If I may, I go back now and say that I think what I said was at least on the fringes of being in order. The purpose of this amendment is to extend the principle of universality and I should like to see that extension include Members of Parliament.

Mr. Mackasey: If I might, I should like to take advantage of the invitation of the hon. member who is on the fringe of being in order, therefore I am on the same fringe. In view of the subamendment proposed by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), and in view of the possibility which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has raised that the objective of the hon. member has not been reached by the additional words, I wonder if I would be in order in suggesting to the House that this section stand. In that way, I would have an opportunity to speak with the legal officers of the department in order that we may, through the proper wording, obtain what the hon. member for Hamilton West has suggested. Possibly at the same time, we could have it worded in such a manner that in the future, through regulation the Unemployment Insurance Commission, when it is deemed appropriate, could include such groups of people as Members of Parliament. If the time is appropriate, and if after study we find that we can convince people that the thing will not be abusive, perhaps the clause can be worded in such a way that the pension benefits of retiring Members of Parliament and things of this nature are taken into consideration in conjunction with the benefits of unemployment insurance for those Members of Parliament who might not be returning next year.

Possibly I would be able to do both those things with a reworded subamendment. Mr. Speaker, after consulting a little later in the day with the officials of the department. Before the supper hour, we could perhaps come back and clear up that particular clause.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I shall not take much time. I am very grateful for the judgment that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has brought into the picture. In trying to extend this coverage to the self-employed, it appears that perhaps I have restricted. Of course, that is not what I am attempting to do.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You are only a lawyer, Lincoln.

Mr. Alexander: Maybe that is the problem; maybe we have too many lawyers here and we are not used to drafting a document in terms that people will understand. I am appreciative of the suggestion made by the minister, and I think we should defer this clause until we can reach some agreement on words that would extend coverage to the self-employed. As far as Members of Parliament are concerned, I have no thoughts on that subject at this time. I am just interested in the particular question of the self-employed. Whether we are self-employed or not is another question that has to be determined, and I am not too interested in that phase of the argument at the moment, just the general theme of the motion in attempting to bring in the self-employed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that motion No. 3, as amended, shall stand?

Some hon. Members: Stand.

Motion No. 3, as amended, stands.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In accordance with the order made earlier today, motions Nos. 4, 5 7 and 8 shall be grouped for debate and a decision on motion No. 4 shall also dispose of motions Nos. 5, 7 and 8.

The Chair has some difficulty here. Motion No. 4 stands in the name of the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) but the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales) has indicated that he would move it. There would have to consent to do this. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales) for the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) moves motion No. 4 as follows:

That Bill C-229, an act respecting unemployment insurance in Canada, be amended by deleting the words "two weeks" in paragraph (g) of subclause (1) of clause 16, lines 35 and 36 at page 10, and substituting the words "first week".

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) moves motion No. 5 as follows:

That Bill C-229, an act respecting unemployment insurance in Canada, be amended by deleting the words "the two weeks" from paragraph (g) of subclause (1) of clause 16 in lines 35 and 36 at page 10, and by substituting therefor the words "one week".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the wish of hon. members that the same sequence of mover and seconder be followed with motion No. 7?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales) for the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) moves motion No. 7 as follows:

That Bill C-229, an act respecting unemployment insurance in Canada, be amended by deleting the word "two" in clause 23, line 23 at page 13 and substituting the word "one".

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) moves motion No. 8 as follows:

That Bill C-229, an act respecting unemployment insurance in Canada, be amended by deleting the word "two" from clause 23 in line 23 at page 13, and by substituting therefor the word "one".

24107—66

• (3:20 p.m.)

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, we have before us one of the most important amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act. This amendment deals with the waiting period, that is the period of time to establish one's rights to benefits. Under the present Unemployment Insurance Act, the waiting period is one week. The government proposes to extend this waiting period to two weeks. My amendment proposes that this should not be done and that it should remain as at present with a one week waiting period. I shall try to put forth my arguments why the waiting period should remain as at present.

This is an insurance bill. An insurance bill is always drafted to provide insurance and protection. When one is entitled to protection or insurance, he wants it right away. He does not want to wait for two or three weeks or even one week. This is the case in such insurance plans as accident and sickness, life insurance or automobile accident. Indeed, if you are involved in an automobile accident, an adjuster is on the job almost immediately. Fire insurance operates in the same way. With other forms of insurance, the adjustment or claim is attended to immediately. The government is now asking these persons to wait one week longer for their unemployment insurance benefits.

Under our present economic situation in Canada, we have a very high rate of unemployment. Welfare costs average as high as 68 per cent. Indeed, in the city of Toronto last year, welfare costs were $45 million. If people must wait an extra week for their unemployment insurance, I am convinced there will be only one result. More people will have to go on welfare to tide them over until their unemployment insurance cheque arrives.

I am sure all hon. members realize that there are thousands and thousands of people who live from week to week. The amount of their Friday night cheque is already committed before they receive it. It is required for rent or they go shopping on Saturday for food and clothing for the children. When a person becomes unemployed, he needs this unemployment insurance cheque immediately. He cannot be expected to wait a week longer than he is now waiting.

I am sure all hon. members have had experience with situations in which something has happened to unemployment insurance benefit cheques. Either the computer went haywire or the form was improperly filled out. As a result of persons not receiving their benefit cheques, they get in touch with their Member of Parliament to see what they should do. They have no money on hand and there is no food in the house. The money is due to them but they have not received it. What do we expect them to do? How are they going to feed their children? The government is now going to ask them to wait an additional week before receiving this benefit. I am convinced that this will increase the welfare costs in this country.

If we are putting forward an insurance bill, we must provide proper insurance. I know the minister will say that this suggestion will cost more money and by extending the waiting period another week the government will save approximately $160 million. This does not interest the unemployed. They are interested in proper coverage and an immediate settlement of their claims. I know the point will be raised that the premium will be reduced from $1.40 to 77 cents. Why drop it down to that level? Why not strike a half way mark and still provide the one-week waiting period rather than the two-week waiting period?

I am sure that every member in this House has received many letters and telegrams from many organizations and people pleading for the government not to include this extra waiting period in this new plan. I received a telegram from one union, Local 541 U.E. It reads in part:

We have grave concern about the increased waiting period, the possibility of reduced benefits for many of the unemployed—

There is grave concern about this extra waiting period among those people who are covered by unemployment insurance schemes. The added welfare costs to which I have referred will have to be borne by the municipalities. It is the taxpayers who will have to pay for this. The unemployment insurance scheme is contributed to by the employer and the employee, and the cost of administration is paid by the federal government. If people are going to be forced to accept welfare because of the added waiting period, the employer and employee, particularly the employer will have to pay in two ways, through his municipal taxes and through unemployment insurance. I plead with the minister and his officials to give this amendment very serious consideration.

Another argument that might be made by the minister is that the benefits are going to be higher under the new plan. The unemployed person is not as concerned about this as about having the benefit available immediately. He says "I need it now; I do not need it in the future, I need it when I am unemployed. That is today." As I said before, the waiting period is being extended to two weeks. Even with a one-week waiting period, from the time the form is filled out until the cheque arrives takes two or three weeks. By extending the waiting period to two weeks, it will be three weeks before he receives payment under this new unemployment insurance bill.

This is the most important change in this new bill. I hope the minister will give it a second thought. If the minister cannot see his way clear to accepting this amendment in its present form, I plead with him to give serious consideration to leaving the one-week waiting period the way it now is until such time as he gets the new bill into operation and gets the administrative problems ironed out. Goodness knows, the administration of this new bill will be a Midsummer Night's Dream for the officials concerned. They will be so busy ironing out the wrinkles in this new bill that it would be a great relief to them I am sure if the waiting period were left at one week, as it is now. Possibly the two-week waiting period could be introduced later on.

• (3:30 p.m.)

If the minister does not wish to do this, I will offer an alternative. Why does he not tie the waiting period in with the national average unemployment figure? In other parts of the bill we find that the period of benefit entitlement is related to the national unemployment figure. If the national average is 4 per cent, the period will be ten weeks; if it is 5 per cent it will be 14 weeks, and so on. Why cannot the waiting period also be tied in on a similar basis? The length of the waiting period is an important part of the bill. I have therefore no hesitation in recommending motion No. 5 for the consideration of the House.

[Mr. Hales.]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): At this time we are considering four proposed amendments, Nos. 4, 5, 7 and 8. Two of them are on the order paper in the name of the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) and two of them in the name of my colleague from Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). Although their wording may vary slightly, they seek precisely the same thing. They seek to amend clauses 16 and 23 so that the waiting period under the new Unemployment Insurance Act will be one week, as it was under the old act, instead of two weeks as is now proposed by the government.

The workers of Canada have felt for a long time that the Unemployment Insurance Act is their legislation. They have become very familiar with its provisions and with its details. If I might speak particularly for the organized workers, I would say they have studied this legislation very thoroughly. Naturally, there are a number of provisions in the new bill which are of concern to the workers who have considered it, but I must say this point is one which seems to have provoked the widest misgivings, namely, the extension of the waiting period from one week to two weeks. The hon. member who has just spoken has called attention to some of the difficulties which will arise if this is done. I would like to underline what he said and to express the hope that the government will yet consider the request we are making in this respect.

The minister and his officials have been quite forthright with us in giving us the reasons for proposing this increase in the length of the waiting period. They have stated that it is their desire to improve the benefits available to unemployed workers and to reduce the premiums. More people are to be covered, benefits are at a higher rate, benefits are to be extended in the sense that sickness and maternity are to be covered, and so on. And the minister and his officials have made it clear to us that if Parliament is to provide these things, things which provide more money, funds have to be found in some way. So, they are to be found by bringing into the scheme people who have not been participants up to this point, and by cutting some benefits here and there. Here we are considering one of the benefits which is to be cut, namely, the right to draw unemployment insurance after a waiting period of only one week.

It has been my experience that workers, particularly the organized workers with whom I have had some connection, have never objected to any extra cost which would be involved in extending unemployment insurance benefits. I remember years ago when we first started arguing for coverage in times of illness that the question was put in committees of the House of Commons to workers' representatives: Are you prepared to pay an extra premium if necessary for this extra benefit? The answer was always a ready and unqualified yes. I believe that is the story now. I believe that if we give the workers the right to a shorter waiting period, in other words, to begin collecting benefits in the second week rather than in the third week, they would be prepared to agree to contribute to the higher cost incurred.

As the bill stands, the amount of premium to be paid by the employee and the employer is to be fixed annually. Rates will be determined each fall for the ensuing calendar year, based on what the experience has been. No amendment to the monetary part of the bill is, therefore, required for the kind of amendment we are proposing. The extra cost to the workers as well as to the employers will be automatic. It is, of course, a fact, that the workers have been used to the one week waiting period. But one must make the point even more strongly that at times such as these when there is so much unemployment, when so many people have to live on a hand to mouth basis, it is not very acceptable to tell someone he should be willing to accept a waiting period of two weeks instead of one week because the benefits he is eventually to receive will be somewhat greater. I do not think we need take the time to argue it. This is one change on which we in the opposition parties are united. It is our hope that the government will agree to these motions when the vote is called. It would be even better if it were not necessary to vote, if the minister, who has already shown he is ready to agree to some changes, would tell us now that he will agree to this one.

In any case, I make it quite clear that we in this party support the necessary amendments to the act to provide that we keep in effect the one week waiting period rather than moving to the two weeks waiting period, which would be extremely difficult for those in this country who become unemployed.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to support the four amendments that are now being studied together, to the effect that the waiting period before receiving unemployment insurance benefits be one week instead of two weeks as set out in the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I support those amendments because as the mover pointed out a few minutes ago, by the time the worker receives unemployment insurance benefits his income has already been reduced and if he has to wait one more week—two weeks instead of one—he is being penalized, his income is further reduced.

As the hon. minister and others who took part in the debate on this bill pointed out, our aim here should be that the worker who is laid off should not be deprived of his income and have to face financial difficulties in supporting his family.

Mr. Speaker, I think the worker is not responsible for losing his job. He has nothing to do with that, as it is due to uncontrollable circumstances.

Therefore, I do not believe we should penalize more than is necessary the worker deprived of his job, by having him lose two weeks of unemployment insurance benefits instead of one.

I think that the current one-week waiting period is amply sufficient for anybody who lost his job to determine whether he can find another one. If he cannot succeed within one week I doubt he would in two.

Mr. Speaker, in the centre column of page 17 of the white paper on unemployment insurance, introduced a few months ago, you can read and I quote:

> The traditional stability of occupations such as nursing, teaching, police work, the armed forces and the public service can no longer be taken for granted. Supply may become greater than demand; austerity measures can cause redundancy;

Everyone knows to what extent the government used restraint measures in its administration to fight inflation, for example, and each time restrictive measures have been adopted for one reason or another, the worker has always suffered from it. Because of the current administration and its predecessors, workers have been sufficiently penalized and should not be even more penalized.

I am confident that the minister and the other cabinet members will understand the arguments put forward and the reasons why the movers have suggested reducing the waiting period to one week. I wonder why anyone would try to extend the waiting period to two weeks.

I strongly support the movers and I hope that the government will consider this motion favourably as it did the first one at the very beginning of this debate.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

[English]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the last speaker for my attention being diverted and not realizing that he was coming to the end of his remarks. I am not unaware, of course, of the very persuasive arguments for the reduction of the waiting period from two weeks to one week. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) pointed out, quite accurately, that this is one of the areas in which workers, through their representatives in the trade unions, the Canadian Labour Congress and other responsible groups who appeared before the committee, have suggested that the ideal plan would, in effect, be to have no waiting period at all.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear.

Mr. Mackasey: The hon. member says "hear, hear". The point is that I am rarely accused of being very conservative—and that is quite a feeling—in my approach to social legislation that affects the workers. However, when we sat down to formulate this proposed change and many other fundamental changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act for the first time we took, perhaps, a global picture of how best to help the work force of this country at reasonable cost to employee as well as to employer.

While the workers of this country have, with some degree of justification, looked upon the Unemployment Insurance Act as their own, we all know that the cost of the plan since 1940 or 1942 when it came into existence has been borne not only by employees but also in equal amount by employers. The plan, therefore, is not the same as the one in the United States which is financed entirely and exclusively by employees; our plan is equally financed by the employers of Canada.

The hon. member has already alluded to the cost factors of many of the features of the plan. For example, the cost to the plan of reducing the two week waiting period to one week, as suggested, and which the workers claim they would be quite pleased to pay for, would run to about $160 million for the normal features of the plan. In addition, of course, you would have to meet the cost of the sickness and accident benefits which would come into effect after one week instead of two, which would mean that the cost would go up to somewhere around $300 million to $400 million.

If you try to apportion that amount of money into weekly contributions, this would run from a minimum of 65 cents a week to up to $2 a week for every employee and employer in this country, an astronomical figure. So, although this proposal may be desirable, it just is not realistic at this stage.

As I said in the committee, since it is the intention of the government, and presumably of subsequent governments, to review the Unemployment Insurance Act with much more frequency, it is quite possible that over the next three, four or five years, after we have had an opportunity to assess—

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Abitibi rising on a point of order?

Mr. Laprise: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

I regret to interrupt the minister, but the translation system seems defective and I wish I could hear the minister's remarks.

Mr. Speaker: Possibly the minister could resume his remarks. We shall then determine whether the hon. member can hear the minister's comments. Perhaps the necessary adjustments will then have been made.

• (3:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Mackasey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have been told previously on many occasions that there was a screw loose in the speaker, and I am not sure which speaker they were referring to at the time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Not the Chair.

Mr. Mackasey: I apologize, Mr. Speaker. I did not really realize how all-embracing that word is.

I was saying, however, that to reduce the two-week waiting period to a one-week waiting period would cost $160 million minimum and could run perhaps as high as $400 million, depending upon the effect of the inclusion of the sickness and maternity features of the bill. So, although it may be desirable one day to get down to a zero waiting period, it is not practical or realistic now.

The second problem we have results from the introduction for the first time of these features in the unemployment insurance, that is, the extension to include people under unemployment insurance as a result of sickness or maternity. Quite frankly we need the two-week waiting period to make certain that people drawing unemployment for these particular reasons are in fact eligible. The administration period is bound to be greater with these new features than was previously the case when we did not have unemployment insurance benefits extended to cover sickness and maternity.

Hon. members are certainly very knowledgeable about the operation and know that the two weeks in many cases could mean eight days. People who register under the plan on Friday could become eligible in as little as eight days. So, the two-week period is highly desirable from an administrative point of view. For that very reason we want, and will make certain, that the unemployment insurance extended to those workers who are off because of illness or maternity is applied properly. Every effort will be made to make sure this is not intentionally or unintentionally abused. From an administrative point of view, we need those two weeks. As I mentioned, this could be as little as eight days or as much as 14 days, depending on when an individual applies and how long it takes to process the application. There are certain functions I do not want to get into in detail.

In addition, it might create a situation where such an individual would receive more money by staying at home than by working, so it would pay an individual to stay on unemployment insurance. We do not want to introduce intentionally any such disincentive. For those two reasons; the fact that the reduction in the waiting period from two weeks to one week would cost anywhere from $160 million a year and up, and the employees of the country would be glad to absorb it, and the fact that we need the time for administration purposes, we feel we cannot accept the amendment.

Such a reduction in time would place an equal burden on the employers of the country who, in the main, have been very responsive to our plan. These employers have advanced a minimum of objection to the features of the plan and generally find the bill very desirable. I suggest when the next review of the act takes place, three, four or five years hence, this could be one area of discussion, whether we can make an improvement by reducing the waiting period to one week. We will then have had five years' administrative experience in operating the plan. We would be able to anticipate the cost of the plan with even greater precision.

Although it is politically attractive to me, as the Minister of Labour, to recommend the acceptance of such an amendment, I must resist the temptation. As desirable as this amendment may be from a humanitarian point of view and as a step in the direction toward an Utopian plan, we must look at what we have tried to do with this. We have tried to construct it in such a way that the workers in this country will get maximum benefits at a reasonable cost. We think we have been able to do this, which you will see if you look at it in the total picture rather than at segments of it. If we were to reduce the two-week period to one week we would substantially increase the weekly contribution, not only to employees at 65 cents a week minimum, but by a dollar or more a week to employers, or conversely we might reduce the benefits and thus reduce the pay-outs.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) quite honestly and properly suggested that the two-week period represents a savings to the plan. It also provides something equally as important. It provides an opportunity to administer the plan with a maximum degree of efficiency. These two things have made it possible for us to introduce maximum benefits with the smallest possible burden on the working force. While the principle of the amendment is socially desirable, I think it is premature, and in a sense this will be the main area on which amendments to the act in five years' time might centre.

Let me say in conclusion that we have to make certain the new features of the act in relation to sickness and maternity are administered properly. We need this time to check out many aspects of eligibility. This would be very difficult with a one-week waiting period. And I point out again that if an applicant registers on Friday this will mean really only eight days required to process a claim properly and ascertain whether the sickness is in reality a real sickness. We must check other aspects in respect of maternity as well.

Equally as important is the fact that the reduction from two weeks to one week would place an added financial burden on the plan amounting to $160 million to $400 million depending on the use of the sickness and maternity features. Even though employees might be quite happy to share the load in this regard, it would cost an extra 65 cents or a dollar a week. Furthermore, it might well interfere with sickness plans now in existence, some paid for by employers who provide some form of payment during a period of sickness. For all these reasons, I would respectfully ask the House to reject the amendment.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words about the amendment before the House. I listened with a great deal of interest to the statement just made by the minister. He gave us the additional cost involved in cutting down the waiting period to one week. I must say I still do not accept the argument put forward. It seems to me if we are going to save between $160 million and $400 million in cost that sum of money still has to come from somewhere. It has to come out of the pockets of the workers, and these are the people receiving benefits from the sickness and maternity features, but these are workers without jobs. They can ill afford to lose this benefit because of the additional costs, even though it will be spread nation-wide among these unemployed.

There is another point which I do not think was covered. If it was I must have missed it. The act as it now exists provides for a one-week waiting period in a benefit year of 52 weeks. The proposed legislation calls for a two-week period. The question I ask is what happens to those workers who have a series of jobs during the summer? They will not only lose two weeks but perhaps four weeks in a year, or maybe more. This waiting period is not going to be just a one-shot affair, at least as I read and understand the bill. If an individual is unemployed twice during the year, he will have a full month during which he will receive no unemployment insurance at all. There are a lot of people in this category. A very large number of casual workers in every part of Canada do not have just one job but a series of jobs. They lose considerable benefits, as I see it, unless the minister has more information on this. Is there to be more than one two-week waiting period in a year? They should be able to continue receiving benefit without interruption if they have sufficient stamps. I would like an explanation on this.

Some of the groups which have been writing to me are as worried about this aspect of the legislation as I am. I feel we should have left the one week stipulation in the regulations. I would have reversed the condition the minister has given this House. I think we should have tried this legislation for the first year or perhaps for the first two years. The government certainly will not be paying nearly as much in unemployment insurance costs as it paid under the old plan. As I read it, they will not be paying part of the cost of running the plan until there is over 4 per cent unemployment. Why do we not experiment for a year and let the government pick up the tab so that we might find out what it is to be, and then have a review at the end of the first or second year. This would be the proper approach.

Let us give the unemployed people in Canada a break. Let us tell them this is really a new plan. This is what it should be. This is the object of the legislation. There are some substantial improvements in the legislation, but this is one of the particularly weak sections of it. I still feel the amendment to cut back the waiting period to one week, as presently exists under the old plan, is a sound one which ought to be accepted by the minister.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question on motion No. 4?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Orders the division stands deferred. As agreed by the House earlier during the debate, this will apply to motions Nos. 5, 7 and 8.

I have indicated before that motions Nos. 6 and 21 have been combined for purposes of debate, it being understood that a vote either negative or affirmative in relation to motion No. 6 would also dispose of motion No. 21.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West) moved:

That Bill C-229, An Act respecting unemployment insurance in Canada, be amended by deleting the word "eight" in paragraph (a) of subclause (2) of clause 17, line 16 at page 11, and substituting the word "twelve".

That Bill C-229, An Act respecting unemployment insurance in Canada, be amended by deleting from Schedule A at page 106, under the column titled "Weeks of insurable employment in qualifying period' in Table 1, the figure "8" in the first entry thereunder and substituting the figure "12".

He said: Mr. Speaker, there is not too much enthusiasm from the other side at this point.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There is not too much on your side either.

Mr. Alexander: Well, we have quality here which is extremely important. We do not need quantity. I have always been particularly concerned, and in fact I would say perturbed, about what would happen in respect of this particular clause. If I recall correctly, the present act indicates that those who will be entitled to unemployment benefits must have had an attachment to the labour force for 30 weeks in the past 104 weeks, with eight weeks being in the last year. When I think of that, I recall that our party has indicated not only in this House but also across the nation that we beg the minister not only to increase the benefits but also reduce the period of eligibility. I do not think anyone would attack us in that regard, particularly because of the cost of living these days, but I shall not go into that because we are not talking about the maximum benefit. I hope when we asked that the eligibility period be reduced the minister did not think we wished to give away things on a platter. When I look at the eight-week period it would seem to be a considerable change, in my humble opinion. The explanation I heard would lead me to believe that it was just a question of judgment whether it would be 6 weeks, 8 weeks, 10 weeks or 12 weeks.

I became increasingly concerned when I found that an eight-week attachment—if I recall correctly and if all things are equal—would allow one to receive 44 weeks of benefit. This is really what I would call a good thing. Surely, we are all in the position where we think about helping one another and being our brother's keeper. Certainly the government must at times, according to my philosophy, help people to help themselves. I wonder, however, whether in fact we are really helping people to help themselves when we reduce the eligibility period to eight weeks. I know I have been misquoted in the newspapers. I have been misunderstood as a result of these misquotations from not only the newspapers but also the radio. I have been quoted as saying the Canadian people are lazy. I have never said any such thing and do not intend to say it. I realize I said that if I were involved I would be tempted to work for eight weeks only with the expectation of receiving 44 weeks of benefit, but certainly it would seem to me that when you hold out some inducement to a person all you are doing is trying to influence people to have little personal initiative in an effort to get ahead.

This is what concerns me and this is the reason I object most strenuously. I know the minister and his officials have indicated to me how important they feel this change is. For the life of me, however, I cannot understand it, particularly when in the committee we were given the impression that the eight-week period was just taken out of the air and was a question of judgment. When I look up at my friends, the officials sitting in the gallery, I wonder why their judgment did not allow them to pick 12 weeks, which I would think would be more in keeping with allowing a person to have initiative. If we are trying to follow the new line of thinking, which is to the effect that governments must be involved with people, it would seem to me we should try to leave people with a will to continue to work and make it on their own. How can we do that when we indicate to a person that all he has to do now is become attached to the labour force for eight weeks in a year and, if all goes well, he will be allowed 44 weeks of benefits. He might be earning $100 a week. Let us put it at $150 a week for eight weeks, and with the new benefits which he will be able to obtain, it appears to me that a person can acquire 44 times $100, which is $4,400.

Of course, the other important point is that it is taxable. Many people will understand that these benefits are not free. The minister indicated, rightly so, that we are going to give some benefits, but we will get something back from them. If you make $150 a week during the eight weeks you contribute, it seems to me that if things go well eventually you can take out $4,400. Perhaps I am wrong. I hope that the minister will clear that up, but as I understand it and as the officials have stated, that is the gist of it.

I could go on and on with it, but I just want to register my dismay and my lack of understanding of how the government can possibly think that this is an incentive. I thought that when we talked about unemployment insurance we meant temporary income maintenance. But 44 weeks is not temporary, it is permanent; as a matter of fact, it is a whole year's salary. I am not saying it is the best of salaries, but I am wondering what we are attempting to do. This is supposed to be temporary income maintenance to facilitate re-absorption into the productive activity of the work force.

All I can say in conclusion is that I am dismayed by this particular clause, and I am afraid that with all the good intentions the government may have, this clause is open to abuse. It removes the incentive that we are all seeking. It certainly does not enhance personal initiative. So, my two motions are an attempt to make the act more reasonable. What we are trying to do is to allow people to help themselves. I think this is what the government should be doing.

The philosophy of my party is that the government should not move in until it is actually and really required. In other words, the individual should be able to help himself, and this is what I like about our philosophy. Governments should not just look after people from their birth to their death, but we are starting to move in this direction. Whether or not Canadian people can afford this is questionable. But I hope that the minister, as well as my colleagues in the House, will appreciate what I am saying. It is not that the Canadian people are lazy. Heavens, no, I would never say that. What I am saying is that when you hold out these enticements, these inducements, these carrots, there is bound to be abuse. I hope that the administration which will be set up will be able to cope with these abuses effectively, because I can foresee problems for the department and for the minister. What he has done, in effect, has been to remove the initiative from people to continue to seek work.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it was very pleasant when we were debating the last set of amendments to be associated with the members of both of the other opposition parties. On that occasion we were unanimous. That unanimity is at this moment shattered by the stupidity of the motion that my friend has put down. I cannot say I am surprised in the sense that I am taken unawares because it is an amendment which my friends in the official opposition moved when we were in committee, but I thought it had been sufficiently dealt with there so that they would not be so foolish as to raise it again on the floor of the House.

I must say also that I find it quite inconsistent for my good friends to the right to want to improve unemployment insurance for the workers by cutting the waiting period from two weeks to one in the last debate and now wanting to make the whole scheme less attractive for the workers by making it necessary for them to have a longer attachment to the work force before they can collect benefits.

I also find it a piece of inconsistency for hon. members to my right to say that one of the things that is wrong—and this was said today—about bringing teachers under the plan is that the plan will not provide them with benefits when they need them, namely before they start to work at all. So in that instance they are really asking for no attachment. They were asking for benefits to be paid to certain people before they start to work, and now when the act proposes that they shall receive benefits after a period of eight weeks, they say, oh no, that is too soon, that is offering a carrot; it is a contribution to laziness, so we must make it 12 weeks.

I really think that the argument which my good friend, the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), put up in which he builds a case of people paying this small unemployment insurance premium for eight weeks and then automatically collecting benefits, as he says, for 44 weeks, is a poor one. Although he did not put the actual multiplication in cold language, he gave the impression that they would receive $4,400 for a few weeks contribution, namely eight weeks contribution to the unemployment insurance fund. It does not work out that way.

Surely he knows that there are two kinds of claims, a minor claim and a major claim, and surely he knows that eight weeks does not entitle you to the full benefit. There are other conditions to be met. Surely, he also knows that you do not get a benefit of $100 a week unless you have had a certain period of employment at $150 a week. This kind of attack on the unemployment insurance scheme is all right when you read it in some of the Tory newspapers in the country, the financial papers and others.

Mr. Alexander: The hon. member is getting mean.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I do not want to be mean, I just want to get my good friend back on the track. In the debates up to his point he has been speaking for the workers, trying to improve things for them, and a number of his amendments are in that direction, although not all of them. But I think this one is completely out of character, at least for my good friend, the hon. member for Hamilton West.

We debated it at length in the committee, so I do not need to spin it out now. I still think that my hon. friends are right when they express concern for people who make no contributions at all. I think that a person who has trained to be a teacher or trained for some other job, who has spent a few years at it and who has spent money, and once he has graduated and has his skill and his documents and cannnot get a job at all, should have some coverage. But at least the government has got it down to eight weeks, and the committee has agreed to eight weeks for a minor attachment claim. It takes longer than that for a major attachment claim. The minister no doubt will deal with that, but I think that to suggest it should be lengthened is not like my hon. friend.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Alexander: You should never trust me.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): But I still have confidence in my hon. friend. He has been in character when he has been pleading for a better deal for the workers. I am just sorry he has proposed this amendment and, as he knows, we shall vote against it vigorously.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about this amendment because I had trouble following the arguments of the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander).

As the previous speaker, I am surprised to note the difference of opinions about his two motions. The hon. member for Hamilton West suggests that the period of employment entitling to unemployment insurance benefits should be raised from eight as mentioned in the bill. to 12 weeks.

Mr. Speaker, I think that this period of eight weeks is acceptable. I did not have the opportunity to check all the clauses of the bill but I understand that this eight-week period will exclude the clauses of the legislation providing for a period of benefits during the slack season. I believe this is so. In my opinion, if we extended this period to 12 weeks, as the hon. member for Hamilton West requests, we would have to bring in other changes to the law or leave as it is the present provision concerning the seasonal period.

In my opinion, it would be preferable to approve the proposal in the bill providing for an employment period of eight weeks only.

There is another point that was not mentioned in this debate. In the remarks on the white paper on unemployment insurance, the students' problem has quite often been referred to. For instance, someone asked what the white paper on unemployment insurance provided for students. Obviously, a youth who has just completed his studies is very seldom credited with contributions to unemployment insurance. But with this short qualifying employment period of eight weeks it will happen often enough that during the holiday period students will have been able to work for these eight weeks, even during a single vacation, and so will have accumulated enough contributions to be entitled to unemployment insurance benefits when their course is completed if they do not find immediate employment.

Thanks to these eight weeks of employment accumulated during the preceding vacation, students will be entitled to unemployment insurance benefits. If this period is extended to 12 weeks, they will be in difficulty.

This is why, Mr. Speaker, I must oppose the motion moved by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander).

[English]

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) sort of ridiculed the members of this party because we had fought for this amendment in the committee and had been beaten. He said the matter had been threshed over and therefore we should not discuss it again. If we follow that line of thinking, it means that once a member has lost any motion in this House he should never return to it, but I point out that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has fought for the same motion year after year in this House—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Not when it's stupid.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): It must have been stupid because the House has always turned it down. When a member is beaten in committee, that does not prevent him from presenting his argument to the House. Therefore, I have no hesitation on speaking on this motion. The same hon. member talked about this party being inconsistent. Mr. Speaker, if we appear to be inconsistent, it is only because the bill is so full of inconsistencies that one cannot talk about it without appearing to be inconsistent.

The minister has said that the basis of the bill is universality. Throughout the committee hearings members of this party pointed out instances where the government had departed from the principle of universality.

[Mr. Laprise.]

But I must admit that the minister, with a display of co-operative spirit, has granted us some of the things we sought. The bill makes provision for a certain attachment to the labour force. It refers to increasing benefits because people need more money due to the higher cost of living. There is also a reference to extending benefits to people who do not have a long attachment to the labour force. But on the other hand, the government says that we must lengthen the waiting period otherwise the provisions of the bill will cost too much money. Just how can you talk consistently on a bill which contains so many inconsistent principles? This is a most illogical and inconsistent piece of legislation.

I was one of the members in committee who spoke about the qualifying period. The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) asked the officials to tell him the basis for the eight weeks qualifying period, and in reply they gave what in hockey is known as a judgment call. In other words, they decided that eight weeks was a nice sounding figure. My hon. friend was told that this was the same as in the present act. I do not agree with that. It is true that under the act a person must have eight weeks attachment in the current year, but there is a stimulation that he must have a bit more than that going back over 104 weeks. We asked the officials why it should not be ten weeks, 12 weeks or 14 weeks, and the answer was that if it were extended to ten weeks it would exclude many people from the benefits given by the act. I attended many of the committee hearings and I did not hear any logical explanation from anyone with respect to the eight week figure. Why couldn't it be ten weeks or 12 weeks? That is the question we want answered. If we had asked the officials why not reduce it to two weeks, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would probably have said, hurrah. If the theory behind this legislation is that it is to look after all the people who are out of work, then why not reduce the period still further?

