

23

CIHM/ICMH Collection de microfiches.

Canadian Institute for Historical Microreproductions / Institut canadien de microreproductions historiques

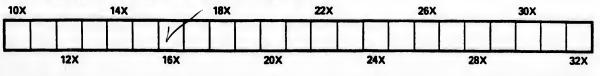

1.12

Technical and Bibliographic Notes/Notes techniques et bibliographiques

The Institute has attempted to obtain the best original copy available for filming. Features of this copy which may be bibliographically unique, which may alter any of the images in the reproduction, or which may significantly change the usual method of filming, are checked below. L'Institut a microfilmé le meilleur exemplaire qu'il lui a été possible de se procurer. Les détails de cet exemplaire qui sont peut-être uniques du point de vue bibliographique, qui peuvent modifier une image reproduite, ou qui peuvent exiger une modification dans la méthode normale de filmage sont indiqués ci-dessous.

Coloured covers/ Couverture de couleur		Coloured pages/ Pages de couleur
Covers damaged/ Couverture endommagée		Pages damaged/ Pages endommagées
Covers restored and/or laminated/ Couverture restaurée et/ou pelliculée		Pages restored and/or laminated/ Pages restaurées et/ou pelliculées
Cover title missing/ Le titre de couverture manque		Pages discoloured, stained or foxed/ Pages décolorées, tachetées ou piquées
Coloured maps/ Cartes géographiques en couleur		Pages detached/ Pages détachées
Coloured ink (i.e. other than blue or black)/ Encre de couleur (i.e. autre que bleue ou noire)		Showthrough/ Transparence
Coloured plates and/or illustrations/ Planches et/ou illustrations en couleur	Ø	Quality of print varies/ Qualité inégale de l'impression
Bound with other material/ Relié avec d'autres documents		Includes supplementary material/ Comprend du matériel supplémentaire
Tight binding may cause shadows or distortion along interior margin/ Lare liure serrée peut causer de l'ombre ou de la		Only edition available/ Seule édition disponible distortion le long de la marge intérieure Blank leaves added during restoration may appear within the text. Whenever possible, these have been omitted from filming/ Il se peut que certaines pages blanches ajoutées lors d'une restauration apparaissent dans le texte, mais, lorsque cela était possible, ces pages n'ont pas été filmées.		Pages wholly or partially obscured by errata slips, tissues, etc., have been refilmed to ensure the best possible image/ Les pages totalement ou partiellement obscurcies par un feuillet d'errata, une peture, etc., ont été filmées à nouveau de façon à obtenir la meilleure image possible.
Additional comments:/ Commentaires supplémentaires:

This item is filmed at the reduction ratio checked below/ Ce document est filmé au taux de réduction indiqué ci-dessous.

TH to

Th

po of fill

Or be the sid oth fin sid

or

The she TIN wh

Ma diff ent beg rigi req me re létails es du modifier er une 'ilmage

85 errata to pelure, on à The copy filmed here has been reproduced thanks to the generosity of:

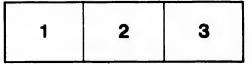

Thomas Fisher Rare Book Library, University of Toronto Library

The images appearing here are the best quality possible considering the condition and legibility of the original copy and in keeping with the filming contract specifications.

Original copies in printed paper covers are filmed beginning with the front cover and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression, or the back cover when appropriate. All other original copies are filmed beginning on the first page with a printed or illustrated impression, and ending on the last page with e printed or illustrated impression.

The last recorded frame on each microfiche shall contain the symbol \longrightarrow (meaning "CON-TINUED"), or the symbol ∇ (meaning "END"), whichever applies.

Maps, plates, charts, etc., may be filmed at different reduction ratios. Those too large to be entirely included in one exposure are filmed beginning in the upper left hand corner, left to right and top to bottom, as many frames as required. The following diagrams illustrate the method:

L'exemplaire filmé fut reproduit grâce à la générosité de:

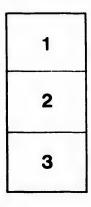

Thomas Fisher Rare Book Library, University of Toronto Library

Les images suivantes ont été reproduites avec le plus grand soin, compte tenu de la condition et de la netteté de l'exemplaire filmé, et en conformité avec les conditions du contrat de filmage.

Les exemplaires originaux dont la couverture en papier est imprimée sont filmés en commencant par le premier plat et en terminant soit par la dernière page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration, soit par le second plat, selon le cas. Tous les autres exemplaires originaux sont filmés en commençant par la première page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration et en terminant par la dernière page qui comporte une telle empreinte.

Un des symboles suivants apparaîtra sur la dernière image de chaque microfiche, seton le cas: le symbole —> signifie "A SUIVRE", le symbole V signifie "FIN".

Les cartes, planches, tableaux, etc., peuvent être filmés à des taux de réduction différents. Lorsque le document est trop grand pour être reproduit en un seul cliché, il est filmé à partir de l'angle supérieur gauche, de gauche à droite, et de haut en bas, en prenant le nombre d'images nécessaire. Les diagrammes suivants illustrent la méthode.

1	2	3
4	5	6

ADDRESSED TO THE

· E

R

LETT

ABBE RAYNAL,

ON THE AFFAIRS OF

NORTH-AMERICA.

IN WHICH

THE MISTAKES IN THE ABBE'S ACCOUNT.

OF THE

REVOLUTION OF AMERICA

ARE CORRECTED AND CLEARED UP.

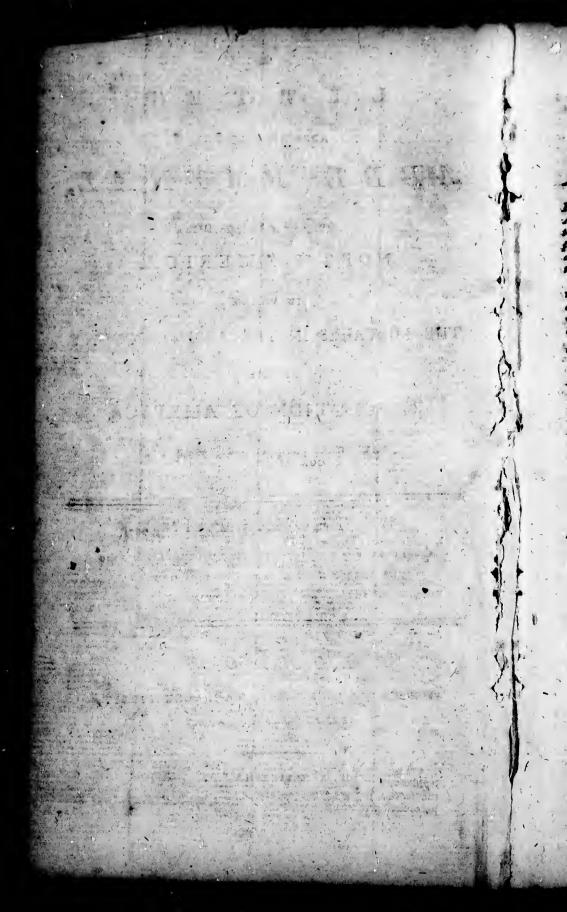

BY THOMAS PAINE,

DECRETARY FOR FOREIGN APPAIRS TO CONGRESS DURING THE AMERICAN WAR, AND AUTHOR OF COMMON SERVE, AND THE RIGHTS OF MAN.

LONDON:

ST. JAMES'S-SQUARE.

W. DCC ICLL.

INTRODUCTION

LONDON translation of an original work in French, by the Abe Rayadi, which treats of the Revolution of North America, having been reprinted in Philadelphia and other parts of the continent, and as the diftance at which the Abbe is placed from the American theatre of war and polities, has occasioned him to mistake feweral facts, or miscanceive the causes or principles by which were produced; the following trade, therefore, is published with a view to reflight boomy and prevent even accidental errors intermixing with bissory, under the faustion of time and filence.

The Editor of the London edition has entitled it, "The Revolution of Amorica, by the ABBE RANNAL," and the American printers have followed the enample. But I have understood, and I believe my information just, that the piece, which is more properly reflections on the revolution, was unfuirly purloined from one printer which the Abbe employed, or from the manufeript copy, and is only gart if a larger work then in the prefs, or preparing for it. The perfore who procure to appears to have been an Englishman; and though, in an advertifement prefix to the London edition, he has endeavoured to glofs over the emberalement with proseficients of patriotifm, and to fosten it with high encomiums of the author, yet the action, in any view in which it can be placed, is illiberal and unpardonable."

"In the courfe of bis 'travels," fays be, " the translator happily fucceeded in obtaining a copy of this exquisite little piece, which has not yet made its appearance from any prefs. He publishes a French edition, in favour of those who wilk feel its eloquent reasoning more forcibly in its native language, at the faine time with the following translation of it; in which he has been desirour, perhaps in with the following translation of it; in which he has been desirour, perhaps in with the following translation of it; in which he has been desirour, perhaps in with the following translation of it; in which he has been desirour, perhaps in with the following translation of it; in which he indulgence of the eriginal; found not be loss. And he statters bimself, that the indulgence of the illustrious bisforian will not be wanting to a man, who, of his own motion, has taken the likerty to give this composition to the public, only from a frong persuasion, that this momentous argument will be useful, in a critical conjecture, to that country which herms in the bosom of the philanthropic author, for the freedom and hopthe piness of all the countries upon earth."

This plaufibility of fetting off a diffeonourable action, may pafe for patrictify and found principles with those who do not enter into its demerits, and whose interest is not injured, nor their happiness affected thereby. But it is more than probable, notwithstanding the declarations it contains, that the copy was obtained for the fake of profiting by the fale of a new and popular work, and that the professions are but a garb to the fraud.

It may with propriety be remarked, that in all countries where literature is protacted, and it never can flourif where it is not, the works of an author are his legal property; and to treat letters in any other light than this, is to banif them from the country, or firangle them in the birth. The embezzlement from the Abbe Raynal was, it is true, committed by one country upon another, and therefore forws no defect in the laws of either. But it is nevertheles a breach of civil manners and literary juffice; neither can it be any apology, that because the countries are at war, literature fball be entitled to depredation*.

• The flate of literature in America must one day become a subject of legislative confideration. Hitherto it hath been a difinteressed volunteer in the service of the revolution, and no man thought of profits : but when peace shall give time and opportunity for study, the country will depeive itest

But

INTROBVETION. Pression of Segurity the Abbe's publication by Leaden editions, for b in Fromb Ranging and the second states of the sec

In some bappene, that the twicks of an argument is left by the wit of feiting is out, as the judgment difordered by an intemperate preitation of the paffioner y a testain degree of animation much he felt by the writer, and raifed in the resuler, in writer to interest the attention; and a fufficient froze given to the imagination, he ena-ble it to create in the mind h fighe of the perfons, characters, and circonflances of the fubject? for unithout the attent of the profile, and timperfest. But if either or bold the two former are reifed too bigs, or hented too works. But if either work of the file the two former are reifed too bigs, or hented too works, the judgment will by iffer the two former are reifed too bigs, or hented too works, in the judgment will diminif tell from its feas, and the schole matter, however important in itself, will dimin into Pantonium of the mind, in subtch we create images that promote no oth and the energies of the stind, in subtable we create imagin that presents so that that employees. While a section to be subtable of all about reprint and reprint of this and subtable of programs which of all about require and reprint of the section of the section of the decay subtable of all about a section of the section of the section of the decay subtable of all about the section of the decay subtable of the section of the section of the section of the decay subtable of the section of the section of the section of the decay subtable of the section of the section of the section of the decay of the section of the section of the section of the section of the decay the section of the decay the work by the section of an section of the section of the section of the work by the section of an section of the se

Ref of the honour and fervice of letters and the improvement of River blog following laws are made to prevent deprediations on literary property the well worth remarking, that Ruffis, who but a tew years are we barenly known in Europe, owes a large finite of her prefent greathers a the close itention the has said, and the wife encouragement the has given a every branch of feience and learning ; and we have almost the finite in fance in Jeance, in the reign of Lewis XIV.

12741

and a state and

A YWEY

A LEAST AND A STRATE AND A LONG

the strong and the second second second a share the second share the second

ETTER

BBE RAYNAL

ADDRESSED TO THE

T O an author of fuch diffinguifhed reputation as the Abbe Raynal, tr might very well become me to apologize for the prefent undertaking s but as to be right is the first with of philosophy, and the first principle of history, he will, I prefume, accept from me a declaration of my motives, which are those of doing justice, in preference to any complimental apology, I might otherwise make.—The Abbe, in the course of his work, has in some inflances extelled, without a reason, and wounded without a cause. He has given fame where it was not deferved, and withheld it where it was justify due; and appears to be fo frequently in and out of temper with his fubjects and parties, that few or none of them are desilively and uniformly marked.

It is yet too form to write the hiftory of the revolution ; and whoever sttempts it precipicately, will unsvoidably millake characters and circumflances, and involve himfelf in error and difficulty. Things like men are feldom underflood rightly at first fight. But the Abbe is wrong even in the foundation of his work ; that is, he has mifconceived and missized the caufes which produced the rupture between England and her then colonics, and which led on, step by step, unstudied and uncontrived on the part of Americs, to a revolution, which has engaged the attention and affected the interest of Europe.

To prove this, I fhall bring forward a paffage, with the placed placed towards the latter part of the Abbe's work, is more intimuter connected with the beginning; and in which, freaking of the original caufe of the diffute; he declares himfelf in the following manner-

⁴ None," fays he, ⁴⁰ of thofe energetic caufts, which have produced fay many revolutions upon the globe, exifted in North-America. Neither "religion nor laws had there been outraged. The blood of martyrs or "patriots had not there fireamed from fcaffolds. Morais had not there been infulted. Manners, cuftoms, habits, no object dear to nations, had there been the fport of ridicule. Arbitrary power had not them torn any ishabitant from the arms of his family and his friends, to drag him to a dreasy dungeon. Public order had not been there inverted. The principles of administration had not been changed there; and the marmas of government had there always remained the fame. The wants queftion was reduced to the knowing whether the mother country had, or had not a right to lay, directly or indirectly, a flight tay upon the "totants."

On this entraordinary pullage, it may not be improper, in general terms, to remark, thus nome can reci like thole who fuller ; and that for a man te A 3

THERE'S BARRIES

LETTER TO THE ABEE RAYNAL.

t judge of the personative, or, as the Abbe figies the of the revolution, he must have refided in America di 2h

al el b 10

. 1

Americas
Ame a man abere i of all their caufes to fyles unergetic. I confess to find out the time to which the former of the work, in speaking of the Abbe siludes; becaufe, in another part of the work, in speaking of the hamp act, which was passed in 1764, he flyles it "An using atter of the Americans most precious and facred rights." Confequently he here admite be most energetic of all caufes, that is, an usurgation of the a most precious and force rights, to have exciled in America tweive years before the decla-metion of independence, and are years before the breaking out of hostilities. "The time, therefore, in which the paragraph is true," mult be antecedent to the famp act; but as at that time there was no revolution, wer any inter of one, it confequently applies without a meaning a it connect. ta of one, it confequently, applies without a meaning ; and as it cannot, in the Abbe's own principle, be applied to any time after the famp adt ; it is therefore a wandering folitary paragraph, connected with pothing. ad at variance with every thing.

