In the past far too much time has been spent on the consideration of the expenditures of the government in debates on estimates. We say, certainly we should cut down that time; we agree with that. But we also say that: by arrangement through the house leaders, certainly not by using proposed rule 16A, one-third of the estimates each year ought to be brought before the House of Commons to be considered by parliament. If that will take too long, let us make it 20 per cent of the estimates. But to do away with the right of parliament to consider expenditures which have risen to almost $11 billion and let standing committees scrutinize those expenditures is all wrong. When you take away control of the pursestrings from parliament you make the executive all-powerful and reduce parliament to a rubberstamp, as my leader said the other day.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Much has been said about proposed standing order 16A. At this time I wish to direct the attention of the house to the abolition of the committee of supply and the proposal to take away from parliament the examination of expenditures which relate to taxation. The burden of taxation is heavy and is borne by all the people of Canada. In many cases that burden has meant that the living standards of many in this country have fallen below the level we think is necessary for the maintenance of decent homes. Indeed, the heavy burden of taxation is preventing some of our young people from being educated to the point where they are equipped to take their place in our great nation.

The estimates and government expenditures are to be scrutinized by standing committees which are creatures of the House of Commons. We may well ask, What kind of committees are they? How are they formed? At present our committees are totally and wholly partisan. They are purely the instruments of the Prime Minister. How is the chairman of one of our standing committees really chosen, Mr. Speaker? The government house leader knows how. When the Prime Minister or the government house leader wants a certain man to be in charge of a certain committee that may consider questions embarrassing to the government, they pick him to head the committee. He goes to that committee made up for the most part of government supporters and is then nominated and picked as the chairman. That is how their boy is picked by the Prime Minister or the government house leader. The house leader in particular has his hand in these things—he is into everything. So their man becomes chairman of the committee. And how do government members get on this committee or on to any committee? Let us fool no one, Mr. Speaker. Many of us have seen the system operating over the years; it has been made use of by this government and governments before it. The majority of committee members are handpicked for the committee by the government house leader, the Prime Minister or the government whip, to do a job for the government.

Mr. Gilbert: Right.

Mr. Woolliams: They form the majority of that committee. Say that an item comes before that partisan committee having to do with part of the government's expenditures of $11 billion. Let us get down to practicalities. Suppose some of us want to find out why the cost of the performing arts centre has risen from $16 million to about $50 million. Supposing some hon. members of the N.D.P. or the other opposing parties want to ask some embarrassing questions. Someone may allege the government has been negligent, and so on. We ask our questions and pretty soon the partisan committee chairman rules us out of order. Then what happens? One of us may object, a motion is passed to say the committee chairman is right, and there is no appeal. We cannot appeal the chairman's ruling to Mr. Speaker. Yet there is an appeal with respect to matters brought up before the chairman of the committee of the whole house to Mr. Speaker. You, sir, are well trained and Mr. Deputy Speaker also is well trained. Committee chairmen are not. Often they are members who have been elected to this house for the first time and who have never before seen the inside of a committee room. So the hanky-panky takes place.

This house is asked to approve of a measure which will allow $11 billion of expenditures to be scrutinized by committees of this kind. As I said the other day, they are nothing but kangaroo courts; they are nothing else. The Prime Minister maintains a majority of government members on all committees he is interested in. The government members are loyal servants who look for patronage and political plums and they vote as they are told to and obstruct any questions that might embarrass the government. If one of the boys steps out of line he is removed from the committee. The hon. member for Middlesex (Mr. Lind) was on the agricultural committee and did something to embarrass the government. Without any consent the party whip took him off that committee. But the hon. member for Middlesex is not to be put off so lightly; he objected in the house and was put back on the committee. Unfortunately there are not enough men here with the integrity of the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: Ministers do not always appear before committees and I do not object to that. Top civil servants are presented to be examined, and in this connection may I tell the house of my experience earlier this week. The vice-chairman of the National Energy Board appeared before the standing committee on national resources and public works, and I wanted to learn why there had been a cut-back in the export quotas of crude petroleum from western Canada, something which goes to the economic heart of Alberta, as the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) knows. I wanted facts. That top man could not give the answer—not that he did not know it but he did not want to embarrass the government. The only way to get the answer is to ask the minister.

Surely it is not asking too much when we say that 20 per cent of the estimates each year should be brought before the house at the request of the parties in opposition, with the consent of the government, in order that certain matters may be aired in parliament. I repeat, if you take control of the pursestrings away from parliament you destroy parliament. It is dead. Take away control of the pursestrings and you make the executive all-powerful. When the executive controls parliament only about half the intelligence available to the opposition can be brought to bear on the consideration of financial matters. The opposition is more or less silenced and parliament becomes a rubberstamp.

The late Mr. Lapointe, a former minister of justice, a distinguished French Canadian and a Great Canadian, had some interesting words to say on the subject. I hope that every member of the government will read what was said by one of the great Liberals of Canada. He was speaking at that time against a Conservative prime minister. Always remember we can never have good government if we have government by people rather than by laws. This is what Mr. Lapointe said:

It means we are being asked to agree to be dragged at the wheels of the Prime Minister and to make parliament an appendage of the executive. This attitude of the Prime Minister makes our duty to resist this legislation more imperative. The first duty of parliament is to remain a parliament, not to become a subservient and ornamental body. Parliament has a right which is certainly paramount to the convenience of the Prime Minister. The right to live.

Parliament, he says, has the right to live.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: When parliaments die—and they died in Europe in the thirties—freedom dies, and the power of the people to express themselves dies with it. The duty of parliament is to defend itself and to resist the invasion of its rights and privileges. That is why I have risen today, and that is why members of all the opposition parties have made their protests in this regard. I am not against reform. But I, together with my hon. friends, am against the muzzling of parliament and the proposal to deprive parliament of its traditional control over the pursestrings. To continue the quotation:

When the Prime Minister says he speaks for the whole of the country he is mistaking the echo of his words for the voice of the Canadian people. It is parliament which is and must remain the authorized exponent of public opinion and of the public will. The legislation, the policies, must be what this house makes them. Even the government must be what the house makes it.

At that point he was interrupted by an hon. member who said: "That is what it will be." Mr. Lapointe answered:

That is very intelligent; it reminds me of the words of the Greek poet Homer that the gods deprive of half their intelligence those who lose their freedom.

That is exactly what will happen if parliament dies. We are in favour of reform, but remember it has been the characteristic of great nations which have had a long history of continuous creation that they finally failed because subsequent generations failed to comprehend the great institutions which their forefathers had built to guarantee the freedom and liberty of the subject. We in Canada are now faced with a real danger of the loss of parliament and the loss of freedom.

What is parliament? It was Lord Acton who said:

—power tends to corrupt and absolute power corrupts absolutely,

It was once said:

If parliament is to be preserved as a living institution, His Majesty's Loyal Opposition must fearlessly perform its functions. When it properly discharges them, the preservation of our freedom is assured. The reading of history proves that freedom always dies when criticism ends. It upholds and maintains the rights of minorities against majorities. It must be vigilant against oppression and unjust invasions by the cabinet of the rights of the people.

We should bear these words in mind today when we consider the proposal to implement rule 16A and abolish the right of the House of Commons to look into the expenditures of this nation which represent the total taxes collected from the Canadian people. To continue the quotation:

It should supervise all expenditures and prevent overexpenditure by exposing to the light of public opinion wasteful expenditures or worse. It finds fault; it suggests amendments, it asks questions and elicits information, it arouses, educates and moulds public opinion by voice and vote. It must scrutinize any action by the government and in doing so prevent the shortcuts to the democratic procedure that governments like to make. The absence of a strong opposition means a one party state.

Reform is good, but if the government is allowed to use rule 16A, if it is allowed, under the guise of reform, to take away the right of parliament to look into expenditures which might be extravagant or which might be corrupt, then this institution is through. You might as well lock the doors.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: Amen.

Mr. Woolliams: Well, it would be "amen" if parliament closed.

An hon. Member: Yea, brother.

Mr. Woolliams: I do not intend to get into any argument with a man who just wants to heckle at a time like this when so many important things are at stake for this institution. The Prime Minister said that every democratic assembly requires some procedure for turning discussion into decision. Nobody argues with that. But let us not turn decision into dictatorship.

Let us consider some examples. We in the opposition have asked for a decision on a new oil policy for Canada because we are losing our oil markets. But we have received no statement of policy and no action has been taken. We have asked for a decision concerning wheat sales and means of expediting the drying of grain. Again, there has been no statement of policy and no action.

We have asked for a decision with reference to the Kennedy round discussions so as to protect our foremost industries in eastern and central Canada. There has been no statement of policy and no action. We have asked for a decision in the field of international affairs in an attempt to discover where this country stands with reference to NATO, NORAD and, indeed Biafra. But there has been no statement of policy and no action. We have asked for a decision as a matter of priority concerning a review of pensions for the aged who are today in dire need, living in conditions which we criticize when they occur in other countries. Yet there has been no statement of policy, and no action. We have asked for a review of the pensions of veterans who served their country in what some Canadians classify as an imperialistic war. But once again there has been no statement of policy, no action. On the other hand, we have received ambiguous statements, wrapped in allegory, by the Prime Minister and other ministers on occasions when they can be encouraged to enter this chamber and grace it by their presence. Mr. Speaker, this government to date has a record of procrastination, vaccillation and tergiversation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: The proposal to turn over expenditures of $11 billion, the total budget, to unreformed committees means the end of the parliamentary system as we know it.

What should be done about such a situation? Every party should have a certain number of chairmen on these committees. The New Democratic party represents a big vote; it should have a certain number of chairmen. The Ralliement des Creditistes should be represented by a certain number of chairmen on these committees. The moment these committees become non-partisan, the moment they are equipped with the technical help required so that they can get at the government and find out the sins of any government, there may be something to be said for taking $11 billion from the control of this institution and turning it over to creatures of the government. But until these requirements have been met we are utterly opposed to such a move.

We believe in reform. We believe the committees should be reformed. But we do not believe in destroying parliament by removing control over the pursestrings, which is the only hold which this institution has, finally, upon any government. Combine the implementation of rule 16-A with the power that any prime minister enjoys without checks and balances and, in the words of the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), the result is totalitarianism. The Prime Minister wants all probing to end. The Prime Minister wants all pushing by the opposition to get decisions to end. Do you know what he really wants? He wants a quiet, silent, effective, confidential dictatorship. That is what the Prime Minister wants.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: He wants his government to operate like a submarine, to hide at the bottom of the sea and surface only for show. That is what he wants.

Some hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: What is his motive? You often have to go to a man's own words to find out his true motive and his true reason. I am told through the grapevine of the backbenchers in the Liberal party, among whom I hope I will always have many friends, that rule 16-A, through which control can be exercised over committees because the house leader can say how long a matter can stay in committee, is the Prime Minister's baby and that the house leader would really like at this stage to rock it to sleep.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I had not wished to interrupt the hon. member. I am just calling the house to order.

Mr. Woolliams: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that. This is what the Prime Minister said on February 13 when he wrote that famous article in Cité Libre—

An hon. Member: What year.

Mr. Woolliams: 1963. These are his words. He has never denied them. They are interesting. They are not my words. He asked the question, what is the political philosophy of the Liberal party? At that time he was not a Liberal. He was looking around.

An hon. Member: He smartened up.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, he did, because this is their philosophy. They are now performing according to the philosophy which the Prime Minister said the Liberal party had. He asked this question and the reply he gave was:

> Say anything, think anything you like. But put us in power, because we are best fitted to govern.

Those words are exactly what the new rules mean in reference to the two matters I have mentioned. As I have said, we are for reform but we are against closure before a debate starts and we are against taking away the pursestrings from parliament and handing them over to a bunch of kangaroo courts.

In that same article the Prime Minister also said about the Liberals:

> Power is what they are interested in. The only kick allowed is that which comes from a donkey. Some say it doesn't matter. Pretty soon, they will be talking about a nuclear storm in a teacup.

That is the Prime Minister's position. Quentin Hogg said:

> Countries cannot be fully free until they have an organized opposition. It is not a long step from the absence of an organized opposition to a complete dictatorship.

It was said yesterday that no person in a position of power ever asked for more power without intending to use it. I suggest that no one ever achieved the power he asked for without using at least 100 per cent of it, and history shows that sometimes persons have used 110 per cent.

What happened in Europe? Italy had a parliament. Then it had a dictator by the name of Mussolini. Kerensky led a revolution in Russia and started a form of legislative assembly. Then came Stalin and parliament died in Russia. Parliament died in Italy. Look at what happened with Hitler. He was elected in an ordinary election, and then the Reichstag was burned down so that he might walk through the ruins as a dictator.

When we are going to reform an institution let us not destroy that institution. If we give men in powerful positions that much power without the rule of law then they have the right to abuse that power. History has shown us that human behavior is such that men will abuse power and then freedom dies. Lapointe said that what they were fighting for was the right of parliament to live.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I say that we are 100 per cent for reform except on these two issues. We want to get on with the nation's business. We do not want to gag parliament by having closure in advance and taking away from this institution the right of criticizing, analysing and probing the expenditures of the nation when taxes are so high already and are running rampant throughout the nation.

Why does the cabinet not meet and say, "We will approve these other rules. We will try the reforms we have got and leave out these two matters." Or if they want to have a little more reform then, as our party recommends, leave only 20 per cent or one-third of the estimates to come before parliament because they will not take up any more time and there will not be any more hours spent in debate. That is our position. I ask the government to consider it carefully. I trust they will be reasonable men and consider it.

I close with one last thought. Government spokesmen describe this debate as holding up the works. It is the government that is holding up the works. It can now approve what all of us on this side of the house agree to and send the other two matters back to the committee for careful study. There are reasonable men in this House of Commons on both sides. They would not have been elected to it otherwise. If this is done then believe me we can get on with the nation's business.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I had the honour and privilege of being a member of the special committee which was to report on the reform of our parliamentary procedure and it certainly was a practical experience which I greatly appreciated.

Several members who have been sitting in the house for many years and who are experts on matters of procedure let us have the benefit of their wise advice and counsel.

Under the able chairmanship of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair), the proceedings for the amendment of the standing orders were constructive and frank. In fact, all the members admit that the present standing orders do not meet present requirements. If certain important provisional changes were made, it must be admitted that the house has been exceedingly slow in amending its standing orders. During the last election campaign and since then we promised to change our rules in order to increase efficiency of the Canadian parliament and to use more wisely the time available to us. We are of the opinion that instead of engaging into lengthy and repetitious debates we should rather study a larger number of pieces of legislation and consider in a constructive and positive way, the estimates required by the various departments and bodies coming under federal jurisdiction.

Mr. Speaker, the government has fulfilled its promise. There is no issue which had and still has stronger and more general support among the people. In fact, they agree that we should engage in discussion, but they require that we make a decision after a reasonable debating time and when both sides have expressed their views.

The government has the responsibility and the mandate of governing and introducing measures in parliament which are deemed to be in the national interest, and it is the government which will have to answer to the people for its neglect or its procrastination in having its legislative program passed.

Although I recognize the inalienable right of parliament to study, criticize or change the measures put before it, it is necessary to reconcile those two imperatives which are not necessarily mutually exclusive. I believe the changes proposed in the fourth and fifth reports of our committee will provide precisely that: better use of the time, which is of necessity limited during a session, without depriving the members, and especially the opposition, of their undisputed right to discuss and criticize the proposals of the government and this, at the various stages and especially in committee where all the estimates and the vast majority of bills are studied. This would allow a more comprehensive, constructive and efficient study, under much more favourable conditions.

It must be recognized that the volume and complexity of public affairs can only grow through the years and take up more and more of the time of parliament, while recognizing, on the other hand, that an unlimited right to debate and discuss all matters is a luxury we can no longer afford because, in fact, it could become a barrier, an obstacle to the orderly and legitimate study of the business of the country.

The members who have been here for several years know full well that the opposition did not limit itself to criticism and opposition; it deliberately and systematically obstructed the passing of certain bills which were eventually agreed to by the majority of the members, but only after repetitions and a waste of time which only served to reduce the efficiency and prestige of parliament.

It is recognized that government proposals or bills can be changed or improved through the suggestions of the members in the house or in committee. Besides, the government must not expect to be given a free hand, but it must be ready to justify its measures, to amend them or, if need be, to withdraw them; however, that does not usually happen after interminable and repetitious debates. A legislative assembly must not place itself in a position where a decision can be delayed indefinitely.

The members opposite have maintained that the government now has the means at its disposal to limit the debate. Indeed, the previous question concentrates the debate on the main motion, but that does not necessarily mean, in practice, that the debate is substantially reduced. In fact, the motion can be debated, but its restrictions are such that it is impractical and rarely used. It was used, for instance, in 1955, during the debate on an act concerning the Department of Defence Production. It did not alter the length of the discussions.

The best known means, although it is rarely used, is that commonly known as the rule of closure which, since it was passed in 1913, has only been used 16 times only. This method of limiting the debating time now appears odious in our country, even though it is very often used in the United Kingdom, in somewhat different circumstances. It is a method which is difficult to implement and which requires notice and a special motion. The 1956 experience showed to what extent debates on procedure can last when such means are proposed. It is also applied when a difficulty arises and the debate becomes fierce and when feelings are running high.

It is used to bring to an end a particular debate or consideration of a motion when a reasonable time for each stage of a bill has to be planned ahead of time. The closure rule still exists, as mentioned by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) but I submit that experience has proved this is not a practical solution for the government, or even sufficient protection of the rights of the opposition.

In 1956 and on other occasions, the house raised important questions on the interpretation given to that rule which does not clearly specify what motions are affected by a particular proposal to end a debate. Therefore, it is an impractical method which is difficult to apply and which does not solve at all the difficulty of planning the parliamentary year or calendar.

The opposition leader (Mr. Stanfield) stressed in his speech Tuesday that discussions must remain within certain limits, and I quote:

> There must be reasonable limits upon the time parliament spends in discussion.

The method advocated in the report of the committee on procedure, namely the setting up of a proceedings committee made up of a representative of each party in the House of Commons, might provide a reasonable period of time which will certainly be more extended than limited, at each of the stages of the various measures the house is called upon to consider.

There is no doubt that with some common sense hon. members of the various parties can agree in most cases and set up beforehand a sensible and realistic program taking into account the nature and the importance of bills to come.

But we must consider another possibility. What happens when one or more than one member, in a committee, cannot agree on the consideration of a given legislation?

It was suggested to leave that question in abeyance and rely on the common sense of members, or else let the debate follow its course. In my opinion, this is neither realistic nor practical. In that case, it normally and conditionally behoves, not one person but the majority of the elected representatives of the people, to decide on the course of action. It has been said that this would be tantamount to closure. It is understandable that this house, contrary to parliaments in other democratic countries of importance which have never known such a procedure, can entertain doubts on the possible effects of such a course, and I submit that the fact of providing for a reasonable allocation of time for a particular debate does not deny the right of discussion, but it is actually an effort to avoid the needless repetition of the same arguments solely put forward to postpone a decision and upset the entire legislative program of the government instead of informing the people.

There is a difference between knowing in advance that a certain number of days will be allotted for the consideration of bills and an untimely termination as a result of the application of closure before any objection or suggestion has been made. The allocation of a definite period of time will not prevent a constructive and partisan debate, but on the contrary, it will encourage the member to use efficiently the time provided. The debate will merely be more concise and specific, rather than being long and repetitious. It is obvious that during each session in the recent past, an important part of the anticipated legislation died on the order paper, due to the lack of time to present and consider it. Therefore, in my opinion, we can only conclude from experience that a modern parliament adjusted to national needs, operating in a regularly, constructive and efficient way, must have a procedure for the planning of parliamentary business during the session, as is done elsewhere, without infringing on the basic rights of parliament and hon. members.

Mr. Speaker, the chairman of our committee on procedure in a masterly speech explained the main recommendations included in the report and I do not intend to reconsider them. I should like to speak briefly of the increasing importance of the standing committees of the house and of the need to reorganize them in such a way that they will be able to carry out their task and contribute in a positive and efficient way to the work of parliament.

Members of the house, and particularly back-benchers, who are often frustrated because they cannot participate enough in the preparation and consideration of bills and in the examination of estimates, will be able to make use of their talents and take an active part in discussions on subjects which they know well and which interest them. They will be able to do so, moreover, in more favourable circumstances than in committee of the whole; they will be able to discuss specific points and obtain answers and information from the ministers concerned and their officials.

Estimates will be referred to the appropriate standing committees, which will be able to examine them in advance and in detail. Moreover, the opposition will also have about 28 days, during three predetermined periods of time, in which to raise specific questions of its choice in the house, and the option of presenting six motions of non-confidence in the government on questions which it will choose itself or resulting from the reports of the standing committees. Parliament will therefore be able to control more adequately the administrative and legislative activities of the government.

All bills, except those derived from money resolutions or ways and means resolutions and those which the house has decided to stand, will be referred to the standing committees for detailed study before being reported back to the house. I think we need well-organized committees which will have enough time to study the measures submitted to them. This will probably require periodic adjournments of the business of the house, as was suggested in the conclusions of the third report of the committee on procedure.

The Leader of the Opposition has expressed doubts cncerning the possibility for the committees to function properly due to their present limitations and in view of the increase in work which will result from the changes in procedure. I believe the government admits that the organization of committees will be necessary to allow them to operate in a practical and efficient way, for instance, through the provision of a greater number of experts, translators, secretaries, premises, and so on.

Members will soon realize the importance of committees and the necessity of being present at the meetings, but in any event, the evident advantages of this system are worth a try.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to discuss the numerous amendments which have been proposed and which will change considerably the old methods and the present practices of the house regarding matters as important as estimates and the procedure of the ways and means committee to levy taxes, following the proposals contained in the budget, and to authorize government expenditures.

Changing ordinary legislative procedures, and the rules on urgent debates as well as several other changes of lesser importance will enable our parliament to play its true role and to regain the prestige which it must have in the eyes of the people.

Finally, those rules are not immutable and if, in practice, it becomes obvious that some of them cause inconvenience or fail to give the expected results, they can be amended by the house which sets its own rules. Besides, realizing the effects of its recommendations, the committee suggested setting up a standing committee on procedure which could revise the recommendations and complete the work of the special committee. In fact, that committee had only a few weeks to deal with the problems it considered most important and most pressing.

I am confident that with the full co-operation of the members, those changes will not have the disastrous consequences some take pleasure in predicting every time the rules and procedures are changed substantially. Instead, they will result in the adaptation of our parliamentary procedure to the needs of a new and complex world which requires the efficient use of the time of the house during a parliamentary session.

[Mr. Forest.]

[English]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, ever since I first became a member of this house I have been a zealous, indeed an impatient advocate for parliamentary reform. I believe, as do most other members, I am sure, that parliament is the supreme instrument of democracy and therefore the best means of bringing about needed changes within society. Therefore I want it to be both efficient and respected.

It has seemed to me that there is in parliament today unnecessary repetition at various stages of debate, that speeches should be shorter as indeed they are in the British House of Commons. The development of a more efficient system of examining legislation and estimates in committees would enable elected members to take a much more meaningful part in the proceedings of parliament than they do at the present time.

It is for these reasons that I deeply regret the government has seen fit to include within the package of parliamentrary reform, most of which I can heartily support, the poisonous pill of the proposed rule 16A. To get the desired reform of parliament we are asked to swallow rule 16A. I for one cannot possibly swallow this pill. The reasons for rejection of rule 16A have already been well stated by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and by the hon. members for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and York South (Mr. Lewis), among others. They bear repetition.

Rule 16A as it is presently drawn undermines the very institution we are supposed to be improving. Parliament has already been rendered far too impotent by the growth of executive power. This rule would complete that process. By limiting debating time within the sole and arbitrary discretion of the executive, rule 16A would deprive the opposition in parliament of its only real weapon. That weapon is the right to rouse public opposition by reasonable debate in this house. It has been said before that members of parliament might as well go home if this rule is passed because their power to have any reasonable degree of control over the executive by an appeal through debate to the power of public opinion would be virtually removed.

The rule is very sweeping in form. A minister of the crown may propose a motion for the purpose of ordering any arrangement for the calling and allotting of time for the consideration and dispatch of any item or items of the business of the house or its committees. I do not think any reasonable observer of parliament would deny the desirability of time allocation in parliament. This is indeed essential if parliament is to get through needed legislation.

I have no doubt that there are in the administrative pipe line many legislative drafts which urgently need to be enacted into law. I take, for example, the amendments to the Immigration Act set out in the government's own white paper. A new Immigration Act has been promised by at least the last ten ministers of immigration but never produced in parliament. I think of another example, the need to replace the present antiquated Expropriation Act, described by hon. Mr. Justice Thorson as the worst in the western world.

Time allocation is a reasonable, indeed a necessary proposal. It must be adopted. But to spring from this necessity to the proposed rule which gives the government unlimited power to dictate the length of debate is to abandon the idea of consensus, reason and agreement and put the proceedings of this house in the hands of a single man. It may be said that the government house leader must be supported by a majority in the house, but we all know that 999 times out of 1,000 the majority would support the house leader. The opposition, no matter how strong their case and how deep their conviction, would have to accept a stifling limitation of debate on the sole judgment of the executive.

For the opposition to acquiesce in such a measure would be to betray our responsibility not simply to this parliament but to the whole institution of parliamentary democracy. The government, as I have said, would be the absolute master of the house. This may be precisely what they want, for all I know. It is precisely this that we must resist. I find it tragic that when 90 per cent of the proposals for parliamentary reform are agreed to, and indeed welcomed, by nearly all the members of the house, this opportunity of getting an agreed reform is thrown away by the apparently uncompromising determination of the government to use the opportunity to force the seizure of absolute power over the procedures of the house.

Apparently the government does not pay any attention to members speaking in the house. The minister in charge is not here and the rest of the members on the Liberal side are chatting. Nevertheless I plead with them all the same. I plead with the government, even at this stage, to take a new look at rule 16A. As I say, perhaps one is wasting one's breath talking in this house—perhaps we should have short debates.

Mr. Basford: I am listening.

Mr. Brewin: That is very encouraging. There is one minister listening.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He is the only one here.

Mr. Brewin: This is a debate that affects the whole future of parliamentary democracy, and yet one minister sits and reads while the debate proceeds. I think this is something worth commenting on. It is some indication of the seriousness with which this government takes the whole institution of parliamentary democracy.

Despite the circumstances I plead with the government, through the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs if he will listen to me—I am glad he is listening—to take a new look at rule 16A. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has already made proposals for a reasonable compromise. He has conceded that when there are unanimous decisions of the committee in regard to the allocation of time its decisions can be made an order of the house without debate. It is suggested that when the majority of the committee is in favour of a proposed time allocation, it can be debated with respect to individual items with a minimum of debate. In fact, if one of the parties in opposition agrees with the government it will be possible, after a fairly short debate, to allocate time to the item. This in itself provides a reasonable prospect that no unreasonable attitude by a single party in opposition can hold up the business of the house.

The present proposal in rule 16A provides for the case where there is an impasse between the government on the one side and all the opposition parties on the other. It proposes that this can be resolved by the dictate of the minister and a simple majority in the house. It can be imposed, moreover, not in regard to a single item only but in regard to as many items as the government suggests. The rule is without any guide line or restraint whatsoever.

Surely some reasonable provision can be found. The case of an impasse between government and opposition occurs, and I think should be dealt with. It is true that in a case where all of the opposition parties obstinately refuse to agree to a reasonable time allocation on an individual item, the process of closure would be open to the government. But it may be, however, that in respect of individual items and after a reasonable time for the opposition to state its objections in debate, and subject to some reasonable limitation, the majority supporting the government should be able to resolve the impasse. I am not pleading that there should be no rule dealing with situations where there is an impasse, but this is a far cry from the present proposed rule.

I would suggest to the government as a possible basis for a compromise solution minimum time limits in the allocation orders imposed by a government majority. This has already been proposed by Professor MacGregor Dawson in "Procedure in the House of Commons of Canada". Surely it is worth the effort on the part of the committee to come up with a solution which would be fair to the government and to the opposition alike and not an imposed solution. I understand that no real effort has been made in this committee to deal with this key matter, and I suggest that this house should not be asked to vote on approval of this rule until a real effort has been made by the committee on procedure to see whether the suggestion of Professor MacGregor Dawson or some other suggestion to deal with this impasse reasonably can be implemented.

In order that the proposed changes and reforms in parliament be secured without bitterness, I urge the government to agree to refer the matter back to the committee to arrive at some such solution which would recognize at once the rights of the opposition and still give some reasonable means, but not unlimited means, whereby the government can, in the absence of compromise, allocate time. If the government refuses to consider a compromise on rule 16A, it will indicate clearly that it prefers to be arbitrary, and that it is prepared to ride roughshod over the basic rights of the opposition. I suggest in all seriousness to the government members that this will not do their party, let alone this parliament, any good.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Brewin: There is room for a reasonable solution if reasonable men will look for it and look carefully at it. As I have said, I suggest that Professor MacGregor Dawson's proposals would be one basis for a discussion. To ram this down our throats is unwise as well as dangerous to parliamentary democracy.

It may be claimed that in the interests of efficiency the imposition of this rule is necessary. But suppose it leaves an embittered house and a justly suspicious public. I say it will poison the good effects of the proposed reforms of parliamentary procedure. Instead of being something adopted by all of us to improve the procedures of this house, this is something imposed on us by a majority vote and in the face of a lack of any reasonable attempt to reach a compromise on this issue. As I said, it will poison the good effects which would flow from the proposed reform of parliamentary procedures.

Although we are and will remain a parliament divided by party and no doubt a forum of vigorous party differences, vigorously expressed, there is no reason why the different parties should not co-operate in this parliament to produce a legislative record of which all parties can be proud. I suggest that the best way to start this is for the government to set the tone of parliament by accepting a compromise in this regard. They can set the tone, indeed, by insisting on securing virtually dictatorial powers over the procedures of parliament. They can set a tone which will seriously jeopardize the usefulness of parliament. It can seriously diminish the power of parliament. It can arrogate to the executive even more power than it has today. It can cripple and emasculate the effective functioning of the opposition and hence of parliament itself. To what end and to what purpose would they do this? Surely they should, even at this stage, look for means of compromise whereby we can work out together a procedure which would enable this parliament to be effective and to do a good job.

There are one or two other matters in regard to the report which I wish to discuss, one that I think has not been discussed before. I notice that the committee in section 38 of its report refers to private members' bills and motions and suggests that a means should be found whereby such bills and motions could come to a final decision or be referred to a committee for study. May I urge that this proposal be given a high degree of priority in the future deliberations of the committee. It has always seemed to me that the private members' hour sometimes reaches a high degree of futility. Even high school debaters are at least at liberty to express an opinion at the end of their discussions. But day after day parliament sees the procedure of private members' bills being talked out and dropped to the foot of the order paper, usually not to be discussed for another year. Some people think that this is of some value because the subject matter of the discussion is at least brought to the attention of the government by the debate and may eventually be adopted by them. Some people say that occasionally the press will deign to notice a private member's bill and thereby give it some publicity. But surely there are better ways of publicizing an idea than to waste an hour of parliament's time in a discussion which practically never results in a decision.

When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) spoke in this debate about government business, Mr. Speaker, he said that debate was all right but it should not be divorced from decision. I quite agree with that. Why should this, however, not apply to private members' bills as well? Why should debate forever be divorced from decision with regard to the bills brought before this house by private members? I appreciate that time makes it impossible to deal with all the private members' bills that might be introduced in a session, but surely it would be better to deal with some of them seriously and either pass them or reject them or else send them to a committee, than to have a large number brought forward only to be killed after an hour's desultory debate.

I would rather introduce one private member's bill during the life of a parliament which was seriously discussed and perhaps defeated or passed than introduce six bills per session, none of which was either accepted or rejected. Why should members bother to introduce private bills? Why should one bother trying to persuade one's colleagues in the house or the members of other parties about the seriousness of a matter which you are trying to introduce, when you know the bill is going to go through this farcical procedure that we go through in this house?

It has been proposed that more legislation be referred to the committees. This is well and good. I think the committees, in themselves, could be very useful as a better source of legislation than some of the bureaucratic sources which now produce our legislation or do not produce it, as the case may be. A great many more private members' bills should be sent to committees. There is a tendency now to say that a good idea is not a good idea if it comes from a private member of parliament. I think this is a great mistake. This would do a good deal to enhance the legislative responsibilities of the individual member of parliament, whether he be a government or an opposition member. The present procedure in connection with private members' hour, it seems to me, tends to demean the seriousness of the functions of the individual member of parliament, and indeed of parliament itself. Surely it would be possible to arrange that those private members' bills which are fortunate enough to get high up on the order paper could be discussed and either accepted or rejected or referred to a committee, after or before three consecutive hours of discussion during the time available for private members' bills.

I might say, while I am on the subject, it seems to me something ought to be done about private bills as distinguished from private members' public bills. Many of these should be dealt with by machinery outside parliament rather than taking the time of the elected representatives of Canada.

Fundamental to the proposed reform in this report is the more effective functioning of the committees. What is proposed of course is not, as has been sometimes said, the adoption of the congressional system of the United States of America. The function of the committees should be, in effect, to secure a consensus if possible, and to enable government policies to be discussed and criticized by elected representatives before they become law. In my view a properly functioning committee system could tremendously invigorate the work of parliament. Let me pick one or two examples within my experience. There is no reason why the committee on immigration should not perform the function of checking the delegated legislation, namely, the orders in council which are the chief regulators of immigration policy today. At the same time, the committee could act as an ombudsman in immigration matters which so deeply affect the lives of so many individuals.

The committee on external affairs and national defence could be a means whereby the views of experts on Canadian policy in this field could be brought to the attention of the public, and could be brought to bear upon the actual policies of government in this important field. This would be a lot more important than the one-shot special review which the government is now undertaking. The contribution to be made by a vigorous and experienced committee on principle in this field would enable Canada to take a real grasp over Canadian sovereignty and have incalculable results. However, an effective committee system will require not only the co-operation of the individual members but also a real effort on the part of the government. The government will have to be ready to take seriously the recommendations of the committees. It will have to make better use of the committees, to use them as a means of securing a consensus. Only if the government is willing will it be able to use committees to obtain the contributions of individual members, whether on the government or on the opposition side, in the process not only of drafting legislation but in reviewing policy.

There have been some committees, of which I have been a member, which were virtually useless. I remember, for example, that the Columbia river treaty was referred to the committee on external affairs. This was a vast treaty affecting the future of this country in a very important manner. At the opening of the hearing the then secretary of state for external affairs came in and said that not one comma in the treaty would be changed, no matter what the committee decided to do. The lengthy sittings of the committee were a lugubrious post mortem on the treaty, relieved only by the vigorous and unextinguishable opposition of General Andrew McNaughton.

The committee on national defence which studied unification was equally useless. After the government had insisted on second reading and insisted that there be no change in the committee, all you had in the committee day in and day out was the transfer of the bickering to the committee rather than carrying it on in the house. This was a complete waste of time. Hon. members will have their own examples in their minds of committees which have worked, worked well, and made a contribution to the development or improvement of legislation. I recall, for example, the joint committee on divorce which laid the foundations for the divorce bill and, indeed, brought to light progressive proposals which went much too far for the present rather conservative administration. Of one thing you can be sure, and that is that the core of the present proposals for the reform and revitalization of parliament will not work unless the committee system functions effectively. We will all have a very great measure of responsibility in trying to make that committee system work.

I notice that at the moment even the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is not here. Not a single representative of the government is present so far as I can see. Oh, the Minister without Portfolio is here. In conclusion, I once again ask the government to be reasonable about changes to rule 16A. A flexible attitude in this regard would seem to be indicated by the Prime Minister's own remarks last Tuesday night. The government could bring a real measure of reform to our parliamentary procedures, with the enthusiasm and support of all parties. It could set the tone for the future of this parliament. I plead with the government not to insist on having its way in this regard but to take a fresh look at this problem.

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I want to say that it was a privilege to have had the opportunity of serving as a member of the special committee on procedure of the House of Commons. It was a small committee numbering 12 members compared with the usual standing committee of 20 members. It did its work in camera without the presence of the press and without calling witnesses. The sessions were working sessions, shirt-sleeve sessions and sometime luncheon or evening sessions. It was a hard working, effective committee, and I want to say particularly how much I enjoyed the association not only with my own colleagues but with hon. members opposite who did their part in bringing about the reforms of the rules. It is a fact that at the end of the sessions held by that committee we were unable to come up with complete agreement on what the standing orders should provide, but there was a very broad accord within the four walls as members worked together in real understanding about the place of parliamentary procedure in governing the work we must do here. Therefore it was a very worth-while experience for me to have the privilege of associating myself in this endeavour with members of the House of Commons from all parties.

We in this house have the dubious privilege of owning what is perhaps the most antiquated set of rules in a modern parliament. While the story of how we came to inherit such a set of rules and why we are the antiquarians of the rules in Commonwealth parliaments has been told in this house before, perhaps it is worth telling once again in sketchy form. When we confederated in 1867 we inherited the rules of the House of Commons of Great Britain. These were the leisurely paced, mid-Victorian rules of that time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Deachman: Mr. Speaker, may I first say that I bow to the very superior knowledge of the rules of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. If he wants to make points or to ask questions about what I have to say today, I am sure he can cut me to ribbons because I am a novice in the field. I think I have a rough idea as to what has happened to us historically. However, I would be very glad to give the hon. member an opportunity of asking his question.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I thank the hon. member for his kindness. I just wanted to be helpful since he is giving what appears to be an interesting bit of history. Is it not a fact that the rules that we took over in 1867, though originally they may have come from Westminster, were actually the rules of the House of Assembly of the parliament of the old province of Canada that existed from 1841 to 1867, which in turn had come from Upper and Lower Canada? I thought that he would like to have the complete story.

Mr. Deachman: I think that is a fact. In searching my mind I recall that these rules were put together under the helpful guidance of Alpheus Todd, Clerk of the House of Commons in the union of Upper and Lower Canada. This was the man who bequeathed to the present House of Commons its first set of rules, who went on to become librarian of the House of Commons and whose son subsequently also served the house. So I agree with what the hon. member says.

As I was saying, our rules are essentially the former rules of the British House of Commons. As the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) has said, commencing in 1881 the British house programmed its work. It was during that year that the British house had to face the troubles caused by the Irish party which brought the work of the House of Commons to a standstill. It became apparent to the members of the House of Commons of that day, accustomed to working at leisure in what was essentially a club, that there now had to be brought into the house a little more order and decorum, some mastery of its own rules and some capability of planning its affairs. As a result the rules of that period were vastly overhauled.

When the new dominions of Australia and New Zealand joined what was then called the British Empire they inherited not the leisurely rules of 1867 of mid-Victorian times but the updated rules of the British House of Commons following the Irish troubles in the house in 1881. At the turn of the century they set out to make rules for themselves which were updated from the rules of 1881 and vastly updated from the rules of 1867 or prior thereto, rules which essentially we have inherited. So it is, Mr. Speaker, that the Australians and New Zealanders have become the modern exponents of Commonwealth parliamentary rules. Great Britain has held the middle ground in rule making, and we in Canada have become the antiquarians of the rules of the House of Commons.

What precisely does the expression "antiquarians of the rules of the House of Commons" mean? It is not very easy to answer this. Everybody knows that the House of Commons wastes time but no one knows exactly how time is wasted. To get to the root of the problem I analysed the time spent on each item of the business of the house in the second session of the 27th parliament, which began on May 8, 1967, and ended its work on March 27, 1968. It was not the longest session of that parliament but it was, as I shall show in a minute, a session of more than normal length. This analysis was made possible, I might say, by the introduction into Hansard during the twenty seventh parliament of the notations of time at ten minute time intervals which hon. members can see in the record today.

The second session of the twenty seventh parliament of Canada encompassed a period of 46 weeks during which the house sat for 32 weeks, or 154 days. The hours in session amounted to 821, according to my own calculations, though there may be a fractional error there because it is pretty hard to figure them out exactly. An additional 26 hours were taken up on adjournment debates.

During that session government business consumed 72 per cent of the working time of the house, or 582 hours. Government motions, oral questions, privilege and urgent debates under standing order 26 took 20 per cent of the house's time, or 164 hours. Private members' business took 8 per cent of the time, or about 75 hours. These figures are exclusive of the 26 hours consumed during the adjournment debate after ten o'clock.

In a normal sessional week the house sits, as we know, 28½ hours, exclusive of dinner hours and the adjournment debate. The question period at the commencement of each day requires three hours and 30 minutes per week, according to our present rules. Opposition members have seldom been known to relinquish a minute of this time.

Other business preceding the first item of government business, including questions of privilege, motions, and questions of urgency under standing order 26, required an average of 19 minutes a day, or one hour and 37 minutes a week. Thus it took over five hours a week to get to the first item of government business.

Apart from the fixed oral question period, the most time-consuming items in this period were government motions and replies to them, questions of privilege and questions of urgency, which at times developed into lengthy debates and also added to the time consumed before government business could be reached. On six days during the second session of the twenty seventh parliament this period took up the whole time of sitting, leaving no time at all for government business. On five other days the period exceeded two and a half hours. This represents a total loss of working time of two weeks in the course of a session.

It required 20 per cent or one-fifth of the house's time to get past the question period. It took two full weeks or ten sitting days to get through the speech from the throne debate at the beginning of the second session of the twenty seventh parliament. It is interesting to note that at the opening of this current session hon. members bored each other stiff with their own talk and gave up the throne speech debate at the end of the seventh day.

The budget is another timed debate. In the second session of the twenty seventh parliament the Minister of Finance brought down two budgets. They were discussed in the months of June, October, November, December and March on a total of 19 days, and included the budget statement itself and the debate on the bills. These two debates, the throne speech debate and the budget debate, took up 29 working days or a period of almost six weeks.

We should be careful in approaching this subject not to imagine we are modernizing our House of Commons rules. We are not. We are simply modifying procedures which were inherited over a century ago and which we have kept almost intact like a family heirloom. When we have finished amending our standing orders we will be applying procedures which other parliaments have been using for decades. There is nothing revolutionary about what we are doing here. In the light of modern legislative practice we are barely updating ourselves to the 20th century.

Lest I be accused of exaggerating let me describe one of our procedures. We take a whole day to hear the Governor General read the speech from the throne. There was a time when this speech was a simple and unadorned catalogue of legislation which the government proposed to introduce during the session. Today the style is to fortify this naked statement with sugary adjectives and syrupy editorializing. I will not go so far as to say that recent speeches from the throne were written by C.B.C. scriptwriters, but I will say that they could be fitted into a Quentin Durgens script with very little editing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Deachman: That is all we do on the first day. Next day two new and starry-eyed members move and second the address, and that is all we do on the second day. On the third day the leaders speak, and when they have finished almost everyone gets up and walks out. For the next week and a half oratory crashes and reverberates through the almost empty chamber until it is finally silenced by votes or, as was the case in September, by common consent out of sheer boredom.

One might excuse this old charade if we did it only at the opening of a new parliament, but we do it every session. In the lifetime of this parliament, if it runs four sessions, it will take up eight weeks or two months of parliamentary time. And the throne speech is not the only time consumer. We debate the budget for a week and then we debate the budget resolutions. Recently we have been bringing down two budgets a year, doubling the time required for the budget debate. We send the estimates of the departments to the standing committees of the house for detailed examination. When they come back to the house we examine them in detail again in committee of supply.

I ask you, sir, if you set out to devise a way of examining estimates would you invite 364 people into a cathedral-sized room and ask them to get on with examining the estimates? And if you found year after year that only about 20 or 30 people came when it was time to examine the estimates would you not imagine, perhaps, that the procedure had become outdated and it was time to change it? When we sit here sometimes near the end of a session or just before the Christmas or Easter recess and have estimates to pass we find ourselves saying, "Shall vote 5 carry—carried, shall vote 10 carry—carried, shall vote 15 carry—carried", and when we look up at the gallery and see people there who may have come great distances to find out what parliament does do we not wonder what they may think of us and why we have not devised a better way of carrying on our business? We alone among Commonwealth parliaments have hung on to these antique practices and that is why, sir, the procedure committee is anxious to see them changed.

I want to deal for a moment with the way we use our time and with the way we spent our time on bills. It has been said many times in discussions in this house and among ourselves, and it was brought up one time in the procedure committee, that on average we really do not take too much time on bills and if the programming of the work of the house were just left to the good will of hon. members we would work out a logical program in which there would be adequate time for the examination of bills. Well, sir, let me give you an idea of how the house has behaved in regard to the examination of bills when no timing device has been used. When we look at the record of government bills considered during the second session of the twenty seventh parliament we see that we spent four days on the Cape Breton Development Corporation, three days on the manpower and immigration bill and five days on the C.N.R. bill, No. C-151. We spent three days on the emergency gold mining bill, seven days on corporate and consumer affairs—

Mr. Basford: Hear, hear.

Mr. Deachman: —and nine days on the broadcasting bill, No. C-163. I note that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is applauding the seven days we spent on his department. I can advise him that unless we are able to arrange and program our work we might not be able to get ministers' future bills through this house.

Between January 22 and Easter we spent on the Criminal Code amendment eight days; on the Judges Act, three days; on the divorce reform bill, six days; on the Income Tax Act, five days; on the broadcasting bill, No. C-163, 12 days; on the patent bill, three days; and on the Income Tax Act, that is, wrapping up the budget, three days. That, sir, is the way we employed our time on bills. When we look at the work we have to do in the house, how can we possibly pursue a schedule like that? How can we possibly, within the limits of 365 days, employ our time usefully in this house if we pursue a program of that kind? Sir, when the procedure committee during the last session went to England and talked with the officers and members of parliament at Westminster regarding the employment of their time, its members came back and prepared their fourth report, an ecstatic report on the way the affairs of the House of Commons of Great Britain are handled. And no one was more ecstatic than the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) who is leading the party opposite in the discussion on this measure. Let me tell you, sir, what they said about the way legislation should be handled in the light of their experience in Great Britain. They said:

> —the ministry has a right to bring forward each year a legislative programme appropriate to a session of normal length with knowledge that the House of Commons will decide expeditiously whether or not to pass each of the proposed measures. Intense debate followed by decision is regarded as reasonable and advantageous by members from both sides.

Sir, I only hope that hon. members on the opposition side realize what members of parliament in Great Britain have already realized that the programming of the work of the House of Commons means a more efficient House of Commons not only from the standpoint of the government itself but from the standpoint of every backbencher who serves in the house. The committee made its report to this house. Hon. members opposite helped to write it and agreed to it. The committee went on to say:

> At the same time it is recognized that the opposition should be given ample time in each session to bring forward for debate and decision its own substantive motions.
> Two observations were heard repeatedly at Westminster. The first was, "we have decided that there are only 365 days in the year." The second was, "We have decided that in debate there comes a time when enough is enough."

Then the committee reported:

> We have reached the conclusion that at Westminster the opposition is willing to accept intense debate and speedy decision on government bills partly because this approach is conducive to order in the daily and weekly business of the house and to predictability in the duration of the sessions, but chiefly because of the efficient way in which supply days are used at Westminster.

The proposals we have introduced do not follow exactly the procedure at Westminster nor in Australia or New Zealand, but they are, I believe, the best that people with long experience of parliamentary rules have been able to devise with the assistance of many who have studied the rules of the House of Commons for many years. The principal cause of difficulty between us arises from the proposed rule 16A which would allow for the programming of the work of the house and under which the number of days to be given to each important piece of legislation and, indeed, to all business which goes through the house, could be determined. This is objected to on the grounds that it would throttle the ability of members opposite to carry debate to what they believe to be its ultimate and just conclusion.

There are three ways in which we can manage our affairs in dealing with legislation. We can, as we do now, let debate run on until it runs out, perhaps keeping on the record the old guillotine order just as a farmer might keep an old and rusty gun in his cellar. He knows he dare not fire it because it might blow up in his face, but it gives him some kind of comfort. He does not really intend to use it, but it is there.

The next way is the closure method by means of which, if debate on a measure or a bill has gone on far enough, an attempt is made to bring the discussion to an end. Well those of us who have been here for two or three sessions or more have some experience of how this works in practice.

A bill is introduced and after debate has gone on for some time cabinet ministers on the front benches begin to lean toward each other and ask: "Do you think this has gone on long enough? Are they going to keep it going for another day, or do you suppose they are waiting for some of the people out west to get back to the house and have their say before the bill goes through?" Then they say: "Perhaps we should let it go on for another day." At the end of the day the leader of the house gets up and says: "I wonder whether we could have unanimous consent to continue this debate for another half hour or so in the hope we can make a little progress." And somebody down at the other end of the chamber says: "I see it is ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker." So no more progress is made that day and it appears there is no desire to get the bill through.

What happens next? We go into caucus where the minister gets up and says: I do not know whether they are filibustering, and the only thing we can do is let it go on for another day. Then he turns to the backbenchers and says: "Look, you will not get any votes by debating this bill in the house tomorrow, so if you would please shut up we will get on with letting the opposition members talk. Perhaps they will run out of speakers soon and we shall be able to get on with the next measure."

What happens then? Ten o'clock comes around and still the bill has not gone through. Now the backbenchers are anxious to get on with something else, and hoping to get into the act they begin to creep down to the front benches to whisper in the minister's ear and ask whether he intends to apply closure. The minister remembers what happened to C.D. Howe and after thinking a little he says: "No, I don't want to do that. I believe they are running out of speakers. They have only got five guys left over there and they are not very good."

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Deachman: We have all seen that sort of thing go on this session in connection with bills which were not all that important, either. Hours slip into days, days into weeks, and our work here in the house has not been done.

The other alternative is the one we suggest in rule 16A, that we should do as other parliaments have done and program our work.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Deachman: When I appeal to hon. members to program the work I do not expect to receive thunderous applause from the opposite side. I notice I am not receiving it. It is probably a fact of history that no opposition member ever moved a motion to program the work of the government or voted in favour of such a motion when it was brought forward by a government. This is because opposition members have a vested interest in confusion. They do not want to see the government programming its work and running its affairs in the House of Commons in an orderly or businesslike fashion. They do not want to see these bills going through as planned, to hear the arguments set forward both for and against and then vote on them and move forward to something else. No sir, that is not for opposition members.

I doubt very much, unless there are some philosophers over there instead of politicians, that we shall get a great deal of help from the opposition. But I come back to the point that in Britain government and opposition members alike are disposed to retain the ground they have gained in the programming of their own work.

I wish to draw attention to another aspect. You will note, Mr. Speaker, that members opposite who went to Britain and talked to people there about the way in which they program their work also agreed to the fourth report and were, in fact, quite starry-eyed about it. Indeed, when I spoke to the hon. member for Peace River some time before the last election—as a matter of fact it was before we even knew there was to be an election —he was starry-eyed and ecstatic about it, simply because the convention of last April had not taken place, and he did not know that after the election we would be on the government side and he would be sitting in opposition. He had it in his mind that we would be sitting over there on the opposition benches and he would be programming the work of a Tory parliament. He wanted it so badly he could taste it and he framed it in the words of the fourth report.

Sir, we know what we have to do here. We have to get on with ordering the work of parliament in an orderly way. I think that in their hearts members opposite also know that this has to be done. They know that when the time comes it is not really going to be all that distasteful. We are not really going to take away from them the right of debate. They know this has not been done in other parliaments where work is programmed.

But quite apart from that I want to appeal to members opposite just to be fair. I appeal to them in this way. I share the business of being a backbencher and I think we backbenchers, including those opposite, want to do what is right in order to provide justice to the backbenchers in this house. We do not care about the ministry. We know they will get in their licks. We do not care about that long range of extinct volcanoes opposite that occupy the front bench. I am concerned about the backbenchers. I appeal to them.

If we program our work the majority of the poor backbenchers will then be able to take part in debates. We on this side of the house, who now sit on our hands waiting for the people on the other side to run out of steam, will be able to take part in timed debates. We won the last election so easily that we came back here with backbenchers in large numbers. The majority of backbenchers are on the Liberal side and in fact slop over into the corner to your left, Mr. Speaker, so that there is a whole rump parliament operating over there. These are the people who have to be given justice under the new rules. I appeal to all backbenchers to pass 16-A and make it possible for the majority of backbenchers to take part in the proceedings of this house in an equitable way, the way we should be able to.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Deachman: We know that opposition members want to hear what we have to say and so I ask them for the privilege of letting us enter into debates in the way in which they now do, and share with them the delights of being full-blown parliamentarians. Let us pass 16-A. Let us program the work. Let us all go to work and not just some of us.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak to the report of the committee on parliamentary procedure. For our part, we have been hoping for a long time that a similar committee would be set up and would produce a report. I expect all the members in this house have also been hoping that a study on parliamentary reform would be made.

A while ago, I listened with great interest to the member who preceded me as he outlined the work of that committee and explained how our government operates under the present rules. We found it a bit amusing, just as visitors do when they find out how our procedure works and our debates proceed. As proof of this, may I mention this person who, the other day, sat in the galleries while we were adopting the estimates. This person heard the whole rigmarole. When I met her, I asked her what she thought of it. She said that here the litanies are very long. Indeed, she thought we were reciting the litany of the Blessed Virgin or the Sacred Heart and felt like saying "Ora pro nobis".

Mr. Speaker, this gives you an idea of the picture a spectator can get when he follows some of our debates. That is why, for six years now, we have been begging various governments to modernize the process and make those rules more realistic and up to date.

Mr. Speaker, allow me first of all to congratulate the team of members who worked hard on the committee on Procedure. Here is a striking example of what sincere men can accomplish when striving for the progress of our society. Ninety-eight per cent of the amendments proposed were accepted unanimously by the members of the committee. Is this not outstanding work intended to improve the working methods of the house and to make its debates more effective?

I will not recall here all the points raised in commitee. Tonight I would like to deal with one point only which was not settled and make my humble suggestions to the house. I am sure that during the Christmas season a happy solution will be found to the ticklish problems which concern all hon. members because I cannot believe for a single moment that 263 hon. members will dare play politics about a matter of such importance to the survival of our democracy.

In fact, I think we are dealing with the most delicate part of the rules of the house. I will even say that we are at the heart of a problem which has been a stumbling block for past governments and the main reason for that waste of time and money which in some way has led the people to lose faith in parliament.

Today, we come to the crux of the matter, at the crossroads of democracy and dictatorship, because to be realistic one must admit there is some dictatorship in any democracy, just like a dictatorship cannot survive without some democratization. In fact, any move made by one man or a majority group, whether it is called a political party or otherwise, becomes a dictatorial act for the minority group. It cannot be otherwise, since the law of the majority is the very foundation of any healthy democracy.

Therefore, it is on this principle that I want to call the attention of this house, since we admit that parliament is made up of political parties, one of which is a majority party, that is the one that received a greatest number of votes and consequently, it represents the majority of the democratic community.

Having established this principle, I think that we should now rise above our respective parties, and engage in a frank and fair discussion. Yet, if some members are not competent, they should, in the days ahead, yield to those who are, because one must not forget that the members of this government, sooner or later, will feel the good or ill effects of the new legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I think that if, for a few days only, we could reach a certain degree of individual freedom and independence, it would be a lot easier to get legislation passed, which would be in line with reality.

It is for that reason that we second the amendment to refer the matter to a standing committee where order 16A can be considered again, and where we will be in a position to discuss it openly and in a friendly way. We would be far from this parliamentary platform where everyone is anxious to show himself to advantage, at the expense of the main issue.

Of course, it is easier for us, members of the Ralliement créditiste, to work towards the passing of a sound legislation because unlike other parties, our party cares only about the interests of the people.

Our first question is as follows: Why did the government introduce standing order 16-A? Why did the official opposition protest against this standing order?

In all fairness, Mr. Speaker, in order to make an impartial judgment, I must get inside the skin of a Liberal on the one hand, and a Conservative on the other.

In view of the party which I represent, this is quite an easy thing for me to do, for I have no special ties with either one of those parties, particularly since those who elected me here are all former Liberals or former Conservatives. Therefore I am not dealing with the problems of committed Liberals or Conservatives.

If I were a real Liberal, a docile one, I would naturally be in favour of standing order 16A, because it is the instrument above all others which will give my party supreme power. On the other hand, if I were a true Conservative, I would oppose it for the opposite reasons.

I am a member of a free party which wants to be logical, constructive and progressive. We have given proof of this since we have been sitting in this house, for our motto is to vote for good measures and against those which are not in the best interest of our fellow-citizens.

Therefore, as I have said, we are supporting the amendment in order to find a logical, impartial and non partisan solution to the present conflict.

In my opinion, and I say it quite simply, neither the government nor the official opposition are totally right or totally wrong. Let me explain what I mean. Let us talk of democracy, since that is what is at stake. We have said that majority rule is the very basis of democracy, and I hope that is accepted by everybody. Therefore, we can conclude forthwith that it is the party that has received the greatest number of votes that represents the majority, and that is the people's will. Thus, we can say that this government is a majority government by the will of the people.

Now, at the leaders level, the same government becomes suddenly a minority government, since they are now three against one, as compared to the majority received from the people. I believe this is the whole problem Mr. Speaker. The members of the opposition want democracy in this meeting, but would it not be the right time to ask ourselves if the composition of this assembly is not at variance with this same democracy?

The problem is so serious that we wonder which group is sinning the most against democracy. If it is the leaders group, in my opinion, that is where the remedy should be applied. The government house leader has been so untractable, that he has done like the surgeon who cut off his patient's head because there seemed to be something wrong with it.

Therefore, it is only natural that every member is protesting. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the government house leader went further than be intended in his proposals, because I cannot conceive that a man, who calls himself a democrat, could honestly speak like that. It is with good reason that the opposition members clamour that democracy is dead, as this will happen very soon if the proposed rule 16-A is adopted.

However, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) left us yesterday with a glimpse of hope when he stated that his government remained willing to discuss the matter. Now, if the government is sincere, and truly eager to preserve democracy in this country, there is one logical thing it can do towards the suggested reform, and that is to invest the government with such authority as to enable it to discharge its responsibilities while guaranteeing the rights of the minorities. What about turning the present committee on procedure into the paramount instrument we need to direct the proceedings of the house? We would have, in that committee, as in any other standing committee, proportional representation with majority rule.

Ever since I have been here, Mr. Speaker, I have been aware of the fact that the meetings of the leaders, because of inadequate representation, have caused some fancy skating and disputes that have left the people bewildered. Let us stop once and for all these futile hagglings and let us tackle boldly the real problem and find a genuine solution, namely a leaders committee with proportional representation of all parties or, if we wish, a committee on the business of the house.

I am under the impression that by acting as he did the government leader wanted to accelerate the work of the house. I firmly believe that they are all ready to sit at the committee table and draft a new legislation which will give the government the necessary powers to use its majority mandate without undermining the rights of other members.

I was always told that a small peaceful settlement is better than all great wars. I am confident, Mr. Speaker, that every member is truly trying to find the reform which is needed. At Christmas time, let us show the country that we are men of goodwill, not only by our words, but also by our deeds.

• (5:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Flemming: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether it would be presumptuous to ask to call it six o'clock?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Perhaps we could call it six o'clock and make the five minute adjustment as we approach seven o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It is my duty, pursuant to standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin)—Industry—Production in Canada of parts for new jet planes; the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis)—Consumer Affairs—Request that protection be included in the Criminal Code; the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid)—Unidentified Flying Objects—Reported sightings over Sioux Lookout, Ont.

Motions for Papers

It being six o'clock, the house will now proceed to private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions (papers), private bills and public bills.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

AIR CANADA—REMOVAL OF WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière) moved:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all extracts of the minutes of the Board of Directors of Air Canada concerning the move of the maintenance base from Winnipeg to Montreal and of all correspondence exchanged between the government and Air Canada in connection with this matter.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have placed on the order paper a notice of motion for papers in order to know what were the issues discussed by the Board of Directors of Air Canada concerning the move of the maintenance base from Winnipeg to Montreal. Furthermore, in this notice of motion I asked for all correspondence exchanged between the government and Air Canada in connection of this matter.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) answered me yesterday that the tabling of such documents would create a precedent and would not be in line with government practice whereby Crown corporations are run in such a way that hon. members cannot inquire about their mode of operation.

Mr. Speaker, I fully realize that the subject matter of this motion is not at issue, that is, whether or not we should move the maintenance base from Winnipeg to Montreal or whether we should accept the offers that the federal government has just made to private companies with regard to the maintenance base. It is rather a question of discussing the opportunity of producing or tabling the documents to which I referred.

Mr. Speaker, if we take a closer look on the one hand at the administration of Crown corporations and their growing importance in the economic life of this country and, on the other hand, at the position of the Canadian government which refuses to produce information on the ground that it would be a precedent, I think that this is an obstacle to the efficient running of Crown corporations, since this house, in my opinion, has the right to know what is going on in the Crown corporations.

All members have been able to read the numerous questions I put on the order paper, regarding the administration of crown corporations, as well as the answers I received.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard).]

As to notice of motion No. 50, dealing with a particular subject, the government considers it to be a matter of principle, as far as can be seen by the answer given to me by the hon. Minister of Transport when he said that these had always been considered as privileged papers.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if it is a question of principle, I agree, but let it be a true matter of principle. In that connection, I shall refer the house to the answer to question No. 53 which I had put on the order paper in order to learn how many senior civil servants were earning $17,000 and more at Polymer corporation—a crown corporation—whose turnover amounts to more than $5 million a year.

I was given the following answer, and I quote:

Polymer Corporation does not have any civil servants in its employ.

Mr. Speaker, they are playing upon words; they have civil servants since it is said further on:

The corporation would not wish to furnish the information requested as disclosure of the number of employees earning $17,000 and more—

—and are bilingual

—would not be in the best interests of the company.

Mr. Speaker, if the possibility for hon. members to get information about the crown corporations is to be made into a matter of principle, we should be old, but we should be given sensible answers.

If I had accepted yesterday the answer given by the Minister of Transport to the effect that such documents could not be tabled, I would have perpetuated the good old tradition according to which, when a member has received an answer, he remains in his seat as was the custom under the good old system which prevailed in Quebec when one was told: You, shut up. That is somewhat familiar and I cannot understand that such a system could prevail here. I think it is of basic importance, Mr. Speaker, for us to be able to get such information.

I spoke a while ago of the Polymer corporation; it is an extremely serious problem and it is exactly the same case as that of Air Canada, about which I intend to speak immediately.

Allow me, by way of degression, to refer to the Polymer corporation. Mr. Speaker, why would the Polymer corporation refuse to provide that information? There is absolutely no reason. If there is any, it would be the lack of bilingual officials which would be quite compromising for that famous policy on bilinguism which is still suppose to be applicable in the public service. This is why the information is not disclosed.

In the case of Air Canada, Mr. Speaker, they refuse to provide those documents on the grounds that it would affect the competitive power of crown corporation.

Mr. Speaker, I will say again that this argument is not valid, because the Canadian government, owing to the considerable number of crown corporations, has given them a privileged status, so that they compete unfairly, and I say that sincerely, with private enterprise.

Moreover, not only are crown corporations granted commercial, jurisdictional and legislative privileges which are not granted to private enterprise, not only are they favoured to the prejudice of private enterprise, but members of the house still cannot get information on them or, if they do, it is by bits and pieces and sometimes, the information is wrong. For example, I am thinking of the answer I was given by the Polymer corporation.

Mr. Speaker, I had also put question No. 724 on the order paper, which included nine items, wherein I inquired about the famous maintenance base in Winnipeg, and I shall quote part of it:

> Did the President of Air Canada send a letter during February, 1963, to his employees informing them of the transfer of the base?

We know that such a letter has been sent, Mr. Speaker, but we want an official reply. That question—and it can be checked—has been on the order paper for too long. Decisions are now being reached. Everybody is aware of that and I cannot get a reply to my question. In addition to that, they would like me to abstain from demanding the tabling of documents for my own information and for the information of the people of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is one of the privileges of hon. members on all sides of the house to be able to obtain information. I acknowledge that sometimes we may ask for information likely to jeopardize the security of the country, for instance. In such cases, Mr. Speaker, I agree with the government that it would be dangerous to give away such information.

In this case, the matter is of an administrative nature. And since we are both administrators and lawmakers, we must be fully aware of what is going on. In this case, we must know whether or not Air Canada officials sent a letter to those employed at the Winnipeg maintenance base, advising them of the possible transfer of that base to Montreal. We must also know, Mr. Speaker, if Air Canada has truly considered whether or not it was advisable to make such a transfer and whether or not it has looked into all other aspects of the matter. Moreover, we have to know, Mr. Speaker, whether the Canadian government made representations to Air Canada in order to force that agency to move its base or not. If the Canadian government were acting this way, it would create a precedent, enabling it from now on to twist all Crown corporations around its little finger. Yet the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) who is here, did say the other day that he could not give any order to the C.B.C., another Crown corporation.

Such is the confusion in which we find ourselves now, and this is absolutely unacceptable.

Mr. Speaker, I think there is enormous work to do in the matter of relations between Crown corporations and parliament. We all recognize that certain information must be provided to members of parliament.

We may ask ourselves a great many questions Mr. Speaker, about this famous matter of Air Canada, but we must wait, indefinitely for answers. And by the time an answer appears to be forthcoming, we are told that this might create a precedent. That is indeed a fact because the honourable Minister of Transport said and I quote:

> Mr. Speaker, as all members of parliament will appreciate, this motion relates to correspondence that has always been claimed to be privileged, not public documents.

Mr. Speaker, whether or not we present a motion for papers on any matter or ask any information concerning Crown corporations, we will never be able to get what we are looking for.

The proof of that is that the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) has been away for a month and a half. While we are scrambling to know whether the C.B.C. really has a policy as to the allotment of its broadcasting time between political or other movements, we are unable to get such information. Although he had promised to give it, he now refuses to do so.

So what other means have the members of this house for calling those Crown corporations to account? Should one of those Crown corporations be guilty of some glaring injustice, how could they bring it to light? I have numerous cases in mind, but what is to be done? It is absolutely impossible to get the information we want.

I was told that, in the case of C.B.C., the Secretary of State said that it was impossible to supply such information and that besides, he had never promised it. And then, he only managed to say: The member does not know that I do not know.

Mr. Speaker, in this case I wish to get information from a Crown corporation, not necessarily to annoy the government but to better fulfil my role as administrator and legislator. If I am here merely to applaud everything the government and the crown corporations do, better do away with the notice of motions, with questions, with the right to speak. Besides, a good start has already been made in that direction if we cannot even obtain information.

Mr. Speaker, I fail to see how a precedent would be created by asking for information, since we are supposed to do so. This is no time to say: It cannot be done because it was not done in the past. It is a matter of knowing if it would be advisable to do it, and I think that in view of the examples I have mentioned from the C.B.C. and Air Canada, it would be advisable and even urgent to set up means of communications which would enable the crown corporations to give such information.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that the matter deserves consideration. In fact, it is of capital importance for hon. members in 1968, since the government has more and more control over the crown corporations. It is a well-known fact that the state operates today an important industrial, commercial and financial sector. It operates uranium mines through the Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited. It is one of the main rubber producers since it operates Polymer corporation. It operates also one of the most important railway systems of the country, the C.N.R.

The government owns also several highway transportation companies, which I will not mention, to avoid a digression.

[Mr. Fortin.]

My purpose is to discuss the advisability of tabling documents, and I want to bring out the importance of this principle.

The government operates the largest hotels of Canada, as everyone knows. The government is engaged in air transport, through Air Canada and Eldorado Aviation Limited. The government owns and operates one of the most important radio and television broadcasting networks, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

I might also mention the operation of hydro-electric enterprises like Hydro-Quebec, Hydro-Ontario, and others.

The federal government is engaged in the mining industry and exports minerals. The Sequem corporation is an example of that. In short, Mr. Speaker, the state owns and operates a great number of commercial, industrial and financial enterprises. And the only information which is available to hon. members with regard to these companies is insignificant, like that supplied to me by Polymer corporation which I mentioned at the outset.

In the face of such government encroachments in the economic, financial, industrial and other fields, it becomes increasingly more difficult for hon. members to face up to that cumbersome administrative machinery and to get information. And when we put a notice of motion for papers as I did, it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that it should be possible to issue a copy of all the minutes of the board of directors of Air Canada concerning the transfer of its maintenance base.

I think it is possible to give us at least a summary of these minutes. If this document is privileged, or if it is dangerous to supply this information, which I doubt, the government should establish a system for preparing a summary of these minutes to be given to the members for their information.

I think this request is reasonable and consideration should be given to the possibility of establishing such a system. I shall not accept the excuse that it would be impossible or dangerous to do so.

Mr. Speaker, meetings have been held, and the answer given by the minister proves it sufficiently. How would this endanger the security of the State? Can anybody explain that? There is no real danger; however, there have been some underhand dealings in this respect, and that is why I attach such importance to the matter.

I must point out that three reports have already been presented concerning this matter by the commissions of inquiry, Wallace Clarke, Dixon Spears Associates and Thompson. These three commissions came to the same conclusion that the government would lose money with the Winnipeg base as long as it stayed there. Furthermore, the president of Air Canada sent a letter to Winnipeg in 1967 announcing that this transfer would take place. However, that was more than 11 years ago and nothing has taken place yet. Therefore, there is political interference in this matter and this is what I am trying to find out, not for the purpose of exposing a scandal but to ensure a healthy, normal and fair administration. Moreover, I consider this a matter of principle, so that in future, crown corporations will report through their representatives in the house, and the members of the house will then obtain information.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to speak much longer. I would like to conclude and give other members the opportunity of expressing their views on the matter. I think it is fundamental that we should change our mentality, that we should change, if you like, our views on crown corporations. If the state wants to go into business, if it wants to launch out into industry, if it wants to bluff financially, it will have to be on equal terms with private enterprises. That is why I placed Bill No. C-115 on the order paper. I know that the government will probably kill it, without having any bad intentions, because it wants to maintain its crown corporations. But, if it wants to keep them, they must really be answerable to the crown, to a minister.

I do not agree with the attitude adopted by the hon. Secretary of State the other day when he told me that the C.B.C. was not answerable to him and that it was independent. The right hon. Prime Minister replied the same thing, which makes me think that there are irresponsible men in government if we cannot obtain information on crown companies which, as I said before, are very numerous.

Mr. Speaker, I insist—and I want to make my point—that the Canadian government should supply the information requested in that notice of motion for production of papers, in order that we might know exactly what happened and what is now going on with regard to the famous Air-Canada overhaul base at Winnipeg. I feel that we are entitled to know. This would not be creating a precedent, not interfering with the security of the state, nor would it be prejudicial to the companies. On the contrary, it would be prejudicial to public opinion to refuse information which the opposition has the right to know and the government has the duty to provide.

[English]

Mr. H. E. Stafford (Elgin): It is obvious Mr. Speaker, that the government should give to parliament the fullest available information possible on any question brought before this house by hon. members. Parliament must be in possession of such information as it requires in order to arrive at the best possible conclusion. This often includes the production of documents and papers, the disclosure of which is necessary for a proper understanding of the matter before the house. But such disclosure has its limitations in the public interest. It is almost too basic for repetition to say that there are many communications and documents of such a confidential character that, in the public interest, should properly be withheld from publication. This motion calls for more than the resumé mentioned by the hon. member. It calls for a copy of all extracts of the minutes of the board of directors of Air Canada concerning the move of the maintenance base from Winnipeg to Montreal, and of all correspondence exchanged between the government and Air Canada in connection with this matter.

This would mean that the minutes of meetings of boards of directors of crown corporations would be considered public documents. The competitive nature of the business of Air Canada and other crown corporations, such as Canadian National Railways, would be endangered. In short, a dangerous precedent would be created. So far as correspondence is concerned, it could mean that any opinion given the minister or any interoffice communication would be public knowledge. Such items, prepared for the minister's information only, have always been privileged. They are so obviously privileged that such a motion as this requires no debate. It is almost too elementary to discuss the ramifications that such a motion, if passed, would bring about.

Passage of this motion would stifle freedom of expression and would deprive the minister of the benefit he now enjoys of receiving voluntary and varied opinions on the many problems before him. Public servants are very frank amongst themselves and are equally frank with the ministers. If their opinions on contentious issues are to be made public, then the public servants of this nation will have great reluctance in giving any minister their honest, reasoned and valued opinions. The purpose of privileged communications is very clear. It means that such communications cannot be made public. We must encourage officials to speak frankly and openly; we must not muzzle them with the passage of this motion.

I am not going to waste the time of this house by speaking for the retention of such an obviously clear and compelling privilege. There are dozens of precedents throughout Hansard to uphold my position. Unless there is to be a breakdown in administration, this motion must be defeated, and the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) knows it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is the house ready for the question? All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Pursuant to section 7 of standing order 66, the vote is postponed until eight o'clock this day.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, since this completes the business under this section, would it not be in order to ask that we adjourn for supper?

Mr. Forest: No, I think we should go to the next item of business, namely private bills.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): There is no unanimous consent.

• (6:20 p.m.)

PRIVATE BILL

THE HURON AND ERIE MORTGAGE CORPORATION

Mr. Gordon Blair (Grenville-Carleton) moved the second reading of Bill S-7, respecting The Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs.

[Mr. Stafford.]

Mr. Forest: Mr. Speaker, in view of the progress we have made now I wonder whether there would be unanimous consent to adjourn the house till eight o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Does the house agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It being around seven o'clock this house stands adjourned till eight o'clock.

At seven o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

MOTION FOR PAPERS

AIR CANADA—REMOVAL OF WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to section 7 of standing order 6 it is my duty to ask the house to revert to private members business for the taking of the vote which was postponed earlier this evening.

PROCEDURE

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN FOURTH REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Blair that the fourth report of the special committee on procedure of the house, presented to the house on Friday, December 6, 1968, be concurred in, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield. (p. 3762).

Hon. Hugh John Flemming (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, speaking in general terms the motion before the house is one which some people might think was somewhat innocent, and might not deserve a great deal of consideration. But when a motion is made for concurrence in the report of a committee, generally speaking that calls for an examination of the report itself. So we have before us a motion by the chairman of the special committee, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair), that we concur in the report of that committee, thus bringing about an examination of what is in that report. That is exactly what I propose to do in the few minutes at my disposal.

I say it seems as though this is a simple motion, but it is not. It is a very dangerous motion to pass, because it threatens the very life of this parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Flemming: Indeed it removes safeguards vital to every Canadian. It jeopardizes the well-being of every man, woman and child in Canada; that is what it does. And, Mr. Speaker, I propose to prove those words to the satisfaction of anyone whose eyes are not clouded by political bias. Apparently the government has predetermined closure at its disposal, and the veto power is placed in the hands of the government house leader by the report of the special committee. There is not any doubt about that whatsoever, and it concerns every piece of legislation which may be brought before this house.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) implied in his speech of two nights ago that there comes a time when discussion should cease and decisions be made. We agree with that, Mr. Speaker, but the time for decision is not before there is any debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Flemming: I wonder what the desk thumpers opposite think of that.

In the course of a very brilliant address, an address with which no one could help being impressed, my leader moved an amendment. It is very appropriate and proper that we examine that amendment, which reads:

> That the fourth report of the special committee on procedure of the house be not now concurred in but referred back to the committee with instructions that it have power to recommend that proposed standing order 16-A be amended to provide that a motion to accept the decision of the proceedings committee shall only be made following the unanimous decision of the proceedings committee arrived at during a meeting properly convened upon adequate written notice.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, and to everyone within sound of my voice that that is a very reasonable amendment, because it says that unless there is unanimous decision the house should not accept a motion of the committee. This is the only part of the committee's report that is dealt with in this amendment. Personally, I propose to have somewhat extended remarks to make later about other matters, because I attach great importance to the right of the house to examine, criticize and suggest changes in the voting of money, a right that is as old as the parliamentary institution itself.

But to return to the trend of my remarks concerning legislation, I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it is a bit unusual to have complete unanimity among the three opposition parties. This means that every one of those parties, and its leader, has examined the situation and it has been agreed between them that there are points in the report of the committee which they cannot accept. This is embodied in the amendment because it is the only amendment that has been moved. Generally speaking there is a subamendment, but not at this time. So, I say that is unusual. The very fact that this unanimity exists here tonight should appeal to every member of the house, because after all what we are here for is to legislate and vote and speak in the interests of the people of Canada. We are here for something more than pounding desks. There is no question about that.

An hon. Member: Don't criticize your own party.

Mr. Flemming: You still hold the record. You are the champions at that.

Let us examine the record of what exactly is the difference between the opposition parties, combined, and the government. First I am going to quote the words of the chairman of the committee when he inroduced the motion because he mentioned certain things about the committee's report. Then, we listened this afternoon to a dissertation of half-truths which implied that the opposition was against the legislation making progress. Nothing could be further from the truth and certainly the chairman of the committee did not say so. As reported at page 3750 of Hansard, he said:

• (8:30 p.m.)

At the end, despite its best efforts the committee had to agree to disagree on what appear to me to be only two or three issues at the most. The suggestion that was made in some quarters of the press that the committee broke up in violent disagreement is entirely false and does a great disservice to all members of the committee and also, I suggest, to all members of this house.

So I suggest that the chairman of the committee have a word with the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Deachman) and set him right, because he certainly needs to be set right.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Flemming: I wish now to refer to and emphasize this question of unanimity, and the importance of it, because in my opinion it is the very crux of the whole argument. The government house leader, as a member of the proceedings committee, actually will have a veto power over that committee, because all he will have to do is disagree. So he disagrees and there is a lack of agreement. The other three house leaders may agree, but that will make no difference. All the Liberal house leader need do is disagree with them and then there is a lack of agreement. Subsequent to the committee meeting he will be able to put on another cap, the cap of leader in this house and not the Liberal leader. He will be in a position to say to this parliament how much time will be spent debating legislation. I submit that that is an arbitrary use of power and that no self respecting parliament could ever consent to it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Flemming: By virtue of that power, however, he could limit the debate on every item of legislation at every stage. I ask my friends opposite and my friends everywhere for that matter, has he ever said what he will do about the debate on the omnibus amendments to the Criminal Code; has he ever said how much time will be allocated for that? Everyone within the sound of my voice is aware that disagreeable things will be contained in that omnibus bill—and "disagreeable" is a very mild word, in the opinion of many people in this country. There is no question about that. Has he said how much time will be allocated to that debate? I suggest he has not. Those who support the government think that because they have the voting power, they will carry the motion for concurrence; and I do not presume for one moment that anything I say will change their minds.

If this resolution passes and the report of the committee is accepted I say that the ordinary member of this house will become a puppet, to be moved at the end of a string by the Liberal house leader and, judging from some of their remarks, that is all some Liberal members are capable of being. So I ask, what about minority rights? They simply become non-existent. We have heard a good deal about minority rights, but under this legislation they would go out of existence. So the Liberal house leader can disagree, and his disagreement will have more influence than the other three house leaders combined.

I say that this motion deserves a label. It should be labelled a motion to muzzle parliament, a motion to remove freedom of speech, or a motion to remove the liberty of the subject; because you cannot take away the rights of the people's representatives without taking away the liberty of the people themselves. There is no question about that.

We are told that this is a very mild and inoffensive sort of report. Let us read what some independent people say about it. They are the people I like to consult—people who have no political prejudice. So we will look at the Montreal Gazette of yesterday morning.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Flemming: The article to which I should like to refer is written by Mr. Arthur Blakely, a distinguished journalist and a member of our own press gallery. Let us examine what Mr. Blakely has to say. How does he label the proposal; how does he refer to the motion now before us? I will tell you.

An hon. Member: We know.

Mr. Flemming: Whether you listen or not I am going to tell you. He said:

> Government and opposition forces clashed head-on in the Commons yesterday over the Trudeau government's demand—

"Demand", Mr. Speaker.

> —for unprecedented, omnibus closure powers to control proceedings in the House of Commons.

Hon. members can read that for themselves—unprecedented, never happened before; omnibus, all embracing, closure. That is what it means. They are going to control the members of this house, according to Mr. Blakely.

But that is not the only thing. I have another quotation from the same paper and by the same author:

> Unlike his predecessors, the logical Mr. Trudeau has pursued the theory to its logical conclusion by demanding powers for which none of his predecessors dared ask, which would give the cabinet complete control of parliament and its deliberations and reduce almost to a nullity parliament's traditional but already-tenuous control of the nation's purse strings.

Those are the words of Mr. Blakely as they appear at page 7 of the Gazette for Wednesday, December 11. Let us now refer to an article which hon. members opposite might like a little better because it appears in the Toronto Globe and Mail of December 12, 1968, which newspaper generally speaking has supported this government. I cannot understand why, I will never be able to understand the reason. Let us see the words that appear in this independent opinion:

> Nothing is more fundamental to democracy than the belief that society is composed of reasonable men.

Then about half way down the first column the article continues:

> We question the strength with which members of the federal Government hold a belief in the reasonableness of their fellow man. House Leader Donald Macdonald, who has been given the job of reforming the procedural rules of the House of Commons, has insisted that proposed reforms include rules that would in effect provide closure in advance of debate.

This is what appears in the Globe and Mail. Then, further down on the page we find this:

> They—

"They" meaning the opposition parties.

> —will not go along with the government plan that, in cases of disagreement, a cabinet minister may make a motion in the house suggesting a limit and, after a maximum of two hours of debate, the motion be put to a vote.

Can anyone blame us. When there is disagreement and it is not unanimous, then he will come in and move that the question be put, there will be two hours debate, and then away it goes.

• (8:40 p.m.)

Let me quote further:

> Considering the Liberal majority, the result would never be in doubt. The government could arbitrarily limit debate before a word was spoken and before the strength of opposing arguments could be heard and assessed throughout the land.
> This is closure in advance. We opposed it when former trade and commerce minister C. D. Howe tried to impose it in the pipe line debate of 1956. We oppose it even more strongly now.

I say to the government that it had better recall what happened, because that government was out of office within a year. It did not in my opinion go out of office because of the pipe line; it went out of office because it imposed closure before there was any debate to speak of. That is the reason it went out of office. The article then states:—

The pipe line bill was on the order paper. On May 14, 1956, Mr. Howe closed his introductory speech with the announcement that he would move the following day for closure. He did, the Liberal majority passed the motion and debate on the first stage of the bill was cut off at one o'clock on the morning of May 16. This newspaper condemned the action in words that still apply: "Closure in advance of debate and the silencing of the committee of the whole before its deliberations began are an insulting defiance of every elector who cast a Liberal vote in the late general election."

This applied then and it applies now. The article goes on to say:

"What the country has seen is a dictator's revolution, engineered by one minister, but acquiesced in by all, as no cabinet voice has been raised against it."

Down at the bottom of the editorial we find these words:

What constitutes ample debate cannot in every instance be determined in advance.

Every reasonable man agrees with those words, there is no question about that. The article states:

Those who believe it can, and that they must have the power to determine it, deny the proposition that reasonable men occupy the benches of the opposition.

I submit that reasonable men do occupy the benches of the opposition but, as I said a few minutes ago, I do not expect to convince anyone opposite or the overflow by these remarks. They are supporting the minister and they are going to continue to do so. They have probably—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but I should like to bring to the attention of hon. members that there are discussions taking place which make it very difficult for the Chair to follow the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Flemming: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is helpful to me as well; but as far as I am concerned, they do not bother me. The Prime Minister and the government hold the house in the palms of their hands. No doubt hon. members have been polled, and very likely they have been told.

Let me refer to Mr. Page, another independent authority on parliamentary procedure, who writes in the Canadian Journal of Economics and Political Science. He has made a study of the subject now before us, and while this is general in its application I think it is important enough to be included as part of my remarks. He says at page 31 of this issue:

[Mr. Flemming.]

Impatient reformers have demanded prompt and extensive changes, but there are good reasons for the slow implementation of procedural reforms. The fundamental problem is to find the correct balance between the time and means needed by the government to carry out its business and the preservation of free, full, and productive debate in the House of Commons.

Everyone knows that is true, and we acknowledge this. There is no difference among us in this regard. On page 32 he goes on to say:

When the government attempts to institute its own rule changes, as it did in May, 1965—

It is doing so today through this motion.

—the opposition feels that its rights are being impeded while the government secures for itself the means of perpetuating its term of office by offering efficient government obtained through muzzling the opposition, thereby destroying parliamentary democracy. The opposition points out that lengthy debates, such as the flag or the Canada Pension debates, produced valuable compromises in the legislation which would not have been implemented if the government had tyrannical powers. The opposition naturally holds that any rule change might allow the government to conceal faulty legislation or shoddy administration and hinder the opposition's scrutiny.

There is no question about that. He likewise says at page 33:

The object of reforms must be carefully evaluated before speedy means are used to alter the principal functions of parliament, an action which would make it a truncated and perfunctory part of our governmental system. The problems of or obstacles to procedural reform are surmountable and parliamentarians are convinced of the usefulness of proposed changes.

These are the opinions of a man who has made a study of our parliamentary system here in Ottawa. While they are moderate in tone, I consider that a deep-rooted consideration would force the chairman of the committee to ask that this be referred back to the committee. There should be no question about that.

I think we should ask ourselves these questions. Why does the government ask for such powers, and what is behind this? We have had brilliant addresses during this debate, including the brilliant address of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), the brilliant address of my leader, the brilliant address by the hon. member for York South, and brilliant addresses today. I am not referring to my own.

Yesterday when the hon. member for York South referred to this matter he expressed the opinion that when power is sought it will be used. The use of this power would make the Liberal house leader a virtual dictator. It gives him complete power over this parliament.

We must examine the question as to what type of things the government wants to introduce, and whether they are in the interests of the country or are desirable. We must consider whether they will improve parliamentary procedure. When they do, we have no objections, but these are the things that the committee on procedure intends to determine by consultation. The proposed amendment would indicate that we are for improvement, but what about those things that might not be improvements but are sought by the government? What about those things that are bad? What about those things that might even be interpreted as being evil?

Does this parliament not want protection? I am not referring particularly to this government, but to any government that may be in office. Should one surrender the protection which we have at the present time and give an absolute veto power to the leader of any administration? If that is the wish, then undoubtedly this motion will pass. If it is not, the amendment will be passed and the motion will be lost.

I submit to you in all seriousness and with all the conviction with which I am capable that we cannot afford to take a chance. I have listened many times to the government house leader since I have been here in the house. He is a good interrupter and he is quite well suited for the vocal cut and thrust and retaliation of House of Commons debate.

Personally I consider that he is all right, but as I watch him operate and see him in action I am convinced that his devotion to partisan advantage is so great that I am reminded of the words of Shakespeare in the play "Julius Casear". When Julius Caesar asked for almost unlimited power he was told, by a character in the play, in the words put into his mouth by the bard of Avon:

> How oft the power to do ill deeds
> Makes ill deeds done.

Possibly ill deeds will not follow the passing of this report of the committee but, as I said, we cannot afford to take the chance.

In all seriousness I put to the government house leader the following question: Does he want to take responsibility for automatic closure in the absence of unanimous consent from the proceedings committee, without having his colleagues share it with him? Does he wish to go down in history as the lord high executioner who was responsible for the death of parliament? That is a good question for him to answer. I do not think he does. Let us take an example. What would the government house leader have done in the following instance when a few days ago a committee report came to this house with a motion which took place completely ignored? Subsequently, a motion was made on a question of privilege to refer it to a second committee and you, sir, saved the day by ruling it in order, so that now it is before a committee. What would the government house leader have done that day, had he been in complete control? This is a good question for him to answer, but not now.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): He said the proceedings were illegal.

Mr. Flemming: I wonder what would have happened if he had been inclined to disagree. I am sure the government house leader will understand those of us who, looking back three centuries, realize how right Shakespeare, that great judge of human nature was when he said those wise words which I quoted a moment ago. The house cannot afford to take that chance.

Now I wish to deal with the question of estimates. There has been much talk about parliament being an old fuddy-duddy institution. I do not agree with such a contention. First, the government brings in the speech from the throne their program, in general terms, of the things which they think they want to accomplish in the interests of the people. A debate follows, in which everyone in the house has a chance to take part and to make suggestions to the government of the day on things they think have to be added, or things with which they disagree. Then the government introduces the budget, which indicates to parliament how they are going to raise the money and in what places and on what things they are going to spend it. Subsequent to that we have a budget debate, and then we have the detailed resolutions.

Although I do not oppose the general idea of sending estimates to a committee because, in my opinion the purpose in doing so is so that the committee may examine the deputy ministers, the departmental officials and even the public, from whom they get certain ideas of what is best for the public good, it is my opinion that the committee room is not the proper place for a public debate. The chamber does not lend itself to public debate, and so when the suggestion is made that one-third of the estimates or even a smaller percentage of them come back to the house to be debated here—those estimates to be chosen by the opposition—for a period to be agreed upon among the leaders, we think it is vital that it be accepted. The power to tax has been one of the prerogatives that the people's representatives have fought and died for, and the imposition of undue burdens of taxation upon people has resulted in some monarchs losing their heads. Yet we are going to do away with it, as though it amounted to nothing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Flemming: Even in the United States Congress, where it is said the committees have more power than our committees have, estimates must come back to Congress for final approval. It is the taxpayers, those who are really responsible for finding the money, who are the important people.

I suggest that there is a remote likelihood that our suggestion will be re-examined by the government. However, they should concede that this is a point with which surely no government can disagree, when the members of this assembly ask that they be allowed a final look at the estimates of a limited number of departments, possibly over a limited amount of time.

I have practically exhausted all the points I wished to make. However I wish to go back to what I said in the preamble of my remarks, that I do not think the motion to adopt all the committee's recommendations in one vote, holus-bolus, take it all and swallow it, is proper or right. In fact I think it is premature. We have not yet tried a partial change. Everyone agrees that we want to do things a little differently, but we cannot afford to give up those rights which have come down to us through the years, rights for which people have fought and died.

Many people within sound of my voice in this chamber have fought in foreign wars to preserve the freedom of the individual. I repeat that in my opinion this is the most important step. I do not think that the government is giving it proper consideration and I do not think that the members of the house have considered it sufficiently. I think the government is going too far, all in one jump. This is too much. The government in my view should consent to a more moderate change and, having instituted a moderate change, see how it works.

The young man who wrote this booklet said that reformers very often defeated their own ends by putting their plans into operation before they should be implemented.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Sudbury): May I begin my participation in this debate, Mr. Speaker, by saying what an honour it was for me, as a new member in this chamber, to be appointed to this special committee dealing with and recommending changes in the procedures of this house. It is perhaps significant that in one sense I, alone, represented the new members. I say that advisedly, because although I was joined as a new member of that committee by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair), we all know that his vast experience in the workings of the committees of this house during the years that he practised law in the city of Ottawa make it difficult to regard him as a new member in this chamber. Certainly the manner in which he chaired that committee and carried out these difficult duties confirmed that opinion, I am sure, in the minds of all members of that committee. I was honoured especially, Mr. Speaker, when I saw the membership which made up that committee, from both sides of the house. The members who were assigned, by my own party as well as by opposition parties, and who participated so vigorously in the proceedings of the committee, in my opinion, indeed made an impressive list.

Conscious as I am of the honour that was bestowed upon me of being a member of that committee, I am equally conscious of the duty which was imposed on me of examining most thoroughly the purposes of this parliament and of its traditions, in order that I may pay proper respect to all these procedures which have served this parliament in a proper fashion. At the same time I felt I had a very important and serious duty to examine critically all of these procedures, all of the traditions and institutions that go with them, with a willingness and even a desire to disregard or dispose of those which had ceased to be functional; to replace them with new and more meaningful procedures which would better serve the members of this house in the conduct of their business and the deliberations in this chamber.

During the debate on this report I have found some confusing references, Mr. Speaker, by those illustrious members of the opposition benches who participated in the debate. I hope to make reference to them later in my remarks. Nevertheless may I say that my confusion grew as I listened to the remarks of the last speaker for the opposition, and placed them against the background of some of the records I have had occasion to examine during his tenure of office as premier of New Brunswick. In that context I should like to refer to a statement that appears in the Synoptic Report of the proceedings of the Legislative Assembly of New Brunswick, page 620, volume 1, where the Hon. Mr. Flemming is reported as saying:

> Once again the time of this legislative assembly is being taken up with a third attempt to express non-confidence in the government and, in fact, to endeavour to usurp the functions of the government through action of this kind.
> On two previous occasions, I have expressed the government's views on the matter and the reasons why I have opposed previous motions for leave. The position has not changed at all in this connection.
> On September 22, 1952 and again on June 18, 1956, the government was clothed with the necessary responsibility and authority to introduce legislation and to guide it through the necessary legislative changes thereafter.
> Such responsibility and authority was not given to any other party and political group so that the attempt to usurp and assume the functions of the government in this connection is plainly in defiance of the popular mandate and of what is understood as constituting responsible government.

Again, I should like to quote from volume 2, page 703, where the same hon. member is reported as saying:

> That's right, we are not ruled by the minority.

Is it any wonder, Mr. Speaker, that a new member coming into this chamber faces his duties with some sense of confusion about the attitudes expressed by hon. members opposite? I should like to cite another example, that of the leader of our party, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). Reference has been made from the opposition benches to statements of his at a time when, it has been said correctly, he was not a supporter of this party. I hold him up as an example of the kind of thing honourable Canadian citizens should do when they feel, as I am sure he does, that if one is to contribute meaningfully to the deliberations of this chamber, then one does not stand aside and criticize it from the outside. The thing to do is to come here and make a contribution to its improvement, to its change, so that it can become and continue to be a powerful force in the government of this country, as it must be if it is to survive.

The challenge to democracy, and to all these institutions at the present time, is the same challenge that is facing many of our institutions in this day and age. It has been seen so graphically that the church in today's society is facing a desperate challenge because it has seemed to fall out of touch with the needs of the people. One sees the church scrambling, trying to catch up. The university students are a group who, in their endeavours at college, might from time to time get carried away with their celebrations and their hazings. What do we find today in their attitudes toward these institutions? There is disrespect for the failure of these institutions to keep pace with the growing needs of young people in our country.

I say that this institution of parliament is not exempt from that kind of attitude on the part of the young people of our country. If we do not change our ways and expedite our procedures in this chamber in order to keep pace with the needs of the youth of our country then we, too, are going to fall into disrespect, to merit their distrust, and this institution will suffer interminably for that. What particularly surprised me was the constant reference, and perhaps it is a good example, to the parliament of the United Kingdom. It seems that the general trend amongst members on both sides of the house is to accept the mother of parliaments as an example. Is it not surprising, when one examines the facts, to find that not one but at least five different methods of closure lie in the hands of the government of the United Kingdom? All of them are invoked on a regular basis. Is it not surprising to find that debates in the United Kingdom parliament are almost invariably of one day's duration, on some occasions two and on rare occasions three? Is it not interesting also to find that private members hour has been lost entirely in that parliament, because of the increasing work load? Is it not surprising also to find the practice of using ministerial orders as appendages to legislation which give the cabinet unbridled power? These annexations to legislation or corollaries to legislation are increasingly used without intervention of parliament, simply because the work load of this parliament has become so great.

If this chamber is not prepared to face its responsibility, and in fact to program its legislation at this time, then in the same manner the privileges of the members on all sides of the house are going to be eroded. They will have to give way to the increasing work load until they disappear and lose their relevance altogether. In the light of this background, how should we move to improve our procedures? Really, there are only two areas of disagreement. The committee has worked long and hard. It has made good use of the precedents and practices in other parliaments. It has presented a report to this house, which report we are debating today. Most of the recommendations are acceptable, but there are two areas of controversy, namely the additional responsibilities being given to standing committees, and the programming of legislation in the house.

Dealing firstly with the question of standing committees, it seems to me that hon. members opposite are missing the point. They are complaining, for example, that by referring the estimates of the departments to the standing committees the government is attempting to take away from this chamber the responsibility and power it now has in the spending of the nation's money. What is really so startling about this claim is that they miss entirely the relocation of time that is involved, this new relationship between the studying of the estimates and their timing.

As it is now, I am sure all hon. members will agree that whatever study of the estimates is done in this chamber—and, as has been said before, there is a tendency to make speeches here rather than to study estimates—this study is always done ex post facto. The money is not only budgeted for but in most cases the estimates are considered in this house long after the fact.

An important thing to consider in referring these estimates to the standing committees under the proposed rules changes is that members not only have an opportunity in the committees to get a close observation and examination of the estimates, but they can do this at a time when it is meaningful. This is the point that seems to be entirely missed by hon. members opposite.

Neither can I understand their complaint that there is any loss of the power of this chamber. Under the proposed amendments to the rules the opposition is given an allotted number of days, any of which it can, upon the return of these estimates from the standing committees, set aside to examine the estimates in this chamber if it so desires. One must also point out that those 25 allotted days, plus three reserved for the examination of the final supplementary estimates—making 28 days in all—can be augmented further by the use of any of the eight days that are allotted to the throne speech debate, or any of the six days that are allotted to the budget—making in all a further 14 days—that are not used up for those purposes.

On all of these days the opposition can completely control the subject matter of debate in this house. So there is no substantial diminution of the days they are allotted under the supply procedure at the present time. Therefore the opposition loses no power or opportunity to insist that this chamber examine estimates in detail. Moreover, when the estimates are considered in the chamber, they will first have been attacked in a standing committee.

So it will be seen, Mr. Speaker, that the opportunity of the opposition to examine estimates in detail in the standing committees is provided, plus the opportunity, if they so desire, to bring the estimates back to the house in order to focus the attention of the chamber upon them. Now, then, can the opposition complain that this chamber is being deprived of the power that it should possess in respect to the expenditures of the nation?

The most interesting area of all has become that of programming. It seems to me that there are certain basic points involved here. In the first place, it is obvious to me as a new member that reforms of this sort toward programming are necessary. I do not have to turn to the traditions of parliament, or to the examples of other legislative assemblies throughout the world, to support that statement. I go no further back than September and October of this year, when we sat around here for three weeks listening to a small number of opposition members speaking time and time again on the same subject of farm legislation. I understand from actual count that one opposition member spoke no less than 12 times in a repetitive fashion on that very subject. Not only did these members individually repeat their own remarks and suggestions to the government every time they spoke, but one member after the other stood in his place to repeat what others had said. Surely, Mr. Speaker, it cannot be suggested, even taking into account my unpractised eye, that quality of debate improves in proportion to its length.

I was astounded to hear the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) actually make reference to the length of the flag debate in supporting his proposition that debate in this house should be unbridled, because, as we all know, that is a far, far cry from the position that he took during the currency of that very debate. As a new member I am not afraid to say that the length of time spent in this house on the farm legislation was absolutely disproportionate to its importance; to its importance, that is, in relation to other matters of legislation that are waiting to get the attention of this chamber.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it is necessary that our procedures change. Not only is it necessary, but apparently in the minds of opposition members it is highly desirable. Certainly the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) stood on his feet to say that he has been a proponent of this programming idea for years, and in fact has called it "calendarizing" the parliamentary year.

Although it is necessary and desirable to change, the point that seems to be missed is that it is the responsibility of the government to take this step. If there is any doubt about this, then would hon. members opposite answer me this: When they go home for the Christmas vacation and are asked, by chance, why this house did not get around to considering, for example, the drug bill, is it possible that they might say to some of their constituents: "Well, you must understand that it is the opposition benches that control length of debate, so it is really not fair to blame the government for its lack of programming in bringing that legislation forward, because we in the opposition prolonged the debate on the farm legislation to the extent that the government did not have the chance"? If they do so, then I accede to their view that responsibility should rest on that side of the house in the matter of controlling time. But it is a false premise to believe that supporters of the opposition will be as generous as I have suggested. What they will do is blame the government for not knowing how to program their legislation. They will claim the government is disorganized and cannot bring forward important legislation; that the government does not know how to plan its affairs.

The government is visited with this awesome responsibility. If it does not take the action suggested in this report, there may not be a parliament left when next we seek to elect a new government. This government is considered by all Canadian voters to have the responsibility of taking this step, and the government is taking this perfectly correct step in moving directly and vigorously, and in a meaningful way, into the area of programming.

Too often we have seen reforms that are obsolete by the time they are introduced. Too often have we seen changes that are away behind the fact and the need. These proposals, as I see them, are not. They constitute a very meaningful and direct step, what I consider to be a courageous step taken by the government, one that I have absolutely no hesitation in transmitting to my constituents as an intention to stop pussy-footing around with the question of programming, and to deal with it in a logical and sensible way.

Given those facts, if you will, what, then, are the true logistics? Let us stop reducing this thing to ridicule, to one of one-man meetings. What are the logistics of setting up a programming committee? The very first consideration that comes to my mind is that in setting up a programming committee the government immediately sacrifices its majority position in the house, if its meetings are to be attended only by the house leaders. If there is anything more fundamental to our parliamentary system than that the government should enjoy a majority in the house at every point in its deliberations, then I do not know what it is. If the government sets up a business committee, which all members agree is a good idea, it will have only 25 per cent of the representation on that committee.

When one moves on from there to examine what must be done in the light of that consideration to resolve the difficulty that arises when that committee cannot agree or come to a unanimous decision, he must bear this representation factor in mind. If, as has been stated I believe, by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, the decisions of that committee are reached by a majority of the four house leaders, then what in fact has taken place is that the government has now completely transferred to the opposition control over the time of the house. It has taken a position as one member of a committee of four, and consequently surrendered itself. If the majority of three opposition members say, "That is the way we will program the legislation," that is an abdication of the government's responsibility, an absolute folly. In any event, in any committee such as this you will ultimately bump up against the government's majority. If someone says, "Well, put more members on it," the only logical extension would be that the committee will become representative of the position of the parties of the house, and again you will run up against the government majority. Of course you do; there is no way around it. I challenge any hon. members of the house to set up some committee like that to program the time of the house that does not ultimately bump up against the government majority. That is fundamental to the operation of this house. The choice is between continuing with the present chaos and getting into the question of programming, and leaving the resolution of disagreement in the committee, by making the committee bigger with a majority of government members, will not be more palatable to hon. members of the opposition.

It has been suggested ad nauseam that the good will of hon. members will resolve this crisis, and about that I want to make several observations. It has been said that the government does not need these residual powers, because the great likelihood is that in a very high percentage of cases the house leaders will agree among themselves. That may be the case. Certainly if the committee had been operating when the farm legislation was before the house, if the new rules had been operating, no matter whether some backbenchers liked the idea or not, that legislation would have been concluded by quick agreement on a much earlier date than it did. However let us examine the proposition that the government does not need this residual power, because the deliberations of the committee very likely will conclude on the basis of agreement. After all, we are only trying to allot time for the debating of subject matters we are all interested in, as citizens of the country. Either that proposition is true or it is not. If it is not, the argument is self-defeating; if it is true, then the government has that residual power to solve any disagreement. That residual power is so minor and will be so rarely exercised that I do not see why we need worry about it.

The second point about the good will argument is that it is said that the discussions and deliberations of this committee will be destroyed, so to speak, if the government holds a stick over its meetings and has the ultimate power. The suggestion is that if everything is left on the basis of consent, agreement and good will, everyone will go to the committee and discuss. I submit that a much more reasonable proposition is that unless the government holds the residual power to resolve any crisis, unless it holds the residual power which will avoid a boycott—and that has happened in fairly recent memory—then the deliberations of the committee will not be meaningful. If the government does not hold that residual power it will in fact get itself into a situation where the tail will wag the dog. Finally, the one thing that seems to be absent from all opposition suggestions on the subject of good will is that good will does reside on the government side of the house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: You said it.

Mr. Jerome: In any event there seems to be no recognition that this government is interested in incurring the good will of this chamber and in maintaining a good relationship with the voters of this country. There seems to be some suggestion that, because the government is to retain a residual power in resolving conflicts within the business committee, therefore it will be like a ramrod in this chamber, or like a dictator. Some think that it will come to this chamber every Thursday afternoon with a bundle of orders saying, "Ho, hum, here is another Thursday afternoon; get ready for some more government legislation to be shoved down your throat." How long do hon. members think that any government adopting that ridiculous position would last?

An hon. Member: Four years.

Mr. Jerome: One can see that the true rationale of proposed standing order 16A is simply an emergency power to resolve any conflict within the business committee. It can only be invoked when the members of that committee either refuse to attend it or refuse to deliberate on the allotment of time of the house. If that is the case, despite what the hon. member for Peace River has said, what is so alarming about this suggestion? There has been a suggestion that the government can always invoke standing order 33 and bring on closure.

Mr. Baldwin: That is what they do in England.

Mr. Jerome: Yes. And what will happen if the government decides to use standing order 33? Without doubt the opposition, in a state of apopleptic horror, will go running to the television announcers outside in the lobby and say, "They have done it again." Certainly, it is easy to say, "Wait until you get yourself in a jam, and then try to get out of it." That is not programming. That is a rescue operation and the government wants no part of it.

Mr. Flemming: They will want it and need it.

Mr. Jerome: I have attempted to say some of the things I felt it my duty to say and to examine some of the things that need examining. They say there is a generation gap in this country. I say that it is not with hon. members who are my contemporaries and of my generation that the difficulty lies. If one goes back in time a short distance only, he will see that many young people are coming forward; they are only five or ten years behind us. When one talks to them about this institution and about institutions in this country in general he does not find great respect for those institutions. I came to this chamber because I believe this parliament has to survive; it therefore must improve and expedite its procedures to get on with the business of the nation. If I had not believed that I would not be here, and I am sure that many hon. members of this house have come here because they have concluded that reforms must be undertaken. But, Mr. Speaker, they must be undertaken in a meaningful way.

I have concluded that parliament is dedicated to discussion, yes. But parliament is not an insular ivory tower, a private club where members sit around as in a debating society and discuss things at the expense of the needs of this nation. This parliament serves not only its members; it serves the people. If it fails to serve the needs of this nation it will disappear, because there are other forms of government that can replace it. I say therefore that this government and this parliament have a responsibility to introduce legislative programs adequate to meet the needs of the nation. The government has the right to expect that program to be considered. The opposition has the right to examine and criticize that program and expose its faults to the nation; it has the right to amend it where possible and, in any case, to vote for or against it as it sees fit.

May I conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that in my humble opinion these reforms are only a beginning. They are not drastic; these are not terminal changes. These are beginnings, because there are other areas of major significance that will have to be changed. Certain parts of our procedure are difficult for new members to understand. For instance, it is difficult to understand why certain matters have to be talked out on a daily basis. Some things this nation will not tolerate any longer, and there are more reforms that will have to be brought up. I am therefore very encouraged that the establishment of a standing committee has been suggested.

I feel that the changes which are proposed at the present time are a significant first step in the direction of improvement and expedition. They will give not only new members but all members a meaningful opportunity to attend standing committees and deliberate on the legislation that has been presented before us in this chamber. We shall be able to program our legislation through the calendar year, therefore do much more work during the parliamentary year and master the terminal point of our legislative program.

I believe these changes are directed to that end. I trust they represent only a beginning and that a standing committee will continue to recommend such changes. This is the only way in which we can maintain the vigil necessary to ensure that parliament becomes a more effective place; it is the only way in which we can rest assured that this institution will survive as the guardian of our democratic liberties.

Mr. Baldwin: Would the hon. member permit a question? He suggested that in the United Kingdom they no longer set aside an hour for private members discussions. Will he not admit that in Britain there are almost 24 full days appointed by the House of Commons for the debate of private members bills and resolutions, and that in the United Kingdom the government has the courage to let these bills and motions go into effect?

Mr. Jerome: I do not think I should be called upon to comment on the courage of the British government. The only thing I can say is that the source of my quotations was a book recommended to all new members by no less a personage than the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). I referred to Lord Hailsham's view of the purposes of parliament, and the alarm he expressed there about the absence of opportunities given to private members. I may have drawn an incorrect inference from that as to the opportunity available for private members to introduce legislation.

Mr. Baldwin: Twenty four days.

Mr. Hales: Would the hon. member permit a further question? He has spoken glibly about programming. Suppose a minister came before the house in connection with a measure affecting, say, 10,000 people employed by the International Nickel Company, and the program called for a debate lasting one day. If time did not permit the hon. member as a backbencher to speak on their behalf, would he still be in favour of programming?

Mr. Jerome: In the first place, that is a hypothetical question. In the second place I would have to say that as a member representing the constituency which houses the International Nickel Company I would be not only surprised but somewhat ashamed if my party did not feel I was worthy to participate, at least to a certain extent, in the procedure.

Mr. Simpson: I hope the hon. member who has just resumed his seat does not consider himself to be the only member representing a constituency which houses International Nickel. I should like him to know there is quite a large development in my own constituency.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): The debate on the rules now before us is of the utmost importance to Canada, it involves critical and essential components of the functioning of a democracy. Consideration of the matters under discussion should not be viewed from the standpoint of the mechanics of the matter, but rather from the standpoint of the principle involved and the consequences of our considerations on our democratic institutions. The mechanics are important in their place, but that place is still secondary to the principles involved.

It is here that I feel we can find one reason for the hang-up which now affects us. It seems to me the government and some of its supporters took the view that with enough tinkering they could speed up the parliamentary process, and that given sufficient powers at certain critical junctures they could make parliament work in the way they wanted it to work. If I might draw an analogy, it seems they considered that if they adjusted the carburetor, used higher octane gasoline and shaved the motor block they could make the parliamentary motor work at an adequate speed. What they overlooked is that they might burn out the motor in the process. In this connection the point made by my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is a valid one. He suggested that the best rules in the world would fail to work if we did not have members of a sufficient calibre, members who were prepared to make them work in the best interests of the country.

It is for this reason that I feel the mechanistic view which has been suggested in some of the contributions from members opposite leaves a great deal to be desired. Before becoming a member of this house I often stated that I was in favour of parliamentary reform. I stand by that statement. The volume of business to be dealt with by parliament has skyrocketed, and the matters of concern to parliamentarians in the course of their duties have multiplied enormously. Parliament must expand its capacity to cope with an increased work load.

Early in the present session a special committee was established to study the rules of procedure. I trust it will be recalled that this action was taken by parliament, not by the government alone, and that all parties participated in the process which led to its appointment. I noted with a little concern the references by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to the establishment of this committee; he seemed to suggest that the setting up of the committee was the government's idea. The records will show that all sides of the house were equally concerned about the matter.

At this point I should like to pay a special tribute to my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre for the leadership, study and skill he has provided in connection with all aspects of parliament's activities. This house is a far better place and a far more effective place as a result of his contribution to it over the years.

I also wish to congratulate my parliamentary leader, the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) for his effective and incisive contribution to this debate. Like those two hon. members, I find myself in agreement with the greater number of the proposals in the two reports now before us. The committee is to be congratulated upon much of its work. Unfortunately the good which has been wrought is being undone by the effect of the proposed standing order 16A which places in the hands of the government a muzzle with which to choke off free and adequate parliamentary discussion.

I was elected by the people of Regina East to speak up on their behalf when I find it necessary to do so. I was not elected to accept meekly a muzzle, and I do not intend to accept such a muzzle. When we talk about altering the rules of procedure and the parliamentary process we ought to consider some of the changes which have taken place around us throughout the years. I believe we have to consider the role played by communications in the parliamentary process today.

At one time parliament had to make its decisions on the basis of little or limited access to public opinion. Now we have media and means of communication which enable Canadians to develop their opinions quickly on important issues. It is important and essential that parliament today does keep in touch with public opinion on all matters before it, but it seems to me that there is potential in this rule for the government to order the business of the house so that the opposition will be effectively denied the ear of the public. Debates can be so short before a vote is taken that there will be no time to allow public opinion to make itself heard. It can be used to gag and emasculate parliament.

Beyond the specific provisions of the proposed standing order, what disturbs me is the tone of the government's views and some of the impressions they are trying to leave. We have to keep in mind that parliament is not for the convenience of the government nor for the convenience of the civil service. I make this reference in recognition of the fact that because of some problems and factors in recent years the civil service has very often had to accept burdens and loads which in fact must be recognized as not being properly its own.

Parliament is here not just to pass legislation. Parliament is here to pass judgment on proposals that are placed before it. This involves more than a vote. It involves an opportunity for adequate discussion. Of course then we have the critical question: Who is to determine what is adequate discussion? The other night after the outset of this debate we had a somewhat scholarly dissertation from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in which he discussed some of the reasons why parliamentary reform was necessary. With many parts of his dissertation I found myself in sympathy or agreement, but there were some implications and suggestions in his remarks which I feel must be questioned.

I noted a rather consistent reference to dealing with business in an orderly fashion or in a systematic manner. This sounds very nice. It is very desirable in many ways, Mr. Speaker, but we have to try to determine who is to say that it is orderly or systematic. By whose standards—on what basis do we judge that that in fact is the case? I suggest this is something that should not be left to any one side of the house to determine.

As recorded at page 3782 of Hansard the Prime Minister said:

> I ask myself if our present procedures do not encourage even the most conscientious members to be good politicians first, and good members of the House of Commons in a secondary way.

I really do not appreciate the Prime Minister taking it upon himself to make a statement such as this with the implications and suggestions contained therein. I do not think it was his role, particularly within the context of the contribution he was making to this debate, to suggest that there is somehow a very queer difference between the role of a politician and the role of a good member of this house. I suggest it was not his place to make such a suggestion at this juncture of the debate.

Later on the Prime Minister made some references to some of the debates which have taken place during the current session. He was making reference to the priorities that are sometimes required in government business. As recorded at page 3783 he said:

> Interest rate provisions may have to be changed to keep an act in operation.

This very obviously refers to the discussion which took place this fall with respect to the farm credit legislation. Again, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Prime Minister revealed something of a lack of knowledge of the political process as it takes place in this house. A little further on he said:

> Days are consumed on the second reading debate and on the first few clauses. Then interest lags, and the technical clauses, the ones that need intensive study, slide by untested.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this is not what has taken place during the current session of the House of Commons. I am a new member of the house but certainly it did not take me and other new members very long to learn that on many occasions much of the discussion on committee stage of a bill takes place on clause 1, and properly so. I will have a few things to say later about the farm credit legislation and the time it took in the house, in view of the references made by the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome).

I could go on to quote some of the other references made by the Prime Minister with which I disagree, but there is one area in particular that I would like to treat at some length. As recorded at page 3787 the Prime Minister stated:

> In this session we have already allowed three months to go by and only passed nine measures. We should not spend a substantial part of this session wrangling fruitlessly over rules of procedure.

I think some of the alternatives with respect to the latter point lie with the government, but with respect to the previous point concerning the nine measures that have been passed I note that the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Deachman) also made some references to the work load of sessions and the length of time taken to dispose of business in the house. He made particular reference to the work load of the last session of the house. I cannot judge particularly on his comments because I was not a member of that parliament, but again it seems to me he left an impression that there was an irresponsible use of time on the part of members of the house.

Because I was concerned with the comments of the Prime Minister, and of other members on the government side, I decided to check for myself just what has taken place during the current session of the House of Commons. I have a complete rundown here, if any hon. member would like to take a look at it to see just what has happened since September 12. My consideration in reviewing the business since that date has dealt solely with the time that was available in the house for government orders.

Since September 12 and until the commencement of the debate on this report there were 60 sitting days in the House of Commons. First of all, with the opening day, the motion to move the address in reply to the speech from the throne, and then the throne speech debate, there were consumed eight days of the time of the house; and it should be mentioned here, Mr. Speaker, that this in fact left two days unused which were at the disposal of the government for some of the business it wished to bring before the house.

Secondly we had the budget speech and the budget debate. Together these two items consumed six and a half days of the time of the house. Then we had the amount of time devoted to supply, and this was established on the basis of agreement between the house leaders, and was approved by an order of the house. We had 17½ days used for the regular supply business of the house to dispose of the estimates for the current fiscal year. In addition we had another approximately one and a quarter days used in debate on interim supply.

Then there was one day when no business was transacted due to the death of Premier Daniel Johnson of Quebec. Altogether these various items total 34¼ days. This left 25¾ days for the other business of the house that has been transacted. There were two committees established dealing with procedures and statutory instruments, and the debates on these two resolutions consumed some 2¼ days of the time of the house.

That left 23½ days devoted to other legislation.

The Prime Minister made reference to the nine measures passed. This includes the supply bill. In fact there were actually 11 bills passed, including the interim supply bill and one private bill, but the remaining eight measures occupied 23½ days of the time of the house.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Reference has already been made to the farm credit legislation dealt with at some length in the house. I should like to review briefly just how much time was taken on government orders in respect of this particular legislation. Here there may be some difficulty concerning some of the fractions, as was noted earlier. I also took the good days with the bad. On some days, of course, only one hour was at the disposal of the government for government orders, and on other days several hours were available. First, with reference to the farm credit legislation, at the resolution stage some two and three quarter days were consumed. This included one one-hour government day as well. At the resolution stage there were three items of farm credit legislation. Then we went to the Farm Improvement Loans Act. The second reading of this measure consumed approximately two hours. Surely no hon. member could complain about the length of time spent on that. Then we moved to the committee stage in respect of the Farm Improvement Loans Act. This consumed one full day on government orders and two one-hour periods of government business on other days. On third reading no time was taken.

Then we had the Farm Credit Act. Second reading on this bill consumed half an hour. Surely no hon. member on either side of the house can complain that too long was spent on that. Admittedly the committee stage took a considerable period of time. On the committee stage of the farm credit bill there were two two-hour periods, plus one full day, and then another two and a half hour period. The third reading stage took approximately half an hour. Altogether we could say that on these two bills which were passed, including the resolution stage of the third bill, there were some eight and a half days of government business time consumed. Considering the controversial nature of this legislation, the importance of it and the many factors that had to be considered, I certainly do not think this was an unreasonable length of time. If members opposite think it was unreasonable, I am sure there are many people in this country who would be interested to hear them say so.

Then we have the prairie grain advance payments bill. The resolution stage took one day. Of course it should be noted that this afforded members an opportunity to discuss many aspects of problems facing the grain industry in western Canada. Then another half day was consumed during the second reading, committee and third reading stage in respect of this bill. This is a total of one and a half days for the prairie grain advance payments bill, or a total of ten days for all these pieces of farm legislation.

Then there was the debate on the post office bill, the other piece of legislation which required lengthy discussion. I wonder whether hon. members on the opposite side of the house will suggest that the debate on that particular bill should have been curtailed. One day was consumed on the resolution stage. On second reading there was a lengthy debate; there is no question about that. Three and a half days were consumed on the second reading stage. On the committee stage we had another day. Then the third reading consumed about 20 minutes. This is a total of five and a half days.

These were the most controversial pieces of government legislation discussed to date, during the current session. Admittedly the debate did take a considerable amount of time, but I would be interested to know whether members on the other side of the house would suggest that, in fact, discussion on these bills should have been curtailed. It is true that there was some duplication of discussion at the resolution and second reading stages of the bills. This is one thing which is suggested in the rules with which we wholeheartedly agree, namely the cutting out of the resolution stage of bills. This will in effect cut out some time.

In addition to these pieces of legislation there have been another five bills which have passed through all stages of discussion in the house. First of all, there was the publication of statutes bill. All stages in respect of this bill were completed in 40 minutes. Then there was the C.N.R. branch line construction bill. The resolution stage took half an hour. The second reading and committee stage took one and a quarter hours. The third reading stage took half an hour. This, in terms of time, represents three quarters of a day. The resolution stage of the bill to amend the Judges Act took one hour. The second reading, committee, and third reading stages took one day, for a total of one and a quarter days. The next is the C.N.R. capital financing bill, the second reading and committee stages of which took one day. The third reading stage consumed one and a half days, making a total of two and a half days. The resolution stage on the Customs Tariff bill consumed one day and the second reading, committee and third reading stages consumed three fifths of a day. This is a total of one and three fifths days.

The debate on the farm legislation consumed ten days, the debate on the post office bill consumed five and a half days and the five other bills were disposed of in a little more than six days of the time of the house that was available to the government. This is a total of something over 21½ days. However, in the time since the opening of this session other items of government business have been considered as well. The resolution stage has been completed on the official languages bill. The minister has made part of his speech on the amendments to the Patent Act, the Trademarks Act and the Food and Drug Act. All these items consumed one day. The discussion on the I.M.F. special drawing rights resolution was completed in just under two hours. Some ten minutes has been spent on the resolution concerning the fresh water fish marketing board. The farm machinery syndicates credit bill has passed through the resolution stage, in spite of some handicaps involving procedure.

When one considers that this is a new parliament and considers also the many problems relating to the Prime Minister's decision to recommend dissolution of parliament last spring, and the inexperience of some of the new ministers in this parliament, it would appear that parliament has completed a considerable amount of business.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might at this stage call it ten o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

INDUSTRY—PRODUCTION IN CANADA OF PARTS FOR NEW JET PLANES

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I asked a question in the house on the orders of the day recently concerning the ten L-1011 jets which Air Canada had ordered from the Lockheed Company.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

Since my question was ruled out of order, I asked that it be discussed at ten o'clock, to find out whether Canada intended to ask this company to make parts for jet planes in this country, in order to provide jobs for Canadians and participate in regional development program so as to abolish regional disparities.

Mr. Speaker, Air Canada has ordered ten L-1011 jets which are to be manufactured by the Lockheed Company at a cost, apparently, of $175 million. The first six jets are to be delivered in 1972; three more will be ready by 1973 and the last one in 1976.

Air Canada has already ordered these 270-passenger planes, after spending nine months appraising the advantages of these aircraft and other similar models.

This giant aircraft, Mr. Speaker—for the information of hon. members who are not familiar with the statistics—has a cruising speed of 565 miles per hour, which is 15 miles faster than the DC-8 and DC-9 aircraft now used by Air Canada. The engines are made by Rolls-Royce and have a thrust of 40,600 pounds; they are therefore twice as powerful as the most powerful engine of the DC-8. Those planes will be used exclusively for domestic flights in North America.

Mr. Speaker, with regard to the contract given by Air Canada, Canadians, naturally—and here I speak for them before parliament—hope to be able to participate actively and intensely in the manufacturing of at least part of those aircraft, for instance, certain parts, as I suggested.

It may be an excellent thing to grant contracts to competent companies which are known for doing a good job but, to my mind, we must nor forget also that Canadians need employment, that they face huge and complex economic problems. In this regard, we do not know what to think because no statement has been made since the news of the contract came out. All Canadians are waiting to find out whether they can find there a source of employment.

This then was the purpose of my remarks this evening. I should like to get a reply to this question: With a view to encouraging decentralizing programs, with which it dins our ears every week, will the government sign agreements with the Lockheed company to give work to Canadians?

Mr. Speaker, I would like the spokesman for the Department of Transport to tell us—I repeat to make myself clear—whether negotiations are now under way between the government, through Air Canada, and the Lockheed company, to arrange for the manufacture of at least certains parts in Canada to encourage and support Canadian labour.

Moreover, as I said before, the engines in these aircraft being Rolls-Royce engines, and as this English firms has a subsidiary in Canada, it therefore does not seem impossible that this new contract could give work to a good number of Canadians without interfering with the contract, since a number of those aircraft are already made in Canada; this is not something to be scorned in these days of unemployment, insecurity and regional disparity.

Mr. Speaker, I feel my proposal is quite acceptable. It surely calls for a positive reply on the part of the government, in order to reassure Canadians who are asking themselves a lot of serious questions in this regard.

I do not wish to take any more of the time of the house; the main purpose of my intervention being a specific reply. I trust the reply of the government will be as favourable.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I can cheer up my hon. friend as far as the purchases of the Lockheed company in Canada are concerned. That company has already placed orders in the past in Canada, it is doing so at the present time and it will do so in the future.

Of course, at the present time, these orders concern the 1011 jet recently purchased by Air Canada and an American military transport aircraft called the C5A.

As far as the 1011 jet is concerned, we expect that the contracts already signed and those being negotiated will bring to the Canadian subcontractors, while the program lasts, a sum of about $300 million. My department is now trying to increase that amount.

As far as the C5A is concerned, $150 million have already been spent on it and that amount will probably be doubled during the construction program of that aircraft.

My hon. friend might be interested to know the names of the Canadian subcontractors. They are: Northwest Industries, Edmonton; Fleet Aircraft, Fort Erie; Bristol Aerospace, Winnipeg; Canadair, Montreal; United Aircraft of Canada, Montreal; Canadian Aviation Electronics, Montreal; Abex Industries, Montreal. Other companies around Toronto and Hamilton in particular also have smaller contracts.

Like the hon. member I am sorry that more of those contracts are not awarded in the eastern townships. It is too bad for the eastern townships but what makes the eastern townships unhappy makes Montreal happy. That is one of those things that cannot be changed very easily.

Furthermore, at the end of February, a conference of tenderers will be called in Toronto, and another one in Montreal. The Lockheed company will, of course, take advantage of this opportunity to brief the Canadian industrialists, and it is possible that other opportunities will be offered to Canadian subcontractors.

This is roughly the situation and I think that it will, at least, moderately cheer up my hon. friend.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS—REQUEST THAT PROTECTION BE INCLUDED IN CRIMINAL CODE

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I asked the Minister of Justice the following question:

> In view of the fact that the housewives' charter to protect the consumer has now become part of Britain's criminal code, will the minister introduce similar legislation or consider such action in connection with his new omnibus bill to amend the Canadian Criminal Code?

The minister replied that he would certainly want to talk that over with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I hope he has done so.

The speeches of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs are studded with declarations that the consumer has the right to be protected from fraud, deception, misleading advertising and other unscrupulous malpractices. Surely the time has come to legislate firmly, clearly and unmistakably against this sort of thing. We need teeth in the Criminal Code to protect the consumer. If the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is to live up to the first half of his title, that is, if he is to be the watchdog for the consumer, he will have to be given the necessary legal teeth.

In Britain they have taken a long step forward in the direction of protecting the consumer from fraud. The housewives' charter, which became part of Britain's criminal code last month, deals with business ethics. A board of trade spokesman describes it as a law vitally important to the whole community. It is designed to give safeguards to everyone who buys goods and services. It requires merchants, when describing their goods, to tell it as it is. Details such as size, manufacture and performance must be given correctly. The same thing applies to certain statements describing services.

For the first time the law extends not only to written but also to oral descriptions. The law requires local weights and measures authorities to enforce it. The housewives' charter, technically known as the trade descriptions act, 1968, has been in the making for several years. At the time of its introduction into the British parliament in the spring of 1966 one British newspaper commented:

> Publicity about the penalties may have the deterrent effect which is needed, without the prospect opening up of butchers or bakers or candlestick makers, being prosecuted by the dozen.

The strict provisions of the new law are clearly designed to curb the malpractices of a few businessmen and their employees in the hope that this protection for the consumer will build up his and her trust in the marketplace.

If we had such legislation in Canada there would be means of inquiring into and dealing with advertising which is mailed wholesale to customers, such as that which I drew to the attention of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs recently. It begins:

> You have already won a great art treasure! Congratulations! You have already won ... an oil painting by Renoir! or an etching by Rembrandt! or a woodcut by Holbein! or a lithograph by Chagall! or a silk-screen by Warhol! or a lithograph by Picasso! or, at the very least, you have certainly won a full colour reproduction of a Gainsborough!

All of which, and much more, is designed to sell an encyclopaedia. What is sold in the process is an unprotected public.

This type of promotion demands the closest scrutiny by public authorities. It is misleading for the very reason that it is so well written. Thousands of Canadians are led to believe that they are already well on their way to possessing a priceless art treasure. Only the fine print indicates that this so-called contest is open to residents of the United States as well, that it is void where prohibited by federal, state, provincial or local laws or regulations, and that there is only one prize per family.

The letter authenticating the top prize—the Renoir—was sent by an American appraiser to an American publishing firm over 18 months ago. Who is to say that this contest was not available to residents of the United States much earlier than to residents of Canada? Who is to say that any Canadian has a chance for more than the booby prize—the coloured reproduction of the Gainsborough, costing a few cents? This whole matter bristles with questions demanding answers that can be given only after proper investigation. The public has a right to be protected from misleading advertising.

The fact that this particular advertising emanated from Maclean's in Toronto led me to believe that the publishers of that well known magazine were responsible, although the two addresses were different. Further investigation indicates that the two Maclean's inhabit a single building on the corner of University and Dundas streets in Toronto, hence the two addresses. It would appear that this is one of those perfect marriages where the two have become a single whole. In any event, the evidence available leads one to that conclusion.

All of this, Mr. Speaker, points up the need in Canada for legislation to protect the consumer from misleading advertising and other malpractices of the marketplace. I urge upon the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) or for that matter the Minister of Corporate and Consumer Affairs (Mr. Basford), the need for a housewives' charter as part of Canada's Criminal Code.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Corporate and Consumer Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that in Britain they now have what they call a shoppers' charter in the form of the British Trade Description Act, 1968. I am pleased that the British have this. I do not want to disappoint the hon. lady, but my officials have examined it and have advised me that most of the provisions of the shoppers' charter in Britain are already contained in the laws of Canada, principally in section 33(c) of the Combines Investigation Act and section 306 of the Criminal Code. As the hon. lady knows, the latter is to be transferred from the Criminal Code to the Combines Investigation Act so that I can have direct administrative responsibility for it. If we were to pass the motion now before the house, dealing with procedural reform, we could undoubtedly get to that more quickly than we will be able to do now. There is protection also in many of the provincial consumer protection acts, as well as the sale of goods acts. The point I am making is that much of what the British have done, we have already done in Canada or have under active consideration.

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

We have already examined the British charter. I have a special assistant on my staff in charge of consumer affairs who will be spending three days in London in the early part of January examining this and other consumer programs in Britain, and judging their suitability to Canadian conditions. I should like also to make the point to the hon. member that at the first meeting of the consumer council which I appointed in November and which met on Monday, I said to the council:

> It seems to me that it would be useful to have before the public, before industry, before consumer groups, and before government, a declaration of consumer rights, and I would hope your council would endeavour to draw up such a declaration. Such a declaration should attempt to set out those consumer rights that will ensure that the consumer benefits from our competitive economic system. It could serve as a guide for the conduct of further debate on consumer affairs ... It would clarify for all sectors of our economy precisely what the consumer demands of his economy and his society.

So, I think in asking the consumer council to prepare a declaration or charter of consumer rights, undoubtedly I have been a step ahead of what the hon. lady is urging. I feel, with all due respect to the British, that in terms of consumer affairs Canada is where the action is. We have established a department; the provinces are all establishing departments or bureaus. My own department is shortly introducing a hazardous products act which will go much further than anything contained in the shoppers' charter in England. I shall be announcing in a short while a prices and income policy to benefit the consumer. I will be announcing a textile and fibre content care label program. Already before the house is the drug legislation to deal with drug prices. Again, if we improve the procedures of the house, we will be able to deal with the drug legislation much more quickly and get the prices of drugs in Canada down. We have—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Basford: My point is that it is not—

Mr. Speaker: Order. My point is that the hon. member's time has expired.

UNIDENTIFIED FLYING OBJECTS—REPORTED SIGHTINGS OVER SIOUX LOOKOUT, ONTARIO

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, on December 4, 1968, I addressed a question to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) concerning the alleged sighting of unidentified flying objects over the town of Sioux Lookout, Ontario. I did this deliberately because the Department of National Defence maintains a very thorough, and I would probably say expensive, radar detection establishment at Sioux Lookout. I also thought this would be an opportunity for the Department of National Defence to shed some light on this phenomenon of unidentified flying objects.

If I were a pilot of one of these U.F.O.'s I am certain that I could think of no better place to land and examine planet Earth than Sioux Lookout, Ontario, the people of which have a tremendous capacity for offering hospitality that is exceeded only by their ability to out-enjoy visitors.

In a more serious vein, there have been a number of sightings located in the general area of northwestern Ontario. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, you will recall an instance where the hon. member for Selkirk brought to the attention of the house the rather spectacular experiences of people in the Falcon lake area. However, no satisfaction was ever given the hon. member, and if the government has any information at all about these matters I think it should be made available to the public. There is, as hon. members know, a great deal of curiosity about this subject.

Shortly after my last visit to Sioux Lookout I was told by telephone, and in person, that there had been a large number of sightings there. An article appeared in the town's paper, the Daily Bulletin, which I should like to quote to bear out my claim that there have been extensive sightings in this area. This is the November 29 edition of the paper, and the article reads as follows:

> For the last two evenings several people in town have sighted an unidentified flying object over Pelican lake.
> Last night's sighting was observed by quite a few people outside Jim's Coffee Bar on Front street at about 6.00 p.m. The only information we could gather from observers was that it "was a big light in the sky, which kept changing in colour". No idea as to its shape or manoeuvreability was given. About a month ago, at least five people saw an U.F.O. Four on a return trip from Dryden spotted a green light in the sky near the "Turkey Trail" while another person in town saw the same phenomenon about two hours earlier over Pelican lake.
> Both descriptions tallied on checking them out and the U.F.O. was described as a flat circular object of bright greenish hue, which appeared to be pulsating. It was travelling at conventional speed for an airborne object and glided down behind the tree line out of sight.

Then the article concludes with the question: Anyone have an explanation?

That brings me to the point of my question, Mr. Speaker. We do have this very extensive facility at Sioux Lookout that is operated by the Department of National Defence. Surely if anything was in the sky over that period, records would be kept by this most efficient establishement, one which, I might add, is also an expensive establishment. Therefore I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary—and it is very kind of him to stay up so late—whether he could release some of this supposedly confidential information for the benefit of the Canadian public. The Christmas holiday season is fast approaching, but I do not want to receive the answer from the parliamentary secretary that it was Santa Claus trying out his reindeer in anticipation of Christmas.

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I hope I am not setting a precedent this evening by answering this question, but questions relating to unidentified flying objects should really be directed to the minister who speaks on behalf of the National Research Council. However I undertook to check out the observations made by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, and I am informed that although there were some strange lights noticed in the Sioux Lookout area on the night of November 27, no radar reflections were picked up by the radar station at Sioux Lookout.

I do not like to disappoint the hon. member, but may I take this opportunity to forecast to him that there probably will be some unidentified flying objects picked up by that radar station on the night of December 24. There is some evidence that these will eventually be identified as a space vehicle propelled by eight unknown objects, and this will be reported through the regular NORAD channels. It is highly unlikely, however, that the pilot of this space vehicle on that night will be identified either as the hon. member for Hamilton West or the hon. member for Edmonton Centre.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.24 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, December 13, 1968

The house met at 11 a.m.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: Order. A message has been received from the Senate informing this house that the Senate has passed Bill S-16, an act to incorporate Transcoastal Life Assurance Company, to which the concurrence of this house is desired.

PRIVILEGE

MR. RICHARDSON—PRESENCE IN TORONTO OF TRANSPORT MINISTER

Hon. James Richardson (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of privilege. When replying yesterday to a question concerning the Toronto international airport I stated as follows, as reported at page 3852 of Hansard:

> —the Minister of Transport today is in Toronto on this matter.

At that point the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales) rose on a question of privilege and advised the house that he had seen the minister get into the elevator as he came into the chamber. The facts, Mr. Speaker, are that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) left his office at about 2.30 yesterday afternoon, and at the time I was speaking he was either on his way to the airport or already in the air on his way to Toronto.

I realize, Mr. Speaker, that this is a relatively minor matter but it does concern accuracy of information and I hope in this instance the house will conclude that the hon. member for Wellington and I were both right.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, on the point of privilege, I accept the minister's observation; I was right and he was right. I think we can conclude that the Minister of Transport has been in flight for some time, so much so that he very seldom alights in the house.

EXTERNAL AID

IVORY COAST—REPORTED REFUSAL OF GIFT OF WHEAT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, normally I would direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs but I am sure the Prime Minister will be familiar with the matter. Will he advise the house if the government of the Ivory Coast in fact is not accepting the shipment of Canadian wheat that is due to arrive in that country soon?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are somewhat puzzled about the information that has appeared. We were approached by a representative of the governments of Ivory Coast and Niger, and after having received representations we agreed to supply 35,000 tons of wheat to be shipped to both the Ivory Coast and Niger. Some 19,000 tons have already been shipped and the rest is being prepared. We could of course, delay the sending of the wheat if it appears that the Ivory Coast does not want any.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the Prime Minister know whether the representative in question who had approached the government of Canada was an authorized representative of his country? Was any contact made, for example, with the external aid section of our Department of External Affairs to ascertain whether the request was one which ought to have been made?

Mr. Trudeau: Oh, yes, Mr. Speaker. We had obvious knowledge that this gentleman was a representative of these governments. He came here and contacted the government through their consular officials in Canada. I understand the problem is mainly one of insufficient storage facilities in Abidjan; there seems to be insufficient provision for handling wheat. I understand it is not that they cannot use the wheat they requested of us, but that they have a storage and handling problem at this time.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Will the Prime Minister say, by way of a supplementary question, whether this sale was to be for cash or on time, with credit guaranteed by the government of Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it was part of our external aid program. So far as I know there was no cash involved. Of course it is possible that part of the shipment was for cash; I can inquire into that. But I know that the essence of the request, the bulk of the request, came about because of shortages which had appeared in the area. Because of this request that we received from the Ivory Coast we channelled the shipment of wheat through our external aid program. If it is not required now or not used I am sure many other countries would welcome it.

[Translation]

[Later:]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question on the same subject.

I should like the right hon. Prime Minister to tell us whether an agreement had been signed between the governments of Canada and the Ivory Coast with regard to this wheat order, in view of the fact that it was shipped and refused? If this is the case, what will come out of this agreement?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any written agreement. There might have been an exchange of correspondence or documents, but I want to make clear that it was not a sale but a gift through our own external aid office.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, another supplementary question.

If it was a gift, may I ask if gifts made by Canada under its external aid program normally go through the unofficial or official channels? If they follow the unofficial channels, why do we not negotiate written agreements?

The right honourable Prime Minister could check my assertion and give me an answer later on this point.

[English]

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): In view of the possible difficulty in making use of this shipment of wheat by the Ivory Coast and the obvious need in both Nigeria and Biafra, is the government making plans to divert this shipment which is expected to arrive on December 20 and, perhaps, to start to make use of some of the stock presently being loaded in Montreal? I am sure it would be happily accepted by both Nigeria and Biafra.

Mr. Trudeau: As to the shipment which is on the way, there is no question of it not being required by the government of Niger. It was sent in reply to a request by them. As to the disposal of some of the wheat which, hypothetically, would not be used by the Ivory Coast, I would point out we are now in the process of assembling some $1,600,000 worth of food supplies and relief which will be channelled through the Red Cross to the various parts of Nigeria. But the request from this quarter has been not so much for wheat as for fish and carbohydrates.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): In view of the misunderstanding which seems to have arisen with the Ivory Coast, may I ask whether any preliminary visits were made by departmental representatives to determine whether adequate facilities existed for the storage of this product?

Mr. Trudeau: Would the hon. member mind repeating his question?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I asked whether any visits had been made by representatives of the department to the Ivory Coast to determine whether storage facilities were adequate.

Mr. Trudeau: Having received a request for a gift of wheat, we made the arrangements to have it assembled and sent. Now that we have learned there may be some question whether the Ivory Coast can use it we have, of course, been in communication with our embassy staff at Accra, I believe, which serves Abidjan also, and we are asking for a report.

Mr. Stanfield: Having regard to the interest in this matter, would the Prime Minister ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs to report to the house on the results of the investigation when he is next in this chamber, so that hon. members may have full information as to just what nas happened?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, we would have no objection to explaining what the situation is as soon as we have clarified this matter.

AIR CANADA

STATUS OF DISPUTE WITH EMPLOYEES' ASSOCIATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I should like to ask either the Prime Minister or the Minister of Transport, whoever has the information, what has happened to the settlement between Air Canada and the employees' association. Have the negotiations now broken down and, if so, what steps are being taken to start them over again?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): There was agreement reached during an all night bargaining session a couple of nights ago. However, when the parties involved began to put down on paper the agreement they had reached there was some difference of opinion as to what had in fact been agreed. This is not unprecedented in the field of relations between employers and employees. They have since then been trying to clarify the situation and I believe are presently meeting—or they were this morning—to see whether some final understanding cannot be reached which will reconcile the difference between the parties.

Mr. Lewis: Is the present disagreement related to the salary settlement? Is it true that Air Canada has withdrawn the wage offer which was accepted by the union, or is the difficulty related only to matters other than wages? While I am on my feet may I also ask whether the Minister of Labour, who is not here today, is taking steps to start the negotiations again, and whether he is going to Montreal personally? What is happening?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour is either en route—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hellyer: —intending to start, or may be in Montreal, and is very directly involved in the situation. So far as the substantive part of the question relating to the agreement between the two parties is concerned I understand it is not the major wage proposal which is in dispute and it has not been withdrawn. It is a question or questions relating to working conditions. Perhaps there might be a pay element in the working conditions, but it is in that area rather than the major wage settlement that the difference of opinion has arisen.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INQUIRY AS TO STEPS TO MEET UNEMPLOYMENT SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to put my question to the Minister of Labour but, in his absence, I will put it to the Prime Minister.

Since Canada now has 338,000 unemployed, 50,000 more than last year—in my opinion, that is a very serious and urgent matter—can the Prime Minister tell us what steps he intends to take in the short or long run to alleviate that serious problem which affects our country's prosperity?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, since it is a matter of statistics, I would like to remind the hon. member that although there are 49,000 more unemployed there are also 268,000 more jobs.

[English]

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that unemployment today is 50,000 higher than it was this day a year ago, and the indication that unemployment is going to increase steadily during the winter months, as it always does, will the Prime Minister give consideration to reinstituting the winter works program as a means of helping to alleviate hardship and suffering caused by steadily growing unemployment?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is just about accurate. Unemployment is up by 49,000.

Mr. Hees: Fifty thousand over a year ago.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, we won't argue about the 1,000. The D.B.S. figures are 49,000.

Mr. Hees: Over.

Mr. Trudeau: But I just want to say that the success of our programs is indicated by the fact that the employment figures are up by 268,000.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I asked the Prime Minister if the government would consider the reinstitution of the winter works program. He has not given me an answer. I take it they are unwilling, and that therefore the just society is only for the affluent and the employed.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question in the same vein to the right hon. Prime Minister. Because of the seriousness of the allegations would the Prime Minister cause an investigation to be carried out in regard to the operations of the Canada Manpower offices in Ottawa, since it has been alleged that permanent civil servants already employed are given preference for occasional work over other applicants?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure that this is a supplementary question, but the question having been asked might be allowed.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, this thing happened—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Well, I posed the question to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has asked the question. There is no point of order since I have allowed the question.

[Translation]

[Later:]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

As the Prime Minister did not answer adequately the question put by the hon. member for Richmond, I would like to ask him what steps the government considers taking to provide employment for the 50,000 more unemployed that we have this year? I think the question is in order and can be answered, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member cannot restate a question already asked merely because he feels that the government or the minister has not answered adequately. According to the standing orders, the hon. member has the right to put a question if he wishes, but he cannot insist on an answer that he would consider more adequate.

[English]

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the increase in employment obviously was inadequate to avoid a very substantial increase in unemployment, may I ask the right hon. Prime Minister, if he does not wish to reinstitute the winter works program, whether the government would consider some other program. Is the government giving consideration to some other program to deal with the large increase in unemployment this winter?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, obviously the labour force increased very considerably more than it usually does in a like period. That is why employment has increased so considerably. If you look at the percentage you will see that employment increased by 3.6 per cent. This proves that our policies for expansion are working well.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are a number of supplementaries. We will try to proceed in an orderly fashion. I believe the hon. member for York South has a further supplementary.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the increase in the labour force was forecast by the Economic Council of Canada some years ago, and everyone knew this would happen; and in view of the fact that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand that the hon. member wishes to ask a question.

Mr. Lewis: Now that I have laid the basis for it may I repeat the question. I ask this seriously. Is the government considering some alternate program to help cities, communities and particularly provinces like Quebec and the Atlantic provinces, meet the unemployment situation this winter?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest the hon. member is merely repeating with more emphasis the question he asked in the first instance.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, does the Prime Minister intend to continue to ignore the fact that there are 50,000 more people unemployed today than a year ago? Does he not intend to institute some policies in respect of this very serious situation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Prime Minister relates to the abandonment of the winter works program. Is the government considering a suggestion I made to the Prime Minister at the time the winter works program was abandoned, that it might be employed in areas where unemployment in the winter months reaches or surpasses 8 per cent?

Mr. Trudeau: When we abandoned the winter works program we did so because we felt there were other ways in which to ensure prosperity. We are seeking these constantly. We are in the process of negotiating a new FRED agreement with Prince Edward Island; we are in the process of extending a loan to New Brunswick to be used for the purpose of erecting transmission lines; we are in the process of offering to the Manitoba government something like half a million dollars to be used for the purpose of constructing sewers and water works in Churchill. We are doing this type of thing in other areas. This has to do with regional development, which is an area with which we are very much concerned. As hon. members know our policies extend from ARDA through AIDA and various forms of assistance to the western farmers. These are all ways in which we try to alleviate the economic situation. Of course we do not have a system of government in which we have entire jurisdiction over the whole economic policy.

Mr. Baldwin: Thank God for that.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, thank God for that; I quite agree with the hon. member. But, if he thanks God for that, why are his members by their questions seeming to indicate that every time something goes wrong—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I believe the Prime Minister's eloquence carried him away from answering the basis of my question, which was whether the winter works program might be reinstituted in areas where unemployment had reached the critical point of 8 per cent or more. In view of the many reasons outlined I think this is a very major and key question.

Mr. Trudeau: It is not the magic of the 8 per cent figure which would make us change our decision to abandon a program which largely was a make-work program. Government policy is not to create work projects or find work just as a way of alleviating a situation. Our program is to create growth in areas where there should be economic growth.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, we listened with interest to the Prime Minister's enunciation of various alternatives to the winter works program. Is he prepared to make a statement as to whether his government will extend—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I am trying to address this very urgent question to the Prime Minister. The groundfish industry is on the verge of total collapse. Unless federal aid is immediately forthcoming to avert the serious unemployment consequences of such a collapse, this will be the result. Will the Prime Minister announce that his government will extend aid to the ground fishery?

Mr. Trudeau: Would the member ask his question of the Minister of Fisheries, please?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members will realize that we have already had quite a number of supplementary questions in respect of what I recognize to be a very important question. Certain other hon. members are anxious to ask questions and perhaps we might allow a few more.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, my question was directed by the Prime Minister to the Minister of Fisheries. Since the question was in order, perhaps the house is entitled to an answer.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the minister of fisheries for Newfoundland, industry representatives and consultants will be meeting here next Tuesday to discuss this problem and help formulate a policy.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, in view of the heavy unemployment figure and his answer of the other day, will the Minister of Industry now get the report from the interdepartmental committee and announce a policy in respect of shipbuilding which will alleviate the serious unemployment in shipyards in this country?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Again, Mr. Speaker, this is the same kind of approach as in previous questions. What we would like to do is to rationalize the industry instead of dumping money into it. We would like to rationalize it in order that the subsidies now being given will be more properly used than they have been in the past.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

The hon. Prime Minister said a while ago, with regard to the unemployment problem, that there were better ways than winter works to achieve prosperity. He spoke of a lot of projects in other provinces, but did not speak of Quebec. I should therefore like to ask him what steps have been taken in the province of Quebec to help check the unemployment that exists there also?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, with regard to Quebec, we signed an agreement barely six or seven months ago with that province setting up a program under ARDA for the Gaspé peninsula and the lower St. Lawrence. On that occasion, the federal government agreed to pay something like $212 million, as compared to, I believe, $46 million for the province of Quebec. That indicates that the federal government is doing much more in that part of the country than it is doing in many others, and certainly much more than the province of Quebec is doing itself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

The statements which have just been made by the Prime Minister suggest that Quebec refuses to help itself and I wish to object to such an allegation, because Quebecers then feel that they are in an inferior position in this house.

I would like the Prime Minister to stop acting in an arrogant manner with Quebec and to provide some assistance in areas such as the eastern townships—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must remind the hon. member that there is no question of privilege. I do not see how parliamentary privileges of the hon. member are affected by the statement of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Trudeau: With the exception, Mr. Speaker, that my privileges are affected—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Trudeau: —The member is accusing me—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think it would be preferable to drop this matter. I pointed out to the hon. member that there is no question of privilege. May I remind him again of what I said just a few days ago, to the effect that the question of privilege has been too often abused. All hon. members should keep in mind the suggestion I made at the time, that we should not rise on a question of privilege unless there are very serious reasons to do so.

[English]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to very earnestly ask the Prime Minister, in view of the persistent unemployment, accompanied by persistent inflation, whether he will seriously review with his ministers the adequacy of present policies and, at a date convenient to him in the near future, make a statement to the house in respect of the proposals the government will make. There is obviously a difficult situation in the country which the government must face having regard to achieving an adequate rate of growth to meeting inflationary pressures. I ask most earnestly for a comprehensive statement in the near future as to government policy in this regard.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, on the inflation side of the question, as the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs indicated on a previous occasion, we are preparing a white paper. The minister has already referred this white paper on control of inflation, prices and economics to the cabinet. This is now in the process of being considered, and we hope to be in a position to table it in the coming days or weeks.

On the other side of the question in respect of the problems of growth in the economy, we are very concerned. We want to sympathize with the Leader of the Opposition in his suggestion that capitalism in the market economy has broken down and we feel there are some steps—

An hon. Member: There was a day when you would not have said so.

Mr. Trudeau: We feel there are some steps to be taken short of replacing the market economy by a totalitarian or directed economy. These steps have to do with regional development as a process, and we have now set up a department for this purpose.

An hon. Member: What is it doing?

Mr. Trudeau: The department is doing the kind of things I was mentioning a moment ago in answer to the question. In answer to the question I can say I agree that at some point we—

Mr. Speaker: Order please. I understand the question was whether a statement would be made at a later date.

Mr. McGrath: I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether the hon. member might not allow other hon. members to go on to another question.

Mr. McGrath: With great respect, Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is of great urgency to all Canadians. I should like to direct it to the minister of consumer affairs. In anticipation of the white paper referred to by the Prime Minister will the minister launch an investigation into increasing automobile prices and decreasing automobile warranties in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: My understanding also is that this question was asked yesterday.

Mr. McGrath: There was no answer.

AIRPORTS

TORONTO—PROTESTS AGAINST EXPANSION OF FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hyl Chappell (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, having now met with representatives of over 150,000 people from Muskoka to Etobicoke, all of whom opposed and rejected the proposed expansion to the Toronto international airport, will the Minister of Transport now abandon this proposal?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that the way in which the question is asked—would the hon. member resume his seat? It seems to me the hon. member is making a proposal or a suggestion to the minister rather than asking a question, and I doubt whether the question asked in this way is in order.

Mr. Chappell: Perhaps I might reword the question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister made any decision which he can announce involving this proposed expansion?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): As indicated to the house a few days ago, I am now in the process of reviewing this whole situation in respect of the proposed expansion of the Toronto international airport. I have been looking at the evidence which has been collected and at the reports of meetings which have been held with officials of the municipalities and the province. I have talked to a number of groups representing citizens in the area. I had a talk with the responsible ministers in the province of Ontario. I hope that within a very few days we will be in a position to announce the decision of the government with respect to this matter.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that there seems to be great difficulty facing the government in the expansion of the airports at Toronto and Montreal, will the government give serious consideration to the building of a new, super jet airport halfway between, preferably in the area of Trenton and Picton—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: —which is an area admirably suited to such an airport?

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

COMPLAINTS FROM FARM PUBLICATIONS AS TO INCREASED RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General. In light of the statement yesterday by Mr. William Bradley of Regina, Saskatchewan, publisher of the newspaper The Westerner, the official publication of eight livestock groups on the prairies, that the publication will have to close down on January 1, 1969, because of the high increase in postal charges, will the minister take this matter under consideration to avoid the serious close-down of this very important publication?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making a recommendation or suggestion to the minister, rather than asking a question. I would think we have to assume that his suggestion has been noted.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Speaker, all I am asking is that consideration be given to this matter.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the facts as stated by the hon. member are accurate. We have been carrying 3,758 copies of this twice monthly newspaper for a total revenue of $5, which is not a very profitable operation. The cost will go up to about $187. We have estimated that if the livestock breeders increased their subscription rate by $1.10 a year they could easily pay for the additional postage. Apparently they do not consider that the paper is worth $4 instead of $3.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): A supplementary question for the Postmaster General. Has the minister received representations from other farm newspaper groups?

Mr. Kierans: We hear from different newspapers from time to time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again I wonder whether it is in order simply to ask whether representations have been received.

[Translation]

[Later:]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the hon. Postmaster General.

Could the minister tell us whether he has received a letter from Mr. Mercier, president of Les Quotidiens du Québec, Incorporé protesting against the unfair treatment of commercial information newspapers in Canada. Does the minister intend to take steps to correct that injustice?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking a question similar to another one which was asked a moment ago. I wonder whether I should have allowed the first question; however, having done so, I think I should allow the hon. minister to answer the question put by the hon. member for Abitibi.

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker, I have received a letter from Mr. Mercier and we are now drawing up a reply.

GRAIN

INQUIRY AS TO AVAILABILITY OF BOX CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. On Friday, November 29, the minister stated that the availability of box cars was not a limiting factor on the movement of damp grain. In view of the large number of delivery points where the initial one bushel quota on dry grain cannot be delivered because railway agents say that box cars are unavailable, will the minister now tell the house whether that problem has been investigated, and if not, whether it will be investigated?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend will give me specific instances where that is the case we will be glad to make representations to the railroads and see if we can alleviate the situation.

[Mr. Kierans.]

SASKATCHEWAN—REPORTED INADEQUATE DRYING FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the wire sent to him by the leader of the opposition in the Saskatchewan legislature, pointing out the need for the installation of additional drying equipment in Saskatchewan, what action does the government propose to take?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am not aware of the telegram, Mr. Speaker. I will inquire about it.

BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

POLICE INVESTIGATION INTO LEAKS OF COMMISSION REPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister in connection with the interrogation of the reporter Lysiane Gagnon of the newspaper La Presse and the searching of the premises of her parents and an acquaintance of her sister. Will the Prime Minister tell the house under what authority this investigation is being carried out, and why?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The way the question is asked leads to some doubt in my mind as to whether it is in order. The hon. member is seeking a legal interpretation and asking under what authority an investigation is being carried out. I have some doubt whether the question can be accepted in those terms.

Mr. Alexander: Perhaps I can rephrase the question, Mr. Speaker, because of the urgency of the matter in terms of the freedom of the press. I wonder whether the Prime Minister could advise this house why an investigation is taking place right now, in view of those circumstances?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I suppose this question would be more properly answered by the Solicitor General when he is in the house, but I can answer in a general way. It goes back to a question asked, I believe, a month or two ago about documents which appeared to be obviously stolen from the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism. At the time I believe I asked the Solicitor General to inquire into it. He has proceeded therefrom. I have no last word report on the matter. I imagine a search was carried out under the authority of a search warrant, but I have no immediate information on that.

Mr. Alexander: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the Prime Minister could advise the house whether this particular matter is under the direct supervision of himself or any other minister. If it is not under the direct supervision of the Prime Minister, which minister is involved? Further, would the Prime Minister undertake to have the Solicitor General make a statement to the house in respect to the entire matter?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, in the second part of this question the hon. member has answered the first part. It is the Solicitor General who is concerned with this matter. I am sure he will have no objection to answering questions which are asked of him on the matter.

EXTERNAL AID

BIAFRA—SUGGESTED DONATION OF SURPLUS FOOD AS CHRISTMAS GIFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but in his absence I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary or the minister responsible, who may have to take it as notice. Would the government of Canada consider a donation on the part of Canada of surplus foods for a Christmas ship which is scheduled to leave New York for Biafra early in January?

BIAFRA—RECALL OF HERCULES AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Since the last relief Hercules aircraft is scheduled to return to Canada, could the Prime Minister tell us whether the government has abandoned hope of an agreement with Colonel Ojukwu regarding daylight flights?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is not that we have abandoned hope, but the hope is not as bright as it was a month or two ago when we conveyed this daylight proposal to the house. We still have had no adequate explanation, in our minds, why the daylight flights would not have been acceptable to help the starving people of Biafra. But the Hercules had to be rotated at any rate, and we thought this would be an occasion to do it, because it was sitting there inactive. We will now be awaiting further information on it.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the difficulties our government has had in getting some clear statement from Colonel Ojukwu on the matter of daylight flights, I wonder whether the government is giving consideration to or whether it has already initiated some kind of direct communication with Colonel Ojukwu in order to clear up these difficulties.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the house knows the reasons this government is not entering into direct contact with rebel forces in a friendly country. I repeat what I have said; apparently Colonel Ojukwu has many friends in this country, some of them sitting on the opposition benches, and perhaps they would be able to convey a message to him or at least give us some satisfactory explanation.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I rise on a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. This is not the first time the Prime Minister has indicated in some indirect way that members in this house have some special access to Colonel Ojukwu. I would be glad if the Prime Minister would indicate who these members are; and whichever of these gentlemen would be acceptable perhaps the government would make some arrangement for that person to travel to Biafra to consult with Colonel Ojukwu.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest this is not a question of privilege.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PROGRAM RESPECTING POLLUTION PROBLEM AT DUNNVILLE, ONT.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. In his absence perhaps the parliamentary secretary would take it as notice. In view of public concern arising from the hit and run tactics of the C.B.C. in its treatment of the pollution problem at Dunnville, would the minister consult the C.B.C. and make an early report to the house on the matter?

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to bring this matter to the attention of the minister. I expect he will be in the house on Monday to answer any questions of the hon. member.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, when the parliamentary secretary is bringing this matter to the attention of his minister will he find out why the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation failed to respond to the invitation of the chairman of the commission investigating this situation?

Mr. Stanbury: I will be pleased to have that matter looked into, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

DECISION OF B.C. GOVERNMENT TO PUBLISH PROPOSED BRIEF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. My question arises from the rather unusual position of Premier Bennett of British Columbia, who announced that on Monday he is going to make public the brief which would have been presented to the federal-provincial conference on that date, and his allegation that federal-provincial problems are of such a nature they cannot wait until February. I ask the Prime Minister if he can comment on this situation, and whether there will be any answer to the allegation that federal-provincial problems are of such a nature they cannot wait for two months.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not believe it is in order to simply ask the Prime Minister whether he cares to comment on the situation. I do not believe the question is acceptable in this form. I should like to bring to the attention of hon. members that we have just about reached the end of the question period.

Mr. Winch: May I ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we might go on with the supplementary from the hon. member for Vancouver East.

Mr. Winch: Will the Prime Minister say whether he has been notified that on Monday the premier of British Columbia is going to release his brief which was intended for the conference which has now been postponed; and has he any comment to make on that?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have received this morning, I believe, a telegram from the premier of British Columbia indicating that he would release the brief as indicated by the hon. member. No comment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the release of the British Columbia brief by Premier Bennett, will the Prime Minister make public the federal position papers now rather than later?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the house was told yesterday in answer to a question that we are seeking some kind of consensus on this. So far as I can see the consensus is mainly, and very strongly, against publication. I do not believe this binds everyone, and certainly a province is entitled to proceed as it wishes. So far as the federal government is concerned, we see the wisdom as other provinces do of not jumping the gun, as it were. I am still hopeful that we will reach a date which will be acceptable to all provinces for the resumption of this conference, and once that is done we can begin to discuss again the question of publication.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ATTENDANCE OF MINISTERS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the Minister of Finance was supposed to be in the house today and is not here, may I ask the Prime Minister if he would ask him to be here on Monday as there are questions we would like to ask him? According to the roster system he would not normally be here until Wednesday.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. On Tuesday of this week I asked the Prime Minister a question concerning guarantees to employees of Air Canada at Winnipeg, and the Prime Minister asked me to put the question to the Minister of Transport. On Wednesday the Minister of Transport was here during the question period but the question period was short and I was unable to put my question. On Thursday he was not here. Today he was here, but I could not get the floor, and now he has gone until next Wednesday. If he were here, Mr. Speaker, I would ask your consent to put the question now. However, I wonder if, on my point of order, I could have the assurance of the Prime Minister that somebody will be ready to answer the question on Monday; because the Minister of Transport will not be here until Wednesday of next week.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I believe the question is directed at you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Transport was here, but perhaps the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre did not catch your eye.

Mr. Hees: May I have an answer to my question, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Speaker: Order. When the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings rose I thought he was rising on a point of order. I did not expect he was rising to ask a question. I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has a supplementary question to ask on his point of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to note that the Minister of Transport has now come back into the chamber. Even though the time for the question period has expired, in view of the fact that he will not be back until Wednesday I wonder if you would permit him to answer my question of last Tuesday, as to whether guarantees have been given to Air Canada employees at Winnipeg regarding their jobs, seniority and other rights they now have.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): These things are to be negotiated between the company, the union and other interested parties during the course of the next few weeks. I am not in a position to make a categorical statement at this time. I hope the arrangements which are made will be satisfactory to all the parties involved. I hope this can be achieved with a maximum of co-operation and a minimum of acrimony or difficulty for any of the people who are directly interested in this affair.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Does that mean that the assurance given in the press release last Friday is not really a guarantee?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the supplementary question is a form of debate.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member wants to ask a supplementary question I think I must remind hon. members that the time for the question period expired a long time ago. I really do not feel it should be prolonged much longer.

Mr. A. C. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I was recognized once but when a supplementary question was asked I had to withhold my question. I think my question is urgent.

Mr. Speaker: I have no authority to allow the question period to go to the extent it is going now, beyond the time allocated, unless there is unanimous agreement.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: It appears there is not unanimous agreement. If this will help hon. members, I might say I have noticed a number who apparently are anxious to ask questions, and I will give them the first opportunity on Monday afternoon.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The ministers will not be here.