I do not want to be misquoted, as the hon. member for Hamilton West was, but I do want to express my belief that all the people who are out of work through no fault of their own should be looked after, but not all through the Unemployment Insurance Act. We have other general legislation. We have welfare legislation. Why destroy the whole intent of the Unemployment Insurance Act by extending much needed welfare through it to people who are out of work but who are not really in the labour force? When I say "not really in the labour force" I would like to give one or two examples of what reducing the work period to eight weeks can do. Take the example of a seasonally employed housewife, of a woman working in a department store at Christmas time. Her husband may be making $10,000 or $20,000 a year and not be in need of any assistance. If this clause is passed as it stands, the woman may work for eight weeks and draw benefits for 44 weeks. I am not going to quibble with my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre about whether this is $100 a week; to me the important thing is that by working for eight weeks she can draw benefits for 44 weeks.

I took this up with an official one day in committee because I thought I must be on the wrong track and I could not believe the answer he gave me. I asked, "As a matter of law, if a person works eight weeks a year, he can draw benefits for the other 44 weeks?" He said, "That's right". So then I asked, "Can a person go back to work for eight weeks the next year and draw benefits for another 44 weeks?" He said, "That's right". I cannot find the logic in this provision or understand how it can be called insurance or how such a person can conceivably be classed as a worker.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. Is the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I am merely asking the hon. member if he would allow me a question.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Thomas) allow the hon. member a question?

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): Yes.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, according to the hon. member, a person may work for only eight weeks each year and receive unemployment insurance benefits during 44 weeks. Could he tell us what would happen to the worker who lost his job through his own fault at the end of eight weeks?

[English]

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer that question; that is up to the officials to decide. I am talking about a person who has the eight-week qualification. If all things break in his favour, he can draw benefits for 44 weeks and he can do the same thing the following year. The minister and I have had good natured exchanges on this point in committee. He said that he assumes all Canadian people are honest and not lazy. I agree with the minister but I qualify the word "all"; I say some Canadian people would take advantage of the regulations. There is an old saw that anything you get from the government is not stolen. That is what will happen here. People will feel that if they have satisfied the minimum requirement and have worked the eight weeks, they can draw the benefits for 44 weeks and be within the law. It is the same thing as taking advantage of the loopholes in the Income Tax Act; that is not regarded as breaking the law.

I differ with the minister on this point. The hon. member for Hamilton West made the point that if you dangle a carrot in front of a person's nose long enough he is going to snap it. I agree with him and that is what we are doing here. In most large cities, the department stores take on seasonal help. It is a common practice for people to work several weeks around Christmas time, and then get laid off so that they can curl all winter. These people then go back to work for another seven or eight weeks in the spring, and get laid off again so they can golf all summer. While it is true there is an enforcement section in the act, I am using this illustration to point out what will happen if the rewards are made great enough that people do not mind cheating a little; it is not dishonest, it is cheating.

Another thing that bothers me about reducing the period to eight weeks is how it will affect students. I asked the officials whether a student who works eight weeks this summer, goes back to college in the fall and is available for work again the following May probably for the balance of the year, could draw benefits as in the previous illustration. I was told that conceivably he could draw benefits up to 44 weeks. We all know the propensity of college students for travel and I can just see what will happen here. The student will say, "All right, I worked eight weeks last summer, I will take benefits for eight or twelve weeks and travel across the country". He can say that he will be available for work because he can get from Montreal to Toronto overnight if necessary. These are some of the abuses that can creep in when the plan is made so attractive. In committee one Liberal member said that we should be trying to help students. Of course we should, but this is not the way to do it. Let the government get the economy going to the point where we can give employment to students in summer and then they won't be tempted to take unemployment insurance benefits.

These are some of the reasons that I am in favour of this amendment to increase the qualifying period to 12 weeks, Mr. Speaker. I say again, it is only a judgment figure. I have not received any satisfactory explanation from the officials why eight weeks was chosen other than the fact that is the provision in the present act. I say it is not the same as the present act and, therefore, we could take any figure out of the hat. I feel that extending the period to 12 weeks, as my colleague has suggested in his amendment, would at least remove some of the dangers and ensure that those people who are applying for benefits are really in the labour force rather than just itinerant workers who work long enough to qualify and then draw benefits. By increasing the period to 12 weeks we would plug some of the loopholes that exist at the present time.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I wish to support the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) because I believe it will help to restore to the proposed bill principles more in keeping with an insurance scheme than those measures now proposed by the government. In my opinion, the proposed act departs from the insurance principle by being universal and extending benefits to too many people who are basically not employed in the work force. If these people are to be assisted, and I think many of them should be, other vehicles are available and should be used to look after them.

Under the present Unemployment Insurance Act, and as stated on page 10 of the government's white paper on "Unemployment Insurance in the 70's", a claimant must have contributed to the unemployment insurance fund for at least 30 weeks over the preceding two 1-year period to qualify for benefits from it. The government now proposes to reduce this qualifying period or period of attachment to the labour force to eight weeks in any one year in order for a participant to receive benefits.

In its calculations of the cost of its new unemployment insurance plan, the government's financial assumptions were based on a national rate of unemployment of 4 per cent. Using this rate, it was estimated that the lowering of the eligibility period for the receipt of benefits would cost an extra 160 million dollars. Thus, even on a national basis of 4 per cent unemployment, a rate which we have not had for very nearly two years, by extending the proposed eligibility period from eight to 12 weeks, the government would be saving considerable money and could use it in other areas.

Even by increasing the eligibility period from eight to 12 weeks, Mr. Speaker, it will be entirely possible for someone to collect benefits from the unemployment insurance fund totally out of keeping with the government's publicly expressed desire to have an insurance scheme which will act as an incentive to work rather than the reverse. When one considers that most people in the country are engaged in tasks which are often unsatisfactory or unpleasant to them it seems to me that these people, with every good intention in the world, can use whatever means is available to make their lives happier.

• (4:40 p.m.)

As I recall, one of the reasons given during committee study of this bill for the government's removal of seasonal unemployment insurance benefits from the new act was that by lowering the eligibility period to eight weeks, a large measure of the need for seasonal unemployment insurance benefits would be eliminated. I would like to illustrate just how expensive an elimination this may well be by citing certain testimony which was brought out at the meeting of the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration on May 5. The example which I shall cite concerns someone who works for as few as eight weeks a year, thus making him eligible for the receipt of benefits under the proposed new Unemployment Insurance Act. If he earns $150 during each of these eight weeks and pays into the fund a mere $1.19 weekly in premiums, which is the proposed new premium rate for the maximum weekly insurable earnings, or $9.52 for the eight weeks in which he works, he can draw a total of $4,000 in benefits from the fund.

The following exchange of remarks occurred at the committee meeting on May 5 between the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Thomas) and the general legal counsel to the unemployment insurance committee:

MR. THOMAS (MONCTON): All right. I think Mr. Alexander will have an amendment. I will ask Mr. Steele or Mr. Douglas, one of the officials about a claimant who has the minor entitlement of eight weeks. If he has the entitlement, how many weeks benefits could he actually draw if he qualified for all phases of the situation, if at all?

[Mr. Ritchie.]

MR. DOUGLAS: If he has the minimum?

MR. THOMAS (MONCTON): If he has the minimum of eight weeks what are the maximum benefits he could draw?

Mr. Douglas: He can draw eight weeks in his initial benefit period—

MR. THOMAS (MONCTON): Right.

MR. DOUGLAS: Ten additional in the extended, which is eighteen, then if the national rate is favourable to him, that is, over 5 per cent, he could draw eight more, but it would depend on the national rate of unemployment at the time he finished the ten. Then if the regional rate at the end of that period were favourable to him, if it exceeded the national rate by at least three points and was over 4 per cent, then he could go on for another eighteen. In most cases it will be a matter of his having the eighteen weeks plus some extended benefits.

MR. THOMAS (MONCTON): So if my arithmetic is correct, that gives a maximum of forty-four weeks, for eight weeks' work he could draw forty-four weeks benefits. He could work eight weeks this year, draw forty-four weeks benefits, conceivably he could work eight weeks next year and draw forty-four weeks benefits. Is that correct?

MR. DOUGLAS: It would be possible if everything worked right for him.

Considering the application of this provision to my own area, I would like to point out that there are many farmers who must leave the land at the ages of 50, 55 or 60. They are still in good physical condition. They usually are not attached to the labour force. A farmer helping his neighbour with planting and harvesting would work slightly over eight weeks; that is the usual period in western Canada. This person could qualify for benefits. If the conditions were right, he could conceivably draw benefits for 44 weeks. Generally speaking, these people are not part of the work force. However, with this provision, it would be to their advantage to pay unemployment insurance in order to qualify for the extended benefits. With this in mind, I believe that the eligibility period of eight weeks is too short. It should be extended to at least 12 weeks. I do not disagree that there are some people who only work eight weeks who are in need of some help to sustain them through the year. However, for those people who consistently work only eight weeks a year, some other means must be found to assist them. In any event, the maximum benefit of 44 weeks is not enough to see them through the year. Therefore, I hope the House will see its way clear to support this amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments on the amendment.

I will say right away that I am not quite in agreement with the sponsor. One could ask: why not two, three, four, twelve or fifteen weeks?

To my mind, the bill in its present form really fits into the context. After listening to comments of some hon. members I am under the impression that there has not been sufficient recognition of the present context. The department is now making a commendable effort, in keeping with the unemployment problem we now face.

I also recognize that some individuals would be tempted to work only eight weeks to obtain benefits during 44 weeks. If I was assured that the bill would be in effect during 10, 15 or 20 years, I would probably object to such a clause. However, I think that the present situation was taken into account and considering the difficulties which we are experiencing—I imagine that it is always possible to annul the bill with the approval of the House—it is quite acceptable under the cirmumstances.

I wonder if it would not be advisable to ask the minister to consider seriously the situation, in order not to tempt workers to work eight weeks to be entitled to 44 weeks of benefits.

It would be to the advantage of the minister and the government to consider, in the future, requiring a given type of work for a given benefit. I believe that is where the problem lies. If we continue to increase unemployment insurance benefits, we are tempting the people and we are inviting them to take the line of least resistance. And that is dangerous.

Always within the present context, I believe that this clause is acceptable, but I must take advantage of this opportunity to tell the minister that any work that is of benefit to society should be considered. Municipalities and provinces would find it useful, I think, to enter into agreements with the federal government for certain projects that are urgently needed and that they cannot afford to carry out alone.

If we keep on constantly increasing unemployment insurance benefits and relaxing the requirements, we shall be responsible, for instance, for spoiling a generation because we are inviting them to abuse their rights. We must be careful not to allow the people to get the benefits too easily.

Considering the present context and the difficulties we know, this clause of the bill is acceptable in 1971 and I hope we shall be able through the co-operation of hon. members to set up some programs and projects in consultation with provinces and municipalities so that benefits will always be available.

We shall better serve the interests of the nation by ensuring a fair distribution of benefits, but it is still alarming and annoying for the people who work all their lives to see others collect benefits so easily.

Indeed, some workers wonder why they spend their lives working, year after year, while others manage to survive without doing so.

To my mind, even though they will be increased, unemployment benefits will still not be high for many people. I think most Canadian workers have more ambition than that and always try to work.

Still, the limit of eight weeks is logical. Surely, with a much lower rate of unemployment, we could perhaps increase these requirements to 12 or 15 weeks. But I believe that for the moment, these eight weeks are welcome and we will try and demand a minimum of work for the good of society rather than give more in return for lesser requirements.

In closing my remarks, I would say that I am in favour of the clause dealing with the qualifying period.

Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971

• (4:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): I should like to take part in the debate for a few moments. First, I would indicate my full support for the amendments proposed by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander). I commend him for the action he is taking in this regard. A great many politicians today seem to believe that anything which results in giving anything away is something they should support; they are most reluctant to speak out against it. My hon. friend has indicated both by his remarks and by his amendment that there are principles associated with the unemployment insurance scheme which must be adhered to, namely that the fund must not be subject to such a drain that it is again placed in the precarious position in which it found itself on several occasions in the past as a result of too many people drawing out large benefits as compared to the amounts paid in.

If eight weeks is all that is required before a worker qualifies for benefit, there is a real danger that the fund will prove to be actuarially unsound. The hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Thomas), has pointed out that a great many people who are not really full time labourers in the work force are drawing huge sums of money from the fund as compared with the contributions they made to it. It is all very well to extoll the virtues of the worker, to say he is honest, progressive and willing to work under any circumstances. I think it is probably true that most Canadians have those qualities. But if we ignore the fact that people will take advantage of any piece of government legislation, we show ourselves to be so naïve that we should not even be in this House. Because they will take advantage. They have taken advantage of the legislation which is on the statute books at the present time. The minister knows this as well as I do.

As parliamentarians, it is our obligation to the taxpayer and to the working man to pass legislation which eliminates this exploitation as far as possible. To make it a requirement that one should work for only two months in order to qualify for ten months' benefit does not really assist in keeping people in the labour force. In this day and age, we ought to do things which ensure that people stay in the labour force once they can find employment. It is difficult at this stage to talk about these things because there are a great many people who cannot get two months' work even if they wished to qualify. I can understand the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) being concerned about this at the present stage of our affairs. But we hope this is only a short-term affair and that in the not-too-distant future there will be employment for those who wish to work in Canada, that the economy will be able to produce the employment needed. What I am saying is that if a person wants to work, he should be required to work at least for three months before he becomes eligible for unemployment insurance benefits.

I return to what the hon. member for Moncton said. He drew attention to the fact that there are a great many people who work part-time and who desire to work only part-time. For example, there are university students who work in department stores and places like that which provide part-time employment. They will now find themselves in a position where they can work for two months and collect unemployment insurance for 44 weeks. If this is allowed to happen a very heavy strain will be placed on the fund and, as I say, it is likely to become actuarially unsound.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. It being five o'clock it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald)—Transport—review by government of ferry rate increases imposed by Canadian National Railways in Maritimes; the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie)—External Affairs—Request for statement on NATO foreign ministers meeting; the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Ryan)—Housing—The Richmond Square project in Toronto.

ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I have the honour to inform the House that the following communication has been received:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE
OTTAWA

10 June 1971

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Right Honourable Gérald Fauteux, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 10th of June, at 5.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Esmond Butler
Secretary to the Governor General.

[English]

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on the order paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions for papers, and public bills.

• (5:00 p.m.)

PRIVATE BILLS

CENTRAL-DEL RIO OILS LIMITED

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill S-12, respecting Central-Del Rio Oils Limited, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

[Mr. Coates.]

Mr. Peters (for Mr. Skoberg) moved:

That Bill S-12, an act respecting Central-Del Rio Oils Limited, be amended by adding the following to clause 1 at line 27 on page 1:

"on the condition that sections 52 to 56 of the Bank Act apply to the company mutatis mutandis notwithstanding the provisions of part I of the Canada Corporations Act."

He said: Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Same old speech.

Mr. Peters: —those who believe in Canadian ownership and want to ensure that this country has Canadian ownership, particularly to preserve as such companies that are now Canadian, make the same old speech from time to time and those who are opposed, like some of my Liberal friends, either make a speech in favour of the sort of speech you would expect from those interested in selling. Then it all depends how much they can get for it; it is a tradeable commodity. I am happy to have my speech bear the stamp of "Same old speech" because we in this party have always been in favour of Canadian ownership and thus it is a pleasure to come before the House today to ask for certain considerations in this regard.

My colleague the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) would want to indicate that we apply to this company the provisions of Sections 52 to 56 of the Bank Act that are laid out in the Canadian statutes. Because of expediency, as well as necessity, the Bank Act provided that foreign-owned banking institutions in this country would be permitted, but foreign-owned banks—and there was a small one in Canada at that time—were to be given a number of alternatives. The Bank Act also provided that a particular bank or company could decide whether it would remain a small investment organization in this country or, alternatively, take a ten-year period to expand very rapidly with the intention of disposing of their operation at the end of that time.

The Bank Act was worded in that way to permit an honest transfer of stock to Canadian shareholders. It allowed the company to make a reasonable profit on their banking ventures in Canada because for a ten-year period they were able to take advantage of expansions of the market and of the provisions of the act. Then they were given the opportunity to sell the operation at a reasonable profit. Those involved in passing the amendments to the Bank Act were of the opinion that the banking institutions of Canada were so important to our development and to the operation of this country as a nation that they wrote into the act these concessions in response to the decision that we had made that the banking institutions of Canada must at all times be under the control of the Parliament of Canada and must react in a predictable way to the policies of the Bank of Canada.

This has been an acceptable position. It is not the kind of position that would be taken in countries which nationalize industries for the sake of nationalization. It did allow for the orderly expansion of the operation concerned. If companies decided to remain in this country with modest growth so they would retain a very small portion of the financial market, then they would be able to do so. However, if they wanted to get the benefit of the normal financial expansion that they could expect if they were allowed to use their banking skills to increase their operations in Canada, then they could do so provided they sold the operation after ten years.

I agree with those who may speak on this subject later and say that the application of the Bank Act to this particular company does make for a ponderous type of legislation in that it takes into consideration some of the difficulties that develop in financial institutions, the fact that financial institutions often have lending problems that may extend over a period of years, and the difficulty of orderly liquidation in the market. This may not apply to this particular company, but we have had companies come before us which on a voluntary basis, with the prodding of the sponsor, the prodding of Members of Parliament and the knowledge of several other companies that they were operating in Canada in a field that was of importance to the development of the economy and resources of our nation, made the concession to members of this party, who for a long time have been interested in Canadian control of our development and of our institutions, that they would remain Canadian and would make this a condition of their incorporation.

There have been other companies—not numerous, unfortunately—which have voluntarily made the concession that if granted the incorporation they were asking for they would make a commitment to Parliament and to the corporate affairs department responsible for our corporate structure that if they did not become 50 per cent Canadian-owned, at the end of the ten-year period they would relinquish their charter and cease to exist as a corporate entity under federal law.

I admit that I do not know whether the corporate structure that we have established in Canada, particularly the provisions of the Corporations Act, has the machinery to ascertain in a meaningful way whether or not companies are Canadian. I am not sure whether companies are in a position to know whether 50 per cent of the stock is in the hands of Canadians normally resident in Canada or whether in their shareholdings there are holding companies which meet the criterion of Canadian-resident ownership yet are in fact controlled from outside the country. In my opinion we have not given consideration to devising a method of ascertaining the nominal control of a company through the stock procedures we allow in Canada. We do not have the machinery necessary to make this assessment and do something about it.

Representatives of this company appeared before the committee and made several commitments. I am not aware whether those commitments have been carried out. If you look at the Financial Post survey on oils for 1971 you find that this company has a number of wholly-owned subsidiaries, an interest in more than 705 million net acres of oil rights and 20 million net acres in oil and gas rights, chiefly in western and northern Canada. As of October, 1969, these companies had issued 20 million shares through Canadian Pacific Investments Limited for all the issued and outstanding shares of Canadian Pacific Oil and Gas Limited.

The purpose of this bill is to amalgamate Central-Del Rio Oils Limited and Canadian Pacific Oil and Gas Limited. They would be amalgamated under the Canada Corporations Act, with the shareholders' approval to be sought at a subsequent annual meeting. The shareholders of this company are at this stage, from my reading of—

Mr. Mahoney: Why don't you say it from memory?

Mr. Peters: I have not been closely connected with the oil industry long enough to name the board of directors without at least looking them up. I suppose the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) could do this. He would say that former Premier Manning is probably a director of every oil company in western Canada. He has been well rewarded. I suppose he would say that Duff Roblin could reasonably be expected to be on the board of directors of this and every other oil company in western Canada.

Then it would become a little more difficult because you run out of premiers. In reading the list of the executive of various oil companies I cannot find the name of a former premier of Saskatchewan. This may be an oversight or it may reflect to some extent the policy of the Saskatchewan government and its interest in having Canadian ownership and Canadian rights in the hands of Canadians. This is particularly so in respect of oil companies on a provincial basis. I suppose the other provinces were not so fussy. In reading this list of directors I find the names of both gentleman whom I mentioned. It is interesting to note that the address of Hon. Duff Roblin is listed as Montreal, rather than Manitoba, but I presume it is the same person. It is also interesting to note that Mr. Taylor is president of this company and several subsidiaries.

It is surprising that a few years ago this company was almost entirely owned or controlled by Canadian Pacific Investments Limited, which was operating almost entirely on pension moneys of the workers of Canadian Pacific Railway. This very large sum of money represented Canadian investment of a very basic kind.

This bill was considered by the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and by the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. It is to be noted that the Canadian Pacific Railway pension funds constituted, I suppose, a controlling interest in this company. Suddenly the fund did not appear to represent a major investment in this company. This fact gives rise to the problem referred to by the hon. member for Moose Jaw. He noticed that there was a change almost overnight. The fund did not represent a major investment in a Canadian-owned operation, but an operation held or controlled by another company.

We believe, as I hope some Liberals—

Mr. Bell: Don't count on it.

Mr. Peters: —and some Conservatives do, that a company which is involved in a resource-based industry in this nation should play a very important role in the development of our natural resources. We also believe, as I am sure most members do, that if a company is Canadian-owned it will play a role consistent with the wishes and aspirations of the Canadian public at large.

I am well aware that we are asking a great deal of the people who control Canadian corporations operating our development industries, in that they operate side by side with United States corporations involved in industries of which they have no particular knowledge or interest except profit making. I am sure most members agree that a Canadian appointed as president, as we have in the case of Central-Del Rio Oils Limited, will be interested in ecology, conservation and the orderly development of a corporate structure operating in the resource fields and will represent to a greater extent the aspirations of the Canadian nation in this regard than will the president of a United States or a foreign-owned corporation.

There have been changes in the shareholders and in the operations of this company. Mr. Taylor, as president of Central-Del Rio, could not give the assurance that the shareholders would remain Canadian. He could not give a commitment that the board of directors would remain Canadian. I suggest that the decision to have this company under the control and direction of Canadian nationalists can only be made by Parliament. If we include in this bill those sections of the Bank Act which apply to control and ownership by foreign corporations we will have decided that as long as this corporation is under the Canada Corporations Act it will reflect the aspirations of Canadian nationals and will be controlled by Canadians.

I suggest that many members of this House would agree that Canadian ownership is an important factor in the development of a resource-based area. I refer particularly to hon. members who have been connected with the mining industry and the oil industry. They know that many companies which are buying up Canadian resources do not have any interest in the development of our natural resources. These companies have no interest in or knowledge of the development role they should play in terms of the relationship of the commodity they are producing to the needs of the nation.

When a United States company buys up or obtains control of such a corporation its only motive, and rightly so, is to derive a profit from the resource. Why should a large United States corporation not buy an oil company which will produce a return of 7 per cent, 8 per cent, 10 per cent or 12 per cent on its investment? Why should it be concerned about whether or not it is exploiting the country in which it operates? I do not blame these people a bit. But representing a portion of the Canadian people, I believe I have a responsibility to take every opportunity—and such opportunity arises when company incorporations come up for consideration—to ensure the retention of ownership of industry in the hands of the Canadian public.

There are those who have said, and correctly so, that many entrepreneurs in Canada are engaged in buying up lucrative portfolios. They are not all foreigners. I have seen it in my own area, where Little Longlac gold mine—a little, two-bit company—moved into Kirkland Lake and bought the Lakeshore mine. This company drew out all the Lakeshore profits and closed the mine. I am not familiar with the company or its board of directors, but I can say they are as much scavengers as any foreign-owned company could be. I want to curtail that kind of operation in respect of any company which comes before us, particularly in the area of our resources. For this reason I commend and support the amendment of the hon. member for Moose Jaw.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, it could be said that we are pouring oil on troubled waters, but you know from past experience that when my colleagues in the New Democratic Party speak on this subject, they speak with persuasiveness and strength. The amendment moved by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) is very important, not only to the members of the New Democratic Party but to Canadians at large. I am delighted to see the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Mahoney) in the House, because he comes from Calgary, Alberta. I am also delighted to see our football star, who is also a member from Calgary. I am sure they wish to participate in this debate.

Mr. Paproski: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I am not from Calgary but, rather, from Edmonton.

Mr. Gilbert: I apologize to the hon. member. I am sure these gentlemen will listen very attentively to the comments of my colleagues and will probably participate in the debate.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to present an historical and constructive point of view on this matter. I recall in the early 1960s a voice from the wilderness. I refer to Walter Gordon who sensed the problem of Canadian ownership. He wrote a book. He attempted to take some action because he appreciated the problem of foreign ownership. Unfortunately, his voice was not heard. He left the Liberal cabinet. The result is that we have seen an increasing trend toward foreign ownership. I shall not repeat in detail the tremendous United States and foreign penetration that has taken place in the Canadian economy, particularly in oil fields and natural resources. Surely the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance could do it far more ably than I and I am sure he will be glad to do it.

On its face this bill would appear to be innocent. According to the explanatory notes the purpose is simply to permit the company to be continued as a company incorporated under the Canada Corporations Act. Then the explanatory notes read.

> The company will be permitted to carry out in Canada its existing objects. If the shareholders approve of an application to continue the company as a company incorporated under the Canada Corporations Act, any amalgamation agreement thereafter adopted by the shareholders shall be deemed to be an amalgamation agreement for the purposes of such act, provided that the agreement complies with certain requirements of section 128A of such act.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) pointed out the valiant attempts this party has made to retain Canadian content in companies and more especially companies which may be subject to foreign control. The easy approach to this question would be for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) to bring forward an amendment to the Canada Corporations Act which would include what is set forth in the Bank Act, which is the substance of the amendment of the hon. member for Moose Jaw.

When I came here in 1965 I was made a member of the finance committee when it was studying the Bank Act. The question of foreign ownership came up because of the operations of the Mercantile Bank in Canada. I recall the Minister of Labour playing his usual important part in going down to New York and speaking to Mr. Rockefeller. He pointed out to him how necessary it was to retain Canadian ownership of our banks. The result was that Mr. Rockefeller appeared before the committee and gave evidence.

Then amendments were made to sections 52 to 57 of the Bank Act to the effect that any non-resident may hold up to 10 per cent of the shares in a Canadian bank, but that the total number of shares of a non-resident may not exceed 25 per cent. We in the New Democratic Party feel that although other measures should be taken to regain control of our economy, the measure set forth by the hon. member for Moose Jaw is a step in the right direction. In other words, if it is good enough for the banks it should be good enough for other Canadian companies. This is why the amendment has been brought forward. When the hon. member attempted to bring it forward in the committee he was met with strong objection from some members and did not have the opportunity to present it. The reason he is bringing it forth is to persuade hon. members that it is a vital amendment which should receive the acceptance of all members of the House.

On various occasions I have asked the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray) when he will bring forth his report concerning foreign ownership. He has, to put it midly, delayed making a definite commitment on when this legislation will be brought forth. I, like many Canadians, feel that by the time it is brought forth we will be in a far worse position regarding foreign ownership in Canada than we are today, because foreign penetration is increasing rapidly.

As the former leader of my party puts it, we do not mind our U.S. cousins coming to Canada to visit us, but we would like to stay in the house rather than move to the garage. It appears that Canadians are being moved to the garage while our guests are taking over control of the house. That trend should be stopped. When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) brings forth his budget on Friday, June 18, I am sure he will have in mind the tax impact that oil companies have on the Canadian economy. When you study the effects that our tax laws have on oil companies, with their tax holidays, depletion allowances and all the advantages that accrue to them, you realize how important it is not only to change the tax laws but to change the corporate laws of our country to protect Canadian ownership.

I notice that the parliamentary secretary is listening attentively. He has a wealth of information and experience and I am sure he looks forward to the budget and to what may happen with regard to oil companies and the tax policy. But more important than that is the key question of ownership. I have yet to discover any country that has laws which permit the penetration into their economy that prevails in Canada. When you look at Sweden and Japan you see that when they borrow money for purposes of developing their economy they do it on a loan capital basis rather than on an equity basis. It is high time that we in Canada took the same approach.

If a commentary were written about the former Premier of Alberta, it would be much like that written of Esau—that he sold the natural resources of Canada for a mess of pottage. As Canadians we should see that Esau's conduct is not repeated in Canada; and the former Premier of Alberta being rewarded with a seat in the Senate is not what Canadians want. That is why the hon. member for Moose Jaw is to be commended for his approach to this problem.

I note that the former Solicitor General is present. He has been in the House for more than 30 years and has greatly contributed to the well-being of Canadians. He has been in the forefront of many social measures and I am sure that if he were given the opportunity to become Minister of Finance one of the first steps he would take would be to impose tax laws which would protect Canadian ownership. If he were Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs I am sure the first step he would take would be to adopt the same approach that we took under the Bank Act and have it applied mutatis mutandis. The hon. member knows the real meaning of that phrase; it means "to the same effect"—not only to the Bank Act but to the Corporations Act.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It means tit for tat.

Mr. Gilbert: I believe the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) is asking what I mean by mutatis mutandis. It is a legal, Latin phrase which has an important meaning. The meaning that we want to apply here is the one included in the Bank Act, that a non-resident of Canada should be confined to 10 per cent of the ownership of a Canadian company and ownership by a group of non-residents should not exceed 25 per cent.

I am sure it is not necessary for me to continue. The hon. member for Timiskaming has been so persuasive that I feel I am being repetitive. I am sure that other hon. members will support us.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak on Bill S-12, an act respecting Central-Del Rio Oils Limited. In reading the legislation I believe there are several points which should be put on record. Anyone checking the record of the committee proceedings which took place on May 20, 1971—the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications—will understand why members of my party are apprehensive about the way in which the bill is presently drafted.

We are seeking an amendment to the legislation which will guarantee that this corporation will remain under Canadian control. We do not have to apologize to anyone for the fight we are putting up for Canadian control of our economy. We have been talking about it ever since our party was formed. We will continue to preach this philosophy until Canadians wake up to the fact that we are rapidly losing control of our economy and that once you lose control of your economy, you also lose political control.

I would like to tell members of the House what Central-Del Rio Oils Limited really is and the extent of its holdings in Canada. Questions were asked in the committee of those who were presenting the bill and I should like to read into the record part of the proceedings of the committee. Mr. Beaven was speaking. He spoke about Central-Del Rio Oils Limited and said:

> Mr. Chairman, I have some figures here. Central-Del Rio Oils Limited is controlled to the extent of 89.27 per cent by Canadian Pacific Investments Limited, which in turn is a subsidiary of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Our shareholdings are divided as follows. This was at December 11, 1970, and there has been no significant change. We had a total of 8,374 shareholders, of which approximately 7,200 were corporations and individuals resident in Canada holding in the aggregate just about 30 million shares out of an issue of about 30.5 million. We had 999 shareholders who were individuals and corporations resident in the United States holding in the aggregate 390,000 shares. This is out of 30 million shares. The remaining 128 shareholders were individuals and corporations residing outside of Canada and the United States and holding in the aggregate 319,000 shares. So, of the just over 30 million shares which are issued and outstanding, 29,800,000 are held by residents of Canada.

That is a very satisfying statement and no one would object to it. It is an excellent record and we want to see it maintained. The following question was asked by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg):

> What assurance is there in the bill before us that this company, your Central-Del Rio, would not become predominantly owned by U.S. shareholders or outside shareholders—I will not say U.S.; I will say shareholders outside of Canada? Is there anything in the bill right now before us that would spell out in clarity that this company will remain predominantly owned by Canadian investors?

The answer by Mr. Taylor was:

> No, there is nothing in the bill which spells out that. We cannot give our firm assurance that we will not have foreign shareholders so long as we are listed on the Toronto, Montreal, Calgary and Vancouver stock exchanges. But we can give you the assurance that the ownership in the company by Canadian Pacific Investments will never be less than an appreciable percentage above 50 per cent.

This is the very point that our members are trying to make. While the company is predominantly owned by shareholders in Canada, there is absolutely no guarantee that this situation will remain unchanged. That is the crux of the debate and gave rise to the amendment we have placed before the House. In the context of that answer I should like to read the amendment:

> That Bill S-12, an act respecting Central-Del Rio Oils Limited, be amended by adding the following to clause 1 at line 27 on page 1:
> "on the condition that sections 52 to 56 of the Bank Act apply to the company mutatis mutandis notwithstanding the provisions of part I of the Canada Corporations Act."

What does this mean? It means that if the amendment is accepted we will never lose Canadian control of this company. This is something in which all members of the House should be interested. We should be taking steps to make certain that Canadian control is retained over a corporation such as this. We have had debates in this House about Canadian ownership. Those debates will continue. They will spill over into the next election campaign. The Canadian people are beginning to realize that this is one of the major issues facing our nation.

As has already been pointed out, much of the resource development that should be taking place in Canada is not taking place, principally because we have lost control of the resource-based industries. Canada is used as a supply house for industries which are located elsewhere. When bills such as this come before the House of Commons we will seek amendment of them to assure retention of Canadian control of our natural resources.

Anyone who notes the tremendous acreage controlled by this company must be alarmed. We must take the necessary precautions to ensure that it remains under Canadian control. The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) told us about some of the holdings which the company has in northern Canada. I understand it is one of the group participating with Panarctic Oils in the exploration of the Arctic Islands, and just the other day we learned that one of the biggest gas finds in history was made in the north. Foreign corporations must be interested when they see that a company like this has an interest in that kind of discovery. It is up to us as Canadians to protect the company.

There are one or two other points that I would like to make with respect to this company's holdings in the various provinces. Again I shall quote from the committee proceedings. Those who appeared on behalf of the company were asked what holdings they had in the province of Saskatchewan, for example. This passage is recorded in the minutes of May 20:

• (5:50 p.m.)

> —I see that under the affiliated company, Minerals Limited, Saskatchewan Incorporated owns 20 per cent of the minerals underlying approximately 750,000 acres—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, the Right Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

• (6:00 p.m.)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An act respecting the packaging, labelling, sale, importation and advertising of prepackaged and certain other products

An act respecting the consolidation of the Income Tax Act in the printed roll of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970

An act to implement a Supplementary Income Tax Convention betweeen Canada and Finland

An act to amend the Prime Minister's Residence Act

An act respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto

An act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act, and an act to make provision for the retirement of members of the Senate

Mr. Speaker: It being after six o'clock, I do now leave the chair. This House stands adjourned until 8 p.m.

