improvements that will be made in the cause of agriculture during thed next fifty years?

Judging from the past, when the year nineteen hundred shall have dawned upon us, the profession of agriculture will be as much covered and sought after, as it was once considered low, and disgraceful. Time was when farming was thought (especially by the young) to be a very unpopular and low business. How many a young man has for saken a comfortable home and farm, and apprenticed himself to some village grocer, because, for sooth farming was degrading!

But a new era is dawning upon this western continent; people are beginning to open their eyes to their true interests, and to the interests of the whole country.

While great improvements have been made While great improvements have been made which, otherwise, never can be settled and glory. There was a time when the farmer would grow crops on his new England soil an long as his land would yield him an equivalent for his labors, without the use of manure or compost, and 'pull up stakes,' and turn his face with the emigrant towards the western wilderness. A different state of things is being brought about. The soil is cared for, and every waste material is turned to account. Thus the land is enriched and kept in a productive state, and rewarding the she is already reviewing her troops, to be kept in a productive state, and rewarding the she is already reviewing her troops, to be his labours. Farming is not confined to the mere ignorant classes of society, as men of talents and wealth have become engaged in the confined to the world that to be a fuller of the soil is no mean occupation.
