DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

FEDERAL POSITION RESPECTING OFFSHORE MINERAL RIGHTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister with regard to his statement yesterday on the important subject of offshore mineral rights, and ask him whether the position of the government of Canada as outlined by the right hon. gentleman yesterday was put forward as a tentative position, a basis for discussion with the provinces, or whether on the other hand it represents a definitive position open to further negotiation in one respect only, that is in relation to the division of that portion of future revenues to be assigned to the provinces.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I wrote to the premiers of the provinces on Friday indicating that this was the best solution we had been able to devise, taking into account both the interests of all Canadians and the interests of the provinces. Even as to the part which the Leader of the Opposition suggests might be open to negotiation, the percentage of the division with the provinces, we do not think there is much room for negotiation there. We are suggesting a 50-50 deal. We would prefer it to be 60-40, 60 for the federal government and 40 for the provinces, but we doubt whether the provinces would think this was much of a negotiating point.

The negotiation, as we see it, would be mainly among the provinces so they could come up with some agreement among themselves as to how this 50 per cent would be divided among them.

As to the mineral resource administration lines, they are not final and forever, in the sense that if the provinces were to produce a very good argument for drawing a geodetic line in a slightly different position we would certainly listen to it. However, as I said yesterday we attempted to draw these lines well within territory which we believe to be under federal jurisdiction, so we do not think there will be legal grounds, at any rate, for the provinces wanting, let us say, to draw lines further out to sea. We doubt whether they would want to do that, anyway. Maybe they would want us to draw the lines nearer to the shore. This could always be negotiated.

Apart from that, as to the general scheme I do not say it is not negotiable, in the sense that if the provinces had some much better solution we should not look at it, but the position we have taken was one we reached after very lengthy and mature deliberation. We thought the federal government had to make some offer. This is our offer, and we feel it is a good one.

Mr. Stanfield: I gather the answer to my question is that this is a definitive statement of the federal position, subject to certain minor possibilities. I would therefore ask the Prime Minister to explain why the government of Canada has decided to abandon the commitment made by the former prime minister and renewed by himself to negotiate the question of offshore mineral rights.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not know if the Leader of the Opposition was quoting me correctly or Mr. Pearson correctly. I think the words used were to the effect that we would offer some equitable arrangement to the provinces, and we feel this is an equitable arrangement.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question. In his answer a moment ago the Prime Minister said that if the provinces should come up with a much better proposition the government would consider negotiating it or discussing it. Who is to decide whether the proposition is a much better proposition? The provinces might consider that it is. Is it the federal government's decision?

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether the supplementary is not argumentative, but the Prime Minister may wish to reply.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, reasonable men looking at this will have to take a position. I would very much welcome reasonable men on the opposition side coming forward with constructive alternatives. Do they think we should give more to the provinces, or less? I would certainly be influenced by any reasonable argument put forth by the hon. member opposite and by any of the provincial representatives. As I say, there is no magic in this formula. We thought it was the most equitable one we could find, 50-50 sharing, but if someone else has a better proposition we would certainly look at it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hees: As a further supplementary question, is it the intention of the government to bring this matter forward for debate in the house soon, so the opposition can put up propositions they might think would be an advance?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, certainly on supply we would be very anxious to have ideas put forth from the opposition that can improve on this idea. They are generally not hesitant to give interviews on television and to the press. We read the results, and any good ideas would be welcomed by us.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for York South wish to ask a supplementary?

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Yes, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the Supreme Court of Canada decision with respect to the case which was referred to it was based on certain historical facts and the legal interpretation of those facts, does the Prime Minister know whether other provinces are prepared to accept the conclusion that those rights belong to the federal authority? If not, is the government considering some way of resolving that problem?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, of course we do not know whether all provinces would consider themselves bound by this Supreme Court opinion. We have heard that some provinces do not consider themselves bound by it. It is because of this that the government has been faced with the situation, of which all of us are aware, that there could be endless litigation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: The reference in the British Columbia case could begin again with every province, and indeed I suppose there would be nothing to prevent endless litigation by private companies that would try to get permits from one province or another. It is to avoid all this litigation that we have racked our brains to come up with some kind of equitable arrangement, and we think a 50-50 sharing is a pretty good place to start.

Mr. Lewis: I am not suggesting that the arrangement proposed by the government is inequitable, but I would like to ask the Prime Minister this question. In view of the fact that it is certain that not all provinces accept the Supreme Court of Canada opinion, would it not have been wiser to place the government's proposition before a federal-provincial conference, such as the one that is convening in a couple of weeks? Would not the Prime Minister consider doing that even now, so that instead of the provinces being faced with a decision of the federal government there would be some consultation between the two levels of government, which is surely the best way to run a federal situation?

Mr. Trudeau: I have no objection to that at all if the provinces decided that is the place they want to debate it. I would just suggest that this would mean one more federal-provincial conference, because the agenda for the December one is already very full. Of course if the provinces want to set aside the agenda that has been suggested and deal with this first we certainly will not be stubborn about it. But one way or the other I felt it was important that the federal government state the proposition, or state the terms of a settlement out of court. This is all we did. If the provinces do not wish to accept that, there can be all kinds of arrangements; there can be federal-provincial conferences, references to courts and all kinds of conceivable arrangements. Once again the essence of the problem was time and to avoid endless litigation.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. Prime Minister stated earlier that he wanted to avoid litigation. I hope he is not suggesting references to the court as a livable alternative. I would ask him whether the federal government should not take the initiative in suggesting to all the provinces that a conference might be held to discuss this particular matter. A delay of another month will not matter very much in respect of this particular issue.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, for years now the opposition and the hon. member in particular have been telling us we were not doing enough about the constitution. We are planning to do something about the constitution in December, and now they suggest we should set this agenda aside and deal with the matter of off-shore mineral rights.

Mr. Lewis: I rise on a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South on a question of privilege.

Mr. Lewis: I respectfully suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister has no right to distort words spoken by another member. I did not suggest that this conference be set aside; in fact I said that a delay of another month or so on this issue would not matter. I am sure the right hon. gentleman understood me to mean that this would not interfere with the conference this month but that another conference should be held at a later date. I resent this political play.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the hon. member. I honestly thought he was suggesting that the subject be dealt with in December. If he means at some later conference, I can only answer that last Friday I wrote to the provinces asking them for their views on the whole subject. If they are of the opinion that a federal-provincial conference should be held, then I am certainly willing to have one.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question about that same matter.

Since the Supreme Court rendered its decision, has the Prime Minister heard from some provinces protesting that decision or have some provinces said they intended to contest it or asked the central government to organize a meeting to discuss that decision?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not think definite representations were made to that effect. I read in the newspapers, as the hon. member undoubtedly did, statements by some provincial premiers who disagreed with the ruling but, to my knowledge, all the provinces were waiting to see what we meant, first by Mr. Pearson, and then by myself, when we stated that we would propose an equitable basis for a solution. And now that we have put it to them, we are awaiting their reply.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask one more question relating only to the point of whether the Prime Minister is now honouring the obligation stated by his predecessor. I should like to quote from the statement the Prime Minister made yesterday and ask him whether this is an accurate account of what he said in the house yesterday, as reported at page 3342 of Hansard:

> My predecessor, Mr. Pearson, indicated at the federal-provincial conference of July 1965, and I repeated in the house on September 19, that we intend to proceed now by negotiation.

I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether in fact that is what he is doing.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We put forward a proposition. I repeat that if some better propositions are available we will certainly want to discuss them, but we have to start with something. We feel this is a good starting point.

Mr. Stanfield: So it is a starting point.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question for the Prime Minister. I ask the Prime Minister whether he would consider legislation passed in this house to be reasonable; and would he say whether it would be fair for the law officers of the crown to retain the interpretation they adopted at the time that legislation was passed?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I should be asked to make a blanket statement that all decisions made in this house are reasonable.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think we should move on to another subject. As hon. members know, supplementary questions are allowed at the discretion of the Chair, and there must be a point at which we should go on to another subject. If it seems we run out of questions or new subjects at a later time perhaps we can return to this one.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): On a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If I should allow further supplementary questions now, it seems there are two or three other members who wish to pose them. Later on I shall return to the hon. members for Cape Breton-East Richmond and Charlevoix.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I have a further supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether the hon. member will accept my suggestion that we go on to another subject, and perhaps return to this matter later in the afternoon.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the fact that decisions rendered by the Supreme Court with regard to constitutional matters—like the one concerning the off-shore mineral rights which was referred to lately—have not always been accepted by all the provinces, will the right hon. Prime Minister, or the government, decide some day, in order to settle constitutional conflicts between the provinces and the federal government, to set up a constitutional court on which representatives of the provinces and the federal government would sit, so that the decisions rendered by the said court would bind all those concerned?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, at the constitutional conference in December we intend to make certain proposals concerning the Supreme Court and we hope that, as a result of that conference, the Supreme Court will not come under federal jurisdiction but under the constitution itself, in a way which will be considered satisfactory by the provinces.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question.

Does the Prime Minister mean that the federal government will suggest to the provinces that a constitutional court be established to deal with the jurisdiction conflicts existing between the federal government and the provinces?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I would not wish the hon. member to press me for a definite statement on the position of the government. I spoke of the matter in a general way, but I am following the rules of the game accepted by federal and provincial officials according to which these discussions are to remain confidential until very shortly before the conference itself.

[English]

[Later:]

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I should like now to pursue the question which I originally intended to ask the right hon. Prime Minister with regard to offshore mineral rights. Did the Prime Minister write to the landlocked provinces, such as Alberta and Saskatchewan, with regard to the decision of the federal government? If so, is this an admission on his part that these provinces are also entitled to a share of the wealth?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps only the first part of the question is in order.

Mr. Trudeau: If this is an answer to the hon. member's question, I would say that I wrote to the premiers of all provinces.

Mr. Korchinski: Then as a supplememtary question, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the provinces are entitled to make submissions to the federal government, or must they consult with the other provinces if they feel they should get a portion of the wealth?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, we hope this is the type of question that the provinces would be able to settle amongst themselves. Of course if they cannot, and if they want to come to the federal government for guidance, we will gladly give it to them.

Mr. Baldwin: God help them.

NATIONAL CAPITAL

SUGGESTED DISCUSSIONS TO EXTEND BILINGUAL CHARACTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Has the right hon. Prime Minister, or the government, entered into negotiations with the authorities of the city of Ottawa—the national capital—with a view to its becoming a bilingual city as soon as possible, notably with regard to road signs?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder if that question is not too general in nature to be put at this time. In any event, I shall allow the hon. member to put it and the right hon. Prime Minister to answer.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I agree with you. The question is too general in nature but it may be that the hon. Minister of Forestry and Rural Development can answer it, if the hon. member directs it to him on another day.

BROADCASTING

EDMONTON—REJECTION OF CATV APPLICATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State or his parliamentary secretary whether they will give an assurance that the CATV application by the city of Edmonton will be processed by the Canadian Radio-Television Commission, reversing the brusque rejection of the application by a civil servant, namely the secretary of the commission.

Mr. Speaker: I have some doubts whether the question as asked is in order.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the city of Edmonton owns its own telephone system, and CATV is merely a relay system operating on telephone cables, will the minister inquire by what right, or in virtue of what statute, the city's application was summarily rejected without even being given a hearing by the commission; and will he ensure that such a hearing is accorded in the interests of justice?

Mr. Speaker: This is a good question and an even better argument.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. It is a constitutional question of a type different to those asked earlier. My question refers to the "Private property" type of sign posted at Government House gate by the new Lieutenant Governor of British Columbia, and the removal of that sign by provincial authorities. Is the government aware of this situation, or will it look into it?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that the question should be placed on the order paper.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PROTEST AGAINST PROGRAM RESPECTING ALGONQUIN PARK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State but in his absence I direct it to the Prime Minister. Because of the completely biased portion of the C.B.C. program "The Way It Is" regarding the lumbering and tourist industry in Algonquin park, which appeared on the C.B.C. Sunday night, would the minister request the C.B.C. not to use public funds to promote a one sided view of the Algonquin park issue which would result in the loss of employment for thousands of people in the upper Ottawa valley region of eastern Ontario?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This also is an argument and not a question.

Mr. Hopkins: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR INTERIM REPORT ON MARKETING SURVEY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for North Shore.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for South Shore.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): You have your compass points a little mixed up, Mr. Speaker. I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. An interim report on the joint government-industry marketing survey now under way has been distributed to participating governments by the management consulting firm which is conducting the study. In view of the serious marketing problems presently facing the fishing industry, has the minister any announcement to make with regard to this report or its recommendations for expanding fisheries markets?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Not immediately, Mr. Speaker; but these reports and others like them are receiving very serious consideration. I hope to be able to make a statement to the industry within the next few weeks.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HEALTH AND WELFARE

STEPS TO OVERCOME SHORTAGE OF MEDICAL PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the alarming statement by a select committee of top medical doctors in Canada to the Medical Research Council of this country that the federal freeze on health resource grants might destroy all possibility of admitting more medical students, so urgently needed with medicare being pushed across Canada by the federal government, would the minister consider this problem when the federal and provincial ministers meet in December?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the problem of adequate facilities for the training of health personnel is always an important matter, and undoubtedly we will be discussing this question with our provincial counterparts.

INDUSTRY

PRODUCTION IN CANADA OF PARTS FOR NEW JET PLANES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport but, in his absence, I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary.

Air Canada has ordered 10 L-1011 jets from the Lockheed Company which, it seems, would agree to certain parts being made in Canada. Could the parliamentary secretary confirm at this time that agreements are now being negotiated between Canada and the company so that parts used for building these jets may be made in Canada and Canadian manpower may be used?

Mr. Speaker: I think the question could be put on the order paper. If it is urgent the hon. member could discuss it at the time of adjournment.

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PROCEDURE IN CONSIDERING RECOMMENDATIONS OF COMMITTEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Is the government going to amend the rules of procedure so that decisions taken by standing and special committees of this house can be rescinded should such decisions prove unwelcome to the government, as is presently being attempted in the standing committee on transport?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is argumentative and I do not think it is acceptable in that form.

RURAL DEVELOPMENT

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF ARDA REPORT ON INDIAN POVERTY AREAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In order that we may have full and informed public discussion, will the minister table the ARDA report on Indian poverty areas, excerpts from which have been published in the press?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, I am unable to table this report immediately. However, I hope to be able to do it at the beginning of next month. According to the rules, we are waiting for the French translation before tabling this report.

[English]

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could have the permission of the house to table the report myself.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): —in that the hon. member for Churchill has referred to a document which he indicated his willingness to table, I think it would be within the rules if the hon. member now tabled that document.

Mr. Trudeau: In both languages?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

I was listening to the simultaneous translation and I did not understand very well. I thought that reference was made to the Hawthorn report, but I realize now that it was the ARDA report. Now, as the ARDA report does not come under my department I do not have authority to answer in that connection and I apologize to the hon. member. I had understood that it was the Hawthorn report, the second volume of which will be tabled next month.

[English]

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I rise on a further question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. It is a struggle for opposition members to make the government realize what they should and must do. It takes a request such as this to make the ministers of this government realize what they are responsible for.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN POSITION RESPECTING POSSIBLE RESTRUCTURING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In connection with the reassessment of Canada's defence and foreign policy, will the minister tell us whether a position is being formulated for the government of Canada with regard to any restructuring of the United Nations?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it had not been our intention, in the review of our foreign policy, to deal specifically with that question. It seems to me this is a question relating to the United Nations itself. We have, of course, views, as I am sure the hon. gentleman has, about the structure of the United Nations. I do not think that would form part of our foreign policy review.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

NOVA SCOTIA—NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNION OFFICIALS AT AVIATION FIRM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Defence Production. He looks neglected today. I wonder whether he is now in a position, inasmuch as some time has gone by, to bring the house up to date on the results of negotiations that took place some time ago between himself and union officials of Fairey Aviation.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Defence Production): Not in a short answer, Mr. Speaker, but if the hon. gentleman—

Mr. Forrestall: Then in a long one.

Mr. Jamieson: If the hon. gentleman would care to check with me later I will give him the latest report. I believe there is one in the mail to him right now.

Mr. Forrestall: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister say whether it is a favourable one?

Mr. Jamieson: The hon. member can decide that when he gets the answer.

COMMUNICATIONS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PROPOSED CORPORATION STRUCTURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the laconic Postmaster General. Will he advise when he plans to table the report of Mr. McIntosh in reference to the financial and administrative structure of the proposed communications satellite corporation?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, we have not yet considered the tabling of this report, but I will raise the matter with my colleagues.

Mr. Macquarrie: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister whether the report has been received, and if so, is it now being studied?

Mr. Kierans: It has been received, Mr. Speaker, and is being studied. But there are many other issues involved before we can decide if it is suitable to table the report.

SPORTS

HOCKEY—ASSISTANCE TO CANADIAN NATIONAL TEAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has Canada's national hockey team received substantial assistance from the government, and if so, in what amount?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Unless hon. members think the information should be given, I suggest this question should be placed on the order paper. But if there is unanimous agreement on the part of hon. members—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no agreement. I would think this type of question should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Dinsdale: With deference, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the current hockey season is well under way and Canada's national team is engaged in important international competition, could the minister indicate whether assistance has been forthcoming from the government this year, and in what amount?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking whether assistance has been given. If he thinks there is urgency in a question asked in this form, the matter could be discussed at the time of adjournment.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

Hon. C. M. Drury (for the Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-131, to amend the Customs Tariff.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Since no one rose I took it there would be no debate, but I am quite prepared to recognize the hon. member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, there is a wall of noise between Your Honour and this part of the house, and notwithstanding your most valiant efforts even the microphone is of no assistance in carrying your voice this far. I thought there would be a statement from the government at this stage. In view of the fact that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) is not present this afternoon, his parliamentary secretary is going to carry on in his stead. But since there is to be no such statement I propose to make a few remarks at this stage of the bill, not having had an opportunity, because of demands on my time in another place, to do so at the resolution stage. Some of my colleagues may also wish to address a few remarks at this stage.

This bill in fact brings before the house the proposals that were contained in the budget of November, 1967, which formed part of the Kennedy round of negotiations that Canada entered into. The committee on finance, trade and economic affairs considered the bulk of these resolutions from January to March, 1968. So in view of all this we must realize that we are being asked to discuss very old matters. I must say that I think this rather awkward performance, and something else which I will raise before Your Honour in a moment, represent part of the price that had to be paid because the Prime Minister decided to call an election for purely personal and electoral benefits. This may be all right. I see the Minister of Defence Production nods his head in satisfaction, or perhaps in self-satisfaction because he benefited from the move. In so far as Canada is concerned, however, we find ourselves in a difficult position internationally as a result of this action, and so does the house. This bill could have been brought forward much earlier if the government had seen fit to do so. As a matter of the fact, the house, in relation to this bill as well as the anti-dumping convention, is the victim of this lack of planning.

Many plaintive assertions have been made from the government side about the difficulty of putting the legislation through. I say to them that they are falling into the same pattern of scheduling legislation in the same disarrayed fashion as happened in 1963 and 1964. In such cases the opposition is often blamed and a great case is made before the press and other communications media which, like so many innocent lambs, swallow this propaganda. The records indicate otherwise. The house knows that this legislation has been produced following long negotiations. We went through all of this in committee. It seems to me it would have been quite simple to have it brought forward as one of the first items on the order paper so that his house could discharge its commitments honourably and without pressure.

Having said this, I want to come to the other point. I know that the government engaged in the very dubious procedure of resorting to the Financial Administration Act for authority to pass an order in council last spring giving some patina of legitimacy to these proposals, not only the Kennedy round proposals but the budgetary proposals in which the present Secretary of State for External Affairs proposed to increase certain duties on liquor and tobacco. I protest with all the power I have against this procedure of using an order in council to validate or attempt to validate the collection of taxes. In the terms of the order in council—and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has put them on the record—it is stated that these taxes shall be deemed to be valid as though the legislation had been passed.

We know in what contempt this administration holds the house. We know their impatience with democracy. We know what they are going to propose with regard to the rules of this house whereby only one group of 25 to 29 men will count. The order in council was not a proposal made by the house but by the government. Hon. members on the other side who are not members of the treasury must keep in mind that they are not part of the government; they are only part of a government majority and members of the House of Commons no more and no less than hon. members opposite. Hon. members who sit in the rump and are the clamorous section of this house must also realize they are not members of the government. In spite of this we have this particular attempt of last April. I want to warn the house of this and draw it to the attention of those people who are supposed to comment about irregularities in the procedures of the house and in government. They should pay attention to matters of this kind rather than to some of the trivia reported about this administration such as the description of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) swinging on a pole in Yorkville. They should report what was done here last April when this order in council was passed. This is a precedent which might be resorted to again. Unsatisfactory or unacceptable tax proposals might be brought forward in this way by the back door.

Even if parliament had been dissolved, Mr. Speaker, the same action could have been taken in regard to that infamous occasion following the income tax bill. An order in council could have been passed under the authority of the Financial Administration Act, which I suggest is a highly questionable procedure. The tax proposal of last spring which was defeated in this house could actually have been implemented under the guise and authority of an order in council validating the collection of taxes thereunder as though the legislation itself had been passed. But even if the house had been dissolved, no doubt another tame majority would have come along and swept the matter under the rug. This is the way this administration is trying to trample on the rights of the members of this house.

A great deal is made, Mr. Speaker, of responsible government. I suggest to you that the word "responsible" is being given the wrong meaning. It is a question of acting responsibly, in other words, that the government is credible. In addition, and principally, the treasury benches must be responsible; in other words, they must account to this house for their actions. Yet here, there and at every turn the government is striving to remove accountability and responsibility. The government is becoming responsible to its own dignity, to the dictates of the one man who leads it; I will have more to say about this later during the session.

In our system of government in the western democracies, Mr. Speaker, there is not one man as powerful as the Prime Minister of Canada. In Britain the Prime Minister is even more powerful, in a political science sense, than is the President of the United States. The President of the United States is surrounded by checks and counterbalances; in Canada there are none of these. In Britain the House of Lords acted as a check on the government but now its powers are being restricted. That is again evidence of the same pattern. One must weep at what the administration has done to the democratic, responsible system of government which once existed at Westminster. That parliament has now become the tool of the administration.

My point is, Mr. Speaker, that this legislation was validated last April by order in council, and it is relevant to show how this government has acted in the context of discussing the change of duty on tequilla that is provided for in this bill. Since the excise tax bill is raising the duty on beer and spirits generally, I do not think I need say more at this time because the excise bill itself has been accepted. As a result there are consequential amendments to the Customs Tariff Act.

With regard to the Kennedy round, Mr. Speaker, I think members in all corners of the house welcome the end result, or what is anticipated to be the end result, of the negotiations. We hope that the same spirit continues, notwithstanding some very disquieting reactions in certain countries. We have heard from the common market countries, as a result of the exigencies of international financial crises, talk of border taxes, further countervailing duties on imports, and that sort of thing. This evidences the fact that there is already, shall we say, some rocking of the international trading boats.

With regard to the justification of these Kennedy round changes, Mr. Speaker, hon. members may have some particular comments to make about how the British preferential tariff and the most favoured nation tariff are going to affect industries in one part or another of the country. In some areas hon. members may wonder why there has been a greater front-end loading of the changes than in other sectors. Some members may wonder why certain commodities were or were not included in the changes.

However, Mr. Speaker, it was represented to us by Canada's negotiators that these changes have been made after very difficult negotiations that took place over a span of years on a commodity for commodity basis. Canada could not accept the proposal of the United States for an across the board reduction because Canada and the United States have different industrial and primary resource patterns. I think our negotiators were correct in approaching the negotiations in this way. We must develop our secondary industries. However, some of our primary industries are very important and it may be that in the result there will have to be some very agonizing adjustments made. I hope that these will be less agonizing than is feared and that adjustment loans and other assistance will be made, I do not like to use the word liberally—

Mr. Jamieson: It has good uses sometimes.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I would use it with a very small "l"—so that the maximum benefit is extended to Canadian industry as a result of government action. I would hate to think that the measures which are to compensate for these changes are going to be administered, shall I say, in the most difficult, mortgage company sort of way, if I may use that term—and I apologize to the mortgage companies for using it. What I mean is that I hope things will not become extremely difficult and legalistic methods used to deny individuals assistance. It is in the interests of the Canadian government to assist these industries as much as possible rather than assisting them only after the government has presented them with a list of qualifications ten pages long. This approach, to me, Mr. Speaker, is wrong.

A spokesman for the government has said: "Yes, we made these concessions; but our trading partners made companion concessions, and these will give Canadian industry a much greater chance to expand its trade". Well, Mr. Speaker, there I pause because I think a reliance on what is expected to be a natural consequence would be dangerously naïve. Why do I say that? I say it simply because so many of our trading partners use non-tariff barriers which were not part of the negotiations under the Kennedy round. Let us all admit that. My goodness, if we consider some of the trading practices of some of our trading partners we may wonder why we call them partners. I will not quote a list of countries that impose quotas or border taxes, that have special financial requirements or that, like our friends to the south, introduce special building codes under their federal housing administration or ask their people to buy American under their "buy American" legislation. In Britain, too, they have restrictions. The central electricity authority can only buy from the provisioners in England and cannot give others specifications. The Japanese have their restrictions; incidentally, we also have quantitative restrictions on trade because the trading practices of some of our trading partners have had a deleterious effect on our production. It is for these reasons that I say that too great a reliance on increasing our proportion of exports as a result of the Kennedy round negotiations is naïve.

Our exporters will have to sharpen their pencils and become more aggressive. Our government will have to assist them to become more aggressive, not necessarily by grants, in which I do not believe, but by providing services through our trade commissioners. Yet I say this: I do not care how much you assist production or how much you increase production; unless you sell the goods you produce at a profit the exercise has been completely and utterly useless. As a matter of fact, it will have been a disservice to the nation.

I will not discuss any matters in detail at this time since I prefer to discuss them clause by clause. There is one exception to this. Yesterday afternoon I asked the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who is the minister responsible, a question about the machinery advisory board since the importation into Canada of machinery at a reduced or entirely waived rate of duty has been transferred to his jurisdiction. If hon. members will consult the transcript of evidence taken at the committee hearing they will see that I questioned this transfer of jurisdiction. This is a question of duty, Mr. Speaker, and as such, in my thinking should have remained with the Department of National Revenue. It is not a question of building another empire under the Department of Industry.

I do not want to dwell at great length on the vicissitudes of the Department of Industry or on the great pains that some took to justify its separate existence and extension. Despite the unanimous view on the part of the opposition that it should never have had a separate existence and should have come under the Department of Trade and Commerce, with a changed name perhaps, we find after four years and an expenditure of $4 million that we now have a Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the more things change, the more they are the same. Do you not agree?

[English]

It is my view, therefore, that we would have been better advised to maintain the machinery advisory board under the Department of National Revenue. We need not call it a board. I also think that section 15 of the Department of Industry Act never contemplated the setting up of this type of thing. The house was never really advised what would be the case, and what happened happened in general terms. I therefore feel that that operation would have been better carried out under the Department of National Revenue.

I have stated my reasons and reservations with regard to the ultimate considerations that may move the cabinet and the minister to pass orders in council remitting duty. I think that here there may be a subject of, shall we say, equivocal decision. In this area equivocal decisions may be made by the governor in council under legislation. It is all set out in the minutes I referred to and I will not repeat it. I merely invite hon. members to see what was said at that time. From the way the officials that were concerned answered certain questions I thought they were at some pains to justify the procedure that had been outlined.

Since there are other members who wish to make statements at this time I will conclude my remarks until we come to the individual items.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, having regard to the subject matter of the bill before the house it is only natural, I think, that we should consider the philosophy of free trade. Perhaps most hon. members pay tribute to this philosophy; certainly this party is committed to a policy that favours the freeing of international trade, not only with regard to this country but with regard to the entire world. We feel that free trade would contribute to international economic development, to the economic development of Canada and would materially contribute to the eazing of world tensions. Nevertheless, when we consider all these problems we find that talking about them is much easier than solving them. Factors beyond Canada's control militate against our pursuing the objective of free trade in world markets. Since other countries follow policies which tend to restrict world trade, those policies are some of the factors that are beyond our control.

This afternoon I wish to refer briefly to a number of matters which are within our jurisdiction and competence and the factors we must consider when discussing the implementation of this bill. When the Kennedy round negotiations were begun there was great hope throughout Canada and many parts of the world that trade might be liberalized. Unfortunately, what we have achieved is something less than what we hoped for.

It is important for us to recognize the limitations of the gains which have been made as a result of the Kennedy round negotiations. Although we approve of the gains that have been made we must recognize that we have not achieved all our original objectives. We must also recognize that those gains will not all produce fundamental changes which are desirable. At the same time there is a need for constant vigilance with respect to world trade and trading patterns. We need to measure the impact of the changes being made in the Customs Tariff and take action to deal with effects which may hurt or hinder sections of the Canadian economy. I have in mind, particularly, certain problems which may be faced by the agricultural industry. I have already referred to some of them during the resolution stage of the bill, and the parliamentary secretary has also made some comments in this connection. I have no wish to labour the point at this stage, but I repeat my recommendation that the government keep in constant touch with the effects of these changes on various sectors of the Canadian economy.

The whole subject matter of this bill and related measures is, of course, an integral part of Canadian history. There is no need to repeat the story involved in the debate which has traditionally taken place in Canada between advocates of free trade and advocates of protection. New approaches are needed today and new approaches are on the way. We are long since past the stage of the infant industries we once knew in this country. Indeed, Canadian industry has now reached a point at which we should be considering the problems raised by maturity and the steps which should be taken in the light of the maturity in our industry and in our economy.

One important step which I feel could contribute materially to the further development of our industry is, of course, the establishment of a Canada development corporation. I do not, of course, intend to discuss this subject now; we have been told that a measure to this effect will be brought before the house during the present session. I, for one, will welcome it, and I hope that when it is introduced the bill will be a much more effective measure than has been indicated so far.

This afternoon I should like to discuss some of the policy considerations arising out of the changes we are considering in the Customs Tariff. The first concerns the necessity for redirecting some of our trading operations. I raised this matter on the resolution stage and I should like to refer to it again briefly. It is well known that some 60 per cent of our trade is carried on at present with the United States; it is only natural that a great deal of it should go in this direction. It has been suggested on many occasions that some redirection of our trading pattern is desirable. The Kennedy round concessions are such as to affect to a great extent our trade with the United States. Indeed, it has been noted by the government itself as well as by publications dealing with this subject that a great many of the concessions which involve Canada affect our trade with the United States. This situation, it seems to me, will result in problems still greater than those we have been facing over the past number of years.

I have already suggested that in order to achieve some measure of redirection of our trading pattern we might consider the whole area of light consumer goods in which we presently trade. Many of these goods now come from the United States. If these articles were bought from other countries with which we would like to increase our trade, I think it would result in a better balance of trade in the long run both with the United States and with other countries of the world.

Reference has been made to the question of foreign ownership. I think this is closely related to our trading pattern. It comes up again when we consider such matters as the rationalization of industry and the restriction one now finds on the further development of secondary industry in Canada when it comes to making greater and better use of raw materials produced in this country. This subject is referred to in the Watkins report, which is familiar to most hon. members. The Watkins report made a number of recommendations for dealing with these problems. For example, it referred to the possibility of setting up a state trading agency which could deal with United States subsidiaries which face the restrictions involved in the trading with the enemy act across the border.

We must also recognize, I think, that the corporate decisions of multi-national corporations are often not related to the national interest of Canada. It seems to me the government is responsible for taking action to ensure that Canada's national interest is protected. It could also be said, I believe, that in many instances these companies, multinational corporations among others, would play the game if the government were to set out the rules under which they had to carry on their operations and make their contribution to the Canadian economy.

There is one other area which, in my view, is related to our considerations today. It has to do with the rationalization of industry. This, it appears to me, is a necessary complement to the liberalization of trade. The process of rationalization has in many cases been hampered by past policies and by the pattern of ownership of Canadian industry. It should be borne in mind, too, that the achievement of free trade does not necessarily bring with it the economic benefits we would all like to see. Hon. members have already referred to the difficulties arising in connection with farm machinery. Even though provision has been made for the free movement of farm machinery across the border with the United States, this has not in fact produced all the benefits we would like to see.

Mention should also be made of monetary policy and its relation to the subject now under consideration. Canadian freedom with respect to monetary policy has, of course, been restricted in recent years. I feel we ought to revise our monetary policy. We have heard references to the desirability of a floating exchange rate, an idea which even some members of the government have recommended from time to time. It is, of course, necessary to follow a policy of full employment if we are to take advantage of some of the opportunities which may be opened up by wider trading opportunities.

In summary, it is important that we do not overestimate the gains and concessions which have been achieved through the Kennedy round. Although we have approved them, it would be a mistake to suggest that in themselves they provide any fundamental solution to the difficulties facing the Canadian economy. Furthermore, we are bound to give consideration to the policy implications of this measure, namely, the redirection of our trade, foreign ownership of our industry, the necessity for the rationalization of industry and the necessity for the revision of our monetary policy.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I think that in the past four years no measure passed by this house has so profoundly affected the livelihood of Canadians as will this bill which has been proffered by the government for our approval at the present time. I do not think any piece of legislation has received more publicity over the months than this bill, nor has any standing committee of the house been engaged more earnestly in the consideration of representations. This emphasizes the genuine importance of the legislation.

I must pay special tribute to the negotiators on the Canadian team at Geneva who worked tirelessly for many years, but I think they will be the first to admit that in many ways this legislation may be obsolete even before it is implemented. I say this because of the fact that the trading patterns of the world are constantly changing, perhaps faster in the present day and age than ever before in the histories of the nations involved in the Kennedy round negotiations. I think this must be taken into consideration by Canada, as I am certain it is by other nations, in looking at the terms and provisions of the bill before us.

For many of our Canadian industries and for agriculture in particular, any talk or discussion about changing tariffs is a matter of very real concern. Many of our industries are directly dependent on protection for survival because of the manner in which government has run the affairs of the nation over the years. Many industries have expanded under the climate provided for them. Now they suddenly find that the very government regulations permitting their existence may be changed by the stroke of a pen.

Last spring, Mr. Speaker, there was merely an intimation by a cabinet minister that certain provisions could be changed and the normal pattern of an agricultural industry disrupted. I am speaking of the Canadian greenhouse industry. That was enough to change the credit rating of particular companies with certain banks, and in the end some found it impossible to survive and went into bankruptcy and others were very hard pressed. Over the past few months we have seen the government act by the implementation of additional duties and the application of non-tariff barriers to prevent the inflow of free trade in certain commodities into Canada in an attempt to stave off bankruptcy for some industries.

There is no doubt that the aim and object of those negotiating at Geneva, to encourage freer trade among nations, were advanced with a definite goal and idea in mind, but we here in Canada must take a hard look at the facts as we see them. Will Canada and its industries in their present form survive under a change in the tariff items, which are to be progressively lowered over the next five years? Or will there be a drastic upheaval in Canada? We are told, and perhaps rightly so, that by the genuine desire of all nations to lower tariffs and permit a free exchange of goods Canada will directly profit. A classic example is the fact that this will open up the large market to the south of us for an expansion in our exports.

A previous speaker has pointed out the fact, and quite rightly so, that although there is no tariff on farm machinery so far as Canada is concerned this has not expanded the Canadian industry. As a matter of fact, it appears to me that whenever an action like this is taken we see a very rapid expansion in the use of our Canadian market by the country to the south of us and a consequent deterioration of secondary and primary production here in Canada.

I give another illustration. There is no duty on the importation of soybeans into this country, with the direct result that our market depends entirely on prices established in another country. If those prices were not pegged at a minimum level by government action in the other country, prices here could drop to a point where it would be absolutely impossible to have economic production of soybeans in this country.

No one from the government side, in the house or in committee, has shown how we shall recover economically the moneys lost by the reduction of tariffs between countries. The classic example generally put before us is the automobile trade pact between the United States and Canada. I think that this is a far greater industry managed market than any of us imagine, which brings up another point.

It occurs to me that when there was tremendous pressure brought to bear at the Geneva conference on nations belonging to the GATT organization to lower tariffs, perhaps the primary reason behind it could have been more of a selfish than an idealistic or philosophic one. It seems to me that when we have a reduction in tariffs straight across the board, as was requested by the United States but a negotiated one so far as the Canadian negotiators were concerned, it lends itself ideally to the changing trade patterns of which I spoke under which we now have the formation of international corporations. No longer are we faced just with the importation into a market in Canada of produce in short supply or produce to supply a market that has been cultivated by local producers. No longer is it just a matter of certain importers, wise in the ways of business, taking advantage of short supply. It seems to me that the customs tariff reductions we are faced with today provide the very climate necessary for international corporations to purchase wherever and whenever they choose on the markets of the world goods in surplus supply at fire sale prices and then use their large international distribution systems to take advantage of short supply in other sections of the globe to the detriment of the local producers or manufacturers. I think this is what is in the minds of many small businessmen, small producers and many secondary industries when they view the ramifications of the piece of legislation which is before us.

One outstanding example I might note at this time of the fear expressed in many segments of the economy is the tremendous interest shown in the companion bill that will be brought forward, the anti-dumping legislation. It seems that the one somewhat contradicts the other. If the purpose of liberalization of the tariff is to make free trade the optimum and the absolute for world nations, why then is it so necessary to place such emphasis on the companion anti-dumping bill? Why is there such interest shown among many successful trading nations that its application be not just nor swift? It seems to me they well know already that if our present machinery for protecting our markets is modified in any way they will suffer direct capital consequences. I am of the considered opinion that the lowering of tariffs by this particular piece of legislation will be more than offset by the anti-dumping provisions as has been exhibited in the debate this afternoon.

We find here in Canada, especially in agriculture, that when we attempt to take advantage of foreign markets in many instances, because by reason of very favourable weather conditions, a very favourable production quota or the efficiency of our farmers or producers we have been able to produce a surplus of a top quality product, it is the non-tariff barriers erected in other countries that make it impossible for us to take advantage of what normally would be a profitable maket. It seems to me that if the countries involved were as sincere in making their markets available to Canada as this government seems to be in making Canada's markets available to them we would not have the actions we see to the south of our border where from time to time and even now additional and unexpected tariffs are imposed against our commodities. Additional unexpected and overnight qualifications concerning inspection methods are applied to our commodities. If the United States were as sincere about dropping its tariff barriers as this government is, I do not think this situation would exist at the present time. If we find such action taking place in the days and months ahead I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the major exporters of our manufactured products and produce of our soil, that any ratification we may give today to the bill before us will be paid for in the economic climate in which Canadian citizens will be forced to work.

I am very unhappy about the ramifications of this bill. It represents a downward trend in the protection we have enjoyed to date and which in many instances we have considered not enough. However, in its wisdom the government has already agreed in general to the terms they are putting before us. In the eyes of the organization at Geneva it is a fait accompli. We are asked to ratify terms which already are in effect. Although I have the greatest admiration for the patience of those who negotiated for us, I feel that in the climate in which they were forced to work and with the pressures that were brought to bear on them they had little opportunity to do for the citizens of Canada the work they would have wanted to do in order to provide the necessary climate, as I said before, for an expansion of our various industries. We shall wait, as we must, to see what will happen. However, when this matter was first brought before the house the minister assured us there would be extreme hardship in some instances and that measures might have to be taken by the government to offset the economic hardship in the extreme cases. In the light of that statement we do not have the right to be confident, and with companies going into bankruptcy just because of an intimation of what may happen I think all Canadians have every right to feel uneasy about the legislation before us.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, before we leave the second reading stage I should like to make one or two brief comments on the bill before us to amend the Customs Tariff Act, with particular reference to the heavy electrical industry. We can alter the Customs Tariff Act by amendments all we like, but it will not mean one iota unless we do something about these non-tariff barriers which have such a great effect on our country's exports. I shall confine my remarks to the heavy electrical and switch gear industry because in my riding there are at least 1,000 people employed in this industry. Prior to 1960 this was a very profitable business, but in the last seven years it has done nothing but go downhill to the point where some of the companies engaged in the industry have gone out of business. I think of one company in particular, the Westinghouse Company, which has ceased to make heavy water-wheel generating equipment because it just cannot obtain export orders on account of the non-tariff barriers with which it is confronted.

These companies have prepared detailed studies on this problem. They have pooled their information. They have found that there is a dual pricing system and also a dual costing system in several exporting countries, chiefly the United Kingdom. The normal value for duty purposes thus presents a very serious and difficult situation because it is difficult to establish the right cost or price. In the United Kingdom the Central Electrical Generating Contract Board is the principal purchaser of all heavy electrical equipment in the United Kingdom. With the two-price system, one for domestic and one for export, the export price is allowed to absorb a lesser amount of overhead and the extra amount is charged to the domestic price. They have a two-price system, one for export and one for domestic, with the result that the Canadian companies are unable to compete with these prices and thereby are losing a great amount of export business.

Just recently the General Electric Company placed a quotation with the Canadian government to supply heavy transformers for the Canadian Nelson River project. United Kingdom Electric also quoted on this tender, as did a company in Switzerland and also another Canadian company. There were four quotations. I understand the General Electric quotation was the second lowest, the lowest being that of United Kingdom Electric. The Canadian government saw fit to award the contract to the United Kingdom Electric Company, knowing that the United Kingdom will not allow Canadian Companies to tender in the United Kingdom. This contract was an initial contract for about $8 million. The result was that the Canadian company lost out. This meant that employment for 700 people for a year was lost to the Canadian market. This hardly seems fair.

We must look into these non-tariff items so that we can play on the same ball diamond with the same set of rules. If we can, there is no doubt that Canadian manufacturers could obtain considerable export business and at the same time supply our own local requirements. Let us correct these non-tariff barriers and keep Canadians employed. If we operate under the same set of rules there is no doubt that Canadian manufacturers can get the business. However, if they have to play under a different set of rules they cannot compete and they will lose the business.

This is a very serious matter. In my constituency the company to which I referred intends to lay off 130 people this month because of the loss of export business. If something is not done for the heavy electrical industry in Canada it will disappear. The situation is as plain as that. Even with the anti-dumping legislation to come into effect on January 1, 1969, we will lose these industries. This legislation will be of no avail unless something is done about these non-tariff barriers. I sincerely hope the officials of the department will take every step to make it possible for Canadian suppliers to operate and compete on an equal basis.

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I have a few things to say about this legislation and all this talk about free trade. It very often frightens me because many countries have been built on other than a free trade basis. Not long ago the majority of trade could be termed closed trade. Let me give an example of what I have in mind. The salt industry is of great importance to the welfare of the people in the area I represent. Before the Kennedy round of negotiations bulk salt, which accounts for most imports and exports of salt, came into Canada at a tariff rate of 3 cents per hundredweight. Canadian salt exported to the United States carried a tariff rate of 1.5 cents per hundredweight. I understand that in 1970 United States salt will come into Canada free but the United States will still charge .8 cents per hundredweight.

I am sure everyone in the area I represent is aware of the existence of salt deposits on the west side of Lake Huron. The difference in production costs is made up by the increased cost of transportation. I referred to this matter during the committee hearings and received sympathetic consideration by departmental officials. I also received the assurance of the then minister of finance that this situation would be the subject of renegotiation if the Canadian salt industry was being jeopardized. In any event we will have to wait until 1970 to ascertain whether the Kennedy round negotiations will have an adverse effect on the salt industry in Ontario. Should this prove to be the case I trust the government will honour its commitment and renegotiate these tariff rates.

At this time I should also like to refer to the Canadian glove industry. Glove producing companies are almost going out of business, thereby jeopardizing the employment of many people, because of the tremendous importation into Canada from other countries. I shall not mention them all but I should like to put on record the figures in relation to gloves imported from several countries. Canada imported gloves of several varieties, including knitted, woven and of synthetic fibers, from Communist China to the extent of 369,000 dozen; from Hong Kong, 165,000 dozen; from Japan, 426,000 dozen; from Taiwan, 170,000 dozen, and 114,000 dozen from the United States. This situation has made it almost impossible for this Canadian industry to remain active. Many of these glove companies are located in small towns and are no longer in a position to employ the same number of people. As a result these small towns become smaller because the people are moving to the cities. This in certainly not good for the economy of these areas. I hope the minister and his parliamentary secretary will take this matter under consideration to see whether something can be done.

Let me refer to another situation in my constituency. At one time we had a sporting goods industry which shipped ammunition all over Canada. Because of the high cost of transportation this business has been almost completely closed down. In order to overcome difficulties the owner began to reload shells. He found it necessary to import a certain constituent from the United States at a tariff rate of 7½ per cent. The government increased that rate to 22 per cent, which represents a 300 per cent increase. Most people expect some increases, particularly in respect of small volume items, but this seems to be outrageous. I should like to ask the government to take this situation into account to see whether something can be done as quickly as possible in order that this firm in my constituency can stay in business.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about Bill No. C-131 to amend the Customs Tariff.

Everyone agrees that the Customs Tariff is an extremely important matter, especially with regard to the encouragement the Canadian parliament must give to the production of Canadian goods and, consequently, with regard to the encouragement we must give our agricultural and industrial workers, as well as producers of all kinds in Canada, and that includes of course all classes of our society.

Mr. Speaker, hon. members as well as the people as a whole are struck quite often by the considerable difference between the price of the products made in Canada and that of the products imported from various other countries in the world.

For instance, our textile industry faces a very threatening competition. Textile products from Japan and other Asian or European countries compete unduly with the Canadian industry. In fact, in the eastern townships, in the areas of Sherbrooke and Drummondville, plants are facing an unfortunate, and even hostile competition.

Certain companies have threatened to close down and others have to cope with strikes which are difficult to settle because employers refuse salary increases to their employees, precisely because of the excessive cost of production, or the lower production cost of goods coming from other countries, including Japan.

The same problem prevails in the field of rubber, Mr. Speaker. We can buy boots made in Japan for about half the price we pay for boots made in Canada, and our industry suffers by comparison.

The situation is just about the same in all sectors, including the automobile industry. Small European cars, for example, are stiff competition for our Canadian industry. In the final analysis, it is the Canadian people who pay for the price increases at home which are due to higher salaries, production costs and profits. All these factors make up the cost price of goods.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, with a population of 20 million people, Canada cannot produce goods as cheaply as countries whose population is 80, 90 or even 200 million people, such as the United States, for example. Our cost of production is higher.

We cannot produce more and, therefore, the government must protect Canadian industry first of all. In doing so, I think—I do not only think, I am sure—we protect Canadian workers and the Canadian people. In fact, in many areas of our production, we must, when we want to export on the world market, agree to considerable reductions in prices and even sell at a loss. It is not very profitable for Canada but we must, in any event, dispose of that surplus of goods.

But here again, Mr. Speaker, there is a point to which I would like to draw the attention of the house: the best outlet for the Canadian goods we must export, or we must sell at any cost, is still the Canadian market, the market made up of the consumers in Canada. And it is incumbent on us, parliamentarians, to meet the needs of those Canadian consumers. That is a steady market, a market which is always within reach, and we neglect it to turn to world markets. We must, of course, think about imports, exports, and at least balance our trade with other countries.

We must import from other countries what we do not produce in Canada; just as we must export goods that other countries which may not have as plentifully as we do. That applies, for instance, to lumber, Ungava iron ore, oil, these resources we have here and we must export. But we must, first of all, meet the demand on our domestic market, the Canadian market.

Mr. Speaker, with regard to the Act to amend the Customs Tariffs, on reading the table, I feel that experts were needed to figure out the Customs Tariff, because there are over 120 or 125 pages of amendments of all kinds. Most of the time we see references to the British preferential tariffs of 10 per cent, or 15 per cent; to the most favoured nation tariff of between 15 and 20 per cent; and to the general tariff which applies to the other countries, which do not benefit by the most favoured nation tariff or the British preferential tariff, of 20, 25 30 and 35 per cent. Those who compiled those figures really got their brains working to give Canada a chance to make some profits through the application of the Customs Tariffs but that does not solve the problem of our market, our Canadian production, and above all that of the distribution of our goods.

Even though we do have to export some goods and import others, one fact remains, as I said a while ago: we definitely cannot compete with countries that have a population of 90 or 200 million people. For example, when we compare the United States and Canada, we realize that a worker over there produces five times as much as a Canadian worker. Why? Because they have almost unlimited means of production. Here, in Canada, we only have a population of 20 million people, and even if we wanted to pretend that it is 50 million, it is not true. Nor will it be tomorrow either. It could be true 25 or 50 years from now, but it cannot be at the present time.

Therefore, I believe the government should introduce not only Bill No. C-131 but another one, making it possible for us to satisfy consumer needs, domestic market needs, to prevent—I shall not say dishonest competition—but rather unpleasant competition against our Canadian producers and industries. It is unreasonable to deprive our workers of work in this country, just because we find it cheaper to buy from Japan.

We all know from experience that the United States have established industries in Japan. The Westinghouse company, for instance, and other industries established over there are owned by Americans. Industries were established in Japan because production is cheaper over there than in the United States. The transportation of those products from Japan to the United States even costs less than producing them directly in the United States. So, production is cheaper in Japan, transportation costs included, than in the United States. Why? Because people are paid less in Japan than in the United States.

Here, in Canada, labour unions are demanding wage parity with workers in the United States. They are asking for the same conditions as those which exist in a country with a population of 200 million. Labour leaders who talk about wage parity with workers in the United States have their head in the clouds; they are not being realistic.

If we could produce like the United States, as much and as quickly as they do, the problem would be solved, but that is a physical impossibility. We must therefore face the facts and learn to be ourselves. Our population is 20 million, not 200 million people. The union leaders should understand that once and for all.

We must realize that we are not the United States. Let us organize ourselves according to our own possibilities, in order to meet the needs of our own trade and our domestic market. Let us face the fact that we will probably have to sell our surplus production below cost, as I said earlier.

However, we will then perhaps be able to help the underdeveloped and poor countries of the world, since two-thirds of the people in the world are in need. We would then be able to give free assistance to these people. I do not object to our giving free aid, once the principle of "Charity begins at home" is applied in Canada by the Canadian government.

Let us begin by meeting the needs of our own people. There is much poverty in Canada. The government is introducing programs to fight poverty as effectively as possible. The best way to fight poverty is to give something to eat to those who are hungry, something to drink to those who are thirsty, to give housing to those who need it and clothes to those who have none. It is as simple as that and we have all these things in Canada. Therefore, there is no need to go to Japan or to the United States.

However, that does not prevent us, once again, from doing business with others. But let us do so while remembering that our first duty is to work towards an economic system which will guarantee without superhuman efforts the just society which we have heard about for the last couple of years, and which will fight efficiently, not the poor but poverty, to get the poor out of the hole in which they are at the present time. And if they are now in a poor situation, they are not responsible for it but we are as members of parliament. Therefore, it is up to us to pass legislation which will guarantee respect for the human person everywhere in Canada and to see to it that we transact our business under the best possible terms with the other countries so that Canada may continue to expand and become an example for all the countries of the world.

[English]

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Béchard in the chair.

The Chairman: Order, please. House in committee of the whole on Bill C-131, to amend the Customs Tariff.

On clause 1—

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I could start by saying a few words about the structure of the bill we are now studying and conclude by dealing with some of the points raised by hon. members during the second reading. I will also attempt to answer the questions that I reserved for this stage during the debate on the resolution. I should explain that each clause of this bill flows directly from the corresponding paragraphs of the budget resolution relating to the Customs Tariff. You will recall that this resolution was examined in some detail and passed by the committee of ways and means after debate on November 14 and 19. There is no change whatsoever in the substance of the provisions which appeared in some detail in the resolution in question. However, the order in which they appear has been rearranged so that in the bill the various clauses and schedules are in the same order as the related provisions of the Customs Tariff Act which they amend.

The Customs Tariff Act, which the bill we are considering amends, commences with an interpretation section. It continues with sections imposing rates of duties set out in schedule A thereto and empowering the governor in council to make regulations. Next come the three schedules. The first of these is schedule A enumerating goods subject to duty and free goods. If you look at the original Customs Tariff Act you will see it is very long. It is followed by two shorter schedules, schedule B providing for certain drawbacks of duty and schedule C containing a list of goods prohibited from importation. Therefore the clauses and schedules in Bill C-131 are arranged in the same order as in the Customs Tariff Act. Bill C-131 commences with a proposal to insert a new definition with respect to wire in the interpretation section of the Customs Tariff and ends with an amendment to schedule C of the act. However, the most important provisions of the bill are those in between which provide for the reductions in the rates of duties set out in schedule A that are required to implement Canada's obligations under the Kennedy round trade agreement which was signed in Geneva on June 30, 1967, and generally which have been in effect on a provisional basis since January 1 of this year.

When the committee of ways and means was concluding its examination of the tariff resolution on November 19 I said I would attempt to supply later on in the debate some information in reply to some of the questions that were asked. First let me attempt to deal with some of the questions raised by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek, and I want to thank him for his most interesting presentation. He has certainly done a lot of work in looking into this question. As I recall his remarks, he argued that the proposed tariff amendments now before parliament would have the effect of imposing a duty on some farm equipment which is now duty free. I have gone into this with officials of the Department of Finance and I am glad to be able to assure my hon. friend that this is not considered to be the case. It should be noted that the proposed amendment to the heading for items 42761-1 and 42762-1 is merely consequential to the proposed amendment to item 40938-1 dealing with tractors. The coverage of the two items I have just mentioned will remain the same. They do not cover machines and tools for use on tractors which are used on the farm for farm purposes only. These are provided for and will remain in duty free tariff item 40924-1. This item was formerly numbered 409(f). I might add that the numbering was changed not as a result of the provision we are considering now but was changed several years ago to aid the Dominion Bureau of Statistics in collecting information on the products in question. As I was saying, the status of item 409(f), which has been renumbered 40924-1, is that it is the main item providing for free entry from all countries of farm implements and farm machinery. Again I should like to assure the hon. member that the item is not affected by the bill before us and it does not appear anywhere in it. Farm tractors also remain free of duty as before.

I should like to tell the hon. member that his suggestion that item 409(f), which is now item 40924-1, be amended has been noted for future consideration. I am not in a position to make any commitment about it and, as I have said, the item does not appear in these resolutions. However, I would be very pleased to arrange to have the hon. member meet with the director of the tariff section of the Department of Finance so that he could pursue this question further.

The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar also asked several questions. First of all I believe he asked about Japanese tariff reductions as they affect soybeans and rapeseed. I am informed that the Canadian negotiators in the Kennedy round attached a high priority to the reduction of the Japanese tariff on rapeseed because of the importance of the Japanese market to Canadian producers. However, Japan did not grant a tariff concession on this product, and it is a matter of concern that this reduction was not made since the Japanese government did make a 50 per cent cut in its tariff on soybeans which will carry the rate on that product in stages from its pre-Kennedy round level of 13 per cent to 6.5 per cent by 1972. In his question the hon. member referred to a reduction in the tariff on the importation of soybeans into Japan from the United States. I am informed, however, the reduction is one of general application and is not limited to imports from the United States. I would also point out that Canadian sales of rapeseed to Japan have doubled in the last few years, from $12.9 million worth in 1965 to over $25 million worth in 1967. Canadian exports in the first nine months of 1968 totalled $18.1 million. I can assure the hon. member that the government is continuing its efforts to improve access for this particular product to the Japanese market.

The hon. member also asked about access to the European common market for wheat and feed grains. The only improvement in this respect is that which has resulted from the new cereals arrangement. It was the objective of Canada and, indeed, of other wheat exporters in bringing the negotiations on cereals within the ambit of the over-all Kennedy round of trade negotiations, to seek a comprehensive arrangement with provisions going beyond those of earlier international wheat agreements. Therefore the negotiations covered feed grains as well as wheat, and dealt not only with international prices but also with domestic policies, access to import markets and food aid. However, it was only possible to reach agreement with respect to wheat prices and food aid. I am sure all hon. members share the disappointment of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar that the Kennedy round has not yet resulted in Canada achieving improved tariff access for our grains in western Europe. However, during the Kennedy round trading nations for the first time did try to grapple with the problem of domestic supports and internal subsidies.

The Leader of the Opposition asked for a breakdown by major countries of the over-all figures which I gave related to the increase in Canadian exports in the first nine months of 1968. I now have comparative data, Mr. Chairman, for exports to each of our major markets in the first nine months of 1967 and 1968, and the figures are as follows. I can read the figures into the record at this time, though the committee may prefer to have them printed as a table in Hansard. Might I ask at this time, Mr. Chairman, whether I have the consent of the committee to have this done?

The Deputy Chairman: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The table referred to above is as follows:]

	(millions of dollars)
All countries	8,344	9,881
United Kingdom	868	925
United States	5,275	6,625

Mr. Gray: May I now deal, Mr. Chairman, with some of the other points made in the debate on second reading. The hon. member for Edmonton West went into some detail on the importance of the negotiations and the resulting legislation that is now before us. I think it is useful to remember that the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs held some 22 meetings for the purpose of studying the resolutions which are now reflected before us in Bill No. C-131. The committee heard many briefs from groups and members of the general public as well as evidence from government officials and ministers. I think we should keep in mind the detailed study that was given to the resolutions at that time and perhaps agree that this committee of the whole house may not feel it necessary to carry out the work that would have had to be done had the standing committee not been given the opportunity of making a detailed study of these proposals.

The hon. member for Edmonton West referred to the manner in which certain tax changes were continued in effect when the house was dissolved for an election. It is my understanding that no tax increases were kept in effect by order in council. On the contrary, Mr. Chairman, the order in council in question was put into effect for the purpose of continuing reductions in duties.

In this regard I might draw the attention of the committee to a statement made by the Minister of Finance on April 26, 1968, a statement which was issued in the form of a press release. In it the minister said that all of the proposed reductions in duties were being continued in effect by means of an order in council, under the authority of section 22 of the Financial Administration Act.

The minister did note at the time, that the budgets of June 1 and November 30, 1967 and the resolution introduced on November 6, 1967, resulted in higher customs duties on some imported products, and in line with the traditional and long-established practice followed by various governments of various political persuasions these increases had been collected on a provisional basis, pending parliamentary passage of legislation to implement them. However, he concluded his statement by saying that since the twenty seventh parliament had been dissolved before passage of the legislation in question, the Department of National Revenue was suspending the collection of the increase in customs duties effective April 24, 1968, pending action by the next parliament, and that the government would collect duties on the imports involved at the former rates.

The minister also went on to say that it was the government's intention to ask the next parliament to pass legislation implementing both the reductions and the increase, effective from the dates originally proposed in the tariff resolution submitted to the last session of parliament. This, in part, is the work that we are attempting to carry out at the present time.

I can assure this committee that the government is well aware that there may be problems of adjustment for certain segments of Canadian industry, and this is why it has set up the general adjustment assistance program. It should be a matter of some satisfaction that to date, out of the hundreds of general inquiries received by the board, there have only been 11 formal submissions for assistance under the program, only one of which, if I am not mistaken, was based on an allegation of injury as a result of the various changes rather than a request for assistance to enable the firm in question to take advantage of additional opportunities created by the Kennedy round tariff negotiations.

The hon. member for Edmonton West and also the hon. member for Wellington drew the attention of the committee to the importance of dealing with non-tariff barriers. I can assure the committee that the government is certainly aware of the need for further action to eliminate non-tariff barriers. When I spoke on the resolution stage I believe I mentioned a special working party, of which Canada is a member, set up under GATT to develop programs for this very purpose. The GATT countries' working party is now examining how best to deal with the non-tariff barriers that are identified by member countries and, as I have said, we are taking a very active part in these discussions.

The hon. member for Moose Jaw repeated his suggestion about keeping in constant touch with the effects of the Kennedy round changes upon the agricultural industry. I can assure the hon. member that this is a practice that is now being observed. The hon. member also made some remarks about multi-national corporations. I think this committee should be aware that the Minister of Finance, when he spoke in New York on November 18, made it clear that the government is fully aware of the problems that can be created by multinational corporations for international trade. Certainly it is giving attention to the study of measures that might be put into effect to deal with these problems.

If I may deal briefly with one or two other points, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Huron wanted to know what effect the tariff changes would have on the salt industry. I can assure him that this situation is being kept under review. Present indications seem to be reasonably optimistic. I am informed that there are at least two new developments being introduced in the method of production. I understand that an announcement was made recently of a new salt manufacturing plant in Saskatchewan. Also may I reassure him that gloves have not been affected by the Kennedy round changes that are reflected in this bill. The tariff remains unchanged at 20 per cent British preferential, 25 per cent most favoured nation. He also made some reference to a higher duty on loading tools for shells, I believe. I am informed that changes in this matter will come about as a result of a ruling of the Tariff board rather than through any changes we are considering at this time. We are keeping this matter under review as well.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, may I say that various hon. members have made references to the possible effects of the tariff changes in question. I should therefore like to repeat again what I said when I concluded the debate on the resolution stage. Most of the changes we are considering now in the form of Bill C-131 have been in effect provisionally for almost one year, and therefore we are able to see actual results and definite trends with respect to our international trade. I think most observers will agree that the results so far are very encouraging.

I put some figures on the record when I spoke on November 19, pointing out that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, in a speech to the Canadian Export Association a few weeks ago, stated that in the first nine months of 1968 our merchandise exports reached $9.9 billion, up 1.6 billion or 18.4 per cent from the same period last year. I said:

> Meanwhile our imports have risen at a slower rate, by $811 million or about 10 per cent. In consequence I think we should be pleased to note that Canada is well on its way to achieving a $1 billion merchandise trade surplus this year... this will be the largest favourable trade balance recorded in the post-war period.

All this has happened since the Kennedy round changes went into effect almost one year ago. So, although one can understand the concern and apprehension which have been expressed, I think the actual facts shown by the figures should provide not only reassurance but also encouragement as to the positive effect over all for Canada, Canadian industry and Canadian workers of the results of the tariff negotiations reflected in this bill. Therefore I would certainly urge the committee to give this bill favourable consideration.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, I wish to direct some remarks to the parliamentary secretary following my remarks of November 14. I still wish to hear a definition of the term "internal combustion tractor". That definition ought to be included somewhere in this bill. Although the parliamentary secretary said that the present wording of the resolution would have no adverse effect on farm tractors I can only say that I have dealt with the Department of National Revenue for 11 years as a farmer and I doubt that the officials of that department will take the opinion of the parliamentary secretary when it comes to defining farm tractors. I suggest that the matter should be clarified in the bill. As I said the other day, it is the duty of the Department of Finance officials to insert certain tariff items but it is the duty of Department of National Revenue officials to interpret them. Opinions on the correctness of interpretations vary. On several occasions I have had to deal with Department of National Revenue officials on a matter of interpreting terms inserted in resolutions by Department of Finance officials. I have had some experience in this field.

Frankly, I do not see how we can define an internal combustion tractor as anything but a tractor. You would have great difficulty in convincing Department of National Revenue officials that a farm tractor is not an internal combustion tractor. It is, in fact, an internal combustion machine, tractor or piece of equipment. Yet I doubt whether I could convince officials of the Department of National Revenue of the correctness of my remarks. Item 42711-1 lists:

> Machines and tools, including blades, loaders, rippers, rakes and related operating and controlling gear; all the foregoing for use on internal combustion tractors—

Under item 40924-1 I am entitled to bring most of these things into the country; yet unless I show the officials of the department a copy of Hansard in five years time and allow them to read the remarks of the parliamentary secretary, there would be no way for them to know what parliament intended with regard to the definition of tractors.

A little while ago the hon. member for Kent-Essex said there is no tariff on farm machinery that is brought into this country. I know that other hon. members have made a similar statement in the past. It has been made over the years, and I can only say that it is erroneous. Everyone in Canada believes that that is the principle under which we operate; yet we do not work that way. Many farmers who have tried to bring in pieces of equipment that are covered by item 40924-1 have had a rude shock.

I received a letter from the Department of National Revenue recently. No matter whether an item says that a piece of equipment is to be used for farm purposes only, or whether it says that the implements listed must be agricultural tools not otherwise provided for, the department makes a certain kind of finding. The minister sent me this letter which says in part:

> It is the position of the department that in order to qualify as an agricultural machine an article must contain mechanical features and be recognizably "agricultural".

You will notice, Mr. Chairman, the two qualifications, "mechanical features" and "recognizably agricultural". I continue:

> The Tariff Board set forth this principle in Appeal No. 237 and it has been followed by the Board on other occasions.
> In other words, it must be determined at time of importation whether or not an article is an "agricultural machine". The fact that one particular unit may be for use on a farm does not in itself qualify the product as an agricultural machine.

In other words, there must be a user's certificate that the implement is to be for farm use. I continue:

> Similarly, an agricultural machine may, on occasion, be for other than farm use.

I said the other night that almost any piece of agricultural machinery may have another use than a farm use. Any piece of farm machinery may be used for a purpose other than that which it was originally intended for, and we do not deny that. We think, however, that the intent of parliament is not being carried out by applying narrow definitions rigidly, since it was the intention to allow farm equipment and machinery into Canada duty free. That is not the case so far as officials of the Department of National Revenue are concerned. My letter goes on to say:

> Some of the articles classified as agricultural machines are feed mixing machines, post drivers, stone pickers and transplanters. These articles are considered to be entitled to duty free entry under tariff item 40924-1 irrespective of whether they are for use by farmers or by others.

Certainly post drivers are not mechanical instruments. Other implements covered under item 40924-1 are not mechanical; yet they are allowed in duty free to be used on farms.

I wish to make a few suggestions to the parliamentary secretary who is piloting the bill through the house. He said on the 14th of November that he was in no position to accept proposals. I wonder whether he would not prefer accepting proposals to voting on amendments, since if we introduce amendments much time would be consumed.

My main interest in this bill relates to item 40924-1. When I was speaking the other night I believe I referred to equipment that is included under item 42711-1. I say there is a relation between the two. I am interested only in the clarification or interpretation of the articles listed in this entry relating to agriculture. It is my only concern with this whole bill. The difficulty has arisen because of the way in which this item was worded. It fails to portray the true intent of parliament to those who are responsible for its interpretation. This has cost the farmers of Canada many thousands of dollars in the payment of duty which parliament never intended them to pay. This affects any individual farmer who tries to bring equipment or machinery into Canada.

The suggestion has been made by officials of the Department of National Revenue that if farmers are not satisfied with the decisions reached as to duty they should appeal to the Customs Tariff Appeal Board. The last item to which I referred involved $300. If a farmer were to come to Ottawa and hire a lawyer it would certainly cost him much more than $300. This is why farmers prefer to pay than to fight these decisions. I maintain that hundreds of farmers have been obliged to pay this duty. Officials of the department, because of the power they have, can force farmers to do so even though they should not really have to meet these charges.

I can imagine what the parliamentary secretary will say after I have sat down. He will tell us he is in no position to change this item because it is related to the Kennedy round agreement. I want to tell him, as I said the other night, that this issue has been fought here for seven years to my knowledge. Former ministers have made promises similar to the one he has made—undertakings that it would be considered by various officials and taken care of. Well, the item with which I have been concerned, and in connection with which I have fought for seven years, has still not been fixed up despite promises by various ministers. This is why I intend, if possible, to propose amendments to this bill. I can tell the parliamentary secretary that what I intend to propose would not result in any change in the revenues of the department. I intend to suggest certain changes in item 40924-1.

I say that the sequence in which the items are listed is confusing to the public and confusing to the officials of the Department of National Revenue. There are 35 articles listed under the entry, all relating, presumably, to agriculture. The 23rd states: "All the foregoing for use on the farm for farm purposes only." I have a question to ask. Why does this particular item appear only two-thirds of the way down the list? Why is it in the 23rd position? Why does it not relate to the ten items which follow it? Is there a presumption that items 1 to 22 could be used for some other purpose but that when used for farm purposes they are allowed entry duty free? What differentiates articles 1 to 22 from articles 24 to 34? I suggest that in reality there is no difference at all.

Any piece of equipment, apparatus or machinery used on a farm today can conceivably be used for some other purpose. It could, for example, be used by industry. This is no argument for the department to put up when we know what the intent of parliament is, namely, that farm machinery shall be allowed entry duty free. The department will not accept an end-user's certificate. What will it accept? Practically nothing. It is concerned only with forcing an individual farmer to pay a duty from which the law is supposed to exempt him.

There is a possibility that item 23 could have been inserted in the wrong place in the list. It could be a printer's mistake. There is also a possibility that at one time the original list only contained 23 items and that item 23 was then the last on the list. This is probably what has happened. Items 24 to 34 may have been additions consequent upon amendments to the original list. If items 24 to 34 were to be treated in the same way as all the others on the list they should have been inserted above the present item 23. There is no reason for treating them differently from the preceding items.

It seems to me that as members of this house we would be abdicating our responsibility if we did not attempt to clarify this entry. Several of us have made representations to the government time and time again, to administrations representing both parties, but no change has taken place. I have stated on many occasions that the entry as it now stands is most confusing to those responsible for its interpretation. How could it be otherwise when one department is responsible for making these lists and another is supposed to interpret what they mean? Proof of what I say can be obtained by reading various decisions of the Tariff Board, and letters in the possession of departmental officials.

There are several ways in which clarification could be achieved. One would be to accept the proposal I made on November 14, 1968 to change the wording of item No. 34 from "All other agricultural implements or agricultural machinery N.O.P" to "All equipment, apparatus, machines and implements N.O.P. for agricultural use." I think this is what the members of the Tariff Board want. Then again, the position of article 23, which reads "All the foregoing for use on the farm for farm purpose only" could be changed, making it the last article in the list of items.

The third proposal I wish to make is that parliament should update the terminology of some of these items. For instance, there is a reference here to wagon boxes, which are no longer used on farms. If this were changed to "truck boxes" a useful purpose would be served. I would refer also to the use of the term "sprinkler irrigation systems". This may have been the original designation, but since that time we have become familiar with such descriptions as "flood irrigation", "ditch irrigation", and so on. If a farmer tries to bring in a motor which could be used on a sprinkler system and lets out, by inadvertence, that it is for use in connection with a flood irrigation system, the department says at once: it is taxable. This shows just how narrow these decisions can get.

I believe such changes as these would bring the entry into conformity with the intention of parliament, help keep the cost of farm produce down to a minimum, and carry out in practice a principle which has been recognized by the farmers of Canada for many years, namely, that farm machinery and equipment should enter this country free of customs duty. At any rate, this is the principle which is presumably recognized. When farmers try to take advantage of it, they find it is not.

I may have some other remarks to make later if I move amendments. However, I should like to give the parliamentary secretary an opportunity to say, if he can do so, that he will have item 23 moved so as to be the last item on the list. This will not change the revenue picture one bit but will make relations with the department more definite. This would clarify it so far as I am concerned. It will give us another opportunity to go after the Department of National Revenue officials about their interpretation. They are very cautious about this. They are very contradictory at times, depending on the article you want to bring in. At one time they will say, "If the item is of an active nature we will allow it in." At another time they will say, "If it is of a passive nature we will allow it in." They use both arguments against you when you try to get these items in. This is something the parliamentary secretary could do without too much disturbance to the bill or to Schedule A. So far as I am concerned it certainly would not change the revenue that the federal treasury gets.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek for his further remarks. Again he has shown how seriously he considers the matter and the problems that he feels are created by certain interpretations that are given. I think he is quite right in suggesting that the explanations I gave at the opening of the committee of the whole stage are in Hansard, and Hansard is a permanent record and he can take it with him to show the officials. In fact, if he thinks it would help I will go along with him.

Mr. McIntosh: I am thinking of the poor member seven years from now who will not know this is in Hansard.

Mr. Gray: I think these matters are recorded permanently in Hansard which is stored in various places. If necessary we could take the reference from Hansard, put it in a time capsule and leave clues as to where it could be found. The proposals made by the hon. member for specific changes in the tariff relate to item 40924-1 and, as we both agreed, this was formerly 409(f). Frankly I think the difficulty facing all of us, no matter what our intentions may be, is that 40924-1 does not appear in any way in this Bill C-131 which this committee of the whole is now studying. The hon. member is suggesting that we make some amendment to 40924-1 but, as I have said before and unless I am seriously mistaken, that item is not before us in any way whatever. However, I should like to reassure him—

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, the parliamentary secretary has said that the item is not before the committee in any way whatever. Does he not admit that item 42711-1, which refers to machines and tools, is the same item as appears in 40924-1?

Mr. Gray: No, I cannot agree with my hon. friend on that point. It is quite a different matter.

Mr. McIntosh: The wording is the same with the exception of "internal combustion tractors," and I am asking the parliamentary secretary to give a definition of what is meant by internal combustion tractors.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I wish I were in the position to give a definition in such a firm and final way as the hon. member asks. It might satisfy the hon. member, but perhaps it might not. If I attempted a definition I do not think it would have the conclusive form that he would wish to have it in his discussions with the officials of the Department of National Revenue.

Unless I am sadly mistaken about the purpose of item 42711-1, first of all, it is not in the way of a renumbering or a re-expressing of what is covered by 40924-1. It deals with a rather different matter. It is part of an attempt that the house is being asked to make to correct a ruling of the Tariff Board which deemed front-end loaders were to be covered under the same tariff item as tractors, and therefore let in duty free. This led to many representations, including some from the opposite side of the house, that this was detrimental to Canadian industry. For example, I think there was a plant in London, Ontario, which was making this equipment. The proposed item 40938-1 is designed to clarify this matter. Item 42711-1 is to make clear that if the tools in question are for the purpose of attachment to the type of tractors in question, but are not for farm purposes, then they are covered by the duty in question.

It is my understanding of the will of parliament, expressed in Schedule A of the Customs Tariff Act, that implements and machinery for farm purposes come in duty free, but that farm equipment is not included in this duty free provision under 40924-1 in quite the way the hon. member would like it to be. This may be something that requires further study and possibly further change, but I conclude by repeating that 40924-1 is not to be found in the bill that is before the committee of the whole in any way whatever.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, the position of the New Democratic party has been stated on the resolution stage and also on the second reading stage by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre. Therefore my remarks will be very brief but pointed.