At 6.05 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

PROVISIONS RESPECTING INSURABLE EMPLOYMENT, COMMISSION, BENEFITS, PREMIUMS, ADMINISTRATION, ETC.

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-229, respecting unemployment insurance in Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, before five o'clock we were discussing amendment No. 6 and amendment No. 21 which, if adopted by the House, would have the effect of increasing the eight-week qualifying period to 12 weeks. These amendments were introduced by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander).

Mr. Woolliams: West, not Wentworth.

Mr. Mackasey: I must say the hon. member for Hamilton West does have one thing going for him that few of us have and that is that he is a very charming person.

Mr. Alexander: So far, so good.

Mr. Mackasey: I am always at a tremendous disadvantage in debating with charming people. I have been sitting here quietly admiring his technique most of the afternoon. He is one of the few members who can, with some confidence in success, play both sides of the street when it comes to moving amendments. Both he and the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Thomas) are very knowledgeable persons by reason of their active participation in the committee.

The hon. member for Moncton has suggested that this bill is not consistent. Although I think that is a matter of opinion, I would suggest that any amendments that have been brought in today have done nothing to remove the inconsistency if there is one. A good example of this is when on one hand we suggest a reduction of the two-week waiting period to one week, at a cost of $160 million or more, and then two minutes later introduce another amendment which would in effect negate what the original amendment was supposed to be doing, namely, help the workers, by increasing the qualifying period from eight weeks to 12 weeks. This would mean that several hundred thousand workers every year who had eight weeks qualifying attachment to the work force but less than 12 weeks—be it 9, 10 or 11 weeks—would not qualify for benefits. We have estimated that this would affect a quarter of a million people who through no fault of their own find themselves temporarily without earnings and who would be ineligible for unemployment insurance.

We talked today about a question of judgment. Before we get into that question I think the whole of this proposed program, as opposed to the basic philosophy of the present program, was to insure members of the work force against the probability of financial loss on those occasions when they are temporarily without work. This is fundamentally different from the old plan where, in effect, your number of weeks benefit was geared or related to your work attachment. In other words, more often than not under the existing plan the people best able to survive or to exist without any income usually find that unemployment insurance benefits come more easily to them and for longer periods than those who need them more by reason of their underemployment or the fact that they are in and out of the work force fairly frequently.

What has pleased me in all of the contributions made in respect of this amendment is that all hon. members have said, I am sure sincerely, that the average Canadian is not lazy. Certainly I have never heard the hon. member for Hamilton West make such a statement and I am sure it would be a distortion of his words if it appeared in print that way. Nevertheless, I wholeheartedly agree with the hon. member for Moncton that human nature being what it is, some people will try to abuse unemployment insurance no matter what the qualifying period is.

To say, for example, that a person who has eight weeks attachment to the work force and then stops work and draws benefit for 44 weeks is to oversimplify the plan. It is true that some people with eight weeks attachment to the work force could draw 44 weeks under certain conditions. The same is true of a man with 9, 10, 11 or 12 weeks attachment. But if you had eight weeks attachment you could easily plan your work pattern to stop at, say, 12 weeks and then draw 44 weeks benefit.

The hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie) got a little excited about that proposition.

However, I do not think that life insurance, for example, is any less consistent in its approach. After all, a man could be unfortunate enough to drop dead after paying the first premium. What we are saying in this bill, in effect, is that there will be some members of the work force who after 8, 9, 10, 11 or 12 weeks in the work force may be unfortunate enough to find themselves out of work and will draw benefits. However, since the plan is actuarially sound, the probability of this happening is such that, in general, due to the universal coverage of the fund we will be able to absorb the payment of benefits to the number of people who could theoretically draw from the fund for 44 weeks following an initial eight weeks attachment.

I am sure that no one wants to leave the wrong impression on the record. I must underline that you do not automatically draw 44 weeks' benefits after an attachment to the work force of eight weeks. You are entitled to eight weeks' benefits, but from there on it all depends on the economic conditions in the particular region of the country concerned. Since we are trying to help a person financially during the period in which he is out of work, it is only logical that we should extend the period of benefit in relationship to the probability of that person being reabsorbed into the work force. The probability of his being absorbed into the work force is directly related to the rate of unemployment in the country and in his particular community.

All other things being equal, people are better working than not working. I have met very few people who would rather draw unemployment insurance than work. Perhaps I am naïve or idealistic, but I am of the view—and most hon. members have said the same thing—that the overwhelming majority of Canadians are honest. We must not lose sight of the fact that a man who quits work at the end of the eighth week has a waiting period, one some hon. members think is too long, before he can draw benefits. He must be interviewed and be ready, willing and able to work. He will be subject to the discipline of the Unemployment Insurance Commission and to the spot checks that they make and to visits to the home.

Neither can we lose sight of the fact that 86,000 people last year were disqualified because they were not ready, willing and able to work. Indeed, the Unemployment Insurance Commission are doing their job zealously, to the point that at times we are asked whether they are not being overzealous in making sure that only people eligible for unemployment insurance draw from the fund.

Then the question came up as to why we had chosen eight weeks and not 12. When we put together our model on the computers when this plan was first visualized, we took a sampling of some 250,000 people in the work force. The economists, both internal economists and those hired to work with the group, worked on this model of 250,000 as representative of the five million people in the work force, which is a larger than average sampling for this type of study. As a result of this sampling we found that with eight weeks we were able to do all the things we wanted to do in the act with regard to the relationship between benefits and salaries, periodical extensions of the benefit structure in relation to the unemployment pattern in the country, sickness and maternity benefits, and so on. All these proposals are feasible with an eight weeks attachment period to the work force.

Let me come back to make the point that if the period were set at 12 weeks it would not in any way reduce the number of people who are dishonest enough intentionally to try to defraud the fund. We have other ways of preventing this. Neither would such a period in any way change the system of interviews or the necessity for people to be ready, willing and able to work. No one knows when spot checks will be made or when telephone calls will be put through to find out whether a man is in or out of the city, or is ready, willing and able to do a job that Manpower may have available for him.

It is not just a matter of being attached to the work force for eight weeks and deciding to draw benefits for 44 weeks. It means attached to the work force for at least eight weeks and then being legitimately unemployed. That means waiting two weeks and drawing benefits for eight weeks. It means that at the end of eight weeks the situation is assessed and evaluated in light of unemployment figures in the region and in the nation, then assessing the probabilities of the man finding work with that rate of unemployment. If, according to the formula, it is highly probable that work is not easy to find because of the burden of unemployment, this is taken into consideration and the period is extended. It is not fair on the part of hon. members to leave on the record the presumption that one can automatically draw 44 weeks' benefits.

We then get into the question of students. This is a problem in our country and it is hard to rationalize the arguments I sometimes hear against students drawing unemployment insurance, as though they were second-class citizens. They are not. If a student leaves university in May and goes to work in a legitimate business the same as his father, brother or people in the normal work force, pays unemployment insurance, goes back to university in the fall and comes back to the work force the following May and cannot find work, provided he has the specified attachment—which is eight weeks or more—there is no reason why he should not draw unemployment insurance just because he happens to be a student eight months of the year. If we find work for him, he must work. If he is not ready, willing and able to work, then he does not draw unemployment insurance.

If students want to travel across Canada, take advantage of other forms of summer activities, go to Europe or do one of the many things students want to do today, they are not eligible for unemployment insurance. On the other hand, if they want to stay and are eligible for work, ready, willing and able, and society cannot provide them with jobs, it is not the fault of the students. If they have paid their stamps and are eligible in every other way, shape and form, there is no reason why they should not be allowed to draw unemployment insurance like every other citizen in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: I find nothing wrong or ridiculous about this. I think it will go a long way to help provide some form of income for students who are not as affluent as others and who do not have wealthy fathers to provide pin money.

Mr. Alexander: Don't look at me.

Mr. Mackasey: I am disqualifying myself by saying "wealthy fathers." I think we all know that some people are more affluent than others. This will, incidentally, answer the question about students graduating or coming out of teachers college after two years, who work for the summer months and go back to university. If they are unable to again join the work force the following summer, they should draw unemployment insurance in relation, of course, to the number of weeks to which they are entitled.

I do not want to become too political about this. but I should point out to the hon. member for Hamilton West that you cannot have it all ways. You cannot in one amendment reflect the thinking of the CMA, in the next amendment reflect the thinking of the CLC and in the next amendment reflect the thinking of the Chamber of Commerce. If you have a philosophy it should be consistent all through your amendments. Let me say this to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). His philosophy or ideology may not be the same as ours, but at least he is consistent. I think consistency is a virtue in this day and age.

Let me say in conclusion that I think there is nothing wrong with the eight-week waiting period. I listened objectively today for one good reason why the amendment should be accepted, making the eligibility period 12 weeks instead of eight weeks. There is nothing in this to offset many of the possible abuses mentioned during the debate. The amendment does nothing to prevent a dishonest person attempting to defraud the fund. At the end of eight weeks he would be as dishonest as he would be at the end of 12. He may just have to wait longer to try his luck.

I think the eight weeks period makes sense, particularly in light of the large work force in Canada and the fact that so many young people are coming into the work force for the first time. Our experience over the last five years indicates that several hundred thousand workers each year are ineligible for unemployment insurance because they have not accumulated a sufficiently long attachment to the work force to be eligible.

We have a tendency to criticize our welfare agencies. We should be honest about the alternative to unemployment insurance. If you are not eligible and have no other income, there is the Canada Assistance Plan. If you draw money from the Canada Assistance Plan you become a financial burden upon your community, the towns and cities, and you become a financial burden on the province which pays half the cost of the Canada Assistance Plan. It is very difficult for young men to find work even under the best of circumstances. It is twice as hard if at the same time they are living on welfare. I think we all know and agree with that.

One of the legitimate features of this plan is that it at least postpones the day when you have to turn to the Canada Assistance Plan for financial assistance. It postpones the day by providing higher benefits with easier eligibility. In this way we give a man an opportunity to seek work while he still has the dignity of an income. Welfare should not be looked down upon by society, but unfortunately it is.

I would ask the House to reject the amendments proposed by the hon. member for Hamilton West.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I always like to hear my good friend the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) take part in a debate because he has the ability of being very personable and being loved by all sides. He is one of those fellows who, when he sees the debate going one way and needs a little support, analyses the philosophy of an hon. member or a party and then makes a great appeal and is very complimentary, as he was with one member, although he was somewhat critical of another.

I am not worried about being personable in my feeling about the question of eight weeks or 12 weeks as the attachment period. What I am concerned about is the hypocrisy in calling this act an Unemployment Insurance Act. I listened this afternoon to the Minister of Labour and other hon. members speaking about insurance. As I understand insurance, when you pay the premium you are insured. After you have paid a few premiums and the commission to the agent—and I never overlook that—you are insured and your policy will build up a cash value.

An hon. Member: That is private insurance.

Mr. Woolliams: I am talking about private insurance. That is what the Minister of Labour was talking about. What the Minister has done under this act is include a lot of people to pay for the plan. That is why there should be a 12-week period rather than an eight-week period. He is bringing in a lot of people who will never benefit. When one takes out life insurance—there are various types of plans, which I am not here to discuss—you are gambling with the company as to whether you are going to live. You build up a cash value and dividends, unless it is short-term and that is very cheap insurance. Right from the beginning of the old plan, thousands of Canadians who have contributed have never drawn a dollar.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair fails to understand how the hon. member's remarks can be related to the amendment now before the House. He seems to be debating the bill generally. I hope he will come back to the amendment.

Mr. Woolliams: I will help you to comprehend my argument, Mr. Speaker. I will read the clause so that even the Chair will appreciate it. Perhaps then the House will appreciate what we are talking about. Clause 17 provides, and this is what we are talking about:

An insured person qualifies to receive benefits under this act if he (a) has had eight or more weeks of insurable employment in his qualifying period—

When you shorten the time, the plan will cost more because you are bringing more people under it. That is the point I am making and that is the argument I am answering so far as the Minister of Labour is concerned. I am sorry if the Chair thought my remarks were not relevant. I am saying that by extending this plan you are bringing in school teachers and other people who have never been under it before, including thousands and thousands of Canadians who will never draw a dollar out of the fund.

• (8:30 p.m.)

The hon. member for Hamilton West is attempting to ease the problem by changing the period from 8 weeks to 12 weeks. It will cost the country less money, because under the policies of this government—I hope you think this is relevant, Mr. Speaker—if people are unemployed, whether they have 8 weeks or 12 weeks they will be on unemployment insurance for some time. The percentage of unemployment is so high at this time that a large number of people will need help under this act, and when they run out of benefits they will require social assistance. As I see it, the reason for the amendment is to make the act as reasonable as possible. The Minister of Labour is bringing in thousands and thousands of Canadians who will never benefit. Do you think the teachers of the country want this legislation, or the nurses—

Mr. Mackasey: Yes.

Mr. Woolliams: The minister says yes. His mail is different from mine. I am prepared to send him 3,000 or 4,000 answers to questions I asked of school teachers and others. These people have not been covered and do not want coverage. This amendment is really an attempt to relieve the situation; that is the purpose behind it. The Minister of Labour talks about an insurance plan, when it would seem to me that he is bringing in a new tax. I say to the members of the NDP that there will be less take-home pay for many of the people they represent. There will also be less profit to people who hire workers, and there will be a higher cost to the consumer. If the NDP wants to go for a higher cost to the consumer, then I agree with what one minister said the other day, namely, that you cannot have it both ways. If you increase the cost of production, you have to increase the cost to the producer.

Mr. Gilbert: Very little.

Mr. Woolliams: The hon. member says, "Very little". Let us get down to sound economics. We change the Canada Pension Plan, we increase the surtax and income tax, we increase unemployment insurance deductions from industrial concerns and management, and then we increase the cost of labour, widen the scope and increase taxes.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Woolliams: Certainly.

Mr. Barnett: Would the hon. member explain, for my benefit, how there is a difference in the cost to the consumer between paying under an insurance plan and paying taxes levied under a welfare plan, if he is talking about the total cost to our society?

Mr. Woolliams: That is one of the most intelligent questions that has been asked. So long as this government is creating unemployment, I agree that there is not much difference. But let us not play games. This is not an insurance plan at all; it is really a new system of taxing the Canadian people. This is the point I am making. I see an hon. member opposite shake his head. He shakes his head whenever anyone on this side speaks. If the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) told him at supper time to go for a swim, he would go for a swim. I am glad the big fellow, the acting House leader, has left because he can never understand logic.

With reference to the amendment, when you increase the period from 8 weeks to 12 weeks at least you are cutting down the cost of this kind of insurance, if you can call it insurance at all. So it is basically a compromise between the position of the minister and the position of the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander). Let us make no mistake about it: this is a brand new tax against Canadians—not only against the workers but against the employers. That is what it is all about. This legislation is dragged in to cover up unemployment caused deliberately by the nineteenth century economic policies of the government.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak very briefly on this amendment. At the outset may I say that I intend to oppose the amendment brought in by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander). It does not make any sense to tell the unemployed of Canada that we are bringing in a new act in which the limit is set at eight weeks after which they can draw benefits, and then have someone tell us it should be increased to 12 weeks. I believe the question asked was very much to the point. If people who are unemployed do not receive money from unemployment insurance, they will obtain it from welfare. Don't try to kid yourselves that this money will not come out of the pockets of the taxpayers.

An hon. Member: That is what we are saying.

Mr. Harding: We believe that if a worker can receive some income from the unemployment insurance fund or pension scheme it is much better for him to have this money as of right than to get it from welfare. This is something the workers understand. They at least have tried to work and have made their contribution to the fund, and this money should come to them as of right. Whether or not the members of the Conservative party understand it, there is a big difference between welfare and unemployment insurance.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Harding: Yes.

Mr. Woolliams: Does he not think there is a group of workers in this country, including teachers, registered nurses and others, who would probably never benefit under this act, and that other people who made payments under the old act—I am not making anything of that—endorse this act and its changes and want to pay into the fund? I will put a second question. Would it not be better to say that we will increase income tax and in that way be honest about it, because it really is not insurance at all but a new tax policy?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair fails to understand how the question is relevant to the amendment before the House. The Chair cannot allow the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) to answer the question.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The change here is from 8 weeks to 12 weeks, so the cost is less. If the cost is more, more people must be included in order to pay for it. It is that simple. I would hope the Chair would appreciate that. That is the question I put to the hon. member. Surely it is plain and clear, and should even be clear to you, Sir.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The Chair appreciates the point made by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), but it is the Chair which must make the final decisions in this House. It is a question of appreciation, and the Chair has decided that the question put by the hon. member does not meet the requirements of the procedures of this House; it does not relate to the very specific amendment before the House. If this question were to be allowed we would be opening the door in respect of any amendments and would be introducing a new procedure. Therefore, the only choice I have is to ask the hon. member for Kootenay West to pursue his remarks.

Mr. Harding: There are only a few comments I wish to make. The impression was left earlier that all some workers had to do was work for eight weeks and somehow or other they would be laid off, following which they would be able to draw benefits for the balance of the year. The minister has very ably explained the situation in which unemployed workers will receive benefits. I will not repeat it, but I want to make my position crystal clear. The impression has been left that the maximum amount is $100 a week under this legislation, but the number of unemployed workers receiving $100 a week will be very limited. A vast number of unemployed people will be much below the $7,800 a year income bracket which would give them the $100 a week benefit.

There is another point which I do not think has been made by anyone else in this debate. For the first time, unemployed workers have to pay income tax on their benefits. This takes another big chunk out of the increased benefits which they will receive under the legislation. The point I am making is that the benefits which people will receive after eight weeks or more will certainly not be all gravy because there are taxes and charges against them. They have to pay the unemployment insurance contribution.

To leave the impression that workers will deliberately leave a job to draw unemployment insurance is wrong: I think it is an unfair statement to make about the Canadian work force. It does not matter where you go, whether it is in business or any other industrial activity there is always someone who will swing the lead, but generally the vast majority of our people want jobs; they will work if they can get jobs. This is the kind of protection that we should give to the working people of Canada. I am surprised that the Tory party would bring in such an amendment at this time when there are vast numbers of unemployed in our nation. I have no hesitation in saying that I intend to vote against the amendment.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, after listening to the persuasive arguments of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) and of the last speaker, the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding), I shall take only a few minutes to speak against the amendment.

I have heard the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) try to compare private insurance with unemployment insurance. In trying to draw an analogy he pointed out that private life insurance includes protection and savings. The immediate question that arose in my mind was, what happens to the savings when a person dies? He never collects them. The only time he collects his savings under a life insurance plan is when he surrenders the policy during his lifetime. This is one of the harsh criticisms which should be made against life insurance companies. It is term insurance, it is protection; and this act provides protection.

May I give my wonderful friend, the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), a little bit of political advice and remind him that back in 1948 when we attempted to pass one of the main social measures in Canada, namely the family allowance legislation, the leader of his party called it iniquitous.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That was in 1944.

Mr. Gilbert: Yes, I stand corrected. It was a foolish political mistake on the part of the then leader of the Conservative party. When medicare was introduced, which was another step in providing security for Canadians, members of that party opposed it until the time of the vote, and then they had to vote for it. When guaranteed annual income legislation is introduced in the House, which will probably not happen within the next ten years, I can picture the Chamber of Commerce opposing it.

I cannot understand the progressive member for Hamilton West espousing that type of philosophy, because he comes from a workingman's riding. He appreciates the problems of workingmen and I am sure that he wants to protect them. To suggest increasing the eligibility period from eight to 12 weeks is not worthy of the hon. member. I am sure it is not his proposal; he has just put it forward but really the Chamber of Commerce presented it to him and he has been taken in by them.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not know whether it is a question of privilege or a point of order, but I will start with a question of privilege. I have a great deal of respect for my friend, but when he attempts to question my integrity and the sincerity with which I put forward this motion I take a pretty dim view of it. I did not follow any instructions from any particular organization when I placed this motion before the House. I feel, in all seriousness and after due deliberation, that what the government is attempting to do is not in keeping with an attempt to maintain personal initiative among the workers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member should state his question of privilege.

Mr. Alexander: I am speaking on the question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. May I point out that it takes guts to stand up and bring forward a motion which perhaps is not in keeping with the thinking of the government or with the thinking of the NDP, who is not even attempting to delve into the questionable aspects of this matter. All they claim is that it is motherhood. Mr. Speaker, I will continue with my question of privilege. I would like to say that the member for Hamilton West will stand by any motion which he brings before the House. I do not intend to be browbeaten, berated or embarrassed by the loose-tongued members of this House into thinking that I have done the wrong thing. I stand by the motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The Chair does not feel it has to make a decision on a question of privilege. The point was made and now I think the House should go back to the debate.

Mr. Gilbert: I would like to speak for a few moments to my colleague the hon. member for Hamilton West. I will always remember the first speech he made. This is the philosophy that he enunciated: judge not a man by the colour of his skin or the way he fights or loves or sins, by the gods he worships or the vintage he drinks, but judge a man by the way he thinks. I think that this really sets forth the philosophy of the hon. member for Hamilton West. When he brought forth his amendment I thought he was not thinking correctly and I tried to protect him by suggesting that perhaps another person proposed that he bring it forth. If this is his amendment, it worries me a little.

However, to get back to the second point with regard to teachers, nurses and students, may I say with regard to teachers that they are having a great problem in obtaining appointments. I am sure that many teachers and nurses will appreciate in the near future the coverage that is being imposed upon them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gilbert: Hon. members should speak to the young graduates from teachers colleges and listen to the problems which they are having in finding placements in schools. I come from a workingman's riding and I am a workingman's son. I have heard from young students many plaintive cries with regard to employment. I feel ashamed when they call me and think I have a special pipeline through which to get them jobs. Frankly, I have not. I think they should get employment on their own initiative, but unfortunately there is much unemployment at present.

• (8:50 p.m.)

I was rather proud of the Minister of Labour when he said that students should not be treated as second class citizens, that if they work this summer, return to university and next year they find difficulty getting jobs, provided they are not travelling and are available for work they should be entitled to unemployment insurance benefits. That is quite progressive on his part. Again speaking of unemployment, I am surprised at the members of the Tory party because their record regarding employment from 1958 to 1962 was not a proud one. In fact, in 1962 it was one of the reasons they were turfed out of office. For them to be self-righteous now concerning employment does not hit well with the Canadian public.

I would like to see full employment but, Mr. Speaker, the day is coming, and coming quickly, when work and income will not be closely related. This is why we have to think in terms of a guaranteed annual income. This bill is a step in that direction. If full employment could be obtained by introducing the four-day work week, I would be the first to agree to that step. But full employment is not easy to attain, especially in this technological age. As Members of Parliament we must find ways and means of ensuring income security for all Canadians. This bill, I repeat, is a step in that direction.

As the minister said, the bill will not bring utopia into existence. That would happen if, when a person becomes unemployed, he automatically receives unemployment insurance benefits. To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that I will vote against this amendment. I hesitate to speak about the reasons the proposer of the amendment had for introducing it, because really he is a very fine man and wants to protect the workers. However, I think he may be mistaken in this instance.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11), the recorded division on the proposed motions stands deferred. The House now has before it for consideration motion No. 9 which, pursuant to the order made earlier today, will be considered separately. Mr. Alexander, seconded by Mr. McCutcheon, moves:

That Bill C-229, an act respecting unemployment insurance in Canada, be amended by deleting clause 28, at pages 15 and 16 thereof.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, as a result of my involvement in this debate I think I have made my mark because not only the minister, on behalf of the government, but members of the NDP point their finger at the member for Hamilton West. Indeed, I would be much disturbed if my remarks had gone unnoticed and unsung.

Clause 28 is what I call the Santa Claus clause. Under its provisions, if a person has been involved in the labour force for some 20 weeks, instead of paying him benefit on a week to week basis on the grounds of the amount of money that will be saved he will be paid three weeks benefit in advance. This is supposed to be an incentive to him to go out and find work. I stand here in utter amazement trying to rationalize this type of thinking. Just what are we attempting to do? No matter what the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) may think, I believe this would destroy personal initiative. It is a disincentive, and I have maintained this ever since I first saw the clause.

To use round figures, if a person is earning $150 a week he will be entitled to $100 unemployment insurance benefit. If he receives a total of $300 in unemployment insurance benefits all at once, is this an incentive for him to go out and look for a job? This is what the minister says. The vast majority of Canadians will do just that. Again, what disturbs me about this bill is that it is holding out inducements and I would not blame people if they took advantage of the legislation. But why do we attempt to create such a climate? The minister says that this provision will save money. Are we not concerned about the results, the implications, the ramifications of this attempt to save money? What are the equities?

The hon. member for Broadview seems to think that I have forgotten about the problems of the workingman. Mr. Speaker, I come from the great city of Hamilton which is presently celebrating its 125th anniversary. I don't stand here playing footsie. I am looking at both sides of the question. A lot of workers have told me they wonder just what is going on in connection with this Santa Clause clause. A lot of people involved with unemployment insurance, workers who will be contributing, just do not understand the philosophy behind such a provision.

Mr. Speaker, I could add word upon word upon word. I could be as repetitious as possible. Perhaps that is the problem with a debate such as this, that we continually repeat ourselves. But as long as we have legislation with clauses such as this, I personally would say to the Canadian people, "Go and take advantage of it. You are not breaking any law, but in taking advantage of it you are destroying your initiative and adopting a questionable philosophy".

I brought this motion before the House in order that we may bring some sanity back to the legislation. Certainly we are all interested in upgrading the Unemployment Insurance Act, certainly we all want higher benefits and reduced eligibility periods—but within reason. That is all we are talking about. So, Mr. Speaker, I end on a note of concern. I hope my remarks this evening will have some effect on this particular clause. I therefore take issue with clause 28.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I in my opening remarks use a word that my hon. friend from Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) used in his opening sentence. He said that he stood in his place amazed at this proposal. I stand in my place amazed at his opposition to it. Throughout this debate I have been puzzled by the way in which my friend and some of his colleagues at times seem to be on the side of the workers and at times against what I think are their best interests. I want to say categorically that I think the proposal in clause 28 is a good one. I commend the author of it, whoever he may be, the minister or even his parliamentary secretary or one of the bureaucrats upstairs. The minister is pointing upstairs, so the author can take a bow.

Let us look at a few of the details of this provision, Mr. Speaker. As the language indicates, it is a provision for paying in advance the first three weeks of an unemployment insurance benefit to which a claimant becomes entitled. In order to obtain that so-called advance payment the claimant in the first place must have gone through a two-week waiting period during which he received no benefit of any kind. If he has had a day's work in that period the amount he earns will be deducted from the advance of his unemployment insurance benefit. In addition to that, when he became unemployed it must have been because of a shortage of work. He cannot come under this program because he decided he was ill, and a female employee cannot come under it because of pregnancy. In addition, the employer must have certified that the lay-off will be for at least five weeks.

Mr. Woolliams: But he might go to another employer.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If he goes to another employer—just a minute now; I appreciate that my friend wants to understand this.

Mr. Woolliams: I understand it. I am asking you.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If he goes to another employer and gets a job within the first two weeks, of course he collects no benefit at all. Remember that the claimant who is going to collect this advance payment will not be able to get back where he was working His employer has already certified that the lay-off is for at least five weeks. The person who cannot get back to his former place of employment and cannot find work somewhere else during the first two weeks is, by the law of averages, likely to be one who is not going to find work for another three or four weeks. I think I have used the right figure in terms of the history of unemployment insurance.

What this provision offers is that the individual who has been off for two weeks, who was told by his employer, and for whom it was certified in writing, that he would be off for at least five weeks and who cannot find work anywhere else, in the third week of his unemployment is given benefit for that week and for the next two weeks. So he has gone two weeks without money, he is in the third week and gets money for that week and two more. He is going to have a tough time to find a job.

I cannot understand why my friends have any criticism of this at all. Maybe I am just idealistic, but I think there is a lot of good in human nature. I think the person who receives that extra money will feel it is an incentive to find a job before the five weeks are up.

An hon. Member: You just said he cannot find one.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Experience says he will not; the chances are against him. But he knows that if he can find a job he can keep the money he earns, if he gets a job in the middle of the fourth or fifth week, without having to return what he received as unemployment insurance. He also knows that if he cannot find a job he has got that money coming to pay his bills and make ends meet. Experience shows that a large number of cases run into the four or five week period unless we find ourselves in a period such as now, with pretty severe unemployment where people are out of work for a long time.

Far from this being a violation of the principles of insurance, and far from it being something based on the lowest instincts of human nature, I submit that this is a good thing. I think it is also true, as was demonstrated in committee, that it will simplify administration. Many of these cases will not have to be dealt with again. By the end of that period many persons will have found employment and will not have to return for three different payments. I think it makes administrative sense. I think it is an incentive to a person to try and find work if it is there at all. I think it meets the problem that an unemployed person faces to say to him, "You have had to wait for two weeks, but at least in the third week you will get the extra money".

My friend, the hon. member for Hamilton West, and I are supported by our seconders. I have the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) and the hon. member for Hamilton West has the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Thomas). We are sparring, but we are good friends and we have gone over this in committee and in this House. However, I still do not understand his logic or his alleged consistency when he complains about the two-week waiting period and wants to put it back to one, and then when we get a proposal that makes up to him in part by saying to the unemployed person, "In the third week you will get an advance to last you for weeks three, four and five," he says we must not do that. Which side is he on? Is he on the workers' side or is he not? I think this is a good measure and I commend the author of it.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): He is on the taxpayers' side.

Mr. Woolliams: We are all taxpayers.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Does my hon. friend not realize that as long as unemployment is under 4 per cent—maybe that would be utopia under this government—unemployment insurance is paid not by the taxpayers but the entire cost is paid by employees and employers? Surely these are the people who have an interest in the employment situation. Surely some sort of security or income is part of the wage package that people who work in industry in this country have a right to expect.

• (9:10 p.m.)

If there is any question about taking sides, the side that should be taken in this is the side of the worker. It is false to say that this is a case of workers versus taxpayers. There are no general tax funds going into the first 4 per cent of unemployment. When we get to another place in the bill I will argue that they should. The point is that people have a right to the best deal they can get. This bill does not give them as good a deal as I would like to see, but there are a few improvements. This is one. I think the hon. member for Hamilton West believes that he is on the side of the workers. If he is, I hope he will withdraw this amendment.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) wants to know which side we are on. I am prepared to support this amendment. The amendment would delete all of clause 28. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has properly said, if a person is unemployed, provided the employer certifies in accordance with paragraph (b) that "at the time of his interruption of earnings neither he nor his employer expected that he would be re-employed by that employer for a period of at least five weeks", he receives an advance of three weeks benefits provided he has been out of work for two weeks.

When asking which side we are on it is necessary to consider who is paying for this program. Somebody has said that it is the taxpayer. I will particularize. Unless the money comes out of the treasury it will come from contributions by the worker and the employer. No one will deny that ever since the act came into effect the rates have gone up from time to time. If this money comes out of the treasury it still comes from the taxpayer who is either an employee or employer. It is the same class of people. I will particularize this clause in a minute. The money will come from the pocket of either the employee or the employer. If the fund runs out of money it must be replenished by money from the treasury, which actually comes out of the pocket of the taxpayer.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and his colleagues always leave the impression that they are the only ones who speak for the working man. This covers a broad section of the vote. The fact is that employees are contributing to the fund. If a man is out of work for two weeks and his employer has certified that he probably will not get work for five weeks, if he finds work two weeks and one day later he keeps the advance and his salary. He makes no contribution to the fund. My idea of insurance and the idea of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre certainly differ. With the greatest respect, I do not think this is insurance. I say that anyone who supports the amendment and opposes this clause is on the side of the worker.

Everywhere in this country workers have a fear about their security, particularly with this government. They are complaining that they have very little take-home pay compared to the amount they are earning. Clause 28 makes gifts; it does not matter how the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre dishes it up. I have faith in my fellow men. However, if a man receives and advance for three weeks and gets a job within two weeks and a day, and does not make any contribution to the fund, somebody has to make up that amount.

What is this all about? I hear the members of the NDP talking. I hear them hammer the government. Tonight the NDP and the government are in the same bed; they have married the same partner. But tomorrow the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will get up in a pious way and complain about the cost of living.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: I do that, too. Surely a man that has worked and has experience with the unions—I do not know whether he draws a pension from them or not—must know that the moment you increase costs, the employee will strike for more money. I can understand that. When he strikes for more money, then the cost of production increases. And the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre starts complaining about the cost of living! I wish the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) were here; he might agree with me.

Clause 28 will increase the cost of living. All the employer will do is pass the increase on to the consumer. Before I left home I heard over the radio that Chrysler Products in the western United States is closing. There will be 1,600 people out of work. Why? Because Chrysler Products cannot compete with Japan in manufacturing automobiles. It is therefore necessary to close the plant. The United States is importing automobiles and putting Americans out of work. The same is happening in Canada.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre can be as pious as he likes about these things, but when there are increases in costs, the workers which he supports will strike. I have heard all the hon. member's arguments. The employer passes the increase on to the consumer, and if the consumer is a workingman he will again strike. It becomes a vicious circle. This is exactly what happened with the Wilson government in Great Britain and this is what will happen here with this kind of clause.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: It is very easy for somebody to stand up and say that the Tories are against giving anything away. I am against giving anything away. The average worker in Canada does not want gifts; he wants to work and receive a fair wage. He does not want less take-home pay. That is what this clause means. I have heard the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre talk. He can say what he likes but he cannot tell me that it is equitable for a man who is out of work for two weeks and one day to draw three weeks advance when he really does not deserve it. He is taking this money from the other fellow. If the clause stated that it must be paid back when the person goes back to work, it would be fair to the other workers of Canada.