Mr. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): The Minister of Agriculture is here today. This is a very urgent question, and I will not get a chance to ask it until some time later.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member might communicate directly with the minister. The Chair does not make the rules. The rules are there for the Chair to administer. The rules provide a time for the question period, and that time expired ten minutes ago, and I think I have gone beyond the bounds of leniency. In spite of the fact that the hon. member has an urgent question, I feel we should go on with orders of the day. I will make a special effort to see the hon. member is given an opportunity to ask his question early on Monday.

Mr. Bell: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I say I fully agree with Your Honour that you have no alternative but to enforce the rules. However, I should like to point out that ministers are not here on the days they are required to attend in the house. For example, this week the Minister of Transport missed one of the days he should have been here. I had a very important question to ask him and I waited, but I could not catch your eye. It could be the case that the minister will not be here next week. We will then recess over Christmas and will not have the chance to raise these urgent matters that affect transport problems. May I also point out that on the few days he is here he should not get up in the middle of the question period and leave the house.

Motion for Concurrence in Report

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, on a question of personal privilege, I had a very urgent telephone call that I felt I must take in the national interest. That was the reason for my very brief absence. I should like to give my hon. friend the assurance that, health and weather permitting, I will be here on my three days next week.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, may I also say that I wish the Prime Minister would require the people in the galleries who are making an attendance record to note when the Minister of Transport is not here, and also see that the minister makes up this time later.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Yesterday the Minister of Agriculture denied a statement I had made that little improvement in the movement of box cars for transporting damp and tough grain had taken place. May I report to the minister that no cars for the transport of tough and damp grain have been delivered to my local elevator.

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is, of course, a point of debate.

PROCEDURE

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN FOURTH REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

The house resumed, from Thursday, December 12, consideration of the motion of Mr. Blair that the fourth report of the special committee on procedure of the house, presented to the house on Friday, December 6, 1968, be concurred in, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield (p. 3762).

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, before the debate was adjourned last night I had made reference to the remarks of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on Tuesday evening, as reported at page 3787 of Hansard, in describing the business transacted so far in the current session. The Prime Minister said:

> In this session we have already allowed three months to go by and only passed nine measures.

Then I went on to described some of the events in the house over the past three months. I noted that in fact some 35 or more days had been absorbed by house business involving important items such as the throne speech debate, the budget debate, all the items of supply and the establishment of the two procedure committees. I went on to outline the very valid use of time in considering the legislation that has been presented by the government to date.

In my view it would be regrettable if the Prime Minister, his cabinet ministers or other members were to leave the faulty impression that parliament has been dragging its feet. It should be noted that parliament has disposed of the following items of business, regardless of whether members agreed or disagreed in part or in whole with any or all of the particular measures that have been disposed of.

First of all, the throne speech was completed in less than the allotted time. It is important that this debate be maintained because it affords members on both sides of the house the opportunity to debate the state of the nation. I disagree with those who suggest that this debate is of little value. It affords all members the opportunity to take an over-all view of Canada's affairs and also to present specific problems of importance to their own constituencies. If for any reason the debate on the speech from the throne dragged this year, then with all respect I would suggest that this was due, first of all, to the warmed-over soup that was dished up in the speech from the throne and, second, to the dishwater type of presentation made by cabinet ministers in dealing with the issues facing the country. Only the Prime Minister and three cabinet ministers chose to take part in the debate and to present any ideas about the new society of which we have heard so much.

The second item of business disposed of was the presentation of the budget and the budget debate. This is one item that was delayed as a result of the Prime Minister's decision to call an election. The budget can be regarded as the single most important item of business to be dealt with during a session. Considering the impact of the budget on the economy, debate is critical. In fact, a good case can be made for saying that the time allotted to the debate this year was inadequate, that further time was required.

The third item was the passage of interim supply. Again this was necessary because of the dissolution of parliament earlier this year. Matters that were debated at that time did require further debate.

The fourth item dealt with was passage of supply for 1968-69. I am sure members will agree that the voting of some $10 billion worth of expenditures is a major and most important item of business. The present procedures provide for a specified period of time for the consideration of supply. I am sure most hon. members agree that the discussion carried on during this period is useful and needed. New procedures for handling supply are now being proposed and I share the doubts of many members in regard to them. Nevertheless, I am prepared to try these new procedures, subject to adequate consideration of them now and a further review in the future.

The fifth item disposed of was the establishment of the procedure committee and the committee on statutory instruments. Debate was essential because of the importance of the operations of parliament, which is a critical factor in the functioning of democracy as has been demonstrated by the debate that is now under way.

The sixth item was passage of one private bill and limited consideration of other private bills and resolutions. I recognize that consideration of these measures comes under the heading of private members' business. However, we must not lose sight of the fact that these measures are an important part of the business of parliament.

The seventh area dealt with was passage of the Farm Credit Act amendments. This was a controversial piece of legislation and considerable debate on it took place. Indeed, there will continue to be debate on the real value of the measure which was passed. Nevertheless, it was passed and I am sure government members are now trying to take some credit for it wherever that is possible. If extensive time was used for that debate I suggest it was not only due to the controversial nature of the subject matter but also to the unwillingness of the government to provide information on the matters under discussion until it was pried out of them in lengthy debate.

The eighth item was passage of the Farm Improvement Loans Act amendments. Again this legislation was controversial and will continue to be a source of controversy. Regardless of the views that we hold about it it must be regarded as an item of business that has now been disposed of by this house.

We also dealt with the Post Office Act amendments, the Publication of Statutes Act, which was certainly regarded as an important measure, a Canadian National Railways branch line construction bill which was given priority by the government, as was the Judges Act, the Canadian National Railways financing bill, which was important, and lastly the Customs Tariff Act. When that act was introduced in the house by the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance he described it as being of historic significance to Canada.

Finally, we completed the resolution stage of the official languages bill, the amendments to the Bretton Woods Agreements Act and to the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act. We have also had part or all of the minister's speech on second reading of the bill to amend the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act and the Food and Drugs Act, as well as the minister's speech on the resolution to establish the freshwater fish marketing board.

Whether I happen to agree with all or part of the measures that have been passed is immaterial to the point now under consideration. The point is that these are major items of business that have been disposed of by the house. In fact, I could spin out the list even further because other items might also be included. Not without note is the work of some of the committees and the prior steps that are required to be taken by parliament to put the committees to work. Any suggestions by the Prime Minister or other hon. members which would deliberately downgrade the work of this parliament would be a disservice to this house and constitute a misrepresentation to the country.

During this debate the operation of our parliament has been compared with the operation of the parliament at Westminster. In any such discussion we must keep in mind that the two parliaments are of different size; here we have 264 members and at Westminster they have 625 members. Also, England for the most part may be termed a homogeneous country in which geographic factors play a limited part. The English government is a unitary government. On the other hand, Canada is much larger and is split up into basic physical and economic regions. We have a federal government. There are differences in the operations of unitary and federal governments. Certainly our federal type of government means that government work may become more complex, and that will be reflected in parliamentary work at all stages. Because of the complexity of the considerations any parliament in Canada must deal with and because of the many viewpoints which must be heard in debate in this country it is necessary to remember that there is a significant difference in the make-up of the Canadian and British parliaments.

For instance, the people of Britain at the present time have decided that they want to be represented in their parliament by two parties, the third party being very small in terms of the number of members in that parliament. On the other hand, the people of Canada have decided that they want four parties basically to represent them at present in parliament. Regardless of the views of hon. members on the subject or whether they want this situation or not, this is what the people of Canada have decided. Parliament must therefore recognize the existence of several bodies of thought in this nation with differing political viewpoints.

A good deal has been said about the organization of house business. The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman) in particular referred to the lack of organization of the business of the house. Some hon. members have implied that the opposition is opposed to planning the business of the house. I think we all recognize that there is a need to plan the operations of the house and if one looks at the wording of the amendment that is before us one will see that the principle of the need to plan the business of the house is accepted.

May I direct the attention of hon. members to part of the wording of the amendment before us. It recommends:

> —that proposed standing order 16-A be amended to provide that a motion to accept the decision of the proceedings committee shall only be made following the unanimous decision of the proceedings committee arrived at during a meeting properly convened upon adequate written notice.

The wording of the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition shows that we accept the principle that we must organize and plan the business of the house. What is proposed here is a change in the method or the mechanics of the operation which is essential to the fulfilment of that proposition. To judge from the remarks of some hon. members it appears they have not read the amendment or have not given it adequate consideration.

Reference has been made to the necessity of allowing more time in the house for the transaction of government business. I confess some sympathy with this point of view. I note that some hon. members have said that on some days after the house completed its routine business there was not much time left for the consideration of government business. It must be recognized that provision has been made to extend the opportunities under which the government may present its proposals to the house.

Some hon. members have spoken of the preliminary business of the house and orders of the day in a way which suggests they want these parts of the procedures of the house discontinued or diminished. The committee concluded, it seems to me, that the time taken on orders of the day is a valid use of the time of the house, and that questions on urgent matters ought to be presented. I trust that thon. members on the government side do not question the right of hon. members to ask the government questions on urgent matters.

A number of hon. members also spoke of private members' business and I agree with some suggestions put forward. We ought to consider changes which will make private members' discussions more meaningful. That part of the business of the house is important and we should not sacrifice it for the sake of allowing more time to be devoted to government business.

The proposed rule changes provide for added hours of sitting. They provide for the transfer of some items now before the house to committees and they also provide for the elimination of the resolution stage. On many of these matters most hon. members are in agreement. All the same, I do not think we ought to provide more time for government business at the expense of the rights of private members. We must consider the rights of private members, the backbenchers on both sides of the house. That those rights exist has been recognized by eminent authorities. I will not take time to quote from the well known work of MacGregor Dawson entitled "The Government of Canada" on the rights of private members of the house, but he says that those rights must be carefully considered and balanced against the needs of the government.

The principle contained in proposed standing order 16-A recognizes the need for the planning of the business of the house. Hon. members opposite do not seem to have supported the principle of planning in the past; yet now we find them in favour of it. Of course, if planning is carried out in a heavy-handed, authoritarian way it can be undemocratic. If proposed standing order 16-A as now worded is implemented, certainly that is the direction in which we shall be headed. The government seems to have mastered the technique of handling planning procedures and has gone ahead in a heavyhanded way to bring in the proposal now before us. This is not right. Of course planning can be carried out democratically if there is a process of consultation—free collective bargaining, in effect—and finally agreement. When there is no agreement the differences in our various political philosophies come into play, of course, and then those differences must be debated. Controversial issues must be debated. Yet the question still remains, who is to say when we have had enough debate? Certainly the decision of that question should not be left to one side of the house or the other.

Much of what I have said has been said from the viewpoint of one newly elected to this house. I did not secure election to the House of Commons to participate in the strangling of this institution. I came here to participate in debate on the issues facing this nation and, after adequate discussion, to participate in decisions on proposals before this house. Standing order 16-A as presented does not meet this standard. For that reason I urge hon. members to vote in favour of the amendment now before us in order to ensure that a job partly done is well done.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think hon. members on both sides of the house will agree that we have had an excellent debate on the motion now before us. I think the calibre of the debate was good and that the concern felt by hon. members was well expressed. Indeed, the discussion has been at a very high level during these past few days. I do not intend to deal with all the aspects of the committee report which is before us because it seems to me the main points of contention have been reduced to two. One is the question of supply and the other is the allocation of time, or programming, for which provision is made in proposed rule 16-A.

I have listened to the statistics which have been recited a number of times during the debate as to how well we have been doing this session. Hon. members pointed out that a lot of time was taken up by the debate on the Speech from the Throne, the budget debate, and so on, and suggested it was unreasonable to expect that more than nine or ten measures should get through in the number of days left for government business after all these things had been dealt with. What has not been said is that these other requirements are with us every session. The fact of the matter is that though we have been sitting since September 12 and then government measures have been dealt with, there are perhaps 37 more which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has announced, plus whatever else may come along between the present date and the end of the session—possibly seven or eight more. In other words, we probably have between 40 and 45 more measures yet to deal with, some of them major in scope.

For example, major amendments are proposed to the Criminal Code. Again, later this session, some time in March or April, we shall begin consideration of the estimates for the 1969-70 fiscal year. We know this is a big undertaking and that there is a great deal of interest taken in these estimates by hon. members in all corners of the house. Thus, if the number of days which have been used up in the first three months of this session is to be a pattern for the balance of the session, we shall not get through half of our business, assuming that the session is to end in June. That is the important point.

We need a legislative program laid out for the house to see early in the session. It does not have to be completely programmed at that point, but there should be some indication of the way in which it is proposed to allocate the time available in order that measures may be brought before the house and hon. members given the opportunity to decide whether to accept them or not.

Mr. Burton: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Olson: Well, the hon. member has just finished his own speech. If I have any time left after I am through I shall be glad to answer his questions.

So I am not impressed by those statistics unless those using them tell the other side of the story too, and that has not yet been done as far as the work still before us for the balance of this session is concerned.

May I turn for a moment to the matter of supply and the objections which have been raised by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) as well as by several other hon. members. I do not question their sincerity. I am a little surprised, however, that some of the people who were the stoutest advocates of setting up standing committees for the consideration of the estimates should now be retreating from that position.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Experience.

Mr. Olson: I am happy to see the right hon. gentleman back in the house. I understand he may enter the debate soon and I am sure his intervention will be useful in support of my argument. He and I share a common concern for the right of all members of this house to consider matters of importance to them in their constituencies, and these matters can, indeed, be considered more effectively if we provide sufficient opportunity and an adequate forum. But I recall two or three sessions during which all the estimates were considered in this chamber in committee of supply. Consideration of them went so slowly that the estimates of many departments were never brought up until we were pressed, a few days before Christmas.

In 1963 the estimates of several departments went through without hardly a word being said despite the fact that a number of hon. members had questions to ask about them. This situation occurred because too much time had been spent on the estimates of other departments. The right hon. gentleman was prime minister in early 1963, and in January and February of that year he ran into a problem because far too much time was being taken on the estimates. The house was still voting interim supply although ten-twelfths or eleven-twelfths of the money had been spent. With this in mind, I am sure the right hon. gentleman will support my contention that this is not a good situation.

There are many advantages attached to referring estimates to standing committees. We know that when the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, the Department of External Affairs or any other department are before a committee of this house there is a fairly low attendance. But the members who are present are members who have specialized in the work of the department and who therefore take a keen interest in the debate which is taking place. However, if it is necessary to put all the estimates through the committee of supply and if members are obliged to stand in line waiting to speak, there is bound to be a great waste of time. It is now being proven that four or five standing committees can function concurrently reasonably well. This provides an opportunity for backbenchers and, indeed, for ministers, to attend the committees in which they are particularly interested and to question the senior officials of the department concerned as well as other witnesses, a most useful exercise in relation to what happens here on the floor of the house.

The 15th report of the special committee on procedure was introduced into this house on December 14, 1964. There are several members in the opposition who were on that committee. Moreover, no majority reports were filed; these were unanimous reports and it is therefore not possible for any hon. member who was on the committee to say he disagreed with the recommendations the particular report to which I have referred will be found in Votes and Proceedings for December 14, 1964. I quote:

> Your committee is of the opinion that the potential value of the committe system of the House of Commons is not being exploited to the full, particularly in relation to standing committees. The structure of the standing committees tends to be cumbersome and, in some respects, even archaic. Your committee is convinced that a fundamental reorganization of standing committees is necessary if they are to be revitalized and their effectiveness and prestige enhanced.

That is the opening paragraph. The committee then went on to deal with a particular matter. This is all I intend to quote. Paragraph 29 of the report reads:

> Your committee recommends that not more than 20 days be set aside for debating the main estimates in committee of supply. On such days it should be the right of the opposition to select the departments for discussion.

It is an easy task for anyone interested to look up the membership of that committee in 1964 and 1965 and determine that there was agreement among all those members that this was the principle upon which we should revise and restructure the committee system of this house. I am not going to continue speaking on this point because the provision of 20 days has been accepted. I know there were some additional days for supply motions and that sort of thing, but what is being suggested here in the present report from the committee is 25 days. Give or take a day or two, there is no question that members from every party in 1964 and 1965 agreed with the principle of what is now in the report of the special committee. So, Mr. Speaker, I hope this will be taken into account.

In my opinion there has been a very useful debate on proposed standing order 16-A, but I am sorry I am unable to follow some of the arguments that are advanced in the name of democracy, arguments stating that the minority somehow has a right to frustrate or hold back the majority that the people have elected. I cannot understand that argument. Surely democracy must include the right of minorities to be heard but also the right of majorities to decide.

All of the arguments that have been advanced by hon. gentlemen opposite have been predicated on the false assumption that they have some right to hold up indefinitely the government that was elected. For a while that is right, but ultimately and finally surely the majority has the right to decide. Surely that is also the principle involved in having the Governor General call on the leader of the party that elects the greatest number of members to form a government.

Mr. Danforth: Nobody denies that.

Mr. Olson: Oh, yes. I think it was the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) who reminded the house that the combined opposition had obtained 55 per cent of the popular vote. Then he went on to argue that this gave them the right in fact to impose that on the majority government. I am sure he was not serious because surely he must represent all of the people in the Peace River constituency. I think I do in the Medicine Hat constituency, whether they voted for me or not, and I did not get 50 per cent. I am the one representative from that constituency.

I have not heard hon. members opposite put forward any other kind of plan yet. Are they talking about proportional representation or something of that nature? Is that the basis for this argument? If it is, certainly it is a rather difficult one to accept since it has always been the case that whichever party gets the most members, whether a majority or a minority of the members of the house, is called upon to form the government, prepare a legislative program and present it to the house.

I have said this before and do not want to say it again, but in the most conciliatory way at my command I point out that on June 25 of this year the people of Canada made a decision. It was not you or I. We tried to persuade them, but they finally decided who was going to represent them and who was going to form the government in this house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be the greatest abdication of responsibility if, after the people had given us on this side the responsibility, we should give it to the opposition. Yet that is the argument they are advancing, that they have some right to a great filibuster, to bring this institution to its knees. Mr. Speaker, this institution was set up by the people of Canada and surely above everything else we have to accept this fact. That is the fundamental of democracy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lewis: You should not only be conciliatory but also accurate.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the hon. gentlemen opposite. I do not want to cause any disturbance but these are some cold hard facts that seemed to fit in that place in my speech. I am sorry if I irritated anyone.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the minister now permit a question?

Mr. Olson: Not just now. By the time I am through I guarantee that the hon. member is going to have some questions even more important than the one he is about to ask now.

Mr. Monteith: You are very proud of yourself.

Mr. Olson: I am proud of the proposal now before the house because I have worked on every procedure committee for the last four or five years. I am proud it has finally culminated in a motion that is now before the house for decision.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, we agree that minorities have a right to be heard within reason. We believe, and this is stated in the proposal, that there should be some reasonable programming. This has not been the practice in the past in any particular or legal way. There has been an understanding about the usual channels and that the house leaders would meet. But the government has the responsibility to move on with the programming if it is unable to obtain unanimous consent from the opposition, as it is now.

I think it is fair to say that the government, after being elected, not only has the right but indeed the responsibility to move on with a program of legislation as rapidly as the people of Canada want the government to do so. I do not think it is right for us to hold back on such matters as, for example, the provisions in the amendments to the Criminal Code and so on if the people want them simply because we cannot tidy up our rules to get on with that matter. I sincerely believe that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Where is the bill?

Motion for Concurrence in Report

Mr. Olson: My hon. friend knows where the bill is. It is waiting until we dispose of some of the matters that we are obliged to attend to before the end of this year. He knows that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, we have been impressed by a number of matters that came up in this debate. Indeed, hon. members opposite have had the opportunity to say what they think of the provisions of 16-A because I am advised that they refused to discuss it at all in the committee. If that is so, Mr. Speaker, then this debate has been useful because now we have—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. That statement is not true.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I rise on another point of order. That statement is true.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members know that the basis of our discussions is that we have to accept the statement made by an hon. member, so I assume we have to accept both statements.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. We discussed 16-A in the committee at great length. We had a vote on it. We tried to persuade the government to cut it off half way. All I am trying to make clear at this point is that the statement that it was not discussed in the committee was incorrect.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I will accept that they perhaps discussed it but they refused to negotiate on the terms and conditions. There was a refusal to negotiate on the terms. They did not want to talk about it when they saw it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Even that is not true. The minister cannot get away with that nonsense.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, it has been useful to have this debate in the House of Commons. As the debate has gone on we have been wondering if ways and means can be found to provide hon. gentlemen opposite with the kind of guarantees that they want, guarantees against the misuse or what they claim will be the misuse of the standing order, and to see if this can be done without continuing a situation that has become increasingly unsatisfactory for this house and the country. The Leader of the Opposition contended that the recommended standing order is faulty because it does not guarantee that notices will be given before the meetings of the proceedings committee. So in his amendment he deals with only that one point, that the reports of the proceedings committee should be unanimous.

The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) has tried to make his point by stating that he would be quite prepared to have a gilt-edged rights requirement written into the standing order. There really is no difference on that point. Perhaps there never really has been. Hon. gentlemen opposite could have brought that up if they had chosen to negotiate the terms. But criticisms have been voiced that go somewhat beyond the one against which the Leader of the Opposition concentrates his amendment. We think these criticisms should not be passed over.

There is the matter of the quorum of the proceedings committee. No reasonable member of the house, I suppose, would suggest that the proceedings committee should be set up in such a way that it could be immobilized by the absence of its members. We think the house ought to be able to rely on something stronger than assurances that this would not happen. The reason for that is that things have not always turned out well despite the fact that on some occasions there has been some agreement among the house leaders on these matters. Hon. gentlemen opposite, particularly the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, know this. I know it because, without specifically pointing out anyone, this in fact has happened a number of times.

It has been suggested that this standing order as drafted would permit the government to prevent the house discussing the full order of government bills. We wonder whether that objection can be met without going back to the kind of chaotic condition that has prevailed before. Both inside and outside the house the criticism has been made that the government should make more frequent use of standing order 33, the closure rule. But all members of the house who are familiar with the rules know that that rule is very awkward so far as legislation in concerned. I was very impressed by the speech of the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) when he quoted the authorities in respect of the difficulty in that regard. What we are suggesting is that in relation to any particular bill any motion for the allocation of time under standing order 16-A would apply to only two stages of that bill.

Perhaps what I ought to do now is read a draft I have so there will be some precision in what we are proposing in order to deal with some of these arguments which have been advanced. There may be some small change which might have to be made later. I wish to say that we give the undertaking that this is the way in which the provisions of standing order 16-A will be used in this committee report is concurred in by the house. So I should like to read very slowly the proposals we are now suggesting:

16A (1) There shall be a continuing committee to consider the making of arrangements in relation to the calling, consideration and disposition of the business of the house and its standing and special committees.

(2) The committee shall be composed of the house leader or other minister who, in either case, shall be chairman, and a representative of each other party in the house. A majority of the members of the committee shall constitute a quorum.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Olson: I knew that was going to happen.

Mr. Lewis: I am not applauding yet. I want to hear the rest.

Mr. Olson: I continue:

(3) (a) Meetings of the committee shall be convened by the chairman from time to time, and ordinarily the committee shall be convened on the first and third sitting days in every week. (b) The chairman, from his place in the house may give oral notice of proposed meetings of the said committee, but, in every case, written notice of any such meeting shall be laid upon the table of the house and the same shall be printed under the heading "Meetings of Committees" on the notice paper attached to the Votes and Proceedings of a sitting preceding the day on which any such meeting is to be held.

(4) When "Motions" are called in the fourth sitting day in any week, a motion may be proposed, without notice by a minister of the crown, for the purpose of ordering any arrangement for the calling and the allotting of time to the consideration and disposition of any item or items of the business of the house or its committees.

(5) Every such motion stated to be made in pursuance of the unanimous decision of a meeting of the committee shall be forthwith decided, without debate or amendment—

That is if it is unanimous.

—but the "yeas" and "nays" shall not be entered upon the minutes, unless so demanded by ten or more members rising in their places to oppose such a motion.

(6) When, pursuant to section (3) of this order, a meeting of the committee has been convened but the committee is unable to function because of a lack of a quorum or when a meeting of the committee is unable to come to a unanimous decision in relation to a proposed arrangement of business, any motion that may then be proposed by the chairman shall be forthwith decided without debate or amendment, except that when ten or more members rise in their places to oppose any such motion, the same shall be transferred to and considered under government orders.

(7) When an order for the consideration of a motion made under section (6) of this order is called, the minister who has proposed the motion may speak first, but no member may speak for more than twenty minutes, and unless the question has been previously disposed of, after two hours of debate thereon, the Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings and forthwith put every motion necessary to decide the main motion.

(8) Except when a motion is made in pursuance of the unanimous decision of a meeting of the committee, any order sought pursuant to the provisions of this standing order shall be confined to no more than two stages in the process of considering any bill or bills or other items of business, but any bill or bills may be the subject of more than one order under this Standing Order.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to take a great deal more time. I think it is fair to say that if these suggestions meet with favour in the house—

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am not seeking to take the minister's time, but I wonder whether he would answer a simple question for information in respect of what he has just read. Is it the intention of the minister and his colleagues that these suggestions go back to the committee which considered the report now before the house and, if so, would the government agree that that be done and this debate end?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has anticipated precisely what I am going to say now. If these suggestions meet with the favour of the house they could be implemented without too much trouble. If the amendment proposed by the Leader of the Opposition were to be withdrawn, the way would be open for the house leader to speak again and I am sure he would want to make two commitments to the house. The first would be that immediately after the standing committee on procedure and organization proposed in the reports now before us has been established, a motion would be proposed to the house instructing that committee to revise standing order 16-A in accordance with the proposals I have just now read. The second commitment that I think the house leader is prepared to make would be that if standing order 16-A were used during any period between the adoption of the reports and the time when the report of the standing committee on procedure and organization made pursuant to that instruction was adopted by the house it would be only with faithful attention to the proposals I have just now read.

Mr. Woolliams: How pious can you get?

Mr. Olson: The hon. member can talk about being pious but this government does not renege on its commitments.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Correct that sentence.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, this will be recorded in Hansard and I am sure the house leader and I will check very carefully what has been recorded in Hansard to make sure that the wording there is precisely what we intend as a commitment. So I ask hon. members to consider these proposals perhaps for a few hours, and when they have I think they will admit they are reasonable. They have met all the criticisms except the one that somehow the minority have the right to frustrate the government in getting along with its business failing an agreement in the procedure committee. We cannot accept a transfer of the government's responsibility to make decisions in so far as the business of this house is concerned if there is failure on the part of the procedure committee to come to an agreement. I think every other reasonable suggestion which has been made is included in the undertaking that we offer. Therefore I commend these proposals to the favourable attention of hon. members opposite.

• (12:50 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: I understand the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is rising for the purpose of asking a question.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, if I may, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Agriculture was quite right in something he said a while ago. I will not ask the question I intended to ask earlier, but I will ask him one in respect of the memorandum he has circulated and read into Hansard. Apart from the formal provision for notice of the meetings of the proceedings committee, what difference is there between the wording in the report and the wording that has now been made known to us?

Mr. Diefenbaker: None whatsoever.

[Mr. Olson.]

Mr. Olson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, there is a difference in respect of 16-A. Paragraph, 2, for example, states:

> The member or members in attendance at any meeting of the said committee shall constitute a quorum.

That has been provided for, and there are many other changes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I should like to ask what is the point of providing a majority for the quorum if you put in the order a provision to obviate the necessity of having a quorum?

Mr. Olson: We do not agree with that at all because there has to be notice. That was one of the objections raised at the meeting. I am convinced there has to be a majority of the members of that committee in attendance before we bring the motion in here. They have to reach unanimous agreement on the allocation of time for any item or items, and that is different. They have to bring this to the house. As I have said, and I say it as kindly and conciliatorily as I can, the government cannot transfer its responsibility to the opposition because it would then be abdicating its responsibility for bringing legislation before this house. That responsibility is given to the government. There was a great deal of argument raised about this.

This does not apply to the complete passage of any item but only to two stages, presumably the second reading and committee stages. There will always be another stage. There were arguments raised that when an issue is presented to the public as a result of debate in this house public opinion is generated or mobilized, if you like. There would still be a stage where this opinion could be presented to the house. The opposition and the government may be impressed by any consideration that is raised and that could be taken into account.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he does not agree that these new suggestions are made without expressing any view about what at this stage is precisely the kind of suggestion which should go back to the committee? You could then have a discussion and improve on the suggestions. Why does it have to be imposed on this house without going back to the committee?

Mr. Olson: There are two reasons for this, Mr. Speaker. If we were to send the revisions to 16-A back to the committee without concurring in this report we would hold up the adoption of the other parts which hon. gentlemen say they accept to the extent of 95 per cent.

Mr. Woolliams: Let us approve of those now.

Mr. Olson: There are also some technical problems involved in taking this report apart, and hon. gentlemen know that very well. We have given a firm undertaking that this is the way 16-A will be used. We have given a firm undertaking that this proposal will be referred back to the committee on procedure as soon as it is set up, which would be soon. Hon. gentlemen know very well that we have to move ahead with this. We have been as conciliatory as possible in adopting all the suggestions—

Mr. Diefenbaker: The word "conciliatory" is just a cover-up for the word "tyranny".

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, would the government consider, if perchance the amendment of the Leader of the Opposition were disposed of, moving an amendment to refer the fourth report back to the committee for the purpose of reconsidering rule 16A? In other words, I am suggesting that it go back for renegotiation rather than having something rigid imposed upon us. Would the government consider that as a way of resolving our difficulty?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, obviously the government considers any possibility. The fact is that we have come to the conclusion that we should adopt this report now because 95 per cent of it is acceptable, with the firm undertaking that we use 16-A as described.

An hon. Member: I thought you were being conciliatory.

Mr. Olson: You asked the question. We are and have been conciliatory to the point of meeting all the objections. I think that is conciliation. We have made adjustments and I think that we—

An hon. Member: It is one o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. An hon. member has brought it to the attention of the Chair that it is one o'clock.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I have not been here during the last two and a half days but some variety of flu, Hong Kong or otherwise, kept me at home. However, I have followed with the greatest interest what has been said in this debate. I have read all the speeches and have been greatly impressed by the quality of the arguments advanced. Indeed, while I will not cover all those to whom congratulation is due, I was very much impressed by the contribution made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). The standard he set has been followed throughout by members in all parts of the house, to some of whom I shall refer during the course of my argument.

I want to sum up the state of affairs as I saw it before the speech of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) this morning. If the allocation of time proposed by the government is carried out, it will mean that the road to Canadian parliamentary serfdom will have been established to meet the ego of a power-hungry government. What is the concept? Where did it come from? What is the pedigree? It certainly was not from those who in the British tradition understand parliament. It was not from those in Canada who appreciate the meaning of this institution. They would never have countenanced this in the days of the greats of the past. Laurier, Borden, Meighen, King, Bennett would never have permitted, would never have dared permit the presentation to this house of a virtual bar on argument. It could have been conceived in a communist country, for under communism there is no opposition. It is said, of course—it is always so, and has been through the years—that those who would make shortcuts through parliamentary procedure are always able to assuage their consciences by giving reasons for the action taken. The reason given in this case is efficiency. I should point out that this was dealt with in the supreme court of the United States by Mr. Justice William Douglas when he said:

> History shows that governments bent on a crusade or officials filled with ambitions have usually been inclined to take shortcuts. The cause being a noble one (for it always is), the people being filled with alarm (for they usually are), the government being motivated by worthy aims (as it always professes), the demand for quick and easy justice mounts. These shortcuts are not as flagrant perhaps as a lynching, but the ends they produce are cumulative, and if they continue unabated they can silently rewrite even the fundamental law of the nation.

Efficiency has always been an argument. We want to make parliament more effective. But parliament is not a corporation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Parliament has a soul. Some theorists have always wanted to make it a corporation, with the prime minister as the managing director holding control over a majority of the stock, and with the rest of the shareholders being dominated because of that fact. It is of interest that at this very time when the government, under the leadership of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and with the assistance of his Man Friday, the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald), is trying to crucify parliament, in the U.S.S.R. the intellectuals are doing everything they can to end the concentration of power in the hands of the few to the detriment of the many.

How the government can explain this, I do not know. I look at those men sitting over there on the government benches and ask myself, how can men like that do this to this institution? It is a spurious trick to emasculate parliament, to cow and eventually to render the opposition null and void. Martinets trying to hobble parliament do not get far, history shows. Today the iron hand has apparently been lifted and the velvet glove has taken its place. Nobody can do that better than the Minister of Agriculture, because he knows both sides of the house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He has been on this side of the house. He used to express views when he was on this side, and did much "social credit" to himself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is what he said in the House of Commons on May 20, 1965, as reported at page 1548 of Hansard. He was dealing with the question of rules and, as he told us today, he has had a wide experience. He sat on several committees. You know, it is a strange thing but there are some who, the more experience they gain, the more adamant their opinions become. What did he say in 1965? He said:

• (2:40 p.m.)

I suggest the government should reconsider some of these proposals so that they may be made clear.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

It should make some of the refinements that are necessary so that a ruthless government could not run roughshod over parliament—

Those are wise words. Physician, now that you are able to do so, heal thyself. Today the hon. gentleman produced a document, a substitute, as it were, for what has already been before this house these past few days. It is an interesting document. Never have I seen more words used to conceal an idea. The idea still remains, to throttle parliament. The only difference now is that the government, having created a chasm, is now afraid of the position and is going to try to jump over it in two jumps. This is a rather difficult thing to do.

What does this mean? It simply means that the government knows it is in trouble. The minister says that is not so, but then he turns to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) who silently works. This morning I noticed that the minister got advice from the President of the Privy Council. I say to the Minister of Agriculture as a fellow westerner: Don't take his advice unless you want to get into great difficulties because with all his smiling exterior one can almost see him as the Simon Legree of parliamentary rights. This document means nothing. A committee is going to meet and if it is unanimous when it meets, then that is fine. If it is not, the government says this is what we will do: we will only proceed by two steps at one time. We will only deal with two phases at one time of the four particular phases of legislation under the parliamentary system today. With the new rules this will mean the government will be able to act when we are on second reading, when the matter goes to committee, on the report from the committee and finally on third reading. This is meaningless. It is an endeavour to deceive the Canadian people, but not intentionally. The hon. gentleman would not participate in anything of that kind. However, the object was to fool, but it will fool nobody but the members of the government.

He says: "We want to make the House of Commons efficient and effective; the record has been bad in the past". This suggestion was analysed at length some years ago by one of the greatest parliamentarians in our time with the finest knowledge of parliamentary procedure in Canada, in keeping with that of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I refer to another Winnipeg member, Colonel Churchill. He analysed this argument that we are not doing anything in parliament. Once more, I place a few statistics on the record to answer that fallacious attempt at escapism on the part of the government. Here are the various sessions: From 1952 to 1963, in 14 sessions, the house got through 654 bills, either amendments to existing statutes or new legislation. This resulted in an average of 46 bills per session. What has been the position since? In 1964-65 the house passed 81 bills in a long session of 248 days. In 1965, in the 53 days before the former prime minister decided to get a majority by going to the country, the house passed 23 bills. In 1966-67 the house sat for 250 days and passed 119 bills. In 1967-68 the house sat 155 days and passed 49 bills. The record of the House of Commons of Canada is equal to that of any parliament in any of the commonwealth countries today. Yet day after day the government has preached this doctrine that there is something wrong with parliament.

The minister says: I give you this promise to do what I say I am going to do. I ask this house, do you not know that this government keeps its promises? I looked over at him, and he smiled. "This government keeps its promises". Ask the labour men in Winnipeg who are working in the overhaul base whether this government keeps its promises. I am sorry the Minister without Portfolio from Winnipeg is not here. I should like to ask for his assistance, and I know I would get it in reverse. During the election campaign he was saying: "We are going to carry out our promises". We have not heard a word since. I can understand that because today ministers are to be seen but not heard. Some, I have to say, we see but seldom as a result of the roster system. "This government keeps its promises". Well, one could go down the list but it is not my purpose to do that unless anyone is anxious. The promise, however, in connection with parliament was to bring about reform; that was the only promise. They did not dare tell the Canadian people what they had in mind, that they wanted to hobble this institution, that they wanted to shut down the opposition. They do not want to hear criticism. None of us like criticism.

Mr. Olson: Allocation of time was the main feature.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Allocation of time—this is the subterfuge. This is what it is called, but in fact it is a denial of the rights of parliament. I point out this to you, Mr. Speaker, that autocracy, tyranny and dictatorship are shadows that ever stand in the wings of even the freest of parliaments. In the absence of a strong opposition the cabinet is in a position in this house to bend any rule without regard to individual or minority rights. One has only to quote Bassett's book, "Essentials of Parliamentary Democracy", to be reminded of the fact. He said: "The opposition is not merely tolerated but it is treated as indispensable". This is not true of this government; they believe it is dispensable. The government want us to sit over on this side of the house and ask them a few questions which they will answer if they choose. They elude when they are asked questions, and in a number of cases they evade the truth. Ministers are here whenever the Prime Minister decides they may be permitted to come here.

• (2:50 p.m.)

According to Bassett:

> The democratic method is not that of securing formal agreement by enforcing acceptance of a minority or majority decree through the suppression of all opposition. On the contrary, differences are recognized and their adequate expression welcomed as a means of attaining voluntary and genuine accord.

That was the view of the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) when he spoke.

> Without an opposition what would parliament be? It would degenerate into the arbitrary direction of public affairs by the executive and the bureaucracy. Minorities would stand unprotected, freedom would wither, individual liberty would be in jeopardy, and the unwarranted and oppressive invasion of private rights would grow unchecked. The government says that we would get efficiency; I say we would not get justice, freedom, equity or liberty.

Before the Minister of Agriculture spoke today I asked a colleague sitting behind me whether he thought the minister would make a counter-offer, whether he would retreat from the position taken by the government, whether he would make a strategic retreat on behalf of the government. But not at all. The minister indicated he was making not a strategic retreat but a pretence—"If we can get this over to the people, we will give them a second chance. We may be able to delude them".

The document that has been produced in this house is a sham, a delusion, a farce. It is an endeavour to cover the weaknesses of the position of a government whose members know in their hearts they are wrong, that is, unless they checked their consciences at the door before coming into the chamber.

Professor Jennings has been quoted before, but he has declared in regard to the parties that are represented in the house:

> The House of Commons is the oratorical battleground of those parties. The one supports and the other opposes the government. The one defends a policy and the other puts forward another. Any defect of administration, any weakness of principle or defect of practice, any blunder of politics, is soon brought to light and exhibited to the world.

That used to be so until the introduction of the roster system.

> The functions which Bagehot described are thus exercised through the competition of government and opposition. The "mind of the people" is expressed in different ways and through different forms because it is not and cannot be a single mind. Political education is real education because at least two points of view are always being put, and the elector has to choose between them. The other side has power to speak and therefore can and must be heard. The opposition demands that policies be formulated openly and consequences of policies revealed.

How can this government defend itself with rational arguments? Majorities have their rights, says the minister. Minorities have too. The majority does not override the minority roughshod because the habits of centuries have created a free people under the British system of government who dislike oppression even of minorities.

I should have liked to see the Prime Minister present in the house today. I know it is difficult for him to be here; I occupied that position and know how the many calls upon the Prime Minister require his absence from the house. However, I intend to deal with one or two phases in which he would be interested if he were here.

I hear it said that we have a new government, a new politics. I suggest it is the same government that has been in office since 1963, with a few changes. It has the same philosophy—a pathological refusal to accept the opposition that was characteristic of the party opposite in the days of the Defence Production Act and the pipe line debate. Hon. gentlemen opposite claim it is a new government, but would you, Mr. Speaker, call a second-hand automobile on which a new steering wheel has been installed a new automobile?

In 1945 those who were endeavouring to undermine the state abolished habeas corpus: it was an obstacle. What we have today is a repetition of the fights of the past. For the Liberal party is unrepentant. It is still the party of the pipe line debate. Whatever the government opposite want they can get because they can count more heads.

I remember last February when the government went down to defeat and should have been out. The Prime Minister, the minister of justice of that day, declared: "We are the masters of the house". That was said when they were in a minority in the house. Today they have a majority and they are going to show us what it means to be masters. In February hon. members opposite said: "If we are defeated we will decide either before or after the vote whether it is to be a vote of confidence."

The house has been going from bad to worse. Hon. gentlemen opposite reform and rewrite everything today. Just think of Charles I who went to the houses of parliament at Westminster and tore out two pages from the record of the House of Commons! I thought of that incident the other day when the question regarding the committee on transport came before the house. It was history repeating itself.

The party opposite has changed the record on more than one occasion. If the Prime Minister were here I would go into the details, but they were fully set forth in an article by Mr. Patrick Nicholson on March 19 last. However, I have always made it a point not to do things like this in the absence of those of whom I speak.

This reformation process goes on, even in the matter of books. The Canada Year Book for 1967, as at February of this year, disclosed that if the government were defeated on a vote of confidence it would be out of office. The new Canada Year Book which was published the other day has changed that statement. So it is a question of changing the record, of treating the House of Commons with infinite contempt.

I will have something to say in a moment when I explain what is actually happening in regard to the Prime Minister's statement that only certain ministers shall attend in the house. As he outlined his plan it was reminiscent of a professor speaking to a freshman class. The government seems to be following a course that is designed to bring about in Canada the United States system of congressional government. They start off with a few ministers not being here and not answering to the representatives of the people as required under our system. It is not a far step from that for the Prime Minister to say, "We have reduced the number of ministers attending to three or four." It is obvious that this is happening. Time magazine says: "Everything Liberal is fine." Oh, yes; according to the Canadian issue of Time, not distributed in any other part of the world, everything is fine.

• (3:00 p.m.)

We have flippancy, in the answers to questions, that would never have been accepted in the days of Laurier, Borden or the other greats of our country. We have frivolity in place of information and, finally, the setting up of a new body which will preside over desks of information. I do not want to be abusive but I think that body deserves a name: Trudeau's snoop troop.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They are the snoop troop. We do not know yet who is paying them but whatever they get they will have earned. They stretch across the country; indeed, one might almost call them the distemper of our time.

Snooping in bedrooms is barred because you are liable to find things you may not want to see. But snooping across the country is lawful and appropriate. And when I look at the Liberal members of parliament—there are some outstanding ones among then and I am very much impressed by some of them—I wonder what all this means. If I were a Liberal member and found my leader had decided it was necessary to get information elsewhere in order for it to be dependable I would not be completely gratified, even if I were a member of whom the Prime Minister had never heard.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I felt sorry for the hon. gentleman; I did not mention him the other day and I will not mention him now, but his applause indicates that he appreciates what was done. If any Prime Minister does not know his own members things are serious. There is every indication that by taking on 28 assistants the Prime Minister intends to approximate the methods of the United States system of government. Sir, the Canadian parliament is not the White House in Washington.

They say they need these powers to enable them to get through this house a number of pieces of legislation. I have found no legislation that has been held up in this session. For days on end the government has not had any legislation ready.

Mr. Woolliams: That is absolutely right.

Mr. Olson: You should look at the order paper.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The government is never ready. It is the government of the unready and it now endeavours to pin responsibility elsewhere than in the proper place. Where are these bills? Where are these pieces of legislation? Why keep them hidden? The fact is that the government has no legislation ready to go ahead with. It may have legislation on the Criminal Code; it can prepare legislation in order to aid abortion and multiply homosexuality. It has that legislation ready. At a time when the Canadian economy is in a serious condition, when taxation is at its highest level, when the cost of living has shrunk the contents of every pocket, this legislation is of first importance, they say.

Earlier I made the statement that there has been a systematic undermining of parliament by the Liberal party. It has been joined in that endeavour by members of some of the other parties. That fact has made it easier for the Prime Minister to try to throttle parliament. Everyone knows we live in uncertain times; some people think everything must be changed. Since the last war there has been a constant conflict between the rights of the individual in a parliamentary democracy and the increasing bureaucracy by which the government increases its intrusion into fields that should be reserved for the individual.

They say we would pass far more bills if we were to pass these rule changes. Why, if these changes come into effect the government will be able to have holidays every two weeks because there will be no business ready for the chamber. There is much clamour for action, speed, efficiency and leadership. The answer to this is given by one of the great writers on parliamentary life, Bassett, who says:

> It may well be contended that the world is suffering today more from hasty and ill-considered measures than from any dilatoriness of action.

There have been great parliamentarians of all traditions and all racial origins in this house. I listened to the late Right Hon. Ernest Lapointe, one of the greatest parliamentarians of our country. When he first came to the House of Commons he did not know any English; yet he became a powerful orator in the English language. This is what he said to parliament and this government should take notice of his words:

> The first duty of parliament is to remain a parliament, not to become a subservient and ornamental body ... It is the will of parliament, not that of the government, that is the will of the nation . . . the sovereignty of the people is delegated to parliament, not to the executive, and when I say "parliament", it means the minority as well as the majority in parliament.

This government has concluded that parliament is a nuisance; it interferes with them. If they bring in anything we approve of, that is fine, but when we dare to question, to examine, to criticize and scrutinize then we are guilty of a filibuster. In the British system there is no such thing as a filibuster. There is obstruction but not a filibuster, and the expression has no place here. Parliament cannot be held in servitude at the beck and call of even such a benign individual as the President of the Privy Council. I recall his Robespierre-like smile as he set out to destroy this institution. Sir, parliament is the repository of free speech. It is not the repository of the rights of government, the majority in parliament. Is it not strange that the Prime Minister made available $125,000 to the opposition in order to provide research facilities so that they could prepare their speeches and at the same time brought in a measure that will deny them the opportunity of making those speeches?

• (3:10 p.m.)

Parliament cannot be made a puppet. It dare not be made a sort of cuckoo clock, or a place in which ministers may appear at stated times regardless of the issues before the house. The President of the Privy Council came out with a fine idea the other day. He said: We spend too much time examining accounts; we should reduce the number of votes from approximately 250 to 125. How helpful that would be, Mr. Speaker. For whom? What a concept of parliament that is! Wherever you go, whatever you do, you find that the government has decided that it is going to emasculate this institution. I want to tell them right now, and I do not intend to use the words of the Prime Minister with reference to an absent member, that they are going to have a heck of a time doing that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I felt sorry for the Minister of Agriculture this morning. He made just about as good a job of his presentation as he has on behalf of the farmers of western Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This government has to begin to realize that the opposition will be more than a bystander watching the procession of legislation introduced by the government pass by. Discussion is to end. We are to have a few minutes in which to speak. The minister has said: "Trust us." Yet after watching the President of the Privy Council, who makes a better contribution when he writes and signs his letters than when he speaks in the house, and what he has tried to do to this parliament, one wonders if this indeed is the new politics to which the government says it is devoted.

There would be no time for discussion. What would have happened on the transport bill in 1967 if there had been no time? After three weeks of discussion in the house and in the committee, 70 amendments were introduced. If it had not been for the opposition the result would have been an abortion and a monstrosity.

Surely the minister did not think today, in offering this bauble, that we would grasp at it. It is exactly the same thing, only double. He indicates that it is not. I read it and re-read it. It would require a Philadelphia lawyer to understand it and I do not belong to that classification. Its object, I repeat, was to deceive the House of Commons and it would simply mean the abolition of parliament.

Now we come to the question of the proceedings committee and the allocation of time. I intended to speak but shortly on it. What has been introduced here as an allotment of time is simply a bill of attainder. Those who introduced it will allow us to speak, perhaps, but it amounts to the worst kind of closure, closure even before the introduction of a bill if the President of the Privy Council so decides. Under the new amendment we are to get two hours, according to the changes suggested by the minister. How many people will be able to express themselves in that time? It fools nobody. We are to debate with a stopwatch in the hands of the President of the Privy Council and we are to get two full hours if the new proposal is adopted.

It is a repeat performance. It is a chronic disease. What is being done here is being done in no other part of the Commonwealth. Allocation of time? Yes, within reason, by agreement. I could not believe it when I read the speech of the President of the Privy Council. There was no ridicule in what the Leader of the Opposition said, that the minister would be able to make the decision in his bathroom. But he will never be able to wash off the guilt.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In the United Kingdom, according to Erskine May, an allocation of time is not usually made until after the second reading of a bill and often, even then, not until the rate of progress in committee has provided an argument for its necessity. Now it is to be proposed before the debate even begins. Surely the government knows better than that.

I am wondering why they are seeking all these powers. I have tried to review some of the things this government might be wanting to do. I believe in change to meet changing conditions, to make parliament more responsive. During my period in office we made the House of Commons bilingual by simultaneous translation. We appointed a member of the opposition to be the chairman of the public accounts committee, remembering that when we were in opposition we could not get any information; we were always barred by the chairman.

I have refrained from saying this before but I will make just a brief reference to it now. As I listened to the Prime Minister in the course of the election campaign I felt he had in mind something which was going to elevate Canada, raise her horizons, give new hopes. I am disappointed. What has taken place has been a negation of the hopes that I had in mind. What are they trying to do? Why do they want this power? Is it because they realize they cannot amend the constitution, the British North America Act, so far as education is concerned because in 1949 all amendments for the future were denied? I took a stand against that. At that time I said: You are forcing the British North America Act into a strait-jacket. Is the government about to try to get around that constitutional difficulty?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am afraid I must interrupt the right hon. gentleman.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, this is a great place, the House of Commons. We disagree, we have strong opinions, but the one thing above all else that one treasures after he has been here through the years is to have the kindness, the thoughtfulness and the helpfulness of members in whatever part of the house they sit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I was not going to ask for extra time; I was going to serialize.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is this the first step along the road to the Americanization of the Canadian political parliamentary system? Is the downgrading of the monarchy to be the next step? Certainly if the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) were here I would ask him to answer that question. His observations regarding the monarchy can only be accepted as meaning that it is meaningless. Indeed he voted for its abolition. I would like to see something said about the monarchy and what it means. During the days of the late Mr. Massey and the late General Vanier, former Governors General of Canada, they regularly set before the Canadian people the meaning of the monarchy. The people understood it, but it is not being said today.

What about language? Through the years when most of you were not born I was in the courts upholding the right of French Canada to have its language in the province of Saskatchewan. When I tell you that, you can look up the law reports. It was not popular. During my term of office we gave French Canada what it had been demanding over and over again—bilingual cheques. We gave French Canada what it never had before, a fair share of the allotment of positions in the civil service and the foreign service. Does it mean anything? Step by step more and more is being asked.

Some advocate a republic. I think if we had a republic in Canada it would end Canadian independence. It could do no other. The monarchy cannot be abolished except by constitutional amendment. But lo and behold, Time magazine has come out with a story this week, and this magazine always has its ear close to the government. I quote:

> Last week, thinking aloud in the Liberal caucus, the P.M. said that the government hopes to "Canadianize" the monarchy by quietly "depersonalizing" the Queen's role in favour of more emphasis on the constitutional position of the Governor General—by, for example, replacing the name of the Queen with that of the Governor General on all official documents.

Sir, that is what we have suspected. Let the government get the power under this monstrosity of a measure to limit the rights of speech and it can get these things through. Is that one of the reasons that there is such a rush? Indeed, the Prime Minister said of the Queen, when an amendment was before a Liberal association in one province, "I did not think it was important enough. I did not vote. I do not take a stand against the trend". Is that why they are asking for this measure, so they can trample on the rights of those who believe other than they do? I can only wonder whether this is the subtlety behind it.

Is it to bring about, in the Supreme Court of Canada, appointments based on race and creed? An hon. gentleman nods his head in a negative manner. That has been widely stated to be the fact, that we are going to take the Supreme Court of Canada, which has become a court respected by all, and emasculate it because some people do not like the way it goes about its business.

I have always taken the stand that separatism in Quebec was not widespread, and the polls have shown it. To me one of the most dangerous things today, and the most perilous to national unity, is those people who, while condemning separatism, use the fear of separatism as a smokescreen through which they endeavour to advance their subtle demands for more and more. That is what is happening. Is that the reason for this amendment of the rules, so that these power-hungry men can trample on the traditions of Canada's past? Is it to secure an amendment on the question of language in the schools which cannot now be secured by a constitutional amendment in view of the action of the government of Canada in 1949? It has been stated by one of the leading jurists of Canada, the hon. J. T. Thorson, a former member of this house, a former minister of the crown, that what is being done will constitute a constitutional amendment. Are they trying to hogtie parliament so that it can be pushed through on their say-so? These are some of the dangers inherent in what is being done.

English Canada wants to bring about unity in Canada, but to go on pushing through things regardless of the wishes of English Canada and the multitudes of those of other racial origins cannot but be serious to the future of Canada. That, Mr. Speaker, is how serious these amendments are.

They did not produce them out of the air. They did not produce them for glorification. The Prime Minister once said that as a student the person he most regarded amongst the statesmen of the world was the Italian dictator of many years ago. I will deal with that on another occasion when the Prime Minister is here. Subtlety, destruction, undermining deviousness, were the characteristics of that person.

This government, on the basis of statements that have been made by the Secretary of State and in no way condemned by the Prime Minister—after all he is one of the triumvirate that came to the Liberal party, one of the three wise men who saw the star—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Wise?

Mr. Diefenbaker: They must have been because they are all in the cabinet now. He says we are going to have a republic. He says we have no use for the crown. And as I watch him in this house he seems to have a controlling interest and I can only conclude that on the basis of statements he has made there are members of this government today who are hell-bent for a republic. We want the matter to be discussed in this house. If Canada decides that way, Canada will decide. But through you, sir, I say to the President of the Privy Council; Don't think that as Simon Legree you can lash us.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We are not going to be made slaves to achieve the purposes you have in mind, if any. When I go outside the main door I see the motor car of the head of the army. I see that what is on the side does not show our rank badges; it displays four stars. It would be interesting to know who gave the right to substitute four American stars for the rank badges of Canadians.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Sir, if the Prime Minister had been here I would have asked for extra time. As he is not, I shall not. I ask the government to agree to the changes that are asked for by members of the opposition. I do not agree that some of the changes should be made, but I won't be here to see the full effect. I have seen parliament for a long while and I know that when you start to whittle away rights it is not very long before you do not have any left. I say through you, sir, to the Prime Minister, "You shall not crucify parliament on the cross of political ambition or by grasping for personal power." I say to you, sir, "If this goes through, a tyrant could ask for no more." The government will be able to do anything it wants to do for four years. By that time, whatever the electorate does or feels will be too late. This is not a personal government of the Prime Minister or the cabinet. It was Churchill who once said that it is a very delicate plant, this parliament, but he also said something else about personal government. He said that personal government with all its latent possibilities of oppression and caprice is not to be endured.

Surely they are not going to try to press this on us. We will not submit to a bureaucratic government in which parliament is an extension of the East Block and the higher echelons of the civil service, whether we like it or not. I say to hon. members, whatever their position in the house may be; do not take this chamber and make it a handmaiden of a government which since 1956 during the pipe line debate, and whenever it has had an opportunity has shown by its attitude its disregard for parliament. Don't do that; save this institution. Make the changes that are necessary, but do not try to place members of the opposition in the position of mendicants who must kneel before the government and ask consideration, while mighty, powerful ministers epitomized in the person of the President of the Privy Council turn to us and say: You have no rights; we have given you five minutes; we have given you two hours under a revised plan for the whole House of Commons; what more can you ask?

Mr. Speaker, I hope yet that the members sitting opposite will talk with the ministers of the government and the Prime Minister, if they are permitted to do so, and make it clear that Canada's future will not be determined on the basis of a chamber in which members are bulldozed by the rules, and denied the right to speak when they have that right.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Ross Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have been involved in politics for many many years, but I never thought it possible that I would ever have the opportunity and privilege to stand in this House of Commons following one of the great parliamentarians of our time. All of us know that the right hon. gentleman who just spoke has made a great name for himself in all of Canada, and more particularly in this august body, the House of Commons. But I want to say that the pages of history are full of references to great men who have been wrong, and the right hon. gentleman in this particular instance is wrong. As a matter of fact, sir, and I say this is a most kind and sincere way I think there are many of us who sit on the government side of the house who are much more loyal to the right hon. gentleman than some of those who sit around him.

We have just heard the story of the ghost of Christmas past. It is a story that has been turned down by the people of Canada; they do not believe it any longer. While I know it has been given in great sincerity, nevertheless as I said, we on this side have the opportunity to disagree and it is my privilege to do that at this minute. This is the first opportunity I have had to speak in this House of Commons. As the opportunity presents itself it is my duty and opportunity to say to you, as the deputy speaker, how much I admire those who sit in the chair in which you are sitting now, and the great job you and Mr. Speaker do. I believe it is one of the most difficult jobs I have ever seen in my life.

Mr. Speaker, as one who has had the opportunity to sit in the Ontario legislature for many years let me say that, as speaker, your job is much more difficult than that of any of the speakers in any of the other legislatures I have seen in the provinces of Canada. Now I wish to come immediately to the business at hand and the opportunity that you, sir, I, and other members of this, the most exclusive club in Canada, have to change some of the rules here, in order to get Canada once again on the road. I should like to quote Upton Sinclair, a great man who unfortunately died about a month ago. One of the things he said was that you do not have to be satisfied with America as you find it; you can change it. Mr. Speaker, we do not have to be satisfied with the House of Commons even though it has been a great body for the last 100 years. We can change it, and certainly we will change it.

As one of the backbenchers of the Liberal party and as a matter of fact if I were any farther back I would be right outside the curtain I say to you, sir, that it has been a most frustrating experience for me to sit here in my seat for the past three months. Remembering all the history, the dignity, and all the great people who sat in these seats here over the past 100 years, I say most kindly that almost any club, the Canadian Club, the Rotary Club, the Women's Institute of Canada and certainly any business, conducts its affairs in a much more businesslike fashion than do you and I sitting here in this House of Commons of Canada.

It has been said on many occasions that it is time for a change. If I ever saw a time for a change, let me tell you it is time right now to change some of the rules we have in this House of Commons. During the last three months and one day, to be exact, since we have sat here, where we are supposed to belong to the most exclusive club in Canada, representing the people from Vancouver to Newfoundland, we have put through about 8 or 10 bills. We should be ashamed of ourselves. There is not a business in Canada, if it were run the same way we have run the affairs of the country in the last three months, which could last for more than two or three weeks, because it would be completely bankrupt.

Last June 25 the people of Canada proudly, perhaps for the first time since Confederation, did not vote for a party as much as they voted for a change. They voted in this way because they were fed up with some of the things that had happened in this House of Commons, particularly in the last ten years. The people were sick to death of what had been happening in this house. Then, thank God, a breath of fresh air came along for Canada, and he sits in the present Prime Minister's seat.

An hon. Member: It is empty.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: The holy ghost.

Mr. Whicher: Let me tell you that he is effective, in any event.

An hon. Member: That's not fresh air, that's hot air.

Mr. Whicher: I am proud of him and I say to you, don't you wish you had him?

For the last few months I have been listening to the gentlemen in the opposition to my left. Let me say that I am a professional, as far as being a member of the opposition is concerned, because I sat for almost 13 years on the opposition side of that most professional political club in the whole of Canada: I sat in opposition to the Tories in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Hees: You will soon be back.

Mr. Whicher: In any event, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if those members to the left of me, when they stand up with their silly questions before the orders of the day, and make their speeches, realize why they are sitting over there to the left of Mr. Speaker, while the government is sitting to the right? I will let them in on a little secret: You fellows lost the election. That is why, in our parliamentary system under democratic government, the opposition sits to the left of Mr. Speaker; and you fellows did lose.

The people have assigned to the government a task, and for those of us who sit here right next to those who comprise Her Majesty's loyal opposition, those of us who comprise what could be described as the government rump—

An hon. Member: He is thoroughly confused.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, let me say that I believe there is some feeling that when a member is giving his maiden speech in the House of Commons he should not be interrupted by the opposition. I have sat in several legislatures and I have been interrupted by experts, so let them carry on because I do not consider them to be experts.

It really makes my heart bleed when I hear the Tories talk about how we on the government side are going to cause things to be terribly bad, because we are going to be the boss. They should see how the Tories, the most professional political club in Canada, operate in the province of Ontario. In any event, a Tory is a Tory. I have seen them operate in Ontario, and let me tell you that they are all brothers. Having sat here and listened to some of the silly questions the Tories ask on orders of the day, many of which are repeated day after day for political reasons only, let me tell you how they operate in Toronto. I realize these people are in the game of politics, and I do not mind their playing the game, but when I think of that exclusive Tory club in the province of Ontario I feel that perhaps some of these gentlemen should read about some of the things that happen there.

Do hon. members here know that no questions are allowed in the legislative assembly of the province of Ontario unless there is a written question submitted to the speaker of the house before twelve o'clock the same day?

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Whicher: Unless you go through the Speaker's office, your question is not acceptable. Boys, how would you like it if we brought something like that in here? But we are not that way; we are not Tories. We are fair, and that is a word I advise you to look up in the dictionary.

It is not just we, as Liberal members, who want a change in the House of Commons. The whole of Canada wants a change, and that is why this government is sitting to the right of Mr. Speaker, and you are sitting to the left. I suggest that the citizens of Canada want some action around here. Let me invite the members of the opposition to come along and support some of the bright ideas presented by the committee which, in my opinion, did a wonderful job. I ask them to support the government on this bill, because if they do not, the rump is going to be a lot bigger after the next election.

It is not going to be good enough for this parliament to be just as good as other parliaments. The people of Canada want something better. That is why, with what I describe as that breath of fresh air, our present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), this is going to be better than other parliaments. This is what Canadians want, and this is what we are prepared to give them. We want your help. No one is more important to parliament than an opposition. I sat in opposition for almost 13 years and I know all about this. I was just as frustrated as you people are, the only difference being that I was right, in my particular circumstances, and you are wrong.

This old Tory feeling, that the status quo is good enough, is just for the birds. People do not believe that any more. I invite the opposition to join the ship and come along, and we will all sail together to make Canada a better place in which to live. By changing the rules of the House of Commons in the next week we will take an initial step in making Canada a better place. The rules must be changed so that the government of Canada, whether it is a Tory or Grit government—I don't think there ever will be any opportunity for those other fellows down there to form the government—can get on with the job of making this old Canada of ours a better place in which to live. We must get ourselves on the right road, as individuals. We must get the House of Commons on the right road.

It is even more important, Mr. Speaker, to get Canada on the right road so that every Canadian, whether he lives in Newfoundland or any other place, right through to Victoria, can proudly say: I am really glad I am a Canadian citizen. By bringing these rules in, and by other things that will be developed in this house, we will be getting on with the job of making this Canada a better place in which to live.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, having listened to the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher), I cannot help remarking that if the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) is still looking for additional revenue, he should place an amusement tax on the speeches of the hon. member. The rhetoric was most—

Mr. Whicher: That is not what your brother says.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Winch: My hon. friend half a dozen times in his remarks said, "I am going to let you in on a little secret." I will let him in on a little secret: He will not hear any speeches from my brother in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Whicher: You will not be making any after the next election.

Mr. Winch: I must admit that, after considerable contemplation, I am surprised at my own surprise in not being surprised at the attitude that has been expressed by the government through the medium of the speeches and the motion dealing with proposed changes to the standing orders and procedures of this House of Commons. But I should not have been surprised; I should have expected it.

We have heard a great deal about Canada being part of the commonwealth. There have been in the commonwealth countries with parliamentary government, and they lost that parliamentary government by military coups d'état. Of course the Liberal party in this house would never think of bringing about a military coup d'état to get control of the house. They would do it in a smoother way. They have their own system of coup d'état to remove the rights and privileges of parliamentarians and to wreck the institution of parliament. Basically the result is the same.

The hon. member for Bruce began his remarks by quoting somebody in the United States saying that if they did not like the United States, they could change it. He said we can change Canada and we can change parliament. I admit that we can change parliament. I admit that some changes should be made in parliament. But we say, for God's sake do not wreck parliament. This is what would happen if we ever allowed the government to get away with at least one of its proposals, in asking us to vote on a blanket package for changes to our procedures and rules. I said that I should not have been surprised, Mr. Speaker, because, though you may try to camouflage it any way you desire, the government's intent is to have absolute and outright control of parliament. And that is dictatorship.

I know, and we all know, that the Liberals sanctimoniously mouth words about democracy and support of democracy and parliament. But, Mr. Speaker, in their heart of hearts they believe in dictatorship.

An hon. Member: You don't believe that.

Mr. Winch: As I say, in their heart of hearts they believe in dictatorship.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear. They have demonstrated it.

Mr. Winch: They have demonstrated it by what they are now asking parliament to do in respect of certain rule changes. My hon. friend has said that I do not believe that statement. I say that he is forgetting Liberal party political history. The move this week in the House of Commons is not new to the Liberal party. Many years ago another Liberal leader, a Liberal premier of British Columbia, with his majority in the British Columbia house introduced and forced through legislation that became known as the S.P.A., the special powers act. The move of this government today is merely a step toward the S.P.A. of British Columbia, brought in by a Liberal. The act to which I refer did not mean just the control of the legislature; it did not mean just the muzzling of the members of the legislature: It was a Liberal sponsored act of parliament that said that by order in council the cabinet could exercise all the powers of parliament without calling parliament in session.

An hon. Member: Louder.

Mr. Winch: That was the effect of the special powers act put through by the Liberals in British Columbia. It took us years to get it off the statute books. Therefore I say that this idea of dictatorship and bureaucratic control of the democratic institution is nothing new to the Liberal party, whether provincial or federal.

My hon. friend from Bruce told us several times that he sat for 13 years in the opposition and understands the institution of parliament. I say that any man who has sat for 13 years in parliament should have reached an understanding and love of parliament and a feeling for the defence of the parliamentary institution. I know I have; and I have sat in parliament a darned sight more than 13 years.

[Mr. Winch.]

In my 36 years, as a matter of fact, in provincial and federal parliaments I have gained a knowledge, understanding and love of the parliamentary institution. It should not be nullified; it should not be hemmed in. It should be expanded. Our parliamentary institution is, without any question whatsoever, the greatest institution ever devised by man for the solution of man's problems. It is our responsibility to expand that democratic institution; yes, to make it more efficient, but you do not do that by removing the rights of members, by stultifying discussion and putting into the hands of one man, a group of men or one party, control of the parliamentary institution.

I most certainly want to add my support to what I maintain were the magnificent words of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who said that irrespective of what the rules might be, the efficiency and democracy of parliament is in the last analysis based upon the quality of the men and women who sit on both sides of the house. I believe that. If you want to make changes, let the changes be made, not dictatorially to our rules but to our attitude and to the meaning of our responsibility as responsible members of the House of Commons.

Of course in times of election campaigns we run as candidates of parties and put forward our programs, philosophies and points of view. When we are elected, of course we do what we are expected to do, that is, we present our views, philosophies, policies and programs. But we also have to be responsible members of parliament. In my opinion this means not reaching decisions on the basis of partyism or political expediency, but on whether the policy, motion or bill is good and necessary, irrespective of the quarter of the house from which it comes.

Unfortunately, that general attitude has not prevailed in the past. Not only has the attitude of the government been that it must be wrong if it comes from the opposition, but that it must be wrong if it comes from one of their own members without the rubber stamp of the cabinet. It is not only motions and bills from this side of the house that are talked out during private members hour, but also bills from the Liberal side unless they have been sanctioned by the cabinet. It was most interesting last evening when there was a vote to see how surprised some people were, unless one stood absolutely solid behind the attitude of the party. One is not expected to have a conscience, or vote according to his own convictions. It is a change of attitude that is required, not a change in the procedure or the standing orders as suggested by this government. Hon. members may have noted that this week a Liberal private member's bill was talked out. The bill requested action on pollution and it was not talked out by the opposition but by the Liberals themselves. We can understand why they talked it out. They did not dare have a real study made of pollution, otherwise the people would recognize the way this government acts. The worst pollution in this country is found in some of the policies this government tries to put forward.

This is particularly true of proposed standing order 16-A. This morning the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) introduced what purports to be an offer from a reasonable man, a reasonable government. I have no hesitation whatever in saying that the proposal put forward by the Minister of Agriculture is an out and out farce. It is an insult to the parliamentarians who sit in this house, when the government introduces this as a substitute. We can only hope that reason will prevail and that there will be an understanding of the meaning of reason, reasonableness and reasonable men, so far as the government is concerned, and that this attitude will apply to rule 16-A as well as the supposed change introduced by the Minister of Agriculture. We can only hope that they will be withdrawn.

So much has been said already about rule 16-A that I am not going to make any more comments on it. There is another phase I should like to discuss about which only a brief mention has been made. This is a matter upon which the committee has made a recommendation, and it disturbs me. I should like to have some explanation of how it is going to operate. I have in mind the referring of estimates to the standing committee. My understanding is that all estimates will be referred to standing committees. No doubt standing committees can do a great deal more of the important work of parliament and perhaps can make a greater contribution than they have in the past. However, because of my knowledge of standing committees that deal with estimates, I am disturbed about how this procedure is going to operate.

When vote No. 1 is before a standing committee, the minister comes in, makes a statement and that is the last you ever see of him. During the balance of the time the estimates are being considered, the deputies and departmental heads are before the committee and they can give only statistical information. However, when you are examining estimates, to a great extent you want information on policy. I know from personal experience that when the External Affairs estimates were referred to the committee this session, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) appeared once. If a member asked a deputy or department head for the information to which we are entitled, and which in the past we could get from the minister in committee of supply, we were told, "Sorry, that is policy; I cannot answer. Only the minister can answer those questions." I am worried about that situation. I should like to have additional information and I hope, confirmation that, if the estimates are referred to committees, the ministers will be in attendance as long as the estimates are before the committee. If that is not to be the case, then this is a negation of the opportunities of members to accept their responsibilities, to ask questions and get information.

There is also another important phase to which I should like to refer. A member can be on only two or three committees. If he is on only two, it can happen and will happen as it has happened this session, that a matter in which a member is interested is before another committee. You cannot even go to listen to the discussion because you are sitting in a committee on estimates. Can you not see, Mr Speaker, how this is going to handicap members of parliament? May I be pardoned if I use a personal illustration, Mr. Speaker? For over 30 years I have been interested in penology, in prisons, in parole, in probation, in pre-sentence reports, in the construction of penitentiaries and in narcotic addiction. When the estimates are considered in committee of supply I can speak to the minister about these matters. However this session I was unable to raise my voice on these matters, about which I think I know something. These estimates were referred to the justice committee of which I am not a member.

We cannot have members jumping back and forth, day by day, from committee to committee. For one thing, they would not know exactly when the subjects in which they were interested were coming up. It would make a farce of the operations of committees. It is because of these two matters of vital importance affecting the study of estimates by committees that I have some doubts about referring the estimates to committees, unless there is a commitment from the government as to how the method is going to be worked. Are we going to be able to accept our responsibilities to our constituents by asking questions about the things we know something about? If we do not happen to be a member of the specific committee in which the matter is being studied, how can we do this?

So, Mr. Speaker, we have before us one of the most important issues ever to come before the House of Commons. I believe in change for the better, in change that represents an improvement. I believe in anything that would make this house a more efficient parliamentary body, subject always to the democratic right of free speech on the part of a person who is sent here, invested with all the power of a member of parliament representing his constituency.

I agree with at least 90 per cent of the suggested changes, but it is wrong and I suggest practically an insult to introduce them in this way, as a package. This means that we have to accept those issues of which we do not approve. This is not a reasonable or responsible manner in which to present proposals to the members of the House of Commons, especially proposals as important as these.

I said that I have a love for this institution. I have said that to my mind it is the greatest institution for solving the problems of man. It has everything to offer in the way of developing the country in the interests of the people and building the nation that our potential makes possible, both as a result of our manpower and womanpower, and our resources. It will be a disgraceful day in the history of Canada if this so-called bunch of Liberals set us back a century in parliamentary democracy by trying to force through a camouflaged policy of outright dictatorship. As long as I am able to speak I shall oppose this step with all the strength at my command.

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to this legislation may I make it abundantly clear at the outset that I support steps to streamline and improve parliamentary procedure. However, I would point out that in speaking to this issue I am at some disadvantage in that I have not been a member long enough to qualify as a rules expert. I have been here long enough however to realize that some of the ideas that I brought here with me as a new member are not practical, and I sincerely hope that some of the "instant experts" opposite will also one day see the light.

Two main reasons impel me to take part in this debate. The first is that, frankly, I am suspicious of the real motives that lie behind these so-called reforms. Secondly, I believe some of these specific proposals are dangerous. I think some are ineffective in their present form; others are foreign to our particular system of parliamentary democracy.

During my years in parliament I have never become, as have some of my colleagues, an expert on the rules and procedures of the house. I cannot even claim to have taken any particular interest in this subject in the past. But recent events and the circumstances of the present have forced me to make myself, if not an expert, then keenly aware of the vital importance of this question.

The reasons for this is simple. Like the people who elected me to represent them here, I hold a strong attachment to the system of government that we know as British parliamentary democracy. This system may have defects, it may falter and creak on occasion. But what free system of government operated by ordinary men and women does not have weaknesses? Surely the important question is to decide which system has the fewest weaknesses; and I believe the answer is "our system".

A leading authority on government, a man who was never, in my opinion, under any circumstances described as a Conservative, was Harold J. Laski. He opened his great work "Parliamentary Government in England" with these words:

> No system of representative government has a history so continuous or so successful as that of Great Britain.

I believe this is true. I believe in the effectiveness of our system. Like the majority of my fellow Canadians I believe in its effectiveness to provide good, stable, democratic government. I further believe in its ability to protect the rights of the individual and of minorities from abuse by an autocratic executive. I believe in parliament's historic role of servant, not master, of the citizen. It is because I suspect that there are those among us who would use the device of procedural reform as a cover for their real purpose that I am so concerned. It is because I suspect that these proposed reforms are a first step toward a fundamental change in the system of government in this country that I have been forced to take a close and keen interest in this question.

Those who propose these changes now before us claim they do so only to make parliament more modern, more efficient, more able to cope with the demands of today's world. This is a reasonable claim. Though it is reasonable, it is not necessarily sound; and it is only reasonable if it is made in good faith. But so many things have been happening in recent months, there have been so many warning signs, that I believe it would be wise for all of us here to look beyond the mere mechanics of procedural change.

I think of the "ministerial Mafia" that was uncovered in the gallery yesterday. Surely, Mr. Speaker, it is better to indulge suspicions that later on may turn out to be groundless than to rush to adopt changes that we may find have emasculated parliament and opened the door to an alien, perhaps even sinister, system of government.

It could happen—I do not say it must—that there are those in this country who seek to do by stealth and deception what they know they could not achieve by an open and democratic expression of public opinion. Anyone dedicated to changing our form of government might well feel the fastest and easiest way to do so would be to weaken, distort and discredit our present institution.

I am appalled by the philosophy, so often and so brashly exemplified by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald), that belittles the role of this house as a forum of free discussion and reduces it to a mere appendage of a sealed legislative machine. Today's political technocrats regard the House of Commons as an industrial machine to be urged to higher and ever higher production levels until it spews forth an endless flow of new laws. This view makes completely meaningless our democratic electoral system. Some hon. members may remember the great satire on mass production, the movie "Modern Times." This measure makes of members of parliament so many Charlie Chaplins humbly serving the machine.

What makes the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) so sure that they have all the moral values, all the wisdom and all honour that exists in this house? A British writer writing in the Spectator in the 1930's, when dictatorship was in fashion, was discussing the popular claim that dictators and dictatorships were more efficient, more effective and speedier than free parliaments and constitutional executives. Dr. G. P. Gooch said it was claimed that dictatorships could deliver the goods; but he asked, what sort of goods, and at what sort of price? This might be a good question to ask ourselves today when we are being urged to become more swift and efficient at the cost of open debate and free discussion. I do not believe that any such sudden and drastic change in our rules and procedures can be warranted on the grounds only of speed and efficiency.

I do not wish to burden you or the record, Mr. Speaker, with too many quotations but I feel that in this debate one ought to put on record as many opinions as possible, particularly when those opinions carry the weight of study and experience which have been denied to the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald).

Professor Reginald G. Bassett, the professor of political science at the London School of Economics until his death in 1962, is considered by many to be an outstanding modern authority on the system we know as parliamentary democracy. His book The Essentials of Parliamentary Democracy is a standard reference work. Among other things he wrote:

> There are some democrats who claim that parliamentary democracy can be speeded up to such an extent that decisions can be taken as quickly as under dictatorships. That, in our view, is a delusion. Democratic government must be comparatively slow in the taking of decisions: that is the price which has to be paid for political freedom.

He also noted:

> Taking of decisions is one thing, and lasting achievement quite another.

He was concerned with the danger to the system of shallow proposals for change and hasty decisions difficult to reverse, once made. This is what he wrote:

> More dangerous, perhaps, in present circumstances, than either the impatience of the extreme left or the obstinacy of the extreme right, is the demand for action as such.

He saw little virtue in change for the sake of change and action for the sake of action, and added:

> To desire speed for its own sake is irrational, and, in politics, as in other spheres of human activity, the indulgence of such a desire may have regrettable consequences.

Before I leave this particular aspect of the debate, Mr. Speaker, I will cite just one more authority. Right Hon. Michael Stewart in his book The British Approach to Politics, wrote:

> —it would be unwise to pursue efficiency at the expense of individuality. Parliament is more than a machine for making laws; it is a forum for discussion, for redress of grievances and exposure of abuses.

This, Mr. Speaker, exactly sets out one of the chief reasons why I deplore this government's obvious attempt to drive debate out of this chamber and into the back rooms.

In looking for the real purpose underlying these proposed changes we should look at the whole tenor of parliament, at the tone of parliament, as set by this new government. The tenor generally speaking—and I say this regretfully—has been one that demeans the House of Commons. We have only to consider the preposterous duty roster of ministers initiated by the Prime Minister. It is a clownish device at which one might laugh, if its implications were not so serious. I view it as a deliberate attempt to restrict the accountability of the executive to the people, to protect ministers arbitrarily from proper questioning and to humiliate and deliberately to degrade the House of Commons and render the role of elected representatives a farce.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. McCutcheon: It may be, of course, that the Prime Minister has banished his ministers to the cabinet harem because he is jealous of their ability, or fears their facility for putting their feet in their mouths. Whatever his reason for cloistering the cabinet, he has shown contempt of his colleagues and of parliament, and I think this attitude of contempt for parliament is reflected clearly in these proposed changes in our rules and procedures.

The Prime Minister's attitude in this house and in many of his public utterances indicates that he holds parliament in contempt as a mere talking shop. He likes to be portrayed as a political sophisticate. Professor Laski, who is an older and wiser hand at this business, once wrote:

It has become almost the proof of political sophistication to sneer at the House. The 'talking shop' leads many people to sigh, like Carlyle, for Colonel Pride and his little platoon. On all this there are many things to be said: not least of them that the alternative to the 'talking shop' is the concentration camp.

The other evening, on December 10, I believe, the Prime Minister gave an interview in which he said, among other things, that the opposition was holding up the business of the country by debating the rule changes. I ask, what business is being held up? What fundamental and earth-shaking steps to formulate the just society are being held up?

An hon. Member: What are they?

Mr. McCutcheon: Yes, Mr. Speaker, what are they? Is one of the measures the measure to increase interest rates for fishermen's loans, perhaps? Or could it be a bill to amend the Historic Sites and Monuments Act, or a measure to arrest the spread of pests injurious to plants? If these are the vital and important measures that are being held up by this discussion of proposed changes in our rules and procedures, Mr. Speaker, I suggest they give a very clear understanding of the importance attached by the Prime Minister to these changes and to parliament. If the Prime Minister had signified his government's intention to bring forward measures dealing with the really crucial aspects of the nation's business, by placing appropriate measures on the order paper, he would have been more convincing. Where are the measures to deal with such urgent matters as unemployment, the steadily rising cost of living, the plight of eastern farmers, the grave crisis in western grain, and the desperate condition of the east coast fishing industry? No, these cannot be found among the priority matters on the government slate. Instead we have such pressing measures as an official languages bill, and changes in the rules of the house.

A giant step towards making parliament more effective could be taken by having this government give priority to the proper national questions. The Prime Minister has changed the face of this house by arbitrarily ordering his ministers to stay out of it. He has set up a system of regional desks within his own office to partition the national business regionally, and to further remove national business from his colleagues and the Commons.

He has suggested that perhaps more frequent use of the name of the Governor General might be made in connection with legislation, rather than that of the Queen. The logical next step for him to take in this regard, one might fear, is to forget about the Governor General and use the name of a president yet to be named by him.

These are all straws in the wind, signs and portents that show the drift of national affairs under this regime. Now we have a suggestion to chase public business out of the open chamber and into the back rooms of parliament. We have a suggestion for the autocratic allotment of time for debate by a government unimpeded by rules or an effective opposition. The whole trend is to get away from the public eye and into the citadel of absolute parliamentary power. I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, that the ultimate step could be a declaration of a form of government modelled on that of France, where parliament would be the powerless and subservient tool of a north American de Gaulle.

Would you believe "General" Trudeau? Before anyone laughs too loudly, let him remember that last February it was the present Prime Minister, then minister of justice, who said: "We are the masters." I do not know whether my suspicions are shared by all or any of my colleagues here, or by Canadians outside this house; but I feel they are valid until disproved, and I say that in the national interest it would be well if the Prime Minister were to make a clear and public undertaking that the intention of this government in advancing these changes had no connection with the intention eventually to change our parliamentary democracy into a republican form of government.

Before I finish my remarks I should like to take up one point of specific objection to these proposals. It has to do with the apparent failure of the government to make the necessary adjustments to our committee system to accommodate its proposed use of committees. In Britain, as I understand it, the practice is to refer bills to an appropriate committee after second reading, much as is suggested by the proposal now before us, in accordance with which proceedings at the committee stage, formerly handled in committee of the whole house, would be dealt with in the same way but within the smaller confines of a standing committee.

It is true this is done in the United Kingdom, but the committee there is in every way a miniature replica of a committee of the whole house. Then again, this system is only possible because the British committee is not an investigative, but a legislative committee. The purpose of the standing and special committees of this house, as now constituted, is set out in section 8 of the proposed amendment to standing order 65. It is to examine and inquire into matters referred to them, to send for persons, documents and records, etc. In other words, the procedure of our committee, sitting as a replacement for the committee of the whole house on a bill, would be to call witnesses, ask questions, consider testimony and arrive at a report.

This would be completely contrary to the traditional procedure in the house at this stage of a bill, and I submit it would be completely ineffective. When a bill is considered at the committee stage in the special legislative-type committee established in Great Britain, the procedure is an exact duplicate of the procedure we have known in committee of the whole house on a bill; the minister explains the various clauses, assisted by his departmental experts; the members ask questions, make their views known in speeches, and move amendments.

The manner in which our committees now proceed—and apparently nothing has been done to change it under these new proposals—is entirely different. They operate as an investigative body, with witnesses called and sworn, documents produced and members reduced to making their contributions by way of questions.

In the British committee no experts are heard—they must make their contributions through information passed either to the minister or to members on the other side. There is ample time for individual members to speak and be heard. I think this question of committee procedure should be cleared up before the house is asked to adopt a motion calling for the blanket assignment of legislation to these committees for consideration at a vital stage.

Mr. Blair: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. McCutcheon: As soon as I am through.

I have many other reservations as to the effectiveness of the new system proposed. However, I am sure that other members, more skilled than I in the intricacies of the rules, will deal with them before this debate comes to an end. It does appear improbable, though, that the speed and efficiency so glibly promised by the President of the Privy Council will be forthcoming. After all, the personnel serving on the committees will be the same as the personnel of the house. With many committees sitting simultaneously, as they must if the promised speed up is to come about, we shall see members flying from one to another without adequate time for preparation, and amidst more confusion than you could shake a stick at.

I fail to see what advantage this proposed new system might have over the use of the whole house as a committee. As I have already stated, I am no expert on the rules but I cannot see what advantage is to be expected at this juncture. Indeed, I am almost inclined to believe that this change is being advocated simply because it might appear to be new and radical. I am reminded, Mr. Speaker, that Mussolini was defended on the ground that he produced greater efficiency. At least he made the trains run on time, it was said. Hitler was lauded for his efficiency in constructing superhighways. In neither case did the defenders of those dictators bother to mention for what purpose the railways and the roads were to be used.

From his many, one might even say endless, public statements about the need to turn parliament into a legislative mill, the President of the Privy Council would seem to be seeking immortality as the man who made parliament run. But in this case I think we would be very wise to ask also, to what end and for what purpose? I believe, Mr. Speaker, members of this house must ask themselves a question and assure themselves upon one main point before they saddle themselves with these proposed changes. We must assure ourselves that we are really trying to improve our system of government, not change our system of government. It is distinctly possible that by adopting these sweeping changes we will merely be accessories in preparing the ground for a fundamental change in the system.

Sure, I may be charged with being an alarmist. I may be accused of bias and of many other things. But, Mr. Speaker, I smell republicanism in the air. I see some of its advocates in high places, and I hear its echoes in the statements of prominent members of the governing political party. Unless someone of the stature of the Prime Minister can effectively deodorize the atmosphere, the aroma is going to persist, and while it persists I will remain suspicious. And I will remain unalterably opposed to changes in our methods that I believe are too hasty, too sweeping and too radical for the need.

[Translation]

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, before coming to the heart of the matter I should like to point out that since the government allotted an amount of some $135,000 or more to the leaders of the parties of the opposition, the members give speeches which, without being more sensible, are better written and can be more easily tolerated. The opposition must recognize that it was a good gesture on the part of the government to give that help.

[Mr. McCutcheon.]

Like several other members, I do not profess to be competent in the matter of parliamentary procedure, but I did make it a point to listen to everything that has been said until now by people who know more about it than I do. I also studied the old Hansards of the house and what other experts have said on parliamentary procedure. I read what the committee on procedure published after its proceedings. I even inquired of the library about what has been done in this regard in other countries, such as Australia and England, for instance. Even so, I do not claim that all this gives me the required competence, but I do say I learned certain things.

This afternoon, I should like to limit my remarks to a rather brief analysis of what has been said until now.

First of all, it seems to me the opposition is overlooking one point when I hear shouts of distress because it would seem that the privileges of parliament are being threatened. It seems to forget that we also belong to parliament, even if our representation spills over onto the other side of the house, and that at the last elections, we were entrusted with the task of governing this country. As far as I know, the results of those elections do not give a minority opposition the absolute right to direct, control, stymie and bog down, to use an expression which is not from Bossuet, the government elected to administer this country.

Mr. Speaker, like many other hon. members I always listen to the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) when he takes the floor. He is a great debater but also a great actor, and I would give him an Oscar for his performances in this house.

The other day while listening to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield)—for whom I have great respect, as I said before, and I think he knows it too—I got the impression that, in view of the success enjoyed by the hon. member for Prince Albert as a public speaker, he would have liked to imitate his tactics or some of his tricks. I would not advise him to try it in view of what has happened so far. The hon. member for Prince Albert has always had that knack for making fun of his opponent, getting him to say what he wants and playing with words with an extraordinary sense of humour, even if he is unkind most of the time. However, experience shows that he has paid for it, because many of his ministers turned against him and his supporters deserted him during election campaigns or political conventions. The leaders of his party have forgotten him and the convention ignored him in a very humiliating way. So the conclusions are so obvious for everyone that, in my opinion, the Leader of the Opposition would venture into a wrong course if he attempted to resort to such debating tricks which are a mere window-dressing, and rather funny. However, these tricks are not consistent, in most cases, with the seriousness of parliament which our friends opposite worship as much as we do.

Mr. Speaker, I think that this whole discussion over the reform of procedure—at least that is what I think and what many other Canadians think—seems to be an organized campaign to throw discredit on the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) and to present Canadians with a caricature, designed to scare them with the prospect of dictatorship, when the only purpose is to make government efficient, as promised, and that is what Canadians demand of this parliament. I think that many of my friends opposite, perhaps without realizing it, are challenging the Prime Minister, because of his tremendous success and also his main associates and the party now in office.

Mr. Speaker, some people clamour for the respect of parliamentary privileges, but I do not see how these are affected, unless they want to limit the definition of parliament in the sense that the opposition alone would constitute parliament and that the responsibility of controling parliament would rest only with them.

The opposition must say what it has to, and it will have a greater opportunity to do so than before, because for instance the estimates will be scrutinized much more carefully in the parliamentary committees. However, no one should be misled by that outcry which can be heard here under misrepresentations, with a tone which would be moving if it were true, and which seems intended to rescue from ruin or disappearance the privileges of parliament. I will say again that we, of the Liberal Party, also belong to this parliament.

It was said that ordinary members, usually called back-benchers, observe a self-imposed silence. If my friends of the opposition could attend our provincial or federal caucus, they would see that there is truly in our party a freedom of speech promoted by the right honourable Prime Minister, by the whole cabinet and by the President of the Privy Council. Of course, our name is not on the front page of newspapers the next day, but I think that in the past, in our own way, we contributed to the formulation of legislation and we stopped a man or a party from becoming the government itself. The caucus is precisely democracy in action.

Mr. Speaker, my reaction to the stand taken by the opposition and its comments from the beginning of the debate—and I have listened nearly to all the speeches—is, first of all, that the opposition wants to keep a kind of power to stall legislation so that when election time comes, the government is unable to show a list of achievements which will please the people and which, of course, would induce them to vote for this government. The opposition seems to forget that this government was elected with a very clear mandate: an efficient administration of the business of the state and a reformation of parliamentary procedure in order to get rid of those lengthy speeches which we have deplored for a long time.

The opposition forgets that the Canadian people and in particular the rising young people are fed up with those lengthy and sterile debates which solve nothing. In fact, under the pretense that the opinion of the people of the ten provinces must be expressed here, all day long we have to listen to lengthy and repetitious debates on the same issues, rehashing twenty times over meaningless points which finally get nowhere and waste the time of the house.

The opposition seems to forget—for I do believe that its members are intelligent—that it would be simply stupid for the present government to restrict itself to a minority role when it has been elected by a majority. There is a reason, Mr. Speaker, why, under our democratic system, the party elected by the majority is responsible for the administration of the country. If the government were really trying to muzzle the opposition, I would be one of the first to protest vigorously.

Members are objecting because, they say, in a committee of four members, if the representative of the government were alone, he could invoke the privilege which authorizes him to act as if he were in the majority. Others are protesting that, under certain circumstances, the opposition would unite against the government. Promises of goodwill have been made to the government. In fact, I heard my friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) promise to co-operate with the government. I admit that most of the time he co-operates, but I remember a few instances where, for partisan reasons, the opposition united in order to prevent the government from adopting a certain legislation. I think the government has the duty to provide against filibustering, if it does not want to be discredited by public opinion because of eternal discussions which do not settle anything.

Mr. Speaker, the opposition forgets that parliament includes also the Liberal members and that this procedure has been considered in committee and in caucus. We are clear-sighted enough to know that we would not be happy if we accepted measures which 25 or 50 years from now, if the hazards of politics brought us back into opposition, might be to our disadvantage. But we believe that, under the circumstances, these reforms as implemented in other countries have become necessary.

Through his whole speech, my friend, the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier)—I was taking notes—was proposing an acceptable compromise, but in my view his conclusion is not acceptable. He said: Why not establish a standing committee on procedure with the responsibility to limit or allot the time?

I want to point out to him that this is unpractical because in the end, the government would again have the majority and nothing would be changed. Therefore, it might be better to let the President of the Privy Council take care of this, as the final result will be the same. So, his conclusion is perhaps not one of the best.

Mr. Speaker, many things have been said, and the most striking was said this afternoon by the right hon. member for Prince Albert, who at one time expressed his disapproval in these terms, and I quote:

[English]

"A ruthless government can subdue parliament."

[Translation]

The right hon. member for Prince Albert, in using the words "ruthless" and "ruthlessness" must have looked at himself in the mirror, because people who were here when he was Prime Minister tell us how determined, how aggressive he was even with the members of his own party. It is hard to conceive that such a thing could happen under the present Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. As a matter of fact, he often says to us: "Go ahead, say what you have to say." And one day when he was asked what would happen if our free interventions became annoying to a minister, he replied that the ministers must learn to take care of themselves and that if they do not know how to do it, they do not deserve to remain ministers. Up till now, they have taken care of themselves very well, thank God.

And the hon. member for Prince Albert said, while speaking about the President of the Privy Council, and I quote:

[English]

"Here is the Simon Legree of parliamentary rights."

This always makes a great deal of impression, Mr. Speaker. Those who hear it for the first time are impressed, it gives them the shudders and brings tears to their eyes. However, when one has heard the member for Prince Albert repeat it twelve times, one feels somewhat less impressed. One tells oneself that it is just some more of his theatricals of which he is a master but which do not settle the situation.

As far as I am concerned, I cannot imagine that the President of the Privy Council could make dictatorial decisions without rousing strong protests among the members of his own party. Let them not take us for school children, for people without a mind of their own, and who do not know what parliament is for. Let them not take us for people who are kneeling down in the hope of getting some day promotions or favours, because we know that there are still a large number of people who think along those lines. It is an exception to be interested in obtaining favours. I will even say that the majority of members on this side have already filled some office in the municipal and provincial fields and on school boards. They are used to parliamentary debates and they respect our parliamentiary customs. However, they have often heard the rising generation asking for more efficiency and voicing eloquently their disgust for the very costly waste of time in parliament.

Since hon. members must make the parliamentary machinery more efficient, the time has come to complete that reform or it will never be done. I deny that the privileges of members are infringed upon by those measures, except perhaps if one insists that the 264 members of parliament should speak until they are breathless on every possible or conceivable subject. It would then be necessary to sit day and night, 365 days a year. Even then we would not succeed in performing our work.

Mr. Speaker, I heard the member for Prince Albert say:

[English]

"The record of this parliament is as good as that of any other parliament."

[Translation]

He then quoted statistics and gave to understand that this parliament has nevertheless achieved something against all odds. Whatever has been accomplished so far does not correspond to the hopes of the Canadian people who are going through changing times characterized by transformation, a true revolution, which requires not only efficient action but also infinitely more numerous and beneficent measures than those adopted so far. That is why our parliamentary procedures must be modernized.

Mr. Speaker, I notice that my allotted time to speak is nearly finished. So that it will not be necessary for you to interrupt me, I conclude my remarks by saying that I approve these measures.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to private members business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills and private bills.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT TO REPEAL COURT OF REVISION

Mr. Walter Deakon (High Park) moved the second reading of Bill C-13, to amend the Canada Elections Act (Repeal of court of revision).

He said: Mr. Speaker, before speaking on this bill I must say that it will indeed be difficult to follow in the footsteps of the illustrious hon. members who preceded me in espousing effervescent rhetoric. It is also ironical that I should be discussing on Friday the 13th a bill which is referred to as Bill C-13, and is listed at page 13 of the order paper. How lucky can I be! Nevertheless I shall endeavour to give in capsule form the purpose and intent of this bill.

Its purpose and intent is basically to eliminate the courts of revision, which generally are established in urban electoral districts, and replace them by the more effective and less costly procedure already provided for rural voters whereby, on voting day, an elector, whose name does not appear on the official list of electors, may cast his or her ballot, notwithstanding that the name is off the list, upon swearing an oath that he or she is ordinarily a resident of the particular electoral district in question, and meets all other necessary requirements of an elector. This is likewise supported by an oath to the same effect by an elector whose name does appear on the official list of electors, and who is ordinarily a resident of that electoral district, thereby corroborating the previous oath.

It is proposed that these oaths be administered at any time up to and including the date of an election by the returning officer of the particular district or riding in question, and in addition on election day the returning officer would also be empowered to administer similar oaths, thereby adding, amending or deleting any elector's name on the official list of electors of the electoral district in question.

As I am sure all hon. members are aware, at the present time lists of electors are compiled for each subdivision of an electoral district by enumerators who are appointed by the returning officers of each federal electoral district. These enumerators usually, especially in urban ridings, consist of two persons for each subdivision, one who is usually recommended by the member who is representing that particular riding, and the other who is recommended by the party having the second largest number of votes polled at the previous election for that particular riding. After these lists are compiled copies are made, some of which are placed in conspicuous places in the subdivision for all to view, to see whether their names are on the list. Other copies are given to the returning officer. These lists are required to be completed within a specified time prior to the election date.

In 1934 a system of permanent lists of electors was adopted by parliament for federal elections by the enactment of the Dominion Franchise Act. This system, however, was only enjoyed for the 1935 general election. The Dominion Franchise Act was repealed in 1938, and the system of compiling lists of electors by enumerators, as previously described and referred to, was provided by section 17, as well as schedules A and B of the Dominion Elections Act of 1938. Since that debate the system has been substantially the same, except for the introduction of revising agents to assist the revising officers in revising the electors lists in various districts, particularly in urban areas.

I submit that at the present time the number of persons added to these voters lists by these agents, or these courts of revision, is very small and does not warrant the cost incurred by the public. I should like to submit at this time certain cost figures which I obtained from the Chief Electoral Officer. This is a cost breakdown in respect of the cost of revising these voters lists, and this is up to November 26, 1968. It shows a total cost for the last federal election of $823,658.83. The cost in respect of the metropolitan Toronto area was $63,331.40, and for the metropolitan Montreal area, $77,904.69. I am sure you will agree that this is a little exorbitant.

I should also like to give the house some figures in respect of the Toronto-High Park area. The cost incurred by the revising officers appointed for this area totalled $3,657.41. I am informed that the six courts of revision added to this list some 240 names. In my humble submission this would represent in the vicinity of $15 to $18 for each name added. Surely you will agree that this is costly. There is no reason this task could not be performed by the returning officer and the deputy returning officers. In addition to the cost involved there are other instances of injustice, especially on election day. I personally encountered some of these during the previous election. Residents came to my office and telephoned me, advising that they had attended at their polling booths but were not permitted to vote. It happened that it was pouring rain on the last election day. It is regrettable that people who want to vote in the polling divisions, especially during adverse weather conditions, were not permitted to do so. I asked many of them why they did not get their names on the voters lists in time, and many had very valid reasons. Some said they were out of town and others said that there were a number of persons in the family, some of whom had their names on the list, and they felt their names would also be there; but they failed to check, and when they did find out it was too late.

In other cases these lists were posted on telephone posts or on trees, and may have been torn down by children or destroyed by the elements. In this event some people would not have had the opportunity to view them to make sure their names were included. I submit that the passing of this bill would eliminate these injustices.

In closing I plead with hon. members to give this bill careful consideration and not, as happens in the case of most private members bills, relegate it to another slot in this exercise in futility. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the mover that neither I nor my colleagues will do anything to prevent or preclude this bill being voted upon this afternoon. I do not know that I have ever spoken in this house on a Friday the 13th, but I find I have often made little contributions on Fridays. It seems that the competition to orate is much less on that day of the week.

An hon. Member: You get the week end press, too.

Mr. Dinsdale: You have a more intelligent audience.

Mr. Macquarrie: I think we have an excellent audience on Fridays.

I should like to congratulate the mover of this bill on his initiative in bringing it forward for our attention, and I commend him for taking an interest in the machinery of elections, that vital process whereby our representative institution is brought into being. As I have often said in the house, in this and in previous parliaments, while the collection of private members bills with suggested amendments to the Canada Election Act is commendable, we have long passed the stage where we should have had a thoroughgoing review of the act. It used to be the custom that after a dominion election—that is an archaic word which I use—the House of Commons, with the experience that all the members derive from the contest, would sit down, look at the election machinery and make suggested improvements.

I believe we have had four elections since we have had a thorough review of this act. I had the honour to preside over the privileges and elections committee when that was last done. While it was a great honour, it was also a burden, because we had many, many meetings, heard many, many witnesses and gave exhaustive study in the process to this question. The exercise was somewhat exhausting also, but I think it was helpful. I think that is the way to do the whole job. I hope it will be done very, very soon so that all questions, that of the voter's age, party affiliations being noted on the ballot, a permanent voters list, and many other aspects of our voting process will be studied, and recommendations made as a result of which a new act can be brought into being.

Many improvements could be made to this process. Usually I find myself in total agreement with hon. members who have brought forward bills of this kind. I am not so sure about this one. There are some things about the bill which cause me a little anxiety. However, I do not want my colleagues to forestall the vote because they think I may vote against the measure. Perhaps before the hour is out I will have been persuaded to vote for it. But I have some reservations. It seems to me that in essence the hon. member is suggesting that the procedures of our urban polling divisions be abandoned, and that we go back to those of our rural polling divisions.

The difference between the procedures, as they now exist under the legislation stems from the fact, as I understand it both in practice and from explanation by the experts, that in the rural polls there is little prospect of misrepresentation; that you are not in a situation of anonymity. This is an entirely different situation from that of the many, many large polling divisions in our great metropolitan centres, where very few officers and agents would know who in the world a given voter was who came in to exercise his franchise. In other words, although I do not think I have a particularly suspicious mind, I would be afraid that the hon. member's suggestion might make it a little easier to practise that ancient but dishonourable art of telescoping. This is not an unfamiliar art.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is telegraphing.

Mr. Macquarrie: Yes. This shows my innocence in these matters.

Mr. Dinsdale: You are not familiar with these techniques.

Mr. Macquarrie: Where I come from there is a great likelihood that everybody would know everybody else and would have a rough idea how everybody would vote, so telegraphing of votes could not occur in Prince Edward Island. But I have heard of its occurring in other places. We know that devices like this are used in our election process, and we should try to make that process more efficient, fair and honest. Therefore I would be a little leery of this provision. I think the hon. member is to be congratulated for having introduced the bill. It is a shocking thing when, because of administrative inefficiency, Canadian citizens are denied the right to vote. This question is raised at every election. There are all kinds of people who, because of the failure of an enumerator to do his duty, finds he is denied a vote. This is a shocking thing, because our machinery should be geared to allow every qualified Canadian to exercise his franchise. Yet in election after election the enumerating process fails here and there.

I am sure there is not a constituency in Canada where there has not been embarrassment and upset on the part of qualified voters. Many people—and I say thank God they are like this—take very seriously their right to vote. Many people are deeply disturbed, profoundly upset when they find that this measure of democracy, the freedom of choice, the exercise of selection, is null and void because of the stupidity of some individual or the inadequacy of some regulation or legislation.

I think a better way of dealing with this problem would be to have a permanent voters list where, in the whole period between elections someone is concerned with the problem of keeping the voters list up to date. Once a permanent voters list is established, steps can be taken to overcome the problems with which the hon. gentleman is concerned. A permanent voters list would allow for absentee voting. A permanent voters list would allow with greater ease the transfer of a man's franchise to another election district. We live in a very mobile society and the advance poll although it has been broadened and improved, has not been able to keep up with the fact that many people have moved during the election period. You cannot hold Canadians stationary for the practically two months period of campaigning.

Incidentally, but significantly too, I would think the permanent voters list would allow for a substantially shorter election campaign. Although election campaigning is fun, I think it would not hurt the country a bit if that particular exercise were abbreviated somewhat. I believe, too, that had we a permanent voters list, and if more of the essential process were carried out of having people listed where they belong, and their qualifications certified, more or less in peacetime before the campaign started, there would be better opportunity for some of the officials whom the hon. gentleman mentioned to cope with these last-minute inadequacies, so that people presenting a legitimate case, and who are obviously qualified to vote, can do so. Under our existing machinery they just cannot make it.

In other words, once the court of revision closes, no matter how good is your case, if you are an urbanite you are out of luck at the present time. This is not good. Under our system, when enumerators' lists are completed, hurriedly at certain times, I do not see how the revision offices could be kept open much longer than they are. My more experienced and worldly friends here, the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), told me that what I was really worrying about was not telescoping votes but telegraphing them. This is a matter which as a political scientist I have studied. I think this would be the one deterrent in the matter. I have not looked into the cost. I had not thought it would be such a money saver, but I would be prepared to study it. It seems to me the revision costs are among the minor ones in the holding of an election.

I commend the hon. gentleman for his initiative. We all join in the desire to broaden the opportunities for people to vote, and to maximize the exercise of citizenship on behalf of Canadians. I think the hon. member has done well in drawing our attention to this matter. I am always happy when in private members hour we are given an opportunity to look at some of the fundamenals of our process. We are doing it in the general debate, but I think we should do it much more often. In this way we can develop a little more awareness of some of the basic aspects of this institution and of the broader institution, namely the democratic process whereby we are brought into being.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to support the plea made by the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Deakon), that his bill be permitted to come to a vote during this hour. He will certainly get full support on that point from those of us on this side of the house, and I hope his words were heard by his colleagues. It may be, Mr. Speaker, that this is the hon. member's lucky day. His bill is No. C-13; it has been called on Friday the 13th. The last time I counted I saw 13 Liberals in the house; I saw 13 of us in the opposition and then I started counting the people in the gallery and I managed to count 13 there. So, perhaps this is the hon. member's lucky day and his bill will get through.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Let us hope the roof doesn't fall in.

An hon. Member: I didn't know you were superstitious.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What I am saying is that I am not superstitious. As a matter of fact, I think it would be a lucky stroke, not only for the hon. member but for the voters in urban centres across Canada if we could do something about this problem.

While I am in a light mood I might pick up the thought the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) was discussing and run the risk of telling a story which I have no doubt has been told in this house before. It is a story told by Chubby Power, our late friend, of an experience he once had with another friend, the late Mackenzie King. It appeared that on one occasion Chubby Power had Mr. King down in Quebec city or somewhere in that area and at Mr. King's request took him out to see the grave of one of Mr. King's uncles or cousins once removed, or something of that sort. It seems they were standing looking at the grave and Mr. King said this was a relative for whom he had great respect, despite the fact he had always voted Tory. Chubby Powers says he replied, "Don't worry, Mr. King, he has voted Liberal ever since he died".

Mr. Speaker, I believe that in this bill the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Deakon) has addressed himself to one of the most serious and pressing problems we in urban centres experience every election day. He said that himself, and all of us who come from urban centres have had the experience every hour of election day of receiving calls from scores of people who are unable to vote because their names are not on the voters' list. Each new returning officer in every urban constituency vows he will do a better job than the last one, but he does not manage to get a list that has all the names on it. People in urban centres hear about people in rural areas being able to get sworn in on election day. They wonder why they cannot do the same thing.

I agree with the hon. member for Hillsborough that a permanent voters' list, as has been suggested in the report Mr. Castonguay recently made, would be a more logical and better way of solving a problem. However, the member for High Park seems to have come up with a much less costly way of dealing with the matter. It does seem to me it should receive the support of the house. As I say, it is an issue that has stumped all of the candidates on election day in urban areas. The hon. member for High Park is to be congratulated upon bringing the matter before the house.

I am going to sit down. I support the plea that we let this bill come to a decision today. If all it gets today is second reading, although I am satisfied it could go further, at least that will be a declaration by the members who happen to be here this Friday afternoon that they support the principle of this bill. If the proposal is made from the government side that the subject matter be referred to the committee on privileges and elections, although that seems to be a compliment, it will mean that will be the last we will hear of the matter in the current session. It does seem to me this is a matter with which we should cope and the hon. member has come up with a solution for it. I hope the house will vote for it.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak only briefly on this important bill. The hon. member is to be congratulated upon his efforts in this regard. Indeed, it has struck me as being incongruous that in the government's great desire to bring about certain reforms in the operations of this house there has been relatively little activity to date with regard to what I suggest is of even far more concern to Canadians, that is the way in which they participate in the process of governing this country. I think it has been unfortunate that as we have developed many means of mass communication, of making mass decisions, many of which could well involve thousands of responsible Canadians, the only thing still required of most Canadian citizens in terms of the democratic procedures in this country is that once every two, three or four years they go to the polls and make an "X". Then, somehow they have fulfilled their responsibilities as citizens. I think the time is very fast approaching when Canadians are anxious to play a much larger role in their own self-government. We will have to use our imaginations not just the members in this house but the people outside as well, to think of ways in which people can be more actively involved in the process of decision making. The bill with which we are dealing this afternoon is one suggesting an amendment to the election act so that people will not be deprived of their right to vote on election day. I sympathize very much with this sentiment. I believe we are depriving far too many people of the right to vote on election day. I think it is a remarkable thing that all the Canadians who serve our government in various government departments, with the exception of those who serve in the ranks, have no opportunity to exercise their democratic franchise as citizens of this country on election day if they are outside of the country.

One could even refer to the immediate past prime minister of this country, who for many years was deprived of the exercise of his franchise because he was serving Canada, whether it was in the United States, Great Britain or some other place. I hope that matters such as this will be dealt with very shortly by the Committee on privileges and elections. I hope it will be a very active committee. I hope it will be not only studying legislation referred to it, but I hope the committee will involve many Canadians who have studied this matter and are concerned about it. The widest possible discussion should take place in the committee on privileges and elections. Following that discussion, I hope the government will put on the order paper legislation that will correct many of the inequities we have debated from time to time in this house.

I think, too, of another large group of Canadians that are deprived on a regular basis of their vote on election day. I refer to those who are in hospitals and who, through no fault of their own but because they are incapable of getting to a polling station, are unable to vote. I may say some provinces are more enlightened on this matter than the federal government in that they do permit such people to vote on election day even if they are not able personally to appear at the polls. I think, too, of those who, for one reason or another, while they may not be in hospital, because of some physical infirmity are perhaps unable to get into the polling station. Sometimes it is simply because the polling station may be some steps above ground level and these people have a heart condition or some physical incapacity which prevents them from participating in the election process.

The hon. member for Hillsborough mentioned the fact that we are a very mobile people. I think we forget that roughly a quarter of our population moves every year. There is a space of almost two months between the time of calling the election and the date of the election. During this time people may move, sometimes thousands of miles or more, and they are thereby deprived of their right to vote. If one were able to actually make a count, and it may be worth while for this purpose to determine just how many Canadian citizens are not able to vote in an election, I think we would be both surprised and deeply disturbed. I think it important, therefore, that we consider these matters. Perhaps I may add that we must also be very careful of the rights of Canadians because the secret ballot is something to be guarded carefully.

I am still troubled by the way in which the service vote is treated as an isolated vote, not usually announced until some days after the general vote has been tabulated and published. It should be possible in this era of high speed communication and transportation, since the service vote is taken some days prior to the general election, to collect this vote, tabulate it and release it as part of the over-all vote for each and every constituency in the country. At the moment I think the situation is unfair to our servicemen. It creates a kind of political aura about the men serving in the ranks, which is not good for them, and certainly not good for the country.

I concur as well with the remarks of the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) and his suggestion that there be established a permanent voters list. This is something that has been talked of ad nauseam, yet little has been done to ascertain its cost, as well as the benefits that might accrue, apart from the major benefit that is quite often talked about—shortening the time taken for election campaigns. That would be one virtue.

I also see many other virtues—and this relates to the first point that I made when I rose to speak. If we really believe what we often say in election campaigns, namely that people are more and more anxious to participate, to involve themselves in political questions of the day and to take part in some responsible way in national decision making, then I think by the establishment of a permanent voters list we will recognize the fact that not only are people important at the time of elections—on which we spend a great deal of money, as the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Deakon) pointed out, to tabulate names and publish lists of enumerations—but that people are important to us all of the time. By keeping annual lists of voters we might consider other ways of involving people in the ongoing decision making process that is self-government.

Generally speaking, Mr. Speaker, I concur with the provisions of this bill, though I think we could improve it a good deal by considering many of the other problems that face us in this regard. I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who suggested that, if we are to respond to the great desire of the Canadian people today to participate in a realistic way, both in 1968 and beyond, in the process of self-government, the house should approve second reading of this bill, to show our support for these kinds of changes, and then perhaps go on to deal with this bill and other measures in committee in a way that will indicate that we are taking seriously the changes and reforms that are necessary in the elections act.

Mr. Jerry Pringle (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, in rising to add my small contribution to the debate on this fine bill that has been presented by one of my colleagues, as usual one runs the risk of finding that most of his speech has already been made. I thank the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) for his words, and I am happy to know that on this Friday afternoon a member of the rump can concur so readily with a member of the opposition to my left.

I should like to add one or two points, if I may. I am in favour of the bill as presented, though I do not feel it is really broad enough in scope. We need to go a great deal further in the matter of reform. I also agree that this is a timely piece of legislation in view of the fact that we are thinking at the moment in terms of reform. I am sure we are all thinking in terms of reform, whether or not we are entirely agreed on the method.

I come from an urban-rural riding. I am sure there are many urban-rural areas throughout the country. I speak, for example, of small towns or cities which have immediately outside their limits a rural area that is in a municipality. In such areas people in the municipality prior to election day are able to be sworn in because they live in a rural area, whereas their neighbours who live virtually across the street are unable to exercise their vote. I know of nothing more aggravating to a couple of neighbours than for one to be allowed to exercise his franchise and the other not able to do so. This does create a great deal of trouble. Unfortunately it does not seem to create too much trouble for the returning officers, although it does for the candidates, because they are continually asked to do something to correct the situation. It seems to me that a bill of this kind would be of considerable help in taking care of the urban-rural areas.

I too am concerned about the absentee ballot. A lot of people in my area are engaged in the logging business and work in the woods. Others work on fishing vessels. When they are away from home, either working in the woods or fishing on the lakes, these people are disfranchised as a result of the lack of a system of absentee voting in times of federal elections. I would hope that this bill could correct the situation. As far as swearing in prior to election day is concerned, this matter of telegraphed votes is entirely new to me. However, I have a great deal to learn, since I am relatively new to politics.

Times have changed considerably during the past two years. For example, take the matter of identification. It seems we must have a card for everything these days. As a matter of fact, cash is now referred to as the poor man's credit card. We have our driver's licence and also our pension card. There are many forms of identification card. It seems to me that if we were serious about giving each Canadian a proper card of identification, then it would be a simple matter for all voters to identify themselves at polling stations when they exercise their franchise on election day.

I should like to support my colleague who has moved this bill and I hope it will be dealt with to his satisfaction on this lucky day, Friday the thirteenth.

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, first of all may I congratulate the hon. member who introduced the bill, which is very definitely an excellent step in the right direction.

Mr. Dinsdale: Then let us vote for it.

Mr. Anderson: There will be time to vote for the bill when I have finished. I realize hon. members want to get home for the week end, but I shall put forward my views in regard to this matter in a short space of time.

In addition to the need for a permanent list of voters, there are other areas in the Canada Elections Act requiring correction. I think particularly of Canadians serving their country abroad, who are unable to vote, here I do not refer to the members of the military forces. This is one aspect which as far as possible should be rectified.

Second, we must also do something about the people to whom my good friend from Fraser Valley East (Mr. Pringle) has just referred, those who are unable to vote either at the preliminary balloting or on the day of the election. I think in particular of fishermen in my riding who cannot choose the time that they go to sea. They must go out to fish during the hours that are allowed them by the licensing authorities. Therefore on some election days they are unable to vote, and this is a situation that we should correct as soon as we can possibly do so.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I regret that this bill and others like it did not come forward to be passed by the house in time to have an effect on the election in Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. Distinguished candidates are running for office in that election.

Mr. Winch: You bet.

Mr. Anderson: It may be that a man of the calibre the hon. member for Vancouver East might wish to see in the house will soon be here.

Mr. Winch: He'll be here after the election.

Mr. Anderson: It is unfortunate that this house did not correct the shortcomings of the Canada Elections Act before holding the election in Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. With these remarks I will sit down, Mr. Speaker, taking care to point out to hon. members that I have not talked the bill out.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, a certain ritual has developed with respect to private bills, and remarks during this debate reflect that ritual. Some hon. members tried to deal with the principle of the bill while others tried to deal with procedure. I confess to being disappointed with the speech of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) because his entire remarks were devoted to the principle of getting the bill voted on. He did not analyse the contents of the bill, although I know he is well capable of doing so. In some respects I appreciated the remarks of the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) who dealt with the principle of the bill.

The ritual we have developed is this: The mover of the bill says, "We should let this bill come to a vote; it is so unfortunate that so many private members bills are not voted on, and these bills ought to be voted on according to their merits", and so on. Well, Mr. Speaker, at the present time there are more than 100 private members bills before the house, and if we were to yield to the ritual each one of our proponents would have us go through, the work of our committees would be substantially changed. Frankly, and I suggest this humbly, I do not think every one of those bills is so carefully drawn that it deserves to be passed in the form in which it is presented to the house.

On the subject of reforming private members hours and abandoning this ritual, perhaps I can tell hon. members what happened in a previous parliament in which I served. A bill similar to the one before us today was part of the package before the house. An hon. member in the house belonging to the party to which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre belongs—he is now a member of the press gallery—had between 15 and 20 private members bills before the house. He gave them exotic names such as "an amendment to the Criminal Code" and so on. From the name he gave a particular bill we could not really know what it was about. One day I listened to him speaking on a bill and, frankly, I could make no sense of it. An hon. member who is now the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources asked the hon. member making the speech if his notes were mixed up, and whether he was not speaking to the wrong bill. It turned out this was correct: The hon. member had gone through half his speech speaking about another bill. He had pulled the wrong file from his cabinet.

The concern I have here is this: I do not believe that the substance of this bill is such that I can support it. I wish to congratulate my colleague from High Park (Mr. Deakon) on his attempt to deal with a serious problem that we all recognize exists at election times, the problem of the voter who should not have been qualified and has not been qualified, but who shows up at the polls. In a rural poll he can take an oath vouched for by an elector; in an urban poll he cannot. My colleague has therefore argued, and he quoted some convincing material to support his argument, that we should follow the procedure of the rural polls.

I have been a candidate in four elections; in three of them I had a mixed rural and urban constituency with rural and urban polls. May I say that problems with respect to polls differ a great deal in different parts of the country. I had the privilege of serving as a member of the privileges and elections committee when that committee in 1963, 1964 and 1965 held a series of hearings on the Canada Elections Act. It reported to the house. Unfortunately, because of the log jam of legislation before this house and the difficulty of resolving procedural rules in order to deal with these matters more expeditiously, the proposed legislation was not enacted and the amendments did not come forward in the form we hoped they would.

At this stage, Mr. Speaker, may I put before the house some procedures that deal with the establishment of voters lists. There is good reason for having different procedures in most urban constituencies, as against rural constituencies. In the rural constituency a single enumerator enumerates the voters and prepares lists. In an urban constituency, in the urban polls, there are two enumerators named from the two political interests which received the highest and the second highest number of votes in the previous election. The theory is that these enumerators will watch one another to make sure there is no irregularity and no omission. Each one of them has the opportunity of making observations and comments to his associate doing the same job. The purpose for this is to serve the public interest as carefully as it is possible to do so.

Then comes the revision procedure. Those of us who have worked under it have found it trying and somewhat vexing. But the elimination of courts of revision in my opinion is not the proper answer to what is wrong. I do not care how expensive it is; I am concerned more with questions of principle. If you want to talk about the expense of conducting an election you could talk about the expense of the military vote; you could talk about how expensive it is to try to guarantee that as many Canadians as possible have the right to vote, under circumstances which are compatible with democracy. If we eliminated courts of revision and permitted a very simple procedure on election day, let us think for a moment what we would face.

Let us think of what happened in the last election when there were complaints about revisions of boundaries. In the constituency which I have the honour to represent the boundary runs down the middle of the street, down the middle of Baseline road. Before the previous election it included one strip of houses on the other side of Baseline road. On election day many people found, to their surprise, that they would not be voting in Ottawa West but in Grenville-Carleton, the constituency on the other side of the street.

If you had a simple procedure along the lines of that in rural polls you might get something like this: A man might say, "I know John Smith; he lives on Baseline road; I live on Baseline road and I can vouch for him; he has lived there for a long time, is a jolly good chap", and so on. The system just would not work if you did not have in your poll an extremely well qualified deputy returning officer, who would be absolutely informed of the latest boundary revisions of the constituency and thoroughly aware of all the little facts of geography, such as the street here or there that runs down the corner to a cul-de-sac; that it bends just before it gets to the cul-de-sac and that the people in the middle of the cul-de-sac vote in one constituency and those at the end in another constituency. I should have considerable reservations about adopting a system that requires this. I will not use the expression the hon. member for Hillsborough used, but I think hon. members will know what I mean.

The vote of someone not properly qualified to vote is not a proper vote. It is better, Mr. Speaker, that thousands of dollars be spent to make sure that there are no irregularities than that in the interests of economy we should open the door to permit a number of voters who are not properly qualified to swamp election machinery or individual polls by permitting the taking of oaths under the pressure of election day and, if I may say so, thereby possibly subverting the results of such an election.

The number of circumstances in which hon. members of this house are elected by very small margins is fairly large in the kind of contests we have now. What I am saying is not academic; it is a matter of serious concern to members who are worried about the principles by which we conduct ourselves in democratic elections. In rural constituencies there is a presumption of knowledge. The boundaries of such constituencies are more easily defined—they are not as closely drawn as they are in the great urban centres. Moreover, residents do not change as quickly. It is literally possible to go to a deputy returning officer and say, for instance: The Smiths have not moved out. Why are they not on the list? Everyone knows a mistake has been made, and it is corrected.

There is a certain wisdom which has been accumulated in the Canada Elections Act. It is not a haphazard document. It represents the results of experience during a number of elections conducted in this country at different times. Members of the committees which have examined this problem have come to the conclusion, in their wisdom, that there is necessity for flexible arrangements in the rural areas. This seems to work. There is no great evidence of abuse nor, in my opinion, is there much possibility of abuse as a result of such flexibility. I have not known abuse to take place in the three elections with which I have been concerned although there was a substantial rural population.

I would, however, be gravely concerned about the mechanical difficulty of coping on election day with the number of people who would come to the polls at the boundary of a constituency, especially if those boundaries had been subject to recent change, and claim that they should be put on the list. In many cases they would do so with the best of intentions, in the firm belief that they belonged to a particular constituency, when in fact they did not.

The possibility of irregularities and contested elections arising out of such a situation is very great, in my opinion. As I said before, I am concerned about the way in which previous speakers have dealt with the subject matter of the bill. Although this subject is one which causes me concern personally, I don't believe the direction they have indicated is one I should like to see this legislation take. I may be wrong, but if I recall correctly the evidence given before the committee by Mr. Castonguay, who is experienced in these matters and who has the complete confidence of all parties in this house, it was not such as to prompt those of us who were members of the committee to move to include this type of amendment in the act. The committee did not deal lightly with the measure, and for this reason I personally feel that in the circumstances I cannot support the principle of the bill.

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): In a moment or two I propose to move that the subject matter of this bill be referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections. Before I do so I might say that this is one of a number of bills on the subject of electoral reforms and various reforms in connection with electoral boundaries which now stand on the order paper as public bills. Since it is the intention of the government to send the elections act to the committee on privileges and elections at some time during the session, the government has indicated that the subject matter of bills of this nature could also be reviewed at that time. Thus, the subject matter of the bill now before us will receive thorough consideration when the elections act is referred to the standing committee.

I therefore move:

That the subject matter of the said bill be referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The hour provided for the consideration of private members business has now expired. It being six o'clock this house now stands adjourned.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, December 16, 1968

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. KNOWLES (WINNIPEG NORTH CENTRE)—COMMITTEE DISCUSSION OF PROCEDURE RECOMMENDATION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. This in fact is the first opportunity I have had since Friday to consult the record and hence bring the appropriate parts of that record before the house. It concerns something in connection with which I believe there was a misrepresentation on Friday of last week. On page 3920 of Hansard for December 13 the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) is reported to have said:

> Indeed, hon. members opposite have had the opportunity to say what they think of the provisions of 16-A because I am advised that they refused to discuss it at all in the committee. If that is so, Mr. Speaker, then this debate has been useful because now we have—

At that point I interrupted and the following exchange is reported to have taken place:

> Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. That statement is not true.
> Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I rise on another point of order. That statement is true.
> Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.
> Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

That was "oh, oh," not "ho, ho" Mr. Speaker. I continue quoting what took place:

> Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members know that the basis of our discussions is that we have to accept the statement made by an hon. member, so I assume we have to accept both statements.
> Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. We discussed 16-A in the committee at great length. We had a vote on it. We tried to persuade the government to cut it off half way. All I am trying to make clear at this point is that the statement that it was not discussed in the committee was incorrect.
> Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I will accept that they perhaps discussed it but they refused to negotiate on the terms and conditions. There was a refusal to negotiate on the terms. They did not want to talk about it when they saw it.

I rise today on this question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, not to ask the house to set my word against the word of hon. gentlemen opposite or vice versa but simply because there is a record of what went on in the special committee on procedure, and I want to refer to that record. I have in my hand the minutes of two of the meetings of that committee, and they make it clear that my statement was correct. I will not take the time of the house to read these minutes in full, but I believe I am entitled to refer to them. I am not referring to several days when we made incidental references to this question, or days when we were told this was the problem we would have to deal with before we got through with our business.

At any rate, the record or minutes of the committee show that on Tuesday, November 26, at a full dress meeting, after a few preliminaries the greater part of the meeting—in fact four pages of minutes—had to do with the question of the programming of house business. The minutes indicate that some of us objected to any idea of putting the matter completely in the hands of the government. In the minutes this sentence is to be found on page 2:

> Mr. Macdonald said that he had to insist on a residual power being given to the government.

It is reported that Mr. Macdonald went on to say that his colleagues would expect him to put through a certain program of legislation, and the reserve or residual power would be needed to ensure this. Two pages later in the minutes the point is reached where the committee agreed to instruct the clerk of the committee to prepare a paper for referral to the draftsman as follows—and there are a number of points which indicate the things we were all agreed on; namely, that there was to be a proceedings committee; that it was to hold meetings; that it was to have a chairman and so many members, and so on; but that it was to act, so far as these parts of the proposal were concerned, only on the basis of a unanimous decision.

At that point the minutes said, quite correctly, that the President of the Privy Council said he would prepare a draft dealing with cases when there was disagreement in the business committee.

That was on Tuesday, November 26, and I say practically the whole of that meeting was devoted to a very thorough discussion of this whole matter even before there was a draft in front of us.

Then the minutes of Tuesday, December 2, will show that we met at 8.30 p.m. in room 112N and did not adjourn until 10.30 that night. It is recorded that a draft of 16A was placed before us. In fact there were two drafts, one which had been prepared by the clerk of the committee at our request and another prepared by the President of the Privy Council which went much further and was more or less along the lines of the proposal in the report which was finally made.

The minutes of the committee include a report of the statements made by several of the members of the committee. For example, I am quoted as saying that the question of programming business was one which had constitutional overtones. I said parliament was a place of debate and there were certain ground rules which had always been observed. I said I still had faith in co-operation and consultation and believed that a proceedings committee would be able to agree on the programming of business without an ultimate sanction. Later, as the minutes say, I made it clear that in my view such a rule would be detrimental to parliament and that no government had the right to take such powers.

The discussion went on, and among those taking part in it were the hon. member for Edmonton West, the hon. member for Sudbury, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar, the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra and the hon. member for Peace River. Finally the chairman indicated that since we .were in disagreement the only thing to do was to take a vote, and each clause was called separately. The minutes say that Mr. Lambert recorded his dissent on section 1, Mr. Knowles on section 2, minor drafting changes were incorporated in section 3, changes were made in section 4, and so on. Mr. Macdonald, seconded by Mr. Jerome, then moved that the proposed standing order as amended be adopted for inclusion as a recommendation in the report of the committee. On this question the committee divided: yeas, Messrs. Deachman, Forest, Jerome, Lang, Macdonald; nays, Messrs. Baldwin, Fairweather, Knowles, Lambert. The minutes show that the vote represented a straight division between hon. members on the government side and hon. members of the opposition.

Surely in the light of this record it is clear that we did discuss this subject at length for two full meetings. This is a controversial question, and I submit that for the minister to say he was advised—

Mr. McIlraith: This is wholly out of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —that we did not want to talk about it when we saw it is a misrepresentation of the facts of the case. I know it has been said outside the house that though we talked about it we did not negotiate. Well, when we tried to negotiate we were simply told that the government was in power and that the government intended to put it through.

However, the record is clear. We discussed it at length, and I therefore believe the statement made the other day should not go unchallenged. That is why I have raised the matter today on a question of privilege, to put the facts on record and make this correct statement with regard to it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): The first thing to be said is that this whole matter, as the hon. member himself has indicated, was the subject of a question of privilege last Friday. It is therefore difficult to see why it should be raised again now, unless it is a device to bootleg the minutes of the committee into the record of this house.

I believe in fairness the hon. member would agree that at no time did we put it to him or to other members that they had no choice but accept this proposal. There was in fact an intensive discussion.

But on the points which were raised by the Leader of the Opposition I think he would equally agree that the question of notice was not the subject matter of any discussion. I do not think he will find this in the record at all. It well may be a matter of argument as to whether there was negotiation in the committee. We felt on the whole that hon. members were not prepared to come forward with what seemed to us reasonable changes in the rules; but surely, Mr. Speaker, this kind of difference of opinion as to the manner in which discussions were carried on does not represent a question of privilege.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support fully the statements made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on this question of privilege. Not only with regard to the particular days in November and December mentioned do the minutes disclose discussion and negotiation, but if we go back to the minutes of November 15 you will find the entire meeting was devoted to a discussion of this particular issue, with proposals and counter proposals flowing back and forth between both sides. Consequently I felt I had to support the hon. member on his remarks directed to the terminological inexactitude perpetrated by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson).

If there was not more negotiation it was for a very good reason, which was made quite plain to us at one period during these discussions in committee. The words as used by government members were to this effect: "This is political warfare. We are going to have our way. We want what we want, and we are going to get it—"

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Baldwin: —and "If we were where you are we would be fighting it just as hard as you are." How do you negotiate with a bulldozer, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have listened to the point made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Actually it is not necessary for the Chair to reach any decision, since the question of privilege raised by the hon. member was not followed by a motion, so that according to the rules there is no necessity to determine whether there is actually a prima facie case of privilege. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre knows much better than I do the statutory provisions and the precedents and rules of the house dealing with privilege, and in particular citation 113 in Beauchesne's fourth edition where it is said:

> —a dispute arising between two members, as to allegations of facts, does not fulfil the conditions of parliamentary privilege.

The hon. member may feel he was duty bound to further substantiate the statement he made on Friday last when he raised the question of privilege, but I suggest that the matter having been raised on Friday and continued at this time, it should not be pursued further.

MEAT INSPECTION ACT

PROVISION THAT GRADE STAMP BE IN BOTH LANGUAGES

Mr. Fernand-E. Leblanc (Laurier) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-143, intituled "An Act to amend the Meat Inspection Act (Inspection Legend)".

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, at a time when all Canadians seem to unite in promoting bilingualism and biculturalism, it seems to me appropriate to draw the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to the importance of this bill, which was already introduced on January 22, 1968 as Bill No. C-196.

Section 68 of the regulations under the act provides that the stamp put on inspected meat shall be in English only. Consequently, this bill stipulates that the stamp shall henceforth be in the two official languages and that it shall bear the same maple leaf as the Canadian flag.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

DIVORCE ACT

EXTENSION OF JURISDICTION TO COUNTY AND DISTRICT COURTS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-144, to amend the Divorce Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to confer a concurrent jurisdiction on the county and district courts of provinces other than Quebec and Newfoundland in divorce matters. Under the bill for divorce which was passed at the last session, jurisdiction was given to the supreme courts alone of the provinces. It has been found in experience, exactly as had been anticipated by some of us, that the supreme court is being clogged with a great load of actions for divorce resulting in delay, the holding up of cases, and the courts being unable to do their work. The purpose of this bill is to give concurrent jurisdiction to county and district courts, which incidentally will make the proceedings less expensive.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

*SASKATCHEWAN—SHIPMENT OF POTASH BY TRUCK

Question No. 185—Mr. Nystrom:

Has International Minerals informed the Department of Transport that they intend to ship potash by truck to a United States border point for reshipment by rail and, if so, has the Minister of Transport made representations to the company with a view to safeguarding the economic position of the rail centre of Melville?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport reports as follows: The answer is no.

DUMPING OF FILL, LAKE ONTARIO

Question No. 570—Mr. Robinson:

1. What is the government policy regarding the dumping of fill in Lake Ontario along the shoreline of Metropolitan Toronto?

2. What arrangement has the federal government with Metropolitan Toronto, the City of Toronto or any of the Boroughs of Metropolitan Toronto regarding the dumping of fill (a) along the waterfront of the Canadian National Exhibition (b) along the waterfront of the Borough of Etobicoke (c) along the waterfront of Marie Curtis Park and the immediate vicinity (d) at or near the mouth of the Humber River (e) at or near the mouth of the Mimico Creek (f) at or near the mouth of the Etobicoke Creek?

3. (a) Has the government taken any action against the dumping of fill as referred to in Parts 1 and 2 above, and (b) what action has been or will be taken against the violators?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): 1. The policy of the department regarding the placing of fill in lake Ontario along the shore of metropolitan Toronto is to treat each application for approval under the Navigable Waters Protection Act individually and independently and on its merits.

2. The federal government has no understanding or arrangement with metropolitan Toronto or any other town, borough or city regarding the placing of fill along the areas mentioned.

3. (a) No. (b) The matter will be investigated and appropriate action taken if warranted.

[Mr. Brewin.]

AMALGAMATION OF QUEBECAIR AND EASTERN PROVINCIAL AIRWAYS

Question No. 683—Mr. MacLean:

1. Has an application been received by the Canadian Transport Commission from Quebecair and Eastern Provincial Airways, seeking approval for these two airlines to amalgamate their services?

2. Has such a request been granted?

3. What effect, if any, will the granting of this request have on the frequency and quality of service provided by these two airlines?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: 1. Yes; a joint letter has been received from Quebecair and Eastern Provincial Airways "for authority to interchange equipment and/or Quebecair to fly the routes of Eastern Provincial Airways or, alternatively, Eastern Provincial Airways to fly the routes of Quebecair".

2. Insufficient information was provided and the companies have been advised by the air transport committee of the Canadian Transport Commission of the type of material required to give proper consideration to the proposal. Upon receipt of a complete application the matter will be considered by the committee.

3. The companies hope to make improvements in the service provided to the public and this is one of the matters the committee will consider in dealing with the application.

ESQUIMALT—DISCHARGE OF SEWAGE BY NAVAL SHIPS

Question No. 775—Mr. Anderson:

1. Are Canadian naval vessels other than submarines discharging raw sewage into the waters of Esquimalt Harbour and, if so, does the Department of National Defence intend to install holding tanks on its vessels on the West Coast?

2. If not, what other steps are being taken to reduce pollution of the harbour?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of National Defence and the Department of Transport as follows: 1. Yes. No, it would be extremely expensive to modify existing warships to take holding tanks.

2. None.

MIXING OF GRADES AT TERMINAL ELEVATORS

Question No. 779—Mr. Southam:

Is the government giving consideration to revising the Canada Grain Act to permit the mixing of all grades of grain at the terminal elevators?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): This matter has been considered in long range studies but further research is required before final decision can be made.

MERCURIAL TREATED GRAIN DELIVERIES

Question No. 780—Mr. Southam:

How many instances in 1968 (a) have the Board of Grain Commissioners had with respect to mercurial treated grain deliveries (b) how many charges have been filed (c) how many convictions have been obtained?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): (a) 25 shipments were found to contain mercurial treated kernels. (b) The board has recommended prosecution in two instances. One is now before the courts and the other under review as to appropriate action by an agent of the Department of Justice. (c) See (b).

DESIGNATED AREAS FOR WHEAT PRODUCTION

Question No. 781—Mr. Southam:

Is the government giving consideration to breaking down the Prairie Provinces into two or three designated areas with a view to allocating production of high quality Red Spring Wheat to the normally semi-drought areas, and the production of lower grades to the higher yield lower grade geographic regions?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Not specifically, but this is one approach under discussion.

INCREASE IN HANDLING CHARGES, TERMINAL ELEVATION

Question No. 782—Mr. Southam:

Is it the government's intention to support the request of the Western Wheat Pools for an increase of handling charges at the terminal elevators?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): The Board of Grain Commissioners, which has the responsibility for setting of maximum tariffs for services performed by elevator companies, is presently reviewing all briefs submitted to them at their public hearing held in Winnipeg on November 6, 1968.

CALGARY AIRPORT CLASSIFICATION

Question No. 790—Mr. Mahoney:

1. Is the Calgary Airport classified as an international airport?

2. If not, does the government intend to classify it as an international airport, and, if so, when?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): 1. Calgary airport is classified as an alternate airport for use by aircraft engaged in international air carrier operations. It has not been classified as an international "regular" airport due to a lack of suitable inspection service facilities.

2. Improvements are now being undertaken to provide additional space in the terminal building which can be made available for inspection services. When this work is completed, the airport will be officially designated as a "regular" for international use.

AIRPORT CONSTRUCTION, THETFORD MINES, QUE.

Question No. 815—Mr. Dumont:

Has the Minister of Transport received a request for the construction of an airport at Thetford Mines and if so (a) when (b) has he taken any steps in this regard?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Yes. (a), June 1966. (b) Officials of the department have been requested to perform economic and engineering studies to determine if federal funds would be justified to assist in the construction of an airport at Thetford Mines.

PENSION APPEAL BOARD

Question No. 835—Mr. Fortin:

1. Who are the members of the Pension Appeal Board, what is the salary of each and what is their term of appointment?

2. How many cases have been heard by the Board since it was established?

3. In what location or locations does the Board meet?

4. What are the names of the employees of the Board and what are the qualifications of each?

5. Are the decisions of the Board published and, if so, where?

6. If such decisions are not published, for what reasons?

[Translation]

Hon. John Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Chairman, Mr. Justice Paul Émile Côté of the Superior Court of the Province of Quebec; Member, Mr. Justice Joseph Alfred Monnin of the Court of Appeal of the Province of Manitoba; Member, His Honour Judge M. L. Tyrwhitt-Drake of the County Court of the County of Victoria, British Columbia. As the members are judges, their salaries are determined under the Judges Act, by their appointment to the courts of the various provinces. They are appointed at pleasure by Governor-in-Council.

2. Three.

3. The intention of the Board is to hear the appeals before it in such locations as are convenient to the parties and the Board.

4. The Registrar of the Board is Mr. Jacques Bonneau, Lawyer. On a temporary basis, clerical and other help is provided as required by the Canada Pension Plan, Department of National Health and Welfare.

5 and 6. Copies of the decision of the Board are available and may be obtained from the Registrar. As more decisions are made, the Board will decide whether they will be reproduced in full, in the form of Reports.

STATUTE REVISION COMMISSION

Question No. 839—Mr. Fortin:

1. When was the Statute Revision Commission established and who are its members?

2. What are the terms of reference of the Commission?

3. Is the Commission required to complete its work in 1968 and, if not, for what reason and when is it expected that its work will be completed?

4. What is the size of the staff of the Commission and how many of its employees have (a) French (b) English, as a mother tongue and how many are bilingual?

[Translation]

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): 1. The Statute Revision Commission was established on the 4th day of May, 1965. The present members of the Commission are: Honourable John N. Turner, Q.C., Minister of Justice; Mr. D. S. Maxwell, Q.C., Deputy Minister of Justice; Mr. R. Bedard, C.R., Associate Deputy Minister of Justice; Mr. D. S. Thorson, Q.C., Associate Deputy Minister of Justice; Mr. Jean Miquelon, C.R., President, Crown Assets Disposal Corporation; Mr. J. W. Ryan, Director, Legislation Section, Department of Justice.

2. The duties of the Commission are to examine the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952, and the public general statutes of Canada enacted since the coming into force of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952, and, in accordance with the provisions of 1964-65, c. 48, arrange, revise and consolidate the said statutes (1964-65, c. 48, s.2).

3. No date is provided for the completion of the revision. The authorizing statute contemplated that current statutes would be included in the work of the revision (see 1964-65, c. 48, s.3). Original target dates have been extended to make the revision as topical as possible upon its completion with the least possible use of amending supplemental volumes. The present target date is late Fall of 1969 to insure inclusion of 1968-69 sessional matter.

4. The staff of the Commission consists of six persons; French is the mother tongue of four and English is the mother tongue of two. Four of the employees of the Commission are bilingual, two are not. The services of six members of the Department of Justice are available to the Commission; all six are bilingual with mother tongues as follows: English 1; French 5.

AIRPORT WORKS, ST. GEORGES DE BEAUCE, QUE.

Question No. 849—Mr. Rodrigue:

Has the Minister of Transport received any requests for certain works to be carried out at the St. Georges de Beauce Airport and, if so, when will such work be carried out?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Yes. Provided that the town of St. Georges de Beauce executes an agreement with the Department of Transport and completes certain undertakings with respect to the title of the land constituting the airport site, it is proposed to call tenders next spring and thereafter award a contract so that the work may be carried out in the summer of 1969.

STAFF POSITIONS, CAMP HILL HOSPITAL

Question No. 859—Mr. Coates:

1. Was a freeze placed on all Civil Service positions at Camp Hill Hospital on March 1, 1968?

2. Was there a shortage of staff on the date the freeze went into effect and, if so, how many positions were not filled at the date on which the freeze was placed?

3. Was a further staff reduction ordered relating to nursing facilities at Camp Hill Hospital after March 1, 1968 and, if so, what was the extent of the staff reduction?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. In line with government policy the strength of the whole department was fixed at the level existing on March 1, 1968. No freeze was imposed on any specific institution, including Camp Hill.

2. 27 positions were vacant on March 1, 1968.

3. No.

C.M.H.C. LOANS, TEMISCAMINGUE CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 867—Mr. Caouette:

What is the total amount of loans approved by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in the constituency of Témiscamingue over the past five years, and how many dwellings have been built with the help of such loans?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The number and amount of loans approved by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation from 1963 to 1967, and the number of dwelling units built with the help of these loans, are shown in the following table. In addition, three loans for $24,000 were approved in 1967 to finance the purchase of existing housing under section 40 of the National Housing Act.

Net NHA Loans Approved for New Housing in the Municipal County of Temiscamingue, 1963-1967

[1]In addition, an increase of $148,000 was approved for a student housing loan initially approved in 1962.

Questions

NATIONAL DEBT

Question No. 873—Mr. Robinson:

1. What was the total amount of the National debt as at March 31, 1968?

2. What is the annual cost of servicing National debt?

3. What proportion of the interest paid on the National debt is paid to (a) Canadians (b) others?

4. What policies does the government follow with respect to the liquidation of the National debt?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. The net debt of Canada, or the excess of liabilities over net recorded assets, was $16,757 million at March 31, 1968.

2. The annual cost of servicing the public debt is as follows:

Public Debt Charges	1968/9*	1967/8
Interest and annual amortization of bond discount, premiums and commissions	1,470,000,000	1,270,939,500
Servicing costs and costs of issuing new loans	4,006,900	2,966,900
	1,474,006,900	1,273,906,400

* Estimate

3. Interest on the unmatured public debt including treasury bills

	1968/9*		1967/8
	$M	%	$M	%
Payable in Canada	1,116	98.2	942	98.3
Payable in other countries	21	1.8	16	1.7
	1,137	100.0	958	100.0

* Estimate

Certain of the interest payable in Canada may in fact be payable to non-resident holders of government bonds denominated in Canadian dollars. This proportion is unknown. However, the Bank of Canada has estimated that at the end of June, 1968, of market issues of the government of Canada of $7,072 million held by the general public, $1,032 million were held by non-residents. This amount represented just over 4.5 per cent of the total of government of Canada direct and guaranteed securities outstanding at that time.

4. The national debt is the net cumulation of past deficits and surpluses of the federal government. Consequently, the extent to which the net debt grows or contracts will depend on the extent to which federal outlays exceed or fall short of receipts in the future and this will depend on the social and economic policies of the government as well as the economic conditions prevailing then.

4. Man-hours 1,464.

SALARY AND EXPENSE ALLOWANCE, C.N.R. CHAIRMAN

Question No. 903—Mr. Godin:

1. What was the salary of the Chairman of the CNR in 1937, 1947, 1957, 1967?

2. For the same years, what was the expense allowance of the office?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows:—1 and 2. Pursuant to section 8 (2) of the Canadian National Railways Act, being chapter 29 of the Statutes of Canada 1955, "...the chairman of the board of directors, if he is not the president, may, in addition, be paid by the national company a salary or other remuneration fixed by the governor in council." In each of the years listed the incumbent president was also chairman of the board of directors and therefore did not receive a salary nor was he paid any expense allowance solely as chairman.

The management of Canadian National Railways further advises that under the aforesaid act the direction and control of the affairs of the company are vested in its board of directors. The properly certified out of pocket expenses incurred by the president while engaged in and upon the affairs of the company are examined and passed upon each month by the board of directors and are subject to regular audit procedures. This is normal and accepted business practice and it is considered the travelling expenses of officers to be a matter concerning the internal affairs of the company.

CONSUMER COUNCIL—NON-REPRESENTATION OF N.B. AND P.E.I.

Question No. 904—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. What reason or reasons prompted the non-inclusion of consumers from the Provinces of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick in the personnel of the Canadian Consumer Council?

[Mr. Howard (Skeena).]

2. Were any citizen of these provinces asked to serve on the Council?

3. Is the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs aware of any protest over the increasing cost of living on the part of residents of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. The membership of the council is intended to be representative of the country as a whole—both economically and geographically. However, in a council of 24 members, it is impossible to have all economic and geographic sectors represented at one time. For that reason, the term of membership is restricted to either one or two years. This permits changes in the membership to allow in future years for the representation of economic or geographic interests not present on the original council.

2. No.

3. The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is aware of a general concern over the increasing cost of living on the part of all Canadians, inclusive of residents of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. An indication of that awareness is reflected in the decision to establish an independent body to study and report on problems of costs and prices as announced by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs during the budget debate.

ARREST OF ONE GINGRAS BY R.C.M.P., QUEBEC

Question No. 910—Mr. Godin:

1. Did the R.C.M.P., Quebec section, arrest a Mr. Gingras of the Quebec City area on July 15, 1968 and seize his automobile?

2. Was this arrest made following a telephone call and, if so, what is the name of the person who made this call?

3. What is the name of the officer who directed this operation?

4. If the said vehicle was seized, were there cans in it and did these cans contain alcohol?

5. If there was alcohol in the cans, what was its percentage-proof content, what was its value and where was it made?

6. Was the vehicle impounded by the R.C.M.P. and, if so, for how many days and at what location?

7. Was the vehicle returned to Mr. Gingras and, if so, on whose order and on what date did Mr. Gingras retake possession of such vehicle?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): 1. Mr. Gingras was not arrested on July 15, 1968, however, his vehicle was placed under detention under the Excise Act and was left in his custody.

2. The investigation was conducted as a result of a telephone call received from a person using a fictitious name.

3. Sergeant J. P. F. Plourde, R.C.M. Police, Quebec detachment.

4. A one gallon can containing alcohol was found in the vehicle.

5. Alcoholic content of the sample analysed was 82.7 per cent of proof spirit. The value and origin of the alcohol is not known.

6. The vehicle was not impounded.

7. The vehicle was released from detention on November 21, 1968 upon the directive dated November 1st, 1968 of the seizures division, Department of National Revenue.

ACCOMMODATION FOR STATE VISITORS

Question No. 913—Mr. Schreyer:

1. Has the Department of External Affairs leased on a long term basis or purchased a residential building for the purpose of accommodating state visitors?

2. If so, at what location and at what cost and from whom was the purchase made or the lease acquired?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of External Affairs and the Department of Public Works as follows: 1. No, but the Department of Public Works bought a house at 7 Rideau Gate which has been assigned to the Department of External Affairs for purposes of government hospitality.

2. The property was purchased for $152,000. from Thomas Travers Ahearn and the Royal Trust Company, executors of the estate of Norah Ahearn.

2. Is it necessary for the Province of Quebec to reimburse the federal government for such services?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General):
1. 527 bottles of assorted liquor.

2. No.

PREPARATIONS FOR AGRICULTURAL CONFERENCE

Question No. 947—Mr. Gauthier:

1. Has the Canadian Agricultural Planning Commission which will prepare a report for the March 1969 conference been formed and, if so, who are the representatives from the (a) Department of Agriculture (b) provinces (c) farming associations (d) farming industries (e) consumers?

2. Has an organization committee for the March 1969 conference been formed and, if so, who are the representatives from the (a) Department of Agriculture (b) provinces (c) farming associations (d) farming industries (e) consumers?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture):
1. The federal task force on agriculture was named on September 22, 1967. It is made up of five experts who were nominated because of their personal knowledge and experience and they do not represent any group. They are: Dr. D. L. MacFarlane, Montreal, Chairman; Prof. D. C. Campbell, Toronto; Mr. P. Comtois, Sherbrooke; Dr. C. Gilson, Winnipeg; Dr. D. H. Thain, London. (a) (b) (c) (d) (e) do not apply.

2. The steering committee for the Canadian Agricultural Congress of March 1969 has been nominated. The members are: Dr. R. Poirier, assistant deputy minister of Canada Department of Agriculture as chairman; Dr. D. L. MacFarlane as representative of the federal task force on agriculture; Dr. Ernest Mercier as representative of the provincial departments of agriculture; Mr. W. E. Burton as a farm producer; Mr. H. Question No. 664—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys):

1. Of the total number of applications approved by the federal government under the Area Development Agency, what is the breakdown by provinces both as to applications and as to the amount of the assistance provided?

2. Of the applications approved in Nova Scotia, what are the names of the firms or individuals who secured the assistance and what was the amount in each case?

3. How many applications received from Nova Scotian firms were rejected and how many applications are still pending and what are the names of the firms who have made application and have yet to have a decision rendered and in each instance how long has the firm been awaiting a decision on its application?

Return tabled.

NATIONAL PRODUCT STATISTICS

Question No. 861—Mr. Caouette:

For each of the last five years, what was the value of (a) consumer goods and services produced in Canada (b) all capital used (c) gross capital formation (d) imported goods and services (e) goods and services used (f) depreciation of capital (g) exported goods and services (h) the surpluses or deficits for each of the above headings?

Return tabled.

TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT CONTRACT WITH CARA OPERATIONS

Question No. 869—Mr. Robinson:

1. Does the Department of Transport have a contract(s) with CARA Operations Ltd, 55 Yonge St., Toronto, Ontario?

2. What are the terms of the contract(s) and how long has it (have they) been in effect?

3. When was the first contract entered into with the Department of Transport?

4. How many contracts have been entered into with CARA Operations Limited?

5. Has the Department of Transport received any complaints about the service provided since the contract(s) went into operation?

6. What has the Department of Transport done about these complaints?

7. Do any of the complaints relate to monopolies?

8. What steps does the Department take to ensure that complaints are properly dealt with?

9. Who audits the books of CARA and are copies of the auditors reports forwarded to the Department of Transport?

10. Has the Auditor General seen the audit reports?

[Mr. Olson.]

11. Has the Auditor General made any comments on them and, if he has, what are they?

12. Since the inception of the contract(s) has the Department of Transport had any difficulty in making an audit of the books of CARA Operations Limited in conformity with the standards generally accepted by the public accounting profession and/or the Auditor General of Canada?

13. What specifically were the problems involved?

14. Is the Department of Transport giving any consideration to changing the current provisions of the CARA contract(s) and opening the operations involved to tender by local businessmen across Canada?

Return tabled.

MILITARY PLANES USED FOR RELIEF FLIGHTS

Question No. 876—Mr. Burton:

1. How many military aircraft have been despatched from Canada since September 12, 1968 for use in transporting relief supplies to Nigeria or Biafra?

2. What is the make of each plane and when did each leave Canada?

3. What was the destination of each plane when it left Canada, what was the route travelled and when did each plane arrive at its destination?

4. What was the name and rank or status of each person aboard each plane enroute from Canada to destination?

5. Have any of the planes returned to Canada and, if so, on what date and from what location did each depart for Canada, what route was travelled and when did each arrive in Canada?

6. What was the name and rank or status of each person aboard each plane enroute the return trip to Canada?

7. What trips were made by each plane from the time of arrival at original destination to the present or to the time of departure for Canada?

8. What is the approximate tonnage of supplies delivered to Nigerian or Biafran authorities through use of the aircraft?

9. What has been the cost to Canada to date for (a) supplies delivered by aircraft (b) the use of the aircraft including costs since the aircraft left Canada (c) wages, salaries and expenses of personnel involved, and (d) other expenses?

Return tabled.

HOUSING AND FARM LOANS, BEAUCE CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 901—Mr. Rodrigue:

1. What was the total amount of loans approved by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in the federal constituency of Beauce during the past five years and how many homes were built with these loans?

2. What was the total amount of agricultural farm loans granted by the government for each of the years from 1962 to 1967 inclusive in the federal constituency of Beauce?

3. What was the average amount of these loans?

4. How many loans were refused during these years?

Return tabled.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I crave your indulgence as I rise again in respect of question No. 4 having to do with the pensions of retired civil servants. I realize I have asked this question a good many times before, but I am obligated to ask again when an answer might be forthcoming. On Wednesday of last week when I asked how many more times I must ask, the President of the Treasury Board said I would have to do it every day until the 15th. The 15th was yesterday. The answer is still not forthcoming. When will we have the answer?

INDIAN AFFAIRS

RESPONSIBILITY IN DEATH OF GIRL—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave), to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a matter of urgent public importance, namely the death of a young native Indian girl on highway No. 1 just west of Brandon, Manitoba, early this month and the guilt of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in respect of her death.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member knows that he must address the Chair on the question of urgency of debate, and I think it would be helpful at least to the house, if not to the Chair, for the hon. member to make his contribution at this stage in respect of the question of urgency, which is the only matter that can be before the house at this moment.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Yes, indeed, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that is the main question and that the other one ancillary to it is the propriety of setting aside the other public business in order to have such a debate.

If I may be permitted perhaps I might briefly outline the circumstances leading to the death of this girl, who was 21 or 22 years of age. Perhaps this would help put the matter in perspective. What I intend to say involves what I consider to be guilt on the part of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, even though there was action on the part of a particular superintendent of an Indian agency, who was only putting into effect what I consider to be the generally casual, administratively inefficient and, worst of all, indifferent attitude which exists on the part of the department. The superintendent's actions only reflect that casualness and indifference.

The young girl in question was from the Oak River Indian reserve near Griswold, Manitoba. She had been committed to the Pine Grove correctional centre in Saskatchewan for the offence of assault committed in the province of Saskatchewan. The sentencing magistrate, having some compassion, made a notation on the warrant of committal to the effect that the young girl was from outside the province and that some arrangement should be made in respect of her before her release date.

The superintendent of the Pine Grove correctional centre, after receiving the warrant of committal, contacted the John Howard Society in Prince Albert, which in turn wrote to the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development at Brandon, Manitoba, pointing out in the letter the date of her release, the desire and need she had for educational upgrading and trades training, with a specific request to the agency to assist her with transportation from Moosomin, Saskatchewan to her home about 50 or 60 miles from Brandon, Manitoba. I suppose because the province of Saskatchewan is unable constitutionally to provide money for such a trip outside the jurisdiction of that province, the superintendent of the Indian agency in Brandon replied suggesting that with regard to transportation the young girl should contact some of her relatives on the Oak River reserve, requesting that they meet her at Moosomin. The superintendent said in his letter that most of the Indians on the Oak River reserve had automobiles and no doubt would meet her there.

When the young girl was released from the Pine Grove correctional centre at Prince Albert she had approximately $2 in her possession and fully believed that she would have to hitchhike from Moosomin, Saskatchewan to her home close to Griswold, Manitoba. She had no other means of transportation.

Unknown to her the Indian superintendent on his own, without notifying this young girl or the John Howard Society at Prince Albert, had made arrangements for relatives to pick her up at Moosomin, without indicating the time of the arrival of the bus or anything of that nature. The young girl left Prince Albert by bus at about nine in the morning. The next that was heard about her was just after midnight, at 12.45 a.m. following the date of her release, when the R.C.M.P. at Brandon received a call from a farmer that a girl's body had been found on the highway about six miles west of Brandon. She had a blood alcohol content of 0.283, which indicates a state of intoxication.

One can only speculate as to what took place between the time she changed buses in Saskatoon and the time she was discovered lying dead on the highway just west of Saskatoon. The sad fact is that she is dead and this is difficult for her parents and relatives to accept, but the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development contributed to her death as the result of a number of things. First, by not making specific arrangements for her transportation home, even though they had been requested to do so.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is obviously discussing the substance of his grievance. I would think that as soon as possible he should come to the procedural aspect of the matter which, as I mentioned a moment ago, is the one point that should be considered by the house at this moment.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wanted very briefly to lay the groundwork of the circumstances in order to point out the urgency and the terribleness of the situation as a matter of urgency of debate, because of the very things which the department of Indian affairs in its indifference and casual approach to this matter did not do and should have done. This is symptomatic of a whole, general sort of lack of sincere interest of many groups in society, including the government. You will notice, Mr. Speaker, that I refrained from adding the cliché "just" in front of the word "society".

There are dozens and dozens of similar cases where such indifference exists toward the fundamental human rights that we expect for ourselves but fail to accord to the native Indian people of this nation. Because the case is symptomatic of something general and is reflective of many, many other instances, I suggest this is the only opportunity that will exist for some time in the future, if the announcements of government business mean anything to us, when we will have an opportunity to discuss this matter and go into a great deal more detail with respect to the involvement of the Indian affairs branch and the government in regard to this question.

If I could just sum up the matter of urgency, Mr. Speaker, I would say we are approaching that time of year when Christian generosity is uppermost in our minds, and no finer opportunity exists than for parliament to now take this question under advisement and discuss the humane values in our society and government attitude toward them.

Mr. Speaker: Having heard the hon. member, I am in full agreement that he may have a very legitimate grievance. But I have to advise the hon. member I am not convinced that he has satisfied the conditions required under the standing order, that is, that the business called for today should be set aside for the purpose of debating the subject matter raised by the hon. member.

The hon. member for Skeena has made the suggestion that the house should consider things which the department should have done and did not do. The hon. member says there is a grievance in this regard, and he may be quite right. But I would not think this is sufficient ground to adjourn the debates of the house for the purpose of considering the matter at this time. I can only hope, with the hon. member, that there will be an occasion at an early date when this matter might be raised again for consideration and debate by all hon. members.

NEWFOUNDLAND—UNEMPLOYMENT RESULTING FROM FISH PLANT CLOSING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries, but due to the minister's absence and the urgency of the question I shall direct it to the Prime Minister. In view of the announcement on Friday afternoon by Unilever that four Bird's Eye plants in Newfoundland will close their doors, what emergency measures is the government taking to prevent further shutdowns of fish plants in the Atlantic provinces?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Fisheries will be here tomorrow and I am sure he would be anxious to answer any questions.

Mr. Crouse: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I submit that the seriousness of this situation cannot be overlooked. Some 4,000 people will be unemployed. I would like some idea of what the Prime Minister proposes to do by way of emergency measures to ease this situation.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister does not have solutions to all Canadian problems in his hip pockets. He has ministers who work on these problems, and the Minister of Fisheries is now doing precisely that.

Mr. Bell: Ministers are always away in a crisis.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the question is urgent, that the announcement was made on Friday that four fish plants in Newfoundland would be closing down, and that a delegation from Nova Scotia and Newfoundland is coming to Ottawa tomorrow to meet with the government, is the Prime Minister prepared to tell the house whether he will meet with that delegation because of the seriousness of the whole situation, which is such that the groundfish industry in the Atlantic provinces is on the verge of total collapse? In view of the serious situation, will the Prime Minister meet with that delegation to discuss what action the government will take to alleviate this problem?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not know that the delegation asked to meet with me. I would suspect that they are going to meet the minister, who knows far more about this matter than I do.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If the delegation does ask to meet the Prime Minister, will he be willing to receive them?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question as asked is hypothetical.

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Since approximately 4,000 people will be affected by the announcement on Friday of the closing of four fish plants in Newfoundland, what program of assistance is the minister planning to meet this very serious situation?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration: Mr. Speaker, the regional director of the department has been made aware of this emergent and very serious problem, and all the facilities and services of the department will be available to assist in any way possible.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question to the minister of regional development. I would like to ask the minister or the acting minister what steps the department has taken to meet the serious economic and social consequences threatened by the closing down of several major groundfish processing plants in the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, I will refer this matter to the minister on his return tomorrow.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order directed to the fact that the Minister of Fisheries is not present in the house today. This announcement was made in Newfoundland on Friday afternoon. It is an urgent situation. I think the Prime Minister, by allowing the Minister of Fisheries to be absent, has shown a certain amount of contempt for the whole situation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Later:]

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the impending meeting between the minister and the Atlantic trades tomorrow, can the parliamentary secretary say whether invitations have been extended to the Atlantic members? If not, would consideration be given to that request?

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I cannot say whether invitations have been extended but I will inquire of the minister and let the hon. member know.

GRAIN

RESPONSIBILITY OF FARMERS FOR SALES—STEPS TO IMPROVE DRYING FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the Prime Minister's reported statement in Winnipeg to the effect that the sale of wheat is the farmers' concern first and foremost, does this indicate that the wheat board is to be left on its own without substantial backing from government departments in terms of credit and sales promotion?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that the question as asked is not proper and that he may wish to rephrase it in some way.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, was the Prime Minister, in this statement as reported, announcing government policy toward the present situation that exists in western Canada?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if you relate this question to the previous one, which was not allowed, the answer is certainly not.

Mr. Gleave: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Prime Minister have the appropriate departments address their attention to the situation which is currently reported to exist on the west coast, namely that ships are waiting at this moment for dry grain to load for Japan?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Now that the Prime Minister has breathed the western air and is able to understand the strength of the feeling toward government inaction regarding the wheat situation, would he advise what is going to be done to meet the situation in western Canada, where at present rates of drying only 106 million bushels or about one third of the wet and damp wheat will be dried by May 1? What is the government going to do? What action does it have in mind? We tried to get this information from the Minister of Agriculture without success, but now the Prime Minister has been out there can he tell us what hope there is that 200 million bushels will not be lost through failure to take action now?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this question has been asked many times in the past couple of weeks, and each time it has been answered by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Minister of Agriculture, or the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatchewan. The only new thing in the matter is that I have been to Manitoba where I was given a very warm reception.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, surely the Prime Minister does not intend to deal with a matter like this in such a jesting and frivolous way. What is he going to do; that is the question.

