THE Canadian newspaper paper manufacturers are certainly a loyal bunch of people when the government has to step in and compel them to supply Canadian publishers. Canada is producing 2,775 tons of newspaper per day. The timber limits and water powers used in that production belong, for the most part, to the people of Canada, and are leased at low rates to the newspaper manufacturers. Surely Canada is justified in insisting that the reasonable domestic requirements, amounting to less than 15 per cent of the production shall be supplied.

It will be everyone's privilege on Monday evening to help alleviate, even if only in a small way, the terrible sufferings of these courageous and down-trodden people. Let one and all show their sympathy on Monday evening by coming to the concert and swelling the contribution to this worthy fund.

KNOX CHURCH GOLDEN JUBILEE

Large and interested audiences gathered at the Golden Jubilee services, of Knox Presbyterian Church, Warwick, held on Sunday and Monday, Jan. 5th and 6th, and also on Sunday, Jan. 12th. The weather was all that could be desired and the sleighing excellent. Loyal friends of the church came from far and near and a number who were at the opening of the church fifty years ago were present.

Rev. Hugh Cameron, B. A., who retains much of his old-time vigour preached in the morning from Eph. 2:19, 20, eloquently exalting the privilege of dignity of those who are stones in the living temple. Dr. Haddow, with the clear voice familiar to so many at the evening service, preached very forcefully from the text "Thy Kingdom Come." It was a great delight at the close of the service, for many in the congregation to shake hands once more with these former and well-beloved pastors.

At the entertainment Monday evening greetings were gratefully listened to from the former ministers, Mr. Shores, Mr. Savers, Mr. Burton and Mr. Rayner. The addresses by Dr. Haddow and Rev. Mr. Cameron were greatly enjoyed by all.

An interesting feature of the evening was the reading by Miss Lillian Ross of a historical sketch of the congregation in connection with the building of the church when the Rev. Wm. Dees from Scotland ministered to the Presbyterian people in Adelaide and Warwick townships preaching fortnightly in each place.

In Warwick he held services at two points—in the Presbyterian Church then situated on the north side of the street near Ford and at the Congregational chapel on the hill, west of the present Knox Church where the Congregational minister, affectionately remembered as "Uncle Joe Little" preached every Sunday. It was interesting to hear the names of those who comprised the building committee fifty years ago, namely, Messrs. John McElroy, William Auld, T. D. Lee, David M. Ross, James Baird, William McKenzie, James Brandon, Robert Auld, Adam Baird, Robert McLeay, James Thompson and John Ross and also the names of many others whom we cannot mention here, who by the united efforts in the congregation's work during the long years of service for the Master.

This historical sketch has been published in the form of a booklet, which contains photographs of many of the ministers and officials. It is rather phenomenal that all but two of the former ministers, Rev. Wm. Dees and Rev. E. H. Baird, are still living, their names in order being: Revs. Dr. Abraham, P. C. Goldie, Hugh Cameron, J. H. Graham and E. B. Horne.

Miss Jean Walker, elocutionist of London, added greatly to the enjoyment of the evening by her excellent selection.

Last Sunday afternoon Rev. E. H. Savers conducted the concluding jubilee service and preached a most appropriate and helpful sermon from the text, "Come thou with us and we will do thee good."

Special thanks are due to Mr. Leonard, Rev. H. T. Crossley's colleague for his splendid solos at two of the services.

The Lesson of Revolution

THE time is approaching when the world must do some constructive thinking. It is quite true that a small, a very small minority is already engaged in this. That has always been so, but the trouble is that a minority cannot really think for a majority, even if the majority elects to be thought for by the minority. As it is, a large percentage of the world is thinking anarchically, on the broad basis that history has shown reformation to be impracticable, unless preceded by a destructive wave sufficiently overwhelming to render fundamental rebuilding a necessity; whilst opposed to this are those who would concentrate the force of nations on the destruction of the destroyers, rather than checkmate them by means of a great reconstruction program.

Now reconstruction on the Phoenix plan has never been successful except in the solitary instance of the phoenix. That mythological bird has, in other words, failed to acquaint its imitators with the secret of the process. Quite a number of adventurers have discovered this in the past, and the latest of the disillusioned is apparently Nicholas Lenin. The Bolshevik Government in Russia, that is to say, has not merely put on all its brakes, it has reversed its engines. The Red Terror is now excused as a necessity of the hour; a little while ago anyone who denounced it was denounced, in turn, as a slanderous reactionary. Evidence, however, is not disposed of by the simple process of denial, and so the world is faced by the apologetic gamut of an earlier Jacobinism.

The question, then, which arises, and it has something more than a mere speculative interest attached to it, is, will Lenin be able to maintain himself where Robespierre failed? Certainly he is intellectually far more adaptable, and he is cumbered, in Trotzky, with no academic revolutionary like Saint-Just; indeed, so much greater is his influence, than that of Trotzky, that he may almost be said to be playing a lone hand. Besides, he has one enormous advantage over the men of '93. It is this, that the Bolshevik leaders are practically without competitors in the great process of reconstruction, and they have taken advantage of this completely to change their policy. Disraeli's famous simile of the Whigs and their clothes might be applied to them with duplicated force and with refined irony. As they walk about Moscow to-day they are arrayed in all the political habiliments of the Mensheviks. They are yearning to strain the once despised peasant to their bosoms, whilst the bourgeois organizer finds the right hand of fellowship extended to him, with a flattering salary grasped in its palm. Strangest of all, here, in the Ultima Thule of Communism, they have revived private industrial enterprise.

Here, then, is an economic Daniel come to judgment, and the shipwrights of Clydebank and the miners of Pennsylvania, no less than Threadneedle Street and Wall Street, will do well to take notice of the portent. The difference between the French Revolution and the Revolution in Russia is essentially this, that the one began and ended in politics, whilst the other grasped in its palm the economic. For Napoleon to establish the First Empire was, for this reason, comparatively easy; in a way, he buttressed the movement for a return to law and order for which the nation was craving, after the horrors of the orery of the guillotine. But, to-day, to return to the Tsardom would be to take away the land from the peasants, and the factories from the operatives; and a nation of peasants and operatives will never listen to the wiles of a Koitchak, not even though he were a Napoleonic one. That is why the revolution of 1789 could be partially reversed; and that is why the revolution in Russia stands in spite and not by reason of the Red Terror.

This does not justify the Red Terror, it does not palliate one of the crimes of Lenin, but it does explain the failure of Judenitch and of Koitchak, and the growing failure of Denikin.

Now all of this contains a lesson which the Western world would be well advised to learn, and it is this, that the anarchist is only dangerous when you play into his hands. What was wrong with the policy of the Allies in Russia was simply that it was calculated to produce the maximum of irritation with the minimum of effect. They might have intervened in force and suppressed the Bolsheviks, which would have been easy, though troublesome and very expensive, or they might have kept their hands off, and left the anti-Bolshevik elements to work out the problem. As it was, they intervened in insufficient strength to accomplish anything definite, but with a sufficiency of interference to consolidate the Bolshevik resistance.

This would be bad enough if it stopped at the Russian frontier, but indications are not lacking that the same chaotic thinking is being applied to the solution of the economic

MOUSEH CHAIRS. It would be to be avoided governments must make up their minds to a definite economic policy, and not be content to drift from one panacea to another. There is in them the real danger of revolutionary propaganda. But if the governments, while insisting sternly on obedience to law, will adopt broad measures of reform, the revolutionary will find himself entirely impotent. Lesson of revolution.—Christian Science Monitor.

NEW MINISTER TO PEKING.

Has Worked Through All the Grades of the Foreign Office.
 Mr. Belby Francis Alston, the new British Minister at Peking, certainly deserves the job. He has been in the running for years and is understood to have wanted the post very badly. Criticisms have always varied about him, but the middle view seems to be the correct one, namely, that he will be a good, useful, diplomatic representative, without being in any way brilliant.

His early upbringing was all in his favor, since his father was Sir Francis Alston, one of the lights of the Victorian Foreign Office. His education was mainly abroad, where he was trained for the Foreign Office in which he has worked through all the grades, beginning in 1890. His chief posts have been at Copenhagen, Buenos Ayres and Peking, of which he became the councillor of legation in 1911-12 and charge d'affaires in 1913. Even in those days people talked about him as a certain minister of the future.

