

MISSING HEIRS ARE BEING SOUGHT FOR A LARGE FORTUNE

Charles Rowe, Late of Cleveland, Falls Heir to the Rispin Estate.

Supreme Court Decides in Favor of Rowe Family, Which Cannot Be Found.

An interesting situation now confronts the persons concerned in the estate of Richard Rispin, who died leaving a fortune to be disposed of by his executors. After the death of Luke Rispin, the testator's only son, a long contest ensued to determine whether the balance should go under the son's will or partly to the son's representatives and partly to the son of the late Richard Rispin's only daughter and his children. The court decided that the daughter's son and his children, if he is dead, should inherit the money.

Where Is Rowe.

The question now arises as to the whereabouts of Charles Rowe, or his children. His last known residence was Cleveland, Ohio, and he was employed for a time as a miller, and for some time followed the calling of a mate on a vessel plying the Great Lakes. He is also said to have been in the Yukon in the great rush.

Judge Macbeth heard the reference and has directed that the most careful and searching inquiries should be made to find the heirs, and it is expected that nothing will be left undone in order to locate them.

In the meantime great interest is shown in the unusual spectacle of a great sum of money seeking an owner.

USE POLITICS IN COLLEGIATE CASE

Trustee Who Tried to Introduce
It Was Promptly
Rebuked.

Friends of Principal McCutcheon Say That He Will Not Resign.

That an attempt to blame the agitation concerning Principal McCutcheon's administration of the London Collegiate Institute on politics, was made when the school board went to Toronto Thursday, and promptly rebuked, was the information that leaked out today. One of the trustees declared that the attempt to cause Mr. McCutcheon to resign was because he was not of the same politics as a majority of the trustees. Another trustee, who was on the deputation, and who happens to be of the same shade of political feeling as the other trustee, quickly refuted the charge.

No Political Feeling.
The latter pointed out that Mr. McCutcheon's defenders had been men, who in public life were of the politics which the first trustee had said were responsible for the agitation. Dr. Shaw, who started the agitation, was of the same politics as Mr. McCutcheon. It was absurd, the second trustee claimed, to charge that there was any degree of political feeling in the matter.

It is understood that Hon. Mr. Lucas, who was acting as minister of education, expressed his regret at an attempt to suggest that there was politics in the matter. He refused to believe that the London School Board was that sort of a concern.

It is said by his friends that Principal McCutcheon is sticking to his guns, and that he will refuse to resign.

THE SITUATION SERIOUS

[Canadian Press.]
Hong Kong, China, July 19. — The severance of the Province of Kwangtung, of which the capital is Canton, from the central government at Peking, was proclaimed by the governor-general of Kwangtung today.

The governor-general declares that the provincial council has appointed him governor-general, and commander, in which to lead the southern soldiers against those of Provisional President Yuan Shi Kai. This step has been taken, he says, on account of Yuan Shi Kai's despotism and policy calculated to ruin the republic.

The governor-general declares he will guarantee the protection of property in the district under his control. Business between Hong Kong and Canton has come to a standstill.

Mr. Beck at his desk.
Enter—A Promoter.

Promoter presents letter of introduction.
Mr. Beck—Let's hear what you have.
Promoter—I have a proposal to electrify a steam road that runs from London to Port Stanley.
Mr. Beck—Has it made money before?
Promoter—No; it has lost a great deal.
Mr. Beck—You think you can make it pay with electrical operation?

Promoter—Well, we have one expert who says it will make $75,000 a year.

Mr. Beck—How does he make it out?

Promoter—He says that operating expenses and taxes will amount to $134,945, and that total earnings will be $210,000. This leaves a surplus of $75,055 "for interest on investment, depreciation and profit."

Mr. Beck—Hum! "Interest on investment, depreciation and profit" mean fixed charges, in other words?

Promoter—Yes, sir.

Mr. Beck—What do fixed charges annually amount to?

Promoter—One expert says they are $90,545, and another says they would be $83,951.

Mr. Beck (figuring it out on scratch-pad)—Then there would be an annual deficit in one case of $15,490, and in the other of $8,896. That's a fine-looking investment to bring to a man. You admit failure in the first breath.

Promoter—What would you advise me to do, then?

THAT KNOCKING NEWSPAPER
HOW IT KEEPS OUT CAPITAL

Toronto Man Tells of Impressions Given the Industrial World
by Attacks Upon Railway Financed by Capital in the Queen City.

A Toronto director of the London and Lake Erie Transportation Company who was recently in the city, gave expression in forcible terms to the campaign of "knocking" that has been conducted by the London Free Press.

"If anything will keep capital from investing in London and building new factories it is that newspaper," he said. "Their attacks upon enterprises such as the London and Lake Erie are being talked of everywhere."

Driving Away Industries.

"Why the Toronto men who are interested in this railway have recently had it in their power to secure an industry which makes an article connected with railroading. It would have meant the employment of a number of men, and there was almost a certainty that it could have been secured."

"Then this newspaper starts in to hammer the enterprise in which we have invested our money. Does it seem reasonable that we are going to take further risks? We invested our money in good faith in this road, and were complimented by some of the best citizens for doing it."

Two Roads Re-quired.

"It would seem an odd proposition to have two electric roads running through the same territory. Since the line has been taken over every cent it has earned and much more has been put back into it in order to improve it. We have had other improvements in mind, but if our actions are to be attacked, if the utterances of this newspaper are to be regarded as a barometer of the feelings of the people, we can only say that the whole investing public will steer clear of London."

THIRTY THOUSAND MORE OF DEBENTURES SOLD

Toronto Firm Takes It and Option On Another
$100,000.

The sale of $30,000 more of the city's debentures was ratified at a meeting of the finance committee on Friday afternoon. The purchasers are Messrs. Wood-Gundy & Co., of Toronto, the same firm to which the city disposed of $300,000 worth last week. A further option on $100,000 more was granted the firm, and will no doubt be paid for as soon as they can market the securities. The debentures are for 30 years, at 4½ per cent, to net the purchaser 5 per cent, less 1 per cent for commission.

This leaves a block of $170,000 yet to be disposed of, out of the total issue of $540,000. Considering the present stringency of the money market it is considered that the city did well in disposing of such a large block of the securities, and it is expected that the remaining block will be disposed of shortly. The debentures were sold on a 5 per cent basis, which, considering the present high rates, is exceptionally good.

Start Work Monday

[Canadian Press.]
Chicago, July 19.—Building operations aggregating $40,000,000, which have been suspended in this city since June 19, will be resumed on Monday as a result of an agreement entered into between employers and employees. The agreement calls for a permanent arbitration board, and is expected to give building operations here a stability they have not known for a number of years. Forty thousand men have been out of employment during the strike. Concessions on both sides marked the agreement.

Integrity of Principals Beal and McKone Attacked by Someone "On the Inside"—Too Much Lobbying Going On, Says a Trustee.

What is regarded as a distinct knock for the upper grades of the London schools was printed in a local paper last night in the guise of a dispatch from Toronto.

It was stated this morning that the alleged information in the article came from someone on the inside in London, and did not come from Toronto, as was claimed.

"That was plainly a knock at the London school principals from someone who depends on the parents of these pupils for the support of the trustees this morning. We are about tired of having our schools run by officials who do as they like, and have not the real interests of the school at heart."

Attack Inspired.
"I have information to the effect in only one or two cases were the papers re-marked, and the attack on Principal Beal and Principal McKone was inspired from a local source, and there will be an investigation. It was an attack upon the integrity of these two men, both honorable members of the teaching staff, who were chosen as examiners because of their demonstrated ability."

LABOR STRIKES
COST CANADA
$18,000,000

Report Expected to Lead to Big Reforms in Labor Legislation.

Over Nine Million Working Days Were Lost in Past Decade.

Ottawa, July 19.—From Jan. 1, 1901, to Dec. 31, 1912, there were 3,319 labor strikes in Canada, in which 319,880 men figured at a total estimated cost to the country of $18,000,000, based on the conservative estimate that the average value of a working day is $2.

During the 12 years, 9,900,000 working days were lost owing to strikes, or an average of three-quarters of a million days per year for the period taken. These interesting figures are embodied in a report just prepared by officials in the labor department, giving all the most important facts and figures on strikes and lockouts in the 12 years specified.

Though there were 319,880 men involved, it is pointed out in the report that many of these men may have been involved in strikes or lockouts more than once during the period in question. The report will, it is said, be something of an eye-opener to legislators and everybody interested in the labor movement in Canada, and may ultimately lead to the framing of changes in legislation dealing with strikes and lockouts now on the statute book.

CHECKING UP WARFIELD REPORT SHOWS MASS OF INACCURACIES; VALUELESS WITHOUT BLUE-PRINTS

Mass of Statistics, But Nothing in Way of Plan or Drawing on Which to Base Them, Says Ald. Richter—Large Part of Report Given To Matter Irrelevant to Subject.

Ald. Richter explained to the members of No. 1 committee at their meeting Friday afternoon some of the difficulties he has encountered in endeavoring to check up the Warfield report on the London and Port Stanley Railway. Although he has gone over only about fifty pages of the voluminous report, he has been halted time and again by the inaccuracies occurring among the figures. "Mr. Warfield has been in to see me nearly every day since the report came out," said Mr. Richter, "and each time he has asked to be allowed to make some correction or addition to it. Recently he brought me a whole new report, which he said contained the corrected figures, and wanted me to substitute it for the report in my possession. I told him I could not do that, as I had made memoranda on all the pages I had examined, and I did not want to do the work all over again. If I did he would probably have another new report ready for me later on."

Useless Without Prints.
The matter of the report was brought up when Ald. Richter moved that steps be taken to secure blue-prints of all the drawings which had been made in connection with the report. The report was practically of no value without them, as there was nothing whereon to base calculations in checking up the report. "I have had a copy of the report sent me," said Mr. Richter, "and I have made an effort to check it up. The first thirty pages contain a lot of general remarks upon the shortcomings of steam engines, such as one would find in a prospectus of an electrical company. It may or may not have any bearing on the rest of the report. Then follows a mass of statistics, but without the plans and drawings upon which the calculations were made it is impossible to check them up. I'm not going to waste my time trying to do it."

Eastman Report Meagre.

Whatever the merits or demerits of the report, Ald. Richter thought that the drawings should prove of value in future years. He accordingly moved that blue-prints be made and a copy kept in the city engineer's office, the city clerk's office, the city treasurer's office, and the office of the London and Port Stanley board.

The Eastman report was thought to be on the other hand too meagre in its details, and a request will be made for more information before going into it.

HON. ADAM BECK BACK
BUT REFUSES TO TALK

Would Make No Statement On Hydro-Electric Break Or Electrification.

Hon. Adam Beck arrived in London today after an absence of some weeks in England.

To The Advertiser Mr. Beck said that his health was improved, but on certain matters upon which the public has been expecting a statement from him, he had nothing to say at the present time.

Specifically, Mr. Beck had nothing to say about electrification, the trouble with the hydro lines, the proposed auxiliary plant for Toronto, the negotiations between the city of Toronto and the Toronto Electric Company for the purchase of the company and other matters.

Mr. Beck will be in London for several days before leaving for Toronto, where, it is expected, he will remain for some time.

A number of Toronto papers wired their correspondents in London to ascertain Mr. Beck's views on Toronto Electric negotiations and other matters.

Mr. Beck refused to deny or confirm that the electrification vote would be postponed for some time, as has been rumored at the city hall.

Mystery in Death of Wesley Boran

[Canadian Press.]
Brookville, July 18.—Sidney Empey, charged with manslaughter in connection with the supposed drowning of Wesley Boran one week ago, was brought out in police court today. The crown asked for an adjournment of the preliminary hearing to await the recovery of Boran's body, which is expected to be recovered later than on Sunday next, providing, of course, he has been drowned, which is only problematical.

Empey, who sticks to his original story, was admitted to bail for his appearance on July 26, furnishing bail for $2,000, exacted by Magistrate Patterson.

Paisley, July 19.—A quiet, pretty wedding was solemnized on Wednesday at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Reed, when their fourth daughter, Alice, was married to James Stewart Dewar. The rooms were prettily decorated with magnolias and evergreens. Rev. Mr. Facey, pastor of the Methodist Church, performed the ceremony in the presence of immediate relatives of both families.

The wedding music was played by Miss Elma Dewar. The bride, who was given away by her father, wore a beautiful gown, in ivory satin and lace, and carried roses and lilies of the valley. After luncheon, Mr. and Mrs.

English Beauty Tells Complexion Secrets

["Elise," in American Home.]

Through a fortunate meeting with an English lady, noted for her dazzling complexion, I recently learned the full meaning of the old adage, "Beauty is but skin deep." She taught me how to remove my muddy old skin, revealing the young and beautiful skin underneath. The process is so simple, harmless and inexpensive, I'm sure you'll be glad to know about it. Just get an ounce of ordinary mercurized wax at any drug store and apply nightly, like cold cream, for a week or so. Every morning in washing off the wax, tiny particles of worn-out cuticle come off, too. The action is so gentle and gradual, there's no discomfort. It's a wonderful treatment, as it not only peels off the faded or discolored skin, but all of its defects, as chaps, roughness, freckles, pimples, blotches, blackheads.

I am indebted to the same lady for a remarkable wrinkle-removing formula. One ounce powdered salicylic acid dissolved in a half pint witch hazel. Used as a face bath, this is so effective that just one application causes the finer lines to disappear, and soon even the deepest Tomorrow's Weather—Fine and Warmer.

LONDON, ONTARIO, SATURDAY, JULY 19, 1913.

264 LOTS SOLD SINCE
THE FIRST OF JULY.

If some of the real estate dealers of the Canadian West, who do so much bragging about the wonderful sales of land in that country, where you never feel the cold, according to their stories, were to hear of the deals that are being put through in London these days, they would turn green with envy.

And the sales that are being made in London are not like the proverbial "pig in a poke," where you buy from a pig and never see the land that you become the owner of, but are made to men who are first taken over the ground and shown what they are buying.

Although only a little more than half the middle of July has passed, 264 lots in two new subdivisions in northeast London have been sold to residents of London or towns in the vicinity of London.

One real estate firm, which has a subdivision, reported today that it had sold 140 lots since the 1st of July, and an official of a loan company, which is handling another subdivision, said that his company had sold 124 lots since the 1st of July.

Merchants Complain About Repair Work Done on Pavement

Claim Filling Put in Holes on Dundas Street East Will Not Last.

Practically all of the holes which have been worn in the Dundas street pavement between Adelaide and Lyle streets have been repaired, with the exception of long strips which were cut out by the street railway company alongside their tracks near the corner of Dundas and Adelaide streets.

A number of the merchants are complaining about the way the holes have been filled in, however, claiming that the edges are already wearing away.

The street railway company has part of the street right at the corner of Dundas and Adelaide streets blocked, and as there is considerable traffic at this point many complaints have been registered.

BUILDING BOOM OF EARLY SPRING IS STILL GOING ON

Numerous Houses Are Now in the Course of Erection, and Demand for Vacant Houses Is Still Large—Estimated That 300 Lots Have Been Sold Since First of Month.

Although many rumors to the effect that the boom which started in London early in the spring would not last long, and that the people who were paying such high prices for property would regret it, it is not borne out by the many new houses which are in the course of erection all over the city, and the others that are to be built.

Property is changing hands all over the city daily, and it is estimated that since the 1st of July nearly 300 vacant lots located within the city limits have been sold.

Many Building Permits.

Numerous building permits have been taken out during the past three weeks, and it is said that a number of people are contemplating having houses built this summer, but so far have been unable to get any contractors to tender on the work on account of the amount of building that is going on in the city at present and a scarcity of labor.

The reported stringency in the money markets of the country is not having any effect on the sale of real estate in this city, as all property that has been sold in London during the last six months has brought a record price.

It was thought early in the spring that the high prices asked for London real estate, particularly within a mile circle of the centre of the city, would be abandoned by the middle of the summer, but such is not the case, and the prices obtained today are as high, if not a little higher, than they were six months ago.

All Houses Occupied.

It is estimated that by the time the first snow falls at least 300 new houses will have been built throughout the city, and although there are not any new industries coming into the city all the houses built this year are occupied, and the people who have houses in the course of erection at present claim they have tenants for them as soon as they are completed.

One man is building three story and a half houses on Grand avenue, near Bellevue avenue, and although they are not nearly completed, he has received a number of applications for them from prospective tenants.

It was thought by a great many people that there would be many vacant houses in London on account of the number that were being built, but this is not the case, and although there are a number of large houses vacant, in different sections, the number of people that are in search of small modern homes tends to the belief that London's population is increasing as rapidly as that of any other city in Canada.

Houses Being Built.

Following is a partial list of houses that are now in the course of erection and will be ready for occupancy before fall: Mr. R. H. Smith, two story brick, at 59 Elmwood avenue, to cost $2,500; Mr. W. A. Purdy, a story and a half brick on Devon street, to cost $2,700; Hyatt Avenue Methodist

TWO BUSINESSMEN DONATE TO FUND FOR ORPHANAGE

Both Give Large Sums When Informed of Nature of Rev. T. B. Clarke's Project.

Work On Building Which Is To Cost About $10,000 Will Not Start Till Spring.

Two well-known businessmen of the city recently contributed handsomely to the fund for the erection of an orphanage in Ealing by Rev. T. B. Clarke, pastor of All Saints' Church. Some time ago, Mr. Clarke, with his personal funds, purchased enough property on the Hamilton road, adjacent to St. David's Mission, to build an orphan asylum for the orphans of London. He also bought a farm on which to grow produce for the supply of the orphans.

It was his intention to start work on the erection of the orphanage this summer, but owing to lack of funds, he could not. About a month ago he announced his intention of starting a canvass for funds, but he has been so busy since then that he has been unable to take up the work. Two businessmen of this city, when informed of the project, were enthusiastic about it and donated quite a sum for the furtherance of the work.

Owing to the absence of funds and the short time in which he has to make a canvass Mr. Clarke will not attempt to have the building started this year, but hopes to have the contractors at work early in the spring.

He contemplated erecting a building that will accommodate about 50 children and cost about $10,000 first, and if necessary, to add to it later.

People Are Generous. Mr. Clarke stated to The Advertiser today that he was well pleased with the amount of money which he had received so far, and that he had been promised more. "It takes a lot of money to start such an institution," said he. "Far more than I could ever donate myself. But every person whom I have approached so far has been generous, and I think that when people realize what such an institution means to London, where there are a number of orphans who cannot get homes, they will come forward and give handsomely."

Boys Camping
in South London

A number of the young men who live in the vicinity of Briscoe street are camping on the vacant lot at the corner of Langarth street, and in the evening they make a lot of noise with the music of various instruments. The people living on the street enjoy an impromptu concert almost every night, and do not in the least object to the program provided. They claim that it is a great relief to the usual music provided by Thomas and Thompson, the favorite vocalists of that section.

Miss Violet Coombs, of Grey street, accompanied by several girl friends, is spending the week at Port Stanley.

START WORK ON PLEASURE HALL

Excavation for Building at the Hospital for Insane Is Almost Finished.

IT MAY COST $20,000

Work on the excavation for the new amusement hall at the asylum for the insane, which is to replace the one which was burned down a year ago last February, is being rushed ahead, and it is expected that before long the foundation will be completed. The building is to be one story and a basement and is to be 120 feet long and 60 feet wide.

Dr. Robinson, superintendent, does not know whether the building will be of brick or stucco, but thinks that between $15,000 and $20,000 will be spent on it by the Government.

The work has been started on the excavations, but I do not know when the building will be finished," said Dr. Robinson. "I can't say how much it will cost, either, because I have not yet learned what the Government is willing to spend on it. At one time, I thought that we would spend about $20,000 on the building, but now I think if we get $15,000 we will do well."

The old amusement hall was completely destroyed by fire, which totally destroyed the kitchen at the institution, a year ago, gutted the inside of the amusement hall.

Company To Build 150 Houses For Its Employees Is Rumor

Said that McCormick Company Will Open Up a Street East of Its New Factory.

Rumors to the effect that the McCormick Manufacturing Company intends erecting 150 houses for its employees in the vicinity of the new factory, were circulated around the city today.

When the company first made known its intention of buying a new site a notice was posted in the factory telling the employees not to pay any attention to rumors of possible locations that were spread about the city, and advising them that as soon as a site was decided upon they would be notified in order that they might purchase property for a home in the same vicinity.

Directly east of the factory between Oxford and Dundas streets there is a large strip of land, which will not be utilized by the company for factory purposes, and it is said that a street will be opened through it and houses for workmen erected on it.

DINED AT SPRINGBANK. The members of the choir of All Saints' Church, accompanied by a number of friends, journeyed to Springbank Thursday night for luncheon. After the meal, which was furnished and served by the women, was finished, a program of sports was carried out.

MEN DISCOVER OIL ON ADELAIDE STREET.

Oil was discovered in London on Friday afternoon. Not in paying quantities, but still it was in the ground about six feet below the surface, and was found accidentally, the way every large gusher that is ever discovered is reported to be.

A company will not be organized to develop the field, neither will there be any stock sold, but just the same, the men who made the startling discovery had visions for a few moments of being second John Rockefellers.

The discovery was made by some men in the employ of the water commission, who were excavating to put a pipe from Adelaide street into the site for the new warehouse for the British American Oil Company, which is to be built near the Grand Trunk tracks on Adelaide street. Its presence was accounted for by old residents, who say that many years ago several oil refineries were located in that section, and that the oil must have soaked into the ground until it reached this soil. There is a considerable quantity of oil in the ground where the men excavated, and it may be taken up and shipped away for paraffin manufacture.

Are Rushing Work on the Addition to East End School

Work on the addition to the Chesley avenue school is being rushed, and it is expected that the extra rooms will be ready for occupancy by the time school opens for the fall term.

The addition to the school is a result of many complaints of parents of East London whose children attend the Chesley avenue school, about having to send them across the Grand Trunk tracks to the Rectory street school, to take the manual training and domestic science studies.

Several times little children have narrowly escaped death at the Rectory street crossing, while going to or coming from the Rectory street school, and it was that that caused the mothers to send several petitions to the board of education for an addition to the school.

The addition, which is of white brick and stone, is being built on the south side of the present building, and is two stories high, with a basement.

Repairing Tracks
in West London

A gang of men employed by the street railway company has been busy during the past week repairing the tracks along Wharncliffe road in West London.

The rails in some places were almost worn through, and those in that condition were taken out and replaced with others.

UNSIGHTLY PIMPLES CAME ON FACE

Sores Spread Until Face Was Covered. So Itchy Could Not Resist Scratching. Cured Entirely in About Two Weeks by Cuticura Soap and Ointment.

Clachan, Ontario.—"My trouble started with sores breaking out on the face. They came as pimples and were unsightly. These sores seemed to keep spreading until my face was covered. They were so itchy that at times I could not resist scratching them. After trying two or three different salves, which did not stop the sores breaking out, I tried a cake of Cuticura Soap also Cuticura Ointment. I found that they cured me entirely of the sores in about two weeks." (Signed) Fred E. Meyer, Feb. 12, 1912.

