mercial Buildings Burned to the Ground--A Fireman Killed by ceive Bad Injuries.

TORONTO, Jan. 7.—One of the most dissatrous confiagrations which have occurred in this city took place yesterday morning when the large building occupied by the Globe newspaper, on the corner of Yonge and Melinda streets, together with
N. Rooney's drygoods house adjoining,
Harry Webb's resturant, on the opposite corner, S. F. McKinnon & Co.'s new building, on the corner of Jordon and Melinda, were almost totally destroyed and several other buildings badly gutted. One fireman lost his life fighting the flames and six others received serious in juries.

The unfortunate fireman was Robert Bowery, aged 24, who resided at 264 Parlia-TORONTO, Jan. 7 .- One of the most dis

Chief Ardagh received a bad gash in the forehead, besides injuries to his back.

injuries to his hand.

The fire broke out in the boiler room in the basement of the Globe building, and quickly spread. It was first discovered about 3 o'clock by the nightwatchman, who, on going to the boiler room, was confronted by the flames. He lost no time in giving the slarm. The central section of the fire department was hurriedly on the scene but so great was the headway made by the flames, that a general alarm was at once sounded, and soon the whole department of the city was at work upon the burning building.

An attempt was made to reach the top stories of the building with the hose, and the large Ariel truck belonging to the city was placed in Melinda street. Firemen attempted to ascend the ladder, which reached the top of the building, but so flerce and hot were the flames that they were driven back and the attempt had to be abandoned.

On Jordan street next to the Globe building stands the building of Brough & Caswell, printers. Chief Ardagh and a number of firemen had taken up their position in the office of the firm when the south wall of the Globe building fell upon the roof, crashing through. It was here that Chief Ardagh received his injuries. He was at once taken to his home in a carriage. Smedley, Forsyth, Saunders and Davidson were dashed down the elevator shaft and were seriously injured. This building was totally destroyed.

A southwest wind was blowing at the time and the flames were carried across Melinda street to the lunch rooms of Harry Webb. These rooms which have almost a provincial reputation, were badly destroyed. The roof and upper storeys were completely burned, but the great damage was caused by water, the building being thoroughly soaked.

Adjoining the Globe to the south was the wholesale clothing house belonging to Nicholas Rooney. This building is a complete wreck.

From the west end of the Globe building the fire was communicated across Jordan street to the large new building and S. F. McKinnon & Co., on the southeast corner of Jordan and Melinda streets.

The losses and insurance on the property destroyed are:—Globe printing and publishing Co., loss on building, $80,000; plant, $50,000; library files, etc., $10,000. A Valuable Witness for the Defence in the Hendershott Case.

St. Thomas, Ont., Jan. 5.—The preliminary hearing of the Hendershott murder case commenced here in the city hall before Police Magistrate White and Justices of the Peace, Frank Hunt, Daniel Turner and Dugald Ferguson. The crowd was so great that the magistrates could not secure order and the hall was cleared. The afternoon was taken up with the evidence of two daughters of prisoner Hendershott. The younger daughter testified at the inquest that she retired very early on the night before the tragedy, but she said that she was in this city that night and that her father, Welter and the deceased came to the city in the morning and that her father drove on to Sparta and Welter and W. Hendershott returned home about noon. She and Welter came to the city about six o'clock in the evening and met her father here and drove home. Trial adjourned until to-day.

His memory has not improved since the inquest and nearly every answer was prefixed by "I don't remember," or "As near as I can remember." The only new matter elicited from him was that he had seen a branch cut from the fallen tree at John Hendershott's: on one end was what looked like a bundle of hairs. This branch had been cut in two and witness placed the pieces for safe keeping in a room in John Hendershott's. He afterwards informed his solicitor, Mr. McDonald, of the find. "He looks very ill," Edith said; "what is the matter with him?"
"Heart disease—brought on by mental suffering. No words can tell what he has undergone since his most miserable wedding-day. It is known only to Heaven and himself, but it has taken his life. As surely as ever human heart broke, his broke on the day he left you. And you, my poor child—you have suffered too."
"Of that we will not speak," the girl answered proudly; "what is done, is done. For me, I hope the worst is over—I am safe and well, and in good health as you see. I am glad Sir Victor Catheron had not met his death in my service. I have only one wish regarding him, and that is that he will keep away from me. And now, Lady Lelena. before it grows any later, I will go home."
"Go home! At this hour? Most certainly you will not. You will remain here all night. Oh. Edith, you anust indeed. A room has been prepared for you, adjoining mine. Inez and Jamison with Victor until morning, and—you ought to see him before you go."