The flamp ad, it is true, was repealed in two years after it was parted ; if it was immediately followed by one of infinite y more milchievous man iude, 1 mean the declaratory set, which offerted the right, as it was fry of the British Parliament, " to bind America in all cafes whatforver." then, the ftamp act was an usurpation of the Americans most precious a facred sights, the declaratory act left them no right at all ; and co is the world. It placed America not only in the loweft, but in the bafel the of vaffalage ; becaufe it demanded an unconditional fabriffion in eve-try thing, ort as the act expresses it, in all cafes subatforver : and what renthis act the more offentive, is, that it appears to have been peffed as an a of mercy; truly, then, it may be faid, that the tender mercies of the Wicked are cruch.

All the original charters from the Crown of England, under the faith of which, the adventurers from the old world fettied in the new, were by this them, which was that of a compact, they were now made fubicit to re-pest or alteration at the mere will of one party only. The whole condition America was thus put into the hands of the Parliament or the Ministry, without leaving to her the leaft right in any cafe whatfoever,

There is no delpotifm to which this iniquitous law did not extend; and though it might have been convenient, in the execution of it, to have con-inited manhers and habits, the principle of the act made all transmy legal. inited manners and habits, the principle of the act made all sysampt legal is those nowhere. It went to every thing. It took in with it the whole life of a man, or, if I may (d signets it, an etermity of circumstances. Is is the nature of law to require obcdience, but this demanded invitudes and the condition of an American, under the operation of it, was not that is the indiced for a vellet. Tyransy has given been effablished methods from the infinites grand fit. Due the habori of man and does not produce and the infinites grand fit. But the habori of man and does not produce and the infinites grand fit. But the habori of man and does not produce and the infinite operation is and sealing the state of the state of the state operation of a state of the babori of man and some the infinite operation of a state of the babori of man and the state of the st

Neicher could it be faid after this, that the legitimure of that course longer made have for this, but that it gave out communde; for a differed an act of Parliament confiructed on this principle, and open this manner, over an unreprefented people, from the order of a s ut commande ; for w eftablifhment ?

The Parliament of England, with refpect to America, was not func-al but perpetual. It appeared to the latter a body always in being, election or its expiration were to her the fame as if its members fuce election or its expiration were to her the fame as if its members furced by inheritance, or were out by death, or lived for ever, or were appointed to it as a matter of office. Therefore, for the people of England to have any juft conception of the mind of America, respecting this extraordinary act, they must fuppole all election and expiration in that country to cent par ever, and the prefeat Parliament, its heirs, Sto. to be perpetual; in his cafe, I afk, what would the most elementus of them think, were an act to be paffed, declaring the right of fuch a Parliament to bind them in al cafes whatforver ? For this word whatforw would go as effectually to their Magno Charta, Bill of Rights, Trial by Juries, Stc. as it went to the char-ters and forms of government in America.

ters and forms of government in America. I am perfuaded, that the Gentleman to whom I address these remarks will not, after the paffing this add, fay, "That the principles of administration had not been changed in America, and that the maxims of government had there been always the fame." For here is, in principle, a total even throw of the whole, and not a fubversion only, but an annihilation of the Soundation of liberty, and abfolute domination chablished in its flea

The Abbe likewise flates the case exceedingly wrong and injurious when he fays, " that the whole question was reduced to the knowing who then the mother country had, or had not, a right to lay, directly or ind-" rectly a flight tax upon the colonics." This was not the whole of the ques-tion; neither was the quantity of the tax the object, either to the Ministry or to the Americans. It was the principle, of which the tax made but i part, and the quantity fill lefs, that formed the ground on which America oppored.

The tax on ten, which is the tax here alluded to, was aeither more or le than an experiment to eftablish the practice of the declaratory have upon delled into the morefathionable phrafe of the usiverfal furthering of Burlian Bor, until this time, the declaratory law had lain dormant, and the fram of it had contented themfelves with barely declaring an opinion. Therefore the woole queftion with America, in the opinion of the pute, was, Shall we be bound in all cafes whatforver by the British Farl Thereis at, or thail we not? For fubmifion to the tes or tax set, impl ment, or thall we not? For fubmillion to the tea or tax set, implied an acknowledgment of the deciaratory set, or, in other words, of the universe fal jupremacy of Parliament, which, as they never insended to do, it was neceffary they flouid appofe it, in its first flags of execution. It is probable, the Abbe has been led into this millake by perufing detach ed pieces in fome of the American news papers; for, id a cafe when were intereffed, every one had a right to give his minion; and there we many who, with the beft intentions, did not chuic the beft, nor indeed the star ground, to defend their caufe upon. They falt themafelues right by general impuble, without being able to fepasato, analyze, and arrange the parts.

I am fomewhat wawilling to examine too minutely into the winds o extraordinary pollage of the Abbe, left I found appear to treat it w writy; otherwile I could flow that not a fingle declaration is justified; at; an inflance, the reviving an absolute act of the reign of the lighth, and fitting it to the America to England and brows is be finded and brought from America to England, and bare of tried for any fuppoled offences, was, in the works follow all manufaces, by the artitrary proves of Furtherman, from the term of an interview, by the artitrary proves of Furtherman, from the term of an interview, by the artitrary proves of Furtherman, from the term of an interview, by the artitrary proves of Furtherman, from the term of an interview, by the artitrary proves of Furtherman, from the term of an interview and find the proves of Furtherman from the term of an interview and the form y care before the breaking and the te to ale ar to treat it will en they to give 54 t or it now : world. e existhich the hich the g of the of the admite precious e declaftilitics.

; confe-

tecedent

er any

Campot: np sa : othing paffeda

US DA vas ftyl-

7. 92

precions

Kercifed e bafeft:

ID CYC-

Int rene d as an

of the faith of by this ature of to rendition iniary, d: and r legal whole 1 neude ot the nd co

LETTER TO THE ABBE RAYNAL.

win, shough the blood of martyre and patriots had not freamed on the affolds, it freamed in the fronts, in the maffacre of the inhabitants of Seaffolds, it freemed is the broots, in the year 1770. Heat the Abbe faid that the caafes which produced the revolution in Ame-rice were originally different from those which produced revolutions in other parts of the globe, he had been right. Here the value and quality of libery, the nature of government, and the dignity of man were known and iderflood, and the attachment of the Americans to these principles produ-id the revolution as a natural and almost unavoidable consequence. They no particular family to fet up or puil down. Nothing of perfonality: a incorporated with their caufe. They farted even-handed with each er, and went no faster into the several stages of it, than they were driven by the unrelenting and imperious conduct of Britain. Nay, in the last add, the declaration of independence, they had nearly been too late ; for had it het been declared at the exact time it was, I faw no period in their affairs se, in which it could have been declared with the fame effect, and ably not at all.

bi

120

Htte

-

-4

But the object being formed before the reverse of fortune took place, that a before the operations of the gloomy campaign of 1776, their honour, their aterest, their every thing, called loudly on them to maintain it; and that w of thought and energy of heart, which even a diftant prospect of inderendence infpires, gave confidence to their hopes and relulation to their standard, which a fate of dependance could never have reached. They looked forward to happier days and scenes of reft, and qualified the hardhips of the campaign by contemplating the establishment of their new-born

If on the other hand, we take a review of what part. Britain has acted. be hall find every thing which ought to make a nation bluth. The most s abufe, accompanied by that species of haughtines, which difting wifehe here of a moh from the character of a gentleman ; it was equally so the from her manners as from her injustice that the lost the colonies. By much from her manners as from her injuftice that the loft the colonies. By the latter the provoked their principles, by the formes the wore out their chimper; and it sught to be held out as an example to the world, to there, how necessary it is to conduct the hufinets of government with ci-oliny. In there, other revolutions may have originated is captice, or gene-ented in ambitions; but here, the most unoffending bumility was tortured into rage, and the infancy of existence made to weep. A union fo extensive, continued and determined, fuffering with patience and never in defpair, could, not have been produced by common caules. It much is fomething capable of reaching the whole foul of man, and arming it with perjectual energy. In vain it is to hook for precedents among the evolutions of former ages, to find out, by comparison, the caules of this. The fpring, the prografs, the object, the confequences, may the men, their these of thinking, and all the circumfances of the country, are different. These of other nations are, in general, little more that the hiftory of their quarrels. They are marked by no important charafter in the annals of tracks; mint in the mais of general matters they because the taxeness. mentes; mist in the mais of general matters they berupy but a common mere ; and while the chief of the fuseefsful particuse Rept into power, the d misitiude fat down and forrewed. Few, very few of them are ecompanied with reformation, either in government or manners; many of m with the most confurminate profligacy .- Triumph on the one fide and ifers on the other were the entyic vents. Pains, publihments, torture, and leash were made the bufinefs of mankind, until compation, the fairest affe-inte of the heart, was driven from its place, and the cys, scenthemed to-the of the Beart, was driven money prace, and the cost shall be a shall be a shall be a shall be and be been a shall be a Res of on the bitante de in Amein other of liberbes awo es produe. They erfonslity with each tre driven. : laft sot for had it eir affairs fect, and lace, that our, their and the t of inde to their They d. the hardnew-born has acted. The most ifting vift equally as pies. By out their world, to t with cior genes tured into-patience aufes. It bg the es of this. nen, their different. y of their anhala of 602060.01 . the them an many of fide and ture, and ires a acd to - 14 19 - they night jully have avalated to punit. The world, the here been only the bullass a weather half case, her very enemies and conten, that a her jult defence, the used it without creaty, a 100 TOVE

+4

As it is not my defence, he used it without evenity, and its is not my defence, to extend this presents to a billiony, take my leave of this pullage of the Abbe, with an obfervation, formathing unfolds itfelf to convince are otherwise, I conset, to be store gammel with America at all events.
They (the members who compose the tailine) had no doubt of more billion to quarrel with America at all events.
They (the members who compose the tailine) had no doubt of more billion to quarrel with America at all events.
They (the members who compose the tailine) had no doubt of more billion one bring it to the flate of a battle ; and they implements in the flate of a battle ; and they implements in the flate of a battle ; and they implements in the flate. The charter and control of the columns were barried in them reachers of offence, and their migd property in property and pairs at the flate of a battle ; and they request the pairs at the second at the second and more and and they implement. The what a dece have made them both lords and implement in them softellion both of the revenue and the reason and induced and pairs in the constant. The what it is a possible of government would have confed in a victory, and a final and bout pat the in any form of the presence of the flate bat form and they include the induced and induced a declet.
If this be taken as the presention and they were not dispected. They have the flate flate of both of the revenue and they contains the domain of the include the induced. They have the flate flate of both induced a declet.
If this be taken as the presention of the include the include the induced for the flate flate of both induced a declet.
If the beta is the presention in the include the include the include the include the presention of independence, and they were not dispected. They have the flate flate they consident is and they are presented to be both indice of and independence, and they were not dispected. They have the flate flate the incl and maft of them defective and obfaurs. It is undoubtedly both an erne man and a abful addition to hildary to mean party it with mathes and re-leading. They align likewise an opromite diving to the light and more diversified manner of expression; but it is abfolutely needed with the form whetch they foring, or the foundations on which they are raised found be well attended to, which in this work they are not. The Abb millione shipoug his navations is if he was glad to get from them, that I The actions of Trenton and Princeton in New Jerfey, in Decemb 76, and January following, on which the fate of America flood for h file trembling on the point of fulpence, and from which the mult import confequences followed, are comprifed within a fingle paragraph, fulnting peologi, and barren of character, circumstance and description. 40 On the 25th of December, "fays the Abbe, " they (the Americant 1.1 erofiel the Delaware, and fell socialisally upon Trenton, which was an explicit by fifteen hundred of the twolve thouland Heffans fold in so has container by their avaricious matter, to the King of Greet Britain. The terms was meffacted, taken, or differfiel. Right days after, three English memory topported their repetation than she foreign troops in their perf. This is all the account which is given of their molt intereding arrents. The Abbe has preceded them by two or three pages on the millions opera-tions of basis unnits, from the time of General Howe mining basis and foreign yout from Plablas, and the vall re-infortements of Hebble and foreign troops with Lond Howe from Hinglets. But in their there is for mich " crolled the Delaware, and fell accidentally upon Trenton, which was millahs, and fo many emillions, that to fet them right, mult be the builders of hidlory, and not of a letter. The action of Long-ifland is but barely histodet; and the operations at the White-Plains wholly omitted : as are swife the attack and loss of Fort Wathington, with a garrifon of about two thousand five hundred men, and the precipitate evacuation of Fort Lee, lequence thereof ; which loffes were in a great measure the cause of e sctreat shrough the Jerlies to the Delaware, a diffance of about ninety iles. Neither is the manner of the retreat defcribed, which, from the sion of the year, the nature of the country, the nearness of the two armies (fometimes within fight and fhot of each other for fuch a length of way), the sear of the one employed in pulling down bridges, and the van of the other in building them up, mult necessarily be accompanied with many interching circumftances.

1000132

LETTER TO THE ABBE RAYNALS

it was a period of diffreffes. A crifis rather of danger than of hope, tere is no defeription can do it juffice ; and even the actors in it, looking the upon the scene, are surprised how they got through; and at a loss to account for those powers of the mind and springs of animation, by which they withflood the force of accumulated misfortune.

It was expected, that the time for which the army was enlifted, would carry the campaign fo far into the winter, that the feverity of the feafon, and the confequent condition of the roads, would prevent any material operation of the enemy, until the new army could be raifed for the next year. And I mention it, as a matter worthy of attention by all future hiftorians, that the movements of the American army, until the attack upon the Hefian post at Trenton, the 26th of December, are to be confidered as opsrating to effect no other principal purpole than delay, and to wear away the campaign under all the difadvantages of an unequal force, with as little miffortune as poffible.

But the loss of the garrifon at Fort Washington, on the 16th of November and the expiration of the time of a confiderable part of the army, fo early as the 30th of the fame month, and which were to be followed by almost date ly expirations afterwards, made retreat the only final expedient. To thefe circumstances may be added the forlorn and destitute condition of the few. that remained ; for the garrison at Fort Lee, which composed almost the whole of the retreat, had been obliged to abandon it fo inftantaneously, that every article of flores and baggage was left behind, and in this definitive adition, without tent or blanket, and without any other utenfils to dreas their provision, than what they procured by the way, they performed a march of about ninety miles, and had the address and management to prolong it to the space of ninetcen days. By this unexpected, or rather unthought of turn of affairs, the country was in an inflant furprifed into confusion, and found an enemy within its. bowels, without an army to oppose him. There were no fuccours to be had, but from the free-will offering of the inhabitants. All was choice, and every man reasoned for himfelf.