[Mr. Gleave.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Ministers really should be here to answer questions. This is frightful.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether, in view of the impression he left that it was up to the farmers to sell the grain, it is now his policy to abolish a government agency, namely the wheat board, whose function it is to sell grain.

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker. I made it quite clear that the government should assist in helping the wheat board in every way it can. I was just indicating that the farmers had a little bit to do with it. The alternative would be, of course, absolute communism where the state would own all the farms and the farmers would be paid salaries by the state.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Trudeau: This is in substance some of the things I had to say, which were applauded in Winnipeg.

Mr. Woolliams: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the Prime Minister's reference to communism are we to take it that he still believes, as he stated during the election, that those farms that are not efficient should be taken over by the state, as is done in the communist countries?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like the Prime Minister, in view of the statement he made in Winnipeg last Friday that first and foremost it was the responsibility of the farmers to market wheat, to indicate whether he will make a statement to the house indicating in what way the farmers are in a position to penetrate international wheat markets by private means.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I was indicating that my understanding is that in the past wheat farmers, through co-operatives, joint ventures and the wheat board itself, have taken the position that they were essentially private individuals operating in co-operation with each other on the wheat market, and that they did not want the state to take over their farms and run them.

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. How does he relate that to the promise he made to the western farmers during the election campaign that the government would sell one billion three hundred million bushels of wheat over the next three years?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question is a point of debate.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I have a supplementary question along the same line. I wonder whether the Prime Minister is withdrawing the promise he made that the government would sell one billion three hundred million bushels of wheat?

[Later:]

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the possibility that the house may recess for a period within the next few days and, more particularly, since the right hon. gentleman has now renounced any personal responsibility for the sale of grain, will he now suspend the roster system in order that the other ministers may be present in the house for the duration of this session to answer vital questions? May I have an answer, Mr. Speaker?

NATIONAL DEFENCE

STUDY OF POSSIBLE REDUCTION IN ARMED FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question is for the Minister of National Defence. Have studies been made or are studies being made in the Department of National Defence to reduce the Canadian armed forces to one third their present strength, and to reduce the role of the forces to the single one of peace keeping?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): I qualified this assumption last week as being wildly speculative.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I have a supplementary question. Has consideration at the same time been given in whole or in part to the reduction of long term contracts for the D.D.H. destroyers, the CF-5 and other equipment to upgrade and modernize Canada's armed forces?

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I have a further supplementary question. Is it not true that all the minister indicated was that this problem had not been put before the cabinet or before a cabinet committee, and was this not the only part that was speculative?

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): Again no, Mr. Speaker.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR EXEMPTION FROM AUSTERITY PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question arises from the tragic incident referred to by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). I wanted to address it to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development or to the Minister without Portfolio, but in their absence I will address it to the right hon. Prime Minister. Inasmuch as the financial inability of the local Indian agency to help in this incident arose from the government's austerity program and the lack of funds for expenditures of this kind, would the Prime Minister assure the house that the austerity program as it applies to the special needs of our Indian citizens might be lifted, as it has been recently on health matters according to the statement made outside the house by the Minister of National Health and Welfare?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of our austerity program is to enable us better to address ourselves to the problems of all the underprivileged in Canada; and of course generally speaking the Indians are amongst those underprivileged. That is why we have a program of austerity.

Mr. Dinsdale: I have a supplementary question. I do not think the right hon. Prime Minister quite answered my question. Will the austerity program, as it has been applied to our Indian citizens, be lifted to meet the obvious special problems of this highly underprivileged group of Canadians?

Mr. Trudeau: I think it is a gross oversimplification of the so-called Indian problem to assume that it can be solved just by pouring more money into that area. We take a much more profound view of that problem.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I have a supplementary question Mr. Speaker, which stems from the original attempt by the hon. member for Skeena to secure an adjournment of the house, and from the recital he made of the facts which are, to say the least, very heartrending and show a sordidness of attitude that ought not to exist. Under the circumstances would the Prime Minister be ready to have a full investigation made of this matter, not a perfunctory one or one carried out by department officials but rather one done outside the department? And if what is stated is correct, would some compensation be made to the family of this girl to show that we do in fact regard our Indian people as worthy of first consideration in the house?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I do intend to ascertain the facts in this case, and I will ask the minister to report to me. The proper way to go about it is first to ascertain the facts from the minister through his department. If I am not satisfied or if the house is not satisfied with the answers, we can then consider the next step.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INQUIRY AS TO STEPS TO MEET UNEMPLOYMENT SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration arising out of questions that were asked of the right hon. Prime Minister on Friday when the minister was not in the house. In view of the increasing unemployment across Canada, and particularly in the disadvantaged areas of Canada, would the minister inform the house what plans he and his department have to deal with the increasing unemployment this winter in those areas in particular?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me the hon. member is asking now that the minister or the Prime Minister make a statement which is very general. It is perhaps a type of statement which should normally be made on motions.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask a more specific question, then. Will the minister consider or is he considering changes in the law and in the regulations regarding training so as to enable the younger people coming into the work force who are not absorbed in the labour market to benefit from training allowances which are now available to those who have been in the labour force for three years since they left school?

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the matter to which the hon. member refers is complicated and has been the subject of discussions with the provinces. We believe this rule to be in the best interests of the group we are principally trying to help, namely unemployed workers and adults in the labour force who in the past have had relatively little opportunity to improve their education and their chances of employment. It is principally for that reason that we are maintaining the three year rule, and also because of the provincial responsibility for education. However, may I say in answer to the direct question that it is not proposed at the present time to amend the regulations or the law in this respect.

Mr. Lewis: A further supplementary question. Would the minister consider making a statement to this house in the near future—some time in the next day or two—with regard to any program that he and his department have worked out or are in the process of working out to deal with increasing unemployment this winter?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to consider the prospect of a statement, but I would not want my hon. friend to conclude that there will be one.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REPORTED STATEMENT BY JUSTICE MINISTER ON BILINGUALISM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Was the Minister of Justice voicing government policy when he said at a luncheon meeting in Ottawa on Friday that expecting aspirants for managerial and executive positions in the civil service to be bilingual by 1970 was totally unrealistic and that 1975, not 1970, was a more realistic deadline?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Justice was forecasting the course of events as it appears likely to him. This cannot be made the object of a policy, I would say, but the Minister of Justice was making a valuable contribution to our estimate of the future.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Prime Minister talk to his colleagues and come out with a definite policy? This is a matter of great concern to civil servants in Ottawa and across the country, and it is important that they know what this date is going to be.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I take it that the Minister of Justice was basing his estimate on the rapidity with which people are learning the other official language, whether it be French or English. He may assume that 1975 is a more realistic assessment of the ability of some people to learn the other language. Other people may think the period will be shorter. I would not care to speculate. Whether the forecast errs on the optimistic or the pessimistic side does not change the policy. The policy was stated in the minister's speech, and of course as he stated it, it is still government policy.

IMMIGRATION

STATUS OF POLISH SEAMEN DETAINED AT HALIFAX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. First of all may I ask him whether he would consider restoring to the nine Polish seamen presently in custody in Halifax freedom of movement so they might practice their religion, have normal exercise and, if possible, attend the English classes which are being given the five Czechoslovakians who are presently in custody in Halifax?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to consider the first part of the question.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, may I put a related question. I wonder whether the minister, further to his comments on Friday of last week regarding the status of these men at the present time and the possibility of there being a retrial, has seen the sworn statutory declarations by these Polish nationals to the effect that their deportation would in fact mean their being committed to imprisonment and perhaps forced to serve in the Polish army in Czechoslovakia.

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the statutory declarations, because I would conclude that they are a matter for the immigration appeal board, which under the law carries the responsibility at this moment of deciding the outcome of the deportation order.

Mr. Forrestall: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the minister would acknowledge that he indeed is the respondent in this matter and whether, in light of that, he does not in fact have access to these declarations. If he has not, I have them here on my desk and I would be delighted to send them over to him and have him review them so that justice might be done for these nine men.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member misunderstands the situation. Any hon. member may have the documents in his possession if he wishes, but under the law the decision in this case is for the immigration appeal board. I would be quite happy to examine the documents if such examination could lead to any possible result; but as it is, under the law the minister has no power whatsoever to exercise discretion in this matter.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

PROPOSED DELAY IN INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. May I ask the right hon. gentleman whether he would agree to hold up the federal languages bill until a similar bill is introduced in the legislature of the province of Quebec?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is customary to consider that federal jurisdiction can be exercised only when provinces take certain other steps.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): A supplementary question. I thank the Prime Minister for his answer, and may I ask him which provinces have asked for postponement of the federal languages bill?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, this came in the correspondence that I was exchanging with the provincial premiers in regard to the federal-provincial constitutional conference. Since this correspondence is not public I should not like to identify who asked that particular question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

MONTREAL—PARTICIPATION IN INVESTIGATION OF BOMBINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. Would the Solicitor General advise the house whether the R.C.M.P. is taking part in the investigations relating to the recent series of bombings in Montreal; and would he also advise the house whether they are taking any preventive measures against more of these bombings, which are causing a very serious threat in Montreal?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for his courtesy in giving me notice of the question. The answer to both questions is yes.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF CHRISTMAS ADJOURNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister a question that is in the minds of members generally, since this house has now sat for the 65th day. What date has he in mind for the adjournment for the Christmas recess? I ask this so that members can make their arrangements. Those of us who come from a long distance are naturally most anxious to have this information.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I would be able to answer this with a little more precision after I have an opportunity of consulting with the house leaders opposite in order to program the business for the balance of this week and get through the remaining three measures for this part of the session.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A supplementary question. What does the minister mean when he refers to three measures going through? Is the debate now before the house supposed to be concluded before we will be permitted to have an adjournment? Is that what it means? Surely there is not such intimidation.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, it would certainly be desirable, having had a full discussion of this matter, to bring the two motions on procedure to a decision as well, of course, as the anti-dumping bill. However, I would be prepared to discuss this matter with the house leaders opposite to see what progress is possible on a voluntary basis.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR POLICY STATEMENT ON CRIMINAL RECORDS AND PARDONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. In view of the fact that the Solicitor General was deprived of an opportunity to make a government statement before the standing committee on justice and legal affairs on the expunction of criminal records and greater use of the pardon, would the Solicitor General make such a statement on motions at the earliest date?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have considered the matter. I too was troubled at having lost the opportunity to make the statement, and I proposed to circulate it to the members of the justice committee. If that is not satisfactory I will consider his suggestion.

Mr. Gilbert: When?

Mr. McIlraith: Tomorrow, perhaps.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR POLICY STATEMENT ON DRYING PROBLEM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In light of the emergency one day debate held in this house one week ago last Thursday on the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, and more specifically on the problem of drying the huge volume of damp and tough grain, would the Prime Minister have the Minister of Agriculture give the house a full statement on motions before the Christmas recess as to government policy to meet this very serious situation?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will ask the minister to consider that very seriously.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PROGRAM RESPECTING POLLUTION PROBLEM AT DUNNVILLE, ONT.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. His parliamentary secretary promised a statement on the first day of the week about the Dunnville incident and the lack of response by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Would the minister care to comment?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): From what I read in the official report of the House of Commons, Mr. Speaker, I find that the hon. member for Fundy-Royal is exaggerating a little when he says that the parliamentary secretary promised a statement about that matter. The only commitment he made was to bring it to my attention when I returned. That is a problem about which the C.B.C. is willing to answer any specific questions that might be asked; but, for the time being, the corporation does not wish to issue a detailed statement in which it would refer point by point to all the charges made against it or to all the questions put to it. It would prefer to make that statement before the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts when it resumes its hearings. However, if specific questions are asked, I will submit them myself to the corporation and I will be in a position to supply the hon. member with the replies that will be given me.

[English]

Mr. Fairweather: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I do not think the house wanted a grand declaration from anybody. The house would like to know whether the corporation will give a simple and courteous answer to the chairman of the investigatory body which asked the corporation to respond. Could this be investigated?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, in this connection I asked the corporation what reply had been given to the committee of inquiry. Just a few minutes before the opening of the sitting today I received from the corporation copy of its letter dated April 10, 1968 to Mr. Hall. As I have not had the opportunity of getting in touch with the president of the corporation to find out whether or not this letter may be tabled in the house, all I can say to the member is that I have it in my possession.

[English]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since it may be some considerable time before the estimates are brought down and investigated by the standing committee, would the minister consider discussing with his colleague the government house leader the possibility of having specific terms of reference drawn up with regard to this issue and the matter referred by that means to the standing committee?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: I shall be pleased to discuss the matter with the house leader, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In any consultations with the C.B.C. has the Secretary of State been assured by the corporation that this agency intends to put on a supplementary program in order to dispel some of the inaccuracies of the original program?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: No, I did not discuss the matter with the authorities of the C.B.C., Mr. Speaker. Therefore, I did not receive any such assurance from the corporation.

[English]

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to address to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Would he care to make a statement about federal responsibility in the Dunnville pollution problem? Would he also care to set forth federal standards with regard to pollution control that are necessary at this time?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—SUGGESTED APPEAL FOR CHRISTMAS TRUCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Will the right hon. gentleman or the government consider joining with others in an appeal for a Christmas truce in the Nigeria-Biafra hostilities, which might lead to a cease fire and possible negotiations?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, our position on intervention in Nigeria, and particularly in a cease fire, has been stated earlier and it has not changed. Since the hon. member links the question of a Christmas truce to a cease fire, the answer is no.

Inquiries of the Ministry

GREECE—U.S. PARTICIPATION IN MILITARY COUP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Mr. Papandreou, a former senior member of the Greek democratic government which existed until recently, made a statement over the week end elsewhere, and in Ottawa today, to the effect that the United States was instrumental in the military coup which took place in Greece and in maintaining the present régime. Does the Prime Minister feel these statements should in any way influence the government in reaching a decision on the question of Canada's membership in NATO?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's question is too wide in scope to be asked at this time.

BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

POLICE INVESTIGATION INTO LEAKS OF COMMISSION REPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Solicitor General. It arises from questions asked of the Prime Minister on Friday last concerning the interrogation of Miss Gagnon of La Presse and the use of search warrants in the case of her relatives and friends. Will the Solicitor General say whether, in the matter of obtaining the search warrants, any indication was given by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police that criminal charges were imminent? Was there any connection between Miss Gagnon's relatives and friends and the alleged offence? In this connection will the Solicitor General obtain a copy of the supporting statements made by the R.C.M.P. on behalf of the government of Canada in obtaining these search warrants?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I do not have the evidence used to obtain the search warrants with me, but the search warrants were obtained in the usual way from a judge in connection with the charge or prospective charges to be laid under the Criminal Code. I have the name of the judge and I can perhaps find out what information is available from court records and bring it before the house, if the hon. member wishes.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Alexander: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the categorical statement by the Prime Minister that La Presse has published documents which appear to be obviously stolen from the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism, may I ask whether it is the crown's position that in publishing the material referred to La Presse has committed an offence? Is the investigation proceeding, therefore, with a view to establishing a precedent in which a newspaper is to be charged with receiving stolen goods?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me the hon. member is now arguing the case rather than asking a question.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, may I then ask a related question with respect to this matter. Will the minister advise whether under his responsibility for the R.C.M.P. he is in direct touch with this investigation in all its stages and whether the police are reporting to him or to his colleague, the Secretary of State, in respect of the documents said to have been stolen from the royal commission?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I should correct the inference left by the hon. member in the question which was disallowed. The Prime Minister did not indicate in his remarks that this document was stolen by La Presse. He was very clear about it. I read the remarks rather carefully, anticipating the question, and there is no such inference to be drawn from those remarks. It must be obvious to all hon. members opposite that documents of the royal commission were obtained somehow and published before being transmitted to the government, their owner.

The answer to the second question, to whom does the R.C.M.P. answer in pursuing this investigation, is the Solicitor General. He is responsible to this house for them and they answer to him. No other minister is directing the inquiry.

Mr. Alexander: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I am extremely sorry that the minister had the impression as a result of my remarks that I believed the Prime Minister had indicated that La Presse was responsible for the theft. I am asking whether an investigation has been going on whereby a member of La Presse—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member kindly ask his supplementary question.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister indicate the nature of the charge or the prospective charge in respect of which the search warrant was issued?

Mr. McIlraith: I hesitate to do that off the cuff, Mr. Speaker, but it would be section 103 of the Criminal Code, I think.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION INTO PRICE OF TOYS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs I wish to direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the outrageous prices being charged for Christmas toys this season, would the Prime Minister consider requesting the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to conduct an immediate investigation into this serious problem?

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether the hon. member would not like to return at ten o'clock this evening to discuss this very timely question.

Mr. Burton: Since millions of dollars are spent in this area and there are only a few shopping days left before Christmas, and since the influence of advertising helps create additional pressures on our society, does the minister not think this problem should be given immediate and serious consideration?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

SPORTS

HOCKEY—GAMES BETWEEN RUSSIAN AND CANADIAN PROFESSIONAL TEAMS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that all Canadians take great pride in Canada's participation in international hockey; since it would appear that we are outclassed at present by the purely professional team operated by the Russians, and since that team has now challenged the Maple Leafs and the Canadiens, would the right hon. gentleman speak to Senator Molson and Stafford Smythe and use his influence to see whether the Russian team cannot be accommodated if it comes to Canada to play our top teams?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know the Minister of National Health and Welfare has this matter under inquiry and is giving his attention to the fact that the Canadian team was defeated. As to the concrete and obviously constructive proposal by the hon. gentleman, I will think it over, but I must tell him I am not much more knowledgeable about hockey than I am about football.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: I am sure the Prime Minister will agree that he has a gift for persuading people, and I think he could persuade those two gentlemen to make their teams available for one night if the Russians can come to Canada.

An hon. Member: We will get parliament to make up the rules.

Mr. Hees: Oh, no.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, since it is being acknowledged that our hockey team did not do so well against the Russians, would the Prime Minister not like to take notice of the tremendous acclaim being accorded in the Soviet union to the Royal Winnipeg Ballet?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Now that the minister has announced outside the house a grant to the national hockey team, and in view of growing concern over the effectiveness of Canada's participation in international competition, would the minister make a statement in the house concerning this vitally important matter?

Hon. John. C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will take that suggestion under consideration.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): I have a question for the Minister of Justice, Mr. Speaker. In view of the lack of sympathy and understanding of the Indian problem as illustrated by the case mentioned by my hon. friend from Skeena—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member resume his seat? I have to remind him that as far as possible questions should not contain statements or allegations. The hon. member should ask his question directly rather than include allegations which make it argumentative.

Mr. Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Would the Minister of Justice consider moving the northern desk of his department to the Northwest Territories, so that his officials might be nearer those with special problems, such as Indians and Eskimos?

Mr. Speaker: I would think that question should be placed on the order paper.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF DISCRIMINATORY LEGISLATION IN KENYA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of discriminatory anti-Asiatic legislation already passed in Kenya and further legislation which has been announced there against Asiatic ownership of business, will the Prime Minister consider raising the matter at the forthcoming prime ministers' conference in order that the Commonwealth may not appear to be supporting reverse apartheid?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I missed the final words of that question but I think I got the gist of it. The agenda for the prime ministers' conference has been set up and I have no information that it includes this particular item.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Will there not be occasions upon which he can speak with his confrères and colleagues and can bring up this matter, one which I believe to be most important?

Mr. Trudeau: Oh, yes, I am sure there will be all kinds of occasions in London when we can meet less formally than around the conference table. I will get a transcript of the question and see whether I should put it to some of the people there.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

HALIFAX—NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING MEDICAL CARE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can he advise the house whether negotiations between his department and the county of Halifax with regard to medical care for Indians have progressed to the point where it will not be necessary for the county to take precipitate action affecting these patients by the end of the current year, two weeks from today?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we are working on this problem with the Halifax people and hope to have a solution by the end of the month. I so advised the hon. member by mail today.

SUPERANNUATED FEDERAL EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR INCREASED PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the right hon. gentleman's desire to extend Christmas happiness to as many people as possible, would he not like to make it clear before Christmas that some time early in 1969 something will be done about the pensions of superannuated civil servants? I think the Prime Minister would like to answer and I would like to hear his answer, Mr. Speaker.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was not all that anxious. The idea in my mind was to tell the hon. member that this question has been answered many times in the house, and that the Minister of Finance has answered for the government on this particular matter.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Are the recommendations which were made by the special joint committee in the last parliament still being considered by the government?

Mr. Trudeau: There has been no change in government policy on this matter, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Ten o'clock.

• (3:50 p.m.)

PROCEDURE

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN FOURTH REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

The house resumed, from Friday, December 13, consideration of the motion of Mr. Blair that the fourth report of the special committee on procedure of the house, presented to the house on Friday December 6, be concurred in, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield (p. 3762).

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy Royal): Mr. Speaker, I wonder what more the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) wants. For years the cry has gone out through the land that without majority government action is impossible. Now the Prime Minister has his majority. I do not propose to question some of the methods used by his party to get it, but the point is that the minority status argument can no longer be trotted out as a convenient excuse for failure to respond to some of the pressing social issues of the day.

What more, I ask, does the Prime Minister want? Mr. Speaker, times change. How revealing it would have been if the proposal contained in 16-A for closure in advance had been made at the time when the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) were crusading essayists and editorial writers. To use the phrase of Dr. Eugene Forsey, these two gentlemen would have "torn the purple from the clouds" if such a proposal had been made in those good, halcyon days when human rights and liberties were catechism to them instead of the catchwords this plan makes them now.

We have had ample warning, though, if we had but heeded it. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) gave us a little evidence the other day. He gave us a sample of what the days ahead would be like when he talked about the throughput of the St. Lawrence Seaway. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) will become the new minister of throughput. He will be the chief programmer for the government. Under this proposal the royal prerogative will settle on a new prince, the Prime Minister. Ancient despots, if they watch us from their present stations, should envy the power of this man. One-time admirers should question his abdication of the principles which motivated his earlier and crusading days.

We seek efficiency, not impotence. We need to generate vital change. We need to speak and legislate when the speaking is done. Radical urgencies of the young, the poor, the Indians, about whom we heard just a few minutes ago, crowd upon us. But technology is not enough, as we have been compellingly reminded in a new book called "The Revolution Of Hope: Toward A Humanized Technology" by Erich Fromm. A reviewer reminds us that "For him that is joined to all the living there is hope." For any of you who do not recognize it, that is an epigram from Ecclesiastes.

The alternatives that face man in these apocalyptic times lead either to a mechanized society in which man is caught like a helpless cog, or to a renaissance of humanism and hope, a society that puts technique not first but second, as a servant of human well-being. The absence of this philosophy in the government's proposal is what disturbs me most and troubles me deeply because of its illiberalism. It makes me wonder not about the mystery, because they are bound by this strange out of date doctrine of be-all and end-all solidarity, but why the Liberal backbenchers are saying they are ready to support these illiberal proposals.

Perhaps the most ominous development, as Dr. Fromm puts it, is that we seem to have lost control over our system and are being carried at an accelerating pace toward destruction. How did it happen? How at the very conquest of nature did man become the captive of his own creation? Fromm's answer is the same one that Emerson gave over a century ago: "Things are in the saddle, and ride mankind." Fromm puts it this way:

> In the one-sided emphasis on technique and material consumption, man lost touch with himself, with life.

In a review of this book Ashley Montagu says:

> People are constantly asking what they can do—

And all hon. members have responded to this frustrated cry. We heard it eloquently put just the other day in the frustration of the hon. member—I apologize to him—from Toronto, who asked about the response of the government to the problem faced by certain Polish seamen. We heard it a few minutes ago when this parliament, the agencies of parliament and the great departments of government are so unresponsive that they cannot deal with a girl leaving jail and needing transport to her home.

These frustrations and the lack of responses are the reason that all over the western world parliaments and the institutions that go with parliament are under question. And I think this is healthy. The debate is healthy if we see some resiliency in the government and particularly some flexibility.

> People are constantly asking what they can do, meaning that they can in fact do nothing. That psychosis is much worse than the apathy, the passivity, on which Fromm comments so ably, for it represents not a negative uninvolvement but a positive disengagement from the human situation.

Motion for Concurrence in Report

This institution has been disengaged from the human situation for so long and instead has been dealing with its little petty problems. I will not go into them because the memory of them makes me want to be sick. But it is this disengagement that is the problem, not whether the government house leader is going to follow this new magical formula that he has proposed when he meets with himself in his office to program the business. Parliament and its members must be agents or catalysts to end this deadening passivity.

I am going to share with the house a verse by a contemporary New Brunswick poet, Alden Nowlan. In a book called "Bread, Wine and Salt" he has a poem entitled "The Nation's Capital." It is so apt it makes me shudder.

> The first thing you learn here > is that the country > bears the same relationship > to the government > that outer space
> bears to the earth

He goes on to depict a member of parliament having a maritini in the Chateau Laurier:

> He must measure his sips > and time them perfectly > or there will be couriers > from the Hill:
> "The government may fall."
> Ah, Mackenzie King,
> I think I understand you:
> how easy to commune with the dead > in a city wholly divorced from reality.

How easy for that former prime minister to commune from a parliament so out of touch with reality! If we need any other witnesses we have them. Jacques Maritain, the great and modern Catholic philosopher, whote a book called "Man And The State." In it he tried to re-establish the principles of democracy in a modern context. He bespeaks a redefining of the very essence of the democratic idea. He writes:

> Democracy can be awkward, clumsy, defective, open to the risk of betraying itself by yielding to instincts of cowardice, or of oppressive violence—

But he goes on:

> Yet the strength itself of a democratic body politic supposes justice, because it uses human energies as energies of free men, not of slaves. Nay more: a supreme effort of all the energies of freedom, in their own spiritual realm, is needed to compensate for the momentary increase in physical strength that is given Machiavellian powers by their determination to use any means whatsoever.

[Mr. Fairweather.]

I doubt that he had met the President of the Privy Council when he wrote those words. And such a supreme effort cannot arise if the body politic ignores moral values and standards. In reality strength is supremely strong only if not strength but justice is the supreme standard.

> To try to reduce democracy to technology would be to try to deprive it of its very blood.

The proposed rule change in 16-A is illiberal. It is disheartening to see it stamped with the imprimatur of those who profess to be Liberals. It is unnecessary because the twenty-eighth parliament, if I am any judge of its mood, is one of co-operation and reasonableness.

In the speeches until now several large red herrings have been drawn across this motion. One red herring was that the various bills to assist farmers occupied too much of the time of the house. However, if anyone wanted to take the trouble to analyse the problem he would see that the three bills were expected to carry too much of the load in responding to the frustration of western Canada farmers because of a wet summer and a damp wheat crop. Those who do not believe me should reread the reports of those debates. The three farm bills were not particularly in question, although the high cost of money obviously was a matter of concern. It was more the fact that these bills gave some hon. members an opportunity to be representative. Once in a while we are representative, and those debates were representative in all their manifestations just as the debate was representative on the day that hon. members from Newfoundland in their representative capacity took a few hours of the time of the house to discuss a matter which to them was of very serious importance. Parliament must wait for this. The computer does not wait for it. Nor does the programmer in the Confederation building. If the computer is putting out at its full capacity it does not wait for the Newfoundland Bullet nor for wet wheat, but we make parliament wait for these things because we are here partly as representatives.

Another aspect, of course, is one that I think we must agree the Prime Minister carries out with very great effect. I refer to the educative role. The unhappy part about it is that he does most of his educating elsewhere. But we also have an educative role. That is the reason it is important that the President of the Privy Council does not spend all his time pressing buttons in respect of his programming because education sometimes takes a little time.

The proposal of the procedure committee to abolish the committee of supply I suggest will, for various reasons, cause trouble. The principle reason, of course, is that the standing committees themselves are in no way equipped to deal with the business that will come before them. Let us not fool ourselves about this. This has been seen very clearly in respect of the British experience. The British did this a couple of years ago.

We had a Couchiching conference on the reform of parliament. Mr. Richard Crossman attended that conference. If you hear people who are in the opposition speak about this, and I suppose I obviously fall into that category, it is wonderful what they say they will do when they are in office. Mr. Crossman was a prime example. He said that the rules and proceedings of the British house would undergo such a fundamental change when he took office that one would not know the place. Well they abolished committee of supply and they are now in deep trouble in Great Britain. Mr. Stephen Fay, as reported in the Montreal Star of Saturday December 14, 1968, says:

> The most radical of the changes introduced by Crossman (and one uses radical in a relative sense relating only to what happened before in parliament, not to general social change) was to take the major part of the debate on the finance bill off the floor of the House, and have the time-consuming committee stage heard by a committee of 50 members, instead of a committee of the whole of the House of Commons. The finance bill's committee stage took five weeks of the House of Commons' time when its time was growing scarcer.
> The object of the reform was to allow the house to debate more topics, and this year it did. But so great was the pressure on parliament created by new legislation, improvements were marginal. Now the Conservative party is demanding that the committee stage of the finance bill be returned to the floor of the House of Commons. The fact is that the proceedings of the small finance bill committee went virtually unreported.

Here is another responsibility. Not only will there be a crowding in on members of parliament but there will also be a crowding in on the press gallery. Unless adequate steps are taken to have full and careful reporting of the standing committees the proper type of public response to these committees will not be forthcoming.

> Iain MacLeod, the shadow chancellor of the exchequer, received too little publicity for his swinging attacks on government policy. The government is, of course, delighted by the experiment; the opposition, for obvious reasons, is less enamoured.
> The arguments are delicately balanced. The critics claim that backbenchers have no opportunity to put small amendments forward which can alter minutely, but improve, the massive bulk of the finance bill. Supporters of the change argue that private members will have more opportunity to debate more general motions.
> In the end the argument is most likely to be resolved on one simple basis: the policy which most suits the government—

In spite of the little intervention by the President of the Privy Council concerning the point of privilege today of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, those of us who sat on the special committee on procedure had discussion on the issue.

> Backbenchers clearly never will believe that, when government and opposition whips meet every Wednesday evening to decide on the business of the House of Commons for the following week, arrangements are made to suit the whole house, rather than the two leaderships. Indeed, some of the stormiest episodes in the house come each Thursday when the leader of the house announces business for the coming week.
> Certainly, time has been won from the government. But not enough to appease the critics who say that the government regards the House of Commons as a rubberstamp.

Mr. Stephen Fay could have been writing from the press gallery of the House of Commons of Canada. I need not go any farther. Perhaps he would like to visit here during this debate.

> It has been won, however, at the expense of some obscure, but residual powers.
> "I don't know of any sort of great differences; there's no dramatic change anyway," says one of the rebels sadly. But the rebels' cause could not conclude in the worst of all solutions: a limited pyrrhic victory.

Bernard Crick, who was at the Couchiching conference a number of years ago and who wrote a book on the reform of parliament which has gone into a new 1968 edition, also has written a more popular type of book called "In Defence Of Politics". This book should be a parliamentary bible. Among other things he said:

> To remove or destroy politics is to destroy the very thing which gives order to the pluralism and variety of civilized society, the thing which enables us to enjoy variety without suffering either anarchy or the tyranny of single truths.

There is a famous dictum of Lord Salisbury that if the public knew how their affairs were being managed they would not sleep in their beds at night I think that Lord Salisbury was being a little bit tough and rather harsh. The fact is that all but 16A and the supply portion of the new committee's report will mean useful changes in our system.

May I enter a caveat to some of the speeches that have been made by government supporters? I find it depressing that they seem to think the majority the government received last June is an endorsation of rule changes. The rules are not the property of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), his government or his supporters in this house. The rules are the property of the whole House of Commons. I think this has been overlooked by some members who have taken part in this debate up to now. We are not changing the rules of the Government, we are changing the rules of the House of Commons. That is why I ask for some measure of understanding from the government benches for the problem faced by that other part of the whole process whose members sit to the left of the Speaker.

The problem that faces parliament is a problem of communication. The day of trial by combat is over. In this area as in so many other aspects of our life, the battle is for men's minds. I have not been here very long, since 1962 but to get here and stay here I have had to face the public on four different occasions plus three times in provincial elections. It is my impression, if I have one that is immutable—I don't know whether an impression should ever be immutable but the President of the Privy Council (Mr Macdonald) wants to make rules that are immutable from concepts that apparently are immutable—that for a great part of my time here the problem has been that we have not been responsive enough to what has been going on in this great Canada and outside in the rest of the world. Let me quote:

> The essential question is how far an active government wielding great and varied power, intervening in the detailed conduct of private business affairs, discriminating between one citizen and another on the basis of subtle and complex judgments of the communities' needs 10 and 20 years ahead, driving bargains with particular interest groups as administrative convenience dictates, can be subjected to effective democratic control.

That mouthful, Mr. Speaker, is contained in a book called "Modern Capitalism", written by Andrew Schonfield who was once the editor of the Economist. This is, of course, the core of the whole problem of effective democratic control. It is not the property only of the government of Canada but an obligation that is placed on all members of this House of Commons. Everybody has been jumping up and down during this debate telling the world they are on the side of reform. I was going to do that, but if anybody wants any credentials they can look up the committee report of December, 1964. That committee in its way was a fairly daring group. One rather dangerous proposal was that we be allowed to take our secretaries to our constituencies when parliament was not in session. I may say that this proposal was readily and easily made by Dr. Pauline Jewett. It took the men of the committee to remind her that it was all right for her to go home with her secretary but it might be met with some question if we did so. That was not the only proposal. In fact, a good many of the rules that are still temporary and still being debated here were proposed in the December, 1964 report.

I want to pay a bit of a compliment, if that is permissible, to the membership of the present committee. One of the things I like about it was that there were some members who had never been here before. I think that is a great thing because it puts me in mind of the Swiss. Every year all the men in Switzerland who make up the parliament vote in their male arrogance to prevent the women in Switzerland from exercising the franchise. I really think that the gods which hover over the Alps of Switzerland must find this one of the most curious exercises of democracy when only the people who want to prevent the reform are voting on it. This is analogous to my comment to these new members, and I propose to name them. They include the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt (Mr. Lang), the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) and the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair). None of these people have been caught up by any of the boloney here, and there is a lot of boloney here and a lot of sacred cows wandering about up and down the corridors. I found it refreshing to have a new look being taken by these members at these rules. Is there some problem from the rear?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): They brought in some fresh boloney.

Mr. Fairweather: They were able to analyse the boloney in a way that a good many of the members who have been sitting here for a good long time were not able to do. I will say that for them. If the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) can wait for his purple heart, I was just about to give it to him. I was going to add, and I think the new members will agree with this, that it would have been impossible for the committee to function or make any report at all had it not been for the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, the hon. member for Edmonton

West (Mr. Lambert), the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen), that very resilient and very flexible minister and, of course, my house leader, the member for Peace River, whose patience and good temper were an inspiration to all of us. I suggest that the new blood on the committee was a very good thing. I sometimes wonder whether the next committee might not be staffed entirely by neophytes.

The problem we are trying to solve will not be solved by the proposed 16A, however, or by the abolition of speeches or by any of the speeches that are being made here, including, first, my own. It has been the subject matter of a great deal of discussion, and lately some people are becoming worried about it. My daughter would say, "daddy, don't get up tight about it." I am not up tight about anything except that we are unable as members of parliament to participate in the give and take of dialogue. Dialogue is a pretty legitimate word if it does not get hammered to death by people who do not want a dialogue but want to dictate. Dialogue is a two-way business.

A book called "Democracy And The Student Left", which had its origin in a speech made by a distinguished diplomat and educator, George Kennan, at the opening of the library at Swarthmore College and was printed under the title "Rebels Without A Program" in the New York Sunday Times magazine of January 21, just eleven months ago, has now been published. Kennan's thesis drew unprecedented response from both academics and students at universities. If any hon. member has nothing else to do over Christmas, he should read this book and be as excited as I was about the quality of the response from the undergraduate community. If anybody is worried, as some people apparently are because their preserves are being threatened by these compassionate young people, I would ask them to read this book and their worries will be dissipated.

I thought that one of the better letters, a letter I wish had been written to the President of the Privy Council but I will read it to him or speak it to him or put it to him, whatever you like—

Mr. Mackasey: Sock it to him.

Mr. Fairweather: That is the word. It is such an inappropriate expression to be used by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal that I hesitate to use it, but okay, I will sock it to him. It was by Professor Thomas Diamondstone of Ohio State University who wrote:

> The essence of democracy is not the will of the majority. This is merely the operational basis by which the political machinery is allowed to function.

If only the President of the Privy Council had listened to that before he proposed 16A. The quotation continues:

> The essence of a democracy is, among other things, respect for the rights of minorities and individuals, which in turn implies that the basis of democracy is moral, not operational.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fairweather: The problem we are facing concerns a minister who is 110 per cent operational. I am not going to say what else, but he is all operations, anyway. The quotation continues in this way:

> This means that there are certain things which a majority cannot do, even if it wished to.

That is why we are standing here debating today, tomorrow and the next day. This is why rule 16A will not be accepted by the party I represent and neither will it be accepted by other parties. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), who last Friday made a most extraordinarily complicated proposal that I do not think can be taken seriously, had better go back and get a proposal that is more acceptable to the house if he thinks these rule changes are to be taken seriously.

I do not know how much time I have, Mr. Speaker. I took a great deal of trouble to find out how to pronounce Walter Bagehot's name. I did not think it was "Bagot", like the constituency. Anyway, I have it on unimpeachable authority that it is "Bagehot". This is relevant because the old boy had something to say to us, whether he lived a few years ago or not. He wrote a book called "The English Constitution". He lists in that book some of the functions of the House of Commons. It is time we reread the book and paid more attention to it. He said in the book:

> First . . . the House of Commons chooses the prime minister from among its members.

The second function, continues Bagehot, "is what I may call an expressive function." It has an obligation "to express the mind of the . . . people on all matters which come before it."

This is what has been missing from the parliaments of which I have been a member. This is why the hon. member for Peace River proposed that in private members' hours there be some determination—I think this proposal found general support in the committee from anybody who was not a minister—of private members' resolutions and bills. A proposal should be made in this respect and there should be, just as there is in the British house, what is called, I think, a one-day resolution or perhaps it is a short-day resolution. In any event there should be some means by which members, no matter to what party they belong, may express their collective will to the government. If we had had this procedure in regard to the Nigerian civil war there would have been a great deal more activity from the government benches than has in fact been the case. They were inhibited—I do not blame them for this—from expressing their free will.

I heard it said once that the former prime minister, Lester B. Pearson, said that when the free vote was called with respect to the capital punishment bill—I do not want to offend anybody but this may be read 50 years from now and it is a little bit of modern history that should not be lost—we would see the real liberals, with a small "l", stand up. I think there should be more times in all these terms and semesters—"semester" is a most uncommonly ugly word; "term" is shorter and plainer—when the will of members, be they government or opposition, be they doctrinaire, dogmatic, waffling or thoughtful, can be made known to the government and the people.

Walter Bagehot also says:

> The third function of parliament is what I may call... the teaching function. A great and open council of considerable men cannot be placed in the middle of a society without altering that society.

Then he continues:

> It ought to alter it for the better.

Of course, it cannot alter it here very much because we have not yet accepted some of the newer media for letting the public know what we are about. I refer to television, which people run from as if it were discovered the day before yesterday. The United Nations has been able to deal with this without too much difficulty. Nobody could ever calculate the value, for instance, of television prior to the hearings when Joseph Welch confronted Joseph McCarthy and destroyed him, really. Joseph McCarthy was seen for the first time by the American people for what he was, the incarnation of evil and bigotry. Millions saw this. It would not be a bad idea if some of the public could get a view of what goes on in this house. It would not be a dangerous thing;

Hansard could deal with it handily. The problem would be the number of times the dial was switched off. Walter Bagehot goes on to say:

> Fourthly, the House of Commons has what may be called an informing function... that to some extent makes us hear what we otherwise should not.

In order to be able to inform, just as in the case of to teach, I suggest that the member himself must be informed. This may involve the use of methods of inquiry which are quite new. Mr. Speaker, I assure you that I am about at the end of my remarks. However, there is one other quotation that I think is relevant. Alfred North Whitehead said:

> A merely well informed man is the most useless bore on God's earth.

I think every one of us should read those words every day because there are a great many bores and I suppose the member for Fundy-Royal is one of them. If we could be confronted with this challenge daily, perhaps it would be good for all of us. I wonder whether our sights are not too high here?

• (4:30 p.m.)

In the external affairs and national defence committee we are about to launch into a fundamental review of Canada's defence and foreign policies. We are staffed by an idealist named Peter Dobell who persuaded the Speaker's office, the Canadian Institute of International Affairs, and some Canadian industries to support an independent technical person in assisting members to ask the right questions. It is very difficult for the ordinary member of parliament to ask the right questions. If accountants are hired someone rushes around saying, "my gracious, we have paid an accountant a few dollars a day", or if a lawyer is retained the next thing we know there is a newspaper column saying that a lawyer has charged someone a lot of money.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am interrupting the hon. member only to bring his attention to the fact that his time has expired. Has the hon. member the consent of the house to continue?

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Fairweather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank my colleagues. I will not be very much longer. I have suggested that we are at the stage where we must accept the principle that committees should be adequately staffed. Certainly if the proposal to end the committee of supply comes into effect it will be the responsibility of the government, and we will remind them of it, to ensure that committees are staffed with technically knowledgeable people who are not beholden to the ministry. This is the only way we can have independent and proper questioning. I am not greatly disturbed about the tendency to follow what is done in the United States, although we always seem to worship in fields other than our own, but if we are to follow the U.S. committee system we will need the U.S. staffing system. There is no gainsaying this fact.

The proposal to televise the proceedings of the house will come about sooner rather than later. We cannot keep out this type of technological advance. The fact that the press gallery is able to report by pen and ink should not prohibit the film-maker from reporting by means of his own technique.

The next point I wish to make could I think well be applied to myself. Nevertheless, may I say with great deference, Mr. Speaker—and I assure you I will be well within the rules—that I believe Your Honour has no idea how much members of parliament would support a tougher attitude by the Chair with regard to relevancy and repetition. I have sat in the gallery of the British house when the Speaker chopped a member down. Perhaps it was a devastating experience for the person making the speech but it kept members to the point. A study of this proposal might also be a thought for future committee hearings.

People like to quote their favorite parts of the bible to support their points of view, and Ivor Jennings has been referred to several times in this debate, in fact a sufficient number of times to warrant a testimonial dinner being given him in the parliamentary restaurant. He is a contemporary expert on parliament and he has summed up the issue very succinctly and clearly. I should like to conclude my speech with his words:

> —the true function of the House of Commons is to question and debate the policy of government.

All that the opposition seeks is the opportunity to question and debate the policy of the government with the proper, modern tools that a great state like Canada can provide without any serious difficulty.

I am really deeply serious about this matter, as I have tried to be through most of this speech. I hope there will be a measure of flexibility on rule 16A. I hope that the Prime Minister and the administration will see that in this twenty-eighth parliament there is a mood to get on with the business of the country. I am willing to be put to the test as one backbench member of parliament. I would not presume to talk for the other parties but if Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition does not measure up to a better adaptation of rule 16A, then we will have no one but ourselves to blame and the government will be right to take the responsibility for such a change. However, until we have failed I ask the government very seriously to make a concession.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, following my election to this house on June 25 of this year and after observing the proceedings as an interested private member since the opening of this session of parliament, I have a few ideas about what I feel is the function of parliament, the function of the executive in this parliament, and the relationship of the one to the other. I believe, as has been stated by many hon. members on both sides of the house, that this is one of the most important revisions of the rules to take place for many decades and perhaps the most far-reaching since the formation of this institution.

Much has been said in the country at large about parliament not functioning properly. It has been said that debates are slow, that parliament does not work quickly and efficiently and that it puts the executive, that is, the Prime Minister and his cabinet, at a great disadvantage in carrying out the governing processes in our highly technical society. Much has been made of the need for the reform of parliament by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair). He said that the mother of parliaments at Westminster had instituted far-reaching reforms that had improved their parliamentary procedure.

One of the arguments advanced by those who favour a drastic revision of our parliamentary system is that we have enormous problems of health and welfare, of housing, education, big business, big unions, and the estrangement of the common person from the governing process, of the loss of individuality by citizens and of the overpowering of his personality by the sheer complexity of government. If parliament is to blame for the state of the nation at present, as many of its critics believe and state, I do not feel that the main reform of parliament along the lines suggested by the government will in its totality materially change our economic and social situation. Indeed, a look at the state of the economic and social structure of the United Kingdom would seemingly not disclose that the great changes in their parliamentary system, as proposed by many here, have materially improved their economy or that their social system has materially benefited from the parliamentary changes at Westminister.

I suggest that perhaps parliament has been much too efficient in grinding out legislation which has affected and changed the lives of our citizens and the social structure in which we live. Anyone who examines what parliament has produced for the Canadian citizen in the last 25 years cannot deny that there has been a vast amount of legislation passed which regulates, changes and affects the everyday life of the average Canadian to a degree not even thought of 50 years ago. The average Canadian has become so dependent on the government that he looks to it to provide him with sustenance in his old age, protection for his health, access to hospital facilities of a highly complex nature at no cost to himself, to provide education for his family, at least to the end of the secondary level and for much of the post-secondary level, to provide him with maintenance during periods of unemployment, and to provide him with some sort of basic maintenance throughout his whole life from womb to tomb.

The governments at all levels are spending almost 40 per cent of the national income. It is small wonder then that disruptions arise and the individual feels that the government is not doing enough for him.

But man is nothing if he is not an individual, and no system can be devised that will make him completely happy and allow him to fit into the social slot. He has not evolved yet to the stage where any one institution or set of institutions will make him completely happy or contented. All institutions devised for government are necessarily imperfect; but I believe that the guiding principle is that institutions that are imperfect but flexible are much better than institutions that are perfect but inflexible. Institutions devised only for the government of the day, by being made more rigid and inflexible, can more easily carry on the business of the day, but they quickly become outmoded and unworkable. As a result intolerable situations develop and social frustration and eventually upheaval are the main results. So I believe that parliament must be changed, but changed always with the view in mind that the governing of man is a very imperfect process, and that we should aim for a flexible, if imperfect, structure as compared to a rigid and necessarily more perfect legislating structure.

I am not qualified at this stage to judge the effect of all of the rule changes. I would like, however, to put forward some ideas on certain of the proposed changes that I feel will not work to the best advantage of the house and of the country.

The first of these changes relates to the committee of supply. If all estimates are sent to the standing committees I feel that this will be a very retrograde step. Since coming to this house I have attempted to attend every committee of which I was a member and to carry on a reasoned questioning of the witnesses. I feel I had a considerable knowledge of much of the subject matter discussed in the committees and in the subject matters of one or two of the committees I had a high degree of technical knowledge. None the less I felt that I accomplished little and that the committees little fulfilled the function for which they were set up.

The first and most marked observation about standing committees is that the government must necessarily appoint the chairmen. In the committees I attended the chairmen were usually reasonable and attempted to give an impartial right to each member. But they certainly were under no obligation to do this and in occasional committee meetings sometimes the whole period would go by without a single opposition member being allowed to ask a question. The standing committees very much lack the impartiality and protection that the Speaker gives to the House of Commons.

It is obvious that the chairman and members of the committee from the government side would in times of scandal, mismanagement or what have you, as best they can and in their own interests make the very best effort to prevent discussion of matters that were inimicable to the government's interest. As well as that, questioning of witnesses, who are usually government employees, reveals that they will answer only as long as the government is not embarrassed.

I do not see how the new rules can make any more time available for the scrutiny of the estimates. In fact, only a very few estimates can even be given casual scrutiny. Members of parliament lack the background information intelligently to question most of the items that come before the committees.

The purpose of parliament, I am sure, is not to decide whether a project is being carried out effectively, or whether money should be spent on one portion of a project or another. This decision is much too technical, and even with the greatest back-up staff only a few, if any, members of parliament can make a meaningful contribution.

The purpose of parliament, it seems to me, is to debate whether or not a project should be carried on for a particular reason. A case in point is the abandonment of the ING project while the Post Office Department went ahead with the satellite program. One project was abandoned in the interest of economy while on the other hand a new expenditure was made. Both of these projects were similar in scope.

It seems to me, if scientific programs are to be properly discussed, that this discussion cannot take place in a standing committee. Such a committee would be a rubberstamp for the government because all discussion could be effectively controlled by the government. The only place where a useful and realistic debate on matters of supply can be carried on in parliament is in the House of Commons. I realize that the estimates of every department cannot be scrutinized in this way because this would be too time consuming and probably unnecessary for the vast majority of departments. But surely a limited number of departmental estimates each year could be brought forward for consideration by the house so that the general principles relating to the departments concerned can be debated.

More and more the government of Canada is becoming involved in the taking of money from one individual and the giving of it to another. More and more the economic health of this country is dependent upon the monetary policies of the government. If the House of Commons loses control of the purse-strings and its means of criticizing and giving wide publicity to the country's monetary problems, then most legislation will be of little value.

If scrutiny of the estimates takes place entirely in standing committees, the control of the House of Commons over spending will be effectively reduced to little more than token scrutiny. I think this would be very detrimental to the power of parliament effectively to control the financial affairs of the nation. If the proposed standing order 16A is implemented, it will mean that the government house leader can unilaterally declare a committee null and void, should he so desire, and thus unable to examine a particular item that is before it. I believe that the committee structure as proposed just would not work.

In past sessions ministers of the cabinet were present on but few occasions in committee meetings. I believe pressure of government business will prevent them from attending committee sessions any more frequently than is the case at present. I have noticed that when the committee of supply was in session ministers did attend and often provided reasonable and valuable information.

As a result of comments made outside the house and by the news media the impression has been created that members are more prone to make speeches in committee of supply than to examine estimates. I suggest that the estimates will not be examined any more thoroughly in standing committees than they are at present, because the subject matter is just too vast and the time too short for members of parliament to carry on any real internal audit of the estimates. I feel that a speech can be very useful if it is directed to a particular aspect of the department under discussion. It is also important to have a forum wherein new trends and ideas can be analysed for the consideration of the government and the people of Canada. Only in committee of the whole house can one get maximum publicity of such analyses through the news media.

If parliament is to fulfil its function properly, it must be an arena for debate. A certain amount of such debate must be carried on on the floor of the House of Commons under the impartial jurisdiction of the Speaker. The days allocated to the budget and throne speech debates are insufficient for this important function of parliament. It is most essential that parliament debate some of the estimates in order to fulfil its role as watchdog of the public purse. If the control and money is lost to parliament, then control over the whole of the state will rest with the executive. I most heartily endorse the position taken by my leader that some of the estimates, by agreement, be retained by the house for discussion in committee of supply.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, some of the ideas I have may be new or at least different. As a previous speaker said, perhaps I have not yet been "steeped in enough boloney". However, to be fair I must say that since I have been in this house I have not observed the waste of time to which reference has been made in this debate. Rather, from my own observations I think all of those who have taken part in the debates of this house have been earnestly trying to further the interest both of the debate and of the nation as a whole.

It does not surprise me too much that the rules of this house and the manner in which the house discharges its business should come under discussion at this time because we are entering a new era of communications and technology. People may very well feel that this demands new approaches because it is putting new stresses on those who make decisions and on the institutions which make decisions. This is just as true of the city council of Saskatoon or the town council of Biggar or the rural, municipal councils in the area where I live as it is of this house. These government bodies are being asked to spend more money and to do more things. They are being asked to undertake a greater role in the everyday affairs of individual men.

There was a time in the area where I live when, to fix a road, someone took what we call a slip scraper and filled in the hole in the road. That is all there was to it and that was sufficient to repair the road. Now no one would think of doing that. The ordinary, individual taxpayer has nothing to do with it. Certain moneys are voted, certain taxes are raised, council decides where a road is to be and it is built there. The situation has completely changed in less than most men's lifetime.

Now we have new means of communication. Television is beamed across this continent, across all the civilized world, telling people what a glorious era they live in and how lovely it is to belong to the United States or Canadian middle class for those who can afford to enjoy its benefits. Television programs tell us almost everyone can own a motor car, almost everyone can get a loan for more horses—I forget the exact wording of the advertising. In this new era of technology and communication the real problem facing parliament and the people of Canada is the difficulty of communicating between the ordinary citizen of Canada and those who decide many of the things that affect his life.

In some ways it is more difficult to communicate now than it was in the days of the slip scraper. In those days of the past when your road had to be fixed a councillor would come to you and say, "Well, Joe, take your horses and fix the road." Both men knew what they were talking about. They knew what had to be done, knew it was essential because they could see the hole in the road, and as a result the job was done. It is different now. By one means or another we must convince the individual in Moncton, New Brunswick, in the Gaspé peninsula, in the prairies or out on the west coast that what is done in this parliament is essential for the individual and, more than that, that it is in his interest. These proposed rule changes are so important because, as I understand them, they will alter the ability to communicate.

If you limit the right of an opposition member or backbencher in this house to express the wishes and opinions of the people who sent him here, you limit or change any communications that might take place between him and his constituents. If he does not have the opportunity to stand up in this house and speak, then to a degree you limit his right to communicate. If he is not reported as having expressed in this house the wishes and opinions of the people he represents, most people in his constituency will say ultimately, "Oh, that individual—we should never have elected him." If they then send another man and the same thing happens, they will ultimately conclude that there is really no point in sending anybody. When we get to that point parliament will really have become downgraded. Parliament in my opinion will not be downgraded by excess of debate but rather by paucity of debate, by the inability of those who have been sent here to express effectively the needs of those who sent them. This is what we should be concerned about.

There has been discussion here about tradition, particularly the tradition of that parliament from which we have drawn our ideas and on which we have patterned much of our procedure. There has been discussion about rules and about the manner in which members carry out their roles in the mother of parliaments as well as about the manner in which debate is controlled there. Traditionally the individual member has the right to say what he thinks in the mother of parliaments and the right to a forum where he can say it. In short, he has the right to express his point of view. That is the basis of any real parliamentary tradition. It took centuries for those rights and traditions to be achieved. It took a long time for individual members to have the right to say in an appropriate forum what they thought, without fear or favour—and that is important because we must have certain guarantees in our parliaments. It took a struggle to achieve our rights and traditions, and it was not easy. We glory in the background of the British parliament, but I point out that it was not always as it now is. Only in 1929, if my memory serves me correctly, did universal sufferage become general in the United Kingdom. That is not long ago. Our democratic institutions really are not that old and we have not used them for long—for a few generations only.

When we discuss rules in this house the most important question we ought to ask ourselves is not whether our time is well spent or otherwise but whether the rights of individual members of parliament are being preserved. Are we preserving the right of parliament to act effectively on the needs of the times? Are we preserving its right to act effectively through the media of publicity—press, radio and television—so that there is a two-way communication between hon. members and those who sent them? In regard to this chamber itself the real question is not whether the present procedure wastes time but whether it serves the people. That is a positive question. If the answer to that question is yes, then this parliament and this house are serving their purpose. There will be no communication through the press or by radio or television unless this parliament plays its part. Certainly there will be communication by the executive arm of the government. From time to time the representatives of the press will ask ministers what they are doing and ministers will give reports over television or radio. What the country wants to know is what individual members are doing.

Mention has been made of additional work being undertaken by the standing committees. This may be a practical way of taking some of the load off the house. In the short time I have been here I have served on two committees—continuously on one of them. We held 11 meetings and the minister concerned attended four of them. I would say the chairman did a fair and even-handed job. But the committee was lacking in services; one could wait for days before the transcript of the proceedings had been prepared and was in members' hands. One could attend a second meeting and possibly a third before the proceedings of the first meeting were available. The steering committee met once. The chairman called it twice but only once was there a full meeting of the steering committee.

We called certain witnesses before us. They appeared and answered questions fairly. But it is likely that many more witnesses would have been necessary, and a great deal more time, before a complete picture of all the activities of the departments concerned could have been presented. I seriously question whether committees can effectively do the work which has been done in the house. This chamber does provide a forum for debate; it does provide for questions to be asked and answered. More important still, it provides an opportunity for an individual member to state his position. This house is the only real forum available to an hon. member. The only real protection against big government is parliament. This is the place where the representatives of the people can speak without fear or favour.

Whether we like it or not—and I suppose some people do not like it—government is playing an increasing role in the economic and political affairs of this nation. This trend is more likely to increase than to decrease. The choice is not, as was suggested today, between helping farmers to sell wheat and taking over their farms, placing them in the position of hired men. It is suggested that the government must either own the land and hire the farmer to produce or step outside the picture altogether. These are not the alternatives we face in this country. This idea is archaic. It is as out of date as the man with two horses pulling a slip scraper.

In this country we quit arguing about the alternatives of capitalism and communism years ago. The issue is not even relevant any more. The question we face really involves the degree and the manner in which government, business, industry and labour are to be mixed—how they will live together and under what conditions, the degree to which government will enter into the economic affairs of the nation. This is why parliament is of prime importance. It is parliament, either by positive decisions or by negative decisions, which will effectively direct the affairs of this nation or opt out. It is therefore essential that parliament be a powerful force in our affairs, and for this reason we should not leave power in the hands of big government without seeing to it that the balancing effect of members who sit on the back benches is preserved.

The degree of government intervention can be observed day after day. There was a picture in the press the other day of the Minister of Labour just after he had successfully resolved the Air Canada dispute.

Mr. Blair: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gleave: I agree with you, sir. But consider the implications. Air Canada is owned by Canada and controlled by the government of the day. The individual who moved to settle this dispute with a powerful union was a minister of the crown answerable to this house. In these circumstances, how important it is that members of parliament should be able to ask that minister: how well did you perform this service and how fairly did you perform it vis-à-vis the labour union? As I see it, this trend toward government influence and intervention is likely to accelerate rather than diminish.

Let me give hon. members another example, this time from the Globe and Mail of December 6. Here is a report saying that the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company of Winnipeg expects to complete its $18.4 million takeover of Sylvite of Canada Limited, Regina, by Monday. I would direct attention particularly to one paragraph of this report:

> Development at the mine has so far cost more than 10 million. Mr. Austin said it is two years from production. He said pre-production expenses for the Sylvite project will be used to reduce Hudson Bay's taxable income beginning this year; without this provision for tax relief, the take-over would not have been undertaken.

Government, by its taxing policies, is the arbitrator, the decider whether or not a business take-over occurs, whether or not a certain project continues. In that light we see the importance of parliament in this debate.

I think it is also relevant to this procedural issue to ask ourselves why the government wishes rule 16-A. Why do the men who sit on the other side of the house wish unlimited power? To make these kinds of decisions so they can take action, or possibly so they do not have to take action? Which is it? Is it so that the government can deal with rising unemployment or so it will not have to deal with it? Is it so that it may deal with the situation fast developing in western Canada with respect to grain, or so it may be avoided? Is it so that debate will not be quite so severe, so prolonged, and so that not as much can be said about it? Is it so that someone may deal with the groundfishery situation on the east coast, or so that it can be avoided?

To what end are these powers sought? So that the government can do things or so that action can be avoided? So that the government can deal with the vast technological changes, so that the political and economic climate of Canada can be kept abreast of these changes, or so that action can be avoided and leave the people of Canada individually to struggle along by themselves?

I suppose there are some people who support this move, but I submit that no prime minister who conceives of parliament as the dominant force of Canadian political and economic life can support this kind of proposal to parliament and to the Canadian people. Some portions of the press are becoming concerned. I read this editorial from the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix of last week:

> A government that is unconcerned about the privileges and responsibilities of its opposition deserves a chance to serve in opposition for a while.
> The Liberal government in Ottawa may be demonstrating such unconcern in its proposed rule changes for the House of Commons. One of the changes would give it the power to set limits on opposition members' debating time.

It goes on to say:

> —an opposition in Parliament performs a vital function in a democracy—a function which could be significantly hampered by the proposed rule.
> Normally government policy undergoes fairly thorough scrutiny in caucus before it is presented to the house. This can have a tempering effect on questionable proposals, but it is not a substitute for public examination by an opposition that is not interested in furthering the political ends of the government—
> If the government is truly unconcerned about this, Canadians would have good reason to consider giving the Liberals another term or two in opposition—as a reminder that an opposition's role in parliament is sometimes of importance equal to that of the government.

Some of the press and some people outside the house are concerned about what is being proposed here. What the government seeks by these procedural changes is the impotence of parliament. Once the executive arm of the government has achieved its objective and deprived the opposition parties of the ability and freedom to protest, then it has automatically done the same to its own backbenchers. It can follow a course of political inactivity in an economic sense. It will then be able to follow the United States tradition of withdrawing progressively from small islands of economic intervention and it will not move to take effective economic action.

This is one of the differences between the tradition of our system and that of the American system. Since 1867 our parliament has been a parliament of action. It took the action necessary to weld Canada together. It created the transportation system that would do that. It created Air Canada because Canada has to be welded together with a communications system. It created the C.B.C. You find none of these important means of communication in our neighbour to the south. Our neighbour to the south took a course whereby congress was not active. We, for our part, have taken the course of saying that in certain fields, at certain times, in certain necessities, we would be active.

One of the saddest things I have ever observed on television was the poor people's march on Washington, to see them in their thousands sit outside congress and yet congress took no action. Why? Because this is not their tradition. This is the same thing as the farmers selling their own wheat. The government is not concerned. Unless we turn things around, unless we reverse the traditions and the courses we have followed in the past we will continue to say that government plays a role in the economic affairs of Canada, in the planning, in the working out of our long and short-term objectives, in deciding the course of destiny for the Canadian people. If we follow our traditions this we will say and this we will do.

Our tradition has been one of communication and also of participation, not only in this house but on the local level. In the area I come from it does not matter whether people's antecedents were Ukrainians, Czechoslovakians or Germans. They were expected to and did take part in the day to day affairs of the councils and other government bodies in that area and in that province. This is the real tradition of Canada, not a tradition of race or of any particular ethnic origin but a tradition of people working together to achieve the end which they think is desirable, not being negative or afraid but being positive and constructive and willing to strike out on new paths when it was necessary to achieve those objectives which they desired. The rule changes proposed here negate the traditional approach which we have created in the short time we have been a nation.

I am not dedicated to the preservation of any "ism" because the isms often lead us into trouble. But I am dedicated to the preservation of the life and vitality of this parliament and to seeing it as an instrument to further the interest and welfare of the Canadian people. I believe the people of Saskatoon-Biggar see it that way. They expect us to act. They do not expect us simply to keep the ring, as someone described the British parliament in its heyday of Conservativism, but to keep safe the economic interests of the country.

We are being asked to limit the participation of individuals in this parliament while at the same time the government sets up regional desks some place back in the hinterland to give them advice when they should be seeking advice from their own backbenchers and the members of the opposition, if only they would listen. "Regional desk" is a good term. It is a nice term—a desk made of steel or wood which does not talk to anybody. It is the people who will sit behind the desks who will do the talking. If they are anything like most political servitors they will tell you, when you get their answers, all the things you want to hear. If you want the truth, then you should listen to those who do not agree with you and not to those who are committed to agree with you beforehand.

As is the case in respect of those who have spoken before me today, I am completely and utterly opposed to the provisions of 16A. They will muzzle and limit this parliament and it will be that much less effective if the government has its way.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker the only thing I regret in rising to speak is that some of my hon. friends are not here to give their applause. I am thinking for instance, of the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) who is a very good supporter of mine. In order that he may be somewhat enlightened I shall place my remarks on the record and he will have an opportunity to read them in any event.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order if I may have the indulgence of the house I believe we all hope that the hon. member's address will be as productive as his wife was on Friday night because he is now the father of another child.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that this is one point of order that is in order. I wish to thank hon. members for their very kind wishes. I think the wind has been taken out of my sails a little, but I am sure I will recover. First of all I should like to congratulate the members of the committee on procedure who, but for the grace of God, did an excellent job in their efforts. I should like to congratulate my colleagues who worked on that committee. I have come to know my colleagues in this regard. As a new member I was impressed by their sincerity and the role they took in trying to bring about changes in the rules that would benefit the whole house and the whole nation because parliament does serve the whole nation of Canada. I wonder why such a stipulation as 16-A was ever brought in as part of the report. I notice the attempt of the government house leader to apologize for its existence on Friday when he did the sort of thing one would do for a youngster who complains, that is, give him a popsicle or a candy. I have wondered what the motive was behind 16-A. After having listened attentively to a number of eminent members of this house make their representations I realize that 16-A was included deliberately to give to the government the power this provision gives.

Having read during my days as a student a number of eminent writers of the 17th century and their criticism of the British judicial system I was reminded of a statement attributed, I believe, to Pope when he said that beggars hang that jury men may dine. This is a very succinct summation of some of the inequities of the judicial system of Britain a few centuries ago. I wonder whether this is not a complete summation also of the content of 16A in that we will hang because they are hungry. This is the attitude of the government toward the problems which exist in this nation.

I certainly do not intend to stand here and take issue with many of the reforms that have been recommended in the report of the special committee on procedure. I am one new member of parliament who is a little impatient and who, like all new backbenchers of all parties, would like to see the government in power take action on many of the social, economic and other problems of our nation. I can say I have been very impatient with the way in which this government to date has not faced up to the problems confronting this nation, despite its great majority.

If I were to make one point only in my few remaining remarks I would dwell heavily on the one point which caught my attention in the remarks made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) last Tuesday. I shall quote from the remarks of the hon. gentleman as they appear at page 3758 of Hansard. These remarks represent the feelings of our leader and of all hon. members in this house who are legitimately and sincerely interested in the regional problems of Canada. They represent in a very brief fashion the part that parliament must play in dealing with these regional problems. The Leader of the Opposition said:

> I suggest we must remember that this is the only national forum in which spokesmen for all parts of Canada can speak and expect to be heard. I need not remind the house that different regions of the country have specific problems and points of view. Discussion in a national forum helps to knit the regions into a whole nation and to build a stronger unity. It seems likely that one of the serious casualties of any major limitation upon the time of debate would be the right of spokesmen to be adequately heard on the problems of the regions. I suggest that national unity would suffer.

As a member of a particular region of Canada I feel, as I assume all members who represent particular regions of Canada feel, that any attempt to restrict legitimate debate on matters pertaining to regional problems would be an infringement of the rights of the people of the various parts of Canada and the people in all of Canada. I consider that one of my main tasks as a new member, and one of the main tasks of any member of parliament, is to sensitize the members of the government in respect of the various regions of Canada, because regardless of how competent, capable or sincere a minister is he cannot expect to understand fully the importance of the particular problems which relate to the various regions. I suspect that had these ministers been so sensitized they would have made an effort to sensitize the bureaucracy into putting the policies and programs of the government into effect.

I consider that the regional problems of Canada which face the whole nation right across the dominion must be brought to the attention of parliament as time progresses and especially because of the changes in government and the changes of ministers of the government who occupy different roles and new portfolios. These people have to be sensitized to our problems across the dominion. How are the ministers and the government going to understand what is going on in Canada if we are not allowed and permitted the right to debate these issues in this house? I am amazed at the attitude of some of the new members who have suggested that by bringing in the proposed 16-A or anything which will or can be intended for the purpose of eliminating debate in the House of Commons they will be better off.

Perhaps I might be permitted to refer to my own problems for a moment. I have had the opportunity since I came to the house of mentioning several problems peculiar to the Atlantic region and I shall continue to do so if the Speaker permits me and with the good will of the house. This is only one region of Canada which has and will continue to have social and economic problems so long as the government continues to take its present attitude. A number of members from the Atlantic region have debated the function change of the C.N.R. These remarks were made during our discussion of the C.N.R. financing bill. I only regret that we did not call for a vote and refuse to provide the financing sought. Any body such as the C.T.C. or the C.N.R. which proceeds to act as dictatorially and inconsiderately as they have acted does not deserve the support of this representative assembly.

I suggest that if there had been members of parliament from the Atlantic region who had been prepared to stand in this house during the last parliament to indicate the importance of a railway system to one province of Canada, Newfoundland, the Canadian Transport Commission and the C.N.R. would not have dared to make the kind of decision they have now made so far as our railway system is concerned. Had we had members with the gumption to get up in this house and make the points we have now made we would not be faced with this very serious problem.

We have heard members from British Columbia, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Quebec and Newfoundland talk at length since this parliament commenced about the serious problems facing our fishing industry. We have had little difficulty in convincing our own colleagues of the seriousness of the state of that particular economic aspect of the Canadian way of life, but we have had great difficulty in obtaining the interest of the minister in respect of our problems. Unless we are permitted to stand here and present our cases, and if the minister continues to take no heed of what we are saying, we will find the whole Canadian nation in a much more serious economic state of affairs than exists even now.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) does not understand the problem facing that industry. Undoubtedly he has heard some talk about it and he may have heard some ministers refer to it, but neither he nor the hon. member for Rosedale is familiar with the Atlantic fishery and perhaps they are not too interested. The Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) and his colleagues might well be sincerely interested in this problem, but they are obviously not fully aware of the serious circumstances involved. What I am trying to say is that unless members of parliament are permitted the right to stand here and indicate to the house and the rest of the people of Canada those problems which exist, the government may never do anything. When one speaks in this house one can influence policy because of press coverage, and one can sensitize the whole nation to the problems of various regions. Perhaps this right will also be taken away shortly. I hope for the sake of the members of the press gallery that they will still be in existence in the new year, and that the Prime Minister does not remove them as a Christmas present to some of his hon. friends.

Unfortunately I was not here on Friday afternoon to hear the remarks of the hon. member for Bruce. I should like to have been present because I was amazed at what he said about this institution being the most exclusive club in Canada. He used that phrase frequently throughout his remarks, and he suggested we should be ashamed of ourselves because we have only passed eight or ten pieces of legislation. Although he did not use this phrase, he said in so many words that parliament should become a sausage factory. This phrase has been used in respect of some educational systems in Canada which turn out young people as though through a sausage factory. That hon. member also said we should be ashamed of ourselves for asking the silly questions we pose in the house. I believe the only reason for this attitude is that a number of Liberal backbenchers are frustrated because they came here with the great idea of taking part in debate and with great ideas about our democratic system of government but have since found different.

Many Liberal backbenchers are blessed with ability and would love to get in their two cents worth but are not permitted to do so, not only because the government house leader and others steal the show most of the time but also because time does not permit. This might be one of the problems. In any event, quite a number of Liberal backbenchers are really frustrated, and I have talked with a number of them. They feel—I was going to say taken in or sucked in but that is not very parliamentary—they have been sold a bill of goods and that these reforms will result in giving them greater flexibility in being able to take part and put their points across.

One point which has been made is that the committees will become the forum for debate. Consequently this has given a number of Liberal backbenchers the feeling that, goodness gracious, there will be a chance for them to get into the debate. They feel they have lots of ability having spent ten years in this or that legislature, or having been mayor of a great metropolitan area, or this or that or something else. They feel that if they can get on a committee which is to be a forum for debate they will be able to get their points across and make a contribution.

I am really shocked by this feeling on the part of the Liberal backbenchers because they ought to realize that the house leader who controls parliament also controls the committees. We had an example of this last week when one committee functioned well and brought in a motion. This motion did not meet with the approval of the house leader and he threw it out. He can decide what is to happen in a committee and who will take part in the debate, when a resolution will be brought in and when it will be debated. He can decide pretty well whether committees will exist. I am shocked by those frustrated Liberal backbenchers who feel that by limiting the debate in this house they will have a greater opportunity to talk about their own constituency problems. They seem to feel that by limiting debate as a result of the proposed rule 16A they will get rid of their frustrations.

Mr. Baldwin: They will have many more problems in the future.

Mr. Lundrigan: One of our major problems in this 20th century is in realizing the fact that we are living in a changing society. As Aristotle said when he was a growing boy, society is always changing. There is a need to make decisions which are going to result in a sensitive approach to the needs of people. This is one of the greatest challenges which faces any organization or institution. I am surprised that any Liberal backbencher could support the proposed change in 16A when in actual fact all they are doing is relinquishing their right to speak. Under the proposed 16A no one will have the right to speak except the Prime Minister, two or three of his friends in the front row and perhaps two or three of my friends in our front row. The opportunity for a backbencher to speak will be completely eliminated. We might as well go home. Liberal backbenchers might as well realize this, go home and send other stuffed shirts to Ottawa, or perhaps a tape recorder, because they will have nothing to do.

No one denies that we need changes in parliament. Having followed the proposed changes since I have been here as a new member, and the report brought forward by the special committee, I believe the committee has done an excellent job in coping with some of the changes which were needed.

I think we need a change, for example, in the sensitivity of the bureaucracy in Ottawa to the needs of the people. We need a change in the efficiency with which decisions of parliament are carried out by the bureaucracy, which tends to bog down and because of its inefficiency, rules, regulations and inadequacy never really puts into effect many of the decisions made by parliament. We need a change in the attitude of ministers of the crown in answering questions in the house. A Liberal backbencher told me that he made a count and one question, the same question, has been asked 40 times since the beginning of the session. He thought this was a terrible reflection on the opposition. What is the minister or his department doing if the question has to be asked 40 times? Obviously an answer has not been given to the question.

I have been frustrated to the point where Mr. Speaker must have taken great exception to my presence here, and rightfully so, as a member of parliament standing and asking questions and receiving nothing more than a shrug of the shoulders for an answer or a "ditto" here, a "ditto" there, here a "ditto", there a "ditto", everywhere a "ditto". This shows the frivolous attitude on the part of a number of ministers.

I have been really frustrated, especially on occasions such as today when we have a chronic emergency developing in one of our provinces and have not been able to get the ministers concerned into the house to answer questions. I think the whole attitude of the government has to change. The attitude of the Prime Minister and the attitude of the hon. member for Rosedale have to change. The people of Canada gave them a majority but they did not give the members of this government the right to eliminate parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lundrigan: We need a change in the attitude of the government toward taxation. I listened with great interest during the budget debate to a number of members, including some of the Liberals, speaking about the aims of the government. This government still retains an out of date attitude toward taxation. Apparently it has never read some of the eminent documents emanating from great writers to the south who have been advising administrations in that country. The attitude of our government toward taxation is 18th century. I do not think the government has one bit of interest in the farmers of Canada. We need a great change by the government in its attitude toward the farmers of western Canada. I have never heard such important speeches by sincere individuals, with so little result from this government, as I have in respect of the farmers of western Canada.

We wonder, when we rise in our places as members of the house, not only of the opposition but of Canada's parliament, whether this government gives one darn about the farmers and the fishermen of Canada. We wonder about its attitude toward unemployment. I read only two or three days ago that there has been a significant increase in the unemployment rate in Canada. I think the figures for the nation indicate that 4.4 per cent of the people of Canada are now unemployed. This is an increase of some 70,000 over the number of unemployed for the same period last year. Yet still we talk about a just society. Still we talk about the amenities of modern life. This is the kind of change of attitude that we can do with right now. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that none of my colleagues would take exception to this kind of change of attitude by the government.

Sometimes I wonder, listening to some members taking part in debate, whether they really realize whose rights we are talking about. We are not talking about the rights of the Liberal government. We are not talking about the rights of the Prime Minister or those of the hon. member for Rosedale, the present house leader of the government. We are not talking about the rights of the Tories, N.D.P.'ers or Creditistes. When we speak about rights we are talking about the rights of the Canadian people.

Mr. Lundrigan: I think it would be wise for the Prime Minister and his colleagues to realize that parliament is responsible to the people. We are being asked to make parliament responsible to the Liberal house leader. This is in actual fact what could happen if rule 16A were passed in its present form. As I say, Mr. Speaker, we would make parliament responsible to the Liberal house leader. I do not mind going along with reform. I do not mind gambling a little bit. But I am certainly not going to commit suicide.

I ask all hon. members to tell their constituents the exact nature of proposed rule 16A. Members should tell their constituents exactly what powers it could give any house leader. They should tell their people what powers it could give to the present house leader and to those who would follow the hon. member for Rosedale. The hon. member for Rosedale may well not be in the house after the next election, but in actual fact if we passed this rule we would be giving this power to anybody who happens to be the government house leader in the future.

I ask hon. members to tell their constituents what this rule could really mean. They should ask their constituents whether they would be satisfied if their rights were relinquished. This is what is sought to be done by rule 16A. We are elected to represent constituencies and to be the voice of our people in parliament. It is not the voice of John Lundrigan from Gander-Twillingate, or some other insignificant character in history who will pass on after a few years and that will be all that is heard of him. We will not be giving up the right of this parliament but the right of the people in our constituencies who have been gracious enough to give us the right to speak on their behalf.

I ask hon. members to ask their constituents whether they are prepared to give up the right of members to speak for them on the farming industry, the fishing industry, the mining industry or the housing situation. I ask hon. members: If the house leader decides that he is going to eliminate debate, as indeed he can under the proposed rule, who will speak for the miners of British Columbia? I have paid attention to the situation in B.C. and am aware that there are significant problems there. I have not heard too much about them, though, because some of my hon. friends are a little less than eager to rise and exercise their right to speak on these matters. This is their privilege. But given a little time I think they will get used to what happens in the house and will eventually rise and speak for the miners of British Columbia.

Who will speak for the farmers of the prairies of Canada if not the elected members from that part of the country, be they from the great Tory party or of any other political affiliation? Who will speak for the farmers of Ontario if debate is limited? Who will speak for the corn growers of Ontario, who faced a tragic situation this fall and who but for the great efforts of a number of my colleagues and others would have had to suffer even more intolerable conditions than those they already face? Who will speak for the language rights of Quebec if this government decides tomorrow, after two hours of skirmishing, that we will spend 20 minutes or half an hour dealing with the language rights of Quebec and the rest of this nation?

Who will stand up in this chamber and speak for the people of Quebec and the rest of Canada regarding language rights? Who will talk about and represent the interests of the lumbermen of New Brunswick, people who have hardly been heard of in Canada? Who will represent the lobster fishermen of Nova Scotia about whom we are very keyed up? Who will speak about the causeway and other problems of the people of Prince Edward Island who are awaiting the Christmas announcement of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing), if he ever gets around to making it? Who will speak for the fishermen of Newfoundland who have been left out in the cold for about 20 years? Only during the last few months have we heard about the problems of the fishing industry on the Newfoundland coast, because those people who came to this house previously did not exercise their right to speak on these matters. It is a good thing they are not here now because they would never have the right if this rule passes.

I ask hon. members, especially backbenchers new to parliament like myself, who will talk about legislation regarding the unemployment situation in Canada? Who is going to stand up in this house and indicate the serious problem of unemployment facing this country? Who will rise here to speak about the legislation on housing which we are all awaiting, or about this great city in the sky about which the Minister of Transport in charge of housing is talking? Who will take issue with some of the loopholes and some of the lack of thought regarding the legislation on housing? Who will be able to stand up and talk about the voting privileges of young Canadians, people who have not yet reached the age of 21 but are demanding the right to vote, if this government decides to increase the voting age to 23? Who will stand here and take issue with some of the inequities in our Criminal Code and point out to the Canadian people what is meant by the amendments to the Criminal Code of Canada when this legislation is brought before the house and can easily be forced on the house?

[Mr. Lundrigan.]

These are the kinds of decisions that have to be made. I suggest that if the hon. member for Rosedale is going to assume responsibility for knowing what the people of Canada feel about these problems and for bringing it to the attention of the house, he will have his hands full for a little while.

There is another thing that worries me more than anything, and I think some of my friends in this house and some backbenchers in all parties are not aware of exactly what rights we are talking about here. I am a little worried that decisions are going to be made by this government without any regard for the wishes of the people of Canada. I indicated earlier in my remarks that I believe that the big problem facing our society today is to be able to make decisions that have been arrived at as a result of knowledge of the needs of the people. Any government that is not willing to listen to what the people want and to listen to the voice of the people from all parts of Canada is not interested in making decisions which are of practical benefit to the people but rather is more interested in making decisions which will perpetuate its existence in office. I am a little worried that before the next four years are up changes will be made to the B.N.A. Act and elections might be abolished.

People generally can be excused for not fighting for the rights which were gained by our forefathers down through the ages. But there is absolutely no excuse for a member of the house not fighting to preserve those rights. All of us here take great pride in saying we will not let the rights we do have go out the window.

I wish to say in closing that I am a little disappointed at the fact that the very simple amendment to the report of the procedure committee which was placed before the house last Tuesday was not accepted. I believe the government should have been aware of the fact that they were bringing in a controversial standing order 16A and I am sure they are now, after the last several days of debate. If the government house leader were not aware of the fact that this standing order is not in accordance with our rules then he would not have allowed the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) to apologize for its existence last Friday afternoon, and yet this is exactly what the minister did. He tried to move an amendment to it and he apologized to the house for the standing order. It is as if he offered a candy to the house and said I am sorry, we made a mistake. He went so far as to indicate that the government is ashamed of what it has done. Why does the house leader not stand up and indicate to the house that we should get on to more important things because we have lots of work to do? We have had lots of work to do since last spring when the government decided to call an election, and yet we took five months off. That was a fairly lengthy holiday, if one may be permitted to refer to that period as such. All of a sudden we come here and are supposed to be ashamed of ourselves because we are not putting legislation through like a sausage factory. We have only passed eight or ten bills but we had five months out of session.

Why does this government not accept the amendment of the Leader of the Opposition? All it says is that it is a vote of confidence in many parts of the report of the procedure committee but a major part of it has to be referred back to the committee. Why does the government not assume its responsibility and stop wasting the time of the house? Let us get down to the work which awaits us and let the government accept its responsibility for governing this country. Let us not take cover under a standing order such as standing order 16-A which will drag out the debate during which time the government will sit back and refuse to govern the country, a responsibility which it has not assumed very well. Let us not allow the government to drag in this red herring—and I am aware of herrings, coming as I do from the Atlantic region. We are saying to the government that they should accept the amendment and get back to governing the country. They should stop wasting our time because we have important problems which need to be solved.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It is my duty pursuant to standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock this day are as follows: The hon. member for Surrey (Mr. Mather), Highway Safety—inquiry as to safety standards for tires; the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert), Consumer Affairs—application for rate increases by Bell Telephone; the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Gibson), Sports—hockey—interference with freedom of choice of young players.

Construction of Fundy Trail

It being six o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business, namely, notices of motions, as listed on today's order paper.

HIGHWAYS

SUGGESTED CONSTRUCTION OF FUNDY TRAIL

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of giving immediate consideration to the provision of special financial assistance to the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia for the construction of the Fundy Trail from St. Stephen, New Brunswick to Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, using existing roads where possible, and assisting financially in connecting existing roads in order that a scenic highway be available to aid in the promotion of the tourist industry.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in opening my remarks I should like to refer briefly to the last few words of the resolution which read as follows:

—in order that a scenic highway be available to aid in the promotion of the tourist industry.

These words represent the crux of the resolution and my purpose in bringing this motion before the house. The purpose of the resolution is to attempt to persuade the federal government, in co-operation with the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, to take the necessary measures to develop the Fundy trail as a tourist attraction which will greatly enhance the economic position of these two provinces. What is the Fundy trail? It is nothing new. For more than 50 years imaginative people have envisioned a 550 mile specially developed highway skirting the Fundy shore from St. Stephen, New Brunswick, to Yarmouth, Nova Scotia. It would traverse some of the most breathtaking scenery on the North American continent. It would open up areas of historic significance, places where Canadian history was born such as the ancient French forts of La Tour and Beausejour; the land of Evangeline immortalized by Longfellow, and Blomidon and Tantramar, the land of the famous Fundy tides. These are places that have an irresistible appeal for tourists, both from Canada and the United States.

The Fundy vacation trail when completed would be 550 miles of pastoral beauty and magnificent seascape graced by dozens of locations enshrined in history, two cities, 15 towns, 350 communities and 490 miles of beaches, inlets and coves washed by the world's highest tides. The trail will trace the entire bay of Fundy shore between St. Stephen, New Brunswick, and Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, its length halved between the two provinces. Its terminal points will be joined by two ferry services.

Developing the Fundy vacation trail means a long-term project, an immense investment and rich benefit, not least during the period of its construction, to the locales through which it will pass. To bring the trail as it now exists up to promotable standards by improving or diverting roads already built and linking them with new highways will cost Nova Scotia and New Brunswick an estimated $25 million. Viewed as a total concept, it may represent an investment of $100 million. The trail's development will inject financial adrenalin into areas in which it is much needed. It will stimulate large, localized capital expenditure. It will breed wide employment opportunity. It will give rise to commerce, particularly that associated with recreation, boat building, sports and resort development, dining and accommodation facilities. It will boost municipal coffers through additional tax revenue available from tourist accommodation services operating for a longer period of the year.

But it is the tourist boom that offers the Fundy vacation trail its most attractive potential. The influx of visitors into both Nova Scotia and New Brunswick has swelled during the last five years. The measure of the Fundy vacation trail challenge is the scope of its potential: it will be within easy reach of both American and Canadian travellers and is seen as the subject of a May to November season.

Let me again refer to the last sentence of the resolution in which I point out that this highway would basically be an aid in promoting the tourist industry. Right now let me clear up any misconceptions that have arisen that the Fundy trail is being advocated simply as another highway for transportation purposes. This view has been put forward by New Brunswick highways minister, Andre Richard, and on these grounds he has dismissed any immediate consideration of the project on the basis that other highway improvements are more urgent. The minister has missed the point. The Fundy trail is desirable not as just another highways system but as an addition to our highways system which would lead to a vast increase in tourist potential and an attraction of more dollars to the maritime economy.

[Mr. Thomas (Moncton).]

The Fredericton Daily Gleaner in an editorial in the December 3, 1968, edition had this to say:

> Highways Minister Andre Richard says in a speech at Moncton that the war on poverty must take precedence over all other measures to improve the maritimes. Projects such as the New Brunswick-Prince Edward Island causeway, the Fundy trail, the Chignecto canal, the Corridor road across Maine, would be highly desirable, he says, when considered on an individual basis. "But considered in total, they would immediately bankrupt any society."
> We agree with Mr. Richard that poverty should have top priority. Through the years we have never departed from that concept. But can poverty be cured without introducing industry? And how can industry be introduced without the implementation of projects to pave the way for it?
> We disagree with Mr. Richard where he fails to distinguish between expenditure and investment. We believe that investment in certain great public works projects would yield a rich return. We believe that it would not be spending wealth, it would be creating wealth. And there is the fundamental difference in the two philosophies.
> The Fundy trail would be an immense attraction to the tourist industry which could be increased if we could interest the great population to the south of us to come to this area.

This government has pledged itself to the correction of regional disparity. We are all aware of the problems of the Atlantic provinces—unemployment higher than the national average and underemployment because of lack of job opportunities. We realize the fact that we are at a great disadvantage in competing on the Canadian market because of our location and our distance from the highly populated areas. But this very handicap can become our greatest asset. Because of our very lack of industrialization and our underpopulation, this area has an irresistible appeal for the millions of people living in the heavily populated areas of Quebec, Ontario and the eastern United States. We are in the happy position of being next door neighbours to one of the biggest tourist markets on the North American continent—the state of New York and the New England states. These areas have become so congested that we are in a wonderful position to attract this tremendous tourist potential to the Fundy area.

The Fundy trail should not be confused with any express highway program. It is an opportunity for both Nova Scotia and New Brunswick to join in a dynamic and further development of the tourist industry of these provinces. Tourism today is more than big business; it is a gigantic self-help program capable of producing highly lucrative returns solely in the public interest. The Fundy vacation trail would be a tourist magnet. The trail would be an impetus to the employment of labour throughout the Atlantic provinces and would use locally made supplies and material. The Fundy vacation trail is the key to an improved standard of living and a better economic future for the Fundy folk and their families.

What can this mean? Tourism today is our second largest industry, second only to our forest products in bringing in foreign dollars. If it were not for these dollars from the tourist trade, our balance of payments with the United States would be in serious imbalance. In the present year some 2,800,000 people visited the province of New Brunswick alone and left behind $87 million. The tourist industry in Canada must continue to grow and remain healthy.

A recent study in the United States analysed the growth of tourism there. It concluded that increased leisure, increased incomes and increased mobility accounted for only half of the increase in tourist usage. It appears that some of the conditions of an increasingly urban life are adding to the number of North Americans who seek some part of their pleasure out of doors.

We can look ahead and predict a 30-hour week. We can look ahead and foresee the day when no family will have an income below the poverty line. We can see the day when the mobility of man is enhanced so that a journey half way round the world is counted as a week end trip. The technical capability is almost with us. The productive genius of man is almost boundless. His social management is less to be commended. We can foresee the man of the future with an even more urgent demand for outdoor recreation facilities. The combined post-war phenomenon of more affluence and disposable leisure time has given rise to accelerated public outdoor recreational demands which have placed radically increasing pressures not only upon our national parks and outdoor recreational space but on all other landscape resources as well. The problem of providing adequate parks and recreational and other types of open space has become one of the major problems in an accelerating urban society.

The 500,000 people in the immediate area of the Fundy trail have recognized the need and expressed overwhelming support for this venture. Cities, towns, municipalities, boards of trade and the press have expressed enthusiastic approval. Let me quote one or two of these endorsements. The first is from the Truro Daily News of June 16, 1966:

> The construction of such a trail would be of great benefit to the two provinces, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and if developed energetically and wisely will allow all communities to capitalize on what is now the area's largest industry. Such a project would not only give major impetus to the tourist industry but additional jobs would be created, as well as the possibility of the establishment of new industries.

My second reference is to the Moncton Daily Times of September 15, 1964:

> The 1964 tourist season now drawing to a close has been a record breaking one in point of throngs of American and Canadian visitors . . . The expansion of Fundy park is a project that cannot long be postponed, if its value and usefulness as a tourist mecca and popular outdoor rendez-vous for our own citizenry is to be maintained.

If it was urgent in 1964, Mr. Speaker, it is that much more urgent today.

Recognizing the need for such a project we may ask, how can it best be realized? I suggest that the federal government ought to take immediate steps to complete the unfinished portion of the trail between St. Martin's and Point Wolfe. The cost of this has been estimated at $12 million. Then action should be taken at once to enlarge the present Fundy national park which is the second smallest park in Canada. Lands should be acquired on the western side to develop new beaches and playgrounds and camping areas. The existing 29 trailer hook-ups are woefully inadequate to meet the increasing demand. Why, one trailer club in Moncton alone has over 100 members. Land is available at present and at small expense could be equipped with sewage facilities and trailer hook-ups which would more than double the present capacity. An excellent nine hole golf course attracts more players than can be accommodated. Plans should be made to enlarge it as soon as possible.

To complete the unfinished section of highway and to bring existing highways and bridges up to standard would require an expenditure of some $25 million. It is not for a minute suggested that this be done immediately, but I do feel that a ten-year program with a total expenditure of $25 million would bring at least another 200,000 tourists to the area. On the basis of figures now available this would bring in some $10 million of additional revenue. Surely this would be one of the best ways imaginable for us to bring living standards in the maritimes up to the level of the rest of Canada. The need for such a project has long been recognized.

Construction of Fundy Trail

Before closing may I refer to an editorial in the Moncton Daily Times of October 6, 1966, headed "Fundy Trail Should be Built". In part this is what it says:

The construction of the trail would involve an expenditure in the vicinity of $25 million and this is no mean sum. Nevertheless, the expenditure would be a worth-while investment. It would stimulate tourism, thus benefitting Canada as a nation, and it would lead to a tremendous expansion of tourist facilities in the affected parts of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. The $25 million would generate many additional millions of dollars worth of building. The effects, both short-term and long-term, would spread through the areas' economy like ripples in a pond.

With every day of delay that passes the cost of the project will increase. The sound economy would be to embark upon this undertaking at an early date. Such a project would not be inflationary in this part of Canada for it is a well known fact —and the federal government has now recognized this—that the inflationary pressures which apply elsewhere in Canada are not operating here.

New Brunswick and Nova Scotia cannot shoulder the burden of building the trail themselves. Aid must be forthcoming from either the federal government or a federal agency such as the Atlantic Development Board. But the project must be tackled. Common sense demands it.

Mr. Guy Crossman (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time because the matter now before the house is of considerable interest to me. The proposed Fundy trail, in order to cover the shoreline of the bay of Fundy, would naturally be partly in New Brunswick and partly in Nova Scotia, and be connected at the provincial border by the isthmus of Chignecto. As you approach the northern end of this isthmus you enter Westmorland county, part of the constituency of Westmorland-Kent that I have the honour to represent in this house. Since it is apparent that a segment of this trail would pass through part of my riding it is only natural that I should show interest in any undertaking, no matter how small or big, if it will contribute to the economy of my riding and province.

How many times in past years have I wished for some magic wand which would enable me to grant the many valid requests coming from all segments of our local industries—the requests of farmers for better marketing facilities and higher incomes, the requests of the fishermen, to whom one's heart really goes out when one sees their need for better docking facilities and services. It has been their lifelong dream to see these improvements accomplished. I am also thinking of transportation rates that will enable our small and few processing industries to compete with the big and far away centres. I also think with emphasis about our tourist industry, the future potential of which cannot be overemphasized.

Requests from these and many other areas come our way each day, and it is our duty as elected members of parliament to shoulder our responsibilities. Every hon. member, I am sure, wishes to find immediate solutions to problems and it is here, Mr. Speaker, that we face reality.

Before continuing with my remarks about New Brunswick's participation I wish to read an editorial contained in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of February 26 which gives a clear indication of the priorities established by Premier Smith and his government, the members of which show responsibility in their decision. The heading is "The Fundy Trail", and the editorial says in part:

Premier Smith is reported to have made a most significant qualification to his official support for the building of the proposed vacation trail along the Fundy coastline of Nova Scotia.

Logan Barnhill, a member of the Fundy trail committee, said last week that Premier Smith had assured the committee of the provincial government's "solid backing" for the project. At an "opportune time", Mr. Smith was reported to have told him, the Nova Scotia government would give the project its full support, including financial aid.

• (6:20 p.m.)

"Opportune time" is surely a significant qualification. There is no doubt that the Fundy trail envisaged as a tourist highway running from the United States border along New Brunswick's Fundy coast and then westward again along the Nova Scotia coastline is a most desirable objective. At present, so much of the Fundy coastline on both sides of the bay, and so many of its beaches and small harbours, are inaccessible. Certainly on the Nova Scotia shore, the coastline often can be reached only by dirt roads. The scenic beauty of much of the area can be enjoyed only by a few patient and resolute motorists.

A Fundy trail might do for southeastern New Brunswick and the Minas basin and Annapolis valley areas of Nova Scotia what the Cabot trail has done for non-industrial Cape Breton. It would be a boon to tourism, the motel and catering industry, and to the economies of the communities along its route.

Yet today is not the appropriate time to start work on the Fundy trail. This province's trunk road system is now being transformed in several regions. New, high-speed highways are being built, at high cost, between Halifax and Truro along those portions of the trans-Canada Highway not yet modernized, between Halifax and the valley towns, and along the south shore.

Rightly, priority has been given to these "bread and butter" highways. The appropriate time for starting work on the Nova Scotia stretches of the Fundy trail will be when the major highway program has been completed and not before.

When one looks at the New Brunswick highways map it is immediately apparent that only the southwestern part of the province has highways completed to modern standards, namely, the trans-Canada highway leading from the Quebec border through Woodstock, Fredericton, Moncton to the Nova Scotia border and also to the P.E.I. ferry crossing at Cape Tormentine. One finds also the highway, in part finished, from St. Stephen to Saint John, and the highway from Saint John to the main trans-Canada at Sussex. The highways just mentioned cover in part only the requirement in the south and west areas. It will also be noticed that the eastern seaboard from Moncton to Caraquet and the northern part from Caraquet to Campbellton and then to St. Leonard, including villages too numerous to mention at this time, also the interior from Newcastle to Fredericton, are all served today by an arterial highway system far below the standards necessary to meet the present day traffic. These major arterial routes have the most basic effect upon economic development, and they constitute the highest priority for highway system development.

The effect of an adequate highway system on the cost of transportation with particular reference to railway freight charges was a subject of comment by the McPherson Royal Commission on Transportation. The report noted, and I quote:

> Expansion of highways has not been uniformly extensive in all regions of Canada and this fact explains some of the disparities which exist in freight charges among regions. In recent years it has become characteristic of Canada's transportation system that areas which are most heavily populated and industrialized have been able to afford the development of highway networks which, with the accompanying growth of motor transport, has forced the railways to lower their rates in these areas in response to competition. At the same time, those regions less generously endowed with the prerequisites for the rapid growth of a highway system have experienced not only a relative absence of competitive railway rates but also the burden of an increasing share of those railway expenses which can no longer be obtained from rail revenues in the competitive sectors.

The Fundy trail, were it to be constructed, would be a scenic highway and, as it is generally known, highway construction is essentially a provincial responsibility. Simply because the Fundy trail would cross provincial boundaries and involve more than one province does not make it, ipso facto, a concern of the federal government. It would remain the responsibility of the two provinces concerned and if they wished to make it a joint provincial responsibility, that would be a matter for their determination.

The two provinces, like the federal government, have established priorities for spending, and the provinces know full well that the federal government has limited funds and that federal money expended on one project may mean that money is not to be available for another one. So it is understandable that neither province has yet approached the federal government to provide assistance for the construction of the Fundy trail.

The federal government, through the Department of Public Works and the Atlantic Development Board, has committed substantial sums of money for road and highway programs in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. The development of these programs was in each case the consequence of joint federal-provincial planning which followed agreement on common priorities.

On November 4 of this year the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing) announced in the house that under the trans-Canada Highway agreements construction in all provinces had already been approved for a total cost of $1,196 million of which amount $90,900,000 would be spent in Nova Scotia and $121,900,000 in New Brunswick. Thus far the federal government has actually expended $724,400,000 on the program; of this $60,900,900 was spent in Nova Scotia and $86,400,000 in New Brunswick. In other words, 20 per cent of all federal money expended on the trans-Canada highway has been spent in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, provinces which contain less than 7 per cent of the country's population.

The federal share in the whole program thus far represents a cost of about $58 per Canadian whereas the share of the federal program completed in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick represents a cost of almost twice that, $106 per resident. So looking at the federal government's involvement in the construction of the trans-Canada Highway in those two provinces, wherein the Fundy trail would run, it is obvious, no matter what basis of comparison is chosen, that relative to elsewhere in Canada the involvement is too high.

In summary, the Department of Public Works has spent $147,300,000 in the two provinces; committed and yet unspent by the departmenf for the Trans-Canada Highway program is an additional $65,500,000.

Now let us turn to see the highway program of the Atlantic Development Board. In 1964, the A.D.B. initiated a program to upgrade and, in some cases, to construct main trunk highways in the four Atlantic provinces. Since that time the board has continued and expanded this program. Costs have been shared with the provinces and while the relative shares have varied from agreement to agreement, the board has always borne 50 per cent or more of the costs. For the portion of the trunk highway program in Nova Scotia, the board has committed $19,500,000; a similar amount has been committed for New Brunswick. As of October 31, 1968, a total of $27,471,988 had been spent in the two provinces, $11,324,889 in Nova Scotia and $16,147,099 in New Brunswick.

In addition to its investment in highway and road programs being administered by the Department of Public Works and the Atlantic Development Board, the federal government has made further expenditures for the same purpose through some other departments. For example, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick will see in this fiscal year the completion of the roads to resources program, a program of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. Invested in each province, essentially for tourist roads, will be the sum of $7.5 million. Tourism is also being enhanced by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development through its program of building highways and access roads to serve the country's national parks. Not to be forgotten, either, is the Department of Transport which has also expended money on roads in the maritimes.

Instead of trying to recount every dollar spent by the government of Canada in the two provinces, I merely wished to demonstrate that the government has spent and is spending considerable amounts for road and highway construction there. Before the federal government even now, there is a joint submission from the four Atlantic provinces that the government contribute 90 per cent towards their ten year highway program, the total cost of which will be in excess of $900 million. It is against this backdrop of information that the proposal for additional funds for the Fundy trail must be viewed.

Having put on the record a brief outline of the federal effort in the construction of highways for New Brunswick, in comparison with other provinces, I think it would be of interest to see the provincial effort. The last fiscal year for which I have reliable statistics is 1966-67. In that year New Brunswick invested $75.90 per capita on the highway system, against an average expenditure by the other provinces of $50.57 per capita. New Brunswick has the second highest per capita expenditure of all the provinces.

It may be of greater significance to consider the proportion of the provincial budget that is invested in the highway system. New Brunswick allocated to the highway system the highest percentage of net provincial budget of all Canadian provinces. I want to be very clear on this matter. I am discussing the expenditure of provincial dollars exclusive of federal contributions. During 1966-67 we spent 32.5 cents of every provincial dollar on the highway system. The average of the provinces to the west of New Brunswick was 16.7 cents, about one half of our investment.

I think I can say with some pride that the government of New Brunswick and its citizens have made a massive effort to solve our transportation problems and with the continuing co-operation that exists between the good offices of the federal and our provincial government I have full confidence that the people of New Brunswick will see these accomplishments realized, especially now that we have a federal minister and department charged with the responsibility of solving some of the problems in regions such as ours. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I will do everything possible on my part to work in complete co-operation with this minister, to see that this will be achieved.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to light an editorial from the Moncton Daily Times of April 26, 1968. It voices my sentiments with respect to one of my very good friends who was mentioned by the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Thomas) and who is also mentioned in the editorial, and it says:

> This newspaper is just as solidly in favour of the principle of the proposed Fundy trail as it ever was, but we feel that its cause was hindered rather than helped by the intemperate remarks made about New Brunswick highways minister Andre F. Richard by the general chairman of the Fundy trail committee, Mr. Mitchell Franklin of Saint John, during a meeting held in the Hillsborough regional High School on Tuesday night.
> Use of such uncomplimentary terms as "stooge", "obstructionist", "saboteur", to describe an elected minister of the crown was highly uncalled for, to say the very least. Mr. Franklin is not helping to hasten the ultimate realization of the Fundy trail project one little bit by resorting to tactics such as this. An approach of this kind could very well have the opposite effect—of causing the project to recede even farther into the future than it is now. Differences of opinion are one thing—the right to voice them is part and parcel of our free democratic process—but they should be tempered with much greater respect and understanding than was shown in this instance, if the right of free speech is to be kept on the high level plane that we have come to expect of our public speakers.

This newspaper is fully convinced, as is Hon. Mr. Richard too, that the construction of the Fundy trail along the New Brunswick and Nova Scotia shores of the bay of Fundy and the other bays leading into it is capable of conferring incalculable benefits upon the tourist trade of the maritime provinces. But this project is going to cost a very large sum of money, and after all, there is such a thing as priorities in this, as in many other things on which taxpayers' money could be spent.

The New Brunswick minister of highways never has come out in opposition to the Fundy trail—he has merely pointed out that his province, for the moment, has a large backlog of urgently needed, year-round highway construction projects that must be tackled quickly if this province is to progress economically in the manner in which it should. High on this priority list is a desperately needed new highway built to trans-Canada highway specifictions between Moncton and Campbellton. The present old road between these two cities has been the scene of a large number of the many fatal road accidents which have been plaguing this province for some time past.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I regret I have to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Crossman: I have just one more paragraph to quote.

It should be remembered as well, that there is only so much money to go round—it doesn't grow on trees, as Mr. Franklin seems to suggest. This also is a time when all governments are retrenching on expenditures in the face of a continuing contraction of the national economy. Thus Mr. Richard and the government as a whole can find no justification at the present time for proceeding with construction projects other than those that come in the category of dire necessities.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I have the highest regard for the minister of highways in New Brunswick, and under his able administration I am sure that if we follow some of his suggestions in the choosing of priorities we will certainly be able to build solidly for the future and continue our efforts in co-operation with the federal government.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I want to support the motion of the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Thomas) regarding the Fundy trail. I had intended in a perfunctory way to state that I think he deserves credit for bringing this motion forward and that I heartily support everything he said. But the hon. member for Westmorland-Kent (Mr. Crossman), who has just taken his seat, causes me to mention two or three matters in order to get at the basis of certain misconceptions. I certainly do not want to debate what the previous speaker said because really his whole speech could have been delivered in a provincial legislature rather than in this federal parliament. But his speech does give me an opportunity to state that there are many misconceptions about the Fundy trail and the responsibility for it.

I think most of them centre around the government of New Brunswick which has failed to see the great potential in the Fundy trail. Members of the provincial government have not had the vision with respect to this marvellous project that we hope hon. members of this house will have, and when I speak of this marvellous project I am thinking of the very colourful language used by the mover of the motion.

The first misconception is with respect to the provincial responsibility, and the second is that this road or trail would be used only during a certain time of the year, that is, three months during the summer tourist season. This project was brought forward some 20 or 25 years ago. Delegations came to Ottawa to discuss it. I recall that the first person who had a responsibility for and an interest in this was Hon. Milton F. Gregg, a minister of labour and minister of veterans affairs in those days. Since that time this matter has grown in interest and, as I say, has been debated, although perhaps not as extensively as it has been today. I believe it was debated mainly during consideration of the estimates of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, which has the responsibility for national parks.

The reason I became interested in this is that in New Brunswick we have a very attractive national park. As everybody knows, it is one of the better family recreational parks in Canada, although it is small when compared with other national parks. I believe it is the second smallest in Canada. We feel that if we are to have the advantages which a national park of Canada should have, the boundary of the park must be increased. Alongside this park there is the land which has been referred to today. This is old timber land. However it has no further use as timber land, and has no other value in the foreseeable future.

This land could be added to the park without much difficulty or expense on the part of the provincial authorities. In that way the federal government would then become responsible for a highway or a trail through the park. In other words, we are not fighting over provincial moneys; nor are we talking about federal moneys that would otherwise go into highways in another manner. We are simply talking about extending the area of the park. In that way, with the resources available in the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, a very substantial and inexpensive part of this highway could be built.

In all the time that I have debated this matter I have never said that the provincial government should provide $50 million of their very scarce highway funds for the building of a Fundy trail, or a super highway down the bay of Fundy. I hope this will be clear, because this misconception is the biggest red herring I have ever seen dragged around in a debate in my life. I think everyone agrees that this is a situation where the government should take some of the moneys available in different ways for park expansion, and use it for this purpose, so that so far as New Brunswick is concerned a very substantial part of the highway could be started.

This is a project which could be extended over the next 30, 40 or 50 years. It could be done in the same way the western parks were developed. We might ask how much money has gone into the parks of Jasper and Banff. Millions of dollars have gone into those parks, and they are beautiful. As Canadians we are proud of those parks. But I suggest we should do something like this in New Brunswick, and that is the reason I am supporting this measure.

Another misconception is that concerning the suggestion that this park, and the highway, would be used during a very short tourist season. I believe there is a very great future in New Brunswick in winter sports. Money is being spent for this purpose in many of our other national parks. It is being spent in the national park in Nova Scotia to develop opportunities for winter recreation. We believe that in New Brunswick we are entitled to have a full assessment of the skiing possibilities. An assessment was made in a minor way, but a complete assessment is necessary in respect of the Fundy National Park, and this should include the potential for winter activity. If this were done, it probably would be possible to make use of the park facilities which have been put there, and are now being developed by private enterprise. In this way the park could be used on a year around basis. The facilities which are there, and in many other parts of the area, could be developed.

I commend the hon. member who is new to the house for coming forward with this measure, one which would mean so much to his area and the southern part of New Brunswick. I believe he deserves great credit for standing up and putting this forward in the house. The hon. member for Westmorland-Kent (Mr. Crossman) is a good friend of mine, but I am sorry that he pulled this great red herring over the Fundy trail, because I think this is a project which can stand on its own four feet, without any of the bickering which goes on about it in the provincial legislature. It is a year around proposition, and I hope that all hon. members who are here today will put their minds on this beautiful park of undeveloped New Brunswick and consider this matter solely on its merits, in so far as we are responsible for it here in the way I have outlined. Then I know everybody will be pleased, as well as the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Thomas) and those of us who support the proposal, if we obtain at least 200 new supporters of the Fundy trail.

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to take part in this debate. First of all I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Moncton for bringing this very important matter to the attention of the house. It is one which should be considered very seriously, first of all because it requires a good deal of planning and because there is a large amount of money involved. Secondly, the people of the country, and of the Fundy area, have shown much interest in this project. I believe we should encourage the people to show their interest, because no doubt this is what the government means when it says it wants the people to participate.

I must say, now that I have heard the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell) speak, that I am a little confused. I believe he should have conferred with the hon. member for Moncton before he said he thought the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development should do this and that, to carry out a federal responsibility. The notice of motion I have before me reads:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of giving immediate consideration to the provision of special financial assistance to the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia for the construction of the Fundy trail from St. Stephen, New Brunswick to Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, using existing roads where possible, and assisting financially in connecting existing roads in order that a scenic highway be available to aid in the promotion of the tourist industry.

So, I think it is very clear that the question here is not in respect of a national park but of building a highway. The way in which I should like to approach this, first of all, is to agree with the hon. member for Moncton, that we should think about this from an industrial, and not necessarily from the highway point of view. First of all I must mention that, regardless of what else it is, the highway is still a public utility. It is still a means to an end; it is a highway to go to some place. It is not just by chance that in Canada highways are a provincial responsibility. However I am not attempting to say that the federal government should not consider this question, if it would be beneficial to the tourist industry. If so, it should be considered, because this government has committed itself to looking after areas of regional disparity.

The government has committed itself to an effort to activate the economy of New Brunswick and the other Atlantic provinces. That is the reason it is important to look at this from an industrial point of view. First of all, because of the amount of money involved, when we consider it from an industrial point of view we must look at the priorities. We must say, first of all, in respect of industrial development whether we should give special emphasis to tourism, secondary manufacturing, mining or to the fishing industry, which is in a difficult position today because of a poor market. I think all these things are important. We must decide within the promotion of industrial development where tourism stands. I have been in some areas where the tourist industry is very important; for example, California. The people do not go there only because there are good highways, they go because there are other attractions there.

I could mention such other areas as Nassau, Bermuda, Jamaica and Porto Rico. People do not go to those places because there are good highways. There must be other attractions for them. We build highways when we have excessive traffic; we do not build highways to create traffic.

I think the Fundy area is most inviting; it certainly is picturesque. If there is need of a highway, and there is an overflow of traffic through that area—and there might be one day—then I think we should consider building this highway. However, I do not think we should decide to build a highway only with the idea of promoting the tourist industry.

The hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Thomas) said that the Fundy trail would probably attract 200,000 tourists each year, but he has not said where he got this figure—whether it is a guess, the result of some economist's work, or a figure calculated by a specialist in the tourist industry. Perhaps it is a figure suggested by the people of the Fundy area; I do not know.

Let me point out that P.E.I. is a very attractive spot, one of the most beautiful islands in the world; yet it attracts less than 500,000 tourists a year. I wonder if this Fundy trail would attract that many tourists. Where would they come from? Would they be the tourists who now visit New Brunswick or those who visit the Cabot trail? I fail to see how the construction of this highway would bring 200,000 people to the area.

The hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell) has suggest that this highway could be used all year round. I agree it could be used all year round, but he has not specifically stated why the people would visit there in the wintertime. I understand there are no hills in the area on which ski slopes could be developed. I do not understand why people would be attracted to go to the Fundy area in the wintertime, and I say this because I understand the tourist industry in New Brunswick is handicapped by a short season. There are only two months during which people would be attracted.

In the last few years the trend has been for people to travel with camping trailers. This trend has reduced the amount of revenue in any area, because people are not taking advantage of existing lodging facilities. If an area has a park which people visit, even though there may be a million people each year, how much revenue goes to that local area? New Brunswick, it has been suggested, obtains $77 million from tourists each year, and it is said, further, that Nova Scotia obtains $60 million. But to this point in the debate no one has said how much money is obtained by the local areas from tourism.

It may be that if we had this highway in the Fundy area we might have ten service stations, ten restaurants and ten motels or hotels. How much employment would this create? Some people might argue that the building of the road itself would create employment, but if we consider our experience we will realize that the major expenditures involved in highway construction can be related to the leasing of equipment, and the purchase of raw materials and finished materials. Very little goes to the local people. A few labourers would be hired, but from a construction point of view we cannot say this would create many jobs.

I know there are other hon. members who wish to speak and I shall conclude my remarks quickly. Both $25 million and $12 million have been mentioned. Perhaps the $25 million would relate to the whole project, and the $12 million to the part from Saint John to St. Martin, or to Fundy. Before this house decides to spend even the $12 million, I think we should consider the revenue which will be created. It is not very clear how much money the tourist industry will bring in. I am not sure that it is clear whether this extra revenue will go to the Fundy park area, Saint John or the province of Nova Scotia.

Whenever it is found that an area has a tremendous flow of tourists it is usually because there is something more than a good highway to attract them. The government should not go ahead with this project on the basis of its being simply a highway project. However, if a future need develop, through more people going to the area, this highway may become necessary.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, as a Nova Scotian let me break into this New Brunswick love fest simply to indicate that not all of the Fundy trail would be constructed in New Brunswick. At least half of it would be constructed in Nova Scotia. I support this for two reasons. This is a natural way to build up what we have, and if we are going to deal with the problems of Atlantic Canada, surely we should do so on the basis of what is there. There is a potential for tourism.

Since part of this trail would go through the northern part of my riding I should like to say it would provide an opportunity to combine another great plan with the Fundy trail, and that is a crossing of some sort—a bridge or causeway—over the Shubenacadie river, thus providing a great land link between Windsor and Truro, which is sorely needed in the province.

There is one tourist facility in the area which everybody should see. I refer to the W. D. Lawrence memorial at Maitland, where they have the only wooden bedspring in North America. I do not want to interfere with the very important decision which I am sure the house will now come to in respect of this resolution.

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, I share the concern of the last speaker and I only wish there was more time for all of us who are interested in this matter to—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. It being seven o'clock this house stands adjourned until eight p.m.

At seven o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

PROCEDURE

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN FOURTH REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Blair that the fourth report of the special committee on procedure of the house, presented to the house on Friday, December 6, 1968, be concurred in, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield. (p. 3762).

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, it is with great feeling that I enter this debate. Being a new member and backbencher, I have listened to the debate with great interest. When the people of Marquette constituency sent me to Ottawa as their representative, I came here with great expectations and hope that this was to be the beginning of the just society, the beginning of a new era for Canada and Canadians. After the report of the procedure committee and the proposals of the government, I am alarmed and disillusioned, not only for the future of Canada but for the future of the House of Commons. We all realize that certain reforms have to be made in the House of Commons. All parties and members agree with this. But the extent to which the government proposes to change the rules is, I believe, an infringement of the rights of members of the house.

Mr. Speaker, I will mention the points which concern me. I appeal to the backbenchers on the government side to consider seriously the implications of these proposals. It has been pointed out that the government house leader could limit the debate to two hours. I found it most interesting when the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome) was asked whether, if a bill affecting mining in his area came up, he would be able to participate if there was a two-hour limit on debate. The hon. member was certain that through the good will of the government he would be allowed to participate in the debate. I ask: What would happen if the bill affected all mining areas of Canada, which would mean that the ridings of many members would be affected and they might want to speak? This would be impossible with a two-hour time limit. It will be said that these members could speak out at committee. This sounds good; but, Mr. Speaker, my experience with committee meetings is that often two or three committees are meeting at once—I mean committees which affect one's riding—and it is impossible to attend them all. In my short time here this situation has arisen more than once.

There is another point which alarms me about committees. We know a member can attend any committee meeting he chooses. However if he is not a member of the committee he can ask questions, but he cannot vote. Under this plan I feel that my constituency, or any constituency, is being discriminated against, because if these proceedings were left in the house any member could participate in the debate and vote. Again I stress that I am in favour of reform. But where does it stop?

This government is continually shrugging off the rights of opposition members. During this session we have had the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) introduce his now famous roster system for the presence of ministers in the house during the daily question period. Hardly a week goes by when it is not pointed out that this system is not only unfair but is not working; yet the Prime Minister will not change it. Originally he said we would try this idea to see how it worked. Any time he was questioned about it, we were given a shrug of the shoulders and a flippant answer.

I remind backbenchers on the other side of the house that some day they will be in opposition and will find how frustrating it is to want to raise an important question, which requires an answer that day, only to find that they cannot ask it because it is not the ministers day designated to be in the house. Or maybe it is a Friday, and because you cannot get the Speaker's attenion—and I fully realize the problems the Speaker faces in this regard —you are not able to put the question. Quite often it is the following Wednesday before the particular minister is in the house. This means it has taken six days to get an answer to your question, when it should have been given the day the question was asked. Yet, Mr. Speaker, this roster system continues.

This session started off with the Prime Minister silencing his cabinet ministers. Next the government set up the roster system for the attendance of ministers. The next step was for the Prime Minister to bypass his own members and set up his own lines of communication or, as the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) called them, Trudeau's snoop troops. Now the Prime Minister wants to silence the opposition. Where is all this leading? I ask, what will be next? With the growth of staff in this government, and the number of executive assistants overflowing into the diplomatic gallery, perhaps the next step will be that the government will take over the press gallery.

Again I stress that we are in favour of reform; but we are not in favour of proposed rule 16-A. Rule 16-A would allow the government house leader to say how long any debate would run, and this is against our whole democratic system. Could we on this basis operate our school boards, our municipal, our councils, our church groups, our service clubs or any organizations which are so much a part of our life? They could not operate on this basis, and neither can parliament.

Mr. Speaker, during this debate hon. members on the government side have said that the opposition are holding up legislation. As an example, they claim that the three agriculture bills took three weeks to pass in the house. Why did they take three weeks? It was because the government would not bend in any way or allow amendments to those bills. What kind of bills did we end up with? The number of complaints I have received with regard to cash advances on farm stored grain confirms that this new act discriminates against the small farmer on a six bushel quota. We repeatedly asked the government to tell us the interest rates under the Farm Improvement Loans Act and the Farm Credit Corporation Act, but it replied that these rates would be set by governor in council and we need not worry. We now have the new interest rates. Under the Farm Improvement Loans Act the interest rate went from 5 per cent to 7½ per cent, and under the Farm Credit Corporation Act it went from 5 per cent to 7¾ per cent. If the government members think this is good legislation, I ask them to come with me to western Canada and talk to the farmers, and they will soon find out what the farmers think of the legislation.

I maintain that if any government proposes good legislation, and the opposition delays it by needless debate, the Canadian voters will pass judgment at the next election. My point is that if the government presents good legislation it will pass in any parliament with limited debate. The Prime Minister says we are not in touch with the people, and the people want parliamentary reform. I should like to quote from an editorial which appeared in the Brandon Sun of September 12 this year. It shows the concern of people over the proposed rules changes. I quote from this newspaper as follows:

> In addition, however, there are rather alarming reports about government efforts to streamline house procedures. Without question procedures sorely need streamlining, but if reports such as that carried earlier in the week by Peter Newman are accurate, the government is carrying things too far.
> It must be remembered that parliament is moving into a new phase, a phase of majority government for the first time in over five years. Some restrictions on debate which were considered necessary during the period of minority government are potentially dangerous when the government is in a strong majority position. The opposition can no longer defeat the government. Therefore its only weapon is debate, debate aimed at bringing government misdeeds to the attention of the public. In a very real sense the public must be a check on the government, and the opposition represents a sizeable percentage of the public.
> The new rules have not been made public. When they are, they should be examined carefully. Efficiency at the expense of full discussion should not be parliament's goal.

• (8:10 p.m.)

It almost seems from the government's stand on 16-A that they want to make a sausage factory out of parliament, so far as the passing of legislation is concerned. The question has already been asked how the government feels it can prepare good legislation to present to the House of Commons and keep it operating on an assembly line basis. I think this point deserves serious thought. Judging from my short experience here in the house it would seem to me that it cannot be done.

May I stress again that we are in favour of procedural reforms, but we do not support rule 16-A. Government members say the voters have given them a mandate and they are a majority government. This is right. However, they must remember that the opposition groups are united on this point, and although we are not the government we represent more than 50 per cent of Canadians.

The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) pointed out the other day that we in the opposition are united on this point, and we represent the majority of the Canadian people.

I do not want to labour this point, as there are many hon. members who feel as strongly about rule 16-A as I do, and who want to speak on it. May I again remind the backbenchers and any other hon. members on the government side who have not sat on the opposition side of parliament, that they should give long and serious consideration to all the aspects of rule 16-A because some day they will be in opposition and then they will have a better understanding of what this fight is all about. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has stated, you have been given a mandate to run the store for the next four years, but you must remember you do not own the store.

In closing may I say that we are in favour of reforming the procedural rules of this house, as I have stressed. However, so far as rule 16-A is concerned, we are not only fighting the government on this point, we are fighting for the rights of the Canadian people.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin by congratulating the hon. member for Marquette on having made his maiden speech on such a very important issue as the change in rules which will affect our parliamentary life in the period ahead. I think he has made his points very clearly and strongly, and his speech, I believe, has been typical of the speeches made in this debate and in the debate which is going on in the press throughout the country. I have been impressed by the sober and temperate tone used both in the house and throughout the country, because I believe there must have been a temptation to make sensational reading out of some of this material; yet this temptation has not been yielded to. I think people realize that this is a very serious matter and that we should be careful to deal with it responsibly.

It is not my intention tonight to make a detailed analysis of the rule changes in the proposal now before us, and for two reasons. First, this has already been done exhaustively and well, and I think we know now what the significance of the proposed changes is likely to be. Furthermore these proposed changes have been explained to us in the house by the best legal and constitutional minds here, and they in turn have cited other authorities along legal, constitutional and historical lines. I want to say how much a great many of us appreciated the speech made by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) this afternoon, a speech which was philosophical and historical and at the same time reflected a great depth of thought, and much reading and consideration of this whole problem.

Nor do I think there is any need to take up time justifying the necessity for updating the rules of parliament. All of us here, even those who have sat here for only a few months since the opening of this parliament, have become convinced of the need for change and of the fact that the machinery of parliament should be updated, and made more streamlined and more efficient. So I do not think there can be any argument on that point. Where the argument comes in is as to the method in which this updating and streamlining is to be carried out.

We in the opposition parties are of one mind. This may seem strange because we are not of one mind on a great many other methods of getting things done. But in this particular matter we feel sure that any changes, if they are to preserve the democratic character of this parliament, can be made only by agreement and consent of all parties in this chamber. Unfortunately the attitude of the government has been that they will listen to what we have to say, but then they will make up their minds; and we will have to take it because they have what it takes to make us swallow the new rules, whether we want to or not. We do not think that this is the way to make changes in a democratic parliament.

Somebody has already pointed out in this debate that there are two ways of achieving a totalitarian form of government, a one party monolithic government. One way is to ban all the parties but one. The other way is to permit the members of the parties to be elected to parliament, and then either to gag them at once, or gradually take away their facilities for expression and for bringing their constituents' ideas before the body of the house.

I believe that this is the method being followed in these proposed rule changes. We on the opposition side agree that this should not be done. There are two alternatives: Either the government believes that these rule changes should be forced upon parliament to make parliament work more effectively, or else they are trying to force them on parliament in order to bypass parliament altogether. We believe that the effect of forcing these changes on parliament will be to enable the government to bypass parliament altogether. We do not believe that this is permissible, and we would not be doing our duty as members of this house, we, who have had these democratic privileges handed to us, if we did not ensure that the essence of democracy is handed on to other people who will sit in this parliament long after we are gone.

The effect of rule 16-A is to bypass parliament. In the first place it gives the government the power to dictate to parliament because it gives them the power to enforce closure ahead of time. I would like to remind hon. members opposite of what happened in 1956 when, in the infamous pipe line debate, closure was applied, not before the debate began but after it had proceeded only a little way. When that happened, to put it in the simplest and most expressive language possible, all hell broke loose and parliament determined henceforth that it would not suffer again that crippling blow to parliamentary privileges.

The effect of the application of closure was to put the then existing government out of power. I want to warn this government that should it be so foolish as to insist on doing the same thing again only in an even more objectionable form, on applying closure before we even start the debate, the same fate will again overtake this government, because no democracy-loving people will put up with it.

An hon. Member: You are so right.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I know I am right. Anyone who remembers the pipe line debate will not want to go through that again in a hurry.

That is the first thing that rule 16-A does. The second is to gag and silence the ordinary member. I do not want to use the term "back-bench member" because I think it implies a feeling of humility and a second rate status. But the ordinary members are important, no matter from what part of Canada they come. It is vital that they be given the opportunity to put the needs of their constituents before this body. I suggest that rule 16-A would gag, choke and throttle the private member whose constituents sent him here to do a job.

When the proposed rule 16-A is coupled with other developments that we have seen take place this fall, then I think the situation becomes ominous. For example, reference has been made to the roster system. What is the roster system? It has the effect of removing on most of the days of the parliamentary week about half of the cabinet ministers, with the result that about half of the subjects which are raised receive no answer. The worst feature is that the only day on which we do have access to all the members of the cabinet is the short day in the middle of the week with the half hour question period. On Monday, the day when we have a full hour, when we return from our ridings with fresh problems and difficulties, about half of the cabinet ministers are beyond the reach of our questions.

Getting the ear of the media is not the only matter. There are many issues of crucial importance which require answers within a very short period. If members have to wait over the week end, plus an additional one or two days, before they can question a cabinet minister, then they might as well not receive an answer because the issue is dead. Consequently the roster system has eliminated many of the democratic rights of the members of this house.

I should also like to couple this rule 16-A with what is happening to our committee system. I like the committee system; I think it has good potential. However, I sat on a committee which considered the estimates of several departments—or at least was supposed to, though the committee did not have time to consider them all. The members of that committee wanted badly to question the minister, but we were told by the officials of the department that they would have to take our request to the minister; the officials themselves either could not answer for government policy or did not have the authority to state it.

Again I suggest that this is depriving the members of this house of their democratic rights and privileges. Rule 16-A throttles private members because it brings the threat of closure before debate starts. This, added to the introduction of the roster system and the new committee structure which does not require members to attend, is an indication that the government is already depriving hon. members of a great chunk of their democratic liberties. We dare not let rule 16-A be adopted by this house.

If the government does not wish to destroy the power of parliament in general and of the ordinary private member in particular, then why is it proposing this rule 16-A? Does the government need this extra power? Hon. members opposite went to the people last June and told them that they needed a majority because they were in a minority position and could not get legislation through. The electorate replied that they wanted legislation to go through, and hon. members were given a good, safe majority.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): The hon. member applauds, but I suggest to him that with this majority the government can already override the combined opposition in this house. Therefore, why do they want rule 16-A? I should like an answer to that question. The government already have a majority; why do they need the over-kill? What are they afraid of? What will be the next part of our parliamentary system the government will want to abolish? Somebody suggested that the press gallery would be the next victim, but I am pleased to see that so far the press gallery has been able to withstand any pressure that may have been brought to bear to whittle down the rights and liberties of its members. The press has treated the whole matter in an exceedingly responsible fashion.

There is one circumstance of the government's desire for extra power that is very suspicious to members on the opposition side. If the government honestly believe that their majority vote is sufficient and they are not proposing to use Rule 16-A for purposes they should not, then why are they afraid to send this rule 16-A back to the committee for revision, in light of this debate? Why are the government afraid of this parliament? I would urge members on the government side of the house to lose such fears and to put their trust in the democratic system. Do not let them imagine that we on this side of the house are not anxious to get ahead with government legislation, because we are, and I shall deal with that point in a moment.

As I said at the beginning, we believe that parliament should be streamlined and made efficient. I also said that how this is done is very important. We say there is only one way to do this, and that is by democratic agreement among the parties in the house.

I now raise another question. Parliament should be streamlined and made efficient—for what purpose? Government spokesmen consider that they have a perfectly ironclad answer when they say that parliament must be made efficient so that the country's business can be carried out efficiently. That is no answer to me. It merely raises further questions. I want to know, what business; whose business?

I think the best way to illustrate my point is to give an example. I come from a riding in the heart of Vancouver. A big part of Vancouver is my riding. The constituency of Vancouver-Kingsway consists of many elements that are typical of the big cities across the country. Vancouver happens to be the third largest, but there are many other cities in very much the same category. Vancouver has a very large percentage of small homeowners, family people who work at every imaginable type of job in various industries and services in the community. Such people are the very backbone of Canada, the salt of the earth of this country. Fortunately most members of the house have a good share of such people in their constituencies.

The needs of the constituents in this type of riding are not at all hard to define. First they need steady jobs at wages or salaries that will enable them to enjoy the modern standard of living for themselves and their families that their work has helped make possible. Second, they need the kind of training and retraining that will enable them to keep up with changes in our automated world. Third, they need to know that their sons and daughters are going to get training in this fast changing world that will enable them to earn their keep in the world.

Fourth, they need modern housing to fit their stage in life; whether it is a self contained home in which children have space to develop or an apartment for young business couples or older people. They need whatever type of home is suitable. Fifth, they need security against the hazards of sickness, accident, invalidity, loss of the breadwinner and other income draining factors. Sixth, they need opportunities for recreation, travel and real education as distinguished from mere training, whether it be training to be an engineer, a plumber or a doctor. In a word, these are the real needs of the people of Vancouver-Kingsway; they are also the needs of the people in every riding of the country from Vancouver island to Newfoundland.

The people of Vancouver-Kingsway sent me here to voice their needs; they sent me here to work for the attainment of those measures of legislation that will meet their needs. That is why I and other opposition members are so much opposed to proposed standing order 16-A. Its effect would be to prevent us from voicing the needs of the people of our riding in parliament. As I said a moment ago, I have no intention of voting to gag, muzzle and silence the members of this house who are determined to do the job they were sent here to do.

If this measure goes through it will place in the hands of the cabinet enough power to choke us. It is useless saying it will not. Once the cabinet has this power to choke off debate, most debates will be of one or two day's duration. That means that only front-benchers and one or two others in each party will have a chance to voice the needs of their constitutents, no matter how important those needs may be. We will not have a chance to be heard on matters which are vital to the people in our ridings. At best only a small fraction of hon. members will have a chance to speak.

"Ah," says the government, "but we are reasonable men; you can trust us to put forward the right priorities. We are out to build the just society. You people need not worry; even if you are not speaking from the front benches you can be sure that we shall bring forward the right priorities." To me it is saddening and significant to note that among the measures we have considered since opening, there has not been a single item that touches on the needs I have outlined as being important to the people of Vancouver-Kingsway and, indeed, to the majority of people all across Canada. There is not a single one. Not one of these items has the government introduced in this session—not one. The only item to come forward affecting the people of Vancouver-Kingsway was the one to do with post office rates, something they did not appreciate, or had a right to expect.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): When we have raised certain matters during the question period—and it is difficult under the rules, Mr. Speaker, to develop a question and give its background so that it makes sense—we have learned certain things. These things concern the people of my riding and the ridings of hon. members across this country. To make sure that these matters were acted on is why the people in my constituency of Vancouver-Kingsway sent me here. That is why the majority of the people in this country sent their members here, because what I am about to refer to affects almost everybody here. The government did not act on the matters I am about to refer to, although it could have done so. We tried desperately to raise these matters during the question period, as I say, and we learned the following.

No. 1: On winter works, we were told that the program had been cut out this year. The government said they believed there should be other measures to take its place. They are looking for those other measures and do not seem to have found them yet.

No. 2: With regard to family allowances, we were told there would be no increase this session.

No 3: On basic old age security pensions, we were told there would be no increase this session.

No 4: On veterans allowances, again we were told there would be no increase this session.

No. 5: On the subject of superannuated civil servants—and I raise this matter at the risk of trespassing on the territory of my colleague from Winnipeg North Centre—there was still no promise of action on a report, agreed to unanimously 18 months ago, which said that pensions ought to be raised.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Shame.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): On No. 6: Medicare, we were told that within five years the federal government would get out of the field and would allow the provinces to go ahead with it, if they wished to. I ask, what chance do the people of Prince Edward Island have to obtain a decent medicare system? My province, British Columbia, the wealthy province of Ontario and the oil rich province of Alberta without doubt will be glad to help the people of Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland and New Brunswick obtain medicare. I say that because we want one Canada, and carrying out the government's wishes with regard to medicare means that instead of one Canada we shall have ten Canadas. I do not care how much you may talk about Canadian unity, that is what it would mean. The government's proposal means that the country will be split up. To return to my original list:

No. 7: housing, we were told there would be no legislation before spring.

No. 8: Unemployment; it was drawn to the government's attention last Friday that at present 338,000 Canadians are unemployed, 49,000 more than one year ago. The Prime Minister's only answer to that was that there are also 268,000 more jobs—cold comfort for the 338,000 Canadians who are walking the streets looking for jobs that are not there.

I have enumerated the government's record to date in some of the more obvious areas. I ask, why do they want this power? They have sufficient power to legislate in every one of those areas I have mentioned.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): They want power to do nothing.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, you know the government's record and you can guess at their attitude. Surely from all this you have a forecast of their intentions. You can guess what they want to do when proposed standing order 16-A is passed. And, one may ask, what is that? They want to throttle the private members in the house, including their own. Some of us do not intend to be party to this destruction of parliament.

Of course there are white papers and task forces and regional desks, royal commissions, committees and everything else under the sun; these are all devices to keep the government away from reality; these are excuses which are put in the way of legislation which should have been introduced away back at the beginning of the fall. As I said, of course there are white papers, task forces, regional desks and advisory boards; but the people cannot live on a diet of hot air and white papers. Nor can they live on a diet of the Prime Minister's promises. He goes out talking with women—whether they are young or good looking I do not know—and it is said he tries to discover their problems. Then he goes talking to all the other people—with chambers of commerce, etc., etc., etc., about their problems, and that is called a dialogue. I say we have had enough of this sort of thing from the government. What we want is action.

An hon. Member: Legislation.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway) We want legislation; we want bills that will help us to solve the problems and needs of this country. When are we going to get legislation? If proposed standing order 16-A is passed by this house it will take much longer for legislation to be brought forward than if the private members' rights were left unimpaired and respected. The people of Canada have been very patient and are still patient. They are giving the government every chance to make good. As a matter of fact they can hardly believe that the government does not intend to go through with all the things it promised last June. The people believed the government would keep its promises. They still believe it is some horrid joke when we tell them what is happening. They cannot realize that they will get no action on housing until next spring—that all they will get is the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) travelling hither and yon across the country finding out things which are already sufficiently well known. They still believe this is some nightmare from which they will awaken. They still believe that someone who looks as nice as Mr. Trudeau would not refrain from doing some of the things which are so important for our people.

They are still waiting, and they will keep on waiting for a little while longer because as yet they cannot believe the evidence of their senses. But when they realize that this government, with its safe majority, does not intend to use that majority to legislate for the needs of the people; once they get it through their heads that this government does not intend to legislate for the just society, but just for the society of the affluent, then hon. gentlemen opposite had better look out.

There was a king once in England who lost his head—twice. He lost it once when he took up the theory of divine right. He lost it finally when he insisted on putting this theory into practice and acting out his thoughts. This government is still at the stage of believing in its divine right, in theory. I suggest they would do well to reconsider rule 16-A before they begin to put their ideas about divine right into practice. That sort of thing is exceedingly dangerous.

If members opposite do not believe me, let them recall also that there was a queen, once, in France—I am being bicultural and balancing off England and France—who, when she heard that the people were in need of bread, was supposed to have said: Let them eat cake. She, too, it will be recalled, lost her head, as did the king.

I would hate to think of this sort of thing happening in Canada, particularly to our own gallant Grand Charles I of Canada. He, too, is playing with fire when he stirs up the expectations of people with talk of a just society, and then gags their representatives so that they cannot protest the building of a society just for the powerful and the affluent. Before it is too late I appeal to the government to reconsider this dangerous rule 16-A. If they are not impressed by the fact that it is dangerous for the future of democratic government in this country, let them at least regard it as being dangerous to themselves. Rule 16-A is just as dangerous for this government as closure proved to be for the government in 1956. I implore the government to bear in mind that though the introduction of closure in the pipe line debate did defeat the government, it had a lot of bad side effects for the country. It lost much of the respect for parliament, and as a result of those events the good name of parliament was under a cloud for a long time. If we let 16-A pass, parliament will suffer again; and Canada cannot afford nowadays to run the risk of a situation of this kind recurring.

Let this government remember that parliament was created precisely as a check on the power of the majority to ride roughshod over the will of the minority. Let them remember they have a majority in this house, they already have the weapons they need. But let them not try to force their will on the opposition by making closure the rule of debate. Let them send this proposal back to the committee so that agreement may be reached by the ordinary democratic procedure of argument and compromise. If they are willing to do that, then as soon as we get back here after the Christmas recess, if they will introduce the kind of legislation for which the people are crying out from Newfoundland clear through to Victoria, they will find no House of Commons anywhere in the world more willing to go along with the compromises required to make this democratic parliament work, and work well, in the interests of Canadians.

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to say a few words concerning the motion now under consideration and, in particular, on the amendment to standing order 16-A proposed in the fourth report of the special committee on procedure.

Ever since our parliament has been in existence, that is, for the past one hundred years, the Canadian people have been fighting for their rights and prerogatives. Can we say that these rights and prerogatives have been respected by parliament when we are still fighting to preserve them today? How is it that, after one hundred years, we should still have to spend our time talking about our rights and prerogatves instead of doing something for the people?

From time to time, there is talk of changing and improving the standing orders, but ever since it came to power the present majority government speaks of renovating everything. When it is realized that the people are displeased or dissatisfied, they talk of changing something.

This may give them the hope that at long last the government is sincere and that it has taken a sober resolution of working and legislating in their favour.

Mr. Speaker, it is ridiculous to see that the proposed changes bear only on the most elementary and superficial instruments of parliamentary procedure.

There is talk of the time allotted to the various stages legislative measures must go through, a purely superficial question that concerns the many ramifications of procedure, but great care is taken not to touch the essential. Indeed, in the committees, great care is taken to select members from various parties, various nationalities, various regions of Canada, various languages or creeds, but when it comes to important committees, such as the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs an absolute majority of members of the party in power is always guaranteed by appointing a chairman and competent senior officials who are under the authority of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and in favour of the policy adopted in advance by the government.

Mr. Speaker, we are fighting for the right to speak, which we have had in the past, but which we now may be denied. The opposition lost the right to act several decades ago. In this house, no member of the official opposition, can introduce any bill whatsoever which entails expenditures for he is called to order. This is to say that the opposition has very little weight; its members may only express what they think, what they feel and criticize such and such a bill. We are forbidden to act. Actually, just like in the parliamentary committees, we can change nothing at all. If we propose amendments to bills, we are always defeated by the opposition. In fact, we do not count for much in this parliament.

The Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) said the other day in a speech that we should try to find a balance, but that would not solve the problem, even if we adopted standing orders contrary to the ones we had. In fact, that would solve neither the problems of Canadians who are hungry or unemployed, not the problems of the increase in the interest rates. That will not prevent the government from increasing taxes.

There was no rule 16-A before, and that did not prevent the government from increasing taxes, namely the tax on building materials. That did not prevent the government from establishing department after department and employing thousands of rather well-paid public servants. Those departments or public servants have not solved the problem because it still exists.

Mr. Speaker, if we want to change something, the head of the organization must be the target. The members are not entitled to take any action any more and we are now being deprived of our sacred right to voice our opinion. We have fought for this right for a hundred years and we will have to start again. It is not logical that we should have to fight today to make sure that we shall keep these prerogatives, these rights. It is illogical.

The government and the opposition are responsible for that situation. In fact, the opposition which we have had in the past and which we still have during this debate have suggested no solution. The hon. Leader of the Opposition did criticize the government, but he did not suggest any solution to reform this parliament. He did not say what was wrong in this parliament nor what was preventing it from taking action in order to give the Canadian people what they are entitled to.

In his speech on the measure under consideration, the Leader of the Opposition neglected to talk about the reforms aimed at giving the people what they are entitled to. He neglected to suggest solutions to increasing taxes. He neglected to suggest a solution to the city of Montreal and the province of Quebec which are no longer able to finance their operations. As for the municipalities and the school boards which are forever increasing taxes, bleeding the citizens in a terrible and shameful way, he does not mention them.

If one advocates reforms, one must explain them, because it is not enough to criticize and condemn.

This discussion on the rights and prerogatives of hon. members leads me to talk about the will of the people which is an indivisible whole. In fact, divided and broken up, it disappears because it cannot be the sum total of the wills of its parts. Man needs truth, security and justice. That is what we are fighting for in this house.

I am more and more convinced that after rule 16-A has been adopted, the government will hold in its hands control of the whole country. Whether or not we will admit it, that is a colossal responsibility that the government wants to assume.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that we, of this generation, must base our beautiful speeches on concrete and positive action. Our generation has been hearing beautiful speeches for a hundred years, but it has lived in pettiness. Beautiful speeches have never put bread on the table of Canadians. Amendments to standing orders alone will not bring about solutions which are liable to help our economy.

Changes in methods of speeches in this house or in doing such thing at such hour rather than at another time will not contribute to adoption of guiding principles and scientific methods that are adapted to the facts and realities of the nation.

Mr. Speaker, in the light of the present parliamentary reforms, what is the solution envisaged by the government in order to establish a new and just society which will insure, on a permanent basis, this measure of justice and freedom the Canadian people have been expecting for a long time? What can the Canadian people hope for? What are the plans made by the government in order to build a better world and to make parliament free of prejudice?

Mr. Speaker, subjecting to amoral legislation all the members of this so-called free parliament is restricting and limiting them in the pursuit of their freedom. This is contrary to natural law and to democratic principles under the guise of law and, consequently, the law of the modern world.

Essentially, these standing orders maintain the right of force. We should substitute therefor a fundamental legislation passed by the representatives of the people based on respect for rights and whereby all citizens are bound to the same duties and obligations. This should become an increasingly concrete and respected reality. Those are the great principles on which the human city should be built.

Mr. Speaker, man needs a certain number of specific and concrete liberties which are necessary if he is to be master of his destiny. Everything which is imposed reflects on the respect of man and introduces a factor of disorder in society. Standing order 16-A which would withdraw the right of speech to the members of parliament would be a factor of disorder if it were approved by the members of the opposition, because they are the members truly representative of the people, who must speak on behalf of those who cannot come here, whether they are rich, poor, powerful or weak. Consequently, freedom of thought and speech, without any restriction or reservation, must be unlimited. It is particularly true in the case of philosophical, political, economic and cultural views. The free exercise of the mind should not entail any danger in a society based on the respect of man, because the two nations intermingle.

It is less inconvenient to allow views to be expressed than to exert a restraint on the mind of members by refusing them that freedom. Freedom of opinion must not suffer any restrictions. The free exercise of intelligence is the only means to ensure a balance of responsibilities in a society whose members have necessarily reached different levels of education. In our society, one cannot conceive someone who would say: "I am the law, the right, the power".

Considered in its everyday life, a nation is at the same time a land, a soul, one or several languages, a history, a culture, a present and a future, an aggregate of mores, customs and traditions, a universe of tendencies and aspirations which it would be difficult to change, without the state becoming the absolute master. This is contrary to the rights and to justice so much sought after by free men.

For man as for nations, it is essential to live according to one's own truth, to accomplish oneself according to one's own vocation and one's own genius. It is by remaining itself that a nation, just like man, will be more useful to humanity and more faithful to the human race.

Therefore, it is not possible to have a law decide that the same political, economic and social system is valid for the whole nation. Each nation must choose of its own accord the means it considers best to build a land and cities.

Uniformity, Mr. Speaker, is the death of a nation, while diversity is life. We must give ourselves our own forms of legal, economic and social power. We do not have the right to copy the rules of procedure that belong to others, because our aspirations are different. We do not have the right to copy the British rules that date back 50, 100 or 200 years, because we are a distinct nation. We must adapt a rule based on Canadian realities and principles.

The right hon. Prime Minister was saying the other day that we should copy the British rules. What has England done so well in the past that we should copy? We are not in England, but in Canada, and it is with Canadian provisions that we must reform our institutions.

We are intelligent enough and we have ministers and a Prime Minister who are intelligent enough to allow us to draw up ourselves legislative measures which will be distinctively Canadian. That Mr. Speaker, is how we will be able to give Canada the standing orders and legislation adapted to its needs. We must decide on our own legal, political and social powers and our own social system. It is neither possible nor desirable to establish the same social, legal and economic structures for all nations. On the other hand, it seems necessary to establish certain basic principles.

The role of the state is to legislate, to govern. There may be only one man who governs, but all the elected representatives of the nation take part in the legislative process. What everybody says and thinks must not only be put on the record but it must weigh in the balance of power. In a democracy, legislation results from a considerable number of actions, reactions, interference between the needs of the nation and the needs of men. It implies long analyses, confrontations, syntheses. It is necessary to weigh, compare, anticipate the consequences, which requires team work. We, the members of the house, constitute a team, and we must work, forgetting our political allegiances, for the good of the people, in order to give them the laws, the rules of procedure and the institutions which will serve them.

In human society, the state must play the role of an orchestra leader and set the example of free and responsible activity. The only conceivable order lies in respect of moral law, of which man is the beginning and the end, there is no way other than that which starts from man and leads to him. Everyone has great responsibilities in that field and every man has duties that he cannot shirk. He must therefore discharge the mandate entrusted to him by the people, according to his status and his talents, his know-how and his knowledge.

In order to express their will, the people must be free to express themselves on what they can really know. And for that, men must be free to consult, to discuss, without obstruction. Now, rule 16-A obstructs the action of our statesmen, of all members of this house. We therefore cannot accept such an attitude on the part of the government.

Mr. Speaker, I could talk at length on this, but much has been said about it in the last few days; it seems that the whole opposition is ready to make changes and to improve parliamentary procedure provided it is for the good of the people. It is willing to accept some reforms, but not ready to lose its right to express itself. We must retain for the people their freedom and their to speak their mind, because those are sacred rights. Freedom is essential to man and nobody has the right to alter it, even in a democracy.

If we refuse to follow democratic principles, we might as well appoint two or three good dictators, close parliament and all go home, leaving the helm in the hands of the dictators. That would be a communist style government. But if we prefer a democracy, our legislation should not deprive members of the right to speak because that would be against the spirit and the letter of the very democratic principles we are here to protect.

It is our responsibility to uphold the principles of democracy. We have been elected under a democratic system and we are not going to yield to any kind of dictatorship. We shall fight to the end in order to prevent dictatorship from prevailing in parliament. We already have far too much of it here. While members may still be free to express their own opinions, they have actually lost the right of taking any practical steps. We are here as representatives of the people and our sole purpose should be to serve them well rather than building up our own private business or helping enrich, at the expense of the people, a small number of citizens across Canada.

The people of Canada have had enough, they cannot live because they are taxed and taxed again and crushed by all kinds of means. And never in this parliament does anyone find time to talk about them. There is never time for that. There is time to talk about such things as the measure under consideration tonight but I would much rather talk about political and economic reform. That is what we should talk about but there is no time and when we try to do it in committees or when we want to suggest amendments, we are always defeated by the government and even by some part of the opposition which does not believe in reforms. Yet they are careful not to make any because they do not see the need for them. They have no solution to any problem and they continue to be satisfied with the old system, wading in dirty and polluted water that cannot be purified in order to allow the people to live in a normal, decent and healthy way.

[English]

Mr. Ray Perrault (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker and hon. members, this has been a good debate and I think it has proceeded in the best tradition of parliament. We have heard excellent cases put forward by those speaking on all sides of this extremely important and urgent matter of procedure. I think in the main the views expressed have been responsible views.

I speak as one with a good deal of experience in opposition. I served in one of the most interesting legislatures in Canada for a period of nine years, at times under difficult circumstances. My experience on the opposition "barbed wire" was trying at times. I think I am as aware as any member of this house of the value and the necessity of good responsible opposition. I will not be party to any action by any government here now or in the future, to take away from the opposition its rights and responsibilities under our great parliamentary traditions. Without good and effective opposition, governments degenerate and deteriorate. They have in the past. The opposition is an integral and important element in the constitutional organization of parliament. As a former prime minister, the right hon. member for Prince Albert, said on October 27, 1949, in a most excellent speech with reference to the responsibilities of the opposition—and this is set out at page 69 of the text:

> "When it properly discharges them the preservation of our freedom is assured. The reading of history proves that freedom always dies when criticism ends. It upholds and maintains the rights of minorities against majorities. It must be vigilant against oppression and unjust invasions by the cabinet of the rights of the people. It should supervise all expenditures and prevent over-expenditure by exposing to the light of public opinion wasteful expenditures or worse. It finds fault; it suggests amendments; it asks questions and elicits information; it arouses, educates and moulds public opinion by voice and vote. It must scrutinize every action by the government and in doing so prevents the shortcuts through democratic procedure that governments like to make."

This was a good speech. It was delivered by the former prime minister to the Empire Club in Toronto on the occasion of one of its meetings in 1949.

As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said in one of his good speeches—

An hon. Member: When was that?

Mr. Perrault: It was entitled, "The Role of the Opposition" and it is available in our library. The hon. member was speaking to the Empire Club at the Royal York hotel on March 21, 1957. He talked about the opposition and if the house will bear with me I should like to quote him when he said:

> We who sit in the opposition in the House of Commons have all sorts of epithets hurled at us. Don't worry, we hurl some across the floor as well. We are called obstructionists, time-wasters, and so on. I submit that ours is a great tradition, that we play a vital role in the democratic process —a role without which our legislative process would not be democratic—and that posterity will continue to bless the pertinacity of those to Mr. Speaker's left who do their job as best they can.

He is right.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, during his brief period in opposition said "In opposition we form part of the peoples' jury and it is our duty to render a conscientious verdict regardless of person or party".

These three views about the importance and the responsibilities of the opposition are correct. Yet, apart from the excellent arguments advanced in this house during the course of this debate, and apart from the outstanding speeches, which have been part of this debate, the question remains in 1968: Are the government and opposition working effectively and efficiently on behalf of the people of Canada or have some features of the institution of parliament become obsolete and effete in the face of the challenges we face? There is a challenge to those on the government side, and surely there is a challenge as well to those in opposition who have been designated the equally important task in opposition as "watchdogs" of the public interest.

Within the existent procedural framework, can government members and opposition members be effective for we are sent here to be effective. The question is not whether opposition rights are being restricted. The question is not whether the government is attempting to force an unfair view on the house. The question is, within the existent procedural framework are government and opposition members able to be effective in the roles set out under our system? In this regard, what modern industrial organization or trade union would be satisfied with procedures enshrined and entrenched in the status quo of a full century ago?

The best Christmas present we parliamentarians could provide the Canadian people with would be a reform of the procedures and rules which while at the same time preserving the concept and the tradition of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Perrault: I would like to ask some questions of the house, Mr. Speaker. How many members will defend the procedures we presently follow in the matter of estimates? The former prime minister, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), in a moment of frustration on July 21, 1960, as reported at page 6673 of Hansard, said:

> We have had 56 days or parts of days on estimates. I say that nowhere else, in any other parliamentary institution, is so much time taken in the examination of particular estimates as is taken here in connection with estimates.

This is the frustration which he felt when he was prime minister.

Mr. Crouse: After 56 days.

Mr. Perrault: This is what the former prime minister had to say on the same subject:

> An opposition does not properly perform its functions unless it examines all expenditures made with a searching eye and with fearless criticism, yet members of the House of Commons have no proper facilities to enable the full examination of the public accounts and estimates.

This is what the former leader of the Conservative party said:

> Debates on estimates are futile.

Then he said, Mr. Speaker:

> An expenditure of millions of dollars that are totally unjustified could conceivably be passed without much danger of detection. Canadians have become so used to the expenditure of billions of dollars that a million here or there seems of little consequence.

This was the former leader of the Conservative party speaking out for reform.

Mr. Nowlan: That reform has been made.

Mr. Perrault: Let me bring to the attention of hon. members that when this speech was made in 1949 the total Canadian budget was $2.34 billion. The budget now is over $10 billion. If there were abuses in 1949, the abuses must be infinitely worse in the matter of estimates in the year of our Lord 1968.

Then we had another resounding speech by the former prime minister on July 21, 1960. I quote from Hansard, page 6675:

> I hope it will be agreed by the house that the rules committee will be set up at the earliest possible date in the next session and will meet to the end that with your assistance, Mr. Speaker, there will be an agreement on the part of hon. members in all parts of the house that we must bring about great changes in the interests of making parliament more effective.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Perrault: This is what he said in that speech:

> In all the years I have been in parliament I do not recall more than two occasions when anybody ever moved to reduce an estimate, or even divided the house on it. Hon. members opposite resort to condemnation and then conclude by allowing the item to pass. That is why it has been found sufficient in the United Kingdom to deal with the vast number of estimates in the large amounts that come before that parliament in just over one-third of the time that we have taken up to this hour.

This has been a situation which has been plaguing the Canadian parliament for years, and rather than be concerned, indeed honourable members should be delighted, that finally we have a government in this country willing to act on delicate procedural matters and willing to take the consequences. An hon. member asked earlier this evening: Where does this reform stop? The majority of members of this house ask: When does it start? The sooner the better.

Another hon. member said that we need action. We certainly do need action.

An hon. Member: In the rump.

Mr. Perrault: The hon. member for Winnipeg North.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Perrault: I mean the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), and some of his colleagues, have been criticizing the proposal to have the estimates considered in detail in committee. This is what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre stated in his speech of March 21, 1957:

> —in the field of government expenditure, a particular responsibility—and a difficult one to discharge—rests upon the opposition. We have to try, in committee of supply, and in some instances in certain special committees outside the house, to examine into every dollar of government expenditure. This task is so huge that the best we manage is spot checking, but I believe it can be said that it does have a salutary effect.

We were spot checking estimates of $4.83 billion in 1957 when that speech was made. Are we going to merely continue to spot check, on behalf of the Canadian people, when the budget is now over $10 billion? Are we going to check every tenth estimate the way the customs people check every tenth automobile to find whether there is contraband aboard? Is that the way we want the parliament of Canada to be run in the year 1968-69?

An hon. Member: Darned right.

Mr. Perrault: An hon. member over here in opposition ranks says "Darned right." They are firmly entrenched in the status quo. The Conservative party sent a representative to the 33rd Couchiching conference, Mr. E. D. Fulton.

An hon. Member: In 1930.

Mr. Perrault: No. The arguments from that side of the house often sound like those of 1930. What did he say? This is what he said:

The business of parliament can be discharged more efficiently and its members made more effective by placing greater emphasis on the committee system, especially in discharging the role of the critic of expenditures and guardian of the public purse.

That is what he said on behalf of his party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Perrault: Then he said:

The second advantage of this system would be that detailed examination of estimates in committee would result in better informed and more effective discussion of policy in the house.

How many in this house will defend the amount of time wasted under the present situation?

Mr. Nowlan: Don't you know the rules have been changed since all those speeches were made?

Mr. Perrault: How much time is wasted in this respect? This is what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said to the same Couchiching conference, as reported at page 71 of "Order and Good Government".

Parliamentarians start with a notion that freedom of speech somehow means freedom to talk forever. Cutting off debate is felt to be a denial of a basic democratic right. But the fact is that we do this in many ways in parliament. The 40-minute limit or the 30-minute or the 20-minute rule that we have are denials of unlimited free speech. Although years ago there were no time limits on any debates, we did, in 1955, impose a limit of a certain number of days on the debate on the address—

Then he went on:

We accept the proposition that it is good to organize such things, but the key to accepting these propositions is that we make the rule before the game starts.

• (9:30 p.m.)

It is on this basis that we have to take the next step. The worthy and hon. member said:

I think we have to look at the debates on legislation and find a way to agree at once as to the length of time we are going to take.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Perrault: Later, Mr. Speaker. I ask the question again: How many will defend the amount of time that is wasted in parliament today? What did the former leader of the Conservative party have to say about it on November 26, 1962 as recorded at page 2009 of Hansard? It reads as follows:

I am not one of those who argues that there should be any interference with the right of hon. members to express themselves, but I do agree with the hon. member that if the house leaders of the parties could get together and apportion the time, it would be a most effective and welcome expedient in order to achieve a high degree of efficiency in parliament. They do it in the United Kingdom, but we have never been able to do it here. It becomes more difficult—this is not a matter of criticism when there is a multiplicity of parties. That means a multiplicity of viewpoints, and it becomes more difficult to achieve. But if out of this discussion today we can bring about agreement to apportion the days between now and the Christmas adjournment, we will have made a tremendous advance in parliamentary reform, of our own volition.

How many will say, apart from the heat of partisan disputation, that parliament must become more efficient?

Again, the former leader of the Conservative party said the following in his address to the Empire Club in 1949:

Government has become so complex and its ramifications so extensive that no matter how industrious a member of parliament may be, it is impossible to master all the problems that come before parliament, and more so in that there are not available to the opposition the trained civil servants who are at the disposal of the government at all times. In my opinion the opposition will not be able to discharge its duty unless it has available to it trained and outstanding research experts whose salaries will be paid by the state.

That speech was made in 1949. No action in this respect was taken by the governments in 1957, 1958 and 1962. It was only this government, which has been pilloried by the opposition, that has taken action and has brought forward this basic and fundamental reform to enable opposition members in this house to be more effective and to serve the Canadian people better. The right hon. member for Prince Albert said:

The opposition cannot oppose without reason. It's alternative policies must be responsible and practicable.

We have heard very few alternative policies advanced in this debate.

Mr. Forrestall: Did the Liberals comment on this at the Couchiching conference?

Mr. Perrault: He also said:

If parliament is to be made as effective an instrument in the modern world as it should be, the procedure of parliament should be modernized and brought up to date—

Parliament must continue to be the custodian of freedom. To that end it must constantly change its procedure to meet the changing needs of the modern world but must be changeless in its concept and tradition.

Where is the spirit of reform in this debate on the part of some of the members of this house? How should these efficiencies be brought about? Time does not permit me to review the excellent arguments which have been advanced by the government in this debate, but the former Minister of Justice, Mr. Fulton, said at the Couchiching Conference in 1964, speaking for the Conservative Party:

But no matter what mathematical disposition has been arrived at by the voters, parliament has the duty to get on with the business of the country; and the government has the right and the responsibility to govern, so long as it enjoys the confidence of parliament, or at any rate unless and until parliament accepts the responsibility of defeating it.

This is what your Tory spokesman said. And now, in 1968, this new government is accepting the responsibility for procedural reform, and it does so cheerfully and gladly. I think it is regrettable that needed reforms which are supported by so many hon. members are surrounded by the controversy which has developed over recent days with respect to differences relating to rule 16-A. Some members, unfortunately, have employed intemperate language to criticise this rule, or what they assume to be this rule. Others have grasped at the opportunity for debate to level wild and irresponsible charges against the government benches.

The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams)—and I am sorry he is not in his seat tonight—suggested that an attempt is being made to take away the control of the pursestrings of parliament. As he said on December 12 as recorded at page 3859 of Hansard:

—you make the executive all-powerful and reduce parliament to a rubber stamp.

[Mr. Perrault.]

He accused the government of "attempting to muzzle parliament". In that same speech he said:

We in Canada are now faced with a real danger of the loss of parliament and the loss of freedom.

This kind of talk does little to reassure the Canadian people of the responsibility of certain members of this assembly. The members who occupy the government benches are just as concerned about the maintenance of a strong, democratic and efficient parliamentary system as are the members of the opposition. However, together with most of them we are not satisfied that parliament is working well enough for the Canadian people. Together with them we seek changes which will preserve freedom and at the same time expedite the business of the country.

Faced with the task of expediting the nation's business, the right hon. member for Prince Albert said this on July 21, 1960, as recorded at page 6672 of Hansard:

I think there is no reason why that debate should not be reduced so far as the number of days is concerned. Immediately I suggest that the opposition will say that they are being throttled.

The word "throttle" is precisely one of the words which is being used by members in the official opposition now. The remarks of the hon. member for Calgary North were quite predictable. Criticism of the kind that he and his colleagues have directed at the government—criticism of this courageous and long-needed legislation, is a price that the government party members pay cheerfully for the improvement and renewal of the parliamentary process in this country. And again, when government members are criticised for allegedly attempting to shorten debate in some areas, we remind ourselves of Churchill's words spoken to the British house of commons on November 29, 1944:

Do not suppose that you can strengthen parliament by wearying it, and in keeping it in almost continuous session. If you want to reduce the power of parliament, let it sit every day in the year, one-fifth part filled, and then you will find it will be the laughingstock of the nation, instead of being, as it continues to be, in spite of all of the strains of modern life, the citadel as well as the cradle of parliamentary institutions throughout the world.

Churchill said these words, but they were quoted by the former leader of the Conservative party on July 21, 1960.

When the government is accused of subverting democracy, and the air is ringing with agitated oratory, objective members remind themselves of the research assistance which is being granted to the opposition parties in this house. I am proud and gratified that a Liberal government in 1968, with the support of its backbenchers, has moved to provide not only this reform measure but these additional measures to improve the contribution of the opposition. The other day the Leader of the Opposition was very critical of the efforts being made by this government to, as he put it, "cripple the opposition". I have in my hand an account of the years of Conservative government in the province of Nova Scotia. May I quote an excerpt from Maclean's magazine (March, 1968)?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Perrault: This is what was written:

—a few years ago a Liberal M.L.A., Dr. J. Henry Reardon, made some pointed remarks about the Stanfield government's ethics in turning over the provincial tourist advertising account to Dalton Camp's firm. This criticism so incensed Stanfield that he announced he had given "serious consideration" to the idea of introducing a bill that would remove Reardon's legislative immunity retroactively.