The first matter I would like to draw to the attention of the parliamentary secretary is that there were three points set forth in the statement by the Consumers' Association of Canada when they presented their brief before the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs.

The first point refers to the desirability of stronger direct representation of consumers in future Canadian trade negotiations. I would assume that the reason for that was the shabby treatment that the different organizations and groups within Canada received prior to the entry by officials of the Department of Trade and Commerce into the Kennedy round negotiations. I think I should put on record that the trade unions were not contacted in any way whatever with regard to their position on the Kennedy round and, to say the least, the representation of the farmers was very slight. I understand they were contacted prior to the negotiations but certainly never during the negotiations. When one thinks of the great changes that took place concerning agricultural produce one hopes that in the future officials of the department will contact these different groups to get their views on these important matters.

The association's second point concerned the regional impact in Canada of relaxation of Canadian trade restrictions, and the third point concerned the importance of continuing efforts to reduce those impediments to international trade which will still remain after the Kennedy round tariff cuts are completed. I would hope the officials would take these points into greater consideration the next time they commence to negotiate with regard to tariff changes.

It would be fair to say that the role of Canada is to develop the principle of free trade and that the GATT agreement was one of the necessary steps to achieve this goal. Tariff protection has been a valuable instrument of nation building, and economic nationalism was necessary to political independence and the creation of a national economy. Now differences arise only with respect to the rate and the manner in which tariff changes should be established, whether they should be unilateral, bilateral or multilateral, or selectively by sector. As a result of the negotiations it appears that Canada, as with other countries, set the pace toward multilateral free trade; yet it has experimented in selective arrangements such as the automotive pact.

There has been a transfer from the dominance of tariff protection to an awareness of the penetration of foreign ownership in Canada. It may be argued that tariff protection created Canadian industries but not Canadian firms, when one appreciates the expansive drive of United States corporations in the late nineteenth century and early twentieth century in developing Canadian industries but not Canadian firms. Instead of creating Canadian entrepreneurship capable of leading Canadian economic growth, the tariff approach has created a branch plant economy. The growth of foreign ownership in Canada has been phenomenal. When one realizes, according to the Watkins report, that in 1964 we had foreign ownership to the value of $27 billion in Canada and that now it probably has soared to around $35 billion, one can appreciate the immensity of the problem. When one appreciates the United States penetration of the Canadian economy and understands that 80 per cent of foreign ownership has been on the part of United States companies, one realizes this is a very important matter. When one appreciates that in the auto industry they have almost 100 per cent control, in the chemical industry 78 per cent control and in the rubber industry 77 per cent control, this underlines the importance of the problem at this time.

When I read the statement of the Prime Minister over the week end and his assessment of the just society to date as well as his almost total acknowledgement of treating our economy as an integrated economy with the United States I was very disappointed. When I hear the statements of cabinet ministers with regard to their continentalist views it makes me realize they have become apostolates of Canadian nationalism instead of apostles of Canadian nationalism. They have denounced and set aside Canada's number one nationalist, Walter Gordon. They have paid no attention to date to the Watkins report. They have failed to heed the serious warnings of the Toronto Star. I might say that the Toronto Star has taken a very active part in pointing out to Canadians the serious problem we have with regard to foreign ownership. In fact they have prepared a pamphlet which all Canadians should have setting forth the danger of the penetration that has been made in the economic sector of our economy. One fears that once they have controlled the economic sector the time is short with regard to any political independence.

It is very difficult to find at the present time one cabinet minister who is a Canadian nationalist. I have only found two Liberal members, the hon. member for Scarborough and the hon. member for York North, who have definitely stated they are Canadian nationalists. I notice that the Minister of Defence Production has made an attempt to participate in this debate and therefore he may get up to say that he is a Canadian nationalist. However, I have not found one cabinet minister who has definitely stated he is a nationalist with regard to our economy. Having had no success with the cabinet ministers, I shall ask the parliamentary secretary just what his position is with regard to this very important problem. There are quite a few parliamentary secretaries. I notice two more in the house at the moment. Perhaps they could set forth their position with regard to Canadian economic nationalism because of the seriousness of the problem. I shall also ask the parliamentary secretary to speak a little more fully with regard to that multinational corporation, the auto industry. I fully appreciate that he comes from a riding that has within it automotive businesses. He appreciates the penetration of United States companies in this field.

Last night I mentioned that it seems to me to be a very sad and sorry situation that in Canada, which is in the position of developing from having a population of 20 million people to having a population of probably 35 million people at the end of the century, we must, as the Prime Minister said in his statement last night, let the automotive business go to our friends in the United States. When I think of countries like Sweden, which has a population of between 7 million and 8 million people, having a very thriving auto business it makes me rather sick to think that we have defaulted in this particular area and have undertaken no research and development to establish a separate automotive industry which could provide Canadians with a car that would suit Canadian conditions and climate and also build up our export trade. This is a very important factor. I am happy to see the Minister of Defence Production agrees with me. He probably will persuade his cabinet colleagues that this is an area in which we should become very active. When we consider that we will double our population by the year 2000 it would seem that this is a field in which we should start working right away.

I might mention the experience some of us had in respect of the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs with regard to the Kennedy round and the chemical industry.

Representatives of that industry appeared before the committee and the problems that are being experienced by it were set forth. I might tell my colleagues in the house just what the problem in the chemical industry is. The chemical industry has developed to such a state that it has gone beyond the status of being nationalist. When an order is received for a chemical they now use a computer. Information is fed into the computer concerning the material, labour and transportation costs, and taxes. Out of the computer comes the answer concerning where the order should be placed. It indicates that in an economy like ours where there is a domination of foreign ownership in the chemical field no concern is given to the need for Canadian industry to put a drive on in the export market in the chemical field. This applies in many fields. This situation is causing many of us concern.

When we consider the immense corporations in the United States and the research and development programs they have, we realize that this leaves the branch plant economy of Canada in a very awkward and weak position with regard to a drive on exports. This is the situation in respect of developing our Canadian economy. The key to economic growth is the export market. When we have to depend on United States firms to do the research and development and when these United States firms are creating branch plants as branches which will serve the domestic market and not the export market, this is an indication of the weakened position we in Canada are in.

I might also relate to the parliamentary secretary an experience I had on a plane while coming to Ottawa. I met a man who is involved in the advertising business. He went to his bank to borrow money for expansion purposes. He said the amount required was modest. The bank refused him the money to expand his plant. Later he had a call from the bank manager. I notice that the parliamentary whip is very attentive because at one time he was a bank manager. What really happened was that the bank manager invited him back at a later date and asked him whether he would be interested in selling his plant to a group of Americans. The bank manager said that they were prepared to finance the group of Americans who were prepared to pay in the neighbourhood of $2 million for this Canadian company.

Here we have a case of a Canadian entrepreneur wishing to borrow a meagre amount of money for plant expansion in his particular business who is refused by the bank and then later invited back by the bank manager who attempts to persuade him that he should sell his Canadian business to a United States group in which case the savings of the Canadian people would be used by the Canadian bank to finance the purchase.

This mood and attitude have pervaded the minds not only of those who occupy the government benches but the minds of other people in Canada. We must do something about this now. It is all very well to talk about trade problems, but we must appreciate some of the practical problems which face Canadian businessmen today. These people need to be encouraged by the government to develop a Canadian economy controlled by Canadians. We need a research and development program supported and assisted by the government in order to increase Canadian exports to the point that we are not dependent on these branch plant operations of United States companies.

The statements by the parliamentary secretary and other hon. members in respect of non-tariff barriers are absolutely accurate. There are problems in respect of quotas and border taxes. The hon. member for Wellington outlined the problems caused by a two-price system in some countries. I was a little surprised that he drew attention to the central electrical authority in England which, according to officials of Canadian General Electric, refused a bid by Canadian General Electric in respect of heavy electrical equipment for use in England.

We hear representations and allegations during the committee stage of the Kennedy Round negotiations against Sweden. It was rather striking that during one meeting the vice president of Canadian General Electric cried about barriers established by England and Sweden, because in an address by the president of Canadian General Electric, which was included in a pamphlet distributed to members of the committee, he asked for special treatment by the Ontario hydro commission in respect of equipment they provided. That company was asking for the very thing it was complaining about other companies doing. This is a part of the problem we are experiencing. Canadian General Electric should put its own house in order not only in this field but in the field of pricing. We are aware of the difficulties this company has encountered in respect of the fixing of prices in other countries.

We also have special treatment for Canadian manufacturers, and I am not talking about defence contracts or decrying them. All I am saying is that we do have these problems in our own jurisdiction and that they should be studied in depth by the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs in order that we can be sure that trade officials when they bargain with these people are well informed about the feelings and views of government members. I ask the parliamentary secretary, who is a very able gentleman, to make known his personal views in respect of these very important problems.

Mr. Otto: Mr. Chairman, I intended to make a few remarks at the resolution stage. However, being a co-operative fellow and having been asked by the parliamentary secretary to wait until today, I have done so. I should also like to direct attention to the fact that at the resolution stage comments were made by members of the opposition to the effect that the minister was not here. In view of the manner in which the parliamentary secretary has handled this whole shebang, and in view of the fact he seems to have knowledge of this department at his fingertips, I have the feeling that, much to the chagrin of the minister, the minister has not been missed. Let me compliment the parliamentary secretary for a wonderful job.

Mr. McIntosh: You are not bucking for a call, are you?

Mr. Otto: My comments will be restricted to those remarks about the Kennedy round negotiations which seem to indicate they are the cause of all our customs tariff problems. The parliamentary secretary mentioned that the advantage we obtained last year in our export position was due to the Kennedy round negotiations. I take some issue with that statement. They had a lot to do with it but, as he admitted, the automotive pact had a tremendous effect.

No Canadian wants to be a hewer of wood and drawer of water. We all want to see Canadian industry manufacture goods and export them. We want other nations to accept our manufactured goods tariff free or at low tariffs. The purpose of tariffs is to protect jobs. Customs tariffs account for about 15 per cent or 16 per cent of our national revenue, and I sometimes wonder whether we are still interested in the original idea of protecting jobs or in gaining revenue. There is always a danger of such a shift in purpose.

This bill is partly the result of the Kennedy round negotiations. We have heard members on both sides of the house refer to problems in respect of the glove, shoe and salt industries. These people are constantly at the heels of officials who attempt to negotiate tariffs on a national basis. This is political activity. It seems to me that the Kennedy round negotiations were intended to ensure that eventually every country would produce those articles it could produce most efficiently. There will always be barriers because of physical situations. Exports and imports are restricted not only because of a desire to protect certain industries but to attain a financial balance. This plays a great part in the over-all picture.

The European economic market has been in existence for some time, and it was hoped that trade problems in that area would by this time have been solved. We all know they still have problems in France. Potato growers there do not agree with the negotiations carried out by their administrators. Other industries in the European common market find themselves in positions far short of their expectations so far as trade patterns are concerned. The original concept was that countries which could most efficiently produce certain products would produce those products. This has not been accomplished.

In long term trading plans we cannot rely to a great extent on the Kennedy round negotiations. We are not all angels and we have certain established interests. When we consider the automotive pact we must realize that it is a plan to create a balance of trade in this industry between Canada and the United States. It does not take into account the dollar balance. What we are saying is that we will accept automotive parts from the United States tariff free as long as the United States will accept an equivalent amount of trade. This is what I have been advocating for the last ten years. We must gear our export-import plans to a volume balance rather than a dollar balance.

Let me give an example. We export each year $28 million or $30 million in reserve gas. This means we have sold to the United States or others a reserve of billions of cubic feet of gas. It also means that we have imported $28 million or $30 million of manufactured goods, radios, and so on. As long as we have the natural resources, electrical energy, aluminum, gas and oil, we can maintain our balance of trade and still be largely unemployed. So that is not the secret. The secret is a balance of trade in man-hours. In other words, we should say to the world: We will allow imports tariff free of so many man-hours as long as we can export the equivalent amount.

That is what the automotive pact is. The strange thing is that although the automotive pact, as the parliamentary secretary said himself, has meant an increase since 1963 from $300 million to $4 billion, we seem hesitant to expand this policy. I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary or one of the ministers can say why we cannot include in the automotive agreement tractors, outboard motors and motorcycles. All these items take about the same amount of skill to manufacture and the industries pay about the same wages. Why cannot we expand the automotive pact still further to other industries?

Two years ago the minister of forestry cried out for another type of pact for the forest industry. Surely by expanding the automotive pact, initially engulfing those industries which are closely allied and then by arrangement allowing other industries to come under the same type of agreement, we would find ourselves on the road to a possible solution of this problem. We will not always enjoy a balance of trade. We will not always be able to export to other countries and solve our financial problems in this way.

GATT was mentioned, the general agreement on tariffs and trade. It is not commonly known that the members of this agreement spend a great deal of time trying to find loopholes in it. I wonder about the value of this agreement, when one considers that we have fantastic transportation problems from coast to coast. In Germany, for instance, what might be called a quasi-subsidization of the transportation business allows the barge system on the canals to be used so that industry anywhere in Germany is, for all practical purposes, right on the seacoast. There is practically no transportation cost involved. These are the things the members of this agreement worry about. The agreement is not working out as well as we thought it would.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I should like to emphasize this point to the parliamentary secretary. He has already pointed out that we have an idea of what constitutes a very good agreement, namely, the automotive pact. Can we not expand this policy and use the same idea with other industries or relate other industries to the concept of export versus import in man-hours and not dollar volume?

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 2 to 15 inclusive agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall schedule A carry?

On schedule A—

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, just before the bill is carried I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary would let me know when I may have a meeting with his officials.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I would be very happy to arrange a meeting at the earliest possible time. I suppose we are not really able to recognize the fact that at this stage we have assistants on the floor before us, but perhaps I might have a short consultation with them right now as to when the hon. member will have a further chance to pursue his proposals in a meaningful way.

The Chairman: Shall schedule A carry?

Schedule agreed to.

Schedules B to H inclusive agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I know it was agreed that we would take item No. 25 next, but since the parliamentary secretary will be making a statement on this matter, perhaps it would be agreeable to the house that we move to the next item, which would be private members' business, and start with item No. 25 at eight o'clock.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That is a very helpful suggestion, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps we could agree to regard it as six o'clock and proceed with private members' business.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could make a suggestion with respect to the rights of individuals. We want to make sure that the member concerned with the bill is present and knows of this situation. If he is here and ready to proceed, this is fine.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I understand that my colleague the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Cyr) will be dealing with the next bill, and he has about him all the appearance of readiness.

Mr. Jamieson: He is warming up in the bullpen.

Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Co.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that we proceed to private members' hour and adjourn at ten minutes to seven o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No, at seven o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being six o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills, public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

BONAVENTURE AND GASPÉ TELEPHONE COMPANY, LIMITED

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (for Mr. LeBlanc, Rimouski) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-12, respecting the Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company, Limited.

He said:

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this bill is not new. Indeed, the same bill under the No. S-33 was passed at the other place during the last session, after having been studied by the standing committee on transport and communications. After first reading in this house, as indicated in Votes and Proceedings for February 28 1968, it was placed on the order paper for second reading on February 28, 1968. However, that debate was not held because the houses were dissolved on April 23 last.

At this point, I should like to quote the explanatory note, of this bill:

> The purpose of this bill is to resolve doubts as to whether the company may dispose of its undertaking to a company incorporated under or subject to the laws of any province of Canada.

The company was incorporated on April 12 1907. Under section 11 of chapter 64 of the statutes for 1906-07, that company was forbidden to merge. Under section 5 of the act respecting The Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company, Limited, namely chapter 86 of the statutes for 1955, the constitution of that company was amended. Indeed, under that act, disposal of the undertaking is allowed subject to the approval of the shareholders and that of the Canadian Transport Commission.

We feel that the act passed in 1955 does not clearly grant the company the power to sell or dispose of its assets to a company which does not fall within the jurisdiction of the Canadian parliament. The company to which

The Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company, Limited wishes to sell its assets is the Quebec Telephone Company which was incorporated under a Quebec charter.

Mr. Speaker, doubts concerning the power to sell or dispose of its assets to a company which does not fall within the jurisdiction of the Canadian parliament would be resolved if the following sentence were added to section 11 of the constitution:

> Such sale or disposal, whether of the whole or any part of the said undertaking, rights and properties, may be so made by the company to any company or person, whether within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada or not, authorized to carry on a business included within the objects or powers of the company.

That alteration is very simple since its sole purpose is to grant in fact to the company the power to dispose of its assets in favour of the Quebec Telephone Company which holds a provincial charter.

For your information, Mr. Speaker, it is important to point out that since 1953 that company has been under the full control of the Quebec Telephone Company, since the latter holds approximately 99.9 per cent of the shares. The areas served by the latter company are all located in Quebec or close to it, and the managements of the two companies merged in 1952. Actually, the staff of the Quebec Telephone Company looks after the operations of the said company. In fact, there is some overlapping and needless expenditures.

It is very important, therefore, to recall that Quebec Telephone is acquiring the assets of the said company in order to avoid needless expenditures resulting from the partial overlapping of the services of the two companies.

We therefore ask hon. members to consider that bill kindly and to agree to its being considered in committee before third reading.

• (5:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, before the hon. member sits down may I ask him what there is in this bill that is different from the bill amending the 1907 act which was passed in 1955? As I understand it, at the time the company was almost totally owned by Quebec Telephone. That was in 1953. Then an amendment was made for the purpose of the sales agreement, with certain conditions in it. What has changed since 1953 or 1955 that would make this amendment more acceptable than the 1955 amendment?

[Translation]

Mr. Cyr: Mr. Speaker, according to the 1955 amendment, this does not seem enough, since the company could not sell its network. In fact, in section 11 of the 1907 statutes, we can read the following:

> Except as provided by section 13 of this act, the company, or any company whose line of telephone or telegraph is leased by the company or under its control, shall not at any time be amalgamated with any company possessing powers similar to those of the company; and any such amalgamation and any arrangement for making a common fund or pooling the earnings or receipts of the company, or of any company whose line of telephone or telegraph is leased by the company or under its control, with any company possessing powers similar to those of the company, shall be absolutely void.

The purpose of this bill, therefore, is to allow the Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company Limited to dispose of all its assets and to amalgamate with the Quebec Telephone Company. I should like to draw to the attention of this house the fact that I am a subscriber of the Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company Limited in Chandler. Since 1953, all business has been done with the Quebec Telephone Company. Only the name still remains, since the Quebec Telephone Company holds 99.9 per cent of the shares. Therefore, this is merely to simplify book-keeping and the reports which this company has to make to the federal and provincial governments. It is simply intended to simplify operations.

[English]

Mr. Peters: May I ask a second question, Mr. Speaker? Is it not true that the Bonaventure and Gaspé Company is now wholly owned by Quebec Telephone, that Quebec Telephone really does not exist either as it is a subsidiary of Anglo-Canadian, that Anglo-Canadian does not exist in the telephone field but is totally owned by General Telephone of the United States, and that the purpose of this bill really is to give General Telephone a Canadian charter in the telecommunications field?

[Translation]

Mr. Cyr: Mr. Speaker, I think the purpose of referring this bill to a committee of the house is to allow us to examine the operations of the Quebec Telephone Company, and I think the hon. member would then be able to obtain all the information he wants.

[English]

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the hon. member for Gaspé explaining the purpose of the bill. This was rather repetitious because, as the hon. member himself said, the same statements have been made on other occasions and in other places because the bill has been before parliament before but for one reason or another has not been proceeded with.

I took the liberty of reviewing the statements which were made in the Senate on February 1, 1968, by Hon. Leopold Langlois who sponsored the bill there, and there are two or three interesting quotations with respect to the bill which I should like to read because of the connection they have with the amendment made in 1955. Senator Langlois, as reported at page 813 of the Senate committee debates, in introducing the bill had this to say:

> It is a matter of establishing clearly the power of The Bonaventure and Gaspe Telephone Company Limited, incorporated by a special act of the Parliament of Canada, to sell its telephone network to Quebec Telephone, a company incorporated in accordance with and subject to the laws of the province of Quebec.

There are other similar references in his remarks to the Senate transport and communications committee which examined the bill, Mr. Speaker.

One gleans from these general references that this is a small, locally owned telephone company. In view of the question asked by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) a moment ago about the ownership of the company, I am convinced that some misleading took place when the bill was explained on other occasions. Senator Langlois, who pointed out that "it is a matter of establishing" a relationship between the Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company and the Quebec Telephone Company, should clearly have set out and established the intricate ownership structure that exists involving this company, two or three other larger companies and a massive United States corporation operating in the telephone field and in a variety of other fields. I expect this matter will be explored in greater detail by one of my colleagues.

It may be, Mr. Speaker, that the sponsors of the bill both in this session and last have felt it not germane to the subject to relate the fact that this company is owned by a U.S. corporation, but in view of the concern that has been expressed on many occasions by members of the government as to foreign ownership and control of the Canadian economy, I think the point is relevant and should have been put forward for our consideration. That is so unless there was, of course, a desire on the part of the government itself, which may become more evident as we proceed, to abandon its position on Canadian ownership and in effect proceed to sell out Canadian interests in favour of an expansion of foreign ownership and control of our economy. I can see no other reason for the omission of this fact from the explanation given of this bill in the first place.

If I may proceed further with my references to Senator Langlois' comments, he went on to say:

> The special 1907 act which set up The Bonaventure and Gaspe Telephone Company Limited—and I would refer honourable senators to chapter 64 of the 1906-1907 statutes—

These next words are very important.

> —was amended by chapter 86 of the 1955 statutes in order, among other things, to empower the company to sell its business under the following conditions: first, the sale has to be approved by a meeting of shareholders called together for this purpose, at which meeting two-thirds of the shares issued must be represented by shareholders present in person or by proxy; second, the sale cannot take effect unless first approved by the Board of Transport Commissioners which, as the honourable senators know, has since become the Canadian Transport Commission.

This, Mr. Speaker, by Senator Langlois' declaration, was the purpose of the 1955 amendment, namely, to provide an arrangement whereby the company could sell its business under certain stated conditions that the senator enumerated.

I have obtained the House of Commons debates for 1955, Mr. Speaker, wherein this 1955 amendment was previously dealt with. Mr. Bona Arsenault, the then member for Bonaventure, sponsored the bill on that occasion. In his introductory remarks on second reading of the bill nowhere did he make a single reference to the conditions that Senator Langlois related and which appeared in Senate Hansard on February 1 of this year. Whether Mr. Arsenault just did not realize what was actually involved in the bill, felt that it was not an important matter, or wanted deliberately not to mention it, I do not know. However, it does seem to me passing strange that last February an hon. senator told the Senate that the main purpose of the amendment in 1955 was to permit the company to sell its assets under certain conditions, yet when we see what the sponsor of the bill had to say in 1955 there is no mention of these conditions. It seems the tune has changed over the years.

As reported at page 1952 of Hansard for March 11, 1955, Mr. Arsenault said:

> For this reason it is felt desirable to have the name in French as well as in English, as is provided in the bill.

According to Mr. Arsenault, that was one of the purposes of the 1955 amendment. Another purpose was this:

> The company also requests authority to increase its capital stock from $100,000, divided into shares of $100 each, to $2 million, divided into shares of a par value of $25 each.

A little farther on he said:

> By virtue of this bill, which will increase to $2 million the capital stock of the Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company, that company will be able to carry out a program of development and modernization—

And so on. Then Mr. Arsenault says that he is pleased to introduce the bill, which provides for an increase in the share capital of the company so that it can go ahead with some development programs. Mr. Arsenault's earlier remarks were actually in French and I have been reading the translation. He then went on to reiterate what he had said in English. He said that the bill had to do with the Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company which was doing business in Quebec. The purpose of the bill was to seek an increase in its capital stock in order to increase certain facilities, and so on. But, as I say, Mr. Speaker, there is not a single word about the company selling its assets, which Senator Langlois told the Senate committee last session was the main purpose of the 1955 amendment. In fact, even if the amendment of 1955 had provided for the company to sell its assets and so on, according to Senator Langlois the business had already been sold in 1953. So this sale was two years old before the company even came to parliament asking for permission to sell.

Senator Langlois says that in 1953 the fixed assets of the company were worth so much and in 1966 they were worth so much more. Their value had increased. According to Senator Langlois the Quebec Telephone Company bought the stock of Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company, Limited. Then we are told by the same senator that in 1955 a bill was brought to the house in order to authorize the company to sell its assets to somebody else when, in fact, it had already sold them two years earlier. Probably the company wanted to validate what had been done. But why go through the process of misleading the Senate and the house about the situation? Why be secretive about ownership? These are valid questions to ask.

I know that the hon. member for Gaspé does not have the answers to these questions. He cannot read the mind of Senator Langlois and learn why he did not tell the Senate the full facts. He cannot search the mind of the former member for Bonaventure and determine why certain things were done that ended in the way Senator Langlois described.

The hon. member says we should refer this bill to a committee and try to obtain all relevant information there. I tried to find the relevant information for the year 1955. I tried to find a transcript of the committee proceedings in connection with this matter when it came before the house committee in 1955. I learned something very interesting. Not one word of the proceedings of the Senate or House of Commons committees with regard to this matter was transcribed. Undoubtedly the committees met in 1955 since they reported the bill back to the house with amendments, I believe. Undoubtedly witnesses were heard. Yet no transcript was produced to enlighten us. As I say, there is not a shred of evidence, not one iota of evidence as to what happened in either committee in 1955. If there had been a Senate committee transcript or a House of Commons committee transcript perhaps we might be in a better position to determine the full ramifications of this bill, and to know its antecedents when it goes to the appropriate committee of this house.

So far I have not mentioned anything about our attitude toward foreign ownership of our industries. It is clear that the company in question is foreign owned. Facts about the company must be dug up by individual members. I am not complaining about that because that is part of the function of members of parliament. We must inquire into the wherefores and whys of any bill that is before us and we must not take as the gospel truth any declarations or statements made about it. A tremendous amount of information may be unravelled in this way about the ownership of this company. All this will have to be explored in greater detail later.

As I said, this company is foreign owned and controlled. In the last few years, particularly when Mr. Pearson was prime minister, we saw a tremendous increase in the degree of foreign ownership of Canadian industry. Some say that 75 per cent of our economy is in foreign hands and being controlled by people who do not live in this country, are not citizens of the country and have no allegiance to Canada. As a result their decisions are not always based on what is good for Canada, and in many instances they are removed from any effectual control by the government of Canada. This is a disgraceful state of affairs.

At one time I thought this country was moving in the direction of greater Canadian ownership of our assets and industries. I thought our government would make us feel proud of Canada and would assist us in developing a high degree of pride in the economic and social life of Canada. Now that is to be changed. There is a good prospect that our present Prime Minister and his cabinet have either sold us out completely or intend to sell out Canada's interests so far as control of our own economy is concerned.

Although this is a private bill this company's business will touch many Canadians. Although many in this country feel that we should own our own industries and our own economy, the government seems to be moving in the opposite direction. I should not be surprised to hear the Prime Minister and his government bring in a bill which would permit the insurance companies and various financial institutions of this nation to do as they darn well please without first coming to parliament to have their actions ratified. It seems to me that the direction in which the government is heading will lead to foreign control of our Canadian economy. This is nothing more than a sell-out of our economic life and it is disgraceful.

May I point out, Mr. Speaker, that the Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company, Limited is not just a little, local rural company in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must interrupt the hon. member to inform him that his time has expired, unless he has unanimous consent to continue beyond his allotted time.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, one of the most important questions facing Canada today is the question of foreign ownership of our resources. If I had any theological training I would cite in full the story of Jacob and Esau to illustrate my point. It will be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that Esau sold his heritage for a mess of pottage. If ever any people in the world are selling their heritage of ownership for a mess of pottage, they are the people of Canada. I might even say that in Saskatchewan Mr. Thatcher is selling our heritage for a mess of potash, but I am not too interested at the moment in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Jamieson: Whose boss was Jacob?

Mr. Gilbert: I note that the Minister of Defence Production is here. If I were to use a Newfoundland term I would say we are in a fine kettle of fish. I am sure that after I sit down he will relate his experiences with regard to foreign ownership as it has penetrated the province of Newfoundland and will certainly support the stand taken on this side of the house with regard to this very important bill.

You will notice, Mr. Speaker, that Bill S-12 is an act respecting the Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company, Limited. The hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. LeBlanc) has set forth the purpose of the measure in the explanatory note. It is, he says, to resolve doubts as to whether the company may dispose of its undertaking to a company incorporated under or subject to the laws of any province of Canada. The explanation is a simplistic one.

As I studied the affairs of this company together with the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) and the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) we came across a revelation which was dramatic, to say the least. We found that this company formed part of a chain of ownership which extended to the Quebec Telephone Company, the Anglo-Canadian Telephone Company and across the international border to the General Telephone and Electronics Corporation in the United States. As the hon. member for Skeena said, it may be our duty to trace ownership. But one can appreciate the difficulties in this connection especially when one is examining the structure of a company such as this. We had to go to the Financial Post survey of industries, 1967. Then we had to turn to the section dealing with public utilities. To ascertain final ownership we had recourse to Moody's Public Utility Manual. The relevant entry extends from page 1151 to page 1160, nine pages setting forth the ownership of General Telephone and Electronics Corporation.

To get back to the Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company, may I first of all refer to the question of ownership. The first link is the Quebec Telephone Company. In the Financial Post survey it is stated that the head office of Quebec Telephone is situated on Rue St. Jean, Rimouski. The company was incorporated in 1927 and the board of directors is constituted as follows: Hon. J. A. Brillant, chairman, Rimouski, Quebec; Jacques Brillant, president, Montreal; Norman Gendreau, executive vice president and treasurer; B. A. Bénéteau, executive vice president; J. R. Bernier, vice president and comptroller; Maurice Martin, vice president, public relations, Rimouski, Quebec; Claude Pratte, Quebec City; H. A. Sewell, St. Catharines, Ontario; J. J. Clerkin, Jr. Darien, Connecticut; J. J. Douglas, Scarsdale, New York, vice-president, general counsel and secretary; Yvon Côté, Julien Thuot.

You will notice, Mr. Speaker, that among these ten or so directors there are eight Canadians and two Americans. There is no objection to that; it shows there is a Canadian majority on the board.

The report tells us that a subsidiary of Quebec Telephone is the Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company, which is wholly owned and serves the south shore of the Gaspé Peninsula, Quebec. So this is the first link in the chain of ownership. We then set about further investigation and found that Quebec Telephone is itself a subsidiary of the Anglo-Canadian Telephone Company whose head office is situated at 715 Victoria Square, Montreal. This is a holding company whose subsidiaries own telephone systems in British Columbia, Quebec and the Dominican Republic, and supervise publication of telephone directories and installation of services for telephone companies in Canada. The company is itself a subsidiary of General Telephone and Electronics Corporation which acquired all of its class A shares in 1965 through an exchange offer of two and a half General Telephone shares for each class A share of Anglo-Canadian. The class A shares have since been redesignated as common shares. This is what we read in a lengthy paragraph setting forth the situation with regard to ownership. Then we find a list of the directors of Anglo-Canadian Telephone Company as follows: J. J. Douglas, president; D. C. Power, L. H. Warner, J. J. Clerkin, Jr., New York; T. A. Boyd, Bronxville, N. Y.; Aristide Cousineau, O. B. Thornton, A. S. Torrey, Montreal; C. H. McLean, Vancouver; Jacques Brillant, Rimouski, Que.; vice president, T. S. Gary; vice president, secretary and treasurer, Cameron Hough.

Again, we notice a mixture of United States and Canadian directors. I think it is clear as I complete the chain of ownership that ownership eventually falls into United States hands. We found in the first instance a large representation of Canadian directors and a small representation of United States directors. In the second link we find a 50-50 split with regard to directors. My hon. friend from Timiskaming has suggested that some directors may be dummy directors. I can only say we shall have to investigate this when the bill is referred to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs. Experience has shown that many companies do make use of dummy directors. For practical purposes, these people are men of straw. I am sure that the hon. member for Rimouski, who is a man of great integrity, will make the position clear when he addresses the standing committee.

When we get to the third chain of title, Mr. Speaker, we cross the Canadian border into the United States, the country to the south of us which has tremendous holdings in the Canadian economy. I spoke briefly on this subject earlier today to apprise hon. members of the tremendous penetration which has been made into the Canadian economy. If we keep repeating this it will make members on the government side appreciate the immensity of the problem, and help get them away from this continentalist "kick"—this tendency to integration with the United States economy. If ever there was a time to speak about Canadian nationalism, it is now. We should not be sold down the river by the smooth and sleek methods used by United States corporations in penetrating the Canadian economy.

As we cross the border and get into the state of New York we have the General Telephone and Electronics Corporation. They are what I would describe as the first owners of this little company situated in Gaspé. When you look at this publication, Moody's Public Utility Manual, you discover it takes ten pages to give the financial structure and operations of this American corporation, and then you appreciate, Mr. Speaker, that this company is one that really needs a great deal of investigation because it has developed not only vertically, and taken in other utilities throughout the United States and Canada, but it has developed horizontally and is acquiring interests in various types of manufacturing.

When you have vertical and horizontal integration it becomes like the tentacles of an octopus, and we are in a very serious plight in Canada with regard to this type of operation.

This type of development has been of recent date in the United States. At the turn of the century man looked upon himself as a great enterpriser. He went out and conquered a particular area of business. He staked it out for himself. He worked hard and managed to get other workers to work with him. It was a form of partnership in the development of a particular industry. One rather admired the courage and initiative that man had in the early part of the twentieth century.

But having developed that, he became sophisticated in his type of ownership. There is a certain greed that penetrates the heart and mind of man. Once he has tasted success there are no limitations. He has to go on and on, like the man with the barns, who just kept on growing larger and larger crops, and who, when he asked, what he should do, received the answer, "Build bigger barns." Corporations are like this. They have become bigger and bigger. Not content to stay in their own backyard in their own country, they have invaded other countries.

If you are going to be a successful entrepreneur these days you have to have it both ways. You have to have the input and the output, as we say. You have to have the natural resource flowing from one country. You have to have the manufacturing process, and then you have to acquire the markets to market the goods. This has been the history of these entrepreneurs of today. This is why we call these companies multinational corporations. They not only want to control the product, but also its input and output.

This is what the General Telephone and Electronics Corporation is doing in the United States. It has now moved across the border into Canada and is acquiring ownership of Canadian companies. If I were to read into the record the financial structure and physical structure of this company it would take me a couple of hours, and I am sure members would not want me to do that. They would prefer that I summarize it. The corporation is a holding company. On December 31, 1967, it controlled more than 30 subsidiary domestic operating telephone companies, serving 7,728,-992 telephones through 2,562 exchanges in 34 states, and also controls various manufacturing companies. That just indicates the magnitude of the company.

In one of the paragraphs it says:

Company together with a controlled subsidiary (Anglo-Canadian Telephone Co....) controls 50.24 per cent of British Columbia Telephone Co., and 53.07 per cent of Quebec-Telephone with 855,657 and 126,424 telephones as at December 31, 1967, respectively. Anglo-Canadian also controls telephone company in Dominican Republic.

I had not mentioned that, Mr. Speaker. Not only has it invaded Canada but it has gone south of the border, right down into the Dominican Republic. I hope when the ministers went on their safari to South America they appreciated that they were going into countries this particular company had invaded. When I use the word invaded I use it in a financial sense.

Mr. Whelan: Not like the Russians.

Mr. Gilbert: I don't use it in the Russian sense, as the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Whelan) says. I should say that the hon. member is well aware of this problem because he comes from a very humble background, like myself—

Mr. Jamieson: He can't afford a phone.

Mr. Gilbert: —and his success has been dependant upon his own initiative. I rather admire him because he is a chip off the old block, so to speak. I feel the same, having come from very humble surroundings, and having attained the high position we have today I think he and I should have a certain justification of pride. So, I rather enjoy the interruption of the hon. member, because I think he deserves credit for the position he has attained. The unfortunate part, Mr. Speaker, is that the government has directed him into a portfolio which has little or no relationship to the background the parliamentary secretary possesses. He comes from an automotive area, and the government has him in the fisheries department. One wonders why it would make such a serious mistake.

If I had time I would set forth the list of the directors and a list of the property which this company owns, but I notice my time is running out. In conclusion I should say that it could be fairly said that this company is American owned and dominated, and I think hon. members should be made aware of this when considering Bill S-12 respecting The Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company, Limited.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to this debate, and as a new member of parliament I am fascinated by the revelations that have been made. I guess I am a bit naïve, but I took at face value the explanatory note printed with this bill, which says:

The purpose of this bill is to resolve doubts as to whether the company may dispose of its undertaking to a company incorporated under or subject to the laws of any province of Canada.

This bill has bearing on a very important Canadian industry. As hon. members, know, Canadians are among the most avid telephone users in the world, so anything affecting an industry of such great importance to Canadians should be of great interest to members of this house. It was interesting for me to note during the debate that what we are discussing virtually amounts to a monopoly situation.

This is a monopoly industry in almost every area of the country with which I am familiar, and possibly throughout the world. We have seen cases of many small telephone companies having been gradually absorbed by larger, perhaps more aggressive or more efficient telephone companies to the ultimate benefit of the companies and also perhaps the public, but not necessarily so. We have seen phone rates increase year after year. Services in some instances have improved, and in others they have not. British Columbia, the province from which I come, as you know has had similar experiences in respect of a monopoly telephone situation. Although it is called, and is incorporated as the B.C. Telephone Company, it is owned and directed by persons and companies that were not resident in our province. One of its leading managing directors, Mr. Cyrus McLean of Vancouver, has been most active in its management. Since the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) mentioned General Telephone's ownership in the Dominican Republic system it might be interesting to note that when the marines landed in the Dominican Republic to remove Juan Bosch and his group from there some years ago, one of our greatest fears was in respect of one of our Canadians who was down there doing business at that time, none other than Cyrus J. McLean of the B.C. Telephone Company.

The hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Cyr) suggested that possibly the reason this bill should have our support is the fact that it is already 99.4 per cent owned by the Quebec Telephone Company, and that in any event the passage of this bill might avoid some serious overlapping. He did not go into any detail concerning what would be involved in this overlapping, or how it would be occasioned. If my arithmetic is correct only a small part of it, .6 per cent, seems to be owned by the original company. It would seem to me that if there is only a .6 per cent overlap, this is not really very serious. I believe that in many of our other industries, notably the insurance industry, the overlapping would be perhaps in excess of this by a much larger amount.

What I was concerned about, as this discussion unrolled, was the secretiveness with which the various tiers of the hierarchy of ownership have been kept from us. I know that some members, especially in this party, have been diligent in searching this out, but I humbly suggest that when a bill such as the present one comes before the house, which has intense international ramifications, the members of this house should be acquainted with the background, and given much more information than has been provided to date. I do not believe nearly enough information has been passed on to me in order that I might make a reasonable response in respect of this bill.

There is information about the various levels of ownership; additionally, I believe, there should be a little more background information made available to members who wish to discuss this matter intelligently. One question which might be asked is, will this legislation ultimately be in the interests of the residents of Gaspé? If I were assured that this is so, I am very certain I could support this bill with a great deal of pleasure. I am told that two thirds of the share membership, or their proxies must be present at a meeting in order for its sale to go forward. We have no figures concerning how many shares are held by one person. It would appear to me that this is the type of information we should have here, so that there would be a complete revelation of the facts behind this whole thing.

Another matter which disturbs me greatly is that it appears from the information revealed in this debate that parliament is being asked to suffer the indignity of facilitating a sale that has already been effected. If this is the case, then it seems to me that perhaps all the revelations necessary for a sensible discussion are irrelevant, and that all parliament is being asked to do is spend its time in rubber stamping something already accomplished some years ago.

Many companies disguise their ownership. They do this to keep from public scrutiny their various plans and their various directors. Directorships, as revealed by John Porter, tend to be overlapping in Canada with the same people pulling the strings in respect to the major corporations all across our land. The Canadian public is becoming increasingly critical of a trend that has been going on for some years, which was referred to by the previous speaker. The Watkins report, tabled a year ago, was a shocking document. It certainly alarmed a great many Canadians because of its reference to the growing extent of economic control by foreign owned companies in Canada. The fact that economic control has taken place is one thing; but what in my view concerns the Canadian public is the kind of political control that will ultimately follow this economic control.

We spend a great deal of money on various communications media in this country. We spend millions of dollars on the C.B.C. We will be spending millions more on the satellites. We spend it on the National Film Board. It is the public's money we are spending on these things. Simply stated, we subsidize communications. Perhaps at some time it might be wise to consider that perhaps the telephone industry is a very important communications medium also, and that it is not in Canada's best interests to have this remain in private hands, especially if the reins of control are held by those outside the country.

The telephone industry in North America is a giant octopus. I think we should be looking in the direction of buying up and buying into this very important communications link, for the benefit of all Canadians, instead of sitting here debating a bill that involves the selling of more of it to companies which in my view already have too much. Thank you.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour for the consideration of private members business has expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—Immigration—distribution of pamphlet as to availability of housing; the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise)—Housing—Quebec—additional loans to counter unemployment; the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie)—tabling of the MacIntosh report by the Postmaster General.

I do now leave the chair, pursuant to special order of the house today. The house will resume at 8 p.m.

At seven o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

FINANCE

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS RESPECTING INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND AND EXCHANGE FUND ACCOUNT

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (for the Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act and the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act so as to enable Canada to participate in a new arrangement in the International Monetary Fund to create new reserve assets that would supplement gold and reserve currencies in the participating countries foreign exchange reserves and would effect certain administrative and operational exchanges in the existing structure of the fund; and to permit the exchange fund account to receive, hold and sell the new reserve assets.

Motion agreed to, and the house went into committee, Mr. Béchard in the chair.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, the bill which will be based on this resolution will represent a major step forward in the evolution of the international monetary system. With the establishment of the scheme to create special drawing rights in the International Monetary Fund, for the first time nations will be able to create international monetary reserves, to meet the requirements of the whole system, by deliberate and joint action. The main objective of the bill will be to provide for Canada's participation in this exciting development.

The bill will set out a number of amendments to the articles of agreement of the I.M.F. to provide for the operation of the scheme to create special drawing rights. It also will set out certain amendments modifying the rules and practices of the existing operations of the fund to reflect the experience of almost a quarter of a century.

The government hopes that this legislation will have the wholehearted support of this house and that its passage will not be delayed. This should not, of course, exclude a thorough consideration of its various aspects in committee. The last time this house had an opportunity to consider these matters at some length was in March 1966 when a bill to increase Canada's quotas in the International Monetary Fund and the I.B.R.D. was before the house. At that time the late Colin Cameron and other members called for the creation of the equivalent in the international field of the managed currency which all modern countries use in their domestic economies. A good deal of interest was shown in the broader issues at that time, and the matter was discussed in the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, of which I was then the chairman.

As members who participated in that discussion well know, the resolution before us represents the culmination of more than four years of intensive study and negotiation by ministers and senior officials in the group of ten and by the executive directors of the I.M.F. The essential soundness of the proposed scheme is a tribute to their efforts. The fact that such complex discussions were begun in time and successfully concluded is a reflection of the international co-operation in economic and financial affairs which we have come to expect in the post world war II period, but which had failed to develop significantly up to that time.

At the centre of this co-operation has been the I.M.F. The fund was conceived, along with the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, during and came into being immediately following the second world war. The results of narrowly nationalistic policies were evident everywhere and the memories of the disastrous consequences of the self-defeating economic policies of the 1930s were still fresh in people's minds. The fund's founding fathers therefore set out to create an international authority to establish and maintain a high standard of conduct in international monetary and economic affairs and which would be endowed with the facilities and the financial resources to help countries to live up to this standard. The significant success achieved by the I.M.F. since 1946 has contributed to the growth of world trade and payments and consequently to the prosperity which Canadians now enjoy. Canada is heavily dependant on international trade and the availability of capital for its prosperity. We have therefore a very large stake in the success of the I.M.F.

Consequently Canada made a noteworthy contribution to the negotiations at Bretton

Woods in 1944, where agreement was reached on the articles of the I.M.F.; we became a charter member and have been an active supporter ever since. The government is particularly pleased therefore to see the historic step of creating special drawing rights being taken within the framework of the fund.

Evolutionary development has been the keynote of fund history. Created as an international organization with delegated powers, rather than as an international central bank superimposed in the structure of national governments, its influence and effectiveness was a function of government's willingness to delegate authority to it. Over the years national governments have become increasingly willing to broaden the scope of the fund's activities in the international monetary sphere. Thus we should look upon these present proposals for fund reform, and particularly on those related to its proposed involvement in the new field of reserve creation, as an encouraging and most significant step forward in its evolutionary development. The fund's managing director has described it as the most significant development in international monetary co-operation since Bretton Woods.

In October, 1963, the ministers of finance and the governors of the central banks of the Group of Ten instructed their deputies to undertake a thorough examination of the international monetary system and its probable future needs for liquidity. It soon became evident that the growth of the traditional reserve assets, gold, U.S. dollars and British pounds would not likely be adequate to meet the aggregate growth in international reserves necessary to meet a steady increase in world trade and payments. Reserve holdings of the pound had ceased to grow for some time and the pound had come under recurring pressure. The U.S. balance of payments deficit, which for many years had been necessary and had been generally welcomed, was becoming chronic and some countries were growing unwilling to go on indefinitely increasing their holdings of U.S. dollars. The United States itself declared its determination to bring its payments into better balance, and consequently the U.S. dollars could no longer be regarded as a likely source of future reserves growth. Nor could gold production be expected to meet the need.

As a result, contingency planning was begun for the day when an emerging shortage of international reserves might threaten international economic growth. In 1966 the deputies of the Group of Ten began a series of meetings with the executive directors, of the fund, who were also considering these problems, and in 1967 at the annual meeting of the International Monetary Fund in Rio de Janeiro the executive directors presented the results of these meetings to the governors in the form of an outline of a facility based on special drawing rights in the fund. The governors in Rio instructed their executive directors to prepare a report by March 31, 1968, which would propose, first, amendments to the articles of agreement and by-laws for the purpose of establishing a new facility on the basis of the outline and, second, amendments to improve the present rules and practices of the Fund.

A few remaining contentious issues were settled at a meeting of the Group of Ten in Stockholm at the end of March, 1968; the proposed amendments were sent to governors early in April and were approved by May 31 by a substantial majority of the board of governors, including the minister of finance as governor of Canada. The scheme will come into force when three-fifths of the total membership having four-fifths of the total voting power have taken the necessary steps to enable them to participate. Obviously, as the house will see, the proposals in the bill represent a highly negotiated package. While all the participants made compromises, the government feels the result has been a workable, well balanced proposal which is capable of further evolution as it becomes familiar and experience is gained in its use.

I would now like to describe the main features of the special drawing rights, which I think we can now refer to in abbreviated form as SDR's, and then go on to outline some of the other amendments that will be in the bill. The facility in question will be a new asset created to supplement existing reserve assets. It is not meant to displace gold or reserve currencies. For reasons mentioned earlier, the proportion of SDR's to total reserves can be expected gradually to increase. Eventually I would expect the bulk of reserves to be held in the form of SDR's. At that stage the participating countries will have close control over the aggregate amount of reserves outstanding, in the same way that a central bank now influences the money supply of a country.

The new facility will be operated in the fund where it will be managed on a day-to-day basis by the executive board, a highly competent and experienced forum. Membership in the scheme will be open to all members of the fund. SDR's will be traded among monetary authorities for convertible currencies. They will not be usable for direct intervention in the foreign exchange markets or for other private transactions. SDR's will be assets owned by a participating country and recorded on the books of the special drawing account in the International Monetary Fund. They will be freely and unconditionally available with two exceptions:

(i) They will only be usable for balance of payments needs, not solely to change the composition of a country's reserves;

(ii) A country making an average net use over five years of more than 70 per cent of its net cumulative allocation of SDR's will incur a reconstitution, in other words a repurchase, obligation. These rules are to help ensure that the new asset will not be abused in its use and will be held by all the participating countries.

The new asset is a fiduciary asset, that is, its value is based on the willingness of countries to accept it in exchange for convertible currencies. It is not backed by any particular asset and in that respect is like the domestic currencies of most countries. Decisions to create SDR's will be taken by the board of governors of the International Monetary Fund on the basis of a proposal by the managing director which has been concurred in by the executive directors. A majority of 85 per cent of the voting power of the participants will be required.

SDR's will be created to meet the long run growth in global demand for reserves—not to meet the balance of payments needs of individual countries. Consequently the decision to create them will be taken every five years and the amount decided will be distributed in equal proportions annually. Of course, if circumstances alter considerably during the five year period it will be possible to make appropriate adjustments in the annual distributions.

SDR's will be used to obtain convertible currencies from other participants either directly or through the special drawing account acting as intermediary. Normally currencies will be acquired from participants with a strong balance of payments and reserve position. A participant's obligation to accept SDR's ceases when its holdings are three times the net cumulative amount of SDR's allocated to it. They will be gold value guaranteed, that is, their value will be protected against changes in the value of national currencies, and they will earn a moderate rate of interest—1½ per cent—the cost of which will be assessed against members in proportion to the net cumulative allocation of SDR's to them.

Newly created SDR's will be distributed to participants in the same proportion as their quotas in the International Monetary Fund. Consequently, if it were decided to create $1 billion of the new asset, Canada would receive $35 million of SDR's. No offsetting liability will back this new creation other than the obligation to accept, in certain circumstances, the asset from others for convertible currencies.

A number of other amendments to the articles of agreement of the International Monetary Fund will be proposed in the bill to modify the rules and practices of the existing machinery of the Fund. Most of these proposals are rather technical and represent no more than a clarification or codification of practices developed over the years and followed currently by the Fund. Others take into account the existence in reserves of SDR's and the operation of the special drawing account. I shall mention here only the most important of the proposed amendments.

Henceforth a general increase in quotas in the International Monetary Fund will require an 85 per cent majority vote of the governors instead of 80 per cent. This will bring the practice in the fund in line with that proposed for SDR's. Requests for purchases of a country's gold tranche, which corresponds to the 25 per cent of its subscription paid in gold or U.S. dollars, are now created automatically on a de facto basis. One of the amendments will make the use of the Fund's resources in the gold tranche legally automatic. Another amendment will remove the present limitation on making gold tranche purchases for meeting capital transfers. A member will be able to make gold tranche purchases even though they are to meet what might be regarded as a large or sustained outflow of capital.

A transaction charge of one half of 1 per cent is currently levied on gold tranche drawings, and this will be removed. Henceforth remuneration at the rate of 1½ per cent per annum will be payable on creditor positions in the fund. In most years since 1963 Canada has been in a substantial creditor position. There are other amendments which are less important and I will be happy to discuss any or all of them at later stages of debate if it is the wish of the house.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, the bill will propose a change in the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act which will permit special drawing rights to be held in and counted as part of Canada's exchange fund. In this way we will have authority to fulfil the undertaking in the new scheme to accept and hold the new special drawing rights. The government hopes that it shall, in the near future, be able to notify the managing director of the Fund that the Canadian parliament has passed the necessary measures to enable Canada to participate in this historic step forward.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, the rather hurried and capsuled description of the proposed legislation—and I do not wish to criticize the parliamentary secretary when I say this—is something which, in my view, confirms the requirement that, following the passage of this legislation and the printing of the bill, the government should immediately place a resolution on the order paper—and I am quite prepared on behalf of the opposition to accept a motion from the appropriate minister without further notice—that the bill shall be referred to the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs for examination and, if necessary, for the purpose of hearing certain representations. I think that, while some people may perhaps criticize the desire to examine this legislation in greater detail and to hear representations in connection with it, as being an unnecessary step, what we have experienced in the last 18 months is a clear indication that the methods used by the countries to exchange their currencies and to maintain the stability of their currencies, and in fact all the operations of the I.M.F., have come under the most extreme strain.

There have been crises with respect to the two reserve currencies, twice with regard to the pound, the last being in November of 1967, and a massive assault on the dollar in February and March of this year. The last one was a few weeks ago with regard to the franc. The unfortunate part is that the rhythm of this cycle of financial crises is accelerating. It is almost as though we were watching a boat starting to rock while at the same time we possessed a greater force which accentuated that rocking. Soon the rhythm will accelerate and the effects on the boat will become more pronounced. It will be that when we go over the brink it will be too late, and therefore I think it is of the greatest importance that we as Canadians contribute to the desirable stability in international monetary relationships.

All types of governments participate in these relationships, and I do not think there is any country, whether it be socialistic or capitalistic, that has a monopoly in or an exclusive recipe for the maintenance of prosperous conditions in that country. Why must there be additional international credits? Simply because the U.S. dollar and the pound sterling which have been used by the International Monetary Fund as reserve monetary units have come under increasing internal strains, and this has been the weakness of the International Monetary Fund in recent years. The U.S. dollar is affected of course in its value by actions on the domestic scene, and all too often those efforts which are made domestically in the United States in connection with problems of inflation or of stimulation of the economy have opposite or complicated effects when it comes to the international market.

We have seen that the strain on the U.S. dollar came about this last spring as a result of the continuing pattern of deficiency on the balance of payments accounts while the United States was active in its trade pattern, its foreign aid, the war in Viet Nam and in a number of other fields. The net result was that known holdings of U.S. dollars by Foreign interests last March exceeded by about $4,000 million the U.S. gold holdings. The reason why the pound sterling has been under severe attack is similar. That currency too has become a unit of international holdings, particularly by countries, banks and individuals in the Middle and the Far East. It is a currency of international commerce. The Lord only knows, the British have been having problems at home, many of them of their own making, and yet the pound, which is suffering such vicissitudes on the domestic scene, is supposed to be the unit of stability on the international scene. We have seen now that this cannot continue.

So far as Canada is concerned, those of us who were here last February and March were well aware of how close we came to the point of having to devalue our currency. The then minister of national revenue was indiscreet in indicating a figure on television, when in actual fact the correct figure was somewhat lower. The then minister of finance had to rebuke his colleague for being indiscreet on television, but for the administration of the day it was par for the course. To me it was just a measure of irresponsibility.

As a matter of fact, just what was the pressure on the currencies? As we know, there was a flight from the franc to the German mark, and there was a tremendous amount of speculation with regard to the mark because it was anticipated there would be a revaluation upward. There are movements of floating capital, which is known as hot money, which are undertaken to improve the value of the capital as a result of fractional changes in valuation.

When it was decided by the French government that the franc would not be devalued, and that the Germans were not going to revalue the mark upwards, about which the Germans were not too enthusiastic, in one day there was an immediate flight of $300 million from the German mark to United States dollars. So you observe, Mr. Chairman, this movement back and forth.

If the United States dollar is affected by this crisis, then so is the Canadian dollar. Although we might be standing by relatively innocently on the side, as a very interested bystander in a currency crisis for one of our trading partners in western Europe, we are caught up by the splash. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, we in Canada have a special interest in the liquidity of the international reserve units, particularly unit that is being set up under these proposals for special drawing rights which are available in times of crisis.

I indicated, Mr. Chairman, that we are going to get caught up by the splash. May I point out that since 1963 Canada has become even more involved. I wish that Canada were not so involved with the U.S. dollar, that there were more options open to Canada in dealing with domestic situations and also with our own position in the international market. We have what the Minister of Finance, I think for reasons of semantics, wishes to call a target; but what I call a ceiling, call it what you will, Mr. Chairman, Canada may hold between $2.55 billion and $2.6 billion worth of United States obligations.

What has happened since this crisis last March, Mr. Chairman? First of all, we are down to holdings of $2.55 billion. Of that sum, $500 million consists of non-negotiable United States securities which Canada retained as a result of realizing some of its convertible United States obligations. This Canada had to do as the price of relief from the mandatory guide lines that were set last January, and the manner in which we were involved during the currency crisis last spring. This situation is severely limiting Canada's options for dealing with its financial problems at home and on the international market.

I was glad to hear from the Minister of Finance, Mr. Chairman, that talks are now going on with the United States treasury officials on this particular subject. Less than one year ago, Mr. Chairman, I was told there was no problem with the ceiling. I do not take credit for my remarks, but pressures here and there, have had some effect on finance department officials. I am not alone in my views. Nevertheless it is conceivable that some of the remarks made by Canadian delegates—chiefly myself—during the Canadian-United States interparliamentary union meeting in March may be bearing fruit. I believe that this so-called ceiling, if we must have one, and I say we should not, should be raised; it should be increased by at least $1 billion.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that this ceiling is having a deleterious effect on our domestic financial operations in that, our trading pattern having been what it has during the last 18 months, the Bank of Canada has found itself under obligation to enter the exchange market to pick up U.S. dollars. To do so it has put into circulation millions of Canadian dollars. In other words, it has had to skim off the market of U.S. dollars within Canada to keep us under the ceiling.

We know that last week, Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance engaged in some refinancing operations and was able to prepay some obligations falling due in 1969. At the present time he has been able to pick up a little spare cash. As a matter of fact, he indicated that he would not have to go to the capital market again shortly.

That may be his plan, Mr. Chairman, but frankly I can see a danger arising which may make the minister go to the market. The minister will need cash to go to the exchange market to buy up U.S. dollars, because we are pushing through the ceiling that has been imposed upon us. If our holdings go up, or threaten to go up, to $2.7 billion, $2.75 billion or $2.8 billion, the minister has to skim off the extra up to $200 in United States funds, and for this he will have to go to the market.

What will be the result then, Mr. Chairman? There will be an upward pressure on our domestic interest rates. This will bring in U.S. money for investment purposes, and away we go again as the wheel turns. The system is self-perpetuating and certainly of no assistance to the government in maintaining an even hand on the tiller, so far as our financial situation is concerned. It is for that reason among others that the sooner we get out of this strait-jacket the better.

At the present time, Mr. Chairman, the Canadian government's credit position is lamentable. The bond market is in disarray. If hon. members want to read something that is truthful, that has no political bias or partisan approach—something which some might try to ascribe to my remarks—then let them read the remarks of the president of the Bank of Montreal yesterday. They are a clear indication of what is thought of the bond market. Let hon. gentlemen opposite consult with their financier friends—and the Liberal party does have friends in Toronto around Bay street, or do they now?—and get a frank answer from those who are in the bond business or the banking field about the position of Canadian bonds.

We know how the level of interest rates has had a general effect on housing, Mr. Chairman. To assist in the correction of this problem the government must start at square one. We must first attack this artificial ceiling that we have on U.S. exchange holdings. Then we shall see that we can have greater freedom to act on behalf of Canadians.

The parliamentary secretary gave us a brief outline in capsule form of many of the main features of the bill—the special drawing rights, that these were new and were not replacing other reserve units, and so on and so forth. I do not think I need to comment on all those things. I can only say that we will appreciate being able to get hold of the bill. I trust this resolution will pass this evening. Finally I should like to know from the parliamentary secretary whether there is an undertaking from the government that the bill will be referred to the finance committee for study in the new year.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Chairman, I note with pleasure that the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance recognized the abilities and knowledge of the late Colin Cameron in the field of financial and monetary affairs. I hope that recognition will produce a further study of his ideas which he so often presented to parliament; I also hope that that study will result in the adoption of some of the ideas he advocated so eloquently.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Burton: Although I do not wish to detract from the parliamentary secretary's sense of history in bringing forward this proposal, I think it is necessary to express a note of caution, so that we may deal with this proposal in as realistic a fashion as possible.

The proposal before us was developed after a great deal of work and negotiation, yet it is but one step on the difficult road we must thread in finding a monetary system that will work satisfactorily. In this respect it is worth noting that the special drawing rights referred to by the parliamentary secretary, which will be dealt with in the bill, do not help with respect to the current problem that has been facing monetary authorities the world over in recent weeks. The Financial Post of November 23 has this to say on the matter:

> Contrary to some views, the present money crisis is not the type of problem the proposed Special Drawing Rights (SDRs)—or international reserve currency to supplement gold, US$ and sterling—was designed to correct. "SDRs are designed to improve world-wide liquidity, not to stabilize an imbalance between one country and another," a senior Ottawa official said. "It would be wrong to use SDRs—if they were in operation—in a situation like the present French-German problem," he said.

The parliamentary secretary also noted that in the proposal before us, which is to establish special drawing rights, there is no provision to replace gold or other reserves. That, itself, indicates the role this measure will have in dealing with our monetary problems.

I submit that we can consider this resolution in a realistic way only if we consider recent developments in world monetary affairs. No doubt hon. members are aware of the events of the past few weeks. These were summed up neatly in the Globe and Mail of November 21, in an article reprinted from the New York Times and the Associated Press:

> The latest international money crisis—the third in 12 months—has exposed once again what many regard as the Achilles heel of the otherwise successful international monetary system that was agreed upon by the leading nations almost 25 years ago.
> But while the vulnerability of the system to crisis is now widely recognized, there is only the barest beginning of official exploration of the most plausible remedy. The remedy is already seen to present numerous problems.

The Achilles heel is that the monetary system provides for fixed, steady exchange rates among currencies for trade and other international transactions, without any parallel binding obligation for nations to pursue policies that keep their international payments in balance at the exchange rate they have chosen.

Thus, in the view of thoughtful critics, the system makes it almost inevitable that from time to time one or another leading country "gets out of whack" with the others—yesterday Britain, today France and Germany, tomorrow, perhaps, the United States. For one reason or another, a nation's balance of payments drifts into chronic deficit or chronic surplus.

The article then points out the reasons for the difficulties that are encountered in the present system. I continue quoting:

The system provides a way out—devaluation of the exchange rate for a country in deficit, or revaluation for a country in surplus. But this is invariably a painful move for domestic political reasons. In the case of devaluation, for example, consumers pay more for imported goods and vacations abroad cost more. In the case of revaluation the profits of the important export industries are reduced and the farm sector may be badly hit.

The inadequacy of our present monetary system has been illustrated in the past few weeks by the panics that have developed when problems have arisen. There are special meetings of finance ministers and top monetary authorities of the countries involved. They patch up the difficulty that has been presented, and we go to another crisis a few months later.

Basically we lack enough liquidity money to cope with the amount of world trade as it has been expanding over the past decade. Canada, I think, is in a most vulnerable position, a position set out in the Financial Post of November 23, where the following words appear:

The stability of the C$, and that of many other currencies, could be upset if Europe's money troubles are not solved soon. But for the moment, France's problem is localized and Canadian observers are hopeful a solution can be found before trouble spreads.

It will take more than mere hope, Mr. Chairman, to solve our present problems. I ask, what action has Canada taken? Certainly, we have participated in some international negotiations. All the same, has there been any real Canadian initiative to deal with the problems at present facing us?

I wish to remind the committee of something the hon. member for York South, my parliamentary leader, said a week ago when the Minister of Finance made a statement to the house about the recent situation I have just discussed. The hon. member for York South deplored the state of affairs that permits our monetary affairs to be so profoundly influenced by speculators, and people manipulating our international financial affairs. In this connection I was interested to read an article in the Ottawa Citizen of November 16 about these gnomes. The heading is, "Who and where are the gnomes?", and the article says this:

International currency crises are commonly blamed on the manipulations of the money market speculators, the gnomes of Zurich, or Wall Street, or even Bay street.

But it is not generally known just who these men are and how they practise their financial wizardry.

He is either the treasurer of a big corporation, or its adviser. His job is to advise his company, among other things, on the prospects for fluctuations in the value of the major currencies.

On his advice, his company will flit from currency to currency, trading the weak for the strong. In the process, it can both make money and guarantee protection for its assets.

Later the article goes on to discuss the influence which these speculators and "gnomes" have on the international monetary situation. The writer states:

Opinions on currency speculators vary. Government officials cite dangers in putting the interests of the company before country.

They point out speculation is self-generating. When dollars are sold in large volume, the exchange rate goes down triggering more sales. A heavy flight of dollars from the economy drains foreign exchange reserves which have to be shored up by the central bank.

Later the article says:

The decisions are not always easy. Sometimes a warning flashed by a currency adviser can have drastic implications for an economy.

Some observers have suggested that changes ought to be made in the present international monetary system. This question was discussed in the Globe and Mail of November 29:

The frequent recurrences of these monetary pressures raises a question as to whether the rigidities of the present fixed-exchange rates should be scrapped in favour of a more flexible system that permits a currency to fluctuate more than the present 1 per cent above or below its declared value.

There is an even broader framework to be considered, and it includes the proposal for the demonetization of gold entirely. This is dealt with in some detail by Mr. Harry Johnson of the London School of Economics in an article which appeared in the Globe and Mail shortly after the gold crisis of last March. Mr. Johnson states:

Painful as the process may be, the attempt to preserve a special monetary role for gold may quickly end in the realization that the effort itself automatically demonetizes gold and converts the world monetary system into one based purely on bookkeeping transactions.

The hope must be that the world's monetary authorities can meanwhile keep their nerve. If they weaken, progress toward a rational international system will be put back a generation. The gold crisis which erupted again two weeks ago, forcing the emergency meeting in Washington, has long been anticipated by international monetary experts.

The only question has been when, and that question has now been answered. At the root of the crisis is the inherent logic of the gold exchange standard itself—the system under which the major countries maintain fixed exchange rates between their currencies by pegging them to convertibility into gold at a fixed price. As a means of providing an international monetary framework, however, this system is inherently illogical. For there is nothing in the laws of nature to guarantee that additional supplies of monetary gold will be forthcoming at precisely the rate required to provide for the world's growing needs for international money.

Instead, the world's supply of new monetary gold is dependant on the vagaries of:

—New discoveries and changing technologies of gold extraction;

—The demand of hoarders and commercial users;

—In the past 10 years, communist sales of gold from stockpiles or new production.

The article goes on to state:

It is true, theoretically, at least, that the gold standard has a self-stabilizing tendency. This is what Jacques Rueff, a leading French economist, is fond of arguing. If prices rise, gold production becomes less profitable, exerting a deflationary influence on the supply of monetary gold and hence on money. Conversely, falling prices stimulate new growth production, exerting an inflammatory influence on the supply of money and prices.

But these influences are slow and uncertain and are swamped by the forces of change in gold technology on the one hand and financial innovation on the other. In addition, government policy makers are not now prepared to abide the slow-grinding discipline of the gold standard.

Throughout the twentieth century the long-run inclination has been for new monetary gold supplies to increase less rapidly than the demand for international reserves. This tendency has been reinforced by government policies that have produced a secular inflation of prices. The result has been a growing scarcity of gold, which has been avertable in the short run by the substitution of national securities convertible into gold for gold itself, at the long-run cost, though, of rendering its system increasingly vulnerable to crises of confidence.

The article goes on to state:

Since the second world war the dollar has come to play the role previously played by sterling and the system has arrived at precisely the same sort of crisis of confidence. Under the system a crisis of confidence is ultimately inevitable. But when and where it strikes depends on the appropriateness of the fixed exchange rates between the various national currencies mediated by the use of gold as an international monetary base.

Mr. Johnson concludes his study by stating:

A coldly rational view of the present international monetary situation would be (1) that gold is a very poor and unrealiable base for an international monetary system and (2) that as soon as possible it should be dispensed with. This implies (3) that gold held as a monetary reserve should be sold as rapidly as possible to anyone who has a non-monetary—and especially a misinformed—speculative use for it and (4) that international reserve money should instead be provided by an international credit operation.

This is, in fact, the way in which world central bank opinion has been moving. In particular, the plan for special drawing rights approved by the International Monetary Fund in Rio de Janiero last September implied the eventual replacement of gold by as pure a pure credit money as could be devised.

Some of these proposals have been dealt with by other observers who share the concern felt for the stability of the present monetary system. Mr. Alan Day of the London Observer service recently stated in an article which appeared in the Globe and Mail of November 26:

Last week's financial crisis was a direct consequence of the unnecessary rigidity of the international monetary system. So long as each country regards any significant change in its exchange rate—either upward or downward—as a national defeat in the last ditch, the international system will continue to operate under quite unnecessary strain.

Later, Mr. Day writes:

Such is the rigidity of the international monetary system that the necessary adjustments can take place only after attempts to shore up a crumbling structure of exchange rates have been accompanied by speculation and rumours which put a heavy strain on currencies such as sterling and the dollar, whose true role in the situation is neutral.

The article goes on to suggest:

One approach which deserves the careful consideration of governments and bankers is the so-called "crawling peg". Each government would agree not to alter its exchange rate more than, say, 4 per cent in any one year. This would allow quite big adjustments to be made within fairly short periods of time, and, if used sensibly, could prevent the development of major imbalances. At the same time it would mean much smaller opportunities for speculators than the present adjustable peg system and would not create major uncertainties for businessmen who could, in any case, cover on the forward market.

The most important thing, however, is for governments and central banks to accept that the present system is too rigid with the consequence that when adjustments become unavoidable the strains are unnecessarily large.

It should be recognized that any change from a fixed exchange rate to a floating exchange rate does involve other considerations; there will be occasions when unusual strain is placed on the monetary system at which time complementary steps would be required such as selective exchange controls. A further question to be considered is the concentration of a large degree of economic and financial power in the hands of corporations whose head offices are in the United States. This is a consequence of the branch plant economy with which we have to contend to such a large extent today. The fact is that corporate decisions which bear no relation to the national interest could in many cases help produce a crisis situation. The step before us at this time is but one small step upon a long and difficult road. What is required from the Canadian government is more leadership and better leadership in finding a long term solution to monetary difficulties.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, the resolution now before the house reminds me singularly of the attitude of the Social Crediters who sat in this house some 22, 23 or 24 years ago, at the time of the first Bretton Woods agreements. At that time, the member for Lethbridge, Mr. Blackmore, warned the Canadian parliament of the consequences of the Bretton Woods agreements; today, we have come to exactly those consequences and results which were forecast 24 years ago by the Social Crediters who sat in roughly the same corner of the house.

At that time, Mr. Chairman, the Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Mackenzie King and the members of the cabinet found the remarks of the Social Crediters slightly crazy, slightly stupid; but let us look at the present world monetary crisis. Do not all the countries look like a group of stupid people trapped in a system of figures with which they cannot agree, which they cannot assimilate or accept, according to the physical possibilities they have to develop or make exchanges between each other?

We are now at grips with the same system; yet, 24 years ago the Social Crediters forecast the consequences of the situation in which we now find ourselves. At that time, the Social Crediters were laughed at, where they spoke of the fiasco that was awaiting the nations of the world that signed the Bretton Woods agreements.

[Mr. Burton.]

Four days ago, one could read the following in Le Soleil of November 27, and I quote:

The future of money remains troubled.

Message from the French, from General de Gaulle, to the effect that the financial system is faulty. Will we need an international monetary reform? The heart is lacking to effect a national monetary reform; yet, the point has been reached where the necessity for international monetary reform is recognized.

Mr. Chairman, thanks to the opportunity afforded me by the study of the resolution introduced by the honourable Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), I am pleased, on behalf of Ralliement Créditiste, to let the house know what we think of this new arrangement within the International Monetary Fund.

With a view to creating new reserve assets to supplement gold—24 years ago it was gold, nothing other than gold which was to serve as the basis for international finance or the International Monetary Fund. On a national level, we have already known the famous gold standard as a guarantee for Canadian bank bills—whether it be bills issued by chartered banks, at that time; or since, by the Bank of Canada—and we thought gold was absolutely needed to give value to our Canadian dollar.

On May 1, 1940, to pay for our war effort, to equip our young Canadians and send them to the international slaughter, the Canadian dollar was taken off the gold standard, it was no longer backed by gold. There was not enough gold for the credit we needed to increase our participation in the world war. The gold reserve backing the Canadian dollar was abolished.

Mr. Chairman, new reserve assets are now being asked for the International Monetary Fund to supplement the gold reserve because there is no longer enough gold available. Some countries have no gold, others are supposed to have too much and others still have enough.

Let us take the example of France which objects to gold no longer being used to back money because it is said France has huge quantities of gold. Last year, less than twelve months ago, when the pound sterling was devaluated, when the British government was forced to impose tremendous restrictions on its people, our international and national financiers were praising France by saying that it had a sound monetary system; that it could no longer be crushed, and that the French franc had a value which could not be affected.

Now France is facing the same problems as England less than a year ago, and they are now talking about reserve assets that would supplement gold in the international field. In fact, the resolution says:

—reserve assets that would supplement gold and reserve currencies in the participating countries foreign exchange reserves and would effect certain administrative and operational changes in the existing structure of the fund; and to permit the Exchange Fund Account to receive, hold and sell the new reserve assets.

As was said earlier by the hon. member who spoke before me, in order to supplement gold, we are now going to accept figures, credit, simple figures—scrip money as we call it—and we shall accept it as reserve currency in the I.M.F.

Twenty-five years ago, the Social Creditors were lunatics; today, there are other kinds of lunatics who are more dangerous than the Créditistes, because we advocate only one solution while the present system offers none.

They try this and that, but let us look at the editorials in the newspapers, one after the other. Nobody, not even the economists, are able to find a solution to the present international financial problem. They still poke fun at Social Credit which wants to use figures—according to the physical capabilities of a country to develop itself or to develop the whole world—which are equivalent to the work accomplished by peoples or by the Canadian people as far as Canada is concerned. Of course, these solutions are considered oversimple, they cannot be understood. I should say rather that they are understood but that one is paid not to understand them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Caouette: First, Mr. Chairman, I want to point out that this resolution results from decisions made during the annual meeting of the International Monetary Fund held in Rio de Janeiro, in September 1967, in which participated the former minister of finance (Mr. Sharp).

On that occasion, Mr. Pierre-Paul Schweitzer, director of the International Monetary Fund stated that the arrangements considered at the meeting with regard to international liquid assets were the most imporant development since the Bretton Woods agreements in the field of international financial cooperation.