It was in this lituation of affairs, equally calculated to confound or to infpire, that the gentleman, the merchant, the farmer, the tradelman, and the labourer, mutually turned out from all the conveniencies of home, to perform the duties of private foldiers, and undergo the feverities of a winter campaign. The delay, to judiciously contrived on the retreat, afforded time for the volunteer reinforcements to join General Washington on the Delaware. The Abbe is likewife wrong in faying, that the American army fell accidestally on Trenton. It was the very object for which General Walkington . crolled the Delaware in the dead of night, and in the midft of fnow, Robins, and ice : and which he immediately re-croffed with his prifoners, as fron as: he had accomplished his purpose. Neither was the intended enterprise sfecret to the enemy, information having been fent of it by letter, from a British Officer at Princeton, to Colonel Rolle, who commanded the Hel-fens at Trenton, which letter was afterwards found by the American. Nevertheles

on

at

fà

-

the

ed

op

A

eh

pe

12

TI

de ol

dr

CŰ

F

-

in 24 to 20

in G min Win of it the bulinels is but barely itted : as are of about two of Fort Lee, the caule of bout ninety h, from the the two ara length of and the van panied with an of hope, n it, looking id at a lois to n, by which lifted, would e feafon, and aterial operahe next year. re hiftoriane, ik upon the Jered as opecar away the as little mif-of November my, fo early y almost dait. To thele of the few ed almost the tantancoully, this defilture infile to drefe performed a magement to , the country by within itsuccours to be choice, and und or to indefman, and of home, to a of a winter ifforded time he Deluware. rmy fell act-Wafhington now, Roma, rs, us fron-ascuterprise stter, from a ed the Hef-Americant. Nevertheles Neverthelefs the post was completely furprifed. A final circumfance, which had the appearance of midake on the part of the Americans, led to a more capital and real millake on the part of Rolle.

The cafe was this: A detachment of twenty or thirty Americans had been fent across the river from a post, a few miles above, by an officer innequainted with the intended attack; these were met by a body of Hellions on the sight, to which the information pointed, which was Christians night, and repulsed. Nothing further appearing; and the Hellions militating this for the advanced party, supposed the enterprise disconcerted, which at that time was not began, and under this idea returned to their quarters p to that, what might have raifed an alarm, and brought the Americans intean ambulcade, forwed to take off the force of an information, and promotethe factors of the enterprise. Soon after day-light General Washington entered the town, and after a little opposition made himfelf mafter of it, with: upwards of nine hundred prifoners.

This combination of equivocal circumstances, falling within what the Atbe stiles " the wide empire of chance," would have afforded a fine field for thought; and I wish, for the fake of that elegance of reflection he is fo enpuble of using, that he had known it.

But the action at Princeton was accompanied by a ftill greater embarration of matters, and followed by more extraordinary confequences. The Americans, by a happy ftroke of generalfhip, in this inflance, not only deranged and defeated all the plans of the Britifh, in the intended moment of execution, but drew from their pofts the enemy they were not able to drive, and obliged them to clofe the campaign. As the circomflance is a curiofity in war, and not well underflood in Europe, 1 fhall, as concidely as I can, relate the principal parts; they may ferve to prevent future hifterians from error, and recover from forgetfulnels a fcene of magnificent fortitude.

Immediately after the furprife of the Heffians at Trenton, General Wathsington recrofted the Delaware, which at this place is about three quarters of a mile over, and re-affurned his former post on the Pennfylvania fide. Trenton remained unoccupied, and the enemy were posted at Princeton, twelve miles diffant, on the road towards New-York. The weather was now growing very fevere, and as there were very few houles near the floor where General Washington had taken his flation, the greatest part of his army semained out in the woods and fields. Thefe, with four other circumfances induced the re-crofting the Delaware, and taking posterion of Trenton. Is was undoubtedly a bold adventure, and carried with it the appearance of defince, specially when we confider the panie-flruck condition of the enemy on the lots of the Heffian post. But in order to give a just idea of the affair , it is neceffary I should deferibe the place.

Trenton is fliusted on a rifing ground, about three quarters of somile diftant from the Delaware, on the eaftern or Jerfsy fide; and is cut into two divisions by a fmall creek or rivulet, fufficient to turn a mill which is an it, after which it empties itfelf at nearly right angles into the Delaware. The opper division, which is to the north-caft, contains about foventy or eighty boufes, and the lower about forty or fifty. The ground on each fide of this creek, and on which the houles are, is likewife rifing, and the two divisions prefent an agreeable prospect to each other, with the creek between, on which there is a fmall flore by def one arch.

which there is a fmall flone bridge of one srch. Scarcely had General Wallington taken post here, and before the feveral parties of militia, out on detachments, or on their way, could be collected; diangues British, leaving behind them a frong garriton at Princeton, masched indexity, and entered Trenton at the upper or north-call quarter. A party of the Americans kinnified with the advanced party of the British, to afford the for removing the flores and baggarge and withdrawing over the bridge. In a little time the British had, policition of one half of the town, General Wallington of the other, and the creek only feparated the two armies. Noaling, could be a more critical fituation than ching and if ever the fate of America

NO.

LETTER OF GERERAL ADD D. ATHALS ..

Amorice depended usen the event of a day, it was now. The Delawase was filling fail with denie Greets of driving ice, and was impediable, fo that no retreat into Penntylviani could be effected, neither is it poffible, in the fine of an enemy, to pals a river of fuch extent. The roads were broken and ranged with the troft, and the main road was octavied by the enemy. I a direct pain is, but were reputed. They made as more another through, with a definit pain is, but were reputed. They made as more another with a the track is paliable: any piere between the bridge and the Delaware. It-runs in a rugged natural-made ditch, over which a perform may pale with little difficulty, the fitness being rapid and flattoned. Hendrange as now coming on, and the Britifh, believing they had all the advantages they could with for, and that they could use them when they pleafed, diffeontion-ed all further operations, and held themfelves prepared to make the attack a maximum ranks the attack of the main when they pleafed, diffeontion-ed all further operations, and held themfelves prepared to make the attack a But the next morning produced a fcene, as elegant as it was unexped

The Briefs were under arms and ready to murch to action, when on their light-horfe from Princecon came furiously down the firm their light-horfe from Princeton came furiously down the fireet, with macsonit that General Washington had that morning attacked and carried the British post at that place, and was proceeding on to feize the magazine at Brunswick; on which the British, who were then on the point of making an affault on the evacuated camp of the Americans, wheeled about, and in; a de of conferention marched for Princeton. This retreat is one of those extraordinary circumfances; that in future, agesting probably pais for fable. For it will with difficulty be believed that, three armists on which fuch important tonfequences, depended, should be; and into fo fmall a frace as Trenton; and that the one, on the syst of grounded into fo fmall a fpace as Trenton ; and that the one, on the sve of management, when every ear is (uppoled to be open, and every watchful-nels employed, should move completely from the ground, with ell for 10 -1 -1 And to empirely were the British deceived, that when they heard the report i of the cannot and fmall arms at Princeton, they supposed it to be thunder, because in the depth of winter.

General Wathington, the better to cover and difguife his retreat from . Tentonia had ordebid a line of firm to be lighted up in front of his camp. That not only ferved to give an appearance of going to reft, and community therefore time, but above effectually concealed from the Brieffi whatever wave acking behind them, for finne can no more be feen through than a wall, and in this finantion, it may with forme propriety he fuid, they became a pillar. reso the age army, and a pillar of a cloud to the other 1 after this, by off mitous march of about eighteen miles, the Americans reached Princeson early in the morning.

ton early in the morning. This is another of prifouers taken were between two and three hundred, is achieved from Transmissionered Printeron about an bar strathe America is any from Transmissionered Printeron about an bar strathe America is any from Transmissionered Printeron about an bar strathe America is any from Transmissionered Printeron about an bar strathe America is any from Transmissionered Printeron about an bar strathe America is any from Transmission at a covenient from the semission of the day is another and about fixteen mules different from Printeron; I for the memory is any dependent in the souther and undrates for the memory is a different with a sight. from a site and instruct from the printer is a strather and a memory with the anithment from the printers for the set is a strather and a memory with the souther and undrates for the part of the set is a strather and a memory with the set is a strather and an undrates for the set is a strather and a memory with a strather and an any strather reft. By the recommended with advantages a sample for which and a strather any is a set for the strather the strather and an appreciable reft. By the memory the strath dry because to them a place of comparable reft. By the memory of the strath dry and advantages a sample for which and a few drys before the strather of the place magazine. The firstfire, which any sport healths is a form, which they late an strather they have the memory and a memory and the strather and a strather and the place and the in the equilibrium and the strather and a strather and the place and the strather and an ender the strather when the strather and the place and the strather and an ender and the strather and a strather and the place and the strather and an ender and the strather and the place and the strather and an ender the strather and the strather and the place and the strather and a strather and the strather and the strather and the strather and the strather and an ender and the strather and the

Delaware ble, fo zhac ble, in zhez re broken emenye di ware, le. pals with was now tages they difcontinuthe attack nexpected. hen one of t, with un and curied. magazing of making ut, and in in future, lieved that a fhould the the eve of watchink the eve of watchink the eve of the other. the other. the report the thunder, treat fram :

ne a pillar,

ed Princa-, hundred,

the day

nd alm

other c

Bria

aem, ta

Ye sking

this h

chis camp. gentinating accycr waswall, and of the debt and paper money of America, wherein, ipaking of their matters, he fays, "Their ideal riches were rejected. The more the multiplication of ⁴⁴ Thele ideal riches were rejected. The more the multiplication of ⁴⁵ them was urged by want, the greater did their depreciation grow. The ⁴⁶ Congress was indiguage at the affronts given to its money, and declared ⁴⁷ all those to be traitors to their country who should not receive it as they ⁴⁶ would have received gold itfelf.

 would have received gold ittelf.  Did not this body know, that poffeffions are no more to be controuted  than feelings are ? Did it not perceive, that in the prefent crifis, every  rational man would be afraid of expofing his fortune? Did it not fee,  that in the beginning of a republic it permitted to itfelf the exercise of fuch acts of defpotion as are unknown even in the countries which are  moulded to, and become familiar with fervicude and opprefilion ? Could  it pretend that it did not punifh a want of confidence with the pains which  would have been fearcely merited by revolt and treason ? Of all this was  the Congrefs well 'aware. But it had no choice of means. Its defpiled  and defpicable ftraps of paper were actually thirty times below their ori- gimat value, when more of them were ordered to be made. On the right  of September 1779, there was of this paper money, among the public,  to the amount of £.35.544,155. The flate owed moreover £.8,3*5:356,  without reckoning the particular debts of fingle provinces.

In the above-recited paffages, the Abbe speaks as if the United States bad contracted a debt of upwards of forty millions pounds sterling, belides the debts of individual States. After which, speaking of foreign trade with America, he fays, that " those countries in Europe, which are truly com-" mercial ones, knowing that North America had been reduced to contract " debts at the epoch of even her greatest prosperity, wifely thought, that in " her prefent distres, she would be able to pay but very little, for what " might be carried to her."

I know it mutt be extremely difficult to make foreigners underfland the nature and circumflances of our paper money, becaufe there are natives who do not underfland it themfelves. But with us its fate is now determined. Common confent has configned it to refl with that kind of regard which the long fervice of inanimate things infenfibly obtains from mankind. Every flone in the bridge, that has carried us over, feems to have a claim upon our effect. But this wasa corner-flone, and its ulfefulnefs cannot be forgotten. There is fomething in a grateful mind, which extends itfelf even to things that can neither be benefited by regard, nor fuffer by neglect : Buy foit is; and almost every man is fensible of the effect.

But to return. The paper money, though iffued from Congress under the name of dollars, did not come from that body always at that value. Those which were iffued the first year, were equal to gold and filver. The fecond year lefs; the third still lefs; and so on, for nearly the space of five years; at the end of which, I imagine, that the whole value at which Congress might pay away the several emissions, taking them together, was about ten or twelve millions pounds sterling.

Now, as it would have taken ten or twelve millions fterling of taxes, to carry on the war for five years, and, as while this money was iffuing and likewife depreciating down to nothing, there were none, or few valuable taxes paid; confequently the event to the public was the fame, whether they funk ten or twelve millions of expended money, by depreciation, or paid ten or twelve millions by taxation; for as they did not do both, and choic to do one, the matter, in a general view, was indifferent. And therefore, what the Abbe fuppofes to be a debt, has now no exiftence; it having been paid, by every body confenting to reduce it; at his own expence, from the value of the bills continually paffing among themfelves, a fum, equal to nearly what the expence of the war was for five years.

Again. - The paper money having now cealed, and the depreciation with it, and gold and fliver lopplied its place, the war will now be carried on by ta 131:00,

taxition, which will draw from the public a confiderable lefs fum than what the depreciation draw more as, while they pay the former, they do not fuffer the latter, and as, when they fuffered the latter, they did not pay the former, the thing will be easily equal, with this moral advantage, that taxation occasions frugality and thought, and depreciation produced diffipation and carelelinefs.

14

And again. If a man's portion of taxes comes to lefs than what he loft by the depreciation, it proves the alteration is in his favour. If it comes to more, and he is justly affelled, it flews that he did not fustain his proper fhare of depreciation, because the one was as operatively his tax as the other.

It is true, that it never was intended, neither was it forefeen, that the debt contained in the paper currency fhould fink itfelf in this manuer; but as by the voluntity conduct of all and of every one it is arrived at this fate, the debt is paid by those who owed it. Perhaps nothing was ever fo univerfally the act of a country as this. Government had no hand in it. Every man depreciated his own money by his own confent, for fuch was the effect which the raising the nominal value of goods produced. But as by fuch reduction he fulfished a loss equal to what he mult liave paid to fink it by taxation, therefore the line of jultice is to confider his loss by the depreciation as his tax for that time, and not to tax him when the war is over, to make that money good in any other perfor's hands; which became nothing in his own.

Again,—The paper currency was iffued for the express purpole of carrying on the war. It has performed that fervice, without any other material change to the public, while it lasted. But to suppose, as some did, that at the end of the war, it was to grow into gold and filver, or become equal thereto, was to suppose that we were to get two hundred millions of dollars by going to war, instead of paying the cost of carrying it on.

Fut if any thing in the fituation of America; as to her currency or her circommences, yet remains not underflood; then let it be remembered, that this war is the public's war; the people's war; the country's war. It is their independence that is to be fupported; their property that is to be focured; their country that is to be faved. Here, government, the army, and the people; are mutually and reciprocally one. In other wars, kings may love their thrones and their dominions; but here, the lofs mult fall on the majely of the multitude, and the property they are contening to fave. Every man being fentible of this, he goes to the field, or pays his portion of the charge as the fovereign of his own poff-filons; and when he is conquered a moment falls.

The remark which the Abbe, in the conclusion of the passage, has made reflecting America contracting debts in the time of her profperity (by which he means, before the breaking out of holdilities), letves to shew, though he has not made the application, the very great commercial difference between a dependant and an independent country. In a state of dependence, and with a settered commerce, though with all the advantages of peace, her trade could not balance itself, and the annually run into debt. But now, in a state of independence, though involved in war, the requires no eredit; her flores are full of merchandife, and gold and filver are become it is difficult to account for : but they are facts, and facts are more powenful then arguments.

As it is probable this latter will undergo a republication in Europe, the remarks here thrown together will ferve to flew the extreme folly of Britain, in refling her hopes of fueces on the extinction of our paper currency. The expediation is at once fo chi difh and forlorn, that it places her in the laughable condition of a famifhed lion watching for prey at a fpider's web.

From this account of the currency, the Abbe proceeds to flate the condition of America in the winter 1777, and the foring following; and clofes his obfarvat one with mentioning the treaty of alliance, which was figned in France, and the propositions of the British ministry, which were rejected in a acrica. But in the manner in which the Abbe has arranged his facts, P

46

.