You can always win votes by promising bread and surpluses; that does not take much brains or character. It sounds awfully good. It sounds so good I can almost see the headlines. It almost touches my heart. But let's get down to the facts. This clause means increases in the cost of production, more strikes, trouble in management and more war between labour and management. The hon. member can dish it up any way he wants, but don't paint the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) with any other brush. If there is any sincerity in this, it comes from this party and not from members to my left. I am prepared to support the amendment.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I do not think the hon. member means to question the sincerity of either of us. I do not know which one of us he was pointing to.

Mr. Woolliams: I don't care how he dishes it up. I am not questioning your integrity, but those facts as far as I am concerned do not ring true. Now, when the hon. member says this is a wonderful system, as far as pointing out the conditions of the clause he is absolutely correct. But he did not say that a person would be able to get the three weeks provided he worked two weeks and one day, and he did not say it would cost the workers of Canada more money, that they would have less take-home pay. He did not say it would cost the consumer more money. If he does not understand the economics of this, then he and I went to different schools.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I always enjoy listening to the heart-touching remarks, as he described them, of the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams). If I wanted to start an argument I would say they were more heart-touching than head-touching. He conjured up the picture of a country virtually in a state of economic chaos, a country paralysed by strikes.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): He did not say that.

Mr. Barnett: If he had spoken a little longer he would probably have had us in a state of civil war over the proposals of this bill. Let us take the individual central to the hon. member's argument, the man who has been unemployed for two weeks and one day. As I read the clause, this is a situation which could arise: I believe the hon. member would admit that while some people might draw three weeks' benefit after having been unemployed for two weeks and one day, not all the people who draw unemployment insurance would be in that position.

Mr. Woolliams: I did not say so.

Mr. Barnett: Statistically speaking, the mass of those who come within the ambit of this clause will have been unemployed for at least three weeks.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): Now we are getting at the truth.

Mr. Barnett: We are getting close to assessing the costs which are really involved to the other workers paying into the fund. Let me refer to the amendment which was proposed by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) objecting to lengthening the waiting period from one week to two weeks.

Mr. Woolliams: I agreed with that, too.

Mr. Barnett: If he claims that this is a retrograde step as far as the application of this bill is concerned, he is bound to agree with the suggestion of my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that the amendment in part compensates for the change to which he objected. He was speaking ordinary common sense and stating the facts of the situation.

I do not pretend to know much about the patterns of work followed in Hamilton or in Calgary, but I would invite both the hon. members to my right who have spoken on this issue to visit my constituency if they wish to assess some of the virtues of this proposal. I did not take part in many of the meetings of the committee. I certainly was not present when the arguments about this clause were presented. But I can tell the hon. member for Calgary North that when I first read the proposals in the bill this clause struck me as being one of the most realistic and helpful changes being proposed as far as many of the workers in my area are concerned.

We are faced with this situation: if a person works, having been unemployed for two weeks and one day, the most he stands to get as far as net income is concerned over and above what he has lost, is four days' pay. Even disregarding the fact that remuneration from the unemployment insurance fund will only amount to a percentage of his regular pay, a percentage of four days' pay will be his net gain if he goes back to work after being unemployed for two weeks and one day. I urge the hon. member for Hamilton West and the hon. member for Calgary North to put this matter into perspective before they start talking as if this proposal would weaken the morale of the working force of Canada or add great new impetus to the rise in the cost of living, precipitate strikes, and so on.

This clause is not mandatory. The key word is "might". I suggest this applies to people who have established a fairly regular pattern of attachment to the labour force, usually over a period of years, people who are subject to only occasional, periodic interruption of regular employment. As soon as they return to work they begin to make contributions to the fund again. As a result of their pattern of work they will soon pay back the extra four days' pay they may have gained. They will pay it back out of their own contributions; they will not be leaning on the contributions of other workers.

In my view this arrangement may eliminate a great many headaches which occur in my constituency. The provisions may well apply to the whole group of loggers on the Pacific coast who regularly have what we call a fire season in the summer or a shutdown because of snow conditions in the winter. At times like these there are massive lay-offs of workers in a whole industry and there is not much alternative employment. This situation has created a great many difficulties as far as administration of the act is concerned and, hopefully, the change proposed will do much to remedy it. These are predictable lay-offs which create a situation where opportunities for alternative employment are, shall we say, virtually non-existent for a short and rather specific period of time.

Perhaps the hon. member for Hamilton West will come to Vancouver Island some time during the nice, warm summer weather so that he can do a little fishing and also see what happens in the logging industry where workers are normally employed on a quite regular basis and are in a fairly well paid wage bracket, which means they make substantial contributions to the fund. I think he would come to appreciate the practicality of what this clause proposes, at least in respect of certain segments of the Canadian work force. This clause may be of no benefit to people who work in an industrial city like Hamilton; he may see it as a provision that will drain money from the pockets of workers in Hamilton to fill the pockets in some other parts of the country.

What I am trying to suggest to the hon. member, if he will examine the picture, is that the clause applies to the group of workers that I suggest can statistically be shown to be self-supporting and self-sustaining as far as their contributions to the fund are concerned. The way this clause will work, as I see it, is that it means there will be a lot less headaches for the workers as well as for the Unemployment Insurance Commission administratively; and within the established framework of a two-week waiting period it makes plain, good, ordinary common-sense to me to put this kind of clause in the bill.

I am trying to point out to the hon. member for Hamilton West that in considering the desirability of removing this clause from the bill he may have overlooked the real and practical situation that applies to some segments of the working force. At the present time there is a slackness in demand for pulp and paper products in the markets of the world. One of the pulp mills in my constituency has announced it is going to shut down for a period of five or six weeks. I would see this clause applying to the workers of that mill. It is possible that the workers of this mill may find an opening at another pulp mill that is not closing down, either within two weeks, after two weeks and one day, or after three weeks of unemployment. But such openings in the industry at other plants in the region are going to be few and far between.

I suggest that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is quite right in saying that if, under circumstances like these, those workers have an opportunity to get a job at another plant where their employment may be more regular than is the case at the plant where they have been working, they will take it. They will not stay unemployed for another week, if there is a chance of a job, simply to draw what is just a part of their normal income by collecting an extra three, or four or five days' unemployment insurance benefits.

Therefore, I hope the hon. member for Hamilton West will reconsider his position on this amendment. I think it is in contradiction with what I have come to feel is a general appreciation of the basic value of an unemployment insurance scheme.

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, we in this party have been accused more than once during this debate of being illogical and inconsistent. Without admitting that, I will say that it is very difficult to be consistent in this debate when we hear members to our left trying to justify all positions and using all sorts of arguments in support of those positions. This clause is a good example.

We were told during the committee hearings that the whole purpose of the three weeks' payment in advance is to provide an incentive to get people back to work. However, I have suspected right from the start that the main reason for this three-week period is that the department figures this is the easiest way out. There is less administrative cost involved if these people are paid three weeks' benefits than in trying to get them back to work.

Having listened to the members of the NDP this evening, my suspicions are confirmed. Both speakers who preceded me stated that once these people have got past the two-week period they will probably be unemployed for at least five weeks. In other words, they are admitting it is difficult to get these people back to work and therefore it is easier to pay them three weeks' benefits in order to get them off their hands.

The previous speaker talked about the situation in his area where it is difficult to get people back to work. In effect, what he said was that we should give these people three weeks' benefits and get them out of our hair for a while. As I say, I suspect this is the real reason for this clause. Certainly it was indicated by the departmental officials that this would mean lower costs administratively. In that way they will only have to deal with these people once, or perhaps twice if the payment is split in half as has been suggested.

All through this debate we have been accused of lack of logic. I stated earlier this afternoon that the whole bill is illogical and has many inconsistencies. We are told that this provision was put in as an incentive to get people back to work, but as far as I am concerned, no one has yet justified that argument. What incentive is there for a man to go back to work if he is paid three weeks' benefits after he has been out of work for two weeks?

Mr. Barnett: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): Certainly.

Mr. Barnett: I do not know whether the hon. member was listening to my illustration of a lay-off in the pulp and paper industry, but would he not agree with me that if a man has his three-week benefit cheque and he knows there is a chance of a job at another pulp mill that may be more permanent than his present job and which is 100 or 150 miles away, he is much more likely to look for a job at that mill with three weeks' pay in his pocket than sit around at home waiting for his next cheque to come along?

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): That may or may not be the case. On the other hand, a man who has settled in a community may not find the three weeks' payment sufficient inducement to travel 150 miles to get another job. But that is a specific case and I am not talking about specific cases. In some cases people may do that, but I think the main reason for this clause is that the department figures it is cheaper to handle the men in this way. This is where our friends to the left are not consistent. Far from being an incentive to a man to go back to work, this three weeks benefit is an incentive to stay at home.

Another thing that bothers me is the administrative nightmare that will result from this bill. I asked the officials about this matter in committee. I told them that as I understood it the only way a man could qualify for the three weeks' payment in advance was if he had a certificate of separation from his employer to the effect that he expected to be laid off more than five weeks. The officials agreed that I was correct, that in that case he would qualify for the three weeks' advance payment.

On the other hand, if an employer was perfectly honest and did not know how long the man in question would be laid off, and perhaps thought he might only be laid off three or four weeks, then after the second week, since the man did not have a certificate of separation that he expected to be laid off for more than five weeks, all he could receive from the fund is the weekly payment in advance. Certainly he would not get the full three weeks.

Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971

• (9:40 p.m.)

In this area I say the bill is an administrative nightmare. It places the onus on the employer to estimate the period of lay-off. This can be done by a large corporation like General Motors where there may be a lay-off for six or eight weeks, but I suggest the small employer cannot do this.

It was very illuminating to me to hear what one of the hon. members to the left had to say about a question I asked in committee. This shows that hon. members to the left try to justify all positions. I asked the officials whether this provision would not place too much onus on the employer and create a great deal of dissatisfaction. It was interesting to hear the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) say that then the employee will probably try to seduce the employer into giving him a separation certificate. These hon. gentlemen point accusingly at us and say we suspect that all men are dishonest. Apparently these thoughts run through their minds. Why would that member of the NDP make such a statement as this, because it could lead to collusion between employer and the employee.

I point this out as another example of the nightmare this measure will create. If on the one hand the employer says he has left for four weeks, he gets no payment; if the employer gives him a certificate for five weeks or more, he is immediately handed a three-week payment in advance. If this is an incentive for a man to go back to work, I am very badly mistaken. I strongly support this amendment because I feel the whole purpose of the clause is to take the onus off the department, by allowing it to say to these people, "You can have three weeks' payment, but don't come back for three weeks; we do not intend to find you a job."

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the minister in connection with one or two points referred to in the remarks of the previous speaker. I realize that most Canadians are honest, but the thought has occurred to me after reading the clause that a racket might be worked out through collusion between a crooked employee and a sleight-of-hand employer. Having made that observation, what provision or restraint has the department thought of in order to avoid a situation such as that taking place? I am not suggesting for a moment that anyone would do this, but after all there are 21 million people in this country and I have reason to believe that some of them are not as full of integrity as they should be. While I am not of a suspicious nature, it seems to me there is here a beautiful loophole for a dandy racket. I would ask the minister to explain the safeguards against such a possibility.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I would much prefer to deal with that question when we reach the clause of the bill that provides penalties and regulations. I will not forget to deal with it then. Quite properly, the hon. member has pointed out that there is a possibility and a danger here of collusion between a dishonest employer and a dishonest employee. This is true of any part of the act; it is not restricted to this part. If you have a dishonest employee and a dishonest employer in this combination, this could exist because it is human nature. We have ways and means of dealing with it.

When we get to that part of the bill dealing with the fines and court action available to the Unemployment Insurance Commission and the procedure to eliminate this type of abuse, I will deal with it. I will point out the legal action that can be taken against such a dishonest employer and employee. I think you will find that the fines and penalties provided therein are more than ample in the way of deterrent to prevent any such widespread fraud, because that is what it would be in the case that has been presented. When we reach that point I will deal much more specifically with the question.

I might say while I am on my feet that the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Thomas) made a very valid point. It would be wrong and dishonest on my part to deny that administratively this tidies up or makes the role of the Unemployment Insurance Commission much easier. I think this is the point that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) mentioned. If a person is unemployed, the commission will ascertain whether he can take advantage of this feature, or to whom this clause of the act applies. There are people, for instance, who are unemployed as a result of sickness or maternity and who therefore are not eligible for advance payment. This advance payment does not apply to anybody other than those with the proper period of attachment.

If an employer believes that his employee will be without work for at least five weeks, then a certificate is issued. In that case, if the person happens to be unemployed in a region that is very badly affected by unemployment— and the hon. member for Moncton has quite realistically suggested that the chances of his getting back to work are not good,—then the chances are he will be unemployed for the five-week period, in which case this provision makes sound sense administratively.

The hon. member made quite a good case for keeping this clause in, having regard to the administrative feature. He suggested it will save a considerable sum of money in respect of unemployment insurance. We cannot have it both ways. If we want an administratively good plan, and if this is going to save money, we should not remove a clause which accord ng to the hon. member for Moncton would make it possible for the administrators of the plan to save that money. I think this clause should be supported for that reason, in addition to the valid reason suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member from British Columbia regarding the incentive features of the plan.

I think the hon. member from Moncton quite properly pointed out that the three weeks' advance payment will be paid in two payments. Quite frankly, the reason for this is that in long periods of unemployment we felt that the time between the first cheque and the next would be about four weeks and this would mean no income for a month. This is essentially the basic reason for dividing the three-week payment into two cheques.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, would the minister answer a question? I take it he is saying the only way you can get a conviction or even a direction under the board, so far as this act is concerned, is if you can prove fraud. Is that the case? The question that follows is, does this preclude an employer rehiring his employee, presuming he was in the business of supply, received a big order and wanted to get back his experienced workers in two weeks? Would he be precluded from hiring those workers, or would he have to hire from outside?

Mr. Mackasey: Dealing with the first part of the question, in the circumstances outlined by the hon. member this would not preclude an employer from hiring the same employee. I was answering a specific case of collusion described by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. McCutcheon). He referred to a situation involving a dishonest employer and a dishonest employee. That is the case I referred to when pointing out that there are penalties in the act to protect the Canadian public and the fund against this kind of combination of a dishonest employer and a dishonest employee.

In so far as the second question is concerned, I am sure there will be cases where an employer has filed a certificate stating that an employee, according to the act, will be unemployed for five weeks. He might subsequently find himself in the happy position, both for himself and his employee, of being able to bring the man back to work sooner than anticipated because of unexpected circumstances. It is not our intention in that case to deal with the employee any differently than if the employer had hired someone other than his normal employee.

To answer the second part of the question, may I say that in those rare occasions when an employer certifies that an employee will not be rehired, and there is a change and the employee is rehired, in that five-week period he is still entitled to assistance.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I shall speak for only a few minutes. For the second time this evening I disagree with my hon. friend from Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander). This rather disturbs me. But surely the crux of this matter is whether we should have an incentive payment. I would be more persuaded if my hon. friend could have assured me that he could provide an alternative to an incentive payment, because time will be the test in respect of this provision. The cost will be very slight. I think we should give it an opportunity to be tested. After a year's time I am sure the minister will appear before the estimates committee and give its members the benefit of his experience concerning this incentive provision. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I would tell the hon. member for Hamilton West the experience they had in New York state with regard to their scheme for a guarenteed annual income.

Mr. Alexander: I have read it.

Mr. Gilbert: There were two main points. One was that if they gave people certain moneys they would not work and, secondly, that they would cheat. Experience has shown, in respect of the cheating aspect, that less than 5 per cent of the people who received the money in New York took advantage of cheating. I believe the same might be said with regard to our Unemployment Insurance Act. I do not know the figures; the minister probably knows them. I am sure the number would be less than 5 per cent. Surely if the figure is that small we should be big enough to give the plan a chance to operate. I believe it would provide an incentive. The New York experience indicated that when people received the money it gave them an initiative to go out and obtain employment. The hon. member says he has read about the New York experience. I think he should accept this conclusion and give this section a chance to operate.

I become rather fed up when I hear people talk about fraud being committed against the unemployment insurance fund. A very small percentage of the people are involved in this practice. There is fraud in other fields. Doctors cheat, lawyers cheat and other workers cheat. We do not level criticism against professional men, although we do against the workers. Let a few workers cheat and a cloud is cast on all workers. This is hardly fair. It is not really worthy of my friends to the right in the Progressive Conservative party to tag this bill as welfare legislation, because it is really insurance legislation to take care of people during a period of unemployment. I have said to them before that if they tag the family allowances as iniquitous, and now if they tag the unemployment insurance as welfare they will take the same political nose-dive that the leader of their party took when he tagged it as iniquitous.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member allow just one question? Does he not think it is commendable for a person to stand up with conviction for what he believes is constructive criticism, and does he not think that is part of the life of a Member of Parliament; or does he continually have to pussy-foot looking for votes?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has the floor for the purpose of asking a question. He has spoken in the debate, but I understand that he is rising on a point of clarification.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, it is the duty of all members to speak from their own personal convictions and experience. I do not doubt for a moment the sincerity, conviction and integrity of the hon. member for Hamilton West. What I doubt is his process of thinking in respect of this legislation. In my Irish, persuasive way I would like to persuade him, but I can see he becomes more adamant the more I penetrate his argument. Therefore I shall leave him to think about it overnight and he will probably come to me tomorrow and say, "John, you were certainly good last night".

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I appreciate that the hon. member for Broadview may be Irish. I appreciate his good nature and it might be easy to pass off what he said. But as I understood it—and I hope

I am interpreting him correctly—he said we have left the impression, and I do not feel any member over here did so, that we were reflecting on all workers.

My question of privilege that men in the Manpower office said there were 100,000 cases in which the Unemployment Insurance Act, even the old act, was misused. We did not say that. What we are trying to do, with honesty and integrity, is see that whatever act does get through Parliament is the kind of law which will attempt to avoid the type of fraud that could happen under the act. Every speaker who spoke tonight emphasized this. I do not think my good friend from Broadview—who is a member, with me, on the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs and a member whom I know very well—would want to leave that reflection on members of this or any other party.

He may have used an unhappy phrase and played the game of Anthony as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre did tonight, but the fact is that the reflection was made and I would hope he would now stand up and clarify his position as not being a reflection on any member of this party individually or on the party as a whole.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Broadway—I mean Broadview.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hope hon. members will excuse the Chair for confusing Broadway and Broadview, but at this time of night Broadway is rather more appealing. I recognize the hon. member for Broadview. I point out to hon. members that the hon. member for Calgary North has a point which he wants clarified. I know the hon. member for Broadview would like to have the opportunity to reply and I would ask that he do so rapidly.

Mr. Gilbert: Very quickly, Mr. Speaker. Never have I met a more personable friend than the hon. member for Calgary North. He is friendly but he is tough. This is what we like about him. He speaks not only from his heart but from his soul and mind. I am sure he would forgive me if I unintentionally cast any reflection on any member of his party. He has a great sense of forgiveness and I am sure he will forgive me if I have made a mistake.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on motion No. 9. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 75 (11), the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

TRANSPORT—REVIEW BY GOVERNMENT OF FERRY RATE INCREASES IMPOSED BY CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS IN MARITIMES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in speaking in this adjournment debate perhaps I should first inquire whether either the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) or his parliamentary secretary are prepared to answer this question. I do not see either of these gentleman in the House. It would be useless to put the question in some detail unless someone is prepared to answer for the Minister of Transport. It is obviously a vital question for Prince Edward Island. Perhaps the fact that neither the minister nor his parliamentary secretary saw fit to be here is a further reflection of the growing lack of concern and interest in the transportation problems of Prince Edward Island.

It was on June 2 that questions were put in the House during the question period with respect to the increase in ferry rates both to the province of P.E.I. and to Newfoundland. The rate increases with respect to P.E.I. were in the range of from 50 per cent to 100 per cent and, as in so many things in recent years, there was no forewarning that such action would be taken, even though this action was taken without any obvious consultation with the government of P.E.I. I should hasten to add that if there was any consultation in advance, certainly no evidence of it was forthcoming from either the Premier or the Minister of Tourism.

Second, it becomes apparent that there was very little forewarning to those who operate the ferry service. I think that that again must be considered to be an example of an unilateral decision that is taken without adequate consultation and without adequate concern for the needs and the rights of the people of P.E.I. It is the smallest province but surely these people deserve the same kind of consideration that people in other parts of this country have a right to expect.

In a general way, since this government took office three years ago there has been a continuing decline in interest on the part of the government in the transportation problems of P.E.I. It began first with a callous disregard of the commitment of more than one government of this nation to build a permanent link with the people of P.E.I., and when this government cancelled the P.E.I. car crossing project it was the first indication that there was not that kind of continuing concern that Prince Edward Islanders thought they had a right to expect under the terms of confederation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Again, recently this year we saw another unilateral decision taken to remove the flagship of the line, the John Hamilton Grey, for a portion of the year from the P.E.I. service. Again there was no consultation, forewarning or indication that this ship, which had been christened with the names of two Fathers of Confederation from New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, would be so cavalierly removed from its basic area of service.

In its place, two summer ferries have been added. Having travelled on these ferries I can say that in terms of transportation they are adequate if not luxrious, but they have particular faults which I think bring great dangers to the federal government. If the minister had been here this evening I would have pointed out the great danger to life which exists in the staircase and fire doors that have been installed in these ferries which make them literally unsafe for persons travelling. I should like to ask the minister at some point what steps he plans to take to deal with the various lawsuits that I am sure he will encounter from people who are more than likely to suffer grievous accident because of these inadequately installed staircases.

I want to deal specifically this evening with the rate increases because it is in this area that most recently the people of P.E.I. are aware of the government's lack of concern, the lack of willingness to consult with the elected authorities of the province, the lack of willingness to state the reasons for which the increases are necessary, and the lack of willingness to state why the subsidy in the case of Northumberland Ferries was to be decreased by a substantial sum, close to $200,000, and that these rates would go into effect at very short notice before anyone has had a chance to ascertain their effect with regard to the second most important industry in P.E.I., namely, the tourist industry.

The minister is not here this evening and neither is his parliamentary secretary. Again, it seems that we are going to be served up with some kind of formalized answer with respect to transportation, which is a binding part of the commitment between this country and the province of Prince Edward Island, entered into at the time of confederation. I think it is a sorry fact that during the last three years we have seen the transportation needs of the province of P.E.I. downgraded and the erosion of decades of progress made in improving transportation to the province. It is about time the minister and the government treated seriously both the long-term and short-term transportation requirements of that province.

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in the unavoidable absence of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Duquet) I have the honour of replying to the hon. member on behalf of the minister. I would like to provide some information relevant to the question of passenger ferry rates which now are in existence on the east coast and to which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) announced changes on Tuesday.

I am sure the hon. member is familiar with the changes to these rates announced by the minister which affect ferry services under Department of Transport jurisdiction, namely, the Gulf Service to Newfoundland and the Borden-Tormentine service. As a result of the minister's intervention the rates which were originally introduced for the summer ferry services were substantially reduced. I should like to read from the very brief public statement which was made by the Minister of Transport on Tuesday, affecting the Borden-Tormentine service:

> In view of representations I received today upon my return to Ottawa I have instructed that the proposed summer rates not be introduced on the Borden-Tormentine ferry service. This means that the new winter rates will apply year round. These involve an increase per passenger of only 15 cents, with no increase for children, and an extra 50 cents only for automobiles. The rate for trailers will increase by just 5 cents per foot with no change in the present minimum.

In addition to this, the minister indicated that he had spoken to the president of the Canadian Transport Commission regarding the Wood Islands-Caribou service. Late Tuesday the water transport committee of the CTC accepted an application from Northumberland Ferries Limited to cancel the new summer rate schedule for that service and to revert to the winter rates announced June 7. While these rates are higher than in other years, they are considerably less than the summer rates which were announced.

I believe the hon. member is aware that there has been little change to ferry rate schedules on the east coast for many years—in one service I believe it was 1949, and in another 1955. Over that period of time the cost of maintaining the service has been increasing steadily. In the past few years considerable expenditures have been made by the federal government in order to provide our two island provinces with fast, comfortable and efficient ferry service. There is no doubt that tourists and the travelling public, while they will be paying a little more for transportation to and from the islands will be getting a better quality of service than has ever before existed in terms of accommodation, frequency and speedier vessels.

The minister's announcement on Tuesday has been understood and appreciated in the Atlantic area. The hon. member has made a number of points which I have not covered since there was no indication in the original question that they would be raised. I will certainly bring these to the attention of the minister.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): On a point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that under the Standing Orders there is no provision for points of order during these proceedings.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON NATO FOREIGN MINISTERS MEETING

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, on Monday, June 7, I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) whether the House could expect a statement from a member of the government following the meeting of the NATO council at Lisbon. Considering that the Lisbon meeting concluded on the preceding Friday, I thought it incumbent upon some member of the government to make a statement thereon. I state this noting that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), who spends a great deal of time abroad, had not deigned to return to Ottawa before leaving for a Washington ministerial meeting where, incidentally, he failed to discuss the TAPS project despite undertakings given previously. I may also say that I am not disturbed by the Prime Minister's posture of condescending indifference, having grown accustomed to it. However, I find it something less than a proper attitude to adopt to an inquiry on a matter so important as a top-level meeting of NATO.

• (10:10 p.m.)

It has been a fairly well-developed pattern in this country that ministers returning from NATO gatherings would report to Parliament and to the country on the main lines of deliberation in this alliance of which Canada is a charter member and was once a very important participant. Perhaps it is the intention of the present government to downplay and denigrate the NATO alliance and Canada's membership therein. From some recent actions and many utterances we might well be inclined to believe that this is the case.

Perhaps this glibness on the part of the Prime Minister merely reinforces a growing opinion in this country that it is a part of the present government's intention to downplay, denigrate and diminish the importance of Canada's role in this organization which has long been regarded as a bulwark of western defence, a buttress of western freedom and a meeting place wherein leaders of friendly nations could consolidate their positions and advance the interests of peace, prosperity and stability in a much broader way.

In recent weeks the foreign policy of the Canadian government has received severe strictures from many Canadians who fear that their Prime Minister is leading them into policy paths which do not reflect this country's aims and interests. It strikes me that the Prime Minister, in the face of widespread misunderstanding of his Russian visit, would seize an early opportunity to clarify the role of Canada in NATO. The fact that this occasion was not used but that the Prime Minister showed his usual impolite cynicism on the matter aggravates rather than ameliorates, the feelings of many alert and thoughtful Canadians whom he is supposed to lead in the realms of foreign policy.

I hope that whoever speaks on behalf of the Prime Minister will be able to explain this seeming lack of interest in the NATO meeting and will tell us why so scant attention is paid to this top-level meeting in Lisbon. Perhaps we will be told, also, if and when the Parliament of Canada, representing the people of Canada, may hear a report on the actions and utterances of government representatives in the meetings of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization recently concluded.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

Mr. Barnett J. Danson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did not realize that this occasion was to be used for a diatribe against the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) nor to suggest a further downgrading of Parliament by not permitting the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) to reply and report to Parliament on his attendance at the NATO meeting in Lisbon.

As the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) knows, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is attending meetings in Washington on very important environmental problems. He will be returning to the House on Monday, when he will make a complete statement to the House on motions. I think, Mr. Speaker, that is the reply that this Parliament deserves and which it will get.

I am surprised that the hon. member for Hillsborough has used the occasion to also suggest that the foreign policy initiatives which this government has taken, particularly in relation to the recent visit to the Soviet Union, are not reflecting the views of the Canadian people. Certainly they reflect leadership on the part of the government, leadership that I think is well accepted and understood by the Canadian people. Perhaps they are not understood by the opposition but I think the people of Canada look with the same hope as this government to the outcome of the recent initiatives with the Soviet Union.

To answer the specific question, the Secretary of State for External Affairs will be in the House on Monday on his return from this very important meeting in Washington, and will report fully to Parliament as is the practice.

HOUSING—THE RICHMOND SQUARE APARTMENT PROJECT, TORONTO

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, this matter concerns the potentially tragic situation created by the sinking of the CMHC financed Richmond Square (Limited Dividend) apartment housing project in my riding of Spadina, in Toronto. This project covers half a city block on the north side of Richmond Street West between Niagara Street and Walnut Avenue. It backs on a lane at the rear of stores and service stations on the south side of Queen Street West. I understand that the whole project was designed to contain 545 suites, the majority of which are likely contained in the 13-storey high-rise building that is now posing the menace of this collapse.

My information is that a private contractor agreed to build this project as a low-rental housing project under the terms of the National Housing Act, by which the builder's profits are limited. If this information is incorrect, the minister is here this evening to correct it. I do not know whether the mortgage loan for this project from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is an 85 per cent or 95 per cent mortgage. I would be interested in knowing the exact situation. I have not seen the application or the terms of agreement between the parties, nor do I know how many thousands or millions of dollars have been advanced under the CMHC commitment to this private builder.

I do know that the building permit was obtained last fall, that despite the usual soil testing, the footings were improperly placed and in any event were probably inadequate. There should likely have been a reinforced concrete pad under at least part of the substructure. Such footings or sills were built lengthwise with the bed of a former creek and have failed to support the structure. I say this because the 13-storey, multimillion dollar part of this project has sunk into the ground and every floor has a sag in it. Local people say that this is symbolic of the Trudeau depression.

I am advised that the interior of the building was finished during the winter and one can see from the outside that the interior painting appears to have been completed. The floors, ceilings and bearing walls have obviously settled and are perhaps 10 to 20 inches out of line. There are approximately 80 apartments in which the windows have popped in or out.

I am advised by an official of the city of Toronto that as the building went up and the frost came out of the ground this spring, a large portion of the building subsided. Apparently the building should have been tenanted long before this but no one who sees the obvious fault in construction wants to move in. Even to a layman's eye the sag in the building poses a hazard to the unaffected parts of the building, adjacent buildings and passing traffic. The sag is obvious on both the north and south sides of the building and in the garage area underneath, where some attempt has apparently been made to support or raise the footings that have sunk. It may be that this building will stand for some while without further settlement, but obviously it will continue to be a menace and with the return of frost in the ground next winter it may be weakened further.

It is imperative that the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Andras) responsible for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation look into this matter forthwith. I am sure he will. I think that the building should be condemned and demolished either in whole or in part. There is no question but that the 80 units are and will continue to be a dead loss. Expert engineering advice is needed, and reassessment of the whole project. In view of this grossly negligent, if not criminally negligent chance taken with people's lives and public money, the Minister without Portfolio's supervision of CMHC comes seriously into question.

Section 13 (3) of the National Housing Act reads:

No contract shall be entered into with a builder unless

(A) The project is completed and is built in an area satisfactory to the corporation and in accordance with standards of construction approved by the corporation and

(B) The project consists of 8 or more family housing units and is designed to provide housing accommodation of a size and type prescribed by the corporation.

In addition, there is the duty of thorough inspection by CMHC officials. In this they have failed. In their inspections and approvals they are not using good methods and good judgment. The tragedy of St. Jean Vianney is another example of poor judgment and inefficiency in this corporation. It was a CMHC-built subdivision that was involved in that landslide. If many more of these cases of negligent engineering, negligent inspection and poor selection of sites come to light—and according to present experience they well might—the corporation's Mortgage Insurance Fund and will be as bankrupt as this government is of competence.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Ryan) is unusually full of fire and brimstone tonight. From the information I have been able to gather since he raised this question this morning, I cannot recognize the project he is describing as being the same one that goes under the name of Richmond Square. This is a project for which a loan was approved in July of 1970 in the amount of $2,300,000 for a project under section 16, comprising 228 housing units—not 500, the number he mentioned—to be built on Niagara Street in Toronto. This is known as Richmond Square. So I think we are pretty close to talking about the same project.

• (10:20 p.m.)

Mr. Ryan: I think the minister is dealing just with the apartments and not with the whole project.

Mr. Andras: If there are any errors in this reply, and there may be some in the hon. member's presentation, we will investigate further. But to bring the matter up to date, as I think the hon. member knows these units were designed under section 16 for families of low and moderate incomes. The plans and drawing of the proposed building had the endorsation of consulting engineers and inspecting and testing engineers. Construction commenced in mid-April of last year and proceeded through the winter. By April 2 the construction was reported as being 60 per cent completed. On or about April 16 it was reported that settlement had taken place along one line of caissons. The city of Toronto immediately placed a stop order on the project and independent consulting engineers were brought in. These engineers ordered the building to be shored. This has now been done and the construction of the building is being proceeded with.

To date, CHMC has advanced $949,000 and, depending on engineering reports to be obtained, it looks as though the corporation will continue its advances as the project nears completion. That is the information I have at this stage. I will further investigate the matter raised and if there is any deviation from the information I have just given I will report it to the hon. member.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.24 p.m.

POLLUTION

GREAT LAKES—STATEMENT ON CANADA-UNITED STATES MINISTERIAL MEETING IN WASHINGTON

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I should like to report to the House on the outcome of a Canada-United States ministerial meeting on Great Lakes pollution which was held in Washington yesterday, and which was attended by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) and myself, along with Mr. Kerr, Ontario Minister of Energy and Resources Management, and by Dr. Victor Goldbloom, minister responsible for environmental quality in the Quebec government. The United States government was represented by a cabinet level delegation headed by Mr. Russell Train, who is the chairman of the council on environmental quality, and Mr. William Ruckelshaus, the head of the environmental protection agency; the United States delegation also included senior representatives of the Great Lakes states governments.