Since we are dealing with the Bretton Woods agreements and with a subsequent development, the special drawing rights, I want to recall the approach of the Ralliement Créditiste on this subject.

In 1945, during the discussion on the Bretton Woods agreements, as I said earlier, the Social Credit member for Lethbridge, who was an expert on financial matters, was considered tiresome because he spoke about money and monetary reform. He challenged parliament to prove him wrong but no member on the government side of the house took up the challenge.

The Social Credit proposals of the hon. member for Lethbridge were thought very tiresome. Nevertheless, he had cast a doubt on the ability of the International Monetary Fund and other instruments created by the Bretton Woods agreements to allow the debtor nations to pay their debts, since nothing compelled the creditor countries to accept the exports of the debtor countries.

Events in the world during the past 20 years have shown that the Bretton Woods agreements have not stopped practically all the member countries from devaluating their currency, as Canada did in 1963, when the Conservative government fell. Everybody remembers that. As we know, that devaluation came after a too marked imbalance in our commercial trade with the United States. At that time, Canada had to impose restrictions on the Canadian people in order to check the purchase of United States products.

That measure simply confirmed what the hon. member for Acadia, Mr. Quelch, predicted, as is recorded on page 3134 of Hansard for December 6, 1945, and I quote:

That is to say—

He was talking about the proposals regarding the International Monetary Fund—

—if the United States consistently refuses to accept imports in exchange for its exports, thereby depriving other nations of dollars to pay for imports, then the fund can borrow or buy with gold, dollars from the United States to enable the debtor nations to balance their payments. But, mark you, it would be done by going into debt instead of by balancing trade and having an exchange of goods.

As the Bretton Woods agreements did not yet exist, money was borrowed from the United States. To-day, we can get into debt by borrowing from the International Monetary Fund, by using special drawing rights, as we did during the 1963 monetary crisis.

Thus we can say that the Bretton Woods agreements did not prevent Canada from devaluating its money and getting into debt by borrowing from international organizations. So much so that we never slowed down this trend and to-day, our national debt amounts to $26 billion against the $18 or $19 billion at that time.

Mr. Chairman, those agreements did not solve the basic problems of Canada. The international control of money, as provided for in the Bretton Woods Agreements Act and the bill now under consideration, does not help Canada to distribute to its people our available products and services. It would be wiser to settle our own affairs and seek a solution to the problems of Canada.

On the contrary, the philosophy of the Bretton Woods agreements and any measure deriving therefrom, such as the bill now under consideration, prevent us from making possible all that would be humanly possible and advisable in our country, because we are entrusting the control of our credit and our money to other countries and foreign authorities, instead of keeping it here in parliament. The Bretton Woods agreements have been in force for 20 years, Mr. Chairman, and nothing has changed. The economic situation has worsened in Canada as elsewhere.

I get letters from Montreal where there are now 80,000 unemployed. What can the Bretton Woods agreements do to settle that problem? But they are given so much importance. It was nice—in fact, it was a magnificent spectacle—to see the other day in Paris or in Bonn, Germany, the representatives of the ten richest countries in the world decide whether or not France should devalue the franc. They were going to settle the future course of the monetary situation in France, and everyone expected a devaluation of the franc. The speculators were dealing on the stock exchange to make a profit and when General de Gaulle announced that the franc would not be devalued, some people pulled a long face.

Mr. Chairman, the French people have not been saved for all that. General de Gaulle declares that he will not devalue the franc, but he imposes tremendous restrictions on the French people, so that it is tantamount to a devaluation of the franc for the French consumer or purchaser.

[Mr. Caouette.]

Mr. Chairman, the same thing happened in Canada as well as in England. And today, they believe that with new agreements, or by supplementing the gold reserve deposited with the International Bank or the International Monetary Fund, they will improve the situation. The Bretton Woods agreements have done nothing for the last 24 years.

Mr. Chairman, nothing has changed. Let us listen to what the Minister of Finance said at the conference held in Rio de Janeiro on September 27, 1967—less than a year ago—and I quote:

> The total volume of reserve assets held by monetary authorities in different countries depends at the present time essentially upon the gold production—

That is the Minister of Finance talking.

> —to be used to improve the reserve position and the balance of payments of some of the principal countries as well as to serve their reserve policy. We are becoming increasingly aware of the inadequacy of that system.
> These past few years, we have resorted to various devices which have allowed the system of sudden crises to continue.

What is the new solution proposed? The creation of special drawing rights, which are actually credits created out of nothing, which will only plunge us into debt, which we will have to reimburse and on which we will have to pay interest.

If a resolution can be introduced in parliament to allow us to have special drawing rights on the International Monetary Fund, how is it that the Canadian parliament, the parliament that is answerable to the people of Canada, cannot pass similar laws to enable the Canadian government to have special drawing rights on the Bank of Canada, in order to get the Canadian economy going?

Mr. Chairman, special drawing rights are needed in the case of the International Monetary Fund; but it seems impossible to create the same drawing rights on our own financial monetary institution, the Bank of Canada. The Liberals find that logical. Not one of them will speak against the Bretton Woods agreements. On the contrary, its benefit will be praised. And that is what is being presented to us as a new solution: the creation of special drawing rights which, in fact, are credits created out of nothing, out of paper gold, as General de Gaulle put it.

Here is what the French Minister of Finance, Mr. Michel Debré, had to say at the conference in Rio de Janeiro, and I quote:

• (9:20 p.m.)

It is often said that both problems would be solved by creating ex nihilo new monetary liquidities and by bringing those liquidities to the level of a new currency independent from gold and replacing gold. Is it really serious? It is impossible to create a currency out of nothing just as it is impossible to create political institutions out of nothing.

Mr. Chairman, in our opinion, money is created according to the real wealth which exists in a country like ours.

At the present time, as I said earlier, gold is no longer used as the standard for money in Canada. It is still used in the field of international relations because some countries still believe in gold, but it is a myth. Gold is used and people believe that the precious metal is the real basis for wealth, whereas in itself it constitutes only short lived wealth. If we wished to use gold, Mr. Chairman, to provide our families with food, lodging and clothing, that would be quite peculiar. We do not need gold, but clothing and food. We realize that more and more when we lay aside the question of gold to deal with that of credit based on the actual resources of a country. That is what the Ralliement Créditiste has been asserting for a long time.

Mr. Chairman, in the issue of Le Soleil which I quoted earlier, we can read the following:

The future of money remains gloomy. Even if the special drawing rights are freely accepted by all countries as part of their international monetary reserves—and nothing is so far from being sure—these rights would only enable nations to postpone a little consideration of problems which cause inflation.

That means that nothing is solved yet.

And I continue the quotation:

The newspaper adds this: "The recent experience has once again demonstrated that an attitude of levity towards currency is not even a good policy in the end—When this lesson has been learned, perhaps a monetary conference will serve some purpose. For instance, can the nations who want a certain amount of freedom towards world monetary discipline find a respectable way of ensuring it; they can be a little more flexible in their exchange rates".

The paper concludes: "Rigid exchange rates and rigid inflationary financing demonstrated that this is a fine recipe to produce chaos".

And there are bumps to go with that.

In La Presse of November 20, this is what Cyrille Felteau had to say. I quote:

Lessons from a monetary crisis.

In the eye of the layman and the experts, the new and serious difficulties the franc is going through prove beyond all doubts that the international monetary system is sick. In any event, that is what General de Gaulle and Mr. Couve de Murville have been saying for quite some time. In his televised speech to the nation, the French premier did not fail to emphasize this important point.

Those who participate in the system will have to take stock of themselves, if they want to prevent other jolts of this kind, which could degenerate into an economic depression on an international scale.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired. Does the committee agree to let the hon. member to continue his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Caouette: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I also thank my colleagues for allowing me to continue my remarks. However, I shall not take unfair advantage of the opportunity given to me. This shows the advantages of the democratic system which allows one to express one's views even if they are different from those of others.

Mr. Chairman, I continue to quote from Mr. Felteau's article:

The participants in the system will have to take hold of themselves if they want to avoid other crises of this sort which can lead to an international economic depression.

I should be noted that the present crisis opposing the franc to the German mark is the third crisis to shake the world monetary system in twelve months.

There have been three international monetary crises in the space of twelve months.

In November 1967, the pound sterling fell. In March 1968, there was a rush on gold—

There was a general rush on gold.

—followed, in the spring, by a running away from the franc and the pound sterling.

In 1968, nobody wanted francs or pounds sterling.

Many Canadians will also remember that in January of that year, the Canadian dollar was saved in extremis.

It was almost a case of administering the last rites.

All this shows that most currencies, with the exception of the American dollar, are more or less vulnerable.

And even the American dollar gave rise to speculations last spring.

> In spite of several important differences, the present situation in France is similar to that which has existed in Great Britain for years.

As I was saying earlier Mr. Chairman, was France, a year ago, not considered as the country with the strongest monetary system in the world? And one year later, France is driven into a corner, as England was two or three years ago. Today, Germany is considered as the country with the strongest currency in the world; a year ago, there was no talk of Germany or of her Herculean strength from the monetary point of view. Today, everybody says that Germany has the strongest monetary system because her people are hard-working and productive. As if France and England had stopped producing, and French and English workers did not want to work!

The international finance is thus putting out feelers in the world. Those wretched financiers, Mr. Chairman, are responsible for destitution throughout the world. They create destitution in all the countries of the world and not only in France or Great Britain, but even in Canada. When we have reached the point where a responsible government as the Canadian government, finds neither the courage nor the strength to act and to make a thorough reform of the Canadian monetary system, what can that government expect to do and what influence could it have at the international level?

In his article of November 20, 1968, Mr. Felteau stated:

> In spite of a few considerable differences, the present situation of France is similar to that which prevails in Great Britain and which started there many years ago. This has been pointed out, for example, in the Wall Street Journal who without mincing words feels that "if Great Britain and France want to become financially respectable they will have to become financially responsible—"

• (9:30 p.m.)

Those are potent words: "To become financially respectable, they have to become financially responsible". Governments must become financially responsible. If the government worked toward a monetary system adapted to our physical possibilities, to the work performed by the whole nation, it could then be called financially responsible and financially respectable.

At the present time, France, Britain, Germany, the United States and Canada are not financially respectable but financially irresponsible, because they will not face facts. Mr. Felteau concludes by saying:

> A kind of "red light" which could not by itself stabilize currencies. For this purpose nothing replaces policies of austerity.

Mr. Felteau concludes by saying that austerity must prevail, that we must tighten our belt, while production is lost or deteriorates on store shelves, and some people understand that.

I have here in my hand the letter which came with the La Presse clipping and which says:

> Dear Mr. Caouette,
> I hope that you will take a few seconds to talk about that on your T.V. program.

I will talk about it on television eventually, but tonight I bring the matter up in the House of Commons.

> Would the Grand Charles be a Créditiste?

Because of his financial difficulties? I hope so. If we have to face financial difficulties to open our eyes, let us consider the stupidity, the nonsense of a monetary system like the one which is imposed upon the nations of the world.

What gives value to the Canadian dollar? The French people from France? The British from England? The Chinese from China? The Russians from Russia? No. Those who give value to the Canadian dollar are the Canadian people who develop their country, and no one else. Our Canadian dollars do not circulate in the United States nor in Russia.

When I went to Russia, four or five years ago, the Russian people looked at the Canadian dollar and found it funny; they did not even recognize the picture of the Queen of England. In their country, the monetary unit is the rouble. I noted, as did those who were with me, that a rouble was the equivalent of an American dollar and, as soon as we left Russia, we went to Zurich in Switzerland—I was with the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) who, at the time, was a good Social Crediter—to exchange our roubles for dollars. Then, we found that, on the international market, we needed four roubles to get one American dollar, while in Russia one rouble was equivalent to one Amercan dollar. The value of the rouble, therefore, depreciates at the international level, but does that prevent the Russians from developing at home? Some say that they will reach the moon before the Americans, and I hope so. Let them go on the moon and stay there. However, the fact remains that inside their country, they could not care less about American dollars, Canadian dollars or French francs and they succeed in developing their country, perhaps through painstaking efforts because they do not have our production capacity. Their production system is completely disorganized, but they keep on going anyway according to their capacity.

Why, in a country such as Canada, could we not do the same thing? What prevents us from developing our riches if not a lack of money?

In the whole world, people wish to participate in the International Monetary Fund, to allow underprivileged countries to avail themselves of special drawing rights.

In my opinion, this is just running round in circles, and in twenty years from now, if we are still alive, we shall be asked to reconsider the Bretton Woods agreements, as amended according to this resolution; we shall still be contending with monetary problems that the present system cannot solve.

So, instead of contemplating a reform of the international system, let us begin with the reform of our own domestic system, let us create Canadian dollars according to the opportunities we have to develop our natural resources. At present the government wavers; claiming that we are short of money, it blocks highway construction and enlargement of hospitals, while patients are waiting for admittance.

Mr. Chairman, we will go and borrow from the International Monetary Fund to enlarge our hospitals in Canada, in the province of Quebec or Ontario; we will go and make use of special drawings rights in the International Monetary Fund to find oil wells in northern Alberta, in Saskatchewan, to enable our farmers to produce wheat and to sell it to foreign countries, or to grant them loans.

Mr. Chairman, I say we live in a financial system that defies imagination, a topsy-turvy world of fools and that we are led by the most notorious amongst them. I say and I shall never repeat enough: that is where the problem lies, and it is the duty of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the ministers, the members of government, everyone of them, to study the problem as it is, instead of indulging in vain imaginings or spinning tall tales; in short, no dreaming in colour, as the honourable member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) said the other day. He is one of those who dream in colour and has been for a long time. Indeed, he has no solution to bring before the house; all he ever does is to mouth stupidities.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

I would never permit the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) to throw a stone in my backyard; he says I dream in colour, but his own colours are mortuary and funereal—

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Trois-Rivières has just shown how he has reached some degree of intelligence. Between his ears, there is a total vacuum. He talks of funereal colours; what does his system propose except things mortuary throughout the whole country?

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Trois-Rivières, on another question of privilege.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Témiscamingue says that I have nothing between my ears. I am ready to concede he is a genius, but I must remind him that when I was a student, I learned that genious was the nearest thing to insanity.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Caouette: It is undoubtedly for that reason, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member for Trois-Rivières did not continue his studies. In any event, I am planning something for him that he will get, not tonight but on another occasion.

Recently he told the house I was dreaming in colour. Let him tell us who is dreaming in colour, with monkey plans like that, in the whole world, if he has a head upon his shoulders that can be of some use to him and not just to wear a hat. At present, he is giving proof that it is a hat stand instead of something to reason with.

Mr. Chairman, as far as the Bretton Woods agreements are concerned, the hon. member for Trois-Rivières and most of the Liberal members never heard about them throughout their whole life, while I was in this house when the subject was under discussion and the agreements were entered into. In fact it is at that time we warned the government of the Right Hon. Mackenzie King of what is happening today.

National currencies of all countries are unstable; they are losing a part of their value and devaluations follow one another. Poverty is settling down permanently in all countries. What is being proposed against that? Absolutely nothing. Yet one allows himself to rise in this house to talk seriously before his electors in the constituency of Trois-Rivières. The hon. member can well be looked upon as a monkey in his own constituency.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Témiscamingue thinks he is smarter than anybody else, but he has not even succeeded in convincing his own supporters.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I think the hon. members for Témiscamingue and Trois-Rivières should limit themselves to the resolution under consideration.

Mr. Caouette: It is easier to get along at Bretton Woods than with the hon. member for Trois-Rivières, Mr. Chairman.

In any case, I shall close my remarks—

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege. He is provoking me and I am asking the Chair to protect me.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I am closing my remarks, but I do not want to resume my seat without sounding once again a note of caution to the government against what may happen within a few years. France had its turn recently; soon, it may be ours. Bretton Woods agreements will never solve the economic problems of Canada, nor will they ever solve—the way they are conceived—the international monetary issue.

It is through the exchange of goods that countries will come to an agreement. But as long as we do not take productivity into account and think only in terms of dollars and gold, the countries of the world will suffer while, as usual, the financiers will get great benefits, because they are the ones who set the exchange rates and make profits.

Pius XI said in 1931: Those who control money and credit are the masters of our lives and without their permission nobody has even the right to breathe. Pope Pius XI set forth the objectives of a sound economic structure in these terms: For then only will economy be soundly established and attain truly its end when it secures for all and each, part of those goods which nature and technical achievement can give, and that share, he said, should be sufficient to supply for all and each an honest livelihood.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his second speaking period has expired.

[English]

Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, I rise to make a few comments on this resolution. I would like the members of the committee to note that the parliamentary secretary introduced the resolution. Prior to this he introduced the resolution on the Kennedy round. I am wondering whether there is a crack in the Liberal cabinet, because the parliamentary secretary appears to be making such progress with regard to these financial matters. When one remembers the poor budget brought down by the Minister of Finance, he appreciates why the parliamentary secretary is getting the headlines these days.

The leader of the Ralliement Créditiste should not be too disappointed with the Liberal party, because in 1962 when the Liberals were so anxious to displace the Conservative government they supported the free money theories of Social Credit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gilbert: The new members of the Liberal party should remember that fact. When the leader of the Creditiste party says that there should be special drawing rights on the Bank of Canada, I certainly agree with him because if you read this morning's paper you would realize the special drawing rights which the banks have on Canadian citizens. The profits that were made by chartered banks in the last year should be revealed to this house. They range from 48.3 per cent of an increase by the Royal Bank over their profits of last year, down to a low of 21.2 per cent, with an average of about 37 per cent. This indicates that the banks have special drawing rights on Canadian citizens.

The substance of this bill is to set up special drawing rights within the Bretton Woods Agreement. This was agreed upon some time ago, and we are now facing its implementation. We in the New Democratic party have said that there should be an immediate conference of the members of the International Monetary Fund so that they can re-evaluate their position and bring forth some new ideas. In his introductory remarks the parliamentary secretary said this was a major step forward. If this is the only major step forward after almost 25 years, all I can say is that it is a very disappointing one. I believe we have had many major steps backwards, and that is why we in the New Democratic party have felt that there should be a new conference of the members of the Bretton Woods Agreement to study some of the monetary problems.

When one considers the serious economic crises that have taken place in the last year and a half, such as the two onslaughts on the English pound, the pressure on the Canadian dollar followed by the crisis with regard to the French franc, he realizes that there must be some new way out of this economic chaos. It is obvious that international speculators are playing more than their full share in creating these crises, and our parliamentary leader underlined this in his statement a few days ago. He said we should do something more than what is proposed in the special drawing rights legislation. This is why we in the New Democratic party have said that serious consideration should be given to a floating exchange rate. One of the most serious problems consists in the fixing of an exchange rate to our dollar, to the pound and to the franc in the international monetary system.

So we would welcome the reference of the bill to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs so that it can be closely examined in regard to the floating exchange problem. I hope that the parliamentary secretary will invite the Postmaster General to state his views on the subject of the floating exchange rate. He is the only member in the cabinet to support it, and thus he also supports the position taken by the New Democratic party.

When the parliamentary secretary said that the approval of a substantial majority of the member nations is required, that is three-fifths of the nations having four-fifths of the total voting power, he indicated how intricate this matter is. I hope the parliamentary secretary will tell us which countries have so far given their approval to this serious matter. I suppose the over-all problem is not only to find a solution to the economic chaos which the members of the International Monetary Fund have experienced, but to examine closely the problems of underdeveloped countries, because without a great increase in trading and without the co-operation of the members of the International Monetary Fund in solving the problems of the underdeveloped nations we are found to face another serious economic crisis. Therefore I plead with the parliamentary secretary to urge the cabinet and the present Minister of Finance to press for a new meeting of the signatories of the Bretton Woods Agreement, so they could study some of the problems which go far beyond the special drawing rights.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale, for Mr. Benson), thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-138, to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act and the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FISHERIES

ESTABLISHMENT OF FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING CORPORATION

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to regulate interprovincial and export trade in freshwater fish and to establish the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation; to provide that the corporation shall conduct its operations on a self-sustaining financial basis without appropriations therefor by parliament; to provide that the governor in council may authorize the Minister of Finance, under certain terms and conditions, to guarantee repayment of loans by banks to the corporation and to make loans to the corporation, the aggregate outstanding of amounts borrowed or loaned not to exceed five million dollars; to provide also for grants to the corporation, out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, not exceeding in the aggregate of one hundred thousand dollars to enable the corporation to meet initial operating and establishment expenses; and to provide further for other related and incidental matters.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee Mr. Béchard in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. House in committee of the whole on the proposed resolution. Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): The resolution before the committee will allow us to introduce a bill to establish the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. The establishment of this corporation has been under discussion by the provincial governments concerned and the federal government for some time. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has had many meetings recently with the officials and ministers concerned with a view to moving forward in this important venture. The bill will enable board marketing of freshwater fish produced in the prairie provinces, the Northwest Territories and northwestern Ontario to be established. It is proposed that this marketing board take the form of a crown corporation which would buy the catch directly from the fishermen, and sell the resulting fish and fish products for export and to domestic processors and distributors. This corporation would be given powers and responsibilities in interprovincial and export trade, and by agreement with the provinces it would receive under provincial legislation parallel powers and responsibilities in trade within the participating provinces. Similar arrangements would be made in the case of the Northwest Territories.

It is intended that the corporation will conduct its operations on a self-sustaining financial basis. It will be financed by bank loans with government guarantee of repayment or by direct loans to the corporation. It will receive a grant for initial operating and establishment expenses.

The objectives of this legislation will be a more orderly marketing for the benefit of the whole fishery, and by this means the achievement of higher and more stable prices for the catch; to provide the fishermen with a better share of the market value of their fish; and to expand total sales and over-all production in the fishery.

The legislation, as I have indicated, was brought forward by the government in response to requests by the provinces concerned for assistance in dealing with the industry and its chronic problems. There were various attempts made previously to solve the problems of the industry, but they were not as successful as had been hoped. It is the conviction of the groups concerned that research activity that is designed to improve conditions in the industry will not be of full benefit unless the central problem of more orderly marketing is solved.

I might remind hon. members, Mr. Chairman, that in 1964 a federal-provincial conference established a committee to study this whole question. After this study was made, in 1965 the McIvor commission was appointed to look into the question. The commission agreed largely with the findings of the province of Manitoba, which had also studied the matter and in which province approximately 40 per cent of the production originates.

These findings, Mr. Chairman, were that the industry is characterized by outmoded business practices and extremely heavy indebtedness on the part of the fishermen; that low and uncertain incomes of the fishermen make it difficult for them to improve their equipment; that much of their equipment is owned by fish companies, and heavy indebtedness on the part of the fishermen to the companies gives them no choice but to sell their fish to the companies which finance them; and that for their part the companies find the provision of credit expensive and awkward. Indeed, often the companies lack the financial strength to hold their inventories until the best price can be obtained.

[Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt).]

In its report, Mr. Chairman, the commission recommended the establishment of an export monopoly, but strongly emphasized the need for fish to be bought directly from the fishermen and for direct transfer to the fishermen of any increased export earnings. The report stressed the importance of orderly marketing, particularly in regard to exports. It recommended some concentration of processing and some streamlining of operation with regard to the flow of products to market. It urged attention be given to improving the quality of the product of the fishery in order to increase its value and reducing the risk of loss, as well as gaining wider consumer acceptance.

The Canadian inland fishery, in total, extends over an area which contains some 20 per cent or more of the world's fresh water. In this extraordinary resource, the harvesting of fish could be more immediately susceptible to scientific management than in the ocean fisheries.

In this sector, Mr. Chairman, the annual average of landings for the six year period 1960-1966 was 74.1 million pounds with a value to the fishermen of $8.5 million. Some 95 per cent of the total landings consists of white fish, lake trout, pickerel, pike and sauger. There are few alternative sources of these species in Canada or in other parts of the world, and none in equivalent volumes.

The fish referred to in this six year period produced exports valued at $13 million. These species of fish do not compete directly with markets enjoyed by ocean fish but tend to supply a specialized demand, particularly in the United States.

Some 6,000 to 7,000 fishermen obtain employment in this fishery, many of them living at near subsistence levels. A large portion of these are Indians and Métis. Under present conditions there appears to be little or no inducement for increased productivity or for men to continue in the fishery where there is other remunerative employment available. In contrast to this there is substantial evidence that the resource possibilities of these freshwater lake areas, on a sustained yield basis, are far greater than are being exploited.

The underlying objective of the proposed legislation is to create for the fishery a totally new environment which will be attractive to capital investment and which will enable the raising of income levels of fishermen to the point where they become independently creditworthy. To achieve these objectives, Mr. Chairman, will take time and will require the support of related provincial and federal programs in the fields of education, manpower training, research, re-equipment and financing.

Following the McIvor report, federal-provincial studies of the problems of the industry pointed to the need for collaboration between the provinces and for the use of federal powers, particularly in the regulation of interprovincial and export trade. Necessary provisions to meet these needs are made in the bill. The agency it is proposed to establish is designed in the form of a corporate organization which will receive the necessary federal powers under this legislation, and by agreement may undertake functions and responsibilities on behalf of interested provinces under related provincial legislation.

Responsibility for the administration of fisheries in these provinces is delegated under the Fisheries Act to provincial ministers. This includes matters such as licensing of fishermen. The recommendation of the provinces is that there be enforced regulations for the fishing season.

For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, and because of their general economic interest in the fisheries, provincial governments have agreed to participate in the direction of the agency and, at the same time, to co-ordinate their activities in the regulation of their fisheries for their mutual benefit.

The corporation would not be intended to duplicate existing facilities of the industry. It should seek to reduce unnecessary duplication of facilities and improve efficiency by streamlining the flow of products to market. It would need to smooth over periods of peak production in order to avoid pressure on prices. Orderly marketing would be planned in consultation with the trade acting as the agents of the corporation. In planning new investment in processing, refrigerated storage, packaging and transportation fields, the industry would be assisted by the corporation. There are possibilities to be explored by expanding markets overseas as well as in the United States, and of increasing consumption in Canada. Greater stability could be sought in part through greater diversification of products and of markets, and through wider use of available species of fish.

As proposed by the McIvor commission, it is intended to establish initial prices for each species, by grade, at the opening of each season, to make payment for the catch on the basis of these initial prices through the season, and at the conclusion of each season to distribute to fishermen in a final payment any additional earnings obtained through marketing of the catch. The corporation should also be empowered to extend short term credit to fishermen to finance the purchase of food and fishing supplies, following established practice in the existing industry.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being ten o'clock it is my duty to rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house.

Progress reported.

• (10:00 p.m.)

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, has the government house leader any information about any fresh house business? It is so nice to see him moving around so quickly after those tiring sittings of the procedural committee.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased by the concern of the hon. member from my father's birthplace. Discussions have been going on up until the last few seconds about the business for tomorrow. We propose to go into committee of supply; I shall be talking to hon. gentlemen opposite and arranging for a continuation of the discussion at some later stage. We may be calling further estimates this week.

Mr. Nesbitt: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Does the government intend to move concurrence in the first report of the standing committee on transport and communications which was tabled this afternoon? If so, when?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That is one of the subjects under discussion with opposition house leaders. The number of days provided by the standing order for the consideration of estimates will soon expire. There has been some suggestion that we might use for estimates days that are otherwise available for supply motions. I gather there will be discussions, and perhaps something along that line might be arranged for Friday.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is it understood or will it be confirmed that on Thursday we shall be dealing with the estimates of the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That depends on the lapse of time provided for by the order of September 20. I understand that if the supply motion provided for in that order is converted into estimates days there will be a general concurrence to deal with agricultural estimates on Thursday.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

IMMIGRATION—DISTRIBUTION OF PAMPHLET AS TO AVAILABILITY OF HOUSING

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, on November 7 last I directed a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration which arose out of a pamphlet entitled, "Canadian Opportunities—Housing", and prepared by the Canadian government's immigration division in 1968. I asked the question because in my opinion the information in that pamphlet is, in important respects incorrect and will tend to create a completely false impression in the minds of prospective immigrants. In my opinion the pamphlet ought to be withdrawn and not used again until it is drastically revised.

Since the end of world war II more than 2 million immigrants have come to Canada. Our immigration policy has received the virtually unanimous support of all sections of the Canadian people. Business, industry, labour, have all supported this large-scale immigration. Immigrants have come to this country not only from Britain, Germany, Holland and the Scandinavian countries from which we have traditionally received them, but also in recent years from Italy, Portugal, Spain and Yugoslavia, to mention just a few. Unlike the immigrants who came here before the second world war, the vast majority of these new arrivals have gone to the cities, mainly to Toronto, Hamilton and Vancouver. They came here because it is a country in which there have been, and are, jobs, and wages which are high enough to enable them to make the kind of living they were not able to earn in the countries from which they came. This is good, and I hope this situation will continue.

But I submit it is completely improper for the government or any other agency to misrepresent conditions in Canada. Immigrants have been told by private employers in many cases that wages are substantially higher than they really are. Within the last year, a mining company in Thompson told workers in Germany that the wages were five dollars an hour. This, of course, is not true. We do not tell immigrants about some of the difficulties they may encounter in Canada. We have not been telling them that up to this year they would not receive the benefit of the kinds of medical insurance plans which had been set up in their countries of origin, or that there is no pension plan such as exists, for instance, in Sweden.

I want to quote a couple of sections from this pamphlet. On page 14 there is one paragraph which I think is a classic of misrepresentation. It says:

> In 1967, the average cost of a new house was in the neighbourhood of $19,000. The average down payment required to purchase this house was about $4,300. The average cost of an older house was approximately $12,000, perhaps a little higher in the larger cities. The average down payment for an older house was some $2,000.

It should be remembered that the majority of immigrants who come to Canada go to Toronto, Hamilton or Vancouver. I submit that there is virtually no truth in the suggestion that an immigrant or anyone else can buy a new house in those cities for $19,000, or an old house for $12,000. No government should be telling prospective immigrants that this is the situation. I suggest to the minister that this kind of thing ought to be taken out of the pamphlet immediately.

Similarly, on page 16, we find a paragraph which says:

> While there has been some shortage of accommodation in Canada in the past year or so, particularly low-cost housing in the larger cities, there is at the present time an upsurge in construction which should improve conditions, particularly in the field of rentals.

Of course, the situation is not improving. It is getting worse. If this were not the case the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) who is in charge of housing would not be travelling across the country with the so-called task force looking for solutions. I could go on quoting from this pamphlet but I think I have demonstrated conclusively that some of the statements in it are, to say the least, exaggerated. The minister ought to take steps to withdraw this pamphlet and to stop its distribution among prospective immigrants until it can be corrected.

• (10:10 p.m.)

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) for his question, but I have to argue that what he has just said is only an expression of opinion. I do not have the same opinion as he, especially in connection with his reference to page 14 of the pamphlet where it says that the average cost of a new house in 1967 was in the neighbourhood of $19,000. The hon. member said that in the regions of Toronto, Vancouver and other places in Canada he could not buy a house for that amount of money. I am from Montreal and I can certify to the hon. member that in the suburbs of Montreal he could buy a house for less than that, some $17,000 or $18,000.

Mr. Orlikow: Try Ottawa.

Mr. Loiselle: I agree that the pamphlet is wrong in one respect. It states that the down payment required is about $4,300. In the Montreal region one could buy a house with a much less down payment than that.

I have received a copy of this brochure from the department. I think it is a nice publication, which reports correctly what the Department of Manpower and Immigration can do for immigrants. For instance at page 17, referring to the information that our officials outside Canada give to prospective immigrants, it says:

> When you visit a Canadian immigration office, an experienced officer will advise you not only on housing but also on employment opportunities, the professions, education, and an almost endless list of topics about Canada.
> At your port of entry in Canada, you will be interviewed by a Canadian immigration officer who will look after your immediate needs. If necessary, he will refer you to the Canada manpower centre in the city or town where you will be living.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North may not agree with everything that is printed in this pamphlet, but I should like each member of the house to take a good look at this pamphlet, which is distributed by every Canadian immigration office throughout the world. It tells immigrants of everything they can expect in any field when they reach Canada. Our immigration officers also advise intending immigrants to obtain copies of Canadian newspapers and read them before coming here.

HOUSING—QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL LOANS TO COMBAT UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be brief tonight since I have partly attained the objective I had in mind when I asked the question being discussed tonight. I wish to congratulate and thank the officials of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for answering my request so quickly.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that a construction firm in Amos—a city located in my riding—would have been forced to lay off several construction workers during the winter if new contracts had not been forthcoming in addition to those it had yet to complete. After calling the officials of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, some cases were found where loans had not been accepted and were still pending, which made it possible to award to that company in Amos two housing projects. Consequently, that company will be able to keep its workers on the payroll during the winter, which will ease the unemployment situation in that region.

Indeed, as reported on page 3070 of Hansard, I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) the following question:

> Since the winter works program has been discontinued, would the hon. minister, in order to fight unemployment, allow additional loans above the 6,000 already granted to contractors for the building of houses next winter?

As will be recalled, the Minister of Transport had previously announced that loans would be available to contractors in the fall or winter, for the building of 6,000 housing units.

Once completed the houses could be put up for sale. I believe this is an excellent measure, since it meets two needs: first, in Canada, there is a strong demand for additional housing units, and I am told that not as many people as was expected or desired requested loans guaranteed or granted directly by the Central Housing and Mortgage Corporation; hence the offer to finance the construction of 6,000 housing units by contractors. In the second place, this measure enables contractors taking advantage thereof to keep most of their qualified personnel during the winter season and thus fight unemployment.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

In that context, Mr. Speaker, I think that other loans should be added to the 6,000 already announced to meet the needs of future owners and persons who otherwise would be seasonally unemployed, at times during an extended period, but who could consequently find a satisfactory position right this winter.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to note that the question of the hon. member turned into congratulations to the government.

We are therefore pleased to hear that he obtained a satisfactory answer to his request, that the problems of his constituency have been solved and that the workers can contine to work.

As concerns housing, Mr. Speaker, hon. members will recall that forecasts were for 175,000 housing starts during 1968. This number was subsequently raised to about 180,000. Now that the current year is about to end, it appears that this figure of 180,000 will even be surpassed, which will be an all-time record for Canada.

Housing starts during the last part of the year remained at a very high level. For instance, on October 31 of this year, 120,000 houses were being built. This figure exceeds by about 15,000 that for the same period last year. Thus, it seems obvious that we start the winter with a large number of buildings under way, and as housing starts have remained at a very satisfactory level, we can be assured that this very high level of construction will continue well into next year.

COMMUNICATIONS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PROPOSED CORPORATION STRUCTURE

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, the question of communications satellites is one of tremendous importance. I gather this from the minister's speeches, from Maclean's magazine, from the task forces, from the white papers, and even from a brand new ministry, the department of communications. Yet, there is a dearth of information. The minister designate seems to be somewhat less than communicative when dealing with matters relating to his own department, although he is not so reticent when discussing NATO, NORAD or matters of that kind. Some of us have sought a statement on this in the house. My question of October 18 which appears on the order paper is very simple, but it has not yet been answered.

[Mr. Laprise.]

This is a major subject. The government has declared itself to be, or to have been, seized of the question as a matter of urgency for a long time. On July 14, 1967 the then prime minister indicated that for the past year the government had been examining the Canadian space program in particular detail. Several studies on various aspects of satellite communications have been conducted under the auspices of the Department of Transport. The Chapman report was published in March under the auspices of the science secretariat. Then came the white paper a year later. There have been other announcements and indications in between. The Southam press of April 2, 1968 revealed the following:

> Industry minister Drury said Monday he hoped a corporation to operate a Canadian owned domestic satellite communications system will be created by autumn.

Autumn has come and gone. The snows of winter are upon us.

Dr. MacIntosh was appointed in April 1968. We have had studies, reports, rumours, magazine articles and speeches by the minister, but little in the house. We ask, why. Of course it is an important question. It is one that transcends politics; but the public should know by now the general trend and tenor of the government's policy, and the program to which the government is committing the people of this country. It is a serious question. This involves international and intra-dominion relations, and we wonder how much consultation with provinces is going to be pursued in this very important field of educational television. In the last few weeks I have noticed comments by the premier of the province of Quebec about this costly and crucial matter. These comments are very significant and very important. He has suggested that no opportunity should be missed to maximize Canadian effort in this regard.

Let us look at this, and let the people's representatives know and have a chance to discuss this vital area, which could so fundamentally affect the quality of life of the people of Canada. Have there been discussions with the provinces? Have there been discussions, with those who lead in this field, about the effect of satellites and their capacity for improvement of mankind?

Quebec is not the only province interested in educational television, but it has made moves which its leaders have publicized and which the federal government must be aware of. How does this awareness reveal itself in federal government planning? I should like to ask the minister, who is not always lacking in communication to drop and cast aside this cloak of secrecy and concealment, and let the upcoming department of communications communicate with the people of Canada through the people's tribunes, their representatives here in the House of Commons. Let us know what Dr. MacIntosh thinks. I have never met him because I do not move in these exalted financial circles, as the minister does. I understand the minister graduated from McGill and that he and Dr. MacIntosh are on the same basis regarding their respect for that institution. Let us know what this distinguished businessman thinks of this whole project. Let us also know if what Maclean's magazine projects in this regard is close to the truth. Tell us what the score is and what the government is recommending.

All Canadian people are involved in this costly and important matter. What could Dr. MacIntosh recommend that should be concealed? I cannot envisage any way in which the Canadian satellite program could be bootlegged into an international program. What are our rights and what are our recommendations, and do these allow enough space for people to co-operate? Let us know about this very important and vital situation.

I do not know whether the minister is interested in power, but I am sure he will find that in this house of parliament knowledge is power. Surely he is aware as the minister designate of communications that he should communicate.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has made a very eloquent plea. I have the very highest regard for Dr. MacIntosh. He and I were student graduates from McGill and we have been long-time friends. He was appointed before I became a member of the federal government. Dr. MacIntosh was asked to draft a model and organizational structure of a financial and corporate satellite. As everyone in this house realizes, we have asked for a report from two companies, Northern Electric and R.C.A., as to their views regarding an appropriate kind of satellite, economically speaking, and educationally speaking, which we could send aloft. We have just received these reports. They contain many hundreds of pages of highly technical material. We must digest these reports. I would suggest to the hon. member that Dr. MacIntosh's report will become relevant when the government itself has decided, in light of other technical reports, what technical progress will meet the needs of the people across this land.

This decision will have a great unifying effect in Canadian history. When Canadian needs are determined and the required facilities are evaluated we will know whether we must spend $60 million or $160 million, or something in between. This will obviously have an effect on the kind of financial structure which will evolve, and therefore will have an effect on whether we can accept Dr. MacIntosh's report in its entirety.

This could be modified; but at the present time, until we have studied our needs, the facilities, the capability that is available in Canada, until we have decided on the kind of satellite that we want to send up, whether it be a Volkswagen or Cadillac type, I can make no useful recommendation to my colleagues in the cabinet. Therefore I doubt that it would be useful to table the report until I can make relevant comments on it.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.28 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, December 4, 1968

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DINSDALE—STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON ASSISTANCE TO HOCKEY TEAM

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege pertaining to a question I asked yesterday respecting financial assistance to Canada's national hockey team. At that time the question was ruled out of order by Your Honour on the ground that it lacked urgency and I abided by your ruling, intending to deal with the matter at a later date, taking advantage of opportunities which are available to hon. members of the house.

Unfortunately in the interim the Minister of National Health and Welfare made a statement on this subject outside the House of Commons. I feel it to be a violation of the privileges of members of this house when ministers resort to this method of conveying information rather than using the framework provided by the House of Commons. I feel it is my duty to make a protest, because this tendency on the part of the government to communicate by instant electronic folklore instead of through parliament is occurring much too frequently.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

MR. BROADBENT—STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON INCENTIVES TO INDUSTRY

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I, too, rise on a question of privilege, with reference to a statement made by the Minister of Industry. In his reply to my speech on the estimates of the Department of Industry the hon. gentleman asserted, as reported on page 3394 of Hansard on Monday last:

> ...a Canadian industrialist who availed himself of our programs might get as much for a civilian project as for a defence project.

Later in the debate he further asserted, as reported in Hansard at page 3399:

> I have indicated that...a combination of IRDIA and PAIT, the two programs I talked about this afternoon, would give him quite a lot of governmental support and as much as he would get on a defence project.

With reference to these quotations, Mr. Speaker, the minister failed to point out that a defence industry doing research and development may also receive funds from the IRDIA program. Thus the appropriate comparison would be to balance the benefits of PAIT and IRDIA against those of IRDIA and DDSP. When this is done, Mr. Speaker, I believe the result is as I stated, that the government is currently providing incentives to our military industry for research and development which exceed those provided to civilian industry.

The minister, I suggest, should retract his statements.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

TABLING OF TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS OF FIRST CONFERENCE

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table, with the consent of the house, a copy in English and in French of the report of the proceedings of the first meeting of the constitutional conference held in Ottawa last February.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Has the Prime Minister leave to table this document?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CHANGE IN ORDER RESPECTING REMAINING SUPPLY DAYS

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been some discussions in the house with respect to the use of the remaining time provided by the order made on September 20, 1968 in regard to the consideration of supply. I believe there would be a general disposition not to use the two days provided by that order for a supply motion, but instead to add the two days to the 17 provided for estimates business, so we would therefore have 19 days altogether for estimates.

If the house is in agreement, Mr. Speaker, perhaps the following might be made an order:

That the order of the house on September 20, 1968 with respect to the business of supply for the fiscal year 1968-69 be amended by deleting the provision for a supply motion of two sitting days under subparagraph (b) (ii) and that subparagraph (b) (iii) of the said order be amended by increasing the over-all limitation from 17 to 19 sitting days, and that subparagraph (b) (iv) of the said order be amended by providing that every question necessary to dispose of all proceedings necessary for the purpose of the order be put on the 19th allotted day.

If the house is in agreement, Mr. Speaker, I would move that motion, which is seconded by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen).

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

CRIMINAL CODE

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO ABOLISH CORPORAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-139, to amend the Criminal Code (abolition of corporal punishment).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to abolish a cruel relic from a barbaric age, namely corporal punishment, and to put our penal system on the basis of reform and rehabilitation rather than revenge.

I would also ask the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice to include this amendment in the omnibus bill on criminal law which will be before the house in the near future.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADA EVIDENCE ACT

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-3 (from the Senate), to amend the Canada Evidence Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

BANK OF CANADA NUMISMATIC COLLECTION

Question No. 63—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

1. Does the Bank of Canada have a numismatic collection and, if so, how much money was expended in each of the last ten fiscal years to obtain items for that collection?

2. Has the collection been put on public display and, if so, upon what dates and at what locations?

3. For each item for which more than $50 was expended, what was (a) the purchase price, and (b) the year identity, by country or group, grade and quality?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I am informed by the Bank of Canada as follows: 1. Yes. The amount expended on the collection is not a matter of public record.

2. Part of the collection has been on public display at the following locations:

NATIONAL GRAINS COUNCIL

Question No. 533—Mr. Gleave:

1. Regarding the National Grains Council, specifically, what were the terms of reference proposed to the meeting of the council in Winnipeg on October 16, 1968?

2. What areas of the grain industry is it proposed that this Council shall examine and report (a) in Western Canada (b) in Eastern Canada?

3. What areas of grain marketing is it proposed that the Council shall examine and make recommendations or take action on (a) export (b) domestic?

4. Will the said Council give direction and make recommendations on research and, if so, in what areas?

5. What are the proposed methods of financing the operation of the Council, to whom will it be responsible and to which branch of government will it report and how often?

Questions

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Trade and Commerce as follows: 1. A meeting of interested parties was held in Winnipeg to discuss the establishment of a national grains council. No terms of reference were actually proposed to the meeting, however, a paper representing a consolidation of the views expressed by participants at the morning session was distributed during the afternoon session.

2. It is contemplated that the national grains council, when established, will choose the subjects it will examine and on which it will make recommendations.

3. Answered by 2.

4. Answered by 2.

5. Decisions on these matters have not yet been reached.

*C.M.H.C. LOAN TO QUEBEC HOUSING CORPORATION

Question No. 585—Mr. McCleave:

1. Has Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation agreed to make a loan to the Quebec Housing Corporation of the approximate order of $140,000,000?

2. If so, on what authority, and on what conditions, if any?

3. Are similar terms available to other provincial government housing authorities or agencies?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the answer to parts 1 and 2 is as follows: By order in council dated April 25, 1968, passed under the National Housing Act approval was given to three agreements entered into by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the Quebec Housing Corporation under which C.M.H.C. agreed to make loans not exceeding $139,100,200 to Q.H.C. to assist in the financing of housing projects. The first agreement relates to housing projects undertaken by non-profit corporations (section 16A-NHA); the second to loans for the financing of public housing projects (section 35D-NHA); the third to loans for student housing projects (section 36B-NHA).

The agreements cover three programs to be undertaken in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1969 and require that each individual project be submitted to C.M.H.C. for determination of eligibility and loan amount.

[Mr. Gleave.]

The answer to the third part of the question is yes, in 1968. The policy in respect to future years will be announced following review of the report of the task force on housing and urban development.

EXPENDITURES OUTSIDE CANADA PROMOTING CANADIAN PORTS

Question No. 600—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Does the National Harbours Board spend funds for the purpose of promoting use of Canadian ports outside of Canada?

2. If so, how much has been spent in each of the last five years and in what way specifically was the money spent?

3. Are joint promotional programs entered into with individual port commissions or authorities?

4. If so, at what cost and with which ones during each of the past five years?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows: 1. A limited amount is spent on port promotion by advertising in foreign periodicals.

2. Cost of advertising in foreign periodicals for each of the past five years was as follows: 1963, $790; 1964, $790; 1965, $1,681; 1966, $1,987; 1967, $3,607.

3. No.

4. See answer to part 3.

FEDERAL SUBSIDIES

Question No. 606—Mr. Harding:

1. What was the total amount paid by the Government of Canada in subsidies for the fiscal years 1965-66, 1966-67, 1967-68, 1968-69 (estimated)?

2. What was the amount of the subsidy paid under each of the eligible categories?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Of the many possible definitions of the term "subsidy", the national income accounts concept covers the most widely accepted definition of the term, and has been used in preparing the answer.

1. Fiscal year	Total subsidies paid by government of Canada ($ millions)
1967-68	395
1968-69 (estimate)	415

2. Government of Canada subsidies (national accounts basis—$ millions)

	1965-66	1966-67	1967-68
Quality premium on high grade hog and lamb carcasses	8	9	10
Freight assistance on western feed grains incl. assistance in respect of grain storage cost	22	20	21
Payments under the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act	15	15	15
Payments in connection with the movement of coal	28	34	35
To advance the technological capability of Canadian manufacturing industry	–	4	6
Payments of carrying costs of temporary wheat reserves	37	30	29
Subventions in respect to eastern coal	2	4	2
Payments to the railway companies under the Maritime Freight Rates Act	14	15	14
Payments to railways under the provisions of the National Transportation Act [1]	65	138	127
Steamship subventions for coastal services	9	9	12
Trading loss: agriculture product account and agriculture stabilization account [2]	38	88	113
Other subsidies	32	15	11
Total	270	381	395

[2] Subsidy payments under the agriculture stablilization board account and the agriculture product board account.

Note: In the national accounts, subsidy payments in the supplementary period are shifted entirely to the next fiscal year. The amounts paid under each category may therefor differ from those shown in the public accounts. Detail for 1968-69 is not yet available.

AIRPORT TRAFFIC, VICTORIA, B.C.

Question No. 609—Mr. Anderson:

1. How many commercial flights are there per week to and from Victoria International Airport?

2. What is the average number of passengers handled per week?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): 1. August, 1968, an average of 194 flights per week.

2. August, 1968, an average of 5,432 passengers per week.

PAYMENTS TO CATHOLIC PRIESTS SERVING INDIANS

Question No. 612—Mr. Godin:

1. When was Father Gagnon, Parish Priest of the Huron Village in Quebec, notified that the government would cease to pay him a salary?

2. Have other Roman Catholic Priests ministering to the Indians received similar notices and, if so, what are their names and addresses?

3. Do missionaries of other religious denominations receive an annual remuneration from the government and, if so, what are their names and addresses?

Hon. Jean Chretien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. By letter dated September 9, 1968, the department notified Father Gagnon that his salary paid from a fund established for the benefit of the Indians of the province of Quebec, be discontinued effective December 31, 1968.

2. Yes, Reverend J. Rémi Dolan of Odanak, Yamaska, P.Q.

3. No.

Questions

MEETINGS ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

Question No. 618—Mr. Stanfield:

1. How many meetings have been held since July 1, 1968, by the Minister without Portfolio (responsible for Indian Affairs in conjunction with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) with Indian spokesmen and leaders in Canada and what are the dates of those meetings?

2. How many meetings have been held since July 1, 1968, by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, with Indian spokesmen and leaders in Canada and what are the dates of those meetings?

3. How many Indian reservations have been visited by the Minister without Portfolio, since July 1, 1968 and what are the dates of those visits?

SALE OF PLUTONIUM TO FRANCE

Question No. 628—Mr. Orlikow:

1. As Canada is a signatory to the International Atomic Energy Agency Convention on the safeguarding of fissionable materials, was the sale of plutonium to France carried out under the terms of this Convention?

2. What effective means are envisaged for inspection by Canada of French facilities to ensure that none of this fissionable material is shifted into weapons utilization?

3. How many 20 Kiloton strength atomic bombs can be produced from the amount of plutonium being sold to France by Canada?

4. What steps have been taken by Canada to check on the fissionable material produced by the reactor sold by Canada to India to ensure that it is not being used to produce nuclear weapons?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): In so far as the Department of External Affairs is concerned: 1. Canada is a member of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) and therefore subscribes to the principles of the statute of the organization. The IAEA has not established a convention on the safeguarding of fissionable materials. However, the sale of plutonium to France has been made in accordance with the Canadian government's long standing policy on "peaceful uses" of atomic energy which is wholly consistant with the principles underlying the IAEA.

2. The sale of plutonium to France from Canada is to be carried out under the provisions of the agreement, dated October 6, 1959, between Canada and the European Atomic Energy Community (EURATOM) for cooperation in the peaceful uses of atomic energy, which provides for the application of the system for safeguards and control established by the Community in accordance with the treaty establishing EURATOM, and for consultation and the exchange of visits between the contracting parties to give assurance that the Community's safeguards and control system is satisfactory and effective.

3. The report of the Secretary General of the United Nations, dated October 10, 1967, on the effects of the possible use of nuclear weapons and on the security and economic implications for states of the acquisition and further development of these weapons, estimates that some eight kilograms of plutonium containing 95 per cent of the fissionable isotope 239 is required for the construction of one nuclear warhead with a yield around 20 kilotons. The exact quantity of plutonium involved in this sale and the percentage of the 239 isotope contained therein will not be known until after the irradiated fuel from Canadian reactors has been processed at the Eurochemic nuclear fuel reprocessing plant at Mol, Belgium. It can be estimated, however, that this amount of plutonium might produce up to 20 bombs with a yield of 20 kilotons each. However, the French government has agreed that the plutonium will be used for peaceful purposes only, and it is subject to suitable safeguards arrangements under the Canada-EURATOM agreement.

4. The agreement between Canada and India providing for Canadian assistance in the construction of the Canada-India reactor was signed on April 28, 1956 before the establishment of the International Atomic Energy Agency. Under the agreement the government of India undertook that the reactor and any products resulting from its use will be employed for peaceful purposes only.

The agreements between Canada and India dated December 16, 1963, December 16, 1966 providing for Canadian assistance in the construction of the two reactors of the Rajasthan atomic power project (RAPP), stipulates that bilateral safeguards will be applied on the Rajasthan atomic power station and on the Douglas Point nuclear generating station in Canada, of which RAPP is a copy. The two governments have further agreed that the International Atomic Energy Agency shall be asked to administer the safeguards responsibilities of the agreement between the two governments, when either a reactor in each of the two stations has operated at full power for one year or 15 months after a reactor in each of the two stations has first achieved criticality, whichever is earlier.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY TO STRAIT OF CANSO

Question No. 653—Mr. Forrestall:

1. When completed, what will be the length of the Trans-Canada Highway between the Quebec-New Brunswick border and the Strait of Canso?

2. Of this total, how many miles of highway are of Trans-Canada Highway standards?

3. Of this total, how many miles represent new construction, and how many miles represent improvement of existing roads?

4. In the case of new construction, what has been the average cost per mile?

5. In the case of improvement of existing roads, what has been the average cost per mile?

6. When is it expected that the entire section referred to will be of Trans-Canada Highway standards?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. 533.5 miles.

2. 517.5 miles.

3. New construction, 293.9 miles; Improvement of existing roads, 223.6 miles.

4. $355,220 per mile.

5. $184,100 per mile.

6. October 1969.

*RECRUITMENT ABROAD FOR PUBLIC SERVICE

Question No. 676—Mr. Code:

1. Is it the policy of the Government of Canada to recruit candidates in other countries for positions in the federal public service for which no qualified Canadians are available?

Questions

2. So far in 1968, how many positions have been filled in this way, what are those positions and, how many such employees were recruited from each country?

3. Are these positions first advertised in Canada in the usual way by the Public Service Commission and was this the case in each of the instances referred to in part 2 above?

4. Is it the responsibility of Mr. Jules Nadon, First Personnel Attaché at the Canadian Embassy in France, to "make more effective the recruitment of French-speaking foreigners for professional posts in the federal service"?

5. Are "talent hunts" being launched in France by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics for sociologists, statisticians and economists and, if so (a) were the positions involved advertised in Canada (b) has it been impossible to obtain qualified French-speaking Canadians to fill them?

6. Is the Canadian Transport Commission seeking computer experts and other personnel in France and, if so (a) were the positions involved advertised in Canada (b) has it been impossible to obtain qualified French-speaking Canadians to fill them?

7. (a) What other departments of government are engaging in similar recruiting efforts, in what countries, and what positions are involved (b) have the positions in question been advertised in Canada in the usual way by the Public Service Commission and has it been impossible to find Canadians qualified to fill them?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: 1. Yes.

2. See Appendix.

PARK DEVELOPMENT, POINT PELEE, ONT.

Question No. 820—Mr. Danforth:

1. Has the government recently undertaken a major plan of development of Point Pelee and Point Pelee National Park?

2. What were the names of the consultants who took part in this undertaking?

3. What are the conditions of employment of the consultants and remuneration received by each and were any local consultants in or near this area used in the project and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. The national and historic parks branch of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development have embarked upon a major plan of development on Point Pelee national park. This will be phased over some ten years and follow closely the conceptual plan for this national park made public in November 1967.

2. To date the following consultants have participated in this development: Sasaki Strong & Associates; James F. MacLaren Limited; William J. Setterington.

3. (a) The conditions of employment of consultants will vary to some extent with the type of service required. Generally, however, the consultant is required to possess a demonstrated professional competence in the field for which the service is required and, where possible, practise in the province in which the project is located; (b) The remuneration received by Sasaki Strong Associates was $11,630.76. The other two consultants referred to in 2 above have not at this time completed their respective assignments; (c) William J. Setterington has offices in Leamington, Mr. James F. MacLaren in London, while Sasaki Strong & Associates were from Toronto. As the various forthcoming phases of the project are implemented additional opportunities will continue to occur for other local consultants to participate in this project.

Return tabled.

Order for Return

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I regret to have to rise again to ask when I will receive the answer to question No. 4. Really there is no excuse for the delay. It has been on the order paper since September 12, which is nearly three months. I have been told two or three times on orders of the day that it would be answered soon. The question is in exactly the same form as one I have asked every year for about 20 years. I am simply trying to get up to date information, and I am beginning to wonder about the delay. This has to do with pensions of retired civil servants.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the hon. member for this delay, and I will undertake to see that something is done about it.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

OUTSIDE ADVISERS ASSISTING IN REVIEW OF FOREIGN POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Now that the names of outside advisers who are to participate in the review of foreign policy have been leaked to the press together with the procedures to be followed in this review, will the hon. gentleman not agree that parliament and the country are entitled to a statement from the government in respect of the personnel, procedures and terms of reference of this review?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I held preliminary conversations with some ten people on September 28, not about the foreign policy review but about procedures for associating academic specialists with discussions on Canadian relations with Europe. These ten individuals, whose names are accurately reported by Mr. Newman in his article, are representatives of non-governmental organizations with particular interests in foreign policy, research and discussion. I am very much indebted to them for having undertaken to select academics who might have such discussions with us. I am sure everyone in the house will agree that it would be useful to get the views of academics on this question. The people who are mentioned in Mr. Newman's article are not likely to be those who will be involved in the review.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, would the Secretary of State for External Affairs consider it appropriate in these circumstances to indicate to parliament and Canada the terms of reference to this inquiry; and would he also confirm whether it is his intention or the intention of the government to submit this report to a private meeting sponsored by the Canadian Institute of International Affairs for consideration before parliament, any parliamentary committee or Canadians as a whole have had the opportunity to see the report? I ask this question in view of the position taken by the minister in requesting that he be allowed to obtain these comments regarding our foreign policy.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the discussion we will be having with these academics is to elicit their views before the government reaches any conclusions. The academics will not be made privy to any of the views of the government on this subject. It will be the purpose of the meeting to find out, before the government completes its review or comes to any view, the views of these people.

If I may be permitted to refer to a committee of the house, yesterday when I appeared before the committee on external affairs I made it plain, and I should like to repeat this now, that it would be very agreeable to the government if the committee were to invite the views of members of parliament and others who might like to appear before the committee to express their views before the government has completed this review. After the review is completed the intention is to publish a white paper, which would then of course be open for debate.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): A supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Speaker. First, are those experts who are being consulted by the government given access to classified information in order to make more appropriate comments; and if so, are they being cleared for security? Second, are any persons outside of Canada, or non-Canadians, being consulted in this regard with respect to the future foreign policy of Canada?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, on the first question the answer is in the negative. Our understanding is that the academics we would like to talk with do not want to be made aware of any classified information, because in that way they might be inhibited in expressing their views in other places. So I can say unqualifiedly that no classified information will be available to them.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, I directed another point to the minister. Perhaps he did not quite hear it. Are there any persons outside of Canada, or non-Canadians, being consulted in this regard with respect to the future foreign policy of Canada?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I would very much doubt whether the Institute of International Affairs would be likely to nominate such persons, but of course I do not know who these academics are going to be so I cannot answer that question quite so categorically. I would doubt very much, however, whether they would put forward the names of non-Canadians.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister say whether the advice given by these academics will be made public, so that members of this house and the general public can get the benefit of their advice to the government?

Mr. Sharp: I have never known academics who are reluctant to express their views on foreign policy. I am quite sure that after they have expressed them to us they will express them publicly and loudly.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. I hope he will not consider it redundant. Would the minister confirm that it is the intention of the government to maintain this country's military strength in Europe until January, 1970, at least?

Hon. Leo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I believe that was implied in the testimony I gave yesterday at the committee.

Mr. MacLean: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Are we to understand that the statement made in the house by the Prime Minister on November 15, I believe it was, to the effect that we can withdraw from NATO during the course of 1969 if we so decide, is in fact an option that is not now open to Canada under the present circumstances?

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, if I am asked to comment on that, I think the Prime Minister was referring to the fact that in August Canada could exercise an option or give notice of withdrawal.

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence and to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

In view of the fact that the estimates of the Department of National Defence have been reported to the house and those of the Department of External Affairs will be reported soon, are the two ministers considering the possibility of sending the annual report of the two departments back to the committee on external affairs and national defence, in order to allow the committee to continue its study and perhaps call witnesses who will help its members to form an opinion and advise the government with regard to its policy revision?

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the chairman of the committee on external affairs and national defence has plans to that effect, although they have no immediate connection with the estimates of the Department of National Defence, which were passed by the committee yesterday.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether the Minister of National Defence was expressing government policy when he stated on television last night that Europe is the geographical region where Canada's security is most in jeopardy.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): He was stating a very important point of view, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Is that all?

Mr. Baldwin: I should like to ask the Prime Minister, in respect of the question asked him earlier, if the government will give the same measure of attention to the recommendations of the committee on external affairs as they are apparently giving to the recommendation of the committee on transport and communications with regard to the railway service in Newfoundland.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think we should go on to a new subject.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED REIMPOSITION OF CEILING ON BANK INTEREST RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance, one that was asked last Monday by my colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. The Minister of Finance has probably seen it. In view of the very large profits announced by the banks of Canada, would the Minister of Finance give consideration to reimposing the ceiling on the interest rate, or to finding some other way of controlling interest rates, particularly on loans for housing mortgages?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the lifting of the ceiling on interest rates has meant that the marginal borrower in Canada has been able to borrow money at lower rates than when the ceiling was on. I think one should not only look at the profits of the banks; one must also look at those of all financial institutions, including finance companies, and at what is happening in this regard.

Mr. Lewis: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the minister's invalid elementary lecture on finance, but I should like to ask him whether in view of the profits which the banks are making he would at least consider renegotiating with the banks the interest rate on farm improvement loans, a subject matter within the purview of negotiation between the government and the lending institutions.

Mr. Benson: I do not think this is really necessary with respect to interest rates on farm improvement and student loans. In these cases what the borrower will have to pay is the current government borrowing rate for a similar term plus a small margin to cover administrative costs. I think this is a fair arrangement, and I believe people generally will be happy with what has been done in this respect.

AIRPORTS

QUEBEC—INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION IN EASTERN TOWNSHIPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the hon. Minister of Transport.

In view of the statement made on various occasions by the hon. minister in this house to the effect that the site of the future Quebec international airport would be known soon—that is in December—why have none of the briefs presented by the municipalities of Drummondville and Farnham as well as other towns located on the south shore not been considered up to now by the federal-provincial committee responsible for finding a site for the future international airport?

[English]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): To the best of my knowledge the members of the technical committee have considered all possible sites. Obviously some of them are better than others, and they are concentrating their attention on the preferable ones.

[Translation]

[Later:]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Since the Minister of Transport has used the expression "to the best of my knowledge", could I ask him to inquire officially from the federal-provincial committee and to give us an official answer on that, in order to assure us that the sites proposed by the municipalities on the south shore are really being considered because, according to our information, they are not?

GRAIN

PROVISION OF ADDITIONAL DRYING AND TRANSPORT FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board.

In view of the grave situation facing western wheat farmers with regard to the drying of damp grain, would the government consider providing free transportation for available grain drying equipment from eastern Canada to help alleviate the situation in the west?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, many measures are being considered to assist in the drying of prairie grain. This kind of scheme would ordinarily originate at the initiative of the provincial government. In the past such schemes as this have certainly been supported with federal assistance.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Acting Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister now advise the house, in the light of the very serious situation in western Canada due to the cost involved in the drying of a multi-million dollar grain crop, whether the government will provide acreage payments of up to $400 per farmer to assist in covering the cost of this very expensive undertaking?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that the question of particular assistance to agriculture is specifically related to this issue. It is a rather broader one, and it is under consideration at all times.

Mr. Baldwin: It does not seem to be related to anything.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I have a supplementary question for the minister. On November 27 he indicated he would look into the matter of grain drying at the lakehead on a 24-hour basis. Are the lakehead terminals drying grain on a 24-hour basis at present?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): The drying facilities at the lakehead are in operation 24 hours a day, six days a week, and negotiations are under way with the labour unions to extend these operations to a seven day basis.

Mr. Korchinski: I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is there insufficient grain at the terminals at present to warrant a seven days a week operation?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): There is now sufficient grain at the terminals, in store or en route, to assure a continuous operation once this can begin on a seven day basis.

Mr. Korchinski: I have one more supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. McKinley.]

Mr. Speaker: I will allow only one further supplementary question, because there are a number of other hon. members who are anxious to ask questions.

Mr. Korchinski: My question is a result of the minister's reply. May I ask the reason for the delay until now in the negotiations with the unions on this particular question? The situation is no surprise to anyone.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the government elevator at Moose Jaw is at present only working on a five day eight hour shift due to a lack of box cars to move grain, I wonder if the minister can state whether the government has taken into consideration the complete co-ordination of the movement of box cars to transport the damp grain.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): It is true that the Moose Jaw terminal is operating on a 24-hour, five day a week basis. Moose Jaw is not in an area where there is a great problem with regard to damp grain, but arrangements have now been made to ensure that adequate quantities of damp grain will in fact find their way to Moose Jaw so as to make full use of that facility.

Mr. Skoberg: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I respectfully suggest that at present the terminal at Moose Jaw is operating on an eight hour shift. I wish to ask the minister again whether he will look into the situation, as I am certain there is a sufficient amount of damp grain to be moved.

Mr. McKinley: I have another supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the minister has placed the burden of responsibility on the provincial governments, I wonder whether he would be prepared to say, if the provincial governments would arrange to make this grain drying equipment available from Ontario, he would then provide free transportation to have it moved to where it is needed.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): I am sure the Minister of Agriculture will be discussing this question with the provincial ministers. I did not mean to suggest it was necessarily a good program, because the drying equipment required to handle the current problem is largely available on the prairies. The problem is more one of organization than of the supply of additional equipment, though no doubt additional equipment would also be useful.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MEETING OF EDUCATION MINISTERS OF FRENCH SPEAKING COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Can he tell us whether an agreement has been reached by Ottawa and Quebec with regard to sending a Canadian delegation to the coming Niamey conference, or whether Quebec will send its own delegation?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The matter has not been settled, Mr. Speaker. However, the discussion is still under way and I am very optimistic about its results.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO CONTROL OF GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. In the minister's statement issued during the weekend he advised the country that during the first seven months of this fiscal year expenditures had exceeded revenues by 30 per cent more than they did during a similar period a year ago and that this situation is worsening steadily. My question is: In view of the situation, is the government in the near future expecting to announce the steps that it intends to take to correct the situation and to bring expenditures in line with revenues?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend, who knows so much about the financial world, should know that he should not pay too much attention to monthly financial statements unless he considers the effect of seasonally adjusting them over the whole year. Second, we have brought the finances of Canada under control, and in my budget speech I indicated what we were intending to do and what most people believe we intend to do.

Mr. Hees: I have a supplementary question for the minister. Is he not aware that during the time he was making his budget speech expenditures were exceeding revenues by $52 million, almost three times as much as during the same month a year ago? Does he call this progress?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is urging me to allow the minister to reply. However, there are only a few minutes left in the question period, and many members have not had an opportunity to participate until now.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

NEWFOUNDLAND—UNEMPLOYMENT RESULTING FROM FISH PLANT CLOSING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I want to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Does the government intend to take any action to forestall the imminent closing of several major fish plants in Newfoundland, directly affecting over 6,000 plant workers and in excess of 10,000 fishermen?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): As the hon. member knows, the 1968 fishing season is drawing to a close. The decision to shut down is up to the companies themselves. I might also comment that in addition to the usual programs of government assistance that have been available this year, there have also been expenditures on special programs of assistance during the past year and the total income in the Atlantic region is up substantially over 1967.

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, and this is a very urgent question. Does the government intend to continue the deficiency payments program to fish operators?

Mr. Davis: The answer, Mr. Speaker, is no. The program came to an end on October 31, 1968, and any new program will have to be announced early in the new year.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): I have a supplementary question. The minister has indicated that the deficiency payments have terminated. Can the minister indicate to the house, in view of the fact that next year's fishing season is in great danger of not being successful, what alternative proposals the government has for staving off literal starvation of the Atlantic fisheries?

Mr. Davis: As I said before, the industry has done fairly well in 1968. However, we will be announcing new programs early in the new year.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HEALTH AND WELFARE

STEPS TO OVERCOME SHORTAGE OF MEDICAL PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but in his absence I will direct it to the acting minister or his parliamentary secretary. In view of the serious shortage of medical doctors which now exists and which will become more serious in future with the introduction of medicare, is the government considering revising its decision to cut health grants and abolish hospital construction grants?

[Translation]

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I shall bring those remarks to the attention of the minister.

[English]

Mr. Monteith: I wonder then if I may add a supplementary to which the minister might also reply. What does the government intend to do to ensure that the country will have enough doctors now and in the future?

AIR CANADA

CONCILIATION BOARD REPORT ON DISPUTE WITH EMPLOYEES ASSOCIATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. On Monday he indicated to me that he had received the report of the conciliation board dealing with the dispute between Air Canada and the airline employees association. In view of the continuing disagreement that exists, can the minister bring us up to date on this situation?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I did receive the report on Monday. After analysing it very carefully I felt the conciliation board had not carried out completely its terms of reference. I returned the report to the board and asked them to amplify certain areas within the terms of reference submitted to the board in order to facilitate both parties. At the present moment the board is reconstituted and will be meeting in Toronto on Friday, at which time I hope more progress will be made.

TRANSPORT

ORGANIZATION OF CONTAINER TRAFFIC IN ATLANTIC PORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): My question is for the Minister of Transport. Will the minister advise why there have been delays in organizing container traffic in a designated Atlantic coastal port, brought about by the apparent incapacity of the National Harbours Board to come to any decisions on this extremely vital matter?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I was not aware of any undue delay, Mr. Speaker, but I would be glad to take the question as notice and check the allegations contained in the hon. member's question.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): May I ask the minister the reason for the delay by the National Harbours Board in setting rate structures in east coast ports and providing the necessary facilities in order that container traffic may be rolling as quickly as possible rather than be diverted to the United States, as is beginning to appear likely?

Mr. Hellyer: I expect that any delay is caused by the fact the private enterprise companies do not want to pay a practical rate, and consequently negotiations are continuing to see if some agreement can be reached.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Is the minister not aware that the delays are caused by the inability of the government and the National Harbours Board to make some of these vital decisions?

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. Has the minister yet had time to read the report on National Harbours Board decentralization? If so, is he now prepared to table that report, especially in view of the fact the transport committee is going to have officials from the National Harbours Board before it on Friday, when it would be very helpful to have the report.

Mr. Hellyer: I wish my hon. friend would not ask that question, because I have not yet finished reading it. I think perhaps I will have to table it without completing my reading of it, or else finish reading it overnight. If my hon. friend wants a decision between now and Friday I will try to give him an answer tomorrow.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

OTTAWA—REPORTED DELAY IN MAIL DELIVERY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): My question is directed to the Postmaster General. Could I ask the minister if he is investigating allegations of slow delivery of the new and more costly mail, especially in view of a report in today's Ottawa Journal concerning a letter mailed in Ottawa on Wednesday last and delivered in the same city on Monday of this week?

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT PROTECTION BE INCLUDED IN CRIMINAL CODE

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I have a question to direct to the Minister of Justice, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the housewives' charter to protect the consumer has now become part of Britain's criminal code, will the minister introduce similar legislation or consider such action in connection with his new omnibus bill to amend the Canadian Criminal Code?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I would certainly want to talk that over with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

UNIDENTIFIED FLYING OBJECTS

REPORTED SIGHTINGS OVER SIOUX LOOKOUT, ONT.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): My question is for the Minister of National Defence. In view of the numerous citings of unidentified flying objects over Sioux Lookout, Ontario, and the fact the federal government maintains an expensive Pine Tree radar detection installation there, I should like to know if the Minister of National Defence has received any reports on these U.F.O.'s?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure this is an urgent question. Perhaps it can be discussed at ten o'clock tonight.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ALLEGED THREATS BY MEMBERS OF CABINET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I have a question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps at this point I should take time out to introduce the Prime Minister to the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I again remind hon. members that there are only a few minutes left in the question period, so perhaps we should get on as quickly as we can.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Is the Prime Minister aware that civil servants are working under duress because of threats emanating from the Liberal caucus?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, some seem to think this is very funny. I follow my remarks by raising a question of privilege. I wish to draw to the attention of the house a matter which is of most serious concern to all. On national television last night a Liberal member of parliament expressed the opinion that threats were used against ministers in caucus in order to bring about desired results.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have time for one more question. The Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I can wait until the cheering dies down. I have in my hand a transcript of a program that was broadcast last night on national television.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member is raising a question of privilege about a matter which arose yesterday he ought to know that according to the rules he must give written notice to the Chair. He cannot raise as a question of privilege a matter which apparently, from what he says, arose yesterday, unless he gives the Chair written notice of his intention to do so.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): With respect, Mr. Speaker, this matter has very serious implications for the Prime Minister and the cabinet. I have in my hand the transcript of comments made on a television program last night, and I wish to bring these to the attention of the house. The allegation is that civil servants are threatened by ministers, and the member of parliament appearing on television said this has been done. I refer to the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Howard), who said—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Crouse: Let us have parliament according to the rules.

An hon. Member: Do not threaten the Speaker.

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): Where is the President of the Privy Council?

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, may I suggest that the committee might rise and report progress for the purpose of hearing the hon. member's question of privilege?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

The Chairman: Order, please. The correct procedure is for the minister to move the motion, give it to me in writing, and allow me to put it to the committee.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order, a very simple one. Is it appropriate for the committee of supply to go back into the whole house on a move which, in effect, is a reflection on Mr. Speaker's judgment? Mr. Speaker left the chair, feeling that the matter then before the house was disposed of. I suggest we have no right to reflect on Mr. Speaker by going back into the house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond).]

Mr. Hees: The government house leader wants to be the Speaker, too.

The Chairman: Order, please. I appreciate the point of order raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, but I think that the Chair has no option in the matter except to put the motion.

An hon. Member: Was Mr. Speaker threatened?

Mr. Lundrigan: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. About 15 minutes before the truth was exposed in the house I indicated to Mr. Speaker that I would be rising on a point of privilege at the end of the question period to bring to the attention of the house a matter that pertains to the fact that our economy is going on the rocks. I bowed to Mr. Speaker's decision when he said that this could wait. At the same time I do not wish it to be thought I am relinquishing my position or the privilege of bringing up the same point on another day.

An hon. Member: Bring it up.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Chairman, I think the government house leader and hon. members supporting the government are abusing their majority. In the interest of decorum and of proceeding in an orderly and proper manner I think the members of the government ought to accept the opprobrium of not proceeding in this matter.