-

66

68

there is a very material error, that not only he, but other European hills, rians, have fallen into : none of them have affigned the true sauls why the British proposals were rejected, and all of them have affined a wrong encode

British proposals were rejected; and all of them have affe med a wrong ener-In the winter t777, and the foring following, Congress were affembled as York-town in Pennfylvania, the British were in posterilog of Philadela inand General Washington with the army were entamped in huts at the Valley-Forge, twenty-five miles distant therefrom. To all who can remember, it was a feason of hardship, but not of despair; and the Abbe, speaking of this period and its inconveniences, fays, ⁴⁴ A multitude of privations, added to fo many other misfortance, might ⁴⁵ make the American regret their former tranquillity, and incline them to ⁴⁶ an accommodation with England. In vain had the people been bound to ⁴⁷ the new Government by the faceednefs of oaths, and the influence of ⁴⁸ religion. In vain had endeavours been ufed to convince them, that it was ⁴⁹ impossible to treat fallely with a country in which one parliament mights ⁴⁰ overturn what thould have been effabilited by another. In vain had they ⁴¹ been threatened with the eternal refertment of an exasperated and vindic-⁴² tive enemy. It was possible that these diffant troubles might not be be-⁴⁴ lanced by the weight of prefent evils.

So thought the Britifh Ministry when they fent to the New World publie agents authorifed to offer every thing except independence to thefe vetional fubmiflon. It is not improbable, but that by this plan of conciliational fubmiflon. It is not improbable, but that by this plan of conciliation, a few months somer, fome effect might have been produced. But; at the period at which it was proposed by the Court of London, it wasfor fear and weaknes. The people were already re-affured. The Conset greis, the Generals, the troops, the bold and field unes in each colony, had peficified themfelves of the authority; every thing had recovered he first fpirit. This was the effect of a treaty of friend/kip und commerce bitwices the United States and the Court of Verfailles, figured the fold of Pebruary, 1778."

On this pailage of the Abbe's I cannot help remarking, that, to unite time with circumflance, is a material nicety in hiftory ; the want of which frequently throws it into endle's confusion and militake, occasions a total feparation between caufes and confequences, and connects them with others they are not immediately, and fometimes not at all, related to.

The Abbe, in faying that the offers of the British Ministry, " were Ter-" jected with difdain," is right as to the fast, but wrong as to the time; and this error in the time, has occasioned him to be miltaken in the cause.

The figning the treaty of Paris the 6th of February, 1778, could have no effect on the mind or politics of America until it was known in America; and therefore, when the Abbe fays, that the rejection of the British offers was in confequence of the alliance, he must mean, that it was in confequence of the alliance being known in America; which was not the cafe: and by this miltake he not only takes from her the reputation, which her unshaken fortitude in that trying fituation deferves, but is likewife led very injuriously to suppofe that had the not known of the treaty, the offers wou d probably have been accepted; whereas the knew nothing of the treaty at the time of the rejection, and confequently did not reject them on that ground.

The propositions or offers above-mentioned were contained in two billsbrought into the British Parliament by Lord North on the 17th of February, 1778. Those bills were hurried through both houses with unusual hasts; and before they had gone through all the cultomary forms of Parliament, copies of them were fent over to Lord Howe and General Howe, then in Philadelphia, who were likewise Commissioners. General Howe, then in Philadelphia, who were likewise Commissioners. General Howe ordered them to be printed in Philadelphia, and fent copies of them by a flag to General Washington, to be forwarded to Congress at Yorks-Town, where they arrived the ailt of April, 1778. Thus much for the arrival of the bills in America.

an what not fufthe forat taxalipation loft by omes to proper e other. hat the ; but as ate, the verfally ry man which duction . ration. as his ke that own. irrying. aterial that at e cqual dollars her circ fecuiy, and gs may on the Every of the tered a s made ty (by of hew, diffeof deages of o deht.

d, that

It is felves, wenful be, the britain, The aughaequires a ceome

ndition his obhed in acd in sfscts, ther

Congreis,

Congreis, as is their usual made, appointed a committee from their own body, to examine them, and report thereon. The report was brought in the next day, (the twenty-fecond), was read, and uranimounly agreed to, entered on their journals, and published for the information of the country. Now this report must be the rejection to which the Abbe alludes, because Congrefs gave the rejection to which the Abbe alludes, because Congrefs gave the rejection to which the Abbe alludes, because Congrefs gave the rejection to make the British Committioners; dated the fubsequent application from the British Committioners; dated the 27th of May, and received at York-Town the 6th of June, Congrefs immediately referred them for an answer to their printed resolves of the 22d of April.—Thus much for the rejection of the effert.

On the 2d of May, that is, eleven days after the above rejee tion was made, the treaty between the United States and Erance arrived at York-Town; and until this moment Congress had not the least notice or idea, that such a measure was in any train of execution. But left this declaration of mine should pass only for essertion, I shall support it by proof, for it is material to the character and principle of the revolution to shew, that no condition of America, since the declaration of independence, however trying and severe, ever operated to produce the most distant idea of wielding it up either by force, distrefs, artifice, or persuasion. And this proof is the more necessary, because it was the system of the British Ministry at this time, as well as before and since. to hold out to the European powers that America was unfixt in her resolutions and policy; hoping by this artifice to lessen her reputation in Europe, and weaken the confidence which those powers, or any of them, might be inclined to place in her.

At the time these matters were transacting, I was secretary to the foreign department of Congress. All the political letters from the American Commissioners refted in my hands, and all that were officially written went from my office; and so far from Congress knowing any thing of the figning the treaty, at the time they rejected the British offers, they had not received a line of information from their Commissioners at Paris on any subject whatever for upwards of a twelvemonth. Probably the loss of the post of Philadelphia and the navigation of the Delaware, together with the danger of the seas, covered at this time with British cruizers, contributed to the disappointment.

One packet, it is true, arrived at York-Town in January preceding, which was about three months before the arrival of the treaty; but, ftrange as it may appear, every letter had been taken out, before it was put on board the vessel which brought it from France, and blank white paper put in their ftead.

Having thus flated the time when the proposals from the British Commissioners were first received, and likewise the time when the treaty of alliance arrived, and shewn that the rejection of the former was eleven days prior to the arrival of the latter, and without the least knowledge of such circumstance having taken place, or being about to take place; the rejection, therefore. b

0

to

tl

tı

tl

b

LETTER TO THE ABER RAYNAL

must, and ought to be attributed to the fixt unvaried fentiments of America respecting the enemy she is at war with and her determination to support her independence to the last possible effort, and not to any new circumstance in her favour, which at that time she did not, and could not, know of.

Befides, there is a vigour of determination and spirit of defi-ance in the language of the rejection, (which I here subjoin); which derive their greatest glory by appearing before the treaty was known; for that, which is bravery in distrefs, becomes insult in prosperity : And the treaty placed America on such a strong foundation, that had she then known it, the answer which she gave would have appeared rather as an air of triumph, than as the glowing screnity of fortitude.

Upon the whole the Abbe appears to have entirely miltaken the matter; for inftead of attributing the rejection of the propositons. to our knowledge of the treaty of alliance; he should have attributed the origin of them in the British cabinet, to their knowledge of that event. And then the reason why they were hurried over; to America in the ftate of bills, that is, before they were passed, into acts, is easily accounted for, which is, that they might have the chance of reaching America before any knowledge of the treaty should arrive, which they were lucky enough to do, and there met the fate they so richly merited. That these bills were brought into the British Parliament after the treaty with France was signed, is proved from the dates : the treaty being on the 6th and the bills the 17th of February. And that the signing the treaty was known in Parliament, when the bills were brought in, is likewise proved by a speech of Mr. Charles Fox, on the faid 17th, of February, who in reply to Lord North, informed the House of the treaty being signed, and challenged the Minister's knowledge of the same fact.*

Though.

• IN CONGRESS, April 22d, 1778.

"THE Committee to whom was referred the General's letter of the. L 18th, containing a certain printed paper fent from Philadelphia, purporting to be the draught of a Bill for declaring the intentions of the Parliament of Great Britain, as to the exercise of what they are pleased to term their right of impoling taxes within these United States; and also the draft of a Bill to enable the King of Great-Britain to appoint Commissioners, with powers to trest, confult, and agree upon the means of quieting certain difor ders within the faid States, beg leave to observe,

"That the faid paper being industriously circulated by emificities of the enemy, in a partial and fecret manner, the fame ought to be forthwith. printed for the public information.

"The Committee cannot afcertain whether the contents of the faid pape have been framed in Philadelphia or in Great Britain, much lefs whether the fame are really and truly intended to be brought into the Parliament of that kingdom, or whether the faid Parliament will confer thereon the usual, fole muities of their laws. But are inclined to believe this will happen, for the following reafons :

" Ift. Becaufe their General hath made divers feeble efforts to fet on foot fome kind of treaty during the laft winter, though either from miftake

Ba

ttee from The rewas read, d publisht must be refs gave and on a dated the of June, ir printed tion of the ove rejee nd Erance is had not y train of s only for to the chacondition ver trying ant idea of persuasion. the system and since. unfixt in lessen her hich those her.

ecretary to etters from and all that o far from at the time d a line of iny subject the loss of aware, totime with nuary preival of the been taken. ght it from m the Brie the time e rejection the latter, having tatherefore. muft

LETTER TO THE ARE RAYMAL

Though I an not furprifed to fee the Abbe millaken in matters of hiltory, acted at fo great a diffance from his fpherebof immediate i vi

me

rel. to 1

her of ofi un

> pr

北山

th

fo

li

ahen ides of his own dignity and impertance, the want of information, or one other could, he bath not made application to those who are invested with a proper authority. . Becaule they impose that the fallacious idea of a cellation of hof-culture will render these States remits in their preparations for war. July. Becaule believing the Americans manyied with war, they impose pate we will accede to the terms for the inhear prace.

the corrupt influence with their debates.

what one of their ministers thought proper to call his conciliatory motion, yls. will lead their own fubjects to continue a little longer the prefent war ; and as it will detach fome weak men in America from the caufe of freedom witthe. why, Because their King, from his own thewing, hath reafon to ap-rendicat his focts and armies, infrad of being employed against the tertring of these States, will be necessary for the defence of his own dominions.

Tebly. Because the impracticability of fubjugating this country, being

The Committee beg leave further to observe. That, upon a supposed in the faid paper will really go into the British the matters contained in the faid paper will really go into the Britifh terms Book, they ferve to facw, in a clear point of view, the weakness wickedness of the enemy.
Turin WIAANNES,
18. Because they formerly declared, not only that they had a right to be inhabitants of their States in all cafes whatfoever, but also that the biod the inhabitants of these States in all cales whattoever, but and the state of the states in all cales whattoever, but and the exercise of the tright. And this fubmilition they have endeavoured to exact by the forend. Receding from this claim, therefore, under the preferst circuinstance their inability to enforce it.

and there their inability to enforce it. of the Reprelentatives of America, praying to be confidered as fubjects, id protected in the enjoyment of peace, liberty, and fafety; and hath raged a most cruel war against them, and employed the favages to butcher when the women and children. But now the fame Prince pretends to treat with these very Reprefentatives, and grant to the arms of America what he side to her proyers. silv. Becaule they have uniformly laboured to conquer this continent, ejecting every idea of accommodation propoled to them, from a confidence their own frength. Wherefore it is evident, from the change in their. sode of attack, that they have loft this confidence. And, this, but by the most public and authentic acts of the nation, hath been, that is in completely with their dignity to treat with the Americans while alloy have arise all their hauds. Notwithftanding which, an offer is now at to be or treaty. and infincerity of the enemy appear from the follow-The wich confideration in Either

10. Either an Bills now to be pasted contain a direct or indirect cef-fion of mart of the former claims, or they do not. If they do, then it is acknow adged that they have factificed many brave men in an unjuft quar-

LIFER TO THE ANDE RATNAL.

the matof immediate ation, or on of hof.

they fap-bject to a did from tien, Tis. s that it var; and f freedom on to apft the terominions, ry, being hemselves

a luppofie he Britifh weakneis

s right to o that the zercile of & by the renman.

eft petitifubjects, and bath e butcher s to treat what he ontinent, onfidence e in their eir Minith been, na while WOIL ST 1

followrect cefnen it is ft quar-Iel.

mediate observation, yet I am more than furprised to find his wrong, (or at least what appears to to me) in the well-enlight

rel. If they do not, then they are calculated to dective America into ter to which neither argument before the war, nor force fince, could per her affent.

16 adly. The first of these Bills appears, from the title, to be a deck of the intentions of the British Parliament concerning the exercise of the right of the intentions of the British Parliament concerning the exercise of the right of imposing taxes within these states. Wherefore, should these States treat of imposing taxes within these should indicate a cknowledge that right, to obtain under the faid Bill, they would indiredly acknowledge that right, to obta which acknowledgment the prefent war hath been avowedly undertaken and profecuted, on the part of Great Britain. " 3dly. Should fuch pretended right be fo acquicfeed in, then of conference the tame might be exercised whenever the British Parliament should find themselves in a different tamper and diffestion; fince it must depend upon those, and fuch like tontingencies, how far men will act according to main former intention.

"Athly. The faid first Bill, in the body thereof, containeth no m matter, but is precifely the fame with the motion beforementioned, a liable to all the objections which lay against the faid motion, excepting following particular, viz. that by the motion, actual taxation was to be the pended, Io long as Americs fhould give as much as the faid Parlisment min think proper : whereas, by the properties Bill, it is to be fufpended as la future Parliaments continue of the fame mind with the prefent.

" sthly. From the fecond Bill it appears, that the British King mar he please, appoint Commissioners to freet and agree with those, when the please, about a variety of things therein mentioned. But such treases are ements are to be of no validity without the consurrence of the fait Parliament, except fo far as they relate to the inipention of holtilities, Parliament, except fo far as they relate to the fulperation of hoffilities, and of certain of their acts, the granting of parsons, and the appointment of Governors to thefe fovereign, free, and independent states. Whenefore, the faid Parliament have referved to themfelves in sepsels mords, the pow-er of fetting alide any fuch treaty, and taking the advantage of any circum-fhances which may arife to fubject this continent to their uturpations. "6 othly. The faid Bill, by holding forth a tender of pardon, implies or criminality in our juftifiable refiftance, and confequently, to treat ander it would be an implied acknowledgment, that the inhabitant of these Status were, what Britsin has declared them to be, Rebels. " 4thly. The inhabitants of these States being claimed by them as fub-

"7thly. The inhabitants of these States being claimed by them as fab jects, they may infer, from the nature of the negociation now pretended to be let on foot, that the faid inhabitants would of right is after wards have by fuch laws as they should make. Wherefore any agreement entries into on fuch negociation might at any future time he repealed. And, "8thly. Because the faid Bill purports, that the Commissioners therein. mentioned may treat with private individuals; a measure highly deronae tory to the dignity of the national character.

" From all which it appears evident to your Committee, that the faid Bills are intended to operate upon the hopes and fears of the good people of these States, so as to create divisions among them, and a defection from the common caufe, now by the bleffing of Divine Providence drawing near to a favourable fue. That they are the fequel of that infiduous plan, which, from the days of the Stamp-act down to the prefent time, hath involved this country in contention and blood fied. And that, as in other cafes lo in this, although circumftances may force them at times to re from their unjultifiable claims, there can be no doubt but they will as herepofore, upon the first favourable occasion, again difplay that luft of domina tion, which hath reut in twain the mighty empire of Britain I UFOR

LETTER TO THE ABBE RAYHAL.