Mr. Alston's utility to the Foreign Office has not lain in the permanency of his occupation of diplomatic posts. He is the diplomatic tourist. Whenever there was a mission going or a conference being held Mr. Alston was always approached. He was present at a conference on copyright in Paris (1896), at three sugar conferences at Brussels, and was sent with Prince and Princess Alexander of Teck to the coronation of the King of Siam at Bangkok in December, 1911. Whenever foreign diplomatic representatives came here it was a matter of certainty that Mr. Alston would be attached to them. He specialized in this sort of attachment to distinguished Chinese visitors to Great Britain who came either on a mission or some royal function such as a coronation. This explains why he has the Grand Cross of the Order of the White Elephant.

These who say that Mr. Alston has never "set the Thames on fire" perhaps not, but he will make few or no mistakes. For years when he was at the Foreign Office he was at the head of the Far Eastern section, or attached to it, and used to receive many a man who came to inquire into his affairs of the day affecting the Far East. For years Mr. Alston used to receive a beautiful, though perhaps they went away thinking they had not learned much. His critics might say that Mr. Alston had not much to tell them, but anyway, his visitors were pleased, and he had no enemies. Otherwise he is not specially distinguished; he is, in fact, the businesslike type of diplomatist, and the Government at home will be able to rely on him. He will never get the Foreign Office into trouble, and it is something for the Foreign Office to be able to count so confidently on one of the young men whom it has trained. His tendencies are not particularly literary, but he does endeavor to study oriental matters, and it is his knowledge of these that has sent him to the Far East rather than his knowledge of Orientals.

Famous Parasol.
 It was not until the 18th century that the parasol became distinctly an article of feminine costume. Large and elaborate parasols have from time immemorial been a mark of honor and official dignity in the Orient. In India, in 1877, when the then Prince of Wales made his famous tour, he was compelled, that he might properly impress the natives, to ride upon an elephant and have over his head a parasol with a frame of gold, and with covering stitched with precious jewels.

$100 REWARD, $100
 The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and this is catarrh. Catarrh being greatly influenced by constitutional conditions requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Medicine is taken internally and acts through the Blood on the Mucous Surfaces of the System, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in the curative powers of Hall's Catarrh Medicine that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

SCIENCE INDEBTED TO ARAB.

Schools of Medicine Established Under Caliphs.
 The origin of the Arab race is a matter of conjecture, but the Arabs were a united political body with a king of their own long before the Christian era, wrote Frederick Simplicin in the National Geographic Magazine. Just now there are perhaps 10,000,000 Arabs, and for convenience of classification they are usually separated into two divisions—"Al Bedou," or "The Dwellers in the Open Land" (commonly called Bedouins), and "Al Hadr," or "Dwellers in Fixed Localities."

The Bedouins, roaming with their herds all over Arabia and even up into Mesopotamia and Syria, are better known to American missionaries, officials and travellers than the Hadr class. They are nomads from necessity and not from choice, and as the country comes under better rule, roads, trade, and irrigation will undoubtedly reduce the number of Arabs forced to lead this wandering life.

Although Bedouin and Hadr are almost synonymous terms in some parts of Arabia, this is hardly fair to the Bedouins when we consider the way they have to live. When they hold up a Mecca caravan, for example, and exact a sum in cash for "protection," they look on this merely as their rightful share of taxes, habitually collected and kept by border officials. A reform of these desert manners and methods will most probably ensue as a result of the British mandate over Arabia.

Although, nominally a Mohammedan, the average Bedouin is said to worry but little about the Koran's rules or whether his mode of living would please the prophet. The wilder tribes even worship the sun, trees, rocks, etc., or else have no religion at all, it is said. Marriage is early and easy and divorce simple and frequent.

About 80 per cent. of all Arabs live in towns, villages, or other fixed places of abode and belong to the "Hadri" class. In this group is found the aristocracy of Arabia. Here are old, reputable families, with records of births, deaths and marriages, deeds and honors, running back through generations.

Perhaps the most noted family in modern Arabia is the house of Korcysb, tracing its connections back to the prophet. The men of this family bear the title of Shereef or Seyd; and it was the Shereef of Mecca who led Arabia's break for statehood.

Education, however, as we regard it in America, is almost unknown among Arabians. The few with cultural and scientific attainments. Most learning is confined to the classics of religious and secular literature; the Koran is learned by rote. In the smaller towns there are no schools at all.

Yet it was Arab learning and skill, in the long ago, which started the civilized world on the way to its present high efficiency. Under the Caliphs, schools of therapeutics were set up at Bagdad, and botany was studied as a branch of medicine. As one writer says, "the principal mercurial and arsenical preparations of the materia medica, the sulphates of several metals, the properties of acids and alkalis, and the distillation of alcohol were, with their practical application, known to Er-Razi and Geber, professors of Bagdad. In fact, the numerous terms borrowed from the Arabic language—alcohol, alkali, alembic and others—with the signs of drugs and the like still in use among modern apothecaries, show how deeply science is indebted to Arab research."

All of which leads the Christian world to believe that the Arab people, as a nation, can "come back."

The Stronger Sex.
 The United States Census Bureau has taken the trouble to enquire into the subject of longevity and has reached the conclusion that the age of 106 is possible for a human being, but that no man or woman has ever seen his or her 107th birthday, all stories to the contrary notwithstanding.

In point of longevity women are far ahead of men, generally speaking. They are more resistant to diseases and they live longer.

Out of 1,000 girls born into the world, 750 live to reach the marriageable age of 18. Out of 1,000 boys, only 700 survive that long—an excess of 50 male deaths. Of the boys, 250 will have to be 69 years old, but 250 of the girls will safely pass their 72nd birthday.

Five boys (nearly) die for every four girls in the first month of life. Out of 1,000 males born during the past year, half will be dead in 1971. Out of 1,000 female babies born in 1918, half will be living in 1976.

And yet women are called the "weaker sex." So they are, muscularly, but it is manifest that they are the stronger sex constitutionally. They possess what biologists term greater "viability"—a superior ability to survive.

Why nature so arranges matters is beyond explaining. Apparently she tries to make up for it to some extent by bringing into the world 1,013 boy babies to every 1,000 girl babies. But it is not enough. So much more hardy are the girl babies that they are actually a majority before the second year of life is reached.

THE UNIVERSAL CAR

and Ford Service

THINK OF IT! Ford Service—which has shown the world what real service is. Service so well organized that when you are touring you are never beyond six or seven miles from a station where you can get Service and Genuine Ford Repairs. The price of these parts is so reasonable that it makes a marked advance in low price,—so low that you can buy the complete car in parts for little over nine hundred dollars.

The New Ford Car, which has been tested and improved for many years, is the lightest weight car in its class on the market. This makes it the most economical car on tires, gas consumption and general upkeep.

It has one-man top, new style windshield, wider and more comfortable seats, deeper and better upholstery, non-skid tires, demountable rims, tire carrier, roller bearings in front hubs and other refinements.

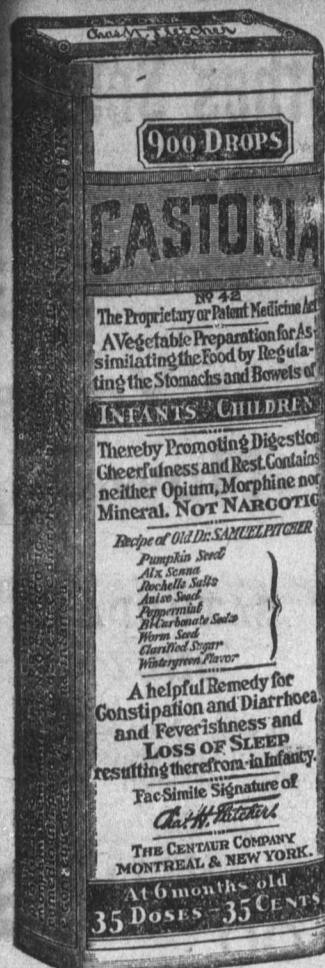

We are taking all of these new cars that the factory will spare us and are finding that our supply will not be sufficient for the demand.

Viscount Jellicoe Looks Mild, But He is Mighty Pays Visit to Dominion

ADMIRAL VISCOUNT JELICOE, the great little British seaman who commanded the British fleet in the Battle of Jutland, arrived in Victoria on the battle-cruiser New Zealand, to pay us a visit.