Mr. Trudeau: I thank the Leader of the Opposition for simplifying the whole problem, but I think it has grown and become a little out of proportion.

Mr. Lewis: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: I do not think we should accept the opprobrium, as the Leader of the Opposition says. It is a matter of elementary fairness. A particular point of privilege was raised; I do not think it is too important. I would be prepared to concede, if it would help the debate, that sometimes members do threaten their ministers in caucus. I do not think that is a very serious matter. The only relevant point is that Mr. Speaker did not catch the eye, I think, of the hon. member who had been put under an accusation and I think, in fairness, he should have been given a chance to answer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (3:30 p.m.)

An hon. Member: It is still a reflection on Mr. Speaker.

The Chairman: Order, pleace. The motion that I have is unacceptable as it is. I will read it to the committee—it will then become clear why it is unacceptable.

An hon. Member: Why read it, then?

The Chairman: I should like to read it so that my ruling might be understood by all members of the committee. It is moved by Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale):

That the committee do rise and report progress for the purpose of hearing the question of privilege of the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary.

My decision is that the latter part of the motion is a substantive question, and that it is therefore out of order at this point.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, could you call the first order of business, so that we might know what is to be the first item to be discussed in committee of supply, and prepare for it now?

The Chairman: Under our standing orders it is the option of the government to bring forward the business to be discussed in the committee of supply, and the Chair does not have any business before it right now.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): With great respect, I indicated to the Clerk of the House that we would be considering the estimates of my colleague the Minister of Finance.

The Chairman: I apologize. I have not yet been advised of that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I wish to say a few words on the main item of the estimates of the Department of Finance, which department I believe is now before the committee.

The Chairman: Order, please. I thought the hon. member was possibly rising on a point of order. I have not put the business formally.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

1. Departmental administration including administration of the guaranteed loans acts, the Inspector General of Banks' office, and payments to provinces as detailed in the estimates, $3,970,500.

The Chairman: The house in committee of supply, revised estimates of the Department of Finance for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1969. Vote No. 1 will be found at page 138 of the blue book; details thereof are listed at page 142.

Mr. Hees: A few moments ago, Mr. Chairman, I asked the Minister of Finance whether in view of the very sharp increase in the excess of expenditures over revenue during the past few months the government intended to take steps to correct the situation so as to bring expenditure and revenue into better balance. The minister replied by saying, in effect, that we should not pay too much attention to statements of that kind, that the main thing was: How is the country doing? It was something to that effect.

Mr. Benson: Oh?

Mr. Hees: Was that not the case?

Mr. Benson: Perhaps the hon. gentleman would allow me to clarify the position. What I was saying was this: Monthly figures, unless they are seasonally adjusted, are very misleading, and I have no reason to believe that the estimates as presented in the budget for the current fiscal year will be materially different from the final figure for the year as a whole.

Mr. Hees: All we can believe, Mr. Chairman, are the statements which the minister himself puts out under his name. I should like to read a Canadian Press report which appeared in the paper on Saturday. The Canadian Press is, of course, a very reputable organization, not known to exaggerate or to take political sides at any time. It is in fact an organization supported by all the newspapers in Canada to give factual reports of the news. Here is what the Canadian Press had to say, under the heading "Spending gets further ahead of revenues" and datelined at Ottawa:

Federal spending is outstripping revenues by a larger amount than in 1967.

A statement by finance minister E. J. Benson giving figures for the first seven months of the current fiscal year which began last March 31 shows a deficit of $83.1 million with budgetary revenues of $5,392,300,000 and spending of $5,475,400,000.

The deficit for the same period last year was $65.7 million, with revenues of $5,009,700,000 and spending of $5,075,400,000. In October this year—

—The month during which the minister made his budget statement—

—spending at $911 million outran revenues of $859.8 million by $51.2 million. In the same month in 1967 there was a deficit of $18.1 million on spending of $750.2 million and revenues of $732.1 million.

All I have done is repeat a statement which was given by the minister over his own signature, as reported by the Canadian Press. In this statement the minister himself has demonstrated that during the month of October, when he made his budget speech assuring us that in future his government intended to balance the budget, at the very moment he was speaking the government was spending $52 million more than it received in revenue, and overspending by three times as much in that month as it did in the same month a year earlier. Those are the facts, and those are the figures.

Mr. Benson: Would the hon. gentleman like an answer?

Mr. Hees: Yes, I would—if there is one.

Mr. Benson: The hon. gentleman has a great deal of experience in finance and I know the tremendous job he carried out prior to being in parliament. He knows that monthly figures are not in themselves indicative of the final result, that in any particular month of the year expenditures can be high and revenues somewhat low. There are variations, depending on the amount of money spent in a particular month, how far contracts have gone, and so on. I simply repeat that I have no reason whatever to change the estimate I made in my budget, which indicates a deficit in 1968-69 fiscal year and a relatively balanced budget in 1969-70.

Mr. Hees: The minister can claim it was unfair to take one month alone and compare it with another month. In the first seven months of the fiscal year government expenditure exceeded revenue by 30 per cent. In other words, during those seven months expenditure was 30 per cent more than revenue. This figure is even higher than the figure for the same period in the preceding year. This gives a pretty good indication, Mr. Chairman, that the government has not been able to curtail its expenditure. I suggest the fact that expenditure exceeded revenue in the month of October by $52 million is somewhat alarming, in that this is three times the excess of expenditure over revenue in that same month the year before. Although this is not entirely indicative of what the total figure will be at the end of the fiscal year, I suggest that we cannot rely on the minister's assurance that everything is going to be all right. If we were to do that, then criticism or debate in this house would be completely meaningless.

The Canadian people are worried about this situation, Mr. Chairman, because they are the ones who have to pay for this excess of expenditure over revenue. The Canadian people want to know what the minister is going to do to eliminate this differential, so that they will not be called upon to pay more and more taxes. In my question this afternoon I asked the minister whether the government expected to make a statement in the near future specifically outlining what it is going to do to bring expenditure and revenue further into line, a very logical and, I believe, sensible request. However the minister brushed it off as something that is of no consequence.

For the last three years, Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance has been making the same statements. For part of this time he was president of the treasury board. I remember when one year ago the president of the treasury board told the house that he had installed in his department a new computer system that in future was going to take all of the guesswork out of forecasting. He said there would be no more misforecasting.

Mr. Benson: Oh!

Mr. Hees: Well, Mr. Chairman, certainly that is the impression I received from reading his speech, and I am sure that is the impression the house received as well.

Mr. Stanfield: He gave his personal guarantee.

Mr. Benson: You were overimpressed.

Mr. Hees: I took the minister at his word and assumed that he meant what he said. I am sure the minister will agree, if he reads the speech he made on that day, that I am not being unfair when I suggest that that is what he meant.

As I say, Mr. Chairman, the Canadian people are worried about the mistakes or miscalculations that have been made by the government. During the recent election campaign the Canadian people were told on several occasions, both by this minister and by the Prime Minister that the government was going to balance its books; that they expected to have almost a balanced budget next time. But when parliament resumes it is advised by the minister that we are going to have a deficit of $675 million, nearly three quarters of a billion dollars.

This is why we feel we must question the government about what steps it is taking to ensure that this overspending in which it has indulged is not going to continue. However, Mr. Chairman, the minister does not seem to take these questions seriously. He assures us that everything is going to be all right if only we have confidence in him. In view of the figures that are published year after year and month after month, the Canadian people cannot be anything but greatly concerned.

In order to offset the excess of expenditure over revenue the Canadian people have to dig into their pockets to meet increased taxation. This has a very serious effect not only upon the well-being of the people and their ability to bring up their families properly and pay their bills, but also on the unemployment situation in this country. As we all know, Mr. Chairman, when people have money in their pockets to buy goods and services, employment prospers. Goods have to be manufactured to replace those that are sold off retailer's shelves.

Naturally, Mr. Chairman, if the Canadian people are called upon to pay more and more taxes, there is less money in their pockets to pay for goods and services. Consequently jobs become fewer. This also is of concern to the public. When taxes on corporations or insurance companies are increased, it is the consumer, the ordinary average citizen, who pays for the increase in the end. In the case of a corporation that manufactures goods and provides services for sale to the public, any tax increase is absorbed by correspondingly increasing the price of its goods to the consumers. In the same way an insurance company absorbs extra taxes simply by increasing its premiums, and the average Canadian citizen pays again. So no matter whether taxes are increased on individuals or corporations, the average Canadian citizen foots the bill.

During the coming year, Mr. Chairman, 1969, which we are looking to with a great deal of interest, because of the importance of our economy to the well-being of average citizens, Canadian taxpayers are going to pay $845 million more in taxes than they paid this year. They will also pay out an additional $100 million on increased postal rates, either in the form of postal stamps or goods that they purchase. Ordinary Canadian citizens will have about $1 billion less to spend on goods and services. I suggest that the result of this will be serious for our employment situation during the next year.

The minister and the former minister of finance, who is in his seat at the moment, seem to consider this whole matter a huge joke. These two ministers have been telling this house for the last three years that they are going to balance the budget; but they have not done so. After all, it is some little time since they told the electorate that they were going to balance the budget. They are thinking: "Yes, we did say that, but it was not true. Since we have got in again we will have four years to work on it, and probably at the end of that period the people of Canada will have forgotten all about it". Since the minister has unlimited time to speak, this would be a good opportunity for him to stand in his place and tell this committee what specific steps he has taken to curtail expenditures.

The figures which he himself issued last Friday show that the excess of expenditures over revenues is growing month by month. It was 30 per cent more during the first seven months of this year than during the first seven months of last year. This is something which should cause him a great deal of worry. I do not think he even knew about these figures. I believe his department issued them, because he seemed surprised that they do exist. They were issued over his signature but—

Mr. Benson: That is just not true.

Mr. Hees: For someone who knew them the minister seemed very surprised this afternoon.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I have been asked to rise and answer the question. I am very much aware that these figures are as they are. I explained to my hon. friend what they meant. If he does not understand it, I cannot do much about it. If he will look back at my budget speech he will see the figures contained therein, and I stand by those figures. I do not think there is any reason to change them. My hon. friend is picking up figures for one month and saying this is what happens in seven months or in a whole year. If we should end up the year with the deficit shown in the first seven months I would be happy, but that will not happen and my hon. friend knows it, because expenditures tend to increase at the end of the year as contracts near their completion.

My hon. friend is making a big fuss about not very much. I consider the matter just as serious as he does. I spend all my time worrying about expenditures of the federal government. I think this government has done more to try to control expenditures than any government in Canada at the federal level in a long time. I think we will succeed ultimately in spite of what my hon. friend says.

Mr. Hees: For a government, as the minister says, which has done more than any other government to control expenditures, the results have been very unsatisfactory. We have had tax increases I think four times in the last three years. In every budget that has been produced there has been a very large deficit, despite the fact that during each year either the previous or present minister has glibly assured us, as we are being assured now, that everything will be all right and that expenditures will equal revenues. This is what the minister has been telling this house. I have sat here and listened to the minister and the former minister for three years, as has every member in this house. The minister has told us these things over and over again and now he asks why we do not believe him and why we do not have confidence. The answer is that for the past three years I have listened to the same speech the minister made a few moments ago. On every occasion he has assured us that he is cutting down expenditures and is going to make the expenditures fit the amount of revenue taken in.

Every time he does this he says that we should wait for a few months. When we do, we find that he was talking through his hat and obviously did not know what he was talking about. I give the minister and the Prime Minister credit for not knowing the figures and not knowing what the situation was at the time of the election, because if the minister had known he could not have made the kind of statement he did when he assured the people of Canada that the government would come very close to balancing the next budget. If the minister did know, then he was deliberately misleading the people of Canada. I do not think he is the kind of man who would do that. I think he is an honest man. I do not agree with the way he is running his department at the present time, but he is an honest incompetent. I retract that statement: I said it for a joke and take it back. I believe the minister tries his very best. I think the previous minister also did his best, but that best is not nearly good enough for a country such as Canada, because not only do the Canadian people have to pay more and more and more in taxes every year, but this will seriously jeopardize employment next year. Unemployment will rise seriously just as sure as God made little apples, because it cannot do anything else.

[Mr. Benson.]

This minister and this government plan to take $1 billion out of the pockets of the Canadian people next year. The Canadian people will not be able to spend that money on goods and services, as they would be able to do if they were not taxed the way they will be as a result of this budget, and if it were not for the increased postal rates which we have. One billion dollars is being taken out of their pockets, which will be $1 billion less of goods and services. This will result in a serious increase in unemployment. This is what worries me.

Mr. Benson: We are taking $1 billion out and putting it back.

Mr. Hees: When are you putting the $1 billion back in?

Mr. Benson: At once, the government will not have a $1 billion surplus.

Mr. Hees: Well, you are certainly taking it out of the pockets of the people who would spend it on the goods and services, and therefore it is not going to be spent. So, Mr. Chairman, I again appeal to the minister to take his job seriously and to persuade his colleagues to take the situation seriously and trim down their expenditures to match their revenues. I ask them to stop this gross overspending and gross overtaxing of the people of Canada.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, when the present Minister of Finance was president of the treasury board there were at least two things of which he persuaded me. He persuaded me that he personally was in favour of taking action to improve the pensions of retired civil servants. I may say that the former prime minister, Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson, persuaded me that this was also true so far as he was concerned. However, these two gentlemen, the present Minister of Finance and the former prime minister, also persuaded me of a second thing. They persuaded me that the ultimate decision on this matter is a financial one and that the person I had to win over is the Minister of Finance. I was not successful in winning over the last minister of finance, but I hope the present Minister of Finance still holds the same views he held before, and that he intends to act on this issue while he holds his present portfolio. I say to him that I have no intention now to irritate him. I do not intend to cajole or even threaten him, although apparently that is a practice employed in some areas around here. I do however appeal to him to do with regard to this issue what he knows really must be done.

I should like to remind the minister that on Monday of last week this subject came up in three separate questions on the orders of the day. The hon. member for Malpeque asked the Minister of National Defence whether something would be done soon to bring the pensions of retired servicemen into line with those that are paid in relation to present pay scales. The Minister of National Defence replied that he hoped something could be done on the matter in the spring. Realizing as I did that the pensions of retired members of the armed forces, retired members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and retired civil servants generally are all of a piece, I followed with supplementary questions to two other ministers, namely the Minister of Finance and the Solicitor General. The Minister of Finance gave me the assurance I have had so often, that this matter is continually being studied. The Solicitor General said he would like to take the question as notice so that he could give a fully accurate answer. I do not quarrel with either of those ministers for not making a precise statement on Monday, November 25, in view of the way in which the question followed one after the other.

However, I do stand here today urging the Minister of Finance, recognizing as I do that these three things are in one basket, to expedite action in respect of this matter in relation to federal superannuates generally, retired armed services people and retired R.C.M.P. personnel.

Not so long ago, on Monday, November 18, I spoke on another set of estimates and I went into this question in detail. I shall not do so today, but I dare to believe that those who have to follow these matters have looked at the remarks I made on that occasion. I might even dare to hope that they may have been drawn to the attention of the Minister of Finance. He knows, however, of the many studies which have been made in respect of this matter by various departments of government, by members of parliament and by the special committee which dealt with it in 1967, and he knows the hopes that have been raised that action will be taken on this matter. These hopes were raised in particular by the unanimous recommendation of the joint committee which made its report to parliament on May 8, 1967. I put the terms of that recommendation on the record on Monday, November 18, and they include a special proposal that there be increases in the pensions of these three groups of retired government employees forthwith.

The Minister of Finance also knows, as I said on Monday, November 18, what he said to me during the month of May. He knows what he told me as to when he expected the legislation to be brought in and when he thought it would be passed. I suspect that he also knows what the former prime minister told me as to when action on that report would be effected. That date has long since gone by, and we have had this issue up time and again since then. I know the Minister of Finance will still take the position that he thinks something should be done but that it cannot be done in light of present conditions. I suggest to him that the good name of parliament, the whole question of how parliamentary committees operate and whether their operations are worth anything at all, and the responsibility of the government to be a good employer, calls for early action on this issue.

One of the arguments, of course, that is sometimes used against acting on this issue at all is that this a matter of concern to all retired people, not just retired government employees. That, in fact, is the standard line used in letters that go out to retired civil servants from the Prime Minister's office and from other offices, namely that this matter has to be looked at not in respect of these groups alone, but in respect of all groups of retired people. I fully agree. Not only do I agree; this is something I have been asserting for a long time. But I suggest the federal government has a particular responsibility to its own employees so far as their position is concerned, and also has a responsibility to give leadership in this issue.

It is not often I find myself wanting to send the Minister of Finance a copy of part of the Financial Post, but I have one here on which I have written "Mr. Benson". I have autographed it with my signature and I intend to send it over to him. The other day when one of my colleagues was directing a question about a matter of financial policy the Minister of Finance retorted that he was surprised to see the N.D.P. and a chartered bank in an alliance. I suppose he will now be surprised to find me in alliance with the Financial Post. Of course, this is the other way around: The Financial Post has caught up with me. May I just take a moment to indicate—

Mr. Stanfield: It is time somebody did.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am sorry, I missed that remark.

Mr. Stanfield: I said, it was time somebody did.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am very grateful to the Leader of the Opposition. This section which I hold in my hand is a special feature which made up a full section of the Financial Post for this issue of November 16, 1968, and it is all on the question of pensions. The theme of the issue was indicated by the main headline on the front page: "Will your pension be adequate all the years of retirement?" The heading under that states:

> For pension planners, the major challenge is how to beat the rapid inflation that could halve value of fixed income every 18 years. As retirement ages become lower and longevity increases, problem becomes ever more of a headache.

Here is another article under the heading "Inflation's pressure on the pensioner". Here is another one on page 3 under the heading "Rising incomes bypass the already retired". There are thousands of people in this country who could testify to the truth of that. Here is another article on page 5 under the heading "Productivity gains must be shared". This is a socialist line I have been preaching for a long time, and here it is in the Financial Post. This one is particularly significant. It states that "Productivity gains must be shared" by all those who are retired. After all, they helped to bring the country to the point where productivity could be increased.

On page 7 we find an article which I hope the minister will read. It is under the heading "Pension adequacy: the union position". Here is an interesting article headed "What pension benefits act is all about". On page 11 we have another article entitled "Is your pension fund performing well?" Here is another interesting article, "Why you should tell all to employees". It begins with a subtitle, "Effectively telling what your pension plan does is sound on many grounds". On page 15 there are a couple of articles, one headed "How to offset rising pension plan costs". In addition to all these articles on this question of pensions there are a good many advertisements dealing with this whole matter.

I make no apology for bringing the Financial Post into this house. In fact I am very happy to do so. I may say I have two or three extra copies, one of which I will send at the appropriate moment to the Prime Minister, and another I will send to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and, if other hon. members over there would like me to do so, I will send them copies. I have one for the Minister of Finance. I put the name of the Prime Minister on this one, but since he is not here I will send this to the Minister of Justice and get another one for the Prime Minister. On this copy I put the name "Mr. Munro". He is not here so perhaps the hon. member for Ottawa West would like it. I will get more copies for the others.

This excellent treatment of the subject in the Financial Post underlines the two points I have been trying to make. The first point is that this is a serious issue about which we ought to do something, particularly to help those we can help, our own employees; retired members of the armed forces, and retired members of the R.C.M.P. It also makes the other point, that this is a problem which has grown in proportion, and that unless we get started with the idea of escalating pensions after they have been put into effect all our pension plans will be in serious jeopardy in five or ten years, to say nothing about the 18 years suggested in this report.

It is not good enough to talk about pensions being increased by the increase in the cost of living. This pattern is becoming accepted. There is this 2 per cent notion around, which would indicate that pensioners have had an increase and therefore cannot get any more. The writers of this Financial Post know better than that. They say what is needed is a sufficient increase to enable people to share the increase in productivity.

I am glad to see my colleagues opposite reading these papers. As I say, I will be glad to get more from the Financial Post for other members, with no charge for the commercial. I hope that what I have said will impress itself upon the minister and that he will realize we cannot continue to stall on this issue as we have done. It does not give me any satisfaction to stand up and say I have been talking about this for 20 years, and that nothing has been done about it. I hope the Minister of Finance will confirm what the Minister of National Defence said the other day that perhaps in the spring something will be done. If something is done for retired members of the armed forces in the spring it cannot stop there. This will have to be done for R.C.M.P. pensioners and federal superannuates generally. If we wait until the spring we will be waiting too long, because these people have been waiting now for many years. But it would mean something if we could be told now that the matter is under that kind of consideration; not the kind that goes on continually and never results in anything, but the kind that will result in something really being done. Over the years I have used every device I know to get something done in this respect. I have been nice and sweet; I have been angry; I have cajoled; I have badgered; I have threatened at length; I have even threatened to keep parliament here during the summer. None of that today: just a straight, man-to-man appeal to the Minister of Finance. He knows where he stands personally on this issue. He knows what he told me during the months of May and June last year. He knows what he told me just before the leadership campaign this year about this whole issue. The minister shakes his head as though he is trying to figure it out. If he has forgotten, I will tell him, but I think he knows.

Mr. Benson: I was not running.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The minister was not running, but he had a favourite candidate and he knows what he told me about which candidate had the best chance of getting this issue through. He told me behind the curtain one day, and I will remind him if he has forgotten.

Mr. Benson: You were not a delegate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It was over here, behind the curtain in this House of Commons. So I appeal to the minister to get started on this issue. As I have indicated by what I have said today, and the emphasis I have given to the reports in the Financial Post, I do not want it to stop with the federal superannuates and employees of the federal government. It is an issue that we have to resolve through our pension plans as a whole. Surely this is a place to start because the unanimous recommendation of the joint committee is there. There are tremendous funds on the books for the paying of pensions. There is the question of the interest rate adjustment that could be made. There are ways, if the minister wants to do it. I think he wants to do it. I ask him to act now without further delay.

Mr. Downey: Mr. Chairman, I would like to cover briefly this afternoon some of the aspects of the proposed estate tax changes. One of the most objectionable things about the proposed changes in the estate tax is the manner in which the minister introduced them. His description of the effects of the tax may not have been a case of deliberate misrepresentation, but it was certainly misleading to many Canadians. For example, the minister said:

> I believe that members will also agree that the estate tax changes should be made effective immediately so as to exempt property passing to widows on deaths after midnight tonight.

That was the night of October 22. What a joke! It would only make sense if all wills drawn before that night could be magically changed to fit within the new system of exemptions and the new rate structure. The minister was simply using the old technique of the stage magician to divert attention from the hand that is performing the trick, and it looks great. Instead of his other hand, both hands were probably busy pilfering the public's pocket. He used widows to divert public attention.

He hoped then, as he hopes now, that the gullible public will think only of the few people now exempt from estate tax and the limited confines of this exemption. He trusts they will not think too much of the tremendously accelerated rate structure of estate taxation. "It is difficult to predict accurately the revenue effects"—this was another gem the minister used in introducing his proposal. It may be difficult for him to predict down to the last pennies, but he knows very well indeed that the number of those pennies will be very much greater than it was under the old system.

We have only to consider that where once the maximum rate of tax applied starting at the $2 million level—I believe it was 54 per cent at that level—it now starts at the $300,000 level at 50 per cent. This acceleration in applying the maximum tax can hardly be expected to yield less revenue than before. My belief is that the minister and his colleagues were so desperate for ready cash that they would go anywhere to get it. In this case they would even pillage graves to get revenue.

They were in such indecent haste to collect some petty cash that they brought forward this proposal in such a complex fashion as to leave outside tax experts and estate lawyers gasping and wondering for some time to come. No one understands the ramifications of this measure, and perhaps that is just the state in which the minister wants the public to remain. One lawyer has told another that the only advice a lawyer can honestly give his client in the present circumstances is: Don't die until we know what it is all about.

The Hamilton Chamber of Commerce recently presented a brief to the minister. In it they pointed out that the apparent tax saving attendant upon the surviving spouse receiving the estate exempt from tax was really a snare and a delusion; it was only a delaying of taxation, payment deferred. I reiterate that the exemption to spouses is not really a tax exemption at all but a tax deferment. Estates will eventually be taxed fully and at a much higher rate than formerly.

The Hamilton group viewed with most alarm the possible drastic effects of the minister's hastily formulated estate tax proposal on the Canadian economy. It would be interesting to hear from the minister regarding some of these questions. I wish to quote from the brief of the Hamilton Chamber of Commerce as follows:

> How many Canadian corporations will be purchased by foreign ownership because the estates will be unable to meet the excessive taxes resulting from the death of a principal shareholder? This question should be a point of concern for all Canadians and particularly the representatives of those Canadians who have stated on numerous occasions that foreign ownership is not in the best interests of Canada.

The second observation in the brief is this:

> How many Canadian corporations will be forced into liquidation because a buyer could not be found to provide funds for estate taxes? If this seems like a remote possibility, consider, if you will, the taxpayer who works a lifetime and builds a business worth $1,500,000. On his death his estate will be subject to estate taxes in excess of $700,000; he will not have been able to gift a large portion of his estate during his lifetime nor will the postponement of taxes until his wife's death alleviate the problem. If a suitable buyer cannot be found in a relatively short period of time, then the executors of the estate may be forced to liquidate the assets of the business to meet the tremendous tax bill.
> How many jobs for Canadians will disappear because of these forced sales and liquidations? Would the net effect of these increased estate and gift taxes be, in the long run, a loss in revenue to the federal government rather than as anticipated an increase in income from these areas?
> Is it the intention of the Canadian government to end the possibility of a Canadian corporation being carried on by future generations?

The Hamilton brief summed up by stating:

> It is our feeling that a situation that was drastic prior to this budget has become catastrophic.

There were in the brief some recommendations that I believe are worth repeating. It states:

• (4:20 p.m.)

> It is our opinion that if these resolutions are adopted as proposed, there will be a serious effect on the Canadian economy. It is our feeling that a situation that was drastic prior to this budget has become catastrophic.

[Mr. Downey.]

Then, in referring to the family corporation they say:

> The excessively high estate and gift taxes will only serve to suppress the initiative required in a democratic society. Too many Canadian business owners will succumb to the lure of foreign dollars and sell their businesses during their lifetime. This will enable them to retain their estates in liquid investments, rather than continuing to expand their corporate operations, knowing full well that the business will be lost to the families at their death—

The Canadian Chamber of Commerce recommended that—> —in view of the adverse effect of the estate tax on the economy and the relatively small amount of revenue produced by this tax, it is recommended that the estate tax be abolished.

I think that as citizens we all feel that way. It goes on to read:

> If no progress can be made in the area of reducing estate and gift taxes, we would suggest that steps be taken to permit the Canadian corporation to pass between generations without tax. This step would at least relieve our major fear, that in the long run the Canadian economy will be the loser.

I believe the minister was less than forthright in his explanations of this proposal. It certainly almost borders on being a fiscal sleight-of-hand. Perhaps the minister did not have the benefit of the report of the Ontario economic council before he brought in these unfortunate schemes. That report damned estate taxation all around the clock. It used such words as "discriminatory", "confiscation", "penalize", "discourage", and so on. Of course this report was made prior to the minister's announcement of the new estate tax set-up. It dealt with the general theory of estate taxation. It regarded it as an iniquitous and disastrous course in any free enterprise system.

The council was most concerned with the effect of estate taxes on family businesses, small business generally and the discouragement of thrift and personal initiative. I contend that this is exactly what we will get out of these proposals, namely a dampening of personal initiative.

The report of the Ontario council said the following:

> Those responsible for guiding the course of our nation's development need only look to history to find proof that nearly every past civilization has hastened its ruin through its dissipation of capital through taxation.

This is certainly one of the effects this new tax will have—the dissipation of privately amassed capital. The report noted that Canada came immediately after Great Britain and the United States among countries paying estate taxation. The percentage of total government revenue raised by estate taxes in England stood at 3 per cent, in the United States at 2.6 per cent, and in Canada at 1.8 per cent. West Germany has a low estate tax rate of .1 per cent. It may be a coincidence, but it is a fact that West Germany has the lowest estate tax rate and the highest rate of economic growth in the world today.

I feel sure that the figure of 1.8 per cent of government revenue in Canada will jump considerably when the new system is imposed. In Alberta, my native province, we do not have an estate tax. This new proposal therefore is of tremendous interest to the people there. The effect of this proposed new estate tax on the family farms and ranches of this nation is beyond comprehension. At current land values, that are based almost entirely on demand rather than on their relative productivity, we find that farms are valued far higher than their production figures would indicate. I do not think it unreasonable to say that a great many of our average family farms will fall into the valuation rate of $200,000 to $300,000. Our maximum estate tax rates begin at $300,000, and what family farm can afford to pay a quarter, a third or half of its total value on passing from father to son? Our farmers are forced to pay 7¾ per cent interest to buy farms. Much of our farm legislation is geared to phase out the smaller farmer and to create larger economic units. Now we have estate taxation which will serve to eliminate the economic units that have already been created. Under the present financial conditions, economic farm units cannot be created in one generation, nor would it be practical to have a whole new group of people on the farms in each succeeding generation.

With the present complicated agricultural technology and with the large amount of capitalization that is necessary today to carry on an efficient food producing agricultural unit, it is vitally necessary that estate taxes be reduced instead of increased so that farms can be easily passed from father to son. The fact that a farm can pass tax free to a spouse is of no value so far as keeping the family farm in business is concerned. The average widow would not care to carry on the business in the event of her husband's death. Most farms carry a large amount of debt during the life of the farmer. To saddle the farm unit with taxes upon his death that might be equal to a third or half of the value of the farm would mean liquidation upon death.

This proposed change in the Estate Tax Act is one of the most vicious ever devised aimed at family farms and family businesses in general. I appeal sincerely to the minister to reconsider the whole estate tax structure.

Mr. Otto: Mr. Chairman, I should like to congratulate the hon. member who just spoke on making a truly conservative speech—not a Progressive Conservative but a conservative speech, and we have not heard one of those for a long, long time. At least the hon. member stands on a principle, and does not hide under any progressive label, as do some of the other members in his party. This is what we are expected to listen to as complaints against the estate tax. First he decried the disappearance of inherited privilege from father to son. He lamented the disappearance of family corporations that have been built up through generations. He also described tragically the disappearance of privately amassed fortunes. Every civilized nation is turning toward a denial of inherited privilege. We acknowledge that people who are working today in this productive society are entitled to reap the benefits of their work and earnings, but to be entitled in perpetuity to reap the benefits of one's great great grandfather, who might have been a whaler and amassed a fortune a hundred years ago, is certainly a denial of the forward looking ideas in this modern world.

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): What about the Prime Minister?

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Otto: I mentioned that I believed a person is entitled to live on and enjoy the production resulting from his own effort. There is no one in this house who is more productive or more able than the Prime Minister. I am sure hon. members did not mean to cast aspersions on him.

An hon. Member: Just his inheritance, that is all.

Mr. Otto: As I said, the world is turning away from inherited privilege in many areas. For example, in the seaboard states of the United States there are people today who think it is shameful to work. They do not have to work because they live on the interest of the interest. They spend their time arranging flowers. I am referring to grown men with great capacity and mental ability. They do not believe it is worth while to work. Hon. members will recall that 200 years ago no gentleman would ever consider working. We have turned away from that idea.

Now let us consider these family corporations. What is so sanctimonious about a family corporation? One of the things against which I have spoken over the past 25 years has been the existence in this country of an establishment. I refer to the family corporations. They are the reason that 182 families in Canada control 85 per cent of our economic wealth. Does anyone think this is good for the economy, when we have this type of establishment? If you want to preserve this situation, I think you are going backwards. The idea should be to loosen the control of this establishment.

Nothing could be better for at least 80 per cent of these family corporations than to lose control. If they were to invite young men with ambition and intelligence to take over these corporations, the situation would improve. If you examine the successful operation of United States corporations, you will find that is one of the reasons they have been successful. They have invited new blood into the corporation. As I say, there is nothing sanctimonious about the preservation of family corporations. I need not go further and make any drastic remarks about the preservation of privately amassed fortunes. Is it worth while to protect this type of thing, and say that someone has amassed a fortune so it must be preserved? If that were the case, then there would be no tax imposed at all. This is where the crux of our problem in Canada lies, the existence of family corporations and family fortunes. There is nothing better than this type of legislation which will break up the establishment and keep the economy of this country rolling. I welcome these changes because I think that this will be the answer, to break up this establishment and invite new blood, new energy, into our whole industrial picture.

Mr. Francis: I should like to say a few words on the question which was raised this afternoon by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, the adjustment of pensions for retired civil servants. This matter has come up on a number of occasions before. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, on November 16, put into the record of Hansard in some detail the report of the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on this question, which reported several years ago. I do know, Mr. Chairman, that this is a matter of great concern to the government. I do know it is a matter which the Minister of Finance has considered in some detail. The problem of budgeting in these circumstances is a very difficult one indeed.

At this stage, however, I must appeal to the minister, and hope that at the earliest possible date there will be some adjustment made in these pensions because, in my opinion, the case for such adjustment is a strong one indeed. I do not want to add to what has been said already by hon. members in this house. Very briefly, I may say that the last adjustment was made a number of years ago. The principle of escalation and adjustment of pensions is one which we have generally accepted in a number of respects. We have written it into the Old Age Security Act for everyone. The problem of the government, in its capacity as an employer, of setting a good example is one which I commend to all hon. members in this house. During the course of the last election campaign in my own constituency, this was one point upon which I campaigned very strongly, and I have not in any respect changed my mind.

I do know that the case is one of justice, and one which does not add too greatly to the burden of the treasury. There is at the present time in the fund in excess of $3 billion on which a rate of 4 per cent is allowed by the government. If we were to add 1 per cent to that rate of interest it would mean an amount of something over $30 million a year to the fund. This amount would be more than adequate to make a very good adjustment in the pensions of civil servants who are now retired. There are roughly 30,000 pensioners and if they were to receive an increase of roughly $30 in their pensions this would amount to about $10 million, or about one third of the resultant increase in the fund to which I referred.

The budgetary problem, as I have said, is a very difficult one. I know what the Minister of Finance is trying to do, by setting an example bringing in what is an absolutely necessary measure of fiscal responsibility. I am happy today to say that I agree with what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said. On a previous occasion in this house I took exception to the line he was taking because, in my opinion, it was an irresponsible one. The same hon. member has put forward a resolution in this house to raise the pensions of everyone to $125, without any means test or examination of resources. He proposes also that the pensionable age be reduced to 65. The effect of such a proposition would be to add something like $700 million a year to government expenditures.

Mr. Saltsman: Good.

Mr. Francis: Well, hon. members on that side say, "Good". Then, in the next breath they say, "Please tell us what an adequate basis of pension would be". This is like saying, if we throw enough gasoline on the fire, how do we put out the fire? The problem is one of controlling inflation. I know it is not easy for the Minister of Finance in these circumstances. I know he is a man of great personal justice, a man who feels very deeply about these matters. However, he has to do a very difficult job in the field of fiscal responsibility at this time. It is very easy for hon. members in opposition to say we should spend another $700 million a year, and then to go on and say this is not inflationary because we are just giving people money to spend; that it really does not matter. It does matter. You cannot give away large sums of money, you cannot make large promises to people in various sectors of the economy, and at the same time hope that you can be responsible in controlling inflation.

The quarrel I have with hon. members of that party is that it seems to me their platform at this stage is a platform of inflation. They can call it whatever they like. They are very good at distributing money, but when it comes to policies which create money and investment in the country, then their program is deficient. In one respect I agree with what the hon. member has said. I think that the case for an adjustment of the pensions of those who are retired, which will compensate to some degree for the hardship they are suffering, is a very strong one. As I said before, it is one which I will urge to the best of my capacity to those responsible for making the decision.

I can think of an example in my own constituency of a couple who are now approaching 90 years of age. The husband retired 25 years ago and on retirement he had $25,000 in personal savings and a pension of $100 per month. This, according to all reasonable expectations, would be adequate resources for his retirement. Today he has nothing. Ill health creates medical bills, and a pensioner must depend on other resources or he must face a means test. Today the man I am talking about is surviving with the help the city is providing.

So, Mr. Chairman, I wish to join with those who have urged in this house that at the first opportunity consideration by the minister and the cabinet ought to be given to an adjustment in pensions, to setting interest rates with respect to the fund to bring those rates more in line with market rates and to recognizing that this is not in the same category of expenditures as other expenditures which are claimed. We recognize the problems at this time and we note the figures. We also believe that the case is such, here, as to command a very high priority.

Before sitting down I wish to make one last series of remarks. There is, as some hon. members know, an organization composed of superannuated civil servants that has set itself the objective of raising pensions. I suppose you could call this a lobbying organization; but the tactics of the organization and the manner they have approached this problem is a matter of some concern. I note that within the last couple of weeks they had a convention in Ottawa. The organization has only about 8,000 members. The fact is that they have weakened their case by presenting it in an intemperate way; they have weakened their case by the irresponsible presentation of a good case and by the tactics they employed in an election campaign.

Let me say at once that I believe in this pension adjustment and I said so at the beginning of the election campaign. That did not stop this organization from calling a meeting in my constituency in the middle of my election campaign, inviting my political opponent to it and not giving me the courtesy even of sending me notice of the meeting or inviting me to it. That did not prevent this organization from sending out a notice to all its members endorsing my political opponent. Of course, that is their privilege and right; but this sort of thing creates many problems for a person trying to promote the idea of pension increases. In trying to achieve its objectives the organization used methods which were considerably less than diplomatic, and still less judicious. They are entitled to seek their objectives, that is true. If one of their objectives is participation in politics, that is their privilege. If they wish to participate in the election of a government, that is their privilege. But if they are trying sincerely to gain the support of those who are truly sympathetic to their cause by trying to enlist a broad base of support for the objectives they have chosen, I can only say that the members of the organization are being ill served by the executive they have chosen.

I am confident that the minister will pay heed to the existing need. I know he has his difficulties in working out and presenting a budget. He has great fiscal responsibilities in times like these. I know that the adjustment of pensions for retired civil servants is long overdue.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will the hon. member permit a question. In the reference he made to the federal superannuates national association, was he referring to the organization on a national basis or the activities of the association in his own constituency? If I may say so, I ask that question because nothing like that has happened in my part of the country, so far as this association is concerned.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Chairman, I communicated with the national president of the association subsequent to the election and brought this matter to his attention. I have had no communication from him saying that he regarded what happened merely as a local action. He did not dissociate himself from it and I can only conclude therefore that what happened came about as a result of the policy of the national association.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) told us for the thousandth, if not the millionth time, how important it is to increase the pension of retired civil servants, and we agree with him.

However, they are not the only ones who need a higher income which would enable them to meet their obligations more easily. I understand that the Department of Finance is studying the situation of the retired civil servants, but I feel that it should also study that of the Canadian people as a whole.

Unemployed Canadians, for instance, who get only unemployment insurance benefits, are in a much worse situation than the retired civil servants, and yet nothing much is done for them. The people who live on welfare are in the same situation, and there are many of them. Therefore, the formula advocated by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and others who hold the same views will not solve the problem.

A while ago, I saw the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) walking behind the curtains, his hands in his pockets. I would rather see him there, his hands in his pockets, than outside the house his hands in the pockets of the Canadian citizens.

Mr. Chairman, on February 25, 1967, in a speech to the University College Alumnae Association of University College of Toronto, the former minister of finance (Mr. Sharp) said:

> —the second point I should like to mention in passing. I think that we can now anticipate the beginning of an international redistribution of wealth—

It was the predecessor of the present Minister of Finance who spoke like that.

> —an international redistribution of wealth—

We talk about international redistribution of wealth. We do not even manage the redistribution of our national wealth among the Canadian people and we already think of an international redistribution. We are close to talking about interplanetary redistribution. Some fine day, Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance will no doubt be on his way to the moon to find outlets for our Canadian wealth. I continue my quotation:

> —and the kind of equalization formulas which we apply to the provinces in our country could very well be applied in the long run on a more total scale.
> What is more important still, disposing very high income, the peoples of the wealthy countries will more readily accept to redistributing their wealth to help others.

It would be true if we had very high income but it has been proved that such is the case for less than 10 per cent of our population, which means that nearly 90 per cent of the Canadian people have inadequate income in spite of the high national production in Canada.

The former minister of finance also told us that within the next few years—if one can forecast 33 years ahead of time, as the present Minister of Finance said recently international redistribution would be a necessity.

Again—I quote the words of the former minister of finance:

> What is more important still, disposing of very high income—

But let us, first of all, get this very high income that we cannot now achieve. Under the present system, we take away from the "haves" to give to the "have nots" thus impoverishing just about everyone. If we take away $1,000 or $2,000 from someone to redistribute them to the multitude that has very little, we are not increasing the purchasing power of the people because the amount of money remains the same.

It must be recognized that the millionaire, for instance, does not pile up his millions in the corner of his bedroom. He spends, he makes his money grow, he makes his money circulate by investing it in buildings or in expansions; and so, he proves his initiative because that money is used to pay salaries, materials, and so on.

When owners are taxed, they are naturally prevented from proceeding with such accomplishments. That is what some fail to understand. When we take something away from the one who owns to give it to those who are dispossessed, we are not encouraging private enterprise, personal initiative. It is a socialist solution, a communist solution, similar to that which the present system advocates. This is redistribution to the detriment of those who own.

Mr. Chairman, let us face the facts. The former minister of finance continued, and I quote:

> —the peoples of the wealthy countries will more readily accept to redistributing their wealth to help others, if they are not desirous of doing so themselves. We can even see parliaments and legislatures throughout the world carry on annual debates on foreign aid, wondering not how to help but instead how to increase existing programs.

We ask that present programs be improved, but the present Minister of Finance always tells us: We have no money. Still, this is the same Minister of Finance that we now have and who is not in the house now because he ran away a while ago. In any event, he is the one who was delegated to France recently. He was also in Bonn attending a meeting with representatives of the other nine wealthiest countries in the world to decide about the fate of France. The Canadian government then accepted to contribute $100 million to help the French increase the value of their franc and maintain the value on the international monetary market.

Mr. Chairman, where did the government obtain these $100 million that have been pledged in order to maintain the French monetary stability? The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) does not say and, in fact, they are not included in the national budget. These Credits amounting to $100 million are given to save the French financial system.

However, if the hon. minister is asked to assist in the development of our resources, he tells us: We do not have the money and there is nothing we can do about it. When it is a matter of helping other countries, however, Canadians are right there. It is even mentioned that India will be granted $8.8 million on an interest-free basis for a period of 50 to 60 years. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) is in a position to do that. They say: Oh, we are not lending money, this is credit.

Why is it that the same kind of credit is not being used to finance the development of our country? If credit is good for India, why is it not good for Canadian municipalities? This item would be profitable to Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba and the Maritime provinces which are now begging the Minister of Finance and the government to give them financial assistance. No, they cannot afford it; they cannot help the provinces with the same kind of credit as was granted to India, Asia or Africa, and this is supposed to be logical.

Newspapers write about the loans to India but they never mention the reason why the same thing cannot be done for Canadians. I have been raising these points in the house for six or seven years. In fact, for at least eleven years, I have been advocating the necessity to make financially possible what is physically feasible in Canada, but the newspapers do not have the time to mention that. Controlled by finance, stifled and muzzled, the press leads the people toward fallacy and hides the truth from Canadians.

When plausible suggestions are made, suggestions similar to what the government has done with regard to foreign countries, newspapers find no room to refer to that. These would be published in the obituary notice, for instance, but without too much publicity. They are afraid, because finance approves it. Newspapers are slaves paid by finance, and the Minister of Finance knows it. They protest only when the government passes a piece of legislation that hurts them, or tax them more. Then, they recognize our existence.

But, Mr. Chairman, it matters little. We will all the same convey the message to the whole population, because the estimates now before us have already been spent and we can do nothing about that. However, this gives us the opportunity to say to the Minister of Finance what we think about his monkey system and he cannot say that we are wrong. In fact, he knows that we are right, but like the others, he is paid not to understand that we are right, to make believe that what we say makes no sense. Those people are not free to speak their mind. What did they say when they went to Bonn? What was dictated by American finance, and the Canadian Minister of Finance said there exactly and textually what American finance told him to say, and nothing else.

Mr. Chairman, I heard earlier a Liberal member speak about the family corporations transferred from father to son and inheritances which he found useless, thereupon a Conservative member immediately added a remark. But what has the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) done to earn the money he has? Everyone knows that he inherited the wealth of his parents and nobody objects to that. But what about the young, the children who usually inherit from their parents? Some heirs may be heartless and dilapidate the estate that was left to them, but the younger generation will generally have enough initiative to improve the industry or inheritance they received. Then, the inheritance represents an asset, a potential, a reason for the existence of taxes that must be imposed on estates left by the father to his son, or by one family to another.

Mr. Chairman, a distributive justice is what the Créditistes ask for. It is not with new taxes that the increase of pensions—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock, it is now my duty to leave the chair, report progress and ask permission to sit again at the next sitting of the house.

Progress reported.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motion and public bills.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

INCLUSION OF MENTAL AND T.B. INSTITUTIONS IN INSURANCE PROGRAM

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of including mental hospitals and T.B. sanitoria in the federal hospital insurance program (Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act) so that the provinces will have available sufficient funds to provide for adequate treatment of the mentally ill, those people suffering from T.B. and the care and training of mentally retarded children.

[Mr. Caouette.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): This notice of motion was called a second time on Monday, December 2.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the problem of mental illness is one of the serious health problems facing the people of Canada at the present time. Today almost 70,000 hospital beds are being used to treat people who are ill as a result of mental or emotional disorders. This is almost half of the number of hospital beds available in Canada. More than 75,000 patients are under the care of Canadian mental hospitals. This year, Mr. Speaker, mental illness accounts for 41 per cent of hospital patient days. It has been estimated that one person out of ten in Canada is or will be mentally or emotionally ill during his lifetime.

We have not had in Canada a really scientific estimate made of the cost of mental illness to Canadians, but experts who have done a good deal of work for the Canadian Mental Health Association have estimated that the cost of mental illness to Canada, in the form of medical and social services, lost time and production, amounts to $500 million per year. This is a very substantial amount of money even in the inflationary year of 1968. Some studies made in Great Britain indicate that the cost of mental illness runs between 1.6 and 1.9 per cent of the gross national product. Applying that figure to Canada, Mr. Speaker, the cost is more than $600 million a year.

I doubt, Mr. Speaker, that any person in this house would disagree with me when I say that the hospital programs initiated just after the end of world war II, as a result of which we now have government financed hospital plans in every province in Canada and covering all of the people of Canada, have been of tremendous benefit in meeting the health standards of the public of this country.

The basic and major fault in the legislation originally proposed, the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, was that mental hospitals and t.b. sanitoria were excluded from the federal hospital insurance program. Every professional organization that has studied the question—for example, the Canadian Medical Association, the Canadian Psychiatric Association, the Canadian Mental Health Association and their provincial divisions—have called upon federal governments both Liberal and Conservative to amend this legislation so as to include under its provisions mental hospitals and t.b. sanitoria. This is what I am suggesting in my motion today, Mr. Speaker.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that compared with the facilities provided for the diagnosis and treatment of people suffering from physical illness, facilities for people suffering from mental illness are distinctly second class. This is unjust, unfair and should be corrected at once. The same standard of care should be given to those suffering from mental illness as is given those with physical illness.

I have not seen any recent figures, Mr. Speaker, but a couple of years ago—and I am sure the ratio has not changed—the cost of care for a person in one of the provincial mental hospitals was not more than one quarter of the cost of care for a person suffering from physical illness in any of the general hospitals to be found in the cities of Canada. This situation I submit is completely unjust.

The Canadian Mental Health Association, in a brief submitted to the government in 1967, recommended that the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act of 1957 be amended so that all mental and psychiatric hospitals come within the terms of the legislation. I think that anybody who gives any consideration to the problem will realize that the proposal made by the Canadian Mental Health Association is one which has complete justification.

There should be no distinction made between people who are mentally or emotionally ill and those who are physically ill. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the medical profession is becoming increasingly convinced that a very large percentage, probably in the neighbourhood of one third, of the people who visit a general practitioner because they feel they are ill are suffering from mental or emotional illness. That being the case, it is certainly true that they ought to receive the same kind of treatment in a hospital, if they require to go there, as a person suffering from a physical disorder.

I realize, Mr. Speaker, that in making this proposal I am running counter to the thinking of this government in regard to shared cost programs. The government has made it clear that it wants to get out of shared programs. It seems to me that there is more than a legal or constitutional problem involved here. Canadian governments must give bold and vigorous leadership in what is a very basic problem. I believe that ways must and can be found to cross the constitutional jurisdictions and restrictions that serve little purpose beyond prolonging and deepening the problem.

When federal governments in the late 1940's and 1950's brought in their plans and legislation to provide for hospital insurance, under which they agreed to bear 50 per cent of the cost of hospitalization plans, they breached the supposed barrier to the federal government in the matter of participating in the field of hospital insurance and the payment of hospital costs. I suggest that in this matter of the payment of hospital costs by the federal government there is no more reason today than there was then for making a distinction between mental illness and physical illness.

There is a very simple principle involved here, Mr. Speaker, and that is that mental illness is like any other illness and should be dealt with within the same organizational, administrative and professional framework as physical illness. That can be done, I submit, only if the federal government would agree—and if this motion is agreed to I think it would be bound to agree—to amend the legislation to which I have referred so as to include within its ambit mental hospitals and t.b. sanitoria.

This question, Mr. Speaker, was dealt with by the royal commission on health services, which heard submissions on this question and on many other questions having to do with health. Their findings are very clear and precise. I should just like to quote a few sections from those findings having to do with mental health. I quote this from the first volume, page 21:

> Of all the problems presented before the Commission, that which reflects the greatest public concern, apart from the financing of health services generally, is mental illness—case finding, diagnosis, treatment and rehabilitation.

The report continues to make a number of specific recommendations. I shall deal only with those having to do with the question of mental health and mental institutions. The first appears at page 25:

> 13. That the Hospital Construction Grant regulations under the Health Facilities Development Fund be amended immediately to provide one-half the cost of construction of psychiatric wards or wings in all general hospitals over 100 beds in size, or of small regional psychiatric hospitals with up to 300 beds, adjacent to general hospitals, including the requisite out-patient facilities, and the small units for the mentally retarded.
> 14. That federal and provincial authorities designate those wards of existing mental hospitals in which patients are clearly receiving active or convalescent care as a "hospital" or "facility"

under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, commencing January 1, 1965, so that these costs will be shared.

17. That salaries or sessional fees for psychiatrists directing these hospital wards or regional hospitals be accepted as a shareable cost under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act.

29. That henceforth all discrimination in the distinction between physical and mental illness in the organization and provision of services for their treatment, and the attitudes upon which these discriminations are based, be disavowed for all time as unworthy and unscientific.

I believe all the provincial governments have been and are facing tremendous financial problems in the field of education, welfare and health, to mention just a few. Despite this, provincial expenditures in the field of mental health have gone up pretty substantially. The provincial governments are caught in the cost squeeze. The result is—and I believe this is true of all provinces—that the amount of money available for the administration of mental hospitals for the care of mentally and emotionally ill patients has been limited.

A few moments ago I mentioned the cost of looking after patients. The cost in one of the provincial institutions is probably not more than one quarter of the cost of looking after a patient in any of the general hospitals in Canada. Given the circumstances I have mentioned, we cannot expect the provinces to do more. If the federal government would assume what I consider to be a just and equitable share of the cost of the administration of mental hospitals and t.b. sanitoria, I would hope that the provinces would not reduce the amount of money they are devoting to those hospitals, but that the federal funds which would be made available would be adequate to meet the costs now being disbursed by the provincial governments so that the type of service which would and could be provided would be improved.

In recent years we had a good deal of experience. In virtually every general hospital, certainly in the larger cities of Canada, there are psychiatric departments and wards. People are treated in those hospitals. Who are the people who go there? Usually they are the people in the middle and upper income bracket who, if they have these problems, see a psychiatrist. If during the time they are seeing a psychiatrist they need hospitalization, they very often go to hospital. This is true in Ottawa; it is true in Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, and in all the other large centres. The people who are treated in the psychiatric wings of hospitals are covered by hospital insurance. They receive the best care that is available in Canada. Their costs, which are somewhere in the order of $30 or $40 a day, are now being paid by the various provincial hospitalization plans. Who goes to the other hospitals, the provincial hospitals, where the costs are not $30 or $40 a day, but probably $10 a day? Usually these are the people who do not see a private psychiatrist.

I suggest therefore that we have one type of treatment for people in the middle and upper income brackets and another and much poorer type of treatment for people in the low income brackets. I submit that this is wrong and immoral. I urge the government to give favourable and systematic consideration to this resolution, not because it is in my name but because it embodies the recommendations made by organizations which are most expert in this field, such as the Canadian Medical Association, The Canadian Psychiatric Association, the Canadian Mental Health Association and, last but not least, the royal commission on health services which reported in 1964.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I just heard "The member for Hull". I thought "dull" was meant, but that is not correct. It is the member for Hull.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this discussion, since it deals with a subject I believe I know very well. Perhaps I am more familiar with it than others, since it deals in fact with a question related to health.

At the beginning of my remarks, I wish to congratulate warmly my good friend from Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), whom I respect very highly, as I believe he has known for a long time the state of stagnation of certain families, resulting from inconveniences due to the illness of certain people.

I know very well that he is a pharmacist by profession and that he has been able for a long time to produce in his laboratory the drugs prescribed by physicians, while giving sound advice at the same time.

He chose politics. Let us say that this may have changed his profession very little but, in my opinion, he was a very good pharmacist, which he remains of course, because of his great human feelings toward his fellow men.

• (5:20 p.m.)

I should like to say that I agree with the principle stated by the hon. member for Winnipeg North; these services should be integrated within an hospital insurance framework; however I think that it is much too late today since eventually we are going to abandon certain joint programs, the hospital insurance, among others.

However, we would have to discuss the principle on the basis of which hospital insurance was established. In 1957, we realized that there were a great many disparities, not with regard to treatment but with regard to those who were stricken by disease, when many ended up the next day as we say, on the street that is faced with bankruptcy in view of the high cost of hospitalization, especially when the illness was rather serious.

An hon. Member: On account of medical costs.

Mr. Isabelle: We shall talk later about physicians.

It was on that principle that the government had based the hospital insurance in those days. Mental hospitals, and T.B. sanitoria were subsidized by provincial governments and, as it was question of chronic diseases requiring several years of hospital care, the federal government never contemplated intruding into an area which was very well administered and was subsidized by provincial governments. That was the way to do it, and it was the government's policy when it introduced its hospital insurance plan.

They wanted all Canadians, from coast to coast, to be treated free of charge in Canadian hospitals and to receive the medical care necessitated by some chronic diseases.

And that is why, on the basis of this philosophy, it is easy to understand that medicare complements this—and I must say that I am one hundred per cent for medicare —and if some of my fellow practitioners are against it, it is because they do not understand this program. I have been saying for a long time that we must try to inform them so that they will know what medicare means. In any case, that is the philosophy o which the government has based the establishment of this hospital insurance.

Needless to say, the Hall report recommended also that these services should be integrated and as I said a while ago, it would be useless to start a complete review of the policy, to set out a new policy in this respect, in order to integrate these mental and T.B. services within the framework of hospital insurance.

We know that today psychiatry is very popular. I think that any decent person will sooner or later see a psychiatrist. Things have changed. There was a time when those people who felt a bit at sea and who told strange stories—not always about politics—when they started to tell funny stories, they were shut up in mental hospitals where they remained until their death.

Today, all this has changed somewhat; they are released from hospitals. It is a new method, which is being tried out, and I hope that there will be drugs strong enough to quieten them down. It is quite a fad today; as soon as some patients are depressed, their physician advises them to see a psychiatrist. I know that this does not happen here, in the House of Commons; we are so busy that we do not feel the need for pills; but sometimes, when I listen to certain members, I feel that it would be advisable for them to receive psychiatric care.

In any event methods of psychiatric treatment have changed considerably; that is why several psychiatric hospitals—which formerly were called "asylums", an old word which will soon disappear from the dictionary—no longer exist, because it is now possible to treat the patients in the psychiatrist's office.

As for T.B., there is no need to go into the details to prove that in 1953 there were roughly 18,000 tubercular patients in Canada while, ten years later, there were barely 8,000. There has been, then, a huge drop in the number of tubercular patients; that is why sanatoria have had to be closed all across Canada for which there was no longer any use. Today, tuberculosis is treated in the doctor's office. Indeed, great success has been achieved thanks to the medical research and good administration of those who were entrusted with the care of health in Canada.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that it is almost scandalous to see what amounts are taken out of public funds these days to pay for the cost of hospital insurance, and what it costs per capita for treatment in hospital. It is the responsibility of the government to check the flow of public money, as it actually did with regard to the winter works program. Some incredible things have been brought to light in this connection and I daresay that even more fantastic things will be uncovered in the field of hospital insurance.

That one could seek admission to hospital just for a check-up is beyond my understanding, Mr. Speaker. If someone is admitted for that purpose, provided a bed is available, that person should pay both his insurance and his hospital costs, just like anyone who consults a doctor, or gets an electrocardiogram or an X-ray. The tremendous cost to the country today is due to the large number of people who seek admission to hospitals just to have a check-up.

Some people spend four or five days in hospitals at government expense to sober up after overindulging in drink. Hospitals have become luxury hotels. This situation should be controlled more efficiently. Although a receipt is handed out on discharge from hospitals, it is mentioned at no time that half the bill is paid by the federal government. Ordinary medical examinations should not be made in hospitals. This would result in decreasing the cost of hospital insurance and would allow a better use of beds. This should not be permitted in the province of Quebec, as these services are free of charge. I do not know what the cost is to the province, but the federal government is contributing a certain amount.

I have made these comments hoping to correct this situation, but 20 minutes is too short a time to say everything I want. Anyway, Mr. Speaker, I could say enough to fill a whole encyclopaedia.

It was said by previous speakers that the government was quite agreeable to the principle of integrating psychiatric hospitals, but as I said previously, it is preferable to concentrate on urgent matters, since psychiatric and tuberculosis cases have decreased to such an extent that it is hardly worthwhile spending too much time on this problem.

I was saying a while ago that medical care is a complement and I wish that some pressure were exerted on the authorities concerned to have this program established in all the provinces.

People always say that medical care is expensive, that doctors charge high fees. As far as I am concerned, I have always had the confidence of those who trusted me. Doctors are given to the people by the Lord to provide them with good care. I hope everyone will appreciate their work, because they are human beings like anybody else, and they understand the needs of people.

I agree with my hon. friend from Winnipeg North who has been sponsoring this bill for several years. I hope that one day he will succeed in getting what he wants; but then, I am afraid it will be too late.

At any rate, I must declare now that the government cannot accept to amend the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act so as to be obliged to provide assistance to the health establishments mentioned in the motion proposed by my colleague from Winnipeg North.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, as regards the notice of motion presented by the hon. member for Winnipeg North, there are two things to point out and that can be dealt with at the same time.

First, the advisability of including mental hospitals and T.B. sanitoria in the federal hospital insurance program. The second point consists in making available to provinces sufficient funds to provide for adequate treatment of the mentally ill, of people suffering from T.B. and the care and training of mentally retarded children.

I believe all the hon. members agree with that, as they must on many occasions have encountered problems concerning mentally retarded people or patients who could not be admitted to mental hospitals or T.B. sanitoria, because of the lack of room there.

The purpose of this motion is to have such mental hospitals and T.B. sanitoria covered by the federal hospital insurance program. The remark I could make is that we are talking of capital expenditures i.e. that we want to include existing hospitals in medicare. But as far as capital expenditures are concerned, we know that today our hospitals, in Quebec as elsewhere, are costing us a fortune, and that it is their financing which is especially costly to the public. The federal government should intervene in this field, in order to allow the provinces to have pyschiatric hospitals and a few sanitoria, the latter being less needed now that T.B. is regressing due to the progress of medical science. On the other hand, we can see that if T.B. is regressing, the number of mental patients is on the increase. And I found a little strange that the member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle) was only looking to the left when he mentioned mental patients. Mr. Speaker, today I wish to suggest that the federal government grant subsidies to the provinces for the construction of psychiatric hospitals or others, according to the formula put forward by Creditists, which would benefit to the provinces, since it would allow them to have the taxpayer pay only once the cost of their hospitals.

I remember seeing statistics that showed that the cost of hospitals built in Quebec or elsewhere had been paid at least three times, either in financing loans, or in bank or bond interests. I find it strange to force the people of the provinces, taxpayers, to pay three or four times the capital expenditures of hospitals that are needed.

We agree. We admit that we lack hospitals, psychiatric or other, and that it is not normal to make taxpayers from Quebec or another province, pay thrice the capital expenditures of a $1 million hospital. After 40 or 50 years, the hospital will have cost $3 or $4 million in capital charges, which means that we shall have to pay an amount equal to the cost of four hospitals, but we shall only have received the investments for the building of a single one.

The hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle) is right when he talks about a scandal in connection with all the moneys that the federal and provincial governments must pay to finance the hospital insurance program.

A look at the items covering investments, depreciations and expenditures for hospital construction makes us realize that we have to pay hospitals four or five times over. The hon. member for Winnipeg North should have pointed out in the notice of motion we are now studying that investment charges should be advanced by the Bank of Canada and made available to the provinces so that they may pay our hospitals only once.

This motion raises a second point in connection with hospital insurance, and I quote:

—so that the provinces will have available sufficient funds to provide for adequate treatment of the mentally ill, those people suffering from T.B. and the care and training of mentally retarded children.

I know several children who are waiting for a hospital bed to undergo treatment. The federal government and the provinces are short of money. There is a shortage of space a shortage of everything. However, there is a solution.

That solution is not medicare, as suggested by the hon. member for Hull, for although he condemns the abuses of the present system, he still approves of medicare. That solution is a plan even more socialistic than today's hospital insurance, which would meet the needs of our citizens in health matters, but not according to the proposals made during the last election campaign concerning medicare.

Abuses are denounced in the case of those who go to hospital just for a check-up and who take it easy for three or four days. But if medicare becomes more elaborate, with even more officers and red tape, we shall have even less results and we shall be even farther away from the objectives we have today, namely the protection of health.

Now the Ralliement Créditiste has recommended for a long time a health program that would solve the problem. A health dividend would be granted by the federal government with the co-operation of the provinces. It would be paid to individuals who in turn could go to a hospital that suited them and subscribe to the health insurance program of their choice. Civil servants should not ram health insurance plans down people's throats.

Health is a matter concerning the individual and the medical profession, and the hon. member for Hull is well aware of it. Why does the government not try to implement a health insurance program which would respect the personality and the privacy of the individual. The Créditistes suggest a solution: A health dividend should be granted to the individual so that he may, as a family man and as a citizen, obtain a program of medical protection from the insurance company of his choice, the representative of his choice, in order to go to the hospital of his choice and to choose his doctor.

When Canada becomes even more socialistic civil servants will choose our physicians for us. It might be an exaggeration in 1968 to say that civil servants, in a few years, through Medicare, will choose our physicians, but let the Medicare program take root in Canada and before ten years, doctors will have become servants of the state. They will have no say whatsoever about health, because the best among them will have gone. In fact they will be replaced by civil servants with no interest in the health of the Canadian people, because they will consider themselves as mere employees of the federal government and will not have any medical reputation to safeguard. Those doctors will be ordinary numbers, the same as the sick persons on a medical file card. The hon. member for Hull is a doctor and if he were not connected with a political party, he would agree with his colleagues who are practitioners and who want to protect the doctor's personal initiative and, at the same time, the health of each individual.

Canadian doctors are as interested as M.P.'s in protecting the health of the Canadian people. When we have incorporated national health in a program such as medicare, the objectives we are seeking to attain today will not only be beyond our grasp but will be further away still than the solution of the problems now facing us.

People complain today because the provincial governments have followed suit in the field of hospital insurance and a few years after such hospital insurance programs have been implemented, it is realized that the prohibitive costs are bleeding the treasury white and there is chaos in the hospitals. The same bleeding occurs in the other fields that the federal government has nationalized or socialized, and the same thing is true in the other countries of the world where health care was nationalized when health insurance programs that respect the individuals and the physicians, as medical practitioners, should have been chosen instead.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, we are not against this notice of motion, but we think it involves two things with which we should deal separately. One has to do with capital investment for hospitals, to which the federal government gives no assistance; that would not allow provinces to get capital investments, for hospitals, which would be less expensive. Then, a program, not medicare, but health dividend program, should be set up to enable individuals to be free, and to choose by themselves their health insurance program and their doctor; that would guarantee the individual freedom and initiative.

We are happy to say, Mr. Speaker, in connection with a notice of motion that does not appear very significant, but which is similar to the national health program so as to contradict those who now consider that if a medicare scheme administered by civil servants was passed, we would now be better off—we say that it is not true. Once we have implemented such a program, we will realize only a few years hence, that a medicare program will have greatly set back the cause of health in Canada to the benefit of thousands of other civil servants who, far from dealing with health, will administer the red tape.

[English]

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): This notice of motion suggests that the government give consideration to the advisability of improving mental hospitals and t.b. sanatoria in the federal hospital insurance program. I recall that back in April 1957 when this act first came into being there was a qualification which made it rather difficult for the provinces to come into the hospitalization scheme. First of all there was a requirement that the majority of the provinces with a majority of the population in them be in favour of the scheme, and then there was a dispute as to which provinces might come in, and when. I recall having the honour in the autumn of 1957 of moving an amendment to the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act to the effect that any province wishing to enter this scheme could do so. Within two years the ten provinces came in the hospitalization scheme. There were some discussions at the federal-provincial conference held in the autumn of 1957 and some of the provinces wondered if the federal government might not amend the act as it is suggested it be amended now. It was suggested that, if my recollection is correct and I do not have the figure in front of me, the federal share be some $70 million. Naturally it would be a great deal more now. The costs of the whole hospital insurance scheme have increased rapidly. However it was felt that as the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act was a new venture, it should be given time to operate before it is judged.

I do not have the latest statistics at hand, but my primary interest is in mental hospitals. I think there have been tremendous strides in the last several years in the improved care of mental patients. I am sure all of us here recall the time when mental patients were practically put behind barred windows. There have been great changes in thinking in the last few years with regard to this particular disease—and I must point out that this is an illness just like any other illness. We treat it much more openly, and this is as it should be.

The hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle) had a great deal to say about psychiatrists. He also suggested that the procedure of sending patients to hospitals for check-ups could be improved upon. At the risk of making enemies of the doctors who are members of the house, I wish simply to point out that one reason for the tremendous increase in hospitalization costs is the simple fact that to a great extent doctors use hospitals as their offices. Many patients are sent into hospital perhaps unnecessarily. I am not suggesting that doctors cannot look after their patients better in hospitals, but I think we might have escaped some of this galloping increase in the number of hospitalized patients if more consideration had been given to treating patients in their homes.

I think it is obvious that the government is not in favour of this notice of motion. They have given notice of their intent to make cuts in health grants and to make cuts in hospital construction grants. I put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr.

Munro) today with respect to this matter, but he was not in the house, and I hope later to get an answer to it. I asked him what the government is doing to ensure that we have a sufficient number of medical men in this country. Not only is this vitally necessary today, but it will be of great importance in the implementation of medicare which the government has brought in and which I claim was done in a haphazard way, without due consideration being given to the provinces and without allowing the provinces to have a say.

As I mentioned earlier, great strides have been made in the care of the mentally ill. The hon. member for Hull also made reference to psychiatric wards in general hospitals. Today patients in these wards are covered by hospitalization insurance. In this respect I would be inclined to favour this notice of motion. I feel that a mentally ill patient, no matter where he might be hospitalized, should receive as much care and be given as much consideration as one who is in a psychiatric ward in a general hospital.

Mr. Jerry Pringle (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to congratulate my colleague from Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) with respect to the resolution now before the house. It seems to me most unfortunate that mental illness has traditionally been considered secondary in importance to physical illness. A great deal of progress has been made in diagnosis and treatment. We all know, of course, that a great deal is yet to be accomplished before we can rest assured that psychiatrists have reached the degree of acceptance enjoyed by physicians and surgeons. It is true also that evolutionary factors in hospital management have helped alleviate the shortage of mental health care units. The provision for treatment of the mentally ill in nearly all general hospitals now operating in the land is, to a degree, justifying the earlier decisions to avoid the inclusion of mental hospitals and t.b. sanitoria in the federal hospital insurance program within the scope of the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act.

At that time, it was considered to be preferable to deal with general hospitals, including the chronic, convalescent and rehabilitation institutions, on a basis of urgency. The costs of hospital care were becoming unbearably burdensome both to individuals and to the hospitals. It was of the utmost importance therefore to take immediate measures to alleviate this situation. In excluding certain types of hospitals, the government had regard for the fact that a certain amount of federal support was already being provided through the national health grants program to general hospitals.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, by far the most neglected area in our mental health program is child psychiatry. It would be most unfair to make a blanket charge that nothing is being accomplished but the development of child psychiatry in Canada has been slow and out of proportion with the incidence of deviant child behaviour. An urgent concern for the disturbed adult has obscured an approach to the problems of child pathology. I should like now to quote from a report on child psychology but I wish to emphasize that millions of dollars are being expended annually in the interests of physical and mental health while precious little has been made available for the treatment of a retarded child. Public spirited citizens have stepped forward to accept this challenge. I should like to refer to the Sunshine Occupational School at Chilliwack B.C., operated by the Society for Handicapped Children which is wholly supported by public subscription. I should like to refer also to the Good Shepherd School in Clearbrook, British Columbia, which functions in a similar way. I know there are many more in Canada, but I wish to make special mention of a school for boys in Langley, B.C., known as Chrisholme.

Eight years ago a group of businessmen in Vancouver became aware of the urgent need for a type of schools for boys possessed of mental faculties making them ineligible for public schools. They purchased a small farm at Langley in the Fraser Valley of British Columbia, and proceeded to develop a curriculum without benefit of precedent but with a sincere desire to succeed. The board of directors begged and borrowed to outfit the farm and school and just recently opened a new workshop. All the capital was publicly subscribed. Through the able management of Mr. Tom Hoeflok and his small but overworked staff, the school eventually graduated eight young men and found them jobs in various trades. They quickly became self-supporting respectable citizens. The first graduates commenced their positions in society 18 months ago and not one has left his job or been released. Another six are nearing the graduation date.

These young boys are referred to the school from child welfare and other agencies. I am told that a long waiting list is depriving many young people from taking advantage of the benefits of Chrisholme and other institutions. I further understand that an average of 20 referrals a week is adding to the waiting list. It is estimated that 10 per cent to 35 per cent of these children will qualify for enrolment at Chrisholme, if facilities were available.

This sincere dedication to the welfare of fellowmen is most admirable and one cannot leave the Chrisholme premises without a feeling that much is still to be done to correct disparity and create a just society within the boundaries of Canada, in so far as retarded children are concerned. The provincial government finances the food and clothing, but all capital expenditures are raised by the board of directors of the school. I sincerely urge, Mr. Speaker, that the time to give serious consideration to national assistance for similar projects is now. We must recognize the human rights of the retarded child and find a proper place in the scheme of things for his attention and care.

The Canadian Psychiatric Association reported as follows in their submission to the royal commission on health service in 1962:

> When the problems of child development and behaviour disorders are uncovered they are legion —juvenile delinquency, the physically handicapped, the mentally retarded, the emotionally disturbed, etc., are areas of grave responsibility for the medical profession, for social agencies, for school authorities and for government. This responsibility falls to a large extent on the child psychiatrist.

I emphasize that this report was made in 1962, and the following paragraph is found therein:

> A child psychiatrist is a qualified specialist psychiatrist who has had an additional two years of training in children's work. In Canada approximately 60 psychiatrists work actively with children and of these less than half have received specialized training in child psychiatry. Most of the available children's services are thinly spread in densely populated areas.
> Most provinces have some outpatient services for children but few have residential facilities; services for disturbed adolescents are sparse and facilities for psychiatric approach for delinquency are minimal. The number of child psychiatrists devoted to the field of mental retardation—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hour for the consideration of private members business has now expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, may I just confirm to hon. members that tomorrow we will again be in committee of supply and take the estimates of the Department of Agriculture.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, December 5, 1968

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HOWARD (OKANAGAN BOUNDARY)—STATEMENT BY MEMBER FOR CAPE BRETON-EAST RICHMOND

Mr. Bruce Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege. When the integrity of a member of this house is impugned it is a matter of the greatest seriousness for all hon. members of the house. It is something that one would not expect an hon. member to do lightly and without concrete evidence to prove his statement.

Yesterday the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis) made a series of vague and rambling statements purporting to show that civil servants were being placed under undue pressure because of my actions. Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote from the television transcript that was referred to by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond. As recorded on page 15 of the transcript, supplied by the C.B.C., I said:

> The backbencher has the most wonderful safety valve for getting things done and I discovered this accidentally, and that is, every week, every Wednesday morning, there's a government caucus and all you have to do is discuss it in that caucus and refer to a particular minister who hasn't acted the way you think he should act in getting a job done for one of your constituents. If a constituent has a problem, and you haven't satisfaction, you take it to the caucus.

That is the end of that quote, but after an interruption by one of the other panellists I said:

> I have the opportunity as a government member to put the minister on the spot in front of the Prime Minister who is sitting there—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): After a couple of additional interruptions I said:

> The merest threat of doing this is enough to get civil servants all down the line making sure that they get that job done that needs being done because they know that if the minister is on the spot, then they're going to be on the spot.