" ()

« .p

6. t

"

in,

nei

nec

the 8 m

m

CE

pa

th

th

a

P

field of philosophical reflection. Here the materials are his own; ereated by himfelf; and the error, therefore, is an act of the mind. Hitherto my remarks have been confined to circumftances: the order in which they arole, and the events they produced. In these, my information being better than the Abbe's, my task was easy. How I may fucceed in controverting matters of fentiment and opinion, with one whom years, experience, and long-effablished reputation have placed in a superior line, I am lefs confident in; but as they fall within the scope of my observations, it would be improper to pass them over.

From this part of the Abbe's work to the latter end, I find feveral expressions which appear to me to start, with a cynical complexion, from the path of liberal thinking, or at least they are so involved as to lose many of the beauties which distinguish other parts of the performance.

The Abbe having brought his work to the period when the treaty of alliance between France and the United States commenced, proceeds to make fome remarks thereon. "In "Upon the whole matter, the Committee beg leave to report it as their opinion, That the Americans united in this arduous contell upon principles of common intereft, for the defence of common rights and privileges, which union hath been cemented by common calamities, and by mutual good offices and affection, fo the great caufe for which they contend, and in which all mankind are interefted, muft derive its fuccels from the continuance of that union. Wherefore any man or body of men, who fhould prefume to make any feparate or partial convention or agreement with Comattfiioners under the Crown of Great Britain, or any of them, ought to be confidered and treated as open and avowed enemies of these United States.

"And inafmuch as it appears to be the defign of the enemies of these. States to ball them into a fatal fecurity—to the end that they may act with a becoming weight and importance, it is the opinion of your Committee, That the teveral States be called upon to use the most firenuous exertions to have their respective quotas of continental troops in the field as soon as possible, and that all the multia of the faid States be held in readiness, to act as occasion may require."

The following is the answer of Congress to the second application. of the Commissioners.

York-Town, June 6, 17.78.

" Be

"I HAVE had the konour of laying your letter of the 3d inftant, with the sets of the British Parliament which came inclosed, before Congress; and I am inftructed to acquaint you, Sir, that they have already expressed their fentiments upon bills not effentially different from these acts, in a publication of the 22d of April 12ft.

SIR.

his own; ct of the cumftany prodube's, my natters of ence, and ne, 1' am by obferfind fecal comey are fo ish other when the commen-

"In

tit as their on principrivileges, by mutual id, and in e continuould prerith Comoght to be ed States. opinion, prence or hey fhall, irals, or is of the a with a mittee, rtions to as pofo act as cation

17.78.

b, with: ogrefs; prefied. s, in a.

St Be

" In fhort," fays he, " philosophy, whole first fentiment is the defire to fee all governments just, and all people happy, in casting her eyes upon this alliance of a monarchy, with a parple who are defending their liberty, is curious to know its man tive. She fees, at once, too clearly, that the happiness of man kind has no part in it."

Whatever train of thinking or of temper the Abbe might be in, when he penned this expression, matters not. They will neither qualify the fentiment, nor add to its defect. If right, it needs no apology; if wrong, it merits no excufe. It is feat into the world as an opinion of philosophy, and may be examined without regard to the author.

It feems to be a defect, connected with ingenuity, that it often employs itfelf more in matters of curiofity than ulefulnefs. Man mult be the privy counfellor of fate, or fomething is not right. He must know the fprings, the whys and wherefores of every thing, or he fits down unfatisfied. Whether this be a crime, or only a caprice of humanity, I am not enquiring into. I fhall take the paffage as I find it, and place my objections against it.

It is not fo properly the motives which produced the alliance, as the confequences which are to be produced from it, that mark out the field of philosophical reflection. In the one we only penetrate into the barren cave of secrecy, where little can be known, and every thing may be misconceived; in the other, the mind is presented with a wide extended prospect, of vegetative good, and fees a thousand blessings budding into existence.

But the expression, even within the compass of the Abbe's meaning, fets out with an error, because it is made to declare that, which no man has authority to declare. Who can fay that the happiness of mankind made no part of the motives which produced the alliance? To be able to declare this, a man must be possible of the mind of all the parties concerned, and know that their motives were forgething elfe.

In proportion as the independence of America became contemplated and underflood, the local advantages of it to the immediate actors, and the numerous benefits it promifed to mankind, appeared to be every day encreasing, and we faw not a temporate good for the prefent race only, but a continued good to all poi-

"Be affured, Sir, when the King of Great Britain shall be feriously in posed to put an end to the unprovoked and cruck war waged against the United States, Congress will readily attend to such terms of peace, as may consist with the honour of independent nations, the interest of their conflict cuts, and the facred regard they mean to pay to treaties. I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your most abedient, and most bumble ferroant, HENRY LAURENS, Prefident of Congrups,"

His Excellency, Sir Henry Clinton, K., B. Philad.

terity;

· water .

LETTER TO THE ABBE RAYNAL.

there, became the motives, therefore, added to those which preceded them, became the motives; on the part of America, which led her to propose and agree to the treaty of alliance, so the best effectual method of extending and fecuring happines; and therefore, with respect to us, the Abbe is wrong.

France, on the other hand, was fituated very differently to America. She was not acted upon by necessity to feek a friend, and therefore her motive in becoming one, has the ftrongest evidence of being good, and that which is fo, must have fome happinels for its object. With regard to herfelf the faw a train of conveniencies worthy her attention. ' By leffening the power of an enemy, whom, at the fame time, the fought neither to deftroy nor diftrefs, fhe gained an advantage without doing an evil, and created to herfelf a new friend by affociating with a country in misfortune. The fprings of thought that lead to actions of this kind, however political they may be, are nevertheless naturally beneficent; for in all caufes, good or bad, it is necellary there should be a fitness in the mind, to enable it to act in character with the object: Therefore, as a bad caufe cannot be profecuted. with a good motive, fo neither can a good cause be long supported by a' bad one, as no man acts without a motive, therefore, in the prefent inftance, as they cannot be bad, they must be admitted to be good. But the Abbe fets out upon fuch an extended scale, that he overlooks the degrees by which it is meafured, and rejects the beginning of good, becaule the end comesnot at once.

It is true that bad motives may in fome degree be brought to fupport a good caufe, or profecute a good object; but it never continues long, which is not the cale with France; for either the object will reform the mind, or the mind corrupt the object, or elfe, not being able, either way, to get into unifon, they will feparate in difguft: And this natural, though unperceived progrefs of affociation or contention between the mind and the object, is the fecret caufe of fidelity or defection. Every object man purfues is, for the time, a kind of miftrefs to his mind: if both are good or bad, the union is natural; but if they are in reverfe, and neither can feduce nor yet reform the other, the oppofition grows into diflike, and a feparation follows:

When the caufe of America first made her appearance on the fuge of the universe, there were many who, in the ftyle of adventurers and fortune-hunters, were dangling in her train, and making their court to her with every profession of honour and attachment. They were loud in her praise, and oftentatious in her fervice. Every place echoed with their ardour or their anger, and they seemed like men in love.—But, alas, they were fortune-hunters: Their expectations were excited, but their minds were unimpressed; and finding her not to their purpose, nor themselves reformed by her influence, they cealed their fuit, and in some influences deferted and betrayed her. Th and u pany. liberty monfil was f amon diftan an inc the fu ly up of di cence fhare Th

unint

was r

Ac

ed. affert fore tion of and t part, not f confie philo It licati tualit a kin has f othe plair

The

five

it car

fate

broi

then fate

feen

that

the

Was

fam

teria

There

1

V

which led s the beft and there-erently to k a friend, ongest evifome hapa train of ower of an to destroy n evil, and country in ons of this s naturally flary there n character profecuted. r furported therefore, y must be uch an exit is meaend comes-be brought ect; but it rance; for corrupt the inifon, they inperceived ind and the very object his mind: they are in they, the op-ance on the ftyle of adr train, and honour and mtatious in or their anthey were l, but their eir purpofe, d their fuit,

There.

There were others, who at first beheld her with indifference, and unacquainted with her character were cautious of her company. They treated her as one, who, under the fair name of liberty, might conceal the hideous figure of anarchy, or the gloomy moniter of tyranny. They knew not what the was. If fair, the was fair indeed. But still the was suffected, and though born among us appeared to be a stranger.

Accident with fome, and curiofity with others, brought on a diftant acquaintance. They ventured to look at her. They felt an inclination to fpeak to her. One intimacy led to another, till the fufpicion wore away, and a change of fentiment fiele gradually upon the mind; and having no felt-interest to ferve, no passion of difhonour to gratify, they became enamoured of her innocence, and unaltered by misfortune or uninflamed by fuccels fhared with fidelity in the varieties of her fate.

This declaration of the Abbe's, refpecting motives, has led me unintendedly into a train of metaphyfical reasoning; but there was no other avenue by which it could fo properly be approached. To place prefumption against prefumption, affertion against affertion, is a mode of opposition that has no effect; and therefore the more eligible method was, to shew that the declaration does not correspond with the natural progress of the mind, and the influence it has upon our conduct.—I shall now quit this part, and proceed to what I have before stated, namely, that it is not fo properly the motives which produced the alliance, as the confequences to be produced from it, that mark out the field of philosophical reflections.

It is an obfervation I have already made in fome former publication, that the circle of civilization is yet incomplete. A mutuality of wants have formed the individuals of each country into a kind of national fociety; and here the progrefs of civilization has ftopt. For it is eafy to fee, that nations with regard to each other (notwithftanding the ideal civil law, which every one explains as its fluits him), are like individuals in a ftate of nature. They are regulated by no fixt principle, governed by no compulfive law, and each does independently what it pleafes, or what it can.

Were it possible we could have known the world when in a flate of barbarilin, we might have concluded, that it never could be brought into the order we now fee it. The untamed mind was then as hard, if not harder to work upon in its individual flate, than the national mind is in its prefent one. Yet we have feen the accomplishment of the one, why then should we doubt that of the other?

There is a greater fitnels in mankind to extend and complete the civilization of nations with each other at this day, than there was to begin it with the unconnected individuals at first; in the fame manner that it is fomewhat easier to put together the materials of a machine after they are formed, than it was to form them

them from original matter. The prefent condition of the world differing to exceedingly from what it formerly was, has given a new call to the mind of man, more than what he appears to be fentible of. The wants of the individual, which first produced the idea of fociety; are now augmented into the wants of the nation, and he is obliged to feek from another country what before he fought from the next perfon.

Letters, the tongue of the world, have in fome measure brought all mankind acquainted, and, by an extension of their uses, are every day promoting fome new friendship. Through them diftant nations become capable of conversation, and losing by degrees the awkwardness of strangers, and the morofeness of sufpicion, they learn to know and understand each other. Science, the partizen of no country, but the beneficent patroness of all, has liberally opened a temple where all maymeet. Her influence on the mind, like the sun on the chilled earth, 'has long been preparing it for higher cultivation and further improvement. The philosopher of one country fees not an enemy in the philosopher of another: he takes his feat in the temple of science, and asks not who sits befide him.

This was not the condition of the barbarian world. Then the wants of man were few, and the objects within his reach. While he could acquire thefe, he lived in a flate of individual independence, the confequence of which was, there was as many nations as perfons, each contending with the other, to fecure fomething which he had; or to obtain fomething which he had not. The world had then no bufinefs to follow, no fluidies to exercise the mind. Their time was divided between floth and fatigue. Hunting and war were their chief occupations; fleep and food their principal enjoyments.

Now it is otherwife. A change in the mode of life has made it neceffary to be bufy; and man finds a thousand things to do now which before he did not. Instead of placing his ideas of greatness in the rude atchievements of the favage, he itudies arts, science, agriculture, and commerce, the refinements of the gentleman, the principles of fociety, and the knowledge of the philosopher.

There are many things which in themfelves are morally neither good nor bad, but they are productive of confequences, which are frongly marked with one or other of these characters. Thus commerce, though in itself a moral nullity, has had a considerable influence in tempering the human mind. It was the want of objects in the ancient world, which occasioned in them such a rude and perpetual turn for war. Their time hung on their hands without the means of employment. The indole ce they lived in afforded leisure for mischief, and being all idle at once, and equal in their circumstances, they were easily provoked or induced to action.

But the introduction of commerce furnished the world with objects, he world s given a ars to be duced the he nation, before he re brought rufes, are them difing by deis of fufpicience, the has liberaln the mind, ring it for lofopher of another: he ho fits be-

Then the his reach. vidual indeas many na-, to fecure g which he , no fludies en floth and ations; fleep ife has made hings to do this ideas of tudies arts, s of the genledge of the are morally confequences, le characters. as had a conl. It was the oned in them time hung on the indole ce ing all idle at the provoked objects,

objects, which in their extent, reach every man, and give him fomething to think about and fomething to do; by thefe his attention is mechanically drawn from the purfuits which a flate of indolence and an unemployed mind occafioned, and he trades with the fame countries, which former ages, tempted by their productions, and too indolent to purchale them, would have gone to war with

Thus, as I have already observed, the condition of the world being materially changed by the influence of science and cominerce, it is put into a straff not only to admit of, but to defire an extension of civilization. The principal and almost only remaining enemy it now has to encounter, is prejudice; for it is evidently the interest of mankind to agree and make the best of life. The world has undergone its divisions of empire, the several boundaries of which are known and settled. The idea of conquering countries, like the Greeks and Romans does not now exist; and experience has exploded the notion of going to war for the fake of profit. In short, the objects for war are exceedingly diminished, and there is now left scarcely any thing to quarrel about, but what arises from that demon of society, prejudice, and the consequent fullenness and untractableness of the temper.

There is fomething exceedingly curious in the conflictution and operation of prejudice. It has the fingular ability of accommodating itfelf to all the poffible varieties of the human mind. Some paffions and vices are but thinly feattered among mankind, and find only here and there a fitnels of reception. But prejudice, like the spider, makes every where its home. It has neither talle nor choice of place, and all that it requires is room. There is fcarcely a fituation, except fire of water, in which a fpider will not live. So, let the mind be as naked as the walls of an empty and forfaken tenement, gloomy as a dungeon, or ornamented with the richeft abilities of thinking ; let it be hot. cold, dark, or light, lonely or inhabited, fill prejudice, if undiffurbed, will fill it with cobwebs, and live, like the faider, where there feems nothing to live on. If the one prepares her food by poiforing it to her palate and her ufe, the other does the fame; and as feveral of our pattions are firongly charactered by the animal world, projudice may be denominated the fpider of the mind.

Perhaps no two events ever united fo intimately and forceably to combat and 'expel' prejudice, as the Revolution of America, and the Alliance with France. Their effects are felt, and their influence already extends as well to the old world as the new. Our ilyle and manner of thinking have undergone a revolution, more extraordinary than the political revolution of the country. We fee with other eyes; we hear with other ears; and think with other thoughts, than those we formerly used. We can look back or our own prejudices, as if they had been the prejudices of C other people. We now fee and know they were prejudicess nothing else; and relieved from their flackles, enjoy a freedom of mind we felt not before. It was not all the argument, however powerful, nor all the reafoning, however elegant, that could have produced this change, fo neceflary to the extension of the mind and the cordiality of the world, without the two circumstances of the Revolution and the Alliance.