When the war broke out practically nobody outside the navy had ever heard of Jellicoe. Everybody now could write a nice little essay about his record in the big conflict; but as to Jellicoe, the man, about all the average Canadian knows about him is that he short, clean-shaven and has a peculiar, close-lipped mouth, which he keeps severely shut. Jellicoe has nothing of the look of a popular hero like Beatty and Berrford and "Jacky" Fisher. His appearance suggests that his management of a fleet would be on the lines of efficiency only — no picturesque stunts, simply business done in a businesslike manner. Physically he is the smallest man in the navy, they say, barring the midshipman.

An American newspaperman who saw a good deal of the admiral during the war describes Jellicoe this way: "If he were not an admiral a stranger would think him a rather successful lawyer—the sort of a lawyer who would handle the real estate business for maiden aunts and handle it well. If he were a doctor he would be the kind to which rich and fashionable families would gravitate. He certainly doesn't look the part of 'Hell-Fire Jack,' as he has been called in the British navy. He doesn't talk like either. He doesn't raise his voice no matter what happens. He doesn't swear—or at least he only swears as much as is necessary. He never places emphasis anywhere. But he apparently gets there anyhow. In fact, he's a whale on doing things."

From another pretty good observer we are told: "Jellicoe is English to his heels. His father was a naval officer and the family is of Hampshire stock. The admiral is always cool and serene. Nothing ever furries him. He never bullies anyone, and no one ever tries to bully him. He sways about as if in command of the situation, but at a dinner table or a quarter-deck."

Three times Jellicoe has dodged death by a miracle, and the stories of these escapes throw more light on the little admiral than a couple of columns of character study. Away back in 1880 he was a lieutenant on H. M. S. Monarch near Gibraltar. One day in a heavy storm a Glasgow steamer, the Ettrickdale, was stranded near the Monarch, which had gone out for target practice. All the boats but one small one had been left behind. When volunteers were called to try a rescue of the crew of the wrecked vessel Lieut. Jellicoe was the first to jump forward. With seven seamen in the small boat they struck out. After a desperate struggle their boat went down and they were washed ashore more dead than alive. They had done their best, and they received medals from the British Board of Trade.

On his next narrow shave he lost this medal. This was in 1893, when he was in command of the Victoria, which was sunk by the Campedown during manoeuvres in the Mediterranean. Jellicoe was in his bunk with a sharp attack of fever. When the crash came he staggered on deck in his pyjamas. He stood on the bridge with flags in his hands ready to signal when he was flung into the whirling waves. Too weak to do much for himself, he would have quickly sank but for a midshipman who helped him. Admiral Jellicoe's medal went down, with the rest of his property, and when the Board of Trade was informed of the loss he was told that he could have another medal by paying for it.

Admiral Jellicoe's third brush with death occurred on land when he accompanied Admiral Seymour on his attempt to relieve the Pekin Legations during the Boxer rebellion. Finding themselves in a hopeless position, they decided to retreat to Tientsin. They encountered cavalry, and Captain Jellicoe, as he was then, was shot through the lung while leading his men in attack. But though his wounds were dangerous his grit pulled him through five terrible days before they reach Tientsin.

The private life of Admiral Jellicoe is a happy one. He is married to a very rich woman, the daughter of Sir Charles Gayer, head of the Clan line of steamers.

Justice Along the Jordan.

There is unaccustomed activity along the River Jordan. Experts from the technical department of the government at Cairo are prospecting for coal, oil, and minerals; engineers are making the surveys that foretell the reclamation of waste land by irrigation; and British energy is extending in this historic but long-abandoned region the modernization that began when Jerusalem was taken and the inhabitants as well as the army of occupation immediately supplied with a twentieth century water system that restored and made useful the ancient reservoirs south of Bethlehem. The Jordan valley, as the signs now point, will become a very different place. The river, the most important in Palestine, before the war was regarded as the Sultan's property. No vessel could sail it without his permission, nor could any bridge be built over it, and the permission had been withheld from tourist companies wishing to establish steamboat service. Much of the immediate country was waste land, and still is for that matter, except that now the British engineers have looked at it and said that a system of irrigation canals could use the river and make some 250,000 acres of alluvial soil available for the agriculture of a semi-tropical climate. At the same time the examination of the Dead Sea Basin predicts that here Palestine has a source of natural wealth comparable to the Klondike. Coal, oil, bitumen, and sulphur undoubtedly wait for development; copper was mined there when Byzantium stood on part of the site of Constantinople; marble, porphyry, and other valuable kinds of stone add to the natural wealth, to say nothing of salt and phosphates.

Lawyers In Print.

An article was the other day printed in the Observer of London which may suggest to somebody a reasonably stout little book on the same subject. Lawyers in literature engaged the writer, not as makers of literature but as represented by those who make it. Beginning with the Man of Law in the "Canterbury Tales," a considerable procession of lawyers can be discovered in print; particularly in the work of Dickens, who is credited with having described thirty-five, in addition to two law-stations, two law-writers, and a law-student. Fielding and Smollett each wrote about lawyers; Trollope pictured them; Scott, George Eliot, and Balzac added to the gallery. A largely forgotten book, "Ten Thousand a Year," is referred to as containing pen pictures of a number of lawyers who were once more or less distinguished. Very likely the lawyers who have made literature also would turn out to be a sizable company; and, of course, there are people who insist that a lawyer wrote "Hamlet" and a number of other well-known and lasting plays.

Have you heard about Peps? Peps is a scientific preparation put up in pastille form, which provides an entirely new and effective treatment for coughs, colds, chest and throat troubles.

Peps contain certain medicinal ingredients, which, when placed upon the tongue, immediately turn into vapor, and are breathed down the air passages to the lungs. On their journey, they soothe the inflamed and irritated membranes of the bronchial tubes, the delicate walls of the air passages, and finally enter and carry relief and healing to the lungs.

In a word, while no liquid or solid can get to the lungs and air passages, these Peps fumes get there direct, and at once commence healing.

Grand Duke Nicholas Is Leading Very Quiet Life In a New Home in Italy

AT Sant Margherita in Italy is living Grand Duke Nicholas Nicholavitch, former commander-in-chief of the Russian army, and his brother, Grand Duke Peter, and their wives.

To a correspondent of the Associated Press the grand duchess said: "We desire on our past life, on our experiences, on all we have left, that silence should reign. This is our dearest wish; our most fervent request."

"We have come to Italy," Grand Duke Nicholas said, "in this fairy-like corner of the world, on the beautiful, smiling Gulf of Sant Margherita, seeking only peace and repose for our spirits and our nerves. We have determined not to talk with anybody on past sad events. All the tortures we endured must, for the outside world, be hidden in our own breasts. The only request we make is that our silence and our address be respected."

"For this reason we lead most retired lives in this villa of Spicola, half hidden in the woods," spending part of the day on the delightful shore of the gulf and the remainder with my brother Peter and his wife Miliza, who live nearby at a place known as Due Pini (Two Pines). Our whole life is circumscribed within these narrow limits."

Replying to an inquiry whether they would remain long in Italy, the grand duchess said:

"We have rented this villa until 1920, but between now and then many things may happen to decide us either to prolong or to shorten our stay here."

The Grand Duke and Grand Duchess Nicholas take their meals in their own villa and in the evening generally receive a visit from Grand Duke Peter and his wife. Every day Anastasia either drives with her husband or walks to the nearby village of San Michele, which is celebrated for hand-made lace.

The correspondence of Grand Duke Nicholas is attended to by Baron Steel, who acts both as private secretary and master of ceremonies.

The visit of King Victor Emmanuel with the Russian grand dukes appears to clear up the mystery of the whereabouts of Grand Duke Nicholas Nicholavitch. He has been at one time or another reported dead, in captivity of the Bolsheviks, and living incognito in various places. The last report had him residing on Prinkipo Island in the Sea of Marmora, between Asiatic and European Turkey.

The Lucky Horseshoe.

The superstitious use of horseshoes as emblems of good luck originated about the middle of the seventeenth century. They were at first deemed a protection against witches and evil spirits, and were nailed on doors of houses with the curve uppermost. It was the belief that no witch or evil spirit could enter a house thus guarded. The custom of nailing horseshoes to ships and other sailing craft is still in vogue in many English-speaking countries. To find a horse shoe with an odd number of nails attached to it is considered the forerunner of good luck, and the more nails the greater the good fortune that is likely to attend the finder.