At our meeting yesterday we agreed that Canada and the United States should conclude a formal agreement which would have the objective of cleaning up the Great Lakes and protecting them in the future. We also reached general agreement on the contents of this agreement, on the basis of recommendations by a joint working group which was established by a first ministerial meeting on Great Lakes problems held in Ottawa last June. We agreed that negotiations should begin right away on the precise text of this agreement, in the expectation that it can be ready for signature in the early autumn.

The decisions we reached yesterday reflect the determination of the governments concerned, at the federal, province and state levels, to take action to deal with the critical pollution situation in many areas of the Great Lakes, especially in Lake Erie and its connecting waterways. The proposed agreement will be solidly based on extensive scientific investigations by the International Joint Commission, and on recommendations submitted by the commission in a report which was tabled in the House in January.

This agreement will establish common water quality objectives which will be based on objectives proposed by the International Joint Commission. On the basis of these common objectives, the governments concerned will establish compatible and legally enforceable standards; and they will also commit themselves to carry out the pollution control programs and other measures to achieve the common objectives within agreed time periods. These programs will include accelerated municipal and industrial pollution control programs; the reduction of phosphorus inputs, which is causing particularly serious problems in Lake Erie; the elimination of mercury and other toxic heavy metals from discharges; control of thermal pollution and pollution from radioactive wastes; control of pollution from pesticides and the development of controls for pollution from combined sewer overflows.

This agreement will also provide for effective and compatible regulations throughout the whole Great Lakes system designed to reduce the risk of pollution from shipping and land transportation, including regulations to control waste discharges by ships. The International Joint Commission will be requested to conduct an intensive investigation into pollution from agriculture, forestry and other land source pollution and to create new arrangements for the better co-ordination of water quality research.

The International Joint Commission will be given additional responsibility and authority in the surveillance of the water quality in the Great Lakes and the control of programs of all the governments concerned. The commission will be requested to make recommendations to the governments on the improvement of their pollution control legislation and programs. We agreed to provide the International Joint Commission with the additional staff and other resources it will need to carry out its expanded role.

At our meeting yesterday we also announced a number of co-operative measures which will be put into effect immediately. These include a new joint contingency plan which could be implemented quickly in the event of a major spill of oil or other hazardous substances. Under this new joint plan the national plans of each country and the Ontario contingency plan will be co-ordinated, so that there will be a joint response to any emergency situation under procedures and arrangements agreed in advance. It was also agreed yesterday that the International Joint Commission should be requested to make a thorough study of pollution problems in Lake Huron and Lake Superior, similar to their recently completed study of the lower lakes pollution problems.

This proposed agreement on Great Lakes water quality should lead to an early improvement in the condition of Great Lakes water, especially in the lower lakes area. The United States will be assuming firm commitments to carry out by 1975 accelerated municipal and industrial control programs, and these programs should greatly reduce the extensive transboundary pollution which exists in many areas. These programs will require expenditures for pollution abatement by the United States many times larger than on the Canadian side.

It will, however, be necessary to accelerate municipal and industrial programs on the Canadian side, particularly in the lower lakes area, so that by 1975 our programs in Ontario will be adequate to achieve the agreed common water quality objectives. I have discussed this matter with Mr. Kerr, because the implementation of many of the Canadian commitments under the proposed Canada-United States agreement will be the joint responsibility of the federal government and the government of Ontario. We have agreed that the apportionment of responsibility among the Canadian government, the government of Ontario and the municipalities concerned for financing the required accelerated program of improvements to municipal sewage treatment facilities in the lower lakes area will be the subject of a detailed agreement to be negotiated between the Canadian government and the government of Ontario. These negotiations will commence right away, since we shall need to conclude our agreement with Ontario before entering into the proposed agreement with the United States next autumn.

It was the view of all who participated at our meeting yesterday that the proposed agreement and the other measures we announced represent a comprehensive and positive response to the recommendations of the International Joint Commission. It will be a precedent for the two countries in dealing with other environmental problems along our boundary, and it will also be a model for other countries in attempting to control pollution across international borders.

Mr. Speaker, with your permission, I should like to table the joint communiqué which was issued at the conclusion of our meeting in Washington yesterday.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin by welcoming the minister back from his Washington tour. It is a long time since we have seen the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), however. I should like to commend the minister for the promptness with which he reported on this matter to Parliament. I think this is the way ministers should relate themselves to this chamber.

I also say that we join in approval of the declaration of intent which followed this meeting and we look forward to the more concrete and precise statements which the minister has outlined in this program.

I note with some little concern that there was some imbalance in the joint talks. The minister uses the expression "cabinet level delegation". I had thought the minister would be meeting with ministers of the United States government, but that was not the case.

I note no projection concerning the cost of this program, and this matter will concern us, but I do commend the steps that have been taken by this government, the government of Ontario and the United States. I do hope that the minister's forecast that something will be done soon will be borne out. This will be an extremely difficult job; much has to be done. I think it was very wise to give the International Joint Commission greater authority, greater scope of action and, of course, additional trained and qualified personnel in this new and very important role which they must carry through.

I am sorry, however, that this meeting which was designed to be a high level discussion on the TAPS route apparently took no cognizance of that very important matter. We were told on May 17 and on May 26, despite the Prime Minister's lapse of memory yesterday, that there would be a ministerial discussion on June 10 on the TAPS route. I find not a single reference to TAPS in the minister's statement nor in the communiqué. I wonder whether, instead of accusing the member for Hillsborough of having a lapse of memory the government itself is losing interest in this very important matter. The government has failed to fulfil a firm commitment given in the House to discuss the TAPS route. We are allowed to gather from the press inferentially that tacked on at the end of the formal discussions the matter was mentioned in an informal way. This is not sufficient for a problem of such great concern as the trans-Alaska pipeline route with all its potential hazards to the people and the coast of British Columbia.

On this matter I take exception, express concern, voice alarm and say to the minister charged with this matter, who is from British Columbia, that it should have been taken up and that the government of British Columbia should have been represented at that part of the meeting just as the governments of other provinces were represented on those matters dealing with the Great Lakes. The government is remiss in this regard. I think it must take seriously the question of the TAPS route, get its ministers together soon, outline its policy, make a statement in the House and then go vigorously to Washington and present the point of view of the Canadian government and the Canadian people on the terrible dangers of the proposed TAPS route. For this omission I criticize the minister most severely.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, the members of our group welcome the report the minister has given the House on the conference held yesterday with representatives of the United States in connection with the problem of pollution on the Great Lakes. It is very encouraging that the talks have progressed at least to the point where it is expected that a formal agreement will be signed this fall in respect of measures to be taken to clean up the pollution in this great waterway.

There are one or two points on which I should like to have clarification from the minister some time within the next few days. I note in the press release that the committee yesterday agreed to accept most of the recommendations of the International Joint Commission which were made last December, its report having been presented to us last January. I should like the minister to tell us some time before the end of June which of these recommendations were not acceptable to the committee because sometimes such recommendations are extremely important. I think Canadians are entitled to know which of the recommendations did not meet with general acceptance by the two groups which met yesterday.

• (11:20 a.m.)

As I looked over the report of the International Joint Commission very quickly to refresh my memory, I noted that the commission pointed out very clearly that one of the keys to keeping the Great Lakes free of pollution was control over the rivers and the streams running into the Great Likes from the states and the provinces bordering the lakes. They pointed out that controls must be exercised over the rivers and streams running into these great bodies of water. In this regard provincial jurisdiction and the jurisdiction of the various states that border the Great Lakes are involved. If anything crystal clear came out of the meeting held yesterday and the recommendations which the minister read to the House today, it is that we must have national standards for Canada and strong international standards which must be enforced nationally. The states bordering the Great Lakes cannot be allowed to carry on their own enforcement. The whole area is involved in the pollution problem and one body must exercise some kind of authority in regard to enforcement throughout the whole area. I point out that there is a lesson here for members of the House that we have to progress nationally and make sure that standards are set up which can be enforced in such a manner as to cure the pollution problems in the Great Lakes.

I should like to make one comment on the remarks made by the speaker for the official opposition on the TAPS program and the proposed tanker route down the west coast of Canada. I feel that some reference should have been made to this vital and important problem. It is one which the government must tackle without delay. I hope the government will take a firm stand and present its views to the United States government before an agreement is reached which will allow the TAPS line to be built across Alaska and the establishment of a tanker route down the west coast of North America. We hope we will have some information on this matter before the end of June.

That is all I have to say. Again I should like to commend the minister and the group who went to Washington. It is encouraging to see that at least we are making progress in this regard.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, we appreciate this statement from the Minister of Fisheries to the effect that an agreement has been signed between the United States and Canada. In my view, this agreement is a striking example of co-operation between neighbouring nations on a very current problem, pollution. We are not talking about pollution of streams but rather about pollution of major inland waters, like the Greak Lakes and, hence, probably the great St. Lawrence River which flows through the whole of the province of Quebec.

It was a pleasure to hear the minister say that the Quebec government had delegated Dr. Victor Goldbloom as its representative at the meetings. I regret however that Ontario was not represented at that conference, for Ontario actually borders extensively on the Great Lakes.

At any rate, Mr. Speaker, this agreement, I am sure, will help in cleaning up our Canadian waters and will tend to protect our waterways from the pollution which we are currently faced with.

Therefore, we welcome this announcement and we urge the minister and the government to pursue their activities along these lines so that Canadian waters may be cleaned up.

KINGSTON—DISTURBANCE IN WOMEN'S PRISON—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I ask the unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The immediacy of the motion is sparked by the disturbance, yesterday and Wednesday, in the Kingston Penitentiary for Women. Of that disturbance this House knows only what members have read in the papers and heard on the air, but it is only the latest in a series of riots that have erupted with frightening regularity in our prisons. They have brought with them death and destruction. I think that surely in a civilized society, ruled by the standards of religion and morality, all people should be treated with justice and fairness. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell):

That the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs be authorized to visit our prison institutions, in particular the Kingston Penitentiary for Women, Kingston Penitentiary and Millhaven, to question prisoners and members of the staffs, and to make such other inquiries as to the committee seem necessary.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Calgary North. Under the terms of Standing Order 43 the motion requires unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity; the motion cannot be put.

Mr. Peters: May I ask who objected?

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might rise on a point of order. It has nothing to do with this motion. It is a suggestion more than a point of order, and Your Honour might be interested in it. Because of the extension of the hours of sitting, if a member wants to move a motion under Standing Order 26 and has to give the necessary two hours' notice, it is almost impossible to get the notice ready that day.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Oh, no.

Mr. Woolliams: Maybe not, but it is next to impossible. Mr. Speaker also has other duties to attend to. In the circumstances I wonder whether the notice could be shortened to one hour during periods when the hours of sitting are extended. I throw out that suggestion for consideration with the thought that the House might agree.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the suggestion made by the hon. member on a point of order might be considered by the party representatives, the House leaders, who apparently meet from day to day.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

INDUSTRY

JAPANESE OFFER TO BUILD PLANT IN CANADA TO PRODUCE ENRICHED URANIUM

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. What reaction did the government express yesterday to the offer of the Japanese delegation who visited Ottawa to build a plant in Canada to produce enriched uranium at a cost of $1½ million, and does the government expect that such a plant will be built in Canada in the reasonably near future?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I was not present when the subject was discussed. I have a feeling that the subject was raised in the afternoon when the businessmen's mission met with officials of the Canadian government. I would like to remind the hon. member that this is a businessmen's group and is not negotiating on behalf of the government of Japan.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, having had some experience in dealing with businessmen's groups and finding them far more satisfactory to deal with usually than government delegations, and especially knowing that any delegation from Japan speaks with the authority of that government on a matter of this importance, would the minister look into this most important offer and advise the House as to the reaction of the Canadian government?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I would be very pleased to communicate the opinion of the hon. member on the operations of the government of Japan to the government of Japan.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, having done that, would the minister do his best to see that this matter is proceeded with as quickly as possible?

ITINERARY FOR FORTHCOMING VISIT OF RUSSIAN TECHNOLOGICAL DELEGATION, NAMES OF OFFICIALS TO BE VISITED, SUBJECTS TO BE DISCUSSED

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Would the minister give the House the itinerary for the forthcoming visit of the Russian technological delegation, their program, the names of the officials they will be visiting, and the subject matters for discussion?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will try to see what I can do on this subject. There is nothing secretive about it. A number of working groups have been constituted. Some have already met. Others will be meeting in the coming months and in the fall. I will try to see if I can provide the information in further detail.

Mr. Paproski: Would the minister also check to see who is going to pick whose brains?

DEVELOPMENT OF PIPELINE AND NATURAL RESOURCE INDUSTRIES—POLICY RESPECTING DISTRIBUTION OF INVESTMENT

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the announced intentions of development of pipelines and natural resource industries I should like to ask the minister whether he is working on a policy to plan the distribution of various kinds of investment?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): That is the purpose of the Canada-U.S.S.R. agreement, Mr. Speaker. As the Prime Minister has indicated on a number of occasions, the Soviets know things that we do not, while we know things better than they do. The purpose of the working groups is to bring together this information. On the basis of this information decisions will be taken by the proper departments and the proper ministers on what course of action to take in the future on each one of these items, and pipelines will be one of them.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST BY INDIA THAT CANADA APPROACH PAKISTAN RESPECTING POLITICAL SETTLEMENT AND RELIEF FOR REFUGEES

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has he received a communication from Prime Minister Gandhi of India requesting him to approach personally the government of Pakistan with a view to promoting a political settlement and, if possible, mounting a massive and co-ordinated relief operation in East Pakistan as well as in West Bengal?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have received no recent communication on this subject, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister does receive such a communication would he be willing, of course with the consent of the government of Pakistan—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will recognize that the question as asked is hypothetical. I would not think that in those terms it would be in order.

CHEMCELL LIMITED—POSSIBILITY OF KEEPING MONTMAGNY PLANT IN OPERATION

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Does the Minister have further information regarding the coming closing down of Chemcell in Montmagny? Is there any possibility that the company can continue its operation?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing new about keeping the plant in operation. The only significant development is the fact that the Textile and Clothing Board has agreed that the employees of the plant be eligible for social benefits provided in the legislation on textiles with which I believe my hon. friend to be familiar.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Is the minister aware of the fact that the provincial government has, now I believe, brought forward suggestions for use of the plant in another kind of production? Is the minister now in touch with Quebec provincial authorities in this regard?

Mr. Pepin: Not personally, Mr. Speaker, but it may be that my officials are involved in that operation. I will look into it and will of course do everything possible for such co-operation.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ASSISTANCE TO FORMER RESIDENTS OF SPRINGHILL WORKING FOR PENNSYLVANIA COAL COMPANY AND FACING EXPULSION FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): My question is directed to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the minister been made aware of severe problems facing a group of Canadians, former residents of Springhill, who are employed by a coal mining firm in Pennsylvania, have worked there for one year and have now been informed by the United States immigration and naturalization service that they must leave the United States by June 30?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will take notice of the question on behalf of the minister, Mr. Speaker. I have not been notified personally.

Mr. Coates: If I send over a copy of the correspondence I have, would the Prime Minister be willing to forward it to the Department of External Affairs to see what can be done to assist these people?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

USE OF MEAFORD TANK RANGE TO TRAIN NATO MILITIA —RELEASE OF SURPLUS PROPERTY FOR DISPOSAL

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence, Mr. Speaker. Would the Meaford tank range be one of the areas the minister had under consideration when he offered to provide training facilities for NATO militia in Canada?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): No, Sir.

Mr. Noble: A supplementary question. Does the government have any plans to release any defence property in Canada to War Assets Corporation?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, there are large quantities of assets, both mobile and land, which from time to time are declared surplus and are transferred. It is very difficult to answer in any general sense the hon. member's question.

INVENTORY OF EQUIPMENT NOT IN USE—STATEMENT ON PROPOSED DISPOSALS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I wonder if I might ask a supplementary. Has the Minister of National Defence or his colleague made a complete inventory of all equipment not being used and is it possible to have a statement in reference to equipment that is going to be disposed of and in what manner it is going to be disposed of to save the taxpayers' money?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): Do we have an inventory of equipment? Yes. Do we have a good indication what we will be using and what we will not be? Subject only to the white paper on defence policy, the answer would be, in general terms, yes. As to when the hon. member can get a statement as to equipment currently up for disposal, I would see no difficulty in that but it would fall under the responsibility of my colleague who is responsible for the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation.

KINGSTON—DISTURBANCE IN WOMEN'S PRISON—USE OF TEAR GAS—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I should like to ask the Solicitor General if he is prepared to make a brief statement to the House regarding the disturbance in the women's section of the Kingston Penitentiary and the orders or instructions that were given that warranted the use of tear gas in this disturbance involving a number of women?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, when minor troubles broke out, 93 women were detained at K ngston; nine of them, for reasons still unknown, decided to cause trouble by refusing to get back into their cells. Finally, they re-entered their cells during the night between Wednesday and Thursday. On Thursday morning, they decided not to eat or leave their cells. Gas was used on the order of the prison superintendent. In the end, one of the women came out and joined the population, another one had self-inflicted injuries and was sent to the hospital; the seven others are in isolation cells, and the situation is entirely under control.

[English]

KINGSTON—DISTURBANCE IN WOMEN'S PRISON—RIGHT OF INMATES TO WRITE TO MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I have a supplementary question. I should like to ask the minister whether his staff have instructed that some of these women be kept in solitary confinement and have instructions gone out from his office—and I am informed that they have—that no prisoner can write to Members of Parliament about complaints? I should like to find out these facts.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether those women keep their privileges. I shall inquire.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder if I might have an answer to the second part, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister instructed the wardens of the various penitentiaries that no longer can prisoners correspond with Members of Parliament and even may be denied the right to correspond with their lawyers? I am asking the question because I have had information.

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, on the contrary. Today, hon. members will receive a letter advising them that from June 15 on, prisoners will be allowed to write directly to all members, without their letters being opened. Naturally, hon. members will be able to do the same.

[English]

Mr. Peters: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In light of the statement that the minister has just made indicating that he believes there should be free correspondence between those in penitentiary and Members of Parliament, does he not agree that it is a rather idiotic process if members are not allowed to visit these people? I am sure he is in the same position, that there is absolutely no point in a member gett ng a lot of mail if he is not in a position to know what to do about it. The visits that members made to the penitentiary were an integral part of our responsibility.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North on a supplementary.

USE OF HANDCUFFS AND LEG IRONS ON INMATES APPEARING IN COURT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Solicitor General whether it is government policy that prisoners who have to appear in court, such as those who were charged as a result of the riot, have to have manacles on their wrists and ankles in moving from prison to court?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I find it as hateful as the hon. member, but circumstances are such that we must take security measures. In the case at hand, in view of the number of prisoners and the accusations made, the authorities of the institution felt it advisable to use those methods.

[English]

KINGSTON—CLOSURE OF WOMEN'S PRISON AS RECOMMENDED BY OUIMET COMMISSION

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): I have a supplementary question for the Solicitor General. When will the minister be implementing the recommendation of the Ouimet report that the women's prison at Kingston be closed?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, 58 of the 118 recommendations of the Ouimet report are already in force. As for that one, it is now under consideration and gives rise to many problems, but I hope that we will soon find a solution.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: Obviously that means another study.

POLLUTION

GREAT LAKES—COST OF CLEAN-UP—PROPORTION TO BE BORNE BY CANADA

Mr. Walter Deakon (High Park): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the minister responsible for the environment. In view of the minister's statement this morning, has he any estimate of the cost of the clean-up of the Great Lakes? If so, what proportion of that cost will be borne by Canada?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, as I said in my statement earlier today, the cost to the United States will be many times the cost which has to be shouldered by Canadians. The detailed report, published last year by the International Joint Commission, suggested that the cost to the United States would be between six and seven times the cost to Canada of this clean-up.

PROPOSED TAPS OIL TANKER ROUTE—PRESENTATION OF CANADIAN POSITION AT WASHINGTON MEETING

Mr. Paul St. Pierre (Coast Chilcotin): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In the course of the discussions in Washington during the last couple of days, was the Canadian government's position on the TAPS line and the oil tanker route down the west coast of British Columbia taken up? If so, with what result?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, this question was taken up by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He and I talked with Secretary of State Rogers yesterday for some time. The Secretary of State for External Affairs will be back in the House on Monday and he will report on this subject.

AIR—CONTROL PLANS FOR SOUTHERN ONTARIO—DISCUSSION AT WASHINGTON MEETING

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The report of the minister dealt almost exclusively with water pollution. Were any plans discussed, or what plans does the government have, for the control of air pollution in southern Ontario, 90 per cent of which, according to various estimates, is caused by our neighbours to the south? Was this matter discussed?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Yes, Mr. Speaker, this matter was discussed at some length. It was decided, however, in respect of the agreement for the fall, that we confine our attention to water. A report is expected this summer from the International Joint Commission dealing with air pollution problems in the Detroit and Windsor areas. When that report has been received we shall have an opportunity to set up similar working groups and perhaps end up with a similar international agreement for action.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PROPOSED TAPS OIL TANKER ROUTE—POSSIBLE STUDY BY INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION—DISCUSSION AT WASHINGTON

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, was the possibility discussed of the International Joint Commission being charged with a study of oil pollution in the Strait of Juan de Fuca and the Strait of Georgia, similar to the studies it is carrying on with respect to the Great Leakes, with a view to having such study presented to the United States Department of the Interior's analysis of the Prudhoe Bay to Valdez to Puget Sound oil tanker route?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, this subject was not discussed formally. However, it is a possible development and one which should be considered carefully.

Mr. Anderson: With regard to the joint U.S.-Canada oil spill contingency plan for the Great Lakes which the minister mentioned in his statement and said was designed to work in advance of problems, was there discussion also about extending this plan to include Canada's west coast as well as the east coast?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, again the answer is no. The discussions yesterday related to the specific recommendations of the International Joint Commission and embodying these specific recommendations respecting the Great Lakes in a formal document to be signed this fall. However, outside the meeting there were references to the extension of arrangements of this kind to other areas along the boundary with the United States.

GREAT LAKES—AGREEMENT WITH ONTARIO ON SHARING OF COST OF CLEAN-UP

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Have the federal government and the province of Ontario discussed the cost-sharing in connection with problems they will meet in the pollution clean-up?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Yes, Mr. Speaker. It was necessary to have an agreement in principle with Ontario before we went to the meeting in Washington yesterday. However, the details of this agreement which involve finance will now have to be hammered out. We agreed on the basic principles. The precise dollar figures have to be arrived at.

PROPOSED TAPS OIL TANKER ROUTE—DISCUSSION AT WASHINGTON MEETING

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When such an excellent opportunity presented itself for discussing the TAPS route with the United States Secretary of State, why did the Canadian Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Canadian minister in charge of pollution and the gentlemen in the United States in charge of the program not take advantage of this opportunity to proceed with discussions?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that the hon. member's question is more in the form of argument. If I did not interpret the hon. member's question correctly, perhaps the minister might be allowed to reply.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, my earlier answer was that the question was discussed with Secretary of State Rogers. I believe that the Secretary of State for External Affairs will be reporting on this as well as on other matters on Monday when he returns to the House.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, arising out of the discussions which the minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs had with Secretary of State Rogers, since the minister himself is charged with the responsibility for dealing with the environment can he tell the House, first, whether the Canadian government asked the American government to abandon the TAPS program? Second, has the government received any indication at all that the American government is prepared to reconsider this program, or has a final decision been made with respect to it?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, these are important questions. However, I would prefer to leave the answer to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who will be here on Monday.

Mr. Douglas: During these discussions did the minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs make any representations regarding any future nuclear testing on Amchitka Island?

Mr. Davis: No, to my knowledge there were no representations on that subject, Mr. Speaker.

INDUSTRY

TOBACCO—STEPS TO MINIMIZE EFFECTS OF LEGISLATION RESPECTING ADVERTISING ON PRODUCTION AND MARKETING

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Since the export of our leaf tobacco brings $60 million in foreign exchange and since the legislation introduced yesterday by the Minister of National Health and Welfare dealt a body blow to the tobacco industry, what steps will the minister be prepared to take to minimize the effect of this over-restrictive legislation on the normal production and marketing of a legitimate product?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is perhaps in the form of argument, but as the matter is important the minister might be allowed to reply.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that this matter could be debated fully when the bill is debated in the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Joliette.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): I should like to put a supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member for Joliette.

[English]

The hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster rises on a point of order.

Mr. Bell: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare made a statement, not in the House but outside, on a matter that will affect the tobacco industry for many years to come. We have absolutely no way of getting at it. Surely the minister, as a courtesy to the tobacco farmers, should say something so that we will know what their position is.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Joliette.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask—

[English]

Mr. Hees: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member for Joliette a second time, but there is another point of order.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, the minister made it clear yesterday that this bill would be proceeded with in the fall, three months from now. This is a vitally important question for some very important producers in Canada, and it is an insult to them and to the country to suggest that they have to wait three months for the answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

SUGGESTED MEETING OF MINISTER AND COMPANY REPRESENTATIVES ON CIGARETTE PRODUCTS BILL

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I was going to say that I am having many troubles with the conservative members!

I should like to put a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Since the cigarette industry is concerned because of measures announced yesterday by the Minister of National Health and Welfare and considering the economic consequences it may suffer, would the minister tell the House whether he intends to meet as soon as possible with the leaders of this industry so as to avoid any misunderstanding which might arise between the latter and the government?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, if Freud were here, he would find that we are all a bit ambivalent. I was listening this morning to a statement by a spokesman for the tobacco industry to the effect that the act would not change anything. So, it will be the one or the other: things will change or they will not! If the industry states that not much will be changed, then I do not see why we should worry unduly.

But in this case we shall continue, until the bill is studied in the House, to apply our present policy. My department will maintain its efforts to help the sale of tobacco outside Canada, and I imagine that the companies will do as much to sell it on the Canadian market.

[English]

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister remind the Minister of National Health and Welfare that he could save the lives of many Canadians who could be harmed by nicotine?

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR RESTORATION OF GRANT TO UNION OF NOVA SCOTIA INDIANS FOR ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT STUDY

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): My question was for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development who was supposed to be here today according to the information provided by the government. In his absence may I direct it to the acting minister who may wish to take notice of it. In light of information that an agreement was made at the regional level with the Union of Nova Scotia Indians that funds would be provided to the union for another six months to enable a study of economic development on Indian reserves in that province to be continued, and in view of that fact that the union has now been advised that these funds have been cut off, would the minister be good enough to investigate this problem immediately and ascertain whether corrective action can be taken to replace these funds?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): I will be glad to bring this question to the notice of the minister and get a reply as soon as possible.

NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION

POSITION RESPECTING E. B. EDDY PLANT

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): My question is for the minister in charge of housing. In my effort to get some information on the E. B. Eddy plant I asked questions on June 3 and 8 about this matter of both the minister responsible for housing and the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry but received negative answers. May I ask the minister responsible for housing whether the plans which have been noted in the papers for the E. B. Eddy plant will now go forward in any shape or form and, if not, why not?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): I made a fairly elaborate statement on this matter before a standing committee of the House the other day. I will simply say we have held some discussions about the Eddy plant. There are no deadlines for action at this stage, and there really is nothing further I can tell the hon. member.

Mr. Bell: In other words, there was a lot of hot air blowing over from Hull.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Two-way.

GREAT LAKES—PROVISION OF NECESSARY POWERS TO INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Will the International Joint Commission be given all the expanded powers necessary to oversee pollution control activities on the Great Lakes?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA—EAST PAKISTAN REFUGEES—ADDITIONAL FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Having regard to the refugee and cholera crisis in India and the need for OXFAM to make an emergency public appeal for greater voluntary contributions in Canada, is the government itself considering providing further financial assistance?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I shall have to discuss this matter with the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I announced the other day some steps which have been taken in this direction. I do not know whether any further action has been taken since then.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Would the Prime Minister consider suggesting to the Secretary of State for External Affairs that he make a statement on motions on this subject?

Mr. Trudeau: I will discuss it with him, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

AUTHENTICITY OF LIPPIZAN STALLIONS APPEARING IN SHOW

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): I should like to have directed my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs but he is not in the House today. Perhaps the acting minister or another member of the cabinet might take it as notice. It concerns the great interest shown by a large number of Canadians in the opportunity being presented to them to view the famous Lippizan stallions. My question concerns a rumour that the animals being presented in Canada may not, in fact, be from Europe or belong to this famous breed. Would the Minister of Consumer Affairs have his staff investigate the advertisements regarding these public events in order to evaluate the veracity of the claims which are being made?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I shall call the minister's attention to this matter.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence and ask him how his investigation of the Ascot arms case is progressing? Has he yet ascertained the identity of the arms?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of National Defence): We have not identified them yet. We have no information from the British authorities on what source they emanated from and what the types are.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

REDUCTION OF EMPLOYEES' AND PENSIONERS' PASS PRIVILEGES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Minister of Transport in the absence of the minister. On May 25 I asked the Minister of Transport a question concerning the action of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in cutting out pass privileges for its employees and pensioners. The minister said he would make representations about this matter. Have these representations yet been successful?

Hon. James Richardson (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport is away on government business but he has asked me to reply on his behalf on the basis of a statement which was received this morning from the CPR. The statement is to the effect that the CPR has decided to reinstate pass and half-fare transportation privileges for pensioners, widows and employees who wish to travel on The Canadian. The move revokes a previous decision made public May 10, 1971, which would have cancelled the transportation privileges on The Canadian beginning June 15. Naturally the Minister of Transport and the government are very pleased with this action by the company.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In view of this welcome success which the government has had with the CPR, will the Minister of Transport continue his efforts to get the company to give a better deal to its retired employees in the matter of their pensions?

POLLUTION

EXTINGUISHING OF SPRINGHILL MINE DUMP FIRE

Mr. Robert Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, last week I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources whether he would report to the House on the meeting he had with the Minister of Mines of Nova Scotia on the extinguishing of the mine dump fire at Springhill, Nova Scotia. Is the hon. gentleman now in a position to answer that question?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The hon. member asked me this question some time ago and I had an answer prepared by officials of the department. A report by the department, which was handed to the Nova Scotia department of mines, discusses the possibility of reclaiming the residual coal in the dump for use in thermal electric power generation. This was discussed with the minister and senior officials of the Nova Scotia Department of Mines who are, we understand, reviewing the feasibility of using the proposal as a basis for reclaiming the coal at Springhill and other dumps in the province.

THE CENSUS

COMPLETION OF FORMS BY STUDENTS AT HIGH AND ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I should like to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce a question with reference to the census. I am advised that the census has been extended to students in high schools and elementary schools. Why is this being done when their parents have completed their forms at home? Is this a check on the parents? What is the reason for taking a separate census from students in schools?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Students who are so asked to fill census forms must know that their parents have already done so, and should answer accordingly.

Mr. Woolliams: Do I take it, then, that students have the right to refuse to answer these questions which appear to be checking up on the answers given by their parents?

Mr. Pepin: Similarly some hon. members of this House were telling me that they received a questionnaire both at their official address and at their home address and they asked me which one they should fill out. Obviously the answer is where they live in normal times and that is a decision they have to take.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What are normal times?

ENERGY

NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES ON AGREEMENT FOR UNLIMITED ACCESS OF CANADIAN CRUDE OIL

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources arising out of the suggestion by President Nixon that negotiations should begin with the Canadian government regarding unlimited access of Canadian crude oil to the United States. I want to ask the minister whether any negotiations have begun or whether he has received any intimation from the government of the United States as to what such an agreement might contain?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Discussions have been going on for some months at the official level and they are continuing. I have nothing to report at this time but I feel quite sure that they will progress satisfactorily as the President of the United States has envisaged.

Mr. Douglas: In view of the fact that the decision to drop the restrictions on Canadian oil to United States markets is a unilateral one, what is involved in the agreement which is being discussed? Are there other energy resources or commodities under discussion as a quid pro quo for allowing Canadian oil to enter the United States market?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, I think I said to the House previously that Canada's position in the discussions has at all times been that the unilateral restriction by the United States was unwarranted and benefited neither country. We have been attempting to persuade the United States equally that their total embargo on uranium is also an unwarranted restriction on trade between our two countries.

[Later:]

DISCUSSIONS ON SHARING OF RESOURCES WITH UNITED STATES—ACCESS TO AMERICAN MARKET FOR MANUFACTURED GOODS

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question that is supplementary to the earlier question asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In his discussions with the United States on the sharing of energy resources, has the minister made it a condition for Canada entering into an agreement that we have access to the U.S. market for our manufactured goods?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, there has been no discussion at any time with the United States on the sharing of energy resources. The subject of the discussions has been that there be free and unfettered opportunities for trade.

[Later:]

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In his discussions with the United States on free and unfettered opportunities for trade, has he asked the United States to consider the removal of their tariff barriers on Canadian manufactured goods?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, tariff negotiations do not take place specifically within the ambit of bargaining for removal of restrictions on trade in respect of energy resources, but certainly this is a very interesting suggestion and one that will probably be pursued in the future.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP—PUBLICATION OF REPORT TO CABINET

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister has declared that the government is committed to proposing a foreign investment policy. My question is: Is the Gray report now going to be made public?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is no such thing as the Gray report. The minister is going to propose in a memorandum to cabinet certain positions for discussion by the government, and the government will announce its policy in due course.

Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF PRESIDENT

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the government had any success at all in persuading anybody to take over the presidency of the Canada Development Corporation?

I should like to ask a supplementary question since I do not seem able to get an answer. Obviously there has been no success, even after about 25 tries. Has the government given consideration to upping the salary from the proposed $75,000, which has had no takers, to $100,000 so as to try to get the government out of the very embarrassing position in which it finds itself?

[Later:]

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I have a question that is supplementary to the question asked a moment ago by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings of the Prime Minister. Could the Prime Minister give the House an assurance that the present Minister of Finance will not "pull a Pickersgillian" and take the position of manager of the Canada Development Corporation?