Had America dropt quietly from Britain, no material change in fentiment had taken place. The fame notions, prejudices, and conceits, would have governed in both countries, as governed them before ; and, ftill the flaves of error and education, they would have travelled on in the beaten tract of vulgar and habitual thinking. But brought about by the means it has been, both with regard to ourfelves, to France, and to England, every corner of the mind is fwept of its cobwebs, poifon, and duft, and made fit for the reception of generous happinefs.

Perhaps there never was an alliance on a broader basis, than that between America and France, and the progress of it is worth attending to. The countries had been enemies, not properly of themselves, but through the medium of England. They, eriginally, Mad no quarrel with each other, nor any cause for one, but what arose from the interest of England, and her arming America against France. At the same time, the Americans, at a distance from and unacquainted with the world, and tutored in all the prejudices which governed those who governed them, conceived it their duty to act as they were taught. In doing this they expended their substance to make conquests, not for themfelves but for their masses, who in return, treated them as slaves.

A long fucceffion of infolent feverity, and the feparation finally occafioned by the commencement of hoftilities at Lexington, on the 19th of April, 1775, naturally produced a new difpolition of thinking. As the mind closed itfelf towards England, it opened itfelf towards the world; and our prejudices, like our oppreffions, underwent, though lefs obferved, a mental examination; until we found the former as inconfistent with reafon and benevolence, as the latter were repugnant to our civil and political rights.

While we were thus advancing by degrees into the wide field of extended humanity, the alliance with France was concluded; an alliance not formed for the mere purpole of a day, but on just and generous grounds, and with equal and mutual advantages; and the eafy affectionate manner in which the parties have fince communicated, has made it an alliance, not of courts only, but of countries. There is now an union of mind as well as of intereft; and our hearts, as well as our profperity, call on us to fupport it.

The people of England not having experienced this change, and thewise no idea of it. They were hugging to their bosons free fame projudices we were trampling beneath our feet; and they

a freedom ent, howant, that extension at the two ial change orejudices, is governtion, they ir and hahas been, nd, every duft, and afis, than t is worth properly They, cause for er arming ricans, at tutored in ed them, In doing for themas flaves. aration fi-Lexingnew dif-England, like our l examieafon and and polivide field acluded; ut on juft ages; and ace com-, but of intereft; port it. change, bofoms et; and they they expected to keep a hold upon America, by that narrownefs of thinking which America difdained. What they were proud of, we defpifed : and this is a principal caufe why all their negociations, conftructed on this ground, have failed. We are now really another people, and cannot again go back to ignorance and prejudice. The mind once enlightened cannot again become dark. There is no possibility, neither is there any term to exprefs the fuppolition by, of the mind unknowing any thing it already knows; and therefore all attempts on the part of England, fitted to the former habit of America, and on the expectation of their applying now; will be like perfuading a feeing man to become blind, and a fensible one to turn an ideot. The firft of which is unnatural, and the other impossible:

As to the remark which the Abbe makes of the one country being a monarchy and the other a republic, it can have no effential meaning. Forms of government have nothing to do with treaties. The former are the internal police of the countries feverally; the latter, their external police jointly: and fo long as each performs its part, we have no more right or bufinefs to know how the one or the other conducts its domeftic affairs, than we have to enquire into the private concerns of a family.

But had the Abbe reflected for a moment, he would have feen that courts, or the governing powers of all countries, be their forms what they may, are relatively republics with each other. It is the first and true principle of alliancing. Antiquity may have given precedence, and power will naturally create importance, but their equal right is never difputed. It may likewife be worthy of remarking, that a monarchical country can fuffer nothing in its popular happines by allying with a republican one; and republican governments have never been destroyed by their external connections, but by fome internal convultion or contrivance. France has been in alliance with the republic of Swifferland for more than two hundred years, and still Swifferland retains her original form as entire as if the had allied with a republic like herfelf; therefore this remark of the Abbe goes to nothing.-Befides, it is best that mankind should mix. There is ever fomething to learn, either of manners or principle; and it is by a free communication, without regard to domettic matters; that friendship is to be extended, and prejudice destroyed all over the world.

But, notwithstanding the Abbe's high professions in favour of liberty, he appears fometimes to forget himfelf, or that his theory is rather the child of his fancy than of his judgment; for in almost the fame instant that he censures the alliance as not originally or fufficiently calculated for the happiness of mankind, he, by a figure of implication, accuses France for having acted fo generously and unrefervedly in concluding it. "Why did, "they (fays he, meaning the Court of France) tie themselves down

C, 2

" 63

" by an inconfiderate treaty to conditions with the Congress, " which they might themfelves have held in dependence by am-" ple and regular supplies."

When an author undertakes to treat of public happinefs, he ought to be certain that he does not militake passion for right, nor imagination for principle. Principle, like truth, needs no contrivance. It will ever tell its own tale, and tell it the fame way. But where this is not the case, every page must be watched, recollected, and compared, like an invented story.

I am furprifed at this passage of the Abbe. It means nothing, or it means ill; and in any case it shews the great difference between speculative and practical knowledge. A treaty, according to the Abbe's language, would have reither duration nor affection; it might have lasted to the end of the war, and then expired with it.—But France, by acting in a ftyle superior to the little politics of narrow thinking, has established a generous same, and won the love of a country she was before a stranger to. She had to treat with a people who thought as nature taught them; and, on her own part, the wisely faw there was no prefent advantage to be obtained by unequal terms, which could balance the more lasting ones that might flow from a kind and generous beginning.

From this part the Abbe advances into the fecret transactions of the two Cabinets of Verfailles and Madrid, refpecting the independance of America; through which I mean not to follow him. It is a circumftance fufficiently firiking, without being commented on, that the former union of America with Britain produced a power, which, in her hands, was becoming dangerous to the world: and there is no improbability in fuppoling, that, had the latter known as much of the ftrength of the former before the began the quarrel, as she has known fince, that inftead of attempting to reduce her to unconditional fubmifion, fhe would have proposed to her the conquest of Mexico. But from the countries feparately Spain has, nothing to apprehend, though from their union fhe had more to fear than any other power in Europe.

The part which I shall more particularly confine myself to, in that wherein the Abbe takes an opportunity of complimenting the British Ministry with high encomiums of admiration, on their rejecting the offered mediation of the Court of Madrid, in 1779.

It must be remembered, that before Spain joined France in the war, she undertook the office of a mediator, and made proposals to the British King and Ministry so exceedingly favourable to their interest, that had they been accepted, would have become inconvenient, if not inadmissible, to America. These proposals were nevertheless rejected by the British Cabinet: on which the Abbe says, —

" It is in fuch a circumfance as this; it is in the time when " noble

28

e by aminefs, he for right, needs no the fame watched, nothing, rence beaccording. br affectin expired the little ame, and She had em; and, dvantage. the more. ginning. anfactions cting the to follow ut being n Britain g dangering, that, er before ead of athe would from the l, though power in felf to, is fimenting ation, on addid, in France in nade proy favourould have hefe pronet: on me when " noble

moble pride elevates the foul fuperior to all terroz; when " nothing is feen more dreadful than the shame of receiving the " law, and when there is no doubt or hefitation which to chufe, " between ruin and difhonour; it is then, that the greatness of " a nation is displayed. I acknowledge, however, that men " accustomed to judge of things by the event, call great and " perilous refolutions, heroifm or madnefs, according to the .. good or bad fuccefs with which they have been attended. If " then I should be asked, what is the name which shall in years " to come be given to the firmnels which was in this moment exhibited by the English, I shall answer, that I do not know. "But that which it deferves I know. I know that the fannals . se of the world hold out to us but rarely the august and majes-"tic spectacle of a nation, which chuses rather to renounce its ". duration than its glory."

In this paragraph the conception is lofty, and the expression elegant; but the colouring is too high for the original, and the likenels fails through an excels of graces. To fit the powers of thinking and the turn of language to the fubject, fo as to bring out a clear conclusion that fhall hit the point in queftion, and nothing elfe, is the true criterion of writing. But the greater part of the Abbe's writings (if he will pardon me the remark) appear to me uncentral, and burthened with variety. They reprefent a beautiful wildernefs without paths; in which the eye is diverted by every thing, without being particularly directed to any thing : and in which it is agreeable to be loft, and difficult to find the way out.

Before I offer any other remark on the spirit and compofition of the above passage, I shall compare it with the cirsumstance it alludes to.

The circumstance, then, does not deferve the encomium. The rejection was not prompted by her fortitude, but her vanity. She did not view it as a cafe of defpair, or even of extreme danger, and confequently the determination to renounce her duration rather than her glory, cannot apply to the condition of her mind. She had then high expectations of fubjugating America, and had no other naval force against her than France; neither was the certain that rejecting the mediation of Spain would combine that power with France. New mediations might arise more favourable than those the had refused. But if they fhould not, and Spain thould join, the ftill faw that it would only bring out her naval force against France and Spain, which was not wanted, and could not be employed against America; and habits of thinking had taught her to believe herfelf fuperior to both.

But in any cafe to which the confequence might point, there there was nothing to imprefs her with the idea of renouncing ther duration. It is not the policy of Europe to fuffer the extinction of any power, but only to lop off, or prevent its dangerous encreafe. She was likewife freed by fituation from the internal and immediate horrors of invation; was rolling in diffipation, and looking for conquefts; and though the fuffered nothing but the expence of war, the ftill had a greedy eye to magnificent reimburfement.

LETTER TO THE ABBE RAYNAL.

But if the Abbe is delighted with high and ftriking fingularities of character, he might, in America, have found ample field for encomium. Here was a people who could not know what part the world would take for, or against them; and who were venturing on an untried icheme, in oppolition to a power, against which more formidable nations had failed. They had every thing to learn but the principles which fupported them, and every thing to procure that was neceffary for their defence. They have at times feen themfelves as low as diffress could make them, without thewing the leaft ftagger in their fortitude; and been raifed again by the most unexpected events, without discovering an unmanly difcomposure of joy. To helitate or to despair are conditions equally unknown in America. Her mind was prepared for every thing; because her original and final resolution of fucceeding or perifhing, included all possible circumstances.

The rejection of the British propositions in the year 1778; circumstanced as America was at that time, is a far greater instance of unshaken fortitude than the refusal of the Spanish mediation by the Court of London : and other historians besides the Abbe, flruck with the vastness of her conduct therein, have, like himself, attributed it to a circumstance which was then unknown; the alliance with France. Their error shews the idea of its greatness; because, in order to account for it, they have fought a cause fuited to its magnitude, without knowing that the cause existed in the prineiples of the country *.

* Extract from, " A short review of the present reign," in England. Page 45, in the New Annual Register for the year 1780.

THE Commissioners, who, in consequence of Lord North's conciliatory bills, went over to America, to propose terms of peace to the colories, were wholly unsuccessful. The concessions which formerly would have been received with the utmost gratitude, were rejected with disdain. Now was the time of American pride and hanghtiness. It is probable, however, that was not pride and hanghtiness alone that dictated the Reco-

" lations

LETTER TO THE ABBE RAYNAL.

But this paffionate encomium of the Abbe is defervedly fubject to moral and philosophical objections. It is the effusion of wild thinking, and has a tendency to prevent that humanity of reflection which the criminal conduct of Britain enjoins on her as a duty.—It is a laudanum to courtly iniquity.—It keeps in intoxicated fleep the confcience of a nation; and more mischief is effected by wrapping up guilt in fplendid excuse, than by directly patronizing it.

Britain is now the only country which holds the world in diffurbance and war; and inftead of paying compliments to the excess of her crimes, the Abbe would have appeared muchmore in character, had he put to her, or to her monarch, this ferious queftion—

Are there not miferies enough in the world, too difficult to be encountered, and too pointed to be borne, without ftudying to enlarge the lift, and arming it with new deftruction ? Is life fo very long, that it is neceffary, nay even a duty, to fhake the fand, and haften out the period of duration ? Is the path fo elegantly fmooth, fo decked on every fide, and carpeted with joys, that wretchednefs is wanted to enrich it as a foil ? Go, afk thine aching heart, when forrow from a thoufand caufes wound it; go, afk thy fickened felf, when every medicine fails, whether this be the cafe or not ?

Quitting my remarks on this head, I proceed to another, in which the Abbe has let loofe a vein of ill-nature, and, what is ftill worfe, of injuffice.

After cavilling at the treaty, he goes on to characterize the feveral parties combined in the war.—" Is it poffible," fays the Abbe, "that a ftrict union fhould long fubfift amongft "confederates of characters fo opposite as the hafty, light, difdainful Frenchman, the jealous, haughty, fly, flow, circumfpective Spaniard, and the American, who is fecretly finatching looks at the mother country, and would rejoice, were they compatible with his independence, at the difafters of his allies ?"

To draw foolifh portraits of each other, is a mode of attack and reprifal, which the greater part of mankind are fond of indulging. The ferious philosopher should be above it, more especially in cases from which no possible good can arise, and mischief may, and where no received provocation can pal-

* lutions of Congress, but a distrust of the sincerity of the offers of "Britain, a determination not to give up their independence, and "ABOVE ALL, THE ENGAGEMENTS INTO WHICH THEY HAD ENTERED "BY THE REATE TREATY WITH FRANCE." Liate the exevent its ion from s rolling ough fhe a greedy king finve found ho could r against e, in ope nations principles that was en themt thewing again by unmanly conditions epared for on of fueinces. ear 1778; ar greater hiftorians hiftorians r conduct comftance ce. Their r order to ts magnithe prin-But n England. 1780. North's conof peace to sions which nost gratime of Amevever, that the Reio-" Lations

t

21

h

21 jt

ai ft

W

ġ

rì

V

d

ij

C

h

k

7

P

1

t

Phit

reiframe

liate the offence. — The Abbe might have invented a difference of character for every country in the world, and they in return might find others for him, till in the war of wit all real character is loft. The pleafantry of one nation or the gravity of another may; by a little pencilling, be difforted noto whimfical features, and the painter become as much hughed at as the painting.

But why did not the Abbe look a little deeper, and bring forth the excellencies of the feveral parties? Why did he not dwell with pleafure on that greatnefs of character, that fuperiority of heart, which has marked the conduct of France in her conquests, and which has forced an acknowledgment. even from Britain?

There is one line, at leaft (and many others might be difcovered) in which the confederates unite, which is, that of a rival eminence in their treatment of their enemies. Spain, in her conquest of Minorca and the Bahama Islands, confirms this remark. America has been invariable in her lenity from the beginning of the war, notwithstanding the high provocations the has experienced? It is England only who has been infolent and cruel.

11

But why must America be charged with a crime undeferved by her conduct, more fo by her principles, and which, if a face would be fatal to her honour? I mean that of want of attachment to her allies, or rejoicing in their difasters. She, it is true, has been affiduous in fhewing to the world that fhe was not the aggreffor towards England; that the quarrel was not of her feeking, or, at that time, even of her wishing. But toldraw inferences from her candour, and even from her justification, to stab her character by, and I fee nothing elfe from which they can be supposed to be drawn, is unkind and unjust.