LEGS BURNED AND ITCHED

Souris West, P. E. Island.—"My little girl, aged four years, was troubled with a painful rash on her legs. It began in a dry rash very hot and itchy and after a few days it looked like little pimples with a white top on them. Her legs were burned and itched very much and she was very restless and was also cross and fretful. She used to scratch and make sores when I was not watching her. I had to leave her stockings off her as they would irritate her legs. I used to bathe her legs with warm water and use the Cuticura Soap freely, then dry her legs and rub on the Cuticura Ointment and she was cured in one week." (Signed) Mrs. P. J. Mulhally, Aug. 1, 1912.

Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere. For a liberal free sample of each, with 32-p. book, send post card to Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Dept. 51D, Boston, U. S. A.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 19.

HOW CANADA IS AFFECTED.

The amended tariff bill reported by the United States Senate committee is of serious concern to this country.

The bill in its present form will hold far fewer benefits for Canadian farmers than Mr. Underwood's original bill —unless the Borden Government re-cants.

As it left the House of Representatives the measure put meats, swine, potatoes, flour, cream and oatmeal on the free list and greatly reduced the duty on wheat, eggs, cheese, horses, sheep, cattle, hay, oats, beans, barley, sugar beets and apples. Many of the agricultural products left dutiable by the Underwood bill have been transferred to the free list by the Senate committee but with a significant provision, giving the President power to impose duties against countries which impose duties against the United States in respect of those particular commodities.

Thus the cattle, the horses, the sheep, the grain, of the Argentine Republic, of Mexico, and other food-exporting countries to the south, will enter the United States at once, as they will lose no time in removing their own duties so as to gain access to the American market. Under the Taft-Fielding reciprocity agreement, these favors would have belonged exclusively to Canada. It would be open to the Borden Government to give the American market to Canadian farmers by simply taking off the Canadian tariff on farm products, but the Conservative party of Canada in 1911
"hanged, bolted and barred" the door against this incommensurable boon. Even if the Government repented, Canada would be obliged to share with other nations the benefits which might have been hers alone.

It is highly probable that Australia and New Zealand will avail themselves of the reciprocal clauses of the new American tariff bill. If they do they will make before the world a mockery and a jest of the Imperialistic pose of the Canadian opponents of reciprocity.
And it is a mockery and a jest.

THE HALIFAX INCIDENT.

We have had occasion to criticize the somewhat bumptious gentleman at the head of the Militia Department.
But when Col. Hughes deserves praise we propose to give it just as freely as we would censure. His lecture to certain staff officers at Halifax on a recent occasion was decidedly praiseworthy. The incident has already been referred to in our news columns.
The minister gave a public dinner to General Hamilton in a Halifax hotel, to which the resident staff were invited. He gave it to be understood distinctly that there were to be no intoxicating liquors used. But some of the smart youths on the staff ignored the order, and smuggled in sufficient liquor to befuddle themselves.
They not only disobeyed orders as soldiers, but they got so drunk that they forgot to behave as gentlemen, and by noisy interruptions prevented some of the speakers from being heard. But they kept quiet when the Minister of Militia talked to them.
He gave them to understand that conduct such as theirs would not be tolerated. He went further, and pointed out to them that they were not occupying any higher position than the ordinary volunteer forces; that, in fact, they were not to consider themselves regular army officers, but simply instructors of the militia, and that promotion or dismissal would depend on their conduct alone.

The warning was doubtless needed.
We have a small contingent of our military force which belong to the regular staff of the department of the service, and are constantly on duty, while in office. But these men do not constitute a regular army; they are simply employed for the benefit of the volunteer force. They do not occupy any higher or more honorable position in Canada than do our volunteers.
They are, in fact, no different from the civil service employees. The same good conduct, obedience to orders, faithfulness to duty, and courteous behavior towards the public, are required from them that is required from a letter carrier, or a clerk in the customs house. Drunkenness in the civil service is recognized as a cause for dismissal. Go into one of the Government offices in this city, and you will see a placard prominently displayed, warning the clerks that drunkenness means the loss of their positions without fear or favor. Officers on the military staff are under the same law.
And if Col. Hughes enforces that law
he will have general support.

It is sometimes said that clerks in the civil service have a tendency to consider themselves as superior beings who are masters of the public rather than their employees. We do not think there is very much of this sort of thing in Canada, though there may be some signs of it in England.

But there is just the slightest inclination on the part of the military employees of the Government to get a "swelled head," to magnify their offices unduly. Of course, that is by no means general. Our experience in London is against the idea. Here we have a military staff whose members do not consider themselves better than other people; who try to do their duty faithfully and without ostentation;
whose moral conduct and gentlemanly behavior are not excelled by any other class. But it is quite evident that there are some in other parts of the Dominion of whom the same cannot be said, if we are to take the Halifax men as examples. Col. Hughes will do well if he makes them get down off their perch. It is but a relic of the old military period when regular or amateur soldiers get exalted notions of their position. And we don't want a revival. A man or woman in the civil service who does his or her duty faithfully and honestly is as deserving of honor and reward just as much as one who wears a uniform or carries a sword. They are both servants of the people, and should receive the same measure of praise or censure, of promotion or dismissal, as their conduct may deserve.

CANADIAN LIBERALS' AND BRIT- ISH PRINCIPLES.

An interesting letter signed "British-Canadian" appears in the London Nation under the title, "The Bitter Cry of the Canadian Liberals." It explains in forceful and certainly "bitter" terms
(1) the position of Canadian Liberals on the constitutional aspect of the Borden contribution bill, and (2) the reasons why reciprocity was defeated in 1911.

The writer enforces the truth that it is the Canadian Liberals who are the British party, the Conservative-Nationalist coalition being an un-British and anti-British faction to the extent that it stands against British preference, against doing anything for imperial defence beyond a money contribution, and especially for the breach of that most fundamental of British constitutional principles, the right of a people to tax itself and appropriate its taxes. The Borden Government, made up of flag-wavers, flag-punchers and big interest men, whose flag is the green dollar, is doing, says the writer to the London editor,

"what no British people should do —committing our public funds to be disposed of for foreign and domestic purposes alike by a parliament in which we are not represented, or a bureaucracy which we do not control. It is tribute in its crudest form. It is un-British. It is anti-British. If there were no other objection to it, it would be bad on principle for the sole reason that it provides your bureaucrats with funds which make them independent, protanto, of the control of your parliament. It strikes at representative and responsible government both at home and in Canada."

The conspiracy of centralizers, wreckers of Lord Durham's and Lord Elgin's work, on both sides of the Atlantic is more than hinted. The writer strikes home thus:

"In the meantime, what are you Liberals in England doing? Why do you permit Mr. Churchill to play ducks and drakes with the principles of responsible government and the autonomy of the dominions? The centralizers and reorganizers of the Empire are willing to go back to the days before Lord Durham; but why should Liberals aid them? You are dealing with dangerous questions;
they were discussed under Charles
I.; discussed again under George III.; discussed again under Victoria; and the Canadian rebellion of 1837 and the famous report brought them to an issue and to a wise settlement which we had hoped would never be disturbed. On that settlement, finsophy, the place, the place, the place, prosperity, and mark you! the loyalty, of the dominions have since rested firmly."

The atmosphere of deceit with which the whole naval question is sedulously enveloped by the centralizers, is succinctly indicated. The three Canadian Dreadnoughts are and are not to belong to Great Britain's 60 per cent.
margin over Germany. England is a weary Titan, but will have to pay more than is "necessary," even, to keep up the white elephant that Mr. Borden wants to present. The ships are to be for the North Sea, but stay at Gibraltar when they are not touring the world
"to show the flag." And so on.

The same line of cheap trickery worked in the reciprocity election of 1911. Englishmen were told that Canada had to choose between mere material interests and British connection, but in Canada there was the very opposite cry, that reciprocity would be the ruin of material interests. And the ultra-British party was paying the expenses of the Quebec Nationalists, whether they were for or against reciprocity!

It is a good thing that a capable Canadian Liberal should set the true state of affairs so closely and so trenchantly before the British public. Against a waterspout of calumny, deceit and bravado Canadian Liberalism may just now need an advocate even with British Liberals.

It is now the fashion for rich Canadians to move to England and break into Society, thereby getting on an equal footing with chorus girls and American heiresses.

In confessing that the proposed three Canadian Dreadnoughts were not immediately necessary to Great Britain,
Mr. Churchill forgot for the moment that they were necessary to enable the Borden Government to save its face.

TOO IMPULSIVE.

"I admire everything that is beautiful," he said.

itch at the tonorial parlor conducted

INFANT PRODIGES.

[London Chronicle.]
Precocious as is the latest musical marvel, the eleven-year-old violinist, Duci Kerekjarte, he has had many predecessors even more precocious, both as players and composers. Sir Charles Halle was only four when he first played in public; Hummel made his first appearance at the age of five.
Mozart at six; Chopin and Rubinstein at eight; Mozart began composing when only five, while Samuel Wesley wrote a march for one of the Guards regiments at the age of seven. Sir Edward Elgar was twelve years old when he composed his first music for a child's play—a shameful lack of precocity!

WEST WILL COME TO IT.

[Victoria Times.]
The money stringency is not so keenly felt in Calgary as it is in Seattle, arising from the introduction of the cent
as a circulating medium. At a public meeting held for the discussion of the matter the allegation was freely made that wage-earners suffer because of the lack of a coin of a smaller denomination than five cents. The sentiment seemed to be, "look after the cents and the dollars will take care of themselves." It is strange when you come to think it over that while in the United States the small unit of exchange has by stress of circumstances forced itself upon the Pacific coast, where public sentiment seems to condemn it, in Canada it has not made its way far beyond Winnipeg. We wonder whether all Canada may soon be included in the "cent belt."

THE BRIDAL VEIL.

[Family Doctor.]
The bridal veil is evidently of eastern origin, being a relic of the bridal canopy held over the heads of the bride and bridegroom. Among the Anglo-Saxons a similar custom existed; but if the bride was a widow it was dis-pens with. According to Saxon usage, a fine linen cloth was laid upon the heads of the bride and bridegroom and was not removed until the benediction had been said. The old British custom was to use nature's veil unadorned, that is, the long hair of the bride, which was so worn by all brides, royal, noble and simple. Only then did everyone behold the tresses of maid-hood in their entirety and for the last time, as after marriage they were neatly dressed on the head. Among some the tresses were cut and carefully stowed away on a woman becoming a wife. It was customary in Russia for village brides to shear their locks on returning from church.

WARNED IN TIME.

[Montreal Herald.]
A member of the French Chamber of Deputies fell dead just as he was about to deliver a speech. If some honorable members of the Canadian House will paste this fact in their hats and respectfully inform the unfortunate French statesman will not have died in vain.

PRE-EMINENT!

[Montreal Star.]
The fact that one hundred and seventy-one children under five years of age died in the city last week is, obviously, something to cause serious concern. The heavy death percentage of mortality really is can be better understood when it is added that the deaths of the entire city for the week in question numbered but two hundred and seventy.

sinecure. "Oh, for a lodge in some vast wilderness," might prove a happy alternative.

MONEY-LENDERS AND CHINA.

[Grain Growers' Guide.]
A few weeks ago, when China was hard pressed for money, the Standard Oil Company, according to a London Times' correspondent in China, came forward with a beautiful offer. In return for the sole rights to exploit petroleum in China for a term of years, Standard Oil was willing to give an immediate loan of $125,000,000.
Wasn't that pure philanthropy toward the struggling young republic? The American trust could well afford not to loan, but a straight gift of $125,000,000 in return for the absolute monopoly in a country of 400,000,000.
Fortunately, the republican leaders,
Dr. Sun and others, are too firm believers in public ownership of natural resources to be caught with any such bait.

IN THE POLICE COURT.

No longer need the search for a white hope be continued. He has turned up in London, and appeared in police court this morning in the person of William Wallison, of Glenwood avenue, who was convicted of committing an assault upon Alfred Ball, a neighbor. According to the defendant's own confession, he struck the plaintiff a blow on the face that knocked him right over a small fir tree, around a maple tree, and under a wire fence out to the street. It was a knockout, pure and simple, but Wal-lison followed it up by kicking the man about the head until he was insensible.

A number of witnesses were heard in the case, including the wives of both men, and the stories differed widely. Each man had laid a charge against the other, accusing him of striking the first blow. The charge of Alfred Ball against his neighbor, who was heard first, and Wallison was found guilty and sentence suspended until the counter-charge could be heard.
Some points in the stories told by the two witnesses, Master Graydon found it hard to reconcile, but the evidence of a disinterested neighbor who witnessed the affair, and who was positive that Ball did not strike Wallison, cleared the situation, and the counter charge failed. Wallison was fined $10 and costs, with the option of one month in jail. His employer paid the fine.

ORDERED RAILWAYS TO REDUCE FREIGHT RATES.

Duluth Wins Big Fight Against Discrimination Shown By Incoming Lines.

[Canadian Press.]
Washington, July 19.—Duluth, Minn., won a substantial portion of its freight rates fight before the interstate commerce commission today, when a reduction of class rates to that city from eastern points was ordered, and the present rates were held to be discriminatory. Duluth's contention that rates on lake-and-rail traffic from the east ought to break at its wharves, however, was not sustained.

The so-called "Duluth case" grew out of the commercial unrest between Duluth and other cities similarly situated at the head of Great Lake navigation on the one hand and Minneapolis and St. Paul and other interior cities in the northwest, on the other. The twin cities have grown as in population, and volumes of trade in recent years, while Duluth and Superior, although commanding located, have not increased as rapidly.
An investigation of the dissimilarity of development convinced the resident manufacturers and businessmen of Duluth that the reason was to be found in the existing lake-and-rail freight rates from eastern points of origin through Duluth to Minneapolis and St. Paul.

The Commercial Club of Duluth thereupon instituted a complaint before the interstate commerce commission attacking the present rate structure. The petition was directed against a large number of railroads operating in trunk line, central freight association and western territories, and also against boat lines operating on the Great Lakes.

Dangerous Fire on Richmond Street
Did $800 Damage.

Fire, which started in a storeroom occupied by the Charlton-Parke Press, printers, in the In. building, on Richmond street, did damage to the amount of $800 shortly after eight o'clock Friday night.

A considerable portion of the damage was done to the stock of the London
Electric Company by water.

When the firemen reached the scene
the upper floor was filled with smoke and they experienced considerable difficulty in reaching the blaze.

The origin is unknown. Chief Atkinson is of the opinion that it may have been smouldering for some time before noticed.

The firemen were called out this morning at 3:30 to the Toasted Corn Flakes factory on Dundas street east, where a fire broke out in one of the ovens on the top floor.

The damage amounted to $200.

TORONTO GIRL GOES ON AN ARCTIC HONEYMOON

The Bride Thinks It Will Be an Enjoyable Seven Years' Wedding Trip.

Montreal, July 19.—Facing the prospect of seven years' missionary work in a sparsely settled Eskimo village, with only half a dozen white men within a hundred miles, the Rev. Percy Howard, with his bride of three weeks, who was Miss Ethel Blanche Le Ber, of Toronto, sailed today on the Nascope for Rupert's House, James Bay, where they will spend a unique honeymoon in caring for the spiritual needs of the simple folk who compose the wandering tribes of the far north.

To retain the aspect of civilization as long as possible, Mr. and Mrs. Howard were dressed in their usual costumes. Mr. Howard having donned his clerical garb, while Mrs. Howard wore a silk morning frock, a last feminine tribute, before the beginning of complete isolation, which will necessitate haircuts and manicures for seven long years. Mr. Howard is not inexperienced in this work, however, as he had two years' preparation at the Hudsons Bay Company's post at Cochrane, where he became acquainted with the Indian temperament, and learned something of the language of the Esquimaux.

A Wycliffe Graduate. Graduating from Wycliffe College in 1910, he proceeded at once to mission work, and has decided to give his life to his task. Mrs. Howard has had no experience in missionary work, but was not at all discouraged at this prospect of leaving the comforts and luxuries of civilization.

"Everyone seems to think we are making a great sacrifice," she said as the boat was about to sail. "But there is really so much more to interest one among the Indian and Eskimo tribes than in the cities, that we both consider we are taking quite the most enjoyable honeymoon possible."

Mail Every Three Months. The Rev. James Woodall is the present incumbent at Rupert's House, and his visit home when Mr. and Mrs. Howard will be his first for five years. Mail reaches the fort every three months only, being brought by canoe from the terminal of the railway. Provisions for a winter have to be taken by the missionaries, however, as freight rates in the north are too expensive to permit of more than one vessel a year.

"We are taking up only what we think will be the necessities this year," said Mr. Howard. "Next year we may get a few luxuries sent up. We trust our predecessor will have a good supply of books and other reading matter, as we are taking very little with us."

BAYFIELD

Bayfield, July 18.—Mr. Orvil Weston, of Detroit, is home for a visit with his parents.

Cottagers and guests of Clinton and Goderich had a dance at Jovett's pavilion last evening. It proved a big success.

Among the visitors at Miss N. Ferguson's are Mr. and Mrs. Charles Edwards, Mr. and Mrs. F. B. Edwards, Miss Muriel Edwards, Master Barry Edwards, Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Leaden, Master Jack Leaden, Miss Leaden, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Johnson, Miss Jean Johnson, of Toronto; Dr. and Mrs. Orme, Master M. Orme, of London; Miss Charlie Baxter, Mrs. Fraser, Miss Janie Fraser, Mrs. Fraser, London; Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dann, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Stecker, Miss Trombly, Miss Turnbull, Miss Metzger, Miss Sleight, Miss Engel, Miss Lawrence, Detroit; Miss Florence Orr, Windsor; Miss Wiseman, Miss Gardiner, Ottawa; Mr. Jack Wiseman, Miss Gladys Wiseman, Mr. Forest, Miss Wiseman, Chicago; Mr. Wm. Wiseman, Edmonton; Mr. Roy East, Winnipeg; Mr. H. Harper, Miss Grace Harper, London; Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Rutledge, Cleveland; Mrs. Walter Boug, Mr. Gordon Boug, Windsor.

Broke His Neck by Falling off Load

[Special to The Advertiser.] Ingersoll, July 19.—Falling from the first excursion train out of Port Stanley Thursday night, Ralph Husband, a local boy, 12 years of age, received cuts and bruises to his head, shoulder and back, and he may be injured internally. He received medical attention on reaching St. Thomas and again after arriving at his home. His case is not regarded as dangerous unless he should be injured internally.

Paris Doctor Says

Dandruff, Falling Hair Are Caused By a Microbe—Dr. Sangerbond Proves It.

Dr. Sangerbond is the leading dermatologist of France.

To prove his theory that germs cause dandruff, he infected a guinea pig with these microbes and in a short time the hair from the animal's body disappeared.

Parisian Sage, which can now be obtained all over Canada, has an immense sale and is highly recommended by physicians in all parts of the world. It is just because it is the only preparation of hair tonic that is absolutely sure to kill the dandruff germ.

It is guaranteed to cure dandruff, stop falling hair or itching scalp in two weeks or money back.

In warm weather it keeps the scalp clean and cool and free from obnoxious odors. Parisian Sage is a pleasant and dainty hair dressing that will put a bewitching charm and lustre into faded and lifeless hair in one week. It is distressing for any woman to have dull, unattractive hair and women so unfortunate should use Parisian Sage.

Parisian Sage comes in large, 50-cent bottles, at all druggists, and is sold by leading druggists everywhere. Your Girl with the Auburn Hair! is on every bottle.

BOWELS BAD, LIVER TORPID? CASCARETS

If Constipated, Bilious, Head-achy, Stomach Sour, Take a Cascaret.

You men and women who can't get feeling right—who have headache, coated tongue, foul taste and foul breath, dizziness, can't sleep, are bilious, nervous and upset, bothered with a sick, gassy, disordered stomach, or have backache and feel worn out.

Are you keeping your bowels clean with Cascarets, or merely forcing a passage every few days with salts, cathartic pills or castor oil? This is important.

Cascarets work while you sleep; cleanse and regulate the stomach, remove the sour, undigested and fermenting food and foul gases; take the excess bile from the liver and carry out of the system all the constipating waste matter and poison in the intestines and bowels.

A Cascaret tonight will straighten you out by morning—a 10-cent box from any drug store will keep your stomach sweet; liver and bowels regular and head clear for months. Don't forget the children. They love Cascarets because they taste good—do good—never gripe or sicken.

"ORANGE LILY SAVED MY LIFE"

These words or expressions having the same meaning are contained in hundreds of the letters I have received during the past year. Many were from women who had suffered agonies from falling of womb; others from women who had escaped dangerous surgical operations, as the tumors and ulcers had been removed by the action of Orange Lily; and others who had suffered from suppressed menstruation, leucorrhoea, painful periods, etc. For all these and the other troubles known in general as Women's Disorders, Orange Lily furnishes a positive scientific, never-failing cure. It is a purifier of the blood, and its operation is certain and beneficial.

As a trial actually proves its merit, I hereby offer to send, absolutely free, a box worth 50c, sufficient for ten days' treatment, to every suffering woman who will write for it. Enclose 2 stamps. MRS. FRANCES E. CURRAH, Windsor, Ont.

LONDON DEFEATED SAINTS
AGAIN BY TIMELY HITTING

Beebe's Pitching, Coupled With London's Hits, Were Responsible for Victory—Rube Deneau Stole Home in Eighth Inning and Made It Standing Up.

[BY JINX.]

The gent who invented the fetchy little phrase, "Taking Candy From a Baby," would have to think up a new one had he been present to describe the ease with which London again defeated St. Thomas across the river in the local pill box yesterday afternoon. Taking confectionery from an infant is regarded as an easy and simple proposition just the same as stealing pennies from a blind man provided the infant doesn't wait and the blind man is really blind. But taking baseball games from this St. Thomas club at present makes these others look like impossible feats of daring. All that seems to be necessary is to play baseball, and then more baseball, and in the most simple sort of a way the team will gradually drift into your possession as though it were the most natural thing in the world.

TEN STRAIGHT WINS.

Yesterday's game was important, since it marked the London club's tenth remove from the pangs of defeat. Ten straight games is a mighty nice little fistful, and if this London club keeps camping on the tail of a winning streak much longer the other clubs in the league will be accusing us of locking ourselves in the top story of the league skyscraper and stalling all the elevators.

Beebe Took It Easy.

Benton B. Beebe, the guy with all the b's in his name, and a couple of wins in his record, chased the tenth straight into Mr. Deneau's corral. He didn't have much of a chase, either. He lapsed in the metaphorical, and he did was let down the bars and sit on the fence and watch the decrepit old Ormen sink into the inclosure. Then he shut up the bars again and there you are. The score? Oh, yes! the score! Never let it be said that we overlooked that important part of the game just because it was a little lopsided. It was 8 to 2, and we will give you three guesses as to who belonged to the nine.

St. Thomas Scores in First.

The Saints kind of encouraged themselves by chasing a counter across in the initial period, but just to show that London club frowned on this sort of behavior, George Dunlop, the Meridian Marvel, beamed one of Mr. Howick's damp ones for two cushions and scored. Patsy Matteson and Lettie Looey Bierbauer in the London section of this opening paragraph. Mr. Howick was treated to scant consideration by the local help after that, and a couple of spasms further on his weeping delivery was justified to all sections of the premises, while his companions in misery were forced to look on.

Matty Matteson Stars.