POST OFFICE

APPROVAL OF POSTAL RATE INCREASES BY PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who is not with us this morning, but because of its importance perhaps I could address it to the acting minister or to a member of the treasury benches who is concerned about this matter. In view of the fact that the proposed increase in first class postal rates amounts to a 100 per cent increase in the cost of local mail delivery since this government took office in 1968, has this matter been referred to the Prices and Incomes Commission for their approval in view of its inflationary impact?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the minister will certainly give an answer to the hon. member in due time.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

PROVISIONS RESPECTING INSURABLE EMPLOYMENT, COMMISSION BENEFITS, PREMIUMS, ADMINISTRATION, ETC.

The House resumed, from Thursday, June 10, consideration of Bill C-229, respecting unemployment insurance in Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose last evening motion No. 9 had been disposed of. The House will now proceed to motion No. 10, standing in the name of the Minister of Labour. Mr. Mackasey—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Where is he?

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Greene, for Mr. Mackasey—

Some hon. Members: Stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the wish of the House that this motion stand and that we proceed to the next motion?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The minister is coming in now, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's intervention is very useful.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour) moved:

That Bill C-229, an act respecting unemployment insurance in Canada, be amended by striking out lines 30 to 32, inclusive, at page 19 and substituting therefor the following:

"section 46,

(c) payment was retained under subsection (3) of section 49, or

(d) he was fully employed during such period."

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question on the motion?

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I hope that the minister will give us some clarification as to the need for the amendment. As Your Honour knows, we have been pursuing this bill with some vigour in committee, so I hope the minister will inform the House what he is attempting to do through this amendment, for the edification of hon. members.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I think the House is entitled to an explanation of my reason for making this particular amendment. It arises from discussions and debate in the committee, and particularly as a result of some of the representations made by the members of the committee that resulted from the brief presented by the United Auto workers. If you will recall, Mr. Speaker, in establishing the period of 29 weeks—

Mr. McCutcheon: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is rising on a point of order.

Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is that the microphone at the minister's desk is not functioning properly. I wonder whether the rules could be changed to allow the minister to go to another desk so that we can hear what he has to say. I am sure all hon. members are interested in his words.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure that is the difficulty. It may be the way the minister is standing. Perhaps he might try to get closer to the microphone. If that is not the trouble, I am sure all hon. members want to hear his remarks and will allow him to speak from another desk.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I have raised this point on several occasions. Perhaps we should return to the good old days when the microphones were above us. We did get into the definition of a speaker yesterday, and I was embarrassed about it. I am sure it left the Chair embarrassed as well. I will try again if it helps. I was mentioning—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I see from the reaction of hon. members that apparently they have the same difficulty. I am sure it would be easier if the minister were allowed to speak from another desk and to try another microphone. Then, we can determine whether it is the microphone or the voice of the minister that is causing the trouble.

Mr. Mackasey: I can assure the House it is not a Freudian slip, Mr. Speaker, it is just an order from the boss. I am getting further and further from the left, and I can see I am going to be influenced all afternoon by the very positive force opposite.

During the committee hearings the United Auto Workers pointed out what they thought was an anomaly in the act. This was after we had discussed the exercise of the 15 weeks' benefits over a period of 29 weeks. There was also some discussion of the period being terminated after four weeks without claim. It was presumed, of course, that the individual would have been working or some thing of this nature.

As a result of that discussion in committee, it occurred to the department and to my staff that we were unintentionally penalizing certain workers or creating a situation where certain people in the work force could be penalized. As you are aware, the major attachment claim entitlement is three weeks' payment, then 12 weeks and then 10 weeks for a total of 25 weeks' benefits. The first 15 weeks can be drawn over a period of 29 weeks. After that period, the 10 weeks' entitlement must be drawn consecutively, and I think we all agree with this. However, this section provides for four weeks in this period for which no benefits are paid, and then the individual must re-establish a claim. That is, he must prove a minimum of eight weeks' attachment. This is what the United Auto Workers complained about and suggested could, in fact, be a disincentive to work. The effect of the amendment that I am proposing, with the unanimous consent of the House, of course, would be to withdraw this restriction; that is, first where the individual was fully employed during that period or where no payment was due to previous overpayments. What we are saying in effect is that if you are not drawing unemployment insurance for four weeks as a result of working, you are not penalized by having to re-establish your claim, thus losing your two weeks' benefits.

An hon. member for the opposition pointed this out to me a week or so ago, and I think he was quite right. Consequently, this would be a disadvantage. So a worker who had an opportunity while unemployed and drawing insurance benefits to pick up four weeks' work would have the tendency to reject the work, because if he accepted it this would mean that when the four weeks were up and he went back to the unemployment insurance office he would have to lose two weeks' benefits all over again and go through the same procedure. Rather than do this he would pass up the opportunity to work for four weeks.

We say if you are divorced from unemployment insurance benefits for four weeks, specifically because you are working during that time, you will not be penalized and you can return precisely as though you had not accepted the part-time job. This is the sole purpose of the amendment and I hope the House concurs.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question on the amendment?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Carried.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Motion No. 10 agreed to.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) (for Mr. Skoberg) moved:

That Bill C-229, an act respecting unemployment insurance in Canada, be amended by deleting paragraph (a) of subclause (2) of clause 44, in lines 21 to 24 at page 27, and by substituting therefor the following: "(a) he is not directly involved or participating in the labour dispute that caused the stoppage of work; and"

He said: Mr. Speaker, we have made a good beginning this morning in that the first amendment to be proposed has been carried. I hope that pattern will continue in respect of this one. I am happy to move motion No. 11 on behalf of the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) who presented this same amendment in the committee. I realize that the committee did not accept it, but I hope the minister and his officials have given further study to this matter in the meantime.

This amendment goes into the bill at that place where we are dealing with the effects of a strike or stoppage of work on unemployment insurance benefits. It is accepted that there are certain conditions under which participation in a strike itself disentitles one to benefits, but then there is subclause (2) of clause 44 which provides for exceptions to the practice of disentitling such a person from benefits.

We feel that the wording of paragraph (a) casts too wide a net. We feel that it creates a danger of catching too many people and, indeed, of denying unemployment insurance benefits to persons who ought not to be so denied because of their participation, their interest or support of a strike, it not being direct. The words of the clause as they are in the bill read:

Subsection (1) is not applicable if a claimant proves that (a) he is not participating in or financing or directly interested in the labour dispute that caused the stoppage of work—

We would like to suggest that this be reduced to the words of the amendment so that it would then read "the subsection is not applicable if the claimant proves that he is not directly involved or participating in a labour dispute that caused the stoppage of work".

As I say, this matter was fully debated in the committee. It seems to me the proposal made by the hon. member for Moose Jaw is a reasonable one and I hope the minister might now be prepared to accept it.

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I must say at the outset in respect of the remarks just concluded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that I agree with his summation. This wording is pretty woolly in the phrase used, "directly interested". We are leaving a loophole there that could cause great consternation and difficulty in matters as delicate as labour disputes. We should approach this problem directly, and since this wording seems to be very woolly I have no hesitation in supporting the amendment.

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this clause is aimed at discouraging a union which is not involved in a work stoppage or dispute from financing a union that is on strike. I would agree with the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. McCutcheon), that the wording of this clause is very woolly. If there is to be any amendment to this clause it should be one that tightens it up to make the objective clear. I cannot see why somebody should expect to receive money from the unemployment insurance fund while at the same time the union to which he belongs and is paying dues is financing another union that is directly involved in a work stoppage. While the present clause is fairly loose, that is probably its intention. I certainly would not want to support any amendment which would derogate from that intention. I certainly cannot support the amendment by the member for Winnipeg North Centre. I hope the minister will give some consideration to making it absolutely clear that we are not going to have one union financing another union while its people are drawing money from this fund.

• (12:20 p.m.)

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. gentleman who just spoke is quite accurate in his analysis of the existing clause and the purpose behind the clause. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) mentioned, this matter was debated at great length in the committee. Perhaps I might have a minute to explain the philosophy behind the whole thing. Periodically, we should be reminded that unemployment insurance is not something which exists exclusively for the benefit of the workers. The fund is financed by the employers and the employees of the country. The general rule is that we have no intention to use our unemployment insurance fund to finance a strike. Therefore, one of the basic things the commission makes certain of is that we do not finance strikes out of funds that are equally proportioned between employer and employee. In other words, I do not think anyone would want to finance a strike with moneys which partly belong to the employers of the country. I believe that is clear-cut.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

However, we go a little further in protecting the fund. We might take the example of a person who is not a member of a union but who became unemployed as a result of a strike over which he had no control. He may be a janitor or a person sweeping the floors. He may come to the commission and say he is out of work because of a strike in which he is not involved. Our answer to him would be that, even though he is not a member of the union and may not have a direct voice in the decision to go on strike, he would benefit from the end result of the dispute because the collective agreement covers not only the unionized employees but all employees. While he may not have a direct participation in the strike he does have, in most cases, a financial interest in the outcome because the end result would mean an increase in his income. If that same company owned three, four or five different operations or, let us say, had activities spread over various branches, and if these branches were affected by a strike or were in some way affected by lack of material and things of this nature, then in that case the employees of these other branches would not be deprived of their unemployment insurance.

We have a case in Flin Flon, for instance, where the craft unions are on strike and the steel workers are not. The steel workers will not benefit by the settlement of the craft workers' dispute and therefore, at the moment, are eligible for unemployment insurance because the plant has been closed down as the result of an action over which they had no control and because when the financial settlement is reached they will in no way be involved. So, they are eligible. Really, we are protecting the fund, but we give as much latitude as possible to the commission to make certain that no one is intentionally deprived of his normal right. Fortunately, because of the way the commission operates, there is sufficient jurisprudence which has been accumulated over the past 20 or 30 years which can be used by the officials, referees and umpires in making certain that justice is done in the case of people who may not be members of a union but who are affected by the labour dispute.

So, I must recommend that this amendment be rejected because, although I understand and sympathize with the reasoning of the hon. member who proposed the amendment, and who unfortunately cannot be here today, I must remind myself and others must remind themselves that we have an immediate obligation to the employers as well as the employees of this country who participate financially to the same extent to make sure we do not finance a strike with the employers' money. On the other hand, we cannot encourage people who remain outside a union and refuse to participate in any shape or form to come lamely to the unemployment insurance commission and say that if they had given in there would not have been a strike so, therefore, they would like to have the unemployment insurance money. We cannot encourage this because eventually these people will get the pay raise or the advantage of the improved conditions which the collective agreement will bring about.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister would accept a question.

Mr. Mackasey: Certainly.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I am seeking information. I know the minister has had more experience than I have had in union affairs. It is possible that one class of workers, A, and another class of workers, B, could belong to the same union, C. The A workers are on strike and the B workers are not on strike. Under the terms and conditions of this bill would B, with no responsibility, be entitled to the benefits? The thing about the financial participation is that both workers A and B may be contributing to the same union and the contribution of both may be assisting A from the union's point of view. Would B then be entitled to the unemployment insurance benefits even though contributing to the union and therefore indirectly contributing to the workers A?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, if I did not quite grasp the hon. member's point, I am sure he will understand. I do not know offhand of any cases where a union would be legally on strike when that strike would not be binding on all members of the union. I think this rarely occurs. On the other hand, there could be in that same plant members of another union. I mentioned the strike at Flin Flon in which the steel workers who have completed their collective agreement and who are prepared to work are out of work because the plant is now struck as a result of a labour dispute between the employer and members of a group of unions called craft unions. The craft union members are not entitled to unemployment insurance because the strike is the result of their direct decision, but the steel workers are entitled to unemployment insurance because they had no participation in the decision-making that brought about the strike, nor will they benefit in any way from the ultimate result of the strike in so far as increased pay or benefits are concerned. The criteria are, first, whether the person involved has a voice in respect of the creation of the strike and, second, even if he is not a member of the union and did not have a voice whether he will eventually benefit from the strike.

In passing, I might point out that through jurisprudence and through our past decisions, a precedent has been established that when people are laid off as a result of a deliberate slow-down prior to a strike, thus reducing productivity or impeding the productivity of that particular employer with the result that he may have to cut back his work force, if these people apply for unemployment insurance and if it can be proven that this has been due to a deliberate slow-down, they cannot draw unemployment insurance. Sometimes these cases go to appeal. Sometimes a decision is made on the side of the employee and sometimes on the side of the employer. There is an effort to maintain a balance between the employer and the employee. The two basic rules are, first, that one should not benefit in any way materially from the end result of the labour dispute and, second, that one should have had no voice in fomenting a strike because if he had a voice he could not draw unemployment insurance.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could make myself a little clearer.

The Speaker: I understand the minister is willing to entertain these questions. I think it is understood that the minister is still deemed to have the floor at the present time but is replying to questions of hon. members.

Mr. Woolliams: I may not be quite right in respect of what I have in mind, but I shall give an example. Suppose in respect of the railways the engineers went on strike and the trains were stopped. The conductors belong to the same union and they are paying their dues to the union, as are the engineers. The conductors may not want to go on strike. Would it be possible for the conductors to draw unemployment insurance because they are not working and the engineers who belong to the same union have stopped the trains?

Mr. Mackasey: I will be accused of giving an ambiguous answer but the determining factor is probably the reason the conductors are not working. If they choose not to work because they respect the picket line put up by the striking union, they cannot draw unemployment insurance. If the company were to shut down all operations, thus divorcing the conductors from their weekly pay, then in all probability the Unemployment Insurance Commission would rule that these people were denied their regular income for reasons beyond their control. If workers choose not to work because they want to respect the picket lines, then they do not draw unemployment insurance. It requires no courage to respect the picket line if they know their loss of income will be offset to some extent by unemployment insurance.

Mr. Ritchie: It seems to me that this subclause is a continuation of the previous subclauses (b) and (c). How easily could a worker laid off under this clause be able to obtain bona fide regular employment in the same occupation as under (b) and (c)? In other words, if a worker were laid off and obtained a job even for one day, would he qualify for the full unemployment insurance?

Mr. Mackasey: What this really means is that if a worker is laid off and he found work for, say, eight weeks, he would begin once again to accumulate benefits. In that event, if he is unemployed, he is entitled to unemployment insurance, but the insurance would take into account also other attachments which he had before being laid off.

Mr. Barnett:: I realize that we are not in committee of the whole, but I suggest that this is one of the most delicate areas in the whole application of the Unemployment Insurance Act. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, you would permit me to direct a rather extended question to the minister so that I can have a response from him.

Mr. Speaker: I understand the purpose of the hon. member, but we still have to proceed in an orderly fashion. The minister has the floor or has not. If he has relinquished the floor, he has spoken once and cannot speak a second time unless by unanimous consent of the House. I certainly do not want to stand in the way of the minister making a second statement but, as the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) has pointed out, we are not in committee of the whole, and we should follow the usual procedure when we are not in committee of the whole.

Mr. Mackasey: Also, Mr. Speaker, I am very suspicious of extended questions.

Mr. Barnett: If there are other hon. members who wish to ask unextended questions, which you are prepared to permit, I will yield the floor to them.

Mr. Speaker: My understanding is that the minister has now relinquished the floor.

Mr. McCutcheon: In speaking on this measure, I should like to point out to the minister that there is a great deal to be gained in this place by such exchanges and discussions as we have had. My first comment was based directly on reading what appears here. Having regard to the minister's explanation, and to the fact that ladies have the prerogative of changing their minds, which I also trust extends to Members of Parliament, I thank the minister for his explanation and I withdraw my previous objection.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I have just a short statement on the point being debated now. As members have indicated, the amendment is extremely important and I have every sympathy for what my NDP colleagues are attempting to do. However, I think the important word which they left out is "finance". This point has been clarified by the minister. It has many ramifications which are not clearly understood but, as I understand it, there is no hard and fast rule. I do not wish to interrupt the minister's conversation but I hope he is listening to my comments. As I understand it, this situation is being dealt with under the regulations, and every instance is dealt with on its own merits. Therefore, there is room for correction of any injustices or ambiguities. I notice that the minister is nodding his head, so it appears that there is some safeguard in the bill. I will, therefore, join my colleagues with great reluctance in not supporting the amendment put forward by the NDP.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I have been interested for a long time in the interpretation by the Unemployment Insurance Commission of the words "directly interested in". This has, in many cases, been used in various ways and changes have taken place for various reasons in the decisions that the commission has made. In the matter of financing, I presume the minister is not referring to persons who are making a donation. He is more interested in the direct financing of a situation and this probably has a different connotation. Many unions assist in the financing of a labour dispute and yet they are in no way involved in the process of making the decision that there will be a strike, or whatever the negotiations may be, nor in any way would they receive remuneration from that. The minister has made decisions in these situations, such as the one he made with regard to the Hudson Bay Mining to separate the trades and the industrial union involved. These decisions have not always been made by the Unemployment Insurance Commission. On many occasions their decision was different.

This is one of the reasons that my colleagues and I are concerned about leaving in the words "directly interested in". If you work for the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Corporation, obviously you will be directly interested in what they do and what are the financial and other implications of their actions. Whatever the company does will have some effect on what happens to you if you are one of their employees, even if you are in a different area or a different town. This has been misinterpreted many times, and it lends itself to various interpretations. I have no qualms about the minister making the right decision, but I have many qualms about the commission making a decision. They have made various decisions on both sides. Sometimes they have allowed payment of benefits, and sometimes they have not when, in my opinion, the reasons were unclear. For this reason many thousands of regulations will have to be made under the bill. These regulations will be in the form of decisions made at various stages. Each may become a precedent. I am sure the minister is aware of cases, apparently identical cases, where totally different conclusions were reached. The words here are subject to varying interpretations, and I do not think they will achieve what the minister wants.

I am also interested in some protection being provided against a situation in which a number of employees might decide they were going to have a holiday and collect unemployment insurance while on holiday. I am sure this might be arranged by a small number of employees acting together in one very large plant. If we leave the words "directly interested in" in the bill, I know that the umpires and all others involved in the decision making process in the Unemployment Insurance Commission may interpret them in different ways. The minister mentioned the Hudson Bay decision in which he had some interest, but I know of at least half a dozen cases where that decision was reversed. Once this bill is enacted we, as Members of Parliament, will have no influence on the decisions that are made. We will be left totally at the mercy of the interpretations that are made.

I know of one case where one union did have two bargaining units operating in a plant. As an industrial worker I was always of the opinion that there were three levels in a plant, the management, the office staff, and the other workers. I had no relationship with the office staff or management, but management did have close relations with office staff. At the Hollinger Mines we organized the office staff into a separate unit of the United Steel Workers, but when the other section went on strike the office staff was not able to draw unemployment insurance. The office staff had not attended the strike meetings and had no influence on the strike decision. We were using the CWS program and a wage structure that did not apply to them. They may have been interested in seeing that members of an associated local of the Steel Workers did not get beaten, but they had no financial interest in the strike. Yet the commission interpretation went against them.

The minister and other hon. members who have had anything to do with labour negotiations are well aware of the problem. If we do not amend the bill, then the Commission will introduce regulations that will change our interpretation of it. I speak from experience of attending tribunals and finding the regulations totally changed from what I had expected them to be. If we leave the words "directly interested" in the bill, the Commission may make whatever interpretations it deems warranted.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the minister would agree with me that basically what we are concerned about when discussing a bill to amend the Unemployment Insurance Plan is that the Unemployment Insurance Commission and the operations of the plan should be as neutral as possible in any situation involving a labour dispute. All we are concerned about is how to achieve this.

Certainly, in the union to which I belong there is a feeling that since the inception of the Unemployment Insurance Commission the jurisprudence that has developed, as a result of Commission interpretations and umpires' decisions, is weighted on the side of the employer interests and against the worker interests. Because of that widespread feeling, I think this is a matter that should receive the closest scrutiny. I am sure it did receive a great deal of discussion in the committee, but apparently my colleague from Moose Jaw was not satisfied that the wording of the bill will create the neutrality desired.

As I read the proposed amendment, I think it is pretty clear that the hon. member wants a distinct statement stipulating that in future umpire decisions should be even-Steven down the line. The way the bill and the existing act are worded means that the onus of proof is on the worker—and this would apply even under the terms of the proposed amendment—to establish that he is not directly involved or participating in the labour dispute that has caused the stoppage of work.

I would remind the minister of some of the situations that developed as a result of the towboat dispute on the coast of British Columbia. I am convinced that the employees in some of the logging operations in the northwest part of Vancouver Island were not directly involved and were not supporting that dispute. But they were laid off because the towboats were tied up. Their claims for unemployment insurance have been in process, and the last word I heard was that there is soon to be an umpire's hearing. Those workers have been left up in the air for months, wondering whether they are going to get the benefits they feel they are entitled to as a result of being laid off by the companies because work operations could not continue due to the tie up of the towboats.

When we talk about this question of financing and participating directly or indirectly as the clause is worded in the bill, this leads to almost any kind of interpretation in the future by an umpire. The whole concept of the labour movement is that it is interrelated. I have voted many times to send a contribution to workers on strike somewhere else. If one wants to take these words literally the fact that a local union has voted $1,000 or $25 to support a group of striking workers in another place, could lead to an umpire's decision that any member of that union who happened to be laid off could be denied benefits because he was financing and had a direct interest in that other labour dispute, though it might be on the other side of the continent.

I do not think the existing jurisprudence has gone in that direction, but this is so complex a problem that only a full-time professional could keep a clear picture in mind of where the matter stands or where it is heading. I cannot understand why the minister is insisting that this phrase be retained. The amendment would provide that a worker would have to prove that he was not directly involved or participating in the labour dispute that caused the stoppage. That seems to put it fairly clearly from the point of view of any future decisions by an umpire on what at times are going to be pretty difficult lines of demarcation.

We all know that under certain circumstances groups of workers who have not been involved in a labour dispute have to make a decision about whether they will handle hot goods or hot cargo. The interpretation of whether or not that action would involve them in the dispute is one on which there may be some disagreement. If the words about financing and direct interest are left in the clause it seems to me that the possibility of a worker proving that he is not involved is weighted against the worker. I urge the minister to recognize that there is no provision that the employer has to prove the worker is involved; the onus is on the worker to prove that he is not involved before he can accept benefit. In a sense, that weights the application of the act in the direction of protecting the employer interests against having their contributions to the fund used to assist workers with whom they may have a dispute. That is one of the considerations the minister should have in assessing the merits of a clause such as this, that you start by putting the onus of proof on the worker. It should be made as simple and as straightforward as possible for the worker to prove it. The wording in the act on which an umpire is going to have to base decisions should enable him to draw a line that is as clear and simple as it can be.

We hope that, as a result of the new act, some of the very messy and unhappy situations that have developed in this area in the past would be eliminated and that we could start afresh to build some new jurisprudence in this area which is a difficult one to deal with.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question on motion No. 11?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 75 (11) the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Jerome: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. As Your Honour has just deferred another division in this matter, it might be an appropriate time to indicate that discussions have taken place about the taking of these deferred votes. It has been generally agreed that it would meet with the approval of all members that Monday night at eight o'clock would be an appropriate time.

Mr. Peters: Why not five o'clock tonight?

Mr. Jerome: I might also say at this time—perhaps in a mood of optimism which I always carry with me—that since this matter is proceeding so well and since the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) and the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert), the respective spokesmen on the Judges Act, are both present today, if this debate should conclude before four o'clock this afternoon we would go on to the Judges Act.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Not the Labour (Standards) Code?

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I shall take the second statement under advisement and tell the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) about the Judges Act. With regard to the votes on the Unemployment Insurance Act, we are in agreement that they come before the House on Monday next at eight o'clock.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We also agree, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: It is agreed and so ordered. Is it the wish of the House that the Chair call it one o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

[Mr. Barnett.]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): When the House rose at one o'clock we had just completed a study of Motion No. 11 on which a vote was deferred in accordance with Standing Order 75 (11). It had been decided, also, that the House would consider Motions Nos. 12 and 13 which would be grouped for debate.

Mr. Mackasey: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. You are perfectly right in what you have said but I was wondering whether, with the unanimous consent of the House, there having been discussions with representatives of the other parties, I could be permitted to introduce an amendment to section 58. I seek permission now because this is the proper time, having regard to the progress we have made.

The purpose of the amendment is strictly to rectify a drafting error. I have made this clear to representatives of opposition parties, who have copies of the amendment. I do not know whether the table has a copy. I should like to read it, anyway, and then I will give a copy to the table.

I should like to ask the unamimous consent of the House to introduce an amendment to clause 58, subclauses (t) and (u). This amendment is required because of an inadvertent omission in drafting and the misplacement of some words as between the two subsections. The white paper on unemployment insurance clearly specified that when the rates of unemployment produced by Statistics Canada were to be used to determine the length of extended benefits, these rates would be averaged to smooth out fluctuations from month to month and avoid the situation where the duration of benefits could swing up or down on the basis of a single month's figure. I might add that this would cause undue hardship to some of the claimants. In the case of national rates, these would be averaged over a period of three months for the purposes of Section 34.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I wonder whether it would not be more correct procedurally to put the motion at this time. The minister could then make his remarks afterward. The Chair would like to know whether the House gives unanimous consent for the minister to present a motion at this time.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour) moved:

That Bill C-229 be amended by striking out lines 41 and 44 inclusive on page 34 and lines 1 to 3 inclusive on page 35 and substituting therefor the following:

and delineating the boundaries thereof and determining residence within such regions;

(u) averaging any rates of unemployment for the purposes of paying extended benefits and prescribing the manner in which such averaging shall be carried out.

He said: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I was saying, the purpose is to be a little more specific, a little clearer as to how the extended benefit period would be determined.

Rates would be averaged so as to smooth out fluctuations from month to month. The averaging of rates would work to the advantage of claimants by avoiding frequent changes in duration based on month to month variations in the rates of unemployment compiled by Statistics Canada.

The wording used in section 58 (u) did not make this clear and I have proposed an amendment which would clarify the requirement and make it clear that the Commission has the power to average the national and the regional rates as described in the white paper. There was no disagreement on this point in committee and I am sure the amendment will be accepted. As far as subclause (t) is concerned, the amendment proposes to return to that clause the words "as determining residence within such regions" which were inadvertently placed at the end of subsection (u) and which should have appeared at the end of subclause (t). It was simply a printing error.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): This may sound complicated, but the minister let us have copies of the proposed amendment this morning and I believe those of us who have been following this matter are satisfied that the purpose of the amendment is simply to correct an error that was made inadvertently. We support the amendment.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I echo the observations of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and thank the minister for letting us have a copy of the amendment beforehand, thus giving us the opportunity to examine it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I return now to the point I was making prior to the intervention by the Minister of Labour. Motion No. 11 has been discussed and a vote on it was deferred in accordance with Standing Order 75(11).

The House will now consider Motions Nos. 12 and 13 which are grouped together for the purpose of debate. A vote on Motion No. 12 would automatically dispose of Motion No. 13. The Chair will at this point put the two motions before the House.

The hon. member for Hamilton West moves Motion No. 12 as follows:

That Bill C-229 be amended by deleting subclauses (1), (2) and (3) of clause 64 at pages 41 and 42 and substituting the following:

"(1) The employer's premium to be paid in a year by an employer of an insured person shall not exceed 1.4 times the employee's premium for that year."

and by deleting the words "but subject to paragraph (a) of section 65" where they severally appear at the end of subclauses (4) and (5) of the said clause at page 42 and by renumbering these subclauses as (2) and (3) respectively.

The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) also moves Motion No. 13 as follows:

That Bill C-229, unemployment insurance in Canada, be amended by deleting clause 65 at pages 42 and 43.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I believe that during the committee hearings members found that, as a result of this new experience which has been brought into the Unemployment Insurance Act, the vast majority of the members questioned the usefulness and the acceptability of what is called the experience rating or the merit rating system which is being introduced by the government.

I recall that yesterday the minister accused members of this party as well as hon. members of the New Democratic Party of being confused inasmuch as we were continually reaching conflicting conclusions. It seems to me the minister has now indicated to the House, and I accept this philosophy in that regard, that many of us must be our brothers' keepers. On the other hand we said we should abide by the universality of the unemployment insurance scheme. It seems to me that rather than being confused on this side of the House it was the government which is confused because the government has now indicated that it is not interested in universality when it comes down to industry. They believe we should get away from the pooling of risks by saying there should be a penalty placed upon industry as a result of high lay-offs.

What concerns many of these people in industry who are making a great contribution to the ultimate destiny of this country is that in many instances lay-offs are beyond their control. For example, I do not want to become political this afternoon but one of the reasons industries occasionally lay off people is the fiscal and monetary policy of the government; there can be no question of that. This is something beyond the control of employers. The external ramifications of capital and money exchanges certainly affect lay-off patterns, as do seasonal adjustments.

If we increase premium rates of employers, the extra cost must of necessity be passed on to the consumer. For the life of me, I cannot understand the thinking of this government when it says that we should pool the risk. After all, they brought in an additional one million people to enable them to pool the risk. They have included in the plan school teachers, firemen, nurses, public servants and armed forces personnel so that the risk can be pooled. The government feels that some industries, perhaps through their inability to compete, should be penalized or driven out of business, but at the same time it forgets that the main theme running behind the entire act is that there should be a pooling of risk and that universality should prevail.

This is one occasion when we found that even labour took a pretty dim view of what the government was doing in this instance. I admit that the senior chamber of commerce took the opposite view and said there should be a pooling of risk. But what is important is that the vast majority of the briefs submitted on this matter were very much opposed to the introduction of experience rating.

It is also of extreme importance that the Gill report dealt with this question. I do not know whether the Gill report is relevant or not, but I do know that he took a pretty dim view of experience rating. I should like to refer to some of the arguments Mr. Gill put forward for the benefit of the government dealing with this particular clause. The Gill report stated:

> It will, we think, suffice for present purposes to indicate, as follows, the main reasons why we do not recommend the adoption of a system of merit rating.
> We favour a system of broad pooling of risk and this is the foundation of our recommendations for universal coverage. We believe that the frictional unemployment that can properly be taken care of by a plan of unemployment insurance is a more or less normal phenomenon of a free economic system, but it emerges strongly in certain industries and occupations in the system and scarcely at all in others. This variation is not, however, the result of particular management decisions. It is, instead, a function beyond the control of the employers concerned.

The statement "beyond the control of the employers concerned" is very important in this context. Further the report states that merit rating—> —would have the result of raising the contribution rates for some of the basic industries that play an important part in Canadian export trade; this would put them at a competitive disadvantage in the international markets.

A further point made by the report is this:

> We have not observed any decisive evidence to substantiate the claim that the operation of a merit rating system would have any significant effect in reducing unemployment.

I am putting forward these points so that the people of this country, as well as my colleagues in the House, understand what is taking place. Another point made by Mr. Gill is this:

> There is some evidence to suggest that the existence of merit rating encourages undesirable practices on the part of some employers. They may tend to oppose claims merely for the sake of improving their position with respect to merit rating. They may oppose socially desirable extensions of the unemployment insurance scheme for the same reasons, and they may indulge in practices relating to hiring and firing of employees designed to minimize the effect on the unemployment insurance plan.

As I said earlier, the Canadian Labour Congress is very interested in the last point. They indicated that they would oppose merit rating because of this danger. Other criticisms can be made of merit rating, and I would refer to one in particular. Merit rating has a regional and structural bias. Government officials insist that, industry by industry, merit rating is administratively and politically impossible. However, juxtapositioning all firms against an average national lay-off rate would heavily favour mature central Canadian business and industrial structures and would actively harm growth and depressed areas. Growth industries have higher lay-off rates simply because of their dynamism. Many stagnant industries have low lay-off rates and would be rewarded even though they often require, according to government policy, swift, efficient mobility.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel).]

Another criticism that can be made is that merit rating may bias hiring practices. The incentive, if it worked, could bring direct hardship to the very people it aims to assist—working people in search of quasi-permanent or permanent employment.

Other objections have been made to experience rating, which is why we on this side of the House deem it advisable to put before the House criticisms that have been directly voiced very vehemently and strenuously by those concerned. It is not going to help the employer, it is not going to help the employee, and the ultimate payer, as usual, will be the taxpayer who has to absorb the additional cost of any increase in premium as a result of experience rating being applied in any particular industry.

I am sure the minister and his colleagues will tell me that I have not made a bad speech but that once again I am off the beam; that things have to be this way because some industries are taking advantage of a good thing. But let me repeat that pooling a risk and universality are at the basis of the unemployment insurance plan. Starting with that premise—and I do not think anyone can disagree with the premise—you cannot then turn around and say that you must make an exception in this particular instance. With all respect, this then brings into question your credibility. I am not being offensive in saying that, but this argument does have us on this side puzzled. Without pursuing the matter further and becoming too repetitious, may I conclude by saying motions Nos. 12 and 13 are being moved primarily to eliminate what I call this very offensive clause in terms of its effects on the Canadian economy.

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support what was said by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) and to congratulate him on going further afield than his own particular locality. He is taking an interest in other parts of the country that are not as well developed as his home city and province. There are, of course, vast areas of the province of Ontario that would be adversely affected by this legislation, as well as the area of the country that I have the honour to represent.

I should like to say it escapes me how the bill, as proposed, will encourage stable employment in types of industries mentioned by the hon. member for Hamilton West because in most cases these industries are totally dependent on factors outside their control. Of course, the major factor in that regard is the weather. The weather pretty well dictates the operations of the construction industry. We are making progress toward extending the construction season into a year-round business but, the fact remains, winter construction in the climate which prevails in most areas in this country is more expensive than in spring, summer and fall.