Mr. Baldwin: You haven't got enough spots left.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Now, Mr. Speaker, it must be very obvious to any fair minded person that having made three references to the "minister" that this was the area of pressure I was talking about and the reference to "civil servants all down the line" was a corollary statement. For the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond to take that reference out of context amounted to a deliberate distortion of the intent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): I believe it is very important that I state some views on the civil service. Since coming to Ottawa I have been most impressed—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that he should state his question of privilege. I suggest to him that this is not the occasion for him to state his views about the public service.

• (2:40 p.m.)

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I will delete any reference to my feelings for the civil service, but I would go on to say that when such instances affect my constituents I will make the facts known to the minister concerned. I make no apology to anyone for this action. Frequently we see in this house the use or abuse of the rule of privilege for narrow, frivolous and partisan purposes. Such abuse reduces the effectiveness of the house and abrogates the privileges of all its members. Our responsibility is to govern the country and to do so we must first govern our tongues.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): My constituents sent me here to work for them with vigour, and to speak fairly and honestly in the House of Commons and outside. I am proud that my constituents in Okanagan Boundary expect high standards of performance from me. I deem it a privilege to follow this standard, and I recommend it to the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Television Statement by Member

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, when I rose yesterday to put the question I did to the Prime Minister I had one thought in mind; that was the code of ethics introduced in this house by the previous prime minister. Under that code of ethics no minister of the crown should be in a position where he may be threatened. Granted, we have had evidence in past parliaments and we have had evidence in this parliament where ministers of the crown in respect of furniture deals or videotape incidents have placed themselves in a position whereby external pressure might be exerted in order to bring about the result desired by anyone who is in on the know, and who is aware that what is being done should not be done; but when a member in this house says he is impugned, he is placing himself in a precarious position when he can be impugned by his own statements made during a broadcast, if anyone should want to refer to this broadcast and go through it.

Is it any wonder the image of this parliament is what it is when members continue to make reference to the wasted time of parliament? We see in the same transcript where another Liberal member referred to it as a very healthy parliament, and then said it should be abolished if it did not become efficient. Why don't they make up their own minds?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): One minute they say it is a healthy parliament; the next minute they say it should be more efficient. The efficiency of parliament is the responsibility of the Prime Minister. He does not contribute anything to this responsibility when he gets up and runs from the house.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether hon. members would not agree that we should not pursue this matter further. Certainly I do not wish to suggest that the debate should be interrupted in any way, but the hon. member did not follow up his question of privilege—and perhaps it is a good thing he did not—by a motion. Normally, there being no motion there can be no question of privilege; but in view of the fact that there was reference in his statement to the statement made yesterday by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond I thought he should be permitted to say a few words, but I hoped he would not say anything that would cause the debate to continue too long.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr Speaker, may I clarify one point. The hon. member for Okanagan Boundary charged deliberate distortion of his remarks. I should like to read from page 16 of the transcript provided through the C.B.C. If Liberal members are interested in this document I shall be happy to table it. I am quoting from page 16 to prove that there is no distortion of his words:

Howard: —You certainly have an opportunity to bring anything up in the house, but I have the opportunity as a government member, to put that minister on the spot in front of the Prime Minister who is sitting there saying—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): —who is sitting there saying "halt . . ."

Mr. Howard goes on to say:

Not as effectively . . . not as often as I can do it. I can do it every week. And the merest threat of doing it—

Then Mr. Howard goes on to say:

This doesn't matter. The merest threat of doing this is enough to get civil servants all down the line making sure that they get that job done that needs being done—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): It's too bad the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary did not finish the statement, because from the applause which took place it takes a government member to threaten the civil servants.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I suggest to the hon. member that for the consideration of the Chair yesterday he read long excerpts from a statement made by the hon. member. The hon. member has again quoted from what was said on Tuesday in this exchange on television. The hon. member is now giving us a third edition of the same thing. I am wondering whether by this time we do not know enough about what was said on that program.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I will complete the quotation and throw his own words back to the hon. member. He said:

—because they know that if the minister is on the spot then they are going to be on the spot. And I have used this and it has worked.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): From the applause of Liberal members it appears that their idea of democracy is to threaten civil servants.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As I said a moment ago, and I trust the member will not go further, when the hon. member raised the matter yesterday I made the decision which I still believe is right, that notice should have been given. Notice was given today by the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary and that is why the matter was allowed to go on. May I conclude in this way, by saying if there was any member who was entitled to raise a question of privilege it was the Prime Minister, and he did not raise one. I understand we have another question of privilege.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, before Your Honour leaves this particular issue I should like to state I agree that the exchange between the two hon. members has been adequate, except in one respect. The hon. member for Okanagan Boundary today used the words "deliberate distortion". I submit to Your Honour that these words, without qualification, constitute an infringement of the privileges of any hon. member. Sometimes, the word "distortion", or other similar words, are used in the heat of debate and upon reflection, hon. members probably wish they had not used them. These words "deliberate distortion" were not used in the heat of debate or as a result of a situation generated in the house but read from a statement, and I suggest these are words the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary should withdraw.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As the hon. member knows much better than I, there are a number of precedents and a number of authors who list long series of words considered to be unparliamentary. Basically I would think the suggestion by a member that there has been a deliberate intention to mislead the house is normally not acceptable according to the practices of this house. Although the hon. member may have wanted to say there had been a distortion, I am quite sure he did not want to impute to an hon. member an intention to deliberately distort something. I should like that hon. member to confirm my understanding of this situation.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I regret that my words have caused so much pain to hon. members in the opposition.

Mr. Bell: Not members of the opposition, to the house.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Unsatisfactory Reply to Question

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): I suggest that perhaps I could have worded my remarks more carefully. Out of respect to you, Mr. Speaker, I would withdraw those remarks.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: On this happy note we will go on to the next question of privilege.

[Translation]

MR. FORTIN—UNSATISFACTORY REPLY TO QUESTION ON ORDER PAPER

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On that happy note, I should like to rise on a less happy one concerning the Department of Justice.

A few months ago, I put the following question on the order paper:

> What works have been declared to be to the general advantage of Canada in the sense of the B.N.A. Act (section 92) since 1867?

The question is most important because it enables us to define the extent to which the B.N.A. Act was applied. Now, some civil servants in the department concerned called me later on to say that it might take a while to prepare a reply and asked me to kindly be patient.

Wanting to prove my good will, I accepted that reply. However, on October 21, 1968, as reported in Hansard on page 1577, I was told, and I quote:

> No list of such works has been maintained.

Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege is based on the type of reply the members, the representatives of the people, are given. The members endeavour to discharge, as best they can, their duties as legislators and controllers of the government and the administration; in order to do this, they want to be as well informed as possible. The government, on the other hand, tries to thwart their good intentions by refusing to give them the necessary information.

Mr. Speaker, as a true democracy cannot exist unless the members and the voters are fully informed, I complete my question of privilege by asking the Department of Justice to revise its position and give us this information.

Moreover, I propose that the house adjourn its business to force the government to tell the house what works have been declared to be to the general advantage of Canada. I make this a matter of principle, because the government refuses deliberately to answer the questions we put to it.

Mr. Speaker: The member, in conformity with standing orders, gave me written notice of the question of privilege he intended to bring up.

He claims that a minister did not give him the information requested through a question on the order paper, and he made a motion to adjourn the house.

The hon. member for Lotbinière quoted the provisions of paragraph 3 of citation 181 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary rules and forms, and I quote:

> A Minister may decline to answer a question without stating the reason for his refusal, and insistence on an answer is out of order, no debate being allowed. A refusal to answer cannot be raised as a question of privilege, nor is it regular to comment upon such refusal. A member can put a question, but has no right to insist upon an answer.

If, according to standing orders, a member cannot insist, by way of a question of privilege, upon an answer, it is obvious that a question of privilege cannot be raised when an answer has been given, even if the hon. member is not satisfied with it. Therefore, I must conclude that the question of privilege is not in order.

As concerns the adjournment of the house for the purpose suggested by the hon. member for Lotbinière, I suppose his motion is based on standing order 26. If so, the subject of the motion does not meet the conditions for urgency listed in citation 100 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary rules and forms. Anyhow, whether it is a pure and simple question of privilege or a motion under standing order 26, the rules do not authorize me to present the hon. member's motion to the house.

FOOD AND DRUGS ACT

REQUIREMENT THAT DRUG LABELS SHALL LIST INGREDIENTS

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-140, to amend the Food and Drugs Act (labelling).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

[Translation]

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, this bill provides that pharmaceutical firms must state clearly on the package the side-effects of the drug. At the present time, no legislation requires, for example, the manufacturer of an antihistamic drug to indicate that his products might slow down reflexes or induce sleepiness.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

NEWFOUNDLAND—UNEMPLOYMENT RESULTING FROM FISH PLANT CLOSING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct this question to the right hon. Prime Minister because the Minister of Fisheries is not in the house. In view of the really shocking telegram from the Minister of Fisheries to the Newfoundland Fishing Trade Association this morning, in which the government appears to wash its hands of any responsibility to help prevent the imminent closure of a number of fish plants in Newfoundland affecting some 6,000 plant workers and over 10,000 fishermen, leading to a crisis of catastrophic proportions if it takes place, will the Prime Minister indicate whether he is prepared to request the Minister of Fisheries to attend the house today to answer questions? Will he also indicate to the house whether the information conveyed by the Minister of Fisheries to the Newfoundland Fishing Trade Association is a final decision of the government in this regard?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Fisheries might be asked to answer the first part of the question tomorrow. I believe that yesterday he had already dealt with the question of existing and future programs, on which he will be making announcements at a future date. Obviously we cannot speculate on whether future programs on which announcements have not yet been made will be government policy.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Since the Minister of Fisheries in his telegram announced that the new government policy would not take effect before the end of the current fiscal year, that is before next March, will the Prime Minister take steps to see to it that the Canadian government policy in respect of assistance to the Atlantic groundfish industry is announced immediately in order to avert a crisis whereby, as the Leader of the Opposition stated, thousands of Canadians would lose their jobs due to lack of action on the part of the government?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to what the Minister of Fisheries has said in this house repeatedly.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Prime Minister indicate whether the fishing industry in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia can expect some immediate assistance now, before the government brings forward a policy in a few months' time as has been promised?

Mr. Trudeau: The answer is the same, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): May I ask a supplementary question. Will the Prime Minister at least undertake to set aside a day, either Friday or Monday, in order that this very serious situation can be dealt with by means of a general discussion in the house?

Mr. Trudeau: Ditto, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: I wonder if the Prime Minister realizes the urgency of the situation?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the minister is very actively working on this problem in his office.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, prior to the little flurry, I did indicate that I was going to rise on a question of privilege to bring this matter to the attention of the house in such a way that we could obtain a statement from the minister today. Unfortunately I was not able to do so. All I am asking is, I wonder is there any way the house can obtain from the Prime Minister the sort of sensitive kind of understanding which would indicate to the people of Canada that the Prime Minister does not consider this to be a frivolous matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will realize that the point he is raising now is not a question of privilege. It may be a grievance. There is a distinction between a grievance and a question of privilege. I doubt very much if the point he is making now qualifies under the rules of the house as a question of privilege.

Mr. Lundrigan: What I want to know is this. Could we get from the Prime Minister an answer to questions which have been posed to him in mannerly fashion, so we may get the sympathy of the federal government on this matter?

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister or the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the large number of people on the Atlantic coast who will be out of work within the next ten days, numbering in the thousands, has either the Prime Minister or the Minister of Manpower and Immigration formulated any plans to take care of these people and provide them with some means of earning a livelihood?

Mr. Trudeau: The Minister of Fisheries was in the house yesterday and he will be here tomorrow. I would not claim, nor would the Minister of Manpower and Immigration claim, to know as much about fisheries as does the Minister of Fisheries. The minister is not here precisely because we have devised a system to permit ministers to devote more time to trying to solve problems that arise within their areas of jurisdiction, and this is exactly what the minister is doing now.

Mr. McGrath: Will you permit one further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the house leader? Would the house leader give consideration, in view of the urgency of this matter, to changing the order of business and bringing forward the estimates of the Department of Fisheries tomorrow?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): I have had conversations with hon. gentlemen opposite, Mr. Speaker, and there seems to be some agreement to having those estimates considered on Monday. I would be prepared to hear again from hon. gentlemen opposite if they desire to change the order.

Mr. McGrath: This is an urgent question, and perhaps the government house leader could give the matter careful consideration and consider bringing forward the estimates of the Department of Fisheries tomorrow.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Perhaps the hon. member might like to address himself to his own house leader on this question.

Mr. McGrath: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I suggest to the Prime Minister that the house could at least take time to address itself to this crisis that is developing.

AIR CANADA

MEETING WITH DELEGATION RESPECTING WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that at 5.30 this afternoon he is to meet a delegation of 50 or so men and women from Manitoba who are here with regard to the retention of the Air Canada maintenance base at Winnipeg, may I ask the Prime Minister a question on this subject? My question is this. Has a decision on this matter already been taken, or will the Prime Minister and those who are with him give serious and open consideration to the representations that will be made to the government this afternoon?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I believe it has been stated, Mr. Speaker, that any decision on this would be made and announced in the coming days after today's meeting.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Can the Prime Minister assure the house that in coming to this very important decision the principle of assistance in regional development will be of paramount importance before any final decision is made?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, questions of regional development have paramount importance in any decisions made by this government.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): May I ask the Prime Minister, with respect to this whole roster system, where the Minister of Transport is today, on a day which is very important to his department? May I also ask the Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Shefford.

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): May I ask a supplementary question of the Prime Minister. Will he give full consideration to the recommendation of the royal commission on this subject during his consideration of it, before a decision is made?

AIRPORTS

MONTREAL—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON EXPANSION PLANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the fact that he is telling us about the significance of area development and transportation, could the right hon. Prime Minister tell this house today, in the absence of the Minister of Transport what are the important investments which have been planned and announced, concerning the Dorval air terminal, in Montreal?

Mr. Speaker: I would suggest to the hon. member that the information involved in his question should rather be given in the form of a statement on motions. If the hon. member wishes to follow up his question, he may give me notice for discussion at the time of adjournment.

MONTREAL—INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION OF BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State.

In reply to a question I asked him on November 7 last, the Secretary of State assured the house that the work on Place Radio-Canada, in Montreal, would start as scheduled on December 1, and that he did not expect any further delay. Since the work has not started yet, would the hon. Secretary of State tell us exactly on what date the work will be started at Place Radio-Canada in Montreal?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in order to know the exact date, I would have to ask the C.B.C. Up to now, I know the contracts have been signed and the work should begin at any time now. I cannot give a specific date as requested by the hon. member, unless the information is given to me by the C.B.C. to which I shall direct the question.

Mr. Valade: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to clear up the matter.

Since the minister replied on November 7 that it would be on December 1, would he be prepared to correct his statement and make another one as soon as possible in order to announce a definite date?

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I have already answered to that question and said to the hon. member that I was going to ask the C.B.C. about the exact date. If I am told by the C.B.C. that a date has been set, I shall give this answer to the hon. member, who knows full well that the Secretary of State does not make such decisions, as the C.B.C. is a crown corporation.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, another supplementary question.

Could the Secretary of State tell us why he undertook during the election campaign to set the date on which the work would begin in November 1968?

LABOUR RELATIONS

REPORT OF TASK FORCE INVESTIGATING INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the reports in this morning's press regarding the alleged contents of the Woods report, would the minister inform the house whether he has received the report of the task force and whether he will table that report for the information of hon. members?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this task force to investigate industrial relations was set up on December 13, 1966, and it will no doubt table its report to the Privy Council office. I have made an investigation, since I too read that morning report, and find the official report of the Woods task force will not be the hands of the Privy Council office until the last week of December. I presume that the article in question, which was written by one of Canada's foremost labour reporters, is probably based on some working papers that came into his hands by means unknown to the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question. Will the minister assure the house that the report will be tabled? I understand, of course, that this body is a task force rather than a royal commission. I think this is a matter of great importance and that the report should be tabled in parliament, and I am wondering whether the minister would undertake to do so when the report is filed with the Privy Council office.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I imagine this report is of importance not only to the Department of Labour but also to the departments of manpower and industry. I must remind the hon. gentleman that in the final analysis the decision to table it will be a matter for the Prime Minister himself.

Mr. Lewis: Then may I address my supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the right hon. gentleman whether he could assure the house that the report of the Woods task force will be tabled. May I also ask him whether he will consider publishing and tabling some of the more important studies that were made for use by the task force.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly consider both those suggestions, and with the advice of the minister will decide whether the report should be tabled. I think it would be unwise to make a blanket statement of principle, before reading the document, that it is in the interest of Canadians to table it. My hunch is that it will be, but I really cannot answer without knowing what is in it.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Labour. In view of the very detailed and lengthy report given on pages 1 and 2 of this morning's Globe and Mail by Wilfred List, which makes it very evident that a great deal of information has been leaked to the press in advance of being given to the members of this house, will the minister make inquiries and find out why this was done, how it was done and then report back to the house tomorrow?

Mr. Mackasey: I suggest that the hon. member would probably obtain a great deal more satisfaction if he discussed the matter with Dean Woods, whose responsibility it is to make certain that these valuable documents are not leaked or made available to the press prematurely.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that this report and other reports indicate that certain labour unions had access to the Woods task force report—and I speak specifically of the head of the steelworkers union—would the Minister of Labour inform the house how this leak came to pass?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, the gentleman who has just been alluded to is one of the more responsible labour leaders in this country. When the task force was set up by the previous prime minister, in his wisdom he placed at the disposal of the task force eight individuals, four from labour and four from management, to advise and help the task force to produce a respectable report. This gentleman to whom reference has just been made is, as I say, one of the top labour leaders of this country, and I am sure his advice would have considerable weight and be well appreciated by the task force.

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question was whether it was the prerogative of the gentleman about whom we are speaking to publicly divulge decisions taken by the task force, as obviously has been the case.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ABSENCE FROM HOUSE OF INDUSTRY AND FISHERIES MINISTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister concerning the whereabouts of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. When the minister brought in his estimates on Monday some of us were left with some concern. Yesterday I rose on a question of privilege relating to what he had said, and I have been following the roster and waiting with some anticipation for his appearance. He was scheduled to appear yesterday and again today. I wonder whether he will appear tomorrow.

[Mr. Hees.]

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is in Victoria, British Columbia, at a water policy seminar where he is replacing the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who is in hospital.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister say whether he has received any word from the Minister of Fisheries as to whether he is coming back to the house today? I was in conversation with the minister and he told me he would contact the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Compton.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member kindly resume his seat? If the hon. member wants me to rule on this question I would have to rule that it is not usual to ask the Prime Minister where a minister is, or whether he will be in the house. I do not think that is a proper question. The question may be asked, but the hon. member cannot insist upon a reply.

Mr. Lundrigan: Then I should like to apologize, Mr. Speaker, for asking my question in that way. What I really meant to ask was whether the Prime Minister had received any indication from the Minister of Fisheries that he would return to the house, as he indicated to me he would during a telephone call a couple of minutes ago.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Later:]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, might I ask the Prime Minister whether the Minister of Fisheries is actually prohibited from attending the house this afternoon, and whether the Prime Minister considers it more important for the Minister of Fisheries to be in his office rather than in the house explaining to the house, and accounting to the people of Canada through this house, a telegram on an urgent matter of public importance sent by the minister this morning?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. McGrath: Find your way out of that.

Mr. Trudeau: That won't be hard. The minister is not prohibited from attending the house, Mr. Speaker, and he does not have to ask permission to be in the house. And I doubt whether that is what he has just said on the phone.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: A question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Are hon. members rising on a question of privilege? I believe this would be the occasion upon which to remind hon. members that in my view the procedure with regard to questions of privilege is being seriously abused in this house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: I am not about to suggest that questions of privilege should not be raised, but hon. members know that according to long standing practice and the rules of the house it is only in extreme circumstances that questions of privilege should be raised. Hon. members may argue that the circumstances at this time justify a question of privilege being raised. What I am saying now does not necessarily apply to hon. members who may wish to raise a question at this moment. But I thought this was a good occasion upon which to express in a general way a reminder that hon. members should be mindful of precedents in this regard.

This having been said, I will call upon the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate to proceed with his question of privilege.

Mr. Lundrigan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May I say I agree entirely with your ruling, though I think the need for it stems from the kind of rules and procedures which are being forced on us by this government. The Prime Minister has accused me of lying.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Lundrigan: He said he seriously doubted whether my report to the house was correct. I will only say I would not doubt the word of the Prime Minister if he made an observation in the house; I would go along with it, although I might be inclined to do otherwise. I was in conversation with the Minister of Fisheries. The minister indicated to me that he intended to contact the Prime Minister but wondered whether, in view of the roster system, he should come into the house this afternoon. I am confident from the remarks of the Minister of Fisheries on other occasions that he would like to be in the house on days when he is not listed.

Some hon. Members: Hear hear.

Mr. McGrath: The Prime Minister has doubted the word of another member of this house, and under the rules he must withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is not correct in his interpretation of the rules. It is against the rules to say that another member has wilfully misled the house or been untruthful. On the other hand, I will admit to the hon. member who has raised this point of order that all hon. members have to accept the word of other members. This is a basic rule. This cannot even be the subject of discussion. It is a basic principle that every member of the house has to accept the word of another member, and it should not even be the subject of discussion.

Mr. Carter: The Prime Minister wanted to speak on the point of order.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member for St. John's West would allow me, I have made a ruling and I suggest we go on to another subject.

QUEBEC—REQUEST THAT EASTERN TOWNSHIPS BECOME DESIGNATED AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the hon. minister of Forestry and Rural Development.

Would the hon. minister tell the house whether or not he proposes to look into the economic situation of the eastern townships, especially the Sherbrooke area which is in dire straits. Does the minister expect that the area will be included in future among the designated areas?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly our intention to study the economy of every region in Canada, including Sherbrooke. However, no decision will be taken as to making Sherbrooke a designated area until the new legislation is passed

FREIGHT RATES

MARITIME PROVINCES—REQUEST FOR DELAY IN PROPOSED INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Minister of Transport who, according to my revised roster, was supposed to be here today. I do not know where he is, but in his absence I will repeat my question of November 21 to the Minister without Portfolio, who at that time said he would take it as notice.

I wonder whether the minister could now give me an answer to the question of what will be done to forestall expiration of the freeze on Atlantic freight rates in March 1969? Does the minister have an answer to that question?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister without Portfolio): No, Mr. Speaker, but I will relay that inquiry to the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the minister catches this elusive minister would he also—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a supplementary question he should ask it.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question for the Minister without Portfolio is this. At the same time would he try to get an answer to my question of October 31 regarding what is being done to forestall the planned lay-off of Canadian National security police in the Atlantic region?

Mr. Richardson: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

INQUIRY AS TO SAFETY STANDARDS FOR TIRES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I have a question on transport that I should like to direct to the attention of the associate minister or the Minister without Portfolio. Having in mind news reports concerning tires that were given safety tests in the United States and that failed such tests, and in view of the fact that some of these tires are imported into Canada, I should like to ask what is the situation in this country. Do we have a testing bureau for tire safety, and are tires that have been proven faulty called back?

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that this question should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Mather: Ten o'clock.

QUEBEC—COVERAGE GIVEN TO POLITICAL PARTIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State.

Recently I asked him if the report he had promised to table about the use and allocation of time granted by the C.B.C. to political and non political movements and others was ready and he replied that he did not know what I was talking about. Now that he does, I would like to ask him if he still intends to promise such a study of the C.B.C.'s policy in that particular field, before the representatives of the C.B.C. give evidence before the parliamentary committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts, as announced?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, on the contrary, I think the hon. member is pretending to know that I know, but apparently he does not know that I do not know, because I tried to find in Hansard —and, in that respect, I had some help—a sentence of mine that could have led him to believe that a report would be tabled in the house on that matter, and I have not found anything to that effect.

On the other hand, when the matter was raised I remember having told the hon. member that the facts that gave rise to his question were not clear, that it could not be answered until he had explained those facts, and I find that he did so during the debate on the adjournment motion but, at that time, unfortunately, I was away from the house and Canada. The C.B.C. prefers to give evidence before the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts, because it is a complex question and the C.B.C. would like to be able to explain and discuss it with hon. members who sit on the committee.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I do not know if the Secretary of State knows that you do not know that he does not know, but we get nowhere with questions like that.

I should like to ask my question again, since he does not give me any answer, and

I ask him if it would be possible to know the C.B.C. policy.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member admits he has already asked that question and I wonder if it is appropriate to put it a second time.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

I should like to point out as humbly as I can before the Secretary of State that this is an extremely important question, which is highly complex, and that before it is looked into by the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts, it would surely be advisable to have the C.B.C. state its policy, if it has a policy—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must interrupt the hon. member. This is a debate between the hon. member and the minister, and I do not believe it would be advisable to go any further.

DISMISSAL OF COMMISSIONAIRES FOR LANGUAGE REASONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): I wish to direct my question to the Prime Minister. It is prompted by an article which appeared in today's press to the effect that 12 English speaking veterans of the Canadian Corps of Commissionnaires are being displaced from security jobs because they are not bilingual. Is this the new policy of the present government?

[Later:]

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. Did the Secretary of State consult with his colleague the Minister of Veterans Affairs before he extended the thanks of a grateful country and fired the commissionnaires who were serving in the various government buildings coming under his jurisdiction?

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

ATTENDANCE OF OPPOSITION MEMBERS AS OBSERVERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question relating to the forthcoming federal-provincial conference. I ask it in the light of information I have received that the government of Ontario will be accompanied by members of opposition parties as observers at the conference. Would the Prime Minister inform the house whether this will also be arranged in the case of members of opposition parties in this parliament?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have stated that we planned to reserve places for members of opposition parties and for members of the government caucus during the public debate at the constitutional conference. I have requested this of the provinces as a procedure for the conference. There has been no objection to it so far, and I think this would be agreeable to everyone. Perhaps that is even more certainly the case if the information just conveyed to me is correct.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he will arrange to have the working papers drawn up by the federal government for the conference released now so that members of the opposition who will be attending the conference as observers and, indeed, the Canadian public generally may have an opportunity to give the fullest consideration to these papers prior to the conference.

Mr. Trudeau: I would be very anxious that this be done. Discussions to that effect are proceeding now between officials of the federal government and of the provinces who have been meeting for the past three days in preparation for the conference on December 16. There has been no word given to me yet of any decision that might have been reached by the officials at that meeting. I do feel, like the Leader of the Opposition, that it would be to the advantage of the public if all parties at this conference could agree to release their position papers before the conference, but if that is not done I think we will press very strongly to release them afterwards.

TELEVISION

REPORTED DIRECTIVE TO C.B.C. RESPECTING EDUCATIONAL BROADCASTING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Is he in a position to tell the house what directives he has issued to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to provide ETV facilities on an interim basis? I ask this question in the light of the minister's suggestion on October 24 that he would be taking this course, and also in the light of the recent acceptance by the C.R.T.C. of applications for ultra high frequency channels in Toronto and Montreal.

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): In reply to the first part of this question dealing with school telecasts and the specific case of Alberta, the matter is at the present time under consideration by the task force on educational television.

Formal instructions have not been given because the study of this particular case has not yet been completed. As to issuing licences for use of decimetric waves, the relevant instructions have already been given to the C.R.T.C. which is to give priority to educational television with regard to the use of decimetric waves.

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: May I take ten seconds to suggest to hon. members that again today we may be running short of time, and I see many members rising who may be anxious to ask questions which I am sure are very urgent and important. I would ask the indulgence of hon. members in connection with supplementary questions.

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Secretary of State.

Since his return from Latin America did he have the opportunity to examine the statement of the Quebec premier, Mr. Bertrand, on educational broadcasting and does the government intend to review its position and issue a licence to the Quebec government?

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I have examined the speech of the Quebec premier. On the other hand, the government does not intend to review its position concerning the issuance of licences for educational television.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Prosper Boulanger (Mercier): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Could he tell us whether it is true that, when he last met with Mr. Lucien Saulnier, the executive chairman of the city of Montreal, he showed the latter out of his office?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking the Prime Minister to confirm what, I imagine, is a press report and the rules of the house do not allow questions of this kind.

[English]

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State and/or the Minister of Labour. It has come to the attention of members of the house that members of the Company of Young Canadians do not participate in or receive any benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act. Will either minister re-examine this unjust situation in order that the meaning of the just society may prevail?

GRAIN

ASSISTANCE IN MOVEMENT OF DRYING EQUIPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I would like to direct to the Minister of Agriculture. In light of the serious situation now facing western grain farmers in connection with the pile-up of damp and wet grain, have any representations been made by the governments of the western provinces to the federal government for a cost sharing program to cover the cost of moving drying equipment into areas where it is urgently needed? If so, what action is being taken?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions between the federal Department of Agriculture and the departments of agriculture of all three provinces affected, not specifically on the point that the hon. gentleman raised but indeed including all ways that the two levels of government can be helpful in resolving this problem. There is much more that could be said about this matter, but inasmuch as the estimates of the Department of Agriculture will be under debate fairly soon perhaps we could discuss it then.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that on November 27 Your Honour indicated that the question of damp wheat is one of continuing emergency I wonder whether the right hon. Prime Minister might not prevail upon the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who answers for the wheat board, to be in the house and available to answer questions on this problem, which obviously is not going to be resolved in one day.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I explained a moment ago the minister is presently in Victoria discussing the question of pollution in general and of water in particular, and this is also very important. He is replacing the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who, unfortunately, is still in hospital. The Minister without Portfolio from Saskatchewan will be replacing the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, but on questions such as wheat I am sure the Minister of Agriculture would be glad to answer if questions were directed to him.

Mr. Korchinski: As a supplementary question may I ask the Prime Minister if he could not possibly have someone available on all occasions to answer questions since this is a very critical problem?

Mr. Benson: The Minister of Agriculture is here.

Mr. Korchinski: He is here today but he is gone tomorrow.

BROADCASTING

INQUIRY AS TO REQUEST FOR TAPES OF NEWS BROADCASTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Did any member of the task force on government information services, set up by the right hon. gentleman, request the Canadian Radio-Television Commission to ask Canadian radio stations to provide tapes of their news broadcasts to the commission?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Not that I know of, Mr. Speaker, but I will gladly inquire.

IMMIGRATION

RECRUITING OF TRAINED PERSONNEL FROM DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the recent report by Secretary General U Thant of the United Nations that Canadian immigration policy is jeopardizing the position of developing countries by draining away their trained and educated citizens, and in view of the statement by the Canadian ambassador to Venezuela, Bruce Rankin, to the United Nations that countries like Canada should agree not to actively seek educated and trained immigrants from under-developed countries, is the minister considering steps that will halt this criticism which is coming from many developing countries throughout the world?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have not examined these comments but it is not the policy of the department to recruit actively in areas where the governments concerned wish to retain their skilled people.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REPORTED INSTRUCTION IN RIOT TECHNIQUES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development or, in his absence, to the Minister without Portfolio associated with that department. Can the minister now answer the question put to him on November 7 relating to a report that Canadian Indians are being taught riot techniques and, if so, can he say who is instigating this?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is meeting with several provincial Indian leaders at this time. With regard to the question asked, there is no information available to us in that respect.

Mr. Mazankowski: As a supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: May I have the co-operation of the hon. member also. The hon. member for Edmonton Centre.

OIL

CONSIDERATION OF BRIEF OF INDEPENDENT PETROLEUM ASSOCIATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, this question should be directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources but owing to his unfortunate absence I will direct it to the Prime Minister. Is the government considering the adoption of the proposals of the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada contained in the association's brief which was presented to the cabinet recently?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will have to take notice of this question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Paproski: I would like to ask a supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must bring to the attention of hon. members that the question period has expired. In fact it expired a few moments ago. I have noted with vigilant eye those members who have tried to get the floor, and I shall make it my duty to recognize them at the earliest possible moment tomorrow.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I waited patiently during the question period because I did not want to interrupt the flow of thought that occurred during a portion of the period. I was hoping that before the conclusion of the question period the Minister of Transport or his stand-in, the Minister without Portfolio, would be able to give me the answer the minister said he would give me in respect of the National Harbours Board decentralization study. Perhaps this might simplify matters tomorrow, since the committee is to meet to deal with the report which the Minister of Transport indicated he might very well table in the house today.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I was in Winnipeg yesterday, but from reading Hansard in this regard I believe the Minister of Transport said he would read the report overnight.

Mr. Bell: Where the hell is he?

Mr. Richardson: I receive a lot of questions about the Department of Transport, but I do not know what the minister's bedtime reading is.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the President of the Privy Council if he would give us the business of the house for the remainder of this week and next week.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as hon. members know, we will be in committee of supply today dealing with the estimates of the Department of Agriculture. Tomorrow we will return to committee of supply to deal with the estimates of the Department of Transport. On Monday it is proposed that we deal with the estimates of the Department of Fisheries and upon their conclusion the resolution dealing with the fresh water fish marketing corporation. On Tuesday it is proposed that we deal with the motions to concur in the reports of the procedure committee. It is anticipated that this will take several sitting days next week. Therefore it is difficult to predict what will be the order of business for the balance of the week. The business that would follow, however, would be the resolution preceding the anti-dumping legislation after the completion of the consideration of the reports of the committee on procedure and as soon as the report is received from the finance committee.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Béchard in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

1. Departmental administration including the Canadian agricultural services co-ordinating committee, contributions to the Commonwealth agricultural bureaux, and a contribution to the agricultural economics research council in an amount equal to one half the contributions to the council from other sources during the fiscal year but not exceeding $50,000, $8,520,375.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House in committee of supply. Revised estimates of the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1969. Vote No. 1 will be found at page 8 of the blue book and the details thereof are listed at page 11.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Chairman, first I should like to express my appreciation to the chairman and members of the standing committee on agriculture for the manner in which they conducted the examination of the estimates of the Department of Agriculture before the standing committee. As hon. members of the committee are aware the examination of these estimates was concluded today. Again, I wish to commend the officers of the committee and the members of the committee for the manner in which they conducted this examination. I might also say at this time that at the beginning of the examination of these estimates before the standing committee I made a statement in general terms relating to the estimates. I am prepared now to perhaps make a supplementary statement relating directly to the estimates, but there is some indication from reading Hansard that there may be some subjects hon. members would like to discuss relating to agriculture that may not be included in my remarks. I, of course, would be happy to do what I can in respect of answering questions in those areas.

The agriculture committee over the past several weeks has given close scrutiny to the 1968-69 estimates of the Department of Agriculture. I do not believe that any useful purpose would be served by my reviewing or recounting the testimony given by myself and by officials of the department. I do think, however, it would be useful if I were to refer to the objectives of the Canada Department of Agriculture and to summarize quickly some of the recent developments in departmental programs.

The Department of Agriculture exists to serve the farmer and in so doing serves all Canadians. We cannot have a healthy Canada without a healthy agriculture. Farm products are very important earners of foreign exchange. About 40 per cent of the work force in Canada is employed in the growing, processing and distribution of agricultural products. A continuous supply of high quality food at reasonable prices is essential to the high standard of living that Canadians expect as a right. That continuous supply will only be there so long as we have people—farmers—willing to produce it. And they will be willing to continue to fill our shopping carts only if they can receive reasonable rewards for their work. Our ultimate objective is that a farmer should be able to make the same return on his capital and labour as if he invested them in the industrial side of our economy. Surely this is not an unreasonable goal.

The 1968-69 main estimates of the Department of Agriculture, exclusing the Canadian Dairy Commission, the Farm Credit Corporation and the Canadian Livestock Feed Board, total $255.8 million. This is an increase of approximately $1.7 million over the previous year if you allow for supplementary estimates, contingency allocations and organizational adjustments. If all these other items are included there is an over-all total of some $284 million.

Provision has been made for increased expenditure under the agricultural stabilization program. The spending for crop insurance premiums will continue to rise as more provincial plans come into operation and more farmers take advantage of this federal-provincial program. Reductions appear for emergency assistance programs instituted to help farmers who suffered income losses due to adverse wheather conditions. Cheese premiums have been dropped, total cost of hog quality premiums has been reduced, and less has been allocated for capital programs in the research branch and Board of Grain Commissioners.

With the funds voted to it by parliament, the Canada Department of Agriculture administers some 30 statutes. The department, among other things, conducts research, grades and inspects farm products, prevents and controls outbreaks of disease and pests in our crops and livestock, and carries out a great many other activities to help solve the farmer's production and marketing problems. The department employs 9,000 people at some 200 separate establishments from St. John's to Victoria with a total of 1.5 million acres of land and 2,500 laboratory, farm and office buildings.

In the interest of brevity, I will not go into detail on the many continuing programs of the department. I shall be happy to answer questions on these areas later. Rather I would like to say a few words on some of the newer ventures on the agricultural scene in which the department is giving leadership.

First may I mention the national farm management service. Farm management involves the use of economic and business principles in determining that combinaton of land, labour and capital inputs on the invididual farm that will yield maximum net income. In the development of the national farm management service the main emphasis is on using an ultra-modern, yet simple, record keeping and analysis system through the use of a computer. It is hoped this service will encourage a more sophisticated approach to farm business management, show profitability of enterprise within a farm business and identify, diagnose, and help to solve some management problems for individual farmers. The department expects to spend some $250,000 in the development of the national farm management service this fiscal year and, in collaboration with the provinces, bring the system into operation in 1969 or early 1970. I might say in addition that when I mentioned those dates I did not intend to indicate they were target dates for some of our pilot projects but that there will be a gradual build-up of this service as the system and expertise to administrate it are developed.

The task force on agriculture is making good progress toward the delivery of a preliminary report to serve as the basis of documentation for the Canadian congress on agriculture which the government is convening in Ottawa from March 24 to 27, 1969. The congress will provide all groups in agriculture an opportunity to discuss the work of the task force and to give their views on the problems facing the agricultural industry and on the development of national goals and long range programs and policies to deal with these problems.

Action has already been taken on the government's decision to work toward the establishment of a national grains council which would embrace all aspects of the grain industry. I am convinced that this proposed council can play a very important role in co-ordinating program planning, promoting research, establishing effective liaison between industry and government, and assisting in developing export possibilities.

These are only a few illustrations of the department's recognition of the forces that constantly change the face of Canadian agriculture and necessitate continual review of policies and programs in response to the current needs of a dynamic industry.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that the Minister of Agriculture on his return to the house and on this first opportunity he has had for some time to make a statement of any consequence with regard to agriculture would give us something concrete as to the plans of his department to attack the very serious problems facing the agricultural industry in Canada. I hope he will excuse me if I cannot discuss this subject this afternoon in the same bland manner he has followed in introducing his estimates. I feel it is necessary to speak rather bluntly about some aspects of agriculture.

No responsible Canadian can help but be concerned about the conditions and prospects of agriculture as we are about to enter a new year. In the east there is a steady and continuing decline apparently unchallenged and unrecognized, at least by any sign of useful action by the minister. It is worsened by such developments as the flood of cheap United States corn into Canada. This has been brought to the attention of the minister time and time again, yet he failed to act until it was too late. Indeed, he has dawdled, and the result is that now it is estimated that imports of corn are up 20 per cent this year in Quebec and the maritimes and amount to over 40 per cent of the market.

Throughout the agricultural sector of the economy there is a more pessimistic and uncertain climate than we have seen for some time. Farm receipts are down from last year and it is expected they will be slightly up next year, to about the 1967 level. Is this real progress under the circumstances? Farmers are worried about markets and about the future, and they are holding off borrowing and investing. One can see this in the reports from farm machinery companies. Sales of farm implements were down in 1967 and in the first six months of 1968 by 20 per cent and there is no sign of any upturn.

While income remains static, what is happening to expenses? It is fair to say that farmers have taken an especially brutal beating from inflation. The composite index for goods and services used by farmers rose by 6.4 per cent last year. According to information produced at the federal-provincial conference on agriculture last week, this year's increase will be about the same. This represents an increase in farmer's costs. Machinery prices were up by 3.1 per cent last year and a larger increase will be realized this year when the final figures are in. Prices of important building materials will be up by over 7 per cent when the final figures are in for this year. One could go right through this list. The squeeze gets tighter; yet the government continues to hang loose.

During the past crop year exports of our main grains, with the exception of barley, all declined. Wheat and flour exports fell to 336 million bushels compared with 515 million bushels the previous year, and 31 per cent below the average for the previous five years. Canada's percentage of the world wheat trade is estimated to have fallen from 29 per cent in 1966-67 to 23 per cent in 1967-68, while that of the United States rose from 37 per cent to 39 per cent.

What is the contribution of the Minister of Agriculture to all this? As far as I have heard he has simply criticized farmers for half-learning the lessons of economics and half-learning lessons of business reasoning. He said this to the farmers:

> Some farmers have convinced themselves that their economic situation is worse than it may be in fact and the government is under pressure resulting, in part at least, from the farmers' misunderstanding of economic principles.

When the minister spoke of the Ontario corn growers he said:

> I suspect that many farmers who protested to Ottawa that they were losing money on corn production did only half the calculation. They charged up their land at appreciated values when calculating their costs but did not record the appreciation as income.
> This is but one example of the fuzzy economic reasoning which often confronts and plagues farm policy makers. It is a luxury we can scarcely afford if we are to put the Canadian agricultural industry on a sound business footing, which must be the eventual aim of long term farm policy.

The corn market is inundated by cheap United States corn and the farmers have protested to Ottawa. Yet the minister, in effect, accuses them of cooking their books.

The president of Federal Grain Limited of Winnipeg estimates that 800 million bushels, or 72 per cent of the grain crop, are either tough or damp. He is quoted in Monday's Globe and Mail as saying the situation in western Canada is even more critical than we first thought. He has suggested there are 458 million bushels of tough or damp grain, 25 million of which are still standing in the field; 181 million bushels of barley, 176 million bushels of oats and 11 million bushels of oilseeds. I understand that the optimum capacity of all farm dryers is about 300 million bushels between now and spring, and that the total of commercial capacity and on the farm capacity is only half the total of damp grain predicted by the Federal Grain Limited survey to which I have just referred.

When the hon. members for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain and Lisgar sought an emergency debate the other day the minister was not able to be in the house and the government was, in the words of one western newspaper, "tongue-tied". I suggest that the persistence of the Prime Minister in treating the ministers as schoolboys, forcing them to stay out of the house on certain days, has caused real frustration not only among opposition members in this house but in the country generally.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: It has caused real frustration in particular to members who are trying to do their job for the people they represent. In no case is this more true than of the members who represent the prairie provinces of Canada. On Monday and Tuesday all ministers with any responsibility touching agriculture are under strict orders from the Prime Minister not to apear in the house—the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatchewan, the Minister of Transport and his assistant, the Minister without Portfolio from Manitoba.

The hon. member for Huron has asked whether the government will assist in the transportation of grain drying equipment now available in eastern Canada, to help alleviate the problem. What is the decision? Nobody knows. I hope the minister will give it to us today. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain has raised the possibility of acreage payments to assist in covering the cost of drying the crop. There has been no answer. I hope we will receive an answer today. The hon. member for Crowfoot has asked about placing additional equipment at the inland terminals. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce says he will take it under consideration.

The damp grain problem was brought to the attention of the government in early November. Action has been delayed; it has been reluctant. The minister need not shake his head. I have been sitting in the house and have watched the complacent reaction of ministers week after week as this crisis developed until it finally came to a head last week. As I say, Mr. Chairman, action has been delayed; it has been reluctant, it has been half-hearted. They have finally got the Lakehead facilities operating 24 hours a day, six days a week. But when the hon. member for Mackenzie inquired yesterday the Minister without Portfolio had to admit that they are not ready to operate seven days a week because negotiations are still under way with the unions. This could have been done and ought to have been done weeks ago.

The hon. member for Mackenzie asked last week whether arrangements could be made to have the commercial dryers come to the elevators dry the grain already purchased and transfer it to the annexes to relieve some of the congestion. Again, he was told the matter would be taken under consideration. The government has had to be prodded, pushed and hounded to accept even an awareness of the problem and then to take some reluctant action. This is made all the more difficult and frustrating by the irresponsible practice of ministers working a three-day week as far as the House of Commons is concerned.

Mr. Olson: We work seven days a week.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Stanfield: They are here to work, to account to the people of Canada only three days a week, and sometimes not even that. With regard to the markets for grain there have been some very disturbing developments. I have already pointed out the fact that our share of world markets has been going down. Second, and potentially of very grave importance, is the fact that countries which might be counted as new markets for Canadian production have revolutionized their own production. That is the striking case in Asia. This year there has been a record production of wheat and rice throughout Asia.

Let us consider India as an example. The total food grain crop in India is officially estimated at 100 million tons this year. This is 32 per cent above the level of last year and is a very fortunate development for that great country. But the startling statistic in India is that this year total food grain crop production is fully 12 per cent above the previous record. This may be in part due to the weather, but Canada and Canadians will be hiding in a fool's paradise if they fail to recognize the tremendous impact of technology upon the capacity of Asia to produce cereals. Farm practices there have improved. This is a great thing. There have been great improvements in the effectiveness and availability of fertilizer, and new high-yielding cereals like the new varieties of wheat from Mexico have changed the future of agriculture in Asia. Therefore they have a profound effect on our future. We are in danger of losing some of our traditional markets and face the prospect of new markets becoming more difficult.

The government has revealed no plan to meet this serious, long term market problem. It is not even showing any awareness that it exists. The minister this morning, and again this afternoon, stated that there would be a Canadian conference on agriculture in March. When I had a previous responsibility a former minister of agriculture told me two or three years ago there would be a Canadian conference on agriculture. Some two years later the minister says it will be held in March.

Mr. Olson: You now have the date.

Mr. Stanfield: Yes, we have the date after two years of talking about it.

Mr. Olson: I have not been minister that long.

Mr. Stanfield: We have a few details, but it appears that the conference will be little more than an expansion of the ministerial conference on agriculture which has been held every year. Of course, it will be larger. I think there are one or two every serious weaknesses about this conference. In the first place, agricultural producers themselves may be forced to take a back seat at the conference. About one-third of the 400 or so people who will attend will represent producer groups, but the minister has said there will not be a single representative of the producer groups on the steering committee.

Mr. Olson: There is one.

Mr. Stanfield: I am glad to be corrected.

Mr. Horner: There is not a representative of the producer groups.

Mr. Stanfield: The minister can correct me after I have finished if what I say is wrong. I hope I am wrong in this regard. The minister says he has invited the National Farmers' Union and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture to designate one delegate between them. But he knew full well when he made that request that it would be difficult and unlikely that these two producer groups would agree on a nominee. They have nominated one each, and as I understand it the minister decided to accept neither. Again, I hope I am wrong.

Mr. Olson: You are right now. You cannot accept two nominees for one position.

Mr. Horner: Why don't you make another position?

Mr. Stanfield: If this is the minister's approach to the problems of agriculture, that he cannot accept two delegates from producer groups because he has established only one position, God help the farmers of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: I am afraid that unfortunately this is typical of the government's habit of ignoring the producer groups on agricultural matters. There are other weaknesses in a conference of this kind. Certainly it is just not enough. We have serious problems in Canada, of course, and we also have great and grave problems outside Canada concerning markets. I believe the situation is serious enough to warrant Canada taking the lead in initiating a world wide investigation of crop and market prospects in the next decade, an investigation, perhaps a conference, which will involve all the countries of the world including, of course, mainland China, with the purpose of letting Canada and other producer countries know what is ahead for them in terms of markets. This investigation or conference should tell us what crops will be in greatest demand, what we can best produce and what new marketing arrangements might need to be considered.

These are only a few of the questions which must be answered if we are to plan our own production effectively. We need to know what will be developing in other countries, what they will require and what they will produce. There is a new ball game in world agriculture. We cannot continue to act as though nothing had changed. The present failure to keep markets is bad enough, but the prospect of having potential new markets cut off is very serious indeed.

What disturbs me particularly is the extraordinary casualness and complacency of the government toward agricultural problems. I recognize that these problems are not easy, that in fact they are extremely difficult. The farmers are confronted with the need for a very rapid adjustment to changing conditions. Of course you can only operate effectively in terms of effective long term government policy and not piecemeal policies, certainly not conflicting policies, of governments. Farmers are compelled to make growing investments in their farms to be effective and competitive. They must make increasingly long term heavy commitments. Of course, we had some government policies which enabled the farmers to make these commitments and indeed encouraged them to do so.

If the minister talks about his task force and his conference in March and if, for example, he asks me to be patient and to wait for the outcome of the work of the task force or the outcome of the conference, I want to ask him why he could not persuade his colleague, the Minister of Finance, to wait before he adopted policies which will be very detrimental to agriculture in this country. The changes in estate and gift taxes which the Minister of Finance announced are bound to have a very serious and detrimental effect on the family farm in Canada, and I would like to see the Minister of Agriculture dispute this. The Minister of Finance lowered very substantially the exemptions on estate and gift taxes thereby catching farmers with moderate sized farms and vastly increasing their difficulties, not in making transfers to their wives but in effecting any continuous operation of the farm by the family.

What is the main problem of the family farm? Surely it is to acquire enough capital to be competitive with the big operator, to carry the heavy debt and to pay it off. Obviously this is a growing load on the family farmer in view of the increasing capital that the farmer needs to be competitive today. Obviously the difficulty in securing capital and accepting heavy debt restricts the development of the family farm. The farmer spends all or most of his life trying to get out of debt. In view of the vast increase in the amount of capital that a farmer needs today, it is becoming increasingly difficult for a young man to get started on a farm that is really competitive. Some young men of exceptional ability can do so, of course, but fewer and fewer are in fact able to do it because of the increasing amount of capital that is needed, the increasing load they must assume to do so, and the increasing difficulty they encounter in obtaining the amount of capital necessary to do so.

I say that the government must decide whether it wants the family farm in Canada to be an institution or whether it is content to let things go to the large corporate organizations. I suggest that one serious effect of the proposals of the Minister of Finance will be to destroy the family farm through the years as a continuing institution which is able to hold its own in competitive agriculture in Canada. They will make it more difficult for the family farm to continue and to have under its control adequate capital through the years. Fewer and fewer farms will survive if the Minister of Finance goes ahead with his present proposals.

I ask the Minister of Agriculture through you, Mr. Chairman, whether he accepts this prospect and whether he accepts the proposal of the Minister of Finance to make these tax changes which bear so heavily on the family farmer in Canada. We know that this government has two policies in foreign affairs, one sponsored by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of National Defence and another sponsored by the Postmaster General, with the Prime Minister trying to sit in between and enjoy the best of both worlds. This may make the Minister of National Defence and the Secretary of State for External Affairs look a little uneasy, but at least the Secretary of State for External Affairs has invited the public to write in and tell him what the foreign policy of Canada ought to be. I do not think the Minister of Agriculture would dare do that, but at least he is calling a conference.

When I speak about the burden that the Minister of Finance is placing upon the family farm I am not speaking about the very wealthy people of Canada or the very wealthy farmers. The Prime Minister has expressed concern about the problems of the very wealthy, and while he has done that the Minister of Finance has socked it to them. In other words, here again the government seems to have two policies. We have a two-China policy and it seems that the government is developing two policies in virtually every area. I think the Minister of Agriculture is in favour of family farms while the Minister of Finance is doing his best to destroy them. The Minister of Agriculture increases the assistance given to the small farmers, but a few weeks later the Minister of Finance announces measures levying an increased toll on family farms. There is no use mincing words. This is clearly an instance of the government working at cross-purposes. It is impossible to justify, and all that can be said for it is that it will have disastrous effects on agriculture in Canada.

I repeat that I am not speaking of the relatively few large, wealthy farmers in Canada who operate either directly or through corporations. I am speaking about the family farmers about whom the Minister of Agriculture has expressed great concern over the years. I ask him to give some real leadership, not only in this house but also in the government, by standing up for the farmers and telling the Minister of Finance quite frankly what the effect of his measures is. If the Minister of Agriculture is not able to present to this house or to the country constructive measures to help the family farmers in Canada, at least the government can hold its hand and resist the temptation to strike the family farmer over the head the way the Minister of Finance has.

So I say, let us not hear from the Minister of Agriculture nice platitudes and general statements of goals but a willingness and preparedness to fight within the government for agriculture in Canada and to fight the Minister of Finance on the vicious policy that he has adopted. It is all very well to have think tanks, computers, task forces and conferences, but let us have a little common sense and a little consistency.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, I appreciated the remarks of the minister as we commenced our discussion of the estimates. I appreciated his statement that quality food at reasonable prices is a right of all Canadians. It is certainly a right of Canadians to have food and it is probably their right in a society such as ours to have that food at reasonable prices, whatever that may be. Along with that right of the Canadian consumer must go the right of the farmer to have a reasonable return for an hour's work, the right to have a reasonable return on the capital he must invest in his enterprise if it is to be an efficient agricultural enterprise, the right to have a return equal to that of his urban cousin who eats well because the farmer produces well. This is really the crux of the situation with regard to agriculture today, whether or not the farmer is going to receive an adequate return on his labour and capital, and whether his rights are going to be given equal consideration with the rights of the Canadian consumer.

There is no question but that the consumer has been well served. About a month ago I referred in this house to information from the Department of Agriculture which indicated that the consumer could buy more butter, more eggs, more milk, more meat, more of all these products for an hour's work based on wages in the manufacturing industry than he could some years ago. I wonder whether the farmer can buy more of urban production for an hour's work than he could that many years ago?

Today we find that farmers are still working a 12 or 14 hour day, although working days of this length are a thing of the past in industry. I have observed this year after year on prairie farms. After I was here a short time I drove out to see a friend of mine in the Ottawa valley. I arrived there about sundown on a Saturday, and it seemed to me that I might have been back on the prairies. This was a modern farm, but I had to go out into the fields to look for the farmer. There was a field of corn over half a mile long which looked like a wheat field on the prairies. The corn stood taller than I am, but of course I am not a very tall man. The lights were on in the milking barn which was modern and up to date. Where was the farmer? He was out in the field at sundown harvesting the corn and his wife was driving the truck. This is the kind of working day the farmers still have, even though some of them have well organized, well financed farms such as there are in Ontario or in some areas of Saskatchewan. These are the only two areas about which I have any personal knowledge. I have been in the province of the Leader of the Opposition, but I would not presume to make a judgment on agriculture in that area. These are the things about which we have to be concerned in connection with agriculture if the farmers are to continue to provide food for Canadians at reasonable prices, or indeed in some respects to provide food at all.

Someone mentioned the corn growers and stated that if pressure is kept on them they may not continue in that business. In some sectors of agriculture we may very well reach the ridiculous position of importing food which we could very well produce ourselves because of our resources in land and people. A report appeared in the Globe and Mail to the effect that W. A. Stewart stated farm income results may be hard to swallow. This is the minister of agriculture of the province of Ontario speaking. The article goes on to quote the minister as saying that he hopes the report of the committee which they set up will bring new vitality to the industry and a new appreciation of the place of agriculture in the total economy of Ontario. This minister believes there must be a thorough review and that we must rectify the serious problems that now exist in agriculture.

One can look at the report of the recent outlook conference held here in Ottawa and find that a decline is forecast in the income of farmers. The farmer's income is down already but there is going to be more of the same. The forecast if for a 6.4 per cent increase in the price index of the goods and services used by farmers. A similar increase occurred in this index last year, but the farmers are supposed to be content with static prices for their produce.

According to the Globe and Mail of November 19 the federal Minister of Agriculture criticized the farmers on several counts. It is the privilege of the minister to say what he thinks, I suppose. I hope this newspaper did not misquote him because if he was misquoted it would certainly be unfortunate. The Globe and Mail is read by many city people and they would believe these comments made by the minister. The minister accused the farmers of basing their case on half-learned lessons in economics and of ignoring social and economic realities. He said also that the farmers had bought tractors that were too large and paid high prices for land.

Let me say to this house that over a long period of years the farmer has merely been reacting to the economic circumstances in which he has found himself. The farmer does not make the economic laws or the economic circumstances in which he has to operate. He reacts to the industrial society in which we live and to the economic laws of that society. Over the years I have listened to economists, some of them employed by government and some of them in universities. They have said that the answer to the problem of the farmers is one of scale, that what we need in this industry, as in all other industries, is to get bigger and then we would be over the hump. Is this not what the farmer is doing when he acquires land and buys the equipment with which to operate a farm? If there is going to be a change in the economic laws under which the farmer operates, well and good. Let us define those laws and let us know where we are going.

I believe we will have to reorient ourselves to some extent in agriculture. Reorientation may be the key to our success in that on the North American continent and in the other advanced countries in the world farmers have proven they have the ability to produce farm products. But given this ability to produce food, Mr. Chairman, the fact is that we find market prices depressed.

I should like to say something about the present situation in western Canada, which is now widely reported in the eastern press. It usually requires a fair-sized boom or a fair-sized disaster on the prairies to attract the attention of the press in eastern Canada. But the disaster in the west has now reached such proportions that it is receiving a great deal of attention. Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, we have been slow to react to it. It is only in the last week or so that we have seen the Canadian Wheat Board and others meeting together to discuss what can be done in terms of handling, drying and transporting grain.

I should like to refer to a few of the headlines that have appeared in the Western Producer, a western farm paper. According to the edition for October 10, only 56 per cent of the crop had been combined. According to one of the main news stories in the October 17 edition, proper drying temperatures are important. In that issue there is an article dealing with drying grain and how it should be done. According to the October 24 issue, little dry grain is to be seen. As far back as October 24, well over one month ago, the forecast was made that in Saskatchewan and Alberta there would be very little dry grain as a result of weather conditions.

It also appears from the November 7 edition that the farmers are joining together to take the crop off the farms and that 90 per cent of the crop has been combined. This article goes on to say that most of the grain is tough or damp, and indicates that the farmers are not happy about the high moisture level. An article that appeared in the November 14 issue is headed: "All Is Not Well With The Grain Crop". Then it goes on to indicate that grain drying is in full swing. Another heading in the November 21 issue reads: "Poor Condition Of Grain Is Causing Terminal Slowdown".

I have made reference to these reports, Mr. Chairman, in order to indicate that the present situation has not been a sudden development, that it has been building up in the prairie provinces for over a month and a half. Hon. members have continually asked the government what action it proposes to take, whether it is prepared to meet the situation and to take steps to meet the calamity that is being faced in western Canada. Sometimes spokesmen for the government have said that yes, information is going out on grain drying, yes, we are waiting to see what the developments are.

We on this side of the house, have twice asked for a debate on this matter. One request came from our party and the other from the party of my hon. friends to my right. Such a debate would put the situation before the government and the government would be able to tell hon. members what it proposes to do to meet the problem. But no, Mr. Chairman, this situation has been allowed to drift until now we begin to get reports about an impending disaster.

According to these reports, the minimum amount of grain that is out of condition is 200 million bushels. According to one of the private grain companies, the maximum amount could run to around 400 million bushels of wheat, barley, coarse grains and so on. Such a loss would be very expensive. Unless we do something about it losses will be substantial. We are facing an emergency, a disaster that could be compared with some of the worst disasters that Canada has suffered in times of floods or similar calamities. We must stop and consider the enormity of the situation. Nobody's house has been flooded or burnt down; nobody's farm has been washed away. But on farm after farm in western Canada lies grain which, unless conditioned and dried, will be lost.

I plead with the government, to make available substantial amounts of aid and to take action to meet this situation. I think it would be perfectly reasonable to suggest that the government share 50 per cent of the cost of drying grain locally. This could run to a fair amount of money, but far greater losses will occur if the grain is not dried.

If farmers are unable to deliver their grain they will not receive any cash. Therefore, how can they pay the people who are going to dry their grain? They are strapped for money. I suggest that a program be worked out which will effectively help our farmers. Such a program is long past due. What is required is a controller to co-ordinate the operations of the different agencies, the activities of the Canadian Wheat Board and the Board of Grain Commissioners and the transportation system in order to get the most from these various agencies.

The task before us now is to co-ordinate the work of farm dryers at the local level so as to use all the facilities possible. Even so, it will be difficult enough because we are approaching the time of year when local farm drying is at a disadvantage owing to weather, temperature, humidity and so on. We must fight the difficulties. It will cost us more money, but we must accept the fact. We should be providing advice as to the operation of these dryers. Insufficient information has been provided. I know this is so because I was obliged to telephone Winnipeg for information which should have been available at the local grain elevator.

According to a report in a newspaper the other day 30 per cent of the grain which has already been dried has been spoiled. This is a shocking figure, a shocking loss. We should help by providing off-site drying facilities. An all-out effort must be made or else the losses will be substantial. The situation calls for the fullest use of extension staffs of the universities and of the Department of Agriculture, as well as the Board of Grain Commissioners. I know that in Saskatchewan and parts of Manitoba steps have been taken in this direction. University people and experts from the departments of agriculture are beginning to work together to pass on information to the farmers.

Mr. Atkinson, the president of the farmers' union, says flatly that the government will have to provide substantial assistance to farmers if a disaster is to be avoided. In his view such assistance is justified; farmers are justified in seeking financial assistance for the drying of grain on their farms. He told the union's annual meeting that the Canadian Wheat Board had indicated that such assistance would be justified by admitting that terminal drying facilities and sales commitments were not adequate to handle an estimated 350 million bushels which needed drying this year. He went on to say that wheat exports are a major source of national revenue and that financial assistance is therefore warranted. It was, he said, a national problem and a national emergency.

I want to say something now about the marketing outlook for wheat and other grains. According to a statement by the responsible minister, possibly 1,300 million bushels will be marketed over the next three years. At the present time we have about 1,200 million in sight with this year's crop. I think it is encouraging that some of the press in eastern Canada is taking note of the fact that grain is piling up and that we may well need new devices for moving it. The Financial Post says:

> Signs of a shift come from Jean Luc Pepin, Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. When addressing the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool recently, he said current practice was being examined "in accordance with the Prime Minister's promise to review credit facilities available to improve the competitive position of Canadian wheat."

What this portends remains, of course, to be seen. Can we move more grain if more credit is provided? I think we can. We have lagged behind in doing some of the things we ought to have done. We should, by now, have recognized the Republic of China and expanded our sales in that market. It is there and in similar countries that our expansion must take place. We should extend credit, we should aid the developing countries and we should make an all-out effort to sell other grains such as rapeseed. We should set a full-scale selling and promotion program going in countries overseas.

I regret that the United States achieved a tariff advantage over Canada with regard to soybeans over Canadian rapeseed during the Kennedy negotiations. We should move to correct this state of affairs because rapeseed and feed grain such as barley would, if moved in volume, take some of the pressure away from the wheat marketing situation.

It has been suggested that the farmers should move into livestock. This takes money. It takes credit, and credit has become expensive. A farmer needs a great deal of courage to borrow large amounts at the present time to diversify his operation.

The minister mentioned the establishment of a national grains council some time in the future. I do not know how far in the future this will be. It is now six months since the Prime Minister said in Winnipeg we were to have a grains council. It is already December. For my part I shall be frank and say I do not see why we need one. It will probably be the fifth wheel on the wagon. We already have the Canadian Wheat Board and the Board of Grain Commissioners. We have the research agencies of the National Research Council and the Department of Agriculture. Could the work of these various bodies not be co-ordinated so that we might achieve what we want to achieve in the way of selling grain and doing the necessary research? Is the Department of Agriculture, and the Department of Trade and Commerce for that matter, so lacking in competence that they need to call together people from their offices in Winnipeg to tell them what to do?

We have able men in the Canadian Wheat Board. One of them even felt it necessary to draw attention, at one of the farm meetings, to the job the Canadian Wheat Board was doing. Surely he must have felt himself under some kind of pressure when he did that. Here are some of the things he had to say with regard to wheat marketing, and I quote from the speech he made to grain growers at Regina:

> I refer to demands that broad selling policies should be more aggressive. Aggressiveness carries a great many connotations, many of which are desirable and necessary. For example, we must constantly seek out and develop markets; we must give a customer the service he demands; we must maintain the standard of quality he requires, and we must try to meet competition from other suppliers.

Later he says:

> I can say this: there is not a buyer of Canadian wheat in any market of the world who has not been personally contacted and who is not personally known by members or senior officials of the board. This is a very big plus in our marketing operations. I don't think any other exporter could make that claim.

Mr. Treleaven went on to say:

> Let us look briefly now at the second demand for flexibility. In the sense used by the critics it is easy to define. It means, simply, lower prices.

I have been reading from a statement made by one of the Canadian Wheat Board commissioners to a meeting in western Canada. These men have done a good job in marketing wheat. Just what is the national grains council going to do? I put a question on the order paper asking for the terms of reference. I was told they had not yet been decided. The reply came from the Department of Trade and Commerce which is not represented here today. I asked how the board would be financed. The answer was: nobody knows, yet. If the wheat board needs more staff and more money, why not say so? If we think more needs to be done in the field of research, why do we hesitate to beef up the amount we are putting into the laboratory services of the Board of Grain Commissioners? After all, this is their job. They already have the power under the act. They have the know-how and their staff includes some excellent men. But, as I have said on earlier occasions, the amount of money they have been allowed to spend has remained static while the industry which they serve is growing. We should have increased the amount of money in their hands if what they had was not adequate to meet the need.

The Deputy Chairman: I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Deputy Chairman: Has the hon. member leave to continue?

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Gleave: I shall take only a few minutes and I thank the committee and yourself—

The Deputy Chairman: I regret that I heard some noes.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Chairman, I do hope it is not because of me that my honourable friend was kept from continuing his remarks, but in any event, I thank you sincerely for giving me the opportunity to express a few opinions on the important matter now under study.

I shall deal with the matter rather briefly, because the estimates of the department were studied in committee fairly seriously, I would even say very seriously. I merely wish to point out to the honourable Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) that we attach great importance to the development of Canadian agriculture so that our country can, as much as possible, feed our own people as well as those of countries less fortunate than ours.

We agree that the years we are now going through are very difficult, and that the government has very complicated problems to solve. That is why we do not want to be harsh with the government; we merely want to work with it in an attempt to find together the most advantageous solutions, not only for the farmer, but also for all the people concerned who live on the progress of agriculture, when there is progress.

Some industries can provide employment to the extent where agriculture can order from them the goods that are necessary to agricultural production.

Mr. Chairman, the agricultural economy has grown difficult, I would even say cruel, at times. In addition, there are the serious effects which stem from a regrettable confusion between political and economic functions and I should like to make a distinction.

We invite the people to reflect on the various fields of responsibilities. Farmers themselves have their very own responsibilities, which they must accept by doing their utmost to lower the cost of their production in order to market top quality products at a price commensurate with the purchasing power of the majority of the people and also to compete, if needs be, with the goods from abroad.

Until a few years ago, family farms met the needs of the times fairly well, but because of the rapid industrialization of our country, agriculture must go through a complete transformation which, even though we accept it, must nevertheless meet the requirements of the commonweal and social justice. Because of its unreliable nature, agriculture demands from all those who are engaged therein the most absorbing activity, whether it is the farmers themselves who are concerned, or the governments, at all levels. As things are progressing in our country, a greater number of means are available to us to carry out more efficient operations on the farm; in a way, we are becoming the victims of this progress.

I listened, since I came into this chamber, to speeches of members representing various areas of the country and everywhere, when we speak of agriculture, we realize that we are caught in a squeeze where we can hardly breathe.

We often hear about the problems of the western grain producers, and I am happy about that, because that gives me an opportunity to become acquainted with the problems facing us across the nation.

Progress is also a factor which forces us to increase production costs. In fact, quite recently—I would not like to criticize the legislation passed by the house—we saw an increase in the interest rate on credit made available to farmers, which is another thing that might increase production costs.

Because of the competition from products coming from countries which produce at a lower cost, it becomes more and more difficult for the farmers to hold on without the help of the governments. That is why I think it is urgent for the state to assume fully its responsibilities and to reform our system so that it will take into account the needs of the farmers who will just have to give up their farms to allow for the changeover from family farming to commercial farming.

Let us take, for instance, the large number of dairy producers who had to give up their production last year and this year. An even larger number might have to do the same thing next year. What will happen to them? Do we really have the right to forget about them without giving any thought to their fate and that of their dependants?

I know that the main task of the Canadian Dairy Commission is not to find jobs for all the farmers who have to give up their farms for one reason or another, but it is a fact just the same that, because of the too severe regulations of that commission, which are necessary, I agree, to try to keep the dairy industry alive in Canada, the producers are faced with very serious problems. That is why I think it is urgent to reform our economic system as soon as possible in order to develop to a greater extent industries in rural centres, to absorb that manpower that will help to create goods of all kinds to meet the needs of the people in Canada and also those of people in underdeveloped countries.

Increasing the estimates of the Department of Agriculture would surely be a very good investment, because that would strengthen that sector of the economy and automatically create more jobs, because when agriculture is doing well, when agriculture can survive in a normal way, the farmers are better able to absorb the manpower available on the spot.

I have on hand some statistics, which seem to be accurate enough, to the effect that in the city of Montreal there are 105,800 families, that is 55.6 per cent of the total number, that are destitute. Now, if those figures are accurate, they represent 1,062,000 persons.

In my opinion, it is in the interest of the whole nation to take all the necessary and conceivable means in order to try to solve the agricultural problem, whether in western or eastern Canada, so as to prevent the Canadian people, those who have to give up farming for want of income, from going to our cities and increasing the number of the poor who thus become a burden of the state.

When all the efforts have actually been concentrated, in the Canadian Dairy Commission, the Farm Loan Board or the Board of Grain Commissioners and in all other government services, when we have succeeded in taking our bearings, we will have to make sure that the settlement of a problem in a certain area will not create others in other areas. This is why I think that we will have to work increasingly together, in order to avoid, when some action is taken, creating a problem elsewhere. This is what is going on at the present time unfortunately and I do not want to blame the minister nor the government agencies.

The Canadian Dairy Commission, for example, must assume its responsibilities. I understand the problem quite well and I congratulate the commissioners for discharging their responsibilities so well. However, I would like to call the attention of the minister to a matter which does not come under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Dairy Commission, that is the estimates available to them. Among other responsibilities, the commission must forecast the requirements of the Canadian market and make the distribution while considering the estimates made available by the minister. Mr. Chairman, I am convinced of one thing: if we really want to make an effective contribution to solve the problems of our agriculture, it will be necessary, when preparing the estimates of the Department of Agriculture for 1969-70, to consider seriously giving it a bigger share of the public monies of Canada, so that farmers will get better prices and the agricultural industry will remain efficient and will help solve other problems in other sectors, by providing employment opportunities and thus fighting unemployment.

I know that the government is now making efforts to help those who are forced to leave the agricultural field by making available to them retraining courses which will facilitate their readjustment to other areas of the economy. However, this is not enough. We should do a lot more in that direction.

I have on hand many letters from farmers telling me about their problems. I do not want to mention specific cases and names, but should the minister wish to read those letters, I would willingly make them available to him, at his convenience. For instance, one farmer wrote me that he had made an application to attend a retraining course, in order to further his knowledge in agriculture, but that it had been rejected. As he does not want to live on social welfare, he writes: "I do not want to live on public assistance. I do not want unemployment insurance. What I want is to earn a living by my own work. I want to be useful to my family and to society." And he adds: "If I am not alowed to take courses by which I could try and earn some money this winter, I shall have to sell some of my milch-cows and, in the spring, my situation will be worse than in the fall."

Mr. Chairman, I am mentioning this case to prove how painful is the plight of some farmers, who are doing their best to be efficient and play their part in our Canadian society.

This leads me to say that we need reforms, because our present economic system is in a bad shape. It must be reformed by orderly men, by people willing to work seriously with a view to establishing order and social justice, so as to make it possible, for those who have enough courage, to work and earn their living, thereby contributing to the development of their own country. Otherwise, the present economic system will, in my opinion, be transformed and destroyed by agitators like those we hear about every day. In fact, we are witnessing protests, rebellion against authority. There is a feeling of unrest and we should not take advantage of that to stir up passions. On the contrary, this should arouse due reflexion on our part, so as to make us assume seriously our responsibilities in order to bring about necessary reforms before it is too late.

Mr. Chairman, in concluding my observations, I express the hope that my remarks will help to solve those serious problems.

[English]

Mr. Pringle: I shall be very brief, Mr. Chairman, in my short dissertation. As a new member I should like to say that I have listened with a great deal of interest to the more experienced farmer members. While I have been here I have learned a great deal about the problems of farming and of the farmers. This is most interesting to me because I have spent my entire life engaged in farming or the industries related to farming. I am concerned about all the statements that have been made concerning the family farm. It has been suggested that the family farm is disappearing, that it is going down the drain. It has also been suggested that by some magic formula the reason for this is government action or inaction. I have been working with family farms for a good many years and I submit that the family farms are not going down the drain.

There are many family farms across Canada. In my constituency in British Columbia I would say that 90 per cent of the farms are family farms. What has disappeared is the old concept of the chicken on the manure pile type of farm where there were a few chickens, a pig or two, a cow in the barn and a horse to pull the plow. This is disappearing and will continue to disappear because the farmers of Canada are not the discredited people that some of the farmer members here suggest they are when they tell us of the terrible plight they are in. Their plight is not all that bad. If the farmers whom I know were sitting in the gallery today, I do not think they would approve of everybody standing up and saying that we must give them this and that because they just have to have it. We are pressuring the farmers. We are telling them how to farm and how to run their businesses.

The point I should like to make, is this: I wish people would forget about this business of the government should do this and the government should do that. No matter what the government has done, is doing or will do at some other time, I should like someone to state what the reasons for the problems of the farmers are and enumerate them, because there are reasons. I cannot remember doing business in Canada when there was not a surplus of every kind of farm product. We have been promoting and encouraging farmers to produce in surplus. This is a way of life. They have been producing to the benefit of the secondary industries. Do not blame the secondary industries for that. From childhood on we are told to buy as low as we can according to the market and to sell for as much as we can according to the market. This is the way business is done. If we overproduce we are in trouble. I thank the divine person who put the bug in somebody's ear that there should be a marketing board for grain because I would hate to think what would have happened over the years if the surplus of grain produced in western Canada had been dumped on the market like it was a few years ago and the price established according to the amount of grain offered on the world markets of that day. Some order has now come out of chaos, and grain farmers by and large can look back over the last few years without being too unhappy about the situation.