These seven or eight cushions were given much work to do through the self-same pastime trying to keep Matty Matteson from scoring a whole bushel of runs himself. In the first inning Matthew was credited with a Cincinnati base hit, but in the next after a hard run.

LEAFS BLEW IN SEVENTH AND BERLIN TOOK GAME

Harris Started It By Booting Sweeney's Roller—Bradshaw Pitched Good Ball.

Guelph, July 18.—A blow-up of the Leafs and a batting bee by the Dutchmen in the seventh frame, gave a victory to the tail-enders today.
The fireworks started when Harris muddled on a roller from Sweeney's clout strike. A single by White, another by Beltz and still another by Gettle tallied for two scores. Dorbeck was then replaced by Kirkley off whose flinging the Dutchmen snatched two more times. A single by Bradshaw, and a bad error by St. Louis let in Berlin's sixth tally. Until the explosion in the seventh, Guelph had the game tucked away under a two-run lead.

Bradshaw Pitched Brilliantly for Berlin.

OTTAWA BEAT HAMILTON
IN TEN INNING STRUGGLE

Senators Tied It Up in Ninth, and Seemed To Have Lost Again in Tenth, But Instead Won Out.

Ottawa, July 18.—With the score tied three times during the game, Ottawa finally defeated Hamilton in the second game of the series by the score of 8 to 7 after a thrilling ten-inning struggle. The score was tied in the ninth inning, and it appeared as though the visitors had the game won when they scored another in the tenth inning. Ottawa, however, started a batting spree in the tenth inning, which resulted in Lage and Powers crossing the plate for the two winning runs. The visitors used three pitchers, while Kubat went the whole game for the home team.

AND SHUT OUT PETERBORO

Chubby Coose Was Pitching For Brantford, and He Also Starred at Bat.

Brantford, July 18.—Chubby Coose, who has been catching for Brantford all week, took his regular turn in the pitcher's box here today, and easily defeated Peterboro, 8 to 0. In addition he made three hits out of four times at bat, being deprived of a fourth hit by a sensational one-hand stop by Brant. The Red Sox looked like a new team today after a severe roast for their work against London during the earlier part of the week. The game was played in record time, one hour and ten minutes. Score:

DR. FEAR'S RINK WON

AYLMER TOURNAMENT

Defeated E. W. R. Hill's Rink in the Final Game.
[Special to The Advertiser.]
Aylmer, July 18.—The finals in the local bowling tournament, unfinished from Wednesday, were played off on Thursday night at the greens, the competing rinks being skipped by E. W. R. Hill and Dr. W. J. Fear, the latter winning by five shots.
The following was the line-up of the rinks:
Geo. Walker, J. A. Gillett, J. M. Wright, Dr. W. J. Fear, skip.

Rowing Club Will Send Crew
To Canadian Henley Next Month

Have Entered in Open Four Race, and Crew Is Busy Each Night Practicing on River—New Shell Ordered From Toronto to Race In.

The London Rowing Club will send a crew of four to the Canadian Henley at St. Catharines on Aug. 1 and 2 to compete in the racing fours event. For the past two weeks the crew has been practicing on the River Thames, and by the time the St. Kitts event comes along will be in good shape. Owing to the fact that the race is rowed without a coxswain, and the shell is steered by the rowers, the Rowing Club had to send to Toronto for a new boat. It has arrived, and the crew is using it nightly on the river.
Will Meet Some Good Crews.
The local crew will have to compete against some of the best crews in Canada, such as Toronto Canoe Club and Toronto Argonauts, but it is confident of making a good showing. The men will be picked from W. Howarth, Art Coates, F. G. Marshall, F. N. Phelps and Alex. Eastwood. All these rowers are young fellows, who have had a great deal of experience in a shell.
Although the boys were a little awkward in the new boat at first, they are getting more accustomed to it now, and each night row to the Springbank dam without stopping. A rest of a few minutes follows their arrival there, and then they start back for the city again. Time is kept on the trip, and each night they are doing it in just a little faster time than the preceding night.

Joe Keenan Signed by Red Sox;
May Supplant Manager Kane

Ex-Manager of Berlin Club Left London This Morning to Report to Brantford Club—Will Play Against Peterboro Today.

Joe Keenan, ex-manager of the Berlin Canadian League team, and a former player of the club, left this city for Brantford, where he will report to the Brantford Red Sox. Joe-Ke was signed up by President Tom Nelson, of the Brantford club, last evening, and he will be in today's game against Peterboro. Since his return to this city from Berlin Joe-Ke has been playing ball with the Hyman team.
The signing up of Keenan by the Brantford Red Sox may be the beginning of the end of Manager Amby Kane's regime in the Telephone City. The Brantford management has been blaming Kane for the poor showing of the Brantford club this season, and it is searching for a new pilot. Keenan's vast experience as a ballplayer and manager would fit him for the position and it may be that he will land the job. The Brantford club has been severely roasted by the Brantford papers for the poor showing made this season, and although Kane has made a couple of trips to New England in an effort to get good players, the men he has brought back with him were not good enough. It now looks as if an estrangement had occurred between the owner and the manager, and the signing up of Keenan may be the first step to supplanting Amby Kane.

Americans May Have To Give Up
Attempt to Lift Motorboat Cup

[Canadian Press.]
New York, July 19.—Fear that the British international trophy for motorboats may be kept in England another year through default of the American challengers to get any American boat across to British waters in time for the cup races, is now being taken seriously. Another chapter of accidents spoiled the trials of the speed boats, which were set for yesterday afternoon off Long Island. The Neptune II, which was expected to show challenge form, was unable to leave her mooring, because of a broken engine. The Hazel II also had a slight mishap. It was expected that the American challenger would be sent to England to try to lift the cup they must be shipped by next Saturday, to tune up alone.

The regular trials closed last week, but only one boat, the Ankie Deep, was able to stand up over the course, and she did so only once. The committee then stated unofficially that this boat would probably be one of the challengers, but it is said her owner has not yet consented to make the trip. He has been advised that the waters in the Solent are generally rough in August, and as his boat is only 32 feet long, while the limit of the class is 40 feet, he has slight chance of lifting the cup. The races are scheduled to be held at Cowes, Eng., Aug. 12. If boats are to be sent to England to try to lift the cup they must be shipped by next Saturday, to tune up alone.

CANADIANS LOST OUT IN TENNIS SEMI-FINALS

American Team Defeated Powell and Schwengler in Doubles Today in Three Straight Sets.

[Canadian Press.]
Wimbledon, Eng., July 19.—The United States Davis cup lawn tennis team today fought its way here through the final round of the preliminary tournament and by adding a victory over the Canadian team in the doubles match to its two wins in the singles yesterday, gained the right to challenge the English holders for possession of the international trophy.

Harold H. Hackett, of New York, and Maurice E. McLoughlin, of San Francisco, were the pair who represented the United States in today's match, and scored a win in three straight sets, 6-3, 6-3, 12-10, from R. B. Powell, the Canadian captain, and B. P. Schwengler, the Canadian singles champion.

Hymans Have Opportunity to Demonstrate What Made-In-London Ball Players Can Do

Local W. O. B. L. Team Is Composed Entirely of Local Boys Who Have Graduated From City Amateur Leagues—Team Has Good Chance to Win League Championship.

THE RECENT showing of the C. S. Hymans W. O. B. L. team has resulted in a great deal of local interest being taken in the outcome of this organization. The Hymans club has won its last two games against the Woodstock and Stratford clubs, the two strongest clubs in the league, and both games were won on the opposing club's grounds.

With six more games yet to play, four of which are to be played in this city, the Hymans team has a splendid chance to win the pennant of the W. O. B. L. To date the local tanners have won two games and lost four, and they have at last hit their stride. Manager Parker is now confident that he has the team to beat, and the recent showing of the club in Woodstock and Stratford would bear this out.

The Hymans club's greatest weakness during the first part of the season appeared to be in the pitching department. However, with the return of Jack Gillis, who has not lost a game for Hymans for two seasons, and during that time has pitched over twenty, and the addition of Pitcher Hughes, the club is as strong as any in the league. The team has never lacked hitting ability, and is liable to break up a game in any inning in this respect.

Today Hymans are playing in St. Thomas, and a win from the railroaders will help a great deal. If the trick is turned the Hymans team will enjoy the record of winning three games in a row and trimming every team in the league on their home lots.

One of the features of the Hymans team, and one which should appeal to all London fans, is the fact that it is made up entirely of local baseball players. This can be said of no other team in the league. Stratford has a bunch of former Canadian leaguers, such as Abbie Johnson, Boyd Hackbush, Anderson, and a few others, while Woodstock and St. Thomas also have a few outsiders. The Hymans team has not imported one player. The club even carries its own umpire and official scorer, and they are all from London. Manager D. M. Parker has pinned his faith to local boys, and now he is beginning to see the benefit of his decision. He had numerous opportunities to sign up ex-Canadian leaguers, but he preferred the boys who were employed in the Hymans factory, and who had played on the team last year. He knew there were just as good ball players in this city as elsewhere, and the only thing was to get them out and demonstrate the fact to local fans.

All the Hymans players with the exception of Jo Jo Keenan, who only recently joined the club, learned the game in this city, and if Hymans can cap the bunting this season it will be an excellent tribute to the made-in-London ball player.

Johnny Farquhar, whose triple won the game at Stratford Thursday, is a Belmont boy, who was given a try-out as a pitcher by the London Canadian League team a year ago last spring. He did not make a good, but joined the Hymans team and played in the outfield. This year Manager Parker has tried him in the infield, and he is playing a great game at second base.

Tommy Phelan, the club's first sacker, is a graduate of the local amateur leagues, and he is one of the best first basemen in the W. O. B. L. He is particularly good on grounders. "Toots" Doherty at short is another local lad who got his baseball training in the Springfield and East End leagues. "Toots" is captain of the Hymans team, and the equal of any shortstop in the league.

"Check" Parkinson, centre fielder, is another graduate of the Springfield and East End leagues. He played with the old St. John club for a couple of years. He is playing great ball for Hymans this year. Clay Gibson, "Clucker" Dunn, Russ Meyers, Jack Gillis, Catcher Russell and Left Fielder Jeffries are all London boys who first started to play in this city.

In the Springfield and East End leagues, "Clucker" Dunn is the man. He has been putting up a good game for Hymans at third base, and his knowledge of the game has helped a great deal. Catcher Russell recently recovered from a stroke of sickness which confined him to the hospital for some days, but he has been in the game again and catching good ball.

PIRATES STILL WINNING

Ran Up Big Score on Brooklyn Yesterday—Cincinnati Beat Phillies With Brown Pitching.

New York, July 18.—New York again broke even in a double-header with St. Louis today. The visitors won the first, a loosely-played affair, 4 to 3, while the locals took the second easily, 5 to 0.

In the second game Mathewson held the visitors to five scattered hits, four of them being infield bouncers, and only two men reached third. Score:

W. O. B. A. DRAW 90 RINKS ENTERED

All the Old Timers and a Lot of New Ones Will Be Present This Year.

GREENS IN GREAT SHAPE

Grounds Are Being Decorated and All Arrangements Completed for the Opening on Monday.

The draw for the Western Ontario bowling tournament, which opens on Monday afternoon, was made last evening and 90 rinks have entered. The list includes nearly all the old timers and a lot of new ones, such bowlers as Sir John Willison, of Toronto; Canadas; Van Valkenberg of Balm Beach, Best of Seaford, Davis of Goderich, Bawden of Ridgeway, and Dr. Mart also of Ridgeway. Two Buffalo rinks will also be present.

Galt Sends Four Rinks.
The Galt Imperials will be well represented with four strong rinks, while the Brantford Heathers are also well represented. All the prominent local rinks are also entered, and some splendid games are promised. The prizes are the best that have ever been offered for such a tournament, and the greens are in splendid condition. The place will be prettily decorated, and will present a gala appearance when the play in the Labatt preliminaries commences. The draw is as follows:

THE MARVELLOUS VEEDEE

Demonstrators Remain a Few Days Longer at the New Masonic Temple, Where Hundreds Call Daily For Free Trials.

So numerous and so pressing have been the requests received yesterday by the Veedee Demonstrators asking them to stay a little while longer, that it has been decided to keep their offices at the New Masonic Temple, London, open for a few days longer.

The local press during the week have devoted columns of their space to description of the Veedee Lecture Demonstration, witnessed by hundreds of people at the New Masonic Temple last Tuesday, when wonderful results were obtained on the platform by the application of the marvellous little machine on the large number of sufferers anxious to test the power of the Veedee Blood Circulator. The extraordinary results were effected before the eyes of the astonished and applauding audience.

Many are calling for free trials. Fully nine out of every ten who try the Veedee are immediately benefited and eventually cured. The great number only requiring a few treatments.

With perfect ease the Veedee is placed to work upon the seat of pain, and in a few moments, almost before you have had time to realize what has happened, those pains have disappeared.

The emphatic and unanimous approval of the British Medical Profession has been accorded the Veedee.

WHAT THE VEEDEE HELPS.

Rheumatism, Neuritis, Arthritis, Gout, Paralysis, Deafness.

As well as the following: Liver Troubles, Stiff Joints, Insomnia, Kidney Diseases, Catarrh, Swollen Glands, Indigestion, Eye Weaknesses, Constipation, Asthma, Bronchitis, General Debility, Contracted Limbs, Neuritis and Stammering. If, however, you are beyond relief or improvement, the Demonstrators would refuse to sell a VEEDEE.

If they did not feel certain its use would be beneficial to you. The medical testimony which supports the Veedee is marvellous in its volume, and in the fact that hundreds of well-known doctors actually use and prescribe the Veedee in their practice.

NOT A CURE-ALL.
It might be thought that in the Veedee, at last, there has been found the Philosopher

Secret of Mysterious Power Revealed at Last

How Prominent People Have Gained Wealth and Fame Simple Method That Enables Anyone to Control Thoughts and Acts of Others, Cure Diseases and Habits Without Drugs, Win
the Love and Friendship of Others, and Read the Secret Thoughts and Desires of People Though Thousands of Miles Away

"TO UPLIFT AND BENEFIT MANKIND," says
THE REV. JAMES STANLEY WENTZ.

WONDERFUL BOOK DESCRIBING THIS STRANGE FORCE AND A CHARACTER DELINEATION POST FREE TO ALL WHO WRITE AT ONCE.

The National Institute of Sciences of London, England, has appropriated $25,000 toward a fund for the free distribution of Prof. Knowles' new book, "The Key to the Development of Inner Forces." The book lays bare many astounding facts concerning the practices of Eastern Yogis, and explains a wonderfully simple system for the development of Personal Magnetism, Hypnotic and Telepathic Powers, and the curing of diseases and habits without drugs. The subject of practical character reading is also covered in detail, and the author describes a simple method of accurately reading the secret thoughts and desires of others though thousands of miles away. The almost endless stream of letters requesting copies of the book and character delineations indicate clearly the universal interest in Psychological and Occult Sciences.

That Prof. Knowles' system is exciting the interest of the brightest intellect of our day is clearly shown by the scores of recommendations, among which the following, from representative British publications, the clergy and the medical profession are striking examples:

THE CHRISTIAN AGE.—"Professor Knowles' System has cured disease, corrected bad habits, strengthened memory, and proved highly beneficial in the cultivation of personal and social influence."

THE LONDON WEEKLY TIMES.—"Professor Knowles' Complete System of Personal Influence and Healing provides the embryo enthusiast with just such knowledge as could be adapted to his own peculiar circumstances and inclinations."

THE LONDON MAIL.—"Professor Knowles' System embraces a great deal of erudition in a form which can be readily grasped by all who have the ability to read and understand simple prose. No better help towards success in life could be desired."

MODERN SOCIETY.—"No modern investigator along psychological lines has received so large an amount of praise as that accorded to Professor Knowles for his marvelous System of Personal Influence and Healing. Here at last is a man who is at once a great scholar, a born teacher and a practical helper for the instruction papers reveal a nature which is sympathetic and of good fellowship for an ambitious, yet largely misguided population."

THE ONLY SURE PROTECTION AGAINST THE FLY IS The Ferguson Window Screen

Contract Let for Welland Canal Work

Dominion Dredging Company Given Contract at $350,000.

[Special to The Advertiser.]

Ottawa, July 18.—The contract for the first section of the new Welland Canal was let by the Government this afternoon to the Dominion Dredging Company at three and a half millions, the lowest tender. This is for section one of the new canal, beginning at Lake Ontario. It is the intention of the Government to let the contracts for the work section by section.

The new canal is to be finished in five years and will cost approximately fifty millions. Work on section one will be commenced at once by the successful tenderers.

Keen competition was shown by the dredging firms of Canada in bidding for this contract, and the bid of the successful tenderers is under the original estimate. There were three tenders in all, which meant two millions of dollars in deposits with the Government.

Departmental engineers are concluding the work of checking up on sections two and three. Section three is to be the big contract of the canal, and much heavier deposits will be required. The whole work will be under contract this year.

PRINCE IS HAPPY

[Canadian Press.]

New York, July 19. A London cable says: Prince Arthur of Connaught, who opened the commercial auto car exhibition at Olympia yesterday, to which more than 120 firms are exhibiting, was in a jocular mood. He said that in view of the recent announcement his thoughts turned more naturally to two-wheeled cars than to the types of vehicles he had been examining there. Nevertheless he found them very interesting.

UNKNOWN HERO SAVED YOUTH AT NIAGARA FALLS

Jumped Into Surging Waters Fifteen Feet From the Brink.

Was Saved Himself After Being Swept Off His Feet Twice.

[Special to The Advertiser.]

Niagara, July 19.—One of the most exciting rescues in years was made on the brink of Niagara Falls shortly after 9 o'clock last evening by four men, who saved Truman Chapman, aged 22, of Hamilton, from a horrible death.

Chapman was sitting on the iron railing just above Prospect Point about 9 o'clock, when the loiterers in the park were horrified to see him suddenly topple backwards and fall into the stream. At this point the current is swift and the pull toward the brink of the Falls almost irresistible. After striking the water Chapman's body lodged against two small projections of rock, and this undoubtedly saved him from almost instant death.

Formed a Chain.

When the cry went up that a man was in the water, John Hughes and Thomas Swinders, of Niagara Falls; Thomas D. Thomas, of Toronto, and a fourth man who did not give his name to the police, leaped over the railing. The unidentified man waded out several feet from the shore, but could not reach far enough to get a secure hold of Chapman, who was then too far gone to get back to the shore unaided. Hughes, Swinders and Thomas formed in a chain from the iron fence, and, clinging to the unknown's hand, enabled him to get nearer Chapman.

A Hard Fight.

When the unconscious man was pulled away from the supporting hold of the rocks there was another moment of intense suspense for the rescuers. His body was a dead weight, and the pull of the current toward the brink of the falls, less than fifteen feet away, was tremendous. A break in the chain meant not only the loss of Chapman's life, but also that of the unknown man, who was then too far gone to get back to the shore unaided. Twice the man at the end of the chain was swept from his feet, but he clung desperately to the helpless burden, and the united efforts of the three men nearest, who had a better footing, finally swung the two of them out of the grasp of the current.

Chapman was unconscious for over an hour, after being taken ashore. Relatives said he was subject to fits, and undoubtedly was stricken while sitting on the rail.

SAILORS BURN HEADQUARTERS OF SOCIALISTS

Fierce Riots While Officers Were Attending Big Navy Dance.

Marines Hurdled Furniture Into Street and Set Fire To Pile.

[Canadian Press.]

Seattle, Wash., July 19.—While the officers of the Pacific fleet reserve of the United States navy were dancing at the army and navy ball in the State Armory last night, a mob of many years, several hundred of their sailors and marines were marching through the streets of the city denouncing the Industrial Workers of the World and the flag, singing and burning Socialist and Industrial Workers' headquarters, and in their excitement demolishing a Salvation Army meeting room before learning that they had mistaken the place.

Damage.

The city headquarters of the Moderate Socialists and the Radical Socialists were sacked and the books and furniture carried into the street and burned. The mob then turned on the principal street corner, where the city was destroyed, and the big meeting room of the Industrial Workers of the World, in the southern part of the city, was stripped of its belongings, which were then carried to a second-story window and burned in the street.

Police Powerless.

The police offered no resistance to the rioters. Some of the officers, who had the force was busy handling crowds attending the golden potlatch festivities, and no reserves were available to cope with the rioters. The actual destruction of property was carried on by undisciplined men, though citizens made up most of the mob. The damage is estimated at $6,000.

Deny Statements.

A report was widely circulated today that the Secretary of the Navy Department, in a speech at the Rainier Club, had taken the Industrial Workers of the World as his subject, and had declared that they and other believers in the red flag should be driven out of the country. Those who heard the address of the secretary said that it was exceedingly moderate, and had no reference to any local trouble. Nor did he at any time mention the Industrial Workers.

THORNDALE.

Thorndale, July 18.—Mr. R. H. Harding has returned from his tour of inspection of the farming country of Western Ontario during the current season, and reports the hay crop very light throughout all parts. Miss Isabel Buckle is holidaying at Sarnia Beach. Wild raspberries are reported to be quite plentiful this year.

DROWNED IN THE THAMES WHEN CANOE WAS UPSET

Jack Williams Perished Last Night Near the Cove Bridge.

Jack Williams, an Englishman employed by the Benson-Wilcox Electric Company, was drowned near the Cove bridge about 12 o'clock last night by the overturning of a canoe. His chum, Jack Parker, was also thrown out, but reached the shore. Williams' body was in the water for two hours before it was recovered. No one was near when the accident happened. The evening being rather dark, they were carrying a light, which went out, and it is supposed that in trying to relight it, the canoe was overturned, causing the accident. Parker tried to save his chum, and after desperate efforts, had to give up the attempt and swim to the shore to save himself. The fire department received notification and hurried to the scene of the drowning, where, after two hours searching, the body was brought to the surface by fireman Tozer. Parker was in an exhausted condition, and first aid was administered on the bank.

Williams was a married man next Thursday, and his friends were preparing a wedding present for him. His friend, Wm. Brinker, and his other friends were expected to surprise him when the young lady arrived from Chicago and are grief-stricken at the fatality.

Williams was able to swim and his chum said at a loss to understand how the accident happened. He was in the habit of taking a swim every evening when the weather was favorable, being a fine swimmer. Whether he was attacked with cramps or whether the weight of his clothing dragged him down is not known.

RETURNS SHOW FALLING OFF IN BANK DEPOSITS

Call Loans Both at Home and Abroad Show Decreases.

Current and Savings Accounts
Generally Are Also Much Shorter.

Ottawa, July 19.—The statement of Canadian chartered banks for the month of June, which has just been issued by the finance department, shows a considerable decrease in deposits on both savings and current accounts. As compared with the month of May there is a decrease of $7,826,634 in savings deposits, which are nearly ten millions less than they were at the end of June a year ago. Deposits on demand, that is for current business, show a decrease of $1,389,714 for the month, and are less than they were at the end of June, 1912.

Other features of the June bank statement are decreases during the month, in call loans, both in Canada and by Canadian banks abroad. Current loans in Canada show a slight increase during the month, but as compared with the end of June a year ago are greater by more than fifty million dollars. In the twelve months' period the banks have increased their capital by $3,602,550, and have increased their reserves by $7,701,375.