Apart from the construction industry, we have a problem in respect of another major industry in the country being affected by the weather, namely, the agricultural industry. It is completely dependent upon the seasons. Farm labourers are subject to the provisions of this bill. I do not think it can be argued that they will not find themselves in an industry which will have a bad merit rating regarding lay-offs. Once the harvesting of any particular crop is completed, a great number of farm labourers are laid off. This can only result in higher costs to the employer, being the farmer. He is already subject to a terrible cost-price scheme. It has been admitted by both sides of the House that the farmer is in no position to pass on this cost. In some seasonal industries, such as construction. I suppose it can be argued that this cost can be passed on. This might get the business itself off the hook, but it does not get the consumer, or the people we represent, off the hook. We should have some consideration for them.

One of my basic objections to this bill is that generally speaking it will increase costs throughout. In this bill, we find an added means of increasing the cost in what I would consider to be a totally, unacceptable and unjustifiable way. In addition to weather conditions, I think my hon. friend mentioned pressures or conditions creating instability of employment in certain areas. We have found that, for the past year or so, it has been a firm policy of the government to discourage construction in certain areas of this country. The city of Calgary, part of which I represent, is in the position of being discriminated against in respect of depreciation as a result of a desire to cool off the economy. I might say in passing, it has had a very good effect, but the construction industry in that city has suffered as a result of this conscious policy of the government.

I do not see how the imposition of higher employee contributions will help to stabilize employment in the construction industry in places like Calgary, when it is singled out from other cities in the country for discrimination by the government with a view to creating unemployment.

I agree also with the hon. member for Hamilton West that this legislation seems to be based on the view that industry is developing to the same extent throughout the country and we have a homogeneous working force. I suppose the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans) would be very happy with this aspect of the legislation because his view would seem to indicate that all industry should be concentrated in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and that the outlying areas of the country should be forgotten. I am sorry I cannot take that position. I urge the government to have some consideration for the growth areas of this country, and accept this amendment which would remove a real discrimination, particularly against the construction and agricultural sectors of the economy.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in so far as these two amendments before us are designed to eliminate experience rating from the new Unemployment Insurance Act, we shall support them. We debated this matter at great length in committee and I do not think it is necessary to rehash that debate at the report stage. In an effort to achieve that goal, may I say simply that there are three main reasons for my opposition to experience rating.

In the first place, employment conditions are to a very large extent beyond the control of the employers. Some spokesmen for experience rating have tried to relate this situation to workmen's compensation where there is a form of experience rating. I suggest that employers can control the safety conditions under which their employees work and can control the number of accidents that take place. So far as the economy of the country is concerned, on which employment is based, that is to a large extent beyond the control of employers. There are various regional and seasonal factors that come into the picture, but we think that because this sort of thing is beyond the control of employers it is unfair to impose experience rating.

The second reason for our opposition to this measure is the fact that the Canadian Labour Congress and other representatives of labour have expressed the view that this would lead to an abuse. An employer who might need a certain number of employees would refrain from hiring them temporarily lest the firing of them shortly thereafter would spoil his record. We think abuses of that kind are possible and we should not encourage them by this so-called experience rating. We think there are hiring practices in reverse which are an abuse, but that they can be dealt with by an amendment such as the minister has made to the Canada Labour (Standards) Code, which we hope will be copied in provincial statutes.

My third reason for opposing this is that if we are going to permit employers to pay lower premiums because of a better record than others, we will have the argument from employees that those who have had long periods without drawing unemployment insurance benefits will feel their premiums should be reduced. This is a one-sided proposition and we feel this is a defect. As I have said, we went into this at great length and argued it with most of the delegates who appeared before us. We tried to persuade the government to drop the whole idea of experience rating. Since we did not succeed there we are indicating that is still our position, and we shall do so again by voting for these two amendments.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to participate in this debate for just a few minutes. I begin by commending the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) for the amendments he has proposed. As a member from the Atlantic region of Canada, I feel that the legislation as proposed by the minister will only place one more impediment in the way of industry in that part of Canada. I feel as a result of this legislation these industries will continue to have more than their share of difficulties, day in and day out, in maintaining themselves in business.

I think this places an extra burden on the shoulders of the employer concerning what he should or should not do in given circumstances. I would be fearful that what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) alluded to might happen. An employer who had been trying to make up his mind concerning whether or not he should take on additional staff for a short period of time would look at the merit system and say to himself that if he did this he might become involved in difficulty. He might consider that it might involve an extra expense, whereas if he used his present staff or kept his staff to a minimum and did not provide additional employment even for a short period of time, he would not be involved in this extra expense. Therefore, this system might work against a great many people in our part of Canada who wish to secure work even for a short period of time. In many instances many people in our labour force are under-employed. These people will now discover they will have less opportunity to secure employment, even for short periods of time. I do not want to see this happen.

I believe there is something else involved here which is even more basic. I refer to the fact that we are living in a capitalist system in this country in which we say to the employer and the unions, in effect, that they must work out a system whereby between them they will know best how industries can operate and how they can secure the best return on their investment. However, we also say we will interfere. We tell them that unless they operate in such a way as to provide constant and stable employment for their employees, whether there is work for them or not and whether or not it brings them return, we will impose upon them a special tax which they will have to pay. I know in my constituency, which is in the agricultural area, we are involved to a very substantial degree in the production of small berries such as blueberries, strawberries and so on. There are frozen food plants which operate there and provide not-year around employment but employment for a specific period of time. People have come to expect this. Certain people involve themselves in this type of employment. They arrange their schedule so that they can work here and do other things at other times.

Now, the people who operate the frozen food plants and other operations of this type will find themselves forced to bear additional costs in carrying out their operations. In facing these additional costs, there is only one conclusion for them to reach. They will have to tell the consumer they are facing additional cost because of the new unemployment insurance legislation and that, therefore, the consumer will have to pay a higher price for the same product than was the case in the past. The cost of living will go up and up and up, as it has been doing all along. In many ways, the cost of living in this country is going up because of the unwarranted interference by government into the private sector of the economy. This is a glaring example of what is happening and will continue to happen so long as the government insists on this type of legislation. So far as I am concerned, the hon. member for Hamilton West has been very persuasive in his arguments concerning why this clause should not be accepted in its present form. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has indicated that so far as he knows labour does not want this merit system.

Why does the government insist upon adding additional burdens on the backs of industries which are having so much difficulty today in surviving? If I might anticipate, if this budget comes in and places many new taxes on the back of industry, just where is industry going? What will happen and how will we ever produce a boyant economy that will look after the hundreds of thousands of people who are in the labour force today and who are looking for work. How can we do this if we continuously heap on the shoulders of industry additional burdens and taxes industry could get along without? In view of the fact that labour itself is neither looking for nor asking for this, and indeed is objecting to the system, why should we be adamant in imposing it upon them or upon the industries which must survive if we are to produce employment in this country to look after the labour force. I cannot quite understand why the minister is so adamant about the merit system. I really do not believe it will be beneficial to either industry or labour. I believe the minister should give very serious consideration to supporting the amendment which has been proposed by the hon. member for Hamilton West.

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I shall not elaborate further on the reasons advanced by my colleague, the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) in proposing the motion other than to say I agree with everything he said about the bad features of including a system of merit rating in this legislation. I heartily agree with him that it does nothing for the plan. It is a bad principle. It is not consistent with the rest of the bill. There is no merit rating, for example, so far as the employees are concerned. The employee pays the same rate regardless of how many times he collects a claim. I agree with my colleague that if universality is a desirable feature of social insurance it must be applied on a consistent basis. I agree with everything that has been said in favour of this amendment.

I should like to refer briefly to some of the evidence presented before the committee. For example, in the submission by Robb Engineering on behalf of the contractors, we find a statement to the effect that it is unfair and unjust to apply experience rating to employers in the construction industry on the basis of lay-off patterns resulting from factors beyond the employer's control. I think that is the important phrase in that submission. It has been pointed out that most employers really have little or no control over their employment patterns. I do not believe they should be penalized for the lack of action or unfavourable action the government takes which affects their employment pattern.

What I should like to refer to specifically are the conclusions reached by the standing committee on the particular question of merit rating. While the committee's report agreed that there should be a system of merit rating, the report was by no means unanimous; it was approved on division. However, even though they endorsed the principle of merit rating, they could not agree on it unanimously. Also, the committee stipulated that if we had to have some type of merit rating, it should be different from the type of merit rating proposed in this bill. This is not the final report, I think, but I believe the wording in the final report was basically the same. The report reads:

> Indeed, the rating of a firm would seem to be more reasonable if based on the industry average instead of a national average. But there is absolutely no reason why one should not extend the experience rating system: an experience rating of industries defined on the basis of the national average and an experience rating of firms defined on the basis of the industry average. Industries could very well have an industry rate. This would provide a much more flexible system and one which would allow the basis of comparison to be fairer.

I simply want to ask the minister the following question, even though I do not approve of the principle of merit rating. I think I mentioned it in the committee and it seemed to me there was some disposition on the part of the minister or of the officials to study the whole question of merit rating. Possibly, by way of regulations, they might be able to break it down so that it would not work a hardship on all industries. As I said, I do not approve of the principle of merit rating, but half a loaf is better than none, and I would like to have an assurance from the minister that something will be done in this regard.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say only a few words in support of this motion, which I find very acceptable. That clause of the bill as well as the proposal of the white paper on which it is based have greatly surprised me and have caused some concern to a number of small employers in my area. In fact, if some employers have to lay-off one or many of their employees at certain times in the year, the cost of their contributions to the unemployment insurance fund will be higher. This is unfair to some small employers who, for one reason or another, do not enjoy the benefit of annual contracts.

There are, in my riding, road contractors, for instance, or forest contractors, who use heavy machinery and, at times, following a contract, need additional labour. When the contracts are completed and if they have no other work to carry out, they are obliged to let their employees go, sometimes temporarily, sometimes for a longer period. Under clause 65 of the legislation they will be penalized, that is, they will have to pay higher contributions to the unemployment insurance fund.

This is unfair to those employers, as well as to other employers, such as those in the construction business—as it was mentioned previously—who, at times, need additional labour. Then, should this clause be passed, those concerned might use other means in order to respect their contracts, and a number of workers will not find jobs, not even temporary ones, in those operations. Therefore, it is unfair to the workers, to the unemployed who want to work and who are looking for jobs.

For all those reasons, although this matter has been considered at length in committee, even if we did not succeed in having this clause removed from the bill, if the minister wants to show the wisdom we know he has, it is important for him to consider all aspects of this clause. He will see then, I am sure, that there is more bad than good in it. I am therefore in favour of this motion which tends simply to remove clause 65 from this bill.

[English]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker. my remarks on this particular section will be brief. I listened with attention to hon. members. I think the contributions were all useful. Some have shown a very deep knowledge of the concept, but others, I am afraid, are not quite aware of what the bill intends. I do not say this sarcastically, but there is no real relationship between the original concept of merit rating that we envisaged in the white paper and the merit rating that is now in the bill. The merit rating system that is in the bill is really a compromise arrived at as a result of the contributions of members opposite on second reading and at the committee stage. The difficulty of the situation was perhaps amplified by the remarks made today by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—the unofficial minister of the socialist party. If he needs to be convinced about the merits of merit rating, he should read the very knowledgeable speech made on second reading by the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman), indicating that even that party has mixed views and that they are not all quite as doctrinaire as might appear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Does the minister agree with everything that the hon. member for Waterloo said in that speech?

Mr. Mackasey: I was referring only to merit rating. I am sure the hon. member does not agree with everything the hon. member for Waterloo said about fishermen either. If he disagrees with much more, he will be disowning his own party and he will become all too moderate for the party.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You are avoiding the issue.

Mr. Mackasey: Merit rating does not, of course, have any relationship at all to the concept of universality. We all know this. We are not violating the concept of universality by introducing merit rating. Universaility simply means that all employees of companies so identified will be included in the plan, and it means that the widest spectrum of employees in the country will be included in the plan. What we are saying is that the employers in the country will have different rates based on the lay-off patterns in their particular industry. We are saying also that certain employees, despite the fact that this plan is universal, will be paying higher or lower contributions than others depending on what their normal income is at their place of employment.

That is what makes the concept of merit rating as we now have it acceptable to all members of the House, and I am surprised that there have been any amendments at all. Perhaps the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was persuaded by the CLC, but I must say in all fairness to the CLC that their view is based on fear, not logic. They feel—and perhaps I have greater confidence in employers than they do—that employers in some Machiavellian way may tend to keep the work staff as low as possible. I do not know too many employers who do not keep their work staff at the minimum possible level, I do not know too many employers who play Santa Claus and have a bigger staff than they need.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Except for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

Mr. Mackasey: This is especially true if they wish to remain in business long. We talk about the Canadian Manufacturers Association opposing merit rating, but no one has yet mentioned that the Canadian Chamber of Commerce endorsed merit rating, indicating that there is a difference of opinion even among employers. But what makes the plan acceptable to everybody, possibly in line with what the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Thomas) pointed out, is that in order to assess the lay-off pattern of an industry we have eliminated all students hired. In other words, whether students are hired for one, two, five or ten weeks and then laid off, this will not affect the merit rating status of a company. Neither will its lay-off pattern be affected by maternity and sickness lay-off, voluntary withdrawals from its work force and those who are dismissed for misconduct.

• (3:00 p.m.)

To make it further acceptable to industry there has been a wide departure, I might say a dramatic departure, from what I first envisioned. I originally thought that through the marvels of the computer age it would be possible to merit-rate each individual company in the country, something which is quite feasible with the records and the computer systems which we have. What we are now proposing to do, and I think this meets the logical arguments that were advanced by hon. members opposite about the construction industry, is not to merit-rate the construction industry against industry in general but, rather, to compare companies in the industry with, or rate them against, the industry itself in general. What we are proposing to do is rate one company within the industry against the companies in general in that industry. In other words, if you had a private firm in the construction industry it would be rated against other private firms in that industry.

Mr. Schumacher: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask one question in this regard. Canada being what it is, with its enormity of size and varying climatic conditions, would regional factors be taken into account in rating these businesses?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, this is the type of observation I might answer as we go along. I am not unaware of the problems of the construction industry. As Minister of Labour, I deal daily with components of that industry. I know their dependence on government; I know that many of them live on government contracts; I know that they are subject to the Labour (Standards) Code. They come to us time after time for exemptions against minimum wages, against the 40-hour work week and against the eight-hour day. These exemptions are given because of the nature of the industry. I think I understand their problems pragmatically, but there are always two sides to the coin when we talk about regions. When we had the winter works program in effect, contractors in British Columbia had a bonanza during the winter months as opposed to contractors in Quebec and Ontario who had to contend with severe climatic conditions.

In any event, we are not taking into consideration student employment, maternity or sickness leave, voluntary withdrawals or dismissals for misconduct in our merit rating; and in view of the fact that we are not going to rate companies in one industry against another industry we have made the proposal even more palatable. Further, this program will not come into effect until 1974, and even then only one-third of the effect will be felt, with the second third to come along in 1975 and the last third in 1976.

In the interval between now and January, 1974, we have arranged for the utmost in co-operation and negotiation with the representatives of industry, through the advisory council. I think I have mentioned previously. Through regulations we can take into consideration the suggestion of the hon. member with respect to the problem of regional factors. These can be taken care of through regulations if the advisory council, the Unemployment Insurance Commission and representatives of the employers think that this is desirable.

Mr. Speaker, the merit rating that people may have feared for many reasons when it was first envisaged has very little resemblance to what we are now proposing. We are now proposing merit rating within an industry rather then with industry in general. We have eliminated the categories I have mentioned which could unduly distort the lay-off pattern of an industry. I do not look on this as a penalty against certain industries but, rather, as a reward to others; and I think this is the way the Chamber of Commerce looked at it.

Where the contribution now is 1.40 per 100, the figure in comparison will be 1.26. In fact, the cost to the employer and the employee is substantially lower under the new plan. Employers who have a fairly stable work pattern, such as school boards, municipalities, and secondary industry in general, will pay substantially less per individual than they are now paying. Some industries will pay a little higher than others, but their lay-off patterns will have to affect two-thirds of their employees in a year to really affect the cost of their unemployment insurance. When it is said that the lay-off of one or two employees would vary the rate, this indicates an ignorance of the bill: it would take as much as a two-thirds variation in work pattern to affect drastically the contributions required to be made.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take advantage of the indulgence of the House. I know that we want to finish this bill by four o'clock so I will just repeat that I recommend that we reject the amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): According to Standing Order 75(11), this vote is deferred. The House will now proceed to the consideration of motion No. 14, in the name of the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) as follows:

That Bill C-229, an act respecting unemployment insurance in Canada, be amended by deleting from subclause 3 of clause 125, in lines 10 and 11 at page 85, the words "or for data processing purposes".

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House had some fears about where the data processing machines would be kept, but after thorough discussion with hon. members on the other side and with officials of the minister's department it is my understanding that the data processing machines will be kept in Canada. They are located in five regions and the information that is compiled in them will only be used interdepartmentally with respect to the government itself. Accordingly, having given the matter some thought I would ask the unanimous consent of the House to withdraw this motion. My fears about the data processing equipment being located outside the country have been allayed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We are happy to agree to the withdrawal, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Does the House unanimously consent to allow the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) to withdraw this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 14 (Mr. Alexander) withdrawn.

Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971

• (3:10 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The House will now proceed to the consideration of motion No. 15, moved by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), for the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales), as follows:

That Bill C-229, an act respecting unemployment insurance in Canada, be amended by adding to clause 138 the words "together with the report of the Auditor General thereon" immediately after the word "year" in line 14 at page 91.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief with respect to this amendment. The hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales) who as you know is chairman of the Public Accounts Committee, has been concerned about this matter in view of the fact that the Auditor General has never audited the unemployment insurance account. All this motion is attempting to do is bring the unemployment insurance account under the audit carried out by the Auditor General. I understand that the government is willing to accept the amendment.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, we are very happy to accept the amendment introduced on behalf of the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales) who has been very objective and useful in committee in the whole area of finance. I think it would strengthen the bill and allay the legitimate fears of members if the unemployment insurance account were presented to the appropriate committee with approval for the Auditor General to do the auditing. In effect, what this amendment is saying is that the report of the Auditor General will be attached to the report of the unemployment insurance committee at the appropriate time. We accept the amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question on motion No. 15?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The question is motion No. 15. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Motion No. 15 (Mr. Alexander, for Mr. Hales) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The House will now consider motions Nos. 16 and 17 which have been grouped together for the purpose of debate. The vote on motion No. 16 shall automatically dispense with motion No. 17. Shall I put the motions at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) moves motion No. 16 as follows:

That Bill C-229, an act respecting unemployment insurance in Canada, be amended by deleting from paragraph (a) in subclause 2 of clause 140, in lines 26 and 27 at page 91, the words "the minister considers" and substituting therefor the word "reasonably".

Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member also moves motion No. 17 as follows:

That Bill C-229, an act respecting unemployment insurance in Canada, be amended by deleting from subclause 1 of clause 143, in line 9 at page 93, the words "the minister deems advisable" and substituting the words "may reasonably be necessary for the purpose of this part, and"

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, these are not significant amendments but they try to make the bill more presentable and get away from the arbitrary decisions that may have to be made by ministers involved—in this case I believe it is the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Lang). Clause 140 (2) (a) provides:

The minister shall collect information concerning employment for workers and workers seeking employment and, to the extent the minister considers necessary,—

This is the part that we find offensive and arbitrary. It is left to the decision of the minister. In the amendment, the power of the minister to make a subjective evaluation as to when he will release information is deleted and the reasonably judicial test is substituted. If the government cannot go along with what I am suggesting, I hope they can give me reasons. I do not think I have to pursue this matter any further except to reiterate that the provision, "to the extent the minister considers necessary" should instead read, "to the extent reasonably necessary," which takes it away from the minister alone.

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): If I could speak in support of this motion, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) is too modest when he refers to the proposed amendment as being somewhat insignificant. In many instances this Parliament delegates far too much authority to individual ministers of the Crown or to the executive branch in general. I think it has to be taken as a practical situation that the minister will probably never be the one to make the decision; it will be made by an administrator on his behalf.

Mr. Pepin: That is just hearsay.

Mr. Schumacher: The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) says that is just hearsay, but maybe he will be prepared to prove that statement by evidence. He probably will not attempt to do it at this time and it is unlikely that a convenient time will ever arise.

I am sure we have confidence in the present minister, but the fact is that ministers are not permanent and this legislation in all likelihood will stay on the statute books for many years. I suppose the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce intervened because this question deals with the collection of information. He is closely connected with the current census which is causing so much dissatisfaction among certain segments of the population, so he is probably somewhat sensitive on the subject.

In my view, the question of privacy arises here. All governments have a penchant for collecting information. They do this with the best intentions in the world, but in many cases never use it and it just turns into a "make work" project. I suggest that any legislation along these lines should be based on the criteria of what is reasonably necessary. A great number of businessmen, small farmers and small businessmen in this country feel they are being driven to the wall by having to make voluminous returns to the government. Sometimes an examination of the questionnaire does not indicate what they are looking for. So I think a determined stand should be taken at every opportunity against this type of legislation which makes it easy for large staffs to be built up in departments for the collection of information even when there is no requirement or need for that information.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel).]

• (3:20 p.m.)

It is just not good enough to say, "where the minister considers it necessary". I think there will be further empire building if this legislation is passed. Empires are still being built. It is too bad that the government cannot institute more austerity programs. On the other hand, of course, our last austerity program did not have a great effect on empires built around the city and in federal government offices across the country.

Certainly, there has been no let-up in increasing the size of our bureaucracy. Bigger bureaucracy has led to increasing demands on bill payers in this country, the people who are trying to make a living, trying to make businesses grow and create jobs for other people. There has been a growing tide of demand on these people to meet administrative expenses which are really not justified nor necessary. I strongly urge the acceptance of this fine and important amendment moved by the hon. member for Hamilton West.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, if a vote is called on these two motions I shall probably vote for them, but I trust my friends will forgive me if I say I cannot get excited about the issue either way. May I abbreviate what is in the bill. It says that the minister shall collect certain information and, to the extent the minister considers necessary, he may make it available. The amendment would have the bill read—again I abbreviate—that the minister shall collect certain information and, to the extent reasonably necessary, make it available. Is there really any difference?

Perhaps my hon. friend will take me behind the curtain and point out to me just who is to decide, in the second case, what is "reasonably necessary". Surely, in the end it will be the minister who decides. I think the wording, as my hon. friend has suggested it, is less offensive. As I say, if there is a vote I shall probably support the amendment, but I do not think it is all that important.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak for a few minutes in defence of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander). Perhaps because I live in a relatively small community with a Manpower office I can see events happening that hon. members who live in larger, more impersonal areas may not see. About 9,000 people live in my town and employers who go to Manpower offices know a great deal, personally, about persons who are available for work. The same holds true of employees. The people of my community have access to a great deal of personal information.

Obviously, the minister cannot look after all the Manpower centres across the country. This means that his officials, including many small officials in lesser positions, will have to make these decisions. I therefore think it is most important for the word "reasonably" to be inserted in the clause. It would provide a defence against prosecution if certain officials consider that information which ought to be made available to them has not been made available.

I think the amendment is important from the point of view of personal privacy. This applies particularly to areas which are relatively small where the people know a great deal about each other. For this reason it is most important that the amendment be incorporated in the bill. The amendment would blunt administrative and bureaucratic trust and prevent officials from being overzealous. I think it is a useful amendment and hope the minister will accept it.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, several speakers, including the mover of the motion, have indicated that they think there is not a great deal of difference between the bill as it stands and as it would stand if amended. According to one interpretation, that could be so. There is, however, a possible significant difference, if the amendment means anything. The amendment would tend to transfer—the mover of the motion said this—the decision as to what information should be made available to the courts and away from the minister.

Mr. Alexander: That is the difference.

Mr. Lang: The difference, if taken that way, is fairly important. I urge hon. members not to support the amendment when viewed in that light. The information is collected so that it is available for providing a service. It would be undesirable if the placing of that information in a particular spot became subject to judicial argument instead of simply to political argument that could quite properly follow if the proper service is not being provided.

The objective of the department in this connection is to provide the maximum level of service. If there is a grievance, it can be brought to the attention of a Member of Parliament and in that way be brought to the attention of the department. Actually, a political or ombudsmanlike remedy through a Member of Parliament is available. Secondly, the amendment would affect the statute.

There is the additional difficulty that we are dealing with confidential information and in certain circumstances it could be important for the minister to assure the person giving the information about any extension of that information beyond the employees of the department. The minister would not be in the position to give that assurance if the amendment carried because we would, in effect, be substituting a judicial decision for the decision which he could make.

I emphasize that this is part of a service which is meant to be provided. The best assurance is the determination of the department to provide that service as well as the kind of control which exists through Members of Parliament and through the minister. I therefore urge hon. members not to accept the amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The question is on motion No. 16, in the name of the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The vote on this motion stands deferred.

The House will now consider motions Nos. 18 and 19, standing in the name of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett). First we will take motion No. 18. These motions will be debated together and the vote on motion No. 18 will dispose of motion No. 19.

The hon. member for Comox-Alberni moves motion No. 18 as follows:

That Bill C-229, an act respecting unemployment insurance in Canada, be amended by deleting subclause 2 of clause 146, in lines 27 to 31 at page 94 and lines 1 to 3 at page 95.

Also, the hon. member for Comox-Alberni moves motion No. 19 as follows:

That Bill C-229, an act respecting unemployment insurance in Canada, be amended by deleting subclause 3 of clause 146, in lines 4 and 5 at page 95.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I believe the purpose of these two amendments will be apparent at once. I am happy they are being considered together because they are part and parcel of the same thing. Arrangements for covering fishermen are, regrettably in my opinion, contained in part VIII of the act which is headed "Transitional and Repeal Provisions". The effect of my amendments would be to place arrangements for the coverage of fishermen in that part of the act which deals with the coverage of working people generally.

It is a matter of great regret to me that at this point, when we are moving much closer to universality in coverage of working people than many hon. members are prepared to accept, we should be taking a retrograde step toward depriving those who work in a basic industry from coverage when unemployed. In the various speeches which he has made at the report stage the minister has repeatedly emphasized his belief in the principle of universality. Yet this clause as it stands makes provision for fishermen to be denied coverage by a simple proclamation on the part of the Governor in Council.

The two clauses we seek to amend are redundant and unnecessary even within the context of the statement made by the government of its intentions with regard to a still undefined plan to provide certain benefits for fishermen. We all know that, procedurally speaking, should the government decide to bring in a bill as an alternative to the present unemployment insurance arrangements for fishermen it would simply have to include in that bill a clause asking the consent of Parliament to delete the section dealing with the coverage of fishermen in the existing act. So from a procedural viewpoint alone the provisions to which I object, and which are contained in the bill before us, are unnecessary.

The records of proceedings in this House give us some indication of the government's intention with respect to an alternative plan. Announcements were made by the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry (Mr. Davis) on more than one occasion. Up to a point one is prepared to accept with an open mind suggestions made by the government in this area, but I want to make it clear that at this stage we have no idea when the government is likely to bring forward this alternative plan or what the nature of the plan might be.

On April 22, when we were called upon to deal with a new unemployment insurance bill, I asked the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry whether he would bring his plan forward so that we might intelligently appraise the proposition and come to conclusions about it one way or the other. The minister replied that he would be glad to bring this matter forward as soon as it had received full consideration by the government. Apparently it has not yet received such consideration; we are still very much in the dark. On May 12, questions were addressed to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) seeking information about this alternative plan. The Minister of Labour replied:

> I think this promise has beeen made many times by the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. The present plan provides coverage of fishermen in the same manner and on the same basis as in the past. I understand it is the intention of the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry to introduce some time in the indefinite future, I think he said, a plan that will be comparable and acceptable to the industry.

Whether or not it will gain acceptance by the industry is, of course, a matter of opinion. We do not know in what manner a determination will be made as to whether or not it is acceptable to the industry. On May 19, a week later, the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry contradicted the statement made by his colleague the Minister of Labour. He said:

> Mr. Speaker, as a point of clarification may I say I have never said this scheme must be acceptable to the fishermen. It has, of course, to be acceptable to my colleagues in the government and also to Parliament.

So there we have it. This is a scheme about which we know nothing, a scheme upon which up to now the government has reached no decision. Yet we are asked today to agree that fishermen can be taken out of the present unemployment insurance plan as a result of a simple proclamation by the Governor in Council whether or not any alternative plan which might be approved by the House is acceptable to them.

Certainly on the Pacific coast the fishermen do not consider this to be good enough. They feel that the time when we are extending the coverage and benefits of the plan is no time to be squeezing them out. I should like to return for a few minutes to the phrase used by the Minister of Labour, "The present plan provides coverage of fishermen in the same manner and on the same basis as in the past." What is in the mind of the government is obvious from the fact that they have placed arrangements for the coverage of fishermen in the part of the bill which is headed "Transitional and Repeal Provision."

I should like to call attention to the phrase "in the same manner ... as in the past". This means that an unsatisfactory situation is to be perpetuated. It means that the silly approach which has consistently been taken when dealing with fishermen will be allowed to continue at least during the period in which they are left in limbo. Again, this is partly the reason I have put down amendments which say, in effect: We want the fishermen to be left in the plan. We want the commission, when the new act goes into effect, to take a realistic look at the principles in accordance with which fishermen have been covered. We do not want to leave the situation stagnant so that some of the stupidities that have developed as a result of the present regulations and arrangements are continued into the indefinite future.

I shall try to relate some of my remarks to what I believe has been a very unhappy history behind the move to cover fishermen under the unemployment insurance plan. Obviously, I cannot do it in the course of one speech on one afternoon in this House. However, when this clause was before the Standing Committee I did make some references to the discussions that took place when the last major overhaul of the Unemployment Insurance Act was made in 1955.

I urge members of the House to read the proceedings of the industrial relations committee when considering the Unemployment Insurance Act in 1955. Among other things they will find that a very unusual procedure developed whereby a minister not responsible for the bill came before the committee and made a special presentation on this subject along with his departmental officials.

I am referring to the then Minister of Fisheries, Hon. James Sinclair. There was also a brief from the then hon. member for Burin-Burgeo, now a member of the other place and, as is well known, there were representations on the subject made by the then Secretary of State, now chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission, who was also a member of the government representing a constituency in the province of Newfoundland.

I suspect that those records do not by any means disclose the whole story of what was going on at the time in regard to unemployment insurance coverage for fishermen, but I do know that the then Minister of Fisheries was interested in the subject, that the member of the cabinet from the province of Newfoundland was also interested and that there was considerable pressure on the then Minister of Labour to take steps to bring the fishermen into coverage. In fact, of course, that did not happen at the time. It was some time before action was taken in that regard. Indeed, not till 1957 did coverage for fishermen become operative under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Some members will recall that in 1957 we had a new government. One of the first acts of the new government was to introduce an amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act generally extending the period of seasonal benefit coverage in view of the increasingly high level of unemployment that was developing at the time. I am not asking anyone to go back and read the record of Hansard, but to try to put this matter into perspective I should mention that I made a speech in the House on that occasion suggesting that the general move toward seasonal benefits with no relationship to the level of premiums, and without reference to any special grant into the fund, was attacking the root principle on which the Unemployment Insurance Act was supposed to have been founded.

History has shown that in the period shortly after that the balance in the fund began to take a drastic plunge and that over a fairly short period it dropped from almost $1 billion into the red. It is in that context that the first assessments were made of the coverage of fishermen under unemployment insurance, and I submit that it was out of that situation that the Gill report developed.

Some comments were made by the unemployment insurance advisory committee on the question of coverage of fishermen. I submit that the initial reaction of the unemployment insurance advisory committee, perhaps partly because of lack of experience, was very shallow and incomplete and that the Gill committee really did not go into this question—I have checked their recommendations on the coverage of fishermen—except in a very superficial way. Their recommendations stem from the fact that the fishermen were receiving consideration at a time when there was a drastic, general decline in the level of the fund, partly as a result of the extension of seasonal benefits and partly as a result of the generally prevailing high level of unemployment. So the coverage of fishermen had two strikes against it almost from the start.

As a result of the first reaction and resulting recommendations on coverage for fishermen embodied in the report of the committee of inquiry, generally known as the Gill report, the people who devised the white paper on unemployment insurance, without any real background study, simply carried forward the rather superficial opinions expressed in the Gill report into the white paper; and this in turn has now been brought forward in the bill before the House.

I would invite the Minister of Labour to read the brief submitted to the Gill commission in 1961 by the spokesman for the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union, the late William Rigby—and I say this advisedly, Mr. Speaker. Before commenting on what Mr. Rigby had to say, may I tell the minister a little story that I heard about William Rigby in another context which I think illustrates that many people who did not share his political views, of whom I was one, had a healthy respect for the keenness of his intelligence and for the lucid manner in which he could put forward a case.

Mr. Rigby appeared before a commission of inquiry into workmen's compensation in the province of British Columbia which was conducted by a former chief justice of the province, Chief Justice Gordon Sloan. Apparently there was a lot of high-priced legal talent there and some of the QC's and others objected to Mr. Rigby appearing before the commission because he had not been admitted to the bar of the province. The Chief Justice, in his capacity as commissioner, very quickly set them back on their heels by saying that of all the briefs submitted to him regarding possible changes in the operation of workmen's compensation in British Columbia, the one presented by Mr. Rigby was the most lucid and penetrating; that far from disqualifying him from appearing before the commission, he wanted to tell everyone that he had made an impressive contribution to the question of possible changes in the composition of the workmen's compensation board of British Columbia.

I would suggest that if the Gill commission, and those responsible for the preparation of the white paper, had paid more attention to the analysis of the whole question of coverage for fishermen as presented in this brief we might not be playing around in the dark about an alternative plan which apparently the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry has not been able to produce in a manner satisfactory even to the government.