It is interesting to note the official opposition's concern for the preservation of members' rights.

Mr. Forrestall: What happened to Reardon? Who was right?

Mr. Perrault: We know that a good opposition is good for parliament. Rule 16-A may meet the test of time: perhaps it will not. Let us hope it does. If in practice it demonstrates there are some shortcomings, then let it be modified to the needs of the time according to the will of a democratic parliament.

• (9:40 p.m.)

But let us not be afraid to experiment, to change, in this House of Commons. If we parliamentarians of Canada are content to rest on the present big, fat, over-stuffed procedural status quo, then we deserve the contempt of the Canadian people. We will win the admiration and acclaim of the Canadian people only by demonstrating that we are willing to take those actions that are geared toward improving our own productivity. We are not citizens of some kind of totalitarian state, some petty little principality that is under dictatorial edict.

In the final analysis, all of us who are sent here know that the people will judge the merits of this legislation and the merits of this government, as they always have done. The final test will come at the ballot box. If the government appears, to the majority of the Canadian people, to be unfair, then it will lose the next election. On the other hand, if the opposition's criticisms lack validity or the opposition is unfair, then they will not be elected in place of the present government, and will remain in opposition.

However, let not fear of failure at the ballot box petrify any section of this house into inaction. As for 16-A, a majority of hon. members are convinced that under most conditions it will be possible for the house leaders to achieve agreement. I think most members predict that the meetings will be cordial, because the party house leaders in this assembly are reasonable and good Canadians.

Let me repeat what I said earlier; I believe that the best Christmas present that this house could present to the Canadian people would be procedural reform achieved in a spirit of amity. This would be a fine Christmas present, because these reforms will enable the people's business to be done in an enlightened and efficient manner, for the benefit of all. Surely in the process the lustre of parliament will be restored.

There are many members in this house who want to participate in this debate. Therefore I should like to move a motion to enable more people to participate in the debate in order that this question can be resolved—hopefully—before Christmas. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald):

That pursuant to standing order 6, subsection (6), this sitting be extended until 12 o'clock midnight tonight.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I object.

The Deputy Speaker: All those members who object will please rise.

And more than ten members having risen:

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. There being more than ten members who object, the motion cannot be put at this time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I now ask the hon. member the question he asked me to hold until he had finished his speech.

Mr. Perrault: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Motion for Concurrence in Report

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): First of all, may I thank the hon. member for his reference to the things I said regarding this matter. Is it not a fact that all of the rules that limit debate to which the hon. member referred were rules that have been agreed to by the whole house, by all parties in the house? Is not the essential difference between this and the present rule 16-A just that? Are we not now being asked to accept a rule that is being supported by only one party in the house?

Mr. Perrault: The point I was endeavouring to make was that there is a widespread feeling on the part of responsible spokesmen of all parties that there must be major reform in the way that we conduct the people's business in the House of Commons. At no time have I suggested, nor do I intend to suggest, that there is unanimous agreement on the part of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to all of the proposals made by the government with respect to procedure. But I think the hon. member made a very valid point when he talked about the manner in which estimates have been passed in Canada. Traditionally and historically there has not been sufficiently detailed study. I agree as well with some of the other criticisms he has made of present parliamentary procedures. These have been outlined in a number of excellent speeches that he has made in various parts of Canada.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): But is not the meat of parliamentary reform agreement among all parties in the house, instead of having rules imposed upon us by the government?

Mr. Baldwin: Would the hon. member permit another question. In the course of his very interesting study of the statistical information that he gathered, did he observe that for two years in succession when this irresponsible Liberal government was the irresponsible Liberal opposition it took 75 days and 79 days respectively to deal with supply?

Mr. Perrault: I do have a quotation from the former prime minister in which he thanked Liberal members for their outstanding co-operation on the question of procedure in the house. I would be glad to table this quotation before we leave here tonight. It is to be found at page 6177 of Hansard for July 13, 1960. Talking of the Liberal members the former prime minister said:

> As far as possible we endeavour—and this brings in the co-operation that we have had from the opposition in recent days—to place before the house in ample time notice of the impending estimates ... At all times that must be the endeavour of both sides and I am sure that, having regard to the extent to which we have made satisfactory progress, we shall continue to work in that spirit of co-operation.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to this debate. I have heard a number of brilliant speeches—for example, the speech made by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), by the former prime minister, the distinguished member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis). They were great speeches which proved to this house that parliament as a debating forum has a place in our national affairs. If hon. members want further evidence of this I would refer them to the brilliant speech made in this house on December 10 by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield).

I also listened to the speech just made by the hon. member for "what's his name"—the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault). I listened to it with interest but I still do not know what it was he was saying. All I heard was a recitation of what other people have said. I heard the hon. member compare parliament to a modern industrial organization. He likened it to a trade union. May I tell the hon. member that this is not an industrial organization or a trade union, it is the parliament of Canada. I have come to the conclusion that the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour sat in opposition in British Columbia for far too long. Yes, Virginia, there is an hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour.

I like to think, Mr. Speaker, that the people of Canada are interested in this debate. They have heard a great deal about the function of parliament. Let there be no mistake about this: Parliament's main function is to represent the people of Canada. I resent the suggestion that we should subvert the traditional right of parliament to function by passing laws with a minimum loss of time. Why not do away with parliament altogether? Why bother with it? Why waste time? Why not have government by executive directive? Surely that has proven to be an efficient way to govern; totalitarian states seem to do it very effectively. Let us do away with parliament entirely. Our system is under attack every day. We have violence in the streets. Violence is now accepted as an instrument of political action. The very people who advocate certain methods of reform and are the most outspoken critics of our traditional parliamentary procedures are loud in support of those who take to the streets in violence.

In my view you do not defend parliament by restricting it; and restricted it will be if we do away with committee of supply and adopt proposed rule 16-A. Every objective hon. member will agree that parliament must be strengthened, and that strengthening parliament means that we must reform the rules of procedure. But you do not strengthen parliament by weakening the opposition. You do not strengthen parliament by abolishing the traditional grievance procedure of private members of this house, or committee of supply. In my view the question before us is simple and goes to the root of the issue. Will parliament govern the country or will the government, representing as it does the huge bureaucracy in Canada, rule without parliament.

I was disappointed with the Prime Minister's speech during this debate. Despite his characteristic modernization he could not refrain from showing what I consider a basic dislike of this institution.

Mr. Bell: Shame.

Mr. McGrath: That dislike came to the fore when he referred to a filibuster. Under our rules there is no such thing as a filibuster. In parliament there is only debate. Take away the right to debate and you take away parliament. If parliament is to exist and if members of parliament are to discharge their responsibilities properly as representatives of the people, this institution must continue to be a meaningful forum for debate. I resent the unilateral use by the government of its majority in this house; I resent its unilateral attempt to impose new standing order 16-A which would limit debating time in advance of debate. That is closure in advance.

The Ottawa Citizen of December 12 had this to say about the new rules. The heading of the editorial is, "A dangerous reform plan", and it says in part:

> The allocation of time for debate is a necessary change, accepted by the opposition. What is unacceptable is that the cabinet should have the unilateral power to set debating time limits in advance—
> A chief function of the parliamentary opposition is to probe for weaknesses in government legislation. If it finds such weaknesses, it needs time to make the point for the general public and to rally opinion in the country. It is hard to see how that could be done under the present plan, especially if the government set out to prevent its being done—
> It would be a great mistake for the government to make use of its new majority to ram its own plan down the throat of the Commons.

The Prime Minister and the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair), the government's spokesman in moving this measure, have shown a complete disregard for the right of private members in this house to contribute by meaningful debate to the process of governing this country. Nobody questions the government's responsibilities or the responsibilities of the executive. But surely we have the right and the obligation to question the government's arbitrary use of the power it has in this house by virtue of its majority. In a rather slurring reference to the committee of supply the Prime Minister said at one point of the debate that hon. members tend to make speeches rather than probe for information. In my view the Prime Minister failed to distinguish between the deliberative function of parliament and the investigative function of the committee system.

I wonder if those hon. members who wish to discuss business they consider to be more important than the present debate would be good enough to do so outside the chamber.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

HIGHWAY SAFETY—INQUIRY AS TO SAFETY STANDARDS FOR TIRES

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, a week or two ago on orders of the day I attempted to raise the question of tire safety in Canada, as this relates to the general question of automotive safety in Canada and the United States. At that time Mr. Speaker ruled my question out of order and I take the opportunity of discussing it again now. My question was and is prompted by the fact that whereas in the United States a good deal of attention is being paid to tire standards and specifications, to the retreading of tires and the grooving of bus, school bus and truck tires, with proper standards and specifications being established, so far as I know in Canada there is no bureau of tire standards. We have no specifications setting out what must be the quality of retreads and grooved tires.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

For quite some time now I have been interested in the whole question of traffic safety involving, as it does, the standardization of the quality of car parts and car repairs. The entire subject is currently under review in the United States by a senate subcommittee, and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs told us the other day that similar action might be taken here. I think we are living dangerously in Canada when we neglect to establish proper standards for tire safety, or to make adequate provision for tire safety checks and call-backs when tires are found to be faulty, as is the case in the United States should tires be found wanting after a safety inspection has been carried out.

When it comes to tire safety I think we depend too much on what our United States friends are exporting into this country. Tires are checked there to the extent I have indicated, but we do not provide our own Canadian standards, although we certainly have our own geographic and climatic conditions which affect tires used here.

Tire safety is just one aspect of automotive safety. Every week in the past few years at least 100 Canadians died on our roads and highways. Some 3,000 are injured, many of them to the extent that they might as well be dead. In economic terms, the toll runs to $600 million a year, including car insurance.

In the relatively short period of six years during which I have been a member of this house, 30,000 Canadians have died in traffic accidents and 950,000 have been injured. The economic loss amounts to more than four billion dollars. Mr. Speaker, this is a very warlike total, and tire safety, or rather the lack of tire safety provisions, is one of the reasons for these alarming figures.

My question was, in effect: "Having in mind reports concerning tires which were given safety tests in the United States and which failed such tests, and in view of the fact that some of these tires are imported into Canada, I want to ask when we are to have a testing bureau for tire safety with a system of call-backs for tires proven faulty?"

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): On behalf of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) I wish to inform the hon. member with regard to the first part of his question, which he asked on December 5, 1968, that earlier this year all provinces adopted the standards issued by the Canadian Standards Association as the basis of their regulations governing the quality of tires sold in Canada. Hence, the entire matter of tire quality, including tire testing, the question of call-backs and the suspicion of noncomplying tires, is within provincial jurisdiction.

As to the second part of the question, we have heard of no cases of either the tire suppliers or the vehicle manufacturers issuing such notifications, but here again only the provincial departments can supply the answers.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS—APPLICATION FOR RATE INCREASES BY BELL TELEPHONE

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): On Friday December 6 I directed a question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) who redirected it to the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans). My question was:

Is the minister aware of the application by the Bell Telephone Company of Canada to the Canadian Transport Commission requesting a sharp increase in telephone rates in Toronto, Montreal, Hamilton and other cities and if so is it the intention of the government to oppose such an application?

The Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) replied:

Mr. Speaker, the application is before the Canadian Transport Commission. Since this is a court of record hon. members would not think it appropriate for me to make any remarks about this application.

I was surprised at this statement by the Postmaster General because in the past and in the present he has been pontificating on so many problems that Canadians have faced. I was shocked that he would shelter himself behind some legal principle regarding the Canadian Transport Commission being a court of record because he knows that the commission is responsible to the government which, in turn, is responsible to all the people in Canada. He also knows that the Bell Telephone Company has only 250,000 shareholders, that it has 5 million telephones serving Canadians, and that the company controls 70 per cent of the telephone industry in Canada.

The Postmaster General also knows that January 17 will be the last day for filing opposition to the proposed rates and, if he does not do it, then the opposition will have to come from the municipalities which are supplied the telephone services. As I say, I was shocked that he would give such an answer to such a question.

On May 4, 1966, the Board of Transport Commissioners announced that the company's permissive level of earnings should range from 6.2 per cent to 6.6 per cent of total average capitalization. Last year it became apparent that the company's earning rate would rise to 6.7 per cent or 6.8 per cent for 1967 and 1968, and the Canadian Transport Commission asked what steps the company planned to take to reduce the rates. Now we have the Bell Telephone Company announcing that it has made an application to the Canadian Transport Commission to increase its rates. This came as a surprise to the other telephone companies within Canada.

An article by George Linton in the Globe and Mail of December 6, 1968 said that "Bell shares reach '68 high, up $1.87" on the Toronto stock exchange. His article added:

> The company's statement appeared to catch the smaller companies by surprise.
> B.C. Telephone said it had no plans to seek rate increases. New Brunswick Telephone said it also has no such plans—
> Maritime Telegraph and Telephone Co. Ltd. of Halifax has not applied for an increase in its rates, although the company faces the same factors that prompted Bell to seek an increase, according to D. W. Myers, Maritime's vice president and general manager—
> Quebec Telephone refused to comment on whether the company plans to seek rate increases.

There you have it, Mr. Speaker, that many of the other telephone companies within Canada had not planned on making applications for any rate increases.

Bell Telephone Company officials say the new rates are necessary to improve the company's financial position and its abilities to raise capital. The increase of 10 per cent would bring Bell $80 million, and if in effect for all of 1969 the company's return on invested capital would be 8 per cent.

We should also note that so far as this year's earnings are concerned analysts are estimating $3.25 to $3.30 a share, as compared with $3.16 in 1967. It is obvious that they are not anticipating any loss or any reduction in the earnings on their share capital.

Bell Telephone claims it will need $180 million in external financing in 1969, and if it were to go to the market for debt money it would have to pay around 8 per cent. Since 1967 Bell has raised $287 million by bond financing and its rates have ranged from 6.25 per cent to 7⅝ per cent. The most recent was this summer's $75 million issue in U.S. funds with interest at 6.9 per cent. Bell's over-all debt service cost is still below 6.2 per cent.

A few weeks ago on the program "Twenty Million Questions" the Postmaster General was asked questions concerning the communication systems in Canada, and in reply to a question by Mr. Jones he said:

> Well I think the problem that worries me the most is probably the international law aspects of communications; and secondarily the federal-provincial relations aspects of it. To go the second one first,—you know we have control over,—although I don't think the regulations are all that good,—over the Bell Telephone and the B.C. Telephone, but not over provincial telephone companies.

So you can see the Postmaster General is concerned about this communications problem and the regulations controlling this particular company.

The time has come for the government to do a study in depth to determine whether the Bell Telephone Company should come under public ownership. The main purpose of the Bell Telephone Company should be to provide the best available telephone service at the lowest possible rate. Telephone service should not depend on satisfying 250,000 shareholders that they are receiving a high return on their invested capital or the necessity of paying high interest rates on bonds for expansion capital. This is the reason many Canadians would like a government feasibility study of public ownership of our communications system.

If the Canadian Development Corporation had been set up and functioning Bell Telephone ownership by the corporation would at least have spread ownership to many more Canadians. Therefore I should like the Postmaster General to state whether the government is opposing the application by the Bell Telephone Company for the rate increase and whether the minister would announce the setting up of a task force to study the feasibility of public ownership of this company which is now operating for the benefit of only a few and certainly not all Canadians.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, for an opening remark, I think I can only repeat what I said before; that is, the Canadian Transport Commission is a quasi judicial body empowered to make its own decisions. Neither the government nor the minister of communications has any right or power to intervene in the judgment of the C.T.C. This is the reason it was set up. While I do not doubt the figures of the hon. member, I think that while they may have an average rate of interest on their current outstanding bonds and debentures of 6.2 per cent, their problem would not be the past but the future, and the current cost of raising money is closer to 8 per cent. This is not said in any way to justify their decision to make the application at this time.

The hon. member, however, has raised an important point. The decision of the C.T.C. will be based, naturally, upon the information made available to it. To me the major issue that is raised is how complete will be the information that will be made public by the telephone company. In this regard the hon. member made reference to some doubt I have expressed about the completeness of information that we presently have. I should like to confirm that statement and say that on the basis of a preliminary assessment by my department much more information will be necessary in the future than heretofore.

The present information is insufficient for the department of communications, a department which as hon. members know is in the process of being established. Why? The function and the mandate of the department of communications it to create a national program and a national policy of telecommunications. We can only do that job if we have the necessary tools, and the essential tool is information on the state of Canada's telecommunications industry, the entire industry. I repeat that I do not believe we now have the information we need to make wise economic, technological and sociological decisions for the maximum benefit of the Canadian public. I say this not intending any inference in respect of the information before the C.T.C. to which the hon. member referred. This information will be judged upon its own intrinsic merits in respect of the long term development of communications in this country.

For that objective, and I am choosing my words with care, I intend to do everything necessary to ensure that the department of communications will be able to command the tools and have the information it needs to make a complete audit of the economic and financial fabric of Canadian telecommunications. Once that inventory is completed we can proceed to make rational decisions on telecommunications development. I am certain that with co-operation we will be able to obtain and compile that information and inventory. At any rate I can assure hon. members that I intend to spare no effort to make sure that the inventory is compiled.

SPORTS—HOCKEY—INTERFERENCE WITH FREEDOM OF CHOICE OF YOUNG PLAYERS

Mr. Colin D. Gibson (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question arises tonight, addressed to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and involves a complaint I have had from my riding, specifically from Stoney Creek, Ontario. It arises from a letter I received from one Karl Beckwick, Stoney Creek and dated December 3, 1968 in which he says:

Dear Sir:

It was suggested to me by John McLellan, a neighbour, to write a letter to you. Apparently my boy, Jim, is in the same predicament as young Frank McLellan.

We were informed in a letter from the Ontario Minor Hockey Assoc., that Jim can no longer play hockey for the Saltfleet team—

This is a ridiculous situation. Jim has played for Saltfleet for four years. We still reside at 15 Durham Road. There has been no amalgamation or annexation of our area, and certainly the Saltfleet club has not released Jim.

It escapes me, why, all of a sudden there are changes made by the Ontario Minor Hockey Assoc., after the boy has become so well established with his home club. I can't see how he can be forced to play for a strange club, and leave all his friends that he has skated with and gone to school with all these years. It is preposterous.

Recently there have been a number of this type of complaint received from this area. It has been widespread that throughout Canada the tentacles of professional sports organizations and commercial enterprises are creeping in to take control of boys of school age, who should be getting the opportunity to play amateur hockey. We will never really get a well trained team in this country, and we will never be able to develop our youth with the proper spirit of sports when this type of practice is widespread.

It appears the coaches of some of these teams have been notified by the president of the Ottawa Minor Hockey Association that certain boys are prohibited from playing for their home teams. The parents of these boys strenuously object on their behalf and I protest on their behalf this unwarranted interference with a boy's right to play for his home team, in this case Stoney Creek or Saltfleet. Is this not a matter which should be investigated by the task force on amateur sports? If anyone questions the constitutionality of this matter I submit it is an example of professional control of amateur sports. When this matter is investigated in detail it will become quite apparent that this is what has happened.

I am suspicious of the monopolistic control of amateur sport by commercial interests. We will never get a world championship hockey team by destroying the free right to choose a team, and by stifling the spirit of these boys. There is far too much interference by commercial groups with the careers and rights of these boys in Canada, and I believe an inquiry by the task force will bring out into the open the nature and extent of this abuse. Can we not free the boys from this power? I ask the minister to make an investigation into this matter.

• (10:20 p.m.)

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, from the comments of the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Gibson), one would think that he plays on the same team as the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro). I should like to reassure the hon. member by quoting some remarks the hon. minister made in Moncton on November 23, 1968 when he was talking about the need to give a new status to amateur sports. I quote:

> These measures include several changes. First of all, if professionals really want to respect such a system of hockey, they must let each player decide for himself whether he wants to play on a national or an amateur team, such as a university team, for example, and how long he wants to be a part of that system. Consequently, they must stop pressing the young to enter a professional league at the earliest opportunity, and that means they must stop any pressure they apply during the whole school year.
> Any premature signing of contracts, whether public or private, must cease. Businessmen cannot be permitted to buy and sell young athletes as if they were real estate. Hockey players are not chattels.

I want to assure the hon. member that this very problem is on the agenda of the task force. Meetings have taken place between the task force and the amateur and professional hockey associations and all those interested in this problem on a national level.

A report by the task force is expected early next year. I think their recommendations will contribute to raise our national and amateur sport to olympic standing which will make us proud while it will respect the freedom of the people.

FINANCE

EXCHANGE OF CORRESPONDENCE WITH U.S. RESPECTING BALANCE OF PAYMENTS

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I should like to table copies of letters which were exchanged yesterday between the secretary of the United States treasury, Hon. Henry H. Fowler, and myself.

These letters review the unique financial relationship between Canada and the United States and the continuing exemption for Canada from the balance of payments programs of the United States. They repeat the judgment of both governments that a continued improvement in the international payments position of the United States is important for Canada and for the international monetary system as well as for the United States. They confirm the assurances of the Canadian government that Canada's exemption from the United States balance of payments programs will not be used in such a way as to endanger the success of those programs. In particular I have reiterated that it is not an objective of Canadian policy to achieve permanent increases in our exchange reserves through unnecessary borrowing in the United States.

At the same time the secretary of the United States treasury and I have agreed that the implementation of this principle does not require that Canada's reserve level be limited to any particular figure, and that our reserves may be expected to fluctuate to accommodate the adaptation of monetary policy to the changing needs of our domestic economy, seasonal influences, and other influences of a temporary nature.

I propose, Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the house that the texts of these letters be appended to Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I wish to thank the minister for letting me have a copy of this correspondence. I do not think it would add anything to the situation simply to say that both countries believe it is in their interest to occasion destabilizing influences on their respective currencies which might inhibit the other country in the pursuit of its own economic objectives.

I note the very general terms in which the minister has indicated that the $2.55 billion, which he calls a target figure and which has long been recognized as the ceiling, is now subject to temporary deviation. As a matter of fact it may be that for all practical purposes it has gone. If this is the true result then I would say it is a step in the right direction. For over a year now I have been saying that this restriction has been strangling us in Canada. Indeed, I would say to the minister it is very fortunate that Canada has been able to obtain this relaxation, though why a ceiling was ever imposed is something one will always question.

As I say, it is fortunate that Canada is not now caught by this limit, because before long the hon. gentleman would have been obliged to go into the market to raise funds had this ceiling not been removed. After all, we know that long term interest rates are now at the highest point ever. Last week the average rate on government long term obligations was up to 7.16, and this would have occasioned an increased movement of foreign funds into Canada.

The result would have been that the Minister of Finance, through the Bank of Canada, would have had to go into the market to sweep up these excess foreign funds, particularly United States funds, in order to limit our holdings to the $2.55 billion figure. The government would have had to go into the market to raise the cash in order to have the money to buy up this United States foreign exchange. This has been obviated. I trust the government will now have a more effective tool in dealing with the problem of inflation. As a matter of fact we are still facing that problem, but this might be allowing the government a bit more room for manoeuvre. We have not yet got rid of all the shackles that the action back in 1963 and 1964 brought on, but I am glad to see that after a lot of prodding the government has taken active steps to have this ceiling removed.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, these documents that have been tabled raise more questions than they answer. Up to now we have had our hands tied by agreement with the United States, and despite repeated questions to successive ministers of finance the indication was given that it really was not terribly important and that we were not being restricted in any serious way. Now we come out with a euphemism which in effect removes this agreed upon or understood ceiling, and we wonder why.

The only conclusion I can come to is that the government is not satisfied with restrictive fiscal policies. It now proposes to go into restrictive monetary policies and wants to raise interest rates beyond the tremendous levels they have presently reached. There might be some agreement on behalf of the government, if it is going to ease up on its fiscal policies in return for tightening up on monetary policies, that this would be a good thing; but there does not seem to be any evidence that the government is the slightest bit concerned about the restrictive policies it has been pursuing, which makes those of us on this side of the house very cautious about what the government is attempting.

We cannot see that this change is going to be of very great benefit to the country unless there is a basic change in the government's attitude, because as matters now stand if the government continues with this attitude all this does is give it an additional restrictive weapon. We could live with one of two policies, either some kind of fixed ceiling on our reserves or a fixed exchange rate, but we could not live with both. The government had a bit of a choice. It could have gone to a flexible exchange rate and forgotten about this aspect of the thing, although I think both should have been done. A flexible exchange rate would have given us the kind of opportunity of freedom this country needs to pursue expansionary domestic policies.

The letters that have been tabled give no indication that they are going to be of much help to this country. I might refer to a statement in Mr. Fowler's letter, where he says:

> These relations have served the interests of both our countries without interfering with the domestic policies of either.

I would like to say that I do not agree with that statement.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

These measures have seriously interfered with our ability to pursue domestic policies in this country, and the present Minister of Finance is going along with these measures as have past finance ministers. It is time we put an end to this. It is time we went to a flexible exchange rate so we could pursue domestic policies of our own without being tied hand and foot to the policies of another country which may not be in our interests.

Therefore the minister has a lot to answer beyond what is contained in these two letters. The question he has to answer to this parliament is this. Is he going to get this economy going or is he going to use these new measures to clamp down even further on the growth of this country and create higher unemployment?

ANNOUNCEMENT OF CHRISTMAS RECESS—CONSIDERATION OF ANTI-DUMPING LEGISLATION

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if I may I would like to make a statement about two items of the business of the house. First, the right hon. member for Prince Albert inquired yesterday about the Christmas recess. I want to indicate to the house that I will be putting on the order paper a notice of motion for adjournment of the house until Tuesday, January 14, 1969, and it would be my proposal that the house rise for the Christmas recess with the adjournment of the sitting day this coming Friday, December 20.

The second matter concerns consultations about today's business. There have been discussions among the house leaders. I think there might be general agreement to a proposal to change the order of business for today and tomorrow so that we might bring forward the ways and means resolution dealing with anti-dumping and the bill consequent upon it. Therefore it might be appropriate for the house to make an order containing two elements; first, the anti-dumping resolution and the bill consequent upon it would be given priority today and if necessary tomorrow over other business under government orders; and second, if the resolution and/or the bill be not passed before the ordinary time of adjournment tomorrow, Wednesday, December 18, all questions necessary to carry the resolution and the bill would be put prior to the moment of adjournment.

If there is general agreement perhaps we could have an order to that effect made by the house right now.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, we are in agreement to that which represents a collective effort in consultation and agreement, which we think is most appropriate to the house.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in view of the attitude taken now by the minister I wonder whether he would add as well to the motion to be passed today the adjournment of the house on Friday evening. Why come back again? Let us finish that up.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the house order proposed for today and tomorrow I am happy to say that the statement made by the government house leader is correct. I may say on behalf of those in this party that we are happy to agree to it. Perhaps I might draw attention to the point that it is possible to decide these things by agreement rather than by compulsion.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, we of the Ralliement Créditiste approve the changes in the procedure, in order to enable the government to pass the anti-dumping legislation which must come into force on January 1 and also to show that we understand the problems facing the government in connection with that measure as well as the others which could arise. Therefore, we are ready to co-operate even if we do not approve the terms of the proposed standing order 16A.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The house has heard the proposal outlined by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald). Is it so ordered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

PROVISION FOR PROXY VOTING BY HANDICAPPED AND AGED

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova) moved the first reading of Bill No. C-145, to amend the Canada Elections Act. (proxy voting).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Comeau: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill to amend the Canada Elections Act is to provide voting facilities to physically handicapped persons and aged citizens by allowing them to vote by proxy.

[Translation]

Many Canadians, Mr. Speaker, are unable to go to the voting poll on election day, as a result of a physical disability. This bill will enable those persons to exercise their right to vote and, in my humble opinion, it will assure them from now on a fuller participation in our democratic system.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

NEWFOUNDLAND—UNEMPLOYMENT RESULTING FROM FISH PLANT CLOSING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the Prime Minister whether he could announce any emergency measures planned by the government for the groundfish industry in view of the announcement by Unilever that four Bird's Eye plants in Newfoundland will close their doors, and he suggested I should direct my question today to the Minister of Fisheries.

In view of the serious economic situation in Newfoundland has the Minister of Fisheries any report to make to the house about the outcome of his discussions today with provincial fisheries representatives and members of the industry concerning emergency aid for the Atlantic provinces groundfish industry?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member has said we are currently holding meetings with the industry and representatives of the government of Newfoundland concerning the financial difficulties the grounfish industry in Newfoundland is in. These meetings are continuing this afternoon. We are discussing among other things a report by consultants which has been prepared over the past 12 months and which goes into detail in respect of the positions of companies in the Atlantic region.

While the discussions will be completed today and will be followed by other meetings, I do not expect we will be in a position to announce any basic solutions or make policy statements today.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether the government is prepared to accede to the request of the government of Newfoundland to continue the program of deficiency payments until the government can come up with a policy to meet this matter.

Mr. Davis: We have had a program in effect during the past summer which cost about $4,500,000. It was a crash program in a form which cannot be continued, or certainly not in that precise form. We will have to make other arrangements.

[Later:]

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries. Yesterday I asked if invitations had been extended to the members from the Atlantic region to negotiations between the federal minister and the trade. Have such invitations been extended? If so, what is the present status of this arrangement?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I might take this opportunity to invite hon. members of the Atlantic region to join me tomorrow and we will discuss what took place today.

BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS IN SECOND COMMISSION REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister and ask whether he and his colleagues have had the opportunity to study volume II, entitled "Education" of the final report of the B and B commission. Can he inform the house as to the company's—the government's—position on that volume? I keep hearing "board of directors" so often that I think of "company". Could he indicate the government position on the recommendations in that volume and whether it supports them?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, all I can tell the shareholder—excuse me, the hon. member of parliament—at this time is that we have not completed the study of the volume and we are not in a position to state any policy regarding it.

Mr. Lewis: Has the chairman of the board of directors, the right hon. gentleman, been in touch with the provinces regarding this report, requesting them to study it and asking them for their position regarding the recommendations?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Despite the recent report of the B and B commission, will the Prime Minister give recognition to the recent thinkers' conference at Toronto which dealt with the multicultural aspects of Canada? Will he appoint a subcommittee, if necessary, to study and report on the possibility of promoting the multicultural aspect of our Canadian society?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, this matter of cultural minorities in Canada is very much present in the government's mind and forms an important part of our policy. On Saturday I had a most fruitful meeting with the Ukrainian organizations in Winnipeg. We discussed this question at great length, but I would remind hon. members that the B and B commission intends to make a separate report on the role of cultural minorities. It might be wiser, before laying down our policy in a final way, to await the publication of this report.

Mr. Korchinski: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will consideration of the first report be suspended until the subsequent report is received?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker, this is not necessary. I see no reason for it.

OIL

STUDY OF DEVELOPMENTS IN ALASKA AND NORTHERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question I have asked on previous occasions. Some days ago the Prime Minister and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce stated they thought it was a good idea to look into the setting up of an immediate commission or study task force to examine the whole petroleum picture in Canada in relation to the effect of the northern and, in particular, the Alaskan development on our industry. Has a decision been reached as yet by the government to set up such a study group, commission or task force?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member asked his question the other day I did say I would look into it with the minister. We have had discussions on it, but I should not like to report what he has in mind at this stage. My feeling is that he is not yet prepared to set up a task force or commission. I do not think he is satisfied that the National Energy Board cannot do the job just as well. But I do not know whether he has made any final decision on this matter.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. In view of the uncertainty in the industry, would the Prime Minister consider sending to Washington, after careful briefing, a committee composed of senators and members of parliament representative of all parties in the house to find out the American thinking on a new oil policy for Canada and the United States so far as it affects Canada, particularly in view of the fact that a new secretary of the interior has been appointed by the president-elect of the United States?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, most suggestions made by the hon. member are worthy of consideration, and I would agree to consider this one. I do feel, however, that until the government itself is in a position to formulate its views on the whole question of a new oil policy for Canada, it might be premature to send such a delegation to Washington. In other words I would prefer, again, that the minister be in a more definite position before taking that step.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

INQUIRY AS TO NEW DATE FOR CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the fact that some of the provinces seem to agree that the federal-provincial conference should be held in February while others want it to be held as soon as possible, in January, could the right hon. Prime Minister tell us whether new arrangements have been made to hold this conference earlier than expected, as he had announced?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. After consulting the premier of British Columbia, for whom the beginning of February was a most inconvenient time, we suggested other dates, which also fall within the first two weeks of February, but on days which the premier of British Columbia finds more convenient. I suggested these dates to the other provinces. I have received some affirmative answers, but all the provinces have not yet answered, and so I cannot say that the date has been definitely settled.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PROCEDURE—FURTHER COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF CERTAIN PROPOSED CHANGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question. Now that the advantages of sweet reason and co-operation have been demonstrated, would the right hon. gentleman not seriously consider discussing with his colleagues the possibility of withdrawing those parts of the proposed new rules which are totally unacceptable to a great many members of this house and to many people in Canada, referring them back to the committee and passing the rest of the rules, so we will come back here in the new year under a completely new régime?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me the question may be a bit premature. There is still to be debate and speakers on this matter, I understand on Thursday and Friday of this week. I therefore would not want to make any commitment now. But I would be happy to hear from the opposition that the agreement reached today on one measure through co-operation, will bind them always to co-operate with our suggestions in the future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not on behalf of tyranny.

An hon. Member: That is not the Christmas spirit.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN TAXING POWERS OF PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

Inquiries of the Ministry

In view of the forthcoming federal-provincial meeting of the Ministers of Finance, would the minister tell the house whether the government intends to hand over certain taxation rights to the provinces so that they can honour their commitments, as the Quebec Minister of Finance mentioned last week-end?

[English]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to say that we must retain certain taxation powers in order that we can face our responsibilities to the people of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question.

Is it the intention of the Minister of Finance to submit proposals to the provinces so that they can be prepared to meet their financial obligations?

[English]

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, of course I will be speaking with the ministers of finance of the provinces and with the provincial treasurers on Thursday. We will listen with understanding to their problems, and I also hope they will listen with understanding to ours.

[Translation]

Mr. Asselin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to know whether the Minister of Finance is going to suggest, on behalf of the government, an amendment to the constitution concerning the financial jurisdiction of the federal government and the provinces, so that the provinces may honour their obligations?

[English]

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I think this is a matter that would have to be discussed at the constitutional conference. If there is to be a reallocation of powers agreed upon under the revised constitution, then of course there must also be a reallocation of means for meeting the revised responsibilities in the hands of the provinces or of the federal government.

NATIONAL REVENUE

REQUEST FOR REDUCTION IN PROPOSED ESTATE TAXES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question. We are approaching Christmas, and although the Minister of Finance is not usually Santa Claus could he give some hope to the Canadian people that the confiscatory rates, which as he has announced will be imposed under inheritance and estate taxes, if parliament accepts the measure, will be considerably reduced when the legislation is presented?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give any hope for a reduction in the rates. The rates were designed to free from estate tax the movement of estates from husband to wife, and other rates had to be adjusted. I should like to point out to my hon. friend that on estates of $200,000 to $250,000 passing on to children in some instances the taxes are lower under the new estate tax than they were under the previous legislation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, a $200,000 estate does not interest me one bit. What I am asking is, what about those tremendous rates that the minister is going to impose? After the husband dies his wife inherits his estate, and after she dies the estate will be almost completely wiped out by heavy taxation. Does the minister not think some relief is due to the Canadian people from such a hold-up?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I know $200,000 to $300,000 is far below what my right hon. friend would consider as an estate. However, I should simply like to repeat what I said, that in some instances when a family farm worth $200,000 to $300,000 is passed on to children, the estate taxes under the new law will be smaller than they are at present.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO COMPLETION OF FOREIGN POLICY REVIEW

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. There have been some news reports indicating that the Prime Minister stated at a meeting last Friday that Canada's present commitment in NATO will be maintained. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government's present foreign policy review as it relates specifically to our NATO commitment has been concluded and a decision taken.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the premise is not in accordance with the facts. I have never said that, nor have I seen it reported anywhere.

Mr. Schreyer: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Prime Minister whether the government's present review of foreign policy has been concluded in so far as it relates to our NATO commitment.

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask a supplementary question and address it to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can he tell us whether the review of our external and defence policies includes an examination of the problem posed by NATO aid being used to bolster military dictatorship which disregard the rule of law and fundamental human rights but are still within the treaty?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether the question is not too wide in scope to be asked at the present time. However, perhaps it might be allowed and the minister permitted to reply.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): If the hon. gentleman was referring, for example, to the question of Greece which has been in the news recently, I can say that the only military aid we are giving to that country consists of some spare parts for training aircraft. We are not supplying any ammunition, weapons, or any kind of offensive military equipment.

VALLEYFIELD—CLOSING OF TEXTILE PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois): Mr. Speaker, I intended to put a question to the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration of which I had given him notice but, in his absence, I shall direct it to his parliamentary secretary.

Can the hon. parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration tell us whether, since this morning, the minister has had conversations with the officials of the Chemcell division of the Canadian Celanese Company with the view to minimizing as much as possible the harmful effects of the unexpected announcement of the closing down of that company's dyeing plant at Valleyfield which will lead to the lay-off of 150 employees next February?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the minister was indeed advised yesterday afternoon of the closing down of that plant; as early as this morning, and even now, the officials of the department are conferring with the officials of the company to find the necessary solutions towards minimizing the problem of the workers.

Mr. Laniel: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

As I conveyed the news myself yesterday afternoon to the minister, can the parliamentary secretary tell us whether the department might be interested in resorting to the good offices of the member for Beauharnois to draw up an efficient program to find—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Laniel: —without delay a solution to the problem?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The member for Sainte-Marie.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

MONTREAL—INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION OF BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the President of the Treasury Board.

Could he tell us whether he has approved the estimates necessary for the construction of Place Radio-Canada, as recently announced by the Secretary of State?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): A contract was approved this morning by the governor in council, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Valade: I should like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Could the President of the Treasury Board tell us the amount authorized by the Treasury Board and whether this amount is to cover the whole work or only part thereof?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order. The information requested by the hon. member cannot be properly given during the question period.

[Later:]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the hon. Secretary of State or to his parliamentary secretary which stems from the reply given a while ago by the President of the Treasury Board.

I should like to know whether the Secretary of State will soon announce officially the start of construction of Place Radio-Canada.

Mr. Robert D. G. Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I hope this announcement can be made either today or tomorrow.

FISHERIES

PROPOSED POLLUTION OF LAKES FOR RESEARCH PURPOSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Fisheries concerning the statement that the federal Fisheries Research Board is polluting 56 small lakes and 17 watersheds in northern Ontario. Would the minister care to comment on that statement and on what is the purpose of such action?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member cannot simply ask the minister to make comments; he has to ask a specific question.

Mr. Rynard: I should like to ask the minister, then, whether he intends to take any action in this matter.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, this is not a matter of pollution but rather a matter of controlled enrichment. Fertilizers such as phosphates and nitrates are being introduced into a number of small ponds. This is a controlled process. The enrichment process can be followed by a de-enrichment process whereby the lakes can be returned to their original state. This experiment is being carried out in co-operation with the department of lands and forests of Ontario, and the situation is under control.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PAYMENT OF RETROACTIVE SALARY INCREASES TO HOSPITAL SERVICES GROUP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I promise not to add an ounce of pollution to the question I am about to ask of the Minister of Veterans Affairs and of which I have given him notice. The urgency arises from the approach of Christmas and the coming into effect of a certain tax on January 1. Is the department doing what it can to issue the back pay raises to its housekeeping and steward forces, recently negotiated, before the end of the year; and with what results?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. In the same Christmas spirit I am very happy to report that the great majority of the hospital services group have already received their retroactive pay increases, and the remainder are being processed as quickly as possible.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question directed to the Minister of National Defence and his charming seatmate. I wonder if I can ask him now if he is in a position to advise the civilian employees of the Department of National Defence whether they will get their retroactive pay before January 1. If not, would they consult their colleagues on the treasury benches to see if those cheques could not be back-dated to some date in 1968 if it is necessary to issue them in 1969.

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not make a daily check on this question, but the last time I did check my information was that the prospects were reasonably good that these cheques would be out on time.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

PREPARATIONS TO MEET POSSIBLE 'FLU EPIDEMIC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): My question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of repeated warnings from United States authorities can the minister tell us what preparations our own federal health department has made to meet a possible epidemic of Hong Kong 'flu over the Christmas season?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I would advise that we have not had very many cases of this particular disease in Canada. So far only about 100 cases have been reported, and they have been relatively mild. Since the summer the food and drug directorate have been doing everything possible with United States and Canadian companies to urge the manufacturer of this particular antitoxin. We hope we will have a supply in Canada by mid January.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister advise the house at this time whether a sufficient supply of antitoxin will be available in this country, and whether the medical profession will have a supply to deal with this very dangerous disease?

Mr. Munro: It will be distributed on a priority basis. These are subjective judgments and are very difficult, but the health authorities will have to make them, such as the elderly first and so on. The difficulty in the manufacture of this antitoxin is being overcome by companies that have permission to make it both in the United States and Canada.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare a supplementary question. Is he making any arrangements to have the members of the house inoculated, as they have been in the past?

Mr. Munro: It is questionable whether members of parliament are considered priority persons.

EXTERNAL AID

BIAFRA—SUGGESTED DONATION OF SURPLUS FOOD AS CHRISTMAS GIFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): On Friday, Mr. Speaker, I asked the parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question concerning the Christmas ship to Biafra. Today I want to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a similar question. Would the Secretary of State for External Affairs consider a donation on behalf of Canada of surplus food for Biafra which would be shipped via the Christmas ship which is scheduled to leave New York early in January?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): As hon. members know, I have received a letter on behalf of members of parliament in which we were specifically asked if we could supply some surplus food. This matter is still under investigation.

Mr. Nystrom: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since this is an international project and since the government of Holland have endorsed it, does the Canadian government intend to encourage the Canadian people to support the project?

Mr. Sharp: If it would be any help, I should like to support it and I hope all members of parliament will support it most generously.

IVORY COAST—REPORTED REFUSAL OF GIFT OF WHEAT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs now to give a report of the circumstances surrounding the refusal by the Ivory Coast to accept Canada's shipment of wheat, as the Prime Minister suggested the minister would do today?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the matter is still under discussion with the governments concerned.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Could he tell the house whether the former member for Champlain is employed by his department and, if so, in what capacity?

Mr. Speaker: This question could be placed on the order paper.

[Later:]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works.

Could he tell the house whether the construction of post offices which had been postponed last year and promised for this year will be carried out in spite of the cancellation of winter works?

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I must have some details about the post office. If the hon. member would care to give me a note about it I should be glad to make some inquiries.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

CONSIDERATION OF MOTION RESPECTING TRANSPORT COMMITTEE REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): My question is for the house leader, but in his absence I should like to direct it to the hon. member for Montmorency in his capacity as chairman of the committee on privileges and elections. I should like to ask the hon. gentleman what became of the motion passed in this house in connection with my question of privilege, referring the report of the standing committee on transport and communications to the committee on privileges and elections. This motion was passed on December 10.

[Translation]

Mr. Ovide Laflamme (Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, the report of the proceedings of the sitting on November 28 was prepared, translated, printed and distributed today only. I got in touch with the whip of the opposition who gave me the names of two members of the Conservative party who were supposed to sit on the agenda subcommittee. This afternoon the notice calling for a meeting of the subcommittee tomorrow was sent out by mail to its members. If tomorrow the members of the subcommittee express the wish to sit on Thursday or Friday, if need be, we shall do so.

POLICE INVESTIGATION INTO LEAKS OF COMMISSION REPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I have a question I should like to direct to the Solicitor General. In view of the fact that La Presse has published documents obviously stolen from a royal commission, is it the position of the crown that a charge of receiving stolen goods is warranted against the newspaper?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have some doubts whether the question as asked is in order. The hon. member is asking for the expression of a legal opinion by the Solicitor General. Perhaps the question could be worded in some other way which might make it acceptable under the rules.

Mr. Alexander: I should like to raise a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I believe it is necessary at this particular time that we know in which direction the government is going. It seems that a major investigation is now taking place which involves several people and might involve the newspaper which did print the allegedly stolen material. I feel this is the type of question which should be asked and answered in order to protect those concerned. I ask Your Honour's indulgence in this regard.

Mr. Speaker: In my view the question is clearly out of order. I do not see how I can accept it. Perhaps the hon. member might give the matter some thought and seek the information in some other way when I recognize him again.

Mr. Alexander: Perhaps I could rephrase this question. May I ask the Solicitor General, are there any charges to be laid as a result of the investigation now being made by the R.C.M.P., and if so, against whom?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): There is an investigation going on at the present time. While that investigation is going on it would be quite improper for me to make any comment upon it. Until it is completed I have no comment to make whatever. When it is completed I will be glad to answer questions about it.

Mr. Alexander: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister advise the house whether he obtained copies of the supporting material used to obtain the search warrants to which reference was made yesterday; and is he now ready to let the house know what this information was?

Mr. McIlraith: Yesterday I indicated that I would undertake to find out what information was used or what form the giving of the information took before the judge, because the form of these hearings varies rather sharply across the country. I do not have a complete report on that. I understand there was no evidence as such taken at the hearing, but I am trying to find out what if any documentation there was. If there was any I will bring it before the house as I said I would.

TORONTO—HOLDING OF INDIAN GIRL IN JAIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Will he investigate the circumstances under which an 18 year old Canadian Indian girl unable to raise bail was detained in the Don jail at Toronto for more than one month, after which time the charge was withdrawn?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I read that article and I have asked my department to investigate. As soon as I know the answer I shall be pleased to inform the house.

[English]

Mr. Gleave: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister also investigate why apparently no assistance was given to this girl by the department?

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

APPLICATION FORM FOR SECOND CLASS MAILING PRIVILEGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Postmaster General. It concerns a three page application required from newspaper publishers applying for second class mailing privileges and the annual fee of $15 charged by the department to study all such applications. Would the minister take the opportunity soon to table such an interesting, costly and obviously very complex document?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad to.

HOUSING

REPORTED INTENTION TO INCREASE MORTGAGE INTEREST RATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport but in his absence may I direct it to his parliamentary assistant. Is it contemplated that Central Mortgage and Housing interest rates will be increased from the current 8¾ per cent to a new, proposed rate of 9¼ per cent?

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SUGGESTED NEW ROLE FOR DEFENCE FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. It is concerned about the recent suggestion made by Dr. O. M. Solandt, chairman of the research council, that Canada should consider converting its armed forces into a sort of global public works corps for the underdeveloped countries. Is this suggestion being considered by the government?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that that question is of very general scope, and I do not feel it is so urgent that it should be allowed at this time. However, since the hon. member appears ready to argue in favour of allowing the question to be asked it might be wiser to allow the Prime Minister to answer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have said that our review is a general one, and that we welcome all kinds of new ideas. I must say this is a new idea, but not so new that I have not also discussed it myself with other people in the past months.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of Dr. Solandt's past experience as founder of the research board will he be asked by the government to expand on his suggestion?

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION BY ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Prime Minister is prompted by similar questions which were asked in the house yesterday by the hon. member for Skeena and other hon. members. The Prime Minister must be aware of the extremely difficult situation which Canadian Indians and Eskimos face as the result of an apparent breakdown of government policy.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows he ought to ask questions and not preface his remarks by the type of statement he has made. Will he kindly ask his question.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I was just leading up to it. Will the Prime Minister consider instituting a royal commission of inquiry to look into the affairs of our native Indians so that our native populations in general will have the assurance that something is being done to correct these situations which certainly smack of serious injustice?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply to that question.

First of all, I should like to tell the hon. member that last week-end I visited the Indians of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. They told me that it was one of the first times a minister had gone out of his way to go and meet them in their province.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, for the first time the government is having consultations with the Indian peoples of Canada.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I should like to correct an impression the minister is trying to leave. Hon. Ellen Fairclough was the first minister who went to consult the Indian peoples.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Obviously the hon. member has no point of order but he may wish to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): By way of a supplementary question may I ask whether the minister's ramblings and wanderings over the country have answered the serious situation brought to the attention of the house by hon. members yesterday and today.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

VANCOUVER—DOMICILIARY CARE AT SHAUGHNESSY HOSPITAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of complaints from British Columbia regarding cut-backs in domiciliary care provided to aging veterans at Shaughnessy hospital in Vancouver, may I ask how the minister is dealing with this urgent matter?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I know of no cutbacks in services. If the hon. member has some specific points to make I wish he would contact me, or be more precise.

Mr. Rose: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Have the admission terms been changed in providing the number of beds for extended care in recent months?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member please resume his seat. I suggest this is the type of question which in my view should normally be placed on the order paper. If it is urgent, then the hon. member may give appropriate notice to the Chair for the purpose of discussing it at the time of adjournment.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to whoever is charged with meeting the orders the house makes with regard to the production of documents. My question relates to a motion for the production of papers passed on October 9 relating to the British Columbia Indian Reserves Mineral Resources Act. I wish to know where the documents are and whether they are going to be tabled.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): I will look into it, Mr. Speaker.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR ACCELERATED DEPRECIATION ON DRYING EQUIPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In the light of questions asked on October 24 and 25 as well as subsequently by the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) about accelerated depreciation on grain drying equipment, and in light of the suggestion three weeks ago that the question would be answered soon, may I ask the minister to advise the house when the new regulations will be published.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I believe the regulations were published in the normal manner by the Department of National Revenue some week or ten days ago.

Mr. Benjamin: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, members of this house have been seeking this information. None of us have received this document from the department, and I think we are entitled to be answered here because the question was asked here.

Mr. Benson: I suggest to the hon. member and to all hon. members that copies of the depreciation regulations are available from the Department of National Revenue.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUPERANNUATED FEDERAL EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR INCREASED PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday I asked the Prime Minister if he would like to make it clear before Christmas that some time early in 1969 something would be done about the pensions of superannuated civil servants. The Prime Minister told me that it is the Minister of Finance who answers for the government on this particular matter. Would the Minister of Finance like to answer my question now?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, before answering the question I should like to read completely what the Prime Minister said yesterday.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask a supplementary question. Surely the minister knows the answer to this. Are the recommendations which were made to this house on May 8, 1967 still under consideration by the government?

Mr. Benson: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Béchard in the chair.

ANTI-DUMPING DUTIES

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the imposition of anti-dumping duty including provisional duty and the establishment of an anti-dumping tribunal consistent with Canada's obligations under the "Agreement on Implementation of Article VI of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade" signed on behalf of Canada in June, 1967, and to provide further for certain related or consequential amendments to the Customs Act, the Customs Tariff and the Tariff Board Act.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

[English]

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Gray: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether spokesmen for the other parties would indicate whether they would prefer to make their major speeches at the resolution stage or on second reading. If the former, I would make a detailed statement at this time. If it is to be the latter, I will reserve my remarks until second reading. In either case, I would be happy to accomodate hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. Harkness: So far as this party is concerned we would prefer to hear the minister's explanation and make our speeches at the resolution stage rather than on second reading.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The members of this party who will be speaking on the subject take the same position.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, for Canada one of the important elements of the Kennedy round package was the new international code to govern the application of anti-dumping duties. Canadian representatives took an active part in negotiating the code to ensure that it would enable the application of dumping duties quickly and effectively when dumping caused or threatened injury to Canadian industry and, at the same time, protect Canadian exporters against the unreasonable use of these measures by other countries. Other signatories to the code have been complying with its provisions since July 1, 1968, as agreed at the end of the Kennedy round. It was not possible for Canada to meet that date and it was agreed with our trading partners that Canada could delay its implementation until January 1 next.

As hon. members are aware, new legislation is required for Canada to give effect to the code. It will be recalled that the white paper on anti-dumping, which was tabled in the house on September 20, incorporated a draft anti-dumping act designed to comply with the provisions of the anti-dumping code. This white paper has been subjected to a detailed examination by the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs which held twenty two meetings for this purpose. In the course of this study, the committee heard extensive evidence from industry representatives and government officials. This evidence forms part of the printed proceedings which have been available for some days.

The report of the committee recommends the draft bill and the white paper to this house for favourable consideration together with the changes set forth in this report. These recommendations have been incorporated into the present bill, to be based on this resolution. I should like to note the way in which members of all parties worked together on the finance committee in studying this important measure. I should certainly like to congratulate the members of the committee and its chairman, the member for Gatineau on the effort they put forward, enabling them to make a report to the house on their studies so expeditiously.

If I may, Mr. Chairman, I should like to comment briefly on the principal features of the proposed legislation. The bill relates to the imposition of anti-dumping duties including provisional duties, the establishment of an anti-dumping tribunal and certain consequential amendments to the Customs Act, the Customs Tariff and the Tariff Board Act.

Under the terms of this bill goods are considered to be dumped if the normal value exceeds the export price and the dumping duty applicable or the margin of dumping is the difference between these two amounts. Normal value is generally the price at which like goods are sold at arms length in the ordinary course of trade in the country of export at about the same time as the goods are sold to the Canadian importer, adjusted for allowances to reflect price comparability between the home market sales and the sale to the Canadian importer.

Export price is defined as an amount equal to the lesser of the exporter's sale price for the goods or the importer's purchase price for the goods on an f.o.b. basis. If the dumped goods cause injury, threat of injury or material retardation to production in Canada, dumping duties will be applied.

The Department of National Revenue is to retain responsibility for deciding whether or not goods are dumped into Canada. It will also be responsible for making preliminary determinations of dumping and the consequent levying of provisional duties. These duties would be collected after a preliminary determination by the deputy minister and would apply to all imports of such goods until there is an order or finding by the tribunal. After an order or finding the deputy minister makes a final determination and definitive duties are applied to all subsequent importations of like goods that are dumped. National Revenue's decision on the margin of dumping and the category of goods involved will be subject to appeal to the Tariff Board and, on points of law, to the Exchequer Court. These appeal provisions are analogous to the appeal provisions set out in the Customs Act.

The most significant change required in Canadian legislation relates to the provision that there must be a formal inquiry into the impact of dumping on production in Canada. This requirement is carried forward from the anti-dumping code which provides that injury, threat of injury or material retardation to production in Canada must be determined before dumping duties are assessed. An anti-dumping tribunal to be composed of not more than five members is to be established for this purpose. The tribunal must, within three months from the date of the deputy minister's preliminary determination, make a decision on the question of injury, threat of injury or material retardation to production in Canada. If the tribunal makes an order or finding of injury, the deputy minister of national revenue must make a final determination as to the margin of dumping.

A number of enforcement provisions have been built into the proposed act to enable the Department of National Revenue and the tribunal to obtain the necessary data and arrive at decisions within the framework of the time limits provided for in the bill. Accordingly it will not be possible for importers to escape anti-dumping duties by either supplying incorrect information or withholding information. On the other hand, importers and exporters who conduct their affairs in a legitimate manner have nothing to fear from the most vigorous application of these provisions.

In so far as the consequential amendments are concerned, the only substantive revision relates to the proposed deletion of subsection 7 of section 40A of the Customs Act. This section provides for the establishment of arbitrary or fixed valuations in respect of goods which are sold to importers in Canada at prices similar to those prevailing in the country of export and therefore are not dumped but are judged to be causing injury to Canadian producers. We are proposing that this section be replaced by a new provision which will achieve the same result as the present law through the use of a surtax rather than anti-dumping duties. Emergency action of this kind is contemplated under Article XIX of the GATT.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I would like to state, and I am stating, that in the government's view the proposed legislation reflects the needs of the Canadian economy in this post-Kennedy round period by providing a comprehensive framework within which action can be taken swiftly to counteract dumping that is injurious to Canadian producers. I can assure hon. members that the government will see to it that the full weight of this legislation will be brought to bear to guard against unfair competitive practices of suppliers in other countries. Mr. Chairman, I urge the prompt adoption by the committee of ways and means of this resolution and the legislation for which it provides a basis.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, in view of the season of the year and the circumstances which exist at the present time in this house there is no intention on the part of this party of prolonging debate on this legislation. Perhaps even more important than that is the fact which was mentioned by the parliamentary secretary that the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs had a long series of meetings on this legislation at which we heard explanations from officials of the Department of Finance and of the Department of National Revenue, and briefs from groups representing most of the major industries in Canada, particularly all those which are likely to be especially affected by this legislation.

Dumping, Mr. Chairman, has been a problem throughout the history of our country. It can, does and will continue to cause serious injury to Canadian industry when it occurs. Dumping, or the sale of goods in Canada at a lower price than those goods are sold at in the country of export and which thereby causes injury to Canadian industry, in that simple form is very easy to define. However, the discovery of when dumping is actually taking place and the taking of effective measures to prevent it are very different matters.

The matter of determining when dumping is taking place was brought to our attention by a lot of the evidence supplied by Canadian industries that we heard in the standing committee. We also had a lot of evidence about past failure to take action after dumping had been brought to the attention of the Department of National Revenue. One of the great difficulties is that if dumping takes place it can cause serious injury to Canadian industry before it is detected. Even though the amount of dumping may not be massive, even though it may be relatively small, the entry of goods at dump prices can lower the entire market, thus putting Canadian industries into a loss position and in some cases forcing them to close down with a consequent loss of jobs, a loss of taxes to the dominion government, and so on. Therefore dumping is an extremely serious matter.

We also were given evidence in the committee that devices of many kinds are employed to conceal the fact that dumping is taking place or has taken place. In fact I think a statement was made by one of the witnesses to the effect that a manufacturer in a foreign country and an importer in Canada who knew all the ropes were in a position to evade completely our dumping laws. I would hope that the administration of this new dumping legislation which we are in process of passing will put an end to statements of that kind, which were not challenged by the officials of the departments represented at the hearings. In other words, I hope that this sort of thing will not continue.

The emphasis in most of the briefs presented by industries that were represented at the committee hearings was to the effect that improved administrative practices and greater speed are necessary to ensure that dumping does not take place, and that these are essential if this new legislation is to be effective. I would like to put on the record two statements made by industries, which are typical of the type of statements we heard in the committee. The first is to be found at page 966 of the evidence and reads as follows:

> In conclusion—

That is, in concluding their brief.

> —we consider the draft Canadian anti-dumping act provides the broad discretionary powers necessary to permit the authorities to apply this instrument effectively. However, its effectiveness will depend largely upon the spirit and manner in which it is administered and the calibre of the people involved.
> Therefore, we consider it is of the utmost importance that the officials responsible for its administration should not only be fully qualified to properly discharge their duties, but should also be fully aware of the need to function expeditiously, aggressively and with Canada's best interest in mind.

This sort of statement was repeated in brief after brief. I think there is no question that the effectiveness of this new legislation will depend almost entirely on how well it is administered. I have hope that the administration will be improved, and later I will touch on one or two points in that connection.

I think the statement I have just quoted indicates pretty fairly the general consensus of the views of industry in regard to the legislation when it says that the draft anti-dumping act provides the broad discretionary powers necessary to enable effective anti-dumping measures to be taken. Therefore once more it comes down to the matter of administration.

I wish to quote briefly from one other brief, again under the heading of administration. It reads:

> Before this new code goes into effect, the customs division should become so organized that it can proceed thoroughly and quickly, and should have the will to do so.
> If the new code is to be applied "quickly and effectively", there is need for:
> 1. More information on entries.
> 2. More prompt reporting of entries by local ports of entry.
> 3. More information relating to imports, which should be made available to the central administrative authorities more quickly.
> 4. Improved mechanism for the determination of values abroad.
> 5. Improved government facilities to establish facts promptly, which have been notably inadequate in the past, even when there were acceptable home market sales in an exporting country for like products.
> The administrative machinery of the Department of National Revenue should be overhauled to ensure the prompt availability of all data, whether it is to be obtained from abroad or from records in Canada.

I think we cannot overemphasize the importance of improved administration and great speed in detecting dumping and in taking the proper measures to put an end to it.

Some of the evidence we were given was to the effect that more Department of National Revenue officers are required overseas to investigate the prices at which goods are being sold in various countries so that individual complaints made by Canadian producers that dumping is taking place may be investigated. The officials of the two departments who were present stated that plans were under way for an increase in the number of officials abroad. I hope the government will take action along this line in spite of the austerity program which they have been talking about to such an extent and in spite of the freeze on the size of the civil service.

One thing which I believe is absolutely essential is that Canadian industry be protected against dumping. This is essential in order to ensure that employment continues at a reasonable level and also that there is a tax base upon which the government can obtain sufficient funds to carry on all the varied activities in which the government is now engaged. Therefore this is a case in respect of which I would hope the present freeze on increasing the number of civil servants will not apply so that a sufficient number of officers of the Department of National Revenue may be sent to overseas posts in order that proper information can be collected with which to properly administer the act.

The parliamentary secretary noted the fact that the committee recognized a considerable number of changes should be made to the draft bill contained in the white paper which was put before the committee. I believe the effect of these recommended changes will be to very greatly improve the bill. I was, therefore, happy to hear the parliamentary secretary state that these changes are being incorporated. I take it that they are incorporated or will be incorporated in full in the bill that will be produced as soon as the resolution stage is completed. I can assure him and members of the house that that in itself will of course greatly expedite the passage of the bill through the house.

I shall not refer in detail to the recommended changes, but I should like to note one of the most important. I refer to the elimination of section 30 in the draft bill which provided for a panel of deputy ministers whose view had to be secured before the tribunal set up to determine if dumping had taken place could take any action at all. I think it was quite apparent to quite a number of members of the committee and the representatives of practically every industry which mentioned the matter that this panel of deputy ministers was an unnecessary step in the procedure and one which was bound to cause delay. Therefore I am delighted that it has been eliminated. It seems to be a very peculiar sort of organization to deal with this whole matter in any event.

There is one other matter about which I should like to speak and which was referred to by the parliamentary secretary. It concerns the elimination of section 7 of the Customs Act and the substitution of section 37 as it was in the draft bill. I do not know what the number will be in the bill to be introduced until we actually receive it. The main point is that a great deal of damage can be done to Canadian industry by importations which are not dumping under the definition of that term but are importations at a fairly or very low price. This type of importation takes place at the end of a season, at the end of a run or because of something else along that line. It happens when the product is being sold in the country of manufacture or production at a price lower than the price which has prevailed previously or which normally prevails. Or it may be that because of certain particular circumstances the product is being produced at an abnormally low price. Importations of this kind have caused more damage and have been more difficult to deal with than ordinary dumping.

One of the best examples of this type of importation is in the fruit and vegetable industry. Our position north of the United States has made us particularly vulnerable in this regard. There is the situation in respect of strawberries. The strawberry season in the United States begins some four or five weeks before the season begins in Canada. By the time the strawberry harvest has begun in Canada it is about at an end in the United States. The cream has been taken off the market, so to speak, and the price has dropped to very low levels in the United States. When the strawberries are imported into Canada at that price, although it is the price at which they are sold in the United States it means that the Canadian industry cannot operate properly. Other fruits and vegetables are affected to a greater or less extent in the same way. Thus, in order to enable Canada to maintain a healthy fruit and vegetable industry some form of protection is needed against importations of this kind.

The same thing applies so far as some manufactured goods are concerned. This situation has been covered in the present Customs Act by the special value for duty provision under which, when an importation of that kind is made, the Minister of National Revenue can apply a special value for duty on the goods coming in sufficient to bring the price up to a reasonable level and thus protect the Canadian industry. Those sections of the Customs Act are being repealed by this legislation and are being replaced by a surtax in cases of this kind. The explanation given is found in the white paper at page 101 and reads as follows:

> The proposed new subsections to be added to section 7 would authorize the Governor in Council to impose a surtax on imported goods that cause or threaten serious injury to Canadian producers of goods that are like or directly competitive with the imported goods. These new subsections would replace section 40A (7) of the Customs Act and in their application would have substantially the same effect as that subsection.

My hope is that the provision will have substantially the same effect as that subsection. We were assured by some of the officials that this would be the case. I would like to have a further definite assurance from the parliamentary secretary that this is indeed the case because I think it should be emphasized and publicized that this same protection will continue to exist. I would express the further hope that the application of a surtax in these circumstances will be put into effect much more quickly than has been the case in the past so far as the imposition of the special value for duty provision is concerned.

I might mention my personal experience while minister of agriculture. On quite a number of occasions I tried to have a value for duty imposed on fruits and vegetables coming into Canada. I found that it was always a slow process to obtain agreement in respect of putting the value for duty provision into effect with the result that serious injury was caused the fruit and vegetable industry while the delay was taking place. In many instances this action was not taken at all. The reason that was always given was that it might cause some form of retribution or might be interpreted as being against the provisions of GATT or something else along that line. We were assured in the committee that this situation could be improved without coming into conflict with our commitments under GATT. Therefore I repeat that I hope that once this legislation is in effect there will not be the hesitation there has been in the past in making use of this surtax on seasonal imports, imports of fruit and other imports that come into Canada at low prices and which, by and large and as a combined group, have done more damage to Canadian industry than actual dumping has done.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, my remarks this afternoon will be brief, principally because we generally agree with the position Canada and the government are taking in this regard. I must say that the way the committee operated was enough to convince anyone that all the political parties in this house can work together effectively for the improvement of legislation. I should like to pay my compliments to the hon. member for Gatineau as the chairman of the committee. He did an outstanding job. Let me compliment also the hon. member for Windsor West. Although it was sometimes difficult to know whether he was acting as a member of parliament on the committee or advising the civil service, in either capacity he did an outstanding piece of work for the committee.

I felt rather proud of our behaviour as a country in respect of the international agreement on anti-dumping. Our negotiators were tough enough to protect our interests, yet at the same time they were sufficiently forward-looking to realize the benefits that flow from honouring international commitments. The behaviour of our people and our government stands in sharp contrast to that of the United States which seemed to take a rather ambiguous position about honouring international agreements. It seems to me the United States is prepared to honour these agreements as long as they do not conflict with their laws. This hardly seems to me to be a good way to embark on an agreement upon which many countries of the world have decided. When an international agreement is arrived at it means that each of the countries involved gives up a little of its sovereignty in return for a step toward a more harmonious and logical international structure. In this regard I think Canada has behaved well. I think our negotiators did extremely well in honouring these international agreements.

There is one aspect of the anti-dumping legislation which has perhaps been wisely left very flexible. It relates to the question of injury. The debate in committee revolved around the question of what is injury and how one goes about defining it. This has been left for the determination of a board or tribunal. There is a danger that injury could be defined in a too rigid way or in such a way it could actually do more damage than good. The nature of injury will always be difficult to determine. I suspect that in the long run the question of injury will in some way have to be a political decision. Since all types of injury are incapable of one definition I do not see how those who apply the differences can do so oblivious of the economics of this country. The implication, therefore, of what I think is one of the central parts of this legislation is the fact that the government will be left on the hook. It will not be able to say, if there is dissatisfaction with the application of the legislation, that it was a civil servant or the tribunal that made the decision.

The very application of the definition means there will have to be in some related way a political implication. That is the way it should be and I am not quarrelling with this concept. I hope there will be some attention paid to the condition of the economy when a decision is handed down. Quite frankly, what may constitute injury under conditions of full employment will be different from what we may consider constitutes injury when the unemployment rate is 5 per cent or 6 per cent as it now is. This will have to be taken into consideration.

Since the feeling of most hon. members is that Canada should move toward a world of freer trade and a less restrictive approach, an easier definition will be more acceptable when our industries are operating at capacity, when our farmers have markets and when our people have full employment, than when there is unemployment and a reduction in production. We have not heard the last of the definition of injury, and we will not with the passage of this legislation. I think this question will continue to return and we will have to consider it from time to time. We should be aware of the government's policy at any given time in relation to the concept of injury.

One of the difficulties of this legislation involves the question of proof. Of course, this created a difficulty in the previous legislation. If anything this measure is better than the previous anti-dumping law; at least, some of the industries which appeared before the committee seemed to feel we were moving in the right direction. In this regard we have to be very much aware of loopholes in terms of selling prices or costing in exporting countries. During the committee hearings I made some suggestions to departmental officials that they consider the use of a form which would put the onus of proof on the exporters rather than having our people running around trying to figure out to what extent the prices are legitimate or camouflaged. I recognize that our existing forms to some extent fulfil this purpose, but I think we could go farther than we have. I hope that the departmental officials will put their considerable talents to the task of finding a way of putting more of the onus of proof on the exporters rather than on the limited number of investigators we have at our disposal in the department.

I began my remarks by saying I was very proud of the role our people played in the negotiations respecting anti-dumping legislation. I also pointed out that perhaps others were not honouring the spirit of the negotiations as well as they might. I think it might be worth while for us to state that we are prepared to continue to be co-operative and to be internationally-minded in regard to legislation of this type but we will not tolerate being taken advantage of if other countries disregard their responsibilities. I believe we should make it very clear that our commitments will continue to be honoured and our good faith will be displayed, but if this is not reciprocated or if attempts are made by other parties to counteract the good intentions of this legislation, we will examine our position. We should not be afraid to say this openly and boldly. We should use this as leverage to ensure that others will observe the spirit of the negotiations to the same extent that we have.

I should like to pay tribute to the members of the committee. I can say this without indirectly flattering myself because I joined the committee only in its last few weeks; I was not a member of the committee from its inception. I have never seen a more outstanding job done by members of a committee. I would in particular like to compliment the hon. member for Edmonton West and the hon. member for Calgary Centre for the work they did in the committee. I heard one manufacturer remark as he left one of the hearings: "I had no idea that members of parliament were so knowledgeable or did their homework so well". I enjoyed the work I did in the committee. I hope I was able to make some contribution. I sincerely hope that the work of the committee and the co-operation displayed there will serve as a model to other committees of the house.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a few remarks on the resolution respecting anti-dumping.

Detrimental anti-dumping duties are called for by many industrialists in our country. Anti-dumping regulations which formerly existed are no longer considered satisfactory by Canadian industrialists. In fact, we have witnessed a great deal of discrimination in the field of anti-dumping. The anti-dumping legislation is very complex, Mr. Chairman, because it is difficult to apply, enforce and control, in view of the volume of international trade of which each country wants its share. Every country has a production surplus that it cannot absorb and it tries to export more in order to get American dollars and balance its international payments. Since the American dollar has become the instrument of international trade and since it controls practically all international relationships, many countries are forced to import because they are hungry for American dollars.

As far as we are concerned, we would like very much to increase our imports because our warehouses are bursting with goods. Our industrialists would be pleased to import, but that is not always easy, because that depends on the goods we can offer. In Canada, western wheat is our most common product and the one we export on a large scale. We have a substantial surplus that we would very much like to export. But it is not always easy to export our products without accepting other products in return.

For instance, two years running Russia purchased wheat in Canada and paid for it in American dollars and gold. That enabled us to reduce our balance of payments deficit. Then, after two years, Russia asked us if we would agree to accept other goods in exchange for our wheat and I think that Canada replied that it was impossible. In view of Canada's economic situation and surpluses of products which we already had in Canada in various fields we did not agree to that deal with the Russians, and it was the same for several other countries.

At the present time, Mr. Chairman, we know that Japan is one of the great exporting countries, that its prices are competitive and that it exports a great deal of radio and television sets. In fact, we receive in Canada a large quantity of those Japanese products which not only cost much less but which are actually quite often superior to ours as far as quality is concerned.

I shall simply give the example of Japanese television sets imported into Canada which are much cheaper than our Canadian television sets although they are of a better quality according to several technicians who do not only tell us but prove that the quality of these sets is better than that of Canadian sets. Therefore, the demand for those various sets is quite strong, because the quality is good and the price is competitive. As a matter of fact, sometimes there is a difference of about $150 between a Japanese and a Canadian T.V. set and this, after having paid the duty, transportation costs, etc. In view of those facts, Canadians demand similar prices, because it seems that this is more in line with Canadian pocket-books.

In the brief it presented to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, the Canadian Shoe Manufacturers Association mentioned the white paper on anti-dumping, and I quote:

Opinions vary widely on the merits of the new international code on the application of the anti-dumping duties and on the necessity of revising present anti-dumping Canadian legislation that it might conform with the principles of the international code. However, Canada being one of the signatories of the "Anti-dumping code", it is obliged to respect it. We will therefore not discuss the merits of the international code.

Before discussing specific clauses of the bill, we should like to point out that the present anti-dumping act is less discretionary. The bill, because of the introduction of the concept of "injury" requires a high degree of administrative vigilance and a far greater use of judgment on the part of officials and members of the tribunal. The bill confers an administrative factor of capital importance.

As we have already mentioned, the former minister of finance, Hon. Mitchell Sharp, pointed out that when dumping caused or can cause injury to Canadian producers, the government intends to see to it that, in Canada, anti-dumping duties are applied properly and efficiently.

Under present legislation, there are no definite restrictions on the retroactivity of the application of anti-dumping duties. The bill proposes, under clause 5, a limited degree of retroactivity, namely 90 days, from the moment when the deputy minister makes a preliminary determination of dumping in respect of goods the shipments of which constitute massive imports or are part of a series of imports to Canada which, taken as a whole, are massive and take place over a relatively short period of time.

The new legislation will not permit only a first dumping shipment but also a series of dumping shipments which would be even more damageable. In addition, clause 5 requires that more judgment and more discretionary powers be exercised.

Mr. Chairman, the members should read carefully the following excerpt found on page 8 of the brief, and I quote:

What constitutes a massive importation?

What constitutes a relatively short period of time?

We recommend that the new anti-dumping legislation provide for the levying of anti-dumping duties in every case and in those cases where goods imported were dumped, thereby causing or being liable to cause injury to production in Canada.

With regard to the investigation procedure, the brief continues:

Clause 13 is the first to deal with investigation procedures. It states that the deputy minister shall "forthwith" cause an investigation to be initiated, on his own initiative, if he is of the opinion that there is evidence that the goods have been or are being dumped and if he is of the opinion that there is evidence or the tribunal advises that it is of the opinion that there is evidence the dumping has caused, is causing or is likely to cause material injury to the production in Canada.

It is proper to note that the requirement to act "forthwith" does not apply until the deputy minister has formed an opinion. The text does not specify that the deputy minister shall form a quick opinion.

Furthermore, there is no requirement under clause 13(4) that the deputy minister shall act promptly upon receipt of a notice from the tribunal.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

It is very important for the members of the tribunal to have some experience of industry and the procedures followed before that tribunal should be quite simple, that is exempt from too many formalities.

Mr. Chairman, in this white paper there are a great many very complex formalities. I would not want to delay the passage of this resolution, but I think that, in Canada, as abroad, if the necessary purchasing power were available to buy the goods which are needed, importation would not be as necessary.

In the present world economic situation each country tries to rob the other of its markets through massive shipments of goods, which in several countries will finally bring about disorder. I would even say that importations could lead to war. All countries should imitate Canada which, in 1968, for example, produced $68 billion and exported and consumed $40 billion, leaving $28 billion worth of goods. It will be said that these products are capitalized, and it is true, because they are stored, they stay in warehouses, in the stores in view of the fact that the Canadian people do not have enough purchasing power to buy them. Each country must therefore find ways to enable the taxpayers to have the necessary purchasing power for domestically produced goods.

Consideration should have been given to another factor. Some countries have abundant primary products which they can manufacture or finish. I think some kind of planning should be established whereby one country could manufacture products which are appropriate to its basic resources, whereas production in another country should be based on its own wealth of primary products so that raw materials would be processed domestically. I would have appreciated studying this problem in the course of a committee meeting, but due to my being away for some time, I did not have this opportunity.

As I was saying before, as concerns anti-dumping, I think some means should be found other than producing and importing without taking into account markets in Canada and those that may exist in other countries. Distribution and consumption can be achieved without any large increase of production in our country, considering our natural resources, our technological progress and all the advantages in a country such as Canada. If more consumers are required, we are certainly in a position to accept more immigrants. Population can be increased. A greater number of immigrants can be welcomed, since we need more consumers to dispose of those surpluses of commodities which are also found in each country.

There are some countries, and Canada could be one of them, which pay compensated discounts on their products in order to reduce prices and facilitate exports into other countries. I think that Canadians, at the present time, are purchasing goods which have been subsidized by foreign countries. Now, if this attitude is allowed in various countries, it should also be allowed here in Canada. We are capable, if we have surpluses, of granting a compensated discount in order to facilitate exportation of such surpluses and consumption by our own people. If the products cost too much, if our Canadians do not have the necessary purchasing power, we can surely enable them, through a compensated discount on prices, to consume more to their greater satisfaction.

[English]

Mr. Danson: I think it is somewhat of a coincidence, Mr. Chairman, that this issue comes before us in the midst of the debate on the report of the committee on procedure because sitting in the committee which considered this matter was one of the most rewarding activities in which I have participated during the short time I have been here. There was a spirit of co-operation which indicated that the committee system works. If committees are provided with the facilities for which we hope, then in the future the committee system will work extremely effectively.

As has been mentioned, there were some 22 meetings of the committee and the chairman deserves credit, as does the parliamentary secretary who guided much of the deliberations of the committee during those 22 meetings. Members from the other side of the house and from this side moved along from point to point in a spirit of co-operation. It was not a debating society; no one was trying to make points. We realized we had a job to do and we got along with it.

I think this spirit is more evident in the intimate atmosphere of a committee than in the somewhat combative atmosphere we find as we face each other across the bastions of this house. I might say that we got to know one another, perhaps not to the extent we would have liked. I am afraid we did tend to sit on opposite sides of the table, but perhaps as we get to know one another better even that tendency will disappear. It was very important, since we are in the midst of a rules debate, to see and experience a committee working well. Men from all parts of the country were gaining a perspective that is only possible when they meet men from other parts of the country. This was indeed an enlightening experience for everyone who participated in the deliberations of the committee.

The committee went beyond a mere examination of the anti-dumping provisions and the white paper. As a result members gained a very excellent insight into Canadian industry as a whole. Though we perhaps strayed too frequently from the direct purposes of the committee, I believe, we all benefited from the education we received. As one industry after another presented us with completely different problems, we learned something about those industries which will help the members of the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs to function a great deal more effectively and intelligently in the future.

Perhaps one of the most interesting experiences, one of the most exciting things for all Canadians, occurred on the day we listened to the brief from the steel industry of Canada. This industry does have its dumping problems and those problems have to be looked into. However, it is an interesting industry. The rates of pay are as high as those in virtually any industry in Canada and, what is equally important, they match or exceed those paid in the same industry in the United States. The industry is highly profitable in that it generates a great deal of new investment in new plant, new technology, and so on. They have reached a technological level that is second to none in the world, and as well the industry pays its shareholders good dividends. As far as I can recall, this was the only industry that was wholly Canadian owned. It is free to move without checking with anybody else anywhere.

Sometimes there was a tendency on the part of the members of the committee and those appearing before the committee to fail to differentiate between tariffs and what is legitimate dumping. As they become more familiar with this new anti-dumping legislation I think that the people in industry, the producers, will be able to make this differentiation.

The question of injury was critical in the examination of this legislation. Injury can be very difficult to prove, and many hours and many meetings were spent on this issue. The interesting part was that everybody seemed to accept the fact that broad discretionary powers were needed. The legislation provides for the establishment of a panel which will have this discretionary freedom. Thus we can implement this measure in the proper spirit of the Kennedy round negotiations. We heard words and saw words in brief after brief to the effect that this must be done forthwith, expeditiously, immediately and precisely. There was a great deal of concern about this.

I can understand the apprehension that prevailed because a year or so ago I sat on the opposite side of the table during the negotiation of the Kennedy round machinery tariff. This industry, with which I was associated, had these same apprehensions. However, there is something new and exciting as a result of the Kennedy round negotiations. There is a spirit abroad which I feel has permeated the departments concerned, particularly the Department of National Revenue, and as a result there is a desire to make this plan work. The new machinery tariff has been in effect for almost a year and there has not been a single complaint during that time. This is very encouraging. I believe that the anti-dumping provisions will be implemented in the same spirit, in a highly intelligent and imaginative way.

We forget that these negotiations are a two-way street; the arrangements are reciprocal. Additional opportunities are provided to us for the protection of Canadian exporters. The spirit of the Kennedy round which is abroad will enable us to function effectively in the international trade arena. There are dangers if we sit back and try to hide behind our tariffs or what is left of our tariffs. We will be given a challenge, an opportunity to get into other markets abroad and show the entrepreneurship which is so essential to this country and from which our industry will benefit greatly.

I have not spoken for 20 minutes. I have only spoken for about 7 minutes, I think, but I have nothing more to say so I see no reason to speak for 20 minutes. I think we should bear this in mind during the rules debate as well.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, at the outset may I pay my respects to hon. members of the committee who dealt with this most important, intricate and technical subject. I also wish to pay my respects to the parliamentary secretary who represents Windsor West, a companion riding to mine. I am sure he is as familiar with the problems of his area as I am with the problems of mine. In the 20 minutes allocated to me I hope to place before the committee some questions that I presume we both agree ought to be asked. Perhaps he will be able to provide some of the answers which we are eager to hear. At the same time I pay tribute to the hon. member for Calgary Centre for his remarks. As an ex-minister of the crown responsible for agriculture, a field where problems have been most acute, certainly he has the right to be considered well versed in this subject. The remarks he made to the committee proved that he was familiar with all aspects of the problem. He has made some constructive suggestions in the committee and in the house in this field.

In the areas the hon. member for Windsor West and I have the honour to represent this legislation is considered to be most important. Because of past experiences our people are uneasy about what will happen. The last time there was a major overhaul in tariff regulations pertaining to international trade small industries, subcontractors and the agricultural industry in general suffered serious economic set-backs. Many of those set-backs have not been made good over the passing years.

It has been found through the years that any reduction in protection or any approach towards free trade has worked adversely in particular circumstances. I am speaking particularly about the growers of luxury crops, the fruit and vegetable growers, the canneries and allied, small industries of the area. Throughout the years they have found that existing anti-dumping legislation did not provide the protection it was felt was required and in many instances there was real hardship.

Why are our people uneasy about this legislation? They have just undergone an experience with regard to the corn industry, which is very important in my area. It seemed impossible under existing regulations to prevent corn from another country being dumped in this country. When corn was brought in the Minister of Agriculture stood up in the house and said that according to existing definitions there was no dumping, that what had happened could not be classified as dumping and therefore no action could be taken. Finally, after many weeks and after much damage had been done as a result of corn importation the government acted, and I am happy to report that in some small way the market has been stabilized. The fact still remains that the government delayed in acting.

Something else which caused our people worry was the matter of tariff reductions. Tariffs were to be reduced, which was of advantage to importers in this country. It is interesting to note that in Canada Farm Economics, volume 2, No. 3, which is issued by the department to aid members of parliament and other interested parties, certain tariff concessions are listed. With regard to concessions by the United States, the nation we are primarily concerned with, three pages in this volume are taken up with items agreed to at the Geneva trade conference. On the other hand, the concessions made by Canada with regard to agricultural imports into this country take up five complete pages. That is cause for worry.

Our people are also worried about statements that the former minister of trade and commerce made at Geneva when the negotiations were in progress. He intimated that some industries would suffer hardships. In particular, he suggested that the greenhouse industry might have to be phased out in the near future and that the men employed in it might have to earn their living in some other industry. Still another minister said that no doubt there would be some hardships and some industries would be hard pressed. He also said that the government might aid these industries in some way in order to help them to meet the adjustment. Naturally we are uneasy.

I am not at all sure that this measure will protect us adequately, despite assurances by some hon. members that it will. I have seen what can happen when measures like this do not work. I have seen private businesses destroyed completely. I have seen bankruptcies. I have seen small plants close down and men 50 to 65 years of age thrown out of work and unable to obtain other employment. I have actually seen suicides among agricultural businessmen because industries which took a couple of generations to build up were destroyed when underpriced produce was allowed into the country at the stroke of a pen—a stroke made by some government official. We do not want to see that happen. That is why I want the parliamentary secretary to assure us that this measure will accomplish what it is said it will accomplish.

I am very concerned when I see that the fair market value for duty yardstick, on which industry has learned to rely, is to be supplanted by a surtax. The surtax may be applied in such a way as to provide adequate protection, but I have doubts about it. I seriously doubt that this measure can be applied quickly enough to do the job. As the hon. member for Windsor West knows, great damage can be done in the agricultural industry when markets disappear or prices fall. Prices change not in months, not in weeks, several days or one-day periods but in hours and even in minutes sometimes. Once a market is lost, especially in high priced luxury commodities, it is lost for good. It is almost never recovered and primary producers almost never recover their initial cost. As a result I want to see the mechanics of this measure set up in such a way that action can be taken quickly enough to avert any situation such as the one I have described or correct one that is going wrong.

When I read in the white paper that a determination of injury shall be made and that a study will have to be undertaken to determine whether or not imports have caused damage to industry, and so on, I begin to fear that this measure may not have the practical results which are intended. I see, for instance, that the imposition of anti-dumping measures is to be studied and decided with special care. I am not opposed to this. I am not opposed to the establishment of a tribunal to assess these situations and take action. Let them study anything they want to study. I am concerned about the result, which is to protect our small industries against being wiped out of existence. I am concerned about maintaining a suitable economy for our agricultural products.

Under this tariff agreement I know that in many instances the duty on the importation of fresh fruit and vegetables into this country has been very little changed. But there has been a tremendous change in the amount of duty payable on goods coming into this country in manufactured or semi-manufactured form. And this seems to be the trend, rather than the movement of goods in bulk or in an untreated state.

I am very doubtful that this legislation in its present form will bring about the results which are needed especially by sectors of the agricultural industry and by small contractors or producers. I am aware that many briefs were presented to the standing committee which dealt so expeditiously with this subject. But those briefs were compiled for the most part by corporation lawyers and chartered accountants at the instigation of well-established corporations, some of them, perhaps, with international connections. I wonder how many of those briefs were from small manufacturers, the men who depend on the tariff concession to keep them in competition. I do hope it is not the policy of the government to let these men go out of business on the ground that free trade is best for all Canadians. I hope the government is concerned about certain specialized sections of the agricultural industry. In my own mind I am satisfied that reductions in tariffs on commodities entering this country will not mean a reduction in prices paid by the consumer except in perhaps a very few instances. If there is a reduction of one per cent in tariff I am sure it will be taken up by those engaged in the trade and that it will not be passed on to the consumer unless violent competition makes it necessary to do so.

I sincerely hope that the aims and objects of this legislation can and will be carried out. On the other hand, I feel it will be impossible in many cases for the terms of this measure to be applied fast enough or completely enough before damage is done, before a catastrophe has been brought about, especially in certain specialized sectors of industry and in certain particular regions of this country. We in Canada are faced by two handicaps. One of them is regional. We have specialized crops. Then, unfortunately, by the very nature of our climate, our early crops are forced to compete in many instances with the residues of crops gathered in the country to the south. Yet there is no comparison when it comes to the price needed to ensure a fair return, having regard to the different methods of production used. I sincerely hope this measure will finally be passed in a form corresponding with the realities of this situation. But I must say I have grave reservations.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to speak for long on this measure today because we had ample opportunity in the committee to discuss all its aspects and to ask our questions and get whatever answers we could. In most cases the answers were very full and quite satisfactory. I think we owe a tribute to the chairman and to the parliamentary secretary for the way in which they contributed to our discussion in the committee, and to all hon. members who participated.

There remains, however, one matter in connection with which I still believe we have not been able to register our opinions with sufficient force. We need to emphasize this point again and again. It concerns the very drafting of the bill. When we discussed this matter with the departmental officials I feel we did not really succeed in impressing on them the importance of what we had in mind, and I think it is necessary to re-emphasize the point I am about to express. In our report we said:

> Your committee wishes to underline the necessity of prompt and effective action to ensure the carrying out of the intent of the proposed legislation with regard to injurious dumping.

And further:

> Your committee also heard much evidence with respect to certain types of low-cost imports causing serious injury and reiterates that prompt and effective action must also be taken under the pertinent section of the proposed legislation.

This has been emphasized many times. In our discussions with departmental officials we tried to get this point across and they told us: Well, we have to get someone from trade and commerce, someone from agriculture, someone from finance, someone from national revenue and someone from external affairs to discuss an application of this kind before a decision can be made.

I am thinking particularly of the difficulty which may well arise in connection with agricultural products which are the concern of the riding I represent. I may say that I have seen in my own constituency what can happen when an urgent situation arises in connection with industry. Months went by before a decision could be made by representatives of the five departments which had been brought together to consider the matter. They negotiated and discussed with the greatest of good will and the best of intention to reach a decision as soon as they could. But by the time a decision had been reached the purpose for which they had met was no longer important. I am confident we need a faster method of getting decisions made. There is one other area to which I should like to draw attention today. I am thinking of the consequences that follow arbitrary strokes of the pen, decisions of one kind or another which affect the agricultural industry. We seem to feel in this country that we can throw sections of the agricultural community to the wolves. Consider the matter of tariff protection or protection against dumping. We specifically exempt imports from certain countries from these measures For example, we have concluded treaties with Australia which make it possible for that country to export to Canada with complete freedom from anti-dumping legislation. We have told Canadian peach growers: "It is too bad, but we have decided that Australia can completely ignore the regulations with regard to dumping". We have said to them: "It is too bad. Go back four squares and miss three rolls of the dice. Try some place else." In many instances when this has happened to manufacturing industries we have said to them: "We are going to give special compensation to industries that find it difficult to adjust to these new conditions." But we do not say that to the agricultural industry. To it we say, "You fellows have to take your lumps." I do not think we can continue to do this. This is something we have to look at when arbitrary strokes of the pen are made in the matter of tariffs and anti-dumping regulations.

These are points that I feel I must make, points that have not been fully dealt with so far in our discussions and negotiations. I think it is important to have them on the record for the consideration of the minister and in turn for his departmental officials who will be handling these matters at the administrative level.

Mr. Hales: First, Mr. Chairman, I would like to compliment the government on the way it has handled this proposed legislation. Ten, 15 or 20 years ago the party in power, regardless of which one it was, would have introduced such legislation and said to the manufacturers of Canada, "Here it is; take it or leave it." But that is not so this time. The manufacturers or their associations had ample opportunity to appear before the standing committee and present their briefs, ideas and suggestions, and the members of the committee were willing to hear them. Furthermore, the committee made amendments which I understand have been almost 100 per cent accepted. So I compliment the government on its approach to this legislation. But in case members of the government might become too elated over what I have just said, I would like to remind them that the late C. D. Howe did not bend over backwards and think too favourably of Canada as an exporting country. He seemed to feel that we would not stand much of a chance as an exporting country.

However, in December, 1960, the then minister of trade and commerce, the hon. George Hees, introduced the brilliant idea of assembling our trade commissioners from all over the world in Ottawa and inviting Canadian manufacturers to meet with them, thus putting across the idea that if Canadian manufacturers were given an equal chance they had a wonderful opportunity to export their goods. He aroused their imagination and since that time Canadian manufacturers have realized they have an opportunity to become large exporters. Give Canadian manufacturers a fair break, give them an opportunity to play in the same ball diamond with the same set of rules and I am convinced they can compete any place throughout the world. So I am glad to see this anti-dumping legislation brought forward to give them some protection.

This anti-dumping legislation gives to the Department of National Revenue, which will administer it, more discretionary powers than have ever been given to any department of government. We, as parliamentarians, have grave reservations about discretionary powers. It is a subject which has been debated at great length in this chamber. The standing committee felt that in order to administer this legislation discretionary powers had to be given to that department, but now that we are giving the department those powers we expect it to act quickly and to be vigorous and prompt in administering the legislation. If the officials do not do that, then the legislation is of no use. It is useless unless those administering it take hold of it, give it a new approach and bring in new people who have the ability to administer the legislation as it should be administered. I am not suggesting that they go out and build a great empire to do this. I think they already have the men in the department. It will be a matter of reorganizing the department for the application of this anti-dumping legislation.

Above all, the administrative staff will require expert chartered accountants, men who can go into the English market, the Italian market, into manufacturing plants abroad, look at their books, study their costing methods, and be able to say whether those manufacturers have arrived at the right, proper and normal value. If we send a man who does not understand his work, who is not a specialist in accounting, he will be lost and will not be able to establish the normal value for export purposes.

Great power is also given to the deputy minister, and he will have to work quickly. The legislation says he must "forthwith" do this and do that. Forthwith does not mean a week from today. It is now, and the standing committee was given to understand that that is just what is meant.

Sometimes it is difficult to get information from boards and commissions such as the hydro-electric power commissions of the various provinces and the Canadian National Railways. Sometimes they refuse to give the prices at which a tender is let. How can one establish the normal value if one cannot find out all the information? I am glad to note that the draft bill contains in clause 11 this provision:

> Where, in the opinion of the deputy minister, sufficient information has not been furnished or is not available to enable the determination of normal value or export price under section 9 or 10, the normal value or export price, as the case may be, shall be determined in such manner as the minister prescribes.

This means that if they do not want to give this information the department has the power to demand it, and I sincerely hope it will use that power in securing all the information required.

A tribunal is to be established consisting of five men. Who will these men be? Will they be capable men? Will they be men who have great experience in commerce and industry or will they be political appointees? If they are appointed on a political basis and not on the basis of ability the tribunal will be useless and the act will not be administered as it should be. When the government picks these five men who will make up the tribunal—and it is the tribunal whose word is final on whether or not a dumping duty should be imposed—I hope it will pick men well experienced in commerce and industry. I also hope the tribunal will report its findings promptly.

The draft bill also contains a clause dealing with the terms and regulations of the tribunal. I hope we will be told who will examine these regulations or terms. Will they be cleared by parliament or by the cabinet? I am not too sure on that point.

I am also a little concerned about a situation which could very well happen in Canada. I think all hon. members are aware that many American corporations operate branches in Canada. Let us assume that a United States corporation, with a subsidiary in Canada which has 90 per cent, 95 per cent, or even more of the Canadian market in respect of one product, has branches all over the world. It is possible it might decide it could make the product it is making in Canada more cheaply at one of its foreign plants. So it would decide to manufacture this product at another plant elsewhere in the world. Thus the Canadian plant would be closed down and many people would be out of work. Who would complain that there was dumping? It is certain that the corporate company in Canada would not complain because it would bring the product in and no dumping could be charged against it. It could continue to bring it in and no one would register a complaint. The only safety valve in this regard, and the one on which we would have to depend, would be that the union in that plant, if it felt that an injury had been caused it, would be perfectly within its rights to register a complaint with the tribunal and say that injury had been caused because the employees had been put out of work. I feel that this anti-dumping legislation is a step in the right direction. After all, our regulations have not been changed to any great degree since 1904. It is time this was done.

I sincerely hope that all the other countries which are involved in this agreement will carry their weight. It has not yet been proven to me that the United States will decide to go ahead with such legislation. I presume this will be the case, but I think Canada should know this first before it moves too fast so that we will begin anti-dumping legislation on an equal basis. Anti-dumping legislation is not the over-all answer. It is not the answer to help Canadian industry to survive. It certainly is a help but it will not correct the situation altogether. We must look at the existing non-tariff barriers and do something about them in the form of legislation. Nothing in this legislation will relieve the problem of low wage countries exporting to Canada in great quantities.

I am told that Italy, with a wage rate about one-third that in Canada, is a large manufacturer of electrical appliances. Italy will and is now exporting these products to Canada. They have other advantages, including a tax structure which the Canadian manufacturer does not have. While the Canadian manufacturer has a 50 per cent corporate income tax slapped on his profits a company in Italy may only have to pay 5 per cent in income tax and in addition is allowed to plow all its profits back into development and research. These are the type of things that are causing real problems in Canada.

Then we have the most-favoured-nation agreements. We have such an arrangement with Russia which I think expires next year. Because of this agreement heavy dump trucks and power shovels that are made in my riding must compete with the heavy equipment brought in from Russia because Russia was given most-favoured-nation treatment. I pause to wonder why this concession was given. When it comes up for renewal I hope the house will give very serious consideration to the facts behind it.

We also have a treaty with Australia. Australia exports canned peaches to Canada. This is causing problems for the Canadian fruit growers.

A free trade agreement in respect of agricultural machinery was made in 1944. It was a one-sided agreement. No mention was made of parts. Now we have the situation of Canadian agricultural machinery manufacturers deciding to move their plants to the United States. The Canadian plants that were supplying parts for agricultural machinery are now trying to export the parts to these plants in the United States. They find there is a duty on Canadian agricultural machinery parts and therefore they cannot send these parts into the United States without paying a duty while the United States manufacturer of agricultural parts can ship these parts into Canada duty free. I wonder what goes on here. These non-tariff barriers are certainly detrimental to the manufacturer in Canada.

Then we find that the government gives business to offshore companies. This is another thing which we should take a look at. I know for a fact that transformers used on the Nelson river project here in Canada were supplied under a contract given to the U.K. Electric Company in the United Kingdom. When that tender was given this Government knew that Canadian industries are not even allowed to quote a price in the United Kingdom. Yet we turn around and give the U.K. Electric Company an $8 million contract to supply the transformers for the Nelson river project. Because of this 1,000 men have lost work for a period of a year in my riding since the General Electric Company did not receive the contract for those transformers, and they were the second low bidder. I must not enlarge on this any more, but I did want to mention that the non-tariff barriers are just as important and perhaps more so than the anti-dumping legislation. However, the anti-dumping legislation is a step in the right direction.

I shall conclude by saying what I said at the beginning. Give the Canadian manufacturers the same set of rules. Let them play on anywhere in the world.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Chairman, I too intend to keep my comments brief. Much has been said about the importance of this legislation. Much has been said also about the effectiveness of the committee on which we all jointly worked together. I should like to add my comments in respect to the committee and how it worked. I express the hope that this might well serve as an inspiration to other committees which have not always found the going so smooth nor perhaps so satisfying. I think this is partly because we were well served by our chairman, the hon. member for Gatineau, by the parliamentary secretary, by the officials, and I think as well by the calibre of the briefs that were submitted to us by interested industrial groups. There was comprehensive and frank discussion at all times.

The importance of this legislation has been referred to by members from all corners of the house. We have been reminded that Canada is a trading nation and that more than most nations we depend on exports and on conditions or the climate abroad that will receive Canadian exports. Equally I think we might remind ourselves that we are a vulnerable nation from the point of view of imports.

The hon. member for Wellington spoke eloquently on the problems of non-tariff barriers. There is no question that these are serious. Other hon. members, including the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary, spoke about the problems of imports in the agricultural area and the need for protection and effective administration.

Let me for a moment refer to the international context in which we as a trading nation operate. Let me go back a little to the period immediately following the war when the hopes of mankind were focused on new international institutions, and I refer to the Bretton Woods agreement, the Marshall plan and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. These were three international expressions of good will and faith in the idea that through increasing trade we could improve standards of life throughout the world. Since then we have seen the development of the European economic community, also an organization which recognized that by lowering tariff barriers internally you could raise the standard of life internally.

These are the sort of things which reflect the spirit of the Kennedy round, the idea that men of good will jointly could create conditions abroad which would stimulate trade and at the same time protect national interests at home. At the same time I think many of us have watched with growing concern some of the trends that have developed south of the border. I refer to the guide lines that were introduced earlier this year, at the very moment the Kennedy round was indeed instituted in many parts of the world.

On January 1 the United States took measures to restrict certain trade practices in the interests of its own balance of payments, or to offset difficulties which were perhaps more of a banking nature than of balance of payments, but that is another speech. The protectionist feeling in the United States has been growing and we have seen manifestations of it during their last election. I would hope that the sort of action that Canada has taken, that this house is taking now in supporting and passing the anti-dumping bill, will be noted by our friends south of the border and give heart to those who would stimulate rather than discourage free trading practices. It is very much in Canada's interest to pass this legislation because I think it fosters a climate and spirit of enterprise both at home and abroad. It provides conditions under which entrepreneurship can flourish. It stimulates outward-looking attitudes rather than inward-looking ones.

This is consistent with risk taking and innovation. There are, of course, dangers and we have been reminded of them, but any great opportunity involves danger. Given prompt, effective administration of this legislation we can do much to create favourable conditions abroad for our own exporters and at the same time protect the interests of all Canadians at home, consumers and producers.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Chairman, along with other members of the standing committee of finance, trade and economic affairs I can testify to the hard work of that committee in studying the anti-dumping code as it was proposed in the white paper put before the committee by the government. I also wish to join with others in paying tribute to several members who put in a great deal of work on this study.

One thing that impressed the members of the committee was the complexity of the factors involved in dealing with the code as it was proposed. For this reason some of the provisions were left in a rather general and flexible way, thus enabling the authorities who will be charged with the administration of the code to have the necessary room to determine, on the basis of experience, the application of the law.

It was demonstrated during the hearings that the administration of this legislation involved a very important aspect of its operation and that it is really quite essential we do have effective and rapid administration of its provisions. Attention was drawn by the committee in its report to this particular aspect of consideration when it stated:

> Your committee wishes to underline the necessity of prompt and effective action to ensure the carrying out of the intent of proposed legislation with regard to injurious dumping.

For this reason, Mr. Chairman, the composition of the anti-dumping tribunal is a very important matter. Again the committee commented on this in its report when it said:

> Your committee recommends that the tribunal be duly constituted with members of the highest calibre at the earliest possible date.

I certainly concur in the wording of that recommendation because it is important that we have a representative group of people who can speak with some knowledge of the various considerations which have to be taken into account in dealing with the work of the tribunal. We need not only the viewpoint of industrialists and representatives of industrial concerns with technical knowledge; we also want to bring to bear the viewpoint of primary producer groups such as agriculture, and the interests of consumers. I would therefore urge upon the government that it obtain as wide representation as possible on the tribunal when it is appointed.

During the committee hearings it was noted there were some difficulties in respect of the interpretation of the code and the application of it in dealing with less than arm's length transactions of United States subsidiary firms operating in Canada. This is a matter which should be kept under very close study and, as well, in the future we should consider possible changes or improvements on the basis of experience.

It also seems to me that the evidence at the hearings underlined the need for rationalization of Canadian industry. We have to keep before us the effect of customs tariff amendments, the anti-dumping code and other measures which may be brought before us. They do not in themselves solve our basic economic problems. What we do need in many sectors of our economy is a restructuring and reorganization of much of our industry in order to maintain our international competitive position and to enable us to continue a rising standard of living.

The report of the committee also referred to the question of implementation of the code on an international basis. You will note that the committee report again stated:

Your committee notes that while agreement was reached on the principles of the anti-dumping code by participating governments, problems still remain with respect to the full implementation of the code among all participating nations. Your committee urges the government to continue to press for the full implementation of the code among all nations and expresses the hope that the passage of the proposed bill will be of assistance in achieving this objective.

I suppose this part of the report arises, in part, from some comments made to the committee by officials of the Department of Finance, in particular Mr. R. Grey, the assistant deputy minister, who appeared before the committee on December 4 and stated as follows:

I think it is fact—I make this statement after some consideration—that some uncertainty has been created as to whether or not the United States tariff commission, which is an independent body of the executive, in a sense, will act in such a way on this point as to be consistent with the code.

There is nothing in the rider which requires the tariff commission to act in such a way as to be inconsistent with the code. It merely enjoins them that discretion is not limited.

They can therefore exercise their discretion to be within the code or not be within the code, depending on the facts of what by definition is likely to be a very complex case.

Mr. Grey in his further testimony quoted the words of the United States delegate at the meeting in Geneva of the committee on anti-dumping. He stated that in case of conflict the present provisions of United States tariff law would take precedence over the international anti-dumping code. Of course, as a point of law this is also the case in Canada. He suggested that in fact there was potential conflict in the case of the United States and some possibility that the United States may not at some time in the future comply fully with the provisions of the anti-dumping code. At the same time Mr. Grey in part, speaking on instructions also, recommended that this should in no way deter Canada from adopting the anti-dumping code. Much as I subscribe to those words, I would express the hope that the United States will comply fully with the anti-dumping code. I find myself in the rather unhappy position of noting that it seems to me that on this occasion as on others we are the country that first has to take action and then later try to persuade the United States to come along.

During the course of the hearings it was also noted that there are certain problems with respect to the agricultural industry, not so much with regard to anti-dumping but depressed prices over a period of time. It was felt that perhaps some progress would be made through the new section that has been provided in the Customs Tariff Act. I would urge, however, that this matter be kept under constant study to ensure that some sectors of our agricultural industry, particularly those concerned with the growing of fruit and vegetables, are not seriously affected by continued unfair competition from United States' surplus production.

There is one further matter I should like to draw to the attention of the committee. It is that considerable time was spent on the problem of the case of one dump of goods being made in Canada. Only one dump is made, which does not enable the authorities to take action, and there is no repeat case with regard to which they can take effective action. It seems to me this is a further aspect of the problems of dumping which should be kept under review.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I of course support the resolution before us and hope it will be a step forward in dealing with our problems of international trade. However, I express the hope it will not be a stopping point and that we will not take a static approach to the problems of international trade. I hope we will continue to evolve our approach to these matters and will in fact make further progress toward achieving the goal of true free trade.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, there are a few minutes left for me to address some remarks to the committee on subjects that I do not think have been dealt with extensively by my colleagues in the house and particularly those who were members of the committee. I think that referring the white paper and the draft bill to the committee is perhaps a blueprint of what many of us have hoped would happen to much legislation. Perhaps it will serve as an example for the legislative process in changing the rules of the house.

Hon. members will find the report of the committee at page 469 of Votes and Proceedings No. 60. If hon. members turn to page 470 they will see the extensive amendments proposed by the government or accepted by the government as a result of the hearings and the observations of members of the committee. Personally I do not think they went far enough in two or three instances. I will have something more to say about this when we reach committee stage of the bill.

There are two or three things of a general nature that I should like to discuss at this time. I would refer hon. members and the general public to the proceedings of the committee which as an experiment, certainly as far as I am concerned, appeared after a certain date in both English and French. May I say that I think the staff of the committees branch must be congratulated on the efficiency and speed with which they produced the transcript of the proceedings. After all, we used to hold sessions morning, afternoon and evening sometimes on Thursdays and by Monday we had a transcript of everything that had transpired at those sessions. This is a completely new dawn as far as committee hearings are concerned and I think the officers of the house and of the committees branch must be congratulated upon it. I hope we will see this practice spread through committees.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Unless this is to be the practice in all committees, the hopes and aspirations of government members and others on the committee on procedure will count for nought because the committee system will break down even more than it has in the past when we sometimes waited two or three weeks for a transcript of committee proceedings.

With regard to the anti-dumping code, hon. members who wish to look for it in the proceedings will note that several members of the committee, including myself, indicated some apprehension about the code. I suggest to hon. members that because of the decision limitation of 180 days, if all proper steps are taken, there can be one free dump. Although dumping may be discovered and dumping duty imposed, it is the crown that recovers the difference between the dump price and what is deemed to be the normal value of the goods. But what of the industry that suffered? There is no way of compensating the industry.

This is almost like Marie Antoinette telling the mob in Paris that if they cannot have bread, let them eat cake. This is tantamount to telling the industry that has lost business and the workers who have become unemployed, "We did apply dumping duty and the crown got its pound of flesh". This does not provide bread and butter for the people in the industry who became unemployed as a result of the serious effects of dumping practices. Let us not be naive. Let us realize there have been and there will continue to be efforts to dump.

I was particularly concerned with the representations made by the heavy electrical goods industry. We have heard it said in speeches made this afternoon that the effectiveness of this legislation will depend entirely on the celerity and the effectiveness of the administration. We can pass ten anti-dumping bills, but if there is not quick and effective action under the provisions of the legislation it is all for naught.

I would refer hon. members to the report for Thursday, December 5, and the evidence of the heavy electrical industry at the time in which it was graphically pointed out that in the case of heavy electrical equipment dumping takes place at the time of the submission of bids and not when the equipment may come in, say two years later. It may be that when the equipment does come in anti-dumping duty is collected but, as I have previously asked, what happens to the workers and to the firms which have lost the work as the result of a tender bid in which the dumping actually took place?

The Department of National Revenue is in a rather difficult position. The deputy minister would not have the information to initiate an investigation. In fact, the industry itself would have difficulty in getting information for him because, unfortunately, it is the practice of many utility bodies throughout this country, some of them private corporations but most of them public bodies, not to publish information with regard to tender bids. The same applies to some crown corporations such as the Canadian National Railways. It is not possible to get any information from them because it is against their bylaws to publish such information. But how on earth can one protect Canadian industry if one cannot get the information to initiate an investigation to determine whether or not dumping has taken place? I know it has been left over for further consideration as to what steps might be taken to either compel or obtain co-operation from these various bodies so they might make the information available to the Department of National Revenue or to the industry itself.

There is one further remark I would like to make briefly at this time, but I will have more comments to make during the clause by clause study later. In the Kennedy round of negotiations it was felt that Canada's position with regard to anti-dumping legislation, that is, the power of the deputy minister of national revenue under section 6 of the Customs Tariff Act, was a form of discrimination and was, shall we say, one of the non-tariff barrier practices. In its negotiations in the Kennedy round Canada decided as part of the package deal to give up its position under the Customs Tariff Act, and agreed to the code. I wish the other trading partners in the negotiations had been as free and generous as Canada because none of their non-tariff barrier practices were the subject of negotiations and none have been corrected. It is hoped that as a result of the Kennedy round Canadian exporters or Canadian industry will have better access to foreign markets. However, let us be quite frank. Our trading partners, the British, the Swedes, the Germans, the Common Market, the Japanese, the South American countries, all have their non-tariff barrier practices, some of which are frankly nefarious. I am glad to see that the committee report recommends that the government initiate immediately negotiations for the elimination of more of these barriers. I do not think we are going to see a real improvement in trade until some of these practices disappear.

I hope we will pass this resolution very quickly, now that I have had my say, of course, but I understand that one more member wishes to speak and then we can proceed to the discussion of the bill clause by clause. I commend the resolution to the house.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take up too much of the time of the house, but I want to point out that although I was a member of that committee, I did not attend all the meetings because I am on too many committees. When it was decided that all committees would sit at the same time, I could not attend both meetings simultaneously.

I should like to draw the attention of the house to something which I realized during the committee meeting. First of all, however, I wish to congratulate all the members as well as the chairman of the committee. We were absolutely free to ask all the questions we wanted and to hear any witness.

I realized, Mr. Chairman, that all the evidence was given by producers. The minutes of the proceedings include a list of the main witnesses, who were the minister, the Graphic Industries Association, the Canadian Textile Institute, the Canada-Japan Trade Board, the Canadian Electrical Manufacturers Association, the Canadian Westinghouse Limited, and so on.

I would have liked the committee to sit longer, to allow us to hear the evidence of the Consumers Association, because the economy is made up not only of producers, but of consumers. However, Mr. Chairman, the Canadian anti-dumping draft legislation stems from agreements negotiated during the Kennedy Round between the participating countries, of which Canada was one. It is, in actual fact, a special act to bring our legislation into line with the international code concerning the application of anti-dumping duties.

Under our economic system, the sole objective of trade consists in realizing more and more profits at the expense of others. This financial system automatically results in lack of purchasing power on the part of the consumers. Therefore, it is clear that this legislation will afford some protection to the Canadian producers wanting to monopolize the domestic market.

Besides, Mr. Chairman, on reading the evidence gathered by the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, as well as the various briefs submitted to this committee by producers, associations and groups, it can be realized that they are interested solely in protecting their customers through Canadian legislation preventing imports of foreign products that would take a larger share of the Canadian market.

Arguments put forward are indeed very persuasive. For instance, it is argued that imported products at lower prices than other similar products manufactured in Canada will jeopardize the Canadian industries, reduce the number of jobs and perhaps cause the bankruptcy of several industries. Some emphasize that it is essential for Canada to be protected against foreign exports as our trade balance with other countries may be seriously affected.

We, of the Ralliement Créditiste, do not accept these arguments because we believe in an economic system geared to the satisfaction of human requirements and to the subordination of the methods to the results we are proposing. Consequently, as we have always indicated, we are guided by the following principles.

The purpose of economic order is to ensure that the needs of the consumers are met, and nothing else.

The end is more important than the means, and the means must be subordinated to the end, and the hierarchy of the various ends must be respected.

The purpose of industry, in all its forms, is to supply goods and services, and not employment. Industrial organization is that much more perfect when it produces more while requiring less human work, leaving man free to exercise his activity in humanizing works.

Money has no other purpose than to help economic life to achieve its end without obstructing it, managing it, or conditioning it.

The nature of things, sane reason and social justice teach us that the end of economic activity should be none other than the material prosperity of society, the well-being of the whole human community. The economy must not aim towards creating wealth for its own sake, or for only a few and it must endeavour to satisfy the needs of all and to produce goods which really make richer all citizens of the country.

In economics it would be said even more plainly that the end of the economic activity is to serve the consumer first. That objective must inspire any truly social, truly human economic policy.

The aim of the economic activity is to meet the needs of the consumers. However, the needs of the consumers will be met more easily and more fully if the products they need and want to get are available to them at prices they can afford.

It can be said that the legislation under consideration affects the consumers very closely because it can deprive them of the products they could not get at the prices now in force in our economic system.

International trade is made essentially of commercial transactions between countries. Purchases of shirts from Hong Kong, shoes from Italy, wines from France, woollens from Great Britain, these are imports for Canadians, imports of goods which other countries can offer to Canadian consumers at better prices, or goods which are not produced in Canada, or which are difficult to produce here according to recognized standards.

Conversely, sales of news-print to the United States, of wheat to Soviet Union, of bacon to Great Britain, are exports for Canada, exports designed to meet the needs of the consumers in those countries.

Thus, it can be said that international trade is a sound thing, and so we must support any measure designed to abolish hindrances, to enable consumers to satisfy their needs. In fact, if some countries produce easily and abundantly certain goods, other goods are better and more plentifully produced elsewhere. So trade between consumers of different countries is a beneficial thing.

However, we must realize that one of the greatest difficulties in international trade stems from the fact that countries want to export more than they import, to ensure a "favourable trade balance".

In fact, we know with what insistence public relations men in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce make every effort to show us that we export more goods and services than we import.

This philosophy, which is not that of the Social Credit, is based on the principle that gold and silver alone are desirable. If such tenets were justified, all trade between countries and even between citizens in a country should be abolished.

Assuming that gold and money were the only wealth, we could brand as madmen people who would be giving away their money to buy a suit or a car. However, today everyone realizes—and consumers are no exception —that what they need is bread, food and clothes, which are the true wealth and which will fill their every need.

Mr. Chairman, may I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the committee would allow the hon. member to complete his remarks before adjourning the debate on the resolution?

[English]

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

I shall simply summarize the remarks I intended to make in order that the resolution can be passed, because we want this bill to go through.

Under a finnacial system based on gold, or a system based on money and credit created by individuals who control the amount in circulation, countries cannot avoid exporting some of their surplus goods which domestic consumption cannot absorb for lack of purchasing power.

They cannot avoid either imposing restrictions on imports, because domestic producers fight in order to grab for themselves whatever small share of the purchasing power the consumers have left.

It is obvious that all this boils down to a matter of sharing the existing purchasing power amongst those who have goods to dispose of.

Mr. Chairman, here are the solutions in brief, because I want to shorten my remarks: Compensated discount on Canadian goods; lower Canadian prices by removal of a lot of taxes which increase prices; reforming our financial system, of credit-debt which pushes prices upwards.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

ANTI-DUMPING DUTIES

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald, Rosedale (for the Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-146, respecting the imposition of anti-dumping duty.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the second time.

Some hon. Members: Later this day.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be debated at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose), Indian Affairs—Competition for position as adviser on policies and programs; the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Chappell), Airports—Toronto—Protests against expansion of facilities; the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton), Consumer Affairs—Request for investigation into price of toys.

It being six o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, public bills.

PRIVATE BILL

BRITISH NORTHWESTERN INSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-9, respecting British Northwestern Insurance Company.

He said: Mr. Speaker, since this bill has already been before the house on three occasions I will not take very long to explain it. It was before the house on November 3, 1967, January 23, 1968 and February 29, 1968. On November 3 I made a detailed explanation of the bill, to be found at page 3813 of Hansard for that date.

The purpose of the bill is to permit the British Northwestern Insurance Company to change its name to Eagle Star Insurance Company of Canada, and to increase the authorized capital. The reason for this is that the parent company of British Northwestern is known under the name of Eagle Star Insurance Company and wants its Canadian subsidiary to be known by the same name. Another reason is that the name "Eagle Star" is well known in the insurance world and the directors of the company feel that by adopting that name substantial benefits will accrue to their operation in Canada.

As I said previously, British Northwestern Insurance Company was incorporated in Canada in 1906 and has been doing business here since that time. Although fully owned by the British company, Eagle Star Insurance Company, all but two of the directors of the Canadian company are Canadians. The company invests extensively in Canada and employs many Canadians as a result of its operations and investments. I point this out merely because some hon. members in previous debates raised objections. Despite the objections of some hon. members to the fact that this company is owned by a British parent, I point out that this bill asks for no substantial changes in the company. As I said, the company invests in Canada and most of its directors and personnel are Canadians. I hope hon. members will allow this bill to go before the committee where they may examine further the officers and directors of the company.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Would the hon. member permit a question relating to the capitalization of the company? I have been given to understand that the company is not all that serious about the capitalization aspect of the bill and might be prepared to forgo that part of its request if that would facilitate passage of the bill through the house. Has the hon. member any knowledge of this?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, after the bill was first debated in the house I discussed this matter with those in the company who are in charge. Since they merely wish to change the name of the company they would be willing to drop those sections of the bill relating to increased capitalization. Of course, they would have liked the increase but if there is objection to that aspect they would be willing to drop that aspect and to ask only for the change of name.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, we would prefer to see this bill go throuh the house as rapidly as possible at this stage and go to committee where answers to certain questions might be obtained. With regard to the change in capitalization, it is evident that the company needs more capital because of expanding business and the bilingual nature of the company giving it opportunities to operate in Quebec. This is very commendable. Having said that, I do not feel that the entire operation of the company ought to be reviewed as though it were seeking incorporation. Here they merely wish to change their name.

An added reason for the company to seek increase capitalization is that besides taking into account its greater volume of business and its improved position it must also take into account the factor of inflation. That factor alone would require the company to obtain greater capitalization. It would be rather reprehensible if we held over the heads of the directors of this company and the petitioners for this bill the requirement that they drop their legitimate request for an increase in capitalization in return for changing the name of the company. I think we have to be much more responsible than that. These people are legitimate, responsible business people and as long as it is the procedure that insurance companies shall come before this house for incorporation or any changes in their charters which are required by legislation, we must meet them as responsible individuals. Therefore I hope that Bill S-9 will be sent without undue delay to the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs where perhaps more questions could be asked and where we might also clear up a number of changes with respect to insurance charters which are long overdue.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I did not hear the remarks the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) made on an earlier occasion, which are reported on page 3813 of Hansard for an earlier session. I have not had an opportunity to read them and this puts me under a cloud when it comes to discussing this important measure. I notice that Bill S-9 has an explanatory note attached to it which says:

> The purposes of this bill are to change the name of the company to Eagle Star Insurance Company of Canada, and, in French, Eagle Star Compagnie d'Assurance du Canada, and increase the capital stock of the company from $2,000,000, divided into 50,000 shares of $40 each, to $5,000,000 divided into 125,000 shares of $40 each.

So there are two main purposes. One is to change the name of the company and the other is to increase its capitalization. You will notice, Mr. Speaker, that the present name of the company is British Northwestern Insurance Company and that the change proposed is to Eagle Star Insurance Company of Canada. The company happens to be a subsidiary of Eagle Star Insurance Company which is a British company of world-wide renown—a company which is very old and very large. I understand that it sells fire and casualty insurance.

The parent company is desirous of identifying this subsidiary more closely with its operations, I understand, and to consolidate its Canadian activities through this Canadian company. I understand also that the parent company itself does business in Canada and is registered under the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act. Another item of note is that the parent company owns all the stock of this subsidiary, and sells general insurance.

I thought we might have a dialogue between the members of my party and the hon. member who introduced this bill concerning not only the name but the question of foreign ownership. I am directing my remarks to the name, and I am sure that when I have finished the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce will gladly take part in this debate. I must say I am confounded by the change of name proposed, the proposal that a name like British Northwestern Insurance Company be changed to Eagle Star Insurance Company. When one thinks of the word "British" one thinks of the British empire, one thinks of the British commonwealth—

An hon. Member: And of the lion.

Mr. Gilbert: Yes, one thinks of the lion, as my hon. friend has suggested, a symbol of strength and solidity. But when I think of an eagle I think of our United States friends, of the eagle they have on their coins and all that the eagle represents in terms of United States power. When I think of a star, I think of the stars and stripes. I think, too, of the red star in Russia, another connotation.

Here we have an application to change the name British Northwestern Insurance Company to Eagle Star Insurance Company of Canada. I do hope the hon. member has good and valid reasons for wanting to make this change and will not say that it is just for the purpose of consolidating the company's activities in Canada. As a person who has sprung from British parentage I would not like to think that any attempt was being made by this company to Americanize this subsidiary, to give an impression to Canadians that it is a United States company by setting forth the words Eagle and Star. It seems to me we have gone far enough already with regard to the integration of our economy and the penetration of foreign ownership. Surely we would not attempt at this stage to change British Northwestern to Eagle Star of Canada for the purpose of conveying to Canadians and to the world at large that this was a United States concern. I notice that the hon. member seems anxious to rise at this point.

Mr. Allmand: Would the hon. member answer a question? At the beginning of his remarks he mentioned that the Eagle Star Insurance Company was a world renowned British insurance company. Would he not agree there is good reason to change the name of the Canadian subsidiary to the name of its British parent so that it would be identified with the parent organization?

Mr. Gilbert: That is an excellent question from a member who used to belong to the same party as I do. If I were to compromise, and I seldom do possibly because of my Irish background, I would prefer to do so on the basis of a name which at least had a British flavour. I have read a study of this particular company, and it shows a long list of other undertakings owned or controlled by Eagle Star. The list includes the Army, Navy and General Assurance Association, the British Crown Assurance Corporation, the Eagle Insurance Company, the Home and Overseas Insurance Company, the City of London Insurance Company, Jacksons of Wandsworth Limited, the Liverpool Reversionary Company, and so on. There are about 25 incorporated companies. If the hon. member were to assure me that the parent company intends to change all these names to "Eagle" so as to convey the impression that they are all under the protective wings of Eagle Insurance I would be inclined to agree with what he says. But I do not think he can give me such an assurance this evening and I doubt that the owners and directors of this privately-owned company would do so.

The study goes on and on. It deals not only with insurance companies but other types of business in which the parent company is interested. We learn that the company operates in England, in Australia, in the Bahamas, in Barbados, Canada, Jamaica, Nigeria, Zambia and South Africa. That is an impressive list.

I think we ought to consider the name Eagle Star in depth because of the serious consequences it might have in conveying to Canadians a connotation of United States ownership. Many people say: What's in a name; that which smells like a rose, that which is a rose, smells the same by any other name; Shakespeare can be the same by any name. I am sure you know that quotation, Mr. Speaker. I kicked it around a little. That which we call a rose can smell as sweet by any other name. I would be happier if I were sure that the purpose of this application was not to convey to Canadians the impression that our economy is not integrated with that of our United States friends.

I turn now to the question of ownership. When I studied the question of ownership I found, when considering the extent of foreign ownership in Canada, that 80 per cent was owned by the United States, 12 per cent by the United Kingdom and the remainder by other countries. You can see the impact that these companies have made. This is why I was so impressed with the former minister of finance, Walter Gordon, when he brought the problem of foreign ownership to the attention of Canadians.

I recall the introduction of the revisions to the Bank Act in 1966. One provision was the lifting of the ceiling on the 6 per cent interest rate. A group of young, avant-garde Liberals saw something wrong in this and they had a meeting at Peterborough under the guidance of Walter Gordon. I am inclined to think that the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce was one of those avant-garde Liberals who met at Peterborough to devise ways and means of meeting this lifting of the interest rate ceiling. I am rather surprised that he has introduced this bill because I think of him as one of the young men in the Liberal party who is far ahead of the cabinet ministers in regard to the economic situation of Canada and the foreign ownership problem.

When Walter Gordon brought this problem to the attention of Canadians he did them a great service. He underlined the problems that face Canadians today. In his book, "A Choice for Canada", he set forth the balance of payments problem which foreign ownership imposes on our economy. We still have that balance of payments problem. We still have an attempt by foreign-owned companies to penetrate the Canadian economy. When one thinks of this one cannot help but think that if we lose our economic independence we may well lose our political independence.

We should also keep in mind the great change that has taken place in society. At one time a large segment of our economy was within industrial control. Some 40 per cent of our economy was geared to industry, which meant that 60 per cent was geared to the service industry. With major technological advances it will be no time at all until only 25 per cent of our economy will be taken up by industrial development and 75 per cent will be service industry.

The insurance business is a service industry. One would hope that we as Canadians would direct our attention at least to controlling our service industries. Many Canadian insurance companies have been lost to foreign ownership. We had the recent example of Excelsior Life which is owned by the Aetna Insurance Company of New York. It has a tremendous spread of ownership not only in Canada but throughout the United States.

The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce said that the directors of the company in question were mostly Canadians. He is quite right. In fact the law requires that the majority of the directors be Canadians and that they become Canadian citizens resident in Canada. The hon. member said that two of the directors were resident in Britain. We would like to see the law applied so that the majority of the shareholders would be required to reside in Canada. This company has a wide spread of ownership throughout the world. More important, its ownership is in private hands. It is not publicly owned. It affords no opportunity to Canadians to participate in the growing service industry in Canada. This is why Walter Gordon was so emphatic about setting up the Canada Development Corporation. Through it he saw an opportunity for Canadians to buy shares in Canada.

When I see the Eagle Star Company, which is owned 100 per cent by English interests, offering no ownership to Canadians I cannot support the application of British Northwestern Insurance Company to change its name and its capitalization. The main purpose of this bill is to change its name and its capitalization. I would hope that the company would retain that great and noble name, "British", and would have the strength and courage to change its capitalization to give Canadians a right to own one of the largest service industries that we have in Canada.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, talking about this bill is like talking about an old friend. I am surprised that this company has not taken a simple method of solving its problems. I have never noticed that Mr. Humphrys was unequivocal about anything, but I would quote the following from the minutes of the proceedings in the committee of the other place:

> Senator Croll: If I have insurance with the British Northwestern Insurance Company now will I continue my policy with the British Northwestern Company or do they transfer me over to Eagle Star?
> Mr. Humphrys: You will continue your policy with this company and in all respects your policy will be valid and unchanged, but the name of the company is being changed so that when your policy is renewed you would get a new policy which would carry the name of Eagle Star of Canada, but it is the same corporation, the same corporate entity with the same liabilities.
> Senator Thorvaldson: Really it is just a change of name. That is all that is involved in this bill.
> Mr. Humphrys: Exactly.
> Senator Thorvaldson: Plus the increasing of the capitalization.

On a number of occasions Mr. Humphrys refers to the change in name, but the increase in the capitalization does not seem to carry any weight with him. If it is only the change of name that is important I wonder why the company does not obtain it through letters patent. Recently a number of companies changed their names by that method. But I think there is more to this matter. This is not a small company. It is a very large company. This company is being dishonest in saying it wants to bring all its companies under the Eagle banner. That is not what is intended.

This company, when it operates, suits itself as to what its name will be. I wonder about this. It has been very prone to change its name.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question? He just said that the company was being dishonest because it said it wanted to change all its subsidiary companies and put them under the name of Eagle Star. Would he advise where the company stated it wanted to put all its companies under the name Eagle Star?

• (6:30 p.m.)

Mr. Peters: I gather from memory that the hon. member in his introduction said that this was the intention of the company; that is, that the reason for changing the name to Eagle Star Insurance Company of Canada was that this is the name of the company in England. If that is not so, then it is all right. Let us look at this matter of the name. This company was incorporated in 1906 as the Freehold Fire Insurance Company. Then there was an amendment in 1906 changing it to the Prince Rupert Fire Insurance Company. Then again in 1908 it was changed to the British Northwestern Fire Insurance Company. It was reincorporated in 1910 under a dominion charter which was amended in 1952 changing the name to the present form. A dominion licence was issued to this company in 1912. It has called itself the Freehold Fire Insurance Company. It has called itself the Prince Rupert Fire Insurance Company. This should interest my friend because I am sure he will wonder why they gave up that name. Then it was called the Northwestern Fire Insurance Company, and now it is called the British Northwestern Insurance Company. So, this company continually over the years has changed its name. This reminds me of the people during the difficult days of the depression who felt that it often was easier to change their address than to pay the rent.

It may be that this company, while using each of the names, received a certain amount of criticism from those who were buying insurance and changed its name for that reason. This however may not be the case; I do not know. Really I do not know the reason these companies change their names. I am not really sure why this company makes the statement that it intends to do business in Canada under its parent company while it also has several other subsidiary companies which write insurance in Canada at the present time. From the information I have I find it difficult to sort out which of its many companies are doing business in Canada.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member another question?

Mr. Peters: Yes.

Mr. Allmand: Does not the hon. member recall during one of our earlier debates when I pointed out that the Eagle Star Insurance Company intended to do all its insurance business in Canada under this one corporation, and that it was closing down the other subsidiary companies that carried out the business of insurance in Canada.

Mr. Peters: Yes, I realize that; but this is not really what they say this year. Although they do not say which they are, they have three subsidiaries doing business in Canada. Two of them have closed down, but they still have two because the parent company is registered and is doing business in Canada as well. This company, as have other insurance companies, has done very little for the insurance business in Canada. It is interesting to note in respect of some of these companies that come before us that they do not make a suggestion concerning something they wish to do that would be for the benefit of the insurance business in Canada. I have always failed to see why we should allow the establishment of a new company or why we should allow the change in the name of a company without some legitimate explanation. I do not understand the reasons. They do not change their method of doing business, and they probably do not change their shareholders. There is no indication that the company either went bankrupt or failed to pay its liabilities. In fact there is no indication that all through the years this company even changed its capitalization. As I understand it, originally 50,000 shares of a value of $2 million were authorized. I believe the authorization is still the same. So I presume this has not changed in any shape or form. The company, however, has been doing business in Canada as has the parent company.

In looking over the report of the superintendent of insurance it is difficult to ascertain whether the Eagle Star Insurance Company of Canada was underwriting its own insurance or whether it was tied in with some other company for reinsurance purposes. It might be that the parent company was carrying some of the re-insurance. It is difficult to know what the situation is. Because we are interested in insurance I think members would be interested in looking over some of the types of insurance this company may write and some of the expenses the company may incur.

I should like to refer to one expense the company has, which I think is very limited. Certainly there are not too many senators on the board of directors of this company. I suggest that if this were the case the company would be paying higher directors' fees. The directors' fees amount to $7,600. Obviously these people are underpaid if the company is doing what it says it is doing. In the Senate report there was an indication that the company hired a majority of Canadians, in compliance with the act. They also had some people who came from England who were acting as directors.

We know that $7,600 is a very small wage. No senators will get fat on that. This probably is the reason they are not involved in the company—and it might be noted that this is not a very charitable company, in any case. Their charitable donations in Canada for a year amounted to only $511. Possibly the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) was talking about this kind of donation in respect of Biafra when he made the suggestion in the house this afternoon that charity begins at home. We should be interested in some of these facts because they probably give a better indication of what this company is, and some of the things that it is involved in. It does not matter whether the company changes its name, the same situation will exist because it has said it will exist.

Let us look at claims ratios incurred, less salaries and excluding adjustment expenses of some of these insurance companies. Perhaps hon. members will be surprised to find that the ratio of claims premiums earned in respect of fire insurance is 39.6 per cent to one. This means 61 per cent or almost that amount is spent on insurance claims, while over 39 per cent is returned to the company. That is a fairly sizeable amount.

My point is that if I want to do business in Canada, and a company such as this does not have a combines or monopoly, I should be able to shop around and get a better return for my money from the company in opposition to this one.

Apparently this company is also involved in the insurance business in relation to inland traffic and transportation, including, I would suppose, inland waterways. The ratio in this regard is 910.1 to one. It seems to me that stealing is not a grave offence so long as you have a licence.

There are other insurance fields of interest to hon. members. This company in respect of automobile liability has built up a 46 to one ratio in respect of premiums earned. That is a fairly sizeable amount. The ratio in respect of automobile life liability is 48.8 to one. As I suggested, it does not matter whether this company changes its name, it is not going to do anything for Canada or the insurance business.

But let me hasten to add that this company will do something for its shareholders in England. They have not done badly in many ways. Most Canadians do not realize, although I am sure the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) will agree, that there is a lot of money available in Canada for the purpose of exploiting Canadians. I think it is perhaps easier to exploit a Canadian than anyone else.

I note that one of these companies—and there are so many that this becomes complicated—owned by British and Northwestern Insurance Company is a company called Trizec. Hon. members will be interested in this regard. One of the major subsidiaries is the Place Ville Marie Corporation. The company also owns Triton Shopping Centres Limited, Inverness interests, which is an investment company I suppose in the maritimes, Imnoklia Incorporated, which has a controlling interest, Tri National Building Services, and National Cleaning Contractors, a division of Kinney National Services Incorporated.

Incidentally, Trizec is affiliated indirectly with Covent North American Properties Limited, which is well known to many members. In the past it has acquired office buildings and complexes, urban shopping centres and other developments in Halifax, Toronto and Vancouver, British Columbia, and now has an office building in Montreal. This is a wholly owned subsidiary of the Eagle Insurance Company, so that a lot of the money flowing to the parent company obviously finds its way to this company.

It seems to me that these companies should be owned by Canadians normally resident in Canada. This can of course, be a paper transaction. This company creates paper directors, most of whom do not own any stock. If this company has a lot of paper directors and the stock is owned by shareholders and under control of the Eagle Insurance Company, it then owns Northwestern Insurance Company lock, stock and barrel. If you can work it out you can kick the stock around until you force a meeting to be held in Toronto. That stock must be brought from England by somebody who comes here to vote. this is not a real vote at all. It is a vote by a number of dummy directors in Canada who receive $6,700 per year. If we cannot do anything else, we can at least get the directors' fees increased, because while these are the people who are going to take the brunt of Canadian criticism, they have no say at all in this company.

We have an obligation as members of parliament to see that there is some competition in the insurance field. It is quite true that all insurance companies, and we will refer particularly to the fire insurance field—operate by zone areas, and consider the type of house and its construction as well as a number of other factors. They then set the rate per thousand in every given area. There is no legitimate reason a company coming into Canada, with a better system of operation, should not be allowed to deal with agents in a given area offering a better or competitive price.

We have heard a lot of talk about independent insurance agents. But they have made certain commitments, and when a new client comes into the office they reach into their file and pick out the application of the next insurance company on the list. The agent repeats this procedure, with the result that there is no competition. This involves nothing more than a search in his file drawer for the next insurance policy application. I suggest this is not in the interest of Canadians, particularly if this company is not willing to do something about it. It should make some other arrangements, and other insurance companies should be allowed to compete. I am sure they will find it not too difficulty to find money for their operations.

We are very pleased with the work of the superintendent of insurance in this field, but we must supply him with the machinery and the tools to enable him to provide us with information on which we can decide which insurance companies will work in the best interests of Canadians, for Canadians and owned by Canadians.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) and others have said, the principal objective of the bill before us is to change the name of the company, accompanied by an ancillary objective to increase its capital from $2 million to $5 million. This is obviously frivolous; it is not a bona fide objective. If the company is prepared or willing to drop that aspect of the bill, in the hopes of obtaining the other, in other words if it is willing to dispense with the idea of increasing its capitalization by two and a half times, I am sure there would be no objection. Either that, or the company has some assurances that it does not have to worry about the capitalization aspect; it will be able to obtain that in some other way.

I think this reflects what has become, even though it was initially a supposedly secret and confidential matter, more and more widely known, namely that this government has given a commitment to insurance companies that they need not worry any longer about going through this process of obtaining alterations to their structure, incorporations, change of name, capitalization or anything else in so far as the private bill process is concerned, because the government has sold itself to them and guaranteed insurance companies and, trust and loan companies, that in the near future they will be able to do this by the letters patent process.

The government has made the commitment to them that in the future, presumably next session or even this one if the opportunity presents itself, it will introduce appropriate amendments to the public law of Canada, whatever it might be, whether it be the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act or the Companies Act, whereby these companies will no longer have the display to the public their involvements and ramifications in order to get their way and have their will done. It has been a standard and I think proper practice in Canadian activity to require insurance companies, which have such a stranglehold on the economy and finances of this nation, to come to a public body and in public display make whatever changes they want in their structure.

The fact that the company so easily offered to dispense with the increased share capital aspect of this bill in order to get the bill through indicates that it was frivolous in the first place, which is making a mockery of parliament, or that it has some guarantee that it will be able to accomplish the same end in another way. Surely we cannot be expected to believe that for a company of this sort, with involvement in so many aspects of the financial world, in real estate and anything you can name, the principal objective of the bill is to change the name. That is nonsense. The principal objective of the bill is to increase the capitalization of the company. Surely in the operation of companies their capital structure and profit picture is more important than the name. To expect parliament to believe that is asking parliament to be incredible. We simply cannot accept it.

This is an indication that government has once more sold out the interest of the Canadian people to foreign interests, not only by this procedure but even by the rule changes that are proposed. Rule 16A is a proposal which has been branded by the Conservative party—which I notice is unanimous in the house today in its view of the bill before us, and I imagine about everything else that may come before us in this hour—as the sort of rule that will remove effective parliamentary debate, as the sort of rule that only a fascist would ask for, as the sort of rule which could only be spawned in the minds of those who would be dictators. There is hardly a newspaper in the country that favours that which is contained within rule 16-A. No matter how odorous and rotten it is, it contains in its provisions the involvement of government in the affairs of this hour. So government, if it is not able to obtain the objective of favouring insurance companies, probably reflecting the degree to which campaign funds are received from them, has made the commitment to these compagnies and guaranteed that they will pass through parliament a public law—

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member seemed to indicate that campaign funds—I do not know whether he was referring to me or not—had been donated by this particular insurance company or other insurance companies. If he has any evidence to that effect, I would be pleased if the hon. member would bring it forward instead of making broad generalizations and insinuations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) that I did not seem to indicate anything of the sort. I said it outright and directly. The Liberal party is the recipient of behind the scenes, under the table campaign fund contributions that the hon. member does not even know about, because the party does not bring him into its confidence anyway.

We ask the hon. member to be as honest in this regard as other hon. members of the house and the party to which I belong. Is his party willing to disclose the source of its campaign funds?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): No, you are not. You haven't got the guts to do so. You would sooner be bought.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would suggest that we return to the issue before the house, which is Bill S-9.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I was well on my way to doing that when I was interrupted by a comment from the other side of the chamber. It was false and untrue, but nonetheless I was interrupted. The government has made a commitment to insurance companies and trust and loan companies that they do not have to worry about coming out into public display any longer with regard to their operations; they can do it privately.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members business having expired, the house will resume the business that was interrupted at six o'clock.

At seven o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

ANTI-DUMPING DUTIES

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald, Rosedale (for the Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill C-146, respecting the imposition of anti-dumping.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Béchard in the chair.

On clause 2—

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I might deal very briefly with some of the very interesting points made by hon. members when they spoke on the resolution stage of the bill, and I would like to thank them all for their participation in the debate. I think that they all put forward points of view which helped to illuminate this very difficult subject.

First of all, the hon. member for Calgary Centre asked for an assurance that the same protection would exist under the new section

7 of the Customs Act as under the former section 40(a). Perhaps I can meet his request by referring him to my comments when I opened the debate on the resolution stage. In speaking about the proposed section 7 of the Customs Act I said:

> We are proposing that this section be replaced—

I was actually referring to the existing section.

> —by a new provision—

—and I am referring here to the proposed section 7—

> —which will achieve the same result as the present law through the use of the surtax rather than anti-dumping duties.

I went on to say:

> Emergency action of this kind is contemplated under article 19 of the GATT.

I would also like to draw the attention of hon. members to page 101 of the white paper on anti-dumping tabled on behalf of the government of Canada by the Minister of Finance. In its explanatory notes the following is said with reference to the proposed section 7 of the Customs Act:

> These new subsections would replace section 40(a) subsection 7 of the Customs Act and in their application would have substantially the same effect as that subsection.

The hon. member for Kent-Essex was kind enough to note that I come from the same area of the country as he does, and that I share his concern about some of the matters he mentioned. I certainly share the concern of all hon. members from the area with respect to the interests of the area's agriculture and industry, a concern shared for example by my colleagues, the hon. member for Kent-Essex and the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Perhaps I should note, with reference to some of the very interesting comments made by the hon. member for Kent-Essex, in particular with reference to the corn situation which was very disturbing to many, that the action taken by the government with respect to corn imports was actually taken not under the existing provisions with respect to dumping but under the present value for duty section of section 40 (a) which is being replaced by the section 7 to which I have just made reference.

Often people refer to action of this type as being dumping action. If I am not mistaken, the term "dumping" has a rather precise meaning in the law of international trade, in referring to sale in one country at a price lower than the price at which the same goods are sold in the country of export, and it is not intended to apply to the problem of low cost imports when the goods are sold at what is considered to be a rather low price in relation to domestic goods but not at a price lower than they are sold in the country of export. It is with respect to the latter situation that action under the existing value for duty section was taken, and it is with respect to these value for duty sections that the government is proposing that they be replaced by a new section 7 which will make somewhat clearer that this type of action is emergency action authorized by section 19 of the GATT, and is not really meant to be included in legislation dealing with dumping. This is one reason why the existing section is being replaced with another one. The purpose is to make more clear the nature of the action that is intended to be taken with respect to low cost imports of the type which cause injury to Canadian production.

I might also say with respect to the comments of the hon. member for Kent-Essex, when he expressed some concern about the time that will be taken under the proposed new legislation with respect to dumping, that perhaps he may be reassured if he notes that the proposed legislation imposed time limits within which action must be taken, time limits which do not exist under the existing law.

The hon. member for Okanagan Boundary also expressed concern about the problem of low cost imports of agricultural products. He had something to say about the trade agreement with Australia. I am informed that this agreement does not exempt imports from Australia from the application of our dumping law, but rather it creates an obligation to consult with the Australian authorities when a complaint of dumping is made either with respect to goods that are intended to be imported into Canada from Australia or with respect to goods that are intended to be imported from Canada to Australia. But again, as I understand it, the agreement states that the consultations must be completed within a certain time period. If mutual agreement is not reached within that time period, then action under the dumping legislation can be taken. As I say, this is a reciprocal provision which would apply also if complaints are made with respect to the export of goods from Canada to Australia.

Anti-Dumping Duties

The hon. member for Wellington also made a most interesting contribution to the debate. He was good enough to mention that if it should happen that a subsidiary is importing goods from a parent company in a way which might be considered to be dumping, than the union representing the employees in a firm could make a complaint. I might add that it is my understanding the government can undertake an investigation into alleged dumping on its own initiative. As I understand the proposed legislation, it is not necessary for the government to wait for a specific complaint to be made, although I suppose that would ordinarily be the case.

Then, the hon. member for Edmonton West, in his own very constructive and useful remarks, referred to the continuing problem of non-tariff barriers. I believe there have been recommendations from the finance committee to the government calling for the intensifying of its efforts to bring about a further elimination of them. It has been said, and I expressed this view when we debated the changes in the Customs Tariff arising out of the Kennedy round negotiations, that the anti-dumping code, which does provides the source for the legislation we are considering now has as the major aim of lessening the impact of the non-tariff barriers as used by trading nations, in which dumping legislation was applied in an unreasonable manner. I might point out that the implementation of the undertakings of the code by the various nations that have signed it, in so far as dumping legislation being used by other nations in a way that creates harrasment for Canadian exporters, would mean the lessening of this non-tariff barriers and corresponding increases in opportunity for our Canadian exporters.

Finally, I should like to remind the committee of the whole house of one other decision of the Kennedy round negotiators, and that was to set up a special working party under GATT, of which Canada is a member, to develop programs for the further elimination of non-tariff barriers. I should like now to thank members of the committee for their kind remarks with regard to my own efforts in the committee, and of course it should be made clear that these remarks would have to apply equally to other members of various parties on the committee and certainly to our distinguished chairman. I am prepared to attempt to deal with questions members may have with regard to clauses of the bill, as we proceed with the consideration of it.

[Mr. Gray.]

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I call on the parliamentary secretary's technical knowledge of the other official language and I call the hon. members' attention to the fact that there is a certain confusion about the terms "anti-dumping", "dumping" and then "dumped". If one looks at the French text, one finds that in clause 1, the present legislation is entitled:

Anti-dumping Act.

Then in paragraph (c), subclause (1) of clause 2, the word "dumped" is translated by the word "sous-évalue".

On the other hand, in subparagraph (ii), paragraph (g), subclause (1) of the same clause, one reads, and I quote:

—in the absence of any goods described in subparagraph (1), goods the characteristics of which closely resemble those—

I beg your pardon, Mr. Chairman; I wanted to quote another example, namely what is found in clause 3, and I quote:

3. There shall be levied, collected and paid upon all dumped goods entered into Canada in respect of which the tribunal has made an order or finding, before the entry of the goods, that the dumping of goods of the same description—

At line 13 of the same clause, one reads:

—an anti-dumping duty—

I wonder what is the real meaning of that text. Is it because, in a sense, one can use the adjective "dumped" goods which could be translated by "sous-évaluées", or else an "anti-dumping act" where again an adjective is used and it is called "antidumping"? Of course, I rely on the parliamentary secretary's knowledge to give us an explanation and I hope, Mr. Chairman, that he will not take that amiss.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the hon. member for Edmonton West. I feel that he has called the hon. members' attention to a very interesting point.

Evidently, the terms "dumping" and "anti-dumping" are acceptable in international French, since these words are used in what is called, I think, the "Anti-dumping Agreement".

For instance, section 8 of the agreement mentions anti-dumping duty and provisional measures. So it is obvious that the use, in the act itself of the terms "dumping" and "anti-dumping"—I speak of the French version—is entirely acceptable, because if the French version of the agreement entered into under GATT uses the terms "dumping" and "anti-dumping", these terms are evidently acceptable, and not only in the international sense.

But the hon. member raised a more complex question. He called our attention to the use of the term "dumped", and I think it might be wise to withhold our final decision on that and resort to the advice of the parliamentary law clerk and counsel, who is usually in the house, nearby, in order to have a fuller explanation. The term "dumped" might be in the Customs Tariff now in force. We should perhaps withhold the final decision on that matter, because I will try to go more deeply into that question.

[English]

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Mr. Howe: I should like to bring to the attention of the parliamentary secretary a problem that has cropped up within the last six weeks or two months. As he may know, some farmers went over to England and were able to buy tractors there, then bring them back to Canada. In one case, according to newspaper articles, farmers imported seven tractors at a saving to them of about $20,000. We know that not too many tractors are being manufactured in Canada, and I wonder whether what the farmers did is being frowned on by the government. My information is that some of the machinery companies have gone to the government and asked it to do something about this sort of practice. Since the farmer is having so much difficulty with the cost price squeeze I think that instead of frowning on what has happened the government ought to condone it. After all, when speaking in Winnipeg the other day the Prime Minister said that the farmers should do more for themselves. In my riding farmers are doing just that. Some are going to England to buy their tractors and are hoping to get away with it. They hope to make tremendous savings.

The cost of farm machinery is an important factor in farming costs and the government must assure these farmers that no taxes or duties will be imposed on the machinery that is brought into Canada because they are bringing it in on their own initiative. I think the government should allow this practice to be carried on in order that farmers may meet their commitments with regard to farm machinery and the costs of operation. It is tremendously helpful to them when they can go to England to buy tractors at great savings. The government ought to consider that point and not throw any roadblocks in their way. Could the parliamentary secretary give us some idea of what the government is to do in this regard?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member has raised a very interesting point. It is my understanding that under our tariff regulations, farm machinery and that includes tractors, has entered duty free. Certainly that law remains the same. Unless the nature of the transaction contravenes the provisions of the laws with respect to dumping or with respect to low cost imports, the practice in my opinion at least would not be stopped by the customs authorities. If the price farmers pay is the price these tractors are ordinarily sold for in England, my understanding is that the transaction does not constitute dumping. Under the proposed law there would have to be not only a determination of dumping by the Department of National Revenue, but a finding of injury to Canadian production as well by the proposed injury tribunal. So, the provisions of the proposed law at least with respect to price would not be sufficient to interfere, in my opinion, with the type of transaction which has been mentioned unless, in the course of proceedings under the proposed law, the injury tribunal also found injury to Canadian production under the terms set forth in it.

Mr. Howe: Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that practically all the tractors bought in Canada are not made in Canada. Hence I cannot see that there is too much injury to any company in Canada in this regard.

Mr. Gray: I thank the hon. member for making this additional point. That is something which the farmers who are interested in this transaction will no doubt bring to the attention of the customs authorities, if complaints from Canadian manufacturers are brought forward.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 3—Anti-dumping duty payable.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Chairman, I want to take a few moments of the committee's time to speak on this matter. First I wish to congratulate the parliamentary secretary upon the magnificent job he has done in this connection. Of course credit is owing to the distinguished chairman. I intervene at this time, Mr. Chairman, to say that I represent a steel city. It is significant that on September 20 when I made my maiden speech I was concerned with the anti-dumping legislation which would be presented to the committee and I said, as reported on page 289 of Hansard:

> It is interesting to note that iron and steel industry sales all across Canada make up approximately 2.7 per cent of the gross national product, therefore being even greater than wheat which is 1.7 per cent.

This clause, which establishes liability for dumping duty, is the most significant clause of the bill because under its provisions any organization or corporation that dumps anything in this country may be found liable. I also wish to point out that industry recognizes that competition on a fair trade basis is customary and challenging. In my speech of September 20 I went on to say:

> However, competition at less than fair market value is disturbing and cannot be considered fair. In fact it may result in irreparable damage to the domestic industry and to the economy. It is suggested that the onus of preventing undue disruption from dumping into the domestic market rests completely on the importing country.

Anti-dumping legislation should be regarded as an extension into the international field of principles expressed nationally by statutes restricting discriminatory or predatory trade practices. Dumping is an unfair trade practice, and I wish to emphasize this point to the parliamentary secretary. It is a lessening of free competition, and sometimes it destroys free competition. Besides being unlawful, dumping in the long run is contrary to the public's interest. Without proper anti-dumping legislation and without prompt, vigorous and efficient application of that legislation, the capitalism of free enterprise will be replaced by the capitalism of international monopolies.

I should like to refer to a brief that was submitted to the authorities by our steel industries, which are vitally concerned about this matter. It is said that the Canadian steel market is particularly vulnerable to imports by reason of its widespread geography, the size of its domestic production compared with that of its near competitors, the world surplus of productive capacity and the marketing practices of certain foreign steel producers. In the brief I have referred to this is said:

> Indeed, there is a real incentive in several countries to maintain full employment by exporting steel at whatever price may be obtained above the labour and material costs of its production: they, in effect, export their unemployment. Therefore, steel is particularly vulnerable to dumping tactics by foreign competitors.

[Mr. Alexander.]

It goes on to say that the Canadian steel industry has a vital concern to see that the legislation will be effective in its application to trade in steel, and in products consuming steel. The latter part is extremely important and I believe was dealt with previously by the hon. member for Wellington South. The brief also says that the rapidity with which both the determination of dumping and the judgment of material injury can be resolved will contribute significantly to the effectiveness of the legislation.

The brief continues to say:

• (8:30 p.m.)

> In our opinion the determination of injury would prove to be an extremely complex problem. The establishment of a tribunal, charged with this serious task, appears and excellent proposal. The absence of a definition of injury indicates appreciation that it is a difficult concept: Each case will require the judgment of the tribunal, and should be judged on its own merits.
> The composition of the tribunal should be such as to make possible conclusions based on practical understanding of business conditions and competitive circumstances. Furthermore, it is suggested that the tribunal be comprised of persons with knowledge and experience in those industries most susceptible to dumping.
> The steel industry is prepared to make available persons with special or technical knowledge either on a full-time or part-time basis. In addition, the steel industry desires the opportunity to meet regularly with the deputy minister of national revenue for a discussion of world business conditions and the likelihood of dump.

I certainly hope the parliamentary secretary will attach importance to these observations. If people are to be appointed to this tribunal on a partisan basis then the intent of the entire legislation will be defeated. What I am trying to indicate is that concern over the application of this legislation must be continuous because of its importance in terms of our economy. We must give this measure our continuing attention to make sure that the tribunal and the government act with the necessary speed, and that severe penalties are used, when justified, in order to protect our industries at home. Each case must be judged on its own merits, and both the tribunal and the government should constantly refer to and consult with industry. The clause which we are presently considering is, I submit, one of the most important parts of this legislation. I say this with all due respect and I trust the parliamentary secretary will accept my words in the spirit in which they are uttered.

Mr. Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): I have a question to ask the parliamentary secretary. It refers to the criteria by which the department will decide whether or not a product has been dumped on the market from the United States. Let me give an example or two. Suppose potatoes are shipped into southern Alberta and sold at the same rate price as in the United States. The farmer who grows potatoes might well receive a bonus or subsidy for doing so, instead of growing wheat, for instance.

The point I am trying to get at is this: What criteria does the department use, or will it use, when reaching decisions on this kind of thing? Take the difficulty which arose in connection with corn imports into Ontario some time ago. How will the department arrive at conclusions in cases like this, when subsidies are paid directly to farmers? In the absence of such subsidies perhaps the price of corn in the United States would be higher. I tried to find the answer to this question in the agriculture committee, as did the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar, but we could not get a satisfactory reply.

Mr. Gray: I might suggest, with all due respect to the agriculture committee, that we would have welcomed the hon. member if he had wanted to sit in on meetings of the finance committee where he would have gotten more information than I can give him now. But I will do my best to answer his question.

I believe his problem relates not strictly to dumping, as the word is ordinarily used, but to low-cost imports which cause injury to Canadian production because I noted he referred to goods imported into Canada and sold at the same price as in the United States. In such cases action taken to protect the Canadian producer would have to be taken under the proposed clause 7 which is before us. This replaces the present section 40A of the Customs Tariff Act. If it is passed by this house it would provide for the taking of emergency action as contemplated by article 19 of the GATT, and which could lead to the application of a surtax on the imported potatoes.

If it were determined that such subsidies were being paid to the United States producer in the manner contemplated by certain sections of the GATT, the way could be left open for the Canadian government to apply countervailing duties to offset the effect of these subsidies. This is a difficult subject to discuss in a general way; it is easier when we are looking at specific cases. But I hope that at least in general I have dealt with the hon. member's question.

Mr. Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Not entirely. I am interested to know the criteria to be used. If this would lead to too involved a discussion here I would be glad to hear the hon. gentleman's private comments at another time. On what basis will it be decided whether there is dumping or not? From my own point of view I would find it difficult to decide what would be fair and reasonable, in the light of the different subsidies given to United States farmers, subsidies which are not made available in Canada.

Mr. Gray: First, let me say that the situation outlined by the hon. member is not what is commonly known as dumping. It would not come directly under the provisions of that portion of the bill which is before us, setting up new Canadian legislation on dumping. It would come under the concluding portions of the act, the consequential sections, particularly those which create the new section 7 in the Customs Act to replace section 40A which previously permitted the fixing of a special value for duty.

This section deals with goods imported into Canada in such a way as to cause injury to Canadian production, even if they were sold at a price which is not below the price in the United States. I wanted to clarify the legislative provision which would be invoked to deal with the problem the hon. member has mentioned. I can understand his concern about it.

With respect to the criteria to be applied, the simplest thing I can say is that the government would have to consider all the circumstances of each case; it would have to consider such things as the method by which the subsidies were applied and their amount, as well as the market situation both in Canada and the United States. This is why neither the existing legislation nor the proposed legislation attempts to spell out a long list of criteria; it was considered advisable to enable the government to look into all these factors taking into account all kinds of circumstances which might not be foreseeable at the time the legislation was provided. I would be happy to arrange meetings between the hon. member and officials of the Department of Finance, or National Revenue, to look into this question. I know they would be happy to sit down with him and go into this important question in somewhat greater detail, perhaps looking at it from the standpoint of specific cases and giving more complete information than would be possible for me to give in a discussion of this type.

Mr. Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): I should like to accept the hon. gentleman's offer.

Mr. Rynard: I come from an area in which there are many small industries. Compared with the great corporations to the south, their output is limited. In my opinion there is therefore no question as to the need for this legislation.

It is interesting to recall that in 1961 a Conservative government brought in a bill to deal with goods of a class or kind made in Canada that should be subjected to dumping duties. You will remember, Mr. Chairman, that it was defeated by the Liberal party of that time.

My only objection to this clause is that, in so far as dumping from the United States is concerned, it is not tough enough. My fear is that the legislation does not go far enough to accord sufficient protection to Canadian industry. Let us face the fact that, situated as we are, directly within the economic orbit of the United States the greatest manufacturing complex in the world, Canada is a natural target for dumping policies of the United States. In a number of major industrial lines Canada over the years, particularly under the policies followed by this government, has simply become a dumping ground for surplus American products. The result is that although politically we are no longer a colony, we have been subjected to economic exploitation in a manner that few other countries have experienced.

Last summer we witnessed wholesale dumping of agricultural products, corn, poultry and others, from the United States, with no action by the government. In textiles we have been subjected to subsidized dumping from the United States and Japan. In footwear we have been subjected to dumping from all over the world. The result is that Canadian industries have gone out of business and we have become a nation importing finished products while forcing more and more of our enterprise into primary industry. No nation can go on doing this for very long.

We have been in the position of living off our principal, and using our resources to buy the things we need, rather than manufacturing those things here in Canada at a cheaper price. Resources do not last forever and in a few years Canada, instead of being a resource rich nation, will be a resource poor nation in many fields. The point I wish to make is that continued toleration of large scale dumping of surplus industrial and manufactured products, as well as agricultural products, will make future generations of Canadians hewers of wood and drawers of water.

Canada has been in the position of an open city, or open country. We have practised the open door policy in so far as foreign goods are concerned. A few years ago we made some effort, by arriving at mutual understandings with countries such as Japan and the United States, to limit the amount of foreign dumping in order that native Canadian industries would not be smothered under an avalanche of cheap goods coming in from other countries. Now with the Kennedy round agreements, the situation is likely to be worse than ever.

This anti-dumping measure is a reluctant recognition by the government that some action must be taken to protect Canadian industry. It is interesting that this measure should be brought in by a party which over the years has proclaimed itself all out for free trade. But nevertheless one cannot help wondering how much protection is afforded the Canadian producer by this bill. As I have said before, it does not go far enough. It is simply paying lip service to the need of preventing Canadian industry from being overrun by dumping from abroad.

The record of the government in international affairs is not reassuring. The Liberal party has a long record of placing international relations above the interests of the Canadian producer. We know how the Kennedy round discussions became an instrument for delaying the signing of a new grains agreement and how Canadian wheat producers suffered by being undercut in the interim. We have been told that Canadian industry will not suffer. Obviously this clause is an attempt to lock the garage door after the automobile has been stolen—and an American automobile at that, Mr. Chairman.

What we now have, obviously, is a tribunal, a sort of court of last resort to which the Canadian producer, when he is on the verge of bankruptcy as a result of having his market undercut, can appeal for some kind of action. Knowing how most of these tribunals work, it is highly unlikely that action will be forthcoming before the producer is compelled to close his doors.

There is another point that must be made in connection with this whole question. It is not merely anti-dumping legislation that is required. There are many cases of Canadian products being designed, developed and manufactured in Canada, and even a market created for them in Canada and sometimes the United States, and then American corporations with their superior financing, large run economies and larger markets at home have moved deliberately into the market created by a Canadian firm and, over a period of time, have simply collared that market for themselves. This is not an exception, Mr. Chairman; it is almost the rule.

This is not done by dumping within the terms of this legislation. It is done simply by making use of the economies of production available to American producers in the American market. The dumping comes later when the Canadian product has been eliminated. At that point the American manufacturer can simply dump his surplus product in Canada, taking over the market created in Canada by a Canadian producer whom the American has either bought out or pushed out. I fail to see any way in which this clause protects Canadian producers against this kind of monopolistic competition. Yet in my opinion this is the most common kind of unfair competition facing Canadian manufacturers of finished articles, the competition from gigantic American competitors who move in, once a Canadian firm has created a market and, either through the parent U.S. corporation or through setting up a Canadian subsidiary, simply take over the market.

Anti-dumping provisions therefore do not prevent the cannibalization of Canadian industry by gigantic American or other foreign competitors, for the simple reason that under the unrealistic definition of dumping there is no dumping until or unless: "the normal value of the goods exceeds the export price." Under the definition of normal value it is only considered to be dumping when a product is sold in Canada at a price lower than the price at which it is sold in the United States. But, Mr. Chairman, it can be just as harmful to Canadian industry when the product is sold at the same price as the price at which it is sold in the United States, because very often the greater volume of American production permits huge economies in production. But that situation is not taken into account in this bill, so far as I can see.

The fact that the goods must be sold below the domestic price in the Canadian market means that a great number of goods which can be sold cheaply and made cheaply in United States or Japan can come into Canada. This applies to Czechoslovakia, East Germany and other European and Iron Curtain countries which can send their products here at exactly the same price at which they are sold in those countries and, because of currency differences and production economies, undercut Canadian manufacturers to a considerable degree.

This is why I said this bill does not answer to any great degree the problem of Canadian manufacturers being undercut by unfair competition from other countries. They would not fall under the dumping definition. This is where the clause falls short. Within a short time the government will be facing a serious situation in the form of complaints from producers all over Canada.