Consolidated Schools

As a part of a thoroughly and radically reorganized education system consolidated rural school must forms prominent part, every boy and every girl in Ontario must be given a citizen-education that will be a good grounding for any and every life-work he or she may make choice of, it matters not what it may be, says the St. Mary's Argus. The only way for the country boy and the country girl to receive this is by means of consolidated rural schools. The log-school and the "little red school house" served their purpose in their day, and served it well, but their day has passed, and it is peremptorily and imperatively necessary to make a change. There must be schools with a number of rooms where the work of grades and subjects can be divided up as in our town schools and high schools now. This is not a case of rivalry between town and country at all. It is simply a means of giving, as nearly as possible, the same educational advantages to all. The consolidated school could teach the elements of Agriculture, but that would not do away with the necessity of multiplying the number of schools where agriculture could be fully taught as well as schools for teaching all other craftsmanships and work that our boys and girls might choose as a life-work. The details and the placing of these consolidated schools would have to be carefully worked out, petty jealousies and narrow local interests would have to be submerged and the good of the whole made the chief end.

It was stated Friday by Hon. R. H. Grant, Minister of Education, that the department was being virtually swamped with inquiries regarding consolidated schools. Four or five letters a day requesting that officials be sent out to explain the act, and how it can be applied to the district are being received by the department. One of the provisions of the act makes it necessary that the district desiring a consolidated school be surveyed by the department before the plan can be consummated. So great has been the demand that the department has not a sufficient staff to meet the needs. Mr. Grant intimated that it would probably be necessary to secure more officials for the work, if it decided to carry out the plan of the former Government of having surveys made.

THE GUIDE-ADVOCATE

C. O. C. F.

At the last regular meeting of Watford Council, No. 255, Canadian Order of Chosen Friends, held on Tuesday evening, January 13th, the following officers were installed by Grand Organizer W. F. Campbell of Hamilton, assisted by Organizer John Berdan, of Strathroy, viz:—
P. C. C.—William Westgate
V. C.—Mrs. Robert McNaughton
W. C.—William Lofties McLean
Recorder and Treas.—W. E. Fitzgerald
Pralsee—Ray, E. P. Irwin, B. A.
Marshall—Cecil McNaughton
Warden—Mrs. Alice Phair
Guard—R. W. Phillips
Sentry—Edward J. McNeill.

After the installation, a very pleasant social time was spent by the members. Mr. Campbell addressed the gathering and fully went into the merits of the Order, showing the excellent financial standing in which it was and how it had withstood the loss that was occasioned on account of the war and the influenza epidemic of last year and still was in such excellent condition. He fully explained the Juvenile Department and showed how this department became a feeder for the Adult Department later on and advised all members and their friends to have the children who were eligible to join come in as soon as possible. He showed the good standing of Watford Council and stated that Watford had, during the period he referred to, paid in nearly $15000 and, during said time, had drawn out a little over $9000 in death claims and $700 in disability claims and his total credit nearly $6000. Mr. Campbell deduced from these figures the fact that Watford must have had first class risks and careful examinations and he recommended any person who wanted insurance to join the Order since it was now charging Government standard rates.

After Mr. Campbell gave his address, different parties gave recitations, musical selections, and there were some speeches by other members of the Order and refreshments were served by the ladies of the Council. The thanks of the Council are due to the following talent, Mr. Harper, Mr. Higgins, Master William Fitzgerald and Master Ernest Sharp.

There is every prospect that Watford Council will in the near future, have a very large influx of new members, having now over 100 members. Mr. John Berdan, who added considerably over 100 members to the Council in the past, received a great deal of praise from the members present and Mr. Berdan expects to repeat in the near future what he has already done.

CHOP STUFF

Miss Irene McManus, a former resident of Petrolia, and a graduate of St. Joseph's Hospital, London, was received into the Community of the Sisters of St. Joseph at London on January 2nd.

Fred Baker, an English lad of fourteen employed on a farm in South Gosfield township, broke his neck by his chin striking as he fell on a noose in a rope he was climbing.

A drilling rig owned by Ald. Thomas Brock was destroyed by fire on Monday night, east of the County Road. There was insurance of $1,000 which, fortunately for Mr. Brock, he had increased from $500 about three weeks ago.

At the annual meeting of the Motherwell school board held on December 31st, a resolution was passed to secure an official from the Department of Education at an early date to bring the matter of Consolidated schools before the school sections of the district.

The oldest resident of Wyoming, in the person of Mr. David Moore, entered into rest last Sunday at the ripe old age of 92 years. Although the ravages of time prevented him from active work for several years past, he has been able to care for himself, and last Sunday morning arose as usual, shaved himself and partook of a hearty breakfast, and enjoyed his usual pipe in his easy chair until about noon, when his arms dropped to his sides, his head fell forward, and the long life was brought to a close as though he had fallen asleep.

Border City Canadians are now having a hard time of it. Those working in Port Huron and residing in Sarnia are paid in Canadian money, which is discounted by the Ferry Co. and Michigan city eating houses and stores, while citizens of Port Huron working in Lambton county are paid also in Canadian money, when discounted across the border, cuts quite a swath in their weekly pay. A number of firms who employ men on both sides of the border are now making arrangements to pay their men in Canadian or American money and bring the present situation to a close to all concerned.

A telephone message from Mrs. Wm. Bryson, Petrolia, summoned Wm. Robinson to the bedside of his father, James Robinson, Friday morning, who was reported to be dying. During the cold weather a few days previous he drove with his horse and buggy to the home of E. R. Parker for coke, and on arrival, evidently fell from the buggy in an unconscious condition, and was taken to the home of his daughter, Mrs. Bryson, at Petrolia, where he has since remained in a low condition. He is about 80 years of age or upwards, and has been a resident of Wyoming for nearly 50 years. —Wyoming Enterprise.

Ray Sawyer, son of Robert Sawyer, Amherstburg, was the victim of a terrible accident at the Bruner Mnd, Sunday forenoon of last week, by which he lost one of his limbs. He was standing on a conveyor, which works in the nature of a huge auger, hammering on a pipe to loosen soda and cause it to drop in the conveyor, when in some way that cannot be accounted for he had his foot caught in the conveyor, and in a twinkling it was cut off between the ankle and knee. On account of the ligaments and muscles being badly torn, amputation of the limb above the knee was found necessary, and this was done at the hospital.

PLYMPTON

A grand reception was held on Jan. 9th in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Lawson Dodge, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Russell, Wanstead. Guests to the number of 150 were present and the evening was spent in dancing and eucure, music being furnished by the Dewar Bros. At midnight a dainty buffet luncheon was served by the hostess. The presents were numerous and costly, and consisted of cut glass, silverware and checks and good wishes for their future happiness, thus showing the high esteem the young couple are held by their many friends. Guests were present from Sarnia, Petrolia, Forest, Watford and Manakinau.

The Chatham council at its first meeting adopted the eight-hour system for its employees.

Mr. James M. Wilson was again elected reeve of Wyoming. This makes Mr. Wilson's ninth consecutive year to hold this office. Congratulations.

James Nesbit, of Sibley, Iowa, died last week. He was a former resident of Sarnia and son of David Nesbit, of Plympton, a former warden of the county.

ARE YOU WEAK AND RUN DOWN?

In This Condition Only a Tonic Medicine Can Renew Your Health.

The condition of being "run down" is one that doctors do not recognize as a disease. The physician of today who gets his training in a hospital where only severe disorders are encountered knows little about it. But those who are "run down" in health know that it is not a fancied affliction.

The expression "run down," applied to health, means a condition in which all the bodily functions are enfeebled. Appetite fails, the digestion is impaired, the nerves are impoverished, the complexion becomes pale or waxy, there is no animation, but rather worry and mental depression. Fatigue is a constant symptom. No particular organ being affected, you must look for relief to the blood. As it circulates through every part of the body, any improvement in the condition of the blood is quickly felt throughout the entire system. As a restorer of the blood and builder of weak nerves Dr. Williams' Pink Pills stand at the head of all tonic medicines. Every dose of these pills helps to enrich the blood and strengthen the nerves, and thus the various organs regain their tone and the body recovers its full vigor. Ample proof of this is given in the statement of Mr. William Devine, Gerrard street east, Toronto, who says: "Two years ago while employed as a conductor on the Toronto Street Railway, I became much run down. I consulted a doctor who gave me medicine, but it proved fruitless as I was constantly growing weaker. My appetite completely failed and I fell away in weight until I only weighed 125 pounds. I was sometimes taken with fainting spells, and finally felt compelled to resign my position. I tried what I thought was lighter work, but with no better results. I was growing weaker and weaker. One day a chum urged me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, but by this time I was heartily tired of medicine, as nothing I had taken did me any good. Finally he bought me a box of the pills, and I could no longer refuse to try them. After a time I felt they were helping me and then I gladly continued their use, with the result that I was finally able to go back to my old position fully restored to health. I owe this splendid condition to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and can strongly recommend them to any one suffering as I did."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills can be obtained through any medicine dealer, or may be had by mail, post paid, at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Knight or Knave?