Call Loans.

On June 30 the call loans in Canada amounted to $68,642,377, a decrease in the month compared with the end of May of $1,240,163; call loans elsewhere, $98,263,520, decrease of $6,787,689. Current loans in Canada, $899,260,000, increase $300,359; current loans elsewhere, $36,848,651, decrease $797,105. Deposits on demand, $362,769,928, decrease $1,939,714. Savings deposits, $622,928,969, decrease $7,826,634. Bank notes in circulation $105,697,629, increase $2,699,692.

General Figures.

Comparing the statement for June, 1913, with that for the same month of last year there is shown a decrease of $59,478 in call loans in Canada; a decrease of $31,206,292 in call loans abroad; an increase of $59,819,434 in current loans in Canada; an increase of $2,640,113 in current loans abroad; a decrease of $10,730,261 in demand deposits in Canada; a decrease of $3,388,718 in savings deposits, and an increase of $3,602,550 in bank note circulation.

Bolt Kills Farmer Baby on Lap Unhurt

Powassan, July 18.—During a severe electrical storm, which occurred here this afternoon, Thomas Stillar, a farmer of the vicinity, was instantly killed. Mr. Stillar was sitting in his home with his baby on his knee when the bolt struck him.

He was 42 years of age, and is survived by a widow and seven children.

Financial and Commercial

BUYING WAS SLOW ON THE MARKET TODAY

There were few changes in prices on the market this morning and everything was quiet, buying being slow. Most vegetables are the same price as quoted previously, except cucumbers, which are selling from 40 to 75 cents a dozen. The fruit supply was small, and the prices unchanged. Hay and oats are the same price as on Friday, and the supply small. All other lines are unchanged.

AUTO TRUCK FOR GARBAGE

Big One Would Make Good and Time Would Be Saved.

WAGONS ARE SMALL

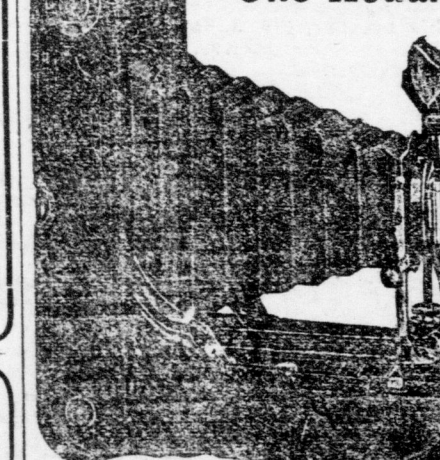

At the finance committee meeting on Friday night, City Treasurer Bell announced that the best tender for boiler insurance on the new incinerator had been received from Messrs. Nelles & Sons, representing the Canadian Casualty and Boiler Insurance Company. The new plant will accordingly be insured in the sum of $30,000 for three years at a total premium of $70. Fire insurance will also be placed on the plant for $10,000.

Ald. Richter expressed dissatisfaction at the manner in which the garbage is being collected. The wagons are much too small, he thinks, necessitating too many trips to the incinerator. "I doubt if they take 500 pounds to the load," he said. He advocated having a big motor truck, which could carry several tons of garbage in one load, and thus save time.

Ald. Spittal thought that if collecting stations could be arranged at certain points along the street car lines, the street railway could be made to remove it on a flat car. A switch could be run into the incinerator from Ottawa avenue. No action was taken in the matter.

A number of accounts were passed, and it was agreed to send Ald. Moore, MINARD'S LINIMENT USED BY PHYSICIANS.

TAKES TIME FOR NEW SCHEDULE TO WORK WELL

Manager King Asks for Further Time To Straighten Out Details.

Manager King, of the London street railway, appeared before the finance committee last night in regard to the new street railway schedules. The company was doing all in its power to make the new service acceptable, he said. It was hard to get things running as smoothly as they might, so soon after the inauguration of the new schedules, and he asked for further time to work out the details. He was told to appear at the next meeting of the board two weeks hence. He will also attend the council meeting next Monday night.

REVIEW ENDS CADET CAMP

Prizes for Efficiency Presented to Boys on Friday Afternoon.

LOCAL CORPS WINS MANY

On Friday afternoon the cadets were reviewed by Col. Hodgins and the prizes for efficiency in the various branches of work presented. The boys made a fine showing and performed several difficult evolutions in a manner that would be creditable to much older and more experienced troops. The colonel complimented them on their fine showing and said he hoped that some day they would join one of the militia units.

The prizes were presented by members of the Daughters of the Empire. Capt. Fulger assisted the ladies and the boys received their rewards for their faithful attendance to duty during the camp. The local corps of the Collegiate Institute received the bulk of the prizes, winning the shooting trophy presented by Hon. Adam Beck, team signalling prize presented by the department of militia, J. S. Barnard prize for team shooting, the skirmishing trophy and other individual prizes. The general efficiency prize went to the Galt cadet corps and the prize for physical training to the Seaford troops.

In presenting the prize for team signalling to the L. C. I. corps Sheriff Cameron said that these corps were the nucleus of the armed forces of the country in the future and that he hoped that the boys would continue to take an interest in the defence of Canada.

CORRESPONDENCE

A Protest Against Meter Payments.
 To the Editor of The Advertiser:

If you will allow me space through the valued columns of your paper, I will endeavor to bring before the citizens of London or who ever else it may concern, a custom that I consider not less than a gross injustice; therefore, if I am cognizant of an existing evil and do not cry out against it, I then lend myself to, and become an accomplice with the sin. I have been a citizen of this fair city for about fifteen years, and have been using the produce of a concern which has given us good service, but in connection with the goods manufactured by this notable firm, they place at their convenience in our premises, a device called a gas meter, through which their goods are measured, which, of course, is meet and right, but at a certain date in each and every month every consumer is exacted to submit to an additional expense per month, to pay for a machine to measure out their goods to you and me. Now, I want to say here, and that without any reflection on the part of intelligent business men, why is it that this mode of doing has gone unopposed for all these years? Why is it that this company claim privileges, paramount to all other business concerns, except our water commission who are the supreme ones? Whoever heard of merchant or farmer asking his customer for a donation to pay for his scale or peck measure, where with his goods are meted out, and then this firm stamps its red letters that amazing 20 per cent discount, if paid at a certain date. Surely any school boy could figure out so simple a problem. How could the discount be taken off before it was taken on? It's simply this, a sort of white wash of telling a black lie. Now, I speak, I hope, aversely, when I say that the thousands of dollars exacted in this way from the gas consumers of this city, should be returned with interest, or handed over to the charitable institutions who are crying for aid, and in addition to that in all fairness to their patrons, they should be allowed space and protection for their gas meters in the different homes. Now, Mr. Editor, I hope every gas consumer in our city will not only read this letter, but will join me in protest against meter rent, and let every fellow pay for his own peck measure.

SHARP CRITICISM OF THE COUNCIL BY PROGRESSIVES

Mass Meeting May Be Called to Demand Resignation of Aldermen.

Charge Is Made That Inactivity Is Injuring the City at All Points.

At the meeting of the Central Progressive Federation held in the board of trade rooms Friday night, a proposal to have a monster mass meeting to demand the resignation of the city council was discussed.

Ex-Ald. Gerry said that Mayor Graham had told him that there would be nothing done in the matter of roads, storm sewers, West London, backwater, East End park, or the bridge for West London this year. Mr. Gerry spoke for over half an hour and arraigned the do-nothing policy of the present council.

An East End Kick.
 All the representatives of the different associations and the representatives of the Trades and Labor Council were present. The East End delegation protested against the inaction of the council regarding the East End market and said that the people that have donated the land for the market are not to be trifled with. The Progressives also drew the attention of the meeting to the letter-box, which they wanted placed on the corner of Campbell and Rectory streets. They had notified the postoffice department some time ago, and the box was promised, but has not yet been placed on the corner.

No Lights For Knollwood.
 The members from Knollwood Park wanted to know why the lights have not been completed. They say that the lights are all complete except the globes, and the delay is, to them, inexplicable.

West London Progressives complained Engineer Ashplant on his breakwater and storm sewer report, but do not expect that the present council will do anything for them.

Want Mass Meeting.
 The delegates were instructed to return to their own association and call special meetings to discuss ways and means of a protest to the city council for the way in which they are handling the affairs of the city.

The Progressives claim that the money is going out and that there is nothing doing. It was suggested that a monster petition be prepared, calling on the council to resign in a body. Another suggestion was a mass meeting censuring the policy of the council, and the people going in a body and demanding the resignation of the city fathers. The representative of the Trades and Labor Council said that the labor people of the city are highly indignant with the present council, and would be glad to join any movement that would cause it to do something.

AYLMER.
 Aylmer, July 19.—The Church of Christ will hold its anniversary services on Sunday, Rev. E. B. Kemm, M. A., of the St. Thomas Church of Christ, will deliver the sermon. Rev. Harry Grover Kellogg will fill Mr. Kemm's pulpit during his absence.

Londoner Makes a Little Trip To Battle, Where Normans Overthrew the Saxons

[Written Specially for The Advertiser.]

There have been two pre-eminent conflicts in the history of Great Britain—the mighty day at Waterloo, and the tremendous day, where the Normans overthrew the Saxons. And in point of interest and age reaching consequence, what "battle" comprises with the field of Senlac?

Being then the King's birthday and what Old Peppy might call "a mighty fine day," I found myself at Hastings station in a third-class compartment of a railway carriage of the South-Eastern, Chatham and Dover Railway; three fellow pilgrims entered, a stout matron accompanied by two wholesome British girls, and soon after came in a short Briton in a blue suit and a blue cap, wearing a permanent smile on his shaven old phiz, accompanied by a substantial young woman, with a fresh-faced baby, holding sponge cake in its little fists, and bestrewn the neighborhood with fragments thereof. A very short run and we were all deposited at Battle station, where a small boy of meek presence presided over the inevitable book-stall of W. H. Smith & Co.

Here the blue-coated little man in soft English accents imparted information. He "were an old resident." And told us that the street leading up tortuously from the station was called "Lower Lake and Upper Lake," and it was currently reported that at the time of the great fight both lakes ran knee-deep in blood. Just now its asphalted surface looked peaceful indeed—not to say sleepy—and on either side hills and valleys of great beauty, adorned with hedges and splendid trees, and enlivened by the cheerful twitter of birds, entranced eye and ear. The spy old gentleman pointed to a magisterial hall where "you goes in for your ticket for the Habby," and obtains it for the price of 6d. A noble church, kept with that scrupulous care which these country churches receive, stood where Lake street runs into High street, but I shall not pause to describe it.

It was a few minutes to 11 o'clock, being the hour when Battle gets busy. The grand old gateway of 1338 was before one, simple, strong and satisfying, and one would have liked to have seen it in the days before Henry VIII. It was a fine old gateway, and a palace, in person, priest and the vivid characters of Chaucer passed to and fro under the stone portal, when it was a sanctuary for criminal, a refuge for the poor, an inn for the traveller, and a place of occasion for monarchs. Time and cupidity have dealt very rudely with the edifice.

Entering the gate one sees, that the best preserved and restored part of the building, where was the grand hall of the ancient abbots, is now devoted to the private dwelling place of one who holds privileges more sacred and secure than those of any abbot, a British landowner. A green, as large as a cricket ground, stretches in front of the building, defined by a wall towards the sea, and gray and mossy towers at the further end being the limits on this side of the central building of the huge abbey.

Here a tall, thin-featured man in a cheap suit of clothes and a straw hat, turned down for the better evasion of the heat, addressed himself to the small knot of sight-seers standing at the wall overlooking a long incline and facing another more distant hill. He assured us in no uncertain terms that we are now on the battle ground, on the Saxon lines. With a mighty swing of the arm toward the sea some six miles distant, he gives us no bad resume of the leading incidents of the battle. We can quite imagine the shouts of the soldiers, the blows of the mighty knights, the impact of the armored Norman knights, while the soft trees shimmer in the sun. We thought of the heroic Harold and the desperate efforts of his followers. Well, it was to be! It was to be!

Passing round to the other side of the central hall and its flanking gables, we saw a bit of British skill in decorative gardening, tiny box hedges a few inches high laid out in a "reticulated" pattern, the persistent evenness of the green somewhat novel to American eyes. Here we entered crypts, arched and brick-roofed, defying the hand of time. There seems to be but one fireplace in this part of the building, and evidently the smoke was shovelled to go where it would. This fireplace is constructed of the thin red Roman bricks. The brethren did not exactly live in the lap of luxury in winter.

Battle has an amazing number of little shops built on the sites occupied for centuries. Such are the battlefields as can do so have essayed gilt signs, plate glass and stucco, and thereby spoiled many a venerable old house, but still there are very quaint old houses, whose oaken beams and red tiles may have seen the soldiers of Cromwell. One particularly venerable timbered house stands outside the grim gate of the abbey, and there certain fairs have been held from time when the memory of man "runeth not to the contrary," as the lawyers say.

Being now much filled with sun and history and sight-seeing, and observing an alluring offer of "teas and light lunches," I entered an antique shop and fell into the hands of a deferential old lady and a rosy-faced maid, and encountered a plate of good ham, a roll and a pot of "china" digestive tea, finished off with pears and cream. The little shop was delightfully cool and quaint, the sunlight could find no direct line of entrance; if the wallpaper was out of time, it was simple and fresh, and the little meal was a treat indeed. Here the old problem came up for solving, was the time being the argument favored the negative.

Now, I fear, I have not added to your knowledge of Battle, nor of the Tricentenary, but I have never mind, if you extract as much pleasure from a visit to it as I did, I shall be satisfied.

Mrs. Cassidy laughed the contented laugh of the guarded and happy matron. With the air of Cornelia exhibiting her jewels, she drew down the collar of her kimono and revealed an amulet of a blue stone, a maroon-colored, edged with olive and orange—a bruise now nearly well, but still to memory dear.

Mrs. Fink capitulated. The formal light in her eye softened to an envious admiration. She and Mrs. Cassidy had been chums in the downtown paper-box factory before they had married. One year before. ARLEMAN.

Mrs. Fink had dropped into Mrs. Cassidy's flat one night below.

"Ain't it a beauty?" said Mrs. Cassidy. She turned her face proudly for her friend Mrs. Fink to see. One eye was nearly closed, with a great, greenish-purple bruise around it. Her lip was cut and bleeding a little and there were red finger marks on each side of her neck.

"My husband wouldn't ever think of doing that to me," said Mrs. Fink, concealing her envy.

"I wouldn't have a man," declared Mrs. Cassidy. "That didn't beat me up at least one week. Shows he thinks something of you. Say! but that last dose Jack gave me wasn't no homeopathic one. I can see stars yet. But he'll be the sweetest man in town for the rest of the week to make up for it. This eye is good for theatre tickets and a silk shirt waist at the very least."

"I should hope," said Mrs. Fink, assuming complacency, "that Mr. Fink is too much of a gentleman ever to raise his hand against me."

"Oh, go on, Maggie!" said Mrs. Cassidy, laughing. "You're only jealous. Your old man is too trapped to ever give you a punch. He just sits down and practices physical culture with a newspaper when he comes home—now ain't that the truth?"

"Mr. Fink certainly peruses of the papers when he comes home," acknowledged Mrs. Fink, with a toss of her head; "but he certainly don't ever make no Steve O'Donnell out of me just to amuse himself—that's a sure thing."

"You poor thing!" she said. "But even so, can't you have a husband like Jack? Marriage wouldn't be no failure if it was all like him. These discontented wives you hear about—what they need is a man to come home and kick their slats in once a week, and then make it up in kisses, and chocolate creams. That'd give 'em some interest in life!"

Mrs. Cassidy sighed. The hallways were suddenly filled with sound. The door flew open at the kick of Mr. Cassidy. His arms were occupied with bundles. Mame flew and hung about his neck. Her sound eye sparkled with the love light that shines in the eye of the Maori maid when she recovers consciousness in the hut of the wooer who has dragged her there.

"Hello, old girl!" shouted Mr. Cassidy. He shot his bundles and lifted her off her feet in a mighty hug. "I got tickets for Barnum & Bailey's, and if you'll bust the string of one of them bundles I guess you'll find that 'silk waist'—why, good evening, Mrs. Fink! I didn't see you at first. How's old Mart coming along?"

"He's very well, Mr. Cassidy—thanks," said Mrs. Fink. "I must be going along now. Mart'll be home for supper soon."

Mrs. Fink went up to her flat and had a little cry. It was a meaningless cry, the kind of cry that only a woman knows about; the most transient and the most hopeless cry in the repertory of grief. Why had Martin never thrashed her? He was as big and strong as Jack Cassidy. Did he not work my arms off washing and tolling for the ugly likes of you? Are you a man or are you a kitchen hand?"

Mr. Fink dropped his paper, motionless from surprise. She feared that he would not strike—that the provocation had been insufficient. She leaped at him and struck him fiercely in the face with her clenched hand. In that instant she felt a thrill of love for him such as she had not felt for many a day. Rise up, Martin Fink, and come into your kingdom! Oh, she must feel the weight of his hand now—just to show that he cared—just to show that he cared!

Mr. Fink sprang to his feet—Maggie caught him again on the jaw with a wide swing of her other hand. She closed her eyes in that fearful, blissful moment before his blow should come—she whispered his name to herself—she leaped to the expected shock, hungry for it.

In the flat below Mr. Cassidy, with a shamed and contrite face was powdering Mame's eye in preparation for her junket. From the flat above came the sound of a woman's voice, high-raised, a bumping, a stumbling and a shuffling, a chair overturned—unmistakable sounds of domestic conflict.

"Mart and Mag scrapping?" postulated Mr. Cassidy. "Didn't know they ever indulged. Shall I trot up and see if they need a sponge holder?"

One of Mrs. Cassidy's eyes sparkled.

"Ain't it a beauty?" said Mrs. Cassidy.

She turned her face proudly for her friend Mrs. Fink to see. One eye was nearly closed, with a great, greenish-purple bruise around it.

"Mr. Fink certainly peruses of the papers when he comes home," acknowledged Mrs. Fink, with a toss of her head; "but he certainly don't ever make no Steve O'Donnell out of me just to amuse himself—that's a sure thing."

Mrs. Cassidy laughed the contented laugh of the guarded and happy matron. With the air of Cornelia exhibiting her jewels, she drew down the collar of her kimono and revealed an amulet of a blue stone, a maroon-colored, edged with olive and orange—a bruise now nearly well, but still to memory dear.

Mrs. Fink capitulated. The formal light in her eye softened to an envious admiration. She and Mrs. Cassidy had been chums in the downtown paper-box factory before they had married. One year before. Now she and her man occupied the flat above Mame and her man. Thereafter she could not put on airs with Mame.

"Don't it hurt when he soaks you?" asked Mrs. Fink, curiously.

"Hurt!" Mrs. Cassidy gave a soprano scream of delight. "Well, say, did you ever have a brick house fall on you?—well, that's just the way it feels—just like when they're digging you out of the ruins. Jack's got a left that

"You poor thing!" she said. "But even so, can't you have a husband like Jack? Marriage wouldn't be no failure if it was all like him. These discontented wives you hear about—what they need is a man to come home and kick their slats in once a week, and then make it up in kisses, and chocolate creams. That'd give 'em some interest in life!"

Mrs. Cassidy sighed. The hallways were suddenly filled with sound. The door flew open at the kick of Mr. Cassidy. His arms were occupied with bundles. Mame flew and hung about his neck. Her sound eye sparkled with the love light that shines in the eye of the Maori maid when she recovers consciousness in the hut of the wooer who has dragged her there.

"Hello, old girl!" shouted Mr. Cassidy. He shot his bundles and lifted her off her feet in a mighty hug. "I got tickets for Barnum & Bailey's, and if you'll bust the string of one of them bundles I guess you'll find that 'silk waist'—why, good evening, Mrs. Fink! I didn't see you at first. How's old Mart coming along?"

Mrs. Fink went up to her flat and had a little cry. It was a meaningless cry, the kind of cry that only a woman knows about; the most transient and the most hopeless cry in the repertory of grief. Why had Martin never thrashed her? He was as big and strong as Jack Cassidy. Did he not work my arms off washing and tolling for the ugly likes of you? Are you a man or are you a kitchen hand?"

Mr. Fink dropped his paper, motionless from surprise. She feared that he would not strike—that the provocation had been insufficient. She leaped at him and struck him fiercely in the face with her clenched hand. In that instant she felt a thrill of love for him such as she had not felt for many a day. Rise up, Martin Fink, and come into your kingdom! Oh, she must feel the weight of his hand now—just to show that he cared—just to show that he cared!

Mr. Fink sprang to his feet—Maggie caught him again on the jaw with a wide swing of her other hand. She closed her eyes in that fearful, blissful moment before his blow should come—she whispered his name to herself—she leaped to the expected shock, hungry for it.

In the flat below Mr. Cassidy, with a shamed and contrite face was powdering Mame's eye in preparation for her junket. From the flat above came the sound of a woman's voice, high-raised, a bumping, a stumbling and a shuffling, a chair overturned—unmistakable sounds of domestic conflict.

"Mart and Mag scrapping?" postulated Mr. Cassidy. "Didn't know they ever indulged. Shall I trot up and see if they need a sponge holder?"

At That, Jeff Might Have Called Him

The Love of Woman
A Short Story

[By Mark Rutherford in the Nation.]

One morning a letter marked "Immediate" came from my friend, Tom Carpenter. It was not written by him, but he had signed it in a very shaky hand. We had been co-partners, but he had retired. I was still living at my work near Birkenhead, but he had settled down in a small hamlet about four miles east of the Huntingdonshire Saint Ives. What made him go there I never found out. He knew nobody in that part of the world, and the country, so I had often been told, was most "uninteresting." But "uninteresting" is a doubtful word applied to fields, rivers and meadows. The letter was short. He was dangerously ill, and besought me to come to him at once "by the next train." He could not have asked me to do anything more inconvenient just then. We expected the decision that day on a tender for building a vessel which was to cost £100,000, and if we succeeded there would be a race against time. The penalties for non-fulfilment were not nominal. They would be enforced, and they were heavy.

Nevertheless, I did not hesitate. In a couple of hours I was in the train. A more wearisome journey I never undertook.

It was entirely cross-country, and the trains did not fit or wait. By the time I got to Peterborough it was nearly 2 o'clock. I had missed the train to the south, and did not reach Tom's house till nearly six. He was in much pain, and certainly very ill. The doctor, although he professed no uncertainty, clearly did not know what was the matter with him. He was most grateful to me for coming. He had been suffering for about two months, but he had not sent word before, knowing how busy I was, and that travelling was so difficult. Now he could hold out no longer, and besides, there was something he wished me to do. Thinking that perhaps I should not be with him in time, he had, with great labor, written a message for me, which I should find in the oak bureau in my room. I could read it when I went to bed, and if he was alive he should like a minute's talk with me about it in the morning. He was too tired that evening. There was a clear, full moon when I went to bed. The house was some distance from the road, but not shut in by trees, and I looked across a big field, then across the broad, slow river, then across the fields on the other side, and so on to the horizon line, over which a brilliant star, not extinguished by the moon, was preparing to follow her. The quietude was deep. I might almost say I heard it. There was not a sound, save now and then the howl of a dog three or four miles away, and the hooting of an owl. I wonder that Tom should live in that house began to abate.