I notice that members have a great deal to say in this house about grain farming and wheat. I lived in Alberta for a good many years. I was not engaged in grain farming specifically but in an allied industry. As a matter of fact, I sold them the products to which they fed the grain. The industry in which I was engaged assisted in using up a lot of grain. All across the dominion of Canada there are industries allied with farming, and many of these are not exactly dependent on the grain business. The poultry industry, the hog industry and the turkey industry are quite large. The beef industry is, of course, dependent on and supplementary to the grain industry on the prairies. Various other industries from Vancouver to Halifax are associated with the grain industry.

It seems to me there is a quiet revolution taking place in the agricultural industry. I am wondering whether we really understand want to do about it. People want to produce their products at the lowest possible cost. They are gathering together at seminars in university rooms, in lodges and in church basements for one purpose, to figure out how they can keep the cost of production down. It was not too many years ago when it took 16 weeks and four pounds of feed to produce each pound of flesh on a broiler chicken. Today we can do this in eight weeks with two pounds of feed or less. What has happened to this saving in the cost of production? It has gone to the consumer and the consumer is paying less and less for products. Neither I nor any member of this house can blame the government because we are living in a private enterprise economy. Thank God that is the situation in this country.

There is a quiet revolution taking place. There are places right across Canada where people are doing something about the situation. They are gathering together and forming economic units, although not in the manner described so often and so eloquently by the hon. member for Crowfoot. These people are getting together and deciding how to take advantage of provincial legislation by forming into what they refer to as marketing boards which in fact are procurement commissions. They plan production in relation to the market and they produce what housewives want to buy. They sell this produce to secondary industries at their prices and then forget about it. They leave the marketing to the secondary industry.

We have heard all kinds of rumours about marketing boards, but I think we should be very careful we do not adopt the concept that we as producers should suddenly blossom out as people who understand marketing and distribution. We should remain with product planning and be satisfied to be paid in relation to production costs and forget about subsidies. We do not want handouts all the time, and I could get plenty of testimonials as far as this is concerned.

Mr. Bigg: That's a good trick if you can do it.

Mr. Pringle: Let me try to answer the hon. member by referring him to the British Columbia broiler marketing board. This body came into existence about eight or nine years ago. Before that a farmer might have received 20 cents a pound, and in those days if you sold by live weight you barely received a subsistence price. A farmer might have found himself with many chickens and receiving only 15 cents, 16 cents or 17 cents a pound. The marketing board established planned production and today these farmers are receiving prices based on the cost of production and they use secondary industry. They do not need farm improvement loans because they are able to go to the banks to borrow money. There are chicken men in British Columbia, chicken men in Alberta and, in fact, chicken men in Ontario.

Mr. Bigg: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Pringle: Yes.

Mr. Bigg: Would the hon. member tell me who owns the broiler industry in Ontario? Is it owned by the farmers?

Mr. Pringle: I assume the hon. member is referring to the integrated broiler industry in Ontario. I am not able to give the hon. member the facts and figures, but I know there are several of these businesses here. I am not suggesting this is correct or that it is wrong, but I am suggesting that had the farmers of Ontario looked at what was being done seven or eight years ago in British Columbia, and listened to several suggestions to the effect that they get off their behinds and into the marketing end they would not have experienced this takeover by integrated industry. This did not take place in British Columbia, and these people have just begun in Alberta. I think there is a time problem in this regard.

There is another point I should like to make in respect of family farms and I am glad the hon. member referred to the integrated or corporate farm. I have seen corporate farms and family farms operate and I submit that in the long run there is no way a corporate farm can compete with the efforts and the profitability of family farms. The family farmer works on labour profit just as do many businessmen such as small storekeepers, laundrymen and service people. A corporate farmer must make a profit because all his labour represents an expense. Labourers on corporate farms will not work the hours worked by a family farmer. I do not wish to take up any more time.

Mr. Horner: Good.

Mr. Pringle: Now that we have heard the crow from the hon. member for "member-foot"—I mean the hon. member for Crow-foot—I will conclude my remarks with the hope that members of this house will give a little more consideration to family farmers. I hope they will realize that the farmer is a businessman and does not require handouts every day of the week.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, I welcome this opportunity to make a few remarks during this debate on item 1 of the estimates of the Department of Agriculture. I should like to say at this time, after listening to the very interesting remarks of the hon. member for Fraser Valley East who has just resumed his seat, that I am afraid, if I interpret his remarks correctly, he is falling into the same trap the former minister of agriculture fell into when he said that farmers never had it so good. I warn the hon. member against this attitude because it is political dynamite.

I am pleased to see the minister back from his trip to Europe and I hope he is prepared to face up to facts and announce positive policies to help our agricultural industry extricate itself from the many economic difficulties it now faces. The leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition presented a very complete and comprehensive review this afternoon of these difficulties. He pointed out that the government has been continually pounded, prodded, pushed and even hounded to take action, yet little action has been forthcoming. My leader in his remarks referred to the very serious and near catastrophic situation in western Canada because of the huge pile-up of wet and damp grain. He did not exaggerate this very serious situation. In all the years I have lived in western Canada, and I was born there, I have never seen the farmers face such a serious situation as exists today.

This fact was borne out by Mr. W. C. MacNamara, the chief commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board, a week ago last Tuesday when, in addressing a meeting of the grain transportation committee, he not only alerted that committee but farmers, the government and all Canadians to the very serious situation existing in western Canada. It was on the basis of this report that I moved a week ago yesterday to adjourn the regular business of this house to debate an urgent matter of public importance. As an alternative I suggested that the agricultural estimates be brought into the house in order that we might have an emergency debate. I am glad the government acceded to this suggestion.

What is the existing picture today in the west? Let us look at a few of the headlines which have appeared in daily and weekly newspapers, because they emphasize the situation as well as anything. The Regina Leader-Post on its editorial page carries the headline, "Farmers See Need For Action." The Globe and Mail of November 30 has the headline, "Grain-drying Problem Worsening —And Action May Come Too Late." Another headline is, "Prairie Grain-dryer Shortage One Of Factors In Crop Spoilage." The Western Producer, which circulates throughout the whole of western Canada, has this headline, "Farmers Must Dry Grain At Home. Terminals At Full Blast Can't Take All Damp Grain." I have here the article to which I referred a week ago last Wednesday when I moved the motion to adjourn the house. The headline in the Globe and Mail is, "Head Of Wheat Board Warns Drying Must Be Done On Farms." The article goes on to elaborate in great detail some of the problems. The Manitoba Co-operator in its issue of November 28 carries the headline, "Decline Forecast In Farm Incomes." Another headline in the Globe and Mail is, "Stiff Competition For Wheat Sales Likely To Continue." I also have here a report of the Saskatchewan Wheat

Pool under date of December 3, wherein the minister of agriculture of Saskatchewan points out the serious situation that now exists. I mention these news comments in passing to emphasize that there really is a serious situation.

I would like to list a few of the factors involved in this problem. I think the basic problem is that we have such an enormous pile-up of grain. We have a backlog of grain which has accumulated from past years. The pile-up of grain has resulted from the lack of sales caused by the lapsing of the international wheat agreement. This has brought about a serious condition in regard to the economic welfare of western Canada, as the minister knows. The figures for the last crop year indicate that as of July 31 we had sold only 30 per cent of the grain sold the previous year. This indicates that inland terminals, facilities on the farms and all other storage space available was filled. This creates a problem in the handling of wet grain at this time because there is not the space available in which to carry out the drying.

The second problem is the transportation of grain. This was emphasized by the hon. member for Mackenzie and others. We must facilitate the movement of grain. The availability of dryers is another serious matter. It was very interesting to note Mr. McNamara's warning last week to the transport committee when in Winnipeg. He said that the total drying capacity of the facilities at the terminals at the head of the lakes, at Vancouver and also at the inland terminals, was only 12 million to 13 million bushels a month. If you take the figure that Mr. McNamara quoted, 380 million bushels of wet grain, include the drying capacity at inland terminals and elsewhere, and exaggerate the figure a little and say that the capacity is 15 million bushels, you can readily understand the problem facing our farmers. Even with these terminal drying facilities operating at full capacity 24 hours a day, seven days a week, with approximately only four months to perform this operation they will not get 100 million bushels dried, which is the figure some people have optimistically quoted.

The grain is very wet and is in a serious condition. It is relatively preserved now because of freezing conditions but as soon as the warmer weather of spring, which is four months hence, arrives, the grain will spoil beyond recovery. Therefore, the capacity of grain drying terminals is a very serious matter. I do not know how we can alleviate the situation at the terminals because we must be realistic and recognize that the terminal elevators require a certain amount of space in which to keep dry grain available for future sales or overseas markets. The problem comes right back to Mr. Farmer on the farm. We must do what we can to assist him to carry out an emergency drying operation during the next three or four months.

The fourth problem is the capacity of dryers related to the dampness of the grain. When you have damp or wet grain the normal capacity of a grain dryer is cut down to possibly one-third. This varies, of course, according to the moisture content of the grain. With a moisture content of 14.5 to 16 per cent the dryers can handle it easily. But when it reaches the 20 or 30 level of moisture we really have a problem. It takes two, three, and sometimes four times as long to dry grain with this moisture content.

In addition, in the winter, which is quite different from summer as far as grain drying is concerned, the farmer has to use drying machines in confined or enclosed buildings such as a machine shed or large granary. The moment you extract moisture from the grain you saturate the air in the building and the maximum drying capacity of the machine is reduced in proportion to the dampness in the air. This is another situation that aggravates the problem. I am very much concerned that even considering the number of dryers available in the most optimistic way, in view of the figures we have, which are for normal conditions and not to meet abnormal conditions, we shall not be able to dry all the damp grain on the farms.

Therefore the government should take steps under an incentive program to induce Canadian manufacturers to manufacture dryers, or obtain them from the United States. The government should also seriously consider the suggestion made by the hon. member for Huron the other day, that if dryers are available in eastern Canada they should be sent where they can be used to the maximum in the next four months.

The fifth problem is the unavailability of cash with which to purchase these machines even on a co-operative or collective basis. In addition, cash is needed to cover the operation of dryers. As hon. members know, the fuel used in these machines is basically propane gas. This is a very expensive gas and it is used in great quantities in dryers. When you have large quantities of grain to dry, the cost is very high indeed. It runs anywhere from 10 cents to 20 cents a bushel. One can imagine the exorbitant cost involved in this operation. The farmers are short of cash at the present time because they have vast amounts of unsold grain on their farms owing to the lack of markets. There is no ready cash coming into their hands.

We in the opposition pressed the government to double the amount of cash advances on farm stored grain, and the government acceded to our request. But the $3,000 to $6,000 involved was used up immediately in the normal operations of the farm, to pay fuel bills, tax bills, repairs and in the general upkeep of the family farm. This money was used, as I say, to cover the cost of current operations. So the farmer has now spent that money and is not able to sell his grain until it is dried. In addition he is caught in a cost-price squeeze the like of which he has never experienced. I suggested through questions to the minister that we should consider the matter of acreage payments. This was done in past years to meet similar emergencies. I therefore believed mine was a practical suggestion.

Another factor in connection with this problem is providing information on how to operate a dryer. Interestingly enough, this is a matter of great concern because many farmers have never had experience in operating these machines. As I understand it, before he can market grain that has been dried at the farm, the farmer has to give an affidavit to the grain elevator company where he is going to dispose of his grain, setting out all particulars with regard to his drying operation. A sample of the farmer's grain is sent to the Board of Grain Commissioners' offices in Winnipeg. They test it, and if it does not meet the required standard it is rejected and will be accepted only as feed. The reason is that apparently in the drying process, if the temperature is not properly regulated the gluten content of the grain is impaired and as a result the flour is not of the right quality for baking. This is another serious situation with which our farmers are faced, and something has to be done about it.

It is my right to complain about the ineptitude of the government and its lack of policy in meeting this emergency. I believe it is my duty to make some constructive suggestions. What are those suggestions? First, I suggest that the government accelerate markets wherever possible to relieve the congestion of grain. I mentioned the fact that this congestion developed over the last year or two owing to the lapsing of the wheat agreement. This is something of which we have to take very serious cognizance in consultation with the other countries of the world which are also involved with the wheat agreement to ensure that the agreement works effectively and in the interest not only of the exporting but of the importing nations.

Second, we have to provide cash assistance to farmers through acreage payments or other emergency subsidies such as P.F.R.A. and P.F.A.A. This has been done previously. I can cite the instance back in 1959 when farmers' crops were under the snow. The government of that time, headed by the right hon. member for Prince Albert, came up with policies which provided acreage payments and special assistance to farmers in order to tide them over the difficult situation. Now we are faced with an even more serious situation because of the vast amounts of wet grain now piled up in western Canada. When I refer to wet grain I think something has been overlooked and should be emphasized again, although I believe the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar referred to it. We have been talking about wheat, but there is also a multi-million bushel pile-up of other grains such as feed grains, oats, barley, flax and so on. References have been made to the 380 million bushels of wet wheat. If we considered all grains I think the total figure would be closer to one billion bushels. This indicates the immensity of the problem and one cannot overemphasize what the farmer is up against.

I hope that as this debate proceeds and the press covers it as well as the further statements made by Mr. McNamara and the minister himself, our farmers will realize they will have to get to work immediately and not leave it for another ten days or two weeks but avail themselves of every opportunity to start drying their grain or we will be faced with a loss of multi-millions of bushels of grain through rot, mould, etc. In terms of dollars and cents, the loss figure would be enormous.

Besides this assistance I think that emergency freight assistance to move dryers into position should be reinstated similar to the action that was taken not only back in the hungry 30's but in 1961 at the time of the great drought in western Canada. At that time legislation was brought in by a special measure under estimate 604 in September of 1961 in co-operation with the provincial governments. That is why I asked the minister this afternoon whether he had already received applications from provincial governments for co-operative freight assistance on a 50-50 basis so as to provide certain moneys to pay for the freight in moving grain dryers and other farm equipment in order to cope with this emergency.

My fourth suggestion is the immediate distribution of emergency instructions on how to handle these dryers properly and on the drying of grain. This will have to be done through the public relations branches of the departments of agriculture, both federal and provincial, and passed on to the farmers so they will be more certain that they are doing a good job of grain drying and so the grain will be saleable and ready when there is a market for it.

My fifth suggestion is that we consider declaring a moratorium for one year where needed on loans due under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act, and Farm Credit Act. If we could do this in the face of this emergency, farmers would feel they could use some of the money that would normally be used to meet these obligations and could band together co-operatively to provide themselves with the equipment needed to do this drying operation and thus overcome the problem from this angle.

I could go on at some length but I am sure other hon. members want to take part in this debate. However, I suggest the matter is very urgent and I am sure that after the minister has had a chance to listen to various hon. members this afternoon and after what went on in our committee this morning, he will be impressed with the urgency of the matter. I strongly urge that the actions which I have suggested and the suggestions which will be made by other hon. members be considered by the minister at once to meet this very serious problem that we are now facing in western Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Chairman, what I have to say may not seem so important to hon. members if one considers that I am no expert in agricultural matters. However, I conscientiously believe that I have to say these things, because they are important, vital and crucial for the people I represent in a special way in the house. Furthermore, being a professional newspaperman, I am not used to taking part in parliamentary debates.

As a newspaperman, I have always been concerned about what was happening at home in the field of agriculture. That is why I will say, as simply as I can, what I want to bring to the attention of the minister and hon. members.

However, with your permission, I shall make a general comment by saying that I see the problem of the potato farmer—and, at this point, I take a chance of being told that I am all wet—in the context of farming in general and in the context of national and international economy. If we take any farm problem out of this overall context, we may follow a course which could lead us into error.

Evidently, this problem must be considered analytically, positively and with an open mind. It is easy to condemn the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) and the federal and provincial governments for not carrying out their responsibilities with regard to agriculture. I have yet to hear members of this house say that the farmers themselves should be blamed for not considering their problems seriously and for neglecting to maintain the quality of their products. In this connection, I want to show one example, although it is related to the potato growers in my own region.

The other day, in the course of a friendly reunion, I met here in Ottawa some people who had left New Brunswick some ten years ago. I was told that they insist on buying New Brunswick potatoes. Unfortunately, after buying bags of potatoes grown in my region, they were disappointed to find that the quality of the potatoes was definitely inferior to that normally expected.

I was told also that the Prince Edward Island potatoes are quite satisfactory to them from a quality standpoint. I am not trying to advertise for Prince Edward Island, but this is a fact. Once again, this illustrates that farmers are not always conscientious in marketing satisfactory products. Those are things that must be said even at the risk of not being appreciated on the political plane. As far as I am concerned, I take my responsibilities, and I believe that all farmers should take theirs. Particularly, they should not try to evade the regulations to put on the market products that are not suitable.

I fully agree with the hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Pringle) in the views he expressed so eloquently. I recognize also that the family farm unit is not on the way out. As a matter of fact, to support this view, I could give some examples taken within my own family.

If farmers in ever increasing numbers have left the land and if this situation still persists—I do not know if it started before or after the great depression, because all that happened before I was born—it is because these people were attracted by the easy gain they could find in the cities and because they were not prepared, as their predecessors were, to earn their bread by the sweat of their brow. And that is why, not all, but a good number of farmers quit the farm to go into exile in the city or, as it turned out in my area, in the United States. But, if the cause of that exodus is sought, we find that hundreds of those unproductive lands should never have been settled. That explains why the people who took them over never managed to make a living there. At times, they could barely support their families. Those lands should never have been settled; a mistake was made at the outset, the effects of which persist even today.

With regard to potato growers, they are now going through a critical period, a very critical seasonal period which recurs every year when the crop is brought in. The market is then at its lowest level. But what concerns me more is that the potato market, this year just like last year and the year before, will not improve enough to enable the farmer to get a decent price for his produce.

I said I was no expert in this regard, but I see farmers wondering how they will solve their problems, of which the marketing problem.

Some claim that they are being exploited by people commonly known as "brokers". I do not know whether they are right, but what I would like to know is why the governments do not look into the problem of the potato marketing.

New Brunswick has lost its traditional markets since the farmers in Quebec and in Ontario have decided to grow potatoes on a very large scale. The export market is also slipping through our fingers. The government cannot be blamed for other countries wanting to grow potatoes. But, indirectly, our farmers take the rap. Therefore, might the federal government be willing to create a commission to set the prices and quotas for potatoes? Would the Minister of Agriculture agree to establish standards which would enable the producer to get a just price?

I know that a task force is making investigations in all areas related to agriculture, but I would like that task force to try to find a solution to the potato problem, as it did for other problems.

I read recently, in the weekly papers of my region, that a company in good repute intends to establish an industry to process potatoes. As you know, there is already, in my region, the McCains Foods Company, known all over the world. And now, the F. W. Piric Company is thinking of embarking upon the same kind of business.

This might help solve the problem of marketing, since the consumer these days prefers finished goods. I hope that the Department of Agriculture and the Departments of Industry and Trade and Commerce, by means of financial assistance whenever a request is made, may help people willing to help themselves and to set agriculture in their area on the road to prosperity.

It must have been evident, Mr. Chairman, that I am not an expert in farming. I simply wished to point out, with all due humility, the problems which the farmers in my area have to face, and I hope that the Minister of Agriculture will give the matter some thought.

[English]

Mr. Horner: I should like to say a word or two before six o'clock, Mr. Chairman, on the urgent problem facing western Canada at this time and perhaps later this evening deal generally with the other problems facing agriculture. It is a fact well known to the Minister of Agriculture and to the house that there is an unusually large amount of damp grain in western Canada. Mr. McNamara has estimated the amount at 380 million bushels of wheat and the head of the federated elevator companies has estimated the amount as high as 800 million bushels of grain, including wheat, oats, barley and flax. Every farm newspaper one picks up, such as the Co-Operator, The Western Producer and Farm and Country is filled with comments on problems concerning the drying of grain. It is an obvious situation, but the government has moved reluctantly in the solving of it.

It is all very well for the hon. member for Fraser Valley to suggest that he would like somebody in this house to stand up and list the problems rather than ask for handouts.

Well, basically, the problem is weather. The second problem is the fact that it is the government's duty to market grain. It is all well and good for somebody to say it is the duty of the wheat board to sell grain. The wheat board serves the Canadian farmers with government assistance, it is a government board set up to market the grain for western farmers. I have long argued that the wheat board should be in the hands of the Minister of Agriculture. I cannot for the life of me see why he should have to sit in the House of Commons and defend the wheat board while the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who has that responsibility, is absent. In fact, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is not even suited to this task. I hold nothing against him, however.

I recall that during the election campaign the Prime Minister said he would appoint cabinet ministers without regard for region but with regard for their knowledge and capabilities. This is an obvious situation in which the Prime Minister made an appointment without regard for region or for knowledge. What should the government have done? It should have moved a lot faster. Some time ago the wheat board sent a delegation to China to try to increase our sales by reaching a new agreement. The delegation was successful in selling grain, but under the old agreement.

Recently the Board of Grain Commissioners appeared before the agriculture committee and stated that their basic problem in aiding the marketing of grain was money. The wheat board operates on the farmers' money and the Board of Grain Commissioners operate on government money. The wheat board should be given assistance in marketing grain by the Department of Trade and Commerce. The minister spent a month in South America, and it is a well known fact we do not sell too much wheat in that area. We have been getting along this year on poor wheat sales under the old agreement. Western Canada is concerned about the problem. The outlook for wheat sales is poor. The minister knows that the government has been slow to move the grain out of the terminals after it was dried. If it were moved faster space would be available at the major lakehead terminals and at the Vancouver terminal. However, Mr. Chairman, grain is not moving out. There is a backlog because there are insufficient drying facilities. Only 13.8 million bushels can be dried at the terminals per month.

What should the government do about this situation? First of all, it should institute a major crash program to sell this wheat after it has been dried. This it is not doing. The minister shakes his head. He knows full well that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce was in South America for a month and a half and that the farmers themselves, in a way, paid for two men to go to China with the wheat board to work out a wheat agreement. But I suggest our salesmen should have gone to Russia three months ago and also visited Poland and other countries in an effort to work out some agreement.

It was suggested in the agricultural committee that the Board of Grain Commissioners should look into the possibility of building a terminal in Europe to handle our grain so that we would have ready access to the European common market. But that as it may, I suggest that insufficient pressure is put on grain movement. In the agricultural committee the Board of Grain Commissioners was asked how the grains council is fitting into the scheme of things and their representatives said that they did not know. We also asked the representatives from the eastern feed board the same question, and they did not know either. Nobody knows, and as a result the grain sales situation is in a state of flux.

What has been the position in the last few years in regard to Canada's flour sales? The minister is well aware of the flour sales that we used to make. For example, I should like to quote part of an article extracted from the Winnipeg Free Press to illustrate my point:

> Canada, which for many years led the world in flour exports, is now running a bad third after the United States and the European common market.

This gives the committee some idea of the extent to which we are falling down, Mr. Chairman. The article goes on:

> Extensive gains have been made in the export of flour by other countries. These are chiefly members of the common market (France, Germany and Italy).

Then the article suggests that Great Britain will reduce its imports of flour from 12 million bushels to something like five million bushels.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, the minister can look into this problem and, if necessary, institute a subsidy program for manufactured flour. I understand there was a subsidy in past years, and maybe a subsidy is still paid.

But if it is, it is not enough. The basic concept is that grain must be moved. The only flour sales being made today are to Russia, which in turn passes it on to Cuba—a very shaky commitment indeed, I suggest.

In regard to the provision of grain drying facilities, I suggest that the government appoint a western grain drying committee to co-ordinate use of all available farm dryers—

Mr. Olson: This is already being done.

Mr. Horner: The minister says that this is already being done. I did not hear him say so in the agricultural committee this morning or in his speech this afternoon. As I was saying, the government should appoint a co-ordinator to ensure that all available dryers are put to use.

This morning during the standing committee hearings the minister suggested that the government has already established one drying point at Saskatoon which is being operated on a turn-around basis. In other words, farmers bring their grain to this facility, dry it and then it is taken back to the farm. Generally speaking, about 40 per cent of the grain grown in the Saskatoon neighbourhood is tough and damp. The same can be said of the grain grown in southern Manitoba.

The minister also told the committee this morning that he had had meetings at various places in the west. I suggest that these meetings should have been held two months ago. It was obvious on October 1 that this was going to be a difficult harvesting year. One had only to look at the amount of harvesting that had been done by October 1 to assess the situation.

I would also point out that at one point the government suggested that it would remove the tariff on dryers. The newspapers—and I do not blame them—flooded the country with reports of big reductions in the tariff on grain dryers. It subsequently turned out that there never was a tariff on grain dryers used on farms. My question asked in this house some weeks ago was directed to the removal of the tariff on commercial, stationary grain dryers, and this the government has done. I also suggest that the government should set up temporary stationary grain dryers at various points on the prairies; I suggest several in southern Manitoba, several in northern Saskatchewan and several in northern Alberta.

I now want to look at the feed grain position, Mr. Chairman. I think the government is hoping that the chickens in the constituency of Fraser Valley East are going to eat all of this feed grain, or that it is going to be shipped somewhere else. We are going to have a surplus of feed grain and unless some action is taken to dispose of it this grain is just going to decay.

I also suggested in the agricultural committee that the duty on steel, glass-lined silos imported from the United States be removed. In the United States these silos were used to store high moisture corn and they could be similarly used in Canada to store high moisture barley and other feed grains. These silos are not manufactured in Canada, so I see no reason why this duty should not be removed. Knowing the tariff structure in Canada as it relates to agricultural implements it may well be that the machinery used to empty and load these silos is duty free, but the major cost is the building itself, which amounts to between $7,000 and $8,000. If this duty were removed it would help a few farmers, though perhaps not many.

I should also like to draw to the attention of this committee what the Economic Council of Canada had to say regarding research in the plants division. There is lots of evidence to suggest that the United States has made major gains in research into the growing of corn. New varieties of wheat have been developed in Mexico. I suggest that not enough money has been put into plant research in Canada. Private industry has not been enticed to enter into the field of plant research to any great extent. I suggest that instead of giving a grant of $75,000 to Crane to keep people out of bathrooms, the minister would have done better to make larger grants to private industry to encourage broader based research. It is all well and good to conduct this sort of research in universities and at the federal government headquarters at Ottawa, but surely we are lagging behind other countries.

For example, Mr. Chairman, may I refer you to the statistics published on page 2 of the Alberta Wheat Pool Budget. According to the pool, for every one million acres planted in the United States there are three wheat research scientists, but for every one million acres planted in Canada there are only two. Further, a breakdown among the federal and provincial governments and the universities investigated revealed that there are 219 professional researchers working on horticultural crops and 113 on cereal crops. I have nothing against horticultural crops—

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Horner: —but I suggest that more research should be done into cereal crops. May I call it six o'clock?

The Chairman: Order. It is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit again later this day.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert), Housing; the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Simpson), Rural Development; the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale), Sports.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of the debate and the seriousness of the situation facing the agricultural economy, I wonder whether the minister and the house will give unanimous agreement to suspend private members' hour at this time and continue the debate on the agricultural estimates. We have only one day for this debate and I believe hon. members realize the importance of the subject.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I too recognize the importance, but I do not think it is fair to say that there has only been one day for debate. These estimates have been considered in the standing committee for many days. While I would have no objection, there is one aspect which I would like to draw to the attention of the house. A bad habit could develop of depriving private members of their opportunity to bring motions and bills before this house. When I used to sit on the other side of the chamber I saw one private members' motion after another passed by, and this is not a good practice.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I believe a glance at the record will show it is this government which has asked that private members' hour be waived whenever it suits its convenience. But when it comes to dealing with the representations of the farmers the minister puts on this pious act and adopts this holier than thou attitude.

Excelsior Life Insurance Co.

Mr. Olson: As usual, the hon. member is wrong again.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The suggestion which has been made is that we postpone private members' hour. The question which now arises is whether there is unanimous consent to do this.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Olson: There is not unanimous agreement, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Speak up, then.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

It being six o'clock the house will now proceed to private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions (papers), public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

EXCELSIOR LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. David Weatherhead (Scarborough West) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-13, respecting The Excelsior Life Insurance Company.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to continue as a federal company a company which is an existing Ontario company. The Excelsior Life Insurance Company is one of the leading insurance companies in Canada with over one billion dollars of insurance in force.

This bill is identical to ones sponsored by the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Stanbury) in the last two sessions of the last parliament. As Bill S-26 it received second reading in the house and received approval by the miscellaneous private bills committee in February, 1967, but died on the order paper when parliament was prorogued in April of that year. As Bill S-8 it was presented for second reading in September, 1967, and was further debated in November of that year and in February, 1968, but it died on the order paper when parliament was dissolved in April of this year.

For the benefit of the many new members of the house, and to refresh the memories of hon. members who were sitting in the house during the debates on this bill's predecessors, the facts are basically these. The Excelsior Life Insurance Company was incorporated under the laws of the province of Ontario by letters patent dated August 7, 1889. It has been registered with the federal Department of Insurance since 1897 and has filed returns with the federal Department of Insurance for some 70 years.

As a provincial company registered with the federal Department of Insurance, the Excelsior Life Insurance Company is subject to most of the provisions of the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, to which it would be subject as a federal company. At the same time, it is subject to the jurisdiction of the Ontario Corporations Act, and there are certain conflicting and overlapping provisions in the said two acts. This dual jurisdiction does result in some hardship and inconvenience. The company, for instance, must prepare its annual statement in a form prescribed by the federal Department of Insurance, but its annual report is prepared differently to comply with the provisions of the Ontario Corporations Act. The investment powers under the Ontario Corporations Act do not conform to those provided for under the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act. Since the company is in direct competition with federally incorporated companies, it feels prejudiced by the more narrow investment privileges under the Ontario Corporations Act.

There are certain areas of difference in the field of administration between federal and provincial requirements which could be resolved if the company became a federal company.

The Ontario department of insurance has been quite understanding in dealing with this company in its operations under these circumstances and the company has been treated much as if it were a federal company. The Excelsior Life Insurance Company is licensed to operate in each province and carries on business in all the provinces of Canada.

It is not considered feasible to reincorporate as a federal company and to sell and transfer the company's assets to the new corporation in view of the large size of the Excelsior Life Insurance Company. In the first place there are about 200,000 policyholders and more than one billion dollars of insurance in force. It would be impracticable to transfer these policies to a federal company. Second, there are mortgages on real estate held by the company totalling about $88 million and marketable securities to a value of about $99 million. It would hardly be feasible to register assignments of all the mortgages and to prepare the necessary transfers of all the securities to a new corporation.

The most serious opposition to this bill's predecessors, Mr. Speaker, has centred around the fact that since 1960 a controlling interest in the Excelsior Life Insurance Company has been held by Aetna Life Insurance Company which has its head office in the United States. Aetna, which holds 72 per cent of the shares of Excelsior, is one of the largest stock life insurance companies in the United States and has been doing business in Canada continuously for over 100 years, longer than any other American life insurance company.

At the time of the acquisition of its controlling interest in 1960 it was declared by Aetna that there would be no change in the management, personnel or directors of Excelsior and that Excelsior would continue as an autonomous Canadian operation, managed and administered by and for Canadians. The following will attest to the validity of this declaration:

1. Since 1960, Excelsior has continued to conduct and expand its operations under the same Canadian management.

2. Excelsior has acquired a substantial volume of Canadian business originally written by Aetna.

3. Excelsior has a board of 12 directors of whom nine are resident in Canada.

4. The invested assets of Excelsior which exceed $211 million are invested almost exclusively in Canadian assets. Less than one-tenth of one per cent of Excelsior's invested assets are invested in United States and foreign securities.

Mr. Speaker, Section 16 of the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act prohibits the transfer to foreign control of those life insurance companies which were Canadian controlled on September 23, 1964. The section also, however, provides a blanket exemption where more than 50 per cent of the shares were held by a non-resident on that date.

Excelsior, as a provincial company, is not subject to said section 16, but even if it had been a federal company it would have been exempt from the 1964-1965 amendments of section 16, since more than 50 per cent of its shares were held by a non-resident at that time and had been so held for about four years. There are 12 other federally registered insurance companies with the same exemption as Excelsior, as far as section 16 is concerned.

The purpose of this bill is to achieve the effect of re-incorporation as a federal company without the apparent difficulties posed by that course of action because of its large size. It is an old established company of high reputation, carrying on business in all the provinces of Canada for over 70 years. It simply wishes to clear up its status in a way which the Superintendent of Insurance entirely approved in the hearings on a similar bill which were held by the miscellaneous private bills committee on February 14, 1967. The bill would subject the company more firmly to federal legislation and cut off provincial authority and control. It would make the Excelsior Life Insurance Company more competitive with other companies in the field and enable it to serve the public interest better.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, those who are interested in the operation of insurance companies in Canada will appreciate the interest that the sponsor of this bill has shown in the role of this insurance company, the purposes suggested for it by the principals concerned, and the reason this type of bill is introduced in this way. For a number of years I have been opposed to this bill but the sponsor did not mention the reason for my opposition.

It would be very simple for the sponsor to agree to a change in the bill, a change such as been accepted by other insurance companies, whereby it would divest itself of American control within a period of years. This was the aim of the former minister of finance, Mr. Gordon, who wished to end American control of Canadian corporations. We do not suggest that this be done to the disadvantage of the company. We suggest, and this has been accepted as a reasonable proposition by a number of other companies, that it be given a ten-year period in which to accomplish this objective. The company would not have to rush out and sell its stock on the market immediately.

This is the type of proposition put forward by the former minister of finance when dealing with banks operating in Canada. In some cases it was accepted reluctantly, and in others favourably. In fact two suggestions were made. The first was that a bank could carry on business as it had been and would be treated as a foreign owned bank operating in Canada. But under this arrangement it could not expand its operations. The second suggestion was that a bank be allowed to expand but that within a ten year period, at the point it thought most advantageous to itself, it would sell controlling interest in its stock to Canadians and become a Canadian owned company.

Earlier this afternoon this house discussed a very serious agricultural problem. If the sponsor of this bill had wished to bring tears to the eyes of hon. members he could have suggested that this insurance company might agree to use its mortgage funds to help farmers suffering difficulty in western Canada.

Aetna Life Insurance Company is an American owned company. It is a monolithic structure. I went to the library to find out some facts about it. Its president is connected with Connecticut Insurance and many other companies. It has quite a bit of money to invest. Last year it held a surplus in shares of upwards of half a million dollars, a surplus in insurance funds of $11 million and had total assets of $185 million. Had the hon. member done this I am sure some of the members of my party would have risen and said: Let us get on with it and spend this money in an advantageous way.

But the company has not suggested this. It acts the same as any other corporation. It is here to make money, and it believes it will be more advantageous to make money with a federal charter than with a provincial charter. But having examined the company's assets, frankly I fail to see how it has hurt the company not to be federally incorporated. I might call this a harangue—I would not want anybody else to call it that—but frankly I do not see why it should be given this power.

This is an old Canadian company which was acquired by an American firm, and since becoming American owned it has not become any more Canadian oriented than it originally was. We have an obligation to foster the idea of Canadian ownership. If the Excelsior Life Insurance Company were federally incorporated and instructed to become Canadian owned within a ten year period, I have the idea at the back of my mind that at a future date, when we were controlling it through our Department of Insurance, we could say to the company: As a good corporate citizen you might make money available for this purpose or for that purpose. I see a number of members from Toronto in the house. I am sure they would like to see more money devoted to housing. Farm representatives would like to see long term loan capital made available to farmers at a reasonable interest rate. This seems to be what this bill is all about.

Excelsior Life Insurance Co.

I listened carefully to the sponsor of the bill when he discussed the reason why this company is seeking federal incorporation. It involves an amendment that was made to the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act which provided that a company which was wholly owned by a foreign company in 1964 could get federal incorporation. In effect the plea being made here is: Let us not follow that law; let us make an exception.

• (6:20 p.m.)

Let us go back to the original incorporation. It was incorporated originally, I believe, in 1889 by letters patent of Ontario, amended by orders in council in 1889 changing the name to Excelsior Life Insurance Company of Ontario. It was modified again in 1897. In 1899 the name was changed to Excelsior Life Insurance Company by supplementary letters patent. This company was originally a Canadian owned company. It became involved in foreign control back in the early 60's and now is owned by a United States corporation.

There is another problem that bothers me. Sometimes we are not right but we are not always wrong either.

I refer to the situation which developed several years ago in the private members' hour. Over a period of years we had seen an amalgamation of the major banks in this country. We saw the Canadian Bank of Commerce amalgamate with the Imperial Bank. We saw the Dominion Bank amalgamate with the Bank of Toronto. There were a number of amalgamations, but there is no need to list them all. There was a drawing together of a number of banks. Then a couple of years ago along came a number of bank bills. In each case the sponsor said: Just pass this legislation and this will give the right to print money.

It must have been wrong to have the amalgamation if it is wise to have a proliferation. If, on the other hand, it was right to allow the amalgamation, then the reverse must be true. When a number of companies wish to expand their operations by setting up new units this must be wrong if the other was right. We pointed this out. We are opposed to the expansion of the number of banks just for the purpose of expanding without having any competitive position along the line. As is already evident two of these banks are out of business. Another has surrendered its charter and another is in a dubious position. I believe one is partly successful. My colleague who comes from that province may say that one is highly successful, but I do not know.

Mr. Alkenbrack: What is the name of that company?

Mr. Peters: I am referring to the Bank of British Columbia. Another of my colleagues says that he has some money invested in it, so I suppose it is still solvent. The point I make is that it was not advisable to establish these banks because they did not have the financial structure that was necessary. Yet continually we are faced with the establishment of new companies.

This company, the Excelsior Life Insurance Company, is in Canada and has been here for several years. It was operated as a wholly owned Canadian company. Aetna Life Insurance Company did not become involved in it because the company was in difficulty or anything, but rather to control it. That in itself is not a bad thing except that Aetna Life Insurance Company was in this country doing business as it has for a great number of years. It has been doing a very large amount of business in Canada. I believe Aetna was organized in 1850 as an annuity company. I believe it commenced business in Canada in 1850 with a licence to transact the business of accident and sickness insurance. So this parent company has not been really left out of business in Canada. I believe it does less business, however, than Excelsior, but it has liabilities in Canada of $53 million. Therefore it is not a small contribution.

I am sure a check will show that Connecticut Life is also doing business in Canada and that there is no drought of insurance companies. Therefore there really is no reason that this company should have any excess advantage in the market because it is not doing any particular good. Certainly I believe, perhaps wrongly, that if a company is a Canadian owned company then we have a responsibility to allow it certain benefits we would not allow a foreign owned company. This, of course, has been established in the difference between the regulations contained in the Insurance Act which affects Canadian owned companies and that which affects British and foreign owned insurance companies. Both are acts of parliament and treat companies in a different way.

I suggest that there is great advantage in this company being a Canadian owned company. I am sure we would not ask the Aetna Life Insurance Company to give up its control without due remuneration. I have never noticed any difficulty in respect of these companies disposing of their stock when they make the decision to do so. If this company decides within a ten year period to be a wholly owned Canadian company with Canadian directors resident in Canada, I am sure this could be brought about without any additional cost to the company.

The sponsor of the bill, in passing, mentioned the board of directors of the company. It is interesting to note that there are Canadian directors of the company normally resident in Canada. Bruce Matthews is of Toronto, Henry Gooderham is also of Toronto. I presume Mr. Matthews is the well known lawyer and that Mr. Gooderham has liquor interests. A. E. Walford is of Montreal. Mr. Paul Matthews is of Toronto. Then it goes on and mentions John A. Hill of Hartford, Connecticut, Olcott D. Smith of Hartford, Connecticut and Fraser M. Fell of Toronto. They list five or six directors who are Canadians. It seems to me that Mr. Matthews would not have much time to devote to his duties as a director of this company. I am sure this is also true of Mr. Gooderham. Perhaps they are on the board, as is the situation in respect of some of the people in the other place, only to provide a Canadian content. In my opinion this is not good enough.

While listening to a couple of economists discuss our national economy I was surprised when they pointed out that the insurance companies of Canada spend more money in the United States than the United States supplies Canada with capital. The drain of money is not into Canada as would normally be expected; it is out of Canada. We have money in Canada which could be used for more development than is the case now if it remained at home rather than going across the border. I suggest this is probably the wish of our people. Therefore it is my opinion that it would be to our advantage that this company consider the suggestions we have made that it be returned to Canadian ownership with a full slate of Canadian directors so that the company will be directed toward Canadian development because of the large sum of money that these insurance companies control.

There was another problem that interested me immensely in respect of this matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired. Is it the pleasure of the house that the hon. member have leave to continue?

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I received on November 16 the following letter from Mr. Léon Verville who is the executive secretary for the Bois-Franc-Saint-François de Warwick region, and I quote:

Dear Sir,

Along with my colleagues of the Société des Artisans, I am counting on you to oppose as strongly as you can the bill proposing to levy taxes on insurance companies and which places on the same footing co-operatives and fraternal societies such as ours and other life insurance companies.

There is no doubt that the societies and companies hit the hardest are those controlled by French Canadians since they are the smallest. Such legislation will create considerable difficulties in their development and will undoubtedly contribute to maintain the economic inferiority of our people.

Kindly accept our anticipated thanks, etc.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we are discussing today Bill No. S-13, which is intended to create an exceptional situation for one insurance company that, in a way, forms part of the American monopoly, since the field of insurance in Canada is largely influenced by that capital.

Several members will probably recall a supplement published by Le Devoir, on October 10, 1968, dealing with insurance problems. This supplement underlined the insurance problems in Canada by comparing French-Canadian companies with Anglo-Canadian and foreign companies. The example was given that in 1946, 23 French-Canadian establishments controlled 8 per cent of the market, while 92 per cent was in the hands of 66 Anglo-Canadian and foreign-owned concerns, and the situation has never changed for the better since. The bill before us would give the Excelsior company and its owner, the Aetna company from the United States, a privileged position and the right to compete with other companies.

Mr. Speaker, the paradox in this matter is that, on the one hand, the government members are ready to give some privileges to foreign companies and, on the other hand, in his mini-budget, the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) dealt a nearly mortal blow to our French-Canadian companies.

So that you can realize the full extent of the problem, Mr. Speaker, let me tell you that the Société des Artisans, about which Mr. Verville, to whom I referred earlier, wrote me, has more than 354,000 members divided into 150 locals and 18 regional offices, including three for Franco-Americans in New England. This is an important company, with permanent and very active agencies. Each one has a board of directors and a regional office constantly at the disposal of local organizations. The general assembly of the society is attended by delegates from its various regional offices. Economically, this body constitutes a democratic system which is very efficient and which does not ask for special treatment but wants to be treated equitably.

On the basis of 1967 figures, the tax levied by the Minister of Finance would represent, for the Société des Artisans, an amount of some $500,000. To give an idea of what that amount means to the Society, I would point out that it is estimated that $800,000 will be paid as rebates in 1968 out of the gains of 1967.

Mr. Speaker, you realize all the trouble taken by this government to help our companies which are truly Canadian, dyed-in-the-wool Canadian, as compared to the advantages granted to those companies.

The last budget led to the following disastrous consequences: first, increased administrative expenses on account of the upheaval and supplementary work which—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I doubt that the remarks of the hon. member are related to the bill now under consideration. I think he is trying to carry on the budget debate, and I respectfully suggest to the hon. member to limit himself, during the time allowed for private members' business, to the bill tabled by the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Weatherhead).

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I shall certainly pay heed to your very kind remarks. I wish to point out, however, that the purpose of Bill No. S-13, as outlined by its sponsor, is to put on the same footing this company, which was in Canadian hands before it was bought by American interests, and the other American companies.

It is said that there is double competition in this field, overlapping of legislation, which makes it more difficult to draw up annual reports, and so on. We were told about the extravagant amount of money involved because of the overall policies in force. We were lectured on mortgages, securities and so on. However Mr. Speaker, to make it short, their purpose, through this bill, is to grant a privileged status to this company.

Indeed, the explanatory note accompanying the bill reads in part, as follows:

> Due to the size of the company, continuation as a federal company and not a federal re-incorporation has been applied for.

Therefore, in my view, this bill is favoured treatment, whereas the last budget was unfavourable to insurance companies.

It is precisely to bring out this point that I referred to the serious consequences of the last budget on one of our insurance companies, the Société des Artisans.

If, on the one hand, Mr. Speaker, we pass Bill No. S-13, this government would have to accept our proposals concerning French-Canadian and Canadian insurance companies.

That is why, Mr. Speaker—without questioning your good judgment, because I think it is better than mine since you have greater experience than I have in this field—I would be pleased if I could conclude my remarks with respect to the Société des Artisans to show how serious the situation is, since it affects considerably our French-Canadian companies.

In fact, we would create a precedent if we acted this way towards this company and I want to record my objection. I want foreign companies to be placed on the same footing as Canadian companies, provided however that our Canadian companies are not scuttled but assisted.

Mr. Speaker, if we harm French-Canadian and Canadian companies, it is absolutely unacceptable that we should pass Bill No. S-13 which promotes, in a way, foreign investments at home as well as purchase of our own companies.

The Excelsior Company was incorporated in 1889. It was purchased by the Americans. If the budget measures are passed and implemented by this government, tomorrow other American companies will buy our French-Canadian companies. I want to object to that and I consider this a matter of principle. That is why I object strenuously to the passing of Bill No. S-13.

• (6:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Skeena.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): That applause is almost embarrassing, Mr. Speaker. Some time ago the former minister of Indian affairs and northern development made an announcement in the house about the establishment of Panarctic Oils Limited. At that time he pointed out that one of the reasons for the establishment of Panarctic Oils Limited was a co-operative venture among a variety of oil exploration and mining companies, and the federal government, to act in concert through one company to carry out exploratory work in the northern part of Canada.

The Canadian government put up 45 per cent of the common and preferred share capital for that company. The point I am getting to—and this is only in a preliminary way—is that this was lauded as a most commendable aspect of the attitude of the Canadian government toward Canadian ownership. As was said then, and as was said this morning before one of our committees, if it had not been for the Canadian government's participation in Panarctic Oils to the extent of $9 million it would undoubtedly have been necessary for that consortium of companies to obtain money from foreign sources, and thus become another aspect of the foreign ownership activity in Canada.

The Canadian ownership aspect, as I understand it, was to the extent of 76 per cent, partly because of the percentage of Canadian ownership in the other companies in Panarctic oils and partly because of the 45 per cent, or $9 million invested by the Canadian people. That brings it to 76 per cent Canadian ownership. This was lauded as being extremely commendable and reflective of government attitude toward Canadian ownership, something which we have been espousing and arguing in favour of for some time.

The former prime minister, Mr. Pearson, in addition to the former minister of finance to whom my colleague the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) referred, went on a nationwide television broadcast. So concerned was he about the matter of foreign ownership that he took to the nation's communication medium to tell the Canadian people that he, Mr. Pearson, as prime minister of Canada was in favour of Canadian ownership of industry and manufacturing in the economy of the nation. I believed him. Many others believed him.

I think this was a fine declaration to have made. Many of the former prime minister's colleagues in the cabinet did not agree with him. Many of them were of the reactionary, pro-foreign ownership type, and there was a split in the cabinet about this matter. None the less the former prime minister, who spoke for the cabinet and the government of the day, made that declaration. We endorsed it, supported it and wished fervently that the declaration would come to some fruition, and that we would see the results of it as time went on.

But we have a different Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) today, Mr. Speaker. He was one in the cabinet of Mr. Pearson who was of the reactionary class or group when he was minister of justice. Regardless of the impression he leaves, regardless of his gentle smile and soft voice, the present Prime Minister fell then, and falls now, in the class of those favourably disposed to foreign ownership and control of the economy in Canada. An indication of this reactionary attitude showed up today in the almost flippant and arrogant way in which the Prime Minister dealt with the fisheries problem on the east coast, something of tremendous concern. He said almost disdainfully: Come on back tomorrow. Maybe the Minister of Fisheries will be here, and he can deal with it then.

I use this as an introduction to the bill, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me the hon. member has been speaking about many things, few of them relevant to the bill before the house.

Mr. Gibson: That was the preamble.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend opposite, whose constituency I am afraid I do not recall at the moment, just said that was the preamble. It was the preamble to the aspect that the bill before us concerns a foreign owned company.

Mr. Gibson: More verbose nonsense.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): It would be helpful if the hon. gentleman would not make remarks from his seat. They make more sense that way, but the rules of the house provide that if he would like to say something he is perfectly at liberty to ask me any question, and I will be glad to try to answer it. The point at issue is the matter of the foreign ownership of this company, Excelsior Life Insurance Company, and what the parliament of Canada is going to do about it.

As we have in the past, we look in many respects to the government of the day because any enunciation of public policy in this matter should emanate from the government. Because this is a one-man government, we must look to the Prime Minister, who so far has been silent on the matter of foreign ownership and control of Canadian industry, silent on the matter of foreign ownership and control of Excelsior Life Insurance Company, and all the other insurance company bills that are before us.

Mr. Gibson: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Yes; I have sufficient time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member might be given an opportunity to ask the question from his seat.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): While he is doing that—

Mr. Speaker: In the meantime the hon. member might go on with the preamble.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gibson: Mr. Speaker, as company law is both federal and provincial, does the hon. member not think he has been most unfair in his criticism of the Prime Minister? He is trying to develop answers to the problems, prior to the federal-provincial conference, where all these things are discussed in the context of a federal-provincial atmosphere of distribution of powers?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, if I were to be permitted to answer that question I obviously would be out of order. But I would point out to the hon. member that this is another indication of the attitude, not only of the government but obviously of the whole Liberal party, namely: Wait until tomorrow; wait until another day; let us see what occurs.

As far as I am concerned, the Prime Minister, because he is the leader of the government, in respect of foreign ownership of Canadian industry, is as phony as a $4 bill, and everyone who supports him in that concept of waiting until some other time to do something about it falls within the same class. It would not surprise me at a bit, and I understand this is the case, that in cabinet already—perhaps my hon. friend does not know about this because he is not close enough to cabinet to find out these things—there are moves afoot to bring in a public law giving the open door treatment to companies like Excelsior Life Insurance Company, and all the rest of the Companies foreign owned, and those controlled by foreign capital, saying to them—and this will occur if the government decision comes out in the open, and it will very soon—that they no longer have to go through the process of having their affairs examined in public; that they can come in by the back door and become incorporated by letters patent. If that comes to pass, as I am told it will—it is a matter the cabinet is discussing—it will simply be an indication once more of the favoured treatment the government has given and will continue to give to the foreign domination of this nation's economy.

Mr. Gibson: Which government, federal or provincial?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Does my hon. friend have another question? I would be glad to listen to it.

• (6:50 p.m.)

In addition, it would not surprise me a bit if even in the rules of procedure of this house, the revision of which is to be tabled tomorrow by the procedures committee, some suggestion is not advanced which will give the government control over the affairs dealt with in private members hour, in order to buttress the position of the government, and through which the government can treat its friends with extreme favours.

Mr. Deakon: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member for Skeena a question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to remind the hon. member that the hon. member for Skeena now has the floor. The hon. member seeking to ask the question cannot do so unless he secures the permission and consent of the hon. member who has the floor.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to extend the consent to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Deakon: I was wondering whether the hon. member would enlighten me as to whether or not this is an exercise in futilty.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the question is not entirely relevant. Also I have to say that some of the comments made by the hon. member for Skeena in my humble estimation were not entirely relevant to the bill before us. The question before the house is not the general matter of private bills and whether we should continue to have a private members hour, but the very specific proposal moved by the hon. member for Scarborough West. I think the hon. member for Skeena should be able by this time to address himself to that bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I was desperately trying to do that, Mr. Speaker but I was sidetracked by a couple of irrelevant questions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Perrault: The hon. member had better hurry up or no time will be left for a vote.

Mr. Peters: If the hon. member is hungry he can go and have his dinner.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): The expression is that this is another voice crying in the wilderness, or perhaps it would be more accurate to say another wilderness crying in a voice.

Regarding the Excelsior Life Insurance Company, perhaps what I can do in order to ensure that I am in order is to read from Hansard the remarks which were made on another occasion with respect to Excelsior Life Insurance Company, remarks which were not ruled out of order at that time. I am quoting from page 2513 of Hansard where the remarks of the then hon. member for Skeena appeared. They read as follows:

> The position of the New Democratic party has been enunciated on a number of occasions. It is a position that goes beyond the narrow confines of the statutory requirements of the Insurance Act. It is a position that, with respect to companies such as Excelsior Life Insurance Company, is identical with that——of the then government.

Perhaps I could refer to something that took place before the committee on February 14, 1967 when the committee began to consider the bill and had certain evidence presented to it. Certain officers of the company appeared before the committee, namely a Mr. Fraser M. Fell, Q.C., who was listed as the parliamentary agent, and a Mr. Kenny who was then president of the Excelsior Life Insurance Company. These gentlemen, together with Mr. Humphry, the superintendent of insurance, and the sponsor of the bill, proceeded to give the committee certain evidence. Part of the evidence related in a broad, general sense to the matter of foreign ownership and control. In this regard, thinking in terms of the Excelsior Life Insurance Company, which is a massive company with large amounts of money at its disposal, part of which is invested in different parts of the world, we might make reference to the Canada-Japan Trade Council Newsletter of July 1968 where we find the following:

> The tremendous industrial and commercial expansion by Japanese industry since the mid-1950s has been accomplished almost entirely without benefit of foreign investment. By and large it has been the policy of the Japanese government to discourage direct foreign investment, except in cases where a Japanese industry would clearly benefit by foreign participation.

Then it points out the degree to which foreign capital has been invested in Japan as compared with other countries, and it says that Canada had a foreign investment and equity capital of fourteen and one half billions of dollars and that Japan, in a similar period, although not in exactly the same year, had a foreign equity investment of only $.7 billion dollars—a tremendous difference. Here we are being asked to make retroactive to 1910 an aspect of foreign ownership and control of another life insurance company in this country, something we can well do without. The whole process that took place earlier on, both before the committee and before the house, continues to have the same force now. It continues to be true that such proposals are antagonistic to the interests of Canada, derogatory to our economic well-being and to our prospects in the future. We should not continue to go through the process of giving a carte blanche to foreign controlled companies to move into this country and do whatever they wish, without any restrictions being put on their activities.

Mr. Speaker: The hour assigned to the consideration of private members bills has now expired.

At seven o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Legault in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

1. Departmental administration including the Canadian agricultural services co-ordinating committee, contributions to the commonwealth agricultural bureaux, and a contribution to the Agricultural Economics Research Council in an amount equal to one half the contributions to the council from other sources during the fiscal year but not exceeding, $8,520,375.

Mr. Horner: When the house went to the consideration of private members hour at six o'clock, I was dealing briefly and rapidly with what the government should have been doing at least two months ago in attempting to deal with the difficult situation which was building up in western Canada. The minister has been out across the western region. I recall that even back in October he was pictured on television, walking in water amongst the swathed crops. He had plenty of evidence then of the situation, and it is too bad the government has not acted.

Mr. Olson: Did you say in or on the water?

Mr. Horner: I said in the water. We now have the facts, and know that something like 40 per cent of the grain crop has been taken off, and that in fact in northern Saskatchewan some 55 per cent of the grain still remains to be harvested. I suggested before, sir, that a correlated effort should be made to round up all available dryers from farmers who are through with them. This could easily have been done through municipalities, and a listing of them made for the government. The government could easily have paid the transportation costs of moving these dryers to the grain, or to the vicinity where there was a lot of damp grain. This course should have been adopted two or three weeks ago at the very latest. It was evident then there was going to be a lot of damp grain. Rarely is any crop harvested after the middle of November. It was known in November that a huge amount of damp grain was available, and the minister would have been wise to inform the farmers at that time that it would be better to abandon the damp grain. It would have been better to allow some to lie in the swaths.

As the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain suggested, the government could have told the farmers to leave their grain in the swath. There is no question about it, that grain will lie in the swath over the winter. It will deteriorate a grade or two, but it is still there in the spring, capable of being harvested, depending on the type of spring weather we get. According to a recent article in the Ottawa Journal the minister said that farmers who have been careless, unlucky or unwise are no different from unlucky storekeepers or plumbers.

Mr. Olson: I didn't write the editorial.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Horner: When the minister makes such a statement, he is plainly abandoning his responsibility, and that of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, as well as that of the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt.

Mr. Olson: Tell that to the editorial writer; I didn't write the editorial.

Mr. Horner: I have had to dispute some newspaper articles during the time I have spoken in this house, but I can honestly say very few. If the minister wants to say he was misquoted—

Mr. Olson: No, I was not; I said I didn't write the editorial, that is all.

Mr. Horner: If the editorial writer put the wrong interpretation upon his remarks, I can only say that is tough; he must have been very misleading in his remarks.

We have a very difficult situation, and the minister has announced he is going to call an agricultural conference to study the whole agricultural industry in Canada. Back in the fifties, when we had a surplus of grain, the farmers were encouraged to diversify. Today, we have a surplus in rapeseed and, a surplus in mustard seed, and a surplus in flax is fast building up. The price of flax is going down correspondingly. Into what is the minister going to tell the farmers to diversify now, when the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has not made any real effort to promote the sale of Canadian grain? As I mentioned before, a sale has been made to Red China. This sale consisted mostly of No. 4 and 5 wheat. No new agreement was made, and there was no mention of an agreement. This order took up the slack in the old agreement, which is running out. I ask the minister this question: Were Nos. 4 and 5 chosen because of price competition? In other words, I am asking whether Nos. 4 and 5 is the only wheat that is competitively priced with our major competitors in the world markets? Certainly I would judge this to be so.

Earlier today I dealt with the question of flour. The minister is fairly knowledgeable on that subject, because at one time there was a flour mill in his own constituency. It has since closed. There was one in Moose Jaw and that closed down last year. For the first time, Great Britain has not led the list as our best customer in cash sales; Japan has taken over. In fact our sales have fallen off.

Recently we exported some barley to Japan, and there was some doubt about its quality. I mention this mainly to point out that when the Board of Grain Commissioners appeared before the agriculture committee they said they were hampered in their investigations of further markets because of the lack of money from the government. Surely this is a very weak excuse. It is a fairly good excuse for the chairman of the Board of Grain Commissioners, but surely the minister cannot honestly say he has gone to bat for the farmers. He should be helping the Board of Grain Commissioners to research more markets. That is why we urged the government to agree to this debate, so as to have an opportunity to try to persuade the minister to reexamine the whole situation. The government made what they thought was an important statement about the reduction of tariffs on dryers, but actually the reduction saved the farmers very little money, if any. Indeed it caused the dealers a great deal of headache because the farmers came to them and asked for refunds.

As I suggested earlier, Mr. Chairman, the government could have purchased these large stationary grain dryers and operated them at various parts of the country where there were insufficient farmer-owned dryers available. This co-ordinating committee, to which reference has been made, could also ensure that this grain is dried properly so as to safeguard the quality of the grain. It is a well known fact that if grain is dried too quickly or at too hot a temperature, its quality may be severely damaged.

May I make just a few comments about the conference next March. The minister said that some 400 people would be invited, 140 of whom would be farm producers. Yet on the steering committee the minister is only permitting the participation—and I use that word because it has a certain significance to that government over there—of two national farm organization representatives. His weak excuse for this is that he told them he would hear from one of them.

Mr. Olson: No, both of them.

Mr. Horner: The minister now says both of them. This is an example of how he confuses the house, Mr. Chairman. Apparently he heard from both of them after he had asked them to select one representative.

Mr. Olson: One nomination from both organizations.

Mr. Horner: That is what I said. I think it is well known in farm circles across Canada that there is a great deal of conflict of opinion as to whether or not Canada should have one national farm organization, or two. It is also well known that there are something like four or five major national farm organizations in the United States. I cannot see why we cannot have two in Canada. But the minister has made no recognition of the fact that there is this conflict of interest between the two farm organizations.

Mr. Olson: Does the hon. member want that carried into the steering committee?

Mr. Horner: Carry it in if you like. If you want my words, take them. I suggest that if the minister is broadminded and wants proper participation in the activities of the steering committee, since 140 delegates out of 400 are producers then the very least number to represent them on the steering committee should be two delegates. As I understand it, the steering committee is going to consist of five members, and I ask the minister whether six members would make it unwieldy, and indecisive, when it comes to deciding how much time should be allotted to each group and how the conference is to be divided up into its various committees. In effect, the minister has told the conference that he has made them a big offer and that it is now up to them to get together.

That is what he told the corn growers when they came to Ottawa. He told them that he could not do anything about their situation, that they had better get together. You can only pass the buck for so long, Mr. Chairman. The minister told the corn growers of southern Ontario that there was no dumping of corn in this country, and then a week or so after he stopped that dumping.

With regard to wheat sales, generally speaking wheat is grown for sale, not for storage. But it must also be recognized that in bumper crop years it is not imprudent to store wheat. The old adage of the Egyptians about storing up in the fat years to meet the needs of the lean years is a sound one, and applies in this case, so long as we remain competitive on world markets.

According to today's Ottawa Journal there is a report to the effect—I do not have the report with me, so I cannot use the minister's exact words—that it is difficult for Canadian farmers to maintain their production if they have to compete with subsidized agricultural industries in other countries. The hon. member for Fraser Valley East might do well to study this article, in which the minister outlines the difficulties facing all farmers, even chicken farmers, as a result of the huge subsidies that some countries are prepared to provide for their own agricultural industries.

This is why I suggest that the Leader of the Opposition was quite sound in suggesting that one of the recommendations that should be made at the conference in March is for a world conference of all primary producers in the agricultural industry. The minister will probably reply that he has just returned from an O.E.C.D. conference on agriculture. However, that conference did not include representatives from the Asian countries. Asia during the last few years has become one of Canada's biggest markets, but now this market is shrinking vastly. The sad fact is that our market in the free world is also shrinking. I do not want to take up any more time on this subject, neither do I want the minister to feel confident that he is doing a good job. Ministers of agriculture have been studying agricultural problems for a long time but very little action has been taken in an attempt to solve them.

I should like to make a brief reference to the cattle industry. Recently I noticed a report that the United States has asked for a voluntary ban on Australian and New Zealand beef entering the United States. I should like to ask whether the government has taken note of this. If the United States is clamping down on Australian and New Zealand beef, will not these two countries now look to the Canadian market?

The livestock journal of Calgary recently carried an article dealing with Argentine beef, and it appears a lot of cooked and partially cooked beef has been exported to Canada and the United States from that country. If we are going to maintain our agricultural industry and keep it on a sound basis, we must guard against surplus products being dumped in Canada by competing nations.

I should now like to say a word or two about the over-all picture of agriculture. Since the government have taken office they have increased interest rates on loans provided under farming legislation. For example, the Farm Credit Corporation now charges 7¾ per cent, and the rate on farm improvement loans is 7½ per cent. One rate moved up 2¾ percentage points, representing more than a 50 per cent increase in the cost of money. The government and the minister felt that raising these rates would be the best way of getting the farmers to participate in our economy. I must not forget to point out that recent changes to the Farm Credit Corporation legislation resulted in a benefit to the corporations.

The proposed changes to the Estate Tax Act will be of direct benefit to farming corporations, in that it will force farmers to become incorporated so as to prevent their land and homes being gobbled up by the payment of estate tax on the death of the father or owner of the farm.

An hon. Member: Socialism.

Mr. Horner: I hear the remark "socialism". I think this could be compared to the Russian system, under which eventually the government owns everything. It now appears that farmers cannot pass on their farms to their sons, unless they become good corporations. If our farmers get together and set up big corporations, what is going to be the next step—state farms? Is the government going to take over our farms completely and manage their production if they are overproducing? I do not know whether that will be the next step, but if it is I would not be surprised. If the government continue on their present course, I suggest that much of this industry will be lost. It will be lost through overproduction and managed control by those who control the economy, this economy which tends to direct farmers into larger and larger units and to destroy active participation by those same farmers in the government and in their operations generally.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. Benjamin: I am happy I was unable to rise to speak until now because I must confess that all the afternoon, before the supper break, I had the feeling I had lost my temper, and that is not a good state to be in when one speaks in this chamber.

My first thought, after hearing the minister introduce these estimates, was, I must say: "Well, I'll be damned!" When the house moved into committee to hear the minister make his statement on these estimates, it was for one reason. The minister knows very well why these estimates were placed before the committee today rather than next week or the week after. It was to allow discussion of the grain crisis in western Canada. Well, in a speech lasting 20 or 30 minutes, the minister uttered not a word on this subject. He had no report to give the house as to what action the government had taken, or was contemplating to deal with this situation.

To me, this smacks of a most casual and indifferent attitude on the part of the minister. It is an attitude of unmitigated gall and amounts to an insult to the farmers of western Canada. It is an extension of what happened last May during the election campaign, when the leader of the Liberal party paid so much attention to farm policy that in the course of travelling between Newfoundland and Vancouver he handed one out through the window of his airplane at Winnipeg.

The whole government knows why these estimates are before the committee today. The grain crisis in western Canada, and its solution, involves not only the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Trade and Commerce but also the Minister without Portfolio, who is supposed to be in charge of the Wheat Board. Incidentally, I wonder what has happened to some of the other prairie liberals—the hon. members for Assiniboia and Provencher. I make no apology to the hon. member for Fraser Valley East and a few others in this house for talking about wheat at this time.

First, I want to say that the government has received repeated warnings about the situation since mid-September. While it might be said that on September 15 or 20 those warnings were premature, or the fears expressed were exaggerated, they have since proved well justified. Representations to the minister on this subject were continued by the farm organizations, by those interested in the grain industry and by members of the House of Commons belonging to opposition parties. I do not doubt for a moment that there were backbenchers on the other side who also expressed warnings and requested that action be taken. Well, we were given repeated assurances that the situation was in hand.

I wish to refer to three factors in this situation—box cars, grain dryers and terminals. We were assured that the railways were co-operating. Mr. Chairman, the supply of railway equipment for the movement of damp and tough grain is still done on a hit or miss basis. The fact is that not only are insufficient cars being supplied but those which are being sent are being allocated inequitably; the railways are only co-operating to the extent that fits in with their own transportation priorities and requirements. A request was made to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce a few days ago that the government appoint a transport controller with complete authority to assess the situation and the requirements at each shipping point in the three prairie provinces and northwestern British Columbia, to co-ordinate the work of the grain companies and terminals for the receiving, drying, forwarding and storage of the grain and, most important of all, require—and I underline that word "require"—the railways to supply the rolling stock and motive power necessary to move damp and tough grain in record time.

At the moment there is no one person or agency responsible for overseeing and co-ordinating the use of railway equipment for grain movement. Instead there is a confused conglomeration of three government departments, three government agencies, three railway companies, all the grain companies and terminals. All these organizations pass the buck among themselves; none seems to know what the others have done or are doing. The inequities in the allocation of box cars as between shipping points at dozens of locations on the prairies smacks of sheer incompetence and indifference on the part of the railways and of the government. Where the railways have been allowed, under Liberal governments, to cancel or suspend scheduled freight or mixed train service, points on some of these lines all too often go two or three weeks without any local train service at all. This is why they do not get box cars. These branch lines suffer unfair treatment as compared with lines where there is a regular, scheduled train service. This unfair allocation of box cars as between subdivisions and as between individual shipping points is not new. It has been going on since the beginning of the bumper crops in 1950-51, and it has become impossible to accept any longer. When it continues in a situation such as faces us this year, marked by the piling up of so much damp and tough grain, it becomes completely incomprehensible.

Let me cite some specific examples. I mentioned in an earlier debate a shipping point called Tate, Saskatchewan. This is a siding on the Canadian National main line between Semans and Nokomis. There are three elevators with a capacity of 114,000 bushels. Mr. Chairman, not one box car was loaded there from July 5 to October 23.

My next example is Tullis, Saskatchewan. This is a dandy. It is in the constituency of the hon. member for Moose Jaw, and is on a Canadian National branch line northwest of Beechy. There are two elevators with a capacity of 104,000 bushels, and it has not received one car in the last nine weeks though there are 15,000 bushels of damp grain at this shipping point.

Now I come to Craven, Silton and Lockwood, three shipping points on a Canadian Pacific branch line between Regina and Nokomis. There are five elevators with a capacity of 300,000 bushels. From September 30 to October 28, a period of four weeks, cars received—none.

Next I turn to Dinsmore, on a C.N. branch line in the same general area as Tullis. This is one of the larger shipping points with five elevators, having a capacity of 584,000 bushels. This is one of the larger shipping points. They have 16,000 bushels of damp grain in store in the elevator. It takes them four days to turn it, and then they have to start turning it again. There are 150,000 bushels of damp grain still in the farmers' hands in that shipping district. The grand total of cars loaded between November 4 and December 4—10

Wolverine—I am sorry the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt is not here because this is in his constituency, C.P.R. line between Lanigan and Colonsay, two elevators, capacity 87,000 bushels. Cars loaded since August 1 —seven, five of them on November 2—none since. For five weeks there have been no cars. There are still 91,000 bushels of damp grain in that shipping district. Of the three bushel quota they can move 46,000 bushels, and that will leave 35,000 bushels to be dried locally. The farmers will require an additional two bushel quota to move their grain.

Young, Saskatchewan, C.N.R. main line between Watrous and Saskatoon, and a C.P.R. branch line, five elevators, capacity 430,000 bushels. Between October 26 and November 30, over four weeks, no cars loaded at the four elevators on the C.N.R. tracks and four cars loaded at the one elevator on the C.P.R. tracks. There are 200,000 bushels of damp grain at this shipping point. They can dry 50,000 bushels locally, and it will take 75 cars to ship the balance.

Lucky Lake, in the constituency of Moose Jaw, C. N. R. branch line next point south of Tullis, four elevators, capacity 346,000 bushels. Five cars were received in the past five weeks, three of them on November 2 and two on November 29. There are 25,000 to 30,000 bushels of damp grain in that district.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

Allan, another place in the riding of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt, C.N.R. main line between Watrous and Saskatoon, five elevators, capacity over half a million bushels. They are all plugged, and again it is taking them four days at a time to turn damp grain in store at those elevators. The last cars received were 12 on November 1. Today is December 5. There are a million bushels of tough and damp grain in the Allan district, and the problem about local drying is that nobody has the cash for it. Some farmers in that district have not even delivered their four bushel units yet. The driers located in that place charge $20 to $45 per hour, depending on capacity, which amounts to ten cents a bushel.

Mr. Chairman, if a few other members of this house will spend the length of time that some of us have, calling country elevator agents, the people who know and who are closest to the problem, they will come up with dozens more places like this. Only the organizational genius of a Liberal government could see to it that, in a country with the two largest railroads in the world, with 40,000 box cars, there would be a short supply of box cars.

I have a telegram here received today by the hon. member for Moose Jaw, from Birsay, Saskatchewan, which reads:

> This point has only had 19 cars for grain loading since new crop year. Elevators plugged and still on unit quota. Some points within 20 mile radius on two bushel dry grain quota. Request you make every effort possible to get cars to this point.

It was sent by Don Kain, President of the Birsay Board of Trade.

I make no apology, Mr. Chairman, for taking up the time of the committee to bring these matters to the attention of the minister. I know that the Minister of Agriculture is not responsible for the allocation of box cars. That matter is supposed to be under the Canadian Wheat Board, but that minister is somewhere else and apparently for him there is no crisis. I know the Minister of Transport has some responsibility for the operations of railways, but that minister too is somewhere else. I know that the Minister of Finance could be helping out with matters financially, but he is somewhere else.

There was a news report in yesterday's Leader-Post as follows:

> Federal Grain Ltd. Monday reported survey results showing that about 72 per cent of this year's prairie grain crop, tough or damp as a result of a wet harvest, will require special storage practices if quality is to be maintained.

"The situation in western Canada is even more critical than we first thought," said Federal President G. H. Sellers.

I don't think it could be said that Mr. Sellers is a man who gets excited easily or who cries doom and gloom.

"On an all-grains total of 1,105 million bushels, 800 million bushels are either tough or damp, it was estimated in the survey by 1,200 Federal grain elevator managers."

We are talking about over $1 billion worth of farm produce, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Sellers said Federal has decided to instal another drier at one of its lakehead terminals and is investigating the possibility of installing more driers at some other terminals.

I suggest they are to be complimented for this. If the government moved half as fast it would be doing better.

That brings me to the question of terminals, but before I refer to that I wish to point out that in spite of the assurance of the government that the railways are co-operating with respect to box cars, this is certainly not the case. I have here the Board of Grain Commissioners figures for car loadings from August 1 to November 30, 1968. Last year in that period car loadings of all grains—wheat, oats, rye, through to rape—if you will pardon the expression, totalled 89,309 cars. In 1968 the figure was 81,490. This shows the great co-operation there has been because this year there have been 8,000 fewer cars moved than in the same period last year.

Let us now move to terminals which come under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Agriculture. I have here car loadings from inland terminals, August 1 to November 30, 1967 and 1968. Things are not doing too badly at Saskatoon terminal. They are working well there. A total of 74 cars have been shipped out of the Moose Jaw terminal, but there were no loads moved out of Moose Jaw inland terminal between August 1 and October 23. In the past five weeks they have shipped 74 cars. Edmonton—big deal—39 cars. They are going to handle lots of grain there. Lethbridge—here is a dandy one—no cars shipped since August 1. There is a grain drier there with a 1,000 bushel capacity. What the hell is it doing? The Minister of Agriculture may say, as the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang), mentioned, that Lethbridge is away south of the trouble. You have only to go north to Red Deer to get damp grain and it can be moved down to the Lethbridge terminal.