I shall give just one other example, Mr. Chairman, and I do not know whether it has been touched on or not. As we know, our seasons in the north range from winter into the spring, and then into summer, so that quite often goods on sale in the country to the south of us have reached their peak market before they come into the Canadian market. Therefore the producers of those goods can afford to sell them here below their actual cost. They can lower their prices because they have already sold 75 per cent, 80 per cent or 90 per cent of their production. Not only that, but the output of one U.S. firm on occasion equals the total production of all Canadian manufacturers of a particular article. One can cite instances where one big corporation in the United States can manufacture more goods and dump more into Canada than the total annual production of Canadian manufacturers. This is of great concern to me. Once those are in the suppliers' hands how can this law be enforced? Therefore, that is the reason I do not think this bill and this clause will accomplish what they are intended to accomplish.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say just a few words on the anti-dumping legislation. The objectives of the bill are certainly to encourage Canadian manufacturers and to protect them against the entry into Canada of goods similar to those manufactured in Canada but at much lower prices.

However, this bill, which is intended to protect Canadian manufacturers, says nothing about consumers and their needs in view of the present economic situation of Canadian or foreign manufacturers.

Anti-dumping is being practised not only between the Japanese and the Americans or other countries in the world, but even within our own country, between one town and another, for example. Obvious examples of this are to be found in the trade between Ottawa and Hull, two adjoining towns which are practically one. However, Ottawa people buy in Hull and Hull people buy in Ottawa because of tax differences between Quebec and Ontario; that constitutes dumping. In fact, Hull people come to buy in Ottawa because prices are lower. The consumer cannot be blamed for seeking lower prices. If, for example, a consumer can buy rubber shoes made in Japan at half the price of the corresponding Canadian-made product, one cannot blame him.

Instead of passing anti-dumping legislation designed to keep prices high, the government should introduce a bill to subsidize Canadian industry, in order to compete with the prices of goods dumped by other countries on the Canadian market and to protect the Canadian consumer. This is not what we are doing. Dumping is not practised only in Canada, because we do it ourselves in other countries.

For instance, Mr. Chairman, it is impossible to find out how much we are paid for the wheat we are selling to Red China. This is then a case of dumping when subsidies cover about one half the normal price of wheat. We are selling our wheat to China at a much lower price than production cost. This is dumping practised by Canada towards other countries.

At one time, we were blaming the United States for selling their wheat to Russia at better prices than ours. American economists and the American government were asked to keep in line with our prices.

The problem will remain the same, Mr. Chairman. This will not increase the purchasing power of our consumers by one red cent. Even with the adoption of this bill, our people will not be in a position to buy more. Perhaps some products will not be admitted to Canada or the government will be able to levy import duties so that these products will reach approximately the price levels of Canadian products, but the purchasing power will not in turn be stimulated; the reverse will be true. I think this is a direct infringement—

[Mr. Caouette.]

[English]

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Caouette: Yes.

Mr. Gleave: What subsidies on Canadian wheat being sold to China are you referring to? Or did I misunderstand the question; was the translation imperfect?

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Here is the situation, Mr. Chairman. We are selling our wheat to China at less than prime cost, than cost price, and it is impossible to find out from the minister what prices we are being paid for the wheat we sell to China.

[English]

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted to interrupt the hon. gentleman I should like to correct one impression. The wheat we sell to China is sold at competitive prices.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Temiscamingue.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: It is sold at a competitive price when we ask the United States to protect us to get the price we want because they were already selling wheat for less than we were and they increased their price to enable Canadians to sell their wheat. That is what happened not so long ago—in fact barely three years ago—but I hold my ground and I maintain that we are selling our wheat to the Chinese or the Russians for less than it is costing us to grow it here. Each time we traded with those countries we had to sell our products at lower prices and that represents Canadian dumping in those foreign countries to which we sell wheat.

Mr. Chairman, I am not against our selling wheat and our being competitive but I object to our selling our products below cost because we have a surplus. However, Canada acts towards the other countries as they do towards us. That is what I mean when I say that this will not help the consumer. It may help the producer, true. It may please the manufacturers of textile products, of rubber, or any other goods.

We want to protect our industry and I suggest this way of doing it. Instead of dumping in other countries, let us give our Canadian manufacturers subsidies to enable them to reduce their prices and sell their goods to the Canadian consumers.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Then production would achieve its end which is to meet the needs of the consumer. That is the solution of the Ralliement créditiste. It is not a far-fetched solution because any intelligent person can understand it.

On the one hand, we dub as unfriendly those countries which sell their goods at extremely low prices; on the other hand, we try to export our goods to those same countries.

We want to help the Canadian people, not only the manufacturer. Canadian manufacturers export and receive subsidies to do so. If it can be done for exports, why can it not be done for consumption here in Canada? Would it be asking for the moon? These subsidies would allow prices to be lowered, and this, in turn, would increase the purchasing power of consumers. It is as simple as that.

However, instead of looking at the economic situation from the point of view of the consumers or of their interests, the government is only concerned about the production angle. Mr. Chairman, the problem is not one of production, but of prices. Actually, production is very healthy. It can be doubled or tripled so long as there is a corresponding demand. The real problem is one of distribution and of consumption of goods manufactured in Canada and outside the country.

We will always have to deal with other countries. We will have to exchange Canadian wood, for fruit from Florida, for example, or wheat against Chinese products. Transactions will always have to continue and even improve.

However, that must always be done in the interests of the consumers and not only for the pleasure of enriching a few persons, such as importers or exporters, and still less financiers who strangle the working people, the farmer as well as the worker. We are not at all interested in protecting and enriching those people. Those who will read Hansard to-morrow, will know that the Ralliement Créditiste is not interested in those who want to make profits out of anti-dumping laws, but in protecting the Canadian citizen.

Those, Mr. Chairman, are the few remarks that I wanted to make tonight. The government owes it to the Canadian people to consider the consumption aspect of our economy and our transactions with other countries. Let us grant to our Canadian people the same subsidies which we give other countries so that they may come and buy here. Instead of taxing and over-taxing the Canadian people in all sorts of ways, let us help them, and the problem will be solved.

We can effectively lower the cost of consumption or production through subsidies; then, we shall become better competitors in the international market and we shall be able to face dumping, as we call it. There would be no need to pass anti-dumping legislation if we were to guarantee every Canadian citizen a purchasing power which would make it possible for him to purchase Japanese, Chinese or Canadian products. In fact, this is the only way we can protect our Canadian industry by granting subsidies so that our people may face international competition.

[English]

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to rise a short while ago to ask some questions of the responsible minister. Now I am on my feet I would also like to refer to some remarks made by the previous speaker, whom I hope I understood correctly. With regard to dumping wheat in China or any other market, this charge should not be brought, and if it is brought, it cannot be substantiated. The wheat that Canadians sell overseas through the Canadian Wheat Board is sold at international prices, without the benefit of subsidy, and I would like to quote some figures to substantiate my point. I am sorry I am speaking only from memory in this regard, but in the area of Vulcan, Alberta, the figure arrived at as the result of a cost study was $1.70, or $1.76 a bushel. This is the cost of production in that area of Alberta, which is one of our good wheat producing areas, comparable to some of the better areas in Saskatchewan or Manitoba in what might be called the dry country.

If you take the export figure at which wheat has been sold, ranging from $1.96 to $2.12, and the difference in the cost of transportation, and so on, you will find it compares with that figure. I would not like the committee to be under the impression that this is a subsidized price for exports. It is not. If you take the cost of transportation and the cost of marketing, you will find that at this figure you are coming very close to the Vulcan figure of cost production.

As the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre has just said to me, the figures I am quoting are for grades 1, 2 and 3 wheat. If it happens to be low grade wheat, you will be very much in the hole.

Having said that, Mr. Chairman, I come to the question I wanted to direct to the parliamentary secretary. It arises out of the answer given by him to the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley. I hope I understood his answer correctly. Do I understand him to say that the anti-dumping provisions can apply fairly effectively to manufactured goods and manufactured imports, but they may not apply very effectively to agricultural imports, and when you get into the agricultural field you may be using a surcharge or value for duty? Did I receive the correct impression, sir?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I do not think that was the impression I intended to convey. The proposed anti-dumping law does not make any distinction with respect to the type of goods which can create the complaint of dumping. I was attempting to get across to the committee that the nature of the problem with respect to agricultural imports very often took a somewhat different form from that of imports of manufactured goods. In my remarks with respect to dumping I hope I was not creating any impression, because that was not my intention, which would indicate that the proposed anti-dumping law made some distinction between agricultural products and manufactured products. It does not.

As I said in response to questions asked by hon. members, if you examine the complaints about imports of agricultural products, in many cases—I do not know whether I should say most—the problem does not fall under the definition of dumping as that term is used in the law of international trade. Rather it would fall under the heading, shall I say, of low cost imports causing injury to Canadian production, because it cannot be demonstrated that these agricultural products are being sold in Canada at a price lower than they are available for sale in the country of export. Therefore a different legislative provision has to be made use of, and the legislative provision in the proposed bill, if it is adopted by this house as I hope it will be, calls for the application of a surtax. The proposed section is based on article 19 of the GATT which contemplates this type of problem facing the various trading nations.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, am I to understand from that answer that agriculture is to get the worst of both worlds? Is agriculture not to benefit from the protection of anti-dumping duties? Does it mean that the part of agriculture that is vulnerable to imports will not receive the protection of anti-dumping duties? Does it also mean that that part of agriculture which depends on export markets for trade will face the additional cost of production as a result of the protection of the manufacturing industry?

Mr. Gray: I certainly would not agree with the hon. member that under these provisions agriculture would get the worst of both worlds. On the contrary, if the importation of agricultural products falls within the provisions of the proposed anti-dumping law, then anti-dumping duties will apply. If the importation of the agricultural products in question falls within the definition contemplated by the proposed clause 7(a) of the Customs Act, then they will get the protection made available by the proposed clause. Any distinctions are not with respect to the type of goods but with respect to the nature of the transaction.

Mr. Gleave: Then, according to the hon. member's explanation, would this protection under the surtax be effective with regard to the importation of U.S. corn and vegetables and would it be effective with regard to the importation of Russian sunflower oil?

Mr. Gray: If the importations referred to are of the type that caused concern a few months ago with respect to corn imports into Ontario and which led to value for duty action being taken under the existing section 40(a) of the customs tariff, then the proposed clause 7, which the hon. member has mentioned with respect to the application of a surcharge, would apply in the same way. The proposed clause 7 is designed to replace the existing section 40(a) of the Customs Act, which permits the creation of arbitrary values for duty. The new clause is being proposed to the house because it is felt that the wording of the proposed clause will make clearer than the existing section 40(a) the nature of the action being taken, and the fact that it is not anti-dumping action but rather special emergency action. As a result this action would be linked more closely with article 19 of the GATT, which attempts to deal with this type of problem for the trading nations which are signatories to it.

Mr. Gleave: As was mentioned in the committee a few minutes ago, steel is a fairly standard product with a fairly standard grade which can be measured. How will this provision apply with regard to potatoes coming into Alberta and undercutting the Alberta market, these potatoes being of stripper grade? This particular situation was reported a year ago by a responsible Alberta publication, The Wheat Pool Budget. How do the provisions under this legislation apply in the agricultural field? Do they apply in the same way as they do in the industrial field?

Mr. Gray: My answer is yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): I have been looking through this bill and I do not see anything which would state what puts this legislation into force. So far as corn is concerned, I do not know what representations have been made to the previous government, but so far as I am aware and so far as the public is aware it was the tractor march to Ottawa that drew the attention of this government to the particular problem.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): I am not saying that this is the case, but I would like to know where in this bill it is stated that the legislation would be put into effect. Does there have to be a tractor march, do there have to be lobbies, and must pressure be put on the minister in this case? What is the approach to be?

Mr. Gray: If the hon. member is referring to the procedure under the proposed anti-dumping act, I would refer him to clause 13. I am not sure if this is in order, but perhaps to expedite the business of the house we might do that. Clause 13 reads:

> The deputy minister shall forthwith cause an investigation to be initiated respecting the dumping of any goods, on his own initiative or on receipt of a complaint in writing by or on behalf of producers in Canada of like goods.

So this creates a pretty wide ambit.

If the hon. member is speaking of the proposed section 7 of the Customs Act, which is dealt with in clause 37 of the bill before us, then I would think that, in view of the fact that a somewhat different procedure is contemplated under that clause, the governor in council should be willing to initiate an investigation on the receipt of a complaint from any one of a great number of sources, and the hon. member has outlined a number of possible sources of complaint.

Mr. Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Chairman, I should like to pursue this matter further. Can anyone write an application on behalf of himself, a group or a company? For example, can I as a member of parliament write an application and would such a complaint be investigated?

Mr. Gray: I certainly think that would be the case, particularly with respect to clause 37 which proposes that section 7 be added to the Customs Act.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Chairman, I think that the idea of this bill is a very good one, but I am a little afraid that we may go on a kind of witch hunting expedition here which may hurt many of our industries, if we pursue this along the wrong lines. I suggest that in order that this legislation be effective there must be a close liaison among the different departments of the government. What is good for the agricultural industry may backfire in other industries, or even in different regional parts of Canada. For instance, if we decide arbitrarily that the selling of U.S. corn in eastern Canada should be stopped, we have to be careful that reciprocal action is not taken by the United States, which will cut down on the importation of coarse grains and fodder from Canada into the northwestern United States.

We are living in times of change. At one time perhaps it was safe to generalize and to say that western Canada was a free trade area. This may well be so when we are trying to sell our wheat, but when we are confronted with the problem of selling our oil, particularly in Alberta and now in the Arctic, we are up against a different thing. Free trade in oil would ruin the oil industry of Alberta at the present time. Before we suggest that the United States is dumping Venezuelan oil in Canada, we have to remember that we have to protect our large oil market in the northwestern United States. At the present time we have a gentleman's agreement with the United States according to which they will sell Venezuelan oil in Montreal, and we will be able to ship our oil through our pipe lines into Seattle.

So we have to be careful that we are neither regional nor blind in this matter. As I said, a closer liaison will be necessary among the agriculture, industry, trade and commerce and the revenue departments to make sure that what we mean to do does not backfire. I think that the stress should be put on reciprocal agreements, and perhaps we should use this legislation very sparingly and only use it as a final stick. But if we plan properly and if we ensure a closer liaison between the different departments, I do not think that this dumping legislation will have to be put into effect very often. As has been pointed out by several hon. members tonight, when we are ready to invoke this act, often it is too late, and if we used a little more foresight in our reciprocal agreements, whether it be in agriculture, in industry or in trade and commerce, the need for this would be forestalled.

If we had a proper world grain agreement, and if we had solidified Canada's trading position in this field, then I do not believe we would have to worry so much about the dumping of corn in eastern Canada or about not having any sales for fodder and coarse grains from western Canada. We should have a viable economy which would draw together all of our industries, agriculture, our manufacturing industry and primary producing industries such as oil.

What I would envisage would be this: If we are going to be faced with the dumping of oil on our Canadian market, I think the people from our industry could build a pipe line system across Canada so that our Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce would be able to forestall the dumping of United States oil on our markets. They would be able to offer United States interests cheap Canadian facilities, and we would at least then have our fair share of oil moving through this pipe line. This is the kind of planning we need. As I say, I feel this is a necessary piece of legislation but it should only be a stop-gap; it should only be emergency legislation. We should forestall any need for invoking this measure by careful planning and by good reciprocal agreements, particularly with the United States which is our greatest competitor in the manufacturing field, in the oil field and in some cases even in agriculture.

Let us not forget that the United States is also our best customer in all these fields. We are only now becoming an aggressive young manufacturing nation. However, we still have a tremendous stake in agriculture. Western Canada has perhaps a half agricultural and half industrial economy, but the agricultural half still has to be protected. I do not want to see Canada going off half-cocked barring corn entering Ontario, because then the United States could say, "All right, no more beef can be shipped into Montana and no more hay into the Dakotas in the dry season."

I should like to see a great deal more liaison between our government departments, so that by careful planning and co-operation with our own primary producers or through making reciprocal agreements, particularly with the United States, we could forestall the need for dumping legislation. We are in a good bargaining position. The United States wants our friendship and co-operation and in some cases they want our cheap oil, our better beef and our competitive grain. However, we have to be willing to make reasonable concessions in return.

If we planned our turkey imports on a quota basis, there would be no need to flood our markets at Thanksgiving or Christmas with cheap turkeys from the United States. This ruins our small producers. As one or two other members have said, it is too late to lock the door after the horse is out of the barn. After our turkey producers have been put out of business, then United States producers are in a position to recoup all their so-called losses by jacking up the prices, in co-operation with the chain stores. In this way they recover the money they were presumably risking by giving us cheap turkeys for one year. We find ourselves in a position where our own producers are out of business, and we have to pay the price.

On clause 9—Determination of normal value of goods.

Mr. Harkness: I have one question on clause 9, subclause (7), dealing with the determination of normal value when there is an export monopoly or, in other words, where state trading exists. The clause reads, in part:

> (a) the government of that country has a monopoly or substantial monopoly of its export trade, or
> (b) domestic prices are substantially determined by the government of that country,
> shall be determined in such manner as the minister prescribes.

What are the criteria envisaged here for making this determination? Is the criteria the normal price that such goods are imported into Canada from other countries or are sold here? Perhaps I might put it this way. What is the general practice at the present time so far as goods from state trading countries are concerned?

Mr. Gray: I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the purpose of the section is to provide authority for the continued use of prices prevailing in trading countries with free economies as the basis of determining the normal value in respect of goods imported from state trading countries. This could involve a number of different options. I suppose this could involve the price at which a state or company sells goods in an adjacent free market country; it could involve the price at which like goods are imported into Canada from free market countries which are adjacent to the state trading countries. I believe I have outlined the major methods. It provides flexibility for dealing with any problem which might be created by the nature of the organization of the economy of the state trading country.

Mr. Harkness: I would merely suggest that to use the price at which goods from the state trading country are exported to some third country would be a very poor criteria to use in determining the price of those goods so far as dumping is concerned in Canada. Some of the other criteria mentioned would be more reasonable. I would hope that what would be used would be the price of like goods which are being imported into Canada from other countries, or what the general level of those goods was at the point of manufacture in Canada itself.

Mr. Gray: Well, Mr. Chairman, perhaps I should clarify my remarks. I mentioned two possible methods. Certainly, one can understand the problem created by the method to which the hon. member referred. I am informed that the method most commonly used is to look at the price at which like goods are sold in a free or open economy. This would ordinarily be some free economy in the general area of the state trading country in question.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 10—Determination of export price of goods.

Mr. Gleave: I am sorry, but in so far as a free or open economy is concerned, how do you define this in relation to agricultural products which are subsidized in the country of origin? How do you arrive at the figure which is to be established in the country of origin? For instance, if a corn producer in the United States takes so many acres out of production, he gets a certain price per bushel. If he takes so many more acres out of production, he gets another price. How do you say this is a free or open economy, and how do you establish the price in the country of origin?

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I was attempting to answer the question posed by the hon. member for Calgary North with reference to the very difficult problem of establishing normal value for goods exported from countries with state trading economies. I am not sure if the hon. member who has just spoken was thinking of a similar situation; perhaps he might prefer to use the term "comparatively open" since it is recognized that there are various forms of government intervention in most countries with respect to various aspects of the economy.

I think I indicated earlier in our discussion that, with respect to determination of normal value, both the bill and the draft regulations, the key parts of which were tabled before the committee, make it possible to take into account, if I am not mistaken, such things as subsidies which help to make up the price in the country of origin.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 11—Where information not available.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, this is the clause that gives to the deputy minister the right to demand in such manner as he may prescribe such information as he may wish to acquire with respect to the determination of normal value. I wish to ask if our constitution is such that the deputy minister of a federal department can demand from the chairman, say, of a hydroelectric power commission of any province, the price at which the commission accepted a tender. Can he demand that information?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure if it is permissible for people carrying out the function I am presently carrying out to attempt to give legal opinions on complicated constitutional questions. I know the hon. member who normally sits adjacent to the seat I am temporarily occupying hesitates to give opinions on constitutional matters and his expertise in law is far beyond any that I can hope to attain. Perhaps I should also hesitate before becoming involved in such an area; but, I presume that the deputy minister could ask questions and seek information; if he is not satisfied with the answer there are other clauses which enable him to come to a decision, even though answers to his questions are not provided by the people he contacts. In other words, the scheme of the act contemplates that the making of decisions with respect to dumping will not be frustrated through a failure to provide information.

Mr. Hales: Thank you. I asked that question because in the provinces it is the public utilities that generally make purchases of heavy electrical appliances. When they place orders offshore it is very hard to establish whether there is dumping. That is what prompted my question. I hope that the deputy minister has the right to demand from the public utilities in the various provinces the figures at which they accepted tenders.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that this clause is designed to provide authority for the deputy minister of national revenue. I believe we are talking of clause 11. It provides the prescribed manner to be used in determining the normal value or export price where sufficient information has not been furnished or is not available. I am also informed that this residual authority is similar to that provided under section 40 of the Customs Act. It is also my understanding of the scheme of the act, that the way the Department of National Revenue will encourage people to give it the information it wants is by virtue of the authority it has under this clause to come to a decision on whatever limited information is available to it. Therefore the people who are not providing the required information may feel that the result will be more adverse to them than if they were to comply with the request of the deputy minister.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, this is the very point I referred to at the resolution stage. There was a good deal of discussion about it during the committee hearings and I do not know what the ultimate answer is. We took the question under advisement when making our report. It seems to me that if the deputy minister of national revenue is kept aware, either on a regional basis or some other way, that public utilities have been placing orders offshore, some inquiry from him to that public utility body would very likely elicit co-operation, because I think these public utility commissions will realize that perhaps 18 months or two years afterwards, when they receive the goods they have ordered, they may be hit with anti-dumping duty. Or, they may be hit when the deputy minister of national revenue has sufficient information on the matter. I think it is a question of establishing a useful rapport with such bodies, and I think experience will bear this out.

I share the concern of my colleague, and I think we all did on the committee. I do not know whether the anti-dumping machinery was made as effective as it might have been, but we shall have to see. Nevertheless, if the Department of National Revenue is able to elicit answers by using, shall we say, voluntary machinery, it may be better to do it that way than to force information out of these bodies by wielding a big stick.

Mr. Gray: Perhaps I can add to the very useful comments of the hon. member for Edmonton Centre. Under our constitution provincial governments claim to have a certain jurisdiction over the development of industry in the economy.

Mr. Paproski: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I think the parliamentary secretary is talking about the hon. member for Edmonton West. I represent Edmonton Centre.

Mr. Gray: I apologize to the hon. member for Edmonton Centre. Clearly, we have two most distinguished members from the Edmonton area.

I was going to say that provincial governments under our constitution claim jurisdiction to encourage the development of the economy and the expansion of industry. One hopes that the comments of the hon. member for Edmonton West and of other hon. members of the committee will be brought to the attention of the appropriate bodies through the coverage given these proceedings, and that when we review the results of the operation of this proposed legislation in a year or so we may find, hopefully, that the problem is not what it may seem to be at the present time.

On clause 13—Initiation of investigation.

Mr. Benjamin: We read in clause 13 that the deputy minister may cause an investigation with respect to the dumping clause to be initiated, if he is of the opinion, and so on. Does this mean that the deputy minister may decide, on his own, that there is cause for investigation, without reference to the tribunal?

Mr. Gray: Yes, that is right, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hales: I rise to comment favourably on what I think to be one of the finest features of this whole bill. This clause contains the phrase "or is materially retarding the establishment or production in Canada of light industries". I take it this means that if there is a company, or a group of men, willing to make like goods of a kind which are now being dumped in Canada, the department or the deputy minister can rule that there is dumping because it is retarding the establishment of industry. I believe this to be a substantial improvement. It should pave the way for young, new and growing companies to establish themselves in Canada.

Mr. Gray: I should like to thank the hon. member for drawing this to the attention of the committee. He has mentioned a significant addition to our laws against dumping.

I might add that under our existing law, before dumping duty could be applied it was necessary to show that Canadian goods which were considered to be adversely affected by the imported goods were of the same class or kind, and this had been stated to mean that they had to supply 10 per cent of Canadian consumption. Thus, companies in situations of the kind referred to by the hon. member were unable to receive the protection of anti-dumping duties.

Mr. Bigg: I wonder whether this measure envisages protection against the reverse of dumping. For example, I understand that fertilizer manufactured in Saskatchewan is sold in North Dakota and Montana for one third less than the price in Saskatchewan itself. This seems to me like dumping on the United States market, or unfair competition. Incidentally, it is to the detriment of western agriculture. I think this legislation could very well be abused. We are giving overmuch protection in some cases to distributers of fertilizer here. They should make sure that the Canadian farmer is protected. In any case, I believe he should be protected against tariff concessions in reverse. We are dumping our fertilizer in the United States and presumably they are in competition with us when it comes to selling agricultural products. Is anything contemplated to prevent this? If we are dumping on the United States market it will surely be difficult to prevent them dumping on our market.

Mr. Gray: The hon. member has raised an interesting point. It would appear, though, that until now the United States authorities have been more than able to take care of themselves and since they are changing their own anti-dumping legislation to conform with the requirements of the anti-dumping code I presume they will be in a position similar to our own and able to take action, should exporters from Canada or elsewhere dump goods into the United States.

Mr. Bigg: When I spoke of liaison earlier on I was suggesting we would be in a good position to prevent occurrences of this sort if we were to meet with representatives of the United States or of other trading nations and conclude a gentlemen's agreement under which we would refrain from dumping, on our part, and they would undertake to reciprocate. We might keep this in mind when dealing with other trading nations.

Mr. Benjamin: I am still a little confused—but perhaps that is normal for me—as to the procedure under clause 13. If the deputy minister were to decide there is a case for investigation and if the tribunal did not take this attitude, supposing a complaint had also been filed with the tribunal, what would be the situation?

Mr. Gray: I should make it clear that the tribunal does not deal with the whole area covered by the proposed law. There are two aspects. There is the determination whether the normal price is higher than the export price, and therefore whether there is a margin of dumping. Second, there is the question whether this dumping is causing injury to Canadian production.

It is the job of the tribunal to make a determination on the question of injury. It is essentially the job of the deputy minister and the departmental officials to carry out investigations and reach conclusions with respect to the question of dumping and the subsidiary factors which have to be considered in order to reach such decisions.

Mr. Benjamin: I take it then that the government feels there can be dumping without injury.

Mr. Gray: That is the concept contemplated by the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, and the anti-dumping code based on it and as part of the Kennedy round agreement. This concept is reflected in the legislation which we are considering this evening.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 14 to 18 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 19—Appeal to the Tariff Board.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am taking no one by surprise when I rise to speak on this clause. I made strong representations about it in the committee and I have made strong representations by way of correspondence to the Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance with regard to it. I find it absolutely unacceptable and I believe many hon. members on the committee shared my concern about this provision, that the period for appeal to the Tariff Board should start from 60 days after a decision has been made.

Nothing is said here about publication; the phrase is simply "after a decision has been made". It is true that decisions made by the tribunal and the deputy minister are to be published. But the period for appeal to the Tariff Board is 60 days after a decision has been made. This requirement is said to be imported from other acts—I am thinking of the Immigration Appeal Board Act, the Customs Act, and so on—and I feel it has been made from the comfortable pews of Toronto, Montreal and Ottawa. When we consider Vancouver, Edmonton, Halifax and other regions we are bound to conclude they are placed at a disadvantage when dealing with the deputy minister of national revenue and the anti-dumping tribunal. Moreover, the description of postal services which is about to come into effect, thanks to the generosity of the Postmaster General, will further prejudice those areas.

I have asked why we cannot adopt some other means of fixing the date for the period of appeal. It was suggested to me that administratively this might be difficult. I am not making any direct reference to Mr. Grey, the assistant deputy minister, but I should like to read what he said to me.

> If it were, in fact, possible to word the section in such a way that anyone who wished to appeal would have 60 days in which to do so, the provisions under which an appeal might be made to the Tariff Board ... would be at variance with the appeal provisions now in the Customs Act.
> We concluded that, on balance, it would be best to retain the proposed wording. It is in keeping with the wording of the notice of appeal provision under the Customs Act and it is familiar to those interested in decisions of the deputy minister of national revenue.

• (9:50 p.m.)

> We believe that it would be more appropriate to consider a reform of this provision at the same time as consideration might be given to amending the provisions of the Customs Act. You will appreciate, I am sure, that to elaborate the present procedure for filing notices of appeal would require substantial change in administrative practices.

Frankly, Mr. Chairman, I don't care a fig for administrative practices, because in my mind if they work an injustice on anyone with regard to the period of appeal, one citizen as against another, then the administrative practices will have to go by the board. For that reason I am proposing the following amendment:

> That clause 19(1) be amended by deleting all the words after "the" in line 31 and by adding the words "date of the publication of the decision in the Canada Gazette."

I am further reinforced in my argument that the period of appeal should date from the publication in the Canada Gazette because under section 19(2) it says:

> Notice of the hearing of an appeal under subsection (1) shall be published in the Canada Gazette at least 21 days prior to the day of the hearing—

If the publication of the notice of appeal is to be made in the Canada Gazette why cannot the date of appeal date from the publication of the order in the Canada Gazette so that everybody starts out from the same position? I could cite many examples to hon. members of the hardship imposed upon persons last summer during the postal strike, persons living out west a distance from Ottawa, because the Immigration Appeal Board Act in its regulations says that the period of appeal shall be so many days from the making of the decision. As I have said, that is a practice from the comfortable pew of Ottawa and has no place in the administration of justice across the country, and for that reason I have proposed my amendment.

Whether it exists in the Customs Act or what have you, I think it is a wrong practice. Here is a point where we can start to get rid of it. Let us start with the anti-dumping code and then we can get on to the Customs Act when the time comes. I would not like this practice to grow up under this bill merely because it has existed under other acts. Two wrongs don't make a right. For that reason I would urge the government to accept the proposition. I know it has considered it and that this amendment has not caught the government by surprise. I would like to hear what the parliamentary secretary has to say in regard to my proposal. It is nothing outrageous.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, this is one of those situations in which we are essentially in agreement on ends but, at the same time, in which we are not in agreement on means.

Mr. Baldwin: That is the story of parliament.

Mr. Gray: There is no question in my mind with respect to the attitude of the government. It wants to give the fullest opportunity for those concerned to be able to file notice of appeal. It is a question of working out procedures which take into account, at least in my opinion, not simply administrative concerns but also the fact that almost any procedure considered might have some type of fault or another in it. For example, it is suggested to me that a problem might be created if the hon. member's proposal is accepted by the fact that everybody may not read or get the Canada Gazette on the same day. I am just raising this as a point that one has to consider in looking at his proposal.

I say this because he has raised various concerns, and certainly we can understand the reason for his concerns with respect to this proposition in the bill that we are studying this evening. The hon. member has brought to the attention of the committee views sent on to him by the Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance, Mr. R. Y. Grey. Perhaps it might be useful if I brought to the attention of the committee some of the other views of the deputy minister on this, not so much to prevent consideration of the hon. gentleman's proposal but to provide a balanced way of looking at this particular matter. I might say that I think the hon. member will agree that his view which he raised in the standing committee has been given very detailed and serious consideration by the department and the officials and that, if it has not been acceded to at least until now, it is not because it has been summarily rejected but that after some study of the matter there is some honest difference of opinion.

In an earlier portion of his memorandum to the hon. member the Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance said that the hon. member had—> —urged that all persons, regardless of their location in Canada, should have equal time, in practice, to file an appeal from a decision of the Deputy Minister to the Tariff Board. I am, of course, in sympathy with your position and I have reviewed this matter with our legal advisors.

> It has proven to be a very difficult matter to find a solution that would ensure that equal opportunity would be provided to anyone who wished to appeal such a decision. You will note from the wording of section 19(1) of the draft bill, that the right of appeal is not limited to the appellant, but rather provides an opportunity of appeal to "a person who deems himself aggrieved". We have been unable to work out a procedure that would ensure that anyone who wished to appeal would have equal time to file such notice. It seems to us that there is no certain means of notifying all such persons other than by notice in the Canada Gazette. In this connection we have considered lengthening the appeal period, but this would not seem to meet the substance of your position.

He went on to say:

> We also considered introducing a provision similar to that appearing in S-61A the Income Tax Act.

I will not attempt to quote it. Then he continued:

> We also took into account that if it were, in fact, possible to word the section in such a way that anyone who wished to appeal would have sixty days in which to do so, that the provisions under which an appeal may be made to the Tariff Board under this proposed anti-dumping act would be at variance with the appeal provisions now in the continued:

He concluded with the paragraph that the hon. member brought to the attention of this committee of the whole house. I would conclude as I started by saying I think we are obviously in agreement on ends, but not in complete agreement on means, and I propose consideration might be given to seeing how we operate under the proposed section in the bill. It may be necessary after a year or two of experience to make changes, because this is a work of human minds, of human beings. I hope it will not be, but this is something that could be given further consideration. Meantime I will see what further thought has been given to the proposal made by the hon. member.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I appreciate all the arguments made by the parliamentary secretary, but may I say that this situation reminds me of the time I wanted to do something before the Exchequer Court. I wanted to tax a bill. There is a provision in the rules of the Exchequer Court that the assistant registrar may tax a bill. I made an appointment with him and then I was advised that the President of the Exchequer Court in a decision had ruled that the Exchequer Court had no business making such a rule, and therefore it was not applicable and the deputy registrar was not to take any appointments to tax bills of this kind.

He made that ruling in a particular case. I am not going to cite it. A person very closely connected to this chamber was involved. But then the judge told the court officials, "This decision is not to be published," and he refused publication in any of the law reports. So therefore 18 months later, long after the period of the appeal of this nonsensical ruling was up, there was no way of finding out.

This is precisely the sort of thing I want to avoid, that a decision shall have been made and then three weeks later it appears in the Canada Gazette. It will appear in the Canada Gazette all right, but three weeks or maybe a month later.

• (10:00 p.m.)

If somebody in Halifax or in Vancouver should feel aggrieved it would be necessary to consult counsel, who may be a tariff consultant, but the period would have elapsed before they could appear before the Tariff Board. This is what I want to avoid. If the date for filing an appeal shall start from the date of publication in the Canada Gazette, then I feel far more people would be available and more justice would be done. That is the purpose of my amendment. I hope the members of the government will sleep on it tonight and accept it.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—COMPETITION FOR POSITION AS ADVISER ON POLICIES AND PROGRAMS

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight because I wish to speak on a question that was ruled to be inappropriate about a week ago. Over a century ago the Indian affairs department started out to administer treaties and to protect rights of native peoples, but according to Indian leaders, because of its paternalistic attitude it has gradually over the years become the oppressor rather than the protector of the very people it was developed to assist. It is perhaps fair to say that no other department of government enjoys so little confidence among the people it is structured to help. There is little real dialogue between the department and the native people themselves, in spite of repeated proposals from the natives that they take part in the decisions which affect them.

The record in respect of the treatment of Indians during the past 100 years in appalling. I could document this if I had time. Despite the expansion of the department by 10 per cent from 1966 to 1968 this expansion has resulted in little observable improvement in the services that will enable the Indians and Eskimos to improve their ability to function in society with independence and dignity. As little as 5 or 6 per cent of the total budget of the department for salaries is being spent on employees of Indian and Eskimo origin. I should like it to be noted that the term "persons of Indian and Eskimo origin" is a very vague one. This does not mean that the money is being spent, in spite of the pitiful 5 or 6 per cent, on wages and salaries for reserve Indians. Metis or off reserve Indians are not covered under the act, but they are of Indian and Eskimo origin.

I think the main problem in the department is that the bulk of the budget is being paid to too many white chiefs, and that not enough trickles down to the Indians. To support this I should like to read from page 385 of the Senate Debates for the year 1968:

> The Department has 927 senior officer positions of which 801 are presently occupied. Of these, 17 persons are of Indian and Eskimo origin. Sixteen of the 17 persons are all occupied with Indian Affairs and represent 4.4 per cent of the senior positions occupied. A number of the 801 senior positions are concerned with education supervision.

Need I say more? If we take out the school principals and supervisors, this 4.4 per cent figure shrinks alarmingly. It is then accurate to say that the major decisions affecting native people are made by men, dedicated as they may be, who are in no position to understand Indian aspirations, because they are not Indians themselves. The door is barred to Indians in this department having a real voice for a long time to come. This brings me to the central point of the question I asked in the house:

> Has the Indian Affairs Branch recently advertised a competition at the PM6 level with a salary of $18,000 to consult with the Indian and Eskimo people on policies and programs affecting them? This competition, as I understand it, is not open to qualified native applicants.

Upon investigation I learned that the position was not really a competition at all but an internal promotion—some would say a political promotion within the department itself—with the incidental right of appeal by a native applicant within the department, if he felt he could meet whatever criteria might be set for the position. I think it is important that people know how these appointments work. First, they are not open competitions designed to secure the best man available from throughout the land. They are, instead, advertised narrowly within the department, and I imagine those in the know realize very early upon whose shoulders the magic wand has been placed.

The executive committee, which really means the deputy minister, chooses a person to fill the position. The right of appeal exists, of course, for any other employee if he is brave enough to appeal the choice, in this particular case before the expiry date of December 18. That is tomorrow, Mr. Speaker. Can you imagine who in his right mind would risk making an appeal in such a patriarchal system, if he wanted to get ahead?

The particular position in question is for the chief of the Indian-Eskimo bureau in Ottawa, a very important position in light of the growing desire of native Indians and Eskimos for a greater voice in their affairs and decisions affecting them. I think this position requires a man of considerable experience in dealing with the problems of native people. If not a native himself, he should have the respect of the people with whom he is to deal. He should possess a real empathy for native people. He should like them and be liked by them, because the position requires that the successful applicant co-operate with native people and enjoy their confidence in order to facilitate communication and learn with them.

What is the history of the applicant designated to fill this very important and sensitive office? My information is that there is little in the applicant's background which would qualify him as chief of the Indian-Eskimo branch. I apologize to the minister and to the applicant in advance, if my information is either unfair or inaccurate. The designated man is a former serviceman, an ex-air force officer. He was formerly employed in public relations in the office of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) when he was minister of national defence. He later worked in public relations for the centennial commission, or was at least under contract to and employed by the centennial commission. Over the past year, and for one year only, the applicant was employed as executive assistant to Mr. R. F. Battle, assistant deputy minister of Indian affairs. He came into Indian affairs without competition. As far as I know he has never been before any civil service board. Now he is slated, after one year's experience in Indian affairs, to be moved from a $13,000 to an $18,000 per year position, without competition.

Two weeks ago in Ottawa the founding meeting of the National Indian Brotherhood took place. Indian leaders from all across Canada are demanding a greater voice. This kind of staffing and promotion practice within the department appalls these leaders and is a great slap in the face to them. Mr. Speaker, how can the Indian leaders believe that the department of Indian affairs is sincere in its desire for better relationships when a public relations man of one years's experience in Indian affairs can be promoted to a position of such importance without competition? Public appreciation of Indian problems and public sympathy and support for a better break for native people is in my view at an all-time high. Practices such as I have described only lower the image and prestige of the department of Indian affairs and, indeed, government generally. In my view it is about time we began to set our house in order in this regard.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the house knows that during the last few months we have been systematically reorganizing the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In fact, we have merged the Indian Affairs Branch and the Northern Administration Branch so that our best officials can hold the positions that will enable them to serve the Eskimos and Indians better.

With regard to the position the hon. member has just mentioned, of course new positions were created during the department's reorganization and the titles of the officials were changed.

With regard to the position of head of the Eskimo and Indian Affairs Branch, a competition was held within the service in order to find the candidate best qualified for that position. That competition was supervised by the Public Service Commission, under the established procedure, and the candidate chosen to fill the position as a result of the competition is Mr. Boyd.

Evidently, it is always possible to say that a candidate may not have the necessary competence, or that it might have been preferable to get the services of a person of Indian or Eskimo origin. In fact, I would have been most happy, Mr. Speaker, if the examination board had chosen a person of Indian or Eskimo origin. That would have been in keeping with my views, as I think it would be desirable to have more Indians and Eskimos among our staff. I am taking every possible means to have this policy enforced in the future. I have instructed officials to interview, in universities and high schools, Indians and Eskimos, and invite those best qualified to join the department.

I can inform the hon. member that we have had the privilege of getting the service of an Indian to replace Mr. Boyd as executive assistant to the assistant deputy minister in charge of social affairs.

I can assure the hon. members that I intend to do everything I can so that the department will hire the largest possible number of Indians and Eskimos, because I believe they are the ones who will best of all solve their problems. We must take the necessary steps to develop in them the spirit of leadership that will enable them to give a new orientation to the people of Indian origin.

I thank the hon. member for having pointed out that perspective to me, of which I am very much aware. Still, it will be understood that within an administration, especially when jobs are shifted around as in this case because of the reorganization, we cannot invite just anybody from the public to fill the vacancies left by men who have been with the department for many years.

If anyone in this house pleads every day in favour of the seniority rights and other rights acquired by the public servants, the members of the New Democratic party do—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Chrétien: I wonder why it is that today they would like us to remove people who have spent years with the department and put newcomers in their place.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

AIRPORTS—TORONTO—PROTESTS AGAINST EXPANSION OF FACILITIES

Mr. Hyl Chappell (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, on December 13 I asked the Minister of Transport if he would abandon the proposal to enlarge the Toronto international airport at Malton. In the few minutes allowed me I shall try to persuade him to do so.

During the last three months I have done a great deal of research on the subject. My views have been fortified by studies conducted by the municipalities and by others. In addition, I have received objections, with reasons, from thousands of families who would be adversely affected.

I have concluded that the proposal is holding up the production of 19,000 housing units or accommodation for 50,000 people in Mississauga and Etobicoke. Living conditions would become unbearable for another 50,000 people now living to the south of the proposed enlargement. It would impair or destroy housing accommodation for another 150,000 people living to the east. Dozens of schools and hospitals would have to be soundproofed at great cost, and even then their efficiency would be lessened. It would disrupt the planned course of development, and thus the economic stability of the municipalities concerned. It would withdraw about 2,000 acres from a limited supply of 40,000 to 50,000 acres of land ready for urbanization, and thus have an extreme adverse effect on housing and other urban developments in the Toronto metro area. It would conflict with the Ontario planning act and be an insult to the planning of the area, as planned by the municipalities and approved by the province and by the Department of Transport itself. It would commit the federal government to pollution, in the sense that where investment is large enough we must accept it and thus make it impossible ever to cleanse thoroughly the air in the Toronto area.

Think of the air in ten years, at a time when there is no wind and thus no movement of air, with 2,000 flights a day spewing gas and carbon over the area. I understand that each plane burns approximately four tons of fuel during a take-off. This could lead to a total of 10,000 tons a day in the 1980's. Future generations would rightly condemn us.

The proposal has been rejected by all of the municipalities concerned. Their refusal to rezone the land for flight paths means that such land would have to be purchased, and the cost of the land alone would, I believe, be at least half a billion, whereas the original estimate for the whole project was approximately $300 million. Appropriately, the Central Ontario Planning Institute of Canada concluded that the expansion is wrong and would lead to a growing and insoluble conflict between the metro demand for land and the airport's demand for control.

A more acceptable and less expensive site can and must be found. I suggest for consideration a site on undeveloped and inexpensive land north of Kingston for a double jet port to serve Toronto and Montreal. If this is thought to be too far into the future, then perhaps Camp Borden would provide a site, since the government already owns 20,000 acres there. In both cases, the land is submarginal farm land, and could be acquired at a minimum cost. The recent trend in North America is for jet ports to be 50 to 100 miles from city centres. Pending development of rapid transit, there could be flying bus service from smaller ports such as de Havilland and the island in Toronto, by means of the new short take-off planes.

A second alternative, that of a floating airport seems worthy of investigation since the flightways would be over open water and would disturb no one. Leading civil engineers hesitate to estimate the cost, but feel a study costing about $100,000 would be a worthwhile investment. In fact, the United States federal aviation administration has just recently launched an intensive study of this solution. Two immediate objections, those of water pollution and a greater use of United States air space for descending planes, are not really tenable.

The airport of the late 70's or early 80's will require a staff of perhaps 30,000 people with a supporting city having a total population of perhaps 200,000. Rather than cause these people to settle in Toronto and Montreal metropolitan areas, where land is scarce and at a premium, we should plan for a new city to be compatible with an airport which would help to relieve the pressure in the metro areas, and at the same time allow the development of a new city on a pre-planned and logical basis.

Since severe intensification of flights would be as undesirable as the major expansion, I support a second airport as early as possible, but better still now, sufficiently removed to avoid a repetition of the present problem, and where land is inexpensive and can be zoned to provide for future further expansion.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I appreciate this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, in the name of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer), to reply to the hon. member's interesting remarks. As indicated in the house a few days ago, the Minister of Transport is now in the process of reviewing the entire situation with regard to the proposed expansion of Toronto international airport. The minister has looked at the evidence which has been acquired by the Department of Transport and other agencies, and has examined the reports of meetings which have been held with officials of the municipality and the province of Ontario. He has also spoken to groups representing citizens of all the surrounding communities of the Toronto international airport. It is expected that within the next few days the Minister of Transport will make a statement concerning the Toronto international airport situation.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION INTO PRICE OF TOYS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the Prime Minister the following question on orders of the day:

> In the absence of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, I wish to direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the outrageous prices being charged for Christmas toys this season, would the Prime Minister consider requesting the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to conduct an immediate investigation into this serious problem?

In a supplementary question I noted that millions of dollars are spent on toys, that there are only a few shopping days until Christmas and that advertising creates additional pressures on our society. My interest in this question was aroused on Saturday when I accompanied my wife on a Christmas shopping expedition. We were appalled at the prices. Since our oldest child is now over eight years of age we have had some years of experience in Christmas shopping for our own children, within the limitations of a family budget. On this basis we noted that prices had skyrocketed since last year.

We were interested in buying several items in which our children had expressed interest, largely as a result of viewing television advertising. The items in which we were interested ranged from $15 to $30 or more, each. This was beyond the family budget. After our initial shock we started to look around. There was hardly any toy selling for less than $8 which would give any child pleasure. Curiously, there were a number of items which had been marked down to half price. I suggest that very likely these were not loss leaders, because they were still selling at a considerable price. Rather, they represented items where the desired profit had been made on the total consignment of the item, and the remaining stock was being sold at a lower level of return.

A friend who heard of my inquiry sent me the following note:

> I bought Billy Blastoff for $8.88 at a well known toy store. I've since seen it for sale in other stores at several different prices, including as low as $4.88. This price range seems ridiculous. We parents need protection.

On Monday, prior to orders of the day, I purchased a plastic building set for $8.98, plus tax, and presented it to the Prime Minister following my question. I hope he enjoys playing with the set and that it will give him some relief from the tensions of office. I believe I obtained the beginner's set; with it I hope the Prime Minister may make more progress than he has so far in building his just society. Possibly he is fortunate that I did not give him the instant insanity set of blocks.

Since then I have discussed this matter with other people. I heard of one case where a four year old girl decided she wanted a particular make of doll. When her mother took her to see Santa Claus at a store the girl informed him she wanted the doll and Santa replied, "You tell your mother we have your doll already wrapped for you." On investigating the mother found the doll cost over $18, and had considerable difficulty, of course, in persuading her daughter that it would be better to buy another doll.

Another mother here in Ottawa investigated the toy situation just after Christmas a year or more ago. She was informed by the merchandising people that any toy could be sold through television advertising. They also told her that toys advertised on television could be sold for three times the ordinary retail price.

Christmas giving is a tradition in our society, stemming from the giving of gifts to the child Jesus in Bethlehem. Down through the centuries the giving of gifts, particularly to children, has become a tradition. Foisted on this beautiful tradition is the influence of mass advertising, and particularly television. The crass commercialization of Christmas for purposes of profit has prostituted this tradition. The conventions of our own society help to create a captive market in the Christmas season. The impact of television advertising constitutes a form of torture, used to squeeze out every possible dollar from the consumer under the guise of Christmas tradition.

I witnessed the impact of television advertising just this evening. My wife and I were looking at a Christmas catalogue and noted a "happy, happy doll" selling for around $15. Our four year old son was able to recite the words of the television ad at the mere mention of the name—"She laughs, and she'll make you laugh, too". Millions of dollars are spent on toys each year, and toys bring merchants one of the highest levels of retail mark-up. I am reliably informed that the average retail mark-up on toys is well above 40 per cent. I am also reliably informed that the retail price of toys is generally double what they cost to manufacture.

[Mr. Burton.]

Further questions of toy safety have arisen. In the Ottawa Citizen of Friday, December 13 we read:

So you're thinking of buying your daughter a miniature vacuum cleaner or sewing machine just like mommy's for Christmas?

Better think again. Consumers Union in the United States tested 42 electric toys of this nature for last months' issue of their magazine Consumer Reports, and found ten to be unacceptable from a safety standpoint.

The article goes on to give many examples. This is an excellent illustration of the type of thing that should be tackled by the Department of Consumer Affairs. Only a few shopping days remain until Christmas. If the Department of Consumer Affairs is to be effective it must develop a capacity to cope with such situations as this in a matter of a few days. Only in this way will the new department be of real value.

In the Ottawa Citizen of Saturday, December 14, appeared an article under the heading: Space toys "in", guns "out". In it we read:

Canadians are spending more than ever in the frantic crush of pre-Christmas buying and toy-makers forecast sales about 30 per cent higher than last season.

The '67 seasonal sale totalled about $180,000,000, or $32 per child.

I am sure this is a matter worthy of investigation by the department.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): With only seven shopping days left before Christmas I welcome this opportunity to answer the hon. member on behalf of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford). I appreciate very much the remarks he has made about the tradition of Christmas giving. I would also like to state with deference to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), that I cannot make any remarks as to his reference to what the Prime Minister said on the subject of block building.

I listened intently to what the hon. member said as to the price of toys, particularly since during the Christmas season all citizens with families of young children have the purchase of toys very much on their minds. In attempting to ascertain the degree to which the current price of toys is a matter of concern to consumers we have checked returns to box 99 which, as hon. members are aware, is the facility through which the consumers of Canada register their complaints with the department. I find there has been little reaction to the price of toys. Out of fewer than 3,000 complaints since the inception of box 99, only 23 have related to toys and of these only two were concerned with price. There is, of course, a wide selection of toys available on the market, presenting the consumer with the opportunity to make a choice as to the variety, quality and, above all, price, to suit his purse. Price shopping is so important that the minister has strongly urged the consumer to shop by price, not only for toys but for all consumer goods.

Especially in cases where consumers regard the price of an article as essential and when other choices are available, as is the case with toys, the exercise of consumer wisdom in buying less expensive articles will have an appropriate effect on the market. Of course if the hon. member has any information to suggest that illegal restraints exist with respect to toys, he should immediately convey that information to the minister, or to the Director of Investigation and Research under the Combines Investigation Act—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Or to Santa Claus.

Mr. Haidasz: —and complaints so directed will, I am sure, receive the appropriate attention and action.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Ho, ho, ho.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

APPENDIX

EXCHANGE OF CORRESPONDENCE WITH U.S. RESPECTING BALANCE OF PAYMENTS

Letter from Mr. Fowler to Mr. Benson

Dear Minister Benson:

In completing the 1969 United States balance of payments program and while arranging for an orderly transition, I thought it would be useful to review the unique financial relationship which exists between our two countries. This was last described in the exchange of letters I had on March 7, 1968, with your predecessor, Mitchell Sharp. In my letter I noted: "Unique financial relations between our two countries have been a mutual support to both and to the international monetary system. These relations have served the interests of both our countries without interfering with the domestic policies of either." Events since March add a new endorsement to this judgment.

This unique relationship which our two countries share is a natural reflection of a common and peaceful border of some 5,500 miles. It reflects as well the importance of trade and capital and neighbours who move across this invisible boundary. Recognizing this interdependence, we have long since believed that it is not in the interest of either country to occasion destabilizing influences on our currencies which might inhibit the other country in the pursuit of its own economic objectives. To this end, our policies in this field have been to support our overall objectives to our mutual advantage.

This is the reason, notwithstanding the crisis then raging in the gold markets of the world and only shortly after the President's New Year's day balance of payments measure, that in March we were able to exempt Canada from our balance of payments measures. This exemption and your reaction to it was indeed "mutual support." Canada was thus assured of access to our markets for a wide range of capital transactions, enabling Canada to continue its traditional method of financing its current account deficit with the United States and permitting financial institutions in both countries to operate flexibly.

This latest recognition of the interrelationship of our international payments is also the reason you have taken constructive actions to ensure that Canada is not used as a "pass-through" channel by which the purpose of the United States balance of payments program might be frustrated. Moreover, the policy under which you invest your foreign exchange holdings is to our mutual advantage.

This is also the reason that in the exchange of letters last March we reiterated the basic principle that it would not be Canada's intention to increase its foreign exchange reserves through borrowings in the United States. Implementation of this principle does not require that Canada's reserve level be limited to any particular figure. We are well aware of Canada's need for flexibility with respect to reserve levels in order to accommodate the adaptation of monetary policy to the changing needs of its domestic economy, seasonal factors and other influences of a temporary nature. This statement of objectives recognizes that under circumstances in which an improvement in the payments position of the United States is essential to the strengthening of the world monetary system, it is in Canada's own interest to avoid hindering the achievement of this objective by unnecessary borrowing in the United States. In recent times capital markets in other countries have developed a capacity which has attracted borrowers from many countries. Canadian authorities have taken advantage of these expanding capital markets to raise funds in substantial quantities. These developments now offer Canada an alternative means of achieving an increase in its reserves whenever Canadian authorities believe this is desirable. In addition, Canada has given strong support to the arrangements for new special drawing rights which, when activated, will offer a source of regular and automatic additions to international reserves. Both our countries, along with other nations, actively support the ratification of this new facility in the International Monetary Fund and the activation of these reserve assets as soon as possible.

In undertaking this review of our relationship, I have been very much aided by the knowledge and experience our respective governments have gained through the close consultations which form such an important part of this relationship. These consultations will, of course, continue to permit us to keep each other fully informed of our views regarding current financial developments.

The unique financial arrangements we have developed, expressed first with the joint statement of July 21, 1963 and brought up to date today, provide support to the payments positions of both countries and hence strengthen the international monetary system.

Sincerely yours,
Henry H. Fowler.

Letter from Mr. Benson to Mr. Fowler

Dear Secretary Fowler:

I welcome the review of financial relationships between Canada and the United States which you have provided in your letter of today's date.

As you have noted, the Canadian government is keenly aware of the importance to Canada and to the world, as well as to the United States, of the strength of the United States dollar and, as a means to that end, of a continued improvement in the international payments position of the United States.

With this in mind, the Canadian government has adopted policies to ensure that the exemption of Canada from the United States balance of payments program would not endanger the success of that program. In particular, we have taken steps to prevent Canada from becoming a "pass-through" channel for the flow of capital from the United States. We have also found various appropriate means of supporting the payments position of the United States. Thus the Canadian government has invested its United States dollar reserves (in excess of working balances) in special non-marketable issues of the United States treasury. It also turned to the expanding capital markets of Europe to find funds with which to rebuild Canada's foreign exchange reserves. In the course of this year substantial sums have been added to our reserves as a result of borrowings of the government of Canada and other Canadians outside the United States, and the investment of these sums has provided support to the payments position of the United States. We expect, as you note in your letter, that the implementation of the special drawing rights scheme in the International Monetary Fund will provide an additional well-regulated source of new reserve assets.

I too have found very useful the close consultations which have come to form such an important aspect of the relationship between our two countries. I look forward to a continuation of them as a means of keeping each other fully informed of our views regarding current financial developments.

In the light of all these considerations I can reiterate to you that it is not an objective of Canadian policy to achieve permanent increases in our exchange reserves through unnecessary borrowing in the United States. I fully share the view expressed in your letter that the implementation of this principle does not require that Canada's reserve level be limited to any particular figure, and that our reserves may be expected to fluctuate to accommodate the adaptation of monetary policy to the changing needs of the domestic economy, seasonal influence, and other influences of a temporary nature.

Yours sincerely,

E. J. Benson,
Minister of Finance.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

EXTENSION OF TRANSITIONAL ASSISTANCE BENEFIT PROGRAM

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would like to announce changes in the TAB or transitional assistance benefit program. I shall read this four page document as rapidly as possible. The purpose of these amendments is to extend the duration of the TAB program for another 18 months. Hon. members will recall that the program was to have ended on December 31 of this year. In addition there are a number of changes that will make the program of greater assistance to workers laid off in the automotive industry. It will better serve its original purpose, which is to ensure that the auto pact, which benefits the whole economy, is not effected at the expense of workers in the automotive industry.

It is proposed to extend the transitional assistance benefit program by 18 months, as I said, so that a lay-off can be certified as coming under the terms of the program up to June 30, 1970. This, hon. members will note, is the same date as that to which the assistance to firms in the industry under the loan program is being contemplated.

The rules on the eligibility of an individual for TAB will be eased. It is proposed that an employee be eligible if he has worked 16 weeks in the industry in the past 52 weeks. Previously the time required was 30 weeks. He must still be qualified for unemployment insurance.

The formula for benefit has been improved. It is now based on one week of benefit for every two weeks worked in the automotive industry in the past two years. The old formula provided four weeks of benefit to employees who had qualified by working 30 weeks in the previous 52, with one extra week of benefit for each additional week of service in that year, plus one week of benefit for each week of service in the year before the previous 52 weeks.

The 52 week maximum benefit is retained, but with the shorter qualifying period this change will allow a longer benefit period for employees with short service in the industry. It is proposed that this change be made retroactive to November 22, 1968.

An employee's entitlement to TAB remains in effect until it is exhausted, up to the expiry date of the program. At present that date is December 27, 1969. That is one year beyond the present termination date of the program. As things stand now a worker certified on that date who had a full year of entitlement to supplementary assistance benefit would never have a chance to draw TAB because the supplementary assistance benefit would have to be taken first. Thus he would be discriminated against compared with workers certified early in the program.

It is proposed that all workers be treated alike by assuring a three year period of entitlement regardless of when the lay-off was certified. The final cut-off point for receiving TAB benefit would be June 30, 1973.

At present an employee must use up any supplementary unemployent benefit to which he is entitled before he can draw TAB. It is proposed that an employee be allowed to choose which benefit he draws first, but not to allow both to be drawn at the same time. However, it is expected that in almost every case the employee will elect to draw supplementary unemployment benefit first because that would be in his best financial interest.

To sum up, these amendments will extend the life of the TAB program by a year and a half, will provide more assistance to workers with short service in the automotive industry, and will allow workers to choose which of SUB or TAB they will draw first. The amendments make some other minor modifications of an administrative nature.

• (2:40 p.m.)

In conclusion I should like to add that I have been informed by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce that a statement was made at eleven o'clock this morning by the Ford Motor Company announcing that a second shift would be added to their St. Thomas assembly plant beginning next May, which will increase the plant work force from 1580 employees to 2715 employees for a net increase of 1135 new positions. I have also been assured by the Ford company that the people who have been laid off in Windsor will be given preference in hiring at St. Thomas. However, this preference will be in accordance with the terms of their collective agreements.

Mr. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to thank the minister for his courtesy in sending me a copy of his statement before noon today. We on this side of the house appreciate this very much.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacEwan: I also commend the minister for the changes in the TAB regulations. This is something which had been pressed for by members of this party as is shown in the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition and myself as reported at page 3132 of Hansard for November 25, 1968. We certainly go along with the changes. I note that the life of the TAB agreement and regulations will be extended for a year and a half. It will cut down the necessity of having 30 weeks of employment in the last 52 weeks. The period now will be 16 weeks. Another important change is that which gives the option of choosing between SUB and TAB, whichever the worker wishes to take. This is a good move.

I wonder whether the minister has looked hard at the possibility of giving consideration to the situation in some other areas such as the constituency of my friend the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir), where some 600 stevedores are now out of work because of the changed situation with regard to the ferry there. The hon. member has brought up this matter many times.

This also brings to mind something else which has been discussed in the house; that is, the necessity of having companies, or as in the case of my hon. friend here the government, give sufficient notice to workers in order that they may have an opportunity to look after themselves, find other jobs and so on. I think this should be done. I think of places like Bell Island. My friend the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) represents that area. I think of the Sydney steel situation which is important, particularly to the people of Nova Scotia. I believe special consideration should be given to this. I realize that the minister is waiting for the Woods task force report. We are all waiting anxiously for this report, and hope something will be done in this regard, to look after the employees.

This measure assists the unemployment situation in the Windsor area. I hope the minister and the government will now come forward with policies to assist the very great number of unemployed throughout this country at this time. We know the latest figures are high. I think of the heavy unemployment in the shipyards, in the fisheries and in the rail car industry in my area, as well as others.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must interrupt the hon. member to remind himself of the rule which governs statements on motions. The statements which may be made by hon. members on behalf of parties in opposition should be brief and should not be of such a nature as to provoke debate at this stage.

Mr. MacEwan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I shall be very brief and conclude by saying I would ask the government, in view of the plight of the people in this country, to bring forward immediately policies to alleviate the heavy unemployment situation in this country.

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I too, Mr. Speaker, would like to thank the minister for his cordial act in sending a copy of his statement to the New Democratic party prior to his announcement in the house.

I find myself in the very happy position at this time of year of being able to say that I think the minister and the government have done a fine job in this area. At the same time I hope the minister and the government will understand that the effective changes in the TAB agreement were argued for at some length by members of this party on behalf of the automotive workers. That does not detract in any way from the fact that we now have these very fine changes in the TAB agreement.

The only point I wish to make is that I hope I and hon. members on this side of the house will not have to wait until Easter to congratulate the minister for another fine act. Of course I am referring to the proposals in the Freedman report, which I know he is very enthusiastic about. We look forward to government action in that field in the new year.

[Translation]

M. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, although I have not received a copy of the statement made by the minister—and I do not blame him, for he may have sent it to another office—I would like, nevertheless, to congratulate him on having mitigated the regulations concerning eligibility for benefits of the automotive industry workers who have been laid off.

I wish to take this opportunity to ask the minister to think also of industries other than the automotive industry, where many workers are laid off and only receive 30 weeks of unemployment insurance benefits during the first 52 weeks.

Mr. Speaker, I think that if the minister continues to do a good job, he will certainly take an interest in the industries in our regions. I would also ask him to think of the agricultural industry, since our farmers have never been spoiled.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PROGRAM ON POLLUTION—TABLING OF LETTER

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, further to the question put to me last Monday by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather), the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation advises me that it has received a positive reply from Mr. Hall to whom the letter had been addressed; I am prepared to table copy of that letter in French and in English.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

CONTROL OF TAR AND NICOTINE CONTENT OF CIGARETTES

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-147, to control the tar content and nicotine level of cigarettes.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Howe: In view of medical information that cigarette smoking creates a definite health hazard for the nation, it seems to be a fact that this health hazard is associated with the tar and nicotine content in cigarettes. According to a recent report on research done at Waterloo University there is a great variation in the tar and nicotine content of cigarettes.

• (2:50 p.m.)

The purpose of this bill is to take steps in order that the safest possible cigarette be made available to the Canadian public. I would hope the government would give favourable consideration to referring this bill to the committee on health and welfare and social services, as has been done with other bills of a similar kind.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

In addition to these amounts, persons of age 67 and over, with the necessary residence qualifications, would be eligible for the Old Age Security pension of $76.50 per month in 1968 plus the Guaranteed Income Supplement of up to $30.60 for those with the lower incomes.

Some of these pensioners will be receiving additional pensions in respect of service in the Armed Forces or the R.C.M.P. or other employment.

The cases shown in this table, where there is a combination of long service and small pension, can arise from two sources: (1) Newfoundland Government employees who transferred to the federal service in 1949 at the time of Union who retired soon after transfer and before their higher federal government salaries had been received long enough to raise the pension level, and (2) Revenue and Assistant Revenue Postmasters in low revenue offices who were brought under the Civil Service Superannuation Act in the late '40's.

All cases which have been identified are of the former category.

Questions

GRANTS IN LIEU OF TAXES, CAPITAL REGION

Question No. 108—Mr. Code:

1. To what municipalities, school boards or other municipal agencies in the National Capital Region does the Government of Canada or any department or agency thereof make grants in lieu of taxes?

2. What departments or agencies make such grants?

3. What was the total amount of the grant made in each year based upon the municipal or school tax bills for the years 1966 and 1967 to each such municipality, school board or municipality agency by each such department or agency?

4. Of the total amount of the grant to each such municipality, school board or municipal agency by each department or agency, what part of such grant was based upon the school tax component of the tax bill?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. In the province of Ontario the city of Ottawa, town of Eastview, townships of Gloucester, Nepean, Fitzroy, March, North Gower, Huntley, Torbolton and the village of Rockcliffe Park. In the province of Quebec the city of Hull, towns of Gatineau, Gatineau Point and Aylmer, township of Hull West, municipalities of Lucerne, Des Chenes, Eardley, Ste Cecile de Masham, East Templeton, North Onslow, South Onslow, Old Chelsea and Chelsea, Hull school commission, Greater Hull Protestant school board, Gatineau Catholic school commission, Gatineau Point Catholic school commission, Protestant school commission of Aylmer, St. Stephen school board of Chelsea, St. Mary's school commission of Quyon, Ste Cecile de Masham school commission, Des Chenes rapides school commission, Protestant school board of Lapeche, Onslow Protestant school commission, St. Etienne de Chelsea school commission, school commission of Eardley, Aylmer Catholic school commission, Protestant school board of Chelsea, and East Templeton school municipality.

NOTES: The above tabulation excludes miscellaneous grants in respect of local improvements, fire supply charge (if paid through water rates) water surcharge for sewer service and redevelopment charge; none of these is levied by school authorities or is in respect of school services. It also excludes payments by certain crown corporations—Canadian National Railways, Bank of Canada and Air Canada—which are not agents of the crown for all purposes and which therefore pay taxes rather than grants in lieu thereof. Finally, it excludes payments made on behalf of occupants of crown property from whom full recovery is made. The Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation payments relate to the business premises of the corporation and exclude payments in respect of property held under housing programs; the latter amounts, which are small, are nearly all recovered from occupants of corporation housing or from persons to whom land is sold. Where an amount is followed by an "e" this denotes that it is an estimate.

Questions

SHIP CONSTRUCTION CONTRACTS

Question No. 295—Mr. Anderson:

1. What is the value of all federal government ship construction contracts in the years 1965, 1966, 1967 and the first six months of 1968?

2. What is the value of federal government ship construction contracts given to west coast ship yards during those years?

3. What percentage of federal government ship construction contracts is to be guaranteed to west coast yards in the years 1969 and 1970?

4. Is it still the intention of the government to have national bidding on all new ship construction after 1970?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the department of Industry and Defence Production as follows: 1. Federal government contract expenditures on ship construction (excluding repairs) amounted to approximately $170M., distributed by fiscal years as follows: 1965/66, $33.5M; 1966/67, $53.23M; 1967/68, $57.79M; 1968/69 (6 months), $25.50M.

2. Federal government contract expenditures in West Coast shipyards on ship construction (excluding repairs) amounted to approximately $34M.

3. The allocation of ship construction contracts to the West Coast area for 1969 and 1970 is at present under consideration.

4. Yes, whenever the nature and operational circumstances of the requirement permits. Area competitions will be held where it is not practical to transfer a vessel from one area to another.

CROWN CORPORATION BOND ISSUES

Question No. 419—Mr. Fortin:

1. What Crown corporations float public bond issues?

2. Has the government any control over such bond issues?

3. Are such bonds guaranteed by the government?

4. During the past five years, which bond issues were floated and at what interest rates?

5. Has the government considered, is it considering, or will it consider granting Crown corporations the authority to borrow from the general public?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. The Canadian National Railways and Polymer Corporation Limited have floated public bond issues.

[Mr. Benson.]

2. Yes.

3. In the case of C.N.R., its bond issues are guaranteed by the government. Bonds issued by the Polymer Corporation Limited are not guaranteed by the government.

4. There has been only one public bond issue in the past five years. It was made by the Polymer Corporation November 1, 1967; its amount was $18 millions and the interest rate was 7½ per cent.

5. The government has considered and approved borrowing from the general public in the instances covered in the above replies. Authority for crown corporations to borrow from the general public must first be incorporated in the corporate powers granted by Parliament. The government is not considering seeking from Parliament such general authority for all crown corporations. Where such authority exists, the government's approval of borrowing by a crown corporation from the general public takes into account such considerations as the purpose of the borrowing, the type of bond or security to be issued, its terms and conditions, the capital market in which it is to be sold, and the conditions in that capital market. Also included among such considerations is a comparison of the relevant cost of supplying the required funds out of the proceeds of direct borrowing by the Government as opposed to borrowing in the name of the crown corporation with or without a Government guarantee.

MISSION TO FRANCE RESPECTING SATELLITE COMMUNICATIONS

Question No. 536—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. Who are the members of the Canadian mission now in France discussing co-operation in the field of telecommunications satellite research?

2. What is the position held in the Public Service of Canada by each member of the mission?

3. When is the group expected to return to Canada?

4. What is the purpose of the mission?

5. What is the estimated total cost of the mission?

6. Were other persons not officials of the Canadian Government asked to accompany the mission?

7. Is it the intention of the government to construct a television satellite and, if so, when is it intended that such satellite will be functioning and what is the estimated cost?

8. From what countries are component parts for such a satellite currently available?

9. To what other countries will the mission referred to in Part I or a similar one be sent?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): In so far as telecommunications is concerned—

1 and 2. Dr. J. R. Whitehead, Science secretariat, PCO; Mr. Gilles Bergeron, Manager, project office, domestic satellite communications, system, PCO; Mr. Robert Bibby, Head of the grounds stations and data, processing group of electronics, laboratories, defence research telecommunications establishment; Mr. Harry Kowalik, Professional, space mechanic section, electronics laboratories, defence. Research telecommunications establishment; Mr. Donald Weese, Systems engineer, project office, domestic satellite communications, systems, PCO; Mr. Jacques Mercier, Communications section, electrical and electronics branch, Department of Industry.

3. Mr. Bergeron returned to Canada on October 26; other members of the mission returned on November 5.

4. (a) To study and analyze in detail the "Symphonie" satellite project in order to evaluate progress in European space developments and to determine how it could be applied to Canadian projects; (b) To seek in the following countries: France, Britain, Germany, Italy, Holland and Belgium, the evaluation of manufacturers and laboratories that could manufacture our telecommunication satellites in the near or distant future; (c) To study at random possibilities of long term space cooperation.

5. The estimated cost of the mission is $9,885.17.

6. No.

7. (a) Yes, (b) The end of 1971 or the beginning of 1972; (c) Since the program is still under way and studies not fully completed, it is impossible to establish the total cost at the present time.

8. U.S.A., Britain, France, Germany, Belgium, Holand and Italy.

9. See answer 4 (b).

ART CENTRE EXPENDITURES

Question No. 582—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. Were any expenditures made for and on behalf of the National Art Centre by the Department of the Secretary of State and/or the Centennial Commission?

2. If so, what is the amount thereof?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): 1. Yes.

2. The following expenditures were made for construction of the National Arts Centre, cumulative to October 25, 1968: Centennial commission: $4,261,064; Department of the Secretary of State: $31,414,536; Before the establishment of the National Arts Centre Corporation, the following expenditures were made for or on behalf of the "Office of the Co-ordinator of the National Arts Centre for the Performing Arts": 1964-1965, Centennial commission, $92,680; 1965-1966, Centennial commission, $118,868; 1966-1967, Department of the Secretary of State, $191,797.

SALE OF AIR CANADA VANGUARD PLANES

Question No. 599—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Is Air Canada planning to sell its fleet of "Vanguards" in whole or part?

2. If so, on what schedule will the sales take place?

3. Have any been sold to date and, if so, to whom and at what cost?

4. (a) What was the average purchase cost of each plane (b) what is the present average depreciated value per aircraft (c) what is the current average market worth of the planes?

5. What aircraft will replace them if they are to be sold?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The Management of Air Canada advises as follows:—1. Yes, Air Canada is planning on a progressive retirement of its Vanguard fleet.

2. 5 aircraft available for sale January 1, 1969, 4 additional aircraft by March 1, 1969 and the remainder of the fleet (14) by November 1, 1971.

3. No.

4. (a) $2,988,809; (b) At October 31, 1968 $142,372; (c) Between $250,000 and $675,000 depending on the condition of the plane.

5. In general, DC-9s, but on certain routes, DC-8s.

CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION

Question No. 602—Mr. Fortin:

1. Who are the members of the Canadian Transport Commission, what is the duration of their term of office and what is the salary of each?

Questions

2. Where is the head office of the Commission, and does it meet in other major Canadian cities and, if so, what cities?

3. Does the Commission have jurisdiction over (a) international transportation by rail, air, pipeline, sea and by road (b) interprovincial transportation by rail, road, water, pipeline and by air (c) intraprovincial transportation by rail, road, water, air and by pipeline?

4. What has been the outcome of negotiations between the federal government and the provinces regarding a division of powers over transportation?

5. Since its establishment, how many permits in each category were granted by the Commission?

6. What regulations have been passed under the Transportation Act?

7. Are the Commission's decisions published?

8. Is the Commission conducting an investigation with regard to the establishment of a merchant marine policy in Canada and, if so, when will the results be available?

9. When will the first report of the C.T.C. be submitted to the House?

10. How many appeals were made from decisions of the C.T.C.?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): 1. The following are members of the Canadian Transport Commission: Hon. J. W. Pickersgill, P.C., president; Pierre Taschereau, Q.C., vice-president; J. R. Belcher; G. R. Boucher; Q.C.; A. P. Campbell; J. F. Clark; R. R. Cope; H. J. Darling; J. E. Dumontier; L. Fortier, Q.C.; H. H. Griffin; W. R. Irwin; D. H. Jones; A. S. Kirk; J. A. D. Magee; G. Morisset; J. M. Woodard. The National Transportation Act provides for members to be appointed for a period not exceeding 10 years, but to cease to hold office upon reaching the age of 70. The annual remuneration of the president is $40,000; of the vice president, $35,000; of other members, $24,000. An additional remuneration of $3,000 per annum is paid to any member of the commission who is appointed to be chairman of a committee of the commission.

2. The head office of the commission is located at 275 Slater Street, Ottawa. The commission has district offices in St. John's, Moncton, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Saskatoon, Vancouver, Calgary. The sittings of the commission are held in Ottawa but the commission sits elsewhere in any part of Canada whenever circumstances render it expedient.

3. The National Transportation Act, under which the commission was constituted, applies to the following modes of transport: (a) transport by railways to which the Railway Act applies; (b) transport by air to which the Aeronautics Act applies; (c) transport by water to which the Transport Act applies and all other transport by water to which the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada extends; (d) transport by a commodity pipeline connecting a province with any other or others of the provinces or extending beyond the limits of a province; and (e) transport for hire or reward by a motor vehicle undertaking connecting a province with any other or others of the provinces or extending beyond the limits of a province; Parts II and III of the act dealing with the subject matters of (d) and (e) are not presently in force.

4. There have been no such negotiations.

5. 9 licences have been issued pursuant to the Transport Act; 139 new licences were issued pursuant to the Aeronautics Act.

6. The Canadian Transport Commission general rules.

7. There is no general publication of the decisions of the commission; however, the decisions of the railway transport committee of the commission are published by the Queen's Printer under the heading "Judgments, Orders, Regulations and Rulings".

8. The commission is undertaking a study of the economic feasibility of a Canadian deep sea merchant marine. It is expected that the study will take about a year.

9. The first annual report of the Canadian Transport Commission was tabled in the House of Commons on April 23, 1968.

10. There have been 20 appeals pursuant to section 18 of the National Transportation Act and one appeal pursuant to section 53 of the Railway Act.

[Mr. Fortin.]

RECREATIONAL FACILITIES ON INDIAN RESERVES

Question No. 624—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Is any capital assistance available to establish recreational facilities on Indian reserves?

2. If so, what amounts are available, on what terms and under what programs?

3. Has the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development received any applications from Indian Bands for loans or grants for capital assistance for recreational programs and, if so (a) where have such requests come from (b) what loans or grants have been made (c) what loans or grants have been refused and for what reasons?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. There is at present no program which provides capital assistance to establish recreational facilities on Indian reserves.

2. While capital assistance as such is not available, grants for recreational programs are available on the basis of on-reserve population. These are granted at the rate of $1.00 per capita for every 10 cents per capita contributed by the band. The maximum is $5.00 per capita but not exceeding $5,000.00 to a band in a year.

3. Since April 1, 1968 the Department received the following application: (a) The Bella Bella band applied for capital assistance; (b) None; (c) The Bella Bella band request is under consideration.

REPRESENTATIONS BY ARMSTRONG INDIAN ASSOCIATION

Question No. 645—Mr. Yewchuk:

1. With reference to the meeting of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development with the president of the Armstrong Indian Association on Tuesday, October 29, 1968, will the Minister make a grant available to Mr. Hector King, president of the association, as a means of encouraging direct involvement of the Indian peoples in the political process?

2. Will the Minister take the initiative in arranging for such a grant from other agencies so that the work of Mr. King can continue?

3. What concrete steps does the Minister propose to encourage the participation of the Indian people and to ensure that the policy of the Department reflects the views of the Indian people, as recommended in the Hawthorn Report?

4. Does the Minister intend to expand the terms of reference of the Indian Act hearings to allow full discussion of means by which the Indian people can participate in the development of Indian policy?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1 and 2. In reply to Mr. Hector King's brief, the minister indicated that he would listen to the views and proposals put forward by the Armstrong Indian Association so long as it continues to be a true representative of the Indian community at Armstrong, Ontario. An agreement is in effect between the Ontario government and the department, whereby the province assigns a community development worker to Armstrong to work with the Indian and non-Indian population. Because of this, the department informed Mr. King that it would not be appropriate to appoint him as a community development worker at this time.

3. Indian people now participate in the administration of their affairs through their band councils and they make known their views on policy through their councils and Indian organizations. In addition, policy matters have, during the past three years, been reviewed at meetings of regional Indian advisory councils and the national Indian advisory board. More recently, Indian leaders have met to establish the National Indian Brotherhood which, it is expected, will have an important role in expressing the views of the Indian people. Relationship between the government and the native brotherhood as well as regional organizations, is currently under review and it is my hope and expectation that they will play an increasingly important role in assisting the government with the formulation of Indian Affairs policy.

4. While the main objective of the Indian Act hearings has been to seek the views of the Indian people respecting the Act, the discussions have ranged beyond the Act and have included the subject raised in the question.

NOTICE OF SALARY INCREASES DEPENDENT UPON FRENCH STUDY

Question No. 656—Mr. Harkness:

1. Have some civil servants been given notice with their pay cheque that there will not be the usual increase in salary unless they enrol for a French course?

2. If so, how many civil servants were such notices sent to and in what geographical areas?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

PUBLIC WORKS TESTING LABORATORIES

Question No. 686—Mr. Paproski:

1. Did the Department of Public Works maintain and operate a soils, concrete and asphalt testing laboratory at Banff, Alberta?

Questions

2. If so, when was it established and is it still in operation or was it closed (a) on what dates, and (b) for what reasons?

3. What was its average personnel complement?

4. As a replacement were there established a separate soils testing laboratory in Edmonton and a concrete and asphalt testing laboratory in Calgary with the technicians therein under the direction of an engineer in Edmonton?

5. Has this proved unsatisfactory and for what reasons?

6. Is it now proposed to expand both the testing laboratories in Edmonton and Calgary and to what level of operations?

7. Will this require additional personnel and, if so, how many and of what kinds?

8. What would be the area of jurisdiction of such testing laboratories?

9. Does the Department of Transport operate a similar testing laboratory in Edmonton and what prevents the joint use of such laboratories?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Public Works and the Department of Transport as follows: 1. Yes.

2. (a) Established in 1956. Closed in 1967; (b) The department's administrative functions in Banff were transferred to Calgary and Edmonton.

3. 26.

4. Yes.

5. No.

6. No.

7. Not applicable.

8. Edmonton: routine testing for quality control of materials with emphasis on soil testing for projects in the Northwest Territories; Calgary: routine testing for quality control of construction materials for projects in the prairie provinces.

9. The Department of Transport operates a soils and materials testing laboratory in Edmonton for testing soils and pavement materials including asphalt and concrete to assure compliance with specification requirements. The facilities available are limited to those necessary to meet the department's day to day work load only, in the specific field of airport construction. Specialized testing is performed by other agencies as and when required.

GREAT LAKES FISHING POLICY

Question No. 691—Mr. Robinson:

1. What is the government policy regarding the fishing industry in the Great Lakes?

[Mr. Paproski.]

2. What is the government policy regarding the provision on the Great Lakes of (a) wharfs (b) harbours (c) harbour facilities (d) marina facilities?

3. Does the government propose to charge a fee for the use of federal wharfs and facilities on the Great Lakes?

4. Will the government assist municipal authorities to provide harbour, wharf and marina facilities in the Great Lakes?

5. What is the government policy toward assisting Metropolitan Toronto in setting up a Harbours Board and/or Port of Authority and what facilities will the federal government provide?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the departments of Fisheries, Public Works and Transport as follows: 1. In Ontario the provincial government has assumed responsibility for administration of the fisheries, through agreement with the federal government. Responsibility for the Canadian share of fisheries research and lamprey control programmes conducted pursuant to the terms of the Convention on Great Lakes Fisheries between Canada and the United States of America is assumed by the federal and provincial governments.

2. (a) and (b) The Department of Public Works provides wharfs and harbours where these are economically justifiable and funds can be made available; (c) Normally harbour facilities such as water, light, parking areas, etc. are not the responsibility of the Department of Public Works; (d) Under the Marina policy assistance may be granted in the establishment of a public marina. This is limited to the construction of breakwaters and dredging in the main harbour channels and is contingent on the developer spending an equal number of dollars on landing places and other shore facilities.

3. Wharfage tolls and dues are payable on vessels using federal public wharves under direct administration of the Department of Transport. Charges apply also on goods loaded or unloaded at the wharves or for storage, etc User charges at the wharves have been in effect for many years. The present schedule of rates is included in the Government Wharves Regulations authorized by Order in Council P.C. 1964-104 dated January 23, 1964, as amended.

4. See answer to 2. above.

5. The present Toronto Harbour administration was incorporated under the Toronto

Harbour Commissioners Act, 1911. The Toronto Harbour Commissioners have kept the government informed with respect to current planning for redevelopment of the Metropolitan Toronto waterfront and members of the government have also had preliminary informal discussions with City authorities in these matters and related questions pertaining to future harbour administration. The question of federal assistance for new harbour works or facilities is also receiving consideration in conjunction with major harbour studies now in progress.

MINISTERS IN CHICAGO, OCTOBER 1968

Question No. 720—Mr. Schreyer:

1. Were any federal Ministers in Chicago on official business at any time during October 1968?

2. If so (a) how many persons were in the group despatched to Chicago (b) for how long a period of time and at what public cost (c) what was the cost of leasing or hiring of limousines and/or other means of transportation?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

PAYMENTS TO WITNESSES, CHARGES AGAINST SEAMEN'S UNION MEMBERS

Question No. 726—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

1. What is the name and address of each person who received payments, with the amount of such payment indicated, for (a) transportation, and (b) other than transportation to attend as witnesses with respect to certain charges laid against certain members of the Seafarer's International Union as referred to on pages 2472-3 of Hansard?

2. With respect to Part (b) of the above, for what purposes, in detail, were the payments made in each person's case?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): 1. There were 94 witnesses in this case, however, it is not deemed to be in the public interest to publish the names and addresses of the individual witnesses. Total payments, revised in accordance with the information available as of this date, are as follows: (a) $5,915.60; (b) $9,599.55.

2. Witness fees, $2,785.00; Meals and lodging, $6,814.55.

*C.N.R. POLICE, MONCTON AREA

Question No. 759—Mr. Crossman:

1. What is the extent of the area covered by the C.N.R. Police based in Moncton, N.B.?

2. What was the repair cost during the last full year to damage caused by vandalism in this area?

3. How many C.N.R. Police officers are employed in this area?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows:

1. Metropolitan Moncton, the Sussex subdivision between Moncton and Sussex and lines of railway comprised in other local subdivisions radiating from the Moncton area.

2. Such information is not available in the form asked.

3. 25.

EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, COMPANY OF YOUNG CANADIANS

Question No. 769—Mr. Coates:

1. How many applications were received for the position of Executive Director of the Company of Young Canadians and were any of the applications received for this position from members of the present staff and, if so, what members of the present staff made application for the position?

2. What is the full name, address and qualifications of the individual appointed to the position of Executive Director and what past experience qualified him for his present position?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I have been informed by the chairman of the provisional council of the Company of Young Canadians as follows: 1. 157 applications were received for the position of executive director of the Company of Young Canadians; applications were received from members of the staff; these applications were made in confidence.

2. Mr. Claude Vidal, 672 Wiseman Street, Outremont, Montreal 8, Quebec.

Personal data and education: 38 years of age; married and father of two children; B.A. (1956) and M.A. (linguistics) (1962), Université de Montréal. Class work for a Ph.D. (linguistics) completed at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor (1962-64).

Working experience: August 1966 to present: government of the province of Quebec. Present title—Director of "Ecole des Beaux-Arts"; August 1965 to September 1966: Montreal Catholic School Board. Title—Associate to the Director, Adult Education; August 1964 to August 1965: Montreal Catholic School Board. Title—Directeur, Language Teaching Bureau; September 1956 to August 1964: Jacques Cartier Normal School. Title—Director of English Language Section.

The governor-in-council and the provisional council of the Company of Young Canadians feel that Mr. Vidal's experience, first as a teacher, and more particularly as director of the École des Beaux-Arts, Montreal, have equipped him eminently for the executive directorship of the Company of Young Canadians. In his most recent post, Mr. Vidal encouraged a substantial measure of effective self government within the school, and through that self government a thorough review of the finances, administration and curriculum of the school.

HALIFAX SPACE RENTAL, COMPANY OF YOUNG CANADIANS

Question No. 793—Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond):

1. Has the Company of Young Canadians rented space in a Halifax hotel?

2. If so (a) for how long (b) at what cost (c) for what purpose?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Company of Young Canadians as follows: 1. Yes.

2. (a) The Company of Young Canadians, through the Department of Public Works, leased 500 square feet in the Lord Nelson hotel, Halifax for a period of five years from August 16th, 1966. The company requested that the Department of Public Works sub-let the above premises in February, 1968; (b) The annual cost was $2,640; (c) The premises were leased to provide office accommodation.

COMPANY OF YOUNG CANADIANS—DAVID DEPOE

Question No. 794—Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond):

1. Was David DePoe a member of the Company of Young Canadians, does he still hold a position with the body and, if not, when did he cease his work with that body and did he resign from that body?

2. If David DePoe was a member of the C.Y.C. was he ever retained by that body as a "consultant" or in any professional capacity and, if so, was this during the period he was also a member of that body or at a later date and, if so, when?

3. If David DePoe was retained in any capacity by the C.Y.C. other than as a volunteer, what was the purpose and duties of the position in question and how much did he receive in fees and expenses?

4. Has the C.Y.C. ever paid any fine for any "consultant" or other person retained by that body in any professional capacity in the City of Toronto and, if so (a) what was his name (b) what was the charge against him (c) what was the amount of that fine, and (d) for what reason was such fine paid?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Company of Young Canadians as follows: 1. Mr. David DePoe is a volunteer member of the Company of Young Canadians. His contract expires January 17, 1969.

2. No.

3. Not applicable.

4. No.

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT FOR STUDENTS

Question No. 813—Mr. Yewchuk:

1. Is the government considering the establishment of a national program for summer employment of university students as recommended at the meeting of the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada?

2. Has the attention of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration been drawn to a statement by the President of the University and College Planning Association that Canadian university students face another "very bleak" employment situation this summer and, if so, has the government launched any special studies of the student employment problem?

3. Will the government bring in legislation to amend the Canada Student Loans Act to make part-time students eligible for loans and at the same time, will the Prime Minister say whether any changes are contemplated in the regulations to make it easier for students to obtain grants and loans?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Finance and Manpower and Immigration as follows: 1. The federal government cannot in isolation solve the problem of summer employment for students. The solution calls for concerted effort by governments at all levels, employers, the universities, and the students themselves. The contribution of the federal government must be consistant with the overall needs of all who seek work. It is the intention of the Department of Manpower and Immigration on a national basis, to publicize the need for co-operation, to expand existing services, and to intensify all efforts that can in any way contribute to the improvement of the summer employment situation for students.

2. Yes. Officers of the Department of Manpower and Immigration have already met with representatives of the University and College Planning Association and other concerned associations to study the problem. On the basis of their suggestions, every effort will be made to improve the student employment situation.

3. The Canada student loans plan was introduced to help assist students to study full time without having to take time out during an academic year to earn a living. Part time students who have a source of income do not require the same measure of assistance. The government therefore does not plan to bring in legislation to make part time students eligible. Loans, by the terms of the act, are authorized only to students in need of a loan in order to pursue their course of studies. Revised federal-provincial agreed criteria are in effect this year on the basis of which need is determined by the provinces. Indications are that they are effective in ensuring that funds are available to those who really need them, and no change is being contemplated to make it easier to obtain loans to those who do not really need assistance. Under the Canada student loans plan, no grants are involved.

C.B.C. PUBLICATIONS

Question No. 817—Mr. MacLean:

1. For each of the last five business years did the CBC Publications operate at a profit or a loss, and what was the profit or loss in each case?

2. What is the criteria for determining that certain CBC publications are not for sale outside Canada?

3. What is the gross sale of CBC publications for the last five years (a) total (b) outside Canada?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows:

1. C.B.C. information services produces a limited number of publications as a further use of C.B.C. broadcast material and these publications are sold at prices intended to recover costs of publication and distribution. In the last five fiscal years net revenues have been as follows: 1963-64, $1,818; 1964-65, $842; 1965-66, $26,873; 1966-67, $31,600; 1967-68, $14,479.

2. The C.B.C. tries whenever possible to purchase exclusive world publication rights to material. However, the option is always with the author to refuse to sell world rights and to limit the agreement to exclusive Canadian publication rights.

3. Gross revenue from the sale of C.B.C. publications for the last five fiscal years was $264,672. Sales records are not broken down as to points of origin.

R.C.M.P. IN ONTARIO

Question No. 823—Mr. Matte:

1. How many members of the RCMP were stationed in the Province of Ontario for each of the years from 1960 to 1968 inclusive?

2. In what areas are the various branches of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police working in the Province of Ontario and how many officers work in each area?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): 1.

	Headquarters*	Training*	Enforcement	Total
1960	483	172	621	1,276
1961	602	210	645	1,457

Questions

PURCHASE OF NORTHERN SERVICE COMPANIES

Question No. 844—Mr. Fortin:

1. What amount was paid to the N.C.P.C. for the purchase of the assets of (a) Yukon Telephone Syndicate Ltd. (b) Dawson City Water and Power Co. Ltd. and (c) Dawson Electric Light and Power Co. Ltd.?

2. Were the shares or the assets of said companies purchased?

3. What was the book value of each of these companies at time of purchase?

4. What criteria were used to assess the price?

5. Were the former owners paid in cash or by interest bearing bonds?

6. Does the N.C.P.C. propose to buy other companies?

7. Has the N.C.P.C. loaned $32,000,000 to the Newfoundland Power Commission and does it intend to lend an equal amount to Hydro-Quebec and at a similar rate of interest?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. The amount paid by N.C.P.C. for purchase of the Yukon Telephone Syndicate, Dawson Water and Power Co. Ltd., and the Dawson Electric Light Co. Ltd. was $336,505.00 which included $234,505 cash on hand, hence the net cost was $102,000.

2. The outstanding shares of the companies were purchased.

3. Book values of the three companies were as follows: (a) The Yukon Telephone Syndicate, Limited, $19,453.00; (b) The Dawson City Water & Power Co. Ltd.,—$88,419.00; (c) The Dawson Electric Light & Power Co. Ltd., $339,676.00; Total, $270,710.00.

4. The purchase price was based on the estimated value of the assets of the three companies for use in connection with construction and operation of a new power plant and electrical distribution system and renovation and operation of the water supply system serving the city of Dawson.

5. Cash.

6. The N.C.P.C. presently has no plans to purchase other companies.

7. As of November 30, 1968 the Federal Government has made loans, under the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act, which has been administered by the Northern Canada Power Commission, to the Newfoundland and Labrador Power Commission, totalling $33,293,780. Because the application of the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act is confined, by the terms of the Act, to the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, and Newfoundland, loans could not be made to Hydro-Quebec under the authority of that Act.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

PERPETUAL BONDS

Question No. 845—Mr. Rynard:

1. What is the total number of 3 percent perpetual bonds which are still to be redeemed?

2. What is the total number of 3 percent perpetual bonds still in the hands of the original owners?

3. Is the government considering, or has it set, a target date for the redemption of these bonds?

4. What is the purchasing value of the 1936 dollar in relation to the value of the dollar today?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. The total number of 3 per cent perpetual bonds still to be redeemed is 47,696, and the number currently outstanding in coupon form and fully registered form is 37,135 and 10,561 respectively. (The amounts outstanding in each form are $24,848,500 and $30,151,500 respectively.)

2. Because coupon bearer bonds pass by delivery it is not known how many coupon bonds are still in the hands of the original owners, but the number of fully registered bonds still in the hands of the original owners is 497 (with a value of $738,500).

3. No. Under the conditions of issue, these bonds, as the term perpetual bond implies, were given no maturity date although the government did reserve the option to redeem the bonds at par plus accrued interest upon 60 day's notice at any time on or after September 15, 1966. The last coupon on the bearer bond and the coupon registered bond certificates also became payable on September 15, 1966, the date when the government's option began. At that time the government issued new certificates to holders of these bonds with an additional supply of coupons attached thereto sufficient for the next 30 years. The perpetuals continue to have no maturity date.

4. On the basis of the consumer price index the purchasing power of the 1936 dollar would be about 39 cents today.

HALIFAX LEASE, COMPANY OF YOUNG CANADIANS

Question No. 857—Mr. Coates:

1. On what date did the Company of Young Canadians secure a lease from the Lord Nelson Hotel, Halifax, N.S., what was the period of the lease and what was the yearly rental for the space in question?

2. On what date does the lease expire and for what period of time did the Company of Young Canadians actually use the place rented or leased and did they endeavour to negotiate a lump sum settlement in lieu of using the space and, if so, what was the result of these negotiations?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Company of Young Canadians as follows: 1. The Company of Young Canadians leased, through the Department of Public Works, 500 square feet net in the Lord Nelson hotel, Halifax, for a period of 5 years beginning August 16, 1966 at an annual rate of $2,640.00.

2. The lease between the Lord Nelson hotel and the Department of Public Works will expire August 15, 1971. The Company of Young Canadians used the offices from August 16, 1966 to September 1, 1967. The Department of Public Works was requested to sub-let the premises for the duration of the lease. It was not possible to negotiate a settlement of the lease in lieu of using the space. Efforts by the Department of Public Works, the Lord Nelson Hotel and the C.Y.C. are continuing to find a new tenant.

CANADA SAVINGS BONDS

Question No. 860—Mr. Thompson (Red Deer):

1. What was the total amount of sales of Canada Savings Bonds for the 1966-67, 1967-68 and the current 1968-69 issues (current issue to date)?

2. What was the amount of the Canada Savings Bonds issue in each of the above periods?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. Total sales of Canada savings bonds were as follows: Centennial series Oct. 1/66 to Sept. 30/67, $2,422 million; 1967/68 series Oct. 1/67 to Sept. 30/68, $1,526 million; 1968/69 series Oct. 1/68 to Nov. 30/68, $3,219 million.

2. The total amount of Canada savings bonds outstanding at each of the above dates was as follows: September 30, 1967, $5,779 million; September 30, 1968, $5,575 million; November 30, 1968, $6,462 million.

NATIONAL GALLERY EXHIBITIONS

Question No. 863—Mr. Caouette:

1. What was the cost of organizing the National Gallery's exhibition "300 years of Canadian Art" from May 12 to September 17, 1967?

2. What will be the cost of the Jordaens exhibition from November 30, 1968 to January 5, 1969?

3. Will the French catalogue for the Jordaens exhibition appear at the same time as the English version and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the National Museums Corporation as follows: 1. $25,193.00.

2. The cost of the Jordaens exhibition is estimated at $147,000.

3. No. The original text was in English and did not arrive on agreed date. Translation was delayed. Editing was exacting and therefore slow. Finally there were production difficulties since there is a limited amount of the type face (Juliana) available in North America so that only one printer could undertake the production.

SATELLITE LAUNCHING CAPABILITY

Question No. 877—Mr. Schreyer:

1. Does Canada intend to develop a launching capability and actual launching rocket in order to launch its domestic communications satellite?

2. If not, is it the intention to seek competitive bids from such other countries that can provide this?

3. If not, for what reason?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): In so far as telecommunications is concerned: 1. No. The white paper on "A Domestic Satellite Communication System for Canada" gives the reasons why it does not appear feasible for Canada to carry out a development program which could lead to a launching facility being available by the probable time a first launch is required.

2. The white paper states that it appears necessary for Canada to negotiate with other countries to purchase the required launching services for the initial system; and that it is the intention of the government to investigate the potential sources of supply of launch services.

3. Not applicable.

MARINA MOTEL, SMITHS FALLS, ONT.

Question No. 881—Mr. Nesbitt:

1. When does the present government lease on the premises known as the "Marina Motel" at Smiths Falls, Ontario, terminate?

2. Does the government possess an option to renew this lease and, if so, under what terms?

3. Has the ownership for the "Marina Motel" changed during the last six months and, if so, who is the new owner?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: 1. June 27, 1969.

2. No formal option has been arranged

Questions

3. Yes—Anglo Canadian Hotel, Management Corporation Limited, 825 Eglinton Avenue West, Toronto 10, Ontario.

R.C.M.P. IN QUEBEC

Question No. 894—Mr. Godin:

1. In what cities of the Province of Quebec was the establishment of the RCMP increased?

2. In each of those cities what was the number of RCMP officers on duty in 1960?

INVESTIGATION OF ARTIFICIAL SWEETENER

Question No. 916—Mr. Woolliams:

1. Has the Food and Drug Administration investigated a chemical known as "cyclamates" which is used to sweeten diet drinks for children and adults?

2. If there has been an investigation, what was the result of the same, and is it still being permitted to be used in Canada for the purpose of sweetening diet drinks in question?

3. Have diet drinks which are imported been tested for this chemical?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Investigations on the cyclamates have been under way in the research laboratories of the food and drug directorate, Department of National Health and Welfare, for several years. Officers of the Directorate also are fully aware of research and investigation on the cyclamates carried out in various other countries.

2. The studies carried out in the food and drug directorate can be summarized as follows: Subcutaneous injection of cyclamate had no effect on the health of rats. Addition of 1 per cent of cyclamate to a nutritionally adequate diet for rats had no effect on health or performance, but 5 per cent produced loose stools. When 1 per cent cyclamate was added to a low-protein diet for rats, weight gains were reduced. Cyclamate had no effect on the absorption and excretion of the vitamins riboflavin and thiamine in human subjects. The food and drug regulations permit the addition of cyclamates to carbohydrate or calorie-reduced dietetic foods, including so-called diet soft drinks.

3. No.

TRANSPORTATION OF SICK INDIANS

Question No. 930—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys):

1. (a) Does the federal government pay all or any part of the cost involved in transporting sick or injured Indians, residents of recognized reserves, to hospitals or other places of treatment (b) in this regard, does the federal government make any distinction between cases requiring urgent or emergency medical assistance and those involving medical examination or consultation (c) if such a distinction is made, upon what grounds?

Questions

2. (a) In what instances, if any, are Indian residents of the Eskasoni Reserve in Nova Scotia entitled to federal assistance in connection with transportation to hospitals or other treatment centres and to what degree of assistance (b) in respect of the above, are sick or injured Indians of the Eskasoni Reserve limited as to the hospitals or other treatment centres they may go to for medical assistance and, if so, what are they and where are they located (c) are Indian residents of the Whycocomagh Reserve, Inverness County, Nova Scotia, in the same position as those of the Eskasoni Reserve in regard to assisted transportation of the sick or injured (d) to what hospitals or other centres of medical treatment are Indian residents of the Whycocomagh Reserve directed when medical assistance is required that is not available on the reserve (e) were Indian residents of the Whycocomagh Reserve ever consulted, or was the Band Council consulted, as to their preference in regard to hospitals or other treatment centres before being directed by the government to such places (f) was St. Mary's Hospital, Inverness, excluded from the list of hospitals and other treatment centres to which Indians of the Whycocomagh Reserve were directed by the government (g) if so, why, and upon what date was such direction effective?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. (a) Yes; (b) Yes; (c) The nature of the illness.

2. (a) Assistance is provided for: Transportation required for emergency cases where the need for a properly equipped ambulance is indicated, transportation required for investigation or treatment requested by public health agencies, transportation required when referred by an attending physician to a major medical centre, transportation required for transfers between hospitals for specialist treatment, transportation required for treatment at the discretion of the attending physician from a reserve to a distant hospital when the local hospital lacks the facilities to care for the specific case; (b) Yes. The primary treatment centre is the medical services clinic in Sydney, staffed by two fulltime medical officers, who also hold clinics on the reserve. Hospitalization is at either Sydney hospital, or Halifax if required; (c) Yes; (d) Usually those at Baddeck or Inverness; when specialized care is required, Sydney and/or Halifax; (e) Yes; (f) No; (g) Not applicable.

TRAINING OF PENITENTIARY WARDENS

Question No. 949—Mr. Caouette:

*MINISTERIAL CODE OF ETHICS

Question No. 959—Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond):

Is the code of ethics issued by the former Prime Minister to his colleagues on November 30, 1964, still a matter of government policy?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The so-called code of ethics was not a matter of government policy.

An hon. Member: You don't have one.

Mr. Hees: Explain.

Mr. Trudeau: It took the form of a letter from the former prime minister to the members of his cabinet as to the standards that he, as prime minister, wished to have observed by those he had appointed as ministers, as well as by their staffs. Shortly after the present government took office I drew the attention of my colleagues to the letter and associated myself with the standards it described.

EXTENSION OF HARBOUR FACILITIES, ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.

Question No. 960—Mr. Carter:

Does the government have any plans to extend its facilities in St. John's (Newfoundland) harbour and, if so, when will work commence?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Pursuant to the provisions of the National Harbours Board Act and the Financial Administration Act, the budget of the board has been submitted to the government for approval of 1969 capital expenditures, and on approval details will be available of proposed works at national harbours, including St. John's harbour.

OIL IMPORTS AND EXPORTS

Question No. 961—Mr. Harding:

1. From what countries and in what volume was oil imported in the years 1961 to 1967 inclusive?

2. To what countries and in what volume was Canadian oil sold in the years 1961 to 1967 inclusive?

3. In the years 1961 to 1967 inclusive, what was the total value of Canadian oil (a) imports (b) exports?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The Dominion Bureau of Statistics reports that: 1, 2 and 3. The total volume and value of imports and exports of "crude petroleum" for the years 1961 to 1967 are given in the attached table. Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Loan year 1964-65, $74,262, paid in fiscal year 1965-66; loan year 1965-66, $757,448; paid in fiscal year 1966-67; loan year 1966-67, $1,230,572, paid in fiscal year 1967-68; loan year 1967-68, $2,402,552, paid in fiscal year 1968-69.

GRANT FOR BATHROOM RESEARCH

Question No. 989—Mr. McCleave:

1. Did Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation recently grant approximately $75,000 to Crane Canada Limited for bathroom and plastic research?

2. Were other firms considered and on what basis was the Crane company chosen?

3. Did the Crane company initiate the proposal for such research?

4. Will the results of the research be made public?

5. Will the achievements arising from the research become public property and available to Crane's competitors?

6. Can companies in competition with Crane make requests for similar grants and will such be seriously considered?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): 1. Yes.

2. After several years of discussion with various companies in both Canada and the United States to encourage research and development in this area, Crane Canada Limited submitted a proposal. Some of the companies involved, besides Crane Canada Limited, were American Standards Limited, Dupont of Canada Limited and Naugatuck Chemicals Limited as well as scientists from universities and government departments.

3. As explained in answer 2, above, Crane Canada Limited was the only party of all those approached to submit a proposal.

4. Yes.

5. The benefits of this research will accrue to the public of Canada, and if there are positive results and they are not pursued, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has maintained the right to pursue or encourage the development of further work based on the results from this program which will benefit the people of Canada as well as Crane Canada Limited and other Canadian companies.

6. Yes. If any company can develop a sound reasonable proposal for research and development that will lead to better housing or products for housing for Canadians, financial support under the National Housing Act can be obtained.

INSPECTION OF SEED POTATOES

Question No. 995—Mr. McQuaid:

1. Does the government propose to charge a fee for the inspection of all seed potatoes entered for certification?

2. If so (a) when will this new rule commence (b) what will be the fee charged (c) who will be responsible for the collection of the fee (d) when will the fee be collected (e) will a farmer be refused inspection if he cannot pay the fee?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): 1. The assessment of fees for services provided by the department is under review and should a decision be made to charge a fee for seed potato certification an announcement will be made outlining all conditions.

2. See answer to 1.

*IMMIGRATION APPEALS FROM WEST OF OTTAWA

Question No. 999—Mr. Haidasz:

1. How many applications to the Immigration Appeal Board have been received from points West of Ottawa?

2. How many applications were received from Metropolitan Toronto?

3. When will an Immigration Appeal Board Court be established in Toronto?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The answer to the first part of the question is that 823 appeals have been received from points west of Ottawa.

The answer to the second part of the question is that there are no available statistics relative to appeals received from metropolitan Toronto. However, 588 were received from the province of Ontario.

[Mr. Hellyer.]

The answer to the third part of the question is that the establishment of an immigration appeal board in Toronto is dependent upon the results of the current experimental extension project put in operation in Montreal last October.

*IMMIGRATION APPEALS FROM EAST OF OTTAWA

Question No. 1,000—Mr. Haidasz:

1. How many applications to the Immigration Appeal Board have been received from points East of Ottawa?

2. How many applications have been received from the Montreal area?

3. Is there an Immigration Appeal Board Court hearing cases in Montreal?

4. Who are the members of the Immigration Appeal Board Court sitting in Montreal?

5. Are any of these members permanently assigned to Montreal?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The answer to the first part of the question is that 351 appeals have been received from points east of Ottawa.

The answer to the second part of the question is that there are no available statistics relative to appeals received from the Montreal area. However, 315 appeals were received from the province of Quebec.

The answer to the third part of the question is that there is an immigration appeal board hearing cases in Montreal, which was established on an experimental basis.

The answer to the fourth part of the question is that Mr. J.-P. Geoffroy, vice chairman, is sitting in Montreal assisted by two members who travel to Montreal from Ottawa when the board is in session.

The answer to the fifth part of the question is that no members have been permanently assigned to Montreal.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, notices of motions for production of papers Nos. 4 and 52 are agreeable to the government.

[English]

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to inquire about a motion for the production of papers. Is this the proper place to do so? On October 30 this house passed an order for the production of papers which I had requested under motion No. 17, concerning the British Columbia hydro rail route from the Matsqui area to Roberts Bank. Nothing happened by November 22, so on that date I asked the President of the Privy Council when these papers would become available. He said he would be glad to look into it. I should like to ask now whether he has looked into it, or whether perhaps the Minister of Transport or somebody else in the cabinet has looked into this matter.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Consultations are now under way, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): May I put the same question to the Minister of Transport, then. Is he the proper minister to ask?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I think so, Mr. Speaker. I am not quite sure of the reason for the delay, but I am willing to find out as quickly as I can.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Could the minister find out before Christmas?

Motions for Papers

Mr. Hellyer: I think so, Mr. Speaker, if the opposition do not throw my officials out of the gallery. They are keeping tabs on these things. I will find out and let my hon. friend know as soon as possible.

[Translation]

Mr. Forest: Mr. Speaker, notice of motion No. 37 is agreeable to the government subject to the usual reservations concerning privileged papers and authorization of the government authorities concerned.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining notices of motions be allowed to stand.

[English]

Mr. Ambrose Hubert Peddle (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I presume that if it was in order for the hon. lady to introduce the subject which she did, I could have a moment on a similar subject.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may have a moment.

Mr. Peddle: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You will never know how much I appreciate this.

• (3:00 p.m.)

On September 20, Mr. Speaker—that was 89 days ago and a few days after the opening of this parliament—I caused to be placed on the order paper of this house notice of motion for the production of papers No. 8. On the same date about which the hon. lady complains, October 30, according to Hansard my motion was agreed to by the government. I have made a number of inquiries since, as the hon. lady has, but nothing has been acknowledged. I suggest that during the time which has elapsed I could have obtained similar information from the government of the supreme Soviet.

C.N.R. PAYMENTS IN LIEU OF MUNICIPAL TAXES

Motion No. 4—Mr. McCleave:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of the Order in Council or other document setting out the authorization and terms under which the Canadian National Railways will make payments to municipalities in lieu of taxes.

Motion agreed to.

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

ADULT OCCUPATIONAL TRAINING, SASKATCHEWAN

Motion No. 37—Mr. Burton:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of any agreements between the Government of Canada and the Government of Saskatchewan with respect to the occupational training of adults.

Motion agreed to.

LETTER FROM C.R.T.C. TO RADIO STATIONS

Motion No. 52—Mr. McCleave:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the letter sent to Mr. Lorne Mahoney of the Canadian Radio-Television Commission on or about November 27th to radio stations.

Motion agreed to.

AIRPORTS

TORONTO—PROTESTS AGAINST EXPANSION OF FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take advantage of the visit to the House of Commons by the Minister of Transport to ask him a question about the Toronto international airport, to follow up information which I sought from the Minister without Portfolio some time ago. Has the minister received from the province of Ontario any communication arising out of a recent meeting between municipal officials from the area concerned and members of the provincial government on that subject? Can the minister give us the substance of any such communication?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): There have been discussions between the two governments as late as yesterday. I hope to be in a position to make an announcement later this week.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): May I ask a supplementary question. I wonder if the minister or his department have considered the suggestion I presented a short time ago, that consideration be given to locating the international airport between Toronto and Montreal because of the congestion in those two cities, and specifically if the area south of Picton could be given serious consideration.

Mr. Stanfield: May I ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Speaker: Is the Leader of the Opposition asking a question supplementary to his own question?

Mr. Stanfield: Supplementary to my own question, Mr. Speaker, and not supplementary to the question asked by my colleague. I wonder whether the Minister of Transport or his minister have consulted with the Ontario municipal board with regard to the zoning restrictions currently in force on the land the department is considering expropriating?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, Mr. Speaker; it was the minister of municipal affairs with whom I was talking yesterday.

VOCATIONAL AND TECHNICAL TRAINING

PAYMENT OF SUBSISTENCE ALLOWANCES DURING HOLIDAY SEASON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration arising out of a matter that has been drawn to his attention previously. Will the minister inform the house what success he has had in getting vocational training schools to remain open to continue their work during the period between Christmas and New Year's, so the trainees may continue to receive their allowances during that period?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): We have had considerable success, Mr. Speaker. I think in the vast majority of cases trainees will be able to continue their courses during the holiday period. I will make an up to date check and advise my hon. friend later in the week.

Mr. Lewis: I assume from the minister's answer there are some cases where this will not happen. I should like to ask the minister whether he is intending to pay allowances to trainees who are kept out of school by the closing of schools, or to make some other arrangement so the trainees who are totally dependent on their allowances are not put to considerable hardship during this period.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend realizes, the solution to this problem is to encourage the provision of instruction during the holiday period. We have suggested to the provinces that we would accept tutoring or classroom instruction aside from the regular instruction during this period. We are not permitted under the law to pay trainees allowances unless the trainees are in classes. We are permitted to pay allowances on statutory holidays, which we propose to do. The real solution to the problem is to encourage instruction during the holiday period.

Mr. Lewis: That is what I meant by "other arrangements".

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Surely some means can be found to avoid the real hardship that is going to be involved in some cases—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's supplementary question is argumentative.

AGRICULTURE

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR INCREASED MILK QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the honourable Minister of Agriculture.

In view of the many representations made by farmers in my riding with a view to an increased dairy quota, which is now set at 300,000 lbs, would the minister tell the house if he intends to accede to these requests?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I believe a meeting was held on December 2, Mr. Speaker, with the people from across Canada who advise the department on dairy policy. We do not intend to change quotas between now and the beginning of the new dairy year on April 1, 1969. However, in keeping with the recommendations that have been made, the new dairy policy in the new year may not be exactly the same as it has been during the past year.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF INCREASED RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): My question is for the Postmaster General. In light of the sharp decrease across the country in the mailing of Christmas cards under the 5 cent postage rate, which might be an illustration of the law of diminishing returns, is the minister now reappraising the value of this postal rate hike in pursuit of a balanced post office budget?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I too receive Christmas cards. Last night I received one which said "Dear Eric: I think of you with every Christmas card I write". The actual volume of Christmas mail varies with the actual day of the week on which Christmas falls. It is far too early to say there will be a 20 per cent drop, or indeed any drop. It is true that up to the day before yesterday the actual volume that had gone through post offices had dropped. However, Christmas comes in the middle of next week and people may be delaying the mailing of cards.

On the other hand we have other evidence that the actual sale of stamps, including 6 cent stamps, has gone up considerably, while the sale of 5 cent stamps has held even. It is impossible for me to tell at this time what the situation will be. In addition I am quite curious, for example, to compare the results in last November with this November—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think if the minister wishes to go into details he will have to ask leave to return to motions.

Mr. Macquarrie: I have a supplementary question which relates to another possible miscalculation. May I ask the minister if steps are being taken to repair or cure—I don't know which word is correct—the computer which allegedly is responsible for short-changing many of his employees in their pay cheques?

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker, I could answer this question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to call on the hon. member for Edmonton West.

FINANCE

INCREASE IN BANK OF CANADA INTEREST RATE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question is for the Minister of Finance. Was the increase of one half of one per cent in the bank rate announced by the governor of the bank of Canada yesterday tied in in any way with the visit of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States? Were any arrangeements made by the Canadian government and the United States government?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): In no way, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Macquarrie.]

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Finance. Yesterday I directed a question to the Minister of Transport which I have since learned should have been directed to the Minister of Finance. Will the minister inform the house if it is contemplated that the interest rate under the National Housing Act will be increased from the current 8¾ per cent to a new rate of 9¼ per cent?

Mr. Benson: As my hon. friend knows, Mr. Speaker, there are automatic adjustments to the N.H.A. rate, depending on the long term borrowing rate of the government.

TRADE

WHEAT—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS WITH RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Can the minister now inform the house the results of the recent visit to Moscow by officials of the wheat board concerning wheat sales to the Soviet union?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have been advised by the Canadian Wheat Board that they have had preliminary discussions in Moscow concerning the quantities that remain to be purchased by the U.S.S.R. under the long term agreement signed in 1966. These discussions will be resumed shortly.

Mr. Paul Yewchuck (Athabasca): A supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. My question pertains to the announcement made by—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I was rising to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I understand the hon. member for Athabasca has a supplementary question.

Mr. Yewchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was saying that my question pertains to the announcement by the Canadian International Development Agency that Canada is making a gift of wheat to India. Could the hon. gentleman assure the house that India has been consulted and is prepared to receive and will not reject this gift of wheat when it arrives?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

GRAIN

ACREAGE PAYMENTS TO ASSIST IN PURCHASE OF DRYING EQUIPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to get up to date now that both the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Agriculture, these peripatetic ministers of the government, are present in the chamber. May I ask the minister of trade and commerce whether, in view of the fact that it is estimated that the cost of drying some 300 million bushels of wheat will be approximately $30 million and that only one third of the damp wheat will be dried by May 1 unless action is taken, consideration is being given to the provision of something in the nature of acreage payments, so that the farmers will be able to finance themselves, in part, to purchase these $10,000 machines?

On the other hand—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, we see these ministers so seldom that naturally there is an accumulation of questions. Possibly the minister would be able to give the house something today other than a smile, so the western farmers will know what the government is planning to do.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, several policies have been announced which, I suggest to the right hon. gentleman, are far more effective in getting grain dried than would be acreage payments —for example, doubling cash advances, and doubling the capacity of the grain dryer at the Saskatoon terminal elevator. The co-operation we have had from the grain industry and the provincial departments of agriculture indicates that everything reasonable that can be done is being done.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the minister accept the view that at the present rate of drying only one third of the wheat that is wet or damp will be dried by May 1? Would the minister also tell the house how many bushels a day are being dried at the elevator now that the capacity of the Saskatoon elevator has been increased?

Mr. Olson: At the present time the capacity at the Saskatoon terminal is about 1,000 bushels an hour, and twice that is 2,000 bushels an hour.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): A supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture. The minister is aware that some of the governments of the prairie provinces have been undertaking a program to assist farmers in the drying of grain on farm or at country elevators. May I ask the minister whether the federal government has any program in mind to assist the provincial governments in any on-farm grain drying efforts?

Mr. Olson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Discussions have been held between officers of my department and the provincial departments of agriculture, and I think also officials of the Canadian Wheat Board, in regard to further assistance that may be useful. These discussions have been going on for a long time. So far as specific proposals are concerned, these have been made known to the various communities. I could go over the list but it is rather long.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON "INDIANS AND THE LAW"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Port Arthur, in his capacity as the real minister of Indian affairs. May I ask him whether before Friday, which appears to be the last day on which we will be here, he will make a statement on motions as to the position of the government with respect to the document "Indians and the Law" which was prepared in August, 1967.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, without accepting the premise contained in the hon. member's comments, I will give that matter consideration.

SUGAR

INQUIRY AS TO SIGNING OF INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. On October 25 he advised the house that the government had accepted the text of a new sugar agreement that had been adopted by the United Nations sugar conference. I should like to ask the minister whether Canada has signed this international sugar agreement.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the cabinet approved the international sugar agreement yesterday, and the signing normally will follow.

TELEVISION

EDMONTON—APPLICATION FOR TEMPORARY EDUCATIONAL BROADCASTING LICENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Secretary of State. Arising from the undertaking of the minister on October 29 to reply before November 30 to the application of the Metropolitan Edmonton Educational Television Association for a temporary broadcasting licence, will the minister say whether a decision has been reached and, if so, what it is and whether it has been communicated to the interested parties?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, unless my memory fails me seriously, I have never promised that a decision would be reached before November 30, if I understood correctly. The dates of the hon. member do not coincide with mine, or else there is an error in the transcription because, according to the calendar we set up, we intend to settle the matter before January 30, if possible.

[English]

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I had a little trouble in getting instant translation of the minister's reply, and I was wondering whether the dates he mentioned were the dates he gave one of his colleagues on the other side of the house who represents one of the other constituencies in Edmonton. I should like to ask a supplementary question. Will the minister say whether one of the problems in reaching a decision is that the government considers MEETA a provincial agency, which would therefore make it ineligible for a broadcasting licence?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: No, Mr. Speaker, under the present circumstances, that objection does not in any way interfere with our plans.

[English]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

APPEARANCE OF SIR OSWALD MOSLEY ON TELEVISION PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barney Danson (York North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. While fully understanding the need for the greatest possible latitude in the preservation of free speech, could the Secretary of State enlighten the house on the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation action which allowed Sir Oswald Mosley to appear on the program "Front Page Challenge" last Monday night to disseminate repugnant propaganda, presumably having paid him to come here to do so?

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

STEPS TO MEET INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the opinions expressed recently in various parts of the country by economists, summed up by the headline in the Globe and Mail for Friday, December 13 which read "Accelerating price rises show pressure of inflation returning"—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member should not make a speech but ask a question.

Mr. Hees: As has been said, Mr. Speaker, you have to give these ministers a lot of background information. My question is this. In view of these facts, does the government intend to continue to rely on the measures contained in the budget to control the rising cost of living and inflation, or can we expect some new initiative to be presented in the near future?

Mr. Speaker: I doubt whether the question should be allowed. It is very general in scope and I would think that in those terms it should not be accepted.

Mr. Hees: Could I put it in more specific terms then. In view of the evidence which has been given recently of the rise in the cost of living, and inflation, does the government intend in the near future to adopt new initiatives to control this situation?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): It is good to hear the hon. member being more specific.

Mr. Hees: It was to get the minister into the act.

Mr. Benson: I think the governor of the Bank of Canada took action yesterday with that in mind.

Mr. Hees: Is that what the government is relying on to stop the rise in the cost of living?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: We shall be watching.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a short day and a short question period. Perhaps we could try to move along.

CRIMINAL CODE

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): My question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Is it the intention to bring in the omnibus bill relating to the Criminal Code before the house adjourns, in view of the fact that the opposition has agreed there will be no debate on the resolution stage?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): The resolution preceding the omnibus bill is now in Votes and Proceedings. It could be called tomorrow if there were unanimous consent to have the resolution passed without debate, in which case the bill could be read the first time and published so that hon. members would see it before the adjournment.

Mr. Woolliams: We still agree, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Do it now.

[Translation]

[Later:]

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I would have liked to put a supplementary question to the hon. Minister of Justice a while ago, but I believe you did not hear me.

Is the minister acquainted with Dr. Serge Mongeau's report against the legalization of abortion?

[English]

HEALTH AND WELFARE

RECALL OF BEADS CONTAINING POISONOUS BEANS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the department made any attempt to have beads made with poisonous tropical beans recalled from sale by trades people?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, the department has done so. We find they have been on sale in Montreal and that they were sold at the exhibition, Man and His World, during the summer. I might say for the information of the house that these beans are a bright, glossy scarlet in colour and that one tip is a deep black. The food and drug directorate has checked many distribution centres and retail outlets in Vancouver, Toronto, Winnipeg, St. John's (N.B.), Halifax and Moncton with negative results. The investigation is being carried on. The beads are known to be lethal if taken.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Has the minister taken steps to warn the people of the danger, through television and other media?

Mr. Munro: We are resorting to every means possible to get this information out to the Canadian people.

GRAIN

STORAGE ON SHIPS AT LAKEHEAD DURING WINTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): May I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. I know this is a short question period, but we have not seen him for five days. What action is being taken to make provision for storage of grain on lake freighters and sea-going freighters at the lakehead during the winter?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I will have to take the question as notice, because several agencies are involved in making arrangements of that kind.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-147

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey): I have a question for the President of the Privy Council in his capacity as leader of the house. In view of the fact that tomorrow the committee on health, welfare and social affairs begins its study of the whole cigarette problem, would the hon. gentleman have the bill which I introduced into the house today referred to that committee for study?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Yes, Mr. Speaker. If we could have unanimous consent perhaps an order could be made:

That the bill introduced this day by the hon. member for Wellington-Grey be not now read the second time but that the subject matter of the said bill be referred to the standing committee on health, welfare and social affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Is it so ordered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

RURAL DEVELOPMENT

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF CENTRALIZATION AND RESETTLEMENT PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the likelihood that a number of fish plants will close down as a result of government inaction—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McGrath: —will the government reappraise the federal-provincial centralization and resettlement program with a view to deferring action? I am thinking now of a statement the minister made—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member should ask a question, not present an argument. He knows that a question should not provoke debate and should not contain allegations.

Mr. McGrath: May I rephrase my question then. Last night on national television the minister said mistakes had been made in the government's centralization program in Newfoundland. In view of this admission and the serious consequences of government policy for the groundfish industry in Newfoundland, will the minister reappraise this whole centralization program with a view to deferring further action?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): We are constantly reappraising programs—programs which, incidentally, offer record levels of assistance. We are seeking to improve the centralization program, and I am sure this will help the industry as well.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR POLICY STATEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Now that the minister has returned from some three months of junketeering, questioneering and electioneering—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have to again remind hon. members that the purpose of the question period is to seek information, not to provoke debate and argument.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): That is the furthest thought from my mind, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): On the subject of housing, when will the hon. gentleman be in a position to give to parliament and the nation the benefit of his findings in the form of new, positive and constructive policy to provide homes for Canadians?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I am very happy to see this evidence of interest on the part of the hon. member in this serious national problem. I hope it is an indication of unqualified support when I bring in exactly the kind of report he has just described.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether the minister is considering replying to the question now.

[Later:]

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): I rise on a point of order. Since the minister was prevented from giving a reply by members of his own party, could he not be allowed to give his answer, now?

Mr. Hellyer: I was merely about to add that the task force has completed its preliminary consideration of the findings evidence which was presented to it. I am most grateful to the members of the task force for their really outstanding efforts during the last few strenuous weeks. It is hoped we shall be in a position to report to the country during the month of January and that I shall be able to present a report formally to parliament at that time.

So, Mr. Speaker, it is to be hoped that not too long afterwards the government of Canada will be in a position to indicate what action, if any—and I hope there will be—it will take based on the report.

NATIONAL CAPITAL

PROPOSED REPLACEMENT OF PRESENT COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Forestry and Rural Development.

Could he tell us whether the government intends to discuss with the provinces of Quebec and Ontario a proposal for the dissolution of the National Capital Commission and its replacement by a bipartite or tripartite agency?

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the question is really urgent. If the hon. member believes that there is some urgency, I shall allow the hon. minister to answer the question.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

I asked the question because I think that a federal-provincial conference will be held soon and parliament should know the attitude of the government in this matter.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter which is being discussed by the three governments and since the discussions are continuing, I am not in a position to report to the house today.

[English]

AIR TRANSPORT

APPLICATION OF KLM FOR LANDING RIGHTS AT TORONTO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the un-ubiquitous Minister of Transport. Is it a fact that the Air Transport Board has turned down the application of KLM air line to land at Toronto? If so, has this jeopardized the position of Canadian Pacific Airlines with respect to landing rights in the Netherlands?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to direct the hon. gentleman's question to the Canadian Transport Commission.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the reply the Minister of Transport made to my question was that he would refer it to the Air Transport Board. Recently at hearings of the transport committee we were told by the head of the Canadian Transport Commission that treaties regarding landing privileges of air lines were entirely a ministerial responsibility, and he could not answer such questions. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Transport should at least try to find the answer, because the head of the Canadian Transport Commission has told us that he cannot answer these questions.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DANGER FROM U.S. ANTI-BALLISTIC MISSILES NEAR CANADIAN BORDER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In light of the fact that the United States department of defence this week has given a special briefing to congressmen from the Michigan area on the potential placing near Detroit of anti-ballistic missiles armed with hydrogen warheads, does the minister intend to make presentations to the United States government regarding possible dangers to Canadian population centres?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has made a representation to the government.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, and with respect, I submit that the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville not only made a representation but that he did ask a question to which I think the house would like an answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister of external affairs.

Mr. Hellyer: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, did you say "external" or "internal"?

Mr. Bell: Infernal.

Mr. Speaker: The Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the governments of Canada and the United States are in consultation at all times with respect to the defence of North America.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am sorry I raised the point of order. The answer wasn't worth it.

Anti-Dumping Duties

The house resumed from Tuesday, December 17, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-146, respecting the imposition of anti-dumping duty—Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) for Mr. Benson—Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of the whole on Bill C-146, an act respecting the imposition of anti-dumping duty. When the committee rose last evening clause 19, with an amendment, was under consideration. I shall reread the amendment which was moved by the hon. member for Edmonton West:

That clause 19(1) be amended by deleting all the words after "the" in line 31 and by adding the words "date of the publication of the decision in the Canada Gazette".

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, after the house rose yesterday evening I asked the officials of the departments concerned to give very careful consideration to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Edmonton West, and very careful consideration has been given to it. As I said yesterday evening, it is a question of some difference of opinion, not on ways but on means, since there is no doubt the government wishes to give full opportunity for the lodging of appeals under the provisions of clause 19 to those who are interested in doing so.

However, it should be noted, Mr. Chairman, that in none of the briefs presented to the standing committee nor in any of the briefs presented to the interdepartmental committee under the chairmanship of Mr. Glass was there any complaint made by either importers, exporters or manufacturers, about the time or method of filing notice of appeal under clause 19. In other words, those who would be concerned with the provisions of clause 19 did not appear to foresee the possible difficulties that were foreseen by the hon. member who moved the amendment.

I should also like to draw to the attention of the hon. member that the clause seems to cover appeals from two kinds of decisions of the deputy minister, those under clause 17(1) and those under clause 18(4). I am advised it is only for those decisions under clause 17(1) that there must be publication of the decision in the Canada Gazette. Therefore the method proposed by the hon. member would not, in my respectful opinion and submission, achieve the aim he has in mind.

I might add one or two other points because I want to demonstrate that serious consideration is being and has been given to the points he has raised. If there continues to be difference of opinion, it is not because of any difference of aims with respect to the wide provision of notice of appeal.

As I was saying, Mr. Chairman, this subclause relates to imports, in other words the individual entry of goods, after an order or finding of a tribunal that there has been injury caused by dumping, and it is considered to be quite different in scope from the "determination" of the deputy minister under clause 17(1). It is at this point in the scheme of legislation that the change is made from looking at the dumping of a series of imports to levying the duty entry by entry, while clause 18(4) relates to the liability for duty on a particular entry after a finding of injury.

The appeal scheme to which I have made reference, from customs appraisers to the deputy minister and then to the Tariff Board, which is proposed here, is a precise parallel to the provisions in the Customs Act. In the committee hearings no one proposed that the deputy minister's determinations on individual entries be made public because generally these provisions are considered by business communities to be of a fair and reasonable nature. It might also be argued that further publicity at this stage, before an importer may decide to appeal to the Tariff Board, might be considered by some as a harassment and deterrent to the use of appeal.

It could also be argued that from the export point of view publicity of this sort might have some inhibition on exports and we would not wish to see this kind of publicity given in our export markets. To conclude, Mr. Chairman, it is obvious that we are moving into a complex new area of administration in which procedural questions and rules are vital.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Accordingly I might inform the hon. member and other interested members of the house that the government would be prepared to undertake a comprehensive review of the procedures under the act and the regulations, upon the occasion of the tabling in the house of the first report of the tribunal, which would be made possible by one of the changes in the bill recommended by the standing committee. At that time it would be possible to provide an occasion for the discussion of the provisions, if such should be deemed necessary. I would suggest to the hon. member that he may wish to accept this suggestion in lieu of his amendment; otherwise, I regret that I do not have the authority to accede to his amendment. If he wishes to proceed I would ask the house to vote.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Having heard the parliamentary secretary I am all the more convinced I am right. However, since it is obvious that the amendment will not carry, I will withdraw it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): However, if hon. members so wish we can put forward the amendment.

The Chairman: Does the hon. member have leave to withdraw his amendment?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I do not withdraw the amendment. Put the question.

Amendment (Mr. Lambert) negatived: yeas 56; nays 95.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 20 agreed to.

On clause 21—Tribunal established.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, this has to do with the setting up of a tribunal of five men, and it is something new. This is the first time this has ever been done. In subclause (4) it says that the members of the tribunal would hold office until they attain the age of 75. I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary whether the government would not consider reducing that age from 75 to 70. We do not want to have a group of old retired men on that tribunal. We want young, aggressive, active men who are interested in industry and commerce and who understand what the tribunal is supposed to do.

An hon. Member: The age is 70 now.

Mr. Hales: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman. I meant to suggest that it be reduced to 65 years of age.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether perhaps we should have a consultation on this with the former leader of the hon. member's party. He might have some views concerning the vigour of people who are 70 years of age. I certainly do not disagree with the general point he has expressed. I would suggest, however, that there are many people who feel that one can be quite vigorous even at the age of 70.

Mr. Hales: Subclause 7 of clause 21 states:

> Each member shall devote the whole of his time to the performance of his duties under this act and shall not accept or hold any office or employment inconsistent with his duties and functions under this act.

Does this mean that a member of the tribunal may be a shareholder of some large corporation or that he may be the vice president of such a corporation? If so, there is no control here. He could be a shareholder of many companies, and therefore would have a conflict of interests. Such a person could be acting as a member of the tribunal when it was hearing a case involving a company of which he might be a large shareholder. I think this is a matter which should be taken care of in subclause 7. Apparently it is not.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member again has raised a useful point. I am informed that this wording is exactly the same as that found in the legislation creating similar independent tribunals, such as the National Energy Board and the Immigration Appeal Board. I would presume it is contemplated that people holding such positions would not hold other appointments or act in ways inconsistent with the terms of their appointment to the tribunal.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, I am afraid I cannot accept that explanation because the situation in respect of the immigration appeal board is entirely different. This tribunal will hear cases concerning businesses where money is involved. One of the members of this tribunal could be a principal shareholder in a corporation. It would be improper for him to sit on that tribunal when the tribunal might be considering a case that would involve his own company. I do not care what the wording is in respect of other acts. This is an entirely new bill and an entirely new tribunal. If the parliamentary secretary is not agreeable to making a change to cover this situation, then I am prepared to move an amendment.

Mr. Gray: I might again point out that I am informed exactly the same type of wording is found in the act which sets up the National Energy Board. This is a board which deals with business interests. I have not heard of any difficulty of the type raised by the hon. member having been found to exist in respect of that board. I do not disagree with the validity of his expressed concern, but I would suggest that the point he has raised is covered in another portion of clause 21. I would refer him to subclause 2 of clause 21 which states:

> Subject to subsections (3) and (4), each member shall hold office during good behaviour for a period of seven years, but may be removed at any time by the governor in council for cause.

It would seem to me that if circumstances or situations of conflict of interest of the type referred to by the hon. member should be found to exist, this would be the type of thing that could be looked upon as a reason for removal from office for cause.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, I would inform the parliamentary secretary now that when these five members of the tribunal are appointed I shall place a question on the order paper asking about the shares they hold and in what companies they hold them.

Mr. Saltsman: The hon. member for Wellington raised a very important point about any conflict of interest that might arise. I think the parliamentary secretary referred to clause 21(2), and especially to the words "shall hold office". It seems to me that we are not talking about dismissing a member from this tribunal because he may have some shares or interest in a corporation. In a society like ours that is a fairly widespread situation. We ought to make sure, through this legislation, that if a conflict of interest does arise, a declaration about such conflict shall be mandatory. In other words, where a person does become involved with any conflict of interest he ought to absent himself from deliberations in the particular case then before the tribunal. Of course the conflict of interest may arise in any number of ways. I think therefore that the question raised, to make sure that this legislation is satisfactory from the point of view of avoiding any conflict of interest, is legitimate, and I hope the parliamentary secretary can assure us that the danger of conflict of interest is provided for.

Mr. Benjamin: I too am concerned about the tribunal, Mr. Chairman. Yesterday the parliamentary secretary told the committee that the tribunal would decide on matters of injury and that the deputy minister of national revenue would decide on matters concerning dumping. It seems to me that great care will have to be taken in selecting the people who are to sit on the tribunal. We must make sure that they are not only from the textile or steel industry. Naturally, if the members were from those industries they might find a great many cases of injury—some of them no doubt beneficial to the rest of the country. Quite often I have difficulty in feeling sympathy for the Steel Company of Canada, which is crying all the way to the bank. In appointing members to sit on this tribunal, will the government give consideration to selecting people from the various areas of our society? For instance, we might have someone from a consumer association, someone from the agricultural industry, someone from the trade union movement and a couple of others, probably, from other industries. Will the selection of members of the tribunal be spread over all sections of our society?

Mr. Gray: I can deal first with the question raised by the hon. member who has just spoken. That is exactly the approach which is going to be taken in making the appointments. An attempt will be made to appoint people with a great breadth and diversity of background and to take into account the useful point the hon. member has made.

With respect to the comments of the hon. member for Waterloo, it seems to me that the place to take steps to avoid possible problems of conflict of interest is at the time of the nomination of the people who will sit on the tribunal. I will make a further suggestion, and that is that with respect to questions of absenting oneself from voting, and so on, this might be taken care of in the rules of the tribunal which will govern these procedures.

Mr. Saltsman: I would like to believe that it is possible for all conflicts of interest to be detected when a member is appointed to the tribunal, but I do not see how that can be done. Surely no one is suggesting that every single asset in an individual's possession will be scrutinized before that individual is appointed. Surely the members of the tribunal will not have to declare every asset they acquire or every piece of stock they buy while they are members of the tribunal. I do not think that has been the practice in the past, and unless the government is saying that it intends to institute such a practice with the members of the tribunal I do not see how we can be assured of any satisfactory answer to the question we have raised.

Mr. Gray: It seems to me that the most significant part of the hon. member's remarks with respect to making decisions or taking part in deliberations of the tribunal where there might be a possibility of conflict of interest, was perhaps where the hon. member indicated that a group might appear before the tribunal and one of its members might have been previously linked with that group in some way. Perhaps it might be a federation of agriculture or some labour movement—it need not necessarily be a matter of ownership. It seems to me that the best way to take care of that, because this is one of a number of matters linked with procedure which are important, would be to have the matter set forth and specified under the rules of the tribunal. It will be noted that in a later clause of the bill it will be proposed that the rules of the tribunal are to be subject to approval by the governor in council. This is something that I think the government should take into consideration when the question of the rules is being dealt with.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, before proceeding further I wonder if we might stand this clause for a moment, so that I might discuss something with the hon. member for Wellington. I wish to see if he would like to propose an amendment. If not I should like to move an amendment which the parliamentary secretary might consider.

The Chairman: Before putting the question to the committee I think it might be wise to allow the questions of other hon. members. Then I shall put the question as to whether or not this clause is to stand.

Mr. Danson: Mr. Chairman, I wish to comment on the remarks of the hon. member for Regina Lake Centre. A few minutes ago he said that he could not really feel sorry for the Steel Company of Canada, which is crying all the way to the bank. Well, we are dealing with a business proposition here, and although I have some very good friends on the other side of the house, whom I regard highly, I cannot understand the type of thinking that seems to prevail over there, that it is immoral to make a profit. I suggest that the greater immorality is for there to be no profit.

I think I said that in the committee, when the Steel Company appeared before us, and I think the hon. member for Waterloo heard me. When the company appeared before us it clearly represented the healthiest industry of the lot. Here was an industry making profits to pay the employees the highest wages in Canada, wages comparable with those paid in the United States and in many cases higher than those paid there; here is a company that is entirely healthy, that is a wholly owned Canadian industry, and hon. members of the party to which the hon. member for Waterloo belongs think there is something immoral about profits. I was impressed by the fact that here was a company which did not have to go outside Canada in order to make any of its decisions; here was a company making decisions which were based on the interests of the economy of this country—it was a most impressive group. Yet hon. members opposite persist in their thinking. That type of thinking, in the face of the reinvestment in plant this industry engages in, in the face of its advancing technology and in the face of its ability to pay its workers high wages, is the most ridiculous sort of thinking I have ever heard.

I thought I should bring this to the attention of the hon. member. His group has talked a lot about Canadian ownership of our industries. Yet, because this industry is successful, it is criticized for being successful. That is an unfair criticism of an industry of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Benjamin: I hope the hon. member who has just spoken will read in tomorrow's Hansard, the remarks I have just made. He will get my point.

May I ask the parliamentary secretary whether this bill contemplates the appointment of the deputy minister to this tribunal? If not, will this be contemplated by the government?

Mr. Gray: Is the hon. member asking whether a person can be on the tribunal and be the deputy minister at the same time?

Mr. Benjamin: Yes.

Mr. Gray: That is not possible under the terms of the proposed legislation. The bill specifies that each member of the tribunal shall devote the whole of his time to the performance of duties under this act, and so on. I do not see how the deputy minister of national revenue could devote the whole of his time to duties as a member of the tribunal, and at the same time be able to carry out the heavy responsibilities placed upon him not only under this act but under the Customs Act and the Customs Tariff Act.

• (4:00 p.m.)

The Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Waterloo did request that this clause be allowed to stand. Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member still is of that disposition, I certainly would not object.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that clause 21 stand?

Mr. Hales: I am ready to move the amendment, Mr. Chairman. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Waterloo:

That in clause 21, subclause 7, line 33, following the word "functions" insert the words "and shall declare any conflicts of interest in any proceedings"—

Mr. Saltsman: I have a question for the hon. member for Wellington, Mr. Chairman. Are there three additional words to be added to those of the amendment? In other words, are the words "under this act" to be added at the end of the subclause?

Mr. Hales: They are already there.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, I have a few words to say before proceeding to the vote on this amendment. I hope the parliamentary secretary will consider accepting the amendment on behalf of the government or asking that the clause stand while he considers the possibility of accepting it. I ask this because I think a rather important amendment has been put forth by the hon. member for Wellington. It may be the first time such a provision has been inserted in an act, but I think it is a most useful addition to the act and one that clearly states, I would think, the purpose and intent of those of us who are concerned with the legislative process.

Mr. Gray: I think, Mr. Chairman, we have another clause dealing with the French and English terms used with respect to the word "dumping", which has been stood. I will have some comments to make on that matter when we get back to the clause. Because I think the point raised by the hon. member is of significance, I would suggest to the committee that this clause stand as well.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that clause 21 stand?

Clause stands.

Clauses 22 to 24 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 25—Rules.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Chairman, I am also apprehensive of the eventual possibility of conflict of interest and suggest to the committee that this clause is an excellent place in which to insert a provision in this respect.

[Mr. Gray.]

Apparently the clause says that the tribunal may, subject to the approval of the governor in council, make its own rules. This is a rather loose provision. I think the place to make the rules is here. Therefore I suggest that a subclause (c) be inserted reading along these lines:

(c) the eligibility of each individual member of the tribunal to perform his duties pertaining to the matters before the tribunal in the event of a conflict of interest by any member of the tribunal.

I offer this suggestion to the committee for what it is worth. I think it is a sound way of ensuring that there will not at any time be any conflict of interest on the part of the five members of the tribunal.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, is the hon. member moving a formal amendment? If he is not, I would thank him for his suggestion, but would point out that it is customary, when tribunals of this type are set up which are designed to be independent bodies of a judicial nature, that they are given broad powers to make their own rules. I know the hon. member for Edmonton West has some views on this subject and I think he may agree with me that it may or may not be suitable to limit the area of rule-making of the tribunal further than already appears to be done by the proposed clause. Certainly the point raised by the hon. member could well be noted when the time comes to draft the rules.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Chairman, the rules laid down by the tribunal will have to be referred to this committee or the house for approval anyway, so I do not think an amendment is necessary at this time. I do however ask the parliamentary secretary to take note of my suggestion.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I think my colleagues have a good point in principle. The only thing is whether it could be written into the act. That is another question. In any event, it must be pointed out that the rules of procedure of the tribunal are subject to approval by the cabinet. The cabinet already has one check in this regard. Second, it will be seen that these rules have to be tabled in the house and will be subject to the scrutiny of the committee on delegated legislation.

Therefore if the rules are not considered adequate or it is thought they are too broad, this house can make further comment on the matter. I find there are no other acts in which the question of conflict of interest arises. We have the principle in the National Energy Board, which is concerned in much the same sphere, and there is nothing in that act which indicates any conflict of interest. I would think that any member of a tribunal who exposed himself to a conflict of interest would be doing so at his very great peril. Such a provision is never written into an act.

The Chairman: Shall clause 25 carry?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, there is one point I would like to make in regard to clause 25. I ask why in the drafting of subclause 2 the usual practice was not followed that rules be laid on the table of parliament, and that this should be done within 15 days of the making thereof, or if parliament be not then sitting at least within ten sitting days of the next following session. That is a standard drafting. At the time the committee was discussing this question with Mr. R. Grey I felt this wording was all right, but on further reflection I believe what I have suggested is preferable, because in fact this provision could mean a delay of almost a year in the tabling in parliament of any rules made under clause 25 or amendments thereto. I think it would have been wiser to draft the clause as I have suggested, because that is the way it is done in most other legislation. We have had many examples in the explanation of this act, stating that it was done this way in another act; but now we have the reverse. I believe there is a lack of consistency in the draft.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Gray: I am advised that the wording is identical with that used with respect to the tabling of rules in the Exchequer Court Act. If I am not mistaken, it would not prevent the government from tabling the rules sooner if they were then available. It makes only a mandatory statement, and, as I have said follows the procedure for tabling rules, as provided in the Exchequer Court Act.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 26 to 28 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 29—right to appear.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to move an amendment to clause 29 (2) which reads:

> A hearing before the tribunal may at the discretion of the tribunal or the chairman, as the case may be, be heard in camera or in public.

It seems to me that at this time in our history there is very little reason for any tribunal meetings to be held in camera. Increasingly legislation is being introduced calling upon public disclosure of business information, and information from trade unions. I think it would be an important principle to incorporate in this bill. I can foresee very few reasons why this information should not be subject to public scrutiny, and therefore I should like to move the following amendment:

> That clause 29(2) be deleted and the following substituted therefor: "All hearings of the tribunal shall be public".

Mr. Gray: One can have sympathy with the point of view expressed by the hon. member for Waterloo, but I think the answer to the question as to whether this amendment would be acceptable to the committee is contained in subclause 3 of clause 29 which reads:

> Where evidence or information that is in its nature confidential, relating to the business or affairs of any person, firm or corporation, is given or elicited in the course of any hearing before the tribunal, the evidence or information shall not be made public in such a manner as to be available for the use of any business competitor or rival of the person, firm or corporation.

First of all, I do not know how we can agree to the hon. member's amendment to the clause and at the same time continue to have subclause 3 of the clause, because they are in conflict with each other. Secondly, and perhaps most important, I think it is clear that there are quite legitimate circumstances when information would be disclosed in these hearings which would be of great benefit to competitors of the firm involved, I think those involved in the hearings could have quite legitimate reasons, as is implied in the proposed subclause 3, for asking that information of this type be maintained on a confidential basis.

Therefore I invite the committee not to accept the amendment moved by the hon. member.

Mr. Saltsman: I recognize the validity of the parliamentary secretary's suggestion about subclause 3 and I am very pleased to add to my amendment the words: "and that subclause 3 be deleted completely."

The argument we have just heard is the same argument that was used before the joint consumer prices committee of the Senate and the House of Commons, when various industries appeared before us and said that any attempt on the part of the committee to obtain information from them would be injurious to them and would be information which competitors might wish to have. Despite the claim made by the witnesses appearing before the committee, the committee in its wisdom decided immediately that none of our meetings would be held in camera, that none of the information that was requested would be considered confidential, and that the committee had the right to call for any information which it felt would serve the public interest or enable us to reach some conclusion. The result was not as disastrous as some people claim. I do not think any competitor picked up information that he did not have before, or that there was any serious claim made on the part of those who testified before the committee that they were injured, or that their competitors took advantage of the situation. I think that this argument is probably greatly overdone in our society and that there are probably very few so-called secrets among business firms that have to be kept close to the chest. Therefore I indicate my willingness to bring the amendment into harmony with subclause 3 by including in my amendment that subclause 3 be deleted completely.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, first of all I think it should be made clear that the aim of this clause is not to permit those appearing before the tribunal to refuse to give information but rather to encourage information to be given to enable the tribunal to carry out its important functions. I think that if the proposal of the hon. member with respect to this clause is accepted, it will make it more difficult for the tribunal to carry out the very important job being given to it, and it is a very vital job dealing with the protection of Canadian industry and the jobs of large numbers of Canadian workers. I suggest to the hon. member that there is a very legitimate case to be made out for the existence of circumstances in which information of value to competitors should be allowed to be kept confidential in hearings of this type. Certainly I think the tribunal should have the discretion which is being given to it by the proposed clause to make up its own mind in this area.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, many representations were made that a degree of confidentiality should be maintained, particularly with respect to the name of the complainant in certain stated instances. This was put before the committee in a number of briefs. With all due respect to the hon. member for Waterloo, I think that what he proposes to do here would negate what has been accepted in previous sections of the act, which was a matter of considerable representation before the committee and of general acceptance to the committee at the time.

Mr. Blair: Mr. Chairman, in considering this clause the house should take into consideration the experience of the Tariff Board which for more than 30 years has conducted inquiries of a similar kind. It has been the practice of the Tariff Board to receive information relating to costs of production, secrets of industrial processes and the like, in confidence without disclosing this information to other parties before the proceedings. This has had a dual benefit. First of all it has encouraged parties coming before the Tariff Board to make a full disclosure of the facts.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Of course, the second benefit is that the Tariff Board has a much better appreciation of the factual situation than if the parties appearing had to "fudge" their presentation in detail in order to avoid the disclosure of important commercial secrets. No one with experience in these matters or in business could possibly agree with the assertion of the hon. member for Waterloo North that there were no trade secrets—

An hon. Member: Waterloo.

Mr. Blair: Pardon me, Waterloo; a famous name in history. Nobody could possibly agree with the hon. member that there are no trade secrets, that the businessmen of this country are not entitled to maintain their cost of production in some reasonable type of confidence, that there is no such thing as competition which makes it necessary. I feel the suggestion the hon. member makes, in trying to couple with his amendment the total deletion of the clause, borders on irresponsibility. It is not something that this parliament would like to countenance.

Mr. Danson: I must agree, Mr. Chairman, with most of what the hon. member for Waterloo has proposed. There are very few secrets that should be held close to the vest, but there are some. This provision was discussed during the committee proceedings at considerable length because we were concerned about this question of disclosure and about secrecy. There was some feeling it may inhibit complainants, and we wanted to make sure that every reasonable protection was given to them. I would be concerned as well about too much secrecy. This whole anti-dumping legislation is dependant upon the spirit in which it is implemented, and the way in which the tribunal functions. If we find, as a matter of fact, the tribunal is taking advantage of this provision then a whole lot of people will be here on our doorstep in Ottawa, and rightfully so.

While I must agree that there are very few things that need to be kept secret, there are some. I think that in order to make the legislation effective at all we must protect those who are prepared to testify. This certainly applies to complainants who do not want to jeopardize their future business position. I believe when the matter was discussed in committee there was unanimous agreement about this need for secrecy being maintained. I would join the hon. member for Waterloo in cautioning against too much secrecy. However, I could not support the amendment because I do not think the legislation would be nearly as effective without that safeguard.

Mr. Benjamin: There have been a great many arguments put forward about the need for secrecy, Mr. Chairman, in relation to obtaining information from complainants. I wonder if there is not some chance—and although many members may not agree with me I suspect there is a great deal of chance—that there will be no means of judging the accuracy of the confidential information given to a board relating to the cost of production or other internal affairs of a given company. How good is this information unless it sees the light of day? It seems to me one of the best ways of judging the accuracy or honesty of figures of this nature is to reveal them to competitors. They will often disprove the accuracy of these figures. Many such incidents have occurred in connection with railway accounting. I should like to see better arguments put forward in opposition to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Waterloo.

I do not believe in practice the tribunal will have sufficient time to thoroughly research and check these confidential figures or other information that may be given relating to the cost of production. It seems to me that both the complainant and the public stand to gain by the removal of this type of secrecy in so far as witnesses are concerned. If there is a good case of injury, these people have nothing to fear from making their figures public. It seems to me they strengthen their case by providing an opportunity for scrutiny.

Mr. Gray: If I might just add a word, I would point out to hon. members that under clause 27 the tribunal is deemed to be a court of record and has very wide powers with relation to the compelling of the production of documents or in respect of the attendance of witnesses. I believe it also has the authority to hire a staff to assist in its deliberations. If I am not mistaken, at the hearing other interested parties are going to be present. I feel we all ought to give proper attention to what the hon. member for Edmonton West said to us concerning the many requests we have had from witnesses before the tribunal for complainants to keep their identity confidential so they could bring forward information freely. While I understand the spirit in which the amendment was proposed, I would ask the committee not to accept it.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Amendment (Mr. Saltsman) negatived: Yeas, 5; nays, 70.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall clause 29 carry?

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 30 to 36 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 37—Surtax in certain conditions.

Mr. Danforth: Some of us, Mr. Chairman, were not privileged to be members of the committee, so may I ask the parliamentary secretary why it was felt necessary to delete the sections of the former act which spelled out the formula for the imposition of value for duty, and change it to a surtax which is left to the discretion of the governor in council? There must have been a reason for this, but I am not aware of it.

Mr. Gray: I think one very important reason, Mr. Chairman, has been reflected in some of the contributions to the debate thus far. In the minds of many there has been some misunderstanding with respect to the difference between dumping, which as I said yesterday has a rather precise meaning in the law of international trade, and emergency action with respect to low cost imports causing injury to Canadian production. This condition was dealt with under section 40A. Now, I believe this Section 40A, was, in effect, to reflect the provisions of article 19 of the GATT.

• (4:30 p.m.)

This authorized the member countries of GATT to take this type of emergency action, even though for example the goods coming into Canada and being sold here at a price that injured Canadian production were not being sold in Canada at a price below that for which the same goods were offered for sale in the country of export. The redrafting of the provisions which were formerly 40(A) and placing them in the Customs Tariff Act quite separate and apart from the anti-dumping legislation, I think serves a very useful purpose in making clear what type of action is being taken.

Second, I think it can be said that the wording proposed follows more closely the provisions of article 19 of GATT. I might say that in spite of the seemingly more detailed nature of the provisions of section 40A, it will be found that it placed a lot of discretion in the hands of the administration, discretion about which complaints have been made in the past. In fact there was some complaint about it during the debate in this house yesterday. Therefore the fact that discretion will remain under the proposed new section 7 does not, in this regard at least, bring about any significant change in the method of administration.

As I pointed out earlier in the debate quoting page 101 of the white paper, and this is also set forth in the explanatory notes of the bill, "the new subsections will replace section 40A (7) of the Customs Act, and in their application will be substantially the same as that subsection."

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 38 and 39 agreed to.

The Chairman: The committee will now turn to clause 21, which was stood.

On clause 21—Tribunal established.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, with respect to the amendment to clause 21 (7), the government has attempted to give further consideration to the amendment that was proposed. While I think one can well be in agreement with the idea underlying the proposed amendment, namely that those serving on the tribunal should not be involved in conflicts of interest, I would suggest, with all due respect to those who prepared it, that the proposed wording is of a rather vague nature and could cause serious difficulties in interpretation.

I suggest that a preferable way to deal with this type of problem would be in the rules of the tribunal, which would have to be approved by the governor in council. I can assure hon. members that the views they have expressed with regard to a risk of a conflict of interest will be carefully noted by the government. Therefore, I invite the committee not to accept this amendment.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Hales) negatived: Yeas, 25; nays, 49.

The Chairman: I delcare the amendment lost.

Clause agreed to.

The Chairman: The committee will now consider clause 1.

On clause 1—Short title.

[Translation]

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, the honourable member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) last night raised a very interesting point with regard to the word "dumping" which has been translated into French in the bill by "sous-évalué", and I want to give him the following explanation.

Since the verb "to dump" does not exist in French, we resort to another word to express the same concept. The Harrap dictionary translates the expression "to dump goods" by "écouler à perte des marchandises". According to that meaning, it follows that the goods would be sold at a loss. That term, however, could not be used to define the word "dumping" which, in the act, applies to goods sold at a price lower than their normal value but not necessarily at a loss. This is why a more specific term had to be selected. It seemed that the word "sous-évalué", which means "below the value", would be more appropriate and would be used in the text of the legislation more readily than the words "marchandises qui font l'objet de dumping".

Therefore, I suggest to the committee to accept the words used in the bill under consideration.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I brought up the matter merely because nowhere in the anti-dumping code have I found the words "sous-évalué" or "sous-évaluation". It is intended to use the word as a verb, as will be noted from page 12 of the white paper, and I quote:

For the purpose of this code, a product is to be considered as being dumped—

I feel that it cannot be done, because in international French, we read the following:

Aux fins d'application du présent code, un produit doit être considéré comme faisant l'objet d'un dumping ...

I have absolutely no objection to the word "dumping", because it is used internationally; but I was wondering why, in Canada, we should innovate by using the word "sous-évalué" which is found nowhere in the international code.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I should like to add a few words. The anti-dumping code is an international agreement of general application. It will be used for domestic legislation in a large number of countries and we should use words that are as specific as possible in our own legislation. That is why those who drafted this bill used the expression "sous-évalué" with a view to being as specific as possible. Therefore, once again, I suggest that the committee accept the use of those words.

Bill reported.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) for Mr. Benson moved the third reading of the bill.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton-West): It is not a question of holding up the bill at all but I want to reiterate from this side of the house the general opinion of all members of the committee as enunciated, particularly, by my hon. friend from Calgary Centre (Mr. Harkness) that the efficacy of this legislation will depend entirely on the efficiency with which it is administered and the speed with which the machinery we are establishing reacts to events.

If this efficiency is not forthcoming, and if the government neglects to take appropriate steps to name a tribunal immediately, appointing to it men of high calibre, the whole purpose of the bill will be frustrated. The tribunal should not be allowed to become a refuge for defeated candidates or the friends of the party opposite. I do not think we should have gone through this bill so diligently, or facilitated its passage through the co-operation of the opposition parties, if this body is to become part of the slough of patronage.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege to act as chairman of the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs when the white book was considered by that committee. I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate and thank sincerely the members of the committee and the personnel of the house for the wonderful co-operation given to me. I would also like to congratulate the various associations for the quality of their submissions to the committee.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

[And order number 38 having been called]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The last I heard from the leader of the house was that we would proceed with the resolution relating to fresh water fish.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The leader of the house has asked me to confirm that with the consent of the various parties in the house the next item on the order of business will be No. 30, the house again in committee of the whole on the resolution introduced by the Minister of Trade and Commerce on the subject of fresh water fish. If that is agreeable, we would call the item I have just referred to.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FISHERIES

ESTABLISHMENT OF FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING CORPORATION

The house resumed from Tuesday, December 3, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Pepin—Mr. Faulkner in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to regulate interprovincial and export trade in freshwater fish and to establish the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation; to provide that the corporation shall conduct its operations on a self-sustaining financial basis without appropriations therefor by Parliament; to provide that the Governor in Council may authorize the Minister of Finance, under certain terms and conditions, to guarantee repayment of loans by banks to the corporation and to make loans to the corporation, the aggregate outstanding of amounts borrowed or loaned not to exceed five million dollars; to provide also for grants to the corporation, out of the consolidated revenue fund, not exceeding in the aggregate of one hundred thousand dollars to enable the Corporation to meet initial operating and establishment expenses; and to provide further for other related and incidental matters—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, may I draw attention to the fact that this was a voluntary agreement, not a compulsory one.

Mr. Crouse: I presume that the Minister without Portfolio who introduced this resolution intends to be here.

An hon. Member: He is just coming from his office.

Mr. Crouse: If this goes on, the opposition will be as confused as the government. At this point I am wondering whether the Minister without Portfolio will have anything further to say. I read his remarks made on December 3 and it appears to me he was cut off before he had time to complete his statement. If he has anything to add we would be pleased to hear him finish his statement, so that the record might be complete. I will await his arrival, if that is the wish of the Chair. Otherwise, I will proceed with my comments.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The Minister without Portfolio, representing the Minister of Trade and Commerce, will be here in a few moments. Listening to what has just been said by the hon. member for South Shore, I note, as he does, that my colleague spoke for only 12 minutes or so and was obviously not able to finish his remarks. If the hon. member would like to begin his speech and yield the floor when the minister arrives, that would be satisfactory to us. Alternatively, if he wishes me to talk about fish until my colleague gets here, I would be glad to do so.

Mr. Stanfield: If this is an example of the type of programming to which we are to be subjected, we don't want to have any more of it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I must say to the Leader of the Opposition that the government was surprised by the degree of cooperation it received from the other side of the house; as a result, we are running ahead of schedule this afternoon. However the Minister without Portfolio is here now, and I yield the floor to him.

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): I am very sorry I could not be here for the whole of the afternoon, the Christmas spirit being so evident in this place. I regret having to absent myself. I came back as soon as I could.

I have only one or two words to add to what I said on this subject previously. It is important that this bill should see the light of day in order that it may be considered not only by members of this house but by interested people throughout the country. I should like to add this to what I said while introducing the resolution some time ago. The responsible federal and provincial ministers have met from time to time, together with representatives from the Northwest Territories, to consider proposals and exchange ideas in the process of their preparation of draft legislation for approval of parliament and the several legislatures concerned.

In their discussions the ministers have emphasized the importance of a smooth transition to a new marketing system. They have agreed that in any event there will be no interruption of the existing trade and industry arrangements before May 1969. At that time, if the necessary legislation has received approval, the processes for changeover might be set in motion in consultation with the interested parties.

Necessary preparations on the part of the industry for its support of the summer fishery of 1969, such as storage of ice and overhaul of boats and motors, should proceed now, with assurance that normal requirements for these will continue.

• (4:50 p.m.)

With respect to short-term financing of fishermen, provision exists in the bill now being placed before parliament for the proposed freshwater fish marketing corporation ultimately to assume this role. In the meantime companies will be aware of the normal needs and capabilities of fishermen who work with them. As in the past this may serve for their guidance in taking what steps are necessary to assure maintenance of production during any phasing in of new marketing arrangements. Mr. Chairman, I think this fish marketing board may do much for the industry and the areas concerned, and I look forward to its early introduction and passage in the house.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Chairman, I listened with interest to the statement made by the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) concerning the government's proposal to establish a freshwater fish marketing corporation as introduced in the house on December 3, and I also listened very carefully to his remarks this afternoon. Since considerable time has passed, some 15 days since he first introduced the resolution, a resolution which is very carefully worded, I believe it would be proper that I put its words on the record. The resolution states:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to regulate interprovincial and export trade in freshwater fish and to establish the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation; to provide that the corporation shall conduct its operations on a self-sustaining financial basis without appropriations therefor by parliament; to provide that the governor in council may authorize the Minister of Finance, under certain terms and conditions, to guarantee repayment of loans by banks to the corporation and to make loans to the corporation, the aggregate outstanding of amounts borrowed or loaned not to exceed five million dollars; to provide also for grants to the corporation, out of the consolidated revenue fund, not exceeding in the aggregate of one hundred thousand dollars to enable the corporation to meet initial operating and establishment expenses; and to provide further for other related and incidental matters.