I took the paper out of the bureau and read:

"It is now over five-and-twenty years ago since Margaret Ramsden came to Bath, and I first saw her at my aunt's house, where I was staying for a holiday. We did not become engaged, but we were in love. We met one another purposely at different places in the city, and went for walks by ourselves. We were in Bath for a month together. Time after time a glorious word rose to my lips, but it remained unspoken. Once, I remember, we went to Bradford-on-Avon, and stayed there the whole day. I ventured so far as to draw my arm round her waist. The pear would have fallen with the slightest touch, but it was left on the branch untouched. We came home, and I walked with her to her door; but I went no farther than she was perfectly upright, rather spare, and a little above the usual height. Her hair was black and wavy, but more than tinged with gray. The features were clearly cut, the lips short, and the hands more delicate and whiter than any I had ever seen. A grand piano stood alongside the wall opposite the windows, and a sonata of Mozart's lay open on it. In a year or two's time she would be stately.

"I have come," I said, "from my friend, Thomas Carpenter, who, I fear, is dying at St. Ives, in Huntingdonshire. He told me that he did not think

When He Drops in to See an Old Friend

Mrs. M. A. Beecher and John D. Rockefeller.

Special Correspondence.

Chagrin Falls, O., July 18—"Land sakes! If it ain't John Rockefeller! Sit down, John." Mrs. M. A. Beecher, 84, placed an armchair under a big shade tree in her farmyard for John D. Rockefeller, 73.

"How are you, Mary? Well?" asked Rockefeller, as he sat down beside her.

"Yes, I'm feeling pretty well," she answered.

"And how are you and Laura?"

"Oh, just about the same."

"Won't you have a drink, John? It's pretty warm today."

"Yes, please."

So Mrs. Beecher's daughter brought water freshly drawn from the deep well beside the house.

"I just want you to see my sweet peas, John," she said, as she rose and led the way to the fence where they made a bright border for the lawn. "They're prettier than for years."

"They're beautiful," said John. Then they returned to their chairs and talked long of old times. And after a while the motor party—which included four young women brought out by Rockefeller for an unaccustomed ride—started back to Forest Hill. John D. waved his hand as he turned the bend in the road, and the aged lady returned the salute.

It wasn't the first time John D. had called on Mrs. Beecher. It was just his first call this year, since his return from Pocantico Hills to his summer home in Cleveland. The two have been friends for more than 40 years.

One of John D.'s summer pleasures is motoring around the pleasant country roads and dropping in to see his old cronies. There are many men and women hereabouts who have heard, of course, that John D. is the richest man in the world, but who know him only as a simple, kindly old man, who doesn't have to work much any more.

"He cannot now write properly," I said, "and did not know your address, and if he had known it he would have been afraid of intruding to the post what he wanted to show you. I am perhaps his closest friend. He telegraphed for me to go to him at St. Ives from Birkenhead, where I live; but, fearing he could not last more than a day or so, he pencilled a few words to you with much trouble before I could reach him."

"Have you got the paper here?"

"Yes."

"Give it to me, and excuse me for a few minutes."

She took it and, without opening it, went into an adjoining room. She was away for half an hour. When she came back I could see she had been crying, and there were red patches on her cheeks. Perhaps she had been kneeling by the bedside.

"What is the matter with him?"

"We do not know. He suffers much pain, and has lost weight seriously during the last six weeks. It is with difficulty we can get him to eat anything. The doctor fears the worst."

"Is he alone?"

"Yes, excepting his housekeeper and his nurse."

"I will go back with you."

"To Saint Ives?" I said with some surprise.

"Yes, to Saint Ives. What is the time?"

"Half-past eleven."

"We can easily catch the half-past one train to Paddington, and I should imagine could be at Saint Ives tonight. I should not go to his house till the morning unless there was no hope. I should not like to surprise him. Will you please telegraph to the inn at Saint Ives for a bed for me. You, of course, can go on."

The decision with which she spoke was singular, considering the importance of her resolution and the evident hysteria through which she had passed. We met at the Bath station, and she asked me by what class I travelled.

I replied "third," and she then said, "If I would excuse her, she would travel 'first.'"

From this point my story is a collection of fragments, some of them my own, but mainly picked up from Tom, or the nurse, or from Margaret. The nurse now speaks.

"Miss Ramsden called about 10 o'clock this morning. Mr. Carpenter, my patient, had fallen asleep, and his Birkenhead friend, Mr. Dixon, had gone out. I answered the door.

"How is Mr. Carpenter?"

"Neither worse nor better."

"Can I see him? I am an old and intimate friend. Mr. Dixon, I dare say, has told you I should call."

"You can see him for a few moments if he can be kept perfectly quiet. He is not yet awake."

"We went noiselessly into his bedroom. She walked softly to the side of his bed and looked at him. To my dying day I shall never forget that attitude and that intent gaze. She was swallowed up. She stood perfectly upright. Her hands hung in front of her, clasped together. She did not stir for fully five minutes. She then came and sat down by the fire opposite to me. Her elbows rested on her knees, and she propped up her head. So she remained till the little mantel-clock tinkled half-past ten. She got up and moved towards the door. As she was going out she beckoned to me.

"I must speak to him."

"There was no regular night nurse. I slept in a room next to Mr. Carpenter's, and there was a door between them always open. Miss Ramsden came again about 9 o'clock in the evening. She asked me if she might sit in Mr. Carpenter's room till the morning. 'If any change for the worse should take place,' she said, 'I shall be close at hand. You could not send four miles for me, and I might not be in time.'

"Of course, I agreed."

Margaret now reports. "What follows is a transcript from her diary."

30 The Seven Ages of 30 Woman in Love: Chapter Five— WHEN SHE IS CRITICAL OF MAN

By Winnie Lee

If there are any unhappy women of THIRTY in town I wish they would write to me. Only a few of the letters I read are from women of that age.

I have become confident that they have fewer heart troubles in the FIFTH than in any other of the SEVEN AGES OF WOMAN IN LOVE.

Married Thirty does not complain of her husband; she is busy and content with her family, and if husband neglects her she finds full compensation in her young children.

Spinster Thirty is absorbed in doing some part of the world's work and her ambition conceals for a time the romantic side of her nature.

So I assert that Woman—average woman—is at no time happier in her whole life than she is at Thirty. Can it be that the secret of human happiness lies in evenly balancing the romantic and practical? I have often wondered, because, curiously enough, every woman is never more PRACTICAL than she is at Thirty.

Whenever she does write of Love it is to put some question about the business of marrying. For instance:

"I am thirty and am to be married in June. I have several thousand dollars in Government bonds left by my father. My fiancée wants me to sell them and put the money into his business. I can't see it that way, and it is making trouble, etc.—X."

No, Thirty is not easily swayed just by the flattery of being loved.

And that unsettles one of man's most cherished theories, his favorite one of the score of unprovable theories which he has accumulated about woman.

Man believes that Thirty is ten times as anxious to marry him as the girl a decade younger. He hardly dares hand Thirty one of those careless "just-in-passing" compliments which he keeps handy for women of every age—for fear it will land him in a breach of promise court.

He telephones an invitation to the theatre instead of committing anything so serious to paper. So wary of Thirty is man.

HE thinks SHE thinks HE is "her LAST CHANCE!"

But not so, O wary, scary bachelor! Thirty isn't TAKING ANY CHANCES ON A MAN.

Thirty is a very critical person, who thinks Prince Charming ridiculous, and the King impossible. And while Twenty-seven is skeptical of love, Thirty is CRITICAL OF THE LOVER.

Twenty will elope in a taxi with a man who hasn't changed enough to tip the chauffeur. But Thirty will not abandon the comfort of father's big car—even on the chance that it is her last chance.

Thirty does not marry until she knows the commercial history of a man's great-aunt-grandfather, and whether insanity has ever cropped out in the family; and what color was the hair of his maternal great-aunts; and what is his salary; and when he can be expected to get his next "raise."

But practical as Thirty is, she has NOT lost her dream of an IDEAL LOVE. That is another one of Man's pet theories which is absolutely untrue. Nothing can kill the longing for love in a woman's soul.

If she cannot have a man and a baby to love, she will substitute a whole orphan asylum, or a cat, or a dog, or a slum, or a philosophy, or a primitive Italian art, or suffragism. And when she is perfectly honest she admits that none of these is quite satisfying. For there isn't an age in the calendar of woman when she does not PREFER to love a MAN.

Mrs. McGraw she don't go to card clubs, she's got lots to do, and when ma is away, she slip over the street and play baseball with Mickey. They live in an alley just over the way. An' Mrs. McGraw she bakes tea cakes—they're dandy an' when supper comes at our house I must die.

Two boys who's clothes baskets instead of just Mickey, deliverin' clothes. T'will be Mickey an' me.

Mrs. McGraw she's the dandiest lady! She ain't got much time like my ma has, you bet.

But if we get hungry she's always got some—pe we do every day, and she never failed yet.

If ma was like her, always happy and jolly, an' handin' out apples and doughnuts all day.

I'd have lots of fun an' stay home like she says to an' not have to go there to Mickey's to play.

But, shucks, she's got clubs, an' she's always out shoppin' an' leaves me at home, where there's nothing to do.

I wish she'd do what my ma does—bake cookies an' feed us on apples like Mrs. McGraw.

Do you know of any woman to whom this boy's lament could be applied? Of course it isn't you, and I know it isn't me—but, well, there are others! Don't you hope they see this, and that it may wake 'em up?

The Normal

THE YELLOW STOCKING.

Broadway was amused on a recent morning by the sight of a young woman wearing a dark blue costume slit up one side and showing with every second step a yellow stocking visible to the knee. Everyone stared, everyone turned to look after this spectacle, and many laughed. But the young woman herself pranced along in a peculiarly aggressive manner and seemed to take for admiration the tokens of surprise she caused.

It would have been easy to make herself less conspicuous, and yet enjoy the freedom of the cut-up skirt, by wearing stockings in the same color as the gown. It was the bright yellow that made her so conspicuous. This is an extreme case of the skirt, by the way. It seems to have come to stay, and many suppose that it is but the prelude to the coming similarity of the dress of both sexes. Certain it is that the very narrow mermaid skirt prevents freedom in walking and renders ridiculous those who attempt to step from the curb to a cab without first raising the gown to a point somewhere about the knees.

PROBLEMS OF THE FAIR SEX SOLVED BY CYNTHIA GREY

[Correspondents are requested to make their inquiries as brief as possible, and to write on one side of the paper only. It is impossible to give replies within a stated time, as all letters have to be answered in turn as they are received. No letters can be answered privately.]

Treading Delicate Ground.

Dear Miss Grey: Will you be so kind as to answer a few questions and to give me your advice on a few matters?

1. What is your idea of a person who, when asked to do anything, or go anywhere with you, invariably refuses, and who is never willing to do anything to please the person they happen to be with? Do you really think this person is selfish or do you think it may be lack of confidence in herself, or, maybe, shyness? I try to think it may be all of these things, for the person I refer to is a very dear girl friend of mine. I spoke of it to her one day, and she became very much annoyed at me, and so I have said nothing more to her about it, but thought I would ask you the best course to take in the matter. Do you know of any way possible to show her how selfish she is being? Or do you think it is not my concern? It makes it very hard where strangers are concerned, because she really is a very nice girl, but, of course, strangers do not know this and judge her accordingly.

2. Do you think the use of peroxide on the face and neck injurious in any way?

3. Could you give me a list of some new kinds of sandwiches for picnics?

4. Do you consider Robert Chambers and Richard H. Davis' good to read?

5. Is there any use asking the old question, "What do you think of my writing?" You will have to excuse it, Miss Grey.

Thanking you in anticipation, I remain, yours sincerely,

"ROBINETTA."

A.—I. It is very delicate ground that we tread upon when we try to correct faults of such a personal nature. How do you know but that your friend sees a fault, equally as great, in your character? Don't you think that to quite an extent at least, it is best to take our faults as we find them, and allow circumstances and experience in the world of people, to rub the rough corners off? You can, of course, by your own gentleness of nature and agreeableness to others, be a constant, quiet influence over your friend, and I think also you can influence her consciously without directly calling attention to the fact that you think it is selfishness on her part. As you say, her trouble may be partly caused by shyness. Write me again if my views help any.

3. Among the latest cries in sandwiches are those made from mint, as follows: Chop finely four or five sprays of the mint, discarding all stems, and mix with chopped cream and finely grated or cream cheese. Spread between thin slices of brown bread, or one slice of white and one of brown may be used.

Tomato sandwiches are made by spreading sliced bread, then place a bit of potted beef on the lower slice, lay on thin slices of tomato, season with salt and pepper, and put the top slice of bread over all.

Lobster sandwiches call for half a pound lobster meat, yolks of two hard-boiled eggs, two ounces of butter, pepper, salt and cayenne to taste. Spread thin on slices of bread and butter, sprinkle with a very little chopped cream or nasturtium leaves, before adding top slices.

Figs chopped rather fine and mixed with one-half the quantity of English walnuts also chopped, make a nice filling if a little cream and a slight sprinkle of salt is added before spreading. Slices of cucumber dressed with a little vinegar and good olive oil make a delicious sandwich, and for still another, yolks of hard-boiled eggs mixed with a little butter and cream cheese, and a tiny quantity of sharp dressing is also good.

If you are a serious reader you may be, as I said, amused by these books, but you will find more solid literary pulchritude in books of other authors, even of today.

A Chocolate Icing.

Dear Miss Grey:—Would you please publish in your paper a good recipe for chocolate icing? I never have very good luck with mine. Wishing you every success, I remain, ROSIEBUD.

A.—A very simply-made icing is the following: Heat two tablespoonfuls of sweet milk in a small saucepan, remove from the fire and add one cupful pulverized sugar; stir thoroughly to remove all lumps. Move sugar may be needed to make the paste stiff enough in hot weather. When smooth, stir in a tablespoonful of ground cocoa, flavor with a dash of vanilla and spread quickly on the cake. This makes a delicious icing.

His Birthday Gift.

Dear Miss Grey:—I suppose you get sick and tired of answering these seemingly foolish questions, but I have those important ones that you answer so ably, so here goes.

I have been keeping company with a young man since about last January, and his birthday is coming. I wonder if it would be proper for me to give him some little thing, say something for his room, as he rooms in the city. He has never given me anything like that, but he has been very good to me in giving me candy and a special time.

How you answer this in the weekly edition as well as the daily, as I live outside the limits. I remain, DOUBTFUL.

A.—I am quite sure the young man would appreciate something for his room. It is odd, of course, but he is inexperienced. He says he would be pleased with a new bed—on a ring variety that hangs upon the wall, the neckties being slipped through, and always ready for use. A useful article in a bedroom, which, to a boarder is also a living-room, is a small waste-basket. These are seldom included in a room's furnishings. A neat basket can be procured at a reasonable figure. A do-it-yourself picture, or (if you do photograph work) a panel of snapshots of local scenes, would make nice gifts. And never forget that there's always the useful calendar, more or less fanciful, as a last resort.

Beat hard, add the stiffly beaten whites of the eggs and beat again for at least ten minutes. As no baking powder is used the lightness of the cake depends upon the eggs and the amount of beating and there can scarcely be too much of the latter. Bake in three layers and when cold put together with boiled icing.

Needlework For Vacation Hours

Every summer girl should embroider herself a handsome girdle to wear with her white frock. Select a soft silk in a vivid tone of blue, green, red or orange, cover it with shirred silk or narrow satin ribbon, winding it over and over, and fold the girdle portion about the waist. On the long slash ends stamp a

Summer Clothes for the Small Boy

There has been thought of by the makers and a visit to the boys' section in the big departmentals is a revelation of what the coolness has been done in respect of comfort of the small able clothing for the small boy. There have been smart little white duck trousers, navy blue, having circular low necks, edged with some pretty color, such as crimson, on the navy, and blue upon the white cast. Cotton jerseys of white, navy blue, having circular low necks, edged with some pretty color, such as crimson, on the navy, and blue upon the white cast. Striped or plain flannel blazers for the cool days that drop down upon us after the heated spells at $1.25 to $2.00; tailored hats, in duck or white linen, that wash perfectly at 50 cents each; washable ties to go with the shirts at 25 cents each. Then there are the white running shoes to be worn without stocking, at 70 cents and up, or sandals at about a dollar a pair. With all these light washable clothes to be had at such reasonable prices the small boy may have many changes and keep clean and cool from morning till night. And if he is "tired" by nightfall, why it is only the dust and dirt of a day that he may shed in the cool bath before he puts on these boys' outfits for summer. Every conceivable article of attire has design and embroider it with any combination of colors to suit your personal taste. If you do not care to embroider your sash, make it of broad ribbon. Fold the ribbon softly about the waist and bone it at the front, sides and back, using pliable featherboning. Have half-inch satin ribbon of the same color knifed and stitched on both sides of the girdle. At the back tie a butterfly bow with long ends and edge it with the narrow pleating.

Black velvet girdles are smart and many have the loops drawn through a buckle of ribbon and satin flowers. To make one of these buckles cut an oval, square or oblong form from buckram and cover it with shirred silk or narrow satin ribbon, winding it over and over. Select a delicate tint of blue, pink, violet or yellow for the narrow strips of silk or satin. Form tiny swirled roses, forget-me-nots, violets or buttercups and attach them to the edge of the buckle. Have these flowers of different tints.

These are just a few articles which the summer girl can make for herself, and among others are bandeaux, slipper ornaments, boudoir slippers and caps, negligees and party-bags. This is pleasant work for vacation hours, and no one wants to idle away the entire summer.

Remember the Flower Mission.

Have you contributed any of the floral beauties of your garden to the Flower Mission in connection with the Young Women's Christian Temperance Union? No? then it's time you were doing so. These girls are visiting many homes in London where sickness and the graver side of life are familiar things, and which render doubly acceptable a few flowers, accompanied with words of cheer and sympathy.

Picture yourself, at home, perhaps convalescing after a severe illness, without the gay bloom of flowers, or the cheer of the green thing-a-growing; without dainty jellies, or cool, refreshing drinks on sultry days. Not a many ailing ones in the city to whom just such comforts are denied.

Why not share the work of the Flower Mission girls by contributing some small way, at least, in flowers, delicacies, or clothing? They'll be glad to receive and distributed most carefully.

AS TOLD BY AUNT GERTIE.

It was the home of some very small people. This much Snow-white could see at a glance for everything, stools, table, beds, plates, cups and saucers were all tiny in size. But they were as clean and pretty as a picture. In Snow-white tells the seven good, little dwarfs all about how she happened to come to the small house in the woods.

The candles were lighted they noticed the right away that some one had been in the house.

From the disordered table they turned to the rumpled beds, crying all together in shrill little voices:

"Who's been lying on my bed?"

But the seventh SAW who was lying on HIS bed, and he called all the other little dwarfs to see beautiful, sleeping Snow-white. For it surely was she.

"Oh, oh!" cried the little dwarfs, in soft whispers. "Isn't she beautiful? We won't wake her!"

They all went to their own little beds, the seventh dwarf taking turns sleeping with each of the others an hour apiece during the night. The next morning when Snow-white awoke

Do You Know That the Moon, the Greatest Night-Light Monopoly in the World, Steals All Its Light From the Sun and the Earth?

BY ALBERT FORD FERGUSON.

Do you want to meet the head of a trust that lights the streets of almost every city in the world at night? Just go to the window this evening and take a look at the moon.

THAT'S IT.

You never thought of the moon as a lighting monopoly, did you? And yet almost every village, town or city in the world, with the exception of the very biggest, has a "moonlight schedule" for street lighting.

Now that it is fashionable to investigate trusts and monopolies, let's start a little investigation of our own and take a look at the moon. There is absolutely no watered stock in this combination!

There isn't, indeed, a speck of water on the moon anywhere, despite the fact that numerous parts of it have rather nautical names.

We also want to understand every bit of the light that the moon furnishes us is STOLEN!

The moon is simply a distributing agent for the sun. And the habit of stealing light has become so firmly fixed with the moon that part of the time when it can't get all it wants from the sun it actually steals a little from the earth!

When the earth was a mass of gas and lava-like fluid whirling through space at a terrific rate, a big drop of the material of which it was made formed on one side and was thrown off into space, according to the best theories. The drop that fell off kept whirling, too, as it went off into the air. It followed the general path of the earth, only revolving a bit slower. As the earth cooled, the big drop cooled, too. And that drop became the moon we know now. It is the nearest thing in the heavens to the earth—being only 238,800 miles away.

A person can learn more about the moon by observing it through a simple pair of opera glasses than can be learned about any other heavenly body, studied in any way, and the summer time—now—is the very best time in the year to look at the moon!

The great silvery mass of light which was once a part of the earth is not a flat disk at all, we will find, but a huge ball with the very rough surface. A survey shows that it is completely covered with big bumps and hollows. These are great mountains and valleys.

In the early days of astronomy it was believed that there were seas and lakes on the moon. This has since been disproved by closer investigation. The places where the seas and lakes were supposed to be are simply the valleys. The old names of seas and bays and inlets have been retained, however, for astronomical use.

Of course, then, there being no water on the moon, there is no life there. That is the reason there are no changes in the surface, astronomers say, although it was believed for a long time that there were changes.

The mountains, some of which are very high, one at least reaching an altitude of 20,000 feet, are most interesting to study. More than 500 of them have been mapped by astronomers, and half of these have been actually named.

Besides these mountains there are immense plains. These are mostly given the names of seas, and the names are far more poetic than those of the waters of the earth. Thus we find the Sea of Tranquility, the Sea of Showers, the Sea of Serenity, and the Bay of Rainbows.

We see only half of the moon. The other half has never been seen by man. And the reason for this is that the moon moves around the earth in exactly the same time that it takes it to spin once on its axis—27 days, 7 hours, 43 minutes and 11½ seconds. As the earth turns the same way there is always just one side of the moon turned toward us.

AS THE EARTH LOOKS FROM THE MOON.

The moon gets its light from the sun. In other words, it simply throws a reflection of the sun's light. But few persons are aware, however, that it also reflects light from the earth. There are certain times when it does, however.

You see, the entire surface of the moon is not always where the sun's light will be reflected to the earth. This is what gives it the different shapes we see. Suppose, for instance, we observe the moon in what we call the "new moon" shape. The sun, then, is just shining on one edge of the great moon-ball. But if we look carefully we see a rather dark shape that continues the spherical outline of the whole moon. This is sometimes called the "old moon in the arms of the new moon."

But that darker reflection, scientists declare, is really the reflection of the earth's light on the moon. Or rather a reflection of the sun's light reflected FROM THE EARTH. This is, of course, not so bright as the direct reflection of the sun on the moon itself. But neither are we wrong in saying that the moon is then stealing light from the earth.

The most important influence of the moon on the earth is in the action of the tides. This is caused by gravitation and is the force or pull exerted by the rotation of the moon on the water on the surface of the earth. Both the sun and the moon pull the water up as they near the earth. And the fact that the two are pulling, sometimes together and sometimes in opposite directions, is what makes the higher tides—the spring tides—and the less high tides—the neap tides.