By Evelyn Claire Fortner.

For miles and miles the prairie gleamed and shone in the setting sun. Far off in the distance could be heard the cry of the prairie wolf. Framed in the doorway of a picturesque little cabin was a girl of fifteen or sixteen years. The sun lingered caressingly on the burnished masses of soft golden curls, which hung about a plain little face, lit by great hazel eyes.

She looked expectantly, anxiously down the seemingly never ending road which ran between waving fields of grain. Then with a little cry of delight she ran down the road and threw her arms about a young-faced, grey-haired westerner.

"Oh, Daddy, I knew you'd come home. I just knew you'd come home for supper tonight! I've got such lovely muffins." They walked into the cabin and Claire busied herself in putting the finishing touches on the table. Then they both sat down to their evening meal.

Fifteen years before this, Fred Carlyle with his year-old bride had come to the great west, almost empty handed. He soon, however, accumulated great wealth. A year after their arrival at the great west little Claire was born and the patient, sweet, child-wife died. Carlyle suffered keenly and the struggle, at first, to make ends meet turned the black hair white. A maiden aunt came to live with them, but she too was dead now.

For a year Claire had kept house for 'Daddy,' he wishing no stranger to enter their home. She had completed the public school education and her father being well educated himself, taught her what more he thought she needed. Quantities of books filled the shelves and Claire's mind was filled with dreams of knights and ladies of bygone days. Truly she was a dreamer, as she told her father her two greatest joys in life were himself and her dreams.

To-night when they were half through the meal, a long dark shadow fell across the table and, looking up, they beheld a tall, bronzed, young man of twenty-five or six standing in the doorway. His soft felt hat drooped as if it too were weary like its owner and a pair of deep, brown eyes looked at them with a tired smile.

"Pardon me for intruding but I cannot go on any farther to-night. I am desperately tired and have been walking, almost without ceasing, the whole day," the stranger said.

"Certainly, come in and rest yourself and then partake of our simple meal," said Carlyle courteously.

Claire busied herself in preparing the stranger's meal. Very shy she was, but if her manner seemed quiet the little mind within was not. "Oh he is like the knight of my dreams," she thought. "I wonder where he got that scar though. If it were a few hundred years ago, I should say he had received it from a fellow-knight in a tournament." There was a remarkable scar on the young man's left cheek—a long, thin, white line, which to Claire, seemed to add, rather than mar, his good appearance.

Through the mind of Jack Dale similar yet different thoughts were passing "what a beautiful child and what strange yet wonderful, dreamy eyes. What a belle she would be in society! How different she is from Dorothy Sinclair!" ran his thoughts.

After supper it was arranged that he should remain during that night. He told them, in that simple little home, of the busy outside world, which Claire had never seen and which Carlyle had almost forgotten. He told them his name—Jack Dale! that he had come west to survey land and that morning had taken the wrong road, which had led him on and on to the lonely little cabin among waving fields of grain.

In the morning, early, he started on his way and after shaking hands with the westerner, he took Claire's little hand in his and said gently, "Good-bye little girl, someday I may come back here. Thank you for your wonderful kindness." After he had departed a vague, empty feeling of loneliness filled Claire's heart. All day she thought of the tall, bronzed easterner with the strange, white scar on the left cheek. When her father came home that night he wore a stern, angry expression.

"Well daughter," he began, "who do you think our fine visitor of last night is?" A fear, strange, incomprehensible, clutched at the girl's heart.

"I do not know Dad," she answered steadily.

"Well I heard to-day, that he is the famous murderer 'Jack Rupert' who escaped penitentiary a few months ago and whom the authorities have been hunting every day. The descriptions sent out here of him are similar to this, 'Look out for Jack Rupert; may answer to alias, tall, bronzed, dark hair, thin white scar across cheek and possessing educated, courtly manners.' If I had only heard that last night," Carlyle finished, "he should not be where he is to-day."

Somehow Claire could not believe this accusation. How could her knight who stepped out of her dreams be the cruel knave?

Weeks and months passed and no word was heard of the stranger who had come so unexpectedly into the western girl's life. And she had never forgotten him. Every night she thought of him; thought of his last words to her, "Someday I may come back here to you." Would he ever come back? Every night, also, when the prairie wolf sent out his lonely cry, she prayed for him. She could not make herself believe what her father firmly believed, that he was a murderer.

One evening, at sunset, two years after a shadow again fell across the table and looking up they beheld a tall figure with a thin, white scar across his face. Claire and her father sprang up and with vastly different words addressed the man. Carlyle with, "Jack Rupert! I thought you had been found and put where you ought to be a year ago." and Claire with, "Jack Dale, I knew you'd come back. I knew you would." Jack Dale looked from one to the other with an amazed face. Then a light broke over it and he said, "So Carlyle, you too thought I was the famous murderer, Jack Rupert? I have heard from several that I resembled that notorious person, especially by this scar; but my scar happens to be on the left cheek, Rupert's on the right. I had no idea, however, that you believed that of me. I am out here surviving again and couldn't resist coming to see you two again. As you said, Rupert has been caught and hung a year ago." He spoke to both Carlyle and his daughter, but his eyes rested on Claire, now eighteen years of age, with the burnished hair drawn softly back and tied in a loose knot at the back of her neck. But the wonderful grey-green eyes were the same—dreamy and wistful. Dale showed them papers to fully assure them of his identity. He told them that he was the son of Mortimer Dale, of New York. Even Carlyle had heard of this great manufacturer. He told them also of his desire to work, to be a man, and of his contract as a western surveyor and lastly of his love for that great, wild free place—the west. He omitted, however, mentioning Dorothy Sinclair, the dark-haired society belle, to whom he had been engaged, and who had handed back the engagement ring because he had taken so little interest in the society life, which she loved.

That night as the moon climbed majestically, to her throne on high; when the waving fields of grain looked a softly moving ocean and the coyote's lonely cry quavered from afar off, Jack Dale took the little western girl, who believed in him, into his arms, pressed her close to his breast and heard her saying in her sweet dreamy way:

"Oh Jack, Jack, you are the knight of my dreams. I knew you could never be the knave, and you know I never wavered in my belief, don't you Jack?" And for answer he kissed the wonderful hazel eyes!

The marriage was quietly solemnized on Saturday afternoon, December 27, at four o'clock, of Laura C. Butler, of Strathroy, to Douglas St. Clair Leitch, son of Mr. Malcolm Leitch, of Caradoc Township.

The marriage is announced at Toronto on Wednesday, December 31st, of Miss Annie K. Hull to Mr. George Linton Snyder. The bride is a sister of Mr. G. S. Hull, of Kerwood.

Upside Down

By RAY FISLER

(Copyright, 1919, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Sorry, young man," said the portly Mr. Horace Seymour, rising to indicate that the ten-minute interview was at an end; "but your quest is futile. I cannot allow my daughter to marry a man with no more alluring future than the one that confronts you."

But Weldon Miller did not move toward the door of the banker's office. Disappointment showed on his clear-cut countenance, but through it gleamed a hint of a smile, somewhat determined smile. He creased his left hand carefully and asked:

"Then there's no hope, Mr. Seymour? You know I love Ruth sincerely, and it's not because of your financial standing, either. It's just her I want, not your money."

Mr. Seymour paused in his march across the room.

"I'm really inclined to believe you are sincere about that," he conceded, lighting a cigar. "However, that is not the question. It is not so much that you are not wealthy, but that you evidently have not the resourcefulness, the aptitude to accumulate money. My daughter must become the wife of a successful man, and he must have the goods to show that he is successful. But you are a mall carrier, and while it is an honest occupation and a very necessary one in the running of the world, it is so prosaic, so devoid of thrills, so lacking in opportunity for achievement that—well, no, I cannot see much hope for you. You need not tell me that Ruth loves you. I believe she does, or thinks she does, but she will forget you. I'm sorry I let the matter go so far. I didn't realize that her activities in entertaining service men would lead to any such serious affair."