Victor Catheron?"
Cold and calm the formal words fell.
"Edith!"
His answer was a cry—a cry wrung from a soul full of love and anguish untold. It struck home, even to her h-art, steeled against him and all feeling of prty.
"I am sorry to see you so ill. I am glad your accident is no worse." Again she spoke, stiff, formal, commonplace words, that sounded horribly out of place, even to herself.
"Edith." he repeated, and again no words can tell the pathos, the despair of that cry, "forgive me—have pity on me. You hate me, and I descrive your hate, but oh! ifyou knew, even you would have mercy and relent?"
He touched her in spite of herself. Even a heart of stone might have softened at the sound of that despairing, heartwrung voice—at the sight of that death like, tortured face. And Edith's, whatever she might say or think, was not a heart of stone. "Id op pity you," she said very gently; "I do pity you," she said very gently in the said the pathon of the man she had artical to eat and drink. But the food seemed to choke her. "He looks very till," Edith said; "what is the matter with him?"
"Heart disease—brought on by mental suffering. No words can tell what he has undergone since his most miserable wedding-day. It is known only to Heaven and himself, but it has taken his life. As surely as ever human heart broke, his broke on the day he left you. And you, my poor child—you have suffered too."
"Of that we will not speak," the girl answered proudly; "what is done, is done. For me, I hope the worst is over—I am safe and well, and in good health as you see. I am glad Sir Victor Catheron had not met his death in my service. I have only one wish regarding him, and that is that he will keep away from me. And now, Lady Lolena before it grows any later, I will go home."
"Go home! At this hour! Most certainly you will not. You will remain here all night. Oh. Edith, you must indeed. A room has been prepared for you, adjoining mine. Inez and Jamison with Victor until morning, and—you ought to see him before you go."
She shrank in a sort of horror.

Edith went back to the work-room in Onford Street, to the old treadmill life of ceaseless sewing, and once more, a bull greeding the last-ending of this strange mystery that had wrecked two lives A hundred times a day that pallid, tortured face, rose before her, that last agonized cry of a strong heart in strong agony rang in her ears. All her hatred, all her revengeful thoughts in were gone—she understood him no better than before, but she pitted him from the depths of her heart.

They disturbed her no more, neither by letters or visits. Only as the weeks went by she noticed this—that as surely as evening came, a shadowy figure hovering aloof, followed her home. She knew who it was —at first see felt inclined to resent it, but as he never came near, never spoke, only followed her from that as afed distance, she grew reconciled and accustomed to it at last. CHAPTER XXV.

Once or twice she caught a fleeting glimpse of his face on these occasions.

What a corpse-like face it was—how utterly weak and worn-out he seemed—more fitted for a sick-bed than the role of a protector.

July—August passed—the middle of September came. All this time, whatever the weather, she never once missed her "shadow" from his post. As we grow accustomed to all things, she grew accustomed to this watchful care, grew to look for him when the day's work was done. But in the middle of September she missed him. Evening after evening came, and she returned home unfollowed and alone. Some thing had happened.

tweethouse unfollowed and alone. Some thing had happened.
Yes, something had happened. He had never really held up his head after that second parting with Edith, For days he had lain prostrate, so near to death that they thought death must surely come. But by the end of a week he, was betteras much better at least as he would be in this world.
But Nature, defied long, claimed her penalty at last. There came a day when Sir Victor could rise from his bed no more, when the heart spasms, in their anguish, grew even more than his resolute will could bear. A day when in dire alarm Lady Helena and Inez were once more summoned by faithful Jamison, and when at last—at last the infallible German doctor was sent for.

summoned by faithful Jamison, and when at last—at last the infallible German doctor was sent for.

The interview between physician and patient was long and strictly private. When Herr Von Werter went away at last his phlegmatic Teuton face was set with an unwouted expression of pity and pain. After an interval of almost unendurable suspense, Lady Helena was sent for by her nephew to be told the result. He lay upon a low sofa, wheeled near the window. The last light of the September day streamed in and fell full upon his face—perhaps that was what glorified it and gave it such a radiant look. A faint smile lingered on his lips, his eyes had a far-off, dreamy look, and were fixed on the rosy evening sky. A strange, unearthly, exalted look altogether, that made his aunt's heart sink like stone.

"Well?" She said it in a tense sort of whisper, longing for, yet dreading the reply. He turned to her, that smile still on his lips, still in his eyes. He had not looked so well for months. He took her hand.