The dictionary gives one of the meanings of the word expedient as being "more politic than just". I cannot help but wonder if this resolution is more politics than justice, more of a promise than a possibility for the future well being of our inland fishermen. I say this because the list of unfulfilled promises made to our fishermen over the years is quite lengthy. The economic hardships faced by large sections of the fisheries are tragic reminders of the government's attitude toward this important primary industry.

Let us look at some of the promises that have been made by the Liberals in the past. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to read the entire list since it is the wish of many of us to get out of here by Christmas, but I will place a few of their statements pertaining to fisheries on the record.

For example a five day federal-provincial fisheries conference was held in Ottawa on January 20, 21, 22, 23 and 24, 1964, behind closed doors. When it concluded a 1,800 word communique was read by the then minister of fisheries, Mr. Robichaud, to a press conference. It said the future of the Canadian fishing industry is bright if a "progressive program of education, modernization and economic encouragement is adopted." The minister pledged to design a national development program that would bring the Canadian fishermen the same benefits given to Canadian farmers. There were no specific details set out at that time by the minister.

Mr. Stanfield: What was that date?

Mr. Crouse: Those dates, Mr. Chairman, were January 20, 21, 22, 23 and 24 in 1964. The minister pledged to design a national development program that would bring Canadian fishermen the same benefits given to Canadian farmers. There were no specific details set out by the minister but his communique did refer to the general agreement reached with the provinces for improved credit facilities for our fishermen, as well as new research programs, exploration programs and technical training. This communique was hailed as a Magna Carta for the fishermen although it was estimated it would take five or more years to get the whole program developed.

I ask the minister who is piloting this resolution through the house this afternoon if this freshwater fish marketing corporation is to be the Magna Carta for our national fishing industry? If it is, then I say to him that it falls painfully short of the promise made by the former minister of fisheries almost five years ago that a national development program for our fishing industry would be established by this government.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, this resolution sets a bad precedent for it implies that only one section of Canada's fisheries, namely our inland fisheries, is facing economic difficulties and therefore requires additional government planning and control. This resolution ignores the problems of salmon fishermen on the west coast. It ignores the problems of our deep sea fishermen who are faced with low prices for their catch and higher production costs. It does nothing for the thousands of fishermen on the Atlantic coast engaged in the salt cod industry, or for the thousands of our inshore fishermen who daily watch the fleets of other nations grow larger and operate in what should be Canada's territorial seas, taking not only their supplies of fish but in some cases destroying their set nets and traps as well.

In my opinion it is pointless to state that you can segregate the problems of the fishing industry. The minister, in his initial statement, said that inland fish do not compete directly with markets enjoyed by ocean fish. I say to this house that the products of the inland fishing industry must compete in the marketplace with all other forms of protein, including salt water fish. It is only natural therefore, since the entire fishing industry is facing severe marketing difficulties, that the freshwater fishing industry would be similarly affected, but the methods proposed to overcome these difficulties cannot help but cause concern within the entire industry.

When considering a fisheries policy for Canada, or for any section of the industry in Canada, I believe the government should be primarily concerned with the individual fishermen and the impact that any new policy will have upon his way of life, upon his income, and upon his standard of living. We must ask ourselves if this policy will rob him of any of his freedoms, if it will improve his income, or advance his training in new and better methods of participation in the fishing industry.

I realize, as well as any one in this house, that the problems of the fishing industry are many and complex, and I cannot help but wonder whether the federal government, in introducing this resolution, is once again overstepping its boundaries of authority by usurping rights which, under the British North America Act, are vested in the provincial governments. I say this because the fisheries minister stated in his first appearance before the standing committee on fisheries and forestry that the provinces have property rights in non-tidal fisheries. He also stated that while all the regulations governing fisheries are made at Ottawa, the enforcement of the regulations, mostly in the freshwater fisheries, have been undertaken by a number of provincial governments concerned, which have also established agencies to promote the development of the fishing industry within their provinces.

The Chairman: Order, please. It being five o'clock shall I rise—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I do not know what the sense of the committee may be as to whether there is any opportunity of concluding debate on this resolution by six o'clock and allowing the bill to be published, so that members could examine it during the Christmas adjournment. We might consider this, with the consent of hon. members intending to present private members bills at this time.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Chairman, we on this side will agree to carry on until six o'clock.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): But is there any chance, in the hon. member's view of concluding debate by six o'clock?

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Chairman, I am not in a position to state the number of speakers who will participate since, as the minister will agree, there was some confusion as to whether this item would be debated today. Because of that, it has not been possible to discuss this matter with other parties but it is my understanding that since the legislation covers a vast area of Canada many hon. members would wish to express their views, and I would believe that it may not be possible to get this matter through by six o'clock. That is only one man's opinion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, we think it would be desirable for the bill to see the light of day before the assumed Christmas recess, and so we would be willing to take this hour for it. In fact we would be willing to take it in the hope that we might get it through.

The Chairman: Possibly between the time I report progress and Mr. Speaker's resuming the chair there may be a consensus on this matter, and the question could be raised at that time.

Progress reported.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am in the hands of the house, but there was a feeling, perhaps in the hope that the resolution in committee of the whole might be completed this evening, that the debate might continue in committee.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is agreed.

The house resumed consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Pepin—Mr. Faulkner in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to regulate interprovincial and export trade in freshwater fish and to establish the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation; to provide that the Corporation shall conduct its operations on a self-sustaining financial basis without appropriation therefor by Parliament; to provide that the Governor in Council may authorize the Minister of Finance, under certain terms and conditions, to guarantee repayment of loans by banks to the Corporation and to make loans to the Corporation. the aggregate outstanding of amounts borrowed or loaned not to exceed five million dollars; to provide also for grants to the Corporation, out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, not exceeding in the aggregate of one hundred thousand dollars to enable the Corporation to meet initial operating and establishment expenses; and to provide further for other related and incidental matters.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Chairman, as I stated a moment ago to the minister I am unable to verify whether or not we can conclude the debate on this resolution. I believe he understands the reason I am unable to give such an undertaking. However I wish to thank the other members of the committee for having granted permission to continue discussion of the resolution at this time.

Since this resolution proposes to regulate interprovincial and export trade in freshwater fish, one of the first questions that comes to mind is as to whether the federal government obtained agreement with all the provincial governments concerned, before proceeding with this arbitrary legislation which presumes to take over some of the authority now vested in the provincial governments? I believe this question must be answered, in view of the present government's attitude toward existing shared cost programs which eventually will leave the provinces with social care programs which they will have to run and finance by themselves. Will this program operate, as the resolution states, on a self-sustaining financial basis and, if so, how will the individual fisherman benefit from this scheme. It seems to me that at the present time the inland fishermen are overloaded with overhead. Before their catch reaches the consumer, who primarily is in the United States, it must go through the hands of the dealer, the processor, the exporter, the United States importer and, finally, the United States retailer.

With all this overhead is it any wonder that there are no worse pockets of poverty in all Canada than those found in the northern sections of our inland fishery. And now these poor fishermen are to have an additional board which will be supported out of their meagre earnings, because this resolution states that the board is to be self-sustaining. I ask the minister: How do you lighten a man's load by adding to his burden?

Just what is the situation within the freshwater fishing industry in this country? Normally, the supply of freshwater fish in Canada runs between 100 million and 125 million pounds. Its value to an estimated 7,000 fishermen is approximately $8½ million with an export value of $13 million. The most important species in terms of income to the fishermen are whitefish, pickerel, sauger, lake trout, pike, perch, smelt and cisco. The importance of this industry is evident when one compares these figures to the over-all total Canadian production which amounts to two and a half billion pounds, valued to the fishermen at $162 million. For some time many of these inland fishermen have been unable to obtain an income from fishing which would provide them with an adequate standard of living. Some of them have been able to supplement their low income from fishing through taking part time employment, but many freshwater fishermen have no other employment opportunities and consequently are living at subsistence levels. Primarily such conditions exist in northern Ontario, the northern parts of the prairie provinces and the Northwest Territories. In these areas the failure of the freshwater fisheries to support normal living conditions is associated more and more with the Indian and Metis, as more of these people have entered the commercial fisheries in recent years.

The marketing of pike, pickerel, whitefish, sauger and lake trout is of major concern to the 7,000 fishermen, 300 dealers and 35 exporters in the western inland fisheries and in northern Ontario. To add to their problems the incidence of parasite infected whitefish is increasing. This is of concern to everyone, since 70 per cent of the freshwater fish from the Northwest Territories and approximately 50 per cent of the catch in Saskatchewan and Manitoba are whitefish. The presence of the parasite is a major problem to the freshwater fish industry because the United States food and drug administration prohibits the entry of infected whitefish under the food, drug and cosmetics act of 1906. All whitefish entering the United States are therefore subject to inspection and rejected shipments, having suffered considerable deterioration in quality are returned to Canada and are subsequently marketed for a greatly reduced return in the domestic market.

In order to minimize the effect of this action of the Canadian freshwater fishing industry and to determine the amount of infection, the whitefish export inspection regulations were established on March 8, 1951 under the Canadian Fish Inspection Act. Under these regulations inspection is carried out by Canadian inspectors who cut up a number of whitefish from each shipment to determine the incidence of the parasite. However, the fish used as samples are not paid for by the federal government and they represent a loss to the exporters and the fishermen. Unfortunately, even with this Canadian inspection at export points, and their rejection of some 5 per cent of all shipments, a great deal of whitefish continue to be rejected by United States inspectors—something in the order of 15 per cent of all shipments—because the samples used in both countries to determine infection are too small to give consistent results.

It is obvious therefore that there is little ground for confidence on the part of the United States authorities in the methods used by Canadian authorities to determine the rate of infection in whitefish. Since the presence of this parasite and the present system of inspection and re-inspection is without question one of the most important problems affecting any single species in the freshwater fishing industry, I cannot help but wonder why the federal government has not taken action to help solve this problem. Why did not the federal government improve its inspection service at the processing level, where the fish are packed, in the same manner that codfish and saltwater fish are inspected? In this way there would be a greater quality control at the producer level and, since top quality commands top prices in any commodity, part of the freshwater fisherman's problem would be solved.

I would also ask this government why they have not made a formal approach to the United States government requesting them to establish a set of standards for the inspection of whitefish which is mutually satisfactory to both countries. We must know, for example, that a fish which has been graded as "clear" in Canada at the source of production will be accepted as "clear" by the United States food and drug administration inspectors. It seems to me that a set of standards could be adopted which would be universally accepted by both countries and which would help eliminate some of the losses presently borne by the inland fishermen. In fact I submit that this is the course which will have to be followed by the government, regardless of the final method used to market our freshwater fish because quality control at the source is the key to the entire problem.

This action might well be taken under a progressive program of education as was listed in the magna carta put forward by Mr. Robichaud, the former minister of fisheries, in his proposals for the entire industry.

Another factor adding to the low returns received by the freshwater fishermen is the fact that fresh fish spoils quickly unless properly iced or refrigerated. In view of the distance between our major exporters and the importers in New York, Chicago, and Detroit, and the absence of effective quality control in Canada, our exporters are frequently faced with claims of poor quality, with no assurance that such deterioration has in fact taken place and, if it did, whether it occurred prior to arrival or resulted from mismanagement at the hands of the importer. This applies to fish exported in the whole round or in dressed form; but generally speaking it does not apply to fish fillets. At present over 95 per cent of all freshwater fish exports or three quarters of our total Canadian production is exported to the United States. In fact, we are the only foreign supplier in that market and U.S. importers depend on Canadian production for nearly all their requirements of pickerel, pike, sauger, whitefish and lake trout. However, in Chicago and Detroit two out of nine importers handle most of the Canadian shipments from some 35 exporters, which makes these two importers the dominant controllers in the pricing of round or dressed freshwater fish.

After making a study of the freshwater fishing industry and comparing it with the saltwater fishing industry as I know it, I can only conclude that the freshwater fishing industry has not progressed very far from the days of Peter, the great fisherman of Bible days. The supermarkets are today the great retailers for the fishing industry. Canadian exporters generally encounter fewer problems and have a stronger bargaining position when marketing fillets than when selling dressed fish; and today's modern housewife has indicated she prefers fillets to fish in the round or dressed state. Exporters can sell fillets, not to an importer distributor, but direct to a retail chain or large outlet. Since there are a large number of importers of fillets, control over the export of fish in this form is not nearly as concentrated as for round or dressed fish. I would therefore suggest that the government give greater consideration to the services provided to our freshwater fishermen by our exporters and dealers before they concur with the recommendations of the provinces which grant licences to some 93 exporters in our freshwater fishery areas. Exporters and dealers should be requested to upgrade their storage facilities and filleting equipment; and with closer quality control our freshwater fishermen could enjoy a better price for their product.

To ensure that our freshwater fishermen are better informed of the prices paid for their product in our major United States markets, I would also suggest that the federal government use the facilities of the C.B.C. to broadcast a daily fisherman's log through the network of stations covering our inland fishing areas. This would be helpful in keeping dealers and fishermen on their toes and would help to bring about some uniformity of prices paid to our freshwater fishermen who must of necessity carry out their operations in areas separated by vast distances.

There are many other matters I wish to raise which might be helpful to our freshwater fishermen, but I will not do so, since I believe my time is running short. I look at this resolution with mixed feelings. It seems to be a direct contradiction of the fisheries minister's statement made in Boston on October 18, 1968, when he said this:

> I believe in free enterprise, and I believe in the free interplay of supply and demand. I believe that competition is an important discipline in our economic system. And I believe that competition is, itself, the best assurance that the consumer at the market end of the line will get his fish at the lowest possible price. Having said that I must be quick to point out that there are too many obstacles to free enterprise, to free trade, and to the effective marketing of our fishery products. These barriers should be torn down so that all these forces should be free to work for the common good.

I ask the minister of Fisheries what has happened to these high sounding ideals? I am sorry to see that he is not in his seat this afternoon. I realize of course that he may be absent trying to solve some of the problems of our fishing industry at the present time. I ask why he does not assist the fishermen and the freshwater fishing industry in the modernization of its plants and equipment, as promised by his predecessor? Or for that matter, why does he not use the Fisheries Prices Support Act to beef up the prices of those fish which are producing incomes below the poverty line so that "economic encouragement is adopted", as promised by Mr. Robichaud? He also promised improved credit facilities for our fishermen; and this promise, if implemented, would help our freshwater fishermen to get boats and equipment so that they would not be dependant on the fish merchants.

Why has no action been taken by the government on order No. 9, the measure to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, which would help our inland fishermen obtain boats and equipment? This has been on the order paper since parliament opened. With an apparent lack of understanding of our problems on the part of the government no action has been taken on this very vital and necessary piece of legislation. New research programs would help our freshwater fisherman to properly ice and improve the quality of his product. Exploration programs may also clean up some of the pollution of our rivers and lakes which has cut the earnings of our Great Lakes fishermen in half. And technical training could help all our fishermen, both inland and on the coast, in faster and easier methods of catching fish. The promises have been made to our fishermen. They were made to them in 1964 and it is time we saw some action.

I said I looked at this resolution with mixed feelings. I do so because it leaves many questions unanswered. For example, who will appoint the representatives of this corporation; will they be appointed by the federal or by the provincial governments concerned? How many will there be, and how great a load will their salaries and expenses be on the backs of the average freshwater fishermen? How many provinces and areas will be covered? Does the resolution cover the entire great lakes area with its large perch, smelt, bass and cisco landings? If it does not cover the southern part of the great lakes area, including lake Erie, and the marketing corporation principle is sound, why was this area excluded? What effect will this have on our fisheries sales in the U.S. which refused to lower the tariff on yellow perch when it was supported last year by the Fisheries Prices Support Board, at a loss of $523,535.13? If this had been the freshwater fish marketing corporation, who would make up the loss, the government or the fishermen? How are the prices under this corporation to be determined? Who sets the market? Who is the government guesser? What will happen to the plants made redundant by this legislation?

The minister said, as reported at page 3465 of Hansard for December 3:

> The corporation would not be intended to duplicate existing facilities of the industry. It should seek to reduce unnecessary duplication of facilities—

Those are his words.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Chairman, may I have your indulgence, to continue for a minute or so, and finish.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Crouse: I ask the minister, who will buy these plants? Will it be the federal or provincial government? What alternative employment programs are planned for these people who will be thrown out of work?

Since some lakes are far away from the United States market, while others are close at hand, who will absorb the difference in transportation costs—the corporation, the government, or the fisherman?

In view of these concerns and many others, Mr. Chairman, I will reserve my judgment of this resolution until I see the bill, at which time I hope to have something further to say and I hope some of my questions may be answered.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I will keep my comments on this resolution very brief. Our party welcomes this resolution. We are not devoted or doctrinaire adherents of free enterprise—to echo an expression which I think the minister used on December 3. I think this particular form of free enterprise has left many fishermen in destitution and we are all in favour of seeing the corporation set up without delay, in order that it may help in the marketing of the products of the fishermen.

I must confess that I find myself slightly surprised to be discussing the subject of fisheries. I do not pose as an expert, though I am an appreciative consumer. My own constituency of Greenwood in Toronto is an urban constituency and not noted as a fishing centre. Yet it happens to be a fact that in our area there is a prospective fishing industry. We are right on top of a very large body of fresh water, lake Ontario, and I am given to understand that there is a real opportunity to develop a fishing industry through the use of modern methods and modern trawlers, particularly with respect to a fish named shad—and I hope no one will ask me what shad is. I think they have other, more picturesque names for it than shad. But I am told by some of my constituents that there is a very real opportunity for development in this field. This is what makes me ask the question. The hon. member for South Shore asked why, in view of previous promises made, this legislation applied only to freshwater fisheries. I ask, why is it so regionally restricted? I notice that the acting minister when speaking on December 3 said the bill will enable the establishment of board marketing of freshwater fish produced in the prairie provinces, the Northwest Territories and northwestern Ontario.

The resolution itself is not so geographically restricted. I want to know why freshwater fisheries—and there are some—in other sections of the internal waterways of Canada are to be excluded from the benefits of this legislation, if indeed that is the intention. I do not begrudge the benefits of the legislation to people in the prairie provinces, the Northwest Territories and northwestern Ontario. There may be an urgent need there. But why should the legislation be restricted, if indeed this is the case, to these particular geographical areas? I presume that if northern Ontario is to be included, Ontario will be one of the provinces co-operating in the setting up of the corporation. But I still do not understand this limitation and would like to know the reason for it.

I will conclude my remarks by saying we welcome this resolution because it seems to us, without having seen the details of the bill, that it represents a very healthy approach to some of the problems of people who are living under conditions of extreme poverty in this country. It envisages co-operation among the producers, the provincial governments on one side and the federal government on the other. Any illustration of this sort of co-operation among producers and governments both provincial and federal to raise the standards of our people is something that meets with our approval.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, in commenting on the resolution for the introduction of a bill to establish a freshwater fish board with powers to buy fish direct from the fishermen and sell to the ultimate consumer, mainly in the United States, I would say that the bill is the result of the McIvor commission report of 1966, which has since created throughout the industry indecision, indirection and a lack of purpose to the extent that the industry is languishing because almost no capital has been invested in it. This is the situation as far as the processing and transportation of freshwater fish is concerned. Therefore this bill is welcomed because it will put an end to the indecision that for the last three years has plagued the industry.

The fishing industry in my riding borders lakes Winnipegosis and Manitoba. It has provided almost half of Manitoba's freshwater fish. The industry has been active for over 70 years and has provided a livelihood, although a dwindling one, for a number of citizens in that time. Unfortunately, during this time there has been little improvement in the methods of fishing and little upgrading in the output per man-hour. It seems to me that the industry, being small and the fishermen individuals who often operate part time, does not lend itself to large capital investment that would improve the output of high quality fish. Indeed, I am told that other than the introduction of nylon mesh nets there has in the past 40 years been little change in the fishing on lakes Winnipegosis and Manitoba.

The fishermen involved vary from families who over the years have found the industry has provided them with an occupation giving a reasonable standard of living, down to many marginal people who eke out a living on a part time basis. One survey indicates that over half the fishermen are Indians, with many more Metis people, so that in many respects this board could be considered to be a development board with the idea of helping these people to either achieve a better standard of living with increased income or phase out their operations and disperse the fishermen into more gainful occupations which will provide a better income.

Approximately 80 per cent of the fish is sold on international markets, mainly in Chicago, Cleveland and New York. Although the minister has implied that the freshwater fish industry has an almost captive market, it comes into competition with saltwater fish, meats and other animal protein foods, so there is a definite limit to what this product will bring in markets related to other meats. In other words, the price is dependant on the price of other consumer meats in the great American cities where freshwater fish is marketed.

One of the great problems of the industry has been the failure to supply a uniform product to the consumer and the inspection and grading of fish has been inadequate, resulting in wide variations in quality. This has detracted from the saleability of the fish. In this area the government, either provincial or federal, which alone can supply adequate inspection facilities, seems to have been derelict in its duty.

The fish products have been bought by fish companies, which in turn have exported the fish to the United States markets. The fish companies need export licences which are obtainable from the province in which they operate. My understanding is that over half the fish the marketing of which will be affected by this bill comes from Winnipeg. These companies vary a great deal in size, facilities and ability to market fish in the continental U.S. markets. Some companies in Winnipeg—these are limited to four or five—seem to have adequate storage, marketing, processing and transportation facilities and have been able to advance to the fishermen a reasonable amount of money as an initial payment. However, there are other companies with very limited facilities to process, store and export fish and there has been complaint that such companies may operate to drive down the price of fish to the producer. It is hoped that this board will provide a more orderly marketing in the freshwater fish industry.

There has been widespread feeling among fishermen that the fish companies have taken advantage of the economic position of the fisherman and his vulnerability to changes in price and supply, and have made considerable profits at the expense of the fishermen. The fish companies' reply to this complaint is that their profits have not been large and that an examination of their books would not indicate that theirs has been a very lucrative business. Another complaint is that the fish companies have not made any great effort to expand marketing facilities or invest further in processing and storage. The implementation of this bill will at least settle that problem, whether it be that the fish companies should expand further or be taken over by the government.

One of the problems, of course, is that the fish caught are of two main varieties. There are those of the marketable variety bringing a fairly good price on the market, and large quantities of so-called coarse fish that have a very low saleability. Various uses of this coarse fish have been investigated, such as use in conjunction with alfalfa plants etc., but the answer from the processors is that it is quite an expensive method of providing protein, even at the low price which the fish bring to the producer. However, these coarse fish must be removed, along with the saleable varieties, otherwise the lakes would soon produce no fish at all, so in some aspects fishing is necessary in order to keep the good species available. One of the most promising aspects of the statement of the minister is that research will be carried on to attempt to make the lakes more productive, and I feel that in the long run this is an approach that might well make the industry reasonably productive and provide for its people a reasonable level of income.

I should like to point out that marketing boards in the past have been less than successful in many fields. Most marketing boards that have been successful have dealt with commodities such as grain, that is non-perishable, which have relatively few importers or exporters and which can be stored for long periods of time.

Even producer boards which operate in the interest of producers alone have not always fared too well. When there is a marketing problem, the reference of the marketing to a board does not automatically ease the problem or cure it. The seasonal nature of the freshwater fish industry, the low level of the productivity of many of the fishermen, the scattered nature of the various sources of fish, scattered over hundreds of thousands of square miles, and the fact that the fishing industry as a whole is in a serious state, as we well know from listening to the maritime members in this house, coupled with the fact that many of the freshwater fishermen are at a sustenance level, will make the work of this board difficult for some time. The hope is expressed that this board can bring about rationalization, price stability and marketing quality.

I will await this bill with considerable interest to see what ideas the government may have on bringing a reasonable degree of stability to this industry. However, I will withhold my judgment whether or not his marketing board will be successful in raising the level of income of the fishermen who are mainly living at a sustenance level,

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, I think it is in order, in beginning my few remarks on this resolution, to refer to the fact, which is perhaps more important than the resolution itself, that we do not have with us today either the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce or the minister to whom I and my colleagues have posed questions day after day concerning the marketing of fish, namely the Minister of Fisheries or his parliamentary secretary. This perhaps in itself is indicative of an attitude which has pervaded the nation regarding the fishing industry of Canada. We have been asking questions day after day regarding the government's position on fisheries, its policy and its programs. We have had nothing more than shrugs of shoulders and frivolous remarks here and there, a sort of comic relief for the house, when the problem of fisheries is brought before the house for discussion. I think the absence today of the ministers concerned and of other members who should be taking an active interest in fisheries should be brought to the attention of the house because one of the saddest things about our fishing industry is that no one in the Liberal government seems to care very much any longer about what is going on.

In 1963, amazingly enough, the Pearson government during its election campaign made a great statement that the government, if elected, would bring before the house and put before the nation a great program to solve the problems of our fishing industry. Of course, true to the words of the man who became prime minister after the 1963 election, a meeting of the provincial ministers of fisheries was held in 1964 at which a statement was made, which was quoted today by the hon. member for South Shore, that the federal government was going to bring forward a Magna Carta for the fishing industry of Canada. This statement was made by the former minister of fisheries, Mr. Robichaud.

In considering the resolution before the house today we are reminded of the words of the President of the Privy Council spoken on December 3, 1968 as recorded at page 3464 of Hansard. This is what he said:

> I might remind hon. members, Mr. Chairman, that in 1964 a federal-provincial conference established a committee to study this whole question. After this study was made, in 1965 the McIvor commission was appointed to look into the question. The commission agreed largely with the findings of the province of Manitoba, which had also studied the matter and in which province aproximately 40 per cent of the production originates.

I can only conclude that what we are studying here now is the magna carta for the fishing industry of the Canadian nation. Day after day since the house opened in September we have posed questions regarding the government's policy on fisheries. We asked what the government's position was regarding the whole fishing industry of Canada.

Mr. McGrath: They had no policy.

Mr. Lundrigan: I agree with the hon. member that they had no policy. Back in September some of my colleagues asked questions of the Minister of Fisheries who answered that the government was going to make an announcement very shortly on the fishing industry of Canada and on its policy. We have received the same answer day after day. Meanwhile, the industry has gone on the rocks, and now we are faced with a resolution which was brought in the first day the house opened and which is presented to the house for debate only today. I wonder why it has taken so long to come before the house, and yet we are to believe that this is the magna carta for the fishing industry. My great regret is that some of my colleagues who have a great knowledge of the fishing industry were not given the opportunity during the past election—but perhaps they will have it in the next election—to bring their influence to bear in solving many of our problems.

I should like to draw the attention of the house to a remark which was made with regard to the resolution. May I say that if the goals of this resolution are ever to be reached, then nobody can take exception to it. Of course the ideals were enunciated at page 3464 of Hansard, as follows:

> The objectives of this legislation will be a more orderly marketing for the benefit of the whole fishery, and by this means the achievement of higher and more stable prices for the catch; to provide the fishermen with a better share of the market value of their fish; and to expand total sales and over-all production in the fishery.

These ideals, as enunciated in the house on December 3, cannot be taken exception to. I think it is commendable of the government to have such an attitude, but I wonder if this answers all the problems faced by the Canadian fishery. I contend that there is a great contradiction between this statement on the goals of the resolution and a statement contained in the resolution which states that the purpose of the marketing board is:

> —to provide that the corporation shall conduct its operations on a self-sustaining financial basis without appropriations therefor by parliament;

Might I stress the fact that the marketing board is to conduct its operations on a self-sustaining financial basis. I think it is a very important statement.

There is another point which concerns me—and I regret, as I am sure do all hon. members, that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Fisheries are not here to speak on that point. I wonder if it is true that the government has given up its interest in the Canadian fishing industry, which appears to be the case. I am not sure whether this is a result of the government's lack of interest, or of some pressure being put on it from the outside. For example, I remember asking the Minister of Fisheries a question during a committee hearing about two weeks ago to which he replied that a commitment had been made to the United States government that the deficiency payments to the fishing industry would be discontinued at the end of October. There was a further commitment that the government of Canada would not involve itself in any form of assistance to the industry that may be construed as aid or as a subsidy. I am wondering if this is the reason for the inclusion of this definite indication that the industry has to pay its way. I would be delighted if this government could introduce a program indicating the government's desire to put the industry on its legs. Then, if the industry shows it can be self-sustaining we will be satisfied, but that provision should be made before the industry is asked to be self-sustaining. The minister made a similar statement in Boston, and it is included here. He said we were setting up a corporation to help the industry. The first thing the government says, however, is that the industry had better pay its way because the government is not going to give it any assistance.

• (5:40 p.m.)

The minister admits the United States government has not taken issue with this attitude. The U.S. government stated they were going to go along with the commitment that no help would be given the industry, regardless of the situation in which this already disabled industry finds itself. Again we have to look back upon what has happened in the past few months. The federal government was paying the Atlantic fishermen a little assistance on the salt they used for the preservation of their catch. This amounted to $300,000, almost as much as will be spent on the great festivities connected with the opening of the cultural centre in Ottawa. This was the amount of money being paid by the Canadian government to Atlantic fishermen. It was taken away at the beginning of this year. Then we lost the insurance which was being paid for the fishermen. This insurance was taken away on the flimsy excuse that not many people claimed losses, so it did not serve any purpose.

The deficiency payments were cut off as of October 30. These things indicate the way this government has literally given up the ghost on this industry and allowed it to go by the boards. If this is the answer with which the government of Canada is coming up for our fishing industry for the whole country, then I say we are in an extremely sad state of affairs. We are all aware of the many problems the industry faces. Only last Friday evening my colleagues in this party had a chance to present to the Minister of Fisheries the serious state of affairs facing the fishing industry on the Atlantic coast. I am not sure that we convinced him how serious the situation was. This week there was the announcement of a very tragic situation. I think perhaps some hon. members might not agree with this, but one of our biggest fishing industries announced that it was closing. We have lost four fish plants and we will lose another ten on the east coast in another week or so. Four thousand people are out of work right at the moment.

My colleague, the hon. member for St. John's East, as well as other members, rose in the house on the day the announcement was made, to question the Prime Minister. He shrugged his shoulders and said he was unable to pull the answers out of his hip pocket. His ministers were not in the house. We did not get any chance to ask the Minister of Fisheries any questions, nor did we get any satisfactory answers. I am afraid the whole economy of one of our provinces will go by the boards unless the government listens to representations from the Atlantic area. I am sure some members in the house have wondered if the situation were really serious, but I am sure they realize now the serious condition of the industry.

We have a prices support board which came into existence a number of years ago. There was a review of that program and the board was reinstituted in 1952. This prices support board gives the government all the power it needs to take care of the slump in our industry. The government has done nothing. The industry is going on the rocks and we sit by. We are going to wait until tomorrow or next week, but still nothing worth while comes from the government. I am wondering if the government has the intention of trying to beef up the industry, or if it is going to sit by and allow it to go on the rocks. If we do not get action of a general nature in a matter of weeks, we won't have to worry. As I think the hon. member for Bonavista-Trinity said last week, we will not have to solve the problems of the fishing industry but instead we will have the problem of creating a fishing industry, since there will be nothing left.

I am not going to continue any longer. I believe some concepts in the resolution are healthy. I think the expansion of this idea in some directions might be healthy, too. All I am saying is that it grieves me to stand here in the house, having taken up fisheries problems in Canada since 1964, and have to accept this as the Magna Carta of the fishing industry. If this is the Magna Carta of the fishing industry, then God help it.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, we see no basic objection to this resolution, and we are anxious to see the bill. I do notice that the resolution contains a statement that the corporation shall conduct its operations on a self-sustaining financial basis. We are very anxious to look at the bill to see what is meant by that because, as the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate has just said, in our view it is impossible to envisage any segment of the fishing industry of Canada on a self-sustaining basis. The fact is this industry in Canada cannot sustain itself and can only be sustained by means of federal subsidies.

Last night the Minister of Fisheries appeared on national television. I regret that he is unable to be here tonight for this debate. It is further regrettable that his parliamentary secretary is also absent. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is not here, either. In my opinion, the absence of these ministers is characteristic of the arrogance and the contempt that this government shows for the fishing industry of Canada. Surely the Minister of Fisheries must have realized that, bearing in mind the events of the past few days, his presence in the house tonight to debate the resolution on which this bill is founded, dealing as it does with freshwater fish marketing, would be most important.

Last night on television the minister made some extraordinary statements. He referred to the centralization program which is taking place in my province. this is a federal-provincial program whereby the government of Canada and the government of Newfoundland proceed to centralize people from small fishing settlements, and put them in communities where, in the view of the governments, it would be more feasible to provide them with job opportunities. In actual fact, it just makes it more practical to apply welfare, because that is all they are doing, making it simpler to apply welfare by taking people from small fishing settlements and centralizing them in larger settlements.

Referring to this program on television last night, the minister admitted that the government had made some mistakes, that they had moved people in the wrong places. The minister is not talking about cattle, or about boats, or fishing gear, he is talking about human beings. Yet on national television he admitted that the government had moved people in the wrong places, that it had made mistakes but is improving the program. In my view this is another example of the government's callousness and arrogance in dealing with the fishing industry of Canada.

We had a manifestation of the same arrogance a few months ago when the minister cancelled the salt rebate program. Granted, this was an ad hoc program, but the minister cancelled it right in the middle of the fishing season. The obvious question to ask is: Why not wait until the end of the season? The program had been in effect for many years, and its cancellation in the middle of the season brought great hardship to the fishermen on the Atlantic coast.

What alternative program did the government offer the house? They had no alternative. The government were not prepared to say to the house that although they were doing away with the salt rebate program they were implementing another program in its place. "Let them eat cake" is the answer of this government to the fishermen of this country.

On the same television program last night the minister also made the extraordinary statement that there would be additional closing downs of fish plants. In the name of efficiency, he said, more plants would have to close down. He said this in the midst of a developing crisis, four fish plants having already had to close down, two fish plants having had to close down in my constituency during the last two years, and one fish plant having closed down a few months ago in the constituency of the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe. This makes a total of seven closings in the last two years. Yet the minister admits last night on national television that there will be still further shutdowns.

Mr. Marshall: Some Christmas present!

Mr. McGrath: As the hon. member says, some Christmas present to the fishermen of Canada! Some Christmas present to the people of Newfoundland! Some Santa Claus!

A close comparison to this callous inhumanity on the part of the government is the program that the late Mr. Stalin instituted in Russia in the 1930's whereby, in a move to make the Russian agricultural industry more efficient, the administration set out to destroy one million peasants. In a move to make our fishing industry more efficient, this government has set out on a deliberate policy of doing away with the few jobs that do exist today in the fishing industry in Canada. As the minister said last night on national television, there will have to be further shutdowns of fish plants in the interest of efficiency.

What kind of government is this? What kind of heartless ministry is this that could so callously and cold heartedly comment in this way upon the real and human tragedy that is involved? The hon. member opposite who laughs would probably not be so amused by this if he knew some of the statistics that we are aware of. For example, the average income of the Newfoundland fisherman is $1,000 a year.

Mr. Marshall: It will be less after this.

Mr. McGrath: It will be less after this, because it will be nil. These fishermen still have to buy food and pay the same prices paid by people much better endowed. They still have to buy their gear. What is even worse, they have to suffer under a government that does not seem to care about them. "Let them eat cake" is the attitude of the government. Let more plants close down.

The minister admitted that there were a few efficient plants in the maritimes and that he still has great hopes for the industry and that it will become more efficient. Then he said that the government will come up with a program in its own good time. As a matter of fact, he said, if I may paraphrase him: We plan on coming in with a new program in March of next year.

The hon. member who has just taken his seat referred to the Magna Carta of the last government, which was in January, 1964. According to the Ottawa Journal for January 25, 1964, Hon. H. J. Robichaud announced a Magna Carta for fishermen. The fishermen were to be placed on a par with the farmers of Canada. If I may just read part of this article, it commences:

> Winding up five days of closed talks, the federal-provincial fisheries conference came forth Friday with a pledge to design a national development program that would bring Canadian fishermen the same benefits given to farmers.

In 1964 the same government was in power that is in power today. We have a new Minister of Fisheries from the province of British Columbia, of which he boasted last night when saying some disparaging things about the province of Newfoundland, to the effect that we can only suffer by comparison. But still there is no fisheries policy in this country. Where is the Magna Carta of 1964, so much talked of and so much heralded, in the program of the government today? Even the premier of Newfoundland, Mr. Smallwood, was ecstatic about the conference results. According to the article he said there was agreement on all sides for the proposition that the fishing industry should be treated the same as agriculture, and he called it a Magna Carta for the fishing industry.

Today we see seven fish plants having to close down, or in the process of closing down, and the minister announcing on television last night that there will have to be further shutdowns if the industry is to become more efficient. I have one question for the Minister of Fisheries, and I am sorry that he is not here now. What is to become of the Canadian citizens who eke out a living working 50 or 60 hours a week in fish plants and consider themselves blessed to have the opportunity to do so? What will become of them if there are further shutdowns in the industry?

In the Atlantic provinces today this government stands condemned as being without heart, cold and calculating. One can only compare its policy to what happened in Russia in the 1930's.

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

Mr. McGrath: The hon. member says "six o'clock". It looks as though it is the eleventh hour for the fishing industry because it is on the verge of total collapse.

I have one further comment to make. If the government does not realize the seriousness of the situation and what is involved in human terms here, then we will have a crisis in this country that will be unprecedented in its proportions.

Before I resume my seat may I say we are anxious to see the legislation. The freshwater fish industry will be affected by the legislation, and the provincial governments are both involved and anxious to see this bill, as are all of us. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, we have no objection to the resolution passing at this time.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Mr. Chairman, might we fail to see the clock for a moment and with the consent of the committee, if no other hon. members wish to speak, carry the resolution and see the bill?

Mr. Crouse: We on this side are agreed to that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): I think many of the questions asked by hon. members opposite will be answered, or certainly sharpened, by the bill itself, and I look forward to their having the chance to see it. The bill has resulted from many discussions between the provincial governments and the federal government, and of course the report of the McIvor commission.

One hon. member asked whether this was a matter in which the provincial governments had co-operated or were willing to accept. It is indeed something that they want very badly indeed. I may say to the hon. member for Greenwood that the question as to which areas are included under the bill depends largely upon discussions and the indications of interest by the provinces in regard to what can be worked out at this time. This bill and all the discussions connected therewith have had the very close attention of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce as well as the Minister of Fisheries, who unfortunately cannot be here at the moment because both are on urgent government business. I was joining them when I was suddenly and somewhat unexpectedly summoned to deal with this matter.

I thank hon. members for their patience. I should like to express appreciation to the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley and to the hon. member for the Northwest Territories for agreeing to reserve their comments until second reading. I may say I have also discussed this matter with the hon. member for Essex, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries, who is keenly interested in this subject.

A board of the kind proposed could do a great deal to meet the marketing problems of this industry, and the difficulties surrounding its rationalization. It could help to deal with the situation which arises when a number of suppliers are suddenly able to enter the market. I look forward to further debate on the bill and on that occasion I shall try to deal with the sharpened questions asked by hon. members.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Crouse: On division.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt) (for Mr. Pepin) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-148, to regulate interprovincial and export trade in freshwater fish and to establish the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, December 19, 1968

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Ottawa, 19 December 1968

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Gérald Fauteux, puisne judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 19th December, at 5.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Louis-Frémont Trudeau
Brigadier Général
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: Order. A message has been received from the Senate informing this house that the Senate has passed Bill No. C-141, an act to grant Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1969.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MUIR (CAPE BRETON-THE SYDNEYS)—STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON INFLUENZA VACCINE

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir) is rising on a question of privilege. I wish to remind hon. members that according to the rules there should be an hour's written notice to the Chair. The hon. member, however, did send a written notice, and in view of the prevailing Christmas spirit I would think this should satisfy the rules of the house. I gather that the statement is to be of a brief nature.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege to draw attention to the statement by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) on Tuesday, December 17, which can be found at page 4035 of Hansard regarding the Hong Kong influenza vaccine. The minister stated at that time:

> We hope we will have a supply in Canada by mid January.

The fact of the matter is the vaccine is now available for selected cases. The aged and those suffering from certain illnesses have a priority. The vaccine is now being supplied by one of the research-based pharmaceutical organizations in the United States. It is my view that the statement by the minister might well mislead many people who should now be contacting their family doctors for the vaccine into not contacting their doctors until January. It may well be that the minister is today in a position to provide further information to the people. Naturally I hope this is the case. I feel also that the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard), a prominent physician in Canada, should be commended for his knowledge of the circumstances and for initially alerting the house and the country to the situation.

In conclusion I wish to quote from a letter that was forwarded to doctors on December 11 by Merck, Sharp and Dohme of Canada announcing the availability of the vaccine in question. The letter states:

> Due to the limited supply of this product it is recommended that you give treatment priority to those persons with the highest risk of severe complications as a result of influenza.

If the minister needs any further convincing I have here a syringe and the vaccine, if he would like to have a shot.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ST. REGIS INDIANS—MOTION FOR COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the provisions of standing order 42 read:

> A motion may, in case of urgent and pressing necessity previously explained by the mover, be made by unanimous consent of the house without notice having been given under standing order 41.

I hope to take some action under that standing order by asking subsequently for the unanimous consent of the house to present a particular motion and to precede it, as the standing order indicates, by explaining the reason for the motion in a very brief way.

• (2:40 p.m.)

My reason for this arises from the arrest yesterday of more than 40 of the St. Regis people of the Iroquois nation near Cornwall, people who have suffered insouciance and indignities at the hands of the government for many, many years. High honour and high recognition were given to the Indians in the treaty signed between the United States and Great Britain in 1794, commonly known as Jay's treaty, which said that the Indian people had the right to cross the international border without paying customs duty. Perhaps I should read what the treaty says in article 3:

—nor shall Indians passing or repassing with their own proper goods and effects of whatever nature, pay for the same any import or duty whatever. But goods in bales or other large packages unusual among Indians shall not be considered goods belonging bona fide to Indians.

The government of Canada never presented this treaty to parliament for ratification, and as a consequence it has been held to have no force and effect. The Indian people concerned have waited patiently for the government to take some action ever since this decision by the Supreme Court was handed down a dozen years ago. The government also expropriated certain Indian lands in the Cornwall island area. Contingent upon that expropriation was the thought that an agreement would be reached with respect to it, but to date the government has not even had the common courtesy to make efforts toward such an agreement.

As a result of these and many other situations the people at St. Regis finally expressed their indignation yesterday by means of a demonstration which saw more than 40 of them arrested. In addition to these events the mayor of Cornwall is reported to have made a statement to the effect that the city of Cornwall had extended the boundaries of the city a dozen years ago to include Cornwall island; in other words that it is no longer reserve land, and that the people there might expect to receive taxation notices from the city shortly.

On this basis I should like to move:

That it be resolved by the House of Commons that it is urgent and expedient to authorize the standing committee on Indian affairs and northern development to meet forthhwith and proceed as quickly as possible to hear evidence on

[Mr. Howard (Skeena).]

1. The document signed between the governments of the United States of America and Great Britain in 1794, commonly referred to as Jay's treaty, and the effect that this treaty has upon the Indian people as well as the matter of parliamentary action with respect to the treaty.

2. The action of the government of Canada in expropriating certain lands of the people of the St. Regis Indian reserve for any purpose whatever.

3. The relationship between the people of St. Regis and the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority or any other agency, branch or department of government.

4. The matter of the city of Cornwall's claim that the St. Regis reserve has been annexed by that city, and

5. Any other matter which the people of St. Regis deem it advisable to raise with the said committee.

And for the committee to report its findings and recommendations with all convenient speed and dispatch.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members know this motion can be put to the house only if there is unanimous consent; this is by virtue of standing order 42, to which the hon. member for Skeena has referred. I have to ask the house whether there is such agreement.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be put.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED RATIFICATION OF NUCLEAR NON-PROLIFERATION TREATY

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, hon. members will recall that on October 29 I tabled in the house copies of international treaties, agreements or protocols which Canada had signed or acceded to in recent months. Among those treaties was the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

This treaty, which marked an important new step forward in arms control, was endorsed by the great majority of member states at a special session of the United Nations general assembly. It was then opened for signature in Washington, London and Moscow on July 1. Canada signed the treaty in Washington and London on July 23 and in Moscow on July 27. More than 80 nations have now signed the treaty and three, Britain, Nigeria and Ireland, have ratified it. We hope that in due course all the nations of the world will recognize the importance of this treaty and accede to it.

Before the non-proliferation treaty comes into effect 43 states, including the three nuclear powers which have signed it, must deposit ratifications. We understand that the United States Senate will consider the question of ratification in January, and that the Soviet union will then make a decision regarding Russian ratification. As a leading proponent of the treaty and one of the major "near-nuclear" signatories, Canada has an opportunity to provide leadership by demonstrating our faith in the non-proliferation treaty. To do this we must take immediate steps to ensure that we are among the first to ratify. A positive decision by Canada may help to exert a favourable influence on other governments whose early support for the treaty is important to its future effectiveness.

The government therefore proposes to take the necessary action to permit Canadian ratification, if possible before the new year.

I am sure members on both sides of the house support the objectives for which this treaty was negotiated and will welcome the fact that the government of Canada now proposes to take steps to ratify it. I hope there will be opportunities in due course to discuss the treaty in the standing committee on external affairs and defence or when the estimates of the Department of External Affairs are under debate in the house. In order not to delay Canadian ratification, however, we would propose to move forward immediately. For this reason I am taking this opportunity to bring the matter to the attention of the house.

As a member of the 18-nation disarmament commitee Canada played an important role in negotiations during the last seven years which culminated in the presentation at the April, 1968 session of the United Nations general assembly of an agreed draft treaty designed to limit the spread of nuclear weapons. Our support for the principles embodied in this treaty has been unwavering. We continue to believe that without an agreement of this nature there is little prospect of progress toward controlling the dissemination of nuclear weapons or toward general disarmament.

In effect the non-proliferation treaty will prohibit signatory countries not now in possession of nuclear weapons from manufacturing or otherwise acquiring such weapons and devices. It prohibits nuclear powers from transferring nuclear weapons or explosives to non-nuclear weapon states. It requires non-nuclear states to accept international safeguards on their nuclear programs but guarantees their rights to exploit nuclear energy for peaceful purposes and to obtain the benefits of peaceful nuclear explosions.

In my opinion the non-proliferation treaty is a significant contribution to the three basic objectives that guided Canadian participation in the lengthy negotiations that led to its conclusion. First, the treaty will reduce the sense of uncertainty and insecurity which aggravates international tensions, accelerates the arms race and increases the risk of nuclear war. It is thus a contribution toward long term world security. Second, the treaty represents an initial but essential step toward the control and reduction of existing stocks of nuclear weapons. Further steps forward are urgently required, and at this current session of the United Nations general assembly I welcomed indications that the United States and the Soviet union are discussing the initiation of talks on the limitation of strategic nuclear armed missile systems, including anti-ballistic missiles.

Our third objective, that effective international safeguards be applied as widely as possible on all the processes involved in the nuclear field, is enhanced by this treaty. By extending and consolidating international safeguards procedures it should facilitate exchanges and co-operation in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy.

Members of the house will recognize, I am sure, that the full potential of the non-proliferation treaty can be realized only if it is respected and accepted by a very large majority of states. The Canadian decision to ratify will, we hope, play a major part in convincing additional countries of the necessity of bringing this treaty into force at the earliest possible date.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy Royal): Mr. Speaker, obviously any international treaty which has the effect of reducing the spread of nuclear weapons will be welcomed by citizens of this country. When I was listening to the minister I thought of all the cliches that could be applied when news such as this is brought before parliament and before the country, and I have tried to discipline myself not to repeat them. I thought it somewhat of a paradox that two of the earlier countries ratifying the treaty should be the United Kingdom and Nigeria, which have not found a civilized way to end a terrible tragedy. However, that is just a comment in passing.

The announcement by the minister gives all of us in the house an opportunity to recall the special service rendered to the nation and to the world by General E. L. M. Burns who, if newspaper accounts are correct, is about to end his very unique service to this country. It also gives us an opportunity to reflect on the need of a restructured United Nations, as has been eloquently stated to the world by Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I will endeavour not to proliferate words on this particular subject. I think everybody in the house welcomes the announcement that has been made. It is a step forward in the direction of security in the nuclear world. We all know there are many other things that must be done, but we have to take each step as it is available.

We believe this non-proliferation treaty can hardly have its full effect until the present nuclear nations take further steps. First of all there should be a ban on underground testing as well as on testing in the atmosphere. We believe moves should be made toward limiting the means of delivery of the present nuclear powers, and toward diminishing the stockpiles they have at the present time. There is need for greater security and for strengthening the United Nations.

All these steps are necessary if this treaty is to bring the security that is its purpose. But, as I said, we have to take one step at a time, and we welcome the treaty that Canada is to ratify. We will be very happy in the committee of external affairs and national defence to go into the details of this treaty.

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, we are happy to comment the statement that the honourable Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) has just made with regard to nuclear weapons.

I am convinced that the whole world would like to see them disappear and the advancement of nuclear science put to the service of humanity. Nuclear weapons are considered by humanity as destructive weapons when they should be a power of resurrection.

[Mr. Fairweather.]

Many countries of the world are stunned by the destructive power of these weapons knowing full well that they can destroy everything on earth. The peoples of the world have to yield to the will of the four great powers that have nuclear arms.

Mr. Speaker, instead of endeavouring to reduce the proliferation of nuclear arms, we should use all those new technological developments to serve humanity and help the economic development of the world.

AGRICULTURE

HOGS—ANNOUNCEMENT OF CHANGES IN GRADES AND PREMIUMS

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a brief statement about a change in hog premiums. A short time ago I announced changes in the grades and grading of hogs which will take place on December 30, 1968. The present grades of A, B and C will be replaced by an index scale based on the scientific principle of appraising carcass merit on the basis of back fat and weight measurements. Since the pricing policy of meat packers will be based on this premise, the immediate result will be a greater reward from the market place to the producer who sells hogs that yield a relatively high proportion of lean. The long term result will be an increase in the production of higher quality pork of the type the consumer wants.

To provide initial impetus to the attainment of this objective the hog premium is being altered to apply at a higher rate to fewer hogs. Commencing December 30, 1968 and until further notice, there will be paid a premium of $3 per hog carcass with an index of 103 or higher. This will be an increase per carcass from the present $2 premium for grade A carcasses, but as I stated earlier it will apply to a smaller percentage of hogs.

I am pleased to be able to report that this new system of hog carcass appraisal has been developed by representatives of producers and processors along with government officials working in close co-operation.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, the statement by the minister this afternoon with regard to a change in the grading program is very important to the industry concerned. At last the government is taking concrete action that will enable this industry to meet competition and world demand for protein rather than carbohydrates and fat.

The minister stated the long term result will be an increase in the production of higher quality pork. When the minister states that the $3 instead of the former $2 will apply to a smaller percentage of hogs, what he is really saying is that in the years ahead the industry will receive from the government far less by way of payments, and this at a time when the industry needs those payments most.

• (3:00 p.m.)

This is a concrete illustration of what can happen to an industry when the government lacks a long range policy. Within two weeks there will be a change in the payments made to the primary producers, when, had the government announced its intention 18 months or two years ago, it would have enabled the producers to take advantage of this change in the grade system. As it is now, definite hardship will be caused among the producers during the next six months to two years, depending on the particular production engaged in.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, this new grading system has been in the making for some time, and has been exhaustively researched. The federation of agriculture, the processors and so on have all taken part, and I think we will have to see how it works out in practice in the slaughter plants, whether it operates effectively on the production line and does not slow the product as it goes through. It will mean that premiums to some farmers who are now receiving them will be ruled out. Therefore I think the emphasis now will be on top grade hogs and producers of lower grade hogs will not receive any premium.

I think one area that has not been explored and researched in view of the proposals now made in the grade marking of quality hogs before they are passed on to the consumer. I think this top quality grading should be passed on from the farmer-producer to the ultimate consumer, as is the case now with beef. I did make this point in the committee on agriculture and was told that for certain reasons this cannot be done, but I think it can. I do not think any objective examination was made into whether it can be done, and this is a real weakness in this new system. As I say, the main point here is that the quality product be passed on as such from the producer to the consumer.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture about the grading of hogs meets the need to encourage even more the production of higher quality pork.

That policy offers some advantages of course, but it also has some disadvantages, and I think that it will be necessary to proceed by stages in order to prevent too heavy losses for the producers who might produce hogs of a quality inferior to the standards that have just been announced in the house.

However, I ask myself a question which must have crossed the minister's mind and which might even have been discussed, although it was not mentioned in his statement. In view of special conditions in the province of Quebec where the government now pays a premium for grade A hogs, in order to help the producers even more, in view also of the fact that grades A and B will be abolished, will the Quebec government keep on grading hogs in the same way and paying the premium or has some agreement been reached? I presume that the federal Minister of Agriculture and his Quebec counterpart have considered the situation and, at the right moment, we would be happy to hear the minister's explanations.

At all events, it appears to us at first sight that this new policy will promote a higher quality production.

The other day, I heard an hon. member say that he was worried about the fact that farmers were not always concerned with quality. I think that this is a gratuitous assertion because even though it might have been so in the past, in 1968 farmers accept more and more to produce high quality products and meet the consumer needs, provided they are compensated for the quality of their products.

STATISTICS ACT

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO CHANGE TITLE

Mr. Kenneth Robinson (Lakeshore) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-149, to amend the Statistics Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, it is proposed that the long title of the Statistics Act be repealed and the word "Canada" substituted for the word "dominion". The purpose of the bill is to give effect to Canada's status as a nation and remove the anachronism "dominion", once useful but now embarrassing.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CRIMINAL CODE

Mr. Speaker: Government notices of motions: the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I believe there is unanimous consent that we go into committee of the whole today and pass this resolution without debate so the bill can be introduced and given first reading today.

Mr. Speaker: It is suggested that the house go into committee of the whole later this day for this purpose. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee of the whole later this day to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Criminal Code, the Parole Act (inter alia to increase the maximum number of members of the National Parole Board from five to nine), the Penitentiary Act, the Prison and Reformatories Act, and to make certain consequential amendments to the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Tariff and the National Defence Act.

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MEETING OF EDUCATION MINISTERS OF FRENCH SPEAKING COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I presume it is still appropriate to ask the secretary of state a question in this house relating to Canada's policy toward the conference to be held in Niger, even though that policy has now been announced in the other place. I wonder whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs could advise the house, in light of the statement made in the other place yesterday, whether the government of Canada has reached an understanding with the government of the province of Quebec as to the manner in which the province of Quebec will participate in the conference in Niger.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that subject is still under discussion with the province of Quebec.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, are we to assume in light of the statement in the other place yesterday and in light of the minister's statement that no agreement has been reached with the province of Quebec, that the government of Canada is modifying its policy with regard to external relations as adopted and announced in the white paper last spring?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, that assumption is incorrect.

[Later:]

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement of the Prime Minister of Quebec that the province of Quebec would be attending the conference in Niger, I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether the government leader in the other place was in fact stating policy for the government of Canada when he stated that the government of Canada would be represented at the conference in Niger.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I intend to formally answer the invitation of the President of Niger concerning this conference. I expect to send that answer probably today or tomorrow. Until I have done so I would prefer not to tell the house what is in it. If I may give a hint, it would be our intention—and we have already indicated this informally through Senator Martin to the president—to indicate that we hope to attend but we hope also to attend as part of a Canadian delegation which would represent all the French speaking Canadians of all provinces. But the formal answer will be going out in a day or two.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Following the visit of Senator Martin to the President of Niger, was an agreement concluded to the effect that the president would recognize a Canadian delegation made up of representatives of various provinces, or will the Quebec delegation also be recognized by the president?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, as mentioned by the Secretary of State for External Affairs at the beginning of this sitting, it is a matter which is now under negotiation between the Quebec and Ottawa governments. We want to accept the invitation and we also want the representation to be adequate. We hope that we can agree in this matter. That is the position which Senator Martin explained to President Diori. I believe this is also the position taken by the President of Niger, but the official acceptance on our part has not yet been sent.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I should to like to put a further supplementary question.

How can the honourable Prime Minister talk about a Canadian delegation consisting of various provincial representatives if Quebec has not yet expressed the wish to take part in this delegation?

Mr. Speaker: This is an argument and not a question.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: I wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether it would be possible for the Prime Minister to arrange to announce the same policy in the House of Commons and in the other place.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I believe it would be contrary to custom for me to announce government policy in the other place. I would prefer to do it in the House of Commons.

INQUIRY AS TO DIPLOMATIC RECOGNITION OF MAINLAND CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the right honourable Prime Minister.

Does he really intend to announce, within a month, the official recognition of Communist China by Canada?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if there are any announcements to be made, we will choose the time and the hour to do so.

[English]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in that connection may I direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the government giving consideration at this time to the early recognition of communist China? If it is, will the government of the United States also give it recognition? My final question in this connection is, will this house have the opportunity of discussing this matter before such an irrevocable decision is made, that is so fraught with danger to the people of Taiwan?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs: Mr. Speaker, the government has stated its intention of negotiating for the recognition of communist China. Whether we will be successful is quite another matter. I hope that in the committee on external affairs and national defence there will be many expressions of opinion on this question as part of the general foreign policy review before we make our decision.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister once and for all give an assurance that whatever is done in this connection, and it is a difficult problem and has been with us for a long time, the people of Taiwan, having stood for freedom in Asia, will not be sacrificed?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister will not give that assurance. Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister whether he would give that assurance. He has given no indication that he will answer. That indicates the great danger of having this government play with this problem.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I did not rise because you were on your feet and I thought you were considering this a very argumentative question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Sharp: May I say to the house that we recognize the position of Taiwan to be a very sensitive issue. I do not think it would be appropriate at this time to give any such assurances. I believe it is a matter that must be considered most seriously in connection with any decision we may make.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Without assurances all such statements mean nothing.

[Later:]

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is it the intention of the government to establish a diplomatic mission in Taipei?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, there is no change contemplated in the present situation.

Mr. Nesbitt: In that case, Mr. Speaker, could the minister tell us if that is an indication that the government intends to break off relations with Taiwan?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

BRAZIL—REPORTED DETENTION OF CANADIAN PRIEST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has he, or has the government, received a report that a Canadian priest is being detained in Brazil during the recent political upheaval in that country? Has the government any information as to the identity of any Canadian clergyman under arrest in Brazil?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not been informed, but I will make inquiries.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

MEASURES TO DEAL WITH PROBLEMS OF UNDERPRIVILEGED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of his statement a few days ago that the purpose of the government's austerity program is to enable the government to address itself to the problems of all the underprivileged in Canada, can he say what measures to deal with the problems of the underprivileged will be placed before parliament when we meet again in January?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, these programs were dealt with in the speech from the throne. As hon. members know, we have only dealt with less than a dozen measures. There are some 40 left to be dealt with. I think the hon. member could check with the speech from the throne. We hope we will have the kind of rules in the house after we return that will enable us to deal with those programs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Prime Minister if one of the measures that will be placed before parliament in the new year will have to do with housing.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport has indicated, if my memory serves me correctly, that he hopes to table his report in the house sometime in January.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the reply made by the right hon. gentleman. Can he assure us that if we have an improvement in our rules, as we hope, we shall also have an improvement in the type of government we have?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question to the Prime Minister may I ask him to reconsider the erection of the C.B.C. building, which will cost $66 million, so that some of that money could be used for housing?

FINANCE

INCREASE IN BANK OF CANADA INTEREST RATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, my question was intended for the hon. Minister of Finance but, in his absence, I shall direct it to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Can he tell the house whether he approves the hasty policy of the Bank of Canada to increase the interest rate without previously consulting the authorities concerned?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Finance was here yesterday; everyone knows that today he is attending the federal-provincial conference. I believe he answered that question, at least in part, and the member must surely know that the government prefers the Bank of Canada not to act on the orders of the honourable Minister of Finance.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CONSIDERATION OF INCREASE IN MINIMUM WAGES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. On September 13 I asked the minister whether, considering that minimum wages for employees in industries coming under federal jurisdiction had not been increased for some three and a half years, and considering that the cost of living had gone up by nearly 15 per cent in the meantime, the government would consider raising minimum wages in those industries, particularly as an example to provincial governments. He said at that time that this was under consideration.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making a speech; he should ask a question.

Mr. Hees: I had just arrived at that point, Mr. Speaker. My question is this. Since the cost of living has continued to rise in the last three months, I wonder whether the minister and the government will have anything to announce in this regard in the near future.

Mr. Speaker: I think the question as asked is of a very broad nature and very wide in scope. The hon. member is asking the minister to make a very important type of statement which I think should be made on motions.

Mr. Hees: Could I ask the minister if he would make a statement tomorrow on motions on this very important matter?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, tomorrow is not my day in the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, since the minister claims to be a member of the government that says it wants to promote the just society, could he not make a special effort tomorrow on behalf of the poverty-stricken people of this country and come to this house to make a statement in that regard?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps we might go to another question. I doubt whether a supplementary ought to be allowed, but I will recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on a related question.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I will accept your word that I have a related question; I thought it was a supplementary question. May I ask the Minister of Labour if he would like me to give him my Bill No. C-74, which is already drafted and which if passed would raise the minimum wage in all works and industries under federal jurisdiction.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, as I won't be here tomorrow—

Mr. Hees: You could be if you were interested.

Mr. Mackasey: I would like to point out that this hon. gentleman has raised this question many times. His speeches are always uniform in quality, or lack of quality, and always of great interest. The hon. member suggested raising the minimum wage as an example to the provinces. I might point out that the Tory government of Ontario has taken three and one half years to reach the federal level of minimum wages now in effect.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We must see what might happen with another related question. The hon. member for St. John's East.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my related question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It is on the same subject. Will the minister extend the same courtesy to opposition parties in this house that he has extended to provincial finance ministers today in making an advance copy of the white paper on prices and wages available to them? My second question is, will the minister be in the house tomorrow for the tabling of this document?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): To reply in reverse order, Mr. Speaker, I will be in the house tomorrow and will be tabling the white paper on price stability. That I intend to do when we meet at eleven o'clock. The first part of the hon. gentleman's question is not quite correct. If the hon. member will read the statement I propose to make to the minister of finance this afternoon he will see that I have not given them an advance copy of the white paper, and in fact I expressed my apologies that it was not yet ready for them.

Mr. McGrath: I wish to direct a supplementary question to the minister. Will he answer my question? Will he make a copy of the white paper available in advance to opposition spokesmen before tabling it tomorrow?

Mr. Basford: No, Mr. Speaker. The white paper will become available to all hon. members when it is tabled.

Inquiries of the Ministry

VOCATIONAL AND TECHNICAL TRAINING

PAYMENT OF SUBSISTENCE ALLOWANCES DURING HOLIDAY SEASON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, may I address this very seasonal question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, supplementary to those asked earlier in regard to students taking vocational training. Have the minister and his department been able to reach an agreement with British Columbia in order to keep the training schools open at this holiday time and thereby avoid deductions from the students, many of whom are married and are now taking retraining? I am speaking of their Christmas allowance. If he has not, and if there is to be a deduction, will he consider some plan by which the deduction will not be made during Christmas week?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I promised the leader of the New Democratic party that I would give an up to date report on this matter, and I shall do so later this week.

AIR CANADA

SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTE WITH EMPLOYEES ASSOCIATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the large number of people who have plans to travel by air over the holiday period, would the minister say whether the contract with Air Canada employees has been signed or whether it is still outstanding?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as I entered the chamber today at 2.30 I was given a telegram which I would like to read. I think it will be a consolation to all hon. members, not only those on this side of the house. It says:

New contract ratified by the Canadian air lines employees' association.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, because of my normal modesty the rest of the telegram is very embarrassing, so I will paraphrase it. It says "The efforts of you, the Minister of Labour, and your departmental personnel, particularly Mr. McRae and Mr. Wilson, appreciated". It is signed "Hayes, President of the Association".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

GRAIN

WESTLOCK, ALBERTA—SHORTAGE OF BOX CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Since we have been assured many times in this house that there is no shortage of box cars in western Canada, could the minister tell me whether he has had a request from the Federal Grain Company, situated at Westlock, Alberta, concerning the shortage of 36 box cars over the period since November 4 of this year; and has his department taken any steps to see that this shortage is rectified?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not have any personel knowledge of having received this representation; but I would not expect it, because I think if it is orders for cars it would be directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who answers for the wheat board.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture. Would he accept a copy of this letter I have received, and take some steps to see that the railroad company are checked up in this regard, because he has gone on record as saying that there is no problem?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INQUIRY AS TO MEETING WITH SASKATCHEWAN WHEAT POOL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Agriculture has he received a request from officers of the Saskatchewan wheat pool to meet with him? If so, when is this meeting to be held? Further, is he prepared to tell the agricultural industry of any financial assistance the federal government is contemplating in the light of the damp and tough grain situation?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I intend to meet later today with the minister of agriculture from Saskatchewan, and I think some officials from the Saskatchewan wheat pool will also be at the meeting. The meeting was called for earlier today but because of the pressure of other urgent business it had to be postponed until after orders of the day.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR POLICY STATEMENT ON TAXATION COMMISSION REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. However, as this is one of his days off this week I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary. In view of the great concern which is evident among many resource industries in relation to the possibility of stagnating resource development if certain aspects of the Carter report on taxation are implemented, can the minister advise the house when the government will be announcing its policy in this respect?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have some doubt whether the preliminary part of the question is in order, but the parliamentary secretary might be allowed to reply.

Mr. H. E. Gray (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): First, Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the house that the minister is attending to his duties representing the government of Canada at the federal-provincial finance ministers' conference.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gray: Second, I would like to inform the hon. member that I shall be very pleased to bring his question to the personal attention of the minister for his consideration.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance. Can he make available to members of this house the economic forecast that has been made available to the provincial premiers?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to take this matter up with the Minister of Finance to see what could be done in this regard.

RESEARCH

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO UNIVERSITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister say when the house can expect to receive the report of the MacDonald committee, established in the spring of 1967 to study the role of the federal government in support of research in universities?

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether this question is very urgent. It seems this committee was established some time ago, and this is the type of question which normally would be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, if the right hon. Prime Minister won't consider answering that question, could be say whether he will take steps to have the production of the report hastened in order to avoid uncertainty?

Mr. Speaker: That supplementary question should also be placed on the order paper.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

MANITOBA—INVESTIGATION INTO DEATH OF YOUNG GIRL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister received the report on the circumstances surrounding the tragic death of a young Indian girl near Brandon and, if so, will he be reporting on it to the house before the Christmas recess?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe I said I would ask the minister in charge of that department to inquire into it. I have not had any report from him as yet.

CRIMINAL CODE

OPPORTUNITY FOR CONSIDERATION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the opposition has waived its right to debate the resolution stage of the Criminal Code omnibus bill, which we have not yet seen, and because of the size of the bill, will the Minister of Justice assure the house that under whatever rules we may be operating we will have time to debate and examine the bill adequately?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I certainly intend to operate under the rules, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: I should like to congratulate the minister on the way he was able to slide through that answer but my question is, would the minister assure the house that we will have adequate time to debate this bill in which many different matters are brought together in a large package?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I would think, Mr. Speaker, whatever rules are adopted, that certainly at the clause by clause stage, whether in the standing committee or the committee of the whole, there should be a very thorough discussion of the bill.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GREECE—PROPOSED TERMINATION OF MILITARY AID

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the council of Europe has decided to expel the representatives of the Greek regime from its midst and because of the fact that the government of Canada is currently undertaking a review of its foreign policy, does the government in its policy review anticipate looking into the advisability of discontinuing military aid to the present military regime in Greece?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think yesterday or the day before in the house I gave the extent of our military aid to Greece which is very small. Our review does not contemplate study of this particular subject.

Mr. Schreyer: In view of the fact that the present military regime in Greece is almost as monstrous as the Soviet—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should ask his questions?

Mr. Schreyer: I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether the government of Canada in its foreign policy review intends to reconsider its posture relative to the Greek government?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is restating or repeating the question he asked in the first instance.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

[Later:]

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I was surprised, but not altogether—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has the floor for the purpose of asking a question.

Mr. Broadbent: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is, would the Secretary of State for External Affairs think it appropriate for the government of Canada to supply small amounts of military equipment to Russia the next time that country decides to invade another country?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is not acceptable, and unless the minister is rising on another question—

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I should perhaps say that Greece has not invaded any other country.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PROPOSED INQUIRY INTO PROGRAM ON POLLUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. According to a press report today the Canadian Radio-Television Commission will conduct a public inquiry into the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation television program "Air of Death". Would the minister advise the house whether the legislation establishing the C.R.T.C. permits it to conduct such an inquiry.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that the hon. member is asking for a legal interpretation. The question as asked is not in order.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

SUGGESTED CONSIDERATION OF CONFLICT IN NIGERIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right honourable Prime Minister.

In view of the fact that the commonwealth conference of prime ministers to be held next month will provide an exceptional opportunity to discuss the Nigerian problem, does the right honourable Prime Minister intend to place these good offices at the disposal of the government of Nigeria so as to find a quick solution to that fratricidal war through negotiations or dialogue?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well informed people tell me that it is not customary, during such conferences, to raise problems concerning the domestic policy of member countries. Therefore, I doubt that there will be any opportunities to take such a position officially, but I shall take into account the representations of the honourable member, when I participate in, shall we say, friendly meetings with the heads of states in London.

[English]

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Interested as we are in the fact that death is now becoming a domestic problem, is it the policy of the government that Canada will support the United States initiative to bring about a cease fire in Nigeria, and what positive steps has the government of Canada taken recently to this end?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): We have continued what I think is the best policy under the present circumstances, that is, to make ourselves available on request to the two parties if they wish us to act in this capacity. But as the Prime Minister has said, in so far as the commonwealth conference is concerned this is a domestic matter and it could not be raised contrary to the wishes of the Nigerian government which is a member of the commonwealth.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NEGOTIATIONS FOR REMOVAL OF NUCLEAR WARHEADS FROM BOMARC MISSILES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in view of the grandiloquent declaration regarding the danger of proliferation of nuclear arms, in the dissertation given by the minister today, is the government engaged in negotiating out of having nuclear warheads on Bomarcs? What steps are being taken in that direction, because I seem to recall a different viewpoint when this matter was raised five years ago?

Mr. Speaker: Order, Please.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the question of what is a nuclear power is defined in the non-proliferation treaty, and Canada is not a nuclear power.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Are any negotiations going on, as promised on a number of occasions, for removal of the nuclear warheads in order to remove the danger that the minister has spoken of in such glaring terms?

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN VOTE ON RESOLUTION RESPECTING GIBRALTAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. With reference to a recent vote in the United Nations general assembly which called upon the United Kingdom to withdraw from Gibraltar despite the clearly expressed contrary view of Gibraltarians, can the minister advise how the Canadian delegation voted on this intriguing and intrusive resolution?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I will take the question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, may I take the opportunity of answering the question which was put to me earlier about our position on Gibraltar? Canada voted against the resolution calling on Britain to give up Gibraltar.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

HARBOURS

REQUEST FOR REPLIES TO QUESTIONS AS TO REPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Privy Council in his capacity as leader of the house. To paraphrase the words of a famous Canadian, where in Hades is the Minister of Transport? The Department of Labour is represented today—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member should ask a question. I do not think a supplementary question would be in order after his first question.

Mr. Nowlan: I did not think the President of the Privy Council would be ready to reply so quickly. The reason I asked the question in the way I did was that I was prepared to wait until the Minister of Transport came into the house, since this is his roster day. The Minister of Labour certainly shows how he pays attention to the leader and the teacher and follows the roster.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for South Western Nova.

Mr. Nowlan: The Minister without Portfolio was answering for the Minister of Transport and we cannot expect the Minister of Transport in the house. We have not seen him very much. I am asking the Minister without Portfolio whether he can answer today two questions which the Minister of Transport said he would answer, one on the National Harbours Board report which he said on December 4 he would answer the next day, December 5, and the other on the Roberts Bank report which he said he would table not later than the following week, or December 6. We have passed both those dates now. Can we have an answer today regarding both these reports?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister without Portfolio): The Minister of Transport is in Toronto today. I am not certain at what time he left but he is away on important government business. I am sure he has very much in mind the two reports which have been referred to and I will be pleased to bring the hon. member's representations to his attention.

Mr. Nowlan: Can we have a definite answer tomorrow, in view of the fact that something might happen tomorrow or certainly over Christmas, perhaps on Christmas Eve? Something is going to happen on Christmas Eve, but in view of something which might happen tomorrow, could we have an answer?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has asked his question a number of times. He has had the floor now for quite a few minutes—

Mr. Nowlan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, very rarely do I challenge anything the Chair says but yesterday I tried to catch your eye all day. I knew the Minister of Transport was here for a very transient visit; he has been attending very infrequently. Both these reports have been promised, and it would be most informative and educational if they were tabled before the house rises, if it ever does.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION

LAY-OFF OR TRANSFER OF ATLANTIC AREA EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. Is it the intention of the government to transfer to other positions or to other parts of Canada those who are about to be laid off in the Atlantic area from what have been called redundant positions within the Unemployment Insurance Commission?

Mr. Speaker: The question as asked is argumentative. I suggest to the hon. member that it cannot be asked in those terms.

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): On a point of order Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could say a word on this question, which is fallacious, based on an erroneous assumption and might create in the minds of certain people in the Unemployment Insurance Commission the impression that they are about to be dismissed. I repeat what I said the other day. Nobody in the Unemployment Insurance Commission will be laid off until at least six months prior notice has been given.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Comeau: I understood what the minister said the other day. I am asking whether it is intended to transfer certain people within the commission to other positions.

Mr. Mackasey: If they are being transferred to other positions they are not being dismissed.

TRADE

REQUEST FOR POLICY STATEMENT ON CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN FAIRS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, in view of the concern felt about Canadian participation in international trade fairs, particularly in West Germany, the most prosperous nation in western Europe, will the Minister of Industry, trade and Commerce undertake to make a statement on motions indicating his department's policy in this regard?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be easier if I were to write to the hon. member.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR REINSTATEMENT OF DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS ON FROZEN FISH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of last night's announcement by the Newfoundland government that it is taking action which will have the effect of nationalizing four fish plants in Newfoundland, will the government reassess its position and consider reinstating the deficiency payments to the frozen fish industry as requested by the Newfoundland government at recent meetings in Ottawa with the minister and members of his staff?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, we are giving urgent consideration to the program for next year.

Mr. Carter: Is the minister in a position to tell the house what were the results of the meeting held on Monday or Tuesday of this week, and what he has decided to recommend to the government in order to alleviate the serious situation which now exists in Newfoundland?

Mr. Davis: Recommendations are being made, but I am not in a position to announce them at this time.

FARM MACHINERY

IMPROVED SAFETY FEATURES—REPORT OF COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to direct this question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs but since he is out of the house perhaps I could direct it to the Minister of Agriculture. In the light of the report on farm safety recently released by Mr. Donaldson, a researcher with the royal commission on farm machinery, what action does the hon. gentleman intend to take to ensure that farm machinery manufacturers improve the safety features of their products?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we intend to study the report first; I understand it was only released yesterday.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The other day the Minister of Agriculture said he would inform the house when he was going to table the report from the commission studying the farm implement situation.

Mr. Olson: What I said, Mr. Speaker, was that I would ask the commissioner for a report by the end of this year, and I expect I will get a report on some aspects of this study. But I cannot table it until I get it.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PROVISION OF SUMMER EMPLOYMENT FOR UNIVERSITY STUDENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Will the minister confirm that for the first time in history the National Research Council will not be hiring university students next summer?

Mr. Speaker: I doubt whether the question qualifies for this period of our proceedings but perhaps the minister might be allowed to answer it.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to investigate the complaint made by the hon. member.

Mr. Yewchuk: Can the minister tell us whether the government is planning any special program to employ students next summer in the public service as a means of alleviating the serious employment situation?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest that both questions could be answered by way of a statement by the minister on motions.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Before government orders are called, Mr. Speaker, may I say that as has been mentioned several times in the house there is general agreement that the resolution preceding the Criminal Code amendment bill could be passed without debate if it were called at this time. Perhaps the house would be agreeable to making such an order so the bill might receive first reading.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed? Is it so ordered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion for Concurrence in Report

• (3:50 p.m.)

CRIMINAL CODE

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Criminal Code, the Parole Act (inter alia to increase the maximum number of members of the National Parole Board from five to nine), the Penitentiary Act, the Prison and Reformatories Act, and to make certain consequential amendments to the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Tariff and the National Defence Act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. House in committee of the whole on a certain proposed resolution to amend the Criminal Code and to make other consequential changes. Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-150, to amend the Criminal Code, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and to make certain consequential amendments to the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Tariff and the National Defence Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PROCEDURE

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN FOURTH REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

The house resumed, from Monday, December 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Blair that the fourth report of the special committee on procedure of the house, presented to the house on Friday, December 6, be concurred in, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield (p. 3762).

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, when I adjourned the debate on December 16 I was referring to the difficulties that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and some of the members of the government were having in trying to distinguish between the deliberative function of parliament and the investigative function of committees of the house. I dwelt at some length on that subject because I think it is very important and germane to any discussion in this debate. The committees of the house as they are now constituted are by their very nature investigative bodies, whereas this house, constituted as a committee of the whole in committee of supply, is in the main deliberative in its function. I think that is a very important function.

This has been a very useful debate. Even the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault) agrees because in his speech he said it had been a good debate and had proceeded in the best tradition of parliament. We have heard excellent cases put forward by those speaking from both sides on this extremely important and urgent matter of procedure. In the main I think that the views expressed have been responsible. I subscribe to that, as I am sure my colleagues do, 100 per cent.

With regard to responsibility, we have just seen how the house can take its responsibility seriously. This was demonstrated in a move whereby debate at the resolution stage of a very important bill was waived by unanimous consent of the house. Unanimous consent could not have been possible unless the house leaders were in agreement and hon. members were unanimous in respect of that agreement. We have just passed without debate the resolution stage of the important bill to amend the Criminal Code, the so-called omnibus bill, in order that members may have the bill before them to study over the Christmas recess, if indeed there is to be one, and hence make a more useful contribution to the deliberations on that important piece of legislation.

Similarly, last evening we had another example of the house taking its responsibility seriously when we agreed, again by consent and after consultation, to limit debate on the resolution preceding the bill to establish a freshwater fish marketing board. We agreed to limit our debate at the resolution stage with the knowledge that we were giving up an opportunity accorded to us whereby we could have debated at great length the very serious crisis facing the groundfish industry in the Atlantic provinces. As hon. members who were present in the house know, we limited ourselves to a debate of just under two hours, I believe. We completed the resolution stage and now have the bill so that when we reconvene we can get right into the legislation. Those who are interested in the bill, the governments of the prairie provinces and others, will have a chance to see the legislation and appreciate exactly what is entailed in it.

As I have said, Mr. Speaker, this is just another example of what can be accomplished by consultation, agreement, showing good will and being prepared to give a little in discussing the business of the house with the various house leaders of the opposition parties. It is also well worth noting that this important debate on the rules was also adjourned by unanimous consent and after consultation and agreement among the house leaders of the opposition parties and the government house leader. Under our present rules it would not have been possible to adjourn the debate without this agreement. However, hon. members, taking their responsibility seriously as parliamentarians, agreed to forgo the rules whereby this debate would have had to be continued in order that Canada could fulfil an international obligation that the government had undertaken. We did that and considered the legislation dealing with anti-dumping duties. As I say, these are examples of what can be accomplished by agreement.

I have made a brief reference to the fishing industry and the very serious crisis facing that industry in Canada. Just a few weeks ago we were able, by our questions in the house, to get the government house leader to bring on the estimates of the Department of Fisheries. Using that as a vehicle, we were able to have an emergency debate on the very serious problems facing the fishery of the Atlantic provinces. I raise this point because without the committee of supply, without the means to at least be able to consider some of the estimates in the house, a very useful vehicle of debate would be done away with. As a consequence, members of this house who feel it necessary to bring to the attention of the house matters which they consider of great urgency or indeed which may be in the national interest and of great national urgency would not have this traditional opportunity to bring these matters up in the committee of supply during the traditional examination of estimates or in committee of the whole house.

As I said at the outset of my remarks, this type of deliberation is not possible under our present committee system, and if the government has its way and these rules are adopted we will not have the opportunity now accorded to us to bring up, to debate and to make speeches on matters we consider to be of national urgency and in the national interest. As a private member of the house I consider this a matter of great regret because it is a traditional right under our British parliamentary system that members can bring up grievances before granting supply to Her Majesty. This is a traditional and long fought for right of parliament. It is most regrettable that we will lose this tradition and this right and that we will not, in my submission, have the same opportunities in the future, if these rules are adopted, to bring up matters of great importance, great urgency and great emergency.

If these rules are adopted in their present form it is my wish and the wish of many of the hon. members who have participated in this debate that some changes be made in our committee system to make the committees more meaningful, to make them forums which would lend themselves to more meaningful examination of estimates and provide the means whereby this examination can take place. We are now used to having to meet in very limited surroundings. Sometimes committees overlap and one finds oneself having to be in two places at once. We had an instance of this during the present session when I found myself greatly interested in the deliberations of the transport and communications committee, as indeed many members from the Atlantic provinces were. On a particular day that committee was considering the estimates of the National Harbours Board and coincidentally with that meeting the committee on regional development was considering the report of the Atlantic Development Board. I raised a point of order at that time requesting that the chairman of the regional development committee bring this to the attention of the co-ordinating committee to ensure that overlapping is avoided if possible, especially on committees of interest to the same members. It is a well known fact that hon. members from the Atlantic provinces and from the other maritime areas in Canada would be greatly interested in the report of the National Harbours Board and at the same time the same hon. members would be greatly interested in the report of the Atlantic Development Board. This is one of the great weaknesses in the present committee system. It is a matter of great regret if we adopt the rules in their present form and have to refer estimates to the standing committees as they are now constituted.

The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) said that debates on supply estimates tend to be general speech-making events and that most of the discussion takes place on the first item. I do not quarrel with that statement because this is a well known fact. All of the well known authorities on parliament have stated that debate generally tends to take place on the first item because the rule of relevancy is not so strictly applied. Thus hon. members can make far-reaching speeches, examine all aspects of the department and in so doing present their case to the committee, but in order to present their case it is necessary for them to make speeches. I find myself in agreement with the hon. member and I find nothing wrong with this procedure. Again I repeat that if these rules are adopted we will not have the opportunity to present our case in the committees of the house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McGrath: We will be deprived of the opportunity to present arguments building toward the investigation or interrogation of the minister or of the various departments whose estimates we are considering. I looked up one of the noted authorities on parliament, Erskine May, and in his 17th edition at page 765 he says in essence that criticism of departmental administration which usually takes place on the first item is "the real business of supply", that is, the real business of the examination of the estimates. It is the traditional practice and right of parliamentarians before granting supply to present their grievances to the house and thereby to the government and to say: Yes, we will vote you the money but before doing so we will take the opportunity accorded to us under our rules and according to the custom of parliament to present our grievances to the government. As I said, this is neither practical nor possible in the standing committees as they are now constituted.

Speaking of the committees as they are now constituted, one has only to look to the committee on transport and communications. I will not say much about it because the subject matter has been referred by an order of the house to the standing committee on privileges and elections as the result of a question of privilege. But the fact remains that because of the partisan nature of committees and because of the partisanship of the chairmen of committees the committee on transport and communications in presenting its second report to this house deliberately, in my view, left out of its report a very important resolution legally passed and adopted by the committee. One can only conclude that that resolution was left out because it was not palatable to the government. Consequently, this points up the fact that unless our committee system is changed and unless members of the opposition are recognized as having their full rights and responsibilities in the committees as they have in the house in the examination of estimates and the granting of supply, the referring of all the estimates to the committees as they are now constituted is nothing but a farce.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McGrath: If the committees are given real powers, then perhaps a case can be made for a useful examination of estimates. But in saying that I would point out to the house that ours is not the congressional system. Thank God we still operate under the British parliamentary system. One must make that distinction. We do not have the enormous research facilities and the research help accorded to the committees of the United States congress. When we examine estimates in committee and interrogate witnesses in relation to those estimates we have to do the best we can as members of the house in presenting our questions knowing full well that the minister has behind him all the experts and all the substantial resources of the particular department that we happen to be investigating or whose estimates we are examining at the time. In contrast members of the U.S. congress and its committees have substantial resources assigned to them and moneys voted to them for this purpose by the House of Representatives. The committees of the United States congress do substantial work because the members of these committees are well equipped and have huge staffs to enable them to conduct useful interrogation and useful investigation.

• (4:10 p.m.)

I suggest to the government, Mr. Speaker, and those hon. members who speak so highly of depriving us of our traditional right of granting supply in a committee of the whole house and referring all estimates to committees, that they bear in mind the distinct difference between our British parliamentary system and the congressionnal system in the United States. In that regard I commend the useful, very sensible and very moderate suggestion by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) in opening this debate for our party, namely, that we retain at least 20 per cent of the estimates in the house and refer the remainder to committees. In that way we would still have a forum in which we could bring up matters of great urgency to the country.

In his criticism of the committee of supply the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that members did not seek information but rather made speeches. Well, what is wrong with making speeches? What is wrong with having useful debate in this house? The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour spoke of the useful debate we are having now on these important rule changes. How else can we represent our constituencies? How else can we represent our provinces? How else can we usefully represent the country if we are not given the opportunity to present our views in this house?

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister is bored. He does not like speeches. He does not like parliament for that reason. He does not like deliberative speech-making, which is the main reason for the existence of parliament. I say to the Prime Minister. That is too bad. I say to the Prime Minister also that the government which he heads is playing with weapons that are very dangerous to the future of the country. When they start fooling around with the traditional, long fought for rights of parliament, when members are not allowed to make speeches to bring up grievances before granting supply, then they are playing with dangerous weapons. Let the Prime Minister come out and say he wants to amend the constitution and have a congressional system. Why does he not have the courage to say that instead of taking from us our rights in this house on a piecemeal basis and doing away with the very symbols of our British parliamentary system? In my view, if he has his way parliament as we know it will cease to exist and that will be a dark day for this country.

I see the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen) in the house. I hope he is going to participate in this debate because he was one of the most successful house leaders the government has had. I think it is a matter of regret that the hon. gentleman is not still the house leader because we would not have the problems we have today. I say that with great deference to the hon. and sometimes humble President of the Privy Council. The great problem is that he does not seem to be able to trust the other house leaders, and this is why he finds himself in trouble today.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. McGrath: As one hon. member has said, basically his problem is one of communication, although he does not seem to have any trouble communicating with the committee on transport and communications. I believe, as do other hon. members who have participated in this debate, that our rules have to be modified; they have to be reformed. Nobody will quarrel with that statement. Our rules have to be reformed from time to time and brought up to date to make sure that our institution of parliament relates to the needs of the day. Yet I say we should not tinker with the basic rights of members of the house. Generally speaking, I think the proposed changes, especially those in 16-A and the proposal to take all the estimates out of the committee of supply, go far beyond the necessary reforms needed to bring parliament up to date and make it relate to the present day.

In my view, Mr. Speaker, when you take away from this house its deliberative function, when you take away from this house the right of private members to stand up and bring their grievances before the government, you weaken this institution to the point where it will some day disappear before our eyes. When that happens we will probably have government by directive. Let us abolish parliament altogether. Why bother going through first and second readings of bills, the committee stage, and so on? Why not do away with parliament entirely if the Prime Minister does not like it? He has a majority.

Why does the Prime Minister not come out and say: I have no use for this institution, so let us abolish it and have government by directive? This is the kind of government there is in the Soviet countries, in countries where there are dictatorships of either the extreme right or left. This is what we had in my own province of Newfoundland. We had government by directive when our constitution was suspended in 1933. We had a dictatorship imposed upon us by Britain. Our people had no say. We had government by directive, and as a consequence of that we came into confederation 50 years behind the other maritime provinces. This was the result of not having a parliament. Our people had no voice in the affairs of our province. I feel very strongly on this subject because I grew up in Newfoundland not knowing what the institution of parliament was. My people had no vote and they had no parliament to represent them. They had no place to present their grievances except by direct petition to the Queen at Westminster. Now this government is tinkering with the very thing of which we were deprived, our right to stand in this house and present our grievances to the government before granting supply.

Motion for Concurrence in Report

The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton said debates on the estimates tend to be general speeches and most discussion takes place on the first item. As I have said, I do not quarrel with that statement. There should be discussion on the first item. Members of parliament are responsible in their examination of the estimates. They do not want to bog down ministers and departmental officials on each item; they want to present their case before asking their questions. The best opportunity to do this is the debate on the first item.

I hope that the government will be imbued with the spirit of Christmas. I hope that the President of the Privy Council will pretend for a moment that he is Santa Claus and not Ebenezer Scrooge—

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Tiny Tim.

Mr. McGrath: —that he will be a little more conciliatory, that he will be prepared to give slightly and in return the opposition parties will also be prepared to give a little. In that way we will get the rules approved.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member who has just taken his seat for introducing me to the house, and I gladly accept his invitation to participate in this very important debate. I had the honour of being a member of the committee which presented this report during part of its deliberations, and in the last parliament of Canada I had the honour of being the chairman of the special committee that presented a number of reports to parliament, the recommendations contained in which have been incorporated in part in this report that we have been debating. I want to congratulate the members of the committee, especially the chairman, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) for the leadership that he gave the committee, for producing the reports under the rather stringent time schedule that we all wanted to have.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Personally, I believe that the changes that will be made in the rules as a result of the adoption of these reports will strengthen the House of Commons and make the institution more meaningful to the Canadian people. It is because of that view that I support the major conclusions of the report. Indeed, they will make the Canadian House of Commons more British. If the hon. member who has just taken his seat thanks God, as he did, for living under the British parliamentary system, then he ought to encourage his group to do in the Canadian parliament the things that have been done in the British parliament to make it more effective and meaningful.

I was a member of a committee that visited Westminster and conferred with a number of British leaders. The government house leader, Right Hon. Richard Crossman, told us bluntly that we were living under 19th century rules of procedure. He said to us: "You are way back where we were in the last century". That is what the British government house leader told us when we visited that country earlier this year.

What has struck me as a student of the Canadian rules is the inner conservatism of Canadian parliamentarians. All through our existence so far it has been very difficult to get members of parliament to change the rules. This conservatism has been deeply embedded in the mentality of Canadian members of parliament in all parties. What we are now doing in these reports is to take a very big step as a result of having failed over the years to take the many smaller steps that could have been taken to modernize and update our rules.

These changes will strengthen the house in a number of ways. They will give an entirely new status to the standing committees because the standing committees will be entrusted with the detailed examination of the estimates and will also have a new role in the examination of public bills. We cannot manage the committees on the cheap any more as we have in the past. I look to the day when the committee system will be entrusted with even greater responsibilities, when private members of parliament through the committee system will have a greater opportunity to participate in the parliamentary process. This will be good for parliament.

These changes will also give the house a greater opportunity to debate broad policy issues. Under the proposed changes the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) will have an opportunity that a leader of the opposition never has had before in the history of this parliament. He will be able to bring forward policy issues in a series of motions that he can introduce with notice and have debated.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And not only the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. MacEachen: In this instance I am making a special appeal to the Leader of the Opposition. So often have we complained in this house that we do not have an opportunity as much as we would like to debate the great policy issues of the day. But now this will be possible. On the report stage on public bills, also, there will be an opportunity for members to focus attention on amendments and induce debate in a way that has not been possible in the past.

Mr. Dinsdale: Provided you do not cut it off under 16A.

Mr. MacEachen: These debates will strengthen the House of Commons.

In addition, the adoption of these rules will make a great contribution by giving this parliament the image that it so badly needs of order and organization. These rules will be tougher on the government, on any government of Canada—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacEachen: Hon. members may hesitate to accept that, but the order, regularity and programming that are envisaged in these rules will present obligations to a government to plan its legislation in a way that has never been the case before in the Canadian parliament. So on that score hon. members ought to welcome them.

I do not intend to belabour my belief in parliament as a free institution. We had a great example of this the other day in the British house when the views of one million petitioners were presented to the British commons in whisky cartons in regard to the potential disbanding of the Argyle and Sutherland Highlanders regiment. I must say that had I been a member of the British Commons I would have applauded that particular petition, but I do not want to go farther and perhaps be accused of interfering in the internal affairs of another country.

I want to deal specifically with a bald assertion that has been made by the Leader of the Opposition. It is the most important assertion that has been made in this debate either inside or outside the house. In the Globe and Mail for December 17 the Leader of the Opposition is quoted as follows:

> "No government in the free world has the power which is being sought by the Liberal government of Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau through changes in the rules governing the operation of parliament", Opposition Leader Robert Stanfield said yesterday.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacEachen: The Leader of the Opposition said that no government in the free world has the power which the government of Canada is now seeking. That statement is simply inaccurate. The Globe and Mail for December 18, in a story headlined "Liberals Ready To Tarnish Nation To Get Rule Changes, Tory says", has this to say:

> Mr. Stanfield was in Toronto to attend the inaugural meeting of the Toronto Conservative forum . . . created to provide the national leader and the federal caucus with advice on policy matters—

• (4:30 p.m.)

I wish they would activate that group and get some advice about what is happening in the mother of parliaments, the British parliament, the parliament upon which the hon. member for St. John's East has drawn the blessings of God this very afternoon. The government in that parliament has had at its disposal a power not identical in every feature to the power being sought here, because of the various differences in rules, but which in principle is almost exactly similar to the power sought by this rule change, and I will demonstrate this if I do nothing else in this debate. I wish to quote from an article in the Parliamentary Affairs of 1958, since hon. members will regard what it says as more authoritative than a statement from a Liberal minister. It reads as follows:

> When the House of Commons makes an allocation of time order, it may provide that each stage shall close at a stipulated time, or it may allocate a definite number of sittings, of the standing committee or committee of the whole house, as the case may be, to the committee stage, the report stage and the third reading.

Mr. Baldwin: For one measure.

Mr. MacEachen: Exactly. For one measure. The hon. member is quite right. But I will show that it has been used on more than one measure in the British house. That is the precise power that is available to the British government, and to say that no government in the free world has this power is ridiculous and unfair to this debate and unfair to the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacEachen: The article goes on to say:

> Some changes of detail have been made in the application of the timetable procedure since 1945.

Previously time tables had only been applied on the floor of the house. Then they were applied by the labour government to standing committees. The Tory party in opposition opposed that change but when they came into office they perpetuated it and carried it into practice.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. MacEachen: The Leader of the Opposition says, "Why, this is closure in advance, something new and unheard of. No free government has it."

Mr. Stanfield: Right.

Mr. MacEachen: Let us consider what the British do.

Mr. Asselin: But we are Canadians. We are not British.

Mr. MacEachen: Absolutely.

Mr. Asselin: That is what I say.

Mr. MacEachen: Absolutely. We are Canadians. I am only meeting the point that has been raised.

Mr. Stanfield: No, the minister is not.

Mr. MacEachen: I am meeting the point that no government in the free world has this power.

Mr. Stanfield: None has the power being asked for here.

Mr. MacEachen: I shall therefore continue reading from the article to explain the theory behind British practice:

> The assumption was that the government should produce to the house, as evidence of the need for a timetable, references to slow progress already made.

The Leader of the Opposition says and hon. members say, "Well, let us get on with it, let us have the flow of legislation and then, if we hold you up, you can apply closure. But do not do any timetabling or programming in advance." The British say:

> We know that the opposition intends to resist this bill as hard as it possibly can, and it will certainly be necessary to have a timetable if the discussion is to be completed within a reasonable time. Therefore it is better to have the whole of the proceedings covered by the timetable, so that the business sub-committee can make the most satisfactory distribution of time for the whole of the bill, rather than to wait until perhaps a quarter of the committee's time has been consumed on the first clause, and then be obliged to restrict unduly the debate on the later parts of the bill.

I want to demonstrate now how this has been used. In my hand I have an excerpt from British Hansard for 1954, when the time table motion was put before the house by the then minister of housing and local government. And who was he? Later he became the right hon. Harold MacMillan, prime minister of Great Britain. He brought in his bill; he brought in his motion; he put a timetable down for the committee stage; he put a timetable down for the debate on report and he put a timetable down on the third reading in advance. Second reading was not included. I will come back to that later. He made a marvelous speech in defence of this timetable motion. It is so delightful that I will share part of it with hon. members. He said:

> I have taken the precaution of looking through some of the present debates on similar occasions. They make quite interesting reading. A stranger to our proceedings might suppose that such a question would be debated as a mere matter of the most businesslike and convenient arrangement that can be devised, but, in fact, the debate scarcely ever turns on anything of the kind.
> What happens is this. The right hon. and hon. members who find themselves for the moment in opposition are filled with an extraordinary devotion to the principles of constitutional government, to the free rights of members, to the long historic struggle of parliament against the executive, to the cause for which Hampden died in the field and Sidney on the scaffold. But when, with the all-healing flow of time, these same members find themselves upon the government benches, they become comparatively immune to these high-flown sentiments. They are influenced by the urgent necessity which every government feels to carry through their parliamentary business with some relation to the calendar and to the march of events.

That is what the prime minister of Great Britain said. Nobody could put it better than the former Tory prime minister of Great Britain put it as he placed before the British house a timetable on every section of the bill. It was a timetable in advance.

Mr. Baldwin: Read what the Liberal leader said in reply to that. I defy you to.

Mr. MacEachen: The speech continues with these words:

> They abandon these elevated principles, or at least they mute the shrill strings of protestation.

We have heard a good many shrill strings of protestation from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the Leader of the Opposition who have expressed lofty sentiments in this debate. The prime minister of Great Britain in his speech talks about the government becoming the opposition and about the opposition becoming the government. He says:

> When in office, of course, they represented the guillotine as a merciful, convenient and lenient method of procedure. When they are out of office then the full horrors of the axe dominate their thought and inspire their oratory. Yet, by a strange parallel, although the victims have to make the right kind of noises as they are drawn to the scaffold, when the axe falls, as we all know it must, nobody is more pleased than they are.

I want to take the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to the scaffold.

It is a wonderful speech. Then the question came to a vote, and this is even more interesting because we may see who voted for the extinction of the British parliament, to use the words of the Leader of the Opposition. Among those who voted to extinguish freedom of speech, fair discussion and parliamentary rights were the right hon. Sir Winston Churchill, the right hon. Anthony Eden and Mr. Edward Heath. Is the Leader of the Opposition trying to put over to the Canadian people that he has a better appreciation, a more sensitive understanding of the workings of parliamentary democracy—

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Stanfield: In Canada, yes.

Mr. MacEachen: —than Winston Churchill, Anthony Eden or the present leader of the Tory party? Is he trying to sell a bill of goods that this government is asking for a power that is unheard of—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacEachen: —a power that has been exercised by every British leader and that ought to have been in effect in this parliament a long time ago? I do not want to be unfair to hon. members. I want to deal with the Labour party.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. MacEachen: Later.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Before he cuts my head off?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Baldwin: Say a prayer for him before he goes.

Mr. MacEachen: In 1947 the Lord Privy Seal, Mr. Arthur Greenwood, moved a time allocation order on two bills at the same time. They were the town and country planning bill and the transport bill—two bills in the same time allocation order. He put down the standing committee, the resolution, the report stage and the third reading. It was carried, and among those great defenders of British parliamentary democracy, for which we are thanking God this afternoon, who supported the guillotine, the extinction of British democracy, of free debate, of the free institution of parliament, were the right hon. Clement Attlee, James Callaghan, Barbara Castle, Richard Crossman, an intimate of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacEachen: —one of his British cronies, Richard Crossman, the government house leader at present. So it is—

Mr. Baldwin: Those were related measures, the same debate.

Mr. MacEachen: There may be differences in detail between the British practice and our proposal but they have the same substance, the same principle. Will you accept the British proposal?

Mr. Stanfield: No, no; not necessarily for Canada.

Mr. Baldwin: Here is the U.K. standing order. Show me in this standing order anything that is similar.

Mr. MacEachen: I have always enjoyed reading the Globe and Mail but it was particularly interesting today to read what was described as a conversation between George Bain and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. It was described as a conversation but it read to me like a monologue. I guess the hon. member took George some place and told him the facts of life. He said, "Imagine, George, they tried to get us to accept that we take only one day on second reading. Just imagine. They asked us to conjure up in our imaginations the notion of one day on second reading." And then the hon. member said, "We scotched that"—a great triumph for parliament democracy.

I would like the hon. member to take a look at the British house. They, as a matter of course, take one day on second reading of every bill. They put the motion down and it is finished that day. I say every bill. I could find only two bills that took more than one day. I have here the time taken on second reading of all their bills in 1959-60, 1960-61 and 1961-62. The bills range over every possible activity of British interest—foreign affairs, welfare, everything in one day. That is the British system. Thank God for the British parliamentary system.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Motion for Concurrence in Report

Mr. MacEachen: Would that my hon. friends would agree to one day on second reading of all our bills in this house, but we are not asking that.

Mr. Nowlan: Do you think a federal system is different?

Mr. Baldwin: They bring in intelligent bills in the United Kingdom.

Mr. MacEachen: My hon. friends are finding it very difficult to defend their position intellectually.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacEachen: We have not proposed in rule 16-A that only one day be spent on second reading.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It might be one hour.

Mr. MacEachen: Take the Criminal Code bill, for example. It is an important bill. If that bill were in the British house it would take a day on second reading, that is all. We do not propose that. Certainly this government would not propose one day for second reading. It would propose more days on second reading.

Mr. Baldwin: How many? Tell us.

Mr. MacEachen: Here you have days on second reading, much more freedom than you would be offered if you were a member of the mother of parliaments. Here there are longer discussions on second reading. Then the criminal law bill will go to a standing committee. How much time will you have there? It may be weeks, months, and yet you are talking about the gag and the end of free speech. Then under the proposals made last Friday by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) we could only put a motion down for second reading and the committee stage. That would give weeks of exposure to the bill. You could worry it to death in the standing committee. It could take weeks there. Then it comes back, the amendments are proposed under our new procedures, and a new allocation order is put down for the report stage and the third reading.

Mr. McGrath: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. MacEachen: I will be glad to deal with any questions when I complete my remarks.

This proposal of ours, Mr. Speaker, has been misrepresented. It has been stated to be a unique development. It is not. It is a matter of course in the parliament to which my hon. friends refer. We are trying to utilize, as it must be utilized, the process of consultation, and that is the best way. It is always used in the British house and we have a provision in 16-A that there will be consultation, that there will be a sincere and genuine effort to arrive at a negotiated, an agreed time limit. When cases arise when opposition parties are so opposed to a bill that they will not agree to a time period of any kind, when the process of consultation breaks down, then the government will not go into some closet and pass an order in council. It will come to the parliament of Canada saying, "We are making a proposal. Will you support it or will you reject it?" And hon. members on all sides of the house will be asked to utilize their judgment. We on this side of the house are members of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacEachen: It seems that hon. members opposite think, in the most arrogant way, that the only true representatives of the people of Canada are sitting in the opposition. All the members of this parliament will have an opportunity to say yes or no to any motion put down by the house leader and they will be able to debate it. They will be able to debate it for two hours.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Can we have order in the house?

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. MacEachen: When the British had the old guillotine rule, when Harold MacMillan, for example, put down his time allocation on his bill his order had to be debated for a day.

Well, they changed that in the British house last December. The right hon. Michael Stewart introduced a motion for a change in the standing orders, producing a new standing order, 43A, which cuts down the time of the debate from a day to two hours because they all said, you know, that spending a day in debate on a time allocation order is really not a very sensible use of the time of parliament. That is the new rule, 43A, that was introduced in Britain last December. Under it the minister makes a motion. He can propose the allocation of time in his motion for the committee stage and his motion authorizes the business committee to allocate the time on the report stage and the third reading. The business committee on a bill then meets. The business committee has a government majority. It is made up of the chairman's panel and five members nominated by Mr. Speaker. When the committee puts down its resolution the standing order provides that it will be forwarded on without debate. That is the British system which had been adopted not in the middle age, not in some murky period of the past, but in December, 1967.

Michael Stewart put the case in the British house, I thought, as well as anybody possibly could put it. He said:

> The heart of this whole matter is—and it has been going on for quite a time in the history of the house—the effort to reconcile the two principles essential to democracy. The first of the two principles that are essential is that after proper discussion the majority shall be able to get their own way. The second principle is that the minority shall have a fair opportunity to express their view with vigour so that it may attract interest and support in the country as well as in the house itself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacEachen: That is what Michael Stewart said. The second principle is that the minority shall have a fair opportunity to express their view with vigour so that it may attract interest and support in the country as well as in the house itself. I subscribe to those principles, the two essential principles. In putting his motion on the order paper—the revised guillotine—and having it debated Michael Stewart expressed the two principles that every member of parliament must feel. The majority must have its way and there must be adequate discussion. Now, listen to this: They adopted this changed time allocation order in one day. They grappled with this issue in one day of debate. They put up their speakers from both sides and at the end of the day they voted and it carried.

Mr. Baldwin: They fixed the day by agreement.

Mr. MacEachen: They carried on by tradition. As my hon. friend knows, a motion is usually carried on the day it is debated in the British house.

Mr. Baldwin: By agreement.

Mr. MacEachen: I ask members of parliament in Canada to remember that a year ago the British dealt with the very issue we are dealing with now and did so in one day.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is the reason they are so frustrated.

Mr. MacEachen: And we hear it said that this is an undemocratic government. Well, I think hon. members will understand for themselves the reason behind the British system. In the fourth report of the committee in the last session it was recommended that we take a look at the British system. The new committee took a look at it, and not a little look. I was in favour of the British system. I believe it is a good system. It has gone on for a long long time and has worked pretty well. The article from which I quoted concludes by saying that this rule has not destroyed or impaired free speech. It is still there for hon. members to examine.

If hon. members think the British practice is better than 16-A then they can look at it, but we on this side think there is an essential principle here. It is a principle that has been stated by Michael Stewart, by Harold Macmillan and, in a less definite way, by Canadian parliamentarians who say that at a certain time a decision must be taken.

Mr. Stanfield: Just as we all do.

Mr. MacEachen: But we do not admit that the opposition should have the right to determine the pace of public business. That is what is being put forward in this debate; that is it, that the opposition should determine the pace of public business. We do not accept that. We accept the principle that hon. members of this house should have an opportunity to express views on a public bill. Tell me how that is denied when a bill will receive second reading, when it will go to a committee for a period of weeks or months and then will come back on a second order for report stage and third reading. Remember this: If the good will that is now issuing forth from hon. members is genuinely based, then it will be only in a rare case of a breakdown that we will have to resort to this exceptional procedure.

Mr. Stanfield: When it suits you.

Mr. MacEachen: And in the case of a breakdown it will be put to a vote. I should like to refer again to what Michael Stewart said in the British house last year. He said:

> One could not run a parliament without an ultimate sanction to prevent the minority preventing the majority from getting their way.

That was not stated by a Liberal in this house. It was stated by a labour minister in the British house last December, a house we are thanking God we have. So let us not have the argument that this is something alien to parliamentary democracy; it certainly is not. We are trying to put order into the legislative process through 16-A.

We should be able certainly to deal with the question before us today quickly and now. I do not know what the objections of the opposition are to 16-A. They have stated now they do not believe the minority has an ultimate right to rule the majority. They have stated that now, so that is not the foundation of their objection. Do they believe that the purpose of an opposition is to obstruct? Do they believe that the purpose of an opposition is to do everything possible to prevent the government getting its business done?

Mr. Crouse: That is what Jack Pickersgill told us in 1958.

Mr. MacEachen: Surely, with the increase in the work load which a modern parliament must face, most members will insist that that view of an opposition is outmoded and should be dismissed and rejected.

A third possible foundation for their objection is that they believe 16-A as now drawn could be used to rush bad bills through the house or that it could be used to put bills through the house before the opposition had an opportunity to put the torch to the heather. That is what they say they believe. If they mean what they say, then this debate can soon end. We can meet them easily on this point. We can meet them easily because the purpose of 16-A has nothing whatever to do with rushing bills through. If they do not mean what they say and if in truth their objections are founded on a belief in the rule of obstruction, then we on the government side cannot meet their point of view.

Mr. Woolliams: You are being ridiculous.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must bring to the attention of the house that the minister's time has expired.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, could the minister have additional time so that we might have an opportunity to ask him some questions?

Some hon. Members: Continue.

An hon. Member: Don't cut him off now.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. MacEachen: We have debated this rule change now for a number of days. The debate has centred on time allocation. It is called in the British house the allocation of time to bills. If the opposition does not like 16-A as we have put it, would they accept the British practice in accordance with 43A? Would they accept the former British practice before 43A was introduced? Would that please them? We are not dedicated to any particular detail. When this debate began the Prime Minister said the government had not prejudged the issue, that he had an open mind and that the government had an open mind. We are saying to the opposition: Let us come to a decision before Christmas on all aspects of these reports.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacEachen: If members opposite want to take another look at what happens in the British parliament, if they think the practice there, or a modification of it, would be better for our purposes, if they want to accept the reasonable suggestions put forward by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), suggestions which are very reasonable and helpful, and incorporate these in 16-A, we can help them on this too. We can meet them, ladies and gentlemen—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacEachen: I am sorry. I was speaking to the press gallery and there are some ladies there.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order.

Mr. Woolliams: I thought you were speaking to us.

Mr. MacEachen: I say to hon. members that it is time for us to reach a decision on all aspects of these proposals except 16-A. If you want to take another look at it, we can agree to that. We are not going to push you into an intolerable position at all. We understand that this is a very important issue for parliament. It is something every member will have to live with in the future, and we regard it as serious. We say to the opposition: We want to test your sincerity of purpose. But we say also we are resolved that this government shall carry out the mandate it received from the Canadian people to put order into the business of this house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacEachen: No amount of speaking will alter that position. If you want to send 16-A back to the committee, we will consider doing so. If you want to give an instruction to the committee to consider the proposals made by the Minister of Agriculture, we shall give the committee an instruction to take a look at the British system. We shall give it that kind of latitude. But we shall not agree to depart from the basic proposition that order must be put into business and that the government must have the opportunity to get its business done in an orderly and planned fashion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) rising to ask a question?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, Mr. Speaker, and I ask it as one who hopes we can arrive at a basis for programming the work of parliament. My question is in two parts. First, with respect to the fundamental changes which were made in the rules at Westminster last December, will the minister tell us whether those changes were brought in by the government or whether they were thrashed out in an all-party committee and presented by that committee after substantial agreement had been reached?

My second question is: Would the hon. gentleman take the time of the house, and I am sure it will be given to him, to explain to us the role of that human being at Westminster who is know as "usual channels" and the part played by him in helping to reach agreement among the various parties in the house before these allocations of time are made?

Mr. MacEachen: I believe the motion to which I referred was a government motion. It was moved by a minister and it was opposed on a vote by a certain number of members. So I cannot regard it as being a unanimous proposal from a committee.

As to the "usual channels" in Britain, the hon. member is as familiar with the useful role that this person plays in negotiating and planning as I am. I believe personally that the consultative process in this house could be strengthened if we took a good look at the way in which it functions in Britain. The consultative process there works very well. When it breaks down they revert to the allocation of time proposal, and British democracy is still pretty sturdy and healthy.

Mr. Woolliams: Not in the house.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In the light of what the minister has said, is the government willing to consider, as part of a new look at this matter, the establishment of an independent person, an honest broker so that we might reach agreement rather than have a rule in which there is resort to compulsion?

Mr. MacEachen: I have not had an opportunity to consult with my colleagues on this point, but I think we would be quite ready to consider any proposal of that kind.

Mr. Baldwin: May I also ask a question?

Mr. Speaker: It is understood that these questions can be asked only if the minister is prepared to receive them.

Mr. Baldwin: That is so. But I believe the house had this in mind when it gave the hon. gentleman extra time. The minister has made a gesture toward what could be a useful settlement, and as negotiation seems to be out in the open at this stage may I ask whether it will be the intention of the government, supposing 16A were referred back to the committee, that there would be specific recommendations to the committee? In that case, would the minister consider including in those recommendations a direction that the proceedings committee and the house should not be asked to consider a number of measures without unanimous agreement in advance of the introduction of those measures to the stage at which we would know what was involved? Would he also let us know if he has in mind that the house would not be asked to agree to allocation of time with respect to any one single measure until that measure had progressed to a stage at which the house knew what was involved in it?

Mr. MacEachen: These go far to being fundamental questions and I certainly would want some considerable time to think about them and to refer them to my colleagues, particularly to the leader of the house. What I am really saying is: let us take a decision. I am not asking hon. members opposite to agree to all the proposals. Let us take a decision this week before we go on everything else, and take a look at 16A. I have made specific proposals that the committee be instructed to consider and report upon the amendments of the Minister of Agriculture, and on the British experience. The British practice gives you a pretty wide look.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It blocks you right in. You haven't got a chance, and you know it.

Motion for Concurrence in Report

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby on a question. The hon. member for Charlevoix. I would not want to be unfair to the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. I did not understand clearly whether he was rising for the purpose of asking a question.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He wants to make a speech.

Mr. Broadbent: No, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to make a speech.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Charlevoix.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, since I have come to this house, I have always listened religiously to the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen) who this afternoon, made a very spirited speech basing his thesis on British traditions.

Mr. Speaker, I have nothing against British traditions, but when the minister—and the government—use them to further their own thesis for electioneering purposes, as we witnessed this afternoon on the part of certain members on the government side—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether we could have a little quiet in the chamber so we may hear the hon. member for Charlevoix.

[Translation]

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, when the members of the government take it upon themselves to trample down British traditions with a view to getting votes, as a Liberal member did this afternoon, by proposing that the word "Canada" be substituted to the word "Dominion"—to which I have no objection—under the pretext that it is another British vestige, I say that this is going too far.

During the debate I asked the hon. minister to make a speech as a Canadian but he preferred to refer to British traditions. However, I find some consolation in the fact that, at long last, the government has decided to be reasonable, which doubtless proves that the presence of the opposition in the house is useful and necessary. Had we, on this side of the house, accepted off-hand the changes to the rules proposed by the government, we would not have heard the minister tell us: We are willing to negotiate, to discuss, because the arguments you have brought up in the last few days on rule 16(A) seem reasonable to us. To my mind, that is one vital argument in favour of the usefulness of an opposition that is willing to prove its usefulness by watching over the government.

Of course, I am not authorized to accept the offers the minister made on behalf of the government, but our parliamentary leader expected the leader of the government to meet the other leaders in the house to come to an agreement. Once more, I repeat that if today the government made a proposal in an attempt to agree on clause 16(A), and if we accept various proposed reforms to standing orders, it is because the opposition was vigilant and because, since the start of this debate, it has not stopped telling the government, day after day, that under rule 16(A), the government was attempting to gag the opposition and trample down the basic principles of democracy.

I am very pleased that, as a result of our representations, the minister has shown himself ready to engage in a dialogue that might lead to an agreement.

The minister tells us: Consider us as reasonable men. That does not mean that we will allow only one hour for a bill such as the omnibus bill. But what guarantee do we have that the government will give a reasonable amount of time to the opposition to examine important bills introduced in the house?

Of course, the minister who is now leaving did not mention the fact that the House of Commons in London has already gone through an experience similar to that which we lived ourselves last February when the government held on to office, refused to resign and said to the house: We are the masters of the house, we will lead it in spite of the opposition's representations.

In fact, when dealing with a government that makes such statements in the house, I think the opposition is allowed to question the good faith of the leader and the members of the government when they tell us that they will be reasonable when applying rule 16A.

Mr. Speaker, I think we will never repeat often enough in this house—and we, as members of the official opposition, have said it many times—that we are in favour of parliamentary reform. In fact, we have been for it since 1964. At this time, I must say that the members of the Progressive Conservative party who sat on the special committee on procedure received from the caucus broad and definite instructions to accept whatever reasonable reforms the government wanted to suggest to the house.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the government for being more reasonable today and ready to negotiate with us. I should like also to congratulate the members of our party and the other opposition parties which, day after day, sat on this committee and made proposals which might settle definitely some problems which we, on this side of the house, wanted to see settled in the house.

As we said from the beginning, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration agreed with us this afternoon, when he wondered about the efficiency rule 16A. When he asks us whether we want to negotiate so that the provisions of rule 16A would come again before the house, I will point out to him that my leader presented this request when he initiated the debate on the motion. When the leader of the Conservative party asked that the provisions of our standing orders which we could not agree to be referred to a committee, he was speaking on the same line as did the Minister of Manpower and Immigration this afternoon.

Of course, we are not so stubborn that we will refuse to negotiate, but I say in advance that the Progressive Conservative party will negotiate with due regard for the rights and privileges of members. The question is not for us to accept any compromise, but to accept a compromise which is acceptable not only to government members but to all members of the house. The government will then understand that rule 16-A was merely a provision enabling the government in advance to prevent members from deciding on important matters.

I am happy, Mr. Speaker, that the minister recognized this afternoon the usefulness of an opposition in parliament. We had the impression that this government, under the provisions of rule 16-A, wished to establish, in this parliament, a unitary government where decisions could be reached as quickly as possible. Yet we know that it takes a long time before the people are acquainted with a new act passed by the house. And rule 16-A gives the government the power, the authority, to say simply, through its house leader: We will discuss this measure during two hours, and then we will take the vote.

It is obvious, Mr. Speaker—and that is a constitutional matter—that the majority in this house should have the right to decide. That is obvious, but authority in this house should be exercised with understanding, without arrogance and with a willingness to co-operate with other groups in the house, instead of being exercised as it has been since the beginning of this session, by driving hon. members to the wall and telling them: You will accept what we propose, or else we will take the vote and crush the minority. Of course, the government can do that, and it is in that sense that the leader of the Progressive Conservative party was speaking when he said that rule 16A was giving the government powers which no other democratic country had yet received. That is the reason why the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) urged the government to be more reasonable, more understanding and to start a dialogue with the various opposition parties, in order that rule 16A may be reconsidered.

If the government wants to, I believe that we, on this side of the house, will get together to consider the government proposals, and if they are reasonable, we are ready to co-operate for, as I said a while ago, we are in favour of parliamentary reforms.

Mr. Speaker, I said a while ago that the government could take advantage of its majority, as this is in accordance with the constitution and many ways are available to do so. It has often been said during this debate that the government could make use of its power to apply the rule of closure. It is obvious that this rule did not always enjoy very great popularity with the Canadian people, but it is a weapon the government can use whenever the opposition becomes unreasonable in the course of discussions and lengthen debates needlessly.

I would not object if the government, deciding that the opposition was taking up too much of the time of the house, were to apply closure, as preceding governments have done. However, there is another alternative, which was mentioned this afternoon. There could be a meeting between the leaders of the different parties and being men of good will, we could agree on the order of business and the time to be allowed for the discussion of bills introduced in this house.

However, Mr. Speaker, rule 16A would give the government house leader absolute power. He could simply tell the house: Today, we will consider an amendment to the Criminal Code which is very important, but we only have so much time in which to discuss it.

We suggested that the committee of house leaders should have their word to say in the programming of the business of the house and that the decisions should be taken by the majority of members.

By insisting on rule 16A the government seems to consider us as people intent on filibustering. That is how the government has decided to consider the members of the opposition.

However, Mr. Speaker, as several of my colleagues have said, since the beginning of the session, I do not think that any party has been more co-operative than ours with the government. I see that a government member seems to have some doubts but I suggest to him that he should read Hansard to note that we asked the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne to be shortened.

We passed important laws without discussion. Yesterday again we passed the anti-dumping legislation. I think that our discussion was reasonable and did not go beyond the limits that can be imposed on the members of the opposition. I think that we have co-operated in model fashion and, for that reason, I assume that rule 16-A is unacceptable, anti-democratic and would give almost dictatorial power to a government member who could conduct the business of the house as he saw fit.

Mr. Speaker, we co-operated with the government but, from time to time, we also refused to when, in our opinion, it introduced measures which were not in the common interest of the Canadian people.

I think that if my colleagues of the government in office had the chance to speak as freely as we have, they would have been the first to criticize the government when it put an end to the winter works program, which resulted in a substantial increase in unemployment in the province of Quebec.

They would have been the first also to oppose an increase in postal rates and the levying by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) of a 2 per cent social development tax on personal income tax.

They would also have been the first to object to an uncompromising and inflexible attitude on the part of the government in federal-provincial relations.

Mr. Speaker, we do not approve the attitude of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and that of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald). I am sorry about that, because the President of the Privy Council is very friendly, socially; but in the house, he is completely transformed: he then becomes obstinate, arrogant and seems to want to make fun of the opposition. Naturally, we cannot approve the arrogance of the President of the Privy Council, nor the way in which he has tried to impose his views on parliament since the beginning of this session. If, in addition, we were to agree that the powers mentioned in rule 16A should be granted the government, we would be setting up a dictatorship. We do not want the President of the Privy Council to be called a dictator by hon. members, and he will understand that by refusing to grant the powers mentioned in rule 16A, we are giving him invaluable help.

What guarantee can the government offer the opposition that no limit will be set on our debates? I said, when I started my remarks, that last February the right honourable Prime Minister of Canada, then Minister of Justice, had risen in this house and in the heat of the argument had dropped this phrase: "Nous sommes les maîtres de la Chambre". We are the masters of this house.

Mr. Speaker, considering the words of the right honourable Prime Minister and the kind of thinking they reveal, how can anyone expect us to give the government the powers which rule 16A would confer? It would mean that the opposition agrees to be gagged and deprived of the role assigned to it by the standing orders of the house, and by the Canadian people when they voted for the members of the opposition. The government should remember that even though it was victorious last June, the parties of the opposition still got more than 42 per cent of the popular vote, that they represent part of the population, and that their opinions must be expressed, not in committees but in the house. We are here to fight for an important sector of the Canadian electorate, which entrusted us with the mandate of watching and scrutinizing the actions of the government.

It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that we have decided, that if negotiations on rule 16A do not come to a satisfactory settlement, we will fight for the survival of the basic principles of democracy, despite the attitude of the government. Therefore, the debate will be pursued until the government is reasonable and proposes a solution likely to clear up the imbroglio where it finds itself by refusing to give up rule 16A and by persisting in enforcing a continued guillotine to the debates of this house, as rule 16A would permit.

Mr. Speaker, obviously, we do waste time in parliament, and it is necessary to revise our rules. But that does not mean, for example, that, under the pretext of improving procedure, the rights of the opposition should be restricted to the point of rendering it practically useless. The very reason for the existence of the opposition, and its only weapon, lies in the fact that it can sometimes force the government to re-examine its bills, amend or even suspend them, if we consider them to be inadvisable or harmful to the Canadian people.

That was the goal we set ourselves when we decided to fight rule 16A to the finish and ask the government to allow the house to consider a third, or 20 or 25 per cent at least, of the estimates, so that we may discuss and examine publicly the estimates which the government intends the house to vote.

Mr. Speaker, it is in the name of common sense that the newspapers of the country have espoused our cause. If this debate had taken place in committee, the newspapers of the country would not have had the opportunity to follow it as they did here nor to have a rather exact opinion about the debate. It is because of the support of the press and radio that this afternoon the government agreed to dialogue and to negotiate with us.

However, the mass media which are always on the lookout for any move on the part of the government represent a weapon which must continue to exist. And the best way to keep the public well informed about what is happening in the House of Commons is not to sit in committee. How can we expect the newspapermen, in one day, to cover five or six committees all sitting at the same time?

The major decisions are taken by parliament which is the supreme court of the nation, where we study, examine and pass legislation which is very important because it sometimes restricts the freedom of individuals and the people. Consequently, it is publicly, in this house, that the fate of the government must be discussed.

The press is a means of exerting pressure and if it had supported the government since the beginning of this debate, it is quite possible that the latter, with its majority, would have taken the necessary measures to apply closure and pass the amendments to the standing orders as proposed by the chairman of the committee on procedure. It is because the press fought on our side that the government decided to be reasonable and to negotiate.

Speaking of the press, Mr. Speaker, all the newspapers have supported our point of view, but there is one, in my opinion, which has been quite explicit about the matter. It is Le Devoir of Montreal, which is quite objective. In its issue of December 18, 1968, there was the following article entitled: "A Threat to the Freedom of Parliament", and I quote:

> The new formula proposed by the government would enable it to have recourse constantly and regularly to a programming of debates which would be equivalent to automatic closure. For each bill or legislation, the government would decide in advance by its majority in the house that so many hours are allotted for such or such a stage and for consideration in committee. In this way, parliamentary proceedings would certainly be disciplined but the opposition could no longer play its role efficiently and would be muzzled.
> The proposed rule would interfere with that essential democratic process. Our political system cannot be programmed as proposed, because that would destroy it. More flexibility must be allowed in parliamentary proceedings. The excessive power requested by the Trudeau government seems inspired by the view that the opposition will indulge in filibustering and that it must be put in a strait jacket so that parliament can operate efficiently.
> But parliamentary rules must not rest on such abuses. Since he has become Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Stanfield has not shown such irresponsibility. Last year he could have toppled the Pearson government at a time when it would have greatly embarrassed the Liberals.
> In view of the impressive majority he now holds, and of the attitude of an opposition led by a reasonable and moderate man, Mr. Trudeau has no excuse to gag the opposition as he plans to do.

This is the editorial of Le Devoir, signed by Paul Sauriol. I could speak to you of the editorials of the Globe and Mail and the Gazette and other papers that express the same views. I say this, in closing: Because of the pressures of mass media who have supported our cause, who have said to the government that it is senseless to impose rule 16A on parliament, and also because of the work of our leader and the members, this afternoon the government at last offered to negotiate on clause 16A.

As a member of my party, and knowing my colleagues, I am confident that offer will not be rejected, that they will deign to hear us and take our advice into consideration, to the effect that the co-ordination of the business of the House of Commons could be agreed upon in a cordial atmosphere by the various parliamentary leaders instead of allowing the government house leader to impose closure at every turn.

I think that, in this case again, we will not turn down the offer which was made to us by the honourable Minister of Manpower and Immigration. We are going to consider it and if we think that it might help preserve the democratic principles whereby we can have in this house frank, sincere and loyal discussions on the bills presented to us, the government can be assured of our full co-operation in a further study of the provisions of rule 16A.

Before closing, I wish to congratulate my colleagues of the Progressive Conservative party and all the members of the opposition who, through their perseverance, have caused the members of the government to think the matter over. And if the government wants to be reasonable,—which is quite consistent with the spirit of the season—we, on our side, will prove to the government that, in the interest of the Canadian people, we are prepared to negotiate with it in order to safeguard the privileges and the rights of all honourable members.

[English]

Mr. J. E. Brown (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to take up the time of the house for very long in saying one or two things about this debate. I am going to support the adoption of the committee's report that is before the house at the present time. May I say I have been very impressed by the tenor and high quality of the debate in the house this afternoon, particularly the magnificent speech by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen). I hope that the offer he made to end the present impasse will be accepted, that the proposed rule 16A will be held in abeyance pending further study and the rest of the proposals made by the committee will be accepted and approved by the House of Commons.

A great deal has been said about the inherent danger involved in adopting the committee's report. It is said that this would present a danger to our democratic process. However, it occurs to me that a greater danger lies in failing to agree to a timetable prepared by the house leaders of the different parties, and certainly there is a danger of our leaders failing to agree to such a timetable among themselves.

Timetables for debate and for the length of such debates on government legislation presented to the house have been used by most modern democratic parliamentary institutions. This is particularly true, as has been pointed out this afternoon, in the House of Commons in the United Kingdom, where such a timetable has been in operation for many years under both Labour and Conservative administrations. There is no doubt that the development of parliamentary government is a subject of contention and controversy. Just the same, parliamentarians feel that there is need for talk on every subject that comes up for consideration. However, shortage of time does not permit us to talk for long, much less to obstruct and far less to filibuster.

Democracy cannot survive in face of obstructionist tactics on the part of elected oppositions in democratic parliaments. I am not saying that such a thing takes place in this chamber, certainly not by design or by contrivance. I have too many friends on both sides of the house to level any such accusation. Nevertheless, the danger of obstructionist, defeatist and filibustering tactics could be fatal to the democratic process in modern times, just as fatal in Canada as it could be in the United Kingdom. Is this country going to be compared with Russia, China and other countries that have no orderly democratic parliamentary practices? Good government is necessary for any nation to succeed in the world today.

We must sacrifice some of the inherited rules of practice and procedure in this House of Commons. This is not easy for us. Most of us I think want to maintain the old, traditional rules of the parliament of Canada. But in the modern world of technology I say that parliamentary reform is absolutely essential if we are not to be bypassed and if parliamentary government is to be effective. Here in Canada each of us should be thankful that we can express our views on matters of national importance. But we must be brief, we must be disciplined, and we must not overplay our individual rights and the liberty we have as members of parliament to oppose and to criticize. I fail to see why the present impasse should not be broken. In my opinion, what is asked by the President of the Privy Council is not so unreasonable. Can the opposition parties not agree to a time limit on bills that are to come before the house?

Mr. Schumacher: Not in advance.

Mr. Brown: Intransigence must not stand in the path of Canada's progress toward a modern and democratic set of rules and procedures in the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There has been a knock on the door.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that a message has been received from the Senate informing this house that the Senate have passed Bill C-146, an act respecting the imposition of anti-dumping duty, without any amendment.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

• (6:00 p.m.)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An act to amend the Customs Tariff.

An act respecting the imposition of anti-dumping duty.

An act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1969.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39-A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), Public Service —superannuated federal employees—Request for increased pensions; the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert), Criminal Code—Inquiry as to introduction of amending legislation; the hon. member for Surrey (Mr. Mather), Old Age Security—Request for issuance of cheques before Christmas.

It being six o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions (papers), public bills.

Private Bill

PRIVATE BILL

AETNA CASUALTY COMPANY OF CANADA

Mr. Ian Wahn (St. Paul's) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-11, to incorporate Aetna Casualty Company of Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill seeks the incorporation of a company under the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act to carry on business in all classes of insurance other than life insurance. A similar bill has been introduced in previous sessions and I believe that many hon. members who are here are familiar with it. For this reason I shall keep my opening comments brief but will be happy to answer any questions that there may be with regard to the details of the bill.

The proposed company would be a subsidiary of the Aetna Casualty and Surety Insurance Company of Hartford, Connecticut. This is a respectable company which already carries on business with its affiliate, the Standard Fire Insurance Company, in all the classes of insurance for which application is being made in this bill to incorporate the new Canadian company. In brief, therefore, what this bill seeks to do is to permit this respectable and reputable group to carry on business through a Canadian incorporation rather than through the United States parent company and its affiliate.

The parent company, the Aetna Casualty Company of Hartford, has held a certificate of registry under the Foreign Insurance Companies Act of Canada for the past 49 years. It has reviewed its operations in Canada and has concluded it would be desirable for the Canadian business to be carried on by a company incorporated in Canada. That, in brief, is the object and purposes of this bill.

I think hon. members will be interested in how the company proposes to operate in Canada. Pending the establishment of the Canadian company, in order to expand its operations in Canada the parent company in September, 1966, opened an office in Toronto which is known as the head office for Canada. It is headed by a Canadian who is general manager for Canada. Canadians are also selected to head the fidelity and surety and underwriting operations for this office.

There are presently 97 employees in this office, 71 of whom are Canadians. Of the 26 non-Canadian employees in Toronto, only 10 are United States citizens. Of the five non-Canadians in Montreal three are United States citizens and of the four non-Canadians in other offices one is a United States citizen. In September 1968, an office was opened in Montreal. The head of the Toronto office is responsible for the operations of this office which numbers 41 Canadians among its 46 employees. All present employees of these two offices would become employees of the Canadian company. The parent company now has claim offices located in Quebec City, Ottawa, Hamilton, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver. All but four of the 50 present employees in the six claim offices are Canadians and all present employees would become employees of the Canadian company.

In the two years since the Toronto office opened in September 1966, the number of employees in Canadian operations has increased from 90 to 193. Normal growth would indicate that by the end of five years employees in Canadian operations would number 450 of which at least 90 per cent would be Canadians. The Canadian company would be under the direction of the general manager for Canada who would have charge of the company's operations throughout Canada. Underwriting, sales, engineering and accounting will continue to be centralized in the head office at Toronto but, as the need becomes evident, facilities for these services will be placed in other important cities in Canada, as occurred with the opening of the Montreal office in September, 1968. Of course the experience and services of the United States company will be available for the assistance of the Canadian company.

One might ask what objection there could be to the incorporation of this company. I think perhaps the objection that would be raised is that it is intended to be a subsidiary of a United States company and that its capital will be United States capital.

Mr. Gilbert: You are right.

Mr. Wahn: Yet there is no law against the incorporation of Canadian companies which are subsidiaries of United States companies. This house would have the option to pass such a law if it chose. Until such a law is passed it seems to me that these companies should be treated on the same basis as other companies and that if they are prepared to abide by our laws their incorporation should be welcomed. Capital from the United States should continue to be welcomed in Canada as long as the owners of that capital abide by our regulations and conduct themselves as good corporate citizens of Canada.

[Mr. Wahn.]

This company if incorporated will be subject to regulation by our Department of Insurance. The form of the bill of incorporation is standard. I understand there is no objection from the Department of Insurance to the incorporation of this company. I believe that probably all members of the house will agree that increased competition in the general insurance business in Canada would be an excellent thing from the point of view of the ordinary Canadian who from time to time buys insurance. This is a reputable company. The formation of a subsidiary in Canada will assist in extending its business and increasing competition in this important field and will confer positive advantages upon Canadians.

Members may be interested in the record of the company with regard to profits made in Canadian business. I have been informed it is the intention of the company to leave any underwriting profits in Canada in order to strengthen the financial structure of the Canadian company. With regard to the personnel policy I have been informed that a primary objective of the company will continue to be to employ Canadians in the management of the operation to the extent they are available. Of course nearly all clerical personnel will be Canadians.

In brief the establishment of the company or its incorporation as a Canadian company will create for Canada additional employment and additional capital funds. Additional capital is something which we need a great deal of in Canada at the present time. The parent company has stated that it looks upon the establishment of the company as an additional thrust for the already demonstrated expanding Canadian economy and as a permanent and growing part of this economy.

If there are any questions with regard to the company I will be happy to do my best to answer them. I hope it may be possible this afternoon to refer the bill to the appropriate committee where a more detailed study of the company and the proposed place of this company in Canada can be considered.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, we certainly welcome and listened with interest to the introductory remarks of the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Wahn) with regard to this bill. I think, however, with all respect and not unkindly, that there is a certain misleading element in the hon. member's remarks. This does not detract from his sincerity in presenting them, but I think there is another side of the picture which should be disclosed. I have in mind the question of a foreign owned company meeting no objection by the Department of Insurance.

If I might be permitted to deal very briefly with the ideas expressed by the hon. gentleman, I should like to indicate to the house in what respect I do not think they are in the full sense valid reasons for accepting the proposition that we should endorse the bill. I understood the hon. member to say that foreign capital should be welcome in Canada as long as the owners of that capital obey our laws, regulations and the like. I do not even know whether the reference to obeying the law is necessary. The purpose of having laws is that they be obeyed. I would not even presume to cast any reflection on the company by suggesting it had any other intention than to obey the laws and regulations and work within them.

The assertion that foreign capital should be welcomed if the owners of that capital obey the laws of the country really begs the question of whether or not we should continue the practice of endorsing foreign capital investments in Canada to the extent that they control sections of our economy. That is the question that we should be dealing with and not whether or not they will obey the law. There is no presumption on my part or, I am sure, on the part of other hon. members that the Aetna company has any other thought than to live by our laws and regulations.

With regard to no objections having been made by the Department of Insurance, in terms of foreign control this is meaningless because Mr. Humphrys, the Superintendent of Insurance can do nothing else but simply look at the bill and the structure of the company in the light of the law as set out in the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act. Mr. Humphrys has no authority to look at the matter of foreign ownership with regard to whether it is good, bad, or otherwise. Simply to say that the bill should be passed because the Superintendent of Insurance has given it his stamp of approval is not really a valid argument for passing the bill. Mr. Humphrys is a public servant and, like many other people in the Public Service of Canada, assiduous as he is he simply follows the narrow letter of the law which guides him. He has no authorization to step outside those bounds.

In fact, I am rather surprised that Mr. Humphrys permits himself to be used as an advocate of some kind in respect of some of these companies when he appears before the committee. In many cases, and this one is no exception, Mr. Humphrys would appear to be the advocate of the company itself because he is the one who presents all the reasons and provides all the answers and explanations in respect of how the company intends to operate and what it intends to do, while the officers of the company who appear before the committee often say relatively little. This, I think, is a pity. The officers and lawyers representing these companies sit in the background and let Mr. Humphrys, the Superintendent of Insurance, carry the ball for them in presenting the case.

Perhaps it is because this happens that the hon. member for St. Paul's argues that this bill should be endorsed on the ground that Mr. Humphrys supports it or has no objection to it. Possibly it is the procedure followed in the committee, which seems to imply that Mr. Humphrys is the president of some of these companies and is defending their position and asking for support that is responsible. I hope Mr. Humphrys will continue to be a witness before the committee but that he will confine his remarks to the relation between the proposed bill and the public law. I also hope that members of the committee will confine their questions to this simple relationship, and that the officers of these companies will reply to questions concerning the directors and so on and not leave Mr. Humphrys, the Superintendent of Insurance, to carry the ball for them.

This bill was considered by the banking and commerce committee of the Senate on October 23 of this year. Mr. Humphrys was there, together with officers representing Aetna, and certain questions were asked about a subject which in my view is the fundamental aspect with which we should be concerned here, namely, the degree of foreign ownership involved.

As an aside, perhaps I can say that once again evidence was given relating to the number of people working in the different offices of the company, the number who were Canadians and the number who were not Canadians. But this information is not material to the point I have in mind. It does not really matter whether 100 per cent of the employees in the company's Canadian operation are Canadian citizens. It is still someone in Hartford, Connecticut, who is calling the shots and making the decisions. Even if all the people in the Canadian offices were born and raised in Canada, even if they were all good Canadian citizens, it would not matter as much as a pinch of snuff because they would be carrying out the intentions of the parent company. It is the parent company which decides policy questions.

I recognize it may make nice reading. I am sure the hon. member for St. Paul's was absolutely sincere in his representations to the effect that it is valuable to have Canadians working for the company in this way. But it is meaningless in terms of what the company will do because the people who control it are not Canadians. They do not live in this country and they have no political or other responsibilities to the nation.

In the committee on October 23 certain questions were asked and I may have to read from the record at some length in order to establish my point. Both Senator Croll and Senator Thorvaldson directed attention to the question of foreign ownership. As reported at page 45, Senator Thorvaldson said:

> I think we might as well get a complete answer to Senator Croll's question. What he was wanting to know was what proportion of the share capital of the parent company which, I take it, is Aetna Casualty, is owned in Canada.

The question was answered by Mr. Clarry, counsel for the company and one of the provisional directors, if I am not mistaken. In any event, there is a Mr. Clarry who will become one of the directors. The answer was as follows:

> Senator, it would be a little difficult to give a precise figure, but as Mr. Rhine has indicated, there are approximately 300 shareholders so it would be a relatively small proportion.

Mr. Rhine is a vice-president of the company. I have interpreted his answer to mean that 300 shareholders are Canadian out of approximately 25,000. The exchange continued:

> Senator Thorvaldson: But that is meaningless. They might each own one share.
> Mr. Clarry: I do not think we have the precise relationship with regard to the number of shares.

In other words, he did not know.

> Senator Thorvaldson: I am talking about the percentage of money.
> Mr. Clarry: That is, of the shareholdings of the parent company?
> Senator Thorvaldson: Yes.

We now have an intervention by Mr. Rhine who is, as I have said, a vice president of this company and a big wheel in its affairs. He said:

> I understand your question, but I am afraid I cannot answer it. You are asking how many dollars of value is represented by these some 300 shareholders. Is that not what you are asking?

[Mr. Howard (Skeena).]

The record continues:

> Senator Thorvaldson: Yes, what I am wanting is the percentage of Canadian ownership in this company. I ask that question because I think it is something you will meet in the other house and I am trying to help you a little bit.

That is the understatement of the day, Mr. Speaker. He went on:

> It is also, I think, something we should know since the other house has made an issue of this very point.

In other words, until now the Senate has not concerned itself with this aspect; it is only because it has been raised here on a couple of occasions that the Senate itself was bothered about it. Mr. Rhine said the figure would have to be determined, after which Senator Croll remarked almost incredulously, I think, knowing Senator Croll:

> Do you mean to say that you were not asked that question during the two sessions you had before the other house?

Mr. Clarry replied:

> That is right. That question was not asked.

Then Senator Croll, having in mind the necessity of bolstering the position of the Senate from time to time, commented:

> Then you can see the usefulness of the Senate. It can be relied upon to come up with something new.

I do not see where the newness is unless it is in this comment as to Canadian ownership made a little later by Senator Croll:

> I was going to suggest that it is infinitesimal.

In other words, there is no Canadian ownership in any real or meaningful sense.

I wanted to read this whole exchange so as to draw attention to some of the ludicrous features which are apparent when taken with other things that have been said during these proceedings. At one stage one of the senators expressed surprise that this bill had been before the Senate on two other occasions. He subsequently cleared this up by saying he had remembered.

The Senate, supposedly a valuable asset to Canadian politics, a part of our political system, is trying desperately to justify itself by saying how valuable it could be in conducting committee studies, how it could easily replace royal commissions which might otherwise be set up in the future and perform a useful task by inquiring into all and sundry subjects and arriving at meaningful proposals for the solution of problems which arise in Canada. On the other hand, the proceedings of this committee indicate that the Senate is not sure what it is about and has not exhibited the degree of interest necessary to promote Canadian ownership of enterprises in this country. I submit that notwithstanding anybody's individual opinions the Senate is not in the least interested in Canada or Canadian ownership because it has treated this whole question very lightly and very inconsiderately. As Senator Thorvaldson said, he only asked this question to help the company a little bit.

He said as an aside and an incidental comment, "It is probably something they should know about as well." I think this is one thing that showed up in the discussions about this company.

However, when it gets to the house, this is where public policy is enunciated. This is where the cabinet is and where the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) sits and makes announcements. He made a point of telling the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) about that today. With some relish the Prime Minister said that he would make announcements in the House of Commons because this was where he is; he did not have any right to be in the Senate. This is the place where public policy in these matters should be developed and determined.

Until a few months ago we thought the position of the Canadian government was in favour of Canada. We thought that the government of this nation was concerning itself seriously, thoroughly and completely with the degree of foreign ownership in this country and wanted to take some measures to ensure that Canadians would have some determination over what was happening to our economic activity. But this has obviously gone by the board, and we are fast coming to the conclusion that not only has the government not paid much attention to what is going to happen to Canada in terms of economic development and control internally by and for ourselves—

Mr. Wahn: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Certainly.

Mr. Wahn: Would it not perhaps be wise, in view of the importance of the basic principle the hon. member is now discussing, to permit this bill to go to committee where a proper forum could be provided and it could be discussed at much greater length and in much more detail than we could possibly have here in the few minutes remaining this evening?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for St. Paul's can guarantee that the government will present to that committee its views about Canadian ownership, the policy it has and the steps it intends to take in order to put us in the position to regain control of our economy; if he can speak for the government and guarantee that a member or members of the government will appear before the committee and make this sort of declarations, I will gladly agree with him. Can the hon. member make that commitment to us?

Mr. Wahn: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately perhaps from my point of view, I am not in a position to speak for the government. However I can assure the hon. member that there are a great many highly qualified people who would be happy to speak on that subject. It would be a very interesting subject to discuss in the committee.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) is here. He is prone to speak for the government from time to time. Perhaps he can tell us whether government policy will be presented to the committee to make sure that Canada will have an opportunity to control itself in so far as its economy is concerned. But without such an assurance I think I can answer the hon. gentleman's question only in the sense that to agree with him to send the bill to committee, without any assurance such as I have just mentioned and which the hon. gentleman says he cannot give, would be simply an exercise in futility. There may be many qualified people on the committee; but it would result in our coming out by the same door through which we entered and we would have no adequate answers about what the government intended to do in this situation. And we are talking about government policy.

Mr. Wahn: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member not agree that public opinion has great force and that committee hearings are proving increasingly important in bringing public opinion to bear? In all sincerity I say that the hon. member has raised an extremely important question, that of the Watkins report, which has not been discussed in detail. I suggest this would be a very useful thing to do.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I do not know if you can exhume the Watkins report and bring life back into it. It has been buried, as the hon. gentleman knows; it has gone. The government has rejected the concepts of the Watkins report; it has ignored them. Is the hon. gentleman trying to tell me that the Prime Minister is wrong? Is he trying to substitute his statements for those of the Prime Minister? I am sure he would not want to do that. In fact, I do not know anybody on that side who would want to challenge the Prime Minister, no matter how stupid and wrong he is in anything he says. Nobody over there is brave enough to say anything about it. Even Steve Otto, the hon. member for York East, when speaking to a Liberal association meeting not too long ago, said that the role of the member of parliament is going to be eliminated as we know it by the proposed rule changes; but he would not say anything unkind about it because—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order. The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I know the house would agree to extend the time of the hon. member, if he asked, but we would not want to deprive other members of the opportunity to take part in this lively debate. The Aetna Casualty Company is an old friend; they have been before us at least three times. On each occasion we have been opposed to the incorporation in Canada of a foreign owned company. This company is operating in Canada and has been for many years. We have no particular objection to that, and there is nothing we could do about it if we did have an objection. We are objecting to their coming into Canada and establishing a subsidiary company to operate like a Canadian company on the Canadian scene, without giving that Canadian company the autonomy that would in fact make it, as a former minister of trade and commerce used to say, a good Canadian corporate citizen. This company obviously does not intend to be a good corporate citizen at all.

In fact, when questions were asked on this matter the answer was that the insurance business is an international matter and therefore should not recognize the bounds of nationalism, or any other provincial or state restriction that would limit it. This sounds very much like the Rothschilds when they talk about finance. They believe that money has no conscience, no nationality and no patriotism, and therefore it does not have to be a good corporate citizen. Their theory is that you can take money where you can get it; there is no dirty money, no matter from what source it comes. They believe that money from the common brothel is as good as that which comes from somebody's hard earned pay cheque.

I believe this is something with which many Canadians will disagree. I disagree with it, as I am sure do many of my colleagues. I think many members of the house agree that we face in this company a phenomenon that has taken place on the North American continent in the last 50 years and in fact has spread to all countries of the world. We face a totally different type of company than that which was originally formed when the great American interest developed, in the mercantile sense, when the United States was able to gain the benefit of money from other countries without losing their soul in the process.

When the United States was starting as an industrial nation and needed large amounts of capital—and there is certainly a similarity between their progress 100 years ago and ours today—they were able to borrow these sums of money in the form of direct loans. This money was paid back, together with the interest charged in respect of it. Companies were originated because of the capital obtained and the generation of input from other sources, namely Dutch and British interests, and the people who lent the money got it back, plus the interest. But when it was all over it was apparent that the economy in that area was more vibrant and self-sustaining. As it happened they went bankrupt.

• (6:40 p.m.)

This is not what is happening in Canada in this case. Here is a company that has a very large interest in the United States. There is no question about its being an old and reliable insurance company which has been doing business in Canada for years and which has been supervised to a certain extent by Canadian authorities in terms of the liabilities it retains. However, in the main it has been operating as a corporate citizen, not even of the United States but of a state in the United States, because of some insurance principle that must have existed in Connecticut which was not common to other states. I think that any hon. member interested in background information relating to insurance companies could look up the insurance legislation of the state of Connecticut and he would find that hundreds of insurance companies have their head offices in Hartford, Connecticut because the legislation in that state is favourable to their business.

There is no reason why we as Canadians being faced, with the development of a new company which desires to do business in this country, and to operate under our protection and our legislation, should not demand that they set up a Canadian corporate company. That is not what is being done. This will never be a Canadian company but only a federally incorporated company. It will be supervised by our superintendent of insurance but it will always be a foreign owned and foreign dominated company because it is only a subsidiary. This has been the history of insurance companies in Canada. I have already said that the United States was able to develop on borrowed capital; we have been able to develop as an extension with subsidiary companies in every industry in Canada, as a consequence of which we do not own any of the industrial development of this nation and we continue to operate only with branch offices. I suppose the easy way out for the company would be to buy government securities, but it will be necessary for them to carry in Canada only the amount of money needed to cover their liabilities, and I doubt if the company will maintain much capital beyond that.

It surprises me that members of parliament, who are surely as good Canadians as I hope I am, fail to see the dangers that are entailed in allowing these very capable companies to come into Canada and operate in such a manner that they can never become part of the Canadian development. I think it is important for us to be aware of our potentialities. This company wants to come to Canada and do business here. I am sure that if we had a law specifying that all the directors on the board of the company must be Canadians, and that a certain percentage of their shares must be owned by Canadians, the situation would be different. All the companies that want to start operating in Canada want to have a big investment on their money. So long as this is the case and so long as they get a reasonable interest, they will want to remain on the Canadian scene. On the other hand, we as Canadians should insist on the right to buy into those companies and to become part owners. If tomorrow we were to pass a law saying that 75 per cent of this company must be Canadian owned, they would surely be willing to set up their company here and to sell their stock on the market in the hope that Canadians would pick it up. Obviously $500,000 is a small amount of money for this company to pay to cover their incorporation. They really could do much better than this if they wanted to, but that is all we require and that is what they will provide to obtain their incorporation.

I am sure that we in Canada could put up the money if this company put its stock on the market, and they have done so as a U.S. owned company. Today there are 300 shareholders in Canada as compared to 75,000 in the United States. It is interesting to note that the company officials indicated when they set up this subsidiary company in Canada that no stock will be available for Canadians, and that the shares will be held totally by the holding company, which is the parent company. Though Canadians are allowed to buy into the holding company, they cannot buy into the insurance company which we are being asked to incorporate.

I suggest that what I have said is supported by a number of members of the house. We have had requests from several insurance companies recently to establish companies in Canada. I was very pleased to talk to one of the presidents of one of these insurance companies who indicated that for a long time he has been a dummy director of a U.S. subsidiary but that he, as an intelligent Canadian with a considerable amount of money, had no desire to be a dummy director of a U.S. corporation. He wanted to set up a company in Canada where he thought that company would make a lot more money.

An hon. Member: He is a capitalist.

Mr. Peters: Certainly he is a capitalist. Obviously he did not become socialist as a dummy director of an American subsidiary company. However, he as a Canadian believed that he could do better for himself and for his company on the Canadian scene. He was not opposed to the implementation of regulations which would give him control of that company in time. It has amused me to note that everyone who has voted for the incorporation of these companies and who has spoken in favour of them, when we finally made a breakthrough in one of these companies, has spoken against them. I am sure hon. members are aware of the time about a year ago when a company was set up with a Canadian identity and was supported by everyone here. No one opposed it.

I do not see why we should be concerned if this company does not get its charter under the terms requested by it. If it wishes to operate in Canada, as it has been doing for a number of years, then I am prepared to let it do so. I am not suggesting that the Aetna Insurance Company is a particularly good or a particularly bad company. I am just saying that it should not be given the rights and advantages of a Canadian citizen in the corporate world, without any of the responsibilities.

We give Mr. Humphrys, the superintendent of insurance, a great deal of responsibility to carry out on our behalf. I am surprised to note how many of the Senators, who have a great interest in insurance companies because they are on the board of directors of many of them, look to Mr. Humphrys for advice on whether or not to underwrite other companies. Mr. Humphrys is bound by the regulations we make or by the lack of them.

One of the things that really surprised me not long ago when dealing with an insurance company was that the company had agreed that within ten years they would have 51 per cent of the ownership of the company in the hands of Canadians. As a matter of fact, if they did not, they would be out of business. When they went to Mr. Humphrys they found that because of a regulation passed by this house, for reasons of which I am not aware, it was impossible for us to write a clause into this bill providing for 51 per cent control in the hands of Canadians. If the company were to get 51 per cent of their stock in the hands of Canadians, it would only be able to vote 10 per cent of its stock. I do not know how the officials arrive at this decision. There are only one or two people here today, and I suppose one would be the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), who would know about this. The provision has some relationship to negotiations with the Mercantile Bank at the time the banking legislation was being considered. I do not know why 51 per cent of the shares in the hands of Canadians would leave the company in the position of being able to vote only 10 per cent of the stock. Mr. Humphrys advised that only 49 per cent of the controlling shares can be divested from the parent company, or the company will technically lose control and only be able to vote 10 per cent of the stock.

The company was not prepared to do that, and I don't blame them. I really do not understand why this type of restriction is involved in this matter. As I say, I did not have the opportunity of being a member of the banking and commerce committee, so I am unfamiliar with the reasoning behind this legislation. I suggest that some members of our banking and commerce committee or some members who are here tonight who are interested in this matter should give some consideration to the reason for this regulation. It certainly surprised the corporation lawyer from the United States who looked into the matter. He could not understand why we would do this, and he was familiar with the regulations in many other countries. He pointed out to us that countries like Japan insisted on de facto ownership in the hands of nationals. This provision probably goes much further than the one we are suggesting.

Another thing which I do not understand is that Canadian Bell has divested all its stock, except perhaps 2 per cent, but is still controlled by the 2 per cent. Part of the reason lies in the system of distribution of stock, and the fact the 2 per cent is able to pick up a very large proxy vote. If only one person turns up at a scheduled meeting of stockholders, I suppose he is the majority and makes the decisions. In my opinion, the situation is very confused and should be clarified.

This company has been coming before us for a number of years, and may come before us for a number of years beyond this date. The company has been in Canada for a period of years, knows the Canadian scene and should be prepared to inform the House of Commons whether or not they would consider setting up a Canadian company in which, over a period of time, the parent company would divest itself of majority control, thus turning over ownership of the company to Canadians. If they are not willing to do this, I suggest they are whistling in the dark. It may be that the proposed rule 16-A will protrude into this sanctimonious hour and may have a detrimental effect on the hour. It is difficult to predict the future.

It seems to me the company is aware of our position. I have known the sponsor of this bill for some time, and I am sure he knows our position. I do not believe I am being unfair when I say he would be more comfortable in sponsoring this bill if a clause were written into it to provide for an effective Canadian ownership of the company. If the company wants to do business in Canada and operate out of Hartford, Connecticut, they have a right to do so. I know I was covered by this insurance company for nearly 15 years, and I did not find them an unusual company. I am now aware of the fact it is not a Canadian company, and perhaps I could have done better if I had been more selective.

If the company is going to operate in Canada and seek Canadian incorporation, then they should make an effort to ascertain from the committee at an early opportunity what steps they must take to be incorporated as a federal company. When they provide us with some guarantee that in a period of time, when they feel the company has become a viable economic unit—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order, please. I regret to advise the hon. member his time has expired.

[Translation]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order. A message has been received from the Senate informing this house that the Senate have passed Bill No. S-19, an act to amend the Navigable Waters Protection Act, and Bill No. S-22, an act respecting Gillespie Mortgage Corporation, to which concurrence of this house is desired.

[English]

It being seven o'clock, the time reserved for the consideration of private members business has expired.

At seven o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

PROCEDURE

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN FOURTH REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Blair that the fourth report of the special committee on procedure of the house, presented to the house on Friday, December 6, be concurred in, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield (p. 3762).

Mr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, when we rose at six o'clock I was saying how happy and pleased we all were with the speech of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen) and to learn that a new offer had been made to settle the dispute before us. As I understood it, if this proposed rule 16-A were temporarily set aside and the other proposed rules were adopted, then the government would take a new look at the rule with a view to settling the dispute, if possible to the satisfaction of all. I am sure that we are all very grateful that another effort will be made to settle the differences that have arisen in the house over the proposed new rules of procedure.

We were also pleased to learn that the government is keeping to the best possible traditions of the House of Commons of Canada in amending the proposed new rules of procedure in a way that should satisfy the great majority of the members of the house.

Having congratulated the Minister of Manpower and Immigration I should like also to congratulate the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin) for his excellent contribution to the debate this afternoon. However one thing he said was that all the newspapers were against the government and in support of the opposition in this dispute. I should like to remind both him and the house that the Brantford Expositor, which has been printed for the past 100 years in Brantford, Ontario, which is in my country supports the government in this debate. However, I am sure agreement will be reached.

I wish also to thank the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for his gracious and moderate speech in this debate. It was filled with gentle proddings to us all to endeavour to limit our speeches on issues before the house and to promote the business of the house more effectively than in times gone by. I believe the present government is trying to be a good successor to great Canadian governments of the past, as well as to make us the heirs of this great British tradition of parliamentary government that has existed for many generations and which has been furthered by men like Gladstone and others of historical importance, and perfected in recent times.

Mr. Bigg: And George Brown.

Mr. Brown: And George Brown of this country. I am happy that he bears my name, and also that he had a summer residence in the city of Brantford, Ontario. During the week he went to Toronto to publish the Toronto "Globe" and every week end retired to the city of Brantford.

Calm, shortened deliberations tailored to fit the time available for the sittings of this house in each and every year are both essential and demanding. We cannot fail to meet the challenge. Any attempt to put off the decision on a more efficient use of parliamentary time than has been the case in the past will not make us true to Canada, the land we all love so much. I am proud of our traditions, but I know—and I think we all know—that they should be improved, and improved greatly, in order to effect the proper dispatch of business before the House of Commons, and to make it more readily possible for parliament to meet the issues of the day and the challenges of our times. Failure to have a timetable for debate, and to tailor our debating time will set us all on a hopeless path, allowing for inadequate and second rate leadership for the Canadian people and for this country in the modern competitive world of today.

There are many in this house who fear that the government will misuse its power if this report is adopted. However, I want to say with great sincerity that in a democratic country there is just as much fear that an opposition composed of several parties will misuse its power as there is that the government will be guilty of a similar misuse. One way the government can misuse its power is by abdicating its responsibility to use the power that it has in order to carry out its legislative program in the interests of the Canadian people.

Speaking as one who has been a member of this house for a number of years I want us all to be able to say to the electorate, as William Ewart Gladstone did at the time of the second great reform bill of 1866, "You cannot fight against the future. Time is on our side."

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the words of the hon. member for Brant, one of the more serious and sincere members of this house, and in many ways I agree with the sentiments he expressed in his eulogistic closing remarks. When he says that time is on the side of the future may I point out that this institution has been here longer than any of us have been alive, and it will continue in some form long after we have departed.

This debate is not being continued for the sake of stirring up the polls. We are not trying to stir up the public merely because it is Christmastime, and because we think it ought to be interested in the procedural debate. Frankly I do not think that Canadians are terribly interested in this debate because I do not think they appreciate fully the significance of the main points being debated.

[Mr. Brown.]

This afternoon the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen) entered the debate, and his contribution certainly was entertaining and energetically delivered, even if his remarks had partisan political overtones. But I was surprised to see him buy the package so soon. After all, the wrapping is not off it. This afternoon we heard from the government side a qualified proposal with regard to the point we are debating. As one who always believed in what is commonly referred to as participatory politics, I wondered what the proposal meant. I know that the house leaders discussed certain matters, such as the Christmas recess, and that we are to come back on January 14. Other than that, before the Minister of Manpower and Immigration had made his remarks this afternoon, I was under the impression that there had been no consultation, without prejudice, about any proposal.

I only hope my hon. friend from Brant does not have too many children. I have a few and I can tell him that my children like to look under the tinsel of the wrapping to see what gifts there are under the tree. They get excited and they like to remove the tinsel. It is true that television has great persuasive powers, and that advertising can sway the opinion of many. However, that does not detract from my suggestion that much of what we have seen represents tinsel, and we do not really know what the underlying package is. In many ways the government is treating us like children waiting for Santa Claus, only they will not take off the tinsel from the gifts under the tree. We want to see what is under the tinsel, what is in the package. No doubt the hon. member for Brant was speaking with the approval of the cabinet. He made many fine statements; all the same we don't know what sort of present the government has for us since all we have seen, basically, is tinsel. That is the problem.

Although the Minister of Manpower and Immigration was most entertaining, it seemed to me that his participation was somewhat artificial. Without doubt the government received a mandate on June 25 to govern this country. It has the right to govern, even though the opposition parties may not like it. The government has its responsibilities to fulfil, and it ought to know, as it no doubt does, that tonight it has the power to cut off any debate in this house, after giving 24 hours notice that it wishes to impose the guillotine.

There was no need for the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) to lecture the house about the right of the government to govern; we accept that. Parties on both sides of the house have used the guillotine procedure. Governments of other, historical periods have used it. The question here is not whether the guillotine ought to be used, but the circumstances under which it may be used: That is the issue. There is no question here of the majority in the house being pitted against the minority. The basic question here is whether parliament shall be an effective instrument of the people, or merely efficient. I suggest respectfully that the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration in this debate have committed a form of parliamentary perjury in trying to build a man of straw. We know that on this side of the house we are in a minority, although I hasten to add that the opposition side obtained the votes of 54 per cent of the Canadian people.

I deplore the technique of the big lie and I suggest, seriously, that if politics is in disrepute tonight it is because men who ought to know better have perverted their principles for the sake of power. That is what I mean when I speak of parliamentary perjury.

I notice that an hon. member of the rump seems agitated. I suggest that if he wishes to participate in this debate, he should do so or he will discover that the government house leader has allocated his time. Unless an hon. member sits on the treasury benches he will have hardly any opportunity to speak.