"In concrete terms, Mr. Seymour," said Weldon, "just what would you require of me to make me eligible as a son-in-law? I'm determined to meet your requirements. Just tell me how to go about it and I'll leave you."

"This was a fair proposition, the banker conceded. 'Sit down,'" he said abruptly, and dropped into his own swivel chair. 'I'm wasting time, but I want to be square. Here's the crux of the thing. You're not on your feet, figuratively speaking. You're upside down. Nine young men out of ten are upside down; they're like turtles flopped on their backs, unable to make progress. Sometimes a fellow will get on his feet overnight and then he can speed to the heights of success. You're honest or you wouldn't be carrying mail for a living. You're too honest to succeed. My advice may sound hard, but it's the only recipe for success. Go after the coin and get it, no matter how, so long as you don't run afoul of the law. Use your brains; put it over the other fellow; grab his coin and you'll win everybody's admiration, especially your victim's, to use a harsh but applicable term. You'll find such a course profitable and also thrilling; not hundred million like carrying mail."

"You ask for a plain business proposition. Well, here it is. It sounds impossible, and for you it probably is. If you can come to me inside of two weeks with a ten-thousand-dollar bank account you can have Ruth and there'll be no questions asked. It will prove your resourcefulness. Good day."

Weldon Miller went to his boarding house and spent the rest of the day shut in his room, smoking and thinking. Early in the evening he appeared to come to a decision, for he flung on his coat and hat and took a street car to the Second National bank. His card brought quick action, for in a few moments he was shaking hands with the president of the institution, who appeared to have seen no more than thirty years.

"By George! I'm glad to see you, Weldon," said the president, shaking his visitor's hand warmly. "What can I do for you? Ever since I inherited this soft job I've been trying to start you in business, but you've always refused."

"You can do something, all right, Ferd," said Weldon, accepting a long, brown cigar and a light. "You can help turn me rightside up. You know old man Seymour of the First State, don't you? Well, listen—"

If there was one subject on which Mr. Horace Seymour was touchy it was his courage. During his rather adventurous career, before settling down to become rich and rotund, he had hunted in the jungles of both Wall Street and Africa.

He had engaged in hot struggles against brokers, with money as the object, and against wild beasts, with life as the stake. He had never been afraid and he was proud of it. He was in his prime, even if he did tip the scales at 214. "I eat danger," was his boast.

Consequently, when the question of courage in aeronautics came up at the club one night he took a prominent part in the debate. He had read up on the subject more or less and assumed the role of an authority.

"It takes nerve to fly," he admitted, "but not so much as I have been forced to display at times on terra firma."

He then related some instances to prove his statement.

"It may be true," observed George Hollister, the young president of the Second National bank, "that going up in an airship does not require an extra amount of courage, but when it comes to looping-the-loop and going through all those fancy maneuvers—well, I reckon you wouldn't care to try it yourself."

"Wouldn't, hey? How much do you want to bet on that?"

"I'll wager ten thousand," replied the challenger, "that if you will go up in an airplane and let the aviator put you through a program of stunts you will be crying quits inside of an hour after leaving the ground."

"It's a go," said Mr. Seymour. "Put up the cash."

A committee was selected to arrange for the bet. All that was necessary was to secure the services of an aviator at the local flying field and swear him to secrecy, for it would not do for the Seymour family to learn of the matter. The arrangements were duly made and two days later, on a clear afternoon, Mr. Seymour, attired in aviation clothes, was strapped to the passenger seat of a biplane. If he was nervous he hid it to his credit that he did not show it. The plane rose gracefully and Mr. Seymour's stomach seemed to climb into his throat with the same motion. He had read it was best not to look down, so he kept his gaze averted, with the result that he did not suffer severe nausea. In fact, he enjoyed the sensation of soaring through space and could not refrain from mentally "pooh-poohing" at the dangers of aviation and chuckling over the ten thousand that would be his.

However, he had reckoned not with the man in control of the craft. Suddenly the machine tipped and started nose first at a sharp angle for the earth. The banker lost his breath and clung desperately to the seat. It seemed that he was going to be dashed to pieces, but abruptly the plane righted itself and shot upward at the same angle. Then it turned far on one side and seemed about to tip completely over, but recovered its equilibrium and tipped to the other side. Before Mr. Seymour could realize what had occurred the machine took another nose dive, this time dropping so far that it almost scraped the top of a tree. Then up, far up, it soared again and—

Heavens! It turned completely over sideways and began rolling over and over. This lasted for it, seemed, an hour, although it was actually only fifteen seconds. Hardly had the craft got to a horizontal position when it took another dive, but instead of heading for the earth the nose turned clear under, the engine was shut off and the plane, upside down, began falling rapidly. The passenger could have sworn that the machine had dropped fifty miles, but it was only a thousand feet, when it struggled once more to an upright position and began looping-the-loop.

"Enough!" groaned Mr. Seymour through the speaking tube. "Get me to the ground in safety and you can have anything I own."

The next day Mr. Seymour did not get to the office until mid-afternoon. He found Weldon Miller awaiting him. The banker glared at him and inquired brusquely as to his errand.

"I've got the ten thousand," said the young man, holding out a bank book, one from the Second National. "Furthermore, I have your consent to marry Ruth."

Mr. Seymour stood at his desk and glared at Weldon.

"Where do you get that stuff?" he said in a voice that was almost a roar. "What do you mean, ten thousand? What do you mean, consent?"

Weldon helped himself to a seat. "I won the ten thousand in a bet," he said. "Mr. Hollister of the Second National loaned me an equal amount and put it up for me. And while we were doing stunts in the sky you told me I could have anything you owned if I put you safely back on the ground. You see, I'm an air mail carrier."

The banker dropped into his chair, flabbergasted.

"You win," he said weakly.

As to Sugar.

Murmuring housekeepers and protesting breadwinners who clamor for more sugar, are told to wait until the "rainbow" sugar is received, when the shortage will be relieved. This product of many colors is daily awaited. In the meantime not a little discussion is going on as to the style and origin of a somewhat unfamiliar compound. Older folk are talking of the "red" sugar used in the "watermelon" cakes of other days; some speak reminiscently of Lisbon, "moist," Denarara "fools," Muscovado, and other old-time names of sugars. The "rainbow" is new to the present generation of sugar consumers, but that a colored sugar is not by any means new is evident from a perusal when the same price ordered the sheriffs of London to send him four loaves of sugar to Woodstock."

The exact date of the first introduction of the latter (sugar) into England continues to be a matter of uncertainty. It was clearly very scarce, and doubtless equally dear, when, in 1220 Henry III. asked the Mayor of Winchester to procure him three pounds of Alexandria sugar, if so much could be got, and also some rose and violet-colored sugar; nor had it apparently grown much more plentiful when the same price ordered the sheriffs of London to send him four loaves of sugar to Woodstock."

Only Males Throw Stones.

A stone thrown through the window of a moving railway train and wounding the passengers with broken glass, leads the Lancet (London, Eng.), to say "It was presumably thrown by a boy; the fusion of the sexes has not yet got to the point of producing a girl who can throw a stone. Throwing seems to be a natural impulse in boys, or rather, we should say, the desire to hit a moving body with a missile is universal among them, but the impulse should be guided in the direction of wickets rather than trains."

No Talking that Night.

"I can tell you have a room on the top floor, sir, if you don't mind sharing it with another gentleman," said the boarding-house lady.

"All right. But do you suppose the gentleman will retire early? I'm in need of sleep, and don't want to be disturbed."

"You'll probably be able to get a good night's rest before the gentleman comes in, sir. He's been stopping with us every September for six or seven years, and this is the first time he's ever made the trip without his wife."

ILLITERATE INDIA.

But Few of the Millions Are Able to Read or Write.

An English writer has called attention to the startling fact that 90 per cent. of the males and 99 per cent. of the females in India, whose population is placed at 315,000,000, are unable to read and write. The total number of illiterates is estimated at nearly 295,000,000. Says this writer:

"It is one of the glories of missionary enterprise in India that the percentage of illiterates, men and women, among Christian natives falls to 70 per cent. and 86 per cent. respectively. Perhaps readers will rather wonder that 70 per cent. of Christian men and 86 per cent. of Christian women should be illiterates than rejoice that the missionaries have succeeded in lowering the percentage in their own flocks 20 per cent. in the case of men and 13 per cent. in the case of women. And certainly it is a shocking thing that there should be in India 1,422,154 men and 1,613,811 women who are unable to read one word of the Gospels in which they have been instructed."