"Aunt" he said. "you have heard of

"You have suffered," he said, tendarly looking at her. "I thought to shield you from every case, to make your life one long deam of plasaure and happineas, and she happineas, and happineas, and the happineas, and with happineas, and the happineas, and happ

An hour later, when Lady Helena softly opened the door and came in, she found them still so, his weak head resting in her arms as she knelt, her bowed face hidden, her fallen tears hardly yet dried. One look into his radiant eyes, into the unspeakable joy and peace of his face, told her the story. All had been revealed, all had been forgiven. On the anniversary of their most method wedding-day husband and wife were reunited at last.

There was no need of words. She stooped over and silently kissed both.

"It is growing late, Edith," she said, gently, "and you must be tired after your journey. You will go up to your room now. I will watch with Victor to-night."

But Edith only drew him closer, and looked up with dark, imploring eyes.

"No," she said, "no, no! I will never leave him again. I am not in the least tired, Lady Helena; I will stay and share your watch."

"But, my dear—"

From the Coaticook, Que., Observer.

The readers of the Observer have become familiar with the remarkable cures effected by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People through their recital in these columns, as taken from other reputable newspapers. It is now our purpose to tell them of a cure, hardly short of miraculous, which was effected on a person with whom many of our readers are acquainted. We refer to Mr. Eli Joyce, formerly of Dixville, but now living at Averil, Vt. A few days ago we saw Mr. Joyce and asked him about his recovery. He stated that for four or five years he had been afflicted with rheumatism and dyspepsia He was laid up and unable to do anything on an average four months in a year, and was constantly growing worse, although treated by good phyworse, although treated by good physicians and trying numerous remedies recommended. A year ago last Aug ust he was taken seriously ill while his sister's Mrs. Dolloff of Dixville He could not retain anything on his stomach and the physicians who at-tended him were powerless in improving his condition. One of them stated that he had cancer of the stom ach and could not live long. It was while in this precarious condition that he determined to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and before long was able to retain food on his st mach. His pain gradually became less and in six weeks time he was back to his home in Averil, feeling that he had obtained a new losse of life. He continued taking the Pink Pills for some time longer and gained so much in health and strength that he is now able to do the hardest kind of a day's work, and he frankly gives Dr. Williams' Pink Pills all the credit for his rejuvenated condition, and says he believes their timely use saved his life. The Observer has verified his story through several of his neighbors, who say that it was thought that he was at the point of death when he began the use of Pink Pills; in fact when we men-tioned his case to one of the doctors who had attended him he said he sup posed he was dead long ago. When such strong tributes as these can be had to the wonderful merit of Pink Pills it is little wonder that their sales reach such enormous proportions, and that they are the favorite remedy with a l classes. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the They are an unfailing specific for locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after heart, nervous prostration, all diseases depending upon vitiated humors in the blood, such as scrofula, chronic ery sipelas, etc. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such

The best newspapers now furnish this kind of information. And very truly this holds good in regard to this reptile, which is classed among the vipers, and of the vipers it is said: "They have but one fang"

The accompanying drawing is from life, or, rather from death, of a good sized rattler, carefully dissected. The reptile was nearly four feet long, had thirteen rattles, and when opened was found to have dined not long before on three young rabbits, which were lying anugly in its very long stomach, lengthwise, one after the other, as they were swallowed. The tail at the junction of the rattles is formed of a bundle of fibres much like those of a tarred rope, one-third of an inch in diameter, twisted in the same manner, and crossed, so as to give a great force to the end of the tail, on which the loose rattles are arranged.

FICKLE FASHION DICTATES SOME CHANGES IN MEN'S GARMENTS.

Correct Dress for the Sterner Sex-Winte Shapes and Shades—How a Man of Fashion Should Look According to Prevailing

To be properly dressed is oftentimes an open letter of recommendation, or, as Po-lonius puts it to his son Laertes, who is about to leave Denmark for fashionable about to leave Denmark for instinuousle. Paris, "the apparel oft proclaims the man." As the society gentleman always wants to be proclaimed the correct sort of a man, he feels as strongly as his sister does that "to be out of the fashion is to be out of the world;" therefore, he is auxious to wear the correct thing in the correct correct clothing—remains with man through the passing generations. Its form may change from season to season, but its identity as a "stovepipe" ever remains.

Fashion, seated in London, has reached out her hand and laid it heavily on the high hats of the men of the west. The effect of this laying on of the hand of fashion has been to press the hat a shade lower, and in the process to broaden the top, making it more bell shaped than before, and at the same time more material is crowded into the brim, making it heavier and at the same time much more rolling. So the correct high hat is not quite so high as last winter, more bell shaped, with a heavier and more rolling rim.