Moose Jaw terminal has a capacity of 5.5 million bushels, and I cannot understand why it has a drier with only a 1,000 bushel capacity, yet inland terminals at Edmonton and Calgary have double that amount of grain drying capacity. It passes all understanding. Liberal planning!

We were assured, Mr. Chairman, that the terminal at Moose Jaw was operating seven days a week, 24 hours a day. We have found it has been operating five days a week and not always 24 hours a day. There are not sufficient car loadings of damp grain arriving there to keep the driers operating. There was a hurried meeting a couple of days ago when the minister was in Europe, as a result of which the railways said they would move 140 cars to Moose Jaw by the middle of next week. Last week the minister told the house that they were getting a backlog of cars loaded with damp grain, yet Moose Jaw was not getting enough cars to keep it operating round the clock. The trouble is that there are too many departments, boards and agencies involved, and one does not know what the other is doing.

There is the Robin Hood elevator at Moose Jaw. The flour mill there is closed, but the elevator has a capacity of 1.8 million bushels, and there is no drier there. Why not? Mr. Chairman, grain drying facilities at terminal elevators will be able to handle only about a third of this damp and tough grain. The government has known about this situation for many weeks. In spite of questions asked in the house, and suggestions from other places, it has made no effort to instal additional equipment on an emergency basis at its own terminals. This group, and I am certain other groups in the house, call on the government to institute emergency measures to increase substantially the capacity of its own terminals for grain drying.

We urge country elevator companies both private and co-operative to purchase immediately and to instal additional grain drying equipment, both at their own terminals and at selected country elevator points. The government, if it has not already done so, should immediately call a meeting with the representatives of these companies and officials of the grain companies to persuade them, help them co-ordinate and offer them some incentives to do this. Since wet harvest conditions such as have been experienced this fall occur only once about every eight or ten years on the average, the nation, the Minister of Agriculture and the government of Canada surely cannot expect the farmers to bear all the cost of making substantial expenditures for grain drying equipment that will sit in their yard for five years out of six, or for six years out of seven or eight years. Surely we cannot expect them to bear that cost.

What has happened is not their fault. It is not the fault of the government either; I cannot blame the government for the weather. If I could find a way to do it, I would. Surely it is unfair to expect the farmers to make these substantial expenditures for equipment that will be used this winter and then sit idle for several years. For the individual farmer, this means thousands of dollars of capital, which he does not have, being tied up in extraordinary equipment which in most years is of no benefit as a capital asset on the farm.

Mr. Chairman, I think I have got beyond the point where I lost my temper and will try to be a little warmer now. I hope the Minister of Agriculture will realize that I sincerely mean what I say. I think he is capable of being the best Minister of Agriculture this country has ever had, but I suggest that until he convinces his colleagues on the front benches, and the Prime Minister, that this is a national emergency he will be stuck with the blame, and no one else. I suggest that everyone in this house and this government must take the basic position that this vast problem is much too large for individual farmers to tackle. If there is spoilage of grain, the loss must be that of the whole country and not just of the farmer. The additional cost of drying is unusual. This is no fault of the farmers and therefore they should not be required to bear it alone. Therefore, government action on a massive scale on a number of fronts is warranted and essential in the national interest. This is the position of the New Democratic party. It is a national emergency because a loss of large amounts of grain through spoilage affects the entire Canadian economy. The first to suffer are the farmers because they have a drastic increase in expenses and a drop in their income which has already suffered a decline this year.

This is a national emergency because it affects stocks available for export in the next two years, which in turn will hurt our balance of payment position. There will be layoffs in the farm machinery and the transportation industries, and a subsequent slowdown in supporting industries. There will be a drop in retail sales. Small businessmen will be hurt and so on down the line. This is a national emergency and must be treated as such by the government. In spite of advance warning as early as mid September the government, to date, has shown the imagination of a doorknob and has moved with the speed of a snail to cope with the situation. In fact it has contributed to the problems of the farm industry this fall by permitting unwarranted increased interest rates on farm loans.

I should like to make some proposals. I know the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain has already done this, but I have some other positive proposals. First, I suggest a crash program to instal additional grain drying facilities in government terminals both interior, lakehead and seaport. Second, I suggest incentives for elevator companies to instal additional drying equipment, with the government picking up the shipping costs, giving tax credits, and exempting the companies from the tariff and sales tax. Third, I suggest authority and incentives for elevator companies to instal grain dryers at selected country elevator points. The fourth proposal is that a complete and thorough survey should be made in respect of where the damp grain is located, and where the dryers are. Fifth, the government should pay transportation costs for moving dryers from place to place where needed. Then sixth, all available and suitable dryers in the United States should be located, hired, and airlifted to the prairie provinces, with the transportation costs paid by the government. Dryers should be brought in, along with any competent personnel needed to run them, with the rental and transportation costs paid.

My seventh proposal is that because of light weight grain the wheat board should be reimbursed for all dead freight charges on carload lots of tough and damp grain, so that the farmers will not be required to pay for this through the board, or the railways should be required to lower the minimum carload weights on all grains that are out of condition. Eighth, all possible off-track storage such as airport hangars, curling rinks, skating rinks and warehouses should be located and dryers placed there. How about using some imagination, Mr. Minister? The government should pay the cost of fitting such buildings for temporary grain storage. Ninth, the farmers should be encouraged and assisted in respect of the building of homemade dryers.

The tenth suggestion is that at points where dryers are operated under government or commercial auspices the farmers be paid 20 cents per mile, round trip trucking costs for distances over 10 miles to a maximum of 100 miles. Eleventh, the federal government should reimburse the Canadian Wheat Board for all additional costs for transportation, extra storage, handling, and so on, connected with the movement, drying and so on of damp and tough grain. Twelfth, arrangements should be made with all lake and oceangoing shipping companies to leave a maximum number of ships anchored at the lakehead from the time of freezeup until spring breakup. This was done last year and six million bushels of wheat were stored. This could be doubled this time, and the federal government should pay the cost of this additional storage.

There are a number of members in this house who could think of many more suggestions. I ask the minister to think of these ideas, use some imagination and encourage the government to get off its fat backside and make a move in respect of this national emergency. The suggestion that we have until the end of July next year to dry damp grain is damned nonsense. Surely the government will now profit from this experience and also launch some long term plans so that this never happens again. Our terminals are grossly inadequate, both in terms of capacity and drying facilities. The government must begin a program immediately which within five years will substantially increase the storage and drying capacities.

In Saskatchewan the storage capacity of the terminals at Moose Jaw and Saskatoon need to be doubled and the total drying facilities need to be quadrupled. In Alberta at Lethbridge, Calgary and Edmonton the same thing is required. In Manitoba the only terminal is at Churchill. For years everybody has been asking that the terminal capacities there be increased. A new terminal should be constructed at a place like Dauphin or Brandon.

The government must, on a long term basis, encourage elevator companies to carry on similar expansion of their own facilities. I do not think we will ever see the day when there is less than a 700 million bushel carryover of grain in this country. Our farmers are becoming more and more efficient all the time, much to the discomfort of this Liberal government. I urge that the government, in concert with the grain, elevator and railway companies complete research and testing in respect of improved methods of grain handling, types of railway equipment, the loading and unloading of this equipment, unit trains, and dock and terminal loading and unloading facilities.

Mr. Chairman, may I repeat that this is an emergency. It is not something that can be treated casually. I am sorry that only one minister of the crown could be here on a day when they all knew why we were to have this discussion on the agricultural estimates. I hope the Minister of Agriculture will use all his influence on his colleagues so that all the government departments concerned with any part of this problem will get together to coordinate their activities, in co-operative action along with the provincial governments, so that there will be effective action taken to deal with this grain crisis.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, so that there will be no misunderstanding about the debate that is taking place here in this House of Commons today I wish to make it completely clear that all of the estimates of the Department of Agriculture are before the committee and therefore any suggestion that these estimates have been called solely for the purpose of dealing with one particular problem in the nation is wrong in my opinion.

There is a great problem in western Canada as a result of volumes of tough and damp grain. No one denies that fact. There are also problems of vital interest to the Department of Agriculture in respect of many parts of Canada, and many other products. I say that because I do not want to leave a false impression so far as my attitude is concerned that is, that we are here to have a discussion in respect of grain on the prairies, and only that problem.

Let me now turn to some of the matters which have been raised, by saying to hon. gentlemen opposite and, indeed, on both sides of the house, that they need not continue this debate in an attempt to persuade me that there is a problem in respect of not only damp grain but in respect of many other sectors of the agriculture industry. If they are doing that, they are preaching to the converted, and I accept this.

My next point is that hon. gentlemen opposite should try to come up with some suggestions or guide lines, so far as solutions are concerned. It does not take a great deal of immagination or courage to identify problems. It does take a little bit more to come forward with some kind of well thought out solutions, which in practical terms will be of economic benefit to the farming community.

An hon. Member: Were you listening?

Mr. Olson: I appreciate the remarks made by the hon. gentlemen opposite about the—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Olson: I particularly appreciated the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition who led off the debate, when he said in his opening sentence—

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) says that the opposition does not suggest any solution. He knows the solution to the agricultural. It would be to create an agricultural bank in order to provide—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I would ask the hon. member to allow the minister to go on with his statement, because there is no question of privilege.

[English]

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I was about to comment on the opening statement of the Leader of the Opposition, that I had opened the debate this afternoon with bland remarks about the entire agricultural industry. Let me say to him with all the charity I can muster, there is nothing bland about my attitude toward the agricultural industry. The hon. gentleman then went further by making the accusation that the country was being flooded with cheap United States corn, and indeed that importations were up something like 20 per cent. He did not give any date in this regard, or any calculation for a specific year as opposed to another. For his information, and I think it is well for the Leader of the Opposition to know these things, the average corn production in Canada from 1961 to 1965 was 42.2 million bushels. By 1966 this had increased to 66.3 million bushels. I am talking about Canadian production. By 1967 this had gone up to 74.1 million bushels, and in 1968 production increased to 78.1 million bushels. There has been a steady and significant increase in the production of Canadian corn.

If one is cleverly selective in digging up statistics he can show where there have been increases in the importation of corn, and also that there have been decreases. I think the Leader of the Opposition might like to have another look at the years he is talking about, because it may be that from one year to another there has been an increase in the importation of United States corn.

Mr. Stanfield: Don't you know?

Mr. Olson: At the same time there has been a steady and significant increase in the production of Canadian corn, particularly in Ontario and Quebec, which has been going into the Canadian market.

The hon. gentleman then went on to indicate there was a 6.4 per cent increase in farmers' costs over last year. I think he must have read the statistics wrong because the latest statistics show there has been a 6.4 increase in the index of farm input. This increase amounts to 2.9 per cent so far as costs are concerned. Perhaps that is even too much. I noticed that the hon. member for Crowfoot did not make the same mistake.

The Leader of the Opposition then complained about the decline in wheat exports this year as opposed to the year before and the year before that. That is true, but let me say this to that hon. gentleman. The 1967-68 crop year was the first crop year for a very long period of time that we were selling to the international market without an international agreement.

Mr. Stanfield: Whose fault is that?

Mr. Olson: Whose fault is that? There were 35 nations involved in respect of the agreement. If the hon. gentleman thinks that Canada has any way of forcing her will on the rest of the world he had better reassess his assessment of the situation. It was not Canada who refused to sign the new international grains agreement in April of 1967. I was not there, but my information is that had it not been for Canada coaxing these nations to come back to the negotiating table the talks would have dissolved and we would not have any agreement today.

Mr. Horner: Canada dealt with industries first.

Mr. Olson: That is only part of the story. What the Leader of the Opposition failed to see is that during 1964, 1965, and 1966 we had the highest levels of grains exports, and at the highest prices, in Canada's history.

Mr. Horner: Tell us why.

Mr. Olson: It may or may not be coincidental that the Liberal government was in office at that time.

Mr. Stanfield: And you are in office now.

Mr. Olson: In any event, those are the facts. Those two years were also associated with the highest crops on record. In 1966 we had almost 840 million bushels, and perhaps through the effort of the government—I prefer to refer to it as the efforts of the Canadian Wheat Board—we were able to dispose of the major part of that crop without building any surplus. In my opinion that was a great achievement.

The hon. gentleman then went on to talk about other problems. So that he will not have to bother looking up the facts for himself, let me tell him also that from August 1, which is the beginning of the crop year, to the end of October we have increased our exports by 25 per cent over last year. Our exports have increased by some 23 million bushels over those of a year ago, making a total for that short period of time of something over 94 million bushels.

Mr. Horner: Would the hon. minister permit a question?

Mr. Olson: The Leader of the Opposition did not bother to do his homework in this respect.

Mr. Horner: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Olson: The hon. member will have all kinds of chances to put all kinds of questions.

Mr. Horner: It is just a short question.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Olson: I have pages and pages of questions, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Crowfoot is rising on a question of—

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I should like to answer the hon. member's question after I have answered all the question I already have before me.

• (9:00 p.m.)

The Leader of the Opposition complained that the government did not do anything in the face of some difficulty that the corn producers in southwestern Ontario were having. I tell the Leader of the Opposition that in the face of some difficulty—and he is aware of this—we put on value for duty at the United States loan price of $1.05 U.S. f.o.b. Chicago, on corn entering Canada.

Mr. Stanfield: Where?

Mr. Olson: I can bring a sheaf of letters in here and show that the corn producers and the practical, knowledgeable people in that area claimed it raised their price from 11 cents to 12 cents a bushel within ten days. As a matter of fact, the price of corn in Chatham yesterday was $1.17½ for street, and it is up to $1.21 for May and $1.23 for July futures. So the future is somewhat better. Maybe it is not enough; it is never enough. But this indicates that the Leader of the Opposition is not in touch with the people who know, in that part of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Olson: He then went on to repeat some of the complaints that have been hurled around this house for the last few days about grain drying, and tough and damp grain. He said nothing has been done and the government generally was not living up to its responsiblity with respect to this great problem. I categorically reject that statement. I have spent the last three days in western Canada. I spent some time with the delegates to the Alberta wheat pool convention in Calgary, and at two meetings in Brandon which were attended by farmers from all over the province. The minister of agriculture for Manitoba was there. I have been talking to the minister of agriculture for Saskatchewan today and many times recently. In Alberta there are some other activities going on and it is a little difficult to get hold of the minister right now, but I tried to call him, too.

Mr. Nowlan: Do you have regrets?

Mr. Olson: I say to the Leader of the Opposition that this is one of those kinds of statements that usually are made when you have not bothered looking up the facts. The facts of the matter are that there have been meetings called by the Canadian Wheat Board and the Board of Grain Commissioners in full cooperation with the provincial departments of agriculture, who not only have to, but in fact have assumed a reasonable share of the responsibility for resolving this problem, as has the whole grain industry. They have taken an active part in trying to find solutions to this problem, in time. That is why I resent and reject the statement that the people concerned in the area are not doing anything about it.

There is one other thing, Mr. Chairman. In addition to all the assistance that can be offered by the federal Department of Agriculture and its agencies, the Wheat Board, the provincial departments of agriculture and the grain trade, there is one other factor, and perhaps it is the most important single factor in reaching a solution to this problem. That is the resourcefulness, the ingenuity and the capabilities of the individual farmer. I would like gentlemen on all sides of this house to know that I put a great deal of faith in the capability of a farmer to look after his own crop. I resent the suggestion made by some hon. members that the farmers are standing back, wringing their hands in the face of this problem, and are not doing anything about it.

Mr. Horner: Who suggested that?

Mr. Olson: That is not what they are doing. That is not the breed of men that I know in western Canada. But of course the fact is that this suggestion is not true. It is not even close to the truth.

Mr. Horner: Nobody said it was true.

Mr. Olson: The implication has been that only the government should solve this problem.

Mr. Horner: Do you want to read that editorial again?

Mr. Olson: The government has never claimed that they were going to move in and do this job for the farmers, and the farmers do not want them to either. They are going to be in there helping. Anyone who has any knowledge about the matter and wants to be objective knows what happens when you have a lot of tough and damp grain. There are many ways of handling tough and damp grain, other than sending it through the elevator channels or buying expensive grain dryers.

I can remember being part of farming operations when we had thousands of bushels of tough and damp grain, before we ever heard of on-farm grain dryers. I can remember in 1942, for example, when shipping was restricted and we had thousands of bushels of it. We managed to keep that grain in condition with grain loaders, and by moving it around when the temperature and humidity of the air were drier. Some of that grain was not sold for two and a half years afterwards, and we never lost any of it. Farmers in western Canada today know that too, and if some hon. members would listen in the right places they would find that the farmers know this. The hon. member for Crowfoot, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain and several others know these things. It is amazing to me that they do not tell their colleagues what can be done to keep grain in condition. It can be done by forcing air circulation through it during the winter months, by pumping fresh air into the bins, by moving it from granary to granary, and so on.

Mr. Horner: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Olson: There is no point of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Crowfoot on a point of order.

Mr. Olson: There is no point of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Horner: I know that the trained seals are in good form tonight, but surely they will let one speak. The minister suggested—

Mr. Olson: What is the point of order?

Mr. Horner: May I make it, Mr. Chairman, or would you rule first?

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I would ask the committee to let the hon. member for Crowfoot state his point of order.

Mr. Horner: The minister suggested that certain members on this side of the house were not informed and had not told their farmers how to dry grain. We are well informed on how to dry grain. Most of us in western Canada are well informed in this regard. We have been trying to convince the minister that because of the unusually large amount of damp grain in western Canada the government should take additional measures to solve the problem.

Mr. Olson: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Horner: Certainly it is a point of order.

The Deputy Chairman: That is no point of order.

Mr. Olson: The only point of order involved here, Mr. Chairman, is that the hon. member has not fulfilled his responsibility in advising his leader about what goes on. But there is one other thing that is damaging to the farmers with regard to what has been going on in this house during the last few days. This is the fact that some of our customers, because of the publicity that hon. gentlemen opposite are trying to get out of this situation—

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Olson: Some of this adverse publicity has got to our customers overseas and inquiries are now starting to come in asking us whether the whole Canadian crop is in this terrible condition.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Olson: That is not doing the Canadian farmers any good. All I and the Canadian Wheat Board will have to do is to work to repair the damage to the Canadian reputation for having good wheat on hand.

• (9:10 p.m.)

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar on a question of privilege.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, I have no objection whatsoever to the minister putting his points across. We did so previously, now it is his turn. But I do object when he says that we brought up these questions for the purpose of seeking publicity.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. There is no question of privilege in what the hon. member said.

Mr. Horner: There certainly is.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar said several times in his speech that I took no action, and so on. That is his opinion and I do not object to his saying so. I believe that hon. members opposite are seeking publicity and it is my right to express my opinion also.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Olson: Surely I have a right to express my opinion.

Mr. Stanfield: Go ahead.

Mr. Olson: Let us dispense with these phony points of order and questions of privilege then.

Mr. Horner: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. It is not for the Minister of Agriculture to say we are seeking publicity.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Horner: The Minister of Agriculture suggested someone was raising phony points of order and phony questions of privilege. Let me point out that he himself is doing nothing to improve this debate by making such remarks, because the point of order was quite in order. The minister alleged we said things on this side of the house that we had not said. He was imputing motives when he suggested we were saying these things purely for publicity. I suggest this is definitely a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman. So both the point of order and the question of privilege were in order.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, all I can say is that I am happy I am not as thin skinned as the hon. member.

Mr. Horner: It is apparent you are thin skinned.

Mr. Olson: Let us get back to the serious points in this debate on a very serious matter. An increasing number of inquiries have been coming to the responsible agencies in Canada about whether or not the whole Canadian supply of wheat is in the damaged condition which hon. gentlemen opposite alleged it is. We will have to do a great deal of work now to repair the damage.

Mr. Horner: Read Mr. MacNamara's report.

Mr. Olson: The fact of the matter is that Canada has adequate supplies of good, dry and high quality grain to fulfil all our commitments. So I say that these attempts at solving the problems by hurling allegations and accusations at someone for not having done anything, or for not having done enough—and in this case the allegations are made mostly against the federal government and its agencies—will not help to solve the problem at all. The magnitude of the whole problem is great; no one denies that. What we need is a very close co-operation and co-ordination among everyone who is involved, including those who are traditionally competitors. That is what we need to resolve this problem. With the exception of hon. members on the other side of this house, we are receiving that kind of co-operation all across the country.

I do not want to repeat what I have said about the efforts of the Board of Grain Commissioners in giving publicity to the matter of drying grain, in holding meetings and that sort of thing. I also mentioned that the Wheat Board did call a meeting and publicized the fact that it will be necessary for the farmers to keep some of this grain in condition on their farms, because the volume is too great to send it through commercial channels. This is in addition to the work that has been done by the provincial governments, and I give all three of them full credit for having co-operated in attempting, first of all, to make a survey of the number of on-farm grain dryers that they have, and in their other action to co-ordinate the activity of these grain dryers at strategic points so that they can be of maximum benefit to farmers.

One of the most useful functions would be to set up strategic positions in which the dryers that are already in western Canada could be placed for truck turn-around operations, in addition to the grain dryers that are already in commercial positions. In other words, farmers, who do not need to have a quota to do this, bring in their grain, have it dried and take it back to their farms. Otherwise, all kinds of other problems arise if the dryers have to be moved around too much, or if it is done in other ways. I suggested to many of the farm groups that the people who are in the best position to do that are the elevator companies. The reason is that they have the men in the field with the knowledge, the contacts and the expertise with regard to western Canada where this grain is grown, and they have indicated a willingness to co-operate. Of course there are many details to be worked out and administrative and physical problems that cannot be solved in a day. Action in this respect has been taken a little more rapidly in some provinces than in others, but in all the provinces things are moving along and I give them full credit for it.

In so far as the elevators under the management of the Board of Grain Commissioners are concerned, the Edmonton drying operation is going on 24 hours a day, seven days a week, and there is a sufficient amount of grain for the operation to continue on this basis. The Calgary dryer is operating 24 hours per day, seven days per week. Sometimes insufficient grain is available, but 80 cars of damp grain are expected there at the beginning of next week. The Saskatoon dryer is operating 24 hours a day, seven days a week, and occasionally running out of grain, but it is expected to have sufficient carloads for continued operation by the middle of next week. The Moose Jaw dryer is operating 24 hours a day, five days a week, but, as has been pointed out, they have run out of grain. They will be receiving 140 cars of tough wheat by the first or the middle of next week. Let us bear in mind that Moose Jaw is not in an area of damp wheat, and also that the volume of tough grain is limited; so it has been difficult to set up the machinery to keep this moving through smoothly.

The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre knows as well as I do that it is not possible to set out a policy for the movement of such a large volume of grain and make all the arrangements to put it into motion immediately. This is not the way it works. It takes a little more time than that to start the whole thing moving swiftly and smoothly. He might remember that in the fall of 1965, when the problem was not with wet grain but rather with getting sufficient volumes of grain into export positions, it took up to ten weeks before all these problems had been worked out, and co-ordination was achieved in moving this grain through all the channels into export positions. We did not have this problem last year, and in fact we have not had it since 1959 in great magnitude.

The hon. member for Crowfoot knows that you do not suddenly decide one day that you are going to give a three bushel quota for tough and damp grain and the next day everyone must deliver. It does not work that way. The problem is much greater than that.

Mr. Horner: How many times has the western grain transportation committee met? Once in the last six months.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. Olson: Anyway, Mr. Chairman, the fact is that a great deal has been done. The work on the arrangements for the fiscal movement of this grain started several weeks ago and the movement in and out of dryers has been building up. So far as I am concerned, the co-operation from the people in the field has been excellent. There will be some places where more could be done. I do not claim we have done everything that could be done, but it is a long, long way from the truth to say that we have not done anything.

I want to turn to another subject, and that is the matter of family farms raised by the Leader of the Opposition. He wondered if we had concern for family farms. We certainly do. I want to tell him for example, that the Farm Credit Corporation—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret that I have to interrupt the hon. member because his time has expired.

Mr. Stanfield: The minister is so entertaining, and he may give us some information later, so let him keep on.

Mr. Olson: I thank the committee for that. I have a lot of questions to answer and I shall do so as quickly as possible. I was about to tell the Leader of the Opposition that the credit extended by the Farm Credit Corporation in 1963 amounted to $96 million, and by 1967 it had gone up to $251 million. This is a rather significant increase. In so far as crop insurance is concerned, in 1963 the average for family farms was in the neighbourhood of $16 million and by 1967 it had gone up to $187 million. One can see, therefore, that these programs are designed specifically with the family farm in mind. There has been a great deal of response to these programs by those in these farm units.

The Leader of the Opposition also had something to say about the national congress on agriculture.

Mr. Stanfield: Why don't you deal with the point I made about family farms, if you are going to talk about them?

Mr. Olson: You mean about succession duties?

Mr. Stanfield: Yes.

Mr. Olson: Well, the hon. gentleman knows very well that there were no succession duty changes that were different for farmers than for any other citizens in Canada. It is the responsibility of the Minister of Finance to deal with matters relating strictly to finance, and which apply to all citizens of Canada. There is no discrimination with regard to those small farms or small businesses, so it seems to me that the Leader of the Opposition has the same access to the Minister of Finance as I have and could make these representations to him.

Mr. Nowlan: Did the Minister of Finance talk to you before he brought in these taxes; that was the question?

Mr. Olson: The Minister of Finance and I have a number of conversations on a number of things.

Mr. Stanfield: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Olson: Certainly.

Mr. Stanfield: Is he concerned about the effect of these taxation proposals on the family farm, or is he not?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, the answer to that question is yes. I might say that, as Minister of Agriculture, I am concerned about all things that affect the well-being of people who are involved in agriculture.

The Leader of the Opposition had some remarks to make about the national congress on agriculture. He felt there would be some disability suffered because of the failure of the two farm organizations to nominate someone to the steering committee. I should like to advise him that there were, we felt, a reasonable number of positions created on the steering committee; I think there were five. We asked the ten provincial departments of agriculture to nominate one representative on the committee. They got together and did nominate one person to that committee. We asked the processing and marketing groups in the country to nominate a representative to the committee, which they did. We asked the farmers union and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture to nominate someone to represent them on the steering committee. I have the letters, if the hon. member would like to see them. Both organizations wrote back and said they could not agree on who it should be, so they nominated more than one person. Well, there was only one position vacant. It seems to me the Leader of the Opposition should recognize that if ten provincial governments of different political stripes could get together to nominate one person to represent them on the steering committee, surely it was not expecting too much for two farm organizations to do this.

I believe it was the hon. member for Crowfoot who said—and these are not my words—that it is well known there is some disagreement between these two organizations. I do not endorse that. If there is, I do not think it should be transferred into the steering committee, when we are trying to set up a national congress on agriculture.

The Leader of the Opposition said we should have some projections made for 1975, and even beyond that. I want to tell him that I have with me an agricultural projection prepared on an international scale by the OECD. The ink is hardly dry on it because we got it in Paris last week. This projection was prepared in co-operation with all countries within the OECD area—Japan, North America, most of western and southern Europe. What the hon. member is suggesting we should be investigating, in fact, has already been done.

Mr. Horner: That does not include the communist countries.

Mr. Olson: We have some information on them, too. Unless there is a higher level of agreement in the international field with regard to co-ordinating national policies and to adjusting some of the incentives to give consideration to the subsidies, these long term projections in so far as agriculture is concerned are not very optimistic for some commodities. There are some commodities of course where things are somewhat easier. With regard to dairy products, for example, and cereals, there are some very severe problems, unless some political decisions are reached to change some of these incentive subsidy programs. I have no fear for Canadian agriculture. We can compete on a practical basis with anyone in certain crops that we grow well. I am deeply concerned about competition between national treasuries in connection with these subsidies.

I will be the first to admit, because I am directly involved and probably spend more hours than anyone else in this house on the problems of agriculture, that there are some very difficult problems. For example a reference was made, I believe by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar, to the outlook conference which was held in Ottawa on November 25. If you took all the documents and made a summary of them you would find the outlook conference concluded that Canadian farm income cash receipts will rise, because of increased returns from the livestock sector. They concluded also there would be little change in cash crop returns. So far as crop insurance is concerned, the coverage taken up in 1969 is expected to increase. So far as seed costs are concerned, there is likely to be no increase in expenditures for seed. Of course, we have had above average production of wheat, and this is good.

On the marketing side, we admit that there are some problems. As I said before, for the first three months of this crop year our exports were up 25 per cent over the same period a year ago.

The outlook conference indicated that corn production in Ontario and Quebec will continue to rise. It also indicated that, with respect to apples and fruit, prices should be up, this because of some smaller crops. Increased marketings of honey are cutting into supplies, but the indication is that prices will strengthen in 1969.

[Mr. Olson.]

In regard to processed fruit, packs were lighter and higher prices are expected. So far as processed vegetables are concerned, except for tomato products and perhaps peas and corn, prices will likely be stronger. With regard to sugar beets, a stabilization payment on the 1968-69 crop is likely, and grower returns may average above the support level.

As far as beef is concerned—and this is one of the bright spots—beef supplies in 1969 will be higher than in 1968, but a continued strong demand will sustain prices. With respect to hogs, marketings in 1969 will be below the high 1968 levels, although it is not expected that prices will rise very much above the present levels. However, they are at significantly higher levels than they have been for some time.

Prices of lamb and veal are expected to remain relatively high. Production of chickens will likely rise at steady prices, without any break in those prices. We anticipate a further increase in the demand for turkeys, which is expected to warrant a 5 per cent increase in production for the next year.

As far as eggs are concerned, there are reduced marketings and higher prices are likely in 1969 until mid-year, when there may be some seasonal decline.

So it is not all dark clouds on the horizon as far as agriculture is concerned. I do not want anybody to say that I said "You never had it so good"; but if hon. members are going to be objective in looking at the whole agricultural picture they must admit there are some reasonably bright spots, along with the troubled areas.

I have already trespassed on my time, Mr. Chairman, but I hope hon. members will not mind if I take two or three more minutes to answer the points they have raised.

The hon. member for Bellechasse suggested that there be a substantial increase in the estimates for the Department of Agriculture. I would be the last one in this house to disagree with that. However we must bear in mind that this has to be balanced against the needs and requirements of all other sectors of the economy. As far as the estimates are concerned, they are up slightly from the estimates for last year.

I should like to thank the hon. member for Fraser Valley East for his very constructive remarks.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nowlan: Explain.

Mr. Olson: It is true, and I can explain that statement in a couple of sentences. If hon. members really want to be objective and get at the root of solving these problems, then I suggest that what the hon. member for Fraser Valley said is far more beneficial in the search for solutions than all the whining and complaining that went on from members opposite.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain tried to impress upon me that there were problems with grain drying. I acknowledged at the outset that this was a problem of great magnitude. The hon. member suggested that certain services be provided by the Board of Grain Commissioners. I want him to know that these services are already being provided and that we are going to expand them as rapidly as we can. This service on the part of the Board of Grain Commissioners is free, and is directed as much as possible to what you might call quality control, offering advice and that sort of thing, in order to see no serious mistakes are made which would damage the quality and grade of the wheat.

The hon. member also suggested that the F.C.C. declare a moratorium on payments. I would advise the hon. member that we are not prepared to do this. However, we have, and have had for some time, a regulation whereby anyone who has been severely adversely affected by weather conditions can apply to the F.C.C. for deferment of his payment. If just cause can be shown for deferring the payment, then permission is granted.

The hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria, I believe it was, inquired about setting up a potato marketing board. May I tell him that the task force is looking into that matter. But even more important than this, in co-operation with the provincial ministers we have, in my view, made a great deal of progress toward finding a way, legally and technically, of empowering a national marketing board to take this step. We are not particularly concerned whether this means a transfer of jurisdiction in this particular area from the provinces to the federal government, or whether some contractual arrangement is made. But if this action is taken, we want the result to be workable. Throughout the meetings that we had with the provinces going as far back, in my experience, as July, a great deal of progress has been made, and there has been a meeting of minds in an attempt to resolve this problem.

The hon. member also suggested that there has been a reduction in potato acreage in New Brunswick; or perhaps he was inquiring whether there had been, it was not clear. During the five year period from 1961 to 1965 the average acreage of potatoes in New Brunswick was 53.6 thousand acres, whereas in the current year it is 61,000 acres. So there is no indication that it is down this year from that average.

I now come to some of the matters raised by the hon. member for Crowfoot. The hon. member complained that there has not been enough active sales promotion. I do not accept that statement. The Canadian Wheat Board do not announce to the world where they send their agents to try to sell grain. He complained about the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce being away in South America and failing to sell grain. How does the hon. member know that the minister was not trying to sell grain down there? I would be very surprised if he were not.

Mr. Stanfield: He told me that he was not.

Mr. Horner: I never said that. We have never sold grain to South America.

Mr. Olson: Well, Mr. Chairman, I suppose we would be criticized if we did not explore every possibility of selling grain, whether in South America, Asia or anywhere else.

The hon. member also complained about a drop in flour exports. I am as concerned as anybody about lagging flour exports or any other commodity, but I do not think the hon. member is justified in suggesting that the Canadian Wheat Board is not doing a good job of sales promotion.

The hon. member also complained about research, and said we were lagging behind. I think he read from the report of the Economic Council when he suggested that we were lagging behind the research efforts of the United States, or wherever it was. I wonder whether the number of scientists per million acres or the number of dollars spent on research, and so on, is really the measure. In this context the hon. member was talking about cereal plant breeding, I think. As far as hard wheat is concerned, more new varieties have been developed in Canada than in any other part of the world. So I do not think we need apologize for what our researchers have been doing in this area.

The hon. member also talked about the steering committee of the conference next March and suggested there was insufficient representation, but I have answered that.

The hon. member also brought up the matter of beef, and said that partially cooked beef was coming in from the Argentine. May I advise him that this is fully cooked beef in sealed tins or sealed polythelene wrappers, not something else.

May I thank the committee for allowing me to speak over my time. If I have missed any questions, I am sorry and I will try to answer them during the next few minutes.

Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Chairman, I will try not to hold up the proceedings unduly but there are a few questions I should like to ask the minister. Two concern items that originated with his predecessor, the former minister of agriculture. Item No. 1 concerns the promised $60 per acre for not growing sugar beets—the phasing out program. This indirectly affects the minister, because shortly after parliament convened in September I asked him when the farmers could expect the $60 payment they were promised by the previous minister on June 10, 15 days before the federal election. His reply was to the effect that payment had been held up due to lack of information as to those eligible. That was quite acceptable. About one month later I inquired again. The minister advised me that lists of those eligible had been received and that the department was working on them. I naturally assumed that payment would soon be expected. In fact this was inferred. I am a patient man. I waited another month before putting my question again. I was then told by the minister that payment could not be made until it had been authorized by parliament. In other words, the undertaking which the previous minister of agriculture had given to the farmers of southwestern Ontario was not worth the paper it was written on. I do not blame the present minister in any way, shape or form, and I will say nothing more about it if he can tell me that provision is made in these estimates to get those cheques out promptly.

Mr. Olson: We have examined this question as to whether we can legally pay these amounts without a vote title, or a supplementary estimate. The Department of Justice advises us that we need a supplementary estimate. I am prepared to submit that. I should like to tell the hon. gentleman that we now have all the data required to determine the total of the amount required and we expect it will be just short of $1 million.

[Mr. Olson.]

I should like to correct one impression. The purpose of this is not to make a payment for not growing sugar beets; it is to assist people in getting into some other crop, during the transitional period, because a plant closed. And that was not the responsiblity of the federal government.

Mr. McCutcheon: I fully accept that. If the minister had been listening carefully he would have heard me use the phrase "phasing out program".

There is one other item to which I should like to refer, and that is the final payment in relation to the last crop grown in 1967, in other words, the final settlement. Normally this final settlement is made considerably earlier in the year. Indeed in 1965 it was made in late October, just before another federal election. Why the delay? It is my understanding that this comes under the stablization board, and as such there is no need to wait for a supplementary estimate.

Mr. Olson: Would the hon. gentleman wish me to answer that question before he continues?

Mr. McCutcheon: I would appreciate it.

Mr. Olson: It is true that payments have been made earlier in final settlement, but not under the present formula, and further information is still needed before we are in a position to make the final payment. However we expect that it can be made reasonably soon—perhaps within two weeks, or four weeks. The hon. member can decide whether this is "soon" or not. We do not need vote title for these payments; we already have sufficient authority.

Mr. McCutcheon: Thank you. There is another item I should like to deal with. The minister himself alluded to it this afternoon. I was about to ask the hon. gentleman what happened to the Barber commission on farm machinery. This is so ancient that when it was organized it was called a commission. I noticed this afternoon the minister referred to it as a task force, in line with the new nomenclature. I submit we should by now have been given an interim report. If one had been made, perhaps it would not have been necessary for farmers to import tractors from the United Kingdom at an estimated saving of between $2,000 and $3,000 per unit. Surely we are entitled to know something about the causes of this obvious disparity in prices. My farmers want to know how this comes about. There are many who suggest there must be pressure from high financial circles and that this is causing undue delay.

I am not one who sees sinister motives behind everything, but my tolerance is being strained to the limit by current developments. I should like to refer to one suggestion I have heard, namely that this government of which the minister is a member has placed an embargo so as to prevent farmers duplicating the effort they made in Toronto a few weeks ago in importing these tractors. If the interest of the farmers is paramount—and I think it is a big "if"—cannot some report be made as to the terrible disparity which now exists in prices? Why should it have been necessary for a group of farmers to take the action they did in importing tractors from the United Kingdom to Canada at a reported saving of $20,000 on seven tractors? I am more confident than ever that there are forces at work in this country, and indeed, in the world, against the welfare of the farm segment, and I think this should be investigated. But investigation is one thing; reporting on the results of the investigation is another.

The high prices of farm machinery are not being brought about by our own Canadian dealers across this country, most of whom deserve our sympathy rather than condemnation. The mortality in this business is unusually high. Last week I was shocked when I returned to my home to hear of two more business failures among farm equipment dealers, and this in an ever-lengthening list. Most of these dealers are financially involved, up to their necks. The big suppliers stand to lose very little, because most of the dealers have been forced to co-sign and are responsible for time payments in the event of default.

I suggest that the pattern of government, indeed the aim of government apparently is to provide the cheapest food, in abundance, for consumers. If this is the aim I do not argue against it; but this being the aim, then I submit that every consideration should be directed toward helping the producer reduce his costs. Instead of that the reverse seems to be the case.

We have free trade in farm equipment between Canada and the United States. This pertains supposedly as well to used equipment and so, with the tremendous volume of equipment used in the United States, many people, particularly from my area, who were short of cash, went to the United States and purchased some of this used equipment. There was greater variety available, and in many cases tremendously lower prices.

I am thinking of the tremendous auction sale held bi-monthly at Archibald, Ohio, where some of my neighbours were able to pick up machinery that would do them, at vastly reduced prices. Indeed, some of the dealers down there also transacted quite a bit of business in this regard. But this was not the case for long. The revenue department, under excise, found some obscure way of taxing these transactions, so that this alternate source of equipment has nearly dried up. This has had the effect, minimal though it might be, of increasing costs. The commission should have some information on this phase of agricultural costs, and moreover should be reporting it.

Returning to the farmer imported tractors from the United Kingdom, one of the disturbing features is the fact that some of these machines are manufactured by great international concerns, and many are assembled from parts made in different parts of the world. An expert on farm equipment tells me that in some machines a transmission case might be cast in England, the differential might be cast in France, and the final machine could conceivably be assembled in the United States. If this is the case, how does the minister account for the tremendous differences in price? There are too many unanswered questions here in the mind of the farmer, with his back to the wall, caught in the cost-price squeeze. Hopefully the Barber commission may shed some light on this, and I was happy to learn, if I heard the minister correctly, that that commission's report will be published early next year.

Machinery costs are one factor in the cost of doing business but there are several others. A new word has crept into our vocabulary and all the experts are using it—inputs. I take it to mean all the items that go into the cost of production. This being the case, then commercial fertilizer is one of these inputs.

I am concerned, as many people are, about the great spread between farm costs in Canada and those in the United States. This is another factor that weighs heavily on the competitive position of the Canadian farmer. The fact that potash produced in Canada is reportedly selling for one third less, and even greater discounts, in the United States than is current here, demands an urgent investigation. I know the minister is aware of some of these discrepancies, and indeed said in this chamber that there is nothing to prevent Canadian farmers going to the United States and buying their fertilizer there. Well, we will soon know, but I suspect from information coming to me that there may be a few roadblocks. As a matter of fact I think some road blocks are already being thrown up. Imagine, if you will, potash brought to the head of the lakes from Saskatchewan, shipped by boat to Ohio, and sold to Ohio and southwest Michigan farmers reportedly at $20 per ton less than farmers in southwestern Ontario can buy it.

Here are some examples of the advertised fall list prices for southwestern Ontario compared with Ohio and southwest Michigan prices. It covers a variety of fertilizers. The first one is 6-24-24. The Canadian price for it is $91.50 per ton bulk, and the U.S. price $53. The bagged price in Canada is $96.50 per ton, and in the United States $57. Let us take another analysis—8-32-16. The Canadian price is $101 per ton bulk, and the U.S. price $58. The Canadian price bagged is $106 and the U.S. price bagged $62. Urea 45 per cent nitrogen has a Canadian price of $116 bagged, and the United States price is $69.

This is too large a spread. Our farmers cannot be expected to compete with this spread. For example, many farmers in my area use as much as 500 or 600 pounds per acre, yes, even up to half a ton or more. Of course many use less, but if you use an average of, say, 300 pounds per acre of 6-24-24 then our farmers' cost is $14.46 per acre compared with $8.55 in the United States, a spread of $5.91. That is the disadvantage the Canadian farmer is at, just on that one input.

Recently, Mr. Chairman, a very large chemical plant started to manufacture nitrogen fertilizer close to my home area. It has been suggested that this Canadian plant may well be supplying the U.S. fertilizer company that offers Urea at $69 per ton compared with a Canadian price of $116 per ton. This is about the same kind of deal there is in the U.S.-Canada automobile pact, where an automobile manufactured in Oakville sells for $300 or $500 less in Buffalo than it does in Hamilton.

Mr. Smerchanski: Would the hon. member permit a question? Is he speaking of dealers' price, manufacturers' price or distributors' price?

[Mr. McCutcheon.]

Mr. McCutcheon: If the hon. member would care to wait until I finish he can ask me this question again.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being ten o'clock it is my duty to rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house.

Progress reported.

• (10:00 p.m.)

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I may be permitted to advise the house, as acting house leader, that the estimates of the Department of Fisheries will be called for tomorrow instead of the estimates of the Department of Transport as was announced earlier by the President of the Privy Council. I understand that this is in compliance with discussions held between parties and the suggestion made in the house earlier today.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, if the consideration of the estimates of the Department of Fisheries should be concluded, what other department would we move to tomorrow?

Mr. Olson: Well, the second reading of the Bretton Woods agreement I understand. There are several other matters that could be taken up. I am advised by the President of the Privy Council to make this announcement at this time so that hon. members will be advised. Perhaps the house leader for the New Democratic party would know what else. However, earlier today the indication was that the Department of Fisheries would take all day tomorrow.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

HOUSING—TORONTO—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MALVERN PROJECT

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, on Friday November 30 I asked the following question on the orders of the day, as reported at page 3307 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport who is in charge of housing. What progress, if any, has been made with regard to building homes at the Malvern project in order to ease the housing crisis in Toronto?

As a result of that question I was directed either to put it on the order paper or discuss it on the adjournment debate. I also asked a supplementary question which reads as follows:

> Will the minister consider appointing the former mayor of Toronto, now the hon. member for York West (Mr. Givens), to be in charge of this project? Otherwise the housing policy may well be a charade.

I asked these questions because back in 1953 a 1,662 acre parcel of land situated at the corner of Sheppard and Markham Road in the township of Scarborough was jointly acquired by the federal government and the provincial government of Ontario and set aside for public low cost housing. Then in 1954 the Ontario government announced it would build 5,000 homes on this site. Fifteen years later not a single house stands on this land. On January 12, 1967 Mr. Randall, on behalf of the Ontario government, announced that work would begin immediately. No action was taken in that year. On August 28, 1968 Mr. Randall stated, as reported in the Globe and Mail:

> The time is now ripe to develop the (Malvern) area . . . Sewers, water and roads are within close proximity. Our partner, Central Mortgage and Housing Corp., is only now willing to go ahead with the scheme as is the municipality of Scarborough and we will proceed with all possible speed.

This was on August 28. The latest rumour we have is that the building will commence in January of 1969. This is the reason I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer), who is in charge of housing, for a report.

Thirty thousand new public and private homes could be built on this land. The Home Ownership Made Easy plan of the Ontario government could be implemented in respect of this project. With the serious housing crisis we have in Toronto, particularly in respect of public housing, this project would help to ease the situation.

Earlier I suggested to the minister that the former mayor of Toronto, now the member for York West (Mr. Givens), could be put in charge of the federal housing responsibilities. Thus far the former mayor has had difficulty in applying his administrative talents in Ottawa. It was the mayor who said before the finance committee last week that this committee was a charade. I have no desire to have the former mayor of Toronto say that the housing policy of the federal government is a charade.

I had hoped the minister in charge of housing would be present to give a full reply, but I am sure the hon. member who will reply will deal with this matter adequately. It is for that reason I took only five minutes, so as to give him more time to deal with this serious question.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I hope the information given to me by the office of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) will shed some light on this Malvern housing project to which the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) has just referred. I am sure the hon. member knows that the Malvern lands were purchased by both governments, and that the feasibility study was sponsored jointly by the federal and provincial governments in 1967. This led to the appointment of consultants in March of 1968, with the request that they prepare a development plan. Provided a plan of subdivision can be registered by mid-1969, it is expected that the installation of services will be under way by the end of that year. The appointed consultants have the responsibility for the design of services and also the supervision of their installation. Actual house construction should follow immediately after the installation of services. I should like to assure hon. members that work on the Malvern lands is proceeding steadily and that I believe this project will be a great success.

I should also like to bring to the attention of hon. members the fact that the provision for more housing for the Canadian people is steadily increasing. Earlier this week the president of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation told a housebuilding conference in Toronto that housing starts in Canada will reach a record total of 190,000 this year, compared with 164,123 last year. This is good news following the previous forecast of 175,000 housing starts for 1968.

Urban housing starts for the first 11 months of this year totalled 147,076, up 19.5 per cent from the corresponding period last year. As a member of parliament representing a Toronto constituency, I am very happy to note that in metropolitan Toronto 34,207 housing starts have been achieved in the first 11 months of this year. This figure already exceeds the total for the whole record year of 1965.

Furthermore, I believe that greater achievements in the housing field will be made after the Minister of Transport puts into motion some of the excellent recommendations made to the federal task force on housing.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

RURAL DEVELOPMENT—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF ARDA REPORT ON INDIAN POVERTY AREAS

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday of this week I requested permission to table a special report concerning Indian people. That request was apparently not acceptable, mainly because of the actions of government members. I propose to discuss this matter at this time. The hiding of this report is just one more symptom of the insistence of privacy on the part of this government.

• (10:10 p.m.)

The Indian Act is under review, and hearings are relatively public. That is a good step as far as it goes, and we applaud it. But the public approach to the Indian Act is the exception. The rule of this government is to meet in private and to make decisions without adequate consultation. We saw that in regard to the reorganization of the Department of Indian Affairs, and we are seeing it again now. This is a most important report. It is highly critical of the present government, which it describes as "a paternalistic and custodially attuned administration, which has resulted in the failure to arrive at any positive policies and goals, and any comprehensive attack... to alleviate the present disadvantaged position of the Indian people."

Therefore, in this report officials of the government itself condemn the government's own policy in exactly the terms that we and spokesmen of the native people themselves have used. Government policy is condemned by its own officials as being paternalistic and inefficient. That is an important fact because it proves that there is virtually unanimous agreement that the policies of the department of Indian affairs have kept the native people down. The report states the conclusion that "fundamental changes in the direction of federal policy and in the roles of the federal and provincial governments will be necessary before the gap"—between the Indian and the average Canadian—"will begin to close."

This report goes on to suggest a different approach. It points out the importance of using, adapting and co-ordinating existing policies of regional development, health services, manpower and other policies to help the native people. It refers to the serious fact that present policy creates among the native people a sense of separateness which is bound to breed prejudice and inequality. It says that the centralization in the Indian affairs branch has "in practice blocked the provinces and other federal programs to Indians, and more particularly, those programs developed to facilitate the relief of economic disadvantage."

[Mr. Haidasz.]

The report points out that the income gap between the Indian and other Canadians is growing larger, not smaller. It emphasizes the importance of co-operation with the provinces and suggests the provinces will need money as well as encouragement from Ottawa before they are prepared to actively initiate new programs. It recommends the establishment of a special joint committee comprising "as a minimum, representatives from the Indian affairs branch, the rural development branch and the social development group of the privy council office." It suggests this committee should be struck as soon as possible and should prepare a comprehensive submission to outline strategy and examine both policy and financial implications of various programs.

This report is not a blueprint, of course. It does not have all the answers, and some of its suggestions need study and discussion. But it is a report with some authority, prepared by senior people with extensive experience in public service. It is a report which would be helpful to every group concerned about the condition and prospects of our native people. It is a report that should be made public.

This government has talked about involvement and participation. Obviously it says one thing and does another. The government promises involvement, and then it hides reports. This report will not stay hidden. Although I have been denied permission to table it in the house, we have had some copies made at our own expense and they will be available to representatives of the press and the native people's organizations.

Mr. Chairman, it is important at any time for the public to know what is going on and to have a chance to influence policy. It is especially important in respect of this problem, because it is a matter of great concern to people across the country. It is a question in which Canadians are prepared to become involved, if the government will lift the cloak of secrecy. Even more important, it concerns a group of people who for too long have been denied a voice in their own affairs. Let me quote one last passage:

> Concerning the development of leadership and of social organization, the potential represented by the band councils and the Indian organizations has been more or less ignored, even stifled.

The custodial practices of the federal government have, in short, taken from the Indians all capability to influence and to spell out for themselves the decisions which determine the conditions of their existence. Among other consequences, this approach has engendered a suspicion and a profound lack of confidence concerning all government efforts aimed at effecting changes in their way of life, and paradoxically at the same time it has resulted in attitudes of passivity and a greater and greater dependence on the Indian affairs branch.

I can only say in conclusion that in refusing to publish this report the government is revealing its paternalism once again. It does not trust the native people. It does not even trust parliament. The government should know that it will not be judged on its words but rather on its deeds.

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, I want to answer the question very quickly in the three minutes I have under the rules. I will say initially to my hon. friend from Churchill that there is no report intended for the purposes which the hon. member has mentioned. However, before I go into details I wish to say, in fairness to the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—and I put this on the record—that earlier in this session, on October 10, in a notice of motion for the production of papers he asked——that an order of the house do issue for a copy of the report prepared by ARDA dealing with poverty among the Indians of Canada.

I discussed that with the hon. member for Winnipeg North and told him what I am going to tell my friend from Churchill tonight. He agreed, and the motion was withdrawn.

I think, with all due respect to the hon. member for Churchill, that he does no service to the native people, nor does he do any service to the parliamentary process when he quotes from a report that is still under consideration and that is indeed one of many interdepartmental reports that were never intended for publication, but in fact are for the consideration of departmental officials and the minister in the eventual formation of policy dealing with native peoples. As I indicated earlier, no such report had ever been tabled in parliament, nor was there any intention other than that of providing a basis for consideration, together with many other interdepartmental reports for the consideration of officials of the department and the minister.

It is difficult for me to know, from what the hon. member has said, exactly what report he is referring to. As I indicated, there have been several reports along this line but I have been able to identify the report which was for interdepartmental study. It was not designed for publication, and may I repeat that it is not doing a service to our departmental or our parliamentary process to pick this particular report out of several. It only creates confusion among those who are concerned, confusion in this house and confusion among the departmental officials who have to deal with this matter and report to the minister. I think it is particularly unfair to those officials to have singled this report out of many.

SPORTS—HOCKEY—ASSISTANCE TO CANADIAN NATIONAL TEAM

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): One of the main characteristics of the new government that was elected last June 25 is a growing tendency to delay action on important issues. The question I wish to bring to the house tonight concerns the financial assistance which, over recent years, has been made available to the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association to assist in the support of Canada's national hockey team. I raised this question on Tuesday but there was no answer at that time in the house.

• (10:20 p.m.)

Mr. Munro: You were ruled out of order.

Mr. Dinsdale: As the minister has just stated, I was ruled out of order; this is quite correct, and I raised a question of privilege yesterday. However, I understand that the minister did make a statement outside the house. This is the first opportunity I have had to bring the matter once again before the house, under the rules, to see if we could have a statement from the minister in this chamber.

The C.A.H.A. a few years, in attempting to deal with problems that had become particularly difficult and embarrassing for Canada, with the assistance of outstanding Canadians such as Father Bauer, organized a national hockey team for international competition. All Canadians pride themselves on the fact that Canada has established an outstanding reputation in hockey, which we regard as our national sport. There are some of course who would dispute that and say lacrosse is our national sport. I am not going to debate that point. I think we all recognize Canada has established an outstanding record in hockey. Indeed, hockey players are one of our main exports to the United States.

This national hockey team system has been assisted by means of grants that have been made available under the physical fitness plan. While this was an improvement over the old system, it was recognized by the C.A.H.A. that it still was not satisfactory. They have been pressing for the establishment of a more effective permanent system of providing an outstanding Canadian team for international competition. They have recommended, for example, that a Canada hockey corporation be set up, which would involve distinguished citizens interested in the promotion of Canadian national hockey competition, and which would provide possibilities for assistance by private citizens of Canada's amateur hockey team. Unfortunately there has been no progress in this direction, largely because it requires certain legislative action on the part of the government.

However, this year we do have two national hockey teams preparing for international hockey, one in the east and one in the west. At the moment, one of the teams is engaged in important international competition. Unfortunately, because of the delay in sending the usual grant from the physical fitness fund, the C.A.H.A. finds itself financing on the basis of bank loans. I am sure that all the members in the house, all the people of Canada, feel that this is placing an unnecessary additional impediment in the way of Canada's participation in international hockey competition. I trust that the minister, in his reply tonight, will be able to inform the house and Canadians generally that these grants will be forthcoming. I do not know what the reason for the delay is. I am sure funds are available. I am sure we all agree that we have to improve even further the method of bringing together teams of Canadian amateurs.

I would hope the government would be able to assist the C.A.H.A. through legislative action in achieving the goal they have been striving toward for two or three years, the establishment of a Canada hockey corporation. Until that happy eventuality, I think it is most important that we do everything we can to boost the morale of our young Canadians who are competing by at least making certain that the usual grant is forthcoming at the earliest possible moment, and supporting them financially to this extent.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I quite agree with the hon. member's remarks concerning the morale of Canada's national team. This gives me the opportunity to indicate that whatever action the government is taking it should certainly not be given the interpretation that we are not in any way in wholehearted support of Canada's national team. We would be very silly indeed if we did not recognize the tremendous effort that these boys are making, in many cases at enormous sacrifice, to bring some renown to Canada; they have our wholehearted support, and certainly mine.

If our support does not follow the pattern that the hon. member thinks appropriate, then that is his judgment. As far as I am concerned the action the government is now taking will in the long run be in the interests of our national team, both this year and next year.

There really has not been any delay for which we have to apologize. The fact of the matter is that the C.A.H.A. wrote to me requesting money some weeks ago. Their letter arrived a few days prior to a meeting that the C.A.H.A. was having in Winnipeg. At that time I had just received the second report of one of the committees of the National Advisory Council on Fitness and Amateur Sport which was studying the whole question of hockey. This was a report from the chairman and members of that committee, which in certain aspects was very critical of the C.A.H.A. and its relationship with the professionals.

One of the members of the official opposition who had studied this report asked me whether I did not have some sympathy with its contents. As a matter of fact, there were some matters worthy of note in this report. Therefore I thought it was only reasonable to advise the C.A.H.A. that, having received this second report only a few days prior to receiving their letter, I should have adequate opportunity to study it.

The following week end, which was past the deadline that they had set in their letter for a decision, my own fitness and amateur sport council was meeting to discuss the matter. I felt that since this body had been set up by statute to advise the minister in these matters, it seemed eminently logical to me that I should at least first meet the council and discuss this request before giving my answer to the C.A.H.A.

Having met with the council approximately two weeks ago it was decided that we would be prepared to meet with the C.A.H.A. in a matter of days.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Perrault): Order.

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, may I just have one more minute of time?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Perrault): Does the house give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Munro: Since a meeting with the C.A.H.A. was not convenient at that time, the meeting was put off until this week, and then a decision will be made.

There are certain arrangements to be entered into. The C.A.H.A. are asking for a money commitment for this year and next year. In turn I should like them to indicate what they are prepared to do in terms of assistance for Canada's national team, both next year and in following years. So there is some negotiation involved here and the matter will not be settled until the latter part of this week.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.31 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, December 6, 1968

The house met at 11 a.m.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Third, fourth and fifth reports of special committee on procedure of the house—Mr. Blair.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

MONTREAL—INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION OF BUILDING

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) I should like to make reference to a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Sainte-Marie (Mr. Valade). In response to the question the Secretary of State indicated that the C.B.C. had signed contracts for the construction of the C.B.C. centre in Montreal. In fact the contracts have not been signed, but the C.B.C. has sought authority from the Treasury Board to sign these contracts. It had been hoped that these would be considered this week, but unfortunately we have not got around to this item. These will be considered at the next meeting of the Treasury Board.

AIR CANADA

MEETING WITH DELEGATION RESPECTING WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Following the enlightening deliberations with a delegation from the province of Manitoba I wonder whether the Prime Minister is in a position, in the interests of national security and based on the program of regional development, to assure the house, the country and the people of Manitoba that the Winnipeg air maintenance base will be maintained.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yesterday we had a meeting with this delegation led by Premier Weir. As a result of that meeting and the information that was exchanged, a cabinet committee will be meeting later today to decide government policy.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the answer the Prime Minister just gave concerning a meeting of a cabinet committee later today, will there be an announcement not later than Monday as to whether the further period of study that was suggested yesterday will be granted by the government?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I cannot state in advance what the cabinet committee will decide, but I would think that that is a reasonable request. If we think we are not in a position to make a final announcement in the next few days and that further study is needed, we will have to announce this after the cabinet committee meeting today or on Monday.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may we be assured that something will be indicated to us not later than Monday even though the Minister of Transport may not be here on Monday?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

TRADE

WHEAT—REPORTED JAPANESE REFUSAL TO ACCEPT CANADIAN GRAIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: I have a bit of laryngitis.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Woolliams: I knew my sins would catch up with me. I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce in reference to the Japanese wheat market.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You should direct it to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Woolliams: I understand that Japan has refused to honour commitments to accept Canadian wheat because of its damp quality this year. Has the minister anything to report in that regard?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the situation is not exactly as the hon. member has defined it. I checked this morning with the Canadian Wheat Board and the Board of Grain Commissioners, and I have been advised that no complaint has been received from the Japanese food agency in respect of the quality of Canadian wheat arriving in Japan. However, due to difficulties the Japanese have experienced with the quality of new crop wheat from the United States, they have requested a meeting with Canadian officials to discuss the quality of the lower grades of wheat from the 1968 crop.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I take it from what the minister has said that we have now lost this market for grain under Japanese commitments?

Mr. Pepin: That is a wrong conclusion.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, how many bushels of wheat is the minister able to assure us and the country we will be able to export at this time under Japanese commitments?

Mr. Pepin: There has been no official complaint on the part of Japan in respect of Canadian wheat exports. Because of difficulties Japan has experienced with United States wheat exports they want to check with us as to the quality of our present wheat crop. This is a normal inquiry.

Mr. Woolliams: Are they looking for a superior or an inferior quality?

Mr. Pepin: I understand that Japan usually buys a superior quality, especially No. 2 northern, and I understand no difficulties have arisen up until now. If difficulties do arise I will duly report them to the house and to the hon. member.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

[Later:]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the reports of the reaction in Japan following receipt there of unsuitable grain, may I ask what steps are being taken to correct this situation. Why did our inspection services not intercept grain that was in poor condition before that grain was shipped?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, it seems very difficult to be heard this morning. I said specifically that this was United States grain and not Canadian grain. The meeting to be held early next week between the Board of Grain Commissioners and the wheat board and Japanese authorities will be in anticipation of possible problems. It is a precautionary measure. It is not a meeting to correct a damage which has taken place in recent weeks.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): A supplementary question to the minister, Mr. Speaker. My question has reference to wheat, just as another matter I raised yesterday had reference to the C.B.C. Would the minister make sure that the facts broadcast by our national news service are accurate, so that misunderstandings such as we have here do not develop again.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has made his representation, and I assume it has been noted.

HARBOURS

ROBERTS BANK—AGREEMENT RESPECTING ACCESS AND EGRESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether an agreement has been reached between the government of Canada and the government of British Columbia to provide federal access and egress for the construction of buildings on provincial foreshore property adjacent to Roberts Bank. If so, can the minister tell the house what is the nature of this agreement?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, is the hon. member referring to access across the foreshore to the port facility itself? If that is the nature of his question I should like to say that we have an arrangement with the provincial government providing for access during the construction period. This will be followed by negotiations for a permanent arrangement. I have indicated to the provincial government that hopefully we would be in a position to talk to them sometime within a few months after the House of Commons has had a chance to study the report on port facilities which is available at this time for consideration.

Mr. Rose: Do I understand, Mr. Minister, that the lease agreement for land upon which very expensive installations might be constructed is based on a temporary or one year agreement? What are the possibilities for the renewal of this agreement, and under what terms?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must remind hon. members that questions should be directed to the Chair. Having said that, perhaps the minister might want to reply.

Mr. Hellyer: It is a temporary arrangement, but that was all that was required to get on with construction of the port. There are a number of options open to the government as to the final solution. Any conclusion in this regard would prejudge policy in respect of port administration and control which is yet to be decided. Consequently all the questions of this nature will have to be left until parliament and the government has had a chance to study the report to which I referred earlier.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, has the minister received the report, which he said back on October 16 would be ready by late November, defining the division of jurisdiction as between the federal and provincial governments; and if so can he table that report?

Mr. Hellyer: The answer is yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nowlan: When will it be tabled?

Mr. Hellyer: Soon, Mr. Speaker. In order to be more precise, I would say not later than next week.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Minister of Transport will take as long to reach a decision with respect to the Roberts Bank problem as the Prime Minister is taking with regard to our national defence problem.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CZECHOSLOVAKIA—INQUIRY AS TO PROTEST NOTE FROM RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Can he tell the house if the government has received from Russia a note of protest similar to that received by Great Britain in view of the discontinuance of cultural exchanges with Czechoslovakia? If so, what position will the Canadian government take about that note of protest and related comments?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am not aware that such a note has been received, Mr. Speaker. However, the Secretary of State for External Affairs could no doubt answer that question if it were put to him when he is in the house.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD—REQUEST FOR INCREASED STAFF

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the opinion expressed yesterday by the chairman of the National Energy Board that high priority should be given to providing the board with sufficient staff to undertake intensive studies regarding the possibilities of future Canadian oil development in the north, will the Treasury Board give high priority to providing the National Energy Board with this additional staff as a means of helping to protect our oil development interests in the north?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question asked by the hon. member is of very general scope and is not of the required degree of urgency. Perhaps the hon. member would like to put the question on the order paper.

Mr. Hees: With deference, Mr. Speaker, I ask the question in view of the very important and recent discoveries by United States interests in the north and the great alarm expressed by the chairman of the National Energy Board as recently as yesterday. In view of this I think the question is important.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the minister might be allowed to answer the question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member I have taken note of the remarks of the chairman of the National Energy Board, and will consider them.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

REQUEST FOR NATIVE INDIAN REPRESENTATION AT CONFERENCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Will the government grant the request of the National Indian Brotherhood to allow the Indian people a formal role in conferences concerned with amendments to the Canadian constitution?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not know of the request, Mr. Speaker, but if the hon. member is referring to the constitutional conference to be held two weeks from now, there is no question of anyone but representatives of the federal and provincial governments sitting there as delegates.

Mr. Simpson: A supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister says he knows nothing of this request. I understand the request may be forthcoming to him today. I am asking whether he will give it his fullest consideration.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether it is in order to ask a minister whether he will give consideration to submissions which will be made to him at a future date or a future hour. I have some doubts about that.

Mr. Simpson: I have a supplementary question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, but in his absence I should like to direct it to his parliamentary secretary. Will the government recognize the National Indian Brotherhood as the official Indian advisory body to the department of Indian affairs; and if so, can he assure the house that the National Indian Brotherhood will not be bypassed as previous so-called advisory groups have been bypassed?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question asked by the hon. member contains allegations, and as such cannot be accepted.

[Mr. Speaker.]

INDIAN AFFAIRS

COMPETITION FOR POSITION AS ADVISER ON POLICIES AND PROGRAMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, but since I do not see him here perhaps the question could be taken as notice. Has the Indian affairs branch recently advertised a competition for a position at the P.M. 6 level with a salary of $18,000 a year, to consult with the Indian and Eskimo people on policies and programs affecting them? This competition, as I understand it, is not open to qualified native applicants.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member the question should be placed on the order paper. If there is urgency for a discussion of the matter it could be raised at the time of adjournment at ten o'clock.

Mr. Rose: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

EFFECT OF INCREASED RATES ON UNION PUBLICATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): My question is for the Postmaster General. Have new representations been made to him about the adverse effects of the increase in postal rates on union publications such as newspapers and magazines? If so, would the minister give consideration to moderating the proposed new rates?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I have not met with any groups in the last two weeks because no groups have asked to meet with me. I expect the regulations, in conformity with the act adopted by the house, will be put into effect on December 24.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROPOSED LAY-OFF OF SECURITY STAFF, ATLANTIC REGION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the hon. gentleman in a position today to bring the house up to date regarding his discussions with Canadian National Railways concerning the cut-backs in the Canadian National police force in the Atlantic region, which has been brought to his attention by the hon. member for Moncton and myself on several occasions?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Not yet, Mr. Speaker. I have had further conversations with the company since the last time my hon. friend raised the question. I am awaiting a report back from the company subsequent to that discussion.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

ABSENCE OF COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN— CONSIDERATION OF REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): My question is directed to the President of the Privy Council in his capacity as house leader. Is the hon. gentleman aware of the fact that the standing committee on transport and communications met this morning but is now deadlocked without a chairman, and hence unable to deal with matters of urgent public importance before it? While the minister is on his feet, would he assure the house that the house will be in a position soon to deal with the first report of the committee, which is now before the house but in which as yet there has been no concurrence?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am aware of both these matters. I am sure the hon. member regrets as much as I do the fact that the chairman of the committee, the hon. member for Manicouagan, had to enter the Royal Victoria hospital last night for surgery. I think perhaps I would be expressing the sentiments of the house if I were to say that we hope the surgery will be successful and we will soon have him with us again.

I have had discussion with hon. gentlemen opposite about a future or further order of reference to the standing committee on transport and communications. My understanding is that the committee expressed an interest in studying the question of transportation in the Atlantic provinces. This was indicated in the first report. The committee also indicated an interest in studying a particular dispute related to the Canadian National.

As I pointed out to the hon. member for Oxford, it has been the government's intention to refer the annual reports of both Canadian National and Air Canada to the committee. It was the government's suggestion also that not only should the committee study Atlantic province problems but that in view of the notoriously good climate there any time of the year, and particularly in the month of January, the committee should be empowered to visit the region for the purpose of studying transportation problems. My suggestion was that this rather broader order of reference might be substituted for the committee's report in this regard, and that the house might agree to putting these two orders, thereby empowering the committee to meet possibly early in January for this purpose.

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary question. Would the house leader advise the house what is the position of the resolution that was passed by the committee dealing with the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission allowing the Canadian National to abandon rail passenger service in Newfoundland, which was not incorporated in the first report of the committee to which I referred in my original question?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I have not studied this; I am advised the resolution was passed but that it was out of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Under the circumstances I take it that it is null and has no effect, but I have not examined the question.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. There is no evidence anywhere in the committee's report that the resolution in question is out of order. It was passed by a majority of the committee members present. The only problem was that the Liberals did not have enough members there to defeat the resolution. That is the only bad part of it. The house leader and his whip have a responsibility, which I hope they take, to get their members out to the committee. I say it is a good resolution, and it should be included in the report.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The first thing to be said is that I am glad that through my intervention in this debate we have restored the hon. member's voice to him. I can only say that we will make every effort to assist if hon. members wish to continue the committee's studies along the line I have indicated, both of the Atlantic transportation problem and of Air Canada and the Canadian National Railways. If so perhaps there might be agreement to adopting this as the order of reference for the committee for the rest of the session, and on that basis we might withdraw the second report.

Mr. McGrath: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I say that the house leader, in reply to my question, set himself up as an expert by ruling on a resolution which was passed by the committee, which the chairman of the committee accepted, and which is now properly in the report of the committee which is before the house. I suggest that the hon. gentleman has no right to take it upon himself to rule on a resolution passed by a majority in the committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, may I say, on the same point of order, that I accept the admonition of the hon. member, but I was only giving a ruling on the resolution because his friend from Calgary North asked me to do so. However, I agree that he was wrong to ask me and that I was wrong to do it.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question. In the house leader's discussion of the past and future activities of the committee would he indicate what is to be done with the estimates of the Post Office Department?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I understand arrangements have been made to try to get the estimates examined in committee in the near future, but I must say I have not been able to follow in detail the present status of all estimates in the committees. I will have to take a further look at that.

PUBLIC SERVICE

DISMISSAL OF COMMISSIONAIRES FOR LANGUAGE REASONS

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

In view of the consequences of the rule to the effect that members of the Canadian Corps of Commissionaires who are not bilingual are to be replaced in the three Ottawa museums on December 31, would the Prime Minister be ready to make an exception for veterans who will reach retirement age shortly?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as everyone knows, national museums come under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of State, who would be happy to answer this question if it were directed to him.

[English]

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Is the replacement of the 10 to 15 civil service commissionaires by bilingual persons a sample of future policy which will affect the federal civil service?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to say that I can hardly be asked to state whether or not this is the policy because, as I said in my answer to the previous question, this matter comes under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of State. I am not familiar with the details of it; it is the Secretary of State who will have to report on it.

Mr. McGrath: Why not say "ditto"?

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In the name of justice and of former commitments to these veterans, will the Prime Minister give consideration to rescinding or withdrawing that directive which emanated from the office of the Secretary of State?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me the hon. member is restating the question asked previously by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mr. Yewchuk: I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will alternative employment be provided to these replaced commissionaires?

Mr. Trudeau: I would like to make it clear, as I did in my first answer, that this matter comes under the Secretary of State who is not in the house now. I am not familiar with the details of the matter, so there is no point in my trying to answer the question.

Mr. McIntosh: I'll bet you don't know the details of it.

Mr. Trudeau: How much do you bet?

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, on this important matter. When discussing this question with the Secretary of State, would the Prime Minister confirm—and he might consult the Minister of Veterans Affairs on this matter as well—whether the veterans preference still applies?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I will ask the Secretary of State to have those consultations.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REPORTED INCREASE OF FRAUDULENT BANKRUPTCIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the minister concerned, I shall direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Can he tell the house what progress has been made in the negotiations with the provinces with regard to fraudulent bankruptcies in Canada, in view of the fact that fraudulent bankruptcies have increased in October by 47 per cent over the previous month?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is not now in the house because he is attending to his affairs, but I shall try to get a reply for the member as soon as possible.

IMMIGRATION

TORONTO—DEPORTATION ORDER AGAINST POLISH SEAMAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I have an urgent question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration or for his parliamentary secretary. What action has the minister taken concerning an urgent telegram from a Toronto lawyer protesting the decision of immigration officials to execute a deportation order against a Polish seaman before this lawyer had received a written order from the immigration appeal board, thereby denying the lawyer an opportunity to appeal the order of the board to the Supreme Court of Canada?

Mr. Gerard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I understand that up to eleven o'clock this morning the minister's office had not received a telegram concerning this case. As the hon. member knows, the minister of immigration has no power or authority over any decisions made by the appeal board. Therefore I suggest to my hon. friend that he recommend the case be taken to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. Haidasz: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister assure the house that the cabinet will consider at the earliest possible moment the approval of the international convention on refugees and seamen?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take the matter under consideration.

TRANSPORT

WELLAND CANAL—INQUIRY AS TO EXPANSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Transport. Is it true that plans for the $1 billion expansion of the Welland canal section of the St. Lawrence seaway have been shelved indefinitely?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, this is not correct. This question is being considered by an interdepartmental committee at the present time. I am not in a position to say when they will finish their studies. I might tell my hon. friend, however, that since the time the report on the seaway was sent to the government there have been changes in the estimates made of traffic. There have also been changes in the technological devices for increasing throughput in the existing canal system which have an influence on the time when additional capacity might be necessary.

I think it is fair to say that no immediate start is required, but at the same time this is not to say that a start will not be required when the traffic forecast is sufficient to justify additional capacity. This is a question that can only be answered when we have had the chance to look at all relevant material in greater detail.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. It is true, is it not, that it is quite possible these plans will be shelved?

Mr. Hellyer: No, Mr. Speaker, I certainly would not agree with that.

SHIPBUILDING

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Defence Production. In view of the continuing heavy unemployment in Canadian shipyards I wonder whether the minister is yet able to tell the house when he will be able to make a statement on motions as to government policy in this regard. I ask him this question because of answers given to me by the minister a few weeks ago to the effect that he and other ministers were meeting with representatives of the shipbuilding industry.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, these meetings have been continuing, as well as meetings with other ministers. In view of the decision that has been made in regard to responsibility, I think this question should more properly be directed to the Minister of Industry.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the indication given yesterday that any decision in regard to assistance to the fisheries was being deferred until the end of the fiscal year, has any decision been taken to defer action with regard to subsidies on wooden vessels also until the end of the fiscal year? I would direct that question to the appropriate minister, whoever he may happen to be.