Does her rejection of the British propositions in 1778, before the knew of any alliance with France, correspond with the Abbe's description of her mind? Does a fingle inftance of her conduct fince that time justify it?—But there is a still betterevidence to apply to, which is, that of all the mails which at different times have been way-laid on the road, in divers parts of America, and taken and carried into New-York, and from which the most fecret and confidential private letters, as well as those from authority, have been published, not one of them, I repeat it, not a fingle one of them, gives countenance to such a charge.

This is not a country where men are under government nted a dif-, and they var of wit tion or the e diftorted as much.

and bring did he not r, that fuof France wledgment ght be difs, that of a Spain, in , confirms lenity from h provocano has been e undefervwhich, if a want of atrs. She, it rld that fhe juarrel was er wifhing. en from her hothing elfe unkind and

1778, befpond with inftance of ere is a ftill naile which i, in divers New-York, vate letters, , not one of ountenance overnment reffraint reftraint in speaking; and if there is any kind of reftraint, it arises from a fear of popular referiment. Now, if nothing in, her private or public correspondence favours such a suggestion, and if the general disposition of the country is such as to make it unsafe for a man to shew an appearance of joy at any difafter to her ally; on what grounds, I ask, can the accusation stand? What company the Abbe may have kept in France, we cannot know; but this we know, that the account he gives does not apply to America.

Had the Abbe been in America at the time the news arrived of the difafter of the fleet under Count de Graffe, in the Weft Indies, he would have feen his vait miftake. Neither do I remember any inftance, except the loss of Charleftown, in which the public mind fuffered more fevere and pungent concern, or underwent more agitations of hope and apprehenfion, as to the truth or falfehood of the report. Had the loss been all our own, it could not have had a deeper effect, yet it was not one of these cafes which reached to the independence of America.

In the geographical account which the Abbe gives of the Thirteen States, he is fo exceedingly erroneous, that to attempt a particular refutation, would exceed the limits I have preferibed to myfelf. And as it is a matter neither political, hiftorical, nor fentimental, and which can always be contradicted by the extent and natural circumftances of the conntry, I fhall pafs it over; with this additional remark, that I never yet faw an European defcription of America that was true, neither can any perfon gain a juft idea of it, but by coming to it.

Though I have already extended this letter beyond what I at first proposed, I am, nevertheles, obliged to omit many observations, I originally designed to have made. I wish there had been no occasion for making any. But the wrong ideas which the Abbe's work had a tendency to excite, and the prejudicial impressions they might make, multibe an apology for my remarks, and the freedom with which they are done.

I observe the Abbe has made a fort of epitome of a confiderable part of the pamphlet COMMON SENSE, and introduced it in that form into his publication. But there are other places where the Abbe has borrowed freely from the fame pamphlet, without acknowledging it. The difference between fociety and government, with which the pamphlet opens, is taken from it, and in fome expressions almost literally

LETTER TO THE ABBE RAYNA

rally, into the Abbe's work, as if originally his own; and through the whole of the Abbe's remarks on this head, the idea in Common Senfe is fo clofely copied and purfued, that the difference is only in words, and in the arrangement of the thoughts, and not in the thoughts themfelves".

But as it is time I should come to a conclusion of my letter, I shall forbear all further observations on the Abbe's work, and take a concife view of the flate of public affairs, fince the time in which that performance was publified.

A mind habited to actions of meannels and injuffice, commits them without reflection, or with a very partial one; for on what other ground than this, can we account for the declaration of war against the Dutch? To gain an idea of the politics which actuated the British Ministry to this measure, we must enter into the opinion which they, and the English in general, had formed of the temper of the Dutch nation; and from thence infer what their expectation of the confequences would be.

COMMON SENSE

34

" Some writers have fo confounded fociety with government, ss to leave little or no diftinction between them; whereas they are not only different, but have different origins.

. " Society is produced by our wante, and governments by our wickedness; the former promotes our happines politively, by uniting our affections; the latter negatively, by reftraining our reprefling of evil." Vices."

ABBE RAYNAL.

Could

0 A

Ph

0

W

ſ

c fl is

" Care muß be taken not to confound together fociety with government. That they may be known diftincly, their origin should be confidered.

" Society originates in the wants. of men, government in their vices. Society tends always to good ; government ought always to tend to the

In the following paragraphs there is less likeness in the language. but the ideas in the one are evidently copied from the other.

" In order to gain a clear and juft idea of the defign and end of government, let us suppose a small number of perfons meeting in fome fequef. tered part of the earth unconnected with the reft; they will then reprefent the peopling of any country or of the world. In this fate of natu-ral therty, fociety will be our first ral literty, fociety will be our first thought. A thousand motives will excite them thereto. The strength of one main is fo unequal to his wants. and his mind fo unfitted for perpetual faitude, that he is foon obliged to leck all tance of another, who, in

"Man, thrown as it were bychance upon the globe, furrounded by all the. evils of nature, obliged continually to defend and protect his life againik the ftorms and tempefts of the air, against the inundations of water, against the fire of volcanoes, against the intemperance of frigid and torrid' zones; against the sterility of the carth, which refuses him aliment, or its baneful fecundity, which makes poilon fpring up beneath his feet; in thort, against the claws and teeth of favage beafts, who difpute with him his habitation and his prey, and at tacking with 3 and head, the fued, that sem, at of on of my he Abbe's lic affairs, ifned.

tize, comrtial one ; ant for the an idea of ry to this they, and aper of the expectation

Could

AL. in not to conwith governbe known diftould be con-in the wants in their vices. to good ; goto tend to the language.

ere bychanco ded by all the i continually is life against ts of the air, s of water. noes, againft id and torrid' ulity of the im aliment, which makes his feet : in and teeth of te with him orey, and attacking

Could they have imagined that Holland would have ferioully made a common caule with France, Spain, and America, the British Ministry would never have dared to provoke them. It would have been a madnels in politics to have done to; unless their views were to hasten on a period of fuch emphatic distress, as should justify the concessions which they faw they must one day or other make to the world, and for which they wanted an apology to themselves. — There is a temper in fome men which seeks a pretence for fubmission. Like a ship disabled in action, and unfitted to continue it, it waits the approach of a still larger one to strike to, and feels relief at the opportunity. Whether this is greatness or littleness of mind, I am not enquiring into. I should suppose it to be the latter, because it proceeds from

COMMON SENSE.

Sis turn, requires the fame. Four or five united would be able to raife a colerable dwelling in the midft of a wildernefs; but one man might labour out the common period of life, without accomplifning any thing; when he had felled his timber he could not remove it, nor cred: it af-ter it was removed; hunger, in the mean time, would urge him from his work, and every different want call him a different way. Discase, nay even missortune, would be death ; for though neither might be immediately mortal, yet either of them would difable him from living, and reduce him to a flate in which he might rather be faid to perifh than to die. power, would form our newly arrived emigrants into fociety, the reciprocal bleffings of which would fuperfede and render the obligations of law and government .unneceffary, while they remained perfectly just to each other. But as nothing but heaven is impregnable to vice, it will unavoidably happen, that in proportion as they furmount the first difficulties of emigration which bound them together in a common caule, they will begin to relax in their duty and attachment to each other, and this remifine's will point out the ne-ceffity of eftablishing fome form of government to supply the celect of meral virtue."

ABBE RAYNAL.

tacking his perfon, feem refolved to render themfelves rulers of this globe, of which he thinks bimfelf to be th mafter. Man, in this flate, alone and abandoned to himfelf, could do nothing for his prefervation. It was neceflary, therefore, that he fhould unite himfelf, and affociate with his like, in order to bring together their ftrength and intelligence in common flock. It is by this union. that he has triumphed over fo. many evils, that he had fashioned this globe to his ufe, reftrained the rivers, fubjugated the feas, infured his fubliftence, conquered a part of the anima's in obliging them to ferve him, and driven others far from his empire to the depth of deferts or of woods, where their number diminishes from age to age. What a man alone would not have been able to effect, men have executed in concert; and altogether they preferve their work-Such is the origin, fuch the advantages, and the end of fociety .- Government owes its birth to the noceffity of preventing and repressing the injuries which the affociated individuals had to fear from one angther. It is the centinel who watches, in order that the common labour e be not difturbed."

the want of knowing how to bear misfortune in its original frate.

But the fublequent conduct of the British cabinet has thewn that this was not their plan of politics, and confequently their motives mult be fought for in another line.

The truth is, that the British had formed a very humble opinion of the Dutch nation. They looked on them as a people who would submit to any thing; that they might infult them as they liked, plunder them as they pleased, and still the Dutch dared not to be provoked.

If this be taken as the opinion of the British cabinet, the measure is easily accounted for, because it goes on the supposition, that when, by a declaration of hostilities, they had robbed the Dutch of some millions sterling, (and to rob them was popular) they could make peace with them again whenever they pleased, and on almost any terms the British Ministry should propose. And no some was the plundering committed, than the accommodation was set on foot, and failed.

When once the mind lofes the fenfe of its own dignity, it lofes, likewife, the ability of judging of it in another. And the American war has thrown Britain into fuch a variety of abfurd fituations, that arguing from herfelf, fhe fees not in what conduct national dignity confifts in other countries. From Holland fhe expected duplicity and fubmiffion, and this miftake from her having acted, in a number of inftances during the prefent war, the fame character herfelf:

To be allied to, or connected with Britain, feems to be an unfafe and impolitic fituation. Holland and America are inflances of the reality of this remark. Make those countries the allies of France or Spain, and Britain will court them with civility, and treat them with respect; make them her own allies, and the will infult and plunder them. In the first cafe, the feels fome apprehensions at offending them, because they have support at hand; in the latter, those apprehensions do not exist. Such, however, has hitherto been her conduct.

Another measure which has taken place fince the publication of the Abbe's work, and likewife fince the time of my beginning this letter, is the change in the British Ministry. What line the new cabinet will purfue respecting America, is at this time unknown; neither is it very mate-

112

its origibinet has ind confeer line. ry humble them as a might ineafed, and abinet, the on the fupities, they s, (and to with them y terms the ner was the was fet on dignity, it n another. fuch a vaherfelf, fhe its in other ity and fub-, in a numne character feems to be America are thofe counn will court make them them. In nding them, r, those apitherto been the time of itifh Minife respecting t very matesial, unless they are feriously disposed to a general and honourable peace.

Repeated experience has thewn, not only the impracticability of conquering America, but the still higher impossibility of conquering her mind, or recalling her back to her former condition of thinking. Since the commencement of the war, which is now approaching to eight years, thousands and tens of thousands have advanced, and are daily advancing into the first stage of manhood, who know nothing of Britain but as a barbarous enemy, and to whom the independance of America appears as much the natural and established government of the country, as that of England does to an Englishman. And on the other hand, thousands of the aged, who had British ideas, have dropped and are daily dropping, from the frage of buliness and life. The natural progress of generation and decay operates every hour to the difadvantage of Britain. Time and death, hard enemies to contend with, fight constantly against her interest; and the bills of mortality, in every part of America, are the thermometers of her decline. The children in the freets are from their cradle bred to confider her as their only foe. They hear of her cruelties; of their fathers, uncles, and kindred killed; they fee the remain of burnt and destroyed houses, and the common tradition of the school they go to, tells them, these things were done by the British.

These are circumstances which the mere English state politician, who confiders man only in a state of manhood, does not attend to.' He gets entangled with parties coeval or equal with himself at home, and thinks not how fast the rising generation in America is growing beyond his knowledge of them, or they of him. In a few years all personal remembrance will be loss, and who is king or minister in England, will be little known, and fcarcely enquired after.

The new British administration is composed of performs who have ever been against the war, and who have constantly reproduced all the violent measures of the former one: They confidered the American war as destructive to themfelves, and opposed it on that ground. But what are these things to America? She has nothing to do with English parties. The ins and the outs are nothing to her. It is the whole country she is at war with, or must be at peace with. Were every minister in England a Chatham, it would now weigh little or nothing in the scale of American politics.

£

Le ·

LETTEN TO THE ABBE RAYNAL.

Death has preferved to the memory of this flatefman, that fame, which he, by living, would have loft. His plans and opinions, towards the latter part of his life, would have been attended with as many evil confequences, and as much reprobated here, as those of Lord North; and confidering him a wise man, they abound with inconfitencies amounting to abfurdities.

It has apparently been the fault of many in the late minority, to fuppole, that America would agree to certain terms with them, were they in place, which fhe would not ever liften to from the then administration. This idea can answer no other purpole than to prolong the war; and Britain may, at the expence of many more millions, learn the fatality of fuch mistakes. If the new ministry wifely avoid this hopeles policy, they will prove themselves better pilots, and wifer men than they are conceived to be; for it is every day expected to see their bark strike upon fome hidden rock, and go to pieces.

But there is a line in which they may be great. A more brilliant opening needs not to prefent itfelf.; and it is fuch a one, as true magnanimity would improve, and humanity rejoice in.

A total reformation is wanted in England. She wants an expanded mind, --- an heart which embraces the univerfe. Instead of shutting herself up in an island, and quarrelling with the world, the would derive more lafting happines, and acquire more real riches, by generoufly mixing with it, and bravely faying, I am the enemy of none. It is not. now a time for little contrivances, or artful politics. The European world is too experienced to be imposed upon, and America tob wife to be duped. It must be fomething new and masterly that must succeed. The idea of feducing America from her independence, or corrupting her from her alliance, is a thought too little for a great mind, and impossible for any honeft one, to attempt. Whenever politics are applied to debauch mankind from their integrity, and diffolve the virtues of human nature, they become deteftable and to be a ftate fman upon this plan, is to be a commissioned villain. Be who aims at it, leaves a vacancy in his character, which may be filled up with the worft of epithets.

If the difpolition of England should be such, as not to wree to a general and honourable peace, and that the war must, at all events, continue longer, I cannot help withing that the alliances which America has or may enter into, may become the only objects of the war. She wants an opportunity of fhewing to the world, that fhe holds her honour as dear and facred as her independence, and that fhe will in no fituation forfake those, whom no negociations could induce to forfake her. Peace to every reflective mind is a defirable object; but that peace which is accompanied with a ruined character, becomes a crime to the feducer, and a curfe upon the feduced.

that

But where is the impoffibility, or even the great difficulty, of England forming a friendfhip with France and Spain, and making it a national virtue to renounce for ever those prejudiced inveteracies it has been her custom to cheristh; and which, while they ferve to fink her with an encreasing enormity of debt, by involving her in fruitless wars, become likewise the bane of her repose, and the destruction of her manners; We had once the fetters that she has now, but experience has shewn us the mistake, and thinking justly has set right.

The true idea of a great nation is that which extends and promotes the principles of univerfal fociety. Whofe mind rifes above the atmospheres of local thoughts, and confiders mankind, of whatever nation or profession they may be, as the work of one Creator. The rage for conquest has had its fashion and its day. Why may not the amiable virtues have the fame? The Alexanders and Cæsars of antiquity, have left behind them their monuments of destruction, and are remembered with hatred; while these more exalted characters, who first taught fociety and foience, are bless with the gratitude of every age and country. Of more use was one philosopher, though a heathen, to the world, than all the heathen conguerors that ever existed.

Should the prefent revolution be diffinguished by opening a new system of extended civilization, it will receive from heaven the highest evidence of approbation; and as this is a subject to which the Abbe's powers are so eminently suited, I recommend it to his attention, with the affection of a friend and the ardour of an universal citizen.