Just consider that, Mr. Speaker. This debate began on Tuesday, December 10, and has continued for six days. Since the contribution of the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault), ten members from the government side have spoken. I think about 12 altogether have spoken from the government side, and I think I am the thirteenth speaker to talk on behalf of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Some hon. member says that is too many, but this is an issue which affects the fundamental framework of this chamber and a mere 12 members out of the 150, odd, opposite have participated. I think that some other intelligent members on that side would like to contribute to the debate. I would suggest that unless some of them come forward in the next day or two and speak, then there has already been an allocation of time in this debate so far as the government is concerned.

Being a backbencher, I think backbenchers should have a real interest in what this debate is all about. Yet only 12 members from the government side have spoken on this fundamental issue which affects parliament not only for today but for the future. What is it going to be like for a backbencher when an issue arises that involves his constituency? What is it going to be like when we get the massive, omnibus Criminal Code bill? As yet the government house leader has not answered the question I asked him several nights ago. I asked, on his figuring of 80 days left in this session, how many days he was prepared to allot in advance for the debate on the Criminal Code bill.

This debate is not over the right of the government to govern and bring in closure when it feels there is obstruction. The whole purpose of this debate has not been as suggested by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in his opening remarks, that there is a time for debate and a time for decision. Of course there is a time for debate and a time for decision, but there is no time in our parliamentary procedures for dictation before debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nowlan: That, Mr. Speaker, is the issue in this house.

This was an interesting afternoon, when the Minister of Manpower and Immigration spoke. We have not heard much from him lately, and he is one of the strong men on the government side.

An hon. Member: Was.

Mr. Nowlan: Anyway we have not heard much from him lately. We were not sure if he had slipped or eroded, but his parliamentary contributions are always interesting in this chamber. I was surprised and amazed at his logic this afternoon and the rationale he used to support 16-A.

The paradox, the irony is that this government, which has been so instrumental in trying to cut off every traditional concept that we have had in this country for 100 odd years, is now trying to rationalize its position by relying holus-bolus on the British system. Britain is a country of one homogeneous people with a uniform form of government, where you can get in a train, choo choo for two hours and cover the whole country.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Nowlan: Someone says shame. He does not know what he is talking about. This country is so different from that. For the benefit of those who are afraid of republicanism in this country and there are some who like our present monarchial form and who are against the republican system of government—I must say that tonight, after listening to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, the Queen of Canada can rest easy in her bed. She is certainly not going to be kicked out by any of the members on the treasury benches who rely so fundamentally on the British system to defend 16-A. Surely they are not going to kick that poor lady out of bed and reject her whole constitutional framework.

In like vein, so far as the Senate is concerned, it is secure forever and a day, because there is the House of Lords across the way, and they are pretty fundamental to the British form of government. I believe in a Canadian form of government and in a Canada taking the best from all worlds.

I suppose, Mr. Speaker, the next thing we are going to have is the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) in an amendment to the omnibus Criminal Code bill, standing up and saying that because they wear wigs in the courts in England we had better wear wigs in the courts in Canada.

After all the minister's rhetoric this afternoon, after an exhaustive research job done with all the staff at his disposal, he came up with three or four cases in the British system where an allocation of time had existed. He did not point out one case where there had been an allocation of time, other than on the committee and third stage of a bill, and the very example he used was after a bill had been in committee for ten days. Forgetting about the judicial principle that you cannot quote a case unless it is on all fours with the case at bar, the case the minister used was completely irrelevant to the issue in this debate. I have a photostatic transcript of the portion of the debate to which he referred, a portion he did not quote, and in it Aneurin Bevan, the hon. member for Ebbw Vale, made some pungent comments on the allocation of time motion.

The minister tried to justify 16-A by showing that four or five times there had been an allocation of time in the British system. This cannot be contradicted. If it can, I hope it will be corrected. Three or four times an allocation of time motion was used.

Mr. Whicher: Did it pass?

Mr. Nowlan: It passed by 297 votes to 243; it was pretty close. It has never been used other than on the committee stage, or later, and has never been used on more than one bill other than once, other than the example given by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, when it was used on two bills that were related and had come through the whole process back to back. That is no precedent to cite in this chamber as justification for 16-A. That is why the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and other members on this side can stand up and say that, so far as 16-A is concerned, it is completely unheard of in practical form and effect in any democratic parliament anywhere in the world.

It is an interesting commentary on this whole debate that, after all the dust of battle had settled, after the Minister of Manpower and Immigration had castigated some of the members in the opposition and supported the British system so completely, what does he come up with? He comes up with a proposal. I sincerely suggest that this should have been discussed beforehand with the house leaders, as are most proposals, but for the first time he advanced it on the floor of this chamber.

When a man from the treasury benches can stand up in this place, after six days of debate, and advance a proposal of change from a rigid, firm, inflexible position, that is the justification for our being against 16-A. That proposal did not come after a time limit had been imposed by hon. members opposite. It came after the free flow of debate, after some of the public got interested, after some of the papers became interested, and after a lot of hon. members became interested. I venture to say that when this debate started a majority of the government members did not understand the effect and implications of 16-A. By making that proposal this afternoon the minister justified this forum. The reason for this forum is to have suggestions and counter suggestions, proposals and counter proposals made on the floor of the house, open to the scrutiny of the public, so that a consensus can build.

We on this side want a consensus after debate. We don't want a computer before the debate even begins.

So far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, it is 16-A which sticks in the throat of any parliamentarian. It must stick in the throat of any parliamentarian, if he is worth his salt, because no parliamentarian in the world has accepted it.

• (8:30 p.m.)

An hon. Member: In Britain.

Mr. Nowlan: So far as I am concerned, that is an unfortunate comment. The member from Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid)—or whoever it is—missed some of the speeches, because it has never been used in the parliament of Britain other than in committee or in later stages. The very example the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen) put to us this afternoon came ten days after committee. It is an unfortunate thing as we come close to the charitable season of good will on earth and peace to all men that we have this package of reform that will revolutionize the procedures of this house, because this will not resolve our problems. If we take the British system and look at all the procedure points, so called, which they have, we should ask whether they have more or less problems today; is their parliamentary status and the status of the parliamentarians there any higher than it is in this country. I venture to say it is not.

I could philosophize. They are supposed to have a very modern efficient system. I suggest the state of parliament, in Britain, let alone the state of the member of parliament, is no higher than some people think it is here, because they have problems which will not be resolved by some of the procedures here. This is a form of parliamentary perjury which puts many things under suspicion, when better men know better what they are talking about.

This is a package of reform which some people feel may deform parliament. We might not agree with it, but it is there; it is a package of reform. I do not know whether the government has been playing a game of Russian roulette in trying to advance to the extreme, so that they can retreat to a more constructive position. I do not know this, because we just heard the first retreat this afternoon.

We on this side of the house are as completely dedicated to reform as is any member of the opposition. But we are not for reaction. I suggest in all seriousness that 16A, coming from a Liberal government that calls itself liberal, is the most reactionary proposal advanced by any party in any country anywhere. It is pure reaction. We are for rules, but we are not for rulers. I am afraid, and my colleagues share my belief, that whether he likes it or not, 16A makes a ruler of the government house leader. It makes him a czar of the Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nowlan: Members opposite clap about a czar of the Commons. They are not very good students of history, because one of the most reactionary forms of government ever known kicked out their czar in 1917. I say that 16-A has a potential for abuse. I do not say that the government house leader will intentionally abuse it, but who does he think he is?

An hon. Member: Hitler.

Mr. Nowlan: Has he ever been on a plane that went from Signal Hill in Newfoundland to Esquimalt; has he ever boarded a plane, travelled from coast to coast in a day and seen all the regions of the country; or has any government leader seen this country, the regions and its people? It is preposterous to think that any one man, before the debate on a bill even begins, should be authorized to stand in his place and say that the debate will be limited to two days or five days.

Rule 16-A is unnecessary with a majority government. The problems we have in this parliament could not all have arisen since June 25. There is a backlog of business because there have been elections and because we have had minority parliaments. In addition there have been many promises which have not been kept. But does any member of this house who has read the rule expect that 16-A will help a minority government? Is any government house leader going to stand in his place and tell us that in the twenty seventh parliament he would have moved an order restricting debate before it began? If so, I suggest that by doing so he would have committed parliamentary suicide for himself or his party.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, it is unnecessary with a majority government. It does not help a minority government. It is unnecessary with a majority government because with the closure procedure they can cut off any debate in 24 hours. I suggest that this rule is unjust and makes a mockery of the just society. What is the whole reason for the much proclaimed Bill of Rights? It is to protect the rights of minorities against majorities that sometimes might be off the beat.

I do not question the sincerity of the Prime Minister in his life-long interest in a bill of rights. But I do wish he would stop preaching the platitudes of the Bill of Rights, and at the same time practise the type of parliamentary reform we have here tonight.

With all respect to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration I suggest, as I said earlier, that in practice 16-A is completely unheard of in any parliamentary form of government in the British system. The unfortunate thing about this is that hon. members opposite do not seem to understand the scar tissue that is left by a debate which affects the rules of the house. There cannot be a debate, be it a pipe line debate, a defence production debate or any debate in which the combined opposition says no, without wounds being opened up.

Here we are in the 28th parliament with a government, which has a popular mandate, coming in at the first session and asking parliament for a rule which does not have the necessary experience behind it. I have only to look across at the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) and think back to a most interesting speech he gave in the House of Commons as recorded at page 1544 of Hansard in the year 1965. I know the minister remembers his speech better than I, because he gave it. I listened to the minister when he gave his speech in this debate on 16-A and the interesting thing is that he failed to point out what he said in respect of 15-A. Rule 15-A which has been in the rule books up until now, is not anywhere near as disastrous or as all-embracing as 16-A. What did he say about that? This is what he said as recorded at page 1544 of Hansard of that year:

> I am also greatly disturbed by paragraph 5 of the proposed standing order 15-A which provides as follows—

He then reads 15-A and gives very cogent reasons why we should be on guard about 15-A. Now he has changed his place, but I do not honestly believe his knowledge or policy has changed just because he changed his seat. I would hate to believe that. But perhaps he too is committed to parliamentary perjury; I do not know. The interesting thing is that after he reviews the fears and apprehensions he has about 15-A he ends up with this interesting paragraph as recorded at page 1548, wherein he says among other things that we have to change our rules. We all agree with that; but he adds this:

> I suggest the Government should reconsider some of these proposals so that they may be made clear.

This is in respect of 15-A which is nowhere near as extreme as 16-A.

> It should make some of the refinements that are necessary so that a ruthless government could not run roughshod over parliament, and generally make sure that all these changes are subject to review in the light of the experience that we gain after having made use of them for a few months.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Well, the former leader of the majority party, Mr. Pearson, never dared use 15-A and no experience has been gained. Yet in a new session, during which there has been no obstruction, no debate of undue length, the government is suggesting the use of 16-A. This rule is unnecessary, unjust and unfair. It will create scar tissue which will live with this parliament for a number of sessions. It will affect the good will and respect which hon. members have toward each other, and it will muddy the waters of the mutual confidence which is necessary for the passage of legislation.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that if we oppose the new rules, and in particular 16-A, we shall be going against the mood of the nation. Well, the Prime Minister may talk about the mood of the nation, but I suggest he is wrong in his estimation of the mood of this house and of its members.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: Not the majority.

Mr. Nowlan: The members of this house are in favour of reform, but they are not in favour of regimentation. This proposal will result only in more speed. We have all seen the speed with which events are dealt with by the television cameras just outside. I personally think they should be placed inside the chamber so that our debates are not redundant. It is getting so bad that those who sit on the treasury benches are wearing blue shirts, so that every time they make a statement they can look good outside. Television in this chamber would make debates relevant, not redundant, as so many of them are today. There is a difference between stability in legislation and sterility of legislation; there is a difference between making effective use of the talents of new members and this new rule in the name of so-called efficiency.

There is one expert who has not yet been quoted, a former member of this house who has had a great deal of experience with the rules. I refer to a lady called Pauline Jewett who wrote much on the subject of our rules, and I would refer now to a statement she made about the reform of parliament in the Journal of Canadian Studies for November, 1966. This makes the quotations used by the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault) seem somewhat archiac, no matter how interesting the statements by my right hon. friend from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker).

She admits that since the 27th parliament there has been a fundamental change. The limitation of time spent on estimates, the shortening of the question period, the abolition of the dinner period, the abolition from appeals from rulings by Mr. Speaker, the provision of one hour's notice to be given on certain questions of privilege, have all led to the more effective conduct of business. So, contrary to all one reads, the situation has changed a great deal in the last three or four years. We tend to forget this. Miss Jewett writes to the effect that there have been substantial changes in procedure, but that the government has failed to improve opportunities for new members to prepare for debates and take part in them. She says, on page 13:

> At any rate, so rapidly was legislation processed in the first session of the 27th parliament that the cabinet was occasionally hard-pressed to keep the flow of bills, particularly of major bills like medicare, going forward. The most urgently needed reform now may well be the reorganization of departmental and cabinet machinery to secure greater efficiency in the preparation of government bills.

She goes on to suggest there should be someone in the Prime Minister's office whose job it would be to make sure that a regular flow of bills was being maintained. These are the view of a writer who is no friend of this side of the house but who is an acknowledged political scientist of considerable experience.

Looking across this chamber, I see the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. I have listened to the protests he has made so often about the right of collective bargaining. We have all heard him say that you cannot interfere with that process. Does he suggest that 16-A gives an opportunity for collective bargaining? Does he believe it gives adequate time for debate? Behind him on the benches opposite I see many hon. members who have been mayors of cities, chairmen of school boards, and so on. Do they believe that the introduction of 16-A to the proceedings of a city or town council, or of a school board, would improve the deliberations of such a council or board? I do not doubt that a good many mayors, a good many chairmen of school boards, might like to have such a rule, but before they agree to it I would be surprised if the members of the council or board did not slice their throats.

If the hon. member for Trois Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) wishes to make a speech, he can do so at any time.

During the election campaign hon. gentlemen opposite made a special pitch for the involvement of youth in our affairs. They are reading every day how youths are swarming over college campuses, breaking in on meetings of university senates, and otherwise registering protest. Is there any one of the younger members opposite who flocked to the banners of the flower people on June 25, who would take a seat in a university senate or on a board of governors and acquiesce when the president of the university or the chairman of the board of governors came in with an agenda which allowed for 20 minutes discussion of one subject, three minutes discussion of another and ten minutes discussion of a third? If they were to do so, I suggest the present disturbances would end in complete unrest.

I can suggest a place where the Prime Minister might take this rule 16-A. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) might show him how to use it. I am thinking of the federal-provincial conference. The premiers attend; there is a debate. But sometimes it is hard to find out what they have decided. If the new model of democracy is to be debate and then decision, let us have debate under rule 16-A at the next federal-provincial conference, and see how it will react on harmonious federal-provincial relations.

If this rule is not good enough for the federal-provincial conference, why is it good enough for the parliament of Canada? We have listened to a quotation from a speech by Lord Morrison of Lambeth. The hon. member quoted only one section of it. He failed to quote the passage which appears at page 224 and which I should now like to put on record:

> Personally, I thoroughly dislike the guillotine. It is justified in conditions of real obstruction and national emergency. But unless there is genuine co-operation and fairness in its application, the guillotine can make a mockery of the legislative process.

• (8:50 p.m.)

That is what Lord Morrison of Lambeth said about the guillotine. But more important than that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote for members of the opposition something that is called "An Appeal for Realism in Politics" written by the committee for political realism. This was a seven-man committee. Two of the authors of this paper were a man called Pierre-Elliott Trudeau and a man called Marc Lalonde. This is a report written for the "Canadian Forum" in the May issue of 1964. It was also reprinted in "Cité Libre". It is called the Canadian Manifesto and is most interesting. I quote these words on page 32 of the "Canadian Forum"—as I say, these are not my words but this is the new politics—of only four years ago, and I wonder whether the Prime Minister and Mr. Lalonde will practise what they then preached:

> The opposition parties must accept their share of the responsibility for keeping the public so little and so badly informed.

I agree with that. Then we find these words:

> The opposition is supposed to force the government to define their policies and to furnish the public with all relevant information. The opposition is supposed to proclaim the true problems of the people—

This is the important thing and the whole purpose of this debate.

> —for it is the conscience of the government.

That is, the opposition is the conscience of the government. Let me read these words:

> Whole sections of society could be completely ignored if the opposition prostitutes its function for the sake of short term political advantage.
> At the same time, however, the present state of our parliamentary mechanism is such that the opposition, even when it is vigilant, is virtually helpless in the face of the resources available to the government. The system must be reformed to give the opposition at state expense the tools which are necessary for it to fulfil its important and true role.

I agree with that. I am coming to the conclusion, Mr. Speaker. The opposition, not the cabinet, is the conscience of the government. Can you put a cowl on a conscience? Can you put a time clock on a conscience? Can you put it through a computer? I suggest that is what hon. gentlemen opposite are suggesting.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Does the house give unanimous consent to the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I am coming to the conclusion of my remarks. I wanted to read further from the Canadian Manifesto because it follows on about the question of conscience. At page 33—and we are talking about a democracy—it says:

> Democratic rule must be maintained at all costs. It is a matter which we will not compromise.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Mr. Nowlan: I will wait until hon. members opposite stop, Mr. Speaker. The whole purpose of this debate is to try to point out that there is some right of a minority, within reason. The Prime Minister, I hope, would like to be reminded of what he wrote in 1964. He said this:

> It is a matter which we will not compromise.

He is speaking about democratic rule. This passage continues:

> The truly democratic traditions have few roots in Canada, where Indians, Metis, orientals, Doukhobors, Hutterites and dissidents of all kinds have been victimized one after the other by the intolerance of the majority. Quebec itself is just emerging from past regimentation and authoritarianism. We will fight any action that tends to erode fundamental liberties and democratic institutions.
> It is subject to these conditions that we wish to work for the good of the community.

I ask whether the Prime Minister wishes to reconsider what he wrote in 1964. He said that the opposition is the conscience of the government, that you cannot shrug it off, you cannot put a time clock on it and you cannot put it through a computer. In a democratic institution we must have the right of debate and the right to dissent. This makes us free, and in this forum it is the right to debate which defines the democratic institution about which Mr. Trudeau talked.

I suggest that we on this side of the house have to consider what the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen) said. We have to take the tinsel off; but we are not prepared to agree to give effect to rule 16-A as it presently sits in the committee report. I ask this government not to prostrate its good will of the majority of public opinion, that I think is still riding with it, for a power that the majority does not need and must not have.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I should like to know whether the hon. member for Annapolis Valley would accept a question?

Mr. Nowlan: Surely.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. member will need the unanimous consent of the house, because the time of the hon. member for Annapolis Valley has expired.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I have just a brief question going back to the earlier confrontation we had in this debate. The hon. member referred to the statement made earlier by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr.

MacEachen) about the British system of closure and guillotine. Would he be willing to accept here in Canada the same system that is in existence in the mother of parliaments?

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I am a member of a party that does not take all the tablets from the mount. We have to discuss these matters. We are going to have a caucus tomorrow to decide what our position will be. The proposals of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration may have put us on the horns of a dilemma. This is the whole purpose of debate. What would hon. members opposite gain by this proposal, if they had the guillotine? That is all I have to say, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to see the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen) back in the house. I was a little surprised to hear him say that the opposition—I think he was looking at the Conservatives but he probably included us as well—had little intellectual support or foundation for their arguments against proposed rule 16-A. The minister then proceeded to speak for at least 40 minutes, and it was probably closer to an hour, expounding what I regard as a rather illogical and anti-intellectual justification of his own position.

If I understood his arguments correctly, he was saying, "Look what has happened in the British Isles. Ergo: It should happen here." It seems to me that the most elementary class that one could take in the field of logic would teach you that this is a rather fallacious argument. If the principle under discussion is the practice of democracy, and you point to another parliamentary tradition and suggest that there has been a movement toward the centralization of authority and power in the system, it seems to me that you are not in a valid position to conclude from that that we should go on in the same way. One must argue, on independent grounds, for an authoritarian structure within a democratic society, if that is what you believe in—which of course, I do not. So I was not in the least bit persuaded by the arguments put forward by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. It takes much more to be convinced of the desirability of a system than to have it demonstrated that this is done elsewhere and to be told "It is there, fellows; you must follow suit". If you want to have that kind of structure, it has to be argued for on quite independent grounds, and this I suggest the minister did not do.

I should like now to pursue what I think is the central issue in this debate, and that is the problem of democratic decision making. It seems to me it is very useful to look at a purported democratic society in terms of two categories. Its governmental institutions and its private or non-governmental institutions should be assessed in terms of the degree of democracy by providing answers to the three following questions: First, does the majority have decision-making power directly, or indirectly by controlling those who do; second, are decisions reached on the basis of a method involving ample and open discussion about differing proposals or conflicting goals; third, are minorities allowed to exist on a continuing basis which will enable them to have the potential of converting their minority position into a majority one?

I suggest that a society and its institutions can be assessed to be more or less democratic according to how well they meet these three criteria. Therefore, in our debate on the desirability of the proposed new rules for this house we should keep this in mind. It is worth noting at this time that efficiency is not an essential characteristic of a democratic society. Such societies or institutions may or may not be efficient. Whatever the case may be, the degree of efficiency does not affect our judgment concerning the degree of democracy characterizing an organization, institution or society. It has been argued sometimes that democratic institutions are likely to be more efficient. The contrary, of course, has also been argued, and perhaps even more frequently. My point is that efficiency, although at times worthy of being desired and pursued, has no essential or even important connection with the practice of democracy.

Efficiency, or rather a person's commitment to it, can, however, affect a democratic institution. Generally speaking, the more deeply a person or institution becomes committed to efficient action, the less likely will that person or institution be committed to democracy, more particularly to the means of democratic decision making. Expressed in another way, the man or institution more deeply committed to efficiency is also likely to be more prone to favour the concentration of power. If that man or institution also regards himself as being democratic, he is likely to confuse democracy with efficiency and is likely to be unaware that it is power, not democracy, that he is pursuing. If he abandons democratic practices, he is also likely to do so in the name of democracy.

I suggest that this is what the minister was indulging in this afternoon. I suggest that it is this confusion which lies behind what is involved in this debate. The government, particularly the house leader and the Prime Minister, have a faulty notion of democracy and a veritable lust for efficiency; and related to both—in what causal sequence I do not know—is the strong desire for concentrated power in this government.

The essential purpose of the rules of the House of Commons is to maximize in a delicate balance the claims of democracy and the requirements of efficiency. The legitimate desire of the government is to rule effectively, and we must have procedures by which they will meet with considerable success. Ruling effectively, however, ceases to be legitimate when the opposition loses its effective right to oppose.

Already much has been said in this debate about the fact that the vast majority of the proposed changes in the rules are accepted, and indeed were proposed, by members on both sides of the house. Although a number of these changes will aid the opposition in its important task as critic of the government, I think it is true to say, and this bears emphasizing, that the effect of the majority of acceptable changes will be to enable the government to operate more efficiently.

In supporting these measures, therefore, the opposition has revealed in unmistakable terms its commitment to the progressive reform of the rules of the House of Commons. We in the New Democratic party believe that the important test of a government, apart from the question of democratic procedures in decision making, is how well it meets the needs and requirements of the Canadian people, what it is doing about housing, about a just system of taxation, about income redistribution, about regional economical disparities and the redistribution of power, about unemployment and about aid to developing nations. These are the very important questions that any government must be concerned about; and if for no other reason than to relieve the government of excuses, we would certainly like to see this debate come to an end so that they could get on and deal with these very serious matters.

What we have opposed is what the Leader of the Opposition and others have appropriately described as closure in advance. It seems to me to be completely irrelevant whether or not closure in advance is to be found in other parliamentary systems. We have opposed and will continue to oppose, even if it is brought back to the committee, any form of standing order 16-A. By giving the government house leader the unilateral authority to set time limits in advance on the duration of debate on matters to be brought before us, we would be abandoning a crucial part of our democratic heritage. Again I repeat that I care not one whit whether other parliamentary systems have also abandoned it.

I suggested earlier that one of the tests of democratic decision making is that policies must be reached in the context of ample and open discussion. In recent years students of parliamentary government, from Bassett and Durbin to Jennings, Dawson and MacIntosh, have indicated that in modern parliaments the opportunity to criticize government proposals is of fundamental importance and that what is crucially important is to maintain the strength of the opposition.

There is little hope for the opposition to get the government to make changes of substance in its proposals, but there is the possibility, and this is the serious question I think, of presenting to the public via parliamentary debate alternative views about policies and about kinds of societies.

There are two very important effects of this process of debate. First, it forces the government to reveal its reasons for acting. In doing this it also makes it more likely that government laws will be defensible laws, and government rules defensible rules. In short, this process makes it more likely that a governed country will be governed well. The second important consequence of this democratic process of public debate is that it enables a party with minority support to build, over a period of months or years, that minority into a majority. Only by having the time to show its ability in discussion can the rational foundation for belief in an opposition party as a credible alternative be established. Only arbitrary or authoritarian governments should be interested in denying or inhibiting this process.

However, this is exactly what the government will be doing if it uses its majority to force the proposed standing order 16-A upon us. Even if it is referred back to the committee, if it is the understanding of the government that rule 16-A will be revived once again, we cannot accept it. for rule 16-A or any other alternative form of the same procedure would turn parliament into a merely consultative body before which the government would appear at intervals to seek formal ratification of its decisions. I suggest in all seriousness it would not in principle be unlike the supreme soviet in the Soviet Union. Debate would be of the most perfunctory kind. There would be pseudo discussion in a semi-democratic institution. We cannot permit this to happen, whether or not it has happened elsewhere. The only serious opposition in society would remain with the press, television and other outside organs of opinion. I repeat this is a very real possibility. Many serious students of government have suggested this has already happened to western democracy. It has been argued that the opposition no longer provides the serious criticism of government, but that it is provided by the press and other outside organs.

On some matters the house leaders of all parties will be able to agree in advance that debate need not take long. But on many issues of public policy, the only rational way of deciding on the necessary time for discussion is in fact to let the debate proceed, to let the issue unfold itself, so to speak. Democrats from Pericles to John Stuart Mill have stressed the important fact that truth and significance can best be revealed in thorough and systematic discussion. Any issue may become a great issue during the process of debate. The voice of the people must be heard through their representatives on both sides of the house. The people, in turn, must be informed by means of the press, radio and television about what opponents of the government think is of significance.

On this point, Mr. Speaker, I am dismayed, for example, by the fact that no member of the Liberal party has risen to criticize the proposed standing order 16-A. Ever since the Labour party has been in power in Britain it has had one backbench revolt after another. When it formed the government the Conservative party in Great Britain had a number of backbench revolts on issues of concern to individual members. However, in this debate, not one Liberal member has stood up to criticize what his government is doing here. I find this very disturbing. Surely, it is not a unique ability of members of the opposition and the vast majority of newspaper writers in this country that enables them to see the dangers in 16-A. There must be a few Liberals around who also recognize these dangers. Perhaps the fact they do not voice their opinions further confirms the view that our government and cabinet system have already become so centralized in the office of the Prime Minister that the backbench members on the government side unconsciously think it would be highly inappropriate for them to seriously oppose their government's policy.

I suggest that there is no essential connection between efficiency and democracy, but there is a relationship between efficiency and the concentration of power. I suggest that the man who is strongly tied to efficiency is also the man who is prone to concentrate power. The concentration of power is antithetical to democracy.

The proposed standing order 16-A is merely the most recent act of a government and Prime Minister assiduously pursuing technocratic efficiency. They are at the same time concentrating power. No serious person could possibly conclude otherwise.

If one talks to the majority of the academics across this country, most of whom supported the Liberals in the last election, he will ascertain how they feel. I suggest the Liberal backbenchers should conduct a survey of political science teachers across this country to see what they think of the Prime Minister these days.

Earlier in this session, the Prime Minister announced the cabinet roster system. By relieving cabinet ministers from the responsibility of being in the house each day to answer questions, two anti-democratic effects result. The first is that members of parliament have fewer opportunities to direct questions to all those responsible for governing. Second, the power of the Prime Minister is increased. Only the Prime Minister is here each day. This means that only he has the opportunity of keeping informed about all the interests and areas of concern of members of parliament, that is to say the interests of the Canadian people. This means, of course, that having day to day contact with the issues, and being the only member of cabinet acquainted with them, his position in cabinet must be immeasurably increased. He must have more power of persuasion, more influence over his fellow cabinet members. The roster system, then, is certainly a system that increases the power of the Prime Minister.

After the announcement of the roster system we learned that a series of regional desks was being established. Regional desks, a democrat might assume, would be set up so that the elected people most directly connected with the citizens of the country would occupy those regional desks or have representation on them. But no, instead of those having the most direct access to the people being associated with the regional desks, we have the Prime Minister and only the Prime Minister having this direct contact. Once again, I would suggest that the power of the Prime Minister is thereby increased immeasurably, and will be in the future. We shall see that the power of members of parliament, those who are in most immediate contact with the people, will be further downgraded. Once again I suggest in all seriousness, in terms of our parliamentary system of government, that democracy has suffered a set-back in this country. If we had regional desks established on a proper basis, then members of parliament would occupy those regional desks, rather than the agents or representatives of the Prime Minister.

If there is a common factor linking the unrest in the western world amongst workers and students I suggest that common link, whether we are talking about students and workers in Czechoslovakia, whether we are talking about students and workers in France or students in North America, is a profound democratic movement in the world. This is true, whether our naïve misguided government recognizes it or not. What is taking place is a very marked reaction to the concentration of power. This is true of the Czechs. It is true of young Frenchmen, it is true of young Canadians and young Americans in universities. I am sure this movement is going to affect us profoundly in the next two decades. It is something to which we should pay very close attention.

With the exception of the small elitist and non-liberal minority in its midst, it is something concerning which I think human beings in the mid-twentieth century should offer profound encouragement and profound praise. There is growing up a generation in all the industrial countries of the western world which has decided it is not going to accept irresponsible power, irresponsible authority, nor are its members even going to accept within a democratic society centres of highly concentrated power. They want it redistributed. This, I suggest, takes us back to the old, much more desirable form of democracy. I, for one, wish them every success.

It seems to me that it is within this particular social context of what is happening outside the House of Commons that we should be examining what is going on here. The pressures of the age are for a less rigid, more open, more democratic and decentralized society.

• (9:20 p.m.)

The pressures of the present government, however, are quite the opposite. Our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in the name of efficiency and democracy is concentrating power in his own office and in the cabinet, but more particularly in the former. His frequently commented upon discussions with young people do not, in my opinion, represent a shift to more democracy at all. These are pseudo-democratic symbols. At best they deceive some of the young into thinking that they have a direct influence upon the Prime Minister, though certainly none of the intelligent young to whom I have talked were taken in. However, a number are. At worst these discussions enable the Prime Minister, whether consciously or not, to manipulate both the young and the public at large. This is not what democracy is about; it is utterly ridiculous to think that it is.

To increase democracy is to decentralize decision making and to maximize free discussion, especially in institutions that have power.

If the Prime Minister wishes to reverse the authoritarian trend of his government, then he could make a good beginning by withdrawing, not only at the present time but even from future consideration, the proposed standing order 16-A. If he does not do so, then our party, and I am sure members of the other opposition parties, will continue with this profoundly important debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, as a new member and after hearing my colleagues take part in this interesting debate, I wish to make my modest contribution.

Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed, first of all, to situate the riding of Laval which was previously represented by the present member for Ahuntsic (Mr. Rochon) who now occupies the chair and to whom I would like to pay a special tribute as well as to all my electors.

My riding is located in the city of Laval which is also represented in the house by the Postmaster General and member for Duvernay (Mr. Kierans) and your humble servant, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Roy (Laval): I do not intend to approach this debate from a legal angle, because God knows that enough hon. members are concerned with that side of the question. I would rather make a few remarks based, I think, on common sense.

I listened to all members who spoke before me, and I must admit, Mr. Speaker, that their remarks were most appropriate. However, enough has been said on all the aspects of the problem and we should now reach a decision, because the opposition members are always repeating the same ideas.

Mr. Speaker, we must be realistic. I have high respect for all legislators who spoke before me in this house since confederation. They have surely safeguarded democracy and I do not think that the proposed amendments to parliamentary procedure would interfere with any aspect whatever of our democracy.

Democracy must be functional. To this diversity of form were added different ways of adapting the very concept of democracy to the political, economic and social evolution of the contemporary world.

We do not want to change basic principles. This democracy has established freedom in all its forms as the most complete expression of human rights, and we are aware of it.

Demagogy is a perversion of democracy and makes use of the most sordid interests and the most condemnable proceedings to lead a nation to ends which are contrary to its prosperity, its greatness and its honour.

We must adapt ourselves to the needs of our time and the exigencies imposed upon us by our world which is in constant evolution and very much influenced by a highly competitive economy.

We cannot continue to impose on the population an outdated procedure, an archaic system, which does not meet our aspirations any longer, that is, protect the interests of the people of Canada and assure the economic development of the country.

All business concerns, whatever their field of activity, have standards of productivity which are the result of efficiency. Can we allow 100-year old administrative services when we have to administer a budget of over $10 billion? Would present members of the house accept a system or a way of life which would be 50 years old?

For the last 12 years, I have worked in private enterprise and in co-operatives, and the efficiency standards were not different in either sectors.

The co-operative movement belongs specifically to members who care for their principles and who make no exception to the rule of efficiency.

I heard my colleagues mention that parliament could not be compared with a business firm. I am of that opinion, in certain fields, but why should it be inefficient in the legislative field?

Politics, as mentioned by the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Marchand), must be a tool to serve the nation and one cannot, under various excuses, use the nation for political interests.

Our commercial enterprises are expecting decisions of our legislators, to undertake the development of their industrial or farming business. We respect democratic principles, but we would not like to hide behind this so-called democratic philosophy the reality of economic problems which we have to face.

• (9:30 p.m.)

This afternoon, the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin) spoke to us of reforms to the parliamentary procedure. We agree with the idea. But I feel that, the members will be just as efficient in committees. The hon. member for Charlevoix was quite concerned about the publicity and the press. We agree with that also. We appreciate the fact that these things are done objectively, but the press is also invited to attend the sittings of the committees.

If we prolong our debates, we will only serve the interests of politicians thirsting for political capital or prestige; we will not achieve the objectives approved by the Canadian people in the last June 25 election.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians want to revive the parliamentary procedure. They want renewed Canadian economic expansion. They are aware of the future awaiting our young country under the leadership of a dynamic Liberal government in which they have put their trust.

Mr. Speaker, we have at the head of our country an extraordinary man, a man who was given an unquestionable mandate on June 25 last, a man who stirred the interest of our young people in administrative political action.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Rondeau: Who is that?

Motion for Concurrence in Report

Mr. Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada decided on "one nation". It rejected the various parties that did not represent the idea of amalgamation.

Mr. Rondeau: Who are they?

Mr. Roy (Laval): That was the policy of our Progressive Conservative friends, including Mr. Camp, the right hon. member for Prince Albert, (Mr. Diefenbaker) and Mr. Faribault who, in addition to being defeated by the present member for Gamelin (Mr. Portelance), lost his deposit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, there must be a reason why the people of Canada—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I should like to remind the hon. members that according to usage in this house when a member makes his maiden speech he must not be interrupted.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Roy (Laval): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. Is the hon. member for Shefford rising on a point of order?

Mr. Rondeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Until such time as the parliamentary procedure is amended, a member may not read his speech in this house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. member for Papineau on a point of order.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to the hon. member who has just resumed his seat that if he studied the standing orders of the house a little bit more, he would realize that a member may read his maiden speech in the house.

Mr. Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, when I studied psychology in school, I learned that when you cannot rise to the same level as your opponent or the man with whom you are conversing, you try to bring him down.

[Mr. Rondeau.]

Mr. Speaker, we are privileged in having, at the head of this government, a man and a cabinet of which all Canada can be proud. All countries in the world now have their eyes on Canada, the country with a future, and we are proud to be Canadians.

I heard, this afternoon, my hon. colleague for Charlevoix insinuate all sorts of things. However, I have in hand the report of the last Gallup poll of November 20, and I quote:

[English]

Just before the opening of Parliament, a September 1968 study by the Gallup poll showed that the Liberals had increased their popular support from 45.5 per cent actually obtained in the June election to 49 per cent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I think he is out of order.

Mr. Roy (Laval): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The poll concluded by saying that the figure now stands at 52 per cent.

That mandate, Mr. Speaker, we must discharge with all the expected flexibility within a more expeditious democratic system of committees.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the members of the opposition who have done their work so well. We have noticed their determination so far, and again tonight, and we noted all their remarks.

However, with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell them that, last Friday, I attended a meeting of the Liberal federation of the riding of Laval and that the report of the special committee on changes to the parliamentary procedure was discussed. They obtained unanimous approval. It may be said: Granted, they are supporters. But Saturday, I met some members of the opposition party who told me that they fully approved that initiative.

If my dear colleagues on the left allow me to give them a single bit of advice, I shall tell them that if they continue to filibuster, the rump is going to invade all this side of the house.

Last Monday, I was listening to the honourable member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault), and as he spoke I could see faces getting red. I do not know why, but if I were to ask my colleague for Hull (Mr. Isabelle), he would tell me perhaps quite candidly, that one turns blue before passing away.

Therefore, I can come to the conclusion that by getting red in the face our colleague, the member for Burnaby-Seymour, definitely put on the right track this good medicine which he served to our very good members of the opposition because they seem to be even more aggressive.

Before closing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to inform you of my reaction when I listened to the right hon. member for Prince Albert for whom I have always had a certain admiration. He did not seem perfectly at ease last Friday because he served us a main dish which we certainly could not call a "pièce de resistance" but rather a salad sprinkled with gall and vinegar.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Mr. Roy (Laval): He repeated that if the Prime Minister were among his audience he would have made other remarks. I concluded therefore that he still considered himself Leader of the Opposition. I even noticed that his charming wife, who was in the gallery, left the house before the end of his speech. At all events, I give the runner a chance, especially if he is winded.

Mr. Speaker, I think the report presented by the special committee on procedure, after having held 26 meetings, should be agreed to.

My colleagues in the opposition have quoted some remarkable excerpts from various conferences. We duly appreciated these glimpses of yesteryear, but we wish now to turn to the future and to establish a workable democratic system geared to the economic requirements created by our century of efficiency.

Before concluding, Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) and the members of the committee who have held 26 meetings in less than 3 months to draw up these new rules.

Adoption of the report presented by the special committee on the procedure of the house will allow us to plan our work more efficiently and to serve better the interests of the people.

[English]

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege I would like to congratulate the hon. member for making such an excellent speech this evening and, if I might just take half a second, to say that this is all the more reason why backbenchers should never be restricted from this great activity in the parliamentary procedures of this house.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Bechard): Order.

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Fish.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Speaker, there is no excuse for ignorance, and there is an example of it. In rising to take part in the debate on the motion before the house I would like first to associate myself with other hon. members on this side of the house, all of whom have stressed the obvious need for reform, and indeed our party's willingness to support and see adopted the vast majority of the reforms proposed. Again, Mr. Speaker, not unlike my colleagues I feel that there are certain proposed changes that, if adopted, will have the effects of destroying the essential functions of parliament, of destroying the effectiveness of our parliament especially the opposition's role which is an integral and important part of the constitutional organization of parliament.

Mr. Speaker, people across the country are shocked by what the government is trying to do in this motion. Newspaper comment has been unanimously critical. The government has made no case whatever for the necessity of measures that by their very nature are arbitrary, extreme and restrictive on parliament's freedom. This measure is designed for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who sits in his seat, and when we raise questions that are of extreme importance to the province of Newfoundland, shrugs his shoulders and says "ditto." We cannot forget the fact that a few months ago in this house the Prime Minister said, "We are the masters." Now he wants to prove it, Mr. Speaker.

In my opinion, sir, if parliament is to be preserved as a living institution Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition must be able fearlessly to perform its functions. When it properly discharges them the preservation of our freedom is assured.

History, Mr. Speaker, has taught us that freedom always dies when criticism ends. I say now, sir, to the Prime Minister, to the members of the government and to all other Liberal members that you cannot, I repeat cannot, hold a stop watch on free speech. This, sir, I contend is what the government is aiming to do. It is aiming to hold a stop watch on free speech, and I am telling them now it will not work.

According to the Prime Minister's own statements and the statements of other government spokesmen, what we are confronted with is an attempt by the government to control the procedures of parliament. Sir, I am sure it is a well known fact and established as one of the oldest traditions and the foundation of our freedom, that parliament controls its own procedures. I say to you, sir that a controlled parliament is not a free parliament. A controlled parliament is a mechanical toy for the government to play with. Sir, speaking as one member of this assembly, of this parliament, I say now that I was not, and indeed we were not elected to exercise that role. I will say this, sir, that if any hon. member of this house, on this side or on the government side, is prepared to accept that role he does not deserve the confidence and the trust that has been placed in him by the people. I say, Mr. Speaker, that he is not worthy of the honour to sit in this house and to be part of this great institution, the preservation of which has cost the lives of so many of our fellow Canadians.

Let me tell hon. members opposite, sir, that something more is at stake here than a mere question of procedure. What is at stake is the very essence and meaning of parliament. I ask you, are we to have an opposition that opposes, that is able to oppose a government, or are we to have an opposition whose hands are tied, an opposition gagged by the government? I don't think, Mr. Speaker, that this will work. In all fairness, sir, I don't think an opposition can function properly when it is gagged and its hands tied, unable to oppose because of rules imposed on this house.

I ask you, sir, are we to have a parliament that is free to talk or a parliament that is stifled before debate begins? I say to you, sir, that the government is attempting to produce a monster by a shotgun wedding between the American and the British systems. We must speak as men, Mr. Speaker, and we know that shotgun weddings do not usually work.

I suggest to you that the government, the Prime Minister and the house leader are proposing, as I have said, a shotgun wedding between the American and the British systems and, sir, it will not work. Our system has been developed over 100 years and has native attributes which cannot be compared with either of the other systems. In any case it should be neither one nor the other, and it certainly cannot be both.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Every time there has been an erosion of freedom or thought, the excuse has been that this has been necessary to improve efficiency. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) and the Prime Minister simply are the most recent editions in a long line of freedom eroders who use efficiency as an excuse for their actions. I say, sir, that what the government is proposing should be done by agreement and compromise. This is the only basis upon which a free parliament can function. If it is to be done by the government majority, used as an instrument to crush the opposition, then I feel there should be a full day's debate. I contend that the two hour limit is an insult to parliament. Parliament is not something that can be turned off and on like a tap. This house labours under sufficient handicaps now, when the Prime Minister and his ministers, after tying the hands of the house, run out and tell their stories before the television cameras. Even under our existing rules the Prime Minister today manages to do much of parliament's business outside the house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Carter: I am sure hon. members will agree that hardly a night goes by when either the Prime Minister or some other ministers do not appear on national television to say unchallenged things they do not dare say in parliament where they would be challenged. It seems very strange to me that ministers who do not have to come in here and face questioning, because they are permitted to be away from the house on so many days in the week, are able to find the time to give their answers before the television cameras. I say that we now have a videotape government. It is a government that hides in isolation, with the ministers appearing only when they are assured of preferential treatment. Is it any wonder that we cannot get any action on behalf of the Newfoundland fishing industry or in respect of the abandonment by the Canadian National Railways in Newfoundland?

A new principle has been written into the rules of parliament, and that new principle is one of government arrogance. Both the house leader and the Prime Minister are using the suggested need to put through a massive and beneficial program as a reason for butchering the rights of parliament. I ask the house leader, where is this program? It is not on the order paper. Does it exist only in the mind of the Prime Minister or in the mind of the house leader? Why do they not list these measures in detail; why are they so secretive? I ask the Prime Minister, where is the promise of his just society? I have been told by people that there never has been such barren legislation on the order paper. I ask whether the house leader is reluctant to disclose the government's proposed legislation because he wants to change the rules first, paralyze parliament, and then bring in this rather mysterious legislation which they say they want but do not reveal?

As I have already stated, one of the oldest traditions and a foundation of our freedom is the assumption that parliament controls its own procedure. The second oldest principle is parliament's right to have grievances redressed prior to voting supply. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, who obviously has addressed himself to the task with a dedication worthy of a better cause, suggested that he would restore vigour to the supply procedures of this house. I ask him how this is possible, if supply is taken out of the house. The hon. member must know that grievances cannot be redressed in committees which are of an investigative nature, and not deliberative. These procedures remove from parliament the right to have grievances redressed. The purpose of supply and ways and means is, first, to examine and criticize the spending and taxing policies of the government. Second, and equally important, is the fact that it presents an opportunity to criticize the administration of government departments. One does not criticize in standing committees; one asks questions. We have lost the right to criticize as well as the right to voice opinions.

The government is asking the opposition to limit its own power to oppose. It is asking the government to gag parliament. If this bill is allowed to pass I contend that members of parliament will become dumb driven cattle, and parliament will be as obsolete as the pyramids. Parliament, sir, will be the tomb and not the defender of Canadian freedom.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

PUBLIC SERVICE—SUPERANNUATED FEDERAL EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR INCREASED PENSIONS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on Monday of this week, December 16, as recorded in Hansard at page 3976, I put this question to the Prime Minister:

> In view of the right hon. gentleman's desire to extend Christmas happiness to as many people as possible, would he not like to make it clear before Christmas that some time early in 1969 something will be done about the pensions of superannuated civil servants?

• (10:00 p.m.)

It took a little prodding to get the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to his feet. He said he was not all that anxious to answer my question, but he told me the subject was one which was dealt with in this house by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), I did not get much out of that question.

The next day, Tuesday, December 17, I repeated the question to the Minister of Finance. As reported in Hansard at page 4039, I used these words:

> Yesterday, I asked the Prime Minister if he would like to make it clear before Christmas that some time early in 1969 something would be done about the pensions of superannuated civil servants. The Prime Minister told me it was the Minister of Finance who answers for the government on this particular matter. Would the Minister of Finance like to answer my question now?

The Minister of Finance told me he wanted to read what the Prime Minister has said the day before. That would not take him very long. I then said:

> May I ask a supplementary question? Surely the minister knows the answer to this. Are the recommendations which were made to this house on May 8, 1967, still under consideration by the government?

I got an answer to that question. As recorded in Hansard, the Minister of Finance said: "Yes, Mr. Speaker".

I suppose I should be pleased to get that answer. The trouble is I have been getting the same answer ever since May 8, 1967. The recommendations made on that May 8 by a special joint committee of both houses of this parliament, recommendations which were unanimous, were in the main to the effect that the pensions of federal superannuates—retired civil servants, retired members of the armed forces, retired R.C.M.P. personnel—should be increased forthwith. These recommendations have been placed on the record a good many times. I submit they are responsible and reasonable. They were made with the support of all parties in both houses and in my view there is no reason, no excuse, for the long delay in dealing with this matter.

Mr. Anderson: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I welcome the support of the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Anderson) and I see a friendly look from the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair). In fact, it is just about unanimous. Looking over to the more than usually full government benches I notice one or two more, for example, the hon. member from Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault). In fact it is just about unanimous in the house tonight.

Yesterday, I finally got an answer to my question No. 4 which has been on the order paper since September 12. Hon. members are probably well aware of the fact that I had put this question down, because it had been there for such a long time. I was glad to get an answer at long last, and when I did get it, it became clear why I had been obliged to wait for so long. It appears the government had gone out of its way to give more information than I had asked for. All I had asked was the number of retired civil servants drawing pensions in each of a number of different brackets—information of a kind which I have sought and obtained over a great many years. Apparently the government decided to enlarge its computer program in some way or other and to break the figures down to show how many people in these categories had served for a certain number of years—some for a short period, some for a longer period, and so on. It was obvious that an attempt had been made to produce figures which would justify some of the low pensions about which we had complained so bitterly.

I submit that the table gives rise to more questions than it answers. I wonder why the government set it out in this way. For example how can any government explain that there are two people who were in government service for 35 years or more and whose pensions are lower than $20 a month? Why did the government take two or three extra months to give me that information, or to tell me there are five people who have served between 30 and 34 years and whose pensions are less than $20 a month? The more one goes into this, the more shameful the whole picture becomes and the more we should regret that nothing has been done to alleviate the difficulties which these people face. I contend it is time some action was taken to solve this problem.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Looking over to hon. members sitting on the government benches tonight I try to figure out who is going to answer my question. I imagine it is the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gray). I do not know what answer he has got ready but I plead with him to tell the retired civil servants of Canada, what the government's Christmas message to them is to be. Is it to be the old story to the effect there are just as many members on the other side who are as concerned with this question as I am? Is it to be the story about the old age security pension or the guaranteed income supplement, or the Canada Assistance Plan—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The time of the hon. member has expired.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): All right, Mr. Speaker. All I want is the government's Christmas message to the retired civil servants of Canada.

Mr. H. E. Gray (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) drew attention to the answer to his question No. 4, which made clear that most of those who are drawing low superannuation pensions have very short periods of service in the government.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Thirty five years!

Mr. Gray: The cases he has mentioned specifically are explained by the footnotes to the table, which the hon. member did not bother to mention. I will read them:

> The cases shown in this table, where there is a combination of long service and small pension, can arise from two sources: (1) Newfoundland government employees who transferred to the federal service in 1949 at the time of union who retired soon after transfer and before their higher federal government salaries had been received long enough to raise the pension level, and (2) revenue and assistant revenue postmasters in low revenue offices who were brought under the Civil Service Superannuation Act in the late '40's.
> All cases which have been identified are of the former category.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), when he answered the hon. member's question of December 17, confirmed that this very important matter remains under active consideration. Unless my memory fails me, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) when speaking on his estimates indicated that he would be willing to take the matter back to cabinet to ensure that it continues under needed active consideration.

One thing is certain: the views expressed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre could be raised with equal eloquence by members of parties on all sides of this house. I conclude, while personally regretting that I cannot add anything further to what has already been said on behalf of the government, by saying that with respect to the hon. member's request for a Christmas message, I feel that one of the great messages of Christmas is hope.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): But they have lost faith and there is no charity.

CRIMINAL CODE—INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, on Monday, December 9, I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) as follows:

> Does the government intend to include in the omnibus bill to amend the Criminal Code a measure abolishing corporal punishment?

The reason I asked that question was that I know from experience, more especially in criminal law, about the use of the broad strap and the cat-o'nine tails with regard to the treatment of men who have been sentenced and have had added to their sentence punishment by either the whip or the lash. I also learned that under the Penitentiary Act there is what is known as what the warden's court for discipline within the institution. In an article in the Toronto Daily Star of November 16, the writer, Mr. Earl McRae, set forth the concern of the executive director of the John Howard Society, Archibald Kirkpatrick, who has been interested in this problem for many years and had an interview with the reporter and set forth his views. His views are worthy of comment. He asked: What is the philosophy behind corporal punishment? The article then says:

> "I think there's a strange idea that the seat of emotions is in the seat of the pants," he says.
> Most of the offences for which whipping can be included in the sentence are of a sexual nature, reflective, he says, of a disordered mind.
> "Corporal punishment would not be considered appropriate in the treatment of mentally disturbed persons and therefore should not be considered in sex offences which are manifestly psychological in derivation," says Kirkpatrick.
> "We have to change people's minds about corporal punishment. They say it is similar to chastising a child. But, when you chastise a child it is done out of love in a home of love. It is accepted in this context. When you whip or strap a grown man you are depriving him of a great deal of his dignity and humanity. We are negating all evidence of humanistic behaviour in modern society. If a man commits an offence, we should be finding out what makes him do these things. We should be trying to rehabilitate him. Corporal punishment, in my mind, is simply vengeance."

• (10:10 p.m.)

In this article he goes on to set forth the views of an assistant warden of Kingston penitentiary who said:

> —last year, about a dozen inmates received the whip or strap.
>
> "And, I don't like it at all", he said. "None of us do, believe me."
> "I have an aversion to it, every officer in here has. We try to preserve as much human dignity as possible. We don't want to look like a bunch of brutes."
> The warden said "It seems to have an effect" for short periods on a few inmates "but morally, I am against it."

Then we have the report of one of the staff doctors, Dr. W. T. Amodeo who said with regard to the effects of corporal punishment:

> "No, I don't think it effects any kind of reformation," he told The Star. "I don't think it is of any value at all.

As a result of that article I directed some remarks to the commissioner of penitentiaries when he appeared before the standing committee on justice and legal affairs. The parliamentary secretary nods his head to show that he remembers that occasion. I said to the commissioner, A. J. MacLeod:

> Mr. Commissioner, I would like to direct other questions to you with regard to corporal punishment. Under the Code you have the whipping section, section 641, with which you are probably familiar, and I understand there are two types of whipping, the lash and the broad strap. Could you tell me how many inmates received corporal punishment in the last three years?

He set forth the two types, the type that is imposed by the judge and the type that is imposed under the warden's court. Then he said:

> I have that information somewhere here. Corporal punishment as a sentence of an institutional board of discipline in our institutions was handed down once this year between January 1 and the middle of October; 19 times in 1967; 32 times in 1966; 7 times in 1965; 26 times in 1964.

So you can see that in this last year only one person has been administered corporal punishment as a result of the warden's court decision. Then he gave the figures with regard to sentences by judges and he said:

> —8 times so far this year, from January to the middle of October; 5 in 1967; 3 in 1966; 3 in 1965; 22 in 1964; 9 in 1963.

Following that and after other remarks which he made, I said:

> In other words, you would not have any objection if I brought forth an amendment to repeal that particular section?

In answer the commissioner said:

> I would not, no. As a judicial punishment, it is remarkable that it is reserved under the Criminal Code for offences that involve the use of violence or the threat of violence by the offender. Our people seem to think that it may have a useful short-term benefit if it is imposed on an offender, but ultimately society reaps more violence from him than it inflicted upon him.

As a result of that I brought forth a bill in this house to abolish corporal punishment. The sequence of this is that we now have the omnibus bill with amendments to the Criminal Code which will be tabled tomorrow morning. This is the reason that I asked the Minister of Justice whether he would include this measure in this very important bill. His answer was disappointing. This is the reason that I brought this matter to the attention of the house, and I hope that the parliamentary secretary will give us hope that he will be able to persuade the Minister of Justice to include this matter in the bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I agree with my hon. friend; this provision should be struck out of the Criminal Code. Fortunately, it is falling into disuse, according to the evidence given to the committee on justice and legal affairs by the Director general of Penitentiaries. In a certain way, I am sorry it has not been included in the amendments to the Criminal Code tabled this day in the house.

It should be mentioned that the proposed amendments affect 119 sections; there are 126 pages of them. I know all the work it took to draw up those amendments and I think that the request of the hon. member unfortunately came a bit too late to be included in those amendments to the Criminal Code.

However we must hope—and I do hope so —that the bill which he tabled himself in the house will be referred to the committee on justice and legal affairs for consideration and that a report will be presented to the house so that very soon we may abandon this practice which I think is barbaric.

I can assure the honourable member—and I am speaking strictly for myself—that I shall do everything I possibly can to help him convince not only the Minister of Justice but also the Solicitor General who is answerable for the penitentiaries, in order to try and bring about the necessary changes.

OLD AGE SECURITY—REQUEST FOR ISSUANCE OF CHEQUES BEFORE CHRISTMAS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I think it was about a week and a half ago that a number of members in this house, including myself, raised the question with the government about whether, particularly having in mind the Christmas season, the old age security pension cheques could not be mailed out a little bit early to their recipients. My question was ruled out of order by Mr. Speaker, and I welcome the opportunity of restating it tonight. I think the reasoning of members in this connection was that it would cost the taxpayers and the government no more money to do this, and it would help the old age pensioners, particularly those on small fixed incomes such as the old age pension itself, to have a little better Christmas than otherwise. I felt therefore this was a reasonable request, and I still think so.

I was pleased myself today to receive my cheque from the government approximately a week and a half ahead of time in the amount of approximately $2,200. This of course includes our quarterly expenses. I was glad to get this, particularly at this time of year, and it does not cost the government any more money to give us this ahead of time. If I was glad to have $2,000 today a little ahead of time, I would think the old age pensioners of this country, numbering about half a million and who receive from this government only about $75 or $80 per month, would be even more pleased to get their cheques ahead of time.

I am not saying this in any demogogic way; I think it is a matter of common sense. It is reasonable that if members of parliament receive their cheques ahead of time, then the old age pensioners, even although it is late in the month, should receive theirs ahead of time. I hope the government, even now, will consider speeding up the delivery of old age pensioners' monthly cheques. I sincerely hope that the government will not give the same old answer, that the senior citizens of this country—who are 75 or 85 years of age—are so inexperienced that as soon as they get the money a week ahead of time they will be throwing it around and living it up. On $18 to $19 a week surely that is ridiculous.

• (10:20 p.m.)

As I say, this step would not cost the public any more money. I am glad to see the Liberal members here tonight, thus indicating some support for this question. Therefore I again ask why the government will not take this action and mail out the cheques, even at this date, so as to give the old age pensioners and senior citizens a little bit of a break.

[Translation]

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do think that the minister would not like anything better than to share in the Christmas spirit and to compete with Santa Claus if he could take a more arbitrary and discretionary approach towards the allocation of old age pensions.

We must remember however that when we refer to the holiday season, we also refer to gifts. With regard to the payment of old age pensions, we must admit that the right to a pension is recognized by the legislation and that the regular payment of those pensions, at the end of each month, has become for the payees an important element of their budget.

Like the hon. member, I know that we welcome cheques when we get them a week in advance, but the money we get allows us to have perhaps a more flexible budget than that of old age pensioners.

Therefore, if the government were to change the date on which monthly cheques are sent out, if it complied with this request, there would be an interval of 40 to 45 days between the reception of the December and the January cheques. It is not a question of giving in to finer feelings at Christmas time, but of recognizing the right of old people to receive their pension cheque regularly.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, December 20, 1968

The house met at 11 a.m.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

EXPRESSION OF GOOD WISHES TO PRIME MINISTER PRIOR TO DEPARTURE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, if the house will grant me the indulgence on this, the last opportunity that we will have in this chamber to wish the Prime Minister well when he attends the Commonwealth prime ministers' conference, I would like the opportunity of speaking not only for myself as a former prime minister who knows something of those conferences but I am sure for members in all parts of the house in wishing him well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister will face a conference different from anything he has ever attended before as representatives gather from all parts of the world in a conference representing the greatest number of people dedicated to freedom and peace that has ever occurred in the history of the world. There will be many tremendous problems to be faced. There will be no vote at the conference, but there will finally be a consensus and agreement when men and women, representing every colour and race, sit around that prime ministers' conference table whose desire will be to do their part to assure the preservation of the Commonwealth and the peace of the world.

In that conference the Prime Minister will speak for all Canadians, and I wish him well. It is a challenging, fascinating, tremendous experience, and I am sure when he sees Her Majesty the Queen he will convey to her the loyalty, affection and devotion of Canadians as a whole.

I say again to the Prime Minister, with the great powers he possesses and the challenging opportunities that will be his, that the hopes and aspirations of Canadians will be carried by him. I repeat that he will speak for all Canadians.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleagues and myself I wish to join the right hon. gentleman in wishing the Prime Minister well. As I am sure he has done, over many years I have watched the development from empire into Commonwealth and have been struck by the most important fact about the present Commonwealth, which is that it is a mixture of forms of government, monarchical and republican, and even more important a mixture of races, every country of every race claiming and having equal status with every other country.

I do not know exactly what the agenda of the Prime Ministers Conference will be, but obviously the question of the treatment of other races in some parts of the Commonwealth, the relationship of the Commonwealth to the United Nations and to events in Europe, the whole problem of feeding a hungry world and of making the Commonwealth work for human equality across the world, are part of the notions that all of us have about the value of the Commonwealth in the present day. And I say without reservation I have confidence that on these matters of human liberty and civil liberty the Prime Minister will represent Canada well, and I wish him an interesting and fruitful time at the conference.

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, we, of the Ralliement Créditiste, would like also to wish the Prime Minister a pleasant trip overseas for the conference of the Commonwealth countries. We would also ask him to urge those countries—I have already mentioned that—to put an end to the hostilities in Nigeria and to make representations to England so that it will stop selling arms to Nigeria, in order that peace may be restored in that country where so many people are dying when we are hoping for peace and prosperity everywhere.

We also ask the Prime Minister to suggest to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) that he could relieve his headaches by allowing the Bank of Canada—as some Commonwealth countries are allowing their central banks to do—to grant interest free loans to the provinces and the municipalities to further our country's development.

Commonwealth Conference

• (11:10 a.m.)

[English]

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am very touched by the wishes I have received. I want to thank the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) in particular for his good wishes. I must confess that I am quite excited at the prospect of this conference. It will be an exciting conference, in an exciting city. The whole proceedings, admittedly, will be a little mysterious to me. It will be my first such conference but not my last, I hope.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: I should add, that I hope it will not be the last that any Canadian prime minister will attend. I am confident that these meetings of Commonwealth heads of government will go on for many, many years. I have heard many definitions of the Commonwealth, but perhaps the one that is most embracing is that it is an assembly of unalphabetically arranged names. It is a meeting of men of good will from many lands.

I am looking forward to the discussions. I will do more listening than talking. I have not, as I say, been enriched by any previous experience in this regard, but I have taken at least a minimum precaution. I have made sure that I will be occupying the same suite, in the same hotel, that was occupied by the right hon. member for Prince Albert at previous Commonwealth conferences in the hope that perhaps some of his wisdom and knowledge will rub off on me.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: I am very conscious of the points underscored by the leader of the New Democratic party, that this is a great occasion for men representing countries of many ethnic and racial origins, situated at varying degrees of the economic and social ladder, to discuss together problems and solutions. I recognize that this is a very important meeting in this sense, that we as equals can discuss problems which make us so unequal because of accidents of birth and geography. I think we can do a great deal to show the world the concepts of pluralism in which we in Canada believe and in which members of the Commonwealth, by the mere fact that they are members of the Commonwealth, also believe.

[Mr. Dumont.]

[Translation]

It can be said that Canada, with its pluralist philosophy does its utmost to direct the Bank of Canada, if not toward the ideology advocated by the hon. member for the Ralliement Créditiste, at least toward pluralism where people whatever their origin or their language, can live in peace in a modern world.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF ANNUAL REPORT OF DEPARTMENT

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among various groups with respect to the standing committee on Indian affairs and northern development, and I think there might be general agreement to the introduction and acceptance of a motion to empower the committee to consider the annual report of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development for the year ending March 31, 1968; to empower the committee to adjourn from place to place; and that the clerk of the committee and the necessary supporting staff might accompany the committee.

I wonder, if leave is given, whether this motion could be put and perhaps made an order of the house.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered by the house.

ORDER OF PRECEDENCE

CHANGE IN STATUS OF SPEAKER OF SENATE AND SPEAKER OF HOUSE OF COMMONS

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the house that the Governor General has approved a recommendation I made to him, concerning a change in the table of precedence for Canada, so that the precedence of the Speaker of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Commons will give due recognition to the importance of their office as representatives of the legislative branch of the government.

[English]

Consequently the Speaker of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Commons shall now be given precedence immediately following the head of the executive branch and the head of the judiciary. I am confident that this change will be greeted with approval in the house, and that all members will be happy to see due recognition given to the occupant of your high office.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: In the same recommendation, and in keeping with the same concept of recognizing the significance of parliamentary offices, I have proposed that the precedence of the Leader of the Opposition should also be advanced. Henceforth the Leader of the Opposition will be accorded precedence immediately following members of the cabinet.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am sure every member of the house will be delighted at the announcement of the Prime Minister relating to the precedence to be given your office and the office of the Speaker of the Senate. We welcome it in terms of yourself personally, but above all in terms of the high office you hold. It shows the increased respect with which we are treating parliament in approving the announcement of the Prime Minister. You, sir, have brought great lustre to the House of Commons as the Speaker of this chamber, and it is certainly most fitting that you should have been in the chair when the Prime Minister made this announcement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: Now, sir, with regard to the position of the Leader of the Opposition, through you may I express my personal appreciation to the Prime Minister. I hope that coming so close in rank to the lofty office of the ministers will not go to my head. I will of course, by virtue of my office, expect to be treated with great respect by everybody from now on and to be approached with the appropriate amount of bowing and scraping. I expect that not in my personal capacity but out of respect to the high office I now hold.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, because of the very high regard that all of us in this house have for Your Honour we welcome this opportunity to demonstrate that fact by giving our applause to the announcement the Prime Minister has been pleased to make. I confess that I have a penchant for making amendments, and if it were possible I would like to amend the statement so as to put Your Honour ahead of the Speaker of the Senate, but I gather there is no rule under which I can move such an amendment. No, please do not mention rule 16-A.

On behalf of the members of this group I join the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition in paying this interim tribute to the way in which you have graced the chair during the last parliament and during this one. We are pleased you are being referred to as our permanent Speaker, even though there may be no such nomenclature in our statutes. In our view you are helping to improve the image of parliament by the way in which you are fulfilling your role. We are very happy to join in this expression of tribute to Your Honour. We welcome the other changes that are indicated in the statement, in particular because we look forward to future developments.

• (11:20 a.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I think this is the perfect day for season's greetings.

In any event, my colleagues and I welcome the announcement made by the right hon. Prime Minister, and we do not think it is a present. We think that the changes he made in the table of precedence are useful and necessary, and we congratulate him.

In examining rule 16A these past few days, I was worried that the efficiency and authority of the Chair would be questioned, but I notice that the right hon. Prime Minister now recognizes this authority and we welcome the decision taken.

PILOTAGE

TABLING OF SECOND REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table two copies in English and two copies in French of the second report of the royal commission on pilotage.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table this report?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

HARBOURS

TABLING OF STUDY OF DECENTRALIZATION, IN ENGLISH

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Annapolis Valley raised the question of my undertaking to table a study of harbour administration in Canada, which I had given in the house some time previously. The problem is the translation of the study is not yet complete. A number of people have requested that it be made public in the interim, including the executive secretary of the Montreal port authority. If it were the opinion of the house that I might now table the copies in English, with the undertaking that copies in French will be laid on the table as soon as they are ready which I understand will be early in the New Year, I would be pleased to do that.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

AIRPORTS

TORONTO—STATEMENT ON EXPANSION OF FACILITIES

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): While I have the floor, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make an announcement with regard to the Toronto international airport. If copies of this statement have not been circulated to members of the opposition I apologize, and I should like my staff to see that this is done immediately.

In 1966 the Department of Transport engaged a firm of consultants to develop a conceptual plan for expansion of airport facilities to cope with the increases forecast for air line passenger, general aviation and air cargo demands in the Toronto area. The consultant's report submitted to the department in late 1967 concluded that expansion of the present Toronto international airport was the most economic and viable course of action to satisfy these requirements, conditional upon three important factors.

The first was that additional land was available for expansion. The second was that an adequate ground transportation system could be provided; and, third, that land use compatibility could be satisfied with respect to the communities surrounding the airport. After officials of the department had carefully studied the many technical proposals in the report, I announced publicly on August 2 last that the government was prepared to proceed with expansion provided the three conditional matters were met, but it should not be carried out at the expense of the general interest of many residents who live near the airport.

Since the announcement, members of my department and myself from time to time have had a series of meetings with officials of the government of Ontario, with the municipalities surrounding the airport, with interested members of parliament mainly from the Toronto area, with the various members of the air line industry, and with volunteer citizens' groups.

Many citizens of the area expressed concern about the possible increased noise which could be generated by an expanded airport, and a number of the municipalities in the area surrounding the airport said serious problems would be encountered in rearranging existing planning and development programs in adjacent municipalities.

On the basis of the sociological implications of the proposed expansion, and in consideration of the present use of land in the area, the government has concluded that the condition of land use compatibility cannot be satisfied. Consequently we have decided against full scale expansion of the airport at Malton. Instead, a joint federal-provincial government committee will be established to study alternative sites for future expansion to serve the southern Ontario region.

The Toronto international airport will be developed to sufficient capacity to meet presently foreseen requirements for servicing large jets being introduced in 1971, and the volume of passenger traffic up to the late 1970's or even into the early 1980's. The development will include extending an east-west runway in the northern part of the airport, building new terminal facilities, and providing additional service and control facilities to handle the expected increase in passengers and freight. Work will start immediately. The present airport will continue to operate as a base for air carrier operations, for special general aviation operations and as an aircraft industrial base even after a second airport is opened.

Plans for future expansion will take full account of the direction of urban growth in the area. Facilities will provide the most up to date capabilities for dealing with advancing air technology, including supersonic aircraft.

We are satisfied that this alternative proposal can efficiently meet the problem of providing the best in services for the air travelling public, while still protecting the basic rights of the many residents of the Toronto urban area.

There will always be a problem in reconciling the demands of progress with the basic concerns and rights of human beings, and the members of the federal government are fully aware of the difficulties in arriving at solutions satisfactory to everyone. Proper solutions depend upon full co-operation of all members of the community. This proposal for Toronto international airport represents the kind of solution that can emerge when all citizens participate in a dialogue with the government in a spirit of reason and good will.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, in view of the rather extensive nature of the statement I wish the minister had followed the custom of some of his colleagues and sent out advance notices. Perhaps he will do so in the future. In view of the short notice I think the remarks of members on this side of the house must be in rather general terms.

Generally speaking it appears that the government has made a wise decision here, inasmuch as there were many complaints and objections by citizens in the area which clearly have received reasonable consideration by the government. The government has apparently decided not to bring the very large supersonic jets of the future into the existing facilities, or even the expanded ones, at the Toronto international airport, and I think this is the correct approach to be taken. However, the minister did indicate that somewhat larger jets will be flying into that area in the immediate future and that there will be an extension of runways and the like.

I hope the government will continue its policy of listening very carefully to complaints made by citizens and business firms in this area, because these expanded jet liners and the larger jumbos are not only noisy nuisances but can present actual hazards to life and property.

There is little else one can say at the moment, Mr. Speaker. I am very glad, as I am sure all members are, that consideration has been given to the building of a large new airport for aircraft of the future, situated in a place which will present no serious nuisance or danger to citizens.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, as one of the members representing a Toronto riding and also speaking on behalf of my colleagues I greet with delight the fact that the minister has changed his mind since last August. However, I express the hope that the extensions of the airport that he has mentioned will not be so large as to defeat the purpose he has in mind. I am sure the affected residents will also hope that is the case.

• (11:30 a.m.)

Will you permit me to take a moment, Mr. Speaker, to say that this experience underlines what some of us have suggested for some time, that there is a need for a permanent kind of organization to plan developments in the major urban metropolitan centres of Canada. Unfortunately the minister came to a conclusion last August on the basis of reports he had received, and only after the people in the affected areas had been frightened out of their wits was he able to consider their representations and change his mind. How much better it would have been if we had had some permanent organization made up of federal, provincial, regional or municipal members—an urban council, as the members of my party have suggested. I feel that if modern developments and the results of technological progress of every sort were discussed by the three levels of government before a decision is made we might avoid the rather frightening situation that the citizens of the affected areas faced until now. I am glad at last the right thing is being done.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the statement just made by the hon. Minister of Transports, I would like to say, on behalf of the Ralliement Créditiste, that we are happy to learn that serious efforts have been made to reconcile the necessities of progress and the expansion of the international airport in Toronto with those of the citizens of that region.

In view of the modern age opening for us in the field of aeronautics, we must now, as the previous speaker has just said, introduce measures and establish continuing organizations in order to plan and anticipate solutions to problems which might arise from the creation of an air base, for these problems sometimes come into conflict with human needs.

Mr. Speaker, although the people of Toronto welcome the announcement of the minister, we are nevertheless anxious in Quebec regarding the construction of the future international airport. I take this opportunity to point this out to the minister, so that similar problems can be avoided in the future, and that we may set up immediately or in the near future, a permanent body, as suggested by the member who spoke before me that can then anticipate problems and also conciliate the expansion of the airport with the economic needs of the region. I feel that we would thus show real foresight, for which the people would be grateful.

I should therefore like to point out to the minister that central Quebec should be taken into consideration in the planning of the future international airport, in the hope that the airport can be as efficient and as interesting as the one in Toronto.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

YUKON—TABLING OF CARR COMMISSION REPORT

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table before the house the two versions, English and French of Volume I of the study entitled: "Yukon Economy: Growth and Life Expectation". This volume represents the main part of the survey made by the consulting economists D. William Carr and Associates Limited at the request of the federal and Yukon governments.

It will be recalled, Mr. Speaker, that on September 24, I advised the house that the government had received a preliminary report on this study. Later on, I distributed a summary thereof to the members. At the time, I promised to table the interim report in extenso, as soon as the French version would be ready. However, the consulting economists gave us the final report soon after, and as it was almost identical to the preliminary report, I thought it preferable to table the final report.

The report was handed to us in eight volumes. Volumes 2 to 8 inclusive are studies on documents and will be available for consultation in some of the libraries in Ottawa and Whitehorse.

I should like to point out to the house that the views expressed in this report are not necessarily those of the federal and territorial governments, although those two governments commissioned the study and the report.

The report will be put on sale throughout Canada through the Queen's Printer. Copies have been shipped to the Yukon for immediate sale.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

TABLING OF WHITE PAPER ON PRICE STABILITY

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table in English and French copies of a white paper entitled "Policies for Price Stability".

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table these documents?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I am in order, seeing the minister has made no statement, in attempting to make a comment or two on this matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. According to the rules statements may be made by hon. members in opposition only if the minister has made a statement. But if there is agreement the Leader of the Opposition could make a statement.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I must express the greatest of disappointment in the policies which have been announced and in the board that is being established. I think we all recall the announcement by the former prime minister at the time of the financial crisis last winter, in which he indicated that there would be a substantial new effort to deal with inflation. In all fairness I can only say that the mountain laboured and produced a mouse.

I make my remarks at this time, not to be provocative but to try to bring to the minister, the Prime Minister and members of the government some sense of urgency regarding inflation and the resulting handicaps it is imposing on the country. We now have an unacceptable rate of inflation associated with an unacceptable amount of unemployment in the country.

Mr. Basford: That is what the white paper says.

Mr. Stanfield: I am not so much interested in what the white paper says as in what the government proposes to do. I was disturbed when the Prime Minister said the other day that the government's programs are working well. In fact we have in this country an alarming inflationary psychology which already has a very pronounced effect on the willingness of our citizens to buy medium or long term obligations. That must also be of concern to the Minister of Finance with regard to his ability to manage the public debt; certainly it must be of concern to the provinces with regard to their ability to manage their public debts.

I say, sir, that considering the continuing unacceptable rate of inflation which is associated with unemployment and the very alarming manifestation of a deterioration in the psychological attitude of investors toward investment, my hon. friends opposite ought to know that it may be far later than they think with regard to dealing with inflation. Setting up this commission under these circumstances is equivalent to arming the Canadian armed forces with pop guns.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, in common with the Leader of the Opposition the members of our party were disappointed that the minister made no statement when introducing this new measure. We have been waiting to hear what he would say, to see how his remarks would differ from the statement he prepared for the ministers of finance at the conference. I have studied the latter material carefully, and I imagine that his comments on the measure presently before us would not have been very different. May I be permitted to comment in several ways on this commission and on what it is likely to do. The Leader of the Opposition—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that the comments she proposes to make should be brief. Even if the minister had made a statement, according to the rules comments made should still be brief, and I think the hon. member should keep that in mind. Since statements have been made by representatives of parties in opposition I think later the minister might be allowed to make a statement on behalf of the party in opposition to the opposition parties. Perhaps he should be allowed later on to do that.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, when people start to caution me and they have not cautioned anybody ahead of me I am always a little leery, but I shall certainly keep Your Honour's remarks in mind. I have heard some fairly lengthy statements this morning but I will certainly be governed by your caution, Mr. Speaker.

I wish it were possible for us to welcome the package which the amiable and hard working minister has put under the Christmas tree, but I am afraid I would be doing less than my duty to the people I represent if I did not point out that there are serious dents and bumps in this package. I wish to say strongly and definitely that what is required at this time is not another educational seminar, not further information and evidence as to the need for something to be done about inflation or the general method of coping with it. What is required now is a prices and incomes board with teeth in it.

I want to enumerate what one or two of the teeth should be, because this is a piece of dentistry which the minister may find difficulty in understanding. We need, first, to put into force legislation giving the commission power to summon anyone before it to justify increases in the prices of goods and services. The price of services is extremely important. There should be statutory provision to obtain information not only from producers but from service industries including medical people and other professional people, the cost of whose services have gone up especially of late, accounting for a marked increase in the cost of living generally.

All increases should be included among the subjects of inquiry. Dividends, rents and profits should come within the purview of this commission. The minister himself has told us it is no secret that there is a conflict between the interest of consumers and the interest of producers. Instead of merely keeping the ring, this commission ought to recognize that the interest of the public is superior to any other interest in this connection.

In conclusion, the people will expect this commission to be given statutory power to bring about a meaningful relation between prices and incomes in this country.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. So that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway may not think I have discriminated against her, I will also ask the hon. member for Abitibi to bear in mind that statements ought to be as brief as possible.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the speech made by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) is not new, since it is only a repetition of what he said yesterday to the ministers of finance who were meeting in Ottawa at the federal-provincial conference

I too would have prefered the hon. minister to make a statement where he tabled his white paper today. In fact, it is not really a present, but rather a worn-out book, since the white paper tabled this morning contains nothing that we do not know already. Many commission of inquiry, especially that of the Economic Council of Canada, recommended in their reports exactly what the hon. minister wants to do by establishing an independent commission.

I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that the method suggested by the minister to determine the causes of our present problems can add anything to the conclusions of the previous inquiry commissions.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs should consider the proposals previously made in this house in order to find real solutions, because there are some. We are facing problems and the minister has attempted yesterday to frighten the provincial finance ministers, but I do not think that he could do that to us. We know that there are problems of inflation and unemployment and the minister stated yesterday that he could not find any solution. Still, to set the financial system in order, the minister only has to consider the proposals made by the members opposite, especially the Ralliement Créditiste proposals.

[English]

Mr. Basford: I intend to be very brief in commenting on the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition. I would point out again that the white paper itself draws attention to the serious problem we face inasmuch as both unemployment and inflation exist at the same time. We highlight this problem, and are proposing policies which will enable us to understand it better and how to deal with it most effectively.

It is also noted in the white paper that in addition to the present cabinet committee a new, independent body, a prices and incomes commission, will be established together with a third element, a new committee of this house to be known as the standing committee on price stability, incomes and employment. If the Leader of the Opposition holds this parliament and its committees in such low regard as to refer to them as popguns I can understand why he is Leader of the Opposition and not Prime Minister. I have confidence in this institution and what its committees can do, and I think this new committee will be an effective instrument in helping create price stability.

With regard to the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, may I say I have difficulty in finding out exactly what that party stands for. I can only take it that the official position of the hon. member's party is as outlined in her private member's notice of motion No. 46—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister knows that the rule—if we can apply the rule as it exists to this debate—says that a reply made by an hon. member should not be of such a nature as to provoke debate. This is what the minister is doing now, and I think much might be gained by bringing this topsy-turvy debate to a turvy conclusion.

Mr. Basford: What I have announced this morning goes much further than the policy enunciated by the N.D.P. in motion No. 46.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: On a point of order, I appreciate the unanimous consent given to me this morning, but I hope this minister or other ministers will not be tempted to use this technique as a device which enables them to reply to members of the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): On that same point of order, Mr. Speaker, we may be tempted to do just that. When we table something without making a statement in order to shorten the proceedings, and spokesmen for opposition parties insist on getting consent to comment, we shall certainly continue to press for consent to make our own comments.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

On the order:

December 18, 1968—The President of the Privy Council:

That when the house adjourns at the conclusion of the sitting on Friday, December 20, 1968, it shall stand adjourned until Tuesday, January 14, 1969, at 2:30 p.m.; provided always that if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultation with Her Majesty's Government, that the public interest requires that the house should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the house shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time; and

That, in the event of Mr. Speaker being unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker or the Deputy Chairman of Committees shall act in his stead for the purpose of this order.

Hon. D. S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Before putting this motion it might be helpful if I were to make a proposal with regard to the day's sitting. It has been suggested that it might be useful to recess the sitting for the purpose of enabling discussion to take place on certain arrangements with respect to the business of the house, and I suggest for the consideration of hon. members that after routine proceedings have been dealt with but before we continue the debate on government orders the house might recess this sitting, to be recalled at the instance of the Chair.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): That is perfectly agreeable. We had such an arrangement in mind, and probably for that reason the minister would be prepared to stand the particular motion which is in his name since the course of the discussion which is to take place might well affect the procedure in this house and the period of adjournment.

• (11:50 a.m.)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would be quite prepared to have the motion stand provided it is understood that at a later stage in this sitting I might put the motion without having unanimous consent.

Mr. Baldwin: Yes.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are happy to support this suggestion. Indeed, it represents an agreement which has been arrived at. I hope I will be pardoned for seeking to clarify one little point. The President of the Privy Council said we would recess after routine proceedings. I believe the understanding was that we shall recess after we have had questions on the orders of the day.

Mr. Baldwin: After the question period.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That being the case we think it is a good idea that the parties have further opportunity for discussion, and that the house leaders have an opportunity to confer in the hope that we might reach a settlement today that will be acceptable to all.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the suggestion made by the President of the Privy Council. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered. It is understood also that the President of the Privy Council shall be permitted to return to motions in due course.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

NAVIGABLE WATERS PROTECTION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DEFINITIONS, UNAUTHORIZED WORKS, ETC.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-19 (from the Senate), to amend the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

INDIANS AFFAIRS

ST. REGIS INDIANS—REQUEST FOR MEETING WITH MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, who was in the house to table a report, but perhaps he really was not supposed to be here today.

Mr. Trudeau: I will check.

Mr. Stanfield: Since he is not here now I will ask the Prime Minister whether he will undertake to have the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development or the Minister without Portfolio from Port Arthur meet again with the people of the St. Regis reserve to seek a satisfactory agreement concerning their rights.

Now that the minister is in his place I will direct the question to him. Would he give the house an assurance that either he or the Minister without Portfolio from Port Arthur will meet promptly with the people of the St. Regis reserve to work out a satisfactory agreement with regard to their rights?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I received a delegation of the people of the St. Regis reserve this week on the eve of their demonstration. I assured them that I was giving attention to the problem, and I immediately got in touch with the Department of National Revenue in order to find a solution to their problem. I talked to the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) who is at the moment Acting Minister of National Revenue and I think that, in the next few days, we will find a solution acceptable to the Indians of the St. Regis reserve.

[English]

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development what his two colleagues, the Postmaster General and the Minister of National Revenue, have to do with the fact that the Canadian government expropriated land from these people some 12 years ago and has not yet had the courtesy to try to reach an agreement. I should also like to ask the minister whether he would include that in the discussions.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, this question has already been discussed. These problems involve the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority and a certain group of the St. Regis band. If the rights of this group are legitimate and if it intends to assert them, they can go before the courts which, I am sure, will bring in a favorable decision if these rights are valid.

[English]

Mr. Peters: That is a fine way to protect the Indians.

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development whether the Postmaster General is determining policy with regard to Indian affairs as well as external relations.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, my colleague the honourable Postmaster General, is always ready to co-operate. I consulted him with regard to this matter because he was Acting Minister of National Revenue.

[English]

[Later:]

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Is he aware that today, right at this moment, there are in Ottawa some members of the Caughnawaga Indian reserve, and they will be joined later by people from the St. Regis reserve, who desire a meeting with the minister to talk about the declaration yesterday by the mayor of Cornwall that he had annexed Cornwall Island and it was no longer an Indian reserve? Is the minister prepared to meet with these gentlemen?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any people having requested to see me, but in that case, I will gladly see them this afternoon if they wish. I may add that the decision to annex to the town of Cornwall part of the reserve of that area was taken by the provincial authorities of Ontario.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

CONSIDERATION OF WHITE PAPER ON PRICE STABILITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Is the white paper which he tabled today to be referred to any committee of parliament, or is it the intention of the government to set up the bodies indicated in it without such prior study by a committee?

Hon. Ron. Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is my intention during the course of January and early February to consult further with the provincial premiers and with business and labour groups in the country. The government would then be in a position to act on the white paper and prepare an order in council establishing the commission. It will of course be necessary to establish the committee that is mentioned in the white paper, and the motion to establish the committee would be debatable in this house.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, perhaps you would permit me to state what I was trying to get at. Obviously, if it wishes the government can produce legislation to set up the commission, or it can have the policy indicated in the white paper studied by a committee of parliament. I should like to ask whether that possibility is definitely abandoned so that industry and labour will not be asked to appear before a committee of parliament in advance of the implementation by the government of the policy indicated in the white paper.

Mr. Basford: It is my intention to consult with industry and labour.

Mr. Lewis: Could the minister inform the house in that case whether he has given consideration to the personnel of the proposed commission and, if so, who that personnel might be.

Mr. Basford: I have given consideration to it, but the government has arrived at no final conclusions. The hon. member will notice that paragraph 62 really is a want ad, in which I am appealing to people of ability to be prepared to come forward and serve on the commission or on its research staff.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON RECENT DEVELOPMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of his recent consultations with the minister of agriculture from Saskatchewan and officials of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool can the minister report on any recent developments in respect of the damp grain problem in western Canada.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I had some very useful discussions with officials of the Saskatchewan wheat pool and two ministers from the Saskatchewan government yesterday and this morning. In addition to what has been done by way of increasing cash advances, thereby making money available to the farmers to do their drying, we are considering other ways that might be helpful in making sure that no one will be denied the financial capability of having his grain dried if he chooses to do so.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): In view of the representations made in a letter, among others, from the Saskatchewan wheat pool, may I ask the Minister of Agriculture whether the government will give immediate consideration to assistance to producers by way of a direct grant for drying farm stored grain, in view of the fact that there is an emergent situation which the minister recognizes. Would this recommendation not be of considerable help, and will the government accept this recommendation which seems to be so feasible and reasonable?

Mr. Olson: The government has already taken several steps to be helpful in this situation. All I can do is repeat that it is the government's intention to take whatever additional steps may be needed to be helpful so that no one will be denied the financial resources to dry his grain if he chooses to do so.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister answer a simple question? Is the government giving consideration to making direct grants to cover the cash costs of drying farm stored grain? That is what the farmers want to know. They don't want generalities.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, members of the government have considered all of the alternative proposals that have been advanced and when we are ready to make an announcement that will be done.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That was said two months ago.

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Is the Canadian Wheat Board investigating the possibility of securing the use of drying facilities at Duluth, Minnesota, to assist in relieving the tough and damp grain situation?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I remember that they looked at that possibility a few weeks ago but, if I recall correctly, there were also some difficulties.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture was asked a question about the possibility of using ships on the great lakes to store grain during the winter. I am happy to report that arrangements have been made for five vessels to store grain at the lakehead. They will store about 3.4 million bushels. This is the largest quantity of grain ever stored in this manner and represents the maximum quantity having regard to availability of berths and the safety of vessels.

Mr. Mazankowski: As a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, may I ask whether the wheat board in fact is endeavouring to secure permission to use the drying facilities at Duluth which can process approximately three million bushels per month?

Mr. Pepin: I will have to check into more recent attempts which might have been made in this regard and I will report to the hon. member personally due to obvious circumstances.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Is it not correct that over six million bushels were stored in freighters at the lakehead last winter, and can he advise why an equivalent or larger amount could not be stored in this manner this winter?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that the question as asked by the hon. member is argumentative.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It has to do with the disparity between the supply of box cars provided by the C.N.R. and the C.P.R. in southern Saskatchewan. I understand a report has been made that in the northern portion, serviced by the C.P.R., it has been possible to get rid of one and two bushel quotas while the same does not apply to those points serviced by the C.N.R. in southern Saskatchewan. Will the minister investigate the reason for this disparity?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I will investigate, but this may be part of the general problem of transportation that I have mentioned a number of times in the house. For example, recently we have had ships waiting to load at Vancouver. The reason for this involved unloading difficulties in that port. Measures have been taken to correct the situation. Now that the lakehead is going to be closed soon transportation of dry grain is being orientated toward Vancouver. My department keeps in touch with these problems in co-operation with the wheat board which is trying to synchronize the movement of box cars in the most efficient possible way.

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the minister. During the holiday season will he discuss the matter of box cars with the railroads and the wheat board in view of the urgent necessity of getting as many Canadian railroad cars back from the United States as is possible?

Mr. Pepin: I will do that, Mr. Speaker. Another announcement I could make is that the Minister of Labour has now waived the application of the Labour Code in order to make it possible to dry grain on a seven day a week, 24-hour day basis at the lakehead.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a related question to the Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister say whether arrangements have been made for him to meet with officials of the grain trade and of the government of the province of Manitoba in a meeting of the same kind as he had with the Saskatchewan people?

Mr. Olson: No, Mr. Speaker. To date there has been no request for such a meeting but I understand that officials of the Board of Grain Commissioners and of the Canadian Wheat Board have had many meetings up to this time. If such a request for a meeting comes forward it will certainly be given every consideration.

Mr. Benjamin: As a further supplementary, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Agriculture whether the Board of Grain Commissioners or his department have concluded their investigation and will they be permitting the grain companies to instal drying equipment at selected country elevator points?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I understand there have been one or two such applications, perhaps not directly, to instal such equipment in these elevators but in conjunction with the operation of these elevators. I would have to get a report in order to be precise on whether they have been approved and, indeed, how many are involved.

FINANCE

INCREASE IN BANK OF CANADA INTEREST RATE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. The minister is reported to have said recently on television that he had met his problems and solved them. Will he now advise the house of his solution for the increasing lack of confidence in government bonds evidenced in the short term money market where the rate for three months is 6.1 per cent and 6.3 per cent on money bills?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): They have been listening to you.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I quite agree with the minister but would he advise the house whether one of his solutions was to agree to an increase in the bank rate, or was this action taken independently by the Bank of Canada to counter government actions in other sectors of the economy?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, the decision to raise the bank rate was, of course, made by the governor of the Bank of Canada. Before he made his announcement he consulted with me and I agreed in principle with what he was doing. The great thing we have to fight in Canada today is inflation. This is one way of doing it. Beyond that, Mr. Speaker, the bank rate in the United States was raised on the same day, which necessitated an increase in the Canadian rate.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, if the action taken with regard to the bank rate was taken solely at the instigation of the governor of the Bank of Canada why was it that the minister cited it so proudly as a government action to fight inflation in his answer to my question the other day?

Mr. Benson: You ought to listen—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

POLICE INVESTIGATION INTO LEAKS OF COMMISSION REPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. It has to do with the investigation of the publication of alleged parts of the report of the commission on bilingualism and biculturalism. Will the government ensure that the principle of the confidential nature of journalistic sources is protected during the rest of the current investigation?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The confidential nature of what?

Mr. Fairweather: Of sources journalists have for gathering information. It is a well known principle.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary South.

Mr. Fairweather: May I have an answer to my question?

OIL

TASK FORCE TO STUDY NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Can the minister confirm recent press reports that a task force has been or is to be created to study northern oil development?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, I can confirm that, Mr. Speaker. The core of the task force consists of the deputy minister of energy, mines and resources, the chairman of the National Energy Board, and the deputy minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. This is a governmental task force and its purpose will be to bring together all information on the existing oil situation in the north, on transportation routes that might be used, and to co-ordinate all available information, from all federal agencies and departments, and then report and make proposals to the government.

Mr. Mahoney: As a supplementary question, has Canada been asked to participate with the United States in a study on the means of transporting oil from the Arctic to market?

Mr. Pepin: No formal requests have been made to this effect but informal consultation has taken place between members of the federal administration and the companies involved. If we should receive a formal request we would be pleased to co-operate.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the minister has now accepted the suggestion which we on this side of the house have made for several weeks to set up this study, will the study group be looking into the question of setting out or trying to arrange a new oil policy by agreement and discussion with the United States? Further, after the task force has completed its work will the minister accept our suggestion that a group of members of parliament and senators representing all parties go to Washington to discuss the matter and make an arrangement?

Mr. Pepin: To answer the last question first, Mr. Speaker, this would be the worst possible thing to do, but this is only a personal opinion. I have read the recommendations made by the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada. Their recommendations are based on a number of assumptions. The north may be the greatest place for oil in the world. It may revolutionize distribution and marketing in North America. This is the kind of assumption we are going to check.

Inquiries of the Ministry

SHIPPING

EXPERIMENTS WITH NEW ICEBREAKING EQUIPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the importance of transportation in this regard, would the government consider supplying some financial assistance in the planned use of the Alexbow on a voyage into the port of Churchill this winter?

TRANSPORT

REMOVAL OF WHARFAGE CHARGES ON FISHING VESSELS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the economic problems facing the fishing industry and the fishermen, has the government considered removing the charges levied for boats tying up at government wharves?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this question has been considered on many occasions. The responsible minister has made representations on behalf of the fishing industry. It is very difficult to arrive at a policy that is universal in its application and at the same time provides encouragement to those engaged in this industry. But I can assure the hon. member that we have an open mind on the subject and will continue to review it.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. On October 30 my notice of motion No. 12, regarding the production of papers in relation to the federal-provincial development of Roberts Bank port-related rail links, was agreed to by the house. Since we have heard a great deal about efficiency here recently, I wonder when these papers will be delivered to me.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I say this without having seen the confirmation, but I understand they are ready. The member of the staff directly involved has had the flu for the last couple of days. I hope there will be no further delay in making them available to my hon. friend.

[Mr. Pepin.]

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does this apply to my motion No. 17 too?

Mr. Hellyer: I do not know, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, while we are in this field. Could the Minister of Transport report on the status of the report on jurisdiction at Roberts Bank? On December 6 the minister said it would be tabled not later than the following week. I refer to the report on which government, federal or provincial, has jurisdiction in regard to the Roberts Bank development.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, is my hon. friend referring to the opinion that was sought at that time? If that is the case, it is now ready. I refer to the opinion asked of the deputy attorney general.

Mr. Nowlan: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. My question of December 6 was directed specifically to the report defining the division of jurisdiction between the two governments. I asked whether the minister could table the report and he replied that he had it and it would be tabled the following week. I am not sure whether it is the opinion or the report defining jurisdiction as between the federal and provincial governments with regard to Roberts Bank. If it is ready, could it be tabled so that we can read it during the Christmas recess, if we have one?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I join my hon. friend in being a bit at a loss, because there is no report that I know of. I am afraid there may have been a little misunderstanding. The only thing that comes close to that is an opinion asked of the deputy attorney general. I would be glad to inquire into the subject and discuss it with my hon. friend.

Mr. Nowlan: Regardless of what it is, Mr. Speaker, the minister agreed on December 6 to table it. I wonder whether he is prepared to do that.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether there might be an understanding between the minister and the hon. member as to what it is that should be tabled.

Mr. Rose: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I have listened with interest to this exchange. What is lacking in both the answer given to the hon. member for Annapolis Valley and the answer given to me is specifically when. Could the minister enlighten us in this respect?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There also appears to be difficulty about what.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: While the matter is being considered by all concerned, we might go on to another matter.

[Later:]

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. My point of order relates to a question asked by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley of the Minister of Transport in connection with the tabling of a report. Some confusion arose, including confusion in the mind of the Chair, as to what was being requested when the minister replied that he had no such report. I refer to the fact that on December 6, in answer to a question from the same hon. member, the minister said that this report had been received and would be tabled not later than the following week.

Further, in order to clear up the minister's confusion—perhaps his confusion could be better cleared up by more frequent attendance and by better attention to his work here in the house.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I should like to call the attention of the minister to the actual report to which the hon. member was referring. On October 16, 1968 the minister stated, as reported on page 1211 of Hansard:

—we in the department have undertaken studies—

That was in connection with port jurisdiction. He went on to say that he expected the report would be ready for consideration by the end of November. We all realize that when members ask questions in the house they are not necessarily entitled to answers. However, when information is given by any minister with regard to a report, or in connection with any other request, at least he should have the ability to keep himself informed as to what is going on in his department.

Mr. Hellyer: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, the mystery is now cleared up and I want to thank the hon. member for looking up these references for me. I tabled this report earlier today.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Now that the minister has found his feet and has said that he tabled this report, he only emphasizes the fact that he does not know what is going on.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TRADE

SHIPMENT OF MINK AND NUTRIA TO RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ray Perrault (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister of trade and commerce. Can the minister say whether Canadian mink and nutria farms have any trading arrangements with the Soviet union, and can he confirm whether a large Christmas shipment of live mink and nutria destined for the Soviet union was loaded aboard a Soviet air liner last night at Toronto international airport under what is alleged to have been a very tight security guard?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that this shipment took place. I cannot see at the moment what is wrong about it. This is regular trade. I am sure my hon. friend agrees with that. I am checking to see whether there was something irregular in the way the minks were treated or something of that kind that would be offensive to ethics.

FARM MACHINERY

IMPROVED SAFETY FEATURES—REPORT OF COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister state whether he is taking immediate steps to implement the recommendations of the first report of the Barber commission on farm machinery safety?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker. As I answered yesterday, I believe it was, we at least need some time to study the report. I do not think it is right to call it a report of the commission; I think it was one of the study papers that was released.

Mr. Yewchuk: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. This first report was published because the recommendations were of some urgency in view of many farm deaths which have occurred owing to a lack of safety features in farm machinery. For this reason immediate steps are necessary in this respect. Does the minister agree with this?

Inquiries of the Ministry

TRANSPORT

ORGANIZATION OF CONTAINER TRAFFIC IN ATLANTIC PORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In keeping with the loveable holiday mood, I sent him a carefully worded notice of the question. Because of the serious impact of containerization on eastern Canadian ports and the lack of government responsibility in this regard, can the minister give us an up to date report on the matter before the recess? Can he tell us what progress has been made within his sphere of responsibility?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I understand that some time today it is likely that Clarke Traffic Services and/or the National Harbours Board will be making an announcement with respect to this question. The harbours board has been scrupulously careful in offering to Clarke Traffic Services equality of treatment between the two ports of Saint John and Halifax. It was therefore left up to the company itself to choose between them on the basis of other considerations outside of the actual provision of the dock facilities themselves.

I must say that at this moment I do not know which one of these two ports the company has decided to use, but I imagine they will have that decision in their announcement when it is made. All I can say is that the harbours board has co-operated in making facilities available at either port and is quite prepared to provide additional facilities in the years ahead as required.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, with regard to two points in these negotiations. First, were exclusive rights given for the container facilities either at Halifax or Saint John and, second, has the minister's department or the National Harbours Board had inquiries from any other consortium or syndicate with shipping interests in the north Atlantic about the use of container facilities in these two ports or from groups other than Clarke Traffic Services Ltd?

Mr. Hellyer: I understand the new terminal will be a public one and available to other steamship lines irrespective of which port is chosen. In answer to the second question, I imagine there have been general inquiries made but none as precise or as serious as this one—in other words, none which got to the stage of actual negotiations with a contract in view.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I am not asking the Minister of Transport to disclose anything but can he tell the house whether Clarke Traffic Services Ltd. has been able to make a decision with regard to either port?

Mr. Hellyer: I understand they have made a decision but have been pretty careful not to tell anybody what it is, at least until this morning. In speaking to the National Harbours Board early this morning I was informed by them merely that they expected to reach some agreement today on the basis of the port which has been chosen by the Clarke company and that a release would be made immediately thereafter.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Minister of Transport to ensure that the next phase of the south end pier development in Halifax, on which tenders closed a few weeks ago, will be processed as rapidly as possible?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, Mr. Speaker, as quickly as it would seem advisable under the circumstances.

Mr. Forrestall: I have a final supplementary question for the minister. In view of the disappointment which may come to either my hon. friend from Saint John or myself, is the minister now able to assure as that the decision will in no way interfere with the plans of the National Harbours Board or the Department of Transport to proceed with the construction of container facilities at both ports?

Mr. Hellyer: I do not think there would be sufficient traffic to justify the acquisition of a crane at both ports at this time. Therefore it would seem reasonable to provide the facilities where they are immediately required. As I indicated a moment or two ago, if and when there is sufficient traffic to justify additional facilities at either or both ports the National Harbours Board will be in a position to provide them.

FISHERIES

U.S. RULING ON USE OF TRADE NAME "GREENLAND HALIBUT"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Douglas A. Hogarth (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the announcement today by the United States government that the use of the trade name "Greenland halibut" will henceforth be prohibited in the United States, what immediate action does the Canadian government propose to take in this regard?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will allow the question, of course, but I should like to bring to the attention of hon. members my opinion that a number of questions asked today might normally have been placed on the order paper. However, this is not suggested to hon. members because of the recess which may come to us later today or at some time.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is that the government will shortly be issuing an order requiring the Canadian fish processing and packaging plants to label this species of fish "Greenland turbot". The main reason for this is that over 90 per cent of the production does go to the United States and the decision handed down today, to be made effective 90 days from now, dictates the trade name to be used in sales there.

SPORTS

HOCKEY—EUROPEAN TOUR BY VICTORIAVILLE TIGERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right honourable Prime Minister and even if I am out of order, I should like to take a minute of the question period to point out the fact that we have the privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member resume his seat.

I must remind him that there are only a few minutes left before the end of the question period and that the minute he is taking is a minute that he takes away from his colleagues who might have important questions to ask.

Mr. Fortin: Then, Mr. Speaker, I am asking my question immediately.

Is the right hon. Prime Minister aware that we have the honour of receiving a Canadian hockey team, the "Tigers" of Victoriaville, who won the Allan cup for 1967-68, and who will be going to Europe soon, that is on December 25, to represent Canada.

I wonder if the right hon. Prime Minister is aware of this and if he intends to send them his best wishes in their endeavour to bring back the senior world hockey cup, that is the "Bunny Ahearne Trophy"?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I hardly understand that question, but I shall read it in Hansard and take any action deemed necessary.

AIRPORTS

RESTRICTION OF HOUSING DEVELOPMENTS BECAUSE OF NOISE FACTOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I too have a question for the hard-pressed Minister of Transport this morning. I listened with interest to the announcement by the minister today relative to his department's plans for the development of new airport facilities in Toronto. In view of the noise factor created by new and larger aircraft, what steps is the minister taking to restrict housing developments adjacent to other existing Canadian airports, for example, the one which serves this very city of Ottawa?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is one of those large problems which involve several jurisdictions of government. The zoning of land in the ordinary sense is within the jurisdictions of the provincial and municipal governments. We are therefore having conversations with them to see what kind of co-operation is possible to protect the future viability of our existing airports. This is precisely the problem that we have just been talking about and discussing in respect of the Toronto international airport. It will require either a considerable degree of co-operation on the part of municipal and provincial governments to protect existing airports or some change in policy on the part of the federal government which would involve the accumulation of much larger areas of land and some land management in respect thereto.

HOUSING

REPORTED INTENTION TO INCREASE MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. It was announced today that the interest rate on N.H.A. mortgage is going to reach an all-time high of 9.25 per cent. I wonder whether the minister would consider taking immediate action in that regard before his task force reports?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, although it will probably bring big red headlines when the announcement is made, it should be recalled that this is a statutory limitation and there is no requirement for lenders to charge that much money for N.H.A. mortgages. Indeed, at the present time they are making loans below the limit. I personally believe that the present rate is a sustainable one and I hope there will be no increase in the effective rate to borrowers, notwithstanding the increase in the ceiling.

Mr. Broadbent: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister seriously suggesting that the government is in no position to do anything about it but—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

COMMUNICATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO OBSERVERS AT U.S. SATELLITE LAUNCHING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I have a question with an international flavour for the minister in charge of communications. Can he advise whether anyone in his department concerned with planning for domestic satellites was given the opportunity of on-site observation of the launching of the latest "intelsat" satellite in the United States, and to what extent such an opportunity was utilized?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I have no particular information on that but I will get it.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF HOLIDAY ON BOXING DAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. Gordon Blair (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Could the minister advise the house whether arrangements have been completed to grant a holiday to the public service on Boxing day?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that is yes, and an announcement has been made. Boxing day will be a holiday generally for all those in the public service other than members of bargaining units which have not sought nor secured in their agreements to have Boxing day as a holiday.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

IMMIGRATION

CANADIAN POLICY ON ASYLUM FOR REFUGEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the forthcoming hearings involving the Polish seamen now in Halifax, has the government communicated to the immigration appeal board its policy concerning Canadian asylum for people from communist countries?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker, the board is empowered under the law to deal with this matter. I think it would be an unwarranted interference for me or any member of the government to communicate with them on this point.

Mr. McCleave: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If it is government policy, and we have been told by the present and former Prime Ministers that it is, surely this statement should be before the board to help it in its decisions. This is what I was asking of the minister, not to interfere but to place that general statement before the board.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker? May I ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether his representative before the immigration appeal board will take government policy into consideration?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I give my hon. friend that assurance.

Mr. Speaker: There are just a few seconds remaining in the question period, and perhaps the hon. member might allow two or three quick questions.

Mr. Forrestall: The lives of nine men are fairly important too, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East.

Mr. Forrestall: No, I will pass it along.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR POLICY STATEMENT ON TAXATION COMMISSION REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance. Is he in a position today to reply to the question I posed to him yesterday and of which he took notice?

Mr. H. E. Gray (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): I regret, Mr. Speaker, that I am not in that position. As the house knows, the minister was involved throughout yesterday with the federal-provincial finance ministers' conference. He has been here earlier today but I have not yet had an opportunity to consult with him. However, I will pursue the matter for my hon. friend.

PARLIAMENT HILL

REPORTED ATTEMPT TO EXTINGUISH CENTENNIAL FLAME

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask what I consider to be a rather urgent question of the minister who is replacing the Solicitor General who is in charge of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Is he aware that attempts may be made later today, if one has not already been made, as a mark of protest by a group which has a substantial complaint against government action, to snuff out the centennial flame on parliament hill? Are any protective measures being taken?

[Translation]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should have liked to put my question to the Minister of Finance, but since he has just left the house I will put it to his parliamentary secretary.

As the result of the failure of the federal-provincial conference of the Ministers of Finance, can we be assured that Quebec will receive the equivalent, in dollars, to the tons of wheat which have just been rejected by the Ivory Coast?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to an order made by the house earlier this day I now leave the Chair to resume at the call of the bells.

SITTING SUSPENDED

At 12.40 p.m. the sitting of the house was suspended during pleasure.

SITTING RESUMED

The house resumed at 4.45 p.m.

PROCEDURE

STATEMENT FOLLOWING DISCUSSION AMONG HOUSE LEADERS

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could have leave of the house to revert to motions for the purpose of making a statement.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a statement to the house on the outcome of the very helpful discussions that have taken place among the representatives of the parties. The course of action that we should like to suggest to the house is that the proposed 16-A provisions be deleted from the fourth report of the special committee, and that thereafter the house be asked to decide today whether or not to adopt the remaining sections of that report, and then the consequential fifth report of the special committee on procedure. We believe that this would meet with approval in all quarters of the house.

To achieve these results I understand that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) is prepared to agree to the withdrawal of his motion for an amendment to the motion for concurrence in the fourth report. A new amendment would then be offered excluding the proposed standing order 16-A from the motion for concurrence. The question on this amendment and on the main motion would be decided today by the house. If the main motion on the fourth report is carried, concurrence in the fifth report would be moved. We have also agreed on the text of a motion to refer the question of the allocation of time to the new standing committee on procedure and organization, and that motion will be put forward for decision today.

The recommendations of the fourth and fifth reports, if adopted by the house, will make major changes in the way this house deals with the business of supply and the examination of public bills. During the course of the debate considerable uneasiness was expressed in various quarters about the suitability of our standing committee system as it now exists to perform the heavy tasks to be assigned to it.

For this reason, it has been agreed that after the new standing committee on procedure and organization has been established, in addition to its general reference and the directive to review generally the effects of the various procedural changes, that committee will be given a specific direction to keep under close observation the operation of the standing committees.

The focus of this observation will be concentrated on four points. The first of these will be the way the standing committees are studying the estimates. The second will be the possibility of making the position of standing committee chairmen somewhat more comparable to that of the chairman of the committees of the whole house. The third will be the matter of ministerial attendance at the meetings of the standing committees. The fourth point will be the need to make available stronger and more extensive support facilities of various kinds to the standing committees. As I said, a motion embodying that instruction will be made when the new standing committee on procedure and organization has been established.

Before taking my seat perhaps I can say a few words of appreciation to members on all sides of the house, particularly to my colleagues the house leaders. I think it can be agreed that we are now engaged in an historic change in the rules of the house, but that in the process we have had an historic debate on the subject. I think it can also be agreed generally that the debate has brought forward with greater clarity the principal issues in our parliamentary system.

Equally I do not think there can be any doubt that the result of our deliberations and the strenuous opinions that were shared across the floor will in the long run make for a better and more effective system. Therefore I should like to express my thanks to all hon. members, and especially to those with whom I have had the privilege of conducting these discussions.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should just like to take the time of the house to make two or three points. If I make them rather firmly it is not from the point of view of being combative but simply from the point of view of making certain that we are removing any possible misunderstanding.

First of all, I would make it very clear that, as I understand it, rule 16-A is not being referred back to committee under the conditions outlined by the Minister of Manpower yesterday, but rather under very much broader terms of consideration. Yesterday the Minister of Manpower indicated that the government would be prepared to give instructions to the committee to consider the proposal made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), which was to take a look at the British system. "We shall give it that kind of latitude," said the minister.

I want to make it very clear that this rule is being sent back to the committee under much broader bounds of latitude than that, including instructions to the committee, among other things, to consider suggestions I made in the course of the debate. I want to make it perfectly clear that we are not agreeing to this section of the report going back to committee within the bounds of latitude outlined by the Minister of Manpower, but rather under the much broader bounds of latitude set out in the motion that the house leader of the government will, I presume, present in due course.

Secondly, we have opposed the power sought by the government party in the house under proposed rule 16-A, and we believe that the country has rejected it as unnecessary and improper. We have accepted in a spirit of co-operation the other rules put forward, though we did have considerable reservations about a number of them, in order to try to make this parliament work more effectively.

Although I do not believe that this would happen, if the special committee, dominated as it must be by a majority of government supporters in the house—and I repeat, I am not suggesting that this will happen—were to bring back a recommendation which was something like 16-A, then we would regard this majority of the house—and I say this very frankly—as being guilty of bad faith. Let there be no mistake about the vigour with which we in this party would react to any such proposal.

I do not say that to be provocative; I say it simply so that there is no misunderstanding. If the rules are to work, they must work through co-operation and good faith. We believe we have given ample evidence of our desire to co-operate, and have shown our good faith in accepting the other rules proposed to the house, despite our considerable reservations. We, and I think the country, sir, will judge the good faith of the government in its desire to co-operate by the manner in which the special committee will now respond to the debate that has taken place in the house when that committee gets down to consider its business. The undertaking of a project such as we are considering in a parliament like this is never easy.

May I take this occasion to express my thanks to my colleagues in my own party for their understanding and patience. I wish to thank especially the members in my party who served on the special standing committee that brought forth these recommendations. If I may say so, I should like to express my particular appreciation to my house leader, who has borne a very heavy responsibility and burden in this matter.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am happy on behalf of this party to confirm the understanding that has been indicated this afternoon by the government house leader. We might almost say that the notes from which he read represent an agreed communiqué which came out of the last meeting of the house leaders. I should also like to join with both hon. members who have preceded me in drawing attention—and I do not think we err in doing this sort of thing too often—to the value of parliamentary debate, which has been proven once again during these past two weeks.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I think I may be forgiven for saying that it is a good thing this debate was not conducted under the limitations of the proposed rule 16-A. If it had, it would have been settled long ago and in an unsatisfactory manner. On the other hand, as a result of free debate in this house, of free negotiations among the representatives of the parties and free discussions within party caucuses, we have arrived at a settlement which I believe will be satisfactory to all and will be good for parliament as a whole.

As everyone knows, two main issues concerned us in the debate of the past two weeks. One of them was of supreme importance to all of us, though the other was also an important issue. Those two issues were the proposed standing order 16-A and the matter of the handling of estimates by parliament. With regard to the proposed rule 16-A, the solution that has been arrived at I believe is crystal clear and I appreciate the way in which the Leader of the Opposition has underlined it. Maybe we are talking about a difference in terminology, but there is meaning to the words we choose. We are not just referring back the proposed rule 16-A out of this report to an old committee. Rather, we are expunging rule 16-A from the fourth report. That rule is finished. Later there will be a motion to refer to the incoming committee on procedure and organization on the subject of the allocation of the time of the house. Certain guide lines will be agreed upon for that committee and they will be broad enough, I am sure, to permit that kind of free negotiation and free discussion which the Leader of the Opposition said would be essential. I can assure all members of the house that when that new committee is established the representative of this party will insist that the discussions and negotiations be free, that there be no attempt to bring back the old proposed rule 16-A that was expunged, and that any recommendation brought back is one that can be agreed upon by all parties in this House of Commons.

We are glad to have achieved this resolution of the problem created by proposed rule 16-A. It was obnoxious for many of us; it was looked upon with disfavour by a large section of the press and other media as well as by the public, and I think parliament has done itself proud to solve the matter in this way. Since it is almost Christmas and since congratulations are being handed around perhaps I may be pardoned for saying that we might even congratulate the government on being willing to take the otherwise unpleasant steps which were necessary so that this agreement could be arrived at.

The other point, Mr. Speaker, was the question of supply. While we, in this party, did not put as much emphasis on that question as we did on the question of rule 16-A, we grew more uneasy about it as time went on. The proposal that is now being made is that we should put into operation the new proposals regarding supply, send the estimates to standing committee, and so on. We have agreed that any review that might take place with regard to that process should not be left until we sit next session, but should be a current review, beginning early in 1969. The government house leader has pointed out that this review will take into account such things as ministerial attendance, the facilities that are available, the job done by the chairmen, and so on.

An hon. Member: And the staff.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We think that this kind of review of the processes of this place is very necessary, and good for the Canadian people and for the members of parliament.

I may say that there are one or two things in the fourth report and one or two things in the fifth report that did concern me. If debate had gone on we would have raised those matters on the floor of the house. I will not mention them now, but will simply say that, now we have been given this guarantee of a review, I feel sure that, if there are things that do not work out as we had hoped they would, we shall have a chance to bring them up, either here or in committee, and perhaps have them acted on.

All told, this has been a good two weeks in the life of parliament and I think we have come to a good resolution of the difficulty. I believe we will be able to begin our work in 1969 with a set of rules that will be helpful to us. I should like to join with others who have spoken in thanking those who have helped us. I appreciate particularly the support and tremendous interest of all members of this party in this whole problem. It has been a pleasure to work with the other house leaders and the members of the committee. It was not always easy to say that. There were one or two nights when it was no pleasure at all. Now that we have resolved the difficulty in a parliamentary fashion it is a pleasure for me to join with others in expressing this work of approval of what we have now accomplished.

[Translation]

Mr. Romuald Rodrigue (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, in my name and on behalf of my colleagues, I am very happy to assure the house that we accept the proposals made by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) about the withdrawal of rule 16A, and we believe that the discussions that took place gave very good results.

We all agree that our procedure must be changed and we believe that all hon. members who took part in the debate these last few days gave their best in order to attain the goal we were all seeking, the streamlining of our parliamentary procedure.

I would also like to congratulate all the members of the committee on procedure, who held 26 sittings, for the wonderful work they did. I hope that the task with which they will be entrusted this afternoon will be carried out satisfactorily and that their work will be as fruitful as anything done until now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN FOURTH REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—WITHDRAWAL OF AMENDMENT

The house resumed, from Thursday, December 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Blair that the fourth report of the special committee on procedure of the house, presented to the house on Friday, December 6, be concurred in, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield (p. 3762).

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I ask the unanimous consent of the house to withdraw my amendment to the motion.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Amendment (Mr. Stanfield) withdrawn.

AMENDMENT DELETING FROM MOTION PROVISION RESPECTING RULE 16-A

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That the motion be amended by inserting therein after the words "Procedure of the House", the words "except the proposal with respect to the proposed Standing Order 16-A."

Mr. Speaker: Shall the amendment carry?

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the motion as amended carry?

Motion as amended agreed to.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Might we have the consent of the house to revert to routine proceedings so that the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) can move a motion with respect to the fifth report?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN FIFTH REPORT

Mr. D. Gordon Blair (Grenville-Carleton): I have pleasure in moving:

That the fifth report of the standing committee on procedures of the house presented to the house on Friday, December 6, 1968, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

INSTRUCTION TO STANDING COMMITTEE RESPECTING ALLOCATION OF TIME

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): As I indicated in the statement I made on motions, there has been agreement in the house with respect to the reference of the question of the allocation of time to the standing committee on procedure and organization which we just established under the terms of the fifth report.

I would confirm, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) suggested, that the statement which I made was the agreed statement, and equally that the following proposed motion is also the agreed motion. I must say I did not hear all the remarks made by the Leader of the Opposition, but I would simply confirm that my understanding of the agreement is as stated in both this motion and in my statement. I take it there is no doubt about the fact that these two documents comprise the agreement between both sides of the house.

On this basis, I move:

That the standing committee on procedure and organization be instructed, and hereby is instructed, to consider and to propose ways to allocate time to the legislative business of the house and to include in its report or reports a draft of a proposed standing order drawn to give effect, if adopted by the house, to the proposal of the committee; and for greater certainty but not to restrict the generality of the foregoing, the committee is instructed to consider the British rules and practice for the allocation of time, the suggestions made by the Leader of the Opposition on December 10, 1968, the suggestions made by the Minister of Agriculture on December 13, 1968, and other proposals and suggestions made in the debate on the motion for concurrence in the fourth report of the special committee on procedure.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Perhaps by way of explanation of my rising at this point I should indicate that in accordance with the report we have just accepted certain resolutions on the order paper preceding the first reading of bills have been expunged from the order paper. I would therefore ask the unanimous consent of the house to go on to the Introduction of Bills stage of routine proceedings for the purpose of introducing certain bills in relation to certain resolutions now appearing as orders Nos. 9, 12, 17, 18, 19 and 20 on the order paper, all of which have been recommended to the house by His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. Speaker: Is it so agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Proposed Legislation

FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

AMENDMENT SUBSTITUTING RATE PRESCRIBED BY GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL

Hon. C. M. Drury (for the Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-151, to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

VETERANS LAND ACT

AMENDMENT SUBSTITUTING RATE PRESCRIBED BY GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-152, to amend the Veterans Land Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

HISTORIC SITES AND MONUMENTS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING BOARD MEMBERSHIP, REMUNERATION, ETC.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-153, to amend the Historic Sites and Monuments Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

AGRICULTURE

PREVENTION OF INTRODUCTION OR SPREAD OF PLANT PESTS

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-154, to prevent the introduction or spreading of pests injurious to plants.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

COMPENSATION FOR CONTAMINATION BY PESTICIDE RESIDUE

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-155, to provide compensation for farmers whose agricultural products are contaminated by pesticide residue and to provide for appeals from compensation awards.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Proposed Legislation

ANIMAL CONTAGIOUS DISEASES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING COMPENSATION, APPEALS, ETC.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-156, to amend the Animal Contagious Diseases Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF CLAIMS COMMISSION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I wonder if I might rise on a point of order and ask what happened to resolution No. 32 relating to the Indian Claims Commission? Surely, if the government considers it proper to deal with pesticides, the slaughter of animals and so on, it could deal with a number of other matters which are of more consequence.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I wish to tell the house that, following consultations with various Indian groups, and in view of certain remarks of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) during my appearance before the committee, we have referred the bill in question to the committee on health, welfare and social affairs, so that another amendment is made before its introduction in the house. I hope to be in a position to introduce this bill when the house reconvenes in January.

• (5:10 p.m.)

[English]

PEST CONTROL

REGULATION OF PRODUCTS USED IN CONTROL PROCEDURE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-157, to regulate products used for the control of pests and the organic functions of plants and animals.

An hon. Member: Is that your caucus bill?

Another hon. Member: That is for New Year's Eve.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Notice of the introduction of this bill has not been given, but it might accommodate the house if the house would concur in this motion so that it could be printed for hon. members.

[Mr. Olson.]

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CHRISTMAS RECESS

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That when the House adjourns at the conclusion of the sitting on Friday, December 20, 1968, it shall stand adjourned until Tuesday, January 14, 1969, at 2.30 p.m.; provided always that if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultation with Her Majesty's Government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the House shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time; and

That, in the event of Mr. Speaker being unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker or the Deputy Chairman of Committees shall act in his stead for the purpose of this order.

Motion agreed to.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the spirit of this house is so good I am sure it is with a bit of nostalgia we will all be leaving, I hope, in a few minutes; but I do not wish that to happen until I have had an opportunity in the name of everyone present to wish each other and all of us a Merry Christmas, bonne et heureuse année, et le paradis à la fin de vos jours.

LABOUR RELATIONS

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTE

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say, if I may, on a point of order, that I notice the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) in his seat and I know he has been occupied much of the day in connection with a dispute between NABET and the C.B.C. I wonder whether the minister could inform the house that the dispute has been properly settled, so that we can leave, in respect of that point, with the right Christmas spirit.

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to be able to add to the Christmas spirit by saying that five minutes ago both parties involved reached an agreement and have settled their differences. They will now be free to enjoy the festive season.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could add my good wishes to those of the Prime Minister and move that we adjourn this day's sitting.

Mr. Speaker: Before I put the motion to the house perhaps I might be allowed to convey to all hon. members a very earnest and enthusiastic invitation to attend the Christmas party given by the independent party caucus in room 16.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 5.15 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, January 14, 1969

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DIEFENBAKER—REMOVAL OF COAT OF ARMS FROM PUBLICATION OF STANDING ORDERS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege in connection with the publication of the standing orders of the House of Commons in January, 1969. It will be noted that in a provisional reprint of the rules published in 1966, the coat of arms appeared on the standing orders. In 1967 a further reprint was made, again with the coat of arms thereon. The reprint that has been delivered to members of the House of Commons has had removed therefrom the coat of arms and for it has been substituted the Speaker's chair.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am amazed to see the degree to which there is approval by members of the cabinet of this surreptitious act. I would ask, because this took place during your absence while visiting India, who made the decision for the removal of the coat of arms? The number of ministers who have applauded would indicate that what was done must have come about through the action of the cabinet; otherwise they would not have been applauding an act that cannot be justified outside parliament. As a member of this house I take the strongest objection to steps being taken by this government, outside parliament and parliamentary decision, to bring about a severance of our traditions. If changes are to be made they must be made by parliament and not by cabinet or by certain cabinet ministers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This trend has been going on for some time, and I am surprised that it apparently receives the support of the cabinet, if one is to judge by the earlier applause of cabinet ministers. I ask Your Honour to look into this matter, and once and for all put an end to the erosion of our traditions in this country by the actions of a government that will not bring these matters before parliament but act under the table.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, very little needs to be said about this. As you will note, neither I as government house leader nor the government was responsible for the publication of the document. In any event, I can tell the right hon. gentleman and the house that the coat of arms in fact is on the picture. There is a coat of arms on the chair which is portrayed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Perhaps Your Honour will note that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. member for Prince Albert has raised a question of privilege and the government house leader has made a statement. I consider it my duty to consider the matter raised by the right hon. gentleman.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION TO INCORPORATE NEW STANDING ORDERS IN JOURNALS

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of motions consequent upon the changes made to the rules of the house. These are primarily for the purpose of accommodating the order paper to the procedural changes. I believe there is general agreement to their acceptance. As my first motion I move:

That the Standing Orders, as amended and reprinted by the House on December 20, 1968, be incorporated in the Journals of the House.

I understand from the table that this is desirable from the standpoint of the records of the house.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, may I raise something for the sake of clarification. There were a number of amendments made with regard to agricultural bills, and so on and so forth, and the matters were referred quite properly to the agricultural committee. With the greatest respect, as a member of the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, I am wondering what the thinking was in referring the fisheries improvement loans bill to the finance committee, since we thought it would have been better for the fisheries and forestry committee to deal with this matter. They have greater expertise available to them in dealing with this matter than have the members of the finance, trade and economic affairs committee. I think perhaps that point could be taken up.

Motion agreed to.

MOTION DISCHARGING ORDER FOR COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, consequent upon the changes with respect to the business of supply I would like to move, seconded by Mr. Olson—

—that order numbered (1) appearing under the heading "Government Orders" on this day's order paper, relating to the committee of supply, be discharged.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Again, Mr. Speaker, is it the intention of the minister to supply continuing items on the order paper in the new form, or is this to be a complete discharge and the removal therefrom of the present item? Otherwise I think it will be a breach of new standing order 58(1).

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member anticipates my next motion.

Motion agreed to.

MOTION TO CONSIDER SUPPLY

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with standing order 58, and the proviso attached thereto, I move, seconded by Mr. Olson——that this house at its next sitting consider the business of supply.

Motion agreed to.

MOTION DISCHARGING ORDER FOR COMMITTEE OF WAYS AND MEANS

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in connection with the changes with respect to the committee of ways and means I would like to move, seconded by Mr. Olson—

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

—that order numbered (2) appearing under the heading "Government Orders" on this day's order paper, relating to the committee of ways and means be discharged.

Further to that perhaps I may say it would be the intention to deposit on the order paper the ways and means resolutions which have yet to be dealt with.

Motion agreed to.

MOTION TO CONTINUE PREPARATION OF COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS IN BOTH OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the house will recall that by provisional order made during the last session it was established on an experimental basis that the proceedings of committees be transcribed and printed in a bilingual form. I understand there has been a general acceptance of the new form, and the motion which I am now going to put before the house is to extend the new form of the committee proceedings for the balance of the current session in the manner in which they were printed in the experimental period. Accordingly I would like to move, seconded by Mr. Olson, — —that the provisions of the order of the house adopted November 15, 1968, with respect to the reporting, transcription and printing of committee proceedings, be extended and continued for the balance of this session.

Motion agreed to.

MOTION TO WITHDRAW RESOLUTION RESPECTING INDIAN CLAIMS COMMISSION

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, hon. members will have noted that order No. 32 is the only remaining resolution on the order paper of the former resolutions preceding bills involving a charge on the fiscal resources of the treasury. As indicated the bill is now under study by the government as a result of representations received. Therefore it would be in order to withdraw resolution No. 32 standing in the name of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien). Accordingly I would like to move, seconded by Mr. Olson,— —that the order for the consideration in committee of the whole of the following proposed resolution be discharged and the said resolution withdrawn:

"That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the disposition of Indian claims, and in relation thereto to provide for the establishment of an Indian Claims Commission; to provide for the duties of the commission, its decisions and awards; to provide for appeals from the decisions and awards of the commission to an Indian Claims Appeal Court; to provide assistance to Indian bands in preparing and pursuing claims; and to enact such financial provisions as may be necessary to accomplish the purposes of the act."

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I must make the observation that this resolution was placed on the order paper as recently as November 12. Now we have a clear indication that the government in power has no legislation ready. In hoping to remove this order from the order paper the government house leader has given no assurance as to when legislation on this very important subject matter will be introduced. We are therefore being asked to agree to this motion without any assurance that legislation to establish a measure to deal with long standing Indian claims will be dealt with. Certainly there is a clear indication that no legislation was ready at the time the resolution was brought in and certainly none is ready now.

I must protest the resolution being placed on the order paper when in fact no legislation was ready. I believe the house is entitled to some sort of undertaking, that would be forthcoming very shortly, so that this matter will not be let drift, and so that this very important and long standing irritation will not be left to deepen and worsen as it is already a very difficult problem.

In closing I should like to say that since the government is unable to produce legislation that is satisfactory it might be appropriate for the house to proceed under rule 16-A which provides for—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Stanfield: I dare say that may have been some kind of Freudian slip; I don't know. It might be appropriate for the house to proceed under rule 68(1) which provides for the introduction of a bill upon motion to appoint a committee to prepare and bring it in. Since the government is unable to produce legislation on this subject, I would suggest that the government bring in a measure to refer the matter to the appropriate standing committee, with instructions that there be consultation with the Indian people and that a bill be brought in for the house to consider.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Leader of the Opposition had paid some attention to the proceedings on the last day before the adjournment, he would have noted that the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) raised that problem and I gave an answer which seemed satisfactory to him.

[English]

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, when the Leader of the Opposition rose I was rising to discuss the same point. I disagree with the minister when he suggests that his reply to the question of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) was in any sense satisfactory. In view of the new rules, I appreciate, as do my colleagues that there is no place for a resolution which anticipates a money measure. I agree with the Leader of the Opposition, however, that when the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) seeks to remove this item from the order paper the government has a duty to inform the house when the legislation will come before the house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: I have not looked up Hansard but I think my memory is correct when I say that the minister who just spoke was unable to give the hon. member for Skeena any date as to when this bill will be before the house, and he has not done so today. I say seriously to the government that they ought now to say to the house when this bill will come before it if ever. If the minister does not want to tie himself down to a date which he might not be able to meet, let him take a date which he will be able to meet.

• (2:50 p.m.)

The members of this house and the Indian community in Canada have a right to know whether the removal of this resolution means that the subject matter is wiped off the order paper of this House of Commons, at least for this session, or whether this is merely a cleaning up affair and that the bill relating to the claims commission will be before the house some time during the next four or five months, and at approximately what date.

I fully support the protest made by the Leader of the Opposition, and there would be no sense in my putting it in my own words. If I may say so, it was put in words that are fully satisfactory to anyone concerned with this matter and I do not want to repeat what he said. I think the President of the Privy Council, the acting Prime Minister—whoever he may be—or the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has a duty to tell us approximately when we may expect this bill relating to the Indian claims commission.

If you will permit me before I sit down, I should like to say that it is a matter of great pleasure to welcome the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) back to the house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: I should like to express the pleasure I am sure everyone feels, that he is now sufficiently recovered to resume his duties.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the house that I fully agree with the two previous speakers to say that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development should be able to tell us when he intends to introduce the bill providing for the establishment of the Indian Claims Commission he referred to last December 20.

You will recall that a dispute arose in Cornwall at the end of 1968 and I think that such a bill could prevent further incidents of the same nature. Before accepting the proposal made by the government house leader, we are entitled to request from the minister the assurance that the bill will be introduced as well as details about when it will be introduced.

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words about this matter. Perhaps before doing that, however, I might associate myself with my leader in welcoming the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources back to the house, and extend also the same welcome to the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken). I am sure we are all happy to have both of these members back with us.

Several of those who have spoken today referred to the statement made by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development on December 20, and this prompted me to look up what he actually said. These were his concluding words on that occasion:

> I hope to be in a position to introduce this bill when the house reconvenes in January.

If these words meant anything they meant that the bill was to be introduced today,

[Mr. Lewis.]

January 14. I suggest that the minister does owe to the house a clear statement as to when this bill is going to be placed on the order paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member, if I have understood the text which I have just read, I said that I hoped to introduce the bill when the session would be resumed in January. I cannot bring it in today, but I can assure the house that the bill will be tabled in the forthcoming weeks, probably before the end of the month.

[English]

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, may I draw the attention of the house to the fact that the government is now supporting and substantiating the statement made by the Prime Minister, and is giving us bum answers.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, perhaps it might be of assistance to the house to make a brief announcement in respect of the proposed business for the coming week. We propose to begin on orders of the day today with the four bills relating to pesticides, pest control and animal contagious diseases; the four pieces of legislation in the name of the Minister of Agriculture. These bills are closely related one to the other in administrative structure, and it is felt they could be most effectively dealt with as a group by the standing committee on agriculture. It is the government's hope that they might be given early passage at the second reading stage so that they might receive more intensive consideration in committee. Following committee study, a more informed opinion would be possible as to the amount of time to be taken to deal with them on the report stage and third reading.

The order we propose for calling the items would be as follows: Nos. 19, 18, 20 and 43. Following those items we would ask that government order No. 7 be called, second reading of the act to amend the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act. In view of the fact that the measure was extensively debated earlier in the session, we hope that it too would receive rapid passage at the second reading stage.

The next item would be No. 25, the legislation with reference to the Bretton Woods Agreement Act and related statutes. The intention would be that the bill be referred to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs for a more detailed study. The next item to be called would be government order No. 30, second reading of the legislation to establish the fresh-water fish marketing corporation. The motion proposes reference of the bill to the standing committee on fisheries and forestry. It is anticipated that interested persons from western Canada concerned with the industry will want to make representations to the committee with respect to the bill. In view of the debate on the general subject matter which has already taken place, it is not anticipated that debate on the second reading stage would be too extended.

The next item would be No. 13, for second reading of an act to amend the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act and the Food and Drugs Act, that is to say, the drug prices bill, which would be referred to the standing committee on health, welfare and social affairs. On Thursday I expect to be in a position to make the customary announcement with respect to further business for the balance of this week and for next week.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I hope that either the minister who has just spoken or the Minister of Agriculture, when he deals with these bills, will be able to assure us that the new pest control bill is in no way related to the late, unlamented rule 16-A, which we hope is buried forever.

GRAIN

WHEAT—LICENSING SALE OF PITIC 62

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would like to announce the licensing for sale in Canada of Pitic 62, a wheat variety which was bred in Mexico. In the interest of brevity I would request permission to table copies of a press release which sets out details of this action taken by the Department of Agriculture today. The house will appreciate that important segments of the grain industry have expressed considerable interest in making a wider range of wheat classes available to farmers. This variety is of a different class and has the advantage of being higher yielding, but it is distinctly inferior in milling and baking qualities to our own milling wheats. Details about seed supplies, grades, etc., are outlined in the documents that I hope to table.

In conclusion, I think it cannot be overemphasized that because of its inferior baking and milling qualities, this class of grain, while it is called wheat, is not wheat in the sense that it will be allowed entry into the marketing channels that are normally considered for wheat in Canada today.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to hear the last statement of the Minister of Agriculture because in the news release, which is in much greater detail—the minister did not read it—the Board of Grain Commissioners advises that, because of its inferior quality, Pitic 62 would only be eligible for grading into the feed grades of wheat. So it does not mean anything in the way of assisting in developing a new variety of wheat that might be more acceptable than our high protein variety sold in the markets of the world.

I would be more interested if at this stage the minister was looking into the matter of the four or five idle ships waiting in the docks of Vancouver for dry wheat. The government should be doing something to get the grain to these ships.

Mr. Olson: We are.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. Woolliams: Probably if the Prime Minister at the Commonwealth prime minister's conference had been flirting a little more with markets than with skirts the farmers would have been better off.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, grain and livestock farmers are of course always looking for good wheat grain varieties to raise, and better varieties are still needed, but I suggest, sir, that this hardly can be called a variety that is to any great degree better than those we now have. It may be that in the future our experimental stations will crossbreed this grain to bring a higher yielding feed grain than we have now. However the shortcomings that the minister specified in his announcement points to the fact that this grain is hardly worthy of mention in this house and is hardly worth getting excited about. There may be parts of the prairie provinces, or certain sections of Ontario, where this grain can be raised, and it may be that Quebec and the maritimes may be able to use this variety—I do not know; the minister has not said. It is subject to smut and bunt and other crop diseases, which is hardly an additional asset to the grain industry in Canada. So I hope the minister will see to it that the department will watch very carefully the use of this grain, and where it is used.

May I conclude by agreeing with the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), that all that can be said here is "big deal". This country and the farmers in it have been anxiously awaiting about 20 different kinds of announcements and statements that this minister could be making, on the order for motions, that are more greatly needed than this one.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

ESTATE TAX ACT

REQUEST FOR RESOLUTION AND FOR AMENDMENT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance, one which arises out of the statement of business just given us by the government house leader. Is the Minister of Finance prepared to give the house an undertaking on when he will lay upon the table the ways and means motions relating to income tax and estate tax changes arising from his budget. I ask this question in view of the concern I have expressed on a number of occasions about this legislation and the growing concern about it throughout this country.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I hope to lay these upon the table in the very near future, within a matter of a few days.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wish to ask the minister whether during the interval, and immediately before the resolutions are before the house he might give an assurance to the people of Canada that the iniquitous estate tax bill is going to be amended so as to preserve home farms for farmers across Canada, and also save small businesses from destruction.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to deny the allegation made by the right hon. member, and indicate that when an estate of $500,000 is left outright, one half to the widow and one half to one child, the ultimate tax is $125,400 as compared with $147,781 under existing law. This is not a small business.

Mr. Stanfield: Are we to assume from the answer of the Minister of Finance that the government proposal is to proceed without amendment or change?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, small changes are always made to taxation bills. I do not propose major changes, but there are always technical amendments proposed to such bills, as my hon. friend knows.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This means the wiping out of family farms.

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): I should like to address this supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. Has he received extensive protests about the proposed estate tax bill from people right across this nation?

Mr. Benson: I have received far fewer protests with regard to the estate tax bill than with regard to the 2 per cent social security tax, and the total number of protests received this year was smaller than those received with regard to the baby budget brought in last spring.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Canadians have now given up hope for any action on the estate tax bill.

FINANCE

REQUEST THAT INTEREST RATES BE CONSIDERED BY STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask some questions of the Minister of Finance relating to another subject. Is the government considering steps to bring down unconscionable interest rates which are now being charged on loans and mortgages, and if so what are such steps?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Of course the government is not in favour of high interest rates.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Benson: High interest rates exist because of conditions in money markets both in Canada and throughout the world.

Mr. Lewis: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the minister's assertion that the government is against high interest rates, I should like to ask him what he and the government are proposing to do to reduce the crippling rate of nine and three eighths per cent which the government has set under the National Housing Act.

Mr. Benson: As my hon. friend knows, this rate is set automatically under the legislation, and I am sure that my hon. friend and all of us look forward anxiously to proposals with respect to housing which will be brought forward by my colleague, the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Lewis: I agree we are anxiously looking forward to them.

I should like to ask another supplementary question on the same subject. In view of the very large profits reported by chartered banks in recent months as a result of high interest rates, will the minister give favourable consideration to amending the Bank Act in order to restore some control over the level of interest rates in the market?

While I am on my feet may I also ask the minister whether he would consider referring this entire subject back to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs for renewed study in the light of the galloping rates of interest from which this country is suffering.

Mr. Benson: Again I would recommend to my friend when looking at the results of operations of financial institutions to look at the results of operations of all financial institutions, and in fact to see whether or not the average consumer who obtains a consumer loan is paying a higher interest rate now than he did before. I think the hon. member will find the consumer is paying lower interest rates.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lewis: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I do not say this unkindly but I really do not need a very elementary lecture on finance and loans.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a point of order he should make it and not make a speech.

Mr. Lewis: My point of order is that instead of indulging in that kind of useless stuff the minister should recognize his duty to answer the question I asked him as to whether there will be any amendment to the Bank Act, and as to whether this subject of the galloping interest rates will be referred to the standing committee. That is what I asked him about.

Mr. Benson: I can answer the first question quickly by saying that at present there is no intention to amend the Bank Act.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AMENDMENT TO ALLOW INCREASED BORROWING BY TRUST COMPANIES

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. Is it the minister's intention to put before this house legislation amending the Trust Companies Act so as to allow increased borrowing power to trust and loan companies? If so, when may we expect such legislation?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, amendments to the Trust Companies Act are presently under consideration by the government. We will probably be presenting legislation to amend the Trust Companies Act later in this session.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): A supplementary question. Will the provisions include increasing the powers of trust companies to borrow capital?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I would prefer to make the contents of the bill known when it is presented to the house.

HOUSING

TASK FORCE—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In the absence of the Minister of Transport and in view of his undertaking that the report of his task force will be tabled in the house within 30 days of the completion of hearings, and this day being the forty second day, could the Minister of Finance advise us when the report will be tabled?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that this is not a supplementary question. I will recognize him in due course, but at present I see an hon. member of his party who wishes to rise, the hon. member for Abitibi.

[Later:]

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. It is not "where the hell is the Prime Minister" but when will the white paper on housing come before us?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, that subject matter comes under the administrative responsibility of the Minister of Transport. I will be glad to draw the hon. member's question to his attention.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

[Translation]

POSSIBILITY OF CANADIAN REPRESENTATION AT VATICAN

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Acting Prime Minister.

Can he tell us when the appointment of an ambassador to the Vatican will become official?

[English]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): I am afraid I am unable to answer that question, Mr. Speaker.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

INCREASED RENTAL CHARGES FOR BOXES

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General and ask him whether he is contemplating any review of the most recent of several announcements regarding the increase in the rental charges for post office boxes, which doubles and in some instances quadruples the charges made prior to those in effect prior to eight days ago.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): No, Mr. Speaker.

DISTRIBUTION OF PORNOGRAPHIC ADVERTISING

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Postmaster General. Can the minister inform the house as to what action has been taken with respect to the recent widespread distribution of pornographic advertising by an organization in California known as Collectors Publications?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, we have taken away the use of the mails from these people.

EFFORTS TO AVOID INTERRUPTION OF POSTAL SERVICE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Postmaster General whether agreement has been reached with the president of the letter carriers union so as to avoid the possibility of any further interruption of postal service.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the house I should like to make a fairly extensive reply to this question.

Mr. Speaker: If the minister wishes to make an extensive reply, it would have to be on motions. Has the minister leave of the house to revert to motions for the purpose of making this statement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Kierans: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the letter carriers union should have criticized implementation of the five-day week. At its last annual convention the union passed a resolution calling for the early implementation of the five-day week. This measure was also recommended by the Montpetit commission of inquiry. It is being implemented both to achieve cost savings—and these are in the order of $13 million—and to improve working conditions.

[Translation]

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the union deemed it advisable to state that they had not been advised of this change before January 2.

The first letters announcing the changes in detail were sent to the union by the assistant deputy minister on October 3.

Later on, in October, November, December and during the first week of January, 13 exchanges occurred between the officials of the department and the union representatives either through correspondence or meetings.

Some of these meetings were held last week and even this morning. I am ready to meet the union leaders at any time, if necessary, and I told them so right from the very first meetings which took place in my office.

[English]

I am also surprised that the union should have stated that the coincident move on February 1 to a new system of letter carrier delivery represents a retrograde step for the employees or for the public. The cost saving of this move is approximately $3 million, which represents a significant saving to the Canadian taxpayer.

This new system differs significantly from the old straight-line or straight-through delivery criticized by the union. Under that system letter carriers left the post office in the morning and continued on their walk, on occasion eating their lunch on the way, until they had completed their deliveries. Under the new system of non-return delivery, letter carriers, after completing their morning round, will be provided with free transportation to the nearest post office, to their home or to a restaurant, whichever they prefer. The difference lies in the fact that under the new system they will no longer return to the post office to sort letters for afternoon delivery.

Now, what is involved? An average of about 20 first class letters are sorted on each day for delivery in the afternoon. Considering the time involved, I do not consider this procedure economic. The effect upon householders is that these 20 or fewer first class letters will be delivered the following morning instead of that afternoon. This represents 20 first class letters of which, on the average, at least three quarters are business mail, such as bills, divided among the 150 points of call on that afternoon walk.

On the issue raised by the union of lay-offs as a result of the five day week, here are the facts. A total of 2,068 positions will become redundant as a result of these changes. To take care of these employees we stopped all hiring as of last October 1. As a result, alternative positions at the same salary have been found for all but 601 of the more than 2,000 employees affected. We have in hand another 215 unfilled vacancies. This leaves us 386 positions. To take care of these we intend, and have so informed the union, that all persons in redundant positions will be maintained on strength for 60 days after February 1. As a result of normal retirements this should open up a considerable number of other vacant positions. At the end of that 60 days we will discuss with union officials any unresolved cases and settle those to the satisfaction of both parties concerned.

Finally, I should like to say this. The post office is undergoing radical change. The public is underwriting that change to the extent of some $90 million a year in increased rates. Post office employees have secured, and rightly so, major wage increases in the past few years. The five day week is being implemented, as I said, to improve working conditions. I invite unions to co-operate with us in achieving a common goal—a better, more efficient post office which serves the public better and which is, by no means least of all, a better place to live and work in.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, we all want an efficient postal service in Canada. I asked my question because many people want some assurance that the Postmaster General and the government generally will make an earnest, sincere and reasonable effort to ensure there is no interruption of service. There is a widespread feeling in the country, and I myself have shared in that, that the prolonged strike last summer was unnecessary, and the result of the government's failure to bargain and discuss questions in good faith until the strike commenced.

I am not rising today to speak for the union; that is not my business, nor is it my place to do so. The members of the union are quite capable of speaking for themselves. Nevertheless I am not exactly comforted by what I interpret as the righteous attitude this afternoon of the Postmaster General.

An hon. Member: The self righteous attitude.

Mr. Stanfield: He expressed surprise at this and surprise at that; he expressed surprise at the reaction of the union. If one wishes to talk about surprise it must be noted that a good many Canadian people are rather surprised at the quality of the mail service existing at the present time. I hope the Postmaster General will bear in mind, as I am sure he will, that while it is all very well to talk about savings you do not save very much unless you have a willing and co-operative work force. I did not rise to lecture the Postmaster General but merely to express the hope that these grievances will be discussed in good faith with a view to reaching a genuine and satisfactory solution which will preserve the working conditions of the men concerned, and will ensure the Canadian public of good postal services that will not be interrupted by any unnecessary stoppage of work.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): It was obvious as one listened to the Postmaster General that, like the Prime Minister, he has learned Marshall McLuhan's message very well: You can say one thing and mean another.

On a number of occasions both inside and outside the house the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) endorsed the basic principles of the Freedman report, that workers shall be consulted and that workers shall not suffer as a result of technological changes. Yet here we have an illustration of government thinking. It is clear that a great number of workers will be laid off as a result of the government's decision to implement the five day delivery. On a number of occasions the Postmaster General made clear and precise statements that not a single postal worker would be laid off because of the new system. The remarks are in Hansard, Mr. Speaker, although this is not the time to read them. The minister knows he made those statements, yet today he can only say that at some time six months from now, if there are postal workers for whom positions have not been found, the government is prepared to discuss that matter with its employees.

I can only say, Mr. Speaker, that either the minister lied when he made the statement that no one would be laid off, or he has changed his mind. Now the minister says this new system means there will be a better service. He said that when a post office worker went back to the post office he picked up only 30 new letters for delivery, of which two thirds may have been bills. Now, none of us like getting bills, but the fact is that the 30 letters we are speaking of were delivered on the same day they were received in the post office. Under the new system they will not be delivered until the next day.

The minister says the department is going to save money and it will be more efficient. Of course he is talking nonsense and I am sure he knows it. He said arrangements will be made to pick up letter carriers at noon to take them back to the post office or to some place where they can eat lunch. This is something new. That decision could not have been discussed with post office workers two days ago, because when I was in Winnipeg last week I met postal workers who are delivering mail and that matter was not mentioned. I may say that some of those postal workers are delivering mail in the fringe areas of my city where there is no public transportation or restaurant.

The temperature in Winnipeg and most of western Canada last week hovered at about 30 degrees below zero. The workers were very concerned—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must remind the hon. member that the rules allow him to make a brief statement at this time. Perhaps he will keep that in mind in the course of the remarks he is making.

Mr. Orlikow: I was coming to the end of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, which I submit have been no longer than the minister's statement. I was trying to deal precisely with matters the minister supposedly dealt with. I say the letter carriers are concerned and have a right to be concerned about the unilateral and arbitrary decision of the department, something which is not new for that department.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

We have a new Postmaster General but we have the same old gang in the top positions in the department. Unless the minister comes up with a new plan, the workers are not going to accept the idea that a substantial number of them will have to eat their lunches outdoors in very cold and wet weather simply because there are no provisions for transportation and thus no opportunity for them to have their lunch break. I say to the minister, and this is not a threat, that I think I know how the postal workers in many cities feel, and unless the department meets these legitimate complaints there will be another stoppage very shortly.

INDUSTRY

ACTION TO PROMOTE INTRODUCTION OF NEW PRODUCTS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

In view of the great importance of the statement made by the minister over the week-end, to the effect that industries should co-ordinate their efforts in the development of new products, can the minister tell the house whether that statement will be followed by the adoption in his department of a new policy to that effect?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, not specifically, I was referring to the use of existing legislation. Some proposed legislative measures, for instance the creation of a corporation to encourage exports, could have an indirect effect. It is a well known fact that the development of exports helps the rationalization and development of industry within a country.

HONOURING OF CONTRACTS BY DEVCO

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. Will Devco honour the contracts in force at the time of its takeover?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, I could not hear the question. Would the hon. member repeat it?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Will Devco honour the general agreements that were in effect at the time it took over from Dominion Coal?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I do not know all the implications of the question. I shall look into it and may answer tomorrow. In principle I say that the corporation should keep its word and live up to its agreements, but I think this is too broad a question to answer at this stage.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): In asking a supplementary question I might say I am quite satisfied with the minister's answer that the Devco people will keep their word, but will the minister take a close look at the Devco retirement plan and assure the miners involved that the company will keep their promise?

AIR POLLUTION

REFUSAL BY AUTOMOBILE MANUFACTURERS TO INSTAL PROTECTIVE EQUIPMENT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Is Canada's Department of Justice having any discussion and dialogue with the department of justice in the United States with reference to the legal action of the justice department of the United States against the leading automobile manufacturers because of their refusal and/or neglect to place on automobiles air pollution protection equipment?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker. This matter would properly fall, I would think, within the authority either of the Minister of Transport or the minister of consumer affairs.

Mr. Woolliams: Then perhaps I could put the question to the minister of consumer affairs, his having heard the first question. Is Canada itself taking any action in connection with air pollution devices for automobiles and the failure of the automobile manufacturers to instal the necessary equipment? If so, what action is being taken?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, with regard to air pollution as a general subject, my colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare is responsible. As to the proceedings both in Washington and California with regard to automobiles generally, and automobile warranties and exhaust devices particularly, the officials of my department are studying very carefully the evidence and the inquiries being held in both jurisdictions to determine what action is appropriate in Canada.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker may I put one more supplementary question, and again I address it to the Minister of Justice. Since this matter is in his field I ask him now: Is Canada contemplating taking any legal action with reference to manufacturers of cars providing air pollution protective devices on their automobiles, the same as is done in the United States?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that if the investigations of my colleague the minister of consumer affairs demonstrate the need for legal action, then it will be taken.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUPERANNUATED FEDERAL EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR INCREASED PENSION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question either to the Minister of Finance or to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that the government has acted upon a recommendation of the special joint committee on the public service of Canada with respect to the salaries of deputy ministers and assistant deputy ministers, when will it act upon the recommendation of the very same committee for increases in the pensions of retired civil servants?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think the first step to which the hon. member has just referred was attributed rather more to the recommendations of an outside committee known as the Clyne committee. With regard to the second part of the question, as I have told the hon. member this matter is still under consideration.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Ten o'clock.

SPORTS

ASSISTANCE TO NATIONAL SKI TEAM

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Has the minister or his department received an application for a grant to assist the national ski team which will represent Canada and, in the affirmative, what is going to be done about that application?

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I shall call the attention of the minister to this inquiry.

IMMIGRATION

POLITICAL ASYLUM FOR POLISH SEAMEN

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration possibly I could direct this question to the acting minister. It has to do with the application for political asylum of nine Polish seamen who have disavowed communism and desire to remain in Canada. The matter has been before the appeal board and has been decided adversely. Is there not something that the government can do in order to assure that these men, desirous of remaining in Canada, can be granted political asylum inasmuch as they fear that if they return to their own country they will be visited with recriminations, if not worse?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to forward this question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. However, as the right hon. gentleman knows, the decisions of the board of appeal are final and binding and I think it would not be wise, from the minister's point of view, not to respect the order of the court. In any event I shall submit the question to the minister.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I just add that I realize the legal position under the law, but surely humanitarian considerations should be paramount in a matter such as this and these Polish people should be given the same rights as those Czecks and others who have left communist countries to seek freedom in our country.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the acting minister. Have government lawyers in these immigration cases been instructed recently to advise the tribunals of Canadian policy regarding asylum for refugees from communist countries?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I know of no such orders, but I shall refer this question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR PRICE CONTROL LEGISLATION

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Having in mind the further substantial increase across Canada in the cost of living recently, is consideration being given to introducing the type of prices control legislation which, to use a perhaps overworked word, would have enough guts in it to protect the wage earners and the pensioners of the country?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the policy of the government is clearly set forth in the white paper which I tabled in the house on the day we adjourned for the Christmas recess. Since its tabling I have sent some 500 copies of the white paper to leaders of labour and industry, and to the university economic community for their comments. Comments I have received so far are very favourable to the policies enunciated in the white paper. I am now engaged in winding up a series of consultative meetings with business, labour and the academic community, receiving their comments on the white paper, and I would hope to implement the policies spelled out in the white paper before the end of February.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

INQUIRY AS TO PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO EXCHEQUER COURT ACT

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice a question.

Could he tell us when he will introduce a bill dealing with the administrative tribunals in order to amend the present legislation? He talked about it at the end of 1968 and he promised that such a bill would be tabled. Can he tell us when this will be done?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I do not know exactly what legislation the hon. member is talking about; is it the one amending the Exchequer Court or another one?

Mr. Fortin: It is the bill dealing with the administrative tribunals which was discussed at the resolution stage. At that time it was said that a new legislation on administrative tribunals could be passed. The minister said then that such a measure would be advisable.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, we are now studying that measure and I will be in a position to present to my colleagues and to the cabinet a new bill intended to make the Exchequer Court a court of appeal for the judicial review of all administrative tribunals of the country. As for a date I cannot set any date at the present time.

SHIPPING

APPLICATION OF STORAGE RATES TO ATLANTIC FISHERY

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the Minister of Transport I wish to direct this question to the acting minister. On January 2 the Minister of Transport announced an increase in wharfage storage rates and lying-up charges at some 3,500 government wharves throughout Canada. Will these increased rates estimated to produce some $300,000 a year in additional revenue, be applicable to the inshore and offshore fishermen on the Atlantic coast?

Hon. James Richardson (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of this question and reply tomorrow.

TENDERS FOR DIGBY-SAINT JOHN FERRY

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport but in his absence I shall direct it to the acting minister. Have tenders for the new Digby-Saint John ferry been awarded and have contracts been let for the new terminals?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, there has been discussion between the C.P.R. and the government officials with regard to the vessel but I do not believe that the tenders have in fact been let.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Can he give to the house and the country an indication of when the Prime Minister may find time from his busy round to join us in this chamber in discussing the nation's business?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I expect the Prime Minister to be back in the house on Monday.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): As a supplementary question, may I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the Prime Minister, during his audience with His Holiness the Pope, will discuss with him his abortion bill? Further, when the Prime Minister returns to Canada will he return to this house or is he going on another vacation?

An hon. Member: Where the hell is the Prime Minister?

Mr. McIlraith: I think I should answer that interjection. He is attending the Commonwealth conference.

GRAIN

DAMP WHEAT—LIFTING OF EMBARGO

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Earlier in the week the wheat board authorized three bushel quotas. However, because of a lack of box cars and an embargo on shipments of damp grain only a few farmers have been able to deliver the three bushel quota and some farmers were not able to deliver any grain at all. When can we expect the embargo on damp grain shipments to be lifted so that more farmers can deliver damp grain up to the three bushel quota?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): There is no change on that subject, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Korchinski: When can we expect the lifting of the embargo so that damp grain can move out of country elevators?

Mr. Pepin: A few weeks ago there was too much damp grain being moved. We now need dry grain of certain grades for export. It is a very complex situation and if I have a chance I would like to explain it.

INSTALLATION OF DRYING EQUIPMENT BY ELEVATOR COMPANIES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Agriculture whether or not the Board of Grain Commissioners, his department or the government have announced any regulations, or will they be, permitting the installation and operation of grain drying equipment by elevator companies at country elevators? Is this now being considered, and when can we expect such permission to be given?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, that suggestion, along with many others, was considered in taking steps to alleviate the problem in western Canada. I will look into this matter again and see if we have any direct applications for the installation of these facilities in country elevators. However, I should like to advise my hon. friend that there are several hundred on-farm grain dryers in western Canada which are not being used at the moment because of the inclement weather.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And also because of the 10 cents per bushel.

Mr. Benjamin: Is the minister aware that some country elevators are now using grain dryers under the provisions and regulations of the Board of Grain Commissioners?

EQUITABLE DISTRIBUTION OF BOX CARS

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct this question to the Minister of Transport but in his absence I will direct it to the Minister without Portfolio. Would the minister inform us whether or not a co-ordinator has been appointed to establish equitable distribution of box cars in western Canada and whether the Canadian Transport Commission has been instructed to look into the equitable distribution of box cars?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the allocation of box cars in the west is followed closely by the Canadian Wheat Board which reports to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I believe he has the information concerning box cars.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, having regard to the failure to receive box cars at so many points and because of the uncertainty in respect of the way allocation is made, I should like to ask whether the government is now giving consideration to the appointment of a transport controller so that allocation may be done with fairness and equity to the farmers of western Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I might answer the question at least in part by saying that there is already a transportation committee made up of the Board of Grain Commissioners, the Canadian Wheat Board, the railways and the grain companies. This committee is constantly keeping in touch with the box car situation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not very successfully.

Mr. Pepin: That is a matter of opinion.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Ask the farmers.

Mr. Pepin: Members of the Committee are doing their best. They might consult the hon. member for Prince Albert to get more enlightenment in respect of what should be done. However, with the mental and physical resources available to them they are trying to figure out these very complicated problems. We have one awkward situation in Vancouver which stems from two very desirable developments. With the approval of everybody in this house, it was thought that the proper thing to do was to give high priority to the movement of high moisture grain to terminal elevators. Everybody seemed to be in favour of that. It just so happened that at the same time sales were made which could not have been anticipated. Sales to China were higher than had been expected; sales to Japan were also slightly higher than expected. So it happened that two very desirable things conflicted.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It just happens that that is not an answer to the question. The minister used a lot of words chasing an idea. I asked whether consideration has been given to the appointment of a transport controller, such action in previous years having actually brought about a reasonable degree of equity?

Mr. Pepin: Yes, consideration has also been given to that. A co-ordinating committee of the transportation committee I referred to has been established in Vancouver. This committee meets on a weekly basis. There are 6,800 box cars of grain under load or at Vancouver, and the first priority of this committee is to ensure that the on-loading of grain will be maximized. This should bring about an improvement.

AGRICULTURE

TOMATOES—U.S. IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Agriculture who I am sure is aware of the action of the United States government in changing its regulations last week on imports of tomatoes into that country and the disastrous effect it could have on our own Canadian industry. Can the minister state whether the government is prepared to tell us now what its decisions are on the recommendations in this regard presented by the greenhouse industry almost nine months ago?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is aware that there have been several changes in the United States import regulations respecting tomatoes. The most recent one has just come into effect within the last day or two. The hon. member also knows we are watching this situation very closely. We will be considering what action will be appropriate in view of what the United States has done and, indeed, what ramifications this will have in the market.

Mr. Danforth: Can the minister say whether the government is prepared to announce its decision on the specific recommendations made by the greenhouse industry and, if not at this time, when this might be expected?

Mr. Olson: I cannot give a specific date in respect of when an announcement will be made. I do not think I can add very much to my statement that all these things will be taken into consideration.

HARBOURS

CORNER BROOK, NFLD.—PLANS FOR DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. Can he say whether plans have been completed for the proposed harbour development at Corner Brook, Newfoundland, and whether provision for this work has been made in the estimates of his department?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take the question as notice and give an answer tomorrow, if I may.

PRAIRIE GRAIN ADVANCE PAYMENTS ACT

AMENDMENTS TO EFFECT INCREASES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, in respect of the announcement made during the recess regarding the payment of 10 cents a bushel to a maximum of $600 as further funds that the farmers might draw, I understand that this will require an amendment to the prairie farm cash advance payments act, or whatever the statute is. When will the Minister of Agriculture bring in these amendments?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture will not be bringing in these amendments at all. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce will be bringing them in. It is a fact, however, that an amendment of the cash advances act is required to increase the amount. The statutory amounts are $1 for wheat, 70 cents for barley and 40 cents for oats.

Mr. Benjamin: Since the Minister of Agriculture has not talked with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, can the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce tell us when he will bring in these amendments?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I can only confirm what the Minister of Agriculture says. As usual, he is extremely well informed. The selecting of a date is in the hands of the house leaders of the parties. We will do our best to bring this legislation in as early as possible and will count on the co-operation of members on both sides of the house.

Pesticide Residue Compensation

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the government house leader. Will the minister check to make certain that the Minister of Transport is here tomorrow to answer important transport questions, particularly in view of the fact that according to the new roster he was supposed to be here today? Apparently he is here in Ottawa looking tanned and healthy after his holiday.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport is attending a ministerial meeting with provincial ministers on highway safety, a subject of general and great public concern. I would point out that in fact the department is represented here today and has responded to questions.

Mr. Bell: Does the minister feel it is a good thing to start the new year with a roster system which is not being honoured?

AGRICULTURE

COMPENSATION FOR CONTAMINATION BY PESTICIDE RESIDUE

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture) moved the second reading and reference to the standing committee on agriculture of Bill C-155, to provide compensation to farmers whose agricultural products are contaminated by pesticide residue, and to provide for appeals from compensation awards.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is my proposal that four bills, C-155, the pesticide residue compensation bill, C-154, the plant quarantine bill, C-156, amending the Animal Contagious Diseases Act, and C-157, the pest control products bill, be considered by the house together. The reason for this suggestion is that they are very much interrelated. The first three mentioned all make provision for compensations to primary agricultural producers in certain situations and the first contains a general provision creating an opportunity for producers to appeal the level of compensation awarded. The fourth bill, C-157, deals with pesticides, as does the first one.