The best time to study the summer moon is when it is full, for then the light of the sun is shining directly on it and there are no shadows to interrupt the view. When the moon is in the first or last quarter there are numerous shadows cast by the various mountains and valleys. This is what gives it a mottled appearance.

From the moon we get the word month, as that is approximately the time it takes the moon to go around the earth. What is called the "lunar month" is a month of 28 days.

den to the nomads living on the highroads, for who can have the heart to cruelly turn away a man on his way to or from a holy place? Another peculiar crowd whom Sir Sven Hedin met was the "Amazonian escort" who acted as portresses for him near the monastery of Kanam. Only two were men, and all the rest women, in frocks of coarse material and black, brown, or gray vests, which left the arms and shoulders bare. Silver pendants dangled from the lobes of their ears, bangles of brass adorned their wrists, and their naked feet surprised me, for they might have to walk over sharp rubbish and unmade paths, where even horses get sore feet. But their soles are hardened by constant wear, and are as little sensitive as the callouses of a camel's foot. Our noble portresses had never touched the water of the brook of Kanam, but they were jolly, fresh, and dainty. Mothers and young girls slung our baggage by cords and straps on to their backs in a moment, and vanished with it into the shady lanes of Kanam.

Leisurely readers will find "Transhimalaya" a travel-book, rich in fascination. It is not altogether, as we have said, a current or an easy book. It is, however, in parts quite entertaining, as when we are told how the author's servants, on reaching the border, began to beat the Tibetans near them in revenge for all the indignities and discomforts they had had to endure in other parts of a most inhospitable country.

THE LOVE OF WOMEN

I loved any other woman. I have never loved any woman but you. I feel a burning desire to tell you this, not altogether because it concerns you and me, but because it is a great discovery that a man can thus love, and nevertheless be what I have been. I also feel the same burning desire that you should know that a man, such as myself, your lover, could find himself without doubt into the arms of a woman he never loved. During the last two years, and since the death of my wife, my nature has undergone a singular rectification. It has become much simpler. If I were not too weak, I should get out of bed and clasp your knee, Margaret, Margaret, that dreadful irresolution, contradiction, resolve where no resolve is, have disappeared and I am at the bidding of the superior direction.

"His hand lay outside the bed. Did I consciously move my own hand towards it? Anyhow, it did move, and he took it in his own and kissed it. How easy of explanation he seemed now."

"It is incredible that a woman should forgive such an insult, such an injury!"

"It is because her spiritual penetration goes deeper: she discerns what is behind what is the truth."

"I am better today; pull up the blind."

"In another quarter of an hour the sun would be up. One could almost hear the advance of triumphant day."

"I believe," said Tom, "I shall not die. Margaret, will you seal my sincerity: will you be my wife? It may only be for hours, but what are hours and years?"

Gently pulled the door into the next room, and then knelt down by his bedside. We were married in that room by special license within a week, and were spared to one another for many years."

I, Philip Dixon, conclude with a word. All these years Margaret's love had lain unseen, unexpressed, unshared, alive, although encompassed with mortality. It was not killed by violence offered to it, nor did it decay through rot and damp.

(I bend my knees and worship.) I have heard of seeds which will remain alive, although encompassed with mortality. It was not killed by violence offered to it, nor did it decay through rot and damp.

NAVAL BATTLES IN AN ARMORY, TO TEACH NAVAL MILITIA LADS HOW TO FIGHT—BABY BATTLESHIPS GLIDE OVER FLOOR INSTEAD OF WATER.

PORT GUNS READY FOR A BROADSIDE AT IMAGINARY ENEMY.

[Staff Correspondence.]

New York, July 18.—"Boom! Boom!" Column right. These were some of the intelligible sounds I distinguished from the din of battle upon entering the large armory of the Second Battalion Naval Militia in Bayridge, Brooklyn.

Behold! There were four miniature men-of-war stripped for action, with battle flags flying and guns booming as each vessel crossed the firing line and belched forth a suggestion of smoke, for it was smokeless powder they used. The flash of fire and the loud report left no doubt that the shot came from real guns in the forward turret. The vessels manoeuvred first to allow a broadside to be discharged on the starboard side, and then the port guns were given position to fire at the imaginary enemy—a great target representing a fleet at one end of the armory.

"What is the object of it all?" I asked the commanding officer, Kingsley L. Martin.

He explained that his men got to sea only a few days each year and many of them who were drilled, night after night, in signal practice and other operations never had an opportunity to see what a real battle was like. Consequently he had conceived this scheme of staging battles as the best substitute for sham fights at sea.

The ships are each manned in the hull by two boys who operate levers connected with gears on the front axes, making the running proposition an easy matter. The complement of each vessel is complete with two milliamperes.

A HUNDRED-YEAR-OLD LETTER.

It is just 100 years since the battle of Vittoria, and a letter from one of the landing officers is now published for the first time by the Times.

It is from Sir James Wilson and was written to his wife.

"I am afraid my dearest Margaret will think I have forgotten her, not having written since the glorious battle of Vittoria on the 21st. But really, my dear girl, I have been so hard worked and so fatigued with following the army that I have not been able to put pen to paper. You will have seen by the Gazette that I was untouched, and perhaps he surprised at the small loss sustained by the regiment. Happily this time we escaped without much slaughter, though the regiment was under fire the whole day. I commanded a Light Brigade which

"Such a day as the annals of history do not produce! We drove them from one of the strongest positions that could be taken up in front of Vittoria, occupied by seventy thousand men. Their right, left and centre were attacked and carried by the bayonet under a heavy cannonade. The enemy abandoned everything with the loss of one hundred and fifty-two pieces of cannon; all their baggage carriages, and military chests—one million of money has been taken. It was like a dream!"

Sir Sven Hedin's Travels Two Years in Tibet at 19,000 Feet Above Sea

How the Rarefied Air Feels—Effects on a European—Curious Habits of the Tibetans A Great Book.

"Transhimalaya." By Sven Hedin. Vol. III. Macmillan, 15s net.

Sir Sven Hedin is one of the least sensational of travellers. He is a man who is able to do things rather than to write about them. Many persons, of course, are able to do both: we have had admirable books of adventure from travellers to the North and South Poles. Sir Sven Hedin, however, writes a far from graphic pen. He is so afraid of leaving anything of importance out that he puts everything, whether of importance or not, in. Consequently, few but the most determined geographers will care to read every word of a book like the present. Average men and women will cry out for a few thrills of the kind Mr. Savage Landor provides in his books of Tibetan adventures. Sir Sven Hedin's book is vastly more important than Mr. Savage Landor's. But the multitude of its facts makes progress as difficult as that of a host of sheep pouring through a gate.

The author's record as an explorer began about a quarter of a century ago, when he was a young man of twenty, and went on his travels through Persia and Mesopotamia. In 1890 he was appointed a member of King Oscar's embassy to the Shah, and ever since then he has been exploring assiduously in Central Asia, especially in Tibet. He claims in the present volume to have been the first European explorer to examine the sources of the Indus and the Sutlej, and he has all the dogged thoroughness and immovable courage that enable men to penetrate the secrets of unknown lands.

19,000 Feet Above the Sea. Even to endure the rarity of the air in some of those high places puts a tremendous strain on a European. Two years in the highly rarefied air 19,000 to 20,000 feet above sea-level is about as much as a European can endure. His heart and lungs are not adapted to the scarcity of oxygen, which is found up on the borders of interstellar space. When the Dalai Lama travels to Calcutta, he is perhaps troubled by the heat, but he must feel the increase of oxygen in the air agreeable. It is otherwise with the European. When he leaves half the atmosphere below him, the muscles and the beating of his heart are excessively strained; he is afflicted day and night with the languid feeling of a convalescent after a serious illness, which is not driven off by ten hours' rest in the night.

Sir Sven Hedin describes his own physical experiences on returning to civilized levels: "The temperature of the body fell a couple of degrees below the normal, the respiration and the pulse were quicker than usual, and the slightest movement produced shortness of breath; I became at last indifferent to everything, except the road to India; the two meals of the day I regarded as a punishment."

Perhaps the discomforts of air were not very much worse than the discomforts of the tea the traveller sometimes had to drink as he enjoyed the hospitality of his hosts. The beverage is a mixture of butter, which floats in small yellow blobs on the top of the tea. All who drink it have a shining ring of butter round their mouths. When you have taken a drink the waiter comes at once with the black pot to fill up the cup again.

That is an interesting glimpse of Tibetan home-life. One wishes the author had been a little more indulgent to his readers in providing them with such entertaining passages.

The Nomads. He gives us a good idea of the life of the nomads of the country in the conversation he reports between himself and a certain tribesman:

"Are there many nomads in Gertse?"

"My tribesmen live in two to three hundred black tents, and we own large flocks of sheep, which are our only wealth."

"Tell me something about the profits you derive from your sheep?"

"Well, you see, some nomads shear their sheep themselves in Gertse, and carry the wool on yaks thirteen days' journey to Tok-jang, whither merchants from Ladak and Hindustan come to market. Others let the sheep carry their wool to market, and the purchasers do the shearing. But those nomads do best who break salt out of the beds of dried-up lakes, pack the lumps of salt on their sheep, and tramp in midsummer all the way to market at Gyalima and to the shore of Tso-mavang, where the sheep are shorn, for they make a profit on the salt as well as on the wool. And when they travel home again their sheep are laden with barley, which they have obtained by barter. Such a Journey, and homeward, occupies the greater part of the summer. The sheep graze by the way, no permission being asked, and so we nomads spare our own grass for the winter."

Besides the nomads, there are other wanderers ever religiously making their way from holy place to holy place. Curious creatures! They wander about by the year together, living entirely on alms. They pass their nights in monastery courtyards in the company of the half-wild sacred dogs, or in the ante-chambers of the temples under the protection of the spirit kings. Where there are neither tents nor sanctuaries, they seek a lodging in caves and clefts, and light their evening fires with flint, steel, and tinder. They are a terrible bur-

He Never Broke His Word and Could Beat the Indians at Their Own Game

THAT'S "KIT" CARSON—THE GREATEST SCOUT WHO EVER LIVED! HE WAS MODEST AND BRAVE, AND ALL BOYS WILL THRILL AS THEY READ HIS WONDERFUL ADVENTURES.

The greatest of all the scouts who ever lived in America! That's whom we are going to tell you about today! He was KIT CARSON, great American pathfinder and trapper; the man whom white men and Indians feared and respected; the man who could make the wildest redman who ever fought smoke the pipe of peace!

Canadian boys have heard of him, haven't you? But that's about all.

Do you know why? Because there has been practically nothing written about this absolutely unique character in American history! Kid hated to be written about!

He hated a "picture machine"—as he called a camera—worse than the sharpest tomahawk he ever saw!

Kit—his real name was Christopher—was born in Kentucky, and when he was just a youngster his family moved to Missouri. There, no one lived but Indians!

Kit's father built a block house. It was a strange-looking house, for it was pierced over with loopholes through which to shoot in case of an attack by Indians.

The single door was heavily barred with oak at night! Every member of the family, including the sisters and the mother, were "dead shots" with the rifle!

His knowledge of woodcraft was equal to any Indian's! And then "wanderlust" got into his blood. He wanted to go deeper into the forests!

He wanted to make the acquaintance of new tribes of Indians!

He wanted to see the great western world!

AND HE STARTED OUT! Do you know how he looked when he began his lifelong journey as a trapper, scout, pathfinder and friend of Indian and white man?

Well, he wore a long, loose coat of deerskin, tied with "thongs" in front. The trousers were of deerskin, too. On his head was a trapper's cap and he carried a long rifle!

He was keen-eyed! Not a sound of the forest could escape him!

He was as brave as the bravest! He loved adventure! But was so cool and so quiet in its face that people called him "taciturn!"

But withal, Kit Carson was kindly and generous and HE ALWAYS KEPT HIS WORD!

The Indians, who almost worshipped him because he was smarter than they at their own tricks, knew that whether he made threat or promise, he would fulfill it as sure as the next day's sun rose.

From the day he started on his western pathfinding trip till the day he died, Kit Carson was always SERVING HIS COUNTRY—either as a scout, as a peacemaker with wild tribes of Indians or as an aid to United States troops. He did especially great service for the U. S. government in the Mexican war and in the civil war.

He has the reputation of NEVER HAVING FAILED in any undertaking.

With a few comrades he could scatter a whole tribe of painted Indians, for they believed him almost supernatural.

The Indians called him "King of the Prairies" and "Father Kit," so great was his power over them.

He knew the language of scores of tribes.

He could speak Spanish, too!

He never got lost, no matter how dense the forest or how wild the frontier into which he ventured!

On his plain tombstone in Taos, New Mexico, is this very simple inscription:

"Kit Carson—Died May 23, 1868. Aged 59 Years!"

With Six Scarecrows and a Pair of Field-Glasses, "Black Bart, the PO8," Became the Greatest of All "Wild West" Bandits

By Brain, Rather Than Brawn, This Modern Dick Turpin Succeeded in Stripping Stage Coaches and Their Passengers—And When They Found Him, Through a Laundry Mark, He Was Just a Quiet "Miner," Living in a Frisco Boarding-House.

By Frank Parker Stockbridge

(Copyright, 1913, by The Newspaper Enterprise Association.)

A mail stage, lumbering down the Sierras toward Sacramento. A figure by the roadside—peaked hat like a circus clown's, linen duster, fute bag wrapped about his legs—looming tall in the twilight.

Back in the chapparal half a dozen other slouch-hatted, fute-legged figures, crouching. "Hands up!"

The driver throws his weight on the brake, heaves his horses to their haunches, and obeys. The gaunt man by the roadside speaks first to the group in the chapparal:

"Don't shoot boys, unless someone fires first."

Then, to the driver: "Throw out the box and mail, please, and line up the passengers."

Down tumbled the "box"—the Wells-Fargo treasure chest—and the registered mail pouches. The passengers scramble out. The bandit apologizes profusely, solicitously, especially lest the ladies may be alarmed.

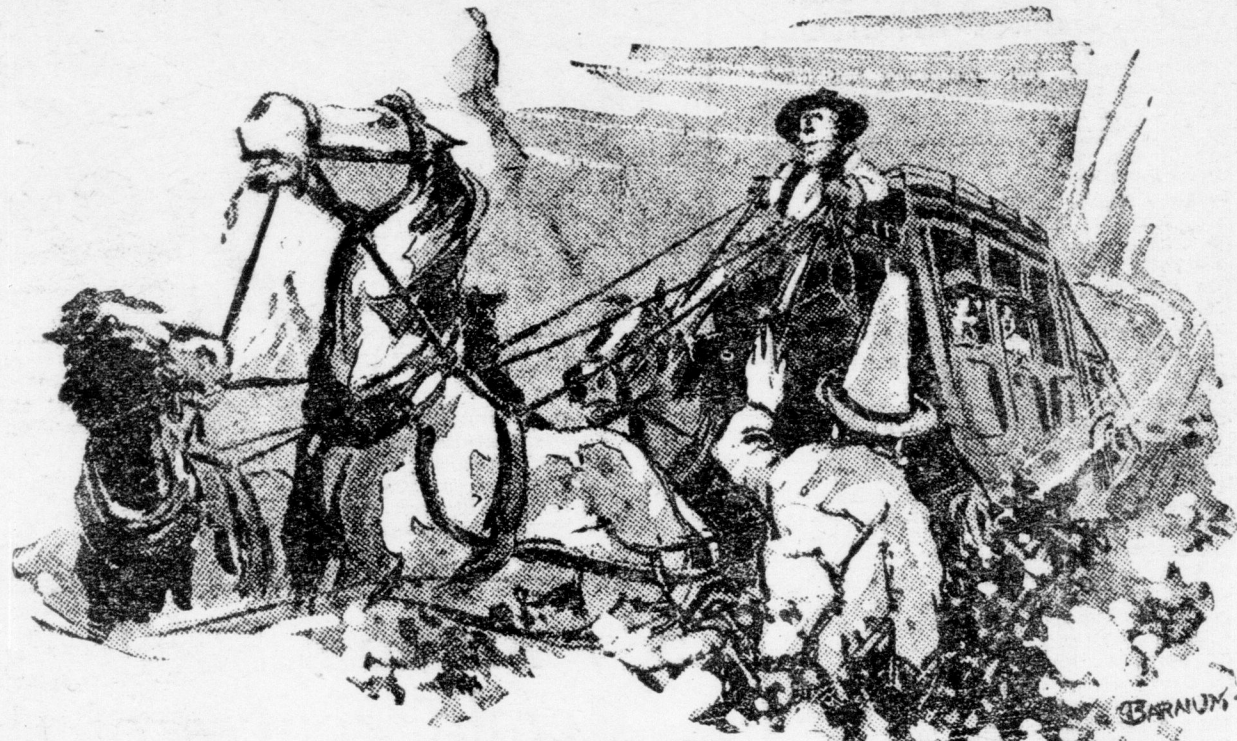

"Drive on," he orders—the money safe in his pockets—"and don't stop until you pass the bend. And," he adds, as the driver gathers the reins, "if anyone asks who held you up, here's my card!"

He slips a bit of paper into the driver's hand. The heavy Concord coach rattles and creaks down the hillside as the "gentle" figure plunges into the chapparal, treasure chest on shoulder, mail pouches dragging behind.

Around the bend driver and passengers scan the bandit's "card." Only a bit of doggerel verse, written in a firm, cultivated hand, properly spelled and punctuated. And signed—

"Black Bart, the PO8."

That was the scene and the action. Late in 1877, of the first of the most daring series of single-handed hold-ups in the whole history of the "wild west," I write "single-handed" advisedly—for express detectives and postoffice inspectors, seeking clues, discovered that the figures in the chapparal—the "boys" who were ordered not to shoot—were just sticks draped with fute bagging and topped with slouch hats.

Perfectly good bandits, though, in the mountain twilight! "All criminals are cowards" is a police maxim. Rare is the thief who dares to rob alone—rarer yet one who robs unarmed—and only cowards go armed. But there was a thief who robbed alone—whose only weapon was a pair of field glasses.

Twenty-three times in the next six years "Black Bart" lined up his dummy "boys" in the chapparal—in the Sierran Mountains, on the Oregon trail, back in his earlier haunt in the Sierras. Always scrupulously polite to the ladies, not once offering violence, always leaving his "card"—a scrap of doggerel signed "Black Bart, the PO8."

His express robberies netted him tens of thousands—nobody knows what treasure he got from the mails. Rewards for his capture went unclaimed. Here was a bandit more cunning than the thieves. Once only was a driver able to describe him—an American, about 50 years old, with long gray hair, thin face, deep-set eyes, prominent teeth and dignified bearing. His language indicated education and good breeding.

Caution and courage go hand-in-hand—and "Black Bart" was caution personified. With his field glass he would watch a stage for hours—no difficult task in a mountain country—until certain none of the passengers were armed. Then the quick ambush, the rifled "box" and always the disappearance without a trace—always, until the last time.

ACCIDENT CATCHES MORE CROOKS THAN ALL THE DETECTIVES.

On Nov. 3, 1882, it was an accident that a boy of the neighborhood rode on the box with McConnell, driver of the Yosemite mail stage, between Milton and Sonoma. An accident, too, that the boy had a gun.

Near Sonoma the boy dropped off. A few minutes later "Black Bart" cried "Hands up!"

"Where is the fellow with the gun?" he asked McConnell. The driver explained as "Black Bart" started off with his booty—$4,400 in gold in the express and mail sacks, $550 in coin from the passengers.

But accident again—THE BOY CAME BACK!

McConnell grabbed the rifle and fired four shots at the retreating bandit. Next day detectives found, beside a camp fire, a blood-stained cuff—and ON THE CUFF WERE LAUNDRY MARKS!

Here was the first real clue. They searched the laundries of every California city, and so, at last, they found "Black Bart, the PO8." A quiet, inof-fensive man, E. C. Bolton, living in an unpretentious San Francisco boarding-house. A "mining man"—so he explained his frequent absences. Identified as "Black Bart" he confessed the last robbery, but denied the others.

But when Bolton went to San Quentin "Black Bart, the PO8" ceased to rob!

Born at Decatur, Ill., he had served with gallantry in the civil war. His mates in the One Hundred and Sixtieth Illinois Regiment knew him as "Whistling Charlie." A teetotaler, well educated, a good "mixer," an entertaining story teller—able to earn more than a good living in any honest work, the motives that drove him to robbery are still his own mystery. No other crimes were ever traced to him and after his six years at San Quentin expired he spent the rest of his life in various honest occupations on the Pacific coast.

Many romances have been woven around the name and exploits of "Black Bart." He was, perhaps, the most romantic figure in the history of western crime—a "story book criminal" in real life.

YET—HE COULDN'T GET AWAY WITH IT!

ending privilege and monopoly in land, in Church establishment, in the liquor traffic, and in the House of Lords as I do so, with your permission, I should like to sling one javelin or two at my persecutors. (Cheers.) Their conduct of this conduct throughout. I can understand a partisan, I can honor a partisan, a downright one, a bigot if you like, a man who refuses to see anything except his own side of the question.

Bitterest Partisan As Judge.

"But I tell you a man I despise—a man who is a bigot, who is the narrowest, bitterest of partisans, and all the while arrogates to himself the position and the functions of a judge! (Loud cheers.) We are all narrow little partisans; they are judges. A downright honest, one-sided fellow—I will take off my hat to him, because there is something he believes in. He is fighting for. But the other! He is just a hungry humbug—(laughter and cheers)—steeped in smugness and self-righteousness."

"I have had a hint from the chair that there is to be no retaliation. (Laughter.) I will respect it. But when I was looking at the list of those who voted to turn us out of public life, I was wondering how many of them would have gone into that lobby if it had been a condition of their being allowed to vote that they must show the whole of their past books for three years. (Cheers.) It is very difficult not to retaliate when I see men setting themselves up as a sort of standard of patriotism in public life—what ought and what ought not to be done with the shares of ministers, and the directorships of companies, and when I remember that I was in the parliament from 1890 to 1905, mostly under Tory ministries, when I remember what passed then—ah! (Laughter.)"

"And when I see Mr. Bonar Law saying that ministers ought to be expelled from office who are guilty of an indiscretion—(laughter)—when I see the Tory party rushing back from Ascot racecourse to pass a solemn vote of censure on the semblance of gambling—(renewed merriment)—I say it gives me a unpleasant cross-channel feeling. (Laughter.)"

No Cash and Little Credit.

Did they really imagine that anybody was under the impression that they were just filled with a passion of burning zeal for the cleansing of public life? "I should like to ask a question," he exclaimed. "I wonder whether they will answer it. Supposing I had devoted as much time and energy to de-

it. (Applause.) I hail this new altruism of the Tory party. Just think of that noble declaration of Lord Robert Cecil—(laughter)—no man is to put himself in a position where his public duty shall conflict with his private interests. (Hear, hear.) I welcome it. (Applause.) After all political virtue is not a kind of prison fare with which you forcibly feed Radical evildoers. (Laughter.) Vicarious virtue is precarious virtue."