POSTSCRIPT.

n, that b plans ld have s much idering punting

n terms not ever anfwer in may, tality of hopelefs ts, and very day ock, and

A more it is fuch umanity wants an universe. arrelling appinels, with it, It is not The s. oon, and ing new feducing from her and impolitics rity, and letestable nfiioned characts. s not to the war withing an shat

Re Barris :

11

EL NER COLLEGE

Hoffins Dine

39

POSTSCRIPT.

SINCE clofing the foregoing letter, fome intimations refpecting a general peace, have made their way to America. On what authority or foundation they fland, or how near or remote fuch an event may be, are circumflances, I am not enquiring into. But as the fubject must fooner or later become a matter of ferious attention, it may not be improper, even at this early period, candidly to investigate fome points that are connected with it, or lead towards it.

The independence of America is at this moment as firmly established as that of any other country in a ftate of war. It is not length of time, but power, that gives ftability. Nations at war know nothing of each other on the fcore of antiquity. It is their prefent and immediate ftrength, together with their connections, that mult fupport them. To which we may add, that a right which originated to-day, is as much a tight, as if it had the fanction of a thousand years; and therefore the independence and prefent government of America are in no more danger of being fubverted, because they are modern, than that of England is fecure, because it is unclent.

The politics of Britain, fo far as they respected America, were originally conceived in idiotism, and acted in madnets. There is not a frep which bears the smallest trace of rationality. In her management of the war, the has laboured to be wretched, and ftudied to be hated; and in all her former propositions for accommodation, the has discovered a total ignorance of mankind, and of those natural and unalterable senfations by which they are so generally governed. How the may conduct herself in the present or future business of negotating a peace is yet to be proved.

He

He is a weak politican who does not understand human nature, and penetrate into the effect which measures of government will have upon the mind. All the milcarriages of Britain have arisen from this defect. The former Ministry acted as if they supposed mankind to be without a mind; and the prefent Ministry, as if America was without a memory. The one must have supposed we were incapable of feeling ; and the other that we could not remember injuries.

There is likewife another line in which politicians miftake, which is that of not rightly calculating, or rather of mifjudging, the confequence which any given circumstance will. produce. Nothing is more frequent, as well in common as in political life, than to hear people complain, that fuch and fuch means produced an event directly contrary to their intentions. But the fault lies in their not judging rightly what the event would be; for the means produced only its proper and natural confequence.

It is very probable, that in a treaty for peace, Britain wil contend for fome post or other in North America; perhaps Canada or Halifax, or both : and I infer this from the known deficiency of her politics, which have ever yet made use of means, whose natural event was against both her intereft and her expectation. But the question with her ought to be, Whether it is worth her while to hold them, and what will be the confequence?

Respecting Canada, one or other of the two following will take place, viz. If Canada fhould people, it will revolt, and if it do not people, it will not be worth the expence of holding. And the fame may be faid of Halifax, and the country round it. But Canada never will people; neither is. there any occasion for contrivances on one fide or the other, for nature alone will do the whole.

Britain may put herfelf to great expences in fending fettlers to Canada; but the descendants of those settlers will be Americans, as other defcendants have been before them. They will look round and fee the neighbouring States fovereign and free, respected abroad, and trading at large with the world; and the natural love of liberty, the advantages of commerce, the bleffings of independence and of a happier climate, and a richer foil, will draw them fouthward, and the effect will be, that Britain will fustain the expense, and America reap the advantage.

One would think that the experience which Britain has had of America, would entirely ficken her of all thoughts of J 2 continenta

ions re-America. mear or am not ater benproper. e points is firmly war. It ty. Nae of antogether o which as much rs; and f Ameufe they ule it is merica, iadnefs. ratioured to former otal igole fenw the nego-

Ho

eontinental colonization; and any part which the might retain, will only become to her a field of jealouly and thorns, of debate and contention, for ever ftruggling for privileges, and meditating revolt. She may form new fettlements, but they will be for us; they will become part of the United States of America; and that againft all her contrivances to prevent it, or without any endeavours of ours to promote it. In the first place, the cannot draw from them a revenue until they are able to pay one, and when they are fo, they will be above fubjection. Men foon become attached to the foil they live upon, and incorporated with the prosperity of the place; and it fignifies but little what opinions they come over with, for time, intereft, and new connections, will render them obfolete, and the next generations know nothing of them.

Were Britain truly wife the would lay hold of the prefent opportunity to difentangle herfelf from all continental embarraffments in North America, and that not only to avoid future broils and troubles, but to fave expences. For to fpeak explicitly on the matter, I would not, were I an European power, have Canada, under the conditions that Britain must retain it, could it be given to me. It is one of those kind of cominions that is, and ever will be, a constant charge upon any foreign holder.

As to Halifax, it will become ufelefs to England after the prefent war, and the lofs of the United States. A harbour, when the dominion is gone, for the purpofe of which only it was wanted, can be attended only with expence. There are, I doubt not, thoufands of people in England, who fuppofe, that those places are a profit to the nation, whereas they are directly the contrary, and instead of producing any revenue, a confiderable part of the revenue of England is annually drawn off, to support the expences of holding them.

Gibraltar is another inftance of national ill-policy. A poff which in time of peace is not wanted, and in time of war is of no ule, must at all times be useles. Instead of affording protection to a navy, it requires the aid of one to maintain it. And to suppose that Gibraltar commands the Mediterranean, or the pass into it, or the trade of it, is to suppose a detected falsehood; because, though Britain holds the post, she has loss the other three, and every benefit she expected from it. And to fay that all this happens because it is besieged by land and water, is to fay mothing, for this will always be the case in time of war, while France and Spain keep up superior sheets, and Britain holds the place. So that, though as an impenetrable inacceffible rock, it may held by the one, as it is always in the power of the other to render it ufeless and exceffively chargeable.

holds

I fhould fuppole that one of the principal objects of Spain in belieging it, is to flow to Britain, that though the may not take it, the can command it, that is, the can thut it up, and prevent its being ufed as a harbour, though not as a garrifon. —But the fhort way to reduce Gibraltar, is to attack the British fleet; for Gibraltar is as dependant on a fleet for fupport, as a bird is on its wing for food, and when wounded there it flarves.

There is another circumstance which the people of England have not only not attended to, but seem to be utterly Ignorant of, and that is, the difference between permanent power, and accidental power, confidered in a national sense. By permanent power, I mean, a natural inherent, and perpetual ability in a nation, which, though always in being, may not be always in action, or not always advantageously directed s. and by accidental power, I mean, a fortunate or accidental difposition or exercise of national strength, in whole or in part.

There undoubtedly was a time when any one European nation, with only eight or ten fhips of war, equal to the prefent fhips of the line, could have carried terror to all others, who had not began to build a navy, however great their natural ability might be for that purpose: but this can be confidered only as accidental, and not as a standard to compare permanent power by, and could laft no longer than until those powers built as many or more ships than the former. After this a larger fleet was necessary, in order to be superior ; and a still larger would again supersede it. And thus mankind have gone on building fleet upon fleet, as occasion or fituation dictated. And this reduces it to an original queftion, which is : Which power can build and man the largeft number of thips? The natural answer to which is, That power which has the largest revenue, and the greatest number of inhabitants, provided its fituation of coaft affords fufficient conveniencies.

France being a nation on the continent of Europe, and Britain an ifland in its neighbourhood, each of them derived different ideas from their different fituations. The inhabitants of Britain could carry on no foreign trade, nor flir from the fpot they dwelt upon, without the affiftance of bipping; but this was not the cafe with France. The idea ght rethorns, vileges, ts, but United inces to promote revenue o, they d to the perity of ey come vill rennothing prefent ntal emto avoid to fpeak uropean ain muft kind of ge upon after the harbour, h only it here are, fuppole, cas they any rend is anthem.

A poff war is of protec-And to alfehood; the other y that all is to fay of war, I Britain holds idea therefore of a navy did not arife to France from the fame original and immediate neceffity which produced it to England. But the queffion is; that when both of them turn their attention, and employ their revenues the fame way, which can be fuperior?

POSTSCRIPT.

The annual revenue of France is nearly double that of England, and her number of inhabitants more than twice as many. Each of them has the fame length of coaft on the channel; befides which, France has feveral hundred miles extent on the Bay of Bifcay, and an opening on the Mediterranean: and every day proves, that practice and exercife make failors, as well as foldiers, in one country as well as another.

If then Britain can maintain an hundred fhips of the line, France can as well (upport an hundred and fifty, because her revenues and her population are as equal to the one as those of England are to the other. And the only reason why she has not done it, is because she has not till lately attended to it. But when the sees, as the now sees, that a navy is the first engine of power, the can easily accomplish it.

England very falfely, and ruinoufly for herfelf, infers, that becaufe fhe had the advantage of France, while France had a fmaller navy, that for that reafon it is always to be fo: Whereas it may be clearly feen, that the ftrength of France has never yet been tried on a navy, and that fhe is able to be as fuperior to England in the extent of a navy, as fhe is in the extent of her revenues and her population. And England may lament the day when, by her infolence and injuffice, fhe provoked in France 2 maritime difpofition.

It is in the power of the combined fleets to conquer every ifland in the Welt Indies, and reduce all the British navy in those places. For were France and Spain to fend their whole naval force in Europe to those islands, it would not be in the power of Britain to follow them with an equal force. She would still be twenty or thirty ships inferior, were she to fend every vessel the had; and in the mean time all the foreign trade of England would lav exposed to the Dutch.

It is a maxim, which, I am perfuaded, will ever hold good, and more especially in naval operations, that a great power ought never to move in detachments, if it can poffible be avoided; but to go with its whole force to fome important object, the reduction of which shall have a decifive effect upon the war. Had the whole of the French and Spanish fleets in Europe come last spring to the West Indies.

BYETY

44

from the ced it to hem turn me way, le that of an twice. coaft on. red miles ne Medid exercife is well as the line, caufe her e as those why she trended to wy is the

If, infers, le France s to be fo. of France able to be s fhe is in l England uffice, fhe h navy in eir whole be in the rce. She ere fhe to he foreign ever hold at a great t can poft to fome ve a decirench and eff Indies every island had been their own, Rodney their prifoner, and his fleet their prize. From the United States the combined fleets can be fupplied with provisions, without the necessity of drawing them from Europe, which is not the cafe with England.

Accident has thrown fome advantages in the way of England, which, from the inferiority of her navy, the had not a right to expect. For though the has been obliged to fly before the combined fleets, yet Rodney has twice had the fortune to fall in with detached foundrons, to which he was superior in numbers : The first of Cape St. Vincent, where he had nearly two to one; and the other in the Weft-Indice, where he had a majority of fix fhips. Victories of this kind almost produce themselves. They are won without honour, and fuffered without difgrace; and are afcribeable to the chance of meeting, not to the fuperiority of fighting: For the fame Admiral, under whom they were obtained, was unable, in three former engagements, to make the least impreffion on a fleet confifting of an equal number of thips with his own, and compounded for the events by declining the actions *.

To conclude, if it may be faid that Britain has numerous enemies, it likewife proves that fhe has given numerous offences. Infolence is fure to provoke hatred, whether in a mation or an individual. The want of manners in the Britifh Court may be feen even in its birth-days and new-years odes, which are calculated to infatuate the vulgar, and difgust the man of refinement; and her former overbearing rudeness, and infufferable injuffice on the leas, have made every commercial nation her foe. Her fleets were employed as engines of prey; and acted on the furface of the deep the character which the fhark does beneath it. - On the other hand, the Combined Powers are taking a popular part, and will render their reputation immortal, by establishing the perfect freedom of the ocean, to which all countries have a, right, and are interested in accomplishing. The fea is the world's highway; and he who arrogates a prerogative over it, transgreffes the right, and justly brings on himself the chaftisement of nations.

Perhaps it might be of some fervice to the future tranquil-

See the accounts, either Englist or French, of the actions in the West-Indies betraces Count de Guichen, and Admiral Rodney, in 1789.

lity

POSTSCRIPT.

lity of mankind, were an article introduced into the next general peace, that no one nation fhould, in time of peace, exceed a certain number of fhips of war. Something of this kind feems neceffary; for, according to the prefent fashion, half the world will get upon the water, and there appears no end to the extent to which navies may be carried. Another reason is, that navies add nothing to the manners or morals of a people. The fquestered life which attends the fervice, prevents the opportunities of society, and is too apt to occasion a coarseness of ideas and language, and that more in ships of war than in commercial employ; because in the latter they mix more with the world, and are nearer related to it. I mention this remark as a general one, and not applied to any one country more than another.

Britain has now had the trial of above feven years, with an expence of nearly a hundred million pounds fterling; and every month in which fhe delays to conclude a peace, cofts her another million fterling, over and above her ordinary expences of government, which are a million more; fo that her total monthly expence is two million pounds fterling, which is equal to the whole yearly expence of America, all charges included. Judge then who is beft able to continue it.

She has likewife many attonements to make to an injured world, as well in one quarter as another. And inftead of purfuing that temper of arrogance, which ferves only to fink her in the efteem, and entail on her the diflike, of all nations, fhe will do well to reform her manners, retrench her expences, live peaceably with her neighbours, and think of war no more.

Philadelphia, Angust 21, 1782.

THE END.

New Publications printed for H. D. SYMONDS.

the next of peace, ng of this t fashion, e appears d. Anoanners or ttends the is too apt that more use in the rer related d not ap-ears, with fterling; e a peace, her ordiion more; unds fter-America, le to conan injured inflead of nly to fink of all natrench her id think of

THE JOCKEY CLUB;

Ι.

OR,

A Sketch of the Manners of the Age. Three Parts.——The fifth Edition.—Price 128.

" I'll speak of them as they are, Nothing extenuate, nor set down aught in malice.

SHAKS.

II.

LESSONS TO A YOUNG PRINCE, By An Old Statesman;

In which is the Method of Studying and Profiting by Mr. BURKE's Strictures on the French Revolution.—Price 4s 6d.

LETTER BY

THE MARQUIS OF LANSDOWN,

With an Appendix; containing Thoughts on the PEACE.—A Letter to the Abbé Sieyes, &c. with a fine Portrait of the Author-—Price 23.

In the Prefs, and shortly will be published,

SECRET HISTORY

GREEN ROOMS.

Containing Authentie and Entertaing Memoirs of the ACTORS and ACTRESSES in the Three Theatres.—In Two Volumes.—The fecond Edition. New Pablications printed for H. D. SYMONDS

IV.

THE LADIES LIBRARY,

In 2 Vols. 8vo.—Price bound 14s.

This Book is a perfect Female Directory, and recommended to every young Married Lady, whofe fituation may not have qualified her with a perfect knowledge of the Direction and Management of a Family in all its Parts. House-KEEPERS and those who have the CARE of the NURSERY, ought not to be without it.

A SKETCH OF THE CHARACTER

' V.

OF THE

PRINCE of DENMARK,

Anecdotes of the Court, State of Literature and the Polite Arts, &c. &c. -Price 38 6d.

VI.

THE TRIAL AT LARGE.

Capt. KIMBER,

For the Murder of a Negro Girl.—With fome Observations on the very extraordinary Conduct of the DUKE of CLARENCE on that Occasion.—Price 1s.

• The Public are requested to be particular in ordering that Trial printed for H, D, Symonys, Paur-Noster-Rew.