The pesticide residue compensation bill provides for appeals against compensation awarded under this new act as well as under other acts to which these appeal provisions are also applicable. These appeal provisions are made applicable to the plant quarantine bill and the Animal Contagious Diseases Act by the bills presented. There is, therefore, very good reason for considering these four measures together.

I should like to repeat the suggestion made by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) that all these bills be referred to the standing committee on agriculture for detailed consideration clause by clause.

To refer to the specific bills, Bill C-155 has reference to the proposed pesticide residue compensation act. As is well known to all hon. members, pesticides have become an integral part of our food production picture, as well as having a multiplicity of uses around the home, in the garden, in public recreation areas and indeed in many of our industries. We just could not economically produce some of our important crops without pesticides.

I suppose that most of us dream of the day when pesticides will no longer be required. Agricultural scientists are striving to come up with alternatives to these control materials and are having some measure of success, but the promised land is not yet in sight so far as doing without some of these very useful chemicals in the production of agricultural products is concerned.

Pesticides are rendering a magnificent service to agriculture and, indeed, to the public at large, but from time to time in spite of careful research and testing the use of pesticides in accordance with recommended practice leads to a residue remaining in food that renders the sale of the food in violation of the Food and Drugs Act.

To protect the public interest we have some very stringent requirements concerning the use of these potentially dangerous materials. Our rules are especially strict in regard to pesticide residues in food. The sale of agricultural products containing even minute quantities of residue can be banned under the Food and Drugs Act. This can work a real hardship on an individual farmer because not only does he lose the immediate revenue from his produce but contamination may be such that future marketings may also be affected.

The pesticide residue compensation bill is designed to assist farmers who suffer losses because of pesticide residue through no fault of their own. More specifically, this bill provides the Minister of Agriculture, through the governor in council, with authority to pay compensation to farmers for losses resulting from pesticide residues in food products which are withheld from sale as a result of action under the Food and Drugs Act.

Eligibility for compensation is dependent on the residues not having occurred through the fault of the farmers. Also, the use of the pesticide must have been in accordance with recommendations made, approved or concurred in by the Canada Department of Agriculture.

Passage of this bill will restore confidence to those farmers who wish to use pesticides according to directions in the economic production of crops and who may have felt some uncertainty because of the significant losses experienced by a very few farmers as a result of pesticide residues. In framing this act the aim has been to make it as easy as possible for the farmer to establish his eligibility for compensation and the amount of compensation while at the same time not interfering with the normal rights and responsibilities of farmers and, indeed, manufacturers of pesticides.

The bill also provides for the appointment of assessors to hear appeals from compensation awards. The powers of the assessors are binding and provide for confirming or varying the decision of a minister and referring cases back to the minister for such further action as may be necessary. Perhaps I should also add that any producer of primary agricultural products will be eligible for compensation.

Pesticide residues include residues of all pest control products such as insecticides, fungicides, herbicides and fumigants. The bill provides that compensation may not be paid until steps have been taken by the farmer to reduce the amount of loss and to pursue any action the farmer has in law against the manufacturer of the pesticide, or any other person.

The provisions I mentioned earlier for appeals against levels of compensation paid under this act may be made to apply to other acts where provisions are made in such other acts for their application. There are two other acts which will be dependent upon or referred to in the provisions of this act in so far as compensation and appeals from amounts of compensation are concerned. It might be well for me to point out at this stage that the financial consideration would not amount to more than $100,000 annually. This is based on our experience. Indeed, the amount may be substantially less because we must find a situation in which in fact the food and drug directorate has banned the sale of some product before the farmer would become eligible. It must also be established that the residue of these chemicals got into the food through no fault of the farmer. While there have been some cases in the past, we do not expect that this bill will result in a very large drain on the public treasury.

Perhaps I might proceed to an explanation of Bill C-154, the plant quarantine bill.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, since some of these bills are quite different in their import perhaps we could deal with them one at a time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I assume the hon. member is raising a point of order at the moment. Obviously there is only one bill now before the house. I suggest to the minister that this is what he should do, and I also suggest that he should not deal with the other bills at this time unless there is agreement on the part of hon. members.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I fully agree that if there is not agreement to deal with all these bills at the same time—the suggestion is that they are interrelated—and hon. members wish to deal with them separately, under the rules that is the way it will have to be done. If there is not unanimous agreement to deal with all these bills concurrently, I have concluded my remarks on Bill C-155.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I express my thanks to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) for his co-operation in this regard. We would rather deal with these bills one at a time because there are definite principles involved in each of them to which we would like to give very serious consideration. My remarks this afternoon will not be at great length because I believe there is general agreement among all members that legislation of this type is and has been needed for some time, perhaps ever since the extensive use of chemicals in the control of diseases and insects that affect crops which provide human and animal food began.

Having considered the terms of the bill and listened to the explanatory remarks of the minister, I believe there is a strong feeling in the house that the basic issue we must always keep before us is the health of animals and humans who consume food produced from the soil on farms where chemicals are being used. We must consider, on the other hand, that in view of the conditions under which food is produced at the present time we in fact need not only the chemicals we now have but new chemicals to control the various pests and diseases that from time to time affect farm production.

I think the minister is right in his contention that the government will not have to spend great sums of money in implementing this legislation because I believe that under the provisions of the bill there is very little recourse for a farmer to obtain redress when his crops are condemned because they are contaminated by pesticide residue. It seems to me that before an individual can present a claim to the government he must on his own initiative exhaust all other courses open to him. He must exhaust all avenues of approach, including the companies which provided the chemicals and the custom operators who applied them to his property or adjacent properties. Therefore it appears that once more the onus has been placed on the primary producer, the farmer. Not only is he faced with the loss of the sale of his products, which may be reduced greatly and in extreme cases may be barred from the market completely, but he is faced with the additional expense of making a claim or pursuing an appeal through the various avenues open to him.

There is one other matter that I think should be, and perhaps will be, explored when this bill is referred to the standing committee on agriculture. I was very pleased indeed to hear the minister emphasize over and over again that it was the intention of the government to refer the bill to the committee. This will give an opportunity to those members of the house directly interested in the subject, and the various experts, companies and individuals concerned with this question, to go into the matter in a very thorough and exact manner in order that the farmers of this country, the primary producers, will have the very best possible bill that it is in our power to enact.

I believe that one of the main problems we should be attacking as a group vitally interested in the welfare of this generation and generations to come concerns the type and composition of the chemicals that are applied to the land. We sometimes find that the application of chemicals to crops can create greater problems because of their residue or action than those which it is sought to control. I speak of chemicals that do not after application break down or change their form in any manner and are therefore a constant threat to the environment in which they are used. They may be a constant threat to animals because of their presence in the topsoil of the land to which they are applied. They may be a constant threat to fresh-water and, indeed, salt-water fish because these chemicals are sometimes carried away through soil drainage to our rivers and lakes and thus to the ocean. Some of the chemicals used lodge in the bodies of the insects they are intended to control and thus are a real threat to various species of bird life of which we in this country are so proud.

My primary point in asking the minister to deal with each of these bills separately was that although they are related in that they deal with chemicals the principles involved are of such magnitude and the ramifications are so great that I believe we must have an opportunity to express our views in regard to each of them. In principle we believe that the action of the government in introducing this bill is commendable. When reviewing the bill we would like an opportunity to deal with each of the clauses in a very explicit manner. In particular we would like from the government explanations of the regulations set out in the bill. After considering the bill I am of the opinion that although its specific purpose is to provide compensation to farmers, the manner in which the bill is drafted means it will be almost impossible for farmers to receive extensive redress for damage. In fact, if they are able to receive compensation it will only be after a long and costly dialogue with the government and the other parties concerned. In the course of our review of the bill we might find a much swifter method of resolving matters as between the injured parties, the farmers, and the government. It is my hope that we shall be able to do this.

We in this party will endeavour in the consideration of these bills to pay every attention to safeguarding the welfare of the people and the animals that consume the production of our soil. Second, we shall investigate these chemicals thoroughly to ascertain whether or not they will remain as active agents in the years ahead. Third, we shall do our very best on behalf of the farmers to make sure that when this legislation becomes law it will be in the most workable form possible.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks made by the minister and by the speaker for the official opposition. I must say that Bill C-155 is a very important piece of legislation and it is my hope that it is just the start of a series of legislative changes regarding the use of pesticides. While this bill deals with compensation to farmers whose agricultural products have been contaminated by pesticide residue it nevertheless leaves much to be desired in the field of control, something that the house must look at very carefully in the months to come. This bill can be described as legislation to provide compensation to those farmers whose products have become contaminated by the use of government approved pesticides. Basically this is the content of the legislation before us.

While I agree with the preceding speaker that legislation of this type is certainly long overdue I believe that compensation for loss is only one facet of the problem. I feel it is imperative that the Department of Agriculture in conjunction with other government departments do far more research into the possible effects of pesticides before they are released for public use. I find it rather disconcerting to realize that over the years we have been using pesticides which in many instances have contaminated the soil and the products grown in it. There is not doubt that this type of soil pollution is extremely widespread not only in this country but in every country in the world. The relatively few cases of this type of pollution which becomes public knowledge are only a fraction of those which really take place. However perhaps the most disconcerting aspect of the pesticide problem is the fact that government agencies have approved their use only to find out later that very severe contamination has taken place.

I would be the first to admit that pesticides are certainly required in the agricultural industry. In British Columbia there are many kinds of farms and pesticides are certainly required to control some pests. In the past one of the problems has been the lack of proper co-operation between the federal and provincial departments of agriculture. It seems to me that in many instances of problems of pollution of agricultural products there has not been the proper degree of co-ordination and co-operation between the provincial and federal departments concerned.

I can think of a case which took place several years ago in Grand Forks. I am quite certain that the minister and his department are well aware of the problem that arose when contamination took place and the farmers concerned were placed in an extremely awkward financial position. They had been raising milk cows and sending their milk to the creamery. Contamination was discovered, and very naturally and logically the creamery had to refuse to take the product. For at least two years a great fight went on, first with the provincial member for the Grand Forks district and then with the department of agriculture of British Columbia. Finally the matter reached the federal field and eventually partial compensation was received by the farmers who had the contaminated product. I think this is a good case to illustrate the point that research facilities are needed desperately in this field.

The above problem in regard to pesticides arose initially because of the use of a pesticide called Aldrin which was used to spray potatoes, I understand. Once Aldrin gets into the soil it often converts itself into a more toxic pesticide called dieldrin. This is the pesticide that caused the problem in the area to which I referred. It did not occur in the crop for which it was used but was found several years later in the hay which cattle had been eating. It took months to search for and find the source of this contamination.

It seems to me that we in Canada have been far too hasty in giving the green light to the use of certain types of pesticides without thoroughly investigating the results which might occur because of a particular pesticide coming into contact with something in the ground and becoming more toxic. We are the only ones that can be blamed. We have allowed this to take place. I am not saying that one government has been more negligent than another, but certainly once these problems are pointed out we should make sure that legislation to protect against this type of problem is placed upon the statute books of our country.

There are one or two more points I should like to make about the use of pesticides. I must say I am very pleased to see a clause in the bill which gives the minister, before paying any compensation to a farmer, the right to insist that the crown be allowed to sue the manufacturer. At least, that is how I interpret the legislation; if I am in error the minister can correct me. I think this is a good provision, but at the same time we must not forget our obligation to the Canadian people to see that proper testing of pesticides is carried out before they are released for general use in Canadian agriculture.

Over the past several years a great deal of work has been done on pollution problems. I do not want to stray too far from the bill under discussion, but it has been found, for example, that the unwise use of D.D.T. sprays has resulted in extreme damage to wildlife and to fish, with consequent economic disadvantage to the public in general. One of our big fish hatcheries, the Bow River fish hatchery in the east Kootenays one of the finest on the North American continent, had its entire stock of fish pretty well wiped out one year when D.D.T. got into the water. The province of British Columbia was financing the plant, but again this is an example of loss to the public. The cause is very difficult to trace. We also see the indiscriminate use of sprays for various pests. While we do a top-notch job of eliminating pests, it must be the over-all, final results that determine the use of particular pesticides.

Many questions will be asked when the clauses come before the committee, but perhaps the minister could indicate to the house in his wind-up speech what the regulations will cover. I think that sometimes we leave far too much to the regulations sections of bills and that certain regulations should perhaps be incorporated within the bill itself. If there is anything extraordinary in these regulations, then I for one would appreciate it if the minister would outline to the house what it is.

There is a host of pesticides—I have referred to one particular pesticide, Aldrin—and there is not time to go into them all during this debate. However, before I close may I say a word or two about pesticides generally. I would not want the Canadian people to think that they are in danger of losing their lives as a result of eating certain agricultural products, but I should like to read one paragraph from "Science" magazine for September, 1967. Basically the paragraph points out that while pesticide residue in food, in animals and so on is rising and causing a great deal of concern in practically every nation on earth, the safety standards that have been set by the World Health Organization have still not been breached. I should like to conclude my remarks with this paragraph:

> The residues of pesticide chemicals consumed in a normal well-balanced diet are substantially below the limits set for acceptable daily intakes by the World Health Organization and United Nations committees and below the safe levels anticipated when legal tolerances are established on the raw foods. Although this conclusion is reassuring, it cannot be said that pesticide residues in foods are not a matter for continued concern. Unpublished data, obtained from objective samples of raw food examined to determine compliance with tolerances, show (i) that for each of the last three years almost half the lots examined contain residues, mostly below tolerance levels, and (ii) that over half these lots contain more than one residue. Even though this investigation does not show a statistically valid difference, there is a finite increase in the daily intake of total chlorinated organic compounds. From these findings, we conclude that continued surveillance and attention to pesticide residues in foods are required.

Although I feel that the bill is a step in the right direction, I hope it is just a start in a real program to fight the soil pollution, air pollution and water pollution problems that are facing Canada today.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Ralliement créditiste I should like to pledge our co-operation so that the four bills of which the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Olson) spoke a while ago can be studied as rapidly and as efficiently as possible.

Those bills are of great interest to the farmer as well as to the people in general, the consumer, etc. I should like to reassure the minister with regard to our position in this regard.

Bill No. C-155, as already pointed out so aptly by those speakers who preceded me, is really a step forward and constitutes an improvement with regard to the use of those products which, unfortunately, have become necessary to increase the income possibilities of those who deal in agricultural production. Unfortunately, in general the Canadian farmer is not sufficiently informed by the companies on the nature of those products. There is far more concern about promoting their sale than about giving sufficient information on how to use them wisely with a view to reducing eventual losses that might result from this use.

I congratulate the minister on having accepted that the bill be referred to the committee on agriculture where it can be discussed at length and looked into more carefully, and where we can make suggestions to improve it. But, before we do so, I should like to ask whether that part of the bill which concerns indemnities to farmers will also apply to pastures because it sometimes happens that pastures are damaged by herbicides causing serious problems for the farmers. The bill is not clear about this, but I am convinced that the minister can give the house some information in this regard.

In any event, I am pleased with this bill as well as Bills Nos. C-154, C-156 and C-157, which are all related. We are very much interested in them; they will surely bring improvements. Still, as mentioned by the speaker who preceded me, there must be a joint effort made to promote general knowledge of those insecticides and pesticides with a view to limiting their ill effects as much as possible. That is probably what the Minister of Agriculture was thinking when he introduced Bill No. C-154 which we will discuss a little later, I hope.

In any case, Bill No. C-155 is acceptable in principle and is a step forward. Knowing the minister as I do, I am convinced that he will be very happy to accept the suggestions we might make to him to improve the bill further. In the meantime, I can say that Bill No. C-155 was needed, that it comes at the right time and that we can hope for appreciable results.

As for the compensation that will be paid to farmers, it is a matter of secondary importance because it must not be considered as a source of income. The damage was done quite by accident and the government will have to make it good to some extent. The aspect of the bill which appeals to me is a clause by which the farmer himself will have to try and get compensation from the companies or the individuals involved.

Secondly, the government will not act as a dictator when requiring the consent of the farmer—if I understand correctly it is the intent of the bill—to institute any legal action if necessary, on his behalf, and I assume that the department's legal action will not be taken at the farmer's expense.

This is a question which can be asked because if the action is taken at the farmer's expense, he could lose all the money he might have received as a compensation and he would not be any better off than if nothing had happened.

Mr. Speaker, those are the few remarks I wanted to make on Bill No. C-155.

[English]

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take a few moments to speak of a few matters burdening my mind. When the bill was first introduced I was elated, hoping it would cover more ground than I found it actually covered on subsequent examination. I know that it provides for compensation in cases where food is contaminated, but compensation might well be merited in other cases where food is not contaminated but stunted or affected during growth as a result of the effects of insectides or pesticides. I had hoped that when the bill was being drafted the department would consider such matters.

I recall a particular instance in which a department of government other than the Department of Agriculture was involved where 2-4-D was used on what was called a P.F.R.A. pasture. It had a certain effect on a farmer's garden and he complained to the department. The department did not take the farmer at his word. Specimens of damaged crops were submitted to the provincial laboratory concerned, but neither the department nor the farmer was able to obtain a statement saying that there had been damage or that there had been no damage. On checking with the laboratory personally I was told in a telephone conversation that an insufficient quantity of material was analysed for the laboratory to be able to give a definite answer. As a result the farmer was not granted compensation. Other farmers tried to substantiate his contention by signing statements to the effect that to the best of their knowledge—and these were knowledgeable farmers—the damage in question was caused by the use of 2-4-D. No compensation could be paid in that case, however, because no proper analysis was made. Therefore there was no substantiation of the claim.

I had hoped that the department would keep matters like this in mind when drawing up the provisions for compensation. I wondered whether the department's thinking had gone that far. I realize that where it can be proved that food has been contaminated there will be compensation. All the same, I think it might be a good idea for the department to take into account matters similar to the one I have raised when considering the provision of compensation. Perhaps the minister might say something along these lines when he sums up.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be brief because rather than criticizing the provisions of the bill I think it can be said that all of us more or less agree with its intent and recommendations. There are one or two points that need to be clarified. Where the wording of the bill says that the minister may do certain things on such terms and conditions as prescribed by the regulations, etc., does that wording refer to the Minister of National Health and Welfare or to the Minister of Agriculture? I ask that question because, although we are dealing primarily with the Minister of Agriculture in this bill, the Minister of National Health and Welfare comes under its aegis and he too must be considered.

I wish to speak about making information available to the agricultural community. Certain useful publications carry information that is useful to our farmers and I think it would be wise to allow such publications to be made available to farmers at reasonable subscription rates. Farm publications carry excellent material; their reports are most helpful to farmers and many of our farmers are worried because some of those publications may have to go out of business.

Often problems are encountered when trying to enforce a particular piece of legislation. Too often we find that the fieldmen who are directly involved in policing legislation are not given proper training before they go into the field. I suggest to the minister that this aspect ought to be looked into before fieldmen are turned loose to police this legislation. I think they ought to be given adequate training before being put into the field. If fieldmen do not have adequate training we shall continue to receive complaints along those lines. We have received such complaints in the past. Whether they were valid I am not prepared to say.

On page 3 of the bill we find these words at the beginning of clause 4: "The Governor in Council may make regulations." I emphasize the word "may" and suggest that it ought to be changed to "will". Too much permissive legislation is not good. We must have some permissive legislation in order to allow the minister to determine what to do. Yet in Bill C-155 I think the word "may" ought to be changed to "will" wherever possible.

Another point that bothers me, as it no doubt bothers many other people in Canada, is that the Department of National Health and Welfare must continually inspect the insecticides at present on the market as well as those that are coming on the market. Too often in the past insecticides have been put on the market without sufficient investigation of their particular properties and the results obtained from their use. The minister should make sure that under the regulations this matter will be looked at closely.

There is another point I would like the minister to clarify. Is it the intent that the farmer must pursue legal action against the manufacturer. I suggest that the government and its agencies are the bodies which should take legal action against a manufacturer because in many cases a farmer is not prepared to take action against an individual who happens to be a close friend and is the agent of a manufacturer. I am sure other methods are available whereby the government or its representatives could take action against a manufacturer after a farmer has lodged a complaint with the manufacturer's agent.

Clause 5(3) says that in paying compensation the minister must take into account any amounts realized by a farmer "as a result of any steps taken pursuant to subsection 1 or as a result of any legal action taken on behalf of the farmer." Would such amounts of money be deducted from the compensation involved? I think it would be contrary to the regulations to deduct such an amount if the legal proceedings were instituted by the crown.

With respect to clause 5(5), under what conditions could a farmer receive compensation to which he is not entitled? If the farmer wins a case in a lower court but the manufacturer involved appeals to a higher court which reserves the decision of the lower court, would the farmer then be liable to repay the compensation he has received to the crown? Can the minister clarify this point? How could a farmer receive remuneration for something that the Department of National Health and Welfare determines is not subject to sale? Further, if a farmer did receive remuneration for such a product would he have to hand it over to the crown?

The agent of a manufacturer is placed in a very precarious position and the question arises whether he should be the one held responsible for selling a product. I suggest that many agents throughout the country have no way of knowing the ingredients in the products they sell, and I believe it would be a retrograde step to make them responsible for the products. I believe we should hold the manufacturers responsible and leave their agents alone. An agent in a rural municipality is having a hard enough time at present making a living by selling products which he believes to be of good quality. Some protection should be afforded manufacturers' agents.

I also wonder whether or not consideration should be given to the payment of compensation to processors as well as producers. In many cases processors find themselves in exactly the same position as producers. There have been many cases where creameries have lost their stocks owing to ingredients found in the products delivered to them when those ingredients could be traced back to a manufacturer. Further consideration should be given to this matter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must inform the house that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I shall try to answer briefly some of the questions raised by hon. members who took part in the debate. However, I suggest that more specific answers to the questions raised by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) could be given when the bill is considered in committee. I assure hon. members that officials from my department will attend the committee hearings where they can go into specific detail on a number of questions the hon. member raised when he referred to particular clauses of the bill. When bills such as this were considered in committee of the whole hon. members will recall that there was a prohibition against referring to specific clauses on second reading. I am not taking objection to that being done now but I think it would be a far more beneficial use of our time if these questions were raised during hearings of the agricultural committee.

The hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth) dealt with the point of a farmer having to sue a manufacturer before being considered for compensation under this bill. That provision is in the bill, and perhaps I should read the words in the clause. They are:

—until the farmer has taken any steps that the minister deems necessary—

In defence of the public purse and the treasury we have to make sure that anyone who tries to claim compensation under this bill has taken all steps necessary to recover any loss or damage he may have suffered from whomever was responsible for it. I think there is considerable latitude in that provision, indeed, sufficient latitude so that the minister can be fair and just in considering what should be the necessary steps before a farmer becomes eligible for compensation.

Another point raised dealt with the establishment of complete safety in the use of chemicals before they are sold to the public. I think that is being too extreme. Had we taken that attitude years ago some of the progress we have made with herbicides and fungicides, many useful chemicals now available to farmers, in fact almost indispensable, would not have been made. Much progress would have been delayed. The hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) referred to one bad case but there have been very few of them. Chemicals are tested, but to require absolute certainty that no residue will ever appear in subsequent crops, or in the food manufactured from those crops, would be too severe. As a result many useful chemicals helpful to farmers could not be licensed, and I do not think we should go that far. I think the record of performance over the years has been very good with respect to testing and labelling of these products.

The hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) wanted to know whether or not compensation could be provided in the case of products that are not necessarily saleable. I should like to make it very clear that this bill is not for the purpose of compensating farmers for losses or to guarantee the efficacy of a chemical or even in respect of the damage a chemical might do. It is only to provide compensation to a farmer if by government action he is unable to sell his product. This is spelled out in one of the clauses. No compensation can be paid unless the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) through the food and drug directorate does in fact prohibit the farmer selling his product. It must be a government action which does in fact result in loss of revenue or loss of income to the farmer. But if government action were taken, for example, to reduce yields rather than increase them or to do other things that did not involve contamination of food, this bill would not take care of that kind of loss. That, of course, would be a matter between the farmer and whoever sold or recommended any of these things.

When the government is involved as a result of the food and drug directorate prohibiting the sale of a product then there is compensation. I think it should be very clear that there can be no compensation paid unless the food and drug directorate has been involved in prohibiting the farmer selling his product.

The hon. member for Moose Jaw also asked about the terms and conditions that may be established by the Minister of Agriculture or the Governor in Council. Indeed, I think he asked who would make these regulations. I believe it is fairly clear it will be the governor in council who will approve the regulations under this act just as is the case in respect of all other acts, but of course they will be recommended to the governor in council by the minister who is responsible for administering the act, in this case the Minister of Agriculture.

I do not wish to continue further because I am sure hon. gentlemen realize there will be a far better opportunity to probe into these details when the bill is before the standing committee on agriculture where greater information will be available to members.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on agriculture.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to standing order 40, to inform the house that the questions to be debated at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—Indian Affairs—proposed native task force to develop policies; the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave)—Immigration Cases—instructions to government lawyers; the hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau)—Transportation across bay of Fundy.

AGRICULTURE

PREVENTION OF INTRODUCTION OR SPREAD OF PLANT PESTS

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture) moved the second reading and reference to the standing committee on agriculture of Bill C-154, to prevent the introduction or spreading of pests injurious to plants.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it will take me perhaps longer than until five o'clock to give the introductory and explanatory remarks on Bill C-154.

Preventing the introduction and spread in Canada of insects and diseases destructive to our farm crops and forests is one of the most important roles performed by my department. Prevention is essential if agricultural productivity and quality are to be maintained and if expensive control and eradication programs which add greatly to cost of production are to be avoided.

The need for effective safeguards has grown as the movement of plants and plant materials in Canada and between Canada and other countries has increased. The plant protection division of my department, which administers the Destructive Insect and Pest Act, last year issued more than 8,200 permits for importation of plants, plant materials and plant products and inspected some 282 million plants, 10,800 pounds of tree and shrub seeds, and 80,000 tons of plant products from 33 countries. There were more than 1,100 interceptions of plant parasitic insects and disease organisms, of which more than 500 were of serious nature.

The Destructive Insect and Pest Act, while it has served Canada well, was drawn up in 1910 on the premise that injurious insect pests and diseases would be excluded either by outright prohibition of host materials or by visual examination of plants and materials at the time of entry to Canada. However, the growth of international trade in agricultural products, the increasing speed of transportation and a greater knowledge of the risks involved has pointed to the necessity of introducing more modern inspection, quarantine and disinfection techniques. The new plant quarantine act, which we are proposing to replace the older legislation, provides for these newer techniques.

This bill, like its predecessor, provides authority for inspection and certification that plants and plant products being exported meet the requirements of importing countries and is essential in keeping the doors abroad open to Canadian products. Last year departmental inspectors certified for export more than six million plants, 20 million board feet of lumber, 1.4 million containers of fruit, two million hundredweight of seed potatoes, and above five million tons of cereal grains and cereal products. The standards imposed on these products by foreign countries have become increasingly stringent in recent years—a situation which makes it imperative that the department have greater authority to carry out inspection and certification programs which will ensure acceptability of Canadian products in international trade.

Prompt imposition of quarantines in affected areas is important in preventing the spread of insect pests and diseases throughout the country. One quarantine of long standing prohibits the movement from Newfoundland of certain articles and commodities capable of carrying the potato wart organism or the golden nematode. A somewhat similar quarantine was imposed on the southern part of Vancouver island following the discovery there of a golden nematode infestation in 1965. More recently, quarantine restrictions have been placed on the movement out of the province of cereal grain, hay and straw from two southwestern Ontario counties. The last was imposed following the discovery of infestations of the cereal leaf beetle, a pest that could seriously damage cereal grain crops throughout Canada.

Although area quarantines are helpful in curbing the spread of insects and disease, there are occasions when effective control or eradication requires that individual farms be quarantined and restricted as to the kind of crops that may be grown. Such is the case with potatoes, the prime host of the golden nematode. Eradication of the nematode requires soil sterlization accompanied by a lapse in potato production for several years. But existing legislation does not provide the authority needed to restrict, from general or specific agricultural use, properties or premises which are infested or suspected of being infested. It will only take me about two minutes to finish, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Baldwin: Agreed.

Mr. Olson: To provide the highest degree of protection against insects and diseases it it also vital that authorities have the power to control movement in Canada—and order their destruction if necessary—of plants which, although they may not be infested themselves, serve as hosts for disease-causing organisms. Such a plant is common barberry which is the alternate host of stem rust.

Tighter controls should be accompanied by a broader base for compensation. Under the existing act compensation may only be paid in cases where infested plants or crops are destroyed in the interest of pest and disease control. It is now proposed to provide authority to extend the grounds for compensation to cover certain situations where sale of plants or use of infested properties is restricted or prohibited. In addition, the provisions for appeal against levels of compensation paid, as provided in the Pesticide Residue Compensation Act, are being made applicable to this act.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills, private bills, notices of motions.

CANADA LABOUR (STANDARDS) CODE

PROVISION FOR THREE WEEKS ANNUAL VACATION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved the second reading and reference to the standing committee on labour, manpower and immigration of Bill C-14, to amend the Canada Labour (Standards) Code (three weeks annual vacation after three years).

He said: Mr. Speaker, I move the second reading of Bill C-14 in a very hopeful mood. We are in the midst of a session during which all the indications are that we are going to do a lot of business. We are going to pass 40 bills in 80 days. We are moving ahead and clearing out the cobwebs and laying the groundwork for a new and more just society. This is what the papers tell us.

As a matter of fact, one of the most outspoken advocates of change is the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) who feels that the time has come for real improvements in the labour field. I think it can be said that he has already demonstrated that he means what he says. Therefore, since the bill I am presenting calls for a very modest step forward I cannot imagine that this house will do anything else but accept this motion and refer this bill to the committee in an attempt to get it on the statute books during this session of parliament.

As I say, the bill is a very simple one. It proposes that the Canada Labour (Standards) Code be amended in so far as it provides for holidays with pay. That legislation at the present time provides for two weeks holidays with pay for all employees who have at least one year's service with the same employer. The very modest proposal in Bill C-14 is that the Canada Labour (Standards) Code be amended to provide that any employee who has three years service with the same employer shall from that time on have at least three weeks annual holidays with pay each year.

I should point out that there are some collective agreements which provide even better holiday arrangements than are suggested in this bill. Likewise, there are many people in professional employment who gets this much or even more vacation in the course of a year. I am sure we all agree in principle that, with advancing technology, the need to distribute employment, and with the acceptance of the philosophy that we are here not just to work but to enjoy some of the benefits of work, it is little enough to suggest that workers in this country, certainly after three years, should enjoy at least three weeks annual holiday with pay.

I recognize that in the federal area we cannot legislate for all of the workers in this country but only for those who come under federal labour jurisdiction, but there is a tendency in Canada for provincial labour laws to be patterned after federal labour law. I feel, therefore, that if we take this step here at the centre it will only be a matter of time until it will be the law across Canada.

I submit this bill confident that the idea behind it meets with the approval of all members. I hope that under these new rules, when on second reading we emphasized the fact that we are referring the bill to the committee for study, the disposition of the house will be to do that with this bill. I hope it will not be talked out. I ask instead that members agree to second reading and agree to its reference to the appropriate committee, so that before the end of this session we can make it part of the law of Canada that after three years workers are entitled each year to three weeks holidays with pay.

Mr. Charles Turner (London East): Mr. Speaker, I have read with interest some of the speeches made by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey). I must say that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made an excellent choice for this very important cabinet post. The minister is a self-made man who a few years ago worked for 30 cents an hour. After long hours of hard work and study he has risen to one of the most important posts in this new government. I should like to congratulate the minister on his appointment because I believe he is the right man in the right post. Although he rose to the top he has never lost his deep concern for the working people of this nation, and he is keenly interested in all their problems.

Annual vacations with pay have been provided for by law in industry subject to federal labour jurisdiction since 1958. The first federal law, the Annual Vacations Act, required employers within its scope to grant their employees paid vacations of one week after one year of employment and two weeks after two years of service. This act was replaced in 1965 by Part III of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code which provides for a vacation with pay of at least two weeks.

I suggest that the government of this nation lead the way and take a good hard look at this bill so that employees under federal labour jurisdiction will be provided with three weeks annual vacation with pay after three years of service. I have always believed that if governments lead the way in matters concerning labour problems many labour and management disputes would disappear.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

We are living in fast changing times regarding employment possibilities in this great nation. We are being forced to retrain workers as they are displaced from their jobs owing to technological change in the industries of this country. I believe that by taking a good look at this bill we could create a great many new jobs as a result of increasing employment opportunities by perhaps 2 per cent. Vacation periods could be spread over a 12 month period and we could find full time jobs for many workers. True enough, company expenses would rise a little, but on the other hand we all have to contribute through various agencies to help support people who are unable to find work.

We must all realize that not everybody in this country can attend university and become lawyers, teachers, doctors, dentists, engineers and so on. Somewhere along the line people have to do the work in industries and it is up to us in this house to provide the necessary jobs so that men can provide their wives and families with the necessities of life and live with dignity.

Industries across this nation have in the past tried to be good members of our society, but sometimes they are slow to change with the times. I think it is time that the legislators of this nation established the best minimum standards and working conditions, and let collective bargaining take over from there.

The proposed standard in Bill C-14 of three weeks vacation after three years of employment with the same employer is still somewhat in advance of present practice in industry generally, although in the past three years there has been a trend toward this standard upon completion of a lesser number of years of service. The 1965 working conditions survey reported in the Canada Department of Labour publication "Labour Conditions in Canadian Industry, 1965" showed that for all non-office employees surveyed, approximately two million or 27 per cent received three weeks annual vacation after less than ten years service. The same survey showed that for all office employees surveyed, approximately 950,000, 46 per cent, received three weeks annual vacation after less than three years service.

The 1967 survey shows that for all non-office employees surveyed, two and a quarter million, 38 per cent, received three weeks vacation, 12 per cent of them after less than five years service. The same survey shows that for all office employees surveyed, 1,100,000, 53 per cent, received three weeks vacation, 22 per cent of them after less than five years service. A further 51 per cent of non-office employees received three weeks vacation after periods of 10 to 15 years service, and 1 per cent received three weeks vacation after 15 years of service. In the case of office employees, 36 per cent received three weeks vacation after periods of 10 to 15 years of service, and 1 per cent after 15 years of service.

I believe these figures show that we are moving in the direction of three weeks vacation for all workers. I also believe that in our society we must change our thinking and that the time is ripe for making an advance with this kind of legislation. We ought to ensure that there are good minimum vacation standards for people in the labouring field, who need holidays more than any others. All people, whether members of this house or not, are aware that there are today increasing pressures on family life. It is also true to say that in most cases members of families do not know each other well; they do not enjoy the day to day contact which is needed for a strong family life.

We live in a society that is travelling so fast that both parents have to go to work daily in order to pay for the necessities of life. The only time the family can enjoy themselves as a family group is on Sunday and during the family vacation. It may not be possible to take action this afternoon in this regard, but I do hope this bill will be given serious consideration by parliament because as the affluent society becomes more and more productive it is our desire that it will no longer be necessary for people to continue to work as hard as they have in the past.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate Bill C-14 introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I agree with him that under the new rules the bill should go to the committee on labour, manpower and immigration and there be fully discussed. I listened with interest to the hon. member for London East (Mr. Turner) and noted the statistics he put on the record. They were most interesting and point up very well the necessity for the opposition to have adequate research facilities in order to deal with these important matters. The hon. member undoubtedly obtained his statistics and figures from the Department of Labour, as he had every right to do. This is one reason why I hope we will proceed very quickly to provide adequate research facilities for members of this house.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre pointed out that in a number of contracts throughout this country in the private sphere, let us call it, annual vacations of three weeks are provided after the period of employment as set out in his bill. I believe this is one reason why the bill should go to committee, because there we could hear from officials of the Department of Labour and from the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) on this question. Persons from private industry could also be heard, and the committee would be in a position to assess this matter after having gone into it fully.

I know of cases where private industry follows this practice. I am thinking of the United Mine Workers contract in the Atlantic area. This practice is carried out there. This matter should be fully studied. This practice should be followed especially by crown companies which are subject to the laws of this parliament.

I am not going to go into the matter any further, Mr. Speaker, except to point out that the Annual Vacations Act referred to by the hon. member for London East was brought into effect by a Conservative government in 1958 and was absorbed into the Canada Labour (Standards) Code in 1965. I think the matter is important. This party believes that the bill should go to the committee to be fully looked into. The committee would then be able to make representations and recommendations to parliament for possible action.

Mr. David Weatherhead (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to take part in the same debate with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) this afternoon. He is one of the most senior members in this house and his sincere concern for social justice is well known. Nineteen years ago, while in my last year of the modern history course at the University of Toronto, I wrote an essay for my professor, Mr. Frank Underhill, on James S. Woodsworth, the first leader of the C.C.F. party who held the seat of Winnipeg North Centre continuously from 1921 until his death in 1942. The present member for Winnipeg North Centre, who was elected to the seat on Mr. Woodsworth's death, had been a member of this house for seven years when I wrote that essay, and at that time I certainly had no idea that I would be debating with him in the House of Commons nearly 20 years later.

While checking into the background of Bill C-14 it was very interesting to read the debates in Hansard on similar bills that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre introduced in recent years. In August, 1964, the hon. member moved second reading of a bill to provide for three weeks vacation with pay to all those workers in Canada under federal jurisdiction, including railway, transportation and communication workers, bank employees, etc., as long as they had been employed by the same employer for five years.

The relevant federal legislation at that time provided for one week's vacation after one year's employment and for two weeks vacation after two years employment. The government speakers in that debate stated, among other things, that since a comprehensive labour code was going to be introduced by the Liberal government in the near future, amendments of this kind should not be made piece by piece in the meantime.

In 1965 the Canada Labour (Standards) Code was passed by parliament, which among other things provided for two weeks annual vacation with pay for all workers under federal jurisdiction who had worked for the same employer for one year. Then in March, 1967, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre moved second reading of a bill similar to the one now before us, calling for three weeks vacation after working for three years for the same employer. In October, 1967, a similar bill was again brought forward by the hon. member.

While only about one-tenth of the labour force in Canada comes under federal jurisdiction and the remaining 90 per cent under provincial jurisdiction, all labour legislation passed in Ottawa is important, not only because of its direct effect on the 10 per cent under federal jurisdiction but also because it should show the way for the provinces and give them the incentive to provide better minimum labour legislation for the 90 per cent of employees directly under their jurisdiction.

I believe the federal government should definitely lead the way in reform labour legislation, as in reform legislation of all kinds. However, since such federal labour legislation tends to be so influential on similar provincial legislation, the federal legislation has to be well considered and realistic because of its effect on the whole economy of our country.

[Mr. Weatherhead.]

• (5:20 p.m.)

As has been pointed out, only one province, Saskatchewan, requires three weeks paid holidays, and that after five years of employment, while four provinces require two weeks holidays, four provinces require one week's holidays, and one has no legislation dealing with annual vacations at all.

In the 1967 survey prepared by the Canadian Department of Labour only 12 per cent of non-office employees and 22 per cent of office employees in all industries received three weeks vacation with pay after working less than five years. The same 1967 survey shows that in industries under federal jurisdiction only 5.1 per cent of non-office employees and 6.6 per cent of office employees received three weeks vacation after working less than five years. Accordingly, an amendment to our Canada Labour (Standards) Code making three weeks vacation compulsory after only three years service would be too sudden an economic change, not only for the industries under federal jurisdiction but also too sudden for the provinces to implement in the near future for the industries under their jurisdiction.

I am sure everyone in the house is generally in favour of longer and longer vacations with pay, and with the rapid increase of automation and the resulting increased productivity of each worker there is no doubt that paid vacation periods will become longer and longer. I hope and expect that federal labour legislation will be in the forefront in promoting this. I do not wish to be harsh but while the general intent of the hon. member's bill is commendable, it shows the lack of practicality and responsibility which members of his party often portray, because they know that they will never have to assume the reins of government and so will never have to try to carry out any of their proposed legislation. It would have been just as easy and had as much practical effect if the hon. member had proposed three weeks holidays after two years service or three weeks holidays after one year's service since the hon. member knows that he will never have to take the responsibility for any such legislation as a member of a government party.

In addition to two weeks paid vacation after one year of service the Canada Labour (Standards) Code also insists on eight legal holidays with pay as a minimum requirement for industries under federal jurisdiction. The provisions in the Canada Labour (Standards) Code are, of course minimum provisions and there is nothing to prevent the negotiation of longer paid holidays by collective bargaining between union and management or between an individual employee and employer in cases where there is not a union.

A great number of collective bargaining agreements provide for three weeks and longer vacation periods, but very few have obtained them for three years employment or less. I suspect the reason for this is that the unions themselves do not generally believe it is reasonable to ask for three weeks vacation after only three years of employment, and so they press for matters which they feel will be considered more reasonable, namely, increased wages, better working conditions, more attractive pension plans, etc.

In the debate on a similar bill in March 1967, referred to previously, the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) who represented the former riding of Prince at that time, spoke quite clearly on the need for longer vacations because of the ever-increasing pressures of modern life on the family unit. However, he went on to discuss the problems of longer periods of leisure for most people who have not learned to use their leisure creatively.

I certainly hope and expect that we will be able to keep increasing the minimum length of paid vacations by amending existing federal labour legislation from time to time and that in the meantime the federal government and all levels of government will encourage and actively support various types of programs that will enable people of all ages to learn to use their leisure time more happily and effectively.

In conclusion I would like to say that a three week annual vacation with pay for a relatively short term of employment is on the horizon and will be commonly accepted within a few years. However, for present economic reasons the bill before us this afternoon is a little premature.

Mr. Jerry Pringle (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for his Bill C-14. It seems to me that the federal labour code is continually being shortcircuited by collective bargaining and by labour unions negotiating the basis of contracts and fringe benefits in various parts of the country, and that we have found it less necessary to amend the labour code in order to provide definite guidelines or laws with respect to the length of vacations that we think our people should have. On the one hand we co-operate with the labour unions through our manpower and labour departments. We try to work in co-operation with them so that they can institute collective bargaining and handle the vacation and pay aspects. On the other hand it is being suggested that we should establish just what these should be by providing three weeks vacation after three years of service.

I presume it would be somewhat dangerous for me to say that employees should not have three weeks vacation, and I will not say it. However, I am concerned about vacations which become periods of moonlighting. While I agree with my good friend, the hon. member for London East (Mr. Turner), I must say that if people definitely went on vacations I believe it would be of great assistance to the Canadian economy. One of the problems I have noticed over the years, especially in recent years when people have had so much spare time anyway, unless they happen to be members of parliament, is that a great deal of moonlighting is taking place in people's spare time. This creates a problem.

It is my belief that we should endeavour to increase productivity so as to reduce the inflation which is confronting us at present and in this way earn a three weeks vacation which can then be taken and enjoyed. I firmly believe, as does the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, that people are entitled to this holiday and should have it. I may say that I am a little confused by the proposed section 16 which reads in part as follows:

> —provided however that every employee who has had three years of continuous employment by one employer is entitled to and shall be granted a vacation with vacation pay of at least three weeks.

I wonder if this could be explained for my benefit because it seems to me it should read: "shall be granted a vacation with pay or vacation pay of at least three weeks." In other words, I do not believe it is required in the labour code that if a person received a vacation he should also receive vacation pay. In this case it would have to be 6 per cent, as I understand it, over and above the regular pay he would get when taking a vacation.

• (5:30 p.m.)

There is a great deal of work to be done in Canada in cementing relations between labour and management. Labour organizations must accept responsibility as soon as possible for taking a fearless look at the problem of productivity. At the same time, they must receive our support in seeing to it that people who work a given number of hours receive the vacation that is due them; that productivity in Canada is stepped up; and that we are all able to enjoy a much rosier economic picture than is in view at this time.

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the most qualified people to speak on the advantages of a three-week vacation are the members of this house who have just enjoyed one. Indeed, they might add to what has already been said about the advantage of having three weeks instead of two, because if we had only two weeks we would have returned here a week ago. I think we might also relate the question of holidays to the question of productivity. I am not so sure that in embarking upon this type of analysis I would agree with the conclusion expressed by the previous speaker.

This subject is certainly one which has engaged the attention of people throughout the world. Perhaps hon. members might be interested in a few remarks which were made 14 years ago in Geneva on the occasion of the 37th session of the International Labour Conference by one of the delegates who gave a brief analysis of what, in his opinion, an annual paid holiday meant. He said:

> There is no doubt that annual paid holidays have biological, social and economic objectives. First, they enable the worker to recuperate psychologically and physiologically, after his hard year's work. Secondly, holidays enable him to change his surroundings and engage in cultural recreation, sport or travel; this is socially useful as well as providing a solution for the fatigue problem, for rest without change is not sufficient for him to recover his strength and his ability to do his job. This brings me to the economic objective, for the holiday enables the worker to recover his productive power.
> However, scientific experiments have shown that in order to achieve these objects it is necessary that the holiday should not be less than two weeks, for if it is shorter the worker will return to his employment without having recovered his biological balance.

On that occasion the convention endorsed and ratified the principle of two weeks' holiday after one year of employment. As I say, this was 14 years ago at a time when automation was perhaps just beginning to make itself felt.

The bill as placed before the house by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is one which perhaps deserves thorough analysis, if only for the reason that a 50 year old employee who because of automation and dislocation in industry has to change his employment from one company to another under federal jurisdiction would find himself starting again at the bottom of the ladder, thus receiving shorter holidays than an employee aged 23 who commenced employment three years before at the age of 20. Such a man at age 50 would perhaps require three weeks' holiday far more than his junior colleague.

We are living in a time of automation which requires dislocation of employment. Therefore rigid approaches to questions of holidays may not be entirely suitable. It seems to me that while the federal government has to set the pace in certain broad areas, and will do so, at the same time it has to approach the matter in a flexible manner, perhaps reflecting in its deliberations and final decisions a concept of holidays that is related to the age of the worker.

We all know that a worker at the advanced age of 60 might require a longer holiday than a worker aged 25 or 30. Therefore I think the whole question requires study. Rather than boxing it in within the scheme proposed, we should study the question of dislocation caused by automation and the development of human resources. We might perhaps ask the question: Why only three weeks after three years? It might well be the case that a longer holiday is required in certain segments of industry that warrant it and a shorter holiday in others that do not. As some hon. members have already indicated, there has to be a certain relationship between holidays and productivity.

I agree we must recognize the fact that the federal government sets the pace for the private sector, and an initiative of this kind would have this effect. But rather than go into the question in this manner it seems to me we should approach it in greater depth, and before making a final decision analyse all of the factors that I have briefly outlined.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy LeBlanc (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I shall give my opinion on the bill brought forward by the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

It is obvious at once that this bill will meet the approval of all legislators, who must necessarily be interested in the Canadian workers' lot.

In view of the constantly increasing pace at which our society is evolving, we know that owing to the progress of technology, the number of working hours is bound to decrease, and that consequently within a few years, we shall have to give serious consideration to organizing the leisure of the Canadian people, who, may be, will want to specialize in the field of research, in order to further develop our country and the rest of the world.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Of course, the purpose of the bill is readily understood, since the title is as follows:

An Act to amend the Canada Labour (Standards) Code (Three Weeks Annual Vacation after Three Years).

Theoretically, this is a very good thing, but a hasty application of this measure would probably result in numerous complications.

At present, under the Canada Labour Code, if I am not mistaken an employer is required to grant an employee two weeks vacation with pay after a year of employment.

I think it is necessary to add, and I emphasize the fact, that eight days of vacation with pay, eight statutory holidays, are granted anyway according to the Labour Code, over those two weeks vacation.

The honourable member for Winnipeg North Centre, as I said earlier—if my memory serves me right—always shows a great deal of perseverance and consistency in his views. I think that we can congratulate him for this positive approach which he has always cultivated and which can be rated among his good intellectual habits.

In fact, we can notice that the sponsor of this bill already introduced a similar bill in April 1965. He also introduced one in 1964 when he suggested that a three weeks annual vacation with pay should be granted to an employee after five years of employment with the same employer and I notice that, at the outset of the debate, the honourable member for Halifax recalled the basic principles which had been used when preparing the Canada Labour Code.

The code was based on the principle whereby it was important to set up minimum standards because it could be dangerous for the balance of our industry to aim towards standards setting up too high maximums. In order to adopt such measures, in spite of the good intentions of those who wished to introduce them, we are still convinced that several years of research or experience are necessary.

I have opposed the opinion formerly expressed by the member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) when he said that by implementing such a measure overnight once again the consumer would foot the bill, once again mothers and small wage earners would suffer heavy deprivations. The honourable member mentioned also the financial difficulties the adoption of this act could mean for small Canadian industrialists and businessmen.

The standards proposed by the bill stipulate a three-week holiday after three years of employment. Those standards outdistance by far present practice in industry, not only that which falls within federal jurisdiction, but industry in general. Looking at working conditions in the Canadian industry in 1964, as reported in a publication of the Department of Labour, and in the industries that fall within federal jurisdiction, we note that this practice is far from a minimum and far from general. Instead of generalizing it, a study should be made of the evolution through the years.

We then see that only 12 per cent of the employees, other than office personnel, have three weeks off after less than 10 years of employment. Of all employees, office and others,—of which there were 2,500,000—15 per cent only had a three-week holiday after less than 10 years of service. Granting three weeks of holidays after relatively short periods of service was far more general amongst office personnel, perhaps because of the more sedentary nature of the work. Numerous other statistics could show us how complicated it would be to apply this legislative measure immediately. Looking at figures, for instance, in the article "Vacations with pay 1964, all industries", we note that:

• (5:50 p.m.)

[English]

Total number of reporting units, non office employees, 19,057. Office employees, 19,267.

[Translation]

The number of those who enjoy a three weeks annual vacation with pay, after less than ten years of service, amounts to 15 per cent while for the office workers, the proportion is only of 26 per cent. After ten years of employment, for the non-office employees, the proportion is 22 per cent compared with 26 per cent for the office employees.

It is clear that for most businesses which give three weeks annual vacation or more to employees with several years of service, the length of service is much more than three years.

It would be advisable also, I think, after a study of what happens in practice with regard to vacation in the industry and businesses in general, to study the policy followed by the provinces.

In Saskatchewan, for example, according to the Labour Code, employees can enjoy two weeks annual vacation after one year, and three weeks after five years.

Three other provinces, Manitoba, Alberta and British Columbia, legislated so that the employee would have two weeks annual vacation after one year of service.

Four provinces, Nova Scotia, Quebec, Ontario and New Brunswick, legislated so that the employee would only get one week vacation.

Two provinces, Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island, have passed no legislation on this subject up to now, at least as far as I know.

With regard to the Canada Labour Code, we know that the labour standards came into force on July 1, 1965. With this code, the vacation period extended from one week to two weeks for employees with one year of service, taking into consideration the eight general statutory holidays—the eight non working days—with pay, as I mentioned earlier. That was, a few years ago, a substantial improvement in the case of numerous employees.

A proposal such as the one in the bill now under study, that would increase substantially the standards concerning annual vacations, could hardly be seriously considered at this time. I think it would also be wise to consider the International Labour Organization in this field.

According to the 1964 statistics, a group of experts has already completed the study of that problem throughout the world and come to the conclusion that there was a tendency to extend the vacation period in numerous industries.

As regards the future, one would obviously hope to grant three weeks annual vacation, but not at this time, because of the complexities involved and of the general practice.

It is, at present, the best solution. Such was my opinion in the past as it still is now. I believe it is in accordance with the principles of our party and with the respect due to private enterprise.

When I think of private enterprise, I do not think only of the boss or the owner but of the employees also. That is why I find it normal, since a reasonable minimum is already provided in our Labour Code, to leave to collective bargaining the task of setting the length of the annual holidays in relation to the years of service and of discussing the matter with the bosses taking into account the nature of the industry, the work, the number of employees and a host of other conditions we all know. We must all ask ourselves how far the legislators should go when setting minimum standards for working conditions, without interfering in the field of collective bargaining, and I think that it is one of the basic principles which inspired the people who drafted our Labour Code—and who are still working on it—to improve our labour legislation and the lot of the Canadian workers.

Where the labour market is steady enough to enable an employee to accumulate several years of continuous employment for the same employer, it seems that there is no obstacle to an effective trade union organization. The present government, just like those preceding it, has taken a great interest in the improvement of labour conditions. In fact, we know that the question of holidays, of annual vacations, holds more and more the attention and to what extent the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen) and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) concern themselves in retraining our labour force, in order to enable it to play an effective part in our country.

Our Speeches from the Throne, which always reflect the principles of our governments, have never neglected the labour policy, as shown by the legislation passed during the last session and by the bills now appearing on the order paper. It is obvious that in all areas of Canada, we must have healthy workers and that we must take their needs into account by granting them reasonable holidays. But the government which is responsibly playing its part cannot infringe on the rights and privileges of the Canadian people. This is why we are always striving in that field to provide maximum justice.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. It being six o'clock, the hour for consideration of private members business has expired and the house will resume its business at eight o'clock.

[English]

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

AGRICULTURE

PREVENTION OF INTRODUCTION OR SPREAD OF PLANT PESTS

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Olson for second reading and reference to the standing committee on agriculture of Bill C-154, to prevent the introduction or spreading of pests injurious to plants.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there are two sentences I ought to add to complete my explanatory remarks in respect of Bill C-154. The legislative changes proposed are not expected to result in any increased expenditure that would not have occurred under the provisions of the existing legislation. The adoption of new techniques will result in the reorientation of resources rather than the need for additional ones.

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of our party, the official opposition, to say we support wholeheartedly the intent of this bill, C-154, to prevent the introduction or spreading of pests injurious to plants. Any legislation which can strengthen the hand of the Department of Agriculture is certainly welcomed by farmers and by the citizens of this country generally. I think we should have nothing but praise for the plant protection division of the Department of Agriculture which has done a great deal over the years to protect the producers of agricultural products from the ravages of pests. Sometimes these pests come into this country quite unknown to the individuals who bring them in but are spotted by officials of the department. So, we welcome this legislation. There can be no argument about that.

The minister has indicated there will be ample time before the standing committee on agriculture to examine the various clauses of this bill. Any necessary amendments or changes can be proposed and discussed with the officials of the department. I believe it is only common sense that we should support this legislation. I propose to be very brief because I sometimes think we waste a lot of time saying that we approve of a bill. Perhaps the minister could tell me whether this bill would limit in any way the bringing in of insects for study by the people in our research laboratories in order that they may gain useful information in this manner. I presume safeguards will be set up. We know that across our country there are research laboratories where the effect of pests is studied and evaluated.

In respect of the common sense approach to this subject, we need only look around us to see examples of situations in which insects have been transplanted into the country in order to control other pests. This practice sometimes causes a great deal of damage and upsets the balance of nature as well as the whole scheme of things.

We do approve of this measure and there will be more said by members of our party when we examine it during the clause by clause study before the committee on agriculture. In concluding my remarks, I reiterate our support for this measure.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, in making my remarks on this bill I shall endeavour to be very brief. I know it is almost as surprising to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) as it is to me that I am talking on a bill of this kind. However, I shall be brief because one of my colleagues is anxious to speak to the next bill. There is no question but that members on all sides of the house approve of the kind of activity the national Department of Agriculture has been carrying on in the field of supervision and control over import and export of plant, vegetable, animal and insect life.

Man has always been making great efforts to play around with his environment in an endeavour to control it. Sometimes the extent of the repercussions of this playing around have been somewhat painful. When mankind has tried to introduce various and sundry plant, animal and insect life into his environment in the hope it would help him, even if the help is only of an aesthetic nature, sometimes the long term effect has been, if not harmful to health, at least a pain in the neck.

One can think of examples such as the sparrow, the starling and the Colorado beetle which are hardly native to Canada. Then, there is the spruce budworm and the Dutch elm disease which we still cannot learn how to control now that they are here. I do not envy the Minister of Agriculture and his officials who will have to make very great efforts in order to bring this type of thing under control. In Saskatchewan a story is told about a person who claimed an exemption on his income tax. He said a horsefly got in with the bees and all the honey tasted like horse manure, so he could not sell it.

In respect of the import and export of what this bill calls pests I might say that I always considered these insects to be Liberals, but the bill gives a much broader definition. Of course, my interpretation includes various and sundry plant life as well. Seriously, may I suggest that while a very good job is being done with regard to the supervision and control of the import and export of these commodities, there is a need for further control. This control needs to be extended to a greater degree inter-provincially, and when provinces fail to do an adequate job in this field within their own boundaries I hope the minister and his department will not hesitate to act. There have been instances of plant and insect harm within provinces when provincial governments have failed to take action. I hope the department will act in such cases, even though it might be said that, according to a narrow interpretation of our constitution as it stands, the federal government does not have jurisdiction.

I was pleased to hear the minister report on the number of permits issued. It sounded very good when he said that his people have inspected 282 million plants. I suspect these were in bulk lots. In any event, that is a great volume to oversee and the department must have been reasonably successful in overseeing the importation of that number of plants since we are not aware of the outbreak of any kind of plant disease as yet.

It is also my hope that what takes place in private circles in experimenting with plant and insect life is supervised very closely by the department. I am sure this is being done. From what I have been able to read about what can be done genetically in terms of insect life I understand that the destruction of one kind of insect may lead to repercussions in respect of that insect life several generations later. I must admit that, as a layman, when I mention this matter I do so in order that the minister and his staff will be able to educate me and other hon. members to a greater extent.

In this regard, I suppose the department also concerns itself with individuals, such as tourists, who might bring plants or insects from other countries. I hope the officials at the ports of entry and exit will, with all tact possible, examine carefully those plants which could harbour insect or bacteria life harmful to this country.

There is no quarrel on the part of this group with the intent and purpose of this bill. We may ask other questions and seek more information when it is before the committee. As to the general nature of the bill as it now stands, it certainly has the support of the members of this group.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my duty to inform the house that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say in closing the debate how much I appreciate the complimentary remarks which have been made by hon. members regarding the activities and functions of the Department of Agriculture in attempting to control the spread of disease among plant life. The hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles) asked a specific question in reference to this bill limiting the importation of insects. The answer is no, not exactly, but there are provisions for the introduction of insects for research and that sort of thing. This will be done under conditions to prevent their escape. There will, of course, be much more detail available to hon. members in respect of each clause and, indeed, an extension of some of the statistics I have given if members are interested when we consider the matter before the standing committee on agriculture.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on agriculture.

ANIMAL CONTAGIOUS DISEASES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING COMPENSATION APPEALS, ETC.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture) moved second reading and reference to the standing committee on agriculture of Bill C-156, to amend the Animal Contagious Diseases Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the proposed amendments to the Animal Contagious Diseases Act embody two major changes. One deals with the way in which compensation rates are set for animals ordered slaughtered. The second provides for an appeal by the owner against a compensation award under the act.

For the past 43 years the federal government has compensated owners of animals that have been ordered destroyed under eradication programs for Johne's disease, brucellosis and tuberculosis.

Up to now, compensation rates have been prescribed in the act. From 1925 to 1949 the compensation rates were a maximum of $60 for grade cattle and $150 for purebred cattle. The basis for this compensation was two-thirds of the value of the animals slaughtered.

In 1949, the compensation rates were revised to provide a maximum of $40 for grade cattle and $100 for purebred cattle. The full value was paid up to the maximum rate. In the last revision in 1968, rates were established at a maximum of $70 for grade and $140 for purebred.

The owner's total return for an animal ordered slaughtered is the meat salvage value plus the compensation awarded by the government. Where the sale of the animal's carcass is unlawful an additional amount equal to the value the carcass would have had if the sale were lawful is paid by the government.

The proposed revision retains this provision so that the farmer would either be able to recover the meat salvage value by selling the carcass or, where this is forbidden, by recovering the carcass value from the government. The amendment provided is that compensation rates would no longer be set by the act. These maximum rates would be established by the governor in council. This would allow a more flexible approach to compensation. Value of purebred livestock and, indeed, of grade dairy cattle for instance, can change markedly even within a year's time.

The second change being proposed is the amendment to provide for appeal against a compensation award. At the present time no such appeal is available. The amended act would permit the owner of an animal ordered slaughtered to appeal against the amount of the award or to appeal where no compensation is awarded at all under the appeal provisions included in the pesticide residue compensation act. The appeal privilege would not delay the destruction of diseased animals.

This bill, C-156 relates directly to some of the provisions of Bill C-155. I am not going to go over them, but the procedures there are the same. Bill No. C-156 cites Bill C-155 and its provisions as the procedure used when an appeal against compensation is being made by the farmer.

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, we in this party are very happy to see Bill C-156 come before the house. We realize that with changes in farm practises, changes in compensation have been long overdue. In the past farmers have been paid at a very low rate for animals which have been destroyed once they were contaminated by a contagious disease. This has caused great hardship. In some cases, for instance in respect of dairy herds, this has driven particular farmers into bankruptcy. We think this bill will give the individual farmers much more insurance. We are also very happy to note that the farmer will have the right to appeal against the judgment of a particular assessor.

• (8:20 p.m.)

In this light we think the bill certainly has merit and we go along with it in every respect. I know it is very closely related to the bills we have been discussing today and we believe it is a step in the right direction in the field of agriculture. I note there are some other fields that are not covered by the bill. At other stages of the bill these matters can be given consideration. I am sure that farmers in some other fields are subjected to loss because of contagious diseases contracted by their herds and I think it is only fair that they should be compensated. Perhaps their herd contracted the disease through no fault of the farmer. I know many farmers whose herds have been afflicted with rabies. They have been compensated to a degree but the farmers themselves have had to undergo long and very painful treatment. They have perhaps been doctoring their animals for some period of time and have been in contact with the disease. If the farmer has a scratch or any opening to his bloodstream he can become affected by the disease.

I know that the likelihood of this happening is very small, but it is a matter that I would like to see considered. I am sure that in all fairness the minister will, in the later stages of this bill, see fit to deal with this question.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, for a long time the matter of changing the compensation in respect of animal contagious diseases has been under consideration by a committee of the house; in fact, ever since I have been here. I presume there are few members in the house who remember the problem that developed in respect of scabies in sheep and the political repercussions of the Gardiner days with regard to that problem. Therefore I ask, why has September 26 been chosen as the cut-off date? Has it any significance? I presume the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) expected us to pass this measure long before now, and that is the significance.

The matter of compensation is a unique one in terms of animals that are slaughtered, in that the nation's agricultural community is always concerned when there is an outbreak of a contagious disease. I can remember back to those days when there were throughout the country dozens and dozens of herds that suffered contagious abortion. These herds were kept and milked. There was nothing wrong with maintaining a brucellosis herd. These cows continued to give milk and were part of an economic unit.

I am not suggesting that we go back to those days, because I think Canada should be very proud of the job that has been done by the Canadian veterinarian service in the eradication of this and almost every other contagious disease in the animal field. The job that has been done with regard to brucellosis control has meant that most of the farming areas in Canada are brucellosis free. The eradication of this disease has been brought about over a period of time and, with a great deal of education, has been highly successful.

Therefore there will not be many cases of brucellosis. There will not be many epidemics of t.b., scabies or any of the other diseases faced in the agricultural field. There are three diseases that we, hopefully, will not have to face in epidemic proportions. One is foot and mouth disease, which of course is in a totally different category from the other diseases about which we have been speaking because in the case of the contagious diseases of scabies, brucellosis and t.b. it is not likely that they will again reach epidemic proportions.

We go into an area and ask a farmer to allow the government to control his herd until the disease is eradicated. We will be doing this not only to the advantage of the farmer but in a wider sense to the advantage of the community and the whole area. This is very true in respect of brucellosis control. For this reason, I do not think we should be so niggardly about the compensation that we pay. If a person has a good herd, the compensation that will be paid by order in council will probably not be much more satisfactory than that paid under the present regulations.

If a farmer has a low grade herd which has contracted brucellosis, the meat can be used and if meat prices are reasonably high he will, with the compensation, probably realize the value of the animal. I suppose it is very difficult to talk about an average in this regard, but I presume that the average, registered dairy cow today is worth approximately $700 to $800. Some of them run as high as $40,000, and I suppose they go down to $250. But the average would, I think, be well over $700. Why, then, should we ask the farmer to bear the whole brunt of the brucellosis control in his area when he may not have had anything to do with the introduction of brucellosis? Therefore I suggest we should be much more generous in this field and make payment on the basis of fair sale value. If the cow is worth $700 we should make up the total value of the animal, taking into consideration the sale of the meat. We should make a settlement on the basis of the total value of the animal. This is not very much. Last year we paid out a very small amount of money in respect of this control.

However, one of these days, unfortunate as it may be, we will again have an epidemic of one of these animal diseases. We are no more immune to an outbreak of anthrax or foot and mouth disease than other countries which established these kind of controls a long time ago. There is no reason why a farmer would try to cover up the disease for a period of time because everyone in the agricultural community realizes that it must be taken care of at the earliest possible date.

We saw last year in England the eradication of a large percentage of the agricultural production in certain sections of the dairy industry. Canada should be proud of the assistance given by the Canadian veterinarian department which went to their aid on that occasion. But this was a calamity; it was a major emergency. I would like to see the retention of any control under the Animal Contagious Diseases Act that will work toward the immediate eradication of a disease that is contracted by a herd. I suggest that the minister has no legitimate reason for not listening to the representations made by every farm organization for fair value for the animal that is slaughtered.

The regulations that will be passed will not be in that field. If they are, let us make them the regulations and let us say so. This raises another problem. Nobody in this country will be more busy than the governor in council if we continue referring all decisions in respect of regulations to that body. I think we should make the regulations and decide that compensation paid should be on a fair value basis. The minister is to be congratulated for making provision in the bill for appeal, but I think fair value should be the basis for the payment. It should not be a matter of deciding that so much will be paid for pure bred cattle, so much for grade cattle, etc. Compensation should be based on the fair replacement value.

There might be another outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease at which time a farmer may lose his whole herd through no fault of his own. The fact that he may get this kind of compensation or even double this compensation will not replace the herd that he has lost. We are not speaking in terms of large amounts of money. Last year we paid out $680,000, and the year before we paid out $600,000, to which we added the rabies assistance program. This is another program which should be included in the Animal Contagious Diseases Act and which should be administered by the federal government. In 1967-68 we only paid out $21,000, and in 1968-69 we appropriated $21,000, some of which was not used. We pay only two fifths of the amount that the provincial governments pay and the provincial governments have a totally different concept of the value of the animals than we have.

I agree with the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott) that the rabies prevention program should be included in the act and that some consideration should also be given to the people affected because the amount of money necessary for the large number of shots required is considerable. I understand that 21 injections must be given over a period of some weeks, and I expect that the pain suffered is quite considerable. We cannot provide protection by any simpler means. I suggest therefore that the minister should give consideration to an amendment which would bring the rabies program into the act. Rabies is one of those odd diseases which involves wild life. The rabies epidemics fluctuate greatly, as I have seen in my area as well as in other areas. An epidemic starts for no apparent reason, and so far as the farming community is concerned the problem is very serious for a period of perhaps two years, following which it disappears for some time.

It would appear that the rabies eradication program will have to be undertaken on a broader scale than programs for the eradication of most other animal diseases and prophylactic measures taken. However, the federal government has a better record in the eradication of these diseases than have the provincial governments. I suggest that we should not pay two fifths of the cost of the provinces for the eradication of animal diseases but that we should rather introduce a program on a national scale with the assistance of the provincial governments. As I said, this has not been an expensive program. Nevertheless more money could be spent on it with greater success because the amount necessary has not varied much over the last eight or ten years. I am sure that this winter there will be outbreaks of rabies in this area and I am sure the matter will be raised again.

The efforts which have been made by the Department of Agriculture in the eradication of these various diseases are very commendable. I think the officials of that department would be the first to agree that Canadians have been very co-operative in the carrying out of these programs. The co-operation which has come from the Bruce county area has been quite surprising. I can well remember the time when whole herds were diseased and farmers were buying the cattle and shipping the milk. This was only 25 years ago. So, the eradication program has been gradual and it has been successful. We should not put this heavy obligation solely on those who have been involved. They also have a great deal of other expenses beside the replacement of cattle. As the minister probably knows, barns have to be disinfected, a complex operation, and when barns and barnyards are disinfected some pastures have to be closed for a period of time. The federal government inspectors take over that operation which leads to a great dislocation of the whole farm operation. This assistance has been provided successfully and fairly voluntarily.

I suggest therefore the minister should not turn this responsibility over to the governor in council. It should also be remembered that a great deal of work is turned over to the governor in council by each department of the government, so that in the end they will be the busiest people in Ottawa. We could easily solve this problem by writing in a fair replacement value for the animals that are lost, taking into consideration grade cattle. They can be more easily replaced than purebred cattle. A purebred does not necessarily mean an expensive animal, but the replacement value should be fair. If it happens to be the top animal in a man's herd, it does not have an average value but rather a set value. I do not think the course advocated would greatly raise the amount that would have to be paid in compensation. As I said, not much over half a million dollars was paid out last year. We have a large agricultural community in Canada and this amount of money does not seem excessive for the eradication of contagious diseases.

I hope, therefore, that the minister will consider the inclusion of a clause providing for replacement value rather than leave to someone else the decision as to how much should be paid. The minister is to be congratulated for including the appeal clause, to which I have no objection.

In closing may I say also that I have no objection to the inclusion of the date of September 26, 1968 except to ask the minister whether it has any other significance than to indicate the delay in passing this legislation because of certain other events.

[Translation]

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to represent a mixed territory, that is a territory where industry and farming live side by side, and as far as cattle breeding is concerned, there are many model farmers in my region because they do everything they can to improve their herds as much as possible.

One knows, for instance, that over the last ten years many of those farmers took advantage of the services provided by the artificial insemination centre in Saint-Hyacinthe and for 50 years those cattle breeders have been choosing their breeding stock with the utmost care. They never hesitated either to make rather important purchases of better developed choice animals when the results expected from their cattle were too long in coming.

Finally, I can say that during that period those farmers benefitted to a great extent from the advantages put at their disposal by the provincial and federal governments, such as the grants for the purchase of good cattle as well as the advice about feeding and other matters given by the government technicians. It goes without saying that such an improvement does not come about without the cattle breeders spending large sums of money, since the operation costs of a farm have been increasing from year to year.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, at first sight Bill No. C-156 now before the house could make us happy because it proposes amendments to increase the compensation to be paid for animals to be destroyed because of contagious diseases. In fact, experience has taught me that the present compensation was not very fair in view of the economic changes the farmers must take into account, and the amount of $70 for destroying grade animals, as well as the amount of $140 for pure bred animals, which was set in 1958, is clearly not enough if one considers that a Holstein cow values between $175 and $200 ten years ago is now worth between $450 and $600. I will not go as far as to insist on the figures quoted by the previous speaker who mentioned a cow worth $40,000, because there are only one or two in a constituency. At any rate, we have generally referred to cattle worth $500 to $600 and for all those reasons an amendment to the legislation is essential.

However, the main object of the bill is to withdraw the amounts paid as compensations and the following recommendations can be read:

> His Excellency the governor general has recommended to the house the present measure to amend the Animal Contagious Diseases Act to remove from the act the amounts of compensation specified for the horses and cattle slaughtered pursuant to the act and to permit the governor in council to prescribe maximum amounts for such compensation;

• (8:40 p.m.)

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, that bill will give rise to patronage and I quote paragraph (b) of section 1:

> —such value to be determined by the minister or by some person appointed by him for that purpose.

Mr. Speaker, there is no problem, because as stated by a Montreal commentator, the minister is well-informed about cows since he owns 250. At the present time, the minister is assisted by technicians—former members of the Coopérative fédérée and farmers—and I feel that it is no longer necessary to worry about the bill now under consideration. But let us suppose that one day or another a minister is inexperienced—it has happened, Mr. Speaker, because he may be a lawyer or an economist, in short, a person who has never seen a cow and could barely tell a dog from a cat—he could refer to another provision of the legislation, because in fact, it has been specifically expected that mistakes could be made and I quote:

> —to provide also for an appeal by the owners of animals slaughtered where no compensation or less compensation than the maximum prescribed is awarded to the owners.

Mr. Speaker, in such a case, if the minister is not sufficiently informed, he would be compelled to appoint someone who would be in a position to apply the act adequately. However, if the person who has been elected is a Liberal condidate who, for instance, was defeated in the last election, and goes in a riding to assess the herd of a Conservative, of a Créditiste or a political organizer, one can imagine what kind of assessment this will be. In a case like this, the farmer will have to appeal again to the board. I am quoting section 2, which says that an ordinary civil servant is to assess the value:

> —where no compensation is awarded for that animal on the ground that the failure to award compensation was unreasonable.

One can easily imagine how easily a farmer will be sent packing. I am quoting further:

> Every appeal to the assessor referred to in subsection (1) shall be brought within three months from the date the owner receives notification of the decision or the compensation that is the subject of the appeal or within such longer period as the assessor may in any case for special reasons allow.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat that this is just political manoevring, which will only result in arousing discontent and creating problems which will have to be solved by other civil servants.

I submit we have enough civil servants as it is. Are we going to hire some more people to correct mistakes? Though it is rather complicated, but it is a way of hiding the unemployment situation.

The fact that the rate of compensation was changed only twice in 20 years proves that we have allowed ourselves to be outdistanced in that field. Standards must be set ahead of time to ensure compensation that is proportionate to the losses incurred. To my mind, those standards are also necessary to give renewed confidence to the stock-breeder and keep him from delays in revealing cases of illness in his herd because, as you are aware, when illness strikes a herd, for lack of capital, a farmer could refrain from reporting the facts and so be responsible for the resulting epidemic.

For all those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I feel that this should be looked into seriously. I bring my remarks to a close by saying again to the hon. minister that I am convinced of the danger inherent in leaving it to one or two civil servants to set the amount of compensation. I ask him to tell us what he intends to do to improve this bill which must have been drawn up by some incompetent person. However, as I know he is acquainted with the problem, I should like him to reassure us and tell us what he intends to do to correct the situation.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty to inform the house that if the minister speaks now he closes the debate.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, if I may reply to some of the questions that have been raised, I should like to say that there has been a very good record of performance, if I may use those words in describing the results of the contagious diseases eradication programs that have been carried on for a number of years.

Perhaps hon. members would be interested in the record so far as brucellosis and tuberculosis are concerned. For example, in the year 1963-64 tests conducted throughout Canada showed that there were 24,980 positive reactors and the compensation paid farmers owning the animals was $1,688,000. In 1964-65 the number of reactors had decreased to 20,800 and the compensation paid was $1.4 million. In 1965-66 the number of reactors had dropped to 13,700 the compensation paid amounting to $941,000. In 1966-67 the number of reactors had gone down to 8,500 and the compensation amounted to $595,000. In 1967-68 the number of reactors to these two diseases had decreased to 6,800 and the amount of compensation paid was $475,000.

There are two matters involved here. One is that as these programs come to completion across the country there are obviously fewer animals to be tested. A decreasing number of reactors is found throughout the country in these eradication programs, whch in my opinion have really been worth while and beneficial not only to the farmers themselves but to the country as a whole, both in terms of economy and of health.

The question was asked why September 26 was the date on which these changes would come into effect. It is true that it was necessary to establish a date, and this date was approximately the time the resolution was introduced in the house. The reason that date was put upon it was that we did not want any farmers to withhold animals in anticipation of higher compensation; we wanted them to know there was a cut-off date. All legislation has a date upon which it becomes effective, but we did want to make sure that we could continue the program without any hold-back on the part of the farmers.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Another question that was raised was the possibility of partisan political considerations entering into the assessment value of these animals.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question. May I bring to the minister's attention the date of September 26. Is it possible that a more recent date would be more applicable.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I was thinking about that matter and I am not sure of the implications that would be involved in changing the date because of some settlements, if you wish to call them that, which have been made with respect to compensation during the intervening period. Certainly I would welcome a discussion of this matter in committee tc see if there are implications or ramifications that would cause us difficulty if we were to consider a more recent date.

So far as the possibility of partisan political considerations entering the decisions of the assessors, I think one can rule that out. I do not see any possibility of that happening at all. There is now a maximum of $70 and $140 for compensation, depending on the classification of animal that is ordered to be slaughtered. We intend to raise this level to bring it more in line with present day levels; but still there will be a maximum to be prescribed in the regulations laid down by order in council.

To answer the question of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) as to why fair replacement value is not considered instead of some maximum value figure, I wish to say that we hope the compensation will be fair. We also believe that a maximum must be laid down, otherwise we might get into a great deal of difficulty in having animals assessed. My hon. friend pointed to that problem. There is a wide variation between the values of so called purebred and registered animals, and we want to be fair. At the same time we must be very careful to make sure it is not profitable for the farmer to have a contagious disease among his livestock. Some responsibility, certainly not all of it, must lie with the farmer. To the extent that there is negligence of any kind in allowing a disease once started to go beyond the point it would have gone if there had been good husbandry, the farmer is responsible.

This bill does not intend that there shall be any profit to anyone having a serious contagious disease in his livestock.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member ought to be in his proper seat.

Mr. Peters: I agree with the minister that compensation should be considered at a reasonable percentage of replacement value. This would provide equitable compensation to some who have had serious losses. On the other hand, those with animals at the low end of the value scale would not suffer so much loss as those who have high quality animals. I think that we ought to prevent abuses from developing in this area.

Mr. Olson: We can take all that into consideration in committee. I think it is fairly obvious that we intend to recommend new maximum levels that are higher than the ones that are prescribed at present. One could not consider seriously the question of leaving values open ended, without a maximum limit. The assessors making assessments in the field ought to be guided by regulations which have been laid down and authorized by order in council, and although we can make changes I think we must have some upper limit in the matter of values. It is also fair to say that the surroundings of high priced, purebred registered animals are more hygienic than those of many other animals.

Another point that was raised was the matter of the federal government becoming directly involved in the eradication of rabies. I think the hon. member who drew that question to the attention of the house answered his own question. One of the greatest problems in eradicating rabies stems from the fact that the disease is carried by wildlife. Though a great deal of work is being done by the provinces in co-operation with the federal government it must be anticipated that the process will be long drawn out, again because of the fact that the disease is carried by wildlife throughout much of Canada.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I must advise the house that the bill provides for the governor in council to establish the maximum levels of compensation, the current rates being $70 for grade animals and $140 for purebreds. The bill provides for new rates to be set by the governor in council, as I have said. We believe there are sufficient funds in the current estimates to provide for the additional compensation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on agriculture.

PEST CONTROL

REGULATION OF PRODUCTS USED IN CONTROL PROCEDURE

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture) moved the second reading and reference to the standing committee on agriculture of bill C-157, to regulate products used for the control of pests and the organic functions of plants and animals.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is the last of the four bills that, as I said earlier this afternoon, are related. Hon. gentlemen will realize, of course, that pesticides have a great deal to do with the high standard of living enjoyed by the average Canadian today. Not only do they enable farmers to produce greater quantities of high quality food more economically, but they also make it possible for all of us to live, work, and play in considerable more comfort than did our forefathers.

The list of pests arrayed against us is formidable. There are about 2,500 different kinds of insects and related organisms that from time to time attack Canadian crops and gardens. There are 2,000 plant diseases. There are 1,000 kinds of weeds. There are several hundred kinds of animal diseases and other animal pests to plague us.

It is estimated that one third of all crops is lost to weeds, pests, and disease. What would be the toll without pesticides? It is a fact that some crops just could not be grown at all without chemical help, while the yields of other crops would be greatly reduced. Food quality would also suffer because many items would be infected with worms, fungi and insects.

The agricultural community is naturally the big consumer of pesticides but these chemicals also have hundreds of uses in industry and in the home. Fumigants kill bugs in warehouses; growth suppressants keep down weeds on airports; insecticides kill aphids on ornamental trees; rodenticides rid our houses of mice; repellants keep dogs away from flowers, and so on. There is a very long list of these chemicals that are useful.

I think hon. members will also realize that pesticides are opening up new recreational areas, allowing us to use what were previously unbearable locations. Pesticides are now a very important part of all our lives. We certainly could not live in the style to which we have become accustomed without them. But pesticides have dual personalities. It is true that they bring us untold benefits, but they can also get us into trouble if they are not handled properly. Careless use of pesticides can lead to food contamination, damage to crops, as well as human and animal injury.

I have mentioned that scientists are making steady progress in coming up with new and alternative methods of controlling pests, such as improved management practices, resistant crops and biological control. But these alternate controls are not yet adequate to protect crops, gardens, animals, or indeed ourselves, and therefore pesticides will be needed far into the foreseeable future.

Government control of the manufacture and use of these potentially dangerous substances is necessary if we are to protect people from the misuse of pesticides. My department registered more than 3,300 different pesticides for use in Canada during the past year. This great number indicates something of the difficulty of the job of keeping tab on all these different pest control products. To do this job adequately we need the very best, most modern legislation possible.

The bill now before us, in general terms, brings the Pest Control Products Act of 1939 up to date. While it is framed in the same general context there are some significant differences and improvements. The increased use of pesticides and associated products, and a greater concern over their potential for harm as well as good necessitate a broader authority for regulation than in the past. This is provided in the proposed legislation by adding the authority to regulate the manufacture, handling, use and advertising of such control products. Authority is also included to regulate manufacturing establishments in regard to prescribed control products for export or interprovincial movement. The present act provides only for the regulation of the product itself as to composition, packaging and labelling.

In addition to true pesticides, the new legislation also applies to other control products and products to be used along with or as a supplement to pesticides and control products. The present act provides only for the regulation of actual pest control products. Examples of products covered by the proposed legislation, not covered under the present act, would be plant growth modifiers such as sprout inhibitors, potato top killers, and fruit stop-drop sprays; emulsifiers, stickers and stabilizers for use with pesticides and other control products.

We have also provided for protection against the danger of cross contamination. For example, cross contamination could occur when the same mixing equipment is used for different pesticides. Two chemicals might be perfectly harmless by themselves but when mixed they are sometimes lethal. Cross contamination could also occur when control products are stored near food, and the use of a pesticide on food crops at harvest time could cause residues that are harmful.

The present act does provide some protection for the public against deception in merchandizing pesticides but only indirectly. This bill permits more specific control over certain labelling, advertising, and packaging practices that are difficult to regulate at present. For example, the use of numbers in the brand name of products may bear no relation to the strength of a product even though it could be construed as doing so. Potentially hazardous compounds may be packaged in containers that resemble other harmless commodities. The new legislation retains the authority of the present act to regulate products through registration, standards and labelling, but adds authority over packaging.

Authority is provided in the bill for registration of premises in which certain prescribed control products may be manufactured for subsequent shipment interprovincially or abroad. These prescribed products could include those which include living organisms in their manufacture. These organisms could pose a public hazard if not handled properly. Indications are that this type of control product will be in production soon and special regulatory powers will be necessary to ensure effectiveness and safety.

In my view, this new legislation will continue to give effective service to the agricultural industry while at the same time providing greatly improved means of protecting the public interest. In conclusion, I should say that the cost of administration will increase somewhat as regulations are approved covering the new activities, and we estimate that the total additional costs would be approximately $60,000 annually when the regulations are fully implemented.

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, as a prelude to my remarks in respect of Bill C-157, I would like to make these observations. The life of the pioneers of this continent was hard but simple. They were farmers and hunters living in isolation in small communities, unconcerned about the outside world. Their existence was free of many of the problems facing the people of this the twentieth century which, in many instances, have been created by the exploitation of succeeding generations. It has been stated that two grim spectres beckon mankind toward oblivion. One offers instant wholesale death by nuclear means and the other guarantees eventual starvation when the population exceeds the food supply. The powers that be in our world of today are struggling in an all out effort to postpone these evil days.

I propose to deal with this bill only in respect of how its aspects affect our food. Man is rapidly changing those once immutable features around him, the soil, atmosphere and water, even our seas and their complete production. The basic conflict is between the mounting need for food and fibre and the equally urgent need to preserve the quality of our environment. This is the perspective in which to view the continuing debate over the value and hazards of pesticides and drugs. I mention drugs because they do relate to certain organic functions in animals.

Of course, the use of pesticides and drugs is not the only way in which man is unrespectful of his environment. The growth of cities, clearing of forests or draining of swamps, the future prospect of weather control, run away population, the adulteration of foods—all of these promise to change this once undisturbed earth irrevocably. Men can no longer approach nature merely to exploit her. They must now learn to manage her wisely. They must decide what kind of environment they really want, what quality of life they desire.

If we talk of pesticides and drugs only in terms of benefits and hazards, we fail to grapple with the basic question. Men do need to know exactly what these chemicals do and what liabilities their use may incur. But then we must decide whether, where, and how to use them to help build the kind of world we want. This is where Bill C-157 can play a very important part.

To my knowledge, the pesticides most widely used are D.D.T. and its breakdown products, aldrin, dieldrin and lindane. In experiments and studies reported to have been carried out by specialists of the University of Miami School of Medicine concentrations of D.D.T. and dieldrin were found in many humans. Traces of pesticides were found in the tissues of stillborn and unborn babies. The greatest concentrations were found in the fat tissue, but the liver, kidney and brain also carried the residue.

At this time I would like to put on the record an excerpt from an article that appeared in the Globe and Mail a few months ago under the heading, "Pesticides Held Threat to Unborn." It reads:

> "An expectant mother can poison her unborn child by drinking milk from a cow that has browsed on forage sprayed by some insecticides," an official of the National Health and Welfare Department said not long ago when addressing 75 pilots attending an aerial pest control conference sponsored by the Ontario health department.

It was further stated that careless crop spraying can have far-reaching effects. Chlorinated hydro-carbons used in some pesticides have the longest effects and can be stored in fat deposits and in milk in cattle.

One authority said that insecticides coupled with the effect of radio-active fall out could produce babies with two heads and six fingers. A survey of short horn cows found a ratio of 30 parts of insecticide to one million parts of milk. An infant child does not have the resistance to insecticides that an adult has and therefore is vulnerable.

It seems also that it would be difficult to deny the use of pesticides has caused death in fish and seagull populations. D.D.T. deposits have been found in fish. This situation is of concern to government wild life and fisheries departments. It is now evident that with the indiscriminate use of insecticides there is a danger that man eventually will not be able to find relaxation in fishing because the fish will be contaminated. He would not be able to enjoy hunting because the wild fowl and wild animals would be contaminated; and the ocean would fail to be a source of protein because even the ocean would be contaminated.

Dr. Keit Ronald of the University of Guelph said insecticides have reached the antarctic and penguins are being affected. He said the antarctic once was considered to be a sterile part of the world but that it is not any more; it is polluted with insecticides. Dr. Ronald said the day is coming when insecticide will be sold in the same manner as poisons with purchasers signing a poison register.

I support Bill C-157 because it will fulfil some urgently needed controls. Another consideration that should not be overlooked is revealed in a statement by Professor Lamont C. Cole of Cornell University division of biological sciences. He contends that certain pesticides like D.D.T., which can kill both helpful and harmful species, actually make life easier for the pests. He followed that thought with the warning that D.D.T. and other persistent types of pesticides carry perhaps the greatest potential long term hazards to mankind.

The United States secretary of the interior in his reference to pesticides said that we have strained mind and dollar to bend nature to our satisfaction. Yet, we do not know what the effects may be, nor do we anticipate possible consequences. Blithely we carry on our multimillion dollar programs in the pesticide field with wholly inadequate research. We could be building our own fools' paradise. The day of reckoning may not be tomorrow, but who knows about the day after?

At this time I should like to refer briefly to the case at Grand Forks, B.C., more specifically known as Sunshine Valley. The farmers there had their hogs, cattle and milk declared unfit for food by the federal food and drug directorate. This was the result of contamination caused by Aldrin which had been used for the control of wireworm in potato crops. It was found that effects of this material remained potent for a long period and would kill wireworm nine years after being administered to the ground. The residue of this chemical was passed on to livestock through forage grown on the potato ground years after being treated with Aldrin.

Much of Sunshine Valley, which is two miles wide by ten miles long, has been rendered useless by contamination. The complete production of several farms has been declared unfit for food. This is a glaring example of a pesticide having been made available before sufficient research work was done so that the end results would be known. In Sweden plans are being made to cut down on the use of insecticides and weed killers to prevent food becoming polluted by chemicals whose long term effects are not known. The Swedish natural science research council which is working on the problem has called public attention to the lack of knowledge available on what biocides do to human beings and whether they can produce cancer. For some time Swedish recommendations discouraged the use of chemicals on food crops during a prescribed safety period before harvest. The period varies from three to 45 days depending on what chemicals are involved. It is calculated to give time for the chemicals to disperse before the plants are used.

The Science council in Sweden now is recommending against spraying. Carrots grown in such soil can contain a higher percentage of dieldrin than the soil surrounding them. Poisons can also enter the human system through eggs. Grain treated with mercury compound has, when fed to hens, produced eggs containing the same substance. The Swedish government now has forbidden the use of dressed seed as feed for chickens.

Bills C-157 supplies provisions that should eliminate some of our pesticide problems. I should like to make a few observations about a product known as Stilbestrol. This material when used in animal food or by pellet implantation has a pronounced effect on the organic function of animals. It is a dangerous product with practically no control. My experiences with this product were disastrous to say the least. As a result of its promiscuous use, damage resulted to a group of mink ranches to the extent of about $750,000. The mink were exposed to Stilbestrol through the cereal content of their ration which was prepared by a large well-known corporation. Our experience and the experience of others has proven that there is an accumulation of residue in the animal tissues because our mink received a very small amount of Stilbestrol over a period of six weeks following this period, they broke down physically. Many died and practically 90 per cent were sterile.

Further, evidence given by the veterinary general before the agricultural committee indicates that the residue does accumulate. This was borne out by the fact that swine had been declared unfit for human consumption after a residue of Stilbestrol above the point of human toleration had been detected. Thousands of cattle across this country are being fed Stilbestrol. Many also carry Stilbestrol pellets in their ears. I am disturbed about the loose handling of Stilbestrol and its effect on humans who must surely be exposed to its residue constantly. The health of our people should be our first consideration. Therefore, I trust some satisfactory control of Stilbestrol may be exercised through the provisions of Bill C-157. This would possibly help to reduce death by cancer.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I think this bill is timely. Perhaps we should have had the tighter controls which will be possible under this bill even before now. I am concerned about the basis on which the Department of Agriculture will be able to make decisions when it comes to the point of control. One may very well say we will see that some manufacturer may or may not be able to distribute such and such a product, but the important thing really is to know before the product is released what it will do. It is important that there be sufficient staff and sufficient research data so that it may be known what a given chemical product will do. I am a farmer and I know there are chemicals being used by farmers who, as a result of personal contact with them, have ended up in hospital. This is not a general situation but I know products have been sold which can cause rather serious sickness on the part of those who use them if they are careless or if they are get down-wind of these products often enough.

We should be concerned about the effect of these chemicals on human beings. If the Department of Agriculture is to control such chemicals the first thing they must know is what those chemicals will do to individuals who use them and what they will do to the environment in which they are used.

[Mr. Noble.]

It is quite true that if we were to remove from the market the chemicals which are now being used in agriculture, our agricultural production would drop severely. It is also safe to say that chemicals have been released for use without sufficient consideration as to what they will do to the environment in which they are used. For example, if on the prairies you use a chemical spray which destroys substantial amounts of foliage on the trees, what do you do to the bird population in that area? The bird population is important. If you use chemicals which cut down the ability of honey bees or ordinary bumble bees to survive, what do you do to the insect population and the production of honey in a given area?

The manufacturer is interested in producing a product, advertising and selling it. If he derives a profit thereby he is happy and has achieved his objective. If no one prevents him from deriving this satisfactory profit he is certainly not violating any law, except the law of nature. The law of nature is pretty important because we all live or die by it, as the case may be.

At the moment on the prairies, and I suppose anyplace else, you can use what is called a low volatile spray for spraying weeds, or the standard spray. The low volatile spray will not drift to the same extent the other will. You can use a contact spray for killing weeds or a spray which is taken into the body of the weeds which literally causes them to explode and die. Each one has a different effect on the surrounding countryside and each one varies in respect of the drift aspect.

This is the kind of thing about which the Department of Agriculture should be concerned and I do not think there is enough money or time being spent in this area. Let me give an example in respect of seed treatment. Every spring beginning about March we see a flood of advertising in western Canadian and, I am sure, in eastern Canadian periodicals advising farmers that such and such a treatment should be used on seeds. These advertisements indicate how much is to be used, what a wonderful boon this is if you apply it to the seed, and what you accomplish by the application. I know for a fact that you can get a number of research men in universities together who will argue among themselves as to whether it is worthwhile to use this seed treatment, yet this treatment is advertised and the farmers are urged to use it. This year, as a result of crop conditions, our seed has suffered damage, and we have already seen suggestions from experts and technicians to the effect that we would be well advised not to use this seed treatment at all. In spite of this, thousands of dollars are being spent on advertising to sell this treatment to the farmer. These are the things about which we should concern ourselves.

I am concerned about the basis upon which control is to be established and used. We must consider the actual application on the farm and the general effect of these chemicals on the general environment in terms of water, air and ground pollution. We must not forget that a great deal of this chemical does not simply disappear but becomes a permanent part of the environment into which it is released, whether it is the soil or the water.

Let me urge the Department of Agriculture to concern itself about this aspect and not merely to be satisfied to control what exists or what particular manufacturers choose to offer the public. There are other ways of controlling insects besides dousing them with chemicals. It has been established that insects can be controlled in many cases by biological methods without using chemicals. This alternative method has not been given sufficient attention, and sufficient money has not been spent to develop this method of controlling insects. We continue to douse them with chemicals.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, the two preceding speakers have dealt with much of the subject matter with which I intended to deal. This has relieved me of a great burden of responsibility. However, in respect of a collateral issue I think I should make it clear to the house that we have now virtually concluded the fourth bill placed before us today. Contrary to what has been said in some places, these are not unimportant bills. They comprise massive legislation which will have a considerable effect on the lives and fortunes of many thousands of Canadians.

It is of some credit to the house, and to the new basis under which we are proceeding, that we understand that under the new practice we will be following, second reading is not taken to mean an acceptance in principle of what is contained within the four corners of a legislative measure. It is in fact a stage in the legislative process during which we can examine the legislation and then refer it to the appropriate standing committee for examination in depth. If we see fit we can then take issue with the provisions of a bill. I am pleased to see that this procedure is being followed.

I know there will be occasions when opposition members and, perhaps hopefully, some government members will be compelled to suggest that certain measures are not good or of advantage to the country. On these occasions, we will feel justified in taking a stand even at the second reading stage. I thought I should make that position clear at this particular time.

At this point I should like to refer to another phenomenon which has come to my mind after listening to what has been said about these legislative proposals. I have in mind the substantial extent to which the government is asking this house to give it the power to regulate by order in council. I do not intend to go into detail, but an examination of the regulatory clause 5 of this bill makes it clear at first blush how very substantial are the rights this house is yielding to the government. This is emphasized by the other bills which have already been passed. I am not going to quarrel about this, but it is a principle I do not like. I think we have gone too far in this direction in the past.

We have given to the government over and over again, in bill after bill, year after year, parliament after parliament, power to act by order in council and ministerial decree. Our rights then vanish; we do not see them again in this house. The effects of the exercise of rights are of course. felt by people all over this country. I say this because I want to emphasize very strongly the need for a right for this house to examine and scrutinize the impact of ministerial decrees and orders in council.

It is true that a committee has been set up. I had the honour to be a member of that committee. We have not had an opportunity to discuss these matters because we have met only once. I do not fault the committee or the chairman for that. But I urge the government to proceed with all speed to make sure that the committee meets often so that before this session is passed we will have arrived at an acceptable method whereby when we do grant the government, as we are now doing by clause 5 of this bill, the very substantial powers which the minister is seeking, there will be some method of examining, those cases where, in the opinion of members of this house, there have been abuses of the rights given to government.

We are probably the only democratic country at the present time which does not have that right in its legislative assembly. I want to make this point, Mr. Speaker, because I think it is most important. There is no doubt that the government will continue to seek powers of this kind. More and more we will find that bills are simply vehicles from which is suspended the right to pass regulations. There must be given to this house the checks and balances to meet this situation. I make this point now. It is a collateral point but I think I can choose no better time than this to emphasize it.

I shall now deal with the merits of the legislation. I am interested in it. I farmed for some years until I descended into public life. I have some knowledge of what is involved. I had the honour to serve as a member of the health and welfare committee which sat in 1963. At that time there had been recently published a remarkable book by the late Miss Rachel Carson, "Silent Spring". The committee was given very wide powers of reference to examine the impact of herbicides and pesticides on environment, on the human existence. We invited Miss Carson to appear before the committee. Because of ill health she was unable to come to see us, but she sent us some documentation. We had a very full examination of this matter but toward the end of the committee's hearings the representatives of the agricultural chemical industry appeared before it. I am not faulting them. It was a lobby; there is no question about that.

This industry serves a special need. There is some question in my mind whether the special need which it serves is balanced against what may well be the general detriment to society from the use, or I should say the abuse, of these chemicals. In any event, these representatives appeared before the committee and after their appearance the committee made a report which to my mind was a very mild one; it did not go as far as it should have. At the conclusion of the report, the committee said certain things. I will read from the report of the health and welfare committee which dealt with food and drugs in 1963. On page 566, of the report, after making what I consider to be very mild recommendations, the committee said:

> The committee finds that it will not be able to complete at the current session of this parliament its inquiries into the matters referred to it for report and, accordingly, recommends that this committee be re-established and appointed early in the next session of this parliament to resume the studies and continue the inquiries initiated by this committee.

The committee was re-established but it did nothing at all. It decided not to pursue its studies in connection with this very serious problem and turned its attention to other matters dealing with drugs generally. It made some very useful recommendations in that respect, but it did not pursue its inquiries nor has there been to my knowledge any committee since that time which has pursued or even attempted to conclude the inquiries which we initiated in 1963.

We have not heard a great deal about Miss Carson's book, although there has been a subcommittee of the United States Senate sitting under the chairmanship of a very distinguished senator and former governor from, I believe, Connecticut, which has been inquiring into environmental hazards and has made some very useful recommendations and proposed some legislation. I do not think it would do any harm at this time, having regard to the fact that this matter is being referred to committee, to read some extracts from this book to remind the house of the grave dangers pointed out by Miss Carson. In her foreword Miss Carson quotes Albert Schweitzer who said:

> Man has lost the capacity to foresee and to forestall. He will end by destroying the earth.

In the foreword to the book there is also a quotation from E. B. White as follows:

> I am pessimistic about the human race because it is too ingenious for its own good. Our approach to nature is to beat it into submission. We would stand a better chance of survival if we accommodated ourselves to this planet and viewed it appreciatively instead of skeptically and dictatorially.

I should like to read two other quotations from the book:

> We poison the caddis flies in a stream and the salmon runs dwindle and die. We poison the gnats in a lake and the poison travels from link to link of the food chain and soon the birds of the lake margins become its victims. We spray our elms and the following springs are silent of robin song, not because we sprayed the robins directly but because the poison travelled, step by step, through the now familiar elm leaf-earthworm-robin cycle. These are matters of record, observable, part of the visible world around us. They reflect the web of life—or death—that scientists know as ecology.

On page 237 we find these words:

> Human exposures to cancer-producing chemicals (including pesticides) are uncontrolled and they are multiple. An individual may have many different exposures to the same chemical. Arsenic is an example. It exists in the environment of every individual in many different guises: as an air pollutant, a contaminant of water, a pesticide residue on food, in medicines, cosmetics, wood preservatives, or as a colouring agent in paints and inks. It is quite possible that no one of these exposures alone would be sufficient to precipitate malignancy—yet any single supposedly "safe dose" may be enough to tip the scales that are already loaded with other "safe doses".

In support of that I should like to tell the house what was said by one of the doctors who appeared before the committee. I tried to find the actual evidence so I could read it to the house, but I could not find it. However, I recall one of the doctors who appeared before the committee being examined on this particular point. He said it will be utterly impossible for 15 or 20 years at least to come to a determination as to the extent to which the constant intake of these pesticide residue may affect the reproductive capacity of the human race.

It may well be—I have not kept up with this—that scientists are now been able to say that this statement is not correct. However, it certainly has not come to my attention and I have tried to keep in touch on with the problem. This was a very serious statement made at that time.

Miss Carsons' critics said that she was an alarmist and was colouring her facts. She was justified in doing so because of the serious nature of this problem. In many cases what she said was confirmed by evidence given before the subcommittee of the Senate in the United States.

I say all this not to oppose this bill but to reinforce the fact that the agriculture committee should take adequate time to resume the study which was commenced in 1963, to examine the further scientific evidence which has now become available, and to see to what extent it might be possible to introduce safety features into the use of these pesticides. I notice that the legislation is substantially different from chapter 209 of the Revised Statutes, The Pest Control Products Act. I should like to call the attention of the minister to the fact that when I was examining the then legal adviser, Mr. Curran of his department, I asked him questions regarding the legal basis upon which the legislative program dealing with pesticides and pest controls had been put forward. It was suggested that, similar to food and drugs, the act was probably based upon the Criminal Code. I do not know whether or not this is the case but I mention it because I think this is another aspect which the committee may look into, namely the extent to which the wide reaching proposals in the bill and in the regulations are in fact valid. I am not suggesting they are not, but certainly if the government is going to take these powers onto itself it wants to have the utmost assurance that its legislation is in fact valid and constitutional.

I notice for example that for the first time the government is seeking under its regulatory power the right to control the use of controlled products, and this probably comes dangerously close to the regulation of trade and commerce which may or may not be valid. I just throw out this suggestion so that when the committee comes to examine this bill they may call before them the proper officials of the Department of Justice and of the Department of Agriculture and examine these things quite carefully.

I think we must retain the very utmost value that is in the pesticides and herbicides we have developed. At the same time, we must make sure that we do so legally and with the greatest degree of safety to human beings in order that we might have the best of both worlds. I make this plea to the minister to ensure that when the committee examines this particular legislative proposal these things will not be forgotten.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say just a few words on this bill. I think it is a bill which has the unanimous support in principle of members in all parts of the house. We agree very thoroughly with the purpose which it sets out to achieve. I believe that the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Noble), the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) and also the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) have all voiced our real concern that this legislation should be backed up with adequate and continuous research. I think the hon member for Peace River made an excellent suggestion when he said that the committee should go into the whole question of the balance between the good and bad features of these pesticides in the light of the most recent scientific research. I should like to mention an aspect that I do not think has been directly touched upon, that is, not only the whole balance of nature and the effect of pesticides on the plant and animal life but its effect in the home. I think there is a doubt in the minds of a great many people as to the effect a number of these pesticides have on the deterioration or adulteration of food products.

In my own province there are quite a number of small farms and market gardens which grow their own products without any kind of inorganic or pesticide materials. They believe that when the balance of nature is upset the food products deteriorate. I am not saying that they are correct but I believe we do not know the answer to that, and in order for this legislation to be thoroughly protective we should know the answer to this question. Another matter concerns these compressed air or aerosol containers for destroying pests. I am not at all sure that a build-up of potentially noxious materials does not occur around the home. If the pesticides are not very carefully controlled a build-up may occur which may very well be deleterious to health. This is also something that the committee could and should look into. Before licences are given for the production and handling of these materials producers and distributors applying for registration should be required to show proof of their effects and their controllability.

I am sure that the regulations will have some kind of standards which the producers must meet before being allowed to put their products on the market. I may also suggest that it would be a good idea to require that these pesticides be a genuine improvement on existing ones before the producers are permitted to put them on the market. As is the case with so many food products, in order for a competitor to get the market he often makes some non-essential change in his new product. I think that is something that needs watching. In other words, we must be careful that under this legislation we do not issue licences to permit the slow deterioration or adulteration of foods and of the atmosphere in our homes and cities. We are concerned about the dangers of cigarette smoking and of other products. I believe there are dangers in these pesticides that perhaps we do not even suspect at present. We do not want to issue licences for slow murder by way of pesticides.

So, having said this, I think that all of us are convinced that this is an excellent piece of legislation. I certainly hope that the committee will be able to improve on it and to make sure that all the loopholes are stopped.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, very briefly I should like to lend my support to the words spoken by hon. members on this side of the house on this important piece of legislation. I realize that this is one of the most important pieces of legislation that this house has before it at this time. The minister has suggested, in reply to a question asked by me concerning another piece of legislation, that the matter would be discussed before the committee. There is a danger in this legislation being referred to a committee. I imagine that everyone in this house realizes that all of us cannot attend all committee meetings. It is absolutely certain that the questions I have on this matter will not be answered because I will not be able to attend the committee meetings dealing with this subject since I have to serve on other committees. I had hoped that some of these questions would be answered on second reading of these bills. The fact they will not be illustrates one of the fears that I have with regard to the new rules.

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

I should like to inform the minister that I am concerned that he may designate any person as an inspector or analyst for the purpose of the act. In all sincerity I suggest to him once again that "any qualified person" should mean exactly what it says and not mean some political appointment. We have seen that sort of thing too often in this country. In every department I can think of there are unqualified people who are trying to enforce the provisions of this particular act. Therefore, I would ask the minister to pay particular attention to this point, because I am sure everyone in the house agrees that it is essential to have qualified people implement a measure of this importance.

There is another matter in connection with which I would lend my support. As the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) suggested when discussing the previous bill, there is a great need for the provisions of this bill to encompass the entire nation. If any province wants to stand in the way of this bill it should be told to get into line with the rest of the country so that the measure is applicable to the whole country. As the minister has suggested, there must be a broad application.

I would also lend my support to the minister's statement that all provinces must come within the terms of the bill. At this particular stage of our development we cannot allow special status to any province with regard to the implementation and enforcement of the legislation we pass here. Once more I ask the minister to put teeth into the bill, teeth that can be sunk into any agency that does not live up to the requirements of the bill before us. If we do not put teeth into these bills, then there is absolutely no point in debating them in this house; we must make sure that they are enforced.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I must advise the house that if the minister speaks at this point he will close the debate.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I have but five or six minutes so may I briefly express my appreciation to hon. members opposite for the way in which these bills have been handled today. I want very quickly to answer some of the questions asked.

The hon. member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Noble) expressed his concern about the residual contamination of some of these pesticides which is found in many places. I share his concern and the provisions of this bill will substantially strengthen the hands of the Department of Agriculture in trying to avoid this contamination as much as possible. We must rely on scientific knowledge, of course, but we are trying to keep abreast of this.

The hon. member expressed particular concern about di-ethyl-stilbestrol. Stilbestrol will not be covered under the act because it is not a pesticide but a female sex hormone which is used in fattening animals and as a growth stimulant. There is a measure under the Food and Drug Act for testing the residue of this di-ethyl-stilbestrol in meat found in packing houses. If anybody violates the act the meat products are condemned and indeed an offence is committed if the level is high enough to be harmful to human beings.

The hon. member pointed out that we do not know all that we need to know about the long-term effects of di-ethyl-stilbestrol and other residues, but we are sincerely trying to keep up with developments and amending our regulations accordingly.

The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) suggested that we must know in advance what will be the long-term effects of these residues. I agree that this would be desirable, but I suggest to him that if we conducted tests for 15 or 20 years—which is the period of time that it would take for the levels of the residues to become dangerous—we would in fact be denying our producers certain benefits during that period.

The hon. member also referred to the problems all farmers have with toxic substances such as mercury and mercurial dust used in fumigating seed. However, new products have recently been introduced which I suggest are a great improvement and much safer to use.

I appreciate the remarks of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) in connection with the new procedures. I should like to give him the undertaking of this minister, at any rate, that it is not the intention to abuse the authority that has been granted by way of making regulations by order in council. However, I am sure he knows that regulations to give administrative effect to bills passed by this house have always been made by order in council; this is not something new. I share with him his hope that the committee on delegated legislation—I think that was the one he was referring to—will make sure that these procedures will not be abused.

With regard to the comments of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), the manufacturers of the products she referred to are required to prove the efficacy of their pesticides before they are put on the market. This particular regulation will not only be retained, but indeed strengthened.

I think it is also fair to say that all of the remarks that have been made by members on both sides of the house are not criticisms of the bill, but on the contrary are supporting comments that reinforce the need for the amendments that are now before the house. I hope we will put these amendments into effect in a fair way and as quickly as possible.

The hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg), I believe it was, wanted to be sure he could attend the meetings of the committee. I do not know whether he is a member of the agriculture committee, but if he has time he has every right to attend the meetings of the committee, whether he be a formal member or not, and to participate in the meetings. He does not have the right to move motions or to vote but he does have the right to participate. I welcome him to the meetings and hope he will be there when the detailed examination of the bills takes place.

In conclusion, may I again express my appreciation to hon. members for the way these bills have been handled today. I hope that very soon the standing committee will have the opportunity to deal with them so that much additional information about the various clauses can be given hon. members when they examine them in detail.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on agriculture.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—PROPOSED NATIVE TASK FORCE TO DEVELOP POLICIES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, late in 1968 representatives of Indian organizations from every province in Canada met to form a National Indian Brotherhood. They met, I think, with the Prime Minister and with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and made a number of proposals to the government. First of all, they proposed that a task force of Indian people be appointed to look into the problems of Indians and to make recommendations for the solution of those problems. They proposed to the government that the government recognize the National Indian Brotherhood as an advisory committee to the government on the problems of Indians. The government, of course, listened as it always does with courtesy, but the answers to the requests of the National Indian Brotherhood were, as usual, to say the least less than satisfactory. Because of the answers that were given to my questions I have risen this evening, Mr. Speaker.

• (10:00 p.m.)

We hear a great deal about poverty. The report of the economic council says that 20 per cent of our people live in poverty. That is, families of four with an income of less than $3,000 a year are poor. Yet 75 per cent of our Indian people have an average annual income of less than $2,000. In 1963, 47 per cent of Indian families earned less than $1,000 a year. It is not surprising therefore that Indians are dissatisfied with their lot.

We hear a great deal about the lack of adequate housing in this country and we all know of the slums existing in every Canadian city. Yet it is fair to say that most slum dwellers live in palaces when one compares their dwellings with the dwellings of Indians on the reserves. Eighty six per cent of Indian homes are devoid of such elementary facilities as sewers, septic tanks, flush toilets, running water and telephones. I know the minister will tell us that a great deal of money is being spent by his department in helping Indians. But, Mr. Speaker, all that is being done almost exclusively on the advice of white civil servants and white experts. Almost no Indians have been listened to or consulted in any way on these matters.

Recently the minister was in Winnipeg listening, as he has done in other parts of the country, to the opinions of our Indians with respect to the amendments to the Indian Act which the government has been talking about for so long. If one reads the submissions of the Indians, and I have read them and I presume the minister has given them consideration, one will see how far we are from facing the basic problems of the Indians. They ask that the regulations under the old act having to do with housing and community improvement be amended. Under the old act there were no regulations enforcing minimum housing standards. People talk about educating the Indians. People criticize Indians because their children do not go on to attend high school. I wonder how many white children would go on into high school if they came from a family of six or eight children who had to live and study in a two room house on an Indian reservation. Yet the authorities have never set minimum standards of Indian housing because it has been assumed that Indians are accustomed to and like conditions that are much worse than those that would be tolerated by the rest of the Canadian people.

The Manitoba Indians have asked the government to establish a development fund which Indians could use to develop the resources of the reserve and which would be controlled not by officials of the Department of Indian Affairs and its white advisers but by the Indians themselves. They have also asked for educational facilities to be sharply upgraded, and that this should be done in consultation with the Indian people themselves. I could go on, Mr. Speaker, in much greater detail. A number of briefs have been presented and the briefs have been clear.

One thing which the Indians want more than anything else is their right as citizens of Canada, and surely they are the original citizens of Canada, to direct and manage their own affairs, to make their own decisions and to learn their own mistakes.

We hear a great deal from the present minister. Sometimes we hear the other side from the other minister, the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Andras), and we wonder who is really running the shop. We have heard a great deal about the subject of listening to the Indians. Yet at the same time the minister proceeded with the reorganization of his department, which instead of decentralizing its affairs centralized them, moving the Indians further away from the decision making than previously. So, Mr. Speaker, I come back to my question of last month. Will the minister really pay attention to the proposals of the National Indian Brotherhood and give the Indians a meaningful role in managing their affairs?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to see that the hon. member has referred to the consultations we had in Manitoba. I would have liked him to be there because I had invited him. The hon. member, who is so eager to talk about the problems of the Indians in the House of Commons, did not even go to the trouble of coming to meet the Indians. I think that if he really cared about the lot of the Indians, he would surely have attended those consultations.

I had very useful consultations with the Indians in Manitoba and they made positive proposals. The president of that association, Mr. Courchesne, showed a very commendable broadness of mind and I think we made considerable progress.

Since I have been Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, we have had consultations with the Indians. For the first time, the representatives of the governments took the trouble of meeting the Indians and asking them what they want and what could be done to elaborate a better policy so that they can become first class citizens in the Canadian society.

We recognized that it was a good thing that the Indians should be able to get together in associations. We invited the National Association of Indians to come to Ottawa and the department paid the travelling expenses of the Indian leaders who spent a week in Ottawa to discuss their problems with me and the department officials. We also had a very useful meeting with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

Never since the welfare of the Indians has been a matter for concern have there been such numerous and fruitful contacts between the government and the Indians.

I have come to the same conclusion as the Indians themselves, namely that we must elaborate a policy that will allow the Indians to become first class citizens.

I am the first to admit that there is much to be done for the Indians in the field of housing and employment. We have made considerable progress in the last few years, when there were hardly any—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order.

Mr. Chrétien: —housing units. We have built 5,500 units in the last three years. I shall come back to this later.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. Order.

IMMIGRATION CASES—INSTRUCTIONS TO GOVERNMENT LAWYERS

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make it very plain at the outset of my remarks that I am not attacking nor do I intend to attack the Immigration Appeal Board, but I wish to make it equally plain at the outset of my remarks that I am going to attack, and as vigorously as I possibly can, a party which appears before the Immigration Appeal Board. I refer to the Government of Canada and the Department of Manpower and Immigration. I hope that I can prove that the procedure of the government and of the department in the case of the nine Polish seamen makes a hollow mockery of what the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of this country had trumpeted about as the just society.

On December 20 last I asked the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen):

> —has the government communicated to the immigration appeal board its policy concerning Canadian asylum for people from communist countries?

The minister replied:

> No, Mr. Speaker, the board is empowered under the law to deal with this matter. I think it would be an unwarranted interference for me or any member of the government to communicate with them on this point.

• (10:10 p.m.)

Then I asked this supplementary:

> If it is government policy, and we have been told by the present and former Prime Ministers that it is, surely this statement should be made before the board to help it in its decisions. This is what I was asking of the minister, not to interfere but to place that general statement before the board.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Haidasz) followed this up by saying:

May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker? May I ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether his representative before the Immigration Appeal Board will take government policy into consideration?

The minister replied:

Yes, Mr. Speaker, I give my hon. friend that assurance.

What a kicking around of words! All I was asking was that the government instruct its advocate before that board to make exactly the same point the minister conceded to the parliamentary secretary. But what happened was that no such point was ever made to the board. The counsel briefed on behalf of the Department of Manpower and Immigration did not go before the board and did not say that it is government policy to grant asylum in Canada to those who are political refugees.

Today, I raised the question again with the Acting Minister of Manpower and Immigration to see whether perhaps a government counsel had been instructed, in the light of that exchange briefly on December 20, to change his or the government's tune in the submission to the board in the case of these nine Polish seamen. Most of us know there can be no justification for the alibi that this is a matter which is before the board and therefore the government should stand back.

The fact is the government is represented before that board by a lawyer and the government gave him some kind of instructions to appear before the board. Quite obviously, they have not given this lawyer instructions to present to the board a statement of government policy that Canada in the past has given refuge to people from Communist countries.

I shall conclude by quoting one of the most amazing answers ever given in the House of Commons. It is so amazing that it skipped completely over the head of the fourth estate. This is found in Hansard for November 27 at page 3248 in reply to a written question of mine about illegal Greek immigrants into Canada. I had asked the minister

Did any of the above—

Referring to Greek nationals

—seek refuge in Canada on political grounds and, if so, how many requests were (a) granted (b) refused.

[Mr. McCleave.]

The answer was that no figures are available. If a government department or minister does not know how many people have come to Canada and have asked and pleaded with us to give them asylum because they would be imperiled if they went somewhere else then, sir, it is no government at all.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank the honourable member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) for his question. As he mentioned earlier, he asked a similar question on December 20 last which was followed by a supplementary question by the honourable member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) who also shows a particular interest for those Polish seamen seeking asylum in Canada.

We know, Mr. Speaker, that desertion by Polish seamen is not a new thing. These seamen are not the first to desert and ask for political asylum.

In 1966, the department had to deal with seven cases of deserting seamen who wanted to seek political asylum; in 1967, there were 22 such cases and 29 in 1968. The honourable member for Halifax-East Hants said a while ago that the department made a mockery of requests for political asylum. The department does not make a mockery of those requests but the person concerned must give proof of being a political refugee. Until now, there has been no proof that, in the past, deserting Polish seamen, or their families were victims of maltreatment on the part of the government once they had returned to their country. Certain cases were accepted by the department, thanks to a permit granted by the minister.

In this case, the request was turned down by the Appeal Board; some time ago, a new request was turned down and, last week or the week before, a new appeal was made to the board which is due to give its ruling this week. I can assure the honourable member that if the applicants prove to the board that upon returning to their country they will be maltreated or persecuted by their government, the commissioners will grant their request and allow them to become Canadian citizens.

Mr. Speaker, it is a well known fact that Canada, more than any other country, facilitates immigration: proof has been given of this. I therefore fail to see why constant attempts are being made to blame the present government, claiming that it prevents immigration or puts restrictions on it. In some cases, for the protection of the Canadian citizens, special attention must be given to certain requests and that is why we have made changes in our restrictions to immigration.

The honourable member can rest assured that the Department of Immigration does everything possible to study fairly all requests for immigration coming from various countries, but he must also understand that we cannot—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order.

Mr. Loiselle: —accept all the requests that are presented.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order.

TRANSPORTATION ACROSS BAY OF FUNDY

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): The subject I wish to deal with is certainly not new to this house. We have brought this matter to the attention of the Department of Transport on many occasions and I am disappointed that there is not a member of the Department of Transport here tonight.

It is my information that about 15 years ago there was a considerable push for a train-car ferry from Digby to Saint John. Approximately ten years ago a ferry for carrying all kinds of road vehicles was proposed. Approximately six years ago the real push was made, but it was then realized that we might be too late and that south western Nova Scotia had perhaps missed the boat. Since then what have we received? The Princess Hélène was replaced by the former Princess Nanaimo, renamed the Princess of Acadia. This ferry that had become obsolete in British Columbia was supposed to be the answer to our transportation problems.

Mr. Regan, the present leader of the Nova Scotia Liberal party, referred to this matter on July 26, 1963 as recorded in Hansard at page 2697. My information is that in 1963 there was almost a firm agreement between the government and the C.P.R. and that only the dots on the "i's" and the crosses on the "t's" had to be accomplished. What has happened since then?

Since 1965 some 22 questions have been asked by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan), all relating to this matter. In 1968 I personally raised the matter about a half a dozen times. The hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell) has raised this matter on many occasions since he has been here. The answers provided to these questions by the ministry have ranged from: the matter is now under study; we are now negotiating; we are experiencing technical difficulties and, lately, the service will be provided soon. When is "soon", Mr. Speaker?

The Trudeau announcement of May 30, 1968 related to a multi-million project; a $17 million freight-auto-passenger service. That evening the Liberal candidate was interviewed at a political rally. He indicated that a decision had been made to proceed with the building of a ferry and the terminal this year. That was 1968.

It is a shame, Mr. Speaker, that politics is abused to this extent. There is no patronage, but no boat either, and the people of south-western Nova Scotia, in the Annapolis Valley, are frustrated, infuriated and depressed by announcements that keep repeating the word "soon". Every time there is political prestige or political headlines to be made, it is the same story—"soon". The Digby Courier of January 9, last week, contained an article wherein a councillor reported to that newspaper that news reports indicated that the tender for the new ferry to run between Digby and Saint John would be awarded soon and that contracts for the terminal would be let in the near future. The same story appeared again last week.

Today I asked a question in the house and received the same answer. What is the secret? Why the sea of secrecy? I say to the government, tell the people, tell the boards of trade, tell the municipal and town governments, tell the M.P.'s and the business people what the hold-up is. What is the problem? Tell us so that we do not have to start anew every time a new government or a new minister is appointed. If the government is not responsible for this and it is the C.P.R. or other agencies that are responsible, why make announcements at all?

It is the responsibility of the government to provide this essential highway link and they should be able to overcome these difficulties. There is an economic future for the Atlantic area but the whole transportation problem must be solved, not only water transportation but air transportation. There is a future for our fishing industry. There is a future for eastern agriculture. There is a possibility of attracting new industry, but we must stop playing politics and use a little bit of common sense.

I suggest to this just society that transportation is the key, and that we must get on with the job.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the ferry service from Digby to Saint John has been operated for many years by the Canadian Pacific Railway. It has now been agreed that the responsibility for providing a new vessel for this service belongs to the C.P.R. The C.P.R. has received tenders for the construction of the new vessel and should make an announcement in the next week or so as to where it will be built and when it will be ready.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.27 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, January 15, 1969

The house met at 2 p.m.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CONSTRUCTION OF POST OFFICES UNDER WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

Question No. 377—Mr. McCleave:

1. Has the building of small post offices under the winter works programme been eliminated?

2. How many post offices were constructed under the programme, and what was the total value of such contracts?

3. Has an estimate been made of the man-hours of work provided and, if so, what?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes.

2. Approximately 711 post offices were constructed under the programme at a total value of about $13,600,000., including the cost of sites, site surveys, legal fees and construction contracts.

3. No.

BROADCASTING—PAT BURNS

Question No. 408—Mr. Valade:

1. Since January 1962, have any written or verbal complaints been addressed either to the B.B.G. or the Canadian Radio-Television Commission regarding Pat Burns, a radio commentator employed by radio station C.K.G.M. in Montreal and, if so (a) how many were received (b) what are the names in each case (c) what was the nature of these complaints?

2. Since 1962, has the government or any member of the present or previous governments asked the B.B.G. or the Canadian Radio-Television Commission to investigate or report on (a) the statements or comments made over the air by the said Pat Burns (b) the complaints received by government bodies following these statements or comments?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Radio-Television Commission as follows: 1. (a) Since January 1962, the BBG and its successor the CRTC has received approximately 957 letters commenting on some aspect of the work of Mr. Pat Burns, while he was engaged in Vancouver by radio station CJOR, of which approximately 145 are letters of complaint. Since his engagement in August 1965 at CKGM Montreal, some 56 letters of complaint have been received. (b) It is the policy of the CRTC not to release the names of persons corresponding with the regulatory body. (c) Complaints received relate to Mr. Burn's attitude and treatment of subjects discussed on open-line programmes.

2. There is no record of members of the present or previous government asking for an investigation or report.

COLUMBIA RIVER SYSTEM—ARROW DAM

Question No. 485—Mr. Harding:

1. Was the Columbia River at the site of the Arrow Dam open to year-round river traffic prior to the dam construction?

2. Is the operation of the lock in the Arrow Dam on a year-round basis and, if not (a) what is the present schedule (b) when was it put into effect?

3. Who will defray the cost of operating the lock in the Arrow Dam?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1. Yes.

2. Yes.

3. The British Columbia Hydro and Power Authority.

COMMUNITY PASTURE ON INDIAN RESERVES, SASKATCHEWAN

Question No. 556—Mr. Burton: (supplementary)

2. What government agencies are involved in the development of the project and what is the responsibility of each?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 2. PFRA is responsible for the development of the areas under a ten year lease agreement. The development program is scheduled to be completed by 1970. The pasture will be in operation by 1971. The PFRA will operate and maintain the pastures to the end of the lease agreement at which time the Indian Bands concerned will have the option for renewal.

The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development act as agents for the Indian Bands in entering into agreement with PFRA for this work and to mediate problems which may arise.

N.B. The other parts of this question were answered on November 13, 1968.

Questions

C.B.C.—MEXICO CITY SUMMER OLYMPICS

Question No. 574—Mr. Coates:

1. How many officials of the C.B.C. visited Mexico prior to the start of the Olympic Games?

2. How many employees of the C.B.C. covered the Olympic Games and what is the estimated cost of the coverage of these games?

3. What is the total amount obtained by the C.B.C. from sponsors for the coverage of the Olympic Games?

4. What is the breakdown of employees covering the Olympic Games by divisions, both as to the French and English networks of the C.B.C. as well as to radio and television?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows: 1. Five of the C.B.C. employees assigned to Mexico for the Oympic Games went there in advance in connection with preliminary planning for the C.B.C. Olympic coverage.

2. The C.B.C. had 106 personnel in Mexico for Canadian coverage of the 1968 Summer Olympic Games. In addition, 23 C.B.C. employees were contracted out to the American Broadcasting Company, holders of North American broadcasting rights.

Total direct cost was approximately $930,000 including the cost of transmission facilities between Mexico and Canada, payment for Canadian T.V. rights, salaries of C.B.C. personnel, payments to casual employees and freelancers, transportation and living expenses, shipping charges on equipment.

3. Billings to sponsors of the Olympic coverage amounted to $315,000 of which $84,000 was paid to private stations affiliated with C.B.C. networks, for a net commercial revenue of $231,000.

4. English Radio, 21; English T.V., 38. French Radio, 12; French T.V., 24. International Service, 3; Administrative, 8.

Question No. 605—Mr. Mahoney:

1. How many C.B.C. employees were engaged in Mexico City covering the 1968 Summer Olympic Games (a) for television only (b) for radio only (c) for both radio and television?

2. How many persons, other than employees, were retained by the C.B.C. to cover the 1968 Summer Olympic Games in Mexico City (a) for television only (b) for radio only (c) for both radio and television?

3. Of the number of persons enumerated in the answers to each of parts 2 (a), 2 (b) and 2 (c), how many were from (a) Canada (b) Great Britain (c) the United States (d) Mexico (e) elsewhere?

4. What was the cost, in Canadian dollars, to the C.B.C. in respect of the persons enumerated in the answers to each of parts 3 (a) to 3 (e) inclusive and, in each case, how much of the cost was fees or retainers, and how much transportation, living and other expense allowance?

5. What was the total cost, in Canadian dollars, to the C.B.C., in respect of the persons enumerated in the answers to each of parts 1 (a), 1 (b) and 1 (c) and, in each case, how much of this cost was salaries or wages and other normal payroll charges, and how much transportation, living and other expense allowances?

6. How many minutes of Olympic coverage, originated in Mexico, were carried by the C.B.C. networks, between the dates of commencement and conclusion of the 1968 Summer Olympics, both dates inclusive, by the following methods and media (a) live on the French T.V. network (b) live on the French Radio network (c) live on the English T.V. network (d) live on the English radio network (e) delayed on the French T.V. network (f) delayed on the French Radio network (g) delayed on the English T.V. network (h) delayed on the English Radio network?

7. Of the minutes of delayed coverage enumerated in the answers to parts 6 (e) to 6 (h), inclusive, how many were repetition of minutes of live coverage enumerated respectively in the answers to parts 6 (a) to 6 (d) inclusive?

8. What was the total direct cost to the C.B.C., in Canadian dollars, of covering the 1968 Summer Olympics?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows: 1. The C.B.C. had 106 personnel in Mexico for Canadian coverage of the 1968 Summer Olympic Games as follows: (a) Television, 62; (b) Radio (including International Service), 36; (c) Radio and T.V. (Administrative), 8. In addition, 23 C.B.C. employees were contracted out to the American Broadcasting Company, holders of North American broadcasting rights.

2 and 3. Fifty-two persons other than C.B.C. employees were retained in connection with the Games, 48 of whom were hired locally in Mexico to provide general services including messengers, drivers, typists, interpreters. The other four people were engaged in radio and television programming as analyst, researcher and commentators. Three were from Canada and one was from Great Britain.

4. Cost in respect of the people referred to in 2 and 3 above was $37,500. This included an amount of $8,600 in fees, transportation and living expenses for the program contributors. The remainder was for salaries paid to the 48 people hired locally.

5. Salaries, wages and other normal payroll charges in relation to C.B.C. employees engaged in Canadian radio and T.V. coverage amounted to approximately $92,000. Transportation, living and other expenses amounted to approximately $143,000 as follows:

	Salaries	Transportation & other Expenses
T.V.	49,000	85,000
Radio (including International Service)	31,000	49,000
Radio/T.V. (Administrative)	12,000	9,000
Total	92,000	143,000

6. (a) 4½ hours (b) 18 hours (c) 5½ hours (d) 48¼ hours (e) 21 hours (f) 3¼ hours (g) 30¾ hours (h) 6 hours; plus 24½ hours for the C.B.C. International Service. Total: 161¾ hours.

7. Details as to repeat broadcasts are not readily available.

8. Total direct cost was approximately $930,000 including the cost of transmission facilities between Mexico and Canada, payment for Canadian T.V. rights, salaries of C.B.C. personnel, payments to casual employees and freelancers, transportation and living expenses, shipping charges on equipment.

Billings to sponsors of the Olympic coverage amounted to $315,000 of which $84,000 was paid to private stations affiliated with C.B.C. networks, for a net commercial revenue of $231,000.

SEAPORT CARGO TONNAGE

Question No. 647—Mr. Harding:

Questions

JURISDICTION OVER ISLANDS ALONG QUEBEC COAST

Question No. 659—Mr. Fortin:

1. Has the Province of Quebec asked for jurisdiction over the islands along the coast of New Quebec?

2. What progress has been made in negotiations concerning jurisdiction over these islands and what are the respective positions of the parties concerned?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

ESQUIMALT HARBOUR POLLUTION

Question No. 662—Mr. Anderson:

1. Is the federal government presently engaged in any scheme to reduce the pollution of Esquimalt harbour caused by federally owned ships and installations?

2. If so, what is the extent of the project and what results have been achieved?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): 1. No.

2. The only two vessels using Esquimalt Harbour regularly are the recently constructed weather ships which are already equipped with complete marine sewage disposal systems discharging an uncontaminated effluent and oily water ballast separators which prevent oil being pumped into the harbour.

TORONTO INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT RUNWAYS

Question No. 672—Mr. Robinson:

1. What is the present length of the runways at Toronto International Airport?

2. To what extent is it anticipated these runways will be extended by (a) 1970-75 (b) 1980-85?

3. What new runways are to be provided by (a) 1970-75 (b) 1980-85?

4. Is the present acreage of Toronto International Airport sufficient to meet the extension of runways as deemed necessary up to the years (a) 1970-75 (b) 1980-85?

5. Is the present acreage of Toronto International Airport sufficient to provide additional runways apart from those presently in existence?

6. How many additional acres of land will be required to extend each of the present runways of Toronto International Airport in accordance with anticipated needs by the years (a) 1970-75 (b) 1980-85?

[Mr. Hellyer.]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): 1. The present length of runways at Toronto International Airport is as follows: Runway 14-32, 11,050′; Runway 05R-23L, 9,500′; Runway 05L-23R, 5,700′; Runway 10-28, 7,200′.

2. It is anticipated that Runway 05L-23R will be extended to 10,500′ by (a) 1970-75 (b) same by 1980-85. No change in other runway lengths by (a) 1970-75 (b) 1980-85.

3. There are no plans for any new runways to be constructed in the period 1970-75 or 1980-85.

4. Yes.

5. The present acreage of Toronto International Airport is not sufficient to provide additional runways.

6. No additional acres of land are required for the extension of present runways in accordance with anticipated needs by the years (a) 1970-75 (b) 1980-85.

ELIMINATION OF LEVEL CROSSINGS

Question No. 675—Mr. Laprise:

1. How many level crossings were eliminated during the past three years in each province, and (a) what share was paid by the federal government (b) what share was paid by the provincial governments?

2. How many projects for the elimination of level crossings are planned for this year (a) in each province and what is the estimated cost?

3. Is the federal government taking steps to expedite consideration of projects submitted by the provinces and to ensure that the sums voted for such projects are not returned to the treasury because the projects have not been carried out?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: 1. During the years 1965, 1966 and 1967, four hundred and seven (407) highway-railway crossings at grade were eliminated as follows: 35, British Columbia; 54, Alberta; 88, Saskatchewan; 24, Manitoba; 107, Ontario; 72, Quebec; 13, New Brunswick; 7, Nova Scotia; nil, Prince Edward Island; 6, Newfoundland; 1, Northwest and Yukon Territories. Total, 407.

Of the above-noted total, 132 crossings were eliminated as the result of construction of grade separations, highway and/or railway diversions, for which commitments were made from the Railway Grade Crossing Fund and from the provincial governments totalling $36,009,452 and $5,331,284 respectively, as shown in the following table of distribution by province:

Province	No. of Crossings Closed	Total Committed From Railway Grade Crossing Fund	Total Contribution From Provincial Governments
British Columbia	10	3,133,000	409,000
Alberta	11	2,427,578	117,591
Saskatchewan	2	698,400	31,685
Manitoba	5	2,503,400	539,400
Ontario	53	18,917,197	2,151,439
Quebec	35	6,032,230	1,739,365
New Brunswick	9	636,610	106,802
Nova Scotia	4	347,377	3,862
Prince Edward Island	nil	nil	nil
Newfoundland	3	1,313,660	232,140
Northwest & Yukon Territories	nil	nil	nil
Totals	132	36,009,452	5,331,284

2. From January 1st, 1968, to October 31st, 1968, the Railway Transport Committee approved 35 projects which will result in the elimination of 42 level crossings and commitments totalling $9,638,305 were made from the Railway Grade Crossing Fund as follows:

Province	No. of Crossings To Be Closed	Commitment From Railway Grade Crossing Fund
British Columbia	2	574,400
Alberta	2	501,000
Saskatchewan	1	500,000
Manitoba	—	—
Ontario	28	6,635,535
Quebec	5	1,134,570
New Brunswick	—	—
Nova Scotia	3	254,400
Prince Edward Island	—	—
Newfoundland	—	—
Northwest & Yukon Territories	1	38,400
Totals	42	9,638,305

Sixty-two other crossings were authorized to be closed during this same period; however, no contributions were made from the fund toward the cost of closing same.

There are a number of applications for other projects now under consideration by the Committee, but it is not known how many of these will be approved during the current year.

3. The coordination of the work of the Railway Transport Committee of the Canadian Transport Commission with the provincial highway authorities is constantly maintained through consultation and every effort made to expedite consideration of all projects submitted. Amounts credited to the Railway Grade Crossing Fund by statutory and other parliamentary votes which are unexpended at the end of a fiscal year are not returned to treasury because particular projects have not been completed. Commitments for projects which have been approved but which remain outstanding due to the time factor necessary for financing construction and auditing of accounts remain outstanding against the fund.

MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION OFFICE ACCOMMODATION

Question No. 677—Mr. Thompson (Red Deer):

1. What was the amount allocated for alteration and upgrading of offices of the Department of Manpower and Immigration between February 1967 and the most recent available date?

C.N.R. ATLANTIC REGION—EMPLOYEE BILINGUALISM

Question No. 702—Mr. Coates:

1. Have any employees of the CNR in the Atlantic Region been released or demoted in their employment because they are not bilingual and, if so, how many?

2. Have any employees of the CNR in the Atlantic Region been informed that they will be released or demoted if they do not secure a working knowledge of the French language and, if so, how many have been so informed?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The Management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1. It is the system objective that throughout the Province of Quebec and in other sections of Canada where French is the mother-tongue of a significant proportion of customers of CN services, persons dealing with the system either orally or in writing may be able to do so readily in either English or French. It is also the Company's policy and practice through language instruction to encourage employees in acquiring the degree of proficiency in either language required by their present or prospective positions. Generally, it can be stated that any employees affected by the implementation of the foregoing objective exercise seniority within their respective groups in accordance with existing wage agreements and the Railway makes every effort to find alternative employment for employees who may be affected by any changed conditions.

2. No.

NATIONAL GRID SYSTEM

Question No. 707—Mr. Coates:

What progress has the federal government made in the establishment of a national grid system for the transportation of electrical energy?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): A report on this subject by the Federal-Provincial Working Committee on Long Distance Transmission has been submitted to all participating governments and was tabled in the House of Commons on December 11, 1968. The federal government is encouraging the strengthening of regional transmission interconnections as a first step towards a national transmission grid.

SPRINGHILL, N.S.—MINE DUMP FIRE

Question No. 712—Mr. Coates:

1. Were officials of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources at the site of the mine dump fire at Springhill, Nova Scotia and, if so, for what reason and at whose request?

2. What are the names of the officials who made the visit to Springhill, what positions do they hold in the Department and did they prepare a report and, if so, for whom and is this report confidential or available to the public?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1. Yes. To inspect the nature of the fire at the request of the Area Development Agency then under the Department of Industry and now under the Department of Forestry and Rural Development, and the Nova Scotia Department of Trade and Industry.

2. T. E. Tibbetts, Head, Coal Preparation and Surveys Section, Fuels Research Centre of the Mines Branch visited the site on April 11, 1968 and again on September 30, 1968, at which time he was accompanied by D. J. O'Brien, a Technician with the department's Fuels Research Centre Laboratory, Sydney, Nova Scotia. A brief memorandum was submitted to the Nova Scotia Department of Trade and Industry and others concerned. A further report will be submitted after completion of examination of dump samples.

RETURNING OFFICERS—QUEBEC

Question No. 717—Mr. Godin:

1. How many returning officers have been appointed since 1965 in the Province of Quebec?

2. What is the name and address of each officer who is still holding this position and who held it before 1965?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Chief Electoral Officer as follows: 1. 85.

2. Abitibi, Mr. Paul-Henri Poitras, 35 Principale Street, Amos, Quebec; Beauharnois, Mr. Joseph Primeau, 80 Ellice Street, Valleyfield, Quebec; Bonaventure, Mr. Louis Lacroix, Carleton-sur-Mer, Quebec; Charlevoix, Mr. A. Edmond Bertrand, P.O. Box 368, Pointe-au-Pic, Quebec; Chicoutimi, Mr. Léon-Georges Gauthier, 295 Labrecque Street, Chicoutimi, Quebec; Compton, Mr. Hervé Blouin, Saint-Isidore-d'Auckland, Quebec; Hull, Mr. Jean-Louis Garneau, 81 Saint-Joseph Boulevard, Hull, Quebec; Laprairie, Mr. Yvon Joyal, 270 Lespérance Street, Saint-Lambert, Quebec; Manicouagan, Mr. Roger Savard, 566 Joliette Street, Hauterive, Quebec; Matane, Mr. André-A. Box 70, Amqui, Quebec; Portneuf, Mr. Guy Renaud, 106 Jacques-Cartier Boulevard, Donnacona, Quebec; Saint-Hyacinthe, Mr. Jean-Paul Brault, 1001 Sacré-Coeur Boulevard, Saint-Hyacinthe, Quebec; Shefford, Mr. Paul Langlois, 354 Laurier Street, Granby, Quebec; Temiscouata, Mr. Jacques Miville, 22 Pelletier Street, Rivière-du-Loup, Quebec; Mount Royal, Mr. Wilfred G. Brown, 5849 McLynn Avenue, Montreal 29, Quebec; Papineau, Mr. J.-Armand Laurencelle, 7256 Christophe-Colomb Street, Montreal 10, Quebec; Saint-Jacques, Mr. Paul-Emile Jodoin, 1239 St-Timothée Street, Montréal, Quebec; Verdun, Mr. Roméo Aubertin, 3851 Verdun Avenue, Verdun, Quebec.

AIR CANADA—WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE

Question No. 724—Mr. Fortin:

1. Was a decision made to move the Air Canada maintenance base from Winnipeg to Montreal and, if so (a) on what date (b) what are the reasons for the delay in putting such decision into effect?

2. Did the President of Air Canada send a letter during February, 1963, to his employees informing them of the transfer of the base and, if so, what were the contents of this letter?

3. What recommendations were made in the report prepared by the R. Dixon Spears Associates and for what reasons were such recommendations not implemented?

4. Over the past five years what oral or written directives have been given to Air Canada by the government or a Minister of the Crown?

5. What recommendations were made in the report prepared by the Wallace Clark Company in 1957?

6. What were the recommendations of the Thompson Commisson?

7. What was the cost of the inquiries carried out by (a) Wallace Clark (b) Dixon Spears Associates (c) the Thompson Commission?

8. Were the conclusions of these three inquiries concerning the transfer to Montreal of the Air Canada maintenance base put into effect and, if not, for what reasons?

9. Will consideration be given to having the directors of Air Canada appear before a Parliamentary Committee to give evidence in this connection?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. Yes. (a) In 1957, to be effective with the phasing out of Viscount aircraft. (b) There are still a substantial number of Viscounts in operation.

2. No.

3. The Winnipeg Base should be closed down at the earliest possible date. Air Canada's facility planning is in line with this recommendation. "The earliest possible date" has been established as the date when phasing out of Viscount aircraft reduces their numbers below 30.

4. See attached copy of announcement made by the Hon. Paul T. Hellyer December 9, 1968.

5. That Air Canada construct a single consolidated Main Base located at Dorval.

6. Commission agreed with Air Canada and their consultants that a single base is best for Air Canada.

7. (a) Approximately $100,000. (b) Approximately $57,000. (c) Air Canada's expenditure: $98,500.

8. See (1) above.

9. Air Canada's officers have appeared from time to time before the Parliamentary Committee on Transport and Communications and have dealt with questions concerning the Winnipeg Base.

December 9, 1968

"Paul T. Hellyer, Minister of Transport, announced today the Government of Canada's proposal for maintaining repair and overhaul facilities in Winnipeg and developing additional aero space manufacturing activity in Manitoba.

These plans include the retention of Viscount overhaul work, further maintenance work from other companies, and new work in building and assembling parts for new jet aircraft.

Following serious consideration of the representations made by the Air Policy Committee of Manitoba, the Government of Canada agreed that the people of Manitoba and the Winnipeg employees of Air Canada should be protected against the consequences arising from the Air Canada decision of several years ago to establish consolidated maintenance facilities in Montreal.

The Government has therefore authorized Air Canada to commence negotiations with two large Canadian firms to enable one of them to undertake continued operation of the overhaul base in Winnipeg. Such negotiations will involve protection of the interests of present employees, maintenance of the present level of work, and provision for further expansion.

The two companies, Northwest Industries Limited and Aircraft Industries of Canada Limited, have each submitted plans for major development of the Winnipeg overhaul facilities. Activity at the Base will include present Viscount maintenance, additional Air Canada work, substantial repair and overhaul work from Lockheed California, repair of National Defense aircraft, and maintenance of other commercial aircraft. In addition, the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation has undertaken, as a result of purchases by Air Canada and the initiative of the Federal Government, to place substantial manufacturing and repair work with Manitoba firms. The combination of these specific commitments can produce in Manitoba a major centre of aero space activities.

It is expected that negotiations with these companies will require several weeks. During this time the Government of Canada has agreed to reconstruct the Working Party, composed of representatives of the Government of Canada, the Government of Manitoba and Air Canada to review all facts and considerations upon which the proposal has been based.

In announcing its proposal, the Government of Canada has fulfilled the commitment made by former Prime Minister Lester B. Pearson, reiterated last year by the present Minister of Transport that..."the Base will continue to be used for the overhaul of Viscount aircraft as long as these aircraft are in service" and ... "to ensure that other aircraft work is available in Winnipeg so that the eventual withdrawal of Viscounts is at least balanced by new activities"...

The Government of Canada believes that through the cooperation of the people and the Government of Manitoba, this proposal will permit Winnipeg to look forward to continued prominence as a major centre in the rapidly expanding aircraft industry."

BELL TELEPHONE CABLE TV

Question No. 732—Mr. Robinson:

Is the government considering legislation to provide that the Bell Telephone Company be given power to provide Cable TV service at nominal cost to subscribers?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): In so far as Telecommunications is concerned: In accordance with the Bell Telephone Act, Bell Canada has the power to provide television transmission channels to persons or companies authorized to operate television broadcasting receiving undertakings, otherwise known as CATV systems, and to receive compensation therefor.

TORONTO—THIRD TELEVISION OUTLET

Question No. 733—Mr. Robinson:

Is the government considering a third TV outlet for Metropolitan Toronto although Cable TV is being implemented?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Radio-Television Commission as follows: The Canadian Radio-Television Commission has announced it will hear applications for licences to carry on UHF television broadcasting transmitting undertakings at Toronto at its public hearing commencing on February 4, 1969 in Ottawa.

WINTER WORKS REPLACEMENTS

Question No. 744—Mr. Matte:

1. What precise measures does the government contemplate to adequately replace winter works?

2. Are some projects presently in progress?

3. If so, what are these projects?

[Translation]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): It is the government's intention to give a more extensive application to those manpower programs which are most efficient and effective in combating not only winter unemployment but unemployment in general. In the current fiscal year the federal government will spend $197 million to provide training and retraining for adult workers. As compared with the previous fiscal year, this is an increase of $47 million. The federal expenditure last winter on municipal winter works totalled approximately $25 million. There is also a program which will this fiscal year provide various kinds of mobility grants to approximately 30,000 workers involving expenditures up to $4 million. The counselling and placement services of Canada Manpower Centres across the country have been greatly extended and improved. The government feels that its new and modified manpower programs are much broader in scope and more effective in application than the Municipal Workers Incentive Program was.

To ensure that as many adult workers as possible are trained when they are unemployed rather than being pulled off the job to take training, the program is planned so that wherever possible, training takes place in regions where unemployment is highest. In addition, in co-operation with most of the provinces, as much as possible of this training will be carried out in the winter months. This, in fact, will take place this year and even more so next year and subsequently.

FORESTRY AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT PRESS RELEASES

Question No. 802—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

1. Does the Department of Forestry and Rural Development issue documents which are of the nature of press releases, press communiques, news releases or the like and, if so, how many such documents have been issued since July 1, 1968?

2. What has been the cost of (a) printing headings or cover sheets (b) typing and stencils (c) mimeographing or other form of duplicating (d) collating and stapling (e) addressing and mailing the said documents?

3. With respect to the paper used for the said documents, what is (a) its quality (b) the quantity used and the cost thereof?

4. What is the estimate of the number of man-hours consumed in the preparation, production and distribution of such documents?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): 1. Yes: 35.

2. (a) Nil; (b) $146.75; (c) $397.60; (d) $118.30; (e) $1,087.00.

3. (a) Standard 32M Bond and 20M Bond, (b) 110,600 sheets—cost $258.70.

4. 350 (estimated).

LEVIS, QUE. SHIPYARDS

Question No. 807—Mr. Caouette:

Does the government intend to set up a corporation to develop the shipyards at Levis and, if not, for what reason?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The government does not intend to set up a corporation to develop the shipyards at Levis. There is already a privately owned shipyard in Lauzon with substantial employment. It is not the policy of the government to form Crown Corporations to compete with private industry.

ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES PRESS RELEASES

Question No. 819—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

1. Does the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources issue documents which are of the nature of press releases, press communiques, news releases or the like and, if so, how many such documents have been issued since July 1, 1968?

2. What has been the cost of (a) printing headings or cover sheets (b) typing the stencils (c) mimeographing or other form of duplicating (d) collating and stapling (e) addressing and mailing the said documents?

3. With respect to the paper used for the said documents, what is (a) its quality (b) the quantity used and the cost thereof?

4. What is the estimate of the number of man-hours consumed in the preparation, production and distribution of such documents?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1. Yes. Thirty-one press releases issued in both English and French.

2. (a) $60.12; (b) $80.60; (c) $30.50; (d) $225.43; (e) $223.20.

3. (a) Cover sheets, 20 lb. bond; subsequent sheets, 16 lb. bond. (b) 24,800 sheets; $84.92.

4. Depending on the nature of the press release, federal-provincial and policy implications, or the necessity to clear the release with officials in provincial governments, the time required for the preparation (research and writing) of a news release can vary from about an hour to several days.

Production, including typing and duplicating in English and French, averages two man-hours per release. Distribution averages three man-hours per release.

FOREST FIRE CONTROL

Question No. 829—Mr. Robinson:

1. Is the government planning any further program to control the outbreak of forest fires?

2. What forest fire program is provided by the government in National Parks?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the departments of Fisheries, Indian Affairs and Northern Development as follows: 1. The Forestry Branch of the Department of Fisheries undertakes a continuing program of forest fire research designed to assist forest fire control agencies in Canada in the control of forest fires. It is the intention of the Department of Fisheries to increase resources allocated to forest fire research and related services with emphasis on solutions to practical fire control problems. As an example, the Department of Fisheries has set up a task force to undertake a thorough investigation of the potential usefulness of a country-wide mobile fleet of airtankers.

2. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is responsible for forest fire protection in our National Parks.

Each National Park has trained staff and facilities suited to its size and nature to provide effective forest fire protection of our park lands. The program includes forest fire prevention, detection and suppression activities as well as the provision of modern detection, communication and suppression equipment.

Additionally, the National Parks Service co-operates closely with forest fire protection agencies responsible for lands adjacent to the National Parks.

DEBATES SUBSCRIBERS

Question No. 864—Mr. Caouette:

How many subscribers were there to both the French and English versions of the House of Commons Debates for each year since 1963?

[Translation]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Defence Production): Insofar as the Department of Public Printing and Stationery is concerned: The Debates of the House of Commons are sold and distributed on a sessional basis. Figures are therefore not available annually, as requested. Actual circulation figures are only available for the last two sessions, and the present session to date.

	English Edition	French Edition
27th Parliament
1st Session (January 18, 1966 to May 8, 1967)	13,451	2,649
2nd Session (May 8, 1967 to April 23, 1968)	12,689	2,568
28th Parliament
1st Session (to November 30, 1968)	13,211	2,622

The above does not include the distribution made by the Joint Parliamentary Distribution Office.

These figures are maintained for procurement purposes, to show the upward or downward trend and, having served this purpose, are not held any longer. The department's need for circulation figures is met by those of three sessions, including the one currently in progress.

CANADIAN COUNCIL OF RESOURCE MINISTERS MEETINGS

Question No. 871—Mr. Nielsen:

1. How many meetings have been held by the Canadian Council of Resource Ministers since the inception of the Council?

2. Of the total number of meetings held, how many have been attended by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and/or his predecessors in office and in what year or years were such meetings attended?

3. Has the Legislative Council of either the Yukon or Northwest Territories been requested to participate in such meetings by their elected representatives?

4. If not, for what reason and is it the intention that they will be invited to participate in future meetings?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1. Nine.

2. None has been attended by the present Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Five were attended by his predecessor, in the years 1962, 1963, 1964 and twice in 1965.

3. No.

4. Membership of the Canadian Council of Resource Ministers is, by custom, restricted to Ministers of the Federal and Provincial Governments. Attendance at meetings of the Council by others than the Federal member of the Council, who is the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, would depend upon the subject matter to be discussed. Matters relating to the Yukon or Northwest Territories would, of course, be referred to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

TORONTO—WORK TO BE UNDERTAKEN

Question No. 893—Mr. Robinson:

What works are to be undertaken by the Department of Public Works in Metropolitan Toronto in the years 1968-72 inclusive and what is the extent of each project and where is each to be located?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): The following works are to be undertaken in Metropolitan Toronto with Department of Public Works funds for the balance of the fiscal year: City Delivery Building: Air conditioning Cafeteria, $48,200; Postal Station "C": Air treatment, $24,000; Postal Station "P": Lighting improvements, $18,000; Postal Station "K": Community Release Centre, $45,500; Rexdale Public Building: Air conditioning—Stage 2, $34,300; Sunnybrook Hospital: Lighting improvements, $5,000; Willowdale Public Building: Air treatment—Stage 2, $56,000.

It is not possible to state what works will be carried out in the ensuing years as this is dependent on the approval of estimates by Parliament.

SEA OTTERS FOR RESTOCKING PURPOSES

Question No. 898—Mr. Anderson:

1. Has the federal government any agreement with the United States with respect to the provision by the State of Alaska for sea otters to be used for restocking purposes on Vancouver Island or has it been requested by the provincial government of British Columbia to assist in any way the procurement of sea otters for restocking purposes?

2. Will the federal government intercede on behalf of the provincial government in order to obtain such animals from the United States or other countries?

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries): 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

VICTORIA, B.C.—DOCK DEPTH INFORMATION FROM CHARTS

Question No. 899—Mr. Anderson:

1. Do Canadian Hydrographic Service Charts accurately indicate the depth of water alongside the Government docks in Victoria B.C., and, if not, what is the present depth of the water?

2. Will the appropriate federal department arrange for (a) the dredging of the silted portions of Victoria harbour (b) the reprinting of hydrographic charts to accurately reflect present water depths?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the departments of Energy, Mines and Resources and Public Works as follows: 1. Canadian Hydrographic Service Chart 3415 accurately indicate the depth of water alongside the Government docks, Piers A and B in Victoria, B.C., as found by a survey in March 1966. Three additional soundings were added to the inner end of the north side of Pier B, by Notices to Mariners, from a survey in December 1966. The accuracy of the charted soundings has been verified by a field check in December 1968.

2. (a) Recent survey indicates no serious siltation and therefore it is not proposed to carry out dredging in the immediate future; (b) As no inaccuracy has been found no chart action is required.

Questions

INDIAN AFFAIRS STAFF

Question No. 921—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

How many people were on the staff of the Indian Affairs Branch for each of the fiscal years 1957-58, 1958-59, 1959-60, 1960-61, 1961-62, 1962-63, 1963-64, 1964-65, 1965-66, 1966-67, 1967-68 and 1968-69?

Hon. TELEVISING OF N.F.L. GAMES

Question No. 924—Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond):

What are the costs to the C.B.C. for televising the National Football League games?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the CBC that the total cost of carrying the National Football League games on both CBC English and French television networks averages $3,350 per game. This is more than offset by commercial revenue.

OLYMPIC GAMES—C.B.C. PERSONNEL

Question No. 925—Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond):

1. How many people were sent to Mexico by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to cover the Olympic Games?

2. What was the total cost in salaries or wages for these people?

3. What were the costs, if any, to other agencies or networks in regard to the coverage by the C.B.C. of the Olympic Games?

4. What were the total hours televised publicly by the C.B.C. in Canada in relation to the Olympic Games in Mexico?

5. What revenues were derived by the C.B.C. in relation to coverage of the Olympic Games?

6. Was any attempt made to have any other T.V. service cover the Games for the C.B.C.?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the CBC as follows: 1. The CBC had 106 personnel in Mexico for Canadian coverage of the 1968 Summer Olympic Games. In addition, 23 CBC employees were contracted out to the American Broadcasting Company, holders of North American broadcasting rights, and four freelance people were sent as program contributors—an analyst, researcher and two commentators.

2. $92,000. in salaries, wages and other normal payroll charges in relation to the CBC employees, and $5,000. in fees to the freelance contributors.

3. None.

4. Canadian television coverage of the events by the CBC amounted to approximately 62 hours. Another 7½ hours of special programming in relation to the Olympic Games was presented in advance as a prelude to the 1968 events.

5. Billings to sponsors of the Olympic coverage amounted to $315,000. of which $84,000. was to private stations affiliated with CBC networks, for a net commercial revenue of $231,000.

6. No.

SASKATOON, SASK.—SECOND TELEVISION STATION

Question No. 927—Mr. Douglas:

1. Is a second television station for Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, currently under consideration?

2. If so, when will a decision be announced?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): 1. and 2. See reply to Question 553, Hansard No. 62 p. 3804.

SOUTH SASKATCHEWAN RIVER DAM EXPENDITURES

Question No. 928—Mr. Douglas:

1. What is the total expenditure to the end of the last fiscal year on the South Saskatchewan River Dam and associated irrigation and power projects by (a) the federal government (b) the Saskatchewan Government?

2. What further expenditures, if any, are yet to be made on this project by the federal government?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): 1. (a) $108,382,000; (b) This information is available from the provincial government.

2. $5.2 millions (estimated to 1978).

FREELANCE BROADCASTERS WITH C.B.C.

Question No. 931—Mr. Reid:

1. Does the CBC employ "freelance broadcasters" and, if so, what are their terms of reference and by what guide-lines are they governed?

2. Did the CBC employ Jeremy Akerman during 1968 as a "freelance broadcaster" and, if so, during what months was he employed, and what was he paid through wages, commissions, fees, etc., per month during his employment?

3. What was the specific nature of his work for the CBC, and on what programmes, if any, did his material appear?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the CBC as follows: 1. Yes. Terms of reference and guidelines vary depending on the nature of the assignment involved. All material broadcast by the CBC must, of course, be consistent with CBC policies and adhere to the regulations of the Canadian Radio-Television Commission.

2. Yes. Mr. Akerman was employed in August, September, October and November. It has not been customary to require the CBC to disclose amounts paid to individuals.

3. Mr. Akerman worked as researcher, interviewer, host and speaker. His material appeared on the television program "Inside Out" and on the radio programs "Insomniac", "Ottawa Insight", "In Canada This Week" and "Ottawa Arts Magazine".

ASSISTANCE TO MEET COST OF TRANSPORTATION TERMINALS

Question No. 939—Mr. Robinson:

Is the federal government contemplating any direct financial aid to municipalities to offset the capital cost of transportation terminals for road, rail and airline service in major cities?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The federal government accepts responsibility for the provision of airports including terminal buildings at sites which receive more than a minimum number of scheduled aircraft movements; this includes all major cities in Canada. No direct financial aid is contemplated to offset the capital cost of terminals for road or rail transport.

FEDERAL AID ON ROAD CONSTRUCTION COSTS

Question No. 943—Mr. Robinson:

Is the federal government contemplating any direct financial aid to municipalities to offset the capital cost of major road transportation arteries to major cities, airports and transportation terminals as an adjunct to the Trans-Canada Highway system?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): So far as the Department of Public Works is concerned the answer is no.

Questions

R.C.M.P. REGINA—"F" DIVISION BUILDING

Question No. 945—Mr. Benjamin:

1. Has construction been delayed on the proposed new "F" Division Headquarters building for the R.C.M.P. in Regina?

2. On what date was construction originally planned to start?

3. What is the new date planned for the start of this construction?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes, at the request of the R.C.M.P.

2. During the summer of 1969.

3. This project has been indefinitely postponed.

R.C.M.P. REGINA—SPACE IN DERRICK BUILDING

Question No. 946—Mr. Benjamin:

1. Has the R.C.M.P. leased space in the Derrick Building in Regina to be used by the operational division for Saskatchewan?

2. If so (a) for what reason was this space leased (b) for how long a period (c) what is the extent (d) the cost per square foot, and (e) the total cost of the area leased?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. The Department of Public Works has leased space for the R.C.M.P. in the Derrick Building in Regina.

2. (a) To accommodate F Division Headquarters; (b) Five years; (c) Total space is 22,800 square feet, consisting of 22,670 square feet office space and 130 square feet storage space; (d) $4 per square foot for office space and $2 per square foot for storage; (e) $90,940 annually.

MOTELS IN NATIONAL PARKS

Question No. 948—Mr. Caouette:

Has the federal government any plans relative to the construction and operation of motels or other public conveniences in the national parks in (a) Canada (b) the Province of Quebec and, if so, in what language will these services be available?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): The Federal Government policy for the construction and operation of motels and similar public conveniences in the National Parks stipulates that these will be built and operated by private enterprise as a result of public calls for tender. The staffing and servicing of each facility is the prerogative of the individual entrepreneur. The general operation of each facility is subject to the provisions of the lease and appropriate sections of the National Parks Act and related regulations.

[Mr. Laing (Vancouver South).]

Directional and informational signs are to be provided in Canada's official languages in all Parks. A similar program is being carried out in the production of new interpretative materials (exhibits, informational folders, etc.) as well as in the updating and replacing of those now in current use. This large project is now under way with the bulk of this work scheduled for completion towards the latter part of 1970. National Parks' staff are being provided in accordance with the requirements of the Public Service Commission Regulations and the intent and provisions of the proposed Official Languages Act.

There are no National Parks in the Province of Quebec.

TEMISCAMINGUE, QUE.—POST OFFICE CONSTRUCTION

Question No. 950—Mr. Caouette:

1. Does the government intend to enlarge or build new post offices in the constituency of Témiscamingue and, if so, when will tenders be called?

2. Does the government intend to set up a mail carrier service in other places in the constituency of Témiscamingue and, if so, when will the service be set up and where?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the departments of Public Works and Post Office as follows: 1. Tenders are expected to be called for the construction of a new Post Office building at Rollet, Que. in the summer of 1969.

2. No.

Note: The basic requirement for the establishment of letter carrier delivery in any community is the availability of 2,000 calls in a concentrated and well developed area. There is no community other than Rouyn and Noranda in the constituency of Témiscamingue that has developed to the stage where it can be foreseen when it will qualify for the establishment of house to house delivery by having the required number of calls.

TEMISCAMINGUE—FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO GOLD MINES

Question No. 955—Mr. Caouette:

1. What financial aid was granted to each of the gold mines in the constituency of Témiscamingue during the past fiscal year?

2. What profits did each of the mining companies in question declare during the past and present fiscal year?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1. The amount of assistance payable to Wasamac Mines Limited under the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act was $508,938 for the year 1967. The Wasamac mine was the only gold mine operating in the electoral district of Témiscamingue in 1967. Nine other gold mines operated in the adjoining electoral district of Villeneuve in 1967.

2. The gold mining companies in common with other companies are required to report profits earned only to the Department of National Revenue for income tax purposes. Annual reports to shareholders by the companies usually contain a statement of profits earned.