"But what a pity these doctrines were not in force before! Millions of acres of common land, the inheritance of the people, were battered away by parliaments when landlords governed both the Upper and the Lower House. Ah, if Lord Robert Cecil had lived in those days—(laughter and applause)—just to preach this gospel and tell them they ought never to put themselves in a position where their private interests conflicted with their public duties! (Laughter.) In those days those people were blind not to their interests, but to their obligations. The new light had not dawned on their conscience. (Laughter.) The result is that the laborers of England, who were freeholders in their own land, are now landless, homeless, liable to be turned adrift at any moment at the caprice of their masters, with wages that barely keep body and soul together for themselves and their children. Why? Because these great principles were not taught in time. (Laughter and applause.)"

Breaking Open The Poor-Box.

This led to an interesting reminiscence. "I remember in 1895," said Mr. Lloyd George, "how the landlords of England, wanting to get into office, said to the people, 'Give us power and we will look after your old people.' They came in, and the money which they had distributed, not amongst the old people, but amongst the landlords to relieve the burden on their land. What was that? Suppose we apply the terminology of the present day to that? It was not putting your hand into the till. It was breaking open the poor box. (Applause.) Was it an indiscretion, was it imprudence, was it corruption? I will tell you what it was. It was a heartless piece of sacrilege. (Applause.) If Lord Robert Cecil had only written his report before then, when that report had been published and circulated as a penny pamphlet—they are still doing it—why they would not send a copy marked to Lansdowne House before Lord Lansdowne made his land speech? (Applause.)"

"You know it is by no means irrelevant to our present purpose, and it certainly is not irrelevant to our future purpose to examine that. Here is a campaign on the land question. All parties want it. (Laughter.) They feel something has got to be done to improve the conditions in rural life. The country certainly demands it. We appointed a committee to investigate patiently the subject, and whilst they were ploughing laboriously through the facts, collecting them together, the Tories rushed us in advance, and said, 'Let's have our program in before these fellows begin. And then came the program."

Lord Lansdowne's Panacea.

"What was it? The laborer is suffering from an inadequate wage. The tenant farmer is suffering from inadequate security. (Hear, hear.) The tenant in the house has been oppressed by tyrannical conditions."

"What was the answer of Lord Lansdowne to the land evils? It was more money for the landlord. (Laughter.) Lord Lansdowne said, 'Yes, houses are bad, houses are deficient; it is true it is the obligation of those who own the land to build and repair. Let's transfer that obligation on to the taxpayer. (Laughter.) That was his idea of reconciling private interests with public duty. (Laughter.) There was the other proposition—land purchase. Advance money at a low rate of interest, to enable the farmer to buy where the landlord is willing to sell. Anybody who followed what happened in Ireland, anybody who had experience of rural life, knew this, that a rate of interest and purchase meant high purchase money. (Hear, hear.) The poor, miserable laborer who could not feed and clothe and house his children adequately—what had Lord Lansdowne got for him? An open mind? (Laughter.) For the landlord, all the heaviest burdens of his estate shouldered by the State, the value of his land put up by hundreds of millions at the expense of the State. An open mind for the laborer and an open mouth for the landlord? (Cheers and laughter.)"

"No sooner," he proceeded, "did Lord Robert Cecil preach the new gospel, no sooner does the new Moses come down with the law engraved fresh upon the tablets, and hardly has he delivered them, than the high priest of his own people is worshipping the same old golden calf. (Cheers.) 'Don't you drop it!' 'I am not going to drop it. I have nothing to fear. (Cheers.) I have disclosed everything—everything, they have scrutinized everything. Why should I drop it now—(applause and "quite right")—when the only thing that remains is the principle which is full of health and healing for the democracy?"

A Standard For Judging Tories.

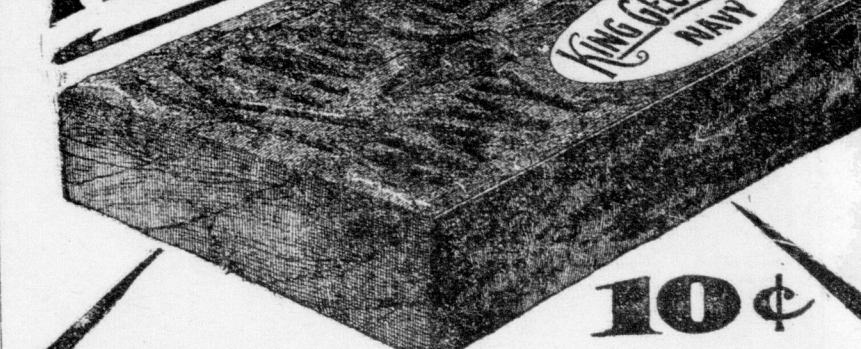

"The principle which they intended to use as a scourge for their foes we shall insist on making a standard for their friends. (Cheers and "quite right.") That is the principle, and it is full of hope for the people, and whatever we have suffered—and we shall not have suffered in vain, if this principle is exalted for observance by all parties, all interests."

There is a great story," the chancellor concluded, "in the greatest of books by a man who spent his life fighting the Philistines. One day he was assailed by a wild beast which he slew. Returning to the scene of the conflict in a few days, he found the carcass full of honey. My right hon. friend and I have been assailed by a vicious monster that sought our lives. Not our own right arm but by the help of friends we have slaughtered it. (Hear, hear.) And unless I am mistaken, out of this prostrate form will come something that will sweeten the lives of millions who hitherto have tasted nothing but the bitterness and dust of the world. (Loud cheers.)"

Conquered Mt. McKinley, America's Highest Peak

Great Achievement of Archdeacon Stuck—Reached Height of 19,500 Feet.

The word of an archdeacon who says he has scaled Mount McKinley is accepted by the press, where the claim of a doctor, who said he had done the feat a few years ago, was scouted. Perhaps a mere deacon would have failed to overcome the editorial skepticism, but Hudson Stuck is an archdeacon, and an Episcopal missionary for Alaska, and he assures us that, on June 7, he and three companions took from Prof. Herschel C. Parker, of Columbia University, the record of climbing in that region. And since, suggests the New York Times, Mount McKinley is the loftiest peak on the continent, "they hold the altitude record for mountain-climbing in North America."

Prof. Parker arrived in July, 1912, within 300 feet of the point of the highest peak, and it was during this expedition that pictures were taken of a peak which Dr. Frederick A. Cook said was the summit of the mountain, but which, according to Prof. Parker, was 20 miles to the south and only 8,000 feet above the sea level. Archdeacon Stuck and his companions set out from Fairbanks, March 13, equipped like a prospector's expedition and supplied with other essentials controlled by Prof. Parker. Supplies had been carried as early as last fall to a point near McPhee Pass, at an altitude of 9,000 feet, by H. P. Karstens, a member of the exploring party. Archdeacon Stuck was by no means a novice in the business, for he has ascended nearly all the great peaks of the Canadian and Colorado Rockies, and scaled many of the high peaks of the Alps. Here is his own description of the Mount McKinley trip in the form of a telegram sent from Fairbanks to a friend in Seattle:

"H. P. Karstens, R. G. Tatum, Walter Harper and I reached top of South (the highest of all peaks) on a clear day, when it was possible to read all angles of the mountain and other points, and make certain that the peak we had conquered was the highest of all. We successfully carried a mercurial barometer to the top and made complete readings and observations, which, with simultaneous readings at Gibben, should permit a close approximation of the true altitude, when proper corrections are made. After completing observations on the summit, we hoisted the American flag on the upper basin, erected a six-foot cross, and said 'Te Deum' on the highest point in North America. The northeastern ridge is the only possible approach to the summit. Due to the violent earthquakes of last July the higher ridges were terribly shattered, and this added largely to the danger, difficulty and labor of the ascent. We spent three weeks in continuous bad weather, hewing a passage three miles long through this slide. This was the chief cause of delay, as we made rapid progress at all other stages of the journey. The chief credit for our success is due to Karstens' good judgment, resourcefulness and caution. We did not have a single mishap."

The Times has this to say about the credibility of the story: "No one will doubt the missionary's report, backed up as it will be by the circumstantial account of his companions, Karstens, Tatum and Harper, and the complete and careful readings of observations taken at points all the way up the mountain. The six-foot cross which Archdeacon Stuck left on the peak will be of permanent record. Time was when the word of an explorer was regarded as unimpeachable. That day has passed, but it is safe to predict that Dr. Stuck's claim will bring no discredit to the cloth."

CURED HER

MRS. THOMAS SKALING, Schreiber, Ont., writes: "My little girl, who is now nearly four years old, and is as healthy and strong as can be, was bothered with Diarrhœa from the time she was born until she was over two years old. The doctor in the hospital, where I was when she was born, did everything he could but did not get it stopped. Just as soon as I got out myself, I got a bottle of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, and gave it to her, off and on, whenever she needed it, and I never had a doctor in the house once, for it would always check it without any bad after effects, and in time cured her altogether. I always keep it in the house, as I have never found anything to compete with it for Diarrhœa."

When you ask for "DR. FOWLER'S" be sure you get it, as some of these no-name, no-reputation, so-called strawberry preparations are being sold on the reputation built up by "DR. FOWLER'S." A HARD-FIGHTING ENEMY OF DRINK

ATTACKED THIS WEEK

Little Fighting, Welshman, Who Has Most Dangerous Job in Canadian Metropolis.

JOHN H. ROBERTS, Secretary of the Quebec branch of the Dominion Alliance, who was knocked unconscious by a gang of roughs with a blackjack on Monday night in Montreal, has had various experiences of that kind since going to the city on the St. Lawrence. Two weeks ago, Mr. Roberts was similarly attacked and was sheltered in the same drug store in the French quarter into which he was carried Monday night. The latter attack was made after a meeting of the Good Templars of St. Andrew's Lodge, and it took a large detachment of police to drive back the crowd, which did not seem satisfied when he was hit over the head once, although he was knocked senseless. And this sort of thing has been going on for years.

Mr. Roberts is a Welshman, and a mighty scrappy little one. He was a temperance worker in the Old Country, and some years ago he came to America to go on a lecture tour. His wife, also a temperance worker, helped him. He toured the United States and Eastern Canada, and wherever he went he stirred things up. One thing he used to do was to have a parade through the slum districts of the cities visited. Finally he decided to remain in Canada. He never lived in Toronto, but three years ago he went to Montreal, and became Secretary of the Quebec branch of the Dominion Alliance, just as Rev. Ben Spence is Ontario Secretary.

"Kill Him!" They Yelled

FROM the first, the owners of the lower tier of saloons in Montreal recognized in John H. Roberts a dangerous enemy—as far as shady work was concerned. John H. "let in the light," as they say, and the underworld of Montreal—and they have quite an active, full-sized underworld down there—got after the new Alliance man hard. One day at a hearing of the license commissioners Mr. Roberts and a lawyer named St. Julian disputed possession of a chair. In half a minute about fifty saloon men were on their feet yelling:

"Kill him! Kill the scoundrel!"

And Mr. Roberts was rather roughly handled before peace was restored. Not long after Mr. Roberts with three detectives went to raid a tough dance hall. They had seized a quantity of whiskey when somebody threw a bottle. Right away the air was a cubist picture of furniture, sticks, bottles, and pretty nearly everything loose around that joint. Roberts was badly beaten up, but escaped before an ambulance was necessary.

He Never Quits

NEXT day he was asked whether he was having anybody arrested. "No," said he, "I haven't laid a complaint yet. We're going to raid some more places like that, and I'll get them all in court together."

Of late Mr. Roberts has been seeking to prove that the Montreal chief of police is in collusion with the dive-keepers. He doesn't seek to prove this in any mild or abstract way. He makes such a mighty noise about broken laws—laws smashed openly and flagrant—that the dive-keepers and the Montreal underworld generally have been getting angrier and angrier all the time.

It will be interesting to see just how this fight will end, for something more serious for either Mr. Roberts or his enemies than has yet transpired seems to be on the way. One thing will not happen, however. Roberts won't quit; you can bank on that.

He is twenty-eight years old, has spent two years on the coast of Labrador, assisting Dr. Grenfell in his missionary work, and graduated from Harvard Law School last year "Cum Laude." He is now employed in District Attorney Whitman's office. The engagement was announced July 2nd, the anniversary of President Wilson's nomination at Baltimore, and the marriage will be the thirteenth in the White House.

LEWIS GOT HIS DIME

WHEN Jim Ham Lewis, Democratic senator from Illinois, was a young man he alternated between being broke and having $40. In Seattle he was broke. Therefore, strolling along the street and observing a nice young man scowling at a pile of coal, he bowed courteously. "I presume," said he, "that you wish that coal carried upstairs to your office. I will do it for sixty cents."

SENATOR JIM HAM LEWIS.

"For fifty cents," corrected the nice young man.

"For sixty cents," corrected Lewis urbanely.

"No," said the young man, "get to work." Lewis carried the coal upstairs. When he concluded his task he dis-

DR. LOCKE, TORONTO'S CHIEF LIBRARIAN, A MAN WITH A NATION-WIDE REPUTATION

System and Liberty are the Keynotes of His Striking Success.

HE IS VERY ACCESSIBLE

To the Public—A Delightful Companion—A Master of the Art of Jolly.

EMPHATICALLY the right man in the right place is Dr. George H. Locke as Toronto's Chief Librarian. Possibly he does not quite look the part, for there is a notable absence of "mustiness" about him. And "mustiness," to many people's minds, should be the lot of him who dwells among books. Nor does he deem that his position renders it incumbent on him to cultivate a monumental frowning of heavily-spectacled brows. But he has made the Public Library a live, up-to-date institution of the city—one that is run on sound and sane, and, withal, economical lines.

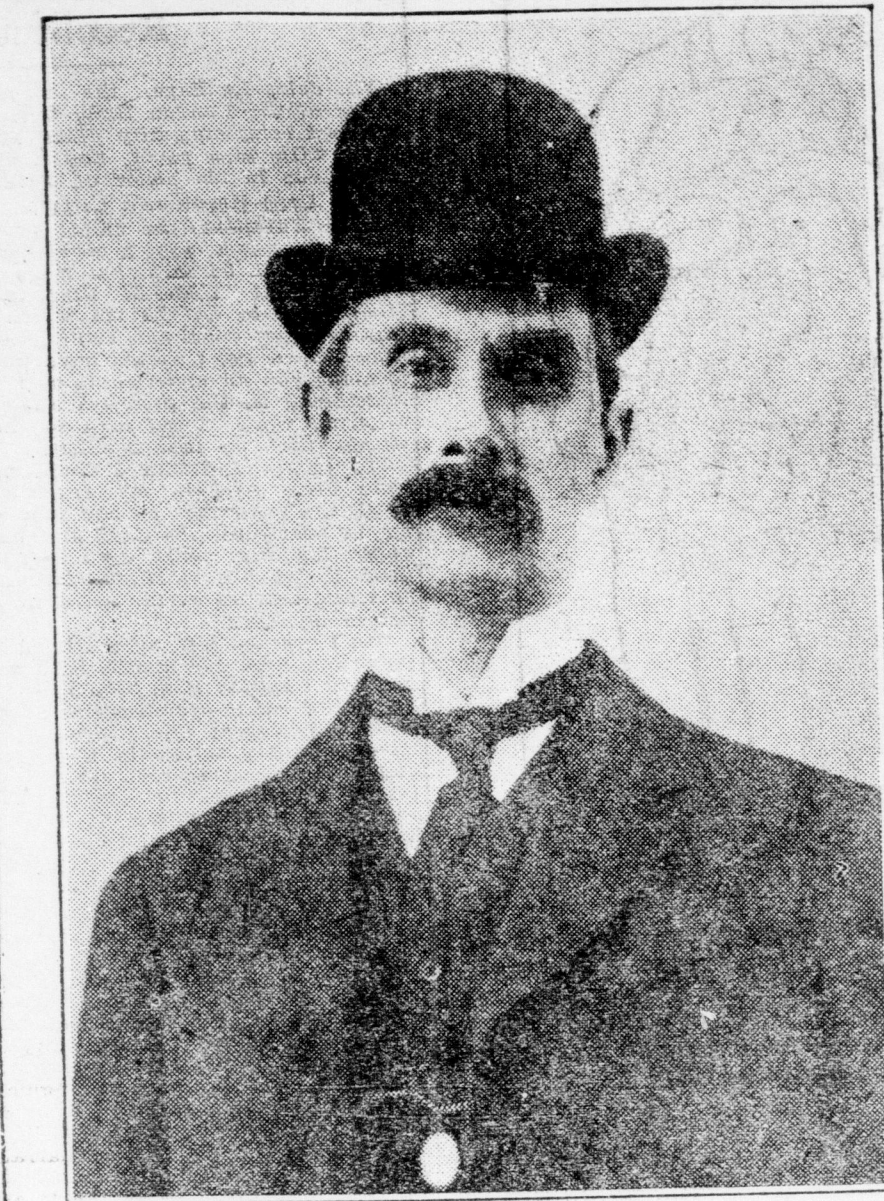

Dr. Locke is a book-lover, rather than what would strictly be called a bookish man. He has literature, indeed, and much literature, but he wears it lightly and brightly like a flower, not as a burden over-grievous to be borne. And in literature, as in so much else, his tastes are catholic. It is his general catholicity of taste which helps to make him the man of the world that he is—without any of that narrowness which that phrase so often implies. He could not be dull if he tried. The odd, whimsical expression comes as readily to his lips as does the original view to his active mind. For converse, whether of grave or gay, he has need to be a wary verbal wrestler who would try a dialectical fall with Dr. Locke.

System and Liberty

PERHAPS the secret of his success in his present post may mainly be found in two directions. First there is his system of efficiency, and his efficiency of system. Whether in arranging, cataloguing, indexing, or what not, that efficiency is easily observable. One cannot be much in the library without realizing that here is a machine which works with a smoothness quite out of the common, and one need see very little of Dr. Locke at work to recognize that that smoothness is attributable to the business methods of a master mind.

In the second place, under his regime the public have been treated as friends and not as potential malefactors.

It was his idea to allow the public to have free access to the shelves—a privilege which is simply invaluable and which has not been substantially abused. Later, he devised a plan whereby a person wishing to read a special book may make special application for it. Then came the juvenile department of the library, the children's book club, the national story hour, and all the rest of the carefully thought out devices for making the library a place of interest and fascination for children. The special provision of taking a number of books at once when going on holiday, which is so greatly appreciated by holiday-makers, is due to his care, and trust in, book-loving humanity.

His Accessibility

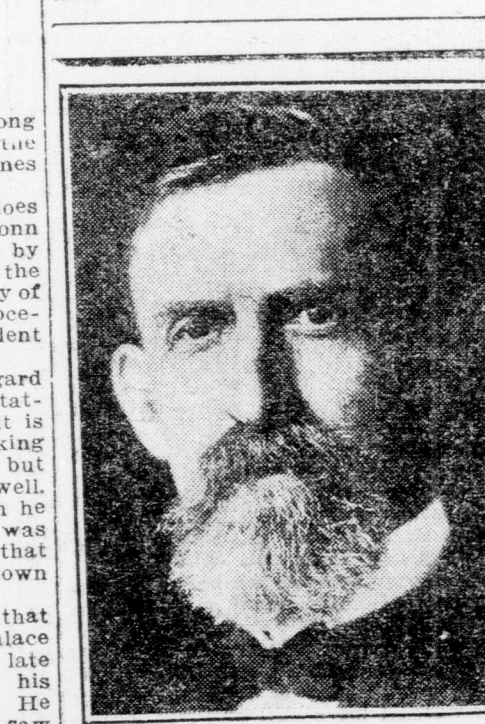

AS has been hinted, Dr. Locke is a delightful companion. If in his heart he does not suffer fools gladly, he is, at least, scrupulously careful that the fool shall not see that his folly irks him. And he is accessible to all—the wise and the unwise alike. Indeed, he probably gets a little mild amusement out of some of the "cranks" who waste his time. For he is a champion in the art of "jolly" and contact with his nimble wits has

TWO VARIETIES

UNITED STATES SENATORS KERN AND SHIVELY—both of Indiana—are bitterly polite to each other. They've been that way for years. But when they exchange Christmas presents, each opens his in a bucket of water. The other day an elderly man called on Kern.

"I have followed your career with intense admiration for years, senator," said he. Mr. Kern smiled pleasantly. "I have never failed to secure a complete report of your speeches, when possible," said the elderly man. "You are Indiana's greatest statesman."

After that Kern just had to be kind. They had a delightful ten-minute talk. Then the elderly man said:

SENATOR KERN.

"By the way, senator, I'm a bit short of money. Can you let me have a dollar?"

Kern had been fairly trapped, and gave up the money. An hour later he saw the elderly man leaving Senator Shivelly's office. He hurried right in.

"Who is that old gentleman who left just as I came in?" he asked.

Shivelly hemmed and hawed. Finally he said:

"Er—he's an old man who has watched my career with admiration for years."

"How much did he get from you?" asked Kern. Shivelly blushed and wriggled. Finally he confessed:

"To tell you the truth," said he, "I let him have fifty cents."

"Well," said Kern, "I'm glad our mutual friend has intelligence enough to discriminate between a dollar senator and a fifty cent senator."

HENRY'S HOAX

REPRESENTATIVE "BOB" HENRY of Texas, who takes the money devil out for a run across country every now and then, is a blithe Democrat with an acute sense of humor. On one occasion he called upon Von L. Meyer when that gentleman was Secretary of the Navy.

"I have called to ask," said Mr. Henry, impressively, "that you confer upon the warship which is now in course of building at the Government yard the name of Waco, that fairest city of the south-west."

Mr. Meyer didn't know just what to say. He finally managed to observe that Waco was a comparatively small town.

"True," said Henry, "but, sir, it is the home of the greatest statesman Texas ever produced. The State will appreciate the honor if you grant him the recognition he deserves."

Meyer racked his brains. He couldn't remember any statesman who lives in Waco. So he dismissed Henry vaguely and began to ask questions. He demanded of everyone who might know "what great statesman lives in Waco?" Persons approached Henry strategically, and asked him. Henry just smiled. Meyer never did find out. In the last hours of his incumbency he met Henry. Promptly trouble seemed his countenance.

He was worrying about that Texas statesman who lives in Waco. The Congressional Directory contains this statement: "Robert Lee Henry of Waco."

"By the way, senator, I'm a bit short of money. Can you let me have a dollar?"

Kern had been fairly trapped, and gave up the money. An hour later he saw the elderly man leaving Senator Shivelly's office. He hurried right in.

OWNS FREER GOSPELS

Which Have Recently Sprung Into Prominence—How His Luck Began.

CHARLES L. FREER is a rich man in Detroit. Now and then he emerges from his office obscurity long enough to get his name on every first page in Christendom. Then he diffidently retreats into the gloom. Between times an effort to learn anything about him is met with the same generous welcome granted to explorers around the South Pole. The latest time his name appeared in print was when the London Times had a dignified and scholarly fit over the "Freer gospels"—a sheepskin manuscript which contains a new version of the Gospels of St. Mark, St. John, and St. Luke. Freer bought it six years ago in Egypt as a curiosity. Now it turns out to be of inestimable value.