"But a few more figures will be likely to convert any inclination to blame missionaries for their failures into the desire to commend them for their wonderful success. For of children who attend elementary schools many of which, though not, of course, all, are under missionary control, between 82 and 87 per cent., according to the district selected, leave the school at the end of their time without being able to read."

"If we ask the reason for the appallingly high percentage of total failure it can be found in the confusion of Indian languages and alphabets. There are in India 37 distinct languages, with upward of 500 dialects. These are written in some 50 different scripts, each requiring from 500 to 1,000 types. The same language is often printed in three different scripts and the same script used for several different languages."

"I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that the mere learning of the alphabet must be out of the power of many lads of moderate ability. Indeed, it is a striking fact that it is immeasurably easier to teach a blind man to read in the specially prepared Braille type than to teach a man with sight to read. The first thing needed is a simple script, prepared on scientific principles, and recognized by the Government as the authoritative script for all languages. But perhaps I ought not to have written the first thing needed. The first thing needed is a great increase of interest in and knowledge of the whole problem here in England."

ARE THE BUTTONS ON TIGHT?

Much Time Lost and Mildly Is Vexed Because of Carelessness of Manufacturer.

You know the little verse about the battle that was lost because of a frair of circumstances that had rise in the fact that a certain horse shoe nail was loose, and you might revise that little verse quite within the bounds of the possible to tell of other battles that have been lost because of the looseness of buttons or fasteners at critical moments.

Now, really, isn't it a vexation to buy an expensive frock or suit only to have a button come off on the first occasion of wearing it? Perhaps the button is lost, and as there are no others like it in the workrooms of the shop where you bought the suit, you have to get along the best you can with one button missing or get an entirely new set of buttons that perhaps are not half so suitable or attractive.

An important fastener on your frock becomes loosened the second time you wear it and the third time it comes off altogether. Then you are not quite sure where the original fastener went and by the time the frock has sagged or pulled down in that particular place and when you do come to put the missing fastener on again you are never able to restore the original trimness of the frock.

In the shops where ready-made suits are sold a great deal of time has to be taken in readjusting buttons and hooks and eyes, and when the clothes have been in stock any length of time it is sometimes necessary to sell them cheaper because of missing buttons and fasteners or to go to the expense of putting on an entirely new set of buttons.

As a result of this a nation-wide campaign has been started on the part of retail men to see that manufacturers spend more time and thought on this really important matter of the loose fastener.

FUR NECK PIECES

Sable, Mink, Fisher, Among Variety to Choose From.

Furriers Have Provided for Record Demand—Choker Collar is Most Popular.

The usual fall flock of fanciful neck pieces is only beginning to put in an appearance. Perhaps this unusual reluctance is merely a judicious waiting until the present rage for the small one or two animal scarfs shall have in a measure burnt itself out.

These altogether admirable little neck pieces in sable, mink, fisher or stone marten are so becoming and practical that most women faced with the choice of but one neckpiece would unhesitatingly choose this one.

But the quiet smartness of its appeal works both for and against it. While it retains its distinction even through excessive popularity, this very unobtrusiveness of quality fails to satisfy the woman who yearns for and perhaps really needs for her best appearance a more pronounced type of scarf.

The furriers, realizing this need, have any number of other small neck pieces in stock, in which squirrel, beaver, Hudson seal, mole skin, kimmer, broadtail and Australian opossum are the pelts utilized.

These neck pieces have the advantage of being less expensive than the animal scarfs of costly, longer haired furs, and this is a distinct advantage when it comes to matching a muff and possibly a hat to the scarf in order to form the get which is so much worn with the tailored suit or dress. The choker collar is probably the most popular of all the small fur neck pieces, and it has undeniable chic on a woman who is slim and long throated. It is buttoned with one or two fur buttons and usually has a fold of satin or velvet showing above the edge of the fur.

Sufferers from asthma and catarrh will find that the Oil when used according to directions will give immediate relief. Many sufferers from these ailments have found relief in the Oil and have sent testimonials.

A Woman's Trouble

Stratford, Ont.—"I do think Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription one of the best medicines I have ever known for the ailments of women. I had for quite a long time been having woman's trouble which caused me to become all run-down, weak and nervous. I doctored but nothing seemed to give me relief until I began taking 'Favorite Prescription.' This medicine gave me such wonderful relief that I am glad to recommend it to others."—MRS. A. GODWIN, 80 Brent St.

NERVOUS AND RUN-DOWN

Stratford, Ont.—"A few years ago I was in a nervous and run-down condition and felt greatly in need of a tonic. A friend who was being helped by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery advised me to try it, too. It helped me from the very start and eventually restored me to perfect health. I feel in a position to praise the 'Golden Medical Discovery' very highly and take pleasure in recommending it to all those who are at all nervous, weak or run-down."—MRS. ESTHER PEATSON.

Dr. Pierce's medicines are made of vegetable growths that nature surely intended for backache, headache, pains, irregularities, and for the many disorders common to women in all ages of life. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is made of lady's slipper root, black cohosh root, unicorn root, blue cohosh root, Oregon grape root and Viburnum. Women who take this standard remedy know that in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription they are getting a safe woman's tonic so good that druggists everywhere sell it in liquid or tablet form. It is without alcohol.

CANADIAN RUNS N. Y. HOTELS.

The Story of John M. Bowman Reads Like a Romance.

John M. Bowman, the Toronto man who went to New York without any money, and just looking for a job, and who now operates six great New York hotels and two resort hotels elsewhere, has had a career like a movie hero. Mr. Bowman is frequently in Toronto, though known by comparatively few people in that city. The November American Magazine tells his story.

"Only a comparatively few years ago he was driving a truck in New York! Later, he broke saddle horses. But always he had the idea that he was cut out for the hotel business. Any other kind of work he regarded as temporary—as a means to an end. But no matter how humble the job, Bowman contrived to use it in some way for permanent gain.

"Even his first little job, doing errands for his grandmother, taught him something of definite value.

"In his native town, Toronto, was a factory that had wood shavings to give away, and Bowman's grandmother liked those for starting a fire in the kitchen stove. So she would often ask him to go to the factory and fetch her a large burlap sack full of shavings. Young Bowman did not like this at all. He did not mind the physical effort so much, but he imagined that he looked ridiculously undignified bearing a bulky sack of shavings through the streets.

"However, he willingly did as his grandmother desired because of the twenty-five-cent piece he knew she would give him. Gradually it dawned on him that there was nothing undignified about the task, that no honest labor, to gain money one needs, is undignified. In fact, he came to feel that boys who loafed about the street corners and occasionally laughed at him, while doing nothing themselves, were really less dignified than he.

"This wholesome view about useful work has clung to him ever since. When the Biltmore was under construction and there was some question about its being ready to be opened on schedule, Bowman, who was to be its manager, used to put on old clothes and climb about over the building to see what was going on.

On the day that it was thrown open to the public, there was a lot of confusion about the turning on of water into certain pipes. And the only man who knew exactly where each valve was located and where each pipe led was Bowman himself. He was obliged to put on a pair of overalls and personally take charge of the plumbing emergency.

"Bowman's first hotel job was at a little resort in the Adirondacks, when he was only nineteen years old. Because of the short season there, he desired a permanent place at some good hotel in New York City. A wealthy man gave him a letter of introduction to the manager of what was then one of the best hotels in New York, a place that Bowman had thought a suitable field for his talents.

"He mailed the letter of introduction to the hotel manager, and requested permission to call. But he got no response. He wrote again and asked for the return of his letter of introduction. Even then he got no reply, and he formed a strong opinion about the character of the man who had exhibited what seemed to him such gross and needless discourtesy.

Years later Bowman became president and directing manager of the company that took over that same hotel, and his first official act was to discharge the manager who had failed to answer his letter. He did not discharge him to vent personal spleen, but because he thought the man lacked that sense of courtesy and consideration which should be among the qualifications of a successful manager.

"Having failed to get the hotel job he sought in New York, Bowman had to do whatever work he could find. Frequently he was obliged to be so economical that each meal was a genuine problem.