The popular derby, that happy compromise between the high hat and the low cap, yet remains in favor. It is the hat dear to the business man, and he clings to it. It, like its more aristocratic brother clothed in silk, has now a fuller crown and a quite heavy rolled brim. Its prevailing color remains black, though the seal brown species is found in all of the fashionable stores, and is meeting with considerable favor at the hands and heads of the more favor at the hands and heads of the more dressy young men.

The windy, rainy and snowy days of the coming winter will see our men wearing many soft, warm and comfortable caps on the streets. The caps are principally of Scotch tweed of light color. The most popular of these is the "golf," which has an extremely low and full crown that nearly covers the vizor. This cap has been made popular by the game in which it is usually worn.

NECKWEAR FOR AFTERNOON AND EVENING

NECKWEAR FOR AFTERNOON AND EVENING.
A cap somewhat similar to the "golf" is the "hookover," which is still in vogue.
It is named from the fact of its having the low crown brought forward and hooked to the upper surface of the vizor.
The tourist's hat of the Alpine variety,
that military looking soft hat with a crease through the centre of the crown, is also worn with business and outing dress.
Beside this goes the "negligee," a soft, low, feather weight hat that is extremely popular. Then the "opera" or "crush" popular. Then the "opera" or "crush" hat, made of rib silk or merino, holds a firm place in the position for which it is ntended. Not only high, but higher collars

Not only high, but higher collars are worn by those who want to be at the height of fashion, Suffering short necked humanity, that has envied by the giraffe, has considered them high enough for the past two years, but now their uncomfortable stiffness has crawled yet higher. The popular height is two and three-quarter neches, but the extreme reaches the altitude of three inches. Think of it! And then—shades of our grandfathers!—a stock tie is to be worn around this—a long, straight tie that is to go twice around the neck, and be tied in a bow in front. Speaking of ties, the "four-in-hand," the "Teck" and the "Imperial" yet remain in oppular favor, and will all be worn the Speaking of ties, the "four-in-hand," the "Teck" and the "Imperial" yet remain in oppular favor, and will all be worn the soming winter, but all with a noticeable shange in form. They are all to be tied in a much smaller knot at the throat, and the flowing ends are broader. The neat "string" and "club" ties will be worn in increased numbers.

The prevailing red color of last winter remains in neckwear, with an increased number of shades. The plaids are also seen in great quantities in the predominating red, with small black stripes. Neckties in gray—plain and in plaids—and other light colors, are also seen on the counters of the fashionable haberdashers. In fact, these grays promise to take the place of the reds in popular favor.

This popular grays is to be found prevailing at the glove counters—and undressed kid of that color is the proper thing to wear. These are now vying with the dark red.

Neither the red nor gray has to any extent made inroads in the color of gentlemen's hose, but the solemn black is yet adhered to.

That broad, conspicuous white shirt front that asserts itself so prominently in the opening of the broad, gaping vest and parted coat front has now departed more than every from the showy ruffles of our grandfathers and has assumed the severe

Fashion pierces the outer clothing and dictates the color of the undergarment, and now fixes blue as the proper hue. Not bright blue, but a light shade that almost borders on the gray, and which seems to be borrowing its popularity from the gray of the neckwear and gloves.

all the coats make a display of ampamaterial.

A very popular topcoat is the "Inverness," a long, comfortable garment with an ample cape. This is worn with ful dress, and at operas and entertainments public and private, where evening costumis seen. This coat will be very conspict outs for the next four months on the street during the evening and about theatre lobbies before and after the performances. vicious looking pointed shoe is now the proper thing to wear.

For dress purposes the elegant patent leather yet holds undisputed sway, and is properly of the congress gaiter pattern with silk tops, yet the revival of an old fashion is introducing the low, thin soled "pump," which is claiming an equal footing with the silk topped gaiter.

For street wear the heavy patent leather is used, as heretofore, and with it is found a strong rival, the enamelled leather, which, with its double cork lined sole, is a most comfortable winter foot covering. With these is to be seen the "russet,' which promises to be more of a winter shoe than heretofore, but will not be worn by the ultra fashionable men.

by the ultra fashionable men.
Street shoes should be laced. And when Street shoes should be laced. And when buttoned shoes are worn they are fastened with the "Columbian" button, which is quite large, and five of them make a complement for a shoe.

Thus the fashionable man should dress from top to toe, to be in the swim of fashion, that carries many on its ever moving, constantly changing current, which, to a greater or less degree, moves every man in the matter of his apparel.