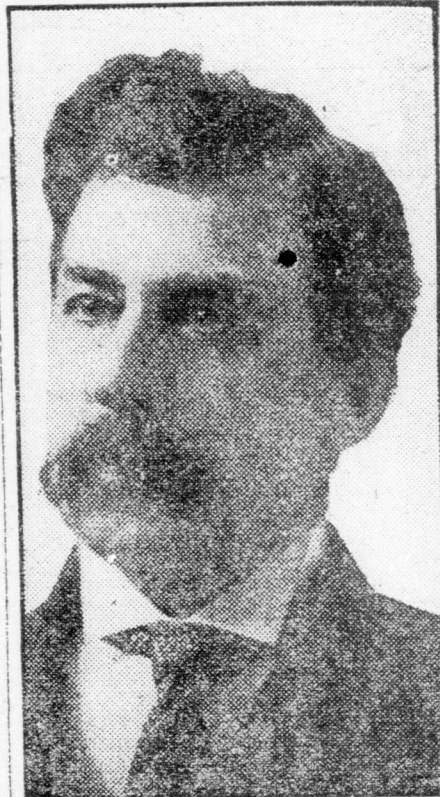

Eight years ago the world, outside of Detroit, heard of Freer for practically the first time. Then he offered a million and a half dollars worth of art and cash to the Smithsonian Institution. Of course, he had been in print before. There was the time the dailies of Logansport, Ind., bewailed in print the probability that poor Charley Freer would starve to death out in a cold world, he having just been boosted out of his job as auditor of the Eel River Railroad. And some years later a discreet attention was paid to the fact that Freer had sold his car-building works in Detroit to the trust, thereby entering into the enjoyment of some loose millions and unlimited leisure. But that is about all that has ever been said.

Definite Limits

FREER is one of the most remarkable art collectors of the United States. His collection isn't of a wholesale and warehouse character of that gathered by the late J. P. Morgan. It is confined within definite limits, and within those lines it is coldly logical. His porcelains, for example, practically cover the field of porcelain manufacture, and his gathering of scripture texts is the most complete in the hands of any individual. He has a most noteworthy collection of Chinese, Japanese, Korean, Babylonian, and Central Asian art. A characteristic of Freer is that he knows what he wants. Then he gets it. Then he keeps still about it. He has owned the "Freer gospel" for six years. The news just kind of leaked out in London.

Freer's luck began when he lost his job as auditor of the Eel River Railroad in Indiana. This was a rust-eaten, rotten timbered neighborhood. It was thirty miles long, owned sixteen freight cars, six coaches, and two tin tea kettles, which Freer passionately asserted were engines. One of them was at the plumber's most of the time having its bristles plugged. Freer lived in a single room and cooked his meals over an oil stove, and adored that frog-hop railroad. By-and-bye he became auditor. Life held no other gifts for him. He wouldn't have traded places with the Prince of Wales.

The Wabash grabbed that meagre angleworm, the Eel River road, and reorganized Freer out of a job. The world came to an end for him there. But in order to occupy his mind he went to Detroit and began to build cars. By-and-bye the trust bought him out. He's been collecting art and keeping quiet ever since. He is something more than sixty years old, and he has been a man of large affairs since he was thirty. And it is believed that he has not spoken in the first person to the press in all that time. He is slender, wears a Van Dyke beard, and is a bachelor. Also, he is the most retiring man in the world. You could bury him in the whispering gallery at Washington and he'd get out without a tinkle.

"FATHER OF PROTECTION" ONCE SOLD TALLOW CANDLES

Says "New York Press," Which Gives William Dewart of Montclair, N.J., Credit for Originating the N. P.

LAST week William Dewart celebrated his 77th birthday in Montclair, New Jersey. Who is William Dewart? Well, he claims to be the "Father of Protection for Canada," and no doubt has considerable right to the claim, although several others have given themselves credit for its origin.

An American writer in the New York Press thus speaks of him: "It was in 1874 that, by a series of brilliant, forceful letters printed in various Canadian newspapers and periodicals, William Dewart launched the National Policy, which then embodied the idea of tariff protection, since universally accepted in Canada."

Mr. Dewart was born in Dummer, Ontario, July 4th, 1835. Three of his brothers now live there, with their children. At the age of 17, when their attention to hunting, fishing, and other rural sports, he began teaching school.

Six years later he gave up teaching, and bought a small country store in the village of Fenelon Falls, Ontario. Here, in the intervals between the visits of customers, and at night, long after the other villagers were abed, he pored over volumes of political economy, philosophy, and history.

In 1874, when the fiscal question was the issue of the day in Canada, he was equipped with a vast store of the accumulated knowledge of the past, which he applied to the pending problem with keen insight. There began to appear in various publications brief, terse, epigrammatic articles showing the fallacy of free trade, signed simply "William Dewart."

"Who is William Dewart?" those familiar with Canadian public affairs began to ask. In the wings of none of the able editors of the day, in the speeches of none of the brilliant politicians, was there that incisive, homely vigor, which marked the Dewart letters.

"Many assumed that the signature was a nom de plume, concealing the identity of some well-known public man. When, finally, it became known that William Dewart sold tallow candles and matches for a living, and dominated the discussions of farmers gathered at a cross-road, by way of mental recreation, the public was amazed."

"In that year, at a meeting in Fenelon Falls, Hector Cameron, standing for Parliament in the Victoria riding, dubbed Mr. Dewart 'the Father of Protection in Canada,' and the name stuck. For in 1878, as every student of Canadian history knows, the Conservatives came into power, and the policy for which the village merchant fought was established, and has endured ever since."

"When it was proposed to build the Victoria Railway from Lindsay to Haliburton, it was William Dewart, by that time a power in the Province, who spent time and money to procure the necessary bonus. The line now is part of the Grand Trunk system."

"Mr. Dewart has seven children living. His son Robert, is a lumber merchant, doing a large business in Canada and the United States, with headquarters in Rochester, N.Y. William T. Dewart is the vice-president and general manager of the Frank A. Munsey enterprises."

MONARCHS OF EUROPE WHO ARE TEETOTALERS

Queen Wilhelmina of Holland Never Touches Liquor in Any Form—Nor Does King Ferdinand of Bulgaria—Kaiser Has Been a Keen Advocate of Temperate Habits—Alfonso Dislikes Both Wine and Spirits.

THOUGH much has been said of Col. Roosevelt's libel suit on Marquette, Mich., the teetotalism of President Wilson, and the grape juice Cocktails of Secretary Bryan, little mention has been made of the crowned heads of Europe, who are just as temperate as any one of them.

Fast and foremost there is the young and pleasure-loving King Alfonso of Spain. Though fantastic stories have been published from time to time describing his alleged excesses when in his cups, as a matter of fact he does not drink either wine or spirits, nor does his mother, Queen Christina. Queen Victoria of Spain sometimes takes a glass of wine at dinner, and it was noticed that during her visit to the French republic she sipped champagne with the President.

With Alfonso total abstinence is not a matter of policy or principle, but simply one of taste. He really finds all wines and spirits, unpalatable, but the cellars in the Spanish palace at Madrid are famous, and wine is served at every meal.

King Ferdinand of Bulgaria forswore beer, wine, liquors, and stimulants of all kinds some years ago on the advice of his clever mother, who he always declares was his most sagacious political adviser. Thanks perhaps to this policy his nerves are always under perfect control; he never loses his temper, never displays any signs of irritation under the most trying circumstances, and this gives him a tremendous advantage in dealing with

Queen Emma of Holland is a rather fanatical blue ribboner, and she instilled her temperance ideas into the mind of Queen Wilhelmina. Neither mother nor daughter touches any kind of liquor on any occasion. Indeed wine never used to be served at the palace until the young Queen married. Then her husband, Prince Henry, throne a firm stand on the question, and after considerable discussion with his mother-in-law, as well as his wife, finally succeeded in having wine served to him and to guests.

The two Queens of Sweden and King Gustavus Adolphus are all abstainers, but the cellars of the palace are always well stocked with fine wines, and these are served to guests, though at family dinners water and lime juice are the only beverages.

The Dowager Queen Sophia of Sweden is really the influence back of this temperance of the royal family and no temperance of the royal family and no wine is ever served at her own table. She has for forty years been the most powerful supporter of the total abstinence movement in Scandinavia and has devoted much of her wealth as well as her time and influence to the cause. Her favorite son, Oscar, who is the chief heir to her fortune, although he sacrificed his place in the line of succession to the throne to marry her maid of honor, has for several years been the president of the Total Abstinence Society of Sweden.

The Emperors of Austria, Russia, Germany and the King of Italy are not teetotalers, but they have always been abstemious in the matter of stimulants. The Kaiser, indeed, has done everything in his power to encourage temperance, because, as he declares, "the next war will demand healthy men; war calls for strong nerves, and victory will crown the colors of the nation which consumes the least alcohol."

The Crown Prince of Germany does not drink, and while a student at Bonn he gave offence to the university by protesting vigorously against the drinking of an exaggerated quantity of beer as part and parcel of the procedure of the old-established student societies.

Information differs widely in regard to King George. It is sometimes stated that he drinks only milk, and it is true that he has been seen partaking of this innocent thirst-quencher, but he does occasionally take wine as well. Of course, at one time in his youth he was a hard drinker! In fact, it was not until he married Queen Mary that he mended his ways and settled down to milder beverages.

It was in King Edward's day that the cellars at Buckingham Palace were worth considering. His late Majesty was as particular about his wines as about everything else. He drank steadily, yet no one ever saw him drunk, and he was a great judge of all food and drink. His favorite hostesses were those who gave him well-chosen meals with just the right wines. He was not in any sense of the word a gourmand, but he was a gourmet, and his people rather admired him for it, just as they secretly admired him for having the best of everything all his life.

Queen Alexandra is not a teetotaler, and her favorite wine, which is served at lunch and dinner, is a rather heavy burgundy. Occasionally she has champagne, but not as she did in King Edward's day, when a very fine brand of champagne was always served.

Hugs and Kisses and---Oh, My! What Great Fun Lunch Time Is for the Pretty Paris Workgirl!

Shepherd Goes To See Her Play and Eat and Love and Kiss Right Out on Streets and Boulevards—If Kisses Were Revolver Shots You'd Think an Army Was Shooting Up Paris.

[BY W. G. SHEPHERD.]

Paris, July 18. — You wouldn't think there was any particular fun in eating cold meat, some hot fried potatoes, a hot bun and topping it off with a cup of coffee—all of which is the midday lunch of the pretty Parisian shop girl—unless you had seen the girl taking her dessert.

At noon the girls tumble down into the streets and boulevards from the shops of the dressmakers. From 12 to 1 they own the sidewalks, they and their sweethearts.

Each girl brings from home some cold meat or cheese, wrapped in newspaper. First she hurries to a hot potato stall, where scores of other laughing girls, whom she meets every day, await their turn to buy two cents worth of fried potatoes. Then she and some other girl friend, carrying the purchase, will scurry through the streets to some hot bun stall, perhaps several blocks away, where for one cent they buy an appetizing bit of cookery. And now it is time to eat. Then she must have her coffee. There are coffee bars at every hand, where she may stand with her foot on a railing and buy, for two cents, from a man who usually looks like a bartender, as good a cup of coffee as you could get for 15 cents in the cafes.

And now comes loving time—dessert. For around the corner there has been a boy waiting impatiently for his girl. The dessert consists largely of hugs and kisses.

THE PRETTY PARIS WORK-GIRL AT LUNCH—DRAWN ESPECIALLY FOR THE ADVERTISER BY HENRI MIRANDÉ, NOTED FRENCH ARTIST, WHOSE SPECIALTY IS THE LITTLE SHOP-GIRLS OF PARIS.

You will see any number of couples walking along the sidewalks of Paris, each with an arm about the other, gazing into each other's eyes, talking love talk and bumping happily and without attention into any person who happens to get into their path. The world may whirl on for all of them; isn't it loving that makes the world go round, anyhow?

Pretty soon it's time to go back to work. Are there any kisses in the whole world any sweeter and purer than the kisses that the little Paris shop girl gives to her boy, right out in the sunshine, on the open streets, where all the world may see, when she tells him good-bye at noon? If kisses sounded like revolver shots, you'd think that the Prussians were besieging Paris again; and if the love light that gleams from the eyes of a girl had any effect on the thermometer Paris would have a daily hot wave at noon.

Famous Actress, Mrs. Fiske, Stars in "Movie!" Picture Fans to See Her in "Tess"

BY GERTRUDE M. PRICE.
The Daily Advertiser's Moving Picture Expert.

Mrs. Fiske, one of the greatest stars of the theatrical world, whom many call the foremost actress in America, will appear in the Forest City soon in a MOVING PICTURE!

She will be seen in her famous role of Tess in Thomas Hardy's "Tess of the D'Urbervilles." The production, which took four weeks to complete, at the studio of the Famous Players' Film Company, in New York, is just finished.

Mrs. Fiske, the great tragedienne and comedienne of the English-speaking stage, has contracted to present, ture, both an instructor and entertainer. She has depicted the inconsequential pictures and really harmful pictures, which she maintains are frequently shown.

It is her conviction that the "movies" have tremendous potentialities for the uplift of the theatre. And this is one of the reasons why she has taken up the entirely novel business of acting BEFORE A CAMERA.

Instead of being irksome, at the end of a long theatrical season, she declares the experience has been a novel, refreshing one.

So the real story of "Tess," with a great theatrical star in the title role, is ready for the picture public.

The combination of a famous star and the best-known work of a noted novelist marks an epoch in the progress of the photo play, and brings to moving pictures a new dignity and importance.

The appearance of Mrs. Fiske in the camera drama in America is as significant as was that of Mme. Bernhardt in France.

and actually finished, the production of a FILM PLAY!

She took it under consideration.

Then, at last, an agreement was made that she should act before the camera some time in the following spring.

But it was summer before she entered the studio of the Famous Players' Film Company in New York to make her initial bow before the moving picture man.

Today the work is complete!

The moving picture public all over the world is to see Mrs. Fiske in her famous role of Tess in the well-known melodrama, "Tess of the D'Urbervilles."

There are a hundred scenes in the picture, which has been produced with the care in detail for which Mrs. Fiske is noted.

In the film play the story closely follows the novel, entirely departing from the form of the play made from it by Lorimer Stoddard. Many scenes, therefore, will be shown that were not seen in the dramatization.

The play will be given in five reels, and it is intended to provide a complete evening's entertainment. A special company, under the title of "The Mrs. Fiske Film Company," is being incorporated to exploit the films.

Although busily engaged with her theatrical productions, Mrs. Fiske has been an interested student of the "movie" theatre, and the "movie" production for some time.

She believes strongly in the value and possibilities of the moving picture.

50 Years In Fleet Street Great Editor's Memories of World-Moving Events

John LeSage's Reminiscences—Reporting Cobden and Palmerston—The Siege of Paris—Recollections of Stanley.

Mr. John LeSage, the managing editor of the London Daily Telegraph, has just completed fifty years of association with that paper, and a dinner was given in his honor on Saturday.

Lord Burnham's Letter. Lord Burnham, the chief proprietor of the paper, sent a charming letter, in which he said that if he had been present "I should have tried—tried hard—to do that to which no words at my command could possibly have helped me. I should have wanted to make you all understand as I have understood it, the priceless and unfaltering work of the man to honor whom you have met together."

"In fairness to him I could never have been brief in my appreciation of the work that he has done with me in nearly all the days and nights of the last fifty years. As I look back upon it, what a wonderful panorama of world-moving events seem to pass before my eyes!"

"As I grasped him by the hand fifty years ago, I so take him by both hands now, as I say to him, 'God bless you, old friend—what ever happens now we have had a great time together. We have done big things in a big way, and I want you to rest assured that I have no stronger or more earnest wish than that you may be spared in health and happiness and contentment to continue the traditions of your life of courage, skill, and devotion.'"

Fifty Wonderful Years. Mr. Harry Lawson, M. P., Lord Burnham's son, said:

"The fifty years had seen a transformation in things political, things social, and things material which dazed the eye and racked the mind."

"It was bewildering to think of what had happened. The map of the world had been unrolled, and half of it had been repainted. Some part of it had been colored for the first time at the expense of the Daily Telegraph. But it was not only the map of the world which had been repainted in this way. The map of life itself had been drawn afresh by the instruments of science and by the novelties of mechanism."

The British Public Hates Lies. "Their guest of that night had seen all this, and he had seen it not from the street corner, but from the heart of the head centre of daily knowledge and daily experience. For the last half-century Fleet Street had been the main thoroughfare of all that the world had been doing and seeing, and John LeSage had seen the dynasties of the world rise and fall, but he had not seen them all fail."

"He certainly would not say of him as had been said of Charles Grey, 'For Fifty Years he listened at the door, and heard some secrets and invented more.' There had been few secrets LeSage had not heard, but he never told them. He would say as none he ever invented. He would say what they all knew to be true. The British public hates lies, and lies do not pay."

In the world of change there were few things that had changed more than the newspaper press itself. LeSage came into an old office in a Fleet Street that had a great deal more of the Johnsonian aspect than we saw in the storied grandeur of today. He joined the staff just eight years after the paper had been founded, and after it had passed with its three months of irritable trouble into possession of his (Mr. Lawson's) family. The taxes on knowledge, with the removal of which his father was intimately connected before the scenes, had only recently been repealed.

Reporting Cobden. "Mr. LeSage reported the last speech Richard Cobden ever made. He was sent down to Brockley Park to find out whether it was true that Lord Palmerston was dead. The footman denied him admittance. But what he saw convinced him—and he was generally pretty right when he jumped to a conclusion—(laughter and cheers) that the report was true, and he came back in a cab to London to tell the editor. There was not a bill in the street. Not a thing was known, and yet the Prime Minister of England had been dead for five hours. One hundred in vain for a 'scoop' pike that today. Now that the evening papers came to us at the breakfast table, and never ceased worrying us until midnight, he was afraid such a chance was not likely to be repeated."

Reporting Palmerston. "But, after all, it was of LeSage's work inside, and not outside, the office that they thought most, and he was bound to say that in the office, ever since he (Mr. Lawson) had known it, LeSage had been the predominant and preponderating influence. And the first and greatest quality that had characterized him throughout had been a sublime sense that amounted to genius."

Mr. LeSage, in his speech, gave interesting reminiscences of his journalistic career.

"The conditions of work were quite different when I joined the staff. There was no telegraphing in those days. At the General Election of 1865, when speeches were still being delivered on the hustings and the figures of the poll were declared every half-hour, I was sent to Tiverton to report a speech of Lord Palmerston. I called on his lordship the evening before he spoke, and he asked me what was the state of his poll in London when I left. He was particularly interested in Westminster, where Mr. W. H. Smith, John Stuart Mill, and I think, Captain Grosvenor were the candidates. Lord Palmerston asked me how I was going back to London when he had made his speech, and I told him the time of the train. He said: 'Well, have your luggage sent to the station, stand in front of the hustings, and tell me how many minutes I have left, and you will catch your train.' I wrote the speech in the train, and it appeared the following morning."

The Germans in Paris. Mr. LeSage narrated a personal reminiscence of how he got the news of the entry of the Germans in Paris through the Daily Telegraph in London. There was only one train a day running out of Paris at noon, and getting to Calais about midnight. "I was directed," he said "to see the chairman of the Northern Railway, Baron Alphonse de Rothschild. He was very polite, but told me he had just arranged with William Russell that the Times should have a special train to Calais, leaving at three o'clock. Then they were having a special boat across, and a special train to London. But that was not what was wanted."

"I asked Baron de Rothschild if he would give me at four o'clock a special train to Lille. That had not occurred to him. He said, 'Yes, I advised London what I was doing, and if you turn to the files you will see there was a special edition, and that in the leader taken for the fact that the Daily Telegraph was the first paper that had that very important news of the day.'"

Lord Burnham and Stanley. The reminiscence which followed was an "illustration of Lord Burnham's lightning-like rapidity of decision." When Stanley came home after finding Livingstone, the Daily Telegraph sent Mr. LeSage to meet him at Marseilles to write all I could about his mission. Stanley and I became rather good friends. Some time afterward he came into the office. I asked him—I do not know why—what was the next big thing he would like to undertake. He gave me the idea of a great expedition of exploration and discovery in Central Africa. At that time, remember, Central Africa was the Dark Continent. "Lord Burnham decided to send Stanley on that famous expedition in three minutes. He asked Stanley if he would do it, and what it would cost roughly, and Stanley told him so many thousands—£15,000 to £20,000 short of what it did cost. Mr. Sidney Low, in the "Dictionary of National Biography," says his expedition was probably the best equipped which has ever accompanied by a white traveller into the interior of Africa."

Why Lord Derby Resigned. Cabinet ministers have on various occasions heard news of capital importance of which they had been entirely unaware through an enterprising press. Mr. LeSage, on one occasion, took a foreign minister from the news which led him to resign from the cabinet. It was a little secret history of which he hazarded, even the "greatest foreign correspondent of this age," Dr. Dillon, who sat two or three seats away, had not previously heard. Then came the story of the speaker's own connection with the matter. "It was the first time," said Lord Derby, that Lord Beaconsfield had ordered the British Fleet to enter the Dardanelles. I was at the office, and a telegram came in about it. I saw its importance, and at once drove to the Foreign Secretary's house. He was out of town, but I proceeded after him, and Lord Derby received me. I told him of the telegram which had been received, and asked him if he would kindly say whether it was correct or not."

"He took the telegram and walked up and down the room. Then he turned to me and said, 'I know nothing whatever about it, I have not heard of such a thing. I really cannot say any more. The order had been given by the Earl of Beaconsfield, and the telegram from Constantinople was the first intimation Lord Derby had. Upon that he resigned.'"

I want to hear picket gates clicking. As the young men come over to call. And the deep and monotonous ticking. Of the grandfather clock in the hall. To harken to the laughter and singing. That comes on the breezes awhirl. And the creak of the hammocks all swinging. And me on the porch with a Girl!

And the leaves would be whispering lowly. And the flowers would perfume the air. And the night would grow quieter slowly. And—gee, but I wish I was there; I s'pose I'd get nothing but blame from The folks in the city's mad swirl. But I want to go back where I came from And sit on the porch with a Girl!

ALIKE AFTER ALL.

"Please explain yourself," said she, looking up at him with her large bright eyes. "It is simply this," he continued, "according to science, which is the only way to approach the subject, you see, you are light and I am dark. You

He was out of town, but I proceeded after him, and Lord Derby received me. I told him of the telegram which had been received, and asked him if he would kindly say whether it was correct or not."

"He took the telegram and walked up and down the room. Then he turned to me and said, 'I know nothing whatever about it, I have not heard of such a thing. I really cannot say any more. The order had been given by the Earl of Beaconsfield, and the telegram from Constantinople was the first intimation Lord Derby had. Upon that he resigned.'"

I want to hear picket gates clicking. As the young men come over to call. And the deep and monotonous ticking. Of the grandfather clock in the hall. To harken to the laughter and singing. That comes on the breezes awhirl. And the creak of the hammocks all swinging. And me on the porch with a Girl!

And the leaves would be whispering lowly. And the flowers would perfume the air. And the night would grow quieter slowly. And—gee, but I wish I was there; I s'pose I'd get nothing but blame from The folks in the city's mad swirl. But I want to go back where I came from And sit on the porch with a Girl!

ALIKE AFTER ALL.

"Please explain yourself," said she, looking up at him with her large bright eyes. "It is simply this," he continued, "according to science, which is the only way to approach the subject, you see, you are light and I am dark. You