"Later he secured work at the Holland House under one Gustav Baumann. Baumann headed a company that put up the Hotel Biltmore and Bowman was to be its manager. A few months after the hotel was ready for occupancy, Baumann died. In a short time Bowman had so thoroughly convinced the board of directors of his ability that he not only was permanently retained as manager, but was made president of the company.

Then he branched out and now operates six great New York hotels—the Biltmore, the Commodore, the Belmont, the Manhattan, the Murray Hill, and the Ansonia. He also controls two great resort hotels—the Belleview at Belleair, Florida, and the Griswold at New London, Connecticut. Mr. Bowman is 43 years old."

Awkward For His Wife.

A good story was told recently by Sir Charles Parsons, of turbine fame, concerning a certain learned professor what shall be nameless.

He was, explained Sir Charles, very absent-minded. One day he saw that his wife had placed a fine bouquet of freshly-cut flowers on his desk.

"What does this mean, dear?" he asked.

"Why, don't you know!" she exclaimed. "This is the anniversary of our wedding-day."

"Ah, is it, indeed?" he answered politely. "Kindly let me know when yours comes round and I will reciprocate."

Birthdays Forbid Marriage.

A curious idea among the Burmese is that people born on the same day of the week must not marry, and that if they defy the fates, their union will be marked by much ill luck. To prevent these disastrous marriages, every girl carries a record of her birthday in her name, each day of the week having a letter belonging to it, and all children are called by a name that begins with that letter.

Wiley-Prangley

One of the leading society events of the season was the marriage at Dresden on New Year's day of Alice Mattice, daughter of Mr. Wm. Prangley, of Dresden, to Dr. H. Irvin Wiley, of Windsor, son of the late Dr. J. I. Wiley and Mrs. Wiley, of Dresden, and grandson of the late John Wiley of Watford. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. C. A. McRae, assisted by Rev. Norman Lindsay, of Dover, and took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. James McVean. The bride, who was given away in marriage by her father, looked very lovely in her wedding gown of ivory charmeuse satin, made with a long court train lined with the palest shade of pink. She wore the groom's gift, a diamond and platinum lavalliere, and carried a wonderful cluster of orchids, violets and roses. Miss Reva English, of Chatham, was the groom's bridesmaid, gowned in black and white, with touches of silver and black picture hat, and the groomsmen were Mr. Grant Wiley, brother of the groom. The wedding march was played by Miss Helen McVean. On their return from their honeymoon they will reside at 11 Jeanette avenue, Windsor.

McFarlane-Smith

A pretty wedding was solemnized on New Year's Day, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Duncan Smith, of Plympton, when their daughter Jennie Laurine, became the bride of Mr. Jack McFarlane, son of Mr. and Mrs. John McFarlane of Camlachie. Miss Nellie Smith, sister of the bride played the wedding march, while the bridal party took their places beneath an arch of evergreens, where the ceremony was performed by the Rev. Mr. Murray of Forest, in the presence of the immediate relatives. The bride who was given away by her father, was becomingly dressed in champagne satin and georgette, and wore a corsage bouquet of pink ophelia roses and maiden-hair fern. After signing of the register, the guests sat down to a dainty dinner. Later the happy couple motored to Sarnia where they will make their future home. An interesting feature of the occasion was, it being the anniversary of the marriage of the bride's parents.

McRae-McNeil

A pretty wedding was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. B. McNeil, Brooke, on December 30th, when their youngest daughter Bessie was united in the holy bonds of matrimony, by Rev. R. G. McKay of Alvinston, to Sergeant Frank G. McRae of Heward, Sask., son of Mr. and Mrs. Alex McRae of Sombra. Promptly at high noon the bride entered the drawingroom on the arm of her father, to the strains of the wedding march played by the groom's sister, Miss Sadie McKee of Sombra, and took her place by the waiting groom, beneath an arch of evergreens and white roses. The bride looked charming in a gown of champagne silk crepe de chine, trimmed with blue silk, and wore the groom's present, a beautiful lavalliere, carrying a bouquet of white carnations and ferns. The bridesmaid, Miss Bella Davis, niece of the bride, wore a gown of yellow silk, carrying a bouquet of pink carnations and ferns. The groom was assisted by his brother Lieutenant James McRae, of Heward, Sask. The groom's present to the bridesmaid was a dainty brooch, to the groomsmen a vest chain, and to the pianist a bar pin. During the signing of the register, Mrs. R. G. McKay sang "Bonnie Mary of Argyle." After receiving the congratulations, about sixty guests sat down to a sumptuous wedding dinner, after which an enjoyable time was spent in singing and music. The happy couple left on the evening train from Watford for Carsonville and other points. The bride's travelling suit was blue serge with fox furs and hat to match. The bride and groom were the recipients of many beautiful presents.

Guests were present from Heward, Sask., Sombra, Whitebread, Glencoe, Watford, and many other visiting friends for a month, they will make their future home in Heward, Sask.

Report of Commission of Conservation

Students of Canada's resources and of the problems associated with their efficient development will find a serviceable addition to the literature on this subject in the tenth annual report of the Commission of Conservation.

A concise review of the year's work is furnished by Mr. James White, Assistant to Chairman. A series of unusually informative contributions includes "Housing, Town Planning and Municipal Government" by Mr. Thos. Adams; "Medicine in War" by Dr. C. A. Hodgett's; discussions of various phases of forest conservation by Mr. Clyde Leavitt, Dr. C. D. Howe and Mr. Roland D. Craig; and of agricultural investigations by Mr. F. C. Nunnick. Particularly timely studies of the water-power and fuel situations in Canada are presented by Messrs. Arthur V. White and Leo C. Denis.

This publication will not disappoint the very wide circle of readers to whom it affords an instructive annual resume of problems and progress in respect to the intelligent use and study of our natural resources.

WAYS OF WEARING THE HAIR

Coiffures Are Elaborate, Receiving Much Attention; Many and Widely Differing Varieties.

Styles in hair dressing change from season to season just as surely as do styles in costumes and dresses. Artists have declared from time immemorial that hair was "woman's crowning glory," but some women do not treat their hair as if it were a glory. They have seemed to take pleasure in twisting their locks from nature's course, thinning them and torturing them by artificial waving.

The fancy that developed about a year ago, of cutting the hair short, may be responsible for the adoption of the mode of elaborately ornamented coiffures for evening this winter.

At the present moment much attention is given to these elaborate coiffures, and there are many and many different varieties. The influence of the Orient is less marked than in recent seasons, and many of these coiffures take their inspiration from the folk costumes of France and neighboring countries. Flowers worn in Spanish fashion, peasant headdresses, Dutch diadems, and the tulle streamers of Boulogne are high in favor.

Among the ornaments favored by the coiffures of this season are cloth of silver and algrettes or paradise, which are invariably worn slanting toward the back and never standing straight. Silver bandeaux supporting a motif brilliant in the middle of the forehead are also very smart, and it is noticeable that they are worn, more and more, crossing the forehead just above the level of the eyes.

Some youthful heads are crowned with very narrow bands of black tulle on which a string of jewels is mounted.

Since skirts have been so very narrow petticoats have received much attention. Naturally, with these extraordinarily narrow skirts it was found that the petticoat came in evidence whenever the wearer sat down; it did not seem to matter how short it was. At once a new skirt was brought out, a mere sheath of satin or silk, fastening onto an elastic band, and snapping into place in front rather than in the back as heretofore. This skirt was left untrimmed except by a deep hem put in with machine hemstitching. It was made of silk or satin and could be bought in almost every color.

The fashionable draped skirts which are made on the wearer by wrapping the material around the figure and then sewing it together necessitate the creation of the sort of undergarment described. Fortunately the skirts of winter are slightly wider and fuller, and we can at least wear regular petticoats again. None are lovelier than the silk jerseys with their smoothly fitting lines and their lovely flourishes of plaid knife plaited and stitched into place. These, too, come in every color and are durable.

OLD-STYLE PETTICOAT BACK

Garment More Satisfactory Returns With Wider and Fuller Skirts for Winter.

Backless evening gowns, as shown in Paris continue to cause consternation. Jenny, one of the most cautious makers usually, is exhibiting many gowns that are scarcely more than elaborate skirts with a pretense of a bodice at the front and in the back there is actually no more than a guide. As the afternoon dresses are short in the sleeve and frequently décollete, it is apparently necessary to differentiate in one way or another.