Indeed, as I look through this presentation in its earlier part which deals with general questions of principle in respect of the application of unemployment insurance, I find that many aspects of this bill which are being hailed by the Minister of Labour as advances, including one of universality and the technique of financing the plan above a certain level of unemployment, are all outlined by Mr. Rigby in his brief as a prelude in which he describes the special case of the fisherman. At page 13 of the brief he said:

> If the general principles we have advocated in the foregoing section of our brief were accepted as guidelines for a reconstruction of the act the present section would be unnecessary, except as an illustration of the deficiencies of the previous structure.

That is the section he refers to as the special case of fishermen. He goes on to point out the pattern and the conditions of groups of employees and workers excluded from the act which, as the minister might recall, included lumbering, logging, transportation by water and stevedoring. They were excluded under the original act. He goes on to cite the pattern of how one by one these groups were covered under the act, the fishing group being the last, in 1957. Mr. Rigby points out that while it is recognized that it is more difficult for fishermen to gain recognition of the fact that their occupation is different in form, but not in essence, from other industrial employments, they are engaged in employment which is essential rather than exotic or archaic. This is a follow-up of his earlier suggestion that fishing is historic, being among the very first of man's employment endeavours.

He goes on to deal with the question I touched upon about the unfortunate juxtaposition of the final agreement to cover fishermen, with a definite period of high unemployment and the drain on the fund which developed in 1957. He goes on to analyse the drain on the fund, which was commented on by the advisory committee, resulting from the terms and conditions under which fishermen were covered, pointing out that there was a great hue and cry about this annual drain on the fund. He also pointed out that in the general picture this was a pretty small part of the decrease in the fund because for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1958, the balance in the fund declined $134,241,000, in 1959 it declined $244,389,000 and in 1960 it declined $133,919,000. So as Mr. Rigby said:

> When these amounts are compared with the committee's own figures, purporting to represent the drain on the fund resulting from fishing coverage, we can only advance a subconscious need of finding a scapegoat to explain the following comments of the committee—

He was referring to what the unemployment insurance advisory committee said in its report dated July 27, 1960, as follows:

> The second major drain on the fund is caused by the extension of coverage to the fishing industry. The loss to the fund during the past three years has been approximately $23,000,000—

This is in response to what we were talking about in terms of a drop in the fund in the order of $500 million. This is a point I tried to argue at the time the coverage was being developed. I remember telling the then Minister of Labour that fishermen in British Columbia in their wildest dreams never expected the government to come up with the kind of plan it did which, as Mr. Rigby and many others have pointed out, has operated in such a way that those who need it least are the ones who benefit most.

I am trying to suggest that because of this sequence of events, and because the government initially came in with an ill-conceived plan for covering fishermen, it is assumed that there is something wrong with including fishermen in the plan. No one has really gone back to the fundamentals of what might have been done in the first place but was not done. I have here a copy of a resolution adopted by a fishermen group in British Columbia.

Mr. Mackasey: What year was it?

[Mr. Barnett.]

Mr. Barnett: This was a resolution adopted at the seventeenth annual convention of the UFAWU of 1961. In other words, this was about the time this question was being reviewed by the commission. These are the points they suggest should be considered as far as fishermen coverage is concerned. They said that fishermen should be fully integrated with other employees under the act in all respects, since the majority of fishermen combine fishing with employment in other industries whenever such employment is available. As a matter of fact, I well remember that at the time I expected the government to make it a condition of eligibility under the act that a fisherman make himself available for alternative employment and that he only claim benefits if the had done that and no other employment was available.

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Before you call it four o'clock, I wonder if unanimous agreement has been reached in respect of carrying on with this debate. There has been discussion and I believe there is disposition to continue this debate past four o'clock, in the hope that it will be concluded not later than 4.30. I think we are very close to the conclusion of the debate and perhaps by 4.30 we will have concluded it. At that time private members' hour could be started, to continue until five o'clock.

Mr. Bell: We have just one brief speech left.

Mr. Schumacher: Mr. Speaker, I rise to say that I cannot consent to this being done.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has not asked for consent, but the hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher) has indicated he will not consent.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. member to reconsider. There is no intention to deny any member the opportunity to speak. We will provide time for anyone else who wants to participate, in addition to time for the regular private members' hour. We could, in effect, extend the time to allow anyone who wishes to do so to participate in private member's hour. I think the hon. member who was speaking has almost exhausted his time.

• (4:00 p.m.)

If we were to extend the time now it would provide an opportunity for other members representing fisheries areas to state their opinions. The hon. member has been very eloquent and I learned a lot about the fishing industry in the 40 minutes during which he spoke. The only thing remaining would be about five minutes for amendments and then we could move on to private members' hour and give the sponsors, to whom I apologize, an opportunity to speak during that hour.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) has made a suggestion. It was four o'clock and there was not unanimous consent for the House not to proceed to private members' business.

If hon. members are in unanimity, as the Minister of Labour has indicated the House could continue the debate which was in process before four o'clock. But the Chair sees little purpose in hon. members expressing varying opinions. If there is unanimity I will put the question now.

Mr. Schumacher: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to members, but I misunderstood the situation and so far as I am concerned I am willing to withdraw my objection.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, do I understand that the debate is to be adjourned at 4.30 so that private members' hour may commence at that time?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair wishes to be sure about this. Do hon. members wish the Chair to ask whether then the time of the debate is to be extended until 4.30, at which time the House will proceed to private members' hour? Is there agreement that this be done?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is so ordered.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Jerome: Mr. Speaker, may I announce that on Monday it is our intention to begin the day with the Judges Act, followed by the pilotage measure, then the clean air bill and at eight o'clock take the deferred votes on this bill. Then afterward—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Afterward would we have third reading on this bill?

Mr. Jerome: We would hope so.

Mr. Blair: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions, I understand, and I wonder if I could have unanimous consent to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

PROCEDURE AND ORGANIZATION

Eighth report of Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization—Mr. Blair.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971

PROVISIONS RESPECTING INSURABLE EMPLOYMENT, COMMISSION BENEFITS, PREMIUMS, ADMINISTRATION, ETC.

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-229, respecting unemployment insurance in Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, if we continue to have points of order, and so on, we will soon reach 4.30. My point of order, which I am not making seriously, is in respect of the minister's remarks about my having taken 40 minutes. It may have seemed like 40 minutes to him but I am sure I had not taken up more than 20 minutes. However, I shall not make a deliberate attempt to continue for another 20 minutes.

I had been outlining some of the principles which might be followed in respect of coverage of fishermen as put forward in 1961 by the main fishermen's organization of British Columbia. They pointed out that employment in the fishing industry should be fully integrated with other types of employment. They suggested that so far as contributions are concerned there should be no distinction between contributions in respect of fishing and other employments.

In respect of benefits it is stated that every contributor should be governed by similar qualifications, whether for regular or seasonal benefits, without regard to the industry or industries in which he may have been employed. Secondly, in respect of weeks of employment it is stated that fisherman's earnings, whether payment is received by the trip or by seasonal settlement, should be averaged over all the weeks engaged in fishing, from the time he sets out for the fishing grounds to the time the boat is tied up at the end of his trip or season.

Mr. Speaker, I would comment on that matter but there is all this talk about it being difficult to determine whether or not a fisherman is actually working. I suggest that a large part of this question has been conjured up. Indeed, the time a fisherman is or should be working is determined by regulation made by the Department of Fisheries and Forestry. It would not be at all difficult to develop a formula which would in fact meet the need clearly in respect of when the man who calls himself a fisherman was working so far as the purposes of this act are concerned. The submission goes on to talk about the system of working out the weekly earnings. I am attempting to condense this a little in the hope that the minister may agree to further consider these matters. The brief reads:

> In case of high earnings during a good season not only would higher contributions be paid but it would also be equitable for an additional waiting period to be established (by some formula to be based on earnings as shown by contribution record) before a benefit could be paid, in case of unemployment immediately following fishing employment.

This is a perfectly reasonable proposition and I think it is one which could be worked out if there were in fact a determination to do it—but in my submission there never was such a determination at the time the plan was first introduced. The basic concern at that time by members of the government who were able to persuade their colleagues to go along with this type of coverage—I believe I am correct in my analysis—was to provide immediate assistance to those who earned a living as fishermen on the Atlantic coast of Canada. In my view the legislation was rushed through without proper consideration. Then, because of the developments I have tried to outline, the quick conclusion was reached that it really was not a very practical arrangement to try to cover fishermen.

The only other point I should like to emphasize before I sit down is that in the brief of Mr. Rigby there is a very penetrating analysis of the question sometimes referred to as the difference between self-employed people and those who have a direct hourly contract for the payment of wages. He points out that unless one were to accept the principle that anyone whose income comes from a piece-work system is to be excluded from the coverage of the act, there is really no more logical basis—if one understands the nature of the fishing industry and the historical pattern on which it has developed—under which to exclude fishermen, whether they be sharesmen or lone fishermen, from the coverage of the act than there is to provide coverage to any other group of industrial workers.

Hopefully, some day I shall be able to say the computerizing of administering of the act has been a good thing—but surely the necessary data upon which a reasonable plan could be developed on a permanent basis is much simpler to obtain today than it was in 1957! Therefore I would seek the support of the House on these two amendments which in effect say that the commission would be directed to provide proper coverage for fishermen and a plan which would be in effect unless and until it was amended by direction of the Parliament of Canada.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak briefly—and I assure the minister that I will be very brief—on the two amendments before the House. The amendments were moved by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett), but I assure the House that there are other reasons for opposing them. The bill states that notwithstanding anything in this act, the commission, with the approval of the Governor in Council, may make regulations for—

(a) including as an insured person any person who is engaged in fishing (hereinafter in this section called a "fisherman"), notwithstanding that such person is not an employee of any other person;

Those of us who have been closely associated with the industry for many years realize that a fisherman is a self-employed person. He has been classified as being a sharesman in a joint venture and as such he can be classified as a self-employed worker. However, in an effort to take care of some of the exigencies of the industry and some of the hardships with which fishermen have been faced over the years, it was decided, although they are sharesmen in a joint venture, to make them eligible for unemployment insurance benefits and therefore fishermen pay a certain percentage of the cost while shipowners at one time, and now buyers of fish, pay the other percentage. When the weather in inclement, or during the winter months when it is impossible to carry out fishing operations, fishermen in turn receive benefits.

This is spelled out in the bill and I find no fault with the wording. Paragraph (b) of clause 146 provides:

including as an employer of a fisherman any person with whom the fisherman enters into a contractual or other commercial relationship in respect of his occupation as a fisherman—

These words adequately cover the situation. There are, for example, many forms of fishing activity. They start out with inshore fishermen operating alone in their boats and they carry on through to the deep sea operation where 20 or 25 men operate a commercial fishing trawler or dragger. In all cases there are times when these men may, through no fault of their own, find themselves unemployed.

We know of the recent example of mercury pollution which affected a large segment of the fishing industry which operates out of my home town of Lunenburg, Nova Scotia. I refer to the deep sea swordfish fishermen. Without the benefits provided by an act of this type it is certain that some of these people would have suffered genuine hardship. Therefore I find these amendments rather strange and complex. I find it almost impossible to understand them. Amendment No. 18 seeks to delete the following words from clause 146:

Notwithstanding any other provision of this act, premiums collected pursuant to any regulations made under this section shall be paid into and credited to the Consolidated Revenue Fund—

These are the key words.

—and benefits paid pursuant to any such regulation shall be paid out of and charged to the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

The key words are "benefits paid", as I read this section of the bill and I for one cannot vote for the deletion of this section of the bill.

Mr. Barnett: Would the hon. member permit a question? Does the hon. member not realize that what this means is that these moneys are to be paid into and credited to the Consolidated Revenue Fund, instead of generally being paid out of the Unemployment Insurance Fund account as is the case for everybody else who is covered? The point is not that the money would not go in and out of the fund, but that it would go in and out of the unemployment insurance account of the fund.

Mr. Crouse: I can only interpret what I read in the bill, and these are the words that become part of the statutes of Canada. The words are very clear. They say that benefits will be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund. As I understand it, this wording is used in view of the circumstances under which fishermen operate. But I would point out to the House that our fishermen, in times of real hardship, are not overly concerned about the source of payments under unemployment insurance. They are concerned about the protection provided by the unemployment insurance plan. I am a representative of a large area where inshore fishermen as well as deep sea fishermen operate and I would be loath to see any changes made which would affect their benefits.

The second amendment calls for the deletion of subclause 3 which provides:

This section shall be repealed on a day to be fixed by proclamation.

I cannot vote for this amendment because we would be projecting ourselves into the future not realizing the intent of the minister or the exact nature of the legislation which he plans to introduce. I hope I will be in this House to see the legislation and will have an opportunity to study it, and after studying the plan which the minister and the government propose to put forth I will reach a decision on whether to support or reject it. But I believe that at this time it would be premature to vote against these clauses in the bill and to reject them, because we do not know the type of legislation which the government will be introducing in the future for our fishermen. With these remarks I have indicated the position of our party and the reasons we cannot do other than vote for the bill as it stands.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in view of the lateness of the hour I want to say that the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) has expressed his point of view very succinctly and I do not think I could do better. I am impressed by his contribution. He made his points briefly. If he had had more time he would have elaborated on some of the problems which fishermen of this country face. Mercury pollution might be one.

What we are doing here is in effect ensuring that they receive their benefits. Their payments are coming out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund. We are asserting here for the first time our moral obligation to the fishermen and the realization that they have particular problems and it is the obligation of the government to help them. The question in the future will be whether the best way of helping them is through unemployment insurance or through another plan that meets with their approval and it will be our responsibility to bring in an alternative plan to provide stabilization, rationalization and a guaranteed income for our fishing industry.

Employed fishermen who in the regulations are classed as employees will be the responsibility of the minister of the environment and fisheries. We are saying that until a plan is brought in which will meet with the approval of the House and the representatives of fishermen, they will be covered by unemployment insurance and entitled to the new benefit structure as will any other Canadian. If we did not have this section in the act, employed fishermen would not be able to qualify in the same way as other employees. Therefore, our provision is badly needed and I would urge that the amendment be rejected.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to speak on the substance of the matter but to call attention to an error in clause 146, which is the one being amended. Perhaps the minister's officials would note it. In line 9, after "146" I think there should be the figure "1" in brackets in the English text, just as there is in the French text.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Negatived on division.

Motion No. 18 (Mr. Barnett) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This note also disposes of motion No. 19. We now have for consideration the last motion, No. 20. Mr. Mackasey, seconded by Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale), moves:

That Bill C-229, an act respecting unemployment insurance in Canada, be amended by striking out lines 21 to 24, inclusive, at page 95 and by substituting therefor the following:

"(c) paragraph (a) of subsection (2) of section 3;

(d) Parts I, II, V, VI (except paragraph (b) of subsection (1) of section 135 thereof) and VII; and

(e) sections 146, 150 to 157, 159 and 160;"

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Motion No. 20 (Mr. Mackasey) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As hon. members will recall, this leaves for consideration motion No. 3 which was stood yesterday. It was put yesterday and is before the House for consideration at this point.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I have to repeat what was said yesterday. This motion almost went through except that there was some confusion about the wording. In order to make it acceptable and achieve what was intended, I will read the amended motion now, hoping that it will be acceptable to the government. The motion will read:

That Bill C-229, an act respecting unemployment insurance in Canada, be amended by adding next after subclause (1) of clause 4, following line 35 at page 5, the following:

"(2) The Commission may, with the approval of the Governor in Council and subject to affirmative resolution of Parliament, make regulations for including in insurable employment any person who is employed or otherwise engaged in a business within the definition of "business" in the Income Tax Act." and renumbering subsequent subclauses accordingly.

The intention of this motion is to include self-employed persons in the event that they would want to come under the plan.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I may speak briefly to the motion of the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander). We have had discussion about it and his amended motion as far as it goes is quite acceptable to the governement. However, in view of the fact that we intend to amend motion No. 3, in the few minutes left may I refer to the committee discussion about whether or not Members of Parliament should be included in the unemployment insurance plan. There was a sharp division of opinion, for various reasons. Some felt that we should be included, particularly school teachers who said we were imposing something on them that we were not prepared to impose on ourselves. Another school of thought was that by including ourselves under unemployment insurance we would be protecting those of us who may not be back here next June. I have wrestled with this problem in the interval.

No one wants to be included in unemployment insurance just for the purpose of accepting benefit but most of the members of the committee were prepared to be included, as an example to school teachers and others. Mr. Speaker, you may want to dispose of the hon. member's amendment to clause 4 first and then I may be permitted to introduce another amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the minister suggesting an amendment, in addition to the motion put forward by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander)?

Mr. Mackasey: It would be an amendment to the same clause, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the minister would like to conclude his remarks I will ask for consent on both amendments at the same time.

Mr. Mackasey: The purpose of the amendment is simply to permit the Unemployment Insurance Commission, by regulation in the future—this does not mean it will happen—if after further consultation over the winter months or during the next session of Parliament it were felt desirable that members of the House of Commons should be included after the next election, to rule that this could be done. It would mean adding the following paragraph to the clause, stating "the tenure of an office as defined in the Canada Pension Plan."

Members of Parliament are covered under the Canada Pension Plan. All the amendment would do is permit the Unemployment Insurance Commission to include Members of Parliament, by regulation—at least those of us who have tenure of office as defined in the Canada Pension Plan—if at some future date it was felt desirable to do so.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think this is a happy solution to the problem and I hope it can be accepted between now and 4.30.

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, I find myself in a rather difficult position. In view of the fact that there seems to have been general agreement expressed among parties, I hope it will be understood that at this time I am speaking as a private member. I would like an opportunity to put on the record my views concerning this matter. I appreciate the intent of the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) and of the other persons involved in agreeing on the proposed amendment. It appears to me that their intention is to allow small private businessmen to come under the plan if they wish to do so. However, I do not think we are reaching any happy solution this way.

We must understand our system of government when considering these matters. If the executive decides that a certain group is to be included, a resolution will be proposed to Parliament and it can be pushed through without any real demand from the people concerned. What is wanted is an amendment allowing people to come under the plan if they wish to do so.

During discussion of this bill we had examples of groups of people, in particular school teachers, who did not want to come under the plan. As a result of the provisions of the bill there will be fewer people outside the plan. I fail to see how the amendment as proposed, in operation will be voluntary in nature. It will permit a government, by resolution, to bring additional people under the plan even though this may be against their wishes, and they will not be in position to defend themselves. If people want to come in, then by all means they should have that privilege; but it should be on their initiative and not the initiative of the Parliament of Canada as appears to be the case with this amendment.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Mackasey: I think the hon. member's remarks, which were pertinent, refer primarily to the amendment of the hon. member for Hamilton West. What it does is permit the Unemployment Insurance Commission upon request to define certain self-employed people as employed people and employees for the purpose of the act—taxi drivers, barbers and small entrepreneurs who need this type of coverage. It gives the Unemployment Insurance Commission the right to cover them by regulation in future if it is found desirable. I think that primarily what the hon. member had in mind was that it does not have to come back to Parliament and if it is found desirable in the view of hon. members, the commission would have the power to adjudicate on the question. I think this is all it is intended to do.

Mr. Schumacher: Can I ask the minister a question? Did I understand him to say that even though the commission can make regulations covering a certain group, they still will not have to come under this coverage?

Mr. Mackasey: It simply involves the subject of universality. Teachers are no problem; they are identified as employees and they are included. Although we have been asked to bring in self-employed people, we have found it administratively impossible as a general rule. However, there can be exceptions. What the hon. member's amendment does is permit the Unemployment Insurance Commission, by regulation, to bring in particular groups of people where there is an administrative problem.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I wonder whether the member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher), having stated his position, would not at least be willing for the amendments to be put to the House, realizing that that part of it takes unanimous consent. He could vote against it and perhaps speak against it again on third reading. I think there is a general desire among all parties that both these amendments, the one by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) and the one by the minister, be placed before the House.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must ask hon. members for consent to deal with the question in that way. It would seem that procedurally we should withdraw motion No. 3 proposed by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) and then put the amending motions. Would that appear to be the situation?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that motion No. 3 as put yesterday is to be withdrawn?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 3 (Mr. Alexander) withdrawn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) moves the following motion:

That Bill C-229 (reprinted as amended and reported by the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration) be amended

(a) by striking out line 32 on page 5 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"thereto"

(b) by deleting line 35 on page 5 and substituting therefor the following:

"consent thereto; and"

(c) by adding immediately following paragraph (f) of subclause 1 of clause 4 on page 5, the following paragraph:

"(g) the tenure of an office as defined in the Canada Pension Plan".

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Motion (Mr. Mackasey) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to the order made earlier today, the divisions which have been deferred at the report stage of this bill will be called at eight o'clock on Monday evening.

In accordance with the order made earlier today we will now proceed to private members' business.

Criminal Code

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

CRIMINAL CODE

PROVISION FOR REMOVAL OF OFFENCE OF VAGRANCY

Mr. Kenneth Robinson (Lakeshore) moved that Bill C-45, to amend the Criminal Code (vagrancy), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I first had the opportunity to present this private members bill on November 7, 1968. I was prompted, in part, to present such a bill by an article that appeared in the Toronto Telegram on October 24, 1968, entitled "Vagrancy charge threat scares off students Biafra Sleep-in" and also because as a lawyer I have on occasion acted as counsel for citizens charged with vagrancy, and as a social worker I looked into the problem to some extent when I was preparing my master's thesis some ten years ago.

I welcome this opportunity to bring before the House a matter that seems to me to require the close scrutiny of hon. members. I am not talking about a problem that has only recently arisen, nor am I speaking of a situation that necessarily requires an immediate remedy. What I am saying is that since the introduction of the original Criminal Code there has been perpetuated in successive statutes an offence that runs contrary to the best principles of criminal justice.

I would hope that if the members of the House do not see fit to support me in this motion, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) might consider including the subject matter of this bill in the proposed omnibus bill on the Criminal Code to be introduced later in the session. I am of course referring to the crime of vagrancy as defined in section 164(1)(a) and (b) of the Criminal Code, which reads:

(1) Every one commits vagrancy who

(a) not having any apparent means of support is found wandering abroad or trespassing and does not, when required, justify his presence in the place where he is found;

(b) begs from door to door or in a public place;

What you have just heard is a law which deals with individuals who have the misfortune to be poor and unemployed at a time when Canada has perhaps the greatest number of people unemployed in its history. Vagrancy is a crime of status which brands a convicted person as one who has failed to live up to the demands of society as far as pulling his own weight is concerned. Thus, vagrancy arrests serve our aesthetic sensibilities by removing temporarily an unsightly group of men from the streets. A conviction for vagrancy is punishment for conduct of the individual which in no way impinges on the rights or interests of others, and which has in no way been demonstrated to have anything more than the most tenuous connection with the prevention of crime and the preservation of public order.

In practice, vagrancy statutes today are used against (a) alcoholic derelicts and other unfortunates whose only crime, if any, is against themselves and whose main offence usually consists of their leaving the environs of skid-row and disturbing, by their presence, the sensibilities of residents of nicer parts of the community, or (b) suspected criminals with respect to whom the authorities do not have enough evidence to make a proper arrest or secure a conviction on the crime suspected.

Vagrancy statutes are however, couched in equivocal terms. As such, they may be applied at one time or another to any and every citizen, law-abiding or lawless. This is where the danger of their application lies. For example, university students are notorious for living without apparent means of support. The greater danger lies, however, more in groups that have traditionally been an anathema to law enforcement officers, the so-called "hippies" who tend to inhabit the larger urban centres of Canada. This group, too, lives without apparent means of support and yet contrary to popular belief infrequently presents any real danger to public order or peace.

What is involved here is a life style outside the customary life style of Canadian society. Unlike those in the general milieu, people in this secondary culture do not have to have means of support or justification for their presence in order to be accepted by others in society. But the vagueness of section 164 allows selective and discriminatory enforcement against just such a minority without any proof of particular harm. I do not intend to fault the police for this. Any time there is an opportunity for abuse it is natural for abuse to result.

This has not been simply my own analysis. It is that also of Ronald Crenshaw, writing in the South Dakota Law Review in the spring of 1970, of Gary Dubin and Richard Robinson in the January, 1962, edition of the New York University Law Review, of Raymond Nimmer in Judicature, volume 54, August-September, 1970, of William Sydney Davis, Jr., in volume 35 of the Tennessee Law Review, of the editors of the Washington University Law Quarterly, and of Cliff Nelson and Ray Steele in the January, 1970, issue of the Osgoode Hall Law Journal.

There are those who will argue that the American vagrancy laws are different from those in Canada. I can only say that they are correct, at least in one sense. The wording of the legislation does differ from jurisdiction to jurisdiction. But—and this is far more important—all vagrancy laws have a common origin, common purpose and a common pattern of enforcement. Others will say that the 1953-54 amendments to the Criminal Code did away with the concept of status criminality and replaced it with conduct criminality, meaning that a vagrant is no longer arrested simply for "being" a particular kind of person but only for "doing" something proscribed by law. In technical, legal theory those who take issue in this manner are probably correct.

The then Minister of Justice, Hon. Mr. Garson, argued to this effect in the 1953-54 session, is found at page 2274 of Hansard. In fact, however, such an argument is statute semantics. In practice the offences consist not in doing, but in being. You have only to look at section 164(1) of the Criminal Code. As far as I am concerned, the gravamen of the offence in subsection (1)(c) is "being a prostitute". Anyone else found in a public place does not have to give a good account of himself or herself.

Even under subsection (1)(a) there is an additional requirement that the individual must have no apparent means of support. Thus, under subsection (1)(c) the particular conduct is proscribed only if the individual involved is a common prostitute. Surely, where the essential element of the offence is status, then the crime is itself a crime of status. In this particular subsection of the act there is an additional distasteful hypocrisy. Most Canadians believe that prostitution is an offence. It is not. The Minister of Justice quoted correctly during debate of the Criminal Code amendments in the 1953-54 session, at page 2286 of Hansard, as follows:

> The mere fact that a woman is a prostitute, however, does not make her a vagrant—

Prostitution in Canada is completely legal. Only if all the constituent elements of section 164 (1)(c) are met—I hesitate to use the word "satisfied"—does it become a crime. Thus, we have the odd case of a naked prostitute who is found not guilty because her policeman client had not asked her to give a good account of herself before he arrested her. If, as some people assert, subsection (1)(c) is intended as a public health measure, it would be better to establish regulations outside the Criminal Code. If not, then I would suggest, without being in favour of such a move, that prostitution itself be proscribed. This discussion is, however, peripheral to the subject matter of the bill now before the House, which seeks the repeal of subsections (1)(a) and (1)(b) of section 164 of the Criminal Code.

There is some history to vagrancy and it is important to realize that all vagrancy statutes owe their origin to the Statutes of Labourers passed in England in 1349 and 1350 confining the labouring population to stated places and fixing wages at specific rates, largely because of the shortage of labour engendered by the black plague and the increasing transient nature of the population followingt he enclosure laws.

This original rationale later gave way to the "probable criminal" theory, and thus to economic and status criminality. The justification for the original vagrancy law, as carried over now in its application, was threefold: first the Protestant ethic dictated that work was necessary for the preservation of society; therefore the vagrancy laws encouraged the idle and the indigent to engage in productive activity and thereby to contribute to the general social and economic welfare. In this way vagrants were discouraged from becoming dependent on public assistance or charity. Second, the state had a right to recognize social sensibilities and to protect the decent citizens of the community from contact with undesirable elements of the general population. Third, since idleness was conducive to criminality, vagrancy laws prevented crime.

The problem, of course, is that the laws originating in this rationale have now become embodied in the Criminal Code. The vagrancy concept operates on a theory of suspicion causation and ignores actual causation. But in traditional criminal theory there must be a relationship between the harm to be prevented and the behaviour punished. With vagrancy offences, the essential elements of criminal theory, that is, conduct and causation, are ignored or distorted in an attempt to prevent crime through the punishment of vagrancy. The customary mens rea and actus reus, the guilty mind and the guilty act, are clumsily passed over in an arbitrary and inefficacious attribution of criminal responsibility. The results are nothing short of catastrophic.

Police forces are able to use the vagrancy provisions with unparalleled ease. First, with respect to a substantial proportion of suspects, and despite existing legal aid plans, the utter impotence of the accused is usually ample guarantee that he will not employ lawyers or otherwise annoy the police. Second, the vague definitions of "vagrancy" confer on an officer a discretion so broad that technically he can seldom be held not to have had reasonable and probable cause for the arrest. Arrests on suspicion, discriminatory enforcement and capricious administration are all made possible by the continued existence of the offence of vagrancy. There is probably not a member in this chamber, and certainly no lawyer, who does not know of abuses under the present vagrancy laws.

This then is the extent of the problem. What are the solutions? It is undoubtedly necessary to give the police some residual power to prevent crime in its inception and to apprehend persons who in the police officer's opinion are seeking the opportunity to commit crime. In my view this is a justifiable purpose of the criminal law, but it is also ill-served by present legislation. What I would suggest is something along the lines of the American Uniform Arrest Act, permitting the detention and questioning of persons whom a peace officer has reasonable and probable grounds to suspect of committing, having committed or being about to commit a crime.

This detention and questioning would be for a limited time—two hours under the Uniform Arrest Act—and would not be recorded as an arrest in any official record. At the end of the detention the person detained would have either to be released or arrested and charged. The advantage of such a system, hopefully, would be that it would be confined to the true criminal element in society and would inhibit harassment by police of those who now fall under section 164 (1(a) or (b). Furthermore, the principles of arrest would be consistent with those of traditional criminal theory.

With regard to the other elements of society who have the great misfortune to fall within the purview of the present vagrancy laws, there is no justification for dealing with them under the criminal law. Either they commit a crime or they do not. For these people the vagrancy conviction is an unpleasant though generally brief interference with an otherwise undisturbed pattern of life. If it provides anything at all, the process of arrest, conviction and sentencing provides only minimal temporary assistance. Recidivism rates for vagrancy demonstrate that no more than short-term help is provided.

The obvious way to treat these people is not through the criminal process, which is already greatly overburdened both in terms of case loads and in terms of inadequate facilities for treatment, but through adequate social legislation. A master of social work thesis completed at the University of Toronto in 1960 and entitled "Public Attitudes Toward the Criminal Transient" states:

> The work-shy constitute only a minute fraction of the whole population of tolerably able bodied and able minded men and women. It appears that if jobs are available, most people have shown a readiness to try them out. If you exclude the obviously unfit, the number of near unemployable is practically negligible, and idleness has proved to be far more a matter of faulty social and economic organization than a personal shortcoming.

Failing the introduction of an adequate social organization, it can still be argued that attribution of future criminality to vagrancy is for the most part unfounded in fact. The only conclusion I can reach is that there is no justification for the unique treatment now afforded so-called vagrants under the Criminal Code. My conception of criminal law does not encompass the serving of aesthetic sensibilities by removing an unsightly and often unattractive group of individuals from public view, and yet in my opinion this is, on analysis, the only possible rationale for the retention of vagrancy offences in the Criminal Code.

In conclusion I should like to thank hon. members present for their attention. Section 164 of the Criminal Code does not include the specific reference to the person who "lives without employment" that was contained in section 238A of the old code. Yet, Nelson and Steele are forced to conclude that in effect the section still deals with the down and out, the unemployed and the unemployable. In my opinion the vagrancy provision forms the catch-all when no more specific offence can be pinpointed. It is the direct ancestor of a long series of penal enactments ordering imprisonment, flogging, enslavement and death whereby the English legislature strove some 700 years ago to grapple with a steadily mounting migratory population. It was legislation designed to correct, among other things, the evils arising from the mendicancy of such wanderers as did not obtain employment and the dishonesty of many of those who did not even seek it. It has now become an anachronistic survival of a past age, unjustified in principle and abusive in application.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that a criminal sanction to enforce an Elizabethan Poor Law concept is grotesquely out of step with the current evolution of criminal justice. Surely in this twentieth century it should no longer be a crime to be poor. I hope all hon. members will support me in this bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Carried.

Mr. D. Gordon Blair (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am sure we are all indebted to my hon. friend from Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson) for raising this important question. Society has advanced greatly in the past few years. There must be very few people nowadays who think the proper treatment of people who are styled as vagrants and who are really, for the most part, unfortunates in our society, is to class them as criminals. The problems which they face and which they create are not properly problems for the criminal law but, rather, as my hon. friend has said, questions of social justice. He has proposed that two only of the governing paragraphs in the section should be removed. There is a third about which he has spoken and which in a modern society is equally offensive—the one which deals with common prostitutes and which many women find an offensive relic of the past.

There is very little I can add in the time available to the excellent argument which has been presented by my hon. friend from Lakeshore. It might be of interest to the House to know that there are people in this country who have given deep consideration to the vagrancy laws and have advocated their abolition and the substitution of other methods of treatment. I cite first the recent report of the Canadian Committee on Corrections, which states at page 392:

> The inappropriateness of most of our present methods of handling such behaviour is a matter for concern in relation to both men and women offenders. The fact that there has been little use in Canada of shelters other than a jail can be assumed to be related to our failure to provide the appropriate alternate resources rather than to a conscious decision that the treatment of vagrancy should be equated with the treatment of other "crimes".

This report, together with the recent report on the Status of Women, indicates how discriminatory these provisions have been against women in this country. At page 371 of the report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women the following is said:

> Even though they have committed no offence, many young girls are arrested and charged with vagrancy, simply because they do not have homes or money or because there is no place to send them for the night. It is relatively easy for homeless men to find shelter in hostels in most large cities but there are few hostels for women. Most charges of vagrancy are not contested and, once convicted, these girls will have a criminal record. They may also have their first encounter with criminals while they wait in prison for their court appearance. The commission considers section 164(1) (a) of the Criminal Code unsound in its treatment of vagrants because we hold that vagrants are not criminals.

At five o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order.