Mr. MacEwan: Mr. Speaker, supplementary to my question to the Minister of Defence Production could I ask the minister of industry when he believes he will be able to make a statement to the house in connection with this most important matter of shipbuilding in Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I love to make statements, but I really do not see the need for one on this subject today. We have a shipbuilding program. The subsidies are being progressively reduced, and representations about this have been made. An interdepartmental committee is now studying these representations, and in due course I will say whether a change is to be made.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the various members of the government have decided who is responsible for subsidies on wooden ships so that my question can be answered.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, wooden vessels come under the fisheries department; steel vessels come under the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Bell: Welcome back.

Mr. Davis: The estimates for next year will be published early in the new year.

[Mr. MacEwan.]

Mr. Anderson: A supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Mr. Speaker. In view of the minister's remark that there is no need for a statement on shipbuilding policy would he please urgently consider answering question No. 295, which was put on the order paper on September 27. Since apparently there is to be no policy change the question should be easy to answer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

SHIPPING

EXPERIMENTS WITH NEW ICEBREAKING EQUIPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, on November 20 I directed a question to the Minister of Transport which the minister took as notice and said he would deal with later. It concerned the planned experimental icebreaking expedition into Churchill with the Alexbow. I wonder whether the minister is able to answer now.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. As I recall it, the allegation to which my hon. friend referred is not correct. The reason the Alexbow experiment did not take place this winter was that the company responsible for its development, having considered the situation and been unable to get the cargo they felt was necessary to assist in defraying the cost of the experiment, decided not to proceed with it this year.

Mr. Simpson: A supplementary question. On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I might tell the minister that I did not make allegations; I merely asked him a question. In view of the fact that the federal government, as I understand it, through their connection with Panarctic Oils, controls a lot of the interest in this new icebreaking equipment, I thought I should bring this to the minister's attention.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

APPLICATION FOR RATE INCREASES BY BELL TELEPHONE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister aware of the application by the Bell Telephone Company of Canada to the Canadian Transport Commission requesting a sharp increase in telephone rates in Toronto, Montreal, Hamilton,

Ottawa and other cities? If so, is it the intention of the government to oppose this application asking for an unjustified sharp increase in rates?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the application, but this is one area of responsibility that has been transferred to the Postmaster General. Perhaps I might redirect the question to him.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the application is before the Canadian Transport Commission. Since this is a court of record hon. members would not think it appropriate for me to make any remarks about this application.

GRAIN

REPORTED SLOW MOVEMENT TO TERMINAL DRYING FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Earlier we were told that drying facilities at the lakehead are not operating on a seven-day 24-hour a day basis because of lack of sufficient facilities to deal with damp grain. In the D.B.S. report dated December 4 it is indicated that for the seven days ending November 21 there were fewer carloadings—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As the hon. member knows, he must ask a question and seek information rather than present information to the house.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I am trying to lay the groundwork for my question. According to the report there were fewer carloadings with respect to grain than in the similar period last year. I wish to know why there were fewer carloadings during that critical period?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think the explanation has already been given either by myself or by the Minister without Portfolio. We indicated before that it took some time to organize and regularize the flow of wheat to terminals. This has been done now and will continue to be done in the coming days. Terminals will be operating six days a week and 24 hours a day. Yesterday the question in the house was "What about seven days a week?" The answer given was that this is presently being discussed with the trade unions.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BROADBENT—STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON INCENTIVES TO INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday last I rose on a question of privilege with regard to comments made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Since he is in the house, and back from the west coast, I wonder whether he would care to answer the matter I raised.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this was a rather technical matter. I stand on what I said and, if I may say so, I do not think it was a matter of privilege. But if the hon. member would care to debate it with me I will be glad to see him at any time today, tomorrow, Sunday or Monday.

FINANCE

STEPS TO BRING ABOUT INTERNATIONAL MONETARY REFORM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Since there are indications that the steps taken by the finance ministers at Bonn recently involve a temporary, patchwork solution to our monetary problems, what steps is the government taking to bring about a longer term measure of reform in our international monetary affairs? What policy proposals is the federal government prepared to advance toward that end?

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to the hon. member that he is seeking information which normally ought to be given by way of a statement on motions.

TRANSPORT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CAUSEWAY—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF INTENTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Has he received a telegram from the Maritime Provinces Board of Trade asking for a positive decision on construction of the causeway? If so, how soon may we expect an announcement of that positive decision?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would venture to say within the next couple of weeks.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the problems concerning the construction of the Northumberland strait crossing. The Prime Minister indicated two weeks ago that there was some difficulty in arriving at a decision that he had promised the premier of Prince Edward Island he would make almost one month ago. Could he indicate to the house the nature of the difficulties; because we may be able to give him assistance.

Mr. Trudeau: Money.

BROADCASTING

INQUIRY AS TO REQUEST FOR TAPES OF NEWS BROADCASTS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): With your permission, Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet may I deal with a question that was raised by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) yesterday, who wanted to know whether any member of the task force on government information services had requested the Canadian Radio-Television Commission to ask Canadian radio stations to provide tapes of their news broadcasts to the commission. I replied that I would inquire. The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOR NOVA SCOTIA APPLE GROWERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Since almost three months have elapsed since the delegation from Nova Scotia presented to the minister a brief on the problems of our apple industry, when will the government make a statement on what assistance it is prepared to give this hard pressed industry?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman knows that for the last three years, and slightly more than that, the federal government has resisted entering into any ad hoc assistance arrangements with the provinces. I have explained the reasons for that. When the brief was first presented to the department the apple market was not as good as it is now. The market in Canada for fresh and processed apples has firmed considerably. That does not resolve the problem arising from the drought in the area, and the matter is still under active consideration. Yet I should not like to hold out any great hope that we will substitute an ad hoc assistance program for the crop insurance program we have offered to all provinces.

Mr. Nowlan: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. From the minister's answer I suppose one could take it that there will be no announcement of government aid at the anual meeting of the apple growers?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think that question is argumentative.

Mr. Nowlan: May I rephrase the question, Mr. Speaker. Am I to gather from the minister's statement that there is to be no announcement with regard to government aid during the annual meeting of the apple growers?

Mr. Olson: That is a wrong assumption. We undertook to give very serious consideration to the representations that were made and to take into account the market and the harvest with respect to this crop. That has been done and is continuing to be done.

AIRPORTS

TORONTO—PROTESTS AGAINST EXPANSION OF FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hyliard Chappell (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the announced rejection of the proposal to expand the Toronto-Malton airport by all municipalities affected by the flightways, will the minister agree not to proceed as proposed and cause studies of other sites to be made?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I hope to be able to review all available data within a few days. Once I have had a chance to do that I will be in a position to make a recommendation to the government.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DATE OF PAYMENT OF RETROACTIVE PAY INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. Can he now give a firmer assurance than he could give before that his department will be able to grant retroactive pay increases to national defence employees before the end of the year?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we are in the process of doing so. I have been in consultation with the Minister of National Defence, who is primarily charged with the responsibility of making the computations in order to get the cheques out.

EXTERNAL AID

BIAFRA—SUGGESTED SPECIAL ACCOUNT FOR PRIVATE CONTRIBUTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. In view of the initiative taken by the government of the Netherlands in allowing persons to open special post office accounts, which enables that country to use its post office facilities to bring relief to Biafra, will our government consider allowing something similar to happen in this country so as to encourage contributions to be made to this worth-while cause?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I can only applaud the initiative of the Netherlands post office, but it is not possible for us to emulate this activity. As you know, we do not operate the gyro banking system which they have in many European countries, which enables depositors to pay their bills directly and make deposits for such worthy causes as the hon. member has mentioned. It may be something for one of the task forces to review, but at the present time we cannot act.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply, revised estimates of the Department of Fisheries and Forestry for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1969. Vote No. 1 will be found at page 158 of the bluebook. Details thereof are listed at page 160.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES AND FORESTRY

1. Departmental administration, including grants and contributions as detailed in the Estimates. $3,509,175.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Chairman, in my opening statement I want to make one thing quite clear, and that is that Canada's fishing industry—and I am talking first about the industry in the over-all sense of the word—is not on the verge of collapse. It has had a record year in 1968 and it is going on to better things in 1969. It is true that certain important sectors of the industry, more particularly the groundfish industry on the east coast, are encountering difficulties, but by and large the situation is favourable to the industry. Quantities are up, prices in respect of most fish products are higher than they were in recent years, and productivity is continuing to improve. Nineteen sixty eight, when all the results are in, will show that it has been the best year in Canada's fishing history; I repeat, the best year in Canada's fishing history.

This assessment is based on hard statistics for the first nine months of 1968, that is, from January to the end of September inclusive. They show that our total catch is up 10 per cent in quantity terms over the corresponding period in 1967. They also show that the earnings of fishermen are up. Their earnings are up by roughly 12 per cent over a year ago. This upward movement in quantity, in gross dollar value and in fishermen's incomes is consistent with the long run trend in the record of the industry.

No doubt, Mr. Chairman, we need more perspective in these matters. In the ten year period from 1956 to 1966 Canada's total output from the fisheries grew by 18 per cent. Returns to fishermen meanwhile rose by 67 per cent in value terms, this despite a decline in the employment. Productivity by fishermen in quantitative terms, in the sense of numbers of fish caught, has improved by more than 2 per cent a year. This is a rate of improvement in productivity which has been comparable with and in some sectors of the industry better than, that of the rest of the economy, so that in terms of efficiency, and again I am generalizing, the industry has been doing quite well.

These figures apply to the nation as a whole, but one might expect large variations from one part of the industry to the other and from one part of the country to the other. During the last 12 months solid gains, again speaking over all, have been made in the Atlantic region. Out on the Pacific coast, and this is largely due to a decline in the halibut catch, our performance has been off somewhat. However, production of salmon has been up in quantity and dollar terms.

Marketing has presented a problem. It has certainly presented a problem in price terms to the groundfish industry. But there have been products, particularly products like lobster, crab, scallops and so on, in which price increases have been favourable to the industry and which have helped to improve the gross earnings, particularly of the fishermen concerned.

Before I turn to try to deal in detail with the groundfish problem situation on the Atlantic coast I would like to recount a few of the success stories. I would like to do this partly because the problem in the groundfish industry is one of confidence. It is a problem related to diversification. It is certainly a problem of finance in the sense that the banks and other financial institutions have been holding back. They have been less inclined to put money into the fishing industry in recent months than heretofore, and therefore I think it is important to give some balance to the over-all picture in respect of the fisheries.

Four developments have highlighted our Canadian fishing industry in the last two years. One on the Atlantic coast relates to the queen crab. This is an industry which in big dollar terms was non-existent four years ago. It involved a product which was regarded by the fishermen largely as a nuisance. Now it is being sold in increasing quantities. For example, the landings rose from two million pounds in 1967 to ten million pounds during the current year. This is up from less than one million pounds in 1966 and a negligible catch in 1965. It is a real success story. There are 20 new plants processing Atlantic crab, most of it caught in the gulf of St. Lawrence and off the east coast of Newfoundalnd. These plants now employ 700 on-shore workers whose annual earnings run to several millions of dollars. So here is one favourable development that relates to the Atlantic area which can be regarded as a partial offset in an over-all picture where the ground fishery is admittedly in some difficulty.

The herring fishery certainly is a success story in the Atlantic area. Herring stocks on the west coast declined rather sharply in recent years and it has been ordered that there be no more fishing for herring perhaps until 1970. Herring stocks around the world have varied considerably. They have been depleted rapidly, but not always by fishing activity. Often the reasons for the decline are biological and the stocks come back again. No doubt we are in one of those as yet uncharted cycles on the west coast. Certainly there is ample evidence that the herring is coming back.

The herring fishing on the east coast meanwhile is picking up rapidly. There has been some movement of vessels from the east coast to the west coast. Certainly the catches have been heavy. There have been a number of new plants built and there have been some remarkable catches per trawler, pointing in the direction of fish gains in productivity in that particular sector of the industry.

I would now like to refer to another development on the west coast. We have had ample evidence of success in respect of restoring, improving and expanding the salmon fish stocks. The immense investment which the federal taxpayer has made in artificial spawning channels is beginning to pay off. The $10 million Babine project is now nearing completion. Its results in respect of salmon runs in northern British Columbia should show up in the next year or two.

• (12 noon)

I have been very interested in reviewing the reports and recommendations which led to this particular program. These assessments —and I think they were hard-headed ones— on the prospective benefits in relation to the costs of that project indicated the benefits would be at least three times as great as the costs involved. This is a good benefit-cost ratio. The results may well exceed that ratio. They certainly will if we put a proper value on the salmon caught by sports fishermen where the value per fish is a great deal higher than the value attributed to fish using the commercial yardsticks.

On the east coast, and also on the west coast, we are looking forward to what I think is an imaginative and obviously encouraging development with regard to fish protein concentrate. Probably no contribution to the fishing economy will have greater effect than that of the Fisheries Research Board in this field in Halifax which has led to this very important breakthrough. It was as a result of the efforts of the research scientists in Halifax that this method of converting fish into a high quality, readily storable and easily transportable product was developed. This has been followed through by substantial pilot plant investigations in the United States. Recently a United States firm announced the construction of a multi-million dollar plant at the strait of Canso. It is to open within the next 18 months. When this plant is in operation fish protein concentrate will begin to move in commercial quantities to the markets of the world.

Fish protein concentrate has been discussed at length in the scientific journals for a long time, but it is only in the last year or two that the economies of producing fish protein concentrate on a commercial basis have begun to firm up. I should like to indicate what these economic prospects are by repeating a calculation which I think is significant. Ten grams of this concentrate—that is a very small quantity, two-thirds of a cent's worth—will supply one person's daily requirement for protein. An individual's requirement for a day can be supplemented with fish protein for less than one cent. By comparison it would take 14 cents worth of pork chops, 11 cents worth of steak, 6½ cents worth of whole milk, 6 cents worth of eggs or 3½ cents worth of dry skim milk to supply the same amount of protein to the average human being.

It looks as if fish protein concentrate will be a relatively cheap source of protein. As I said before, it is a high concentrate product which is storable for long periods of time at any temperature and may be transported very cheaply. This substance looks like a white powder. It can be mixed with foods in very small quantities. It can be mixed into a variety of foods. It is normally tasteless. The food which people consume can obviously be enhanced considerably in respect of its protein content as a result of a very small addition of this valuable product. So the construction of a big plant in Canada at Canso, Nova Scotia, will mean that shortly production will begin on 20 million pounds of this concentrate per year. This is certainly something which Canadians should welcome.

This will not be the only large scale plant in the world. I gather that two others are already under construction in the United States and there is considerable interest in other parts of the world. In other words, it looks as if we will not be alone in trying to market this new product in its early years. Others have also seen the economies involved here and are trying to convince the breakfast food people, the soft drink people and other large purveyors of food and foodstuffs on this continent that fish protein concentrate is a very useful and a very economical product. I welcome the support of those great industries in getting F.P.C. launched.

Perhaps I could draw an analogy here. Over 100 years ago it was found that it was possible to produce paper from wood by grinding it up, by pulping it and using the wood fibres to make paper and other pulp and paper products. At one time a tree was used only to make large planks. The rest of the tree was rejected, thrown away. Then more was used not only for planks but for sawn lumber and pulp. A much greater proportion of the tree became useable because the tops, branches, edgings, and so on could be used for pulp. As a result we have the most economic wood product plants in the world including, side by side, large sawmills and large pulp and paper mills. The straight sections of the tree are now used to make the prime products such as sawn lumber, for example, and most of the rest of it is used to make pulp and other useful products.

The situation in respect of the whole fish is akin to that of the tree. We can take the choice part of the fish, cut off the most desirable portions, sell them, for instance, as fillets, and the rest of the fish can be ground up and converted into fish protein concentrate. This is why our new F.P.C. plant in Nova Scotia is located right beside a large fish filleting operation. Such a plant can be located beside any type of fish plant such as a herring reduction mill. It can use a very wide variety of fish species. It does not discriminate in the same way as plants do which concentrate on the fish fillets that are so attractive to the palates of the people of North America. As a result of this process, equivalent to the pulping process, we will be able to draw on a much wider range of species and use up more of the fish in the oceans. We will be able to supplement the income of our fish filleting plants.

This will be very good in the long run. I do not suggest that it will tide the industry over its short term difficulties. We will see more of these plants as the marketing of fish protein concentrates gets under way. Here is a long range probability. It is a real probability in respect of the over-all improvement in the fishing industries of both our coasts. It can be a very helpful development indeed.

Now I should like to say a few words about the longer term developments in the industry and the longer term prospects. I shall turn specifically to the problem with regard to the groundfish industry on the Atlantic coast. It seems to me when we look at the expenditures of the federal Department of Fisheries, for example, which currently are in the order of $50 million a year, we must look not only at the commercial side of the industry, commercial in the sense of fish caught for consumption and marketing through normal commercial channels, but also at the sports fishery as well, the recreational side. I believe that more of the higher value fish will be caught by sports fishermen. In fact the sports fishermen will be investing in boats, gear, travel, hotel accommodation and so on many times as many dollars per fish caught than is invested by the commercial fishermen today.

I was surprised to learn, for example, that the number of fish caught now off the east coast of the United States by sports fishermen is greater than the total number caught by commerical fishermen. I will repeat that. Off the east coast of the United States there are more fish caught, and I am referring to numbers of fish, by sports fishermen than by commercial fishermen. This is an immense industry which is bound to develop in this country. Coming from the west coast of Canada as I do, I cannot regard this as something for the long term future, because the sports fishery in British Columbia is as important today as the commercial fishery. It is probably worth a good deal more if one were to take into account all the secondary effects. We must know more about this particular industry. Certainly there are far more small craft owned by sports fishermen on the west coast, representing a greater dollar value, than there are craft owned by commercial fishermen. In the sense of value I would say the sports fishery is the greater of the two already and it is growing very rapidly. It is more than doubling with each passing decade. Certainly the number of small craft engaged in the sports fishery is more than doubling every decade on the west coast. I am sure this is also true, but starting from a smaller base, on the east coast. It is certainly true of the Great Lakes and in a number of our other freshwater areas as well.

The new department of fisheries and forestry must be increasingly concerned with this sports fishing aspect and, indeed, with recreation and the redevelopment of communities, some of which are solely dependent on the commercial fishery. We must be concerned with the redevelopment of these communities to service the sports fishery and tourists, all Canadians who want to travel in boats to where the fish are, and to enjoy the scenery in other parts of Canada. What I am saying about Canadians travelling up and down our coasts also applies to our good friends from the United States. This is a supplementary and complementary industry and, in the long run, perhaps even a more important arm to fisheries in Canada.

I said I wanted to make a few remarks about the main problem area which concerns members opposite today and, indeed, members in all parts of the house. This is the groundfish industry on the Atlantic coast. The groundfish industry, if I can first assess it in very round terms, has been producing $50 million in total income for fishermen. Converted into saleable products which go to the market, this is a $100 million industry. Not all sectors of this industry are in difficulty. Not all companies and certainly not all areas are in difficulty. But this is an industry which has problems, and these problems are of two kinds. There is the problem in respect of declining prices on the market and there is the problem of the rising costs of catching and processing fish. The industry is, in other words, caught in a serious cost-price squeeze which is not unlike the situation that the prairie wheat farmer is encountering.

In the last couple of years there has been a declining ceiling on the price for the product, and slowly but inevitably many of the costs of this industry are rising. The industry has been trying to adapt itself to these changing circumstances. It has been necessary, however, certainly during the past 12 months, for the federal government not only to recognize this problem but to do something about it. In the past year two programs were instituted, both of which I might refer to as ad hoc programs. They were announced in several parts and pieces. The one which relates directly to fresh and frozen fish was announced last May. At that time the former minister of fisheries said that $4 million would be available to the industry, basically to maintain the price of fish to the fishermen. As a result of some adjustments and, incidentally, an exceptional increase in production quantity, the total sum has reached $4,500,000. That program in its detail is without precedent in our history. We have, in what was declared at the time as being a one-shot program, begun a process of helping the industry in financial terms to the extent of many millions of dollars.

The industry has been faced, as I say, with declining prices for its products. The price for cod blocks delivered in Boston reached a high of 29 cents a pound a few years ago. It has been slipping year by year and is now down to 21 cents. My impression of the industry is that it could break even—would see a little daylight—if the price was up around 26 cents. Until the price is up to 26 cents a pound there will be a problem.

There is a problem in respect of maintaining the price to fishermen and there is also a problem which the companies face in finding ways to finance their purchases of materials and to pay the interest on their bonds. In other words, they need cash. The companies lost money in 1967. Because $4,500,000 was passed on to the fishermen their position has not changed materially in 1968. In other words the industry is still in difficulty because of the lower prices.

When looking at the marketing side we can perhaps see some relief. The figures I have, supplied to me partly by our own fisheries people and partly by the Department of Trade and Commerce, indicate that the total volume of exports, and this is 70 per cent of the production of the fresh and frozen fish industry on the east coast, has increased. I want to say also that the dollar value of exports to all countries has also gone up by 8 per cent. In other words the overall income of this industry has been rising in spite of the declining price.

In the first nine months of 1968 Canada exported 290 million pounds compared with 220 million pounds in 1967. We have obviously been shipping a lot more fresh and frozen fish to the United States, and in spite of the decline in the price the gross income or value of these exports is higher than it was last year. I understand the gain in respect of our fish products has not been reflected in over-all consumption. Certainly production principally of fish sticks has gained in relation to other fish products exported to the United States market.

I am told that the per capita consumption of fish in the United States has been fairly constant in recent years, running about 10.5 pounds per annum. However, when considering the quantity of fish sticks consumed in the United States, we are up from January to October, 1968, to over 185 million pounds in comparison with 128 million pounds during the first ten months of 1967. That is an increase of nearly 60 million pounds or 45 per cent. So we are shipping more of these fresh and frozen fish products to the United States markets. We have been getting a larger share of the United States market in the form of fish sticks and portions.

• (12:20 p.m.)

Of course, this has to be viewed in relation to the performance of other countries. I understand that shipments from Norway, Denmark and Iceland have also increased considerably, and this is reflected in the fact that our share of the total market is down so much. However, there is another aspect of this problem in relation to overseas competition with which I am sure many members opposite are also familiar. The devaluation of the currencies of those countries which are also exporting to the United States in larger quantities than before has resulted in United States prices looking higher to them in terms of their currencies. In their currencies the price is at least the same as a few years ago. In the case of Iceland, where the over-all devaluation has now reached the order of 50 per cent, the price undoubtedly looks a lot better to the fishermen in that country and to the industry, companies and organizations shipping into the United States. There is a diversion, also, of these fish products from European, and particularly African, markets. The difficulties on the continent of Africa at the moment are one of the causes for there being an additional supply of fish available from European countries.

[Translation]

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Cyr): Order. I must remind the member that his time has expired, unless he has the unanimous consent of the committee.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Cyr): Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Davis: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have skimmed over quite briefly the development on the United States market side—greater volume and a declining price to the Canadian exporter. I might perhaps have mentioned that there has been no decline in price to the ultimate consumer. So there is a larger margin available in the United States at the moment. Perhaps some part of that margin is going toward the promotion in the United States market of our products, our fish. I would certainly hope so. I would hope also that we have in prospect, and hopefully early in the new year, some improvement in price to the Canadian exporter. But this is something which we certainly cannot take for granted. If it does not happen, of course the industry has to turn even more to cost reductions and improvements in efficiency in order to get by.

There are a number of things the industry can do, but again many of these are developments which can only be counted upon in the longer term. The government has been financing a study of productivity in the industry and how individual fishing and processing operations can be improved in the Atlantic area. The industry itself has been looking hard at the possibilities of reducing costs. I am told that in respect of our major trawler fishing operations, economies of as much as 25 per cent could be effected by reorganization of the operations of the fishing sector itself, by redesigning vessels, and so on. But this, as I mentioned before, cannot be counted upon to come about overnight.

A similar improvement in productivity resulting from a rationalization or centralization of plants, but most of it due to a reorganization within existing plants, can take place on land. But again this is a long term process. I see no reason, looking at the summary reports I have had and listening to others, why a 2 per cent to 3 per cent per annum improvement in productivity cannot be realized. Perhaps this process must be speeded up by one device or another. We can expect some relief from that quarter.

I want to return now to the immediate problem. The immediate problem is that of an industry which in the round produces products worth $100 million, an industry which received $4.5 million worth of assistance from the federal government in the form of so-called deficiency payments for fresh and frozen fish during the past 12 months, an industry which has also received some $4 million in terms of purchases of dried salt cod, all of which has been taken out of normal commercial channels and will be used for food aid purposes. Those dollar inputs have been there in 1968. The industry, of course, wants the taxpayers of Canada through the federal government either to buy some of its products or price support others of its products so it can continue (1) to pay the fisherman the same price as he received in 1967 and 1968 and (2), to have enough cash in hand to pay immediate bills, to buy the fuel and other supplies needed to send trawlers to sea in January, 1969, to pay interest on debts, and so on.

I think hon. members opposite know that we are all concerned about this problem. We must be concerned about it because we are on the verge of doing something unprecedented for the fishing industry in Canada. We do not want to start doing the same sort of thing as was done in respect of the coal mines in important parts of Canada and get in deeper and deeper. We must resolve what is a very deep-seated problem here. It is essentially one of productivity. We know that with the best management in the world and the best equipment in the world, the best vessels and the best plants, we can improve our productivity by 25 per cent.

This by itself would be a $25 million solution to the industry's problems. But as I said before, this is not going to happen quickly. We can hope that the price will rise, particularly for codfish products to the United States, from 21 cents up to 26 cents or 27 cents; suddenly there would be another $25 million gross income available to the industry. Then this problem, at least in the short term, will be resolved. We are going around a tight corner and will have to come up with short term solutions as well as long term solutions. Mr. Chairman, the committee has been very tolerant in giving me this much time and perhaps I had better sit down and listen to other people's solutions to our problems.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Chairman, I listened with interest to the remarks of the Minister of Fisheries who is piloting his estimates through the house for the first time. It is evident that he has spent considerable time studying the problems of this important primary industry. I am glad his estimates came before the committee today rather than on Monday, for on Monday the roster might not have permitted him to be here to carry out this very important function.

As the committee is aware, the fisheries estimates were referred to the standing committee on fisheries and forestry where the operations and policies of the department were given a very thorough scrutiny. However, we are dealing with an expenditure of some $75,106,300 of the taxpayers' money and there are a number of items upon which I should like to comment while the estimates are before the committee. Of course I shall also comment upon a number of the minister's statements with which I disagree.

The importance of the Department of Fisheries has been recognized over the years by the increasing importance of the fishing industry in our economy and in the economy of the world. Canada's fisheries resources are harvested from two of the greatest oceans and from the most extensive bodies of fresh water in the world. The living resources of the two oceans contribute up to 95 per cent of our nation's fisheries production, while the remainder comes from freshwater stocks in the Great Lakes and other inland waterways. We utilize commercially more than 150 species of fish and shellfish, the most important being groundfish, salmon, halibut, herring, lobster and other shellfish.

The country's fishing industry represents an estimated investment of more than $200 million in ships and fishing gear, and tens of millions of dollars more in shore facilities. It provides employment income for an estimated 80,000 fishermen, of whom some 30,000 are full time operators, as well as 20,000 men and women workers in our processing plants. The fishing industry makes a great contribution to our foreign exchange reserves, for over two-thirds of the industry's output, which last year was estimated at $325 million, is sold in export markets. In fact, our exports of fisheries products last year set an all-time record of $235 million, and Canada now stands in second place behind only Japan among the world's leading fish exporters in terms of value.

All this is very heady stuff and at first glance the average Canadian would get the impression that the fishing industry has had clear sailing with fair winds. In fact, in his comments the minister practically stated that Canadian fishermen never had it so good. However, this is simply not the case because the fishing industry is going through a very difficult period of readjustment. On the Atlantic coast the fresh and frozen sector of the groundfish industry is faced with falling yields on offshore grounds along with very serious marketing difficulties. On top of this, the reduction industry is faced with very low levels of world prices for fishmeal and oils. Generally, prices for most of our frozen fisheries products have declined in the United States which is our most important market. In fact, only a few weeks ago one of our European competitors sold 700,000 pounds of frozen cod blocks in the United States market for 20 cents a pound, not 21 cents but 20 cents a pound, which is one cent below the market price in recent weeks and approximately six cents per pound below our cost for landing the same species in Boston. Unfortunately the end is not in sight, for Iceland, one of our chief competitors, again devalued her currency from 57 krona to the U.S. dollar to 88 krona to the U.S. dollar, which is bad news for our fresh and frozen groundfish exporters as well as our salt fish dealers.

I know of no industry in Canada which faces economic problems as serious as those presently faced by our Canadian fishing industry. Many fish processing plants in the Atlantic provinces have already closed their doors—one in the town of Shelburne in my constituency—while others are on the verge of bankruptcy. This situation is the direct result of almost three years of declining revenues and increasing costs. As a consequence, there has not been any expansion—here I differ with the minister—in the over-all earnings of our fishermen and this situation is contributing to serious social and economic problems in our fishing communities. The records will show that from 1960 to 1966 we had a period of heavy investment in fishing vessels and processing plants which was encouraged by a strong demand and rising prices for our fishing products. The reversal of this expansionary trend since 1966 is not due, in my opinion, to any weakening of consumer demand for fish but can be related directly to developments abroad which have reduced market prices in terms of national currencies. This is one of the problems which the minister stressed in his statement.

It is evident that currency devaluation in European countries is now having a marked effect upon Canadian fish exporters. Coupled with devaluation is the disruption of Iceland's and Norway's traditional markets in Africa and these countries are now setting the pace of competition in our traditional markets. Therefore I found it hard to believe that the Minister of Finance could recently rise in his place and state that the currency crisis in Europe would not put any pressure on the Canadian dollar. If he wants to see the effect it is having on the Canadian dollar. I would invite him to visit some of our Atlantic coast communities. I was pleased that the Minister of Fisheries commented on this devaluation because it is evident he is aware of this problem, and I hope that the Minister of Finance reads these remarks today so that he too is made aware of the problem created for the Canadian dollar by the devaluation of currencies in Europe.

Faced with this savage competition, Canadian exporters have been able to hold their own in terms of quantity, but our position in the U.S. market was retained at a tremendous cost in prices. In fact, the duty paid delivered price of cod blocks declined from 30 cents per pound in November, 1965 to 21 cents in July of 1968 with similar declines in the prices received for ocean perch and flounder fillets. Since it takes three pounds of cleaned codfish to provide one pound of fillets, a decrease of nine cents per pound in the price of cod blocks represents three cents per pound less for raw material. In other words, the prices paid to fishermen for codfish would have been expected to decline by three cents a pound during this period, but for a variety of reasons this did not happen.

In an effort to stabilize the industry, processors maintained prices to the fishermen using up working capital, bank credit and earnings from ancillary enterprises which they operate in connection with fisheries. However, many companies now find their resources depleted, and there is no easing of the pressure of supply on the U.S. market. I might add that prices would have been reduced this summer, but this last-ditch solution was avoided by the deficiency payment program authorized for the Atlantic frozen groundfish industry by the government. This program was in effect from May to October, 1968, and during this period the borrowing position of many processors was strengthened and a serious decline in the price paid to fishermen was averted.

For this program I am prepared to give the government full marks. However, the program has now terminated even though a substantial difference still exists between the costs of production of frozen groundfish products over the revenue received from their sale in the United States market. As I mentioned earlier, this difference ranges anywhere from four to six cents per pound, depending on the location of the processor and the distance between his plant and the U.S. market. With deficits of this size hanging over the industry, every fisherman on the Atlantic coast engaged in catching groundfish continuously faces the prospect of a 25 to 30 per cent drop in his earnings from this occupation. But while this threat hangs over him, every day brings him new evidence of substantial wage and salary increases approved by the government or granted to occupational groups in some other part of this country.

This government and this country have a responsibility to take action on behalf of our Canadian fishermen as long as the present depressed prices continue for their products. This government must show an interest in the economic well-being of thousands of our Canadian fishermen and their families, as well as in the processors upon whom they depend for the purchase of their catch. I say this because of the air of frustration and despair which hangs over hundreds of fishing communities where there are no alternative occupational opportunities. During the June election campaign the present Prime Minister stated that regional disparities were a greater threat to our national unity than differences in our languages. I say to this house that if there is a decline in the prices which fishermen now receive for groundfish and this decline lasts for any period of time, the result will bring chaos to the economy of the whole Atlantic region at a time when regional disparity is supposed to receive top priority from the Liberal government now in power.

I do not wish to be critical of the Minister of Fisheries, for the problems with which he must deal were created for him in no small measure by the inaction of the former minister, assisted by the former secretary of state. However, I did read the minister's speech as delivered at the Canada Day banquet in Boston on October 19 with some misgivings. The minister made it quite clear that the government is going to adopt a very hard line toward the fishing industry. These are his words as quoted from his text:

> Our commercial fishery, like any other industry, must make a profit for the Canadian community as a whole. It must generate more benefits than costs, it must pay taxes and not deduct too many tax dollars, it must pay its way and not constitute a new burden on the Canadian community as a whole.

Farther on he added:

> We do not intend to go on propping up the fishing industry indefinitely.

These are harsh words, Mr. Chairman, harsh words spoken in another country about a people and an industry which has been a way of life for many thousands of Canadians and which has contributed many millions of dollars to our country's progress, to our country's foreign exchange reserves through the export of our fisheries products. However, today Canada's fishing industry, though still made up of wooden ships and iron men, is fighting literally with its back to the wall; it is fighting the bureaucracy that grants pay increases which alone are sometimes greater than the annual earnings of some of our fishermen. It is fighting increasing governmental aid in many parts of the world which permits the exporters of those countries to take away our traditional markets. It is fighting for its markets against state-owned vessels from behind the iron curtain, the operators of which seem to have little or no problem when it comes to balancing their books in relation to profit and loss on their operations. It is fighting to keep its ships in the water and provide a livelihood for Canadian fishermen and their families and Canadian shore workers and their families.

In spite of runaway inflation in costs and diminishing prices for fish, the industry is even fighting for a place on the ocean in which to fish. This results from a lack of action by the government which failed to implement Canada's Territorial Sea and Fishing zones Act which was passed away back in 1964. Today the minister spoke at great length about a wonderful new industry, one of the stars of the fishing industry, the queen crab fishing industry. While we welcome a new fishing venture which the department, through its fisheries research, helped us to establish, I would say to the minister that the queen crab industry is primarily located in the gulf of St. Lawrence. It is an industry, Mr. Chairman, which is exposed to exploitation by every other nation, and will be so exposed until Canada's territorial sea and fishing zones limit is implemented. This is something the minister must take into consideration because unless some action is taken to implement that act the queen crab industry will be exposed to foreign exploitation. It is for this reason I said the minister inherited some of these problems.

I recall the former secretary of state for external affairs rising in his place and saying that this measure would be implemented immediately it was passed by parliament. It has not been implemented yet and the lack of action by the government has created no small problem for our Atlantic coast fishermen. The minister said, in effect, that the fishing industry must stand on its own feet. I ask the minister, is this attitude going to be adopted toward other government operations? Is this the attitude that is going to be adopted toward the C.B.C. which this year will have a deficit of as much as $150 million? Are we going to make the C.B.C. pay its way? I agree with the minister's concept that it is desirable to have all our industries stand on their own two feet. However, I cannot agree that our fishermen, faced with abnormal economic conditions forced upon them by the actions of other national governments, should be allowed to founder on the rocks of economic privation, desperation and despair when they need help.

I ask the minister, what does he think will happen to these people? What does he think will happen to many of our small fishing ports unless some action is taken by the government? It is not possible to put all these people on welfare and we cannot let them starve. We cannot ask them to compete, without aid, with Norway, for example, whose parliament approved a state subsidy for their fishing industry up to May 31, 1969 in the amount of $32 million U.S. dollars. This type of support measure for Norwegian fishermen is aimed at reducing the cost of fishing gear and bait and will be paid on the amount of these items actually bought by the fishermen. With some of these costs borne by the Norwegian government, it is possible for exporters to sell their fish at lower prices than those required by Canadian fishermen.

However, this is only one sample of the type of competition our fishermen are forced to meet. In my opinion, the government has no alternative at the present time but to formulate a policy of direct federal assistance to the Atlantic fishing and processing industries. This policy must take into consideration the immediate short term needs of the industry whose operating losses have depleted financial reserves of the fishermen as well as processors, and it must also consider a long term approach which will assist in reducing costs and expanding consumer demand for fisheries products.

According to all reports, there will be no easing in the immediate future of the pressure on world markets for the salt cod or the fresh frozen industry from European and Scandinavian countries. Until peace is restored in Africa, the fishermen of Iceland, Norway and Denmark will continue to press for greater exports to the United States. In fact, during the past eight months these exports have increased to the United States by some 40 million pounds. It is imperative, therefore, for the short term for the government to re-establish the deficiency payment program and the salt fish surplus disposal program. The deficiency payment program could be implemented in a number of ways.

I am well aware of some of some of the problems facing the minister in this regard, especially in relation to the general agreement under GATT and the Kennedy round. For example, the deficiency payment could be made on a graduated scale to fishermen and boat owners based on the number of days registered as fishing at sea, thus spreading the payments to a number of varieties of groundfish. For processors the deficiency payment could take the form of a supplementary payment on a percentage basis covering the number of man-hours worked by shore employees. Other formulas for the deficiency payment could no doubt be worked out, but I cannot stress too strongly the need for the government to take immediate action on this thorny problem.

For the long term benefit of the fishing industry I can only suggest that the government in future use more of its fisheries budget to help educate North American housewives on the nutritional value of eating seafood. In my opinion, in the past there has been too much emphasis on the productive end of the fishing industry and insufficient emphasis on the marketing of fisheries products. I should think it would be possible to perfect a seafood sandwich that could be sold at drive-ins. This is something upon which the department could work. In addition, well prepared fish and seafood luncheons could be served in our schools. More imaginative seafood displays could be used in our stores, and a training program instituted for the managers of seafood departments in our supermarkets. All of these things would be helpful.

We have heard much about the progress being made in the Kennedy round of GATT negotiations. We are told that the United States tariffs on cooked and uncooked fish sticks of 30 per cent and 20 per cent respectively are being reduced by 50 per cent over a five year period. In other words, the final stage will not be reached until January 1, 1973. In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, this is not good enough. It is too little too late because there are still formidable barriers which make it very difficult for Canadian firms to compete in United States markets.

On the Canadian scene, it would be very helpful if the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce—I am glad to see him in his seat this morning—would get together with the Minister of Transport, if he could find him, in an effort to speed up the railway service on less than carload shipments of fresh fish. As the minister is aware, the industry has made great strides in the processing, packaging and shipping of fresh fish to our markets in Ontario and Quebec. We are dependent on rail shipments to these markets to which we ship around 12 million pounds per year. At the present time we are faced with increased costs on these shipments. In fact, I believe it was last September that charges on these shipments increased by something like 10 per cent, a cost which the industry can ill afford to bear.

This, in itself, was harmful to the industry but even more important and even more harmful are the delays experienced by some of our processors in their l.c.l. shipments. I would point out that fish is very perishable and time is of the essence. Time is most important in the transportation of such a highly perishable product as fresh fish. Anything that the Minister of Fisheries, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce or the Minister of Transport could do to lower these costs or to speed up the delivery of fish would be beneficial to the entire Atlantic coast industry.

On the international scene Canada should take the lead in establishing sound conservation measures as well as a more rational basis for international merchandising of fisheries products. I want to warn the government that unless conservation measures are soon taken to prevent the increasing depletion of our groundfish stocks by foreign fishermen, the day is fast approaching when the offshore and inshore fishing industry on Canada's east coast will become uneconomical.

It is evident that the approach used to date for the implementation of Canada's Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act, passed in 1964, has not been successful. However, if that act had been implemented as promised in 1964 there would have been a reduction in the catches of fleets from other nations which now fish these waters and consequently there would be less pressure on our traditional markets. At the same time, hopefully, our Canadian catches would have increased and unit costs would have decreased.

In my opinion and for the reasons I have stated, the government therefore has a considerable measure of responsibility for the situation which exists today in our fishing industry, a situation which has existed for some time and which, if the government does not take any action, will exist for some time in the future. In closing may I say I hope the government will face up to its responsibilities and to the challenge that is before it, for the benefit of our fishermen who for too many years have been the forgotten Canadians.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, I am a little startled and surprised to be called on since it is so close to one o'clock. I realize I will not have the opportunity, at least before lunch, to explore all of the various topics I wish to discuss. However, I should like to add my congratulations to the minister upon his appointment and to say that in all the dealings I have had with him up to the moment he has been most cordial. I have been impressed by his grasp of the industry and also by his fair-mindedness in dealing with any problem I have brought before him.

In spite of the fact that the year 1968 has been a record year and that over the past ten years there has been a decided increase in the earnings of fishermen on both coasts, the industry has not been without trouble. Apparently the fishing industry, like many other industries in Canada, is going around a very tight corner. One of the problems that members of parliament will have to face is that we are entering upon a period when many industries are reacting to the kind of economy which exists in the world at the present time. Anything that we do here is not done, of course, in isolation from the rest of the world, since we are an exporting country and the success of our exports depends to a large extent on the world market picture and economies in the world generally.

My remarks will be directed mainly to the salmon industry. However, by way of preamble may I say that I was a little taken aback at the minister's suggestion that fish are the source of cheap protein and therefore on that count alone a desirable commodity. I think his presentation might have been a good deal more positive. It sounded as if he were suggesting that in utilizing completely the whole fish we in Canada would eat the fillets and then ship the remainder of the fish, though rich in protein, to some other country that does not enjoy our standard of living.

I believe that the whole idea behind the promotion of fish and fish products should be an attempt to make this product as attractive as the promoters of beef and chickens have made their products. Nobody has ever heard of heavenly fish although one hears a great deal about heavenly chicken. Neither does anybody compare fish steaks or salmon products with the gourmet's delight, the filet mignon. If I may make the suggestion, I think that the promotion of fish products can benefit from the kind of attractive merchandising that many other industries have cottoned on to and are pursuing in a much more able and aggressive manner than is the case with fish products.

I have also been interested to note that in our own parliamentary restaurant we have probably the most delightful recipe for poached salmon that I have ever had the good fortune to meet. And when I say "meet", I am not intending a pun. Nevertheless, I suggest that this sort of recipe and the promotion of this particular item in the diet will encourage people to eat more fish.

My ancestors came from Prince Edward Island, and I happen to enjoy fish products. But in most cases I find it difficult indeed when I go to a restaurant to be able to purchase fish products attractively prepared. Since I have mentioned the parliamentary restaurant I should like to say that during the lobster season I think it would be very nice to have lobsters prepared attractively rather than just served cold on a plate.

The Chairman: Order, please. It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until 2.30.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, as I said before lunch, I am very interested in what the minister and his department have achieved. In my view fish products ought to be marketed in a much more attractive way than at present and promoted aggressively on the basis that not only are they substitutes for meat but an attractive basic food as well as a delicacy in some cases. Although the minister is an affable sort of man the industry as a whole is in trouble. Over the years many militant labour disputes have broken out in the industry, and we are not free from that difficulty today. The reason for that, is that the industry in general is depressed, paying depressed wages for work done under medieval working conditions. When one considers the poor markets for fish it is small wonder that we have difficulties of this kind in this industry, or in any other industry that suffers from the evils experienced in the fishing industry.

The minister mentioned some interesting conservation projects, including Babine lake and various other projects. He mentioned productivity, and I wish to deal with that. In the fishing industry productivity is not the responsibility of those who man vessels or are employed as cannery packers. The workers do not control productivity; it is controlled by those who own fishing companies and canneries. Over a long period we must increase investment in ships, canneries, shore installations and processing equipment, to say nothing of improvements in transportation, packaging and marketing before we shall see the productivity of this industry growing. To increase our productivity we must have a work force that is better educated and we must channel sizeable amounts of money into investment of badly needed research. Only in that way will new markets be developed.

Pollution of fish spawning grounds is a problem that plagues the industry. The minister and his department so far have been able to exercise little or no control over this matter. I hope the minister will recognize how serious the problem of pollution is and make a statement about it. I also hope to hear something from the minister about the progress of the proposed Canada Water Conservation Assistance Act amendments. Is a bill to be introduced soon? I ask this even though the matter may come under the aegis of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. We must tighten the various departmental and provincial responsibilities with regard to pollution and we must recognize that responsibility for pollution is not something that is only of regional interest but concerns our entire population.

I should like to hear the minister say something about the establishment of an anti-pollution authority. I submit that the plans of various municipalities and plants to use the rivers and lakes of Canada as so many open sewers for the disposal of waste ought to come under scrutiny. No one ought to be allowed to dump waste into our rivers and lakes that are inhabited by fish and used by human beings in summer. We must bring strict regulations to bear in this area so that our rivers and lakes may be kept as free of pollution as possible. Over the years persuasion has not been enough to curb this problem and I should like some concrete governmental action taken in this regard.

May I direct your attention, Mr. Chairman, to the salmon industry of British Columbia, an industry which has faced troubled times and will face troubled years in the future. The fishermen of my area are disturbed because fishermen from the United States may fish in the waters off Point Roberts on days when the fishermen from my area may not do so. Regulations govern the catching of fish in the Fraser river. On certain days our fishermen are prohibited from fishing but this prohitition does not apply to United States fishermen. Our fishermen complain that while they are prohibited by our laws from fishing on certain days in the Fraser river, United States fishermen take advantage of their inability to catch fish about to enter the Fraser and obtain catches which our Canadian fishermen would have obtained if they had been allowed to engage in fishing.

The salmon fishermen, as represented by their union, are concerned about the new licensing regulations which have recently been proposed and imposed by the minister. For the benefit of the committee, Mr. Chairman, I would like to review some of the points connected with these new regulations. I believe the main point in these proposals is that there are to be no new licences issued, at least for the time being.

The vessels that fish for salmon are divided into two kinds, class A and class B. Class A are those described as having a total value catch of more than $1,250 in 1967 and 1968, and class B are those which have had a total catch of less than $1,250 in 1967 and 1968. The class B licences are slated to disappear along with the boats. A licence will die when the boat is no longer a viable fishing vessel. There does not seem to be any criticism of this action regarding class B vessels. The main point at issue rests with the issuing of licences to class A boats because those licences are now to be bought and sold with the boats to which they are attached. The big question is, who can buy these boats and therefore acquire a licence for himself?

As I have said, Mr. Chairman, these new regulations are of deep concern to many fishermen and that concern has been expressed by their organizations, notably their union. We must admit that all branches of the Pacific coast industry with one exception, the Prince Rupert Co-op, agree that there should be some kind of limitation, but the question concerns the method by which limitation is to be accomplished.

I would like to outline to the committee the main fears of the fishermen, as represented to me, on this matter of particular importance to them which affects their livelihood. The first point is that fishermen who know no other occupation, fishermen of all ages and in all branches of the industry, might be prevented by these new regulations from ever being able to fish privately again. They are concerned because they think they may have no other choice than to become employees or slaves of the fishing companies. They cannot afford to purchase class A boats. In many cases they have spent their whole lives and their families for generations have spent their lives in the fishing industry, and they fear that in the future they will be excluded from it.

The second point is that these new regulations will lead to the establishment of a select group of vessel owners, many of whom will be fishing companies. The big corporations, the well financed companies, will be in a position to purchase class A vessels. They can even afford to buy them, hold them out of use for a while, retain the licences and use them at a future date. The main matter that particularly disturbs private fishermen with limited resources is that few of them will be able to compete under the kind of licensing arrangements that are forthcoming.

The third point of disturbance is that because class A boats with licences attached are limited in number, their price will be so high that only large fishing companies will be able to purchase them. The fishermen fear the concept of vertical integration such as has developed in the forest industry, whereby a company will own the boats and the canneries and will wholesale and market the produce. This is likely to occur in the fishing industry. When we have a situation such as exists in the forest industry, where there is vertical integration, I feel that the much praised concept of free enterprise and free competition no longer exists. Such a situation leads to the control of an industry by a relatively few companies and is ultimately more costly for the average citizen.

The next point is that this type of vessel price-kiting can lead to such an extra investment in vessels and equipment that it will eventually affect productivity. As you increase your investment in a particular industry and your production, your crop, as it were, remains relatively the same, productivity is bound to go down. In fact I am told that this has already happened in the fishing industry because the minister has said that there are too many fishermen chasing too few fish.

Finally, fishermen are concerned about what provisions are being made for their retraining and to provide them with a measure of mobility, if they are going to be displaced from the fishing industry by these new regulations.

Through you, Mr. Chairman, I wish to advise the minister that the fishermen in my area are so concerned about this matter that they have asked for a meeting next Friday, a week from today, to see what can be done to humanize these regulations. This is a matter which the minister and I have discussed previously, and I feel certain that he will consider it in all seriousness.

The minister has said that everyone agrees to licensing limitations, except perhaps the Prince Rupert Co-op, and that only the union objects to this form of licence limitation. However, this is not completely compatible with my information. As the minister discovered in Prince Rupert recently, other groups are beginning to have gnawing doubts about the effect. I have heard that fishermen using trawlers and seiners are no longer in complete accord with these regulations, and this is something which should be taken into serious consideration. Many of the trawlers and seiners were out at sea during the various deliberations that took place when the licensing regulations were proposed initially. I am certain they would like to review this whole matter, and I would hope a thorough review will come out of the deliberations of the fisheries committee when it travels to hold meetings on the west coast as it plans to do.

What are the alternatives to the method of limitation proposed by the minister? We might consider licensing individuals who are committed to the industry. I am not talking about moonlighters, those people working normally in other jobs who come into the fishing industry, work at it for a while, take the cream off the top and then go about their other business. I would suggest that such people should go sport fishing. This seems to be the kind of hobby approach we are facing in the fishing industry, but perhaps I do the minister a disservice by treating his suggestion frivolously because I too think there is much to be gained from his suggestion that the sport fishing industry has a lot to offer by way of profit to those engaged in it and to various related industries.

I would point out that the fishermen's union proposes a five year moratorium on licences and that the renewal of a licence be granted on the basis of the catch of a particular vessel attached to a particular person. The suggestion has been made that if a person derives from 30 per cent to 50 per cent of his annual income from fishing, that would be sufficient to consider him a bona fide fisherman. This is not something that is absolutely new. The Farm Credit Corporation will not lend money to anyone who is not a bona fide farmer. I think something along these lines might be considered. Possibly a waiting list should be established and administered by a board composed of representatives of the fishermen's organizations, the Department of Fisheries, and perhaps some disinterested body such as a university. Certain preference should be given to those families which historically have engaged in the fishing industry in our province.

Supply—Fisheries and Forestry

I hope the minister will look into the proposals which have been advanced in an effort to see whether or not a solution can be arrived at in respect of the licensing problems facing this industry. I believe the provision to the effect that ownership of a boat allows a fisherman the right to fish and that the privilege of owning a boat is dependent upon how much money a particular individual has is surely discriminatory and unfair and will ultimately lead to the disappearance of many private fishermen whose resources are not sufficient to reach the financial heights of the resources of the fishing companies. Certainly this industry and the various related industries such as cold storage plants, outfitters and canneries should not be subjected to further disruption. Unrest in this industry must come to an end if the industry is to be effective on behalf of all Canadians.

I think it should be pointed out that the minister, on the one hand, is limiting the salmon fleet by reducing the licences and, on the other hand, recently there was a new proposal to spend $4½ million for vessels and training and retraining of our native Indian fishermen. This action is designed to encourage them to enter the salmon fishing industry. No one argues that this is not a good thing. Certainly these native people require a great deal of assistance in getting started in the industry, but this is bound to be resented by some because of the anomaly involved in that on the one hand we are cutting down the number of licences and on the other hand increasing them.

I should like to make one final point. It seems extremely strange that the fresh fish marketing boards do not come under the Department of Fisheries. It has been my experience in respect of the various agricultural marketing boards that in many cases they have been the means of protecting the particular products which they were designed to market. I hope the fresh fish marketing boards can soon come under the aegis of the Minister of Fisheries. I hope also that this can be accomplished rapidly for the benefit of the fishing industry in its entirety. I suggest that perhaps the minister should enter into a complete review of this matter and give a celebrated second look at the proposed licensing regulations.

Mr. Goode: Mr. Chairman, during the last ten years all ministers of fisheries have been appointed from the eastern provinces. Although they were capable men the west coast fishermen felt that these ministers did not have a full understanding of the problems of British Columbia. Indeed, many Pacific fishermen pointed to the days of Jimmy Sinclair of Coast Capilano, now Capilano, as being the last era of major co-operation between the federal government and themselves. Without a doubt Jimmy was an outstanding leader of the department. He led the industry with progressive legislation.

[Mr. Rose.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Goode: By coincidence the present Minister of Fisheries also represents the same riding. He is also becoming known among M.P.'s as co-operative, progressive and a man who is not afraid to enact legislation. Equally coincidental is the fact that the fishermen and the fishing industry in Jimmy Sinclair's days were represented in the Burnaby-Richmond delta by a member named Tom Goode. I do not wish to suggest that only "Goode" legislation is enacted in British Columbia and that fisheries flourish only when the member from Capilano is the minister and the member from Burnaby-Richmond delta is on the government side and his name is Tom Goode. I should like to point out, however, that Burnaby-Richmond has another Tom Goode although perhaps not yet of age. However, if Capilano in another 25 years can produce a minister of fisheries, we will have another Goode as the member from Burnaby-Richmond.

In British Columbia the wages of workers in most industries have increased substantially in the past ten years. Many of them are doing well. Families have obtained a standard of living equal to any in North America, but the fisherman has fallen behind. His family is not benefiting from a prosperous Canada. As salmon catches by individual boats have gone from bad to worse more boats with ever-increased investments in gear are fishing for fewer salmon. The Department of Fisheries has cut down on the allowable fishing hours in order to permit some salmon to escape from this larger fleet. Thus the income from the rivers and the ocean off the coast of British Columbia has diminished. Alarm has spread as pollution has become apparent in the major rivers of British Columbia. Nothing has been done about this pollution.

The battles and representations for a headland to headland base line have produced no victories and have caused the men and the industry to feel that no one really cares. To make matters worse, the Russian and Japanese fleets presented themselves off our coast line. These fleets at first stayed well out to sea until 1964 when, as a result of lack of base lines and an inadequate 12 mile limit, they crept closer and closer to our shores taking more and more fish. The Russians with their massive fleet and their floating processing ships threatened to destroy our bottom fisheries. The fishermen have suffered from lower incomes, poor catches, too many boats, foreign fleets, pollution, increasing costs and no local fisheries minister to complain to.

But once again enthusiasm and optimism are spreading among the boats. The fishermen now know they have a competent minister of fisheries who is from British Columbia. They know he understands their problems. They have heard that strong government investigations are being carried on in respect of new headland to headland base lines in order to stop the destruction of our fisheries by foreign fleets. The fishermen know that the fresh new government and the eager new M.P.'s from British Columbia realize that pollution must be controlled and they know that the Fraser River has No. 1 priority. The government has promised new low cost loans for the purchase and improvement of fishing boats. At last the high interest rates will be done away with.

This summer, in response to the long time representations of the fishermen, the minister responsible brought in licensing restrictions to limit the future number of boats allowed to catch salmon. Two categories, A and B, were immediately instituted to cover salmon boats and class C was later added to cover halibut and herring fishermen. These regulations immediately disqualified 1,000 boats from further participation in salmon fishing, leaving 5,500 vessels in the preferred category A and 1,500 smaller boats in the restricted category B. The basis of the regulations is to stop the entry of additional fishing boats into the business and to upgrade the class A boats. It is hoped that most of class B will disappear in the next few years.

In class B is included one of the major sources of annoyance to professional fishermen. Here we have the part time fisherman or moonlighter, as he is called. He swarms over the best positions on the river. He constantly hinders and restricts the proficiency of the fleet by his inexperience. He is a fireman, a school principal, a millworker, or a student. He is not a legitimate fisherman. He catches few fish, less than 2 per cent of the total salmon catch, but he represents 22 per cent of the boats on the rivers. For the good of the industry the moonlighter must be eliminated. This must be done soon in order to restore the fisherman's confidence in our government.

The government's proposed program to purchase these class B licences for the health of the B.C. fisheries must be brought in without delay. We must prove that this government is sincere in its desire to reduce the number of boats. We must prove that we will no longer tolerate substandard incomes among our fishing people. We must eliminate these 1,500 class B vessels in the shortest possible time, at the outside within a maximum of three years. If this program is followed we will eliminate the need for welfare and unemployment insurance among the fishing people. The bitterness will disappear in these fishing communities.

There are two methods open to the government in order to fulfil a short term elimination of moonlighting, and I encourage the use of both. First, the yearly purchase of a large number of licensed boats through a government fund supplemented by increased payments for boat licences should take place. Second, we must progressively increase the minimum catch limit allowed to hold a class A licence from the present 1,250 yearly catch limit over a three year period to 3,000.

Let us eliminate the small part time boat. The seiners, the trawlers and the gill netters of B.C. have always plied their trade with great vigour and skill. They are also renowned for their ability to bring their elected representatives to task whenever they feel the need has arisen. They feel that these new regulations have brought forth a definite need to criticize their minister and their members of parliament. This criticism is welcomed by all of us, for this is the path to good co-operative legislation. There are many criticisms of the new fish boat licensing. One of the main points of opposition originated with the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union, an organization which negotiates product prices for most of the British Columbia salmon fishermen. The union agrees that licensing is important and has been making representations for control to deaf government ears for over a decade, but the agreement that there must be controls is the last point of concurrence between government and union policy. The United Fishermen would prefer licensing of individual fishermen themselves rather than have licences remain with the boats.

With the suggestion of a five year moratorium on new persons entering the profession the union further suggested that to remain in the industry an operator must obtain over 40 per cent of his annual earnings from the sea. This would mean that fishermen would be forced to present one tax return to the Department of National Revenue and another to the Department of Fisheries. We do not want to investigate fishermen's incomes and they do not want us to do so. Therefore there is no way we could possibly restrict people entering the industry on the basis of income, because the income of fishermen varies every year.

The union's proposed program possesses weaknesses and errors which override any advantage in this form of approach. First, by enforcing the five year moratorium on licensing of new fishermen we would be eliminating the entry into the industry of those young men whose heritage directs them to this exciting life. They have the right to enter this business just as those men in the business have the right to remain. Today's young men would be denied the right to follow this chosen pursuit for at least five years, at which time they would have no guarantee of entry. The decision would not belong to the individual but to a government controlled board which would be forced to consider all applications, not only those of fishermen's sons but others.

Who would then receive the nod to enter this profession? Would we deny entry to new Canadians? Would we limit it to people over 25 years of age and under 50 years of age, or would we limit it to friends of fishermen or friends of the government in power? Would we stop new Canadians from entering this industry? We should remember that new Canadians make up most of the labour force in the fishing industry. This is not the way to solve the difficulties.

Second, the limitation on income is contrary to the Canadian way of life. We believe that the man who works the hardest presumably receives the greatest reward, but we would be telling men not to work in the off-fishing season but to stay at home on unemployment insurance and welfare benefits. Let us remember the one fact that fishermen in our country are now receiving $3 million each year in welfare payments and unemployment insurance benefits; yet they return only $100,000 in revenue or 30 times less than the benefits which are being drawn. This is intolerable for both the fishermen and the taxpayers.

The Burnaby-Richmond delta possesses many brand names that are world famous in relation to seafood. Two of these brands are synonymous with quality salmon. They are Cloverleaf, produced by B.C. Packers Limited, and Paramount produced by the Nelson Brothers. Both firms' products are packed in the Richmond-Steveston area, and we are exceptionally proud of the part these industries play in the Canadian economy.

In conclusion may I point out that the fishermen of the Burnaby-Richmond delta do not want welfare or unemployment insurance. They do not want to stop people from entering this industry but they do want the right to control the entry of new fishing enterprises and they want the right to control prices.

Mr. Moores: Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond for his kind remarks about the minister. I suggest to the minister that possibly that hon. member should be appointed as his public relations man on the west coast.

Let me deal primarily with the catastrophic situation existing in the groundfish industry of eastern Canada and particularly in Newfoundland. Last spring I had the opportunity to write an article dealing with the then difficult time the industry was experiencing. Except for government action the present crisis would have come about much sooner. The deficiency payment scheme was introduced and lasted until the end of October. Its implementation allowed the industry to survive. Its elimination without anything to replace it has dealt the industry and the many thousands connected with it a fatal blow from which they cannot recover. It is for this reason that I plead with the minister to reconsider his position. I also realize that the existing problem was not caused by the present Minister of Fisheries, but while this may be the case it is now his responsibility to overcome the problem.

During my remarks I do not intend to be kind to the industry, but neither am I going to let the government off the hook. The imminent ruin of the frozen fish industry is so serious to the economy of Newfoundland and of Canada, so tragic in its implications for thousands of ordinary Canadians, that it cannot be sloughed aside again by the government. Make no mistake about it, the death of this industry is sure if the government, wilfully and callously, continues to withhold the life-giving measures necessary. Failure to take meaningful action now means the end of an industry and the end of a way of life for tens of thousands of Canadians. If this end is allowed to come, the odium of it will cling to this government for all time.

I have no interest today in trying to embarrass the government or to criticize it simply for partisan advantage. I have no wish to single out individual ministers or members for attack. The question is too urgent and too grave for that. This is something of such pressing and fundamental concern to so many that it is impossible to exaggerate or overdramatize. It passes all understanding that the stark social and economic injustice of allowing this industry to die by default could happen in this oddly-titled "just society". If there is any sense of justice, if there is any feeling of compassion, if there is any plain, old-fashioned common sense left within this government, I appeal to it through the Prime Minister to act now and play later.

As I have said, I would like to mention again the Minister of Fisheries. I believe he is genuinely concerned about the plight of the industry. I believe he feels for the thousands of ordinary Canadians so closely involved with its life or death. I believe, too, that he wants to do something to help this industry and its people. In the past we have directed the minister's attention to the problem. After all, it is neither strange nor new. In all justice it must be said that he has shown an appreciation of its importance and its dimensions. But the situation in Newfoundland is gravely serious today, much more so than the minister apparently realizes. The trouble is primarily financial. The reasons for the trouble are many. I believe that in order to bring the present picture into focus it is necessary to briefly review our fisheries background.

The most prolific groundfish supplies in the world are accessible to the Newfoundland deep sea fleet. This, as well as the natural phenomenon of the inshore fishery, when large quantities of fish come to the coast of Newfoundland during certain periods each year, means that the cost of raw material has been relatively cheap. In the case of other fishing nations, especially the Europeans, their capital investment in fishing equipment together with the long distances they travelled to get to the fishing grounds meant a much higher cost for raw material than was the case in eastern Canada. This in fact meant that the Newfoundland processor had, and has a considerable head start in the matter of cost compared with his competition. Our competitors, faced by this unfavourable raw material cost difference, were forced to compensate by becoming very skilled in other phases of fish processing. Whilst they became very skilled in productivity and efficiency, the Newfoundland industry went merrily on its way, partially resulting in the present state of affairs.

The undercapitalized and very segmented Newfoundland industry also paid the penalty of underutilized facilities in the form of seasonal plants in which employment was only assured for a few months each year. This resulted in attracting poor quality labour and being unable to develop the necessary skills owing to the high turnover from year to year.

The world supply of frozen groundfish exceeds demand, and even if the world catching power remains constant this situation is likely to continue in 1969 and 1970. The production by Newfoundland firms has been mainly of low value commodity items such as cod blocks, with some, through a small, effort to produce more refined and better value packs, and virtually no effort to produce the more sophisticatedly prepared and high value packs.

The reason for the difficult marketing conditions that exist is readily explainable. The world suppliers of fish and fish products, in a fit of optimism and a state of euphoria, embarked upon a massive build-up of catching power. This was commenced a few years ago for the following reasons:

1. Rising prices, which advanced in the case of cod blocks from 23 cents to 30 cents during 1965 and 1966.

2. Optimistic forecasts.

3. Increasing sales and the introduction of new products.

4. Steadily increasing consumer facilities such as deep freezes, refrigerators, etc., especially in Europe.

5. The always present theory of increasing volume in order to lower costs.

The reasons were valid and some of the build-up could have been justified. However, without any planning or consultation the world fishing industry went blissfully ahead, led by an even more blissful Newfoundland. The fishing industry in Newfoundland, because of its background and location, has been wholly production oriented. Owing to the size of the companies, virtually none of them were, or are, capable of developing the necessary marketing and sales arrangements because of the lack of diversified products, volume, finances and, probably most important, know-how. This resulted in the easiest course of action being followed, volume sales of low value commodity items through brokers, a course of action that guaranteed the lowest possible return. Since the second world war the fishing countries of the western world, other than Canada and the United States, have received increasing industry-wide subsidization. Information as to the form and implementation of the many and varied schemes is available.

The iron curtain countries have in recent years also made a massive assault on the north Atlantic fisheries and today, Mr. Chairman, when 40,000 tons of Canadian deep sea fishing fleets are operating off the eastern Canadian coast, there are 2,800,000 tons of subsidized European fleets fishing there. To put that in slightly different language, for every ton of ships sailing out of Canada there are already 80 tons fishing in the northwest Atlantic from western and central European countries. Our main western European competitors, namely, Norway, Iceland and Denmark, have received subsidization in many forms. A few of the major ones are, first, on the purchase price of raw material—for instance, in Norway the fishermen receive 6.77 cents per pound for cod and the government pays 50 per cent of this amount; second, on labour rates; third, through state encouraged and even state controlled marketing and processing organizations. In the case of Iceland, whose economy is primarily fishing, their method of subsidization is through continuous devaluation of their currency. This, of course, is a situation which cannot last, but in the past few years Iceland has devalued its currency 26 per cent.

These and many other factors are the reasons why we in eastern Canada cannot compete against the very heavily subsidized European fleets. The peripheral benefits that Canadians receive and which could be misconstrued as a form of subsidization, that is, unemployment insurance, able-bodied relief, etc., especially as they apply to fishermen, are more conducive to non-productivity than they are to productivity.

One of the major problems in the Canadian fishing industry, but much more especially in Newfoundland, has been the uncontrolled growth of a multitude of small privately owned companies. These companies, due primarily to financial resources, lack the technical advancements in processing and catching equipment and have failed to keep up. The size of the companies, and in turn the individual plants, inhibit the employment of professional management in the administrative, accounting, technical, marketing and sales areas of their businesses which our much larger European competitors enjoy. The individualism of the Newfoundland owner has been such as to avoid mergers or any form of group co-operation which would mean he was not in control in name and in fact. This individualism was to be admired when the individual was matching wits with his counterpart in another town or hamlet in Newfoundland. However, it cannot survive in the international league in which Newfoundland finds itself competing today. As unpalatable as it will be to some people, the fact remains that the day when one owned the only horse and buggy in town is over.

These factors, together with the haphazard policy of the provincial government of putting large amounts of money into the industry in an unplanned and uneconomic manner, have led to the present chaos. We can easily define the problems and the reasons for them, but the solutions are much more difficult. However, I will sincerely try to provide some of the answers in a minute or two after advising the house just how serious is the present situation.

I believe I can show that the matter is urgent and critical. I believe I can demonstrate the dimensions of the problem, its causes and effects. I think that I can even provide some suggestions as to what should be done to save this important part of the Canadian economic fabric and eventually bring it back to full productive capacity. But perhaps more important, in the light of the government's apparent unawareness and apathy, I can point out what this government will be faced with if immediate remedial action is not taken. There will be thousands upon thousands of unemployed, undernourished and poorly housed Canadians on our eastern coast. There will be a ruinous impact upon the economy of a region, and eventually a heavy drag upon that of the nation as a whole. There will be bankruptcies and heavy losses among creditors. There will be cries for help from many quarters by way of demands for direct relief payments, subsidies and emergency payments of all kinds.

Because deficiency payments ended at the end of October, Newfoundland companies will from now on be trying to live on trading results only, without government assistance. The present market condition has been created by countries with heavily subsidized fishing interests both in their fleets and on shore or by countries which have recently experienced drastic devaluation, as I have mentioned previously.

The industry has now been advised by telegram from the minister not to count on any help from the government of Canada before the end of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1969, with no indication of what is to come after that. This means five consecutive months of substantial losses estimated for those processing groundfish in Newfoundland, cash losses of between $300,000 and $400,000 a month for the companies concerned. The trading losses including depreciation are of course in the order of half a million dollars per month, and I think it should be stated that the depreciation cost is as valid a cost as the actual cash loss. Half a million dollars per month is the over-all trading picture which includes depreciation, but even if one said, "well, I am concerned only with cash", the cash figures would be between $300,000 and $400,000 of actual cash loss per month, though for five months it would be getting on to $2 million in the industry. The actual cash loss for five consecutive months, not including depreciation, would run from $1½ million to $2 million. The trading losses, including depreciation, which I insist should be taken in, would be in the vicinity of $2 million to $2½ million between the termination of the deficiency payments and the end of the government's financial year.

The situation is that now all companies are running at a loss position every month. Most of them are already reaching the limit of bank borrowing, and the those few who are not are so close to it that it makes no difference. So if they cannot raise money from some other source, other than trading, then a shutdown is inevitable for all companies. The actual number of days and weeks until it happens depends on how successful people are in raising funds elsewhere and on their willingness to go on anyway despite the very bleak picture, without any government assistance whatsoever until the end of March at the earliest, and most of them feel that they might as well get out right now and cut their losses.

At the present time the fishing industry is very heavily in debt. Their bills payable are excessive, with a great percentage of the money owing in excess of 90 days and most of the balance being due from 30 to 60 days. This is a situation which, of course, cannot be tolerated. If the creditors press for payment—and naturally they will with the industry in its present condition—it is only a matter of a very short time before the industry actually closes down.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the people in this house realize what this will mean to Atlantic Canada and particularly to Newfoundland. At present in Newfoundland there are in excess of 2,500 people working in factories and 1,200 employed on the trawlers bringing the fish into these factories. During the heavy seasons in the summer which stretch from six to eight months there are 10,000 people employed in the factories and some 16,000 fishermen involved. All in all there are something like 26,000 people. With dependants and back-up service, this means at least a ratio of five to one. So that you can say that one Newfoundlander in every four would be pretty directly affected. It means that 25 per cent of the people in Newfoundland will feel the drastic effects of the shutting down of this industry. This must not be allowed to happen.

Under no circumstances must the people of Canada stand by and watch 26,000 people become unemployed, with so little required to actually keep them employed. This government must provide assistance because the market prospects for the balance of this year are not bright. I stress the urgency of this assistance. Very recently I was informed that Iceland had sold considerable quantities of fish at 21 cents per pound for cod blocks to the U.S. market, and this is at least four to five cents below the actual cost of Canadian producers.

Equally, Mr. Chairman, you cannot expect firms with parent companies elsewhere to keep pouring money into a bottomless pit unless they can see some light at the end of the tunnel.

The minister will not even tell us what we can expect at the end of March, and I think it is time for him as well as for the industry to come out with a plan and with some definite commitments as to where both are going. We cannot wait until the end of March. We must come up with a long term plan in order to stabilize the industry but, as I have said, while this plan is being created we must buy time in order that there be an industry left. As I have said, in the short term time has to be bought. It has to be bought in the form of deficiency payments that have just been discontinued or of an equivalent scheme under a different name. The industry must be here when the long term plan is implemented. If this is not ensured, I suggest to the minister that at the end of March in lieu of a formula he will have to consider the establishment of a fish industry because most of the present one will not be in existence in eastern Canada.

Now I should like to deal with some recommended solutions as I see them. The problems in the Newfoundland industry could be solved by massive injections of money, but then so could just about everybody else's. This would not in itself be the answer. The federal government would be neglecting its responsibility and doing very little good if it did not insist that the fishing industry in Newfoundland first put its own house in order before this long term plan is implemented. This must be done but it cannot be done overnight. In the interim, money should and must be found to allow the Newfoundland fishing industry to buy time until it can become viable in its own right.

This morning the minister mentioned that he was looking forward to hearing solutions from this side of the house. I would suggest to the minister that we should be able to expect that he, with the staff of experts that surround him, should be able to come up with solutions. However, I will make a few suggestions of my own.

My first suggestion is an open auction system for the selling of fish products from the primary producer to the companies. Eastern Canada is one of the few places still left in the world where the open auction system is not in effect. Through the open auction system one ensures quality and one also ensures the highest possible price to fishermen.

Second, ideally one firm should be established to operate the industry. This is, of course, impractical. However, it should be accepted that as few firms as possible should continue to operate, and in my opinion their number should be kept as small as possible. This would involve the merging of the smaller firms as well as some of the larger ones. The remaining much larger firms could afford to employ professional management for administrative, accounting, technical marketing and sales positions. This would be an extremely bitter pill for most of the present owners to swallow, but it must be appreciated that it is more lucrative to own a small percentage of a healthy and viable concern than 100 per cent of a bankrupt one.

The third recommendation is that a commission be appointed to study under the terms of reference suggested in my recommendations as well as those of the department and to propose the most effective manner by which to implement them.

The fourth recommendation is that the provincial government cease immediately giving assistance on an ad hoc basis. However, this same authority must establish a policy whereby assistance is uniformly applicable on an industry-wide basis. This can readily apply to the present structure of the industry as well as to any future changes. In this regard I might stress that I mentioned here the provincial government which in the past has granted money at the whim of an individual rather than on a well planned basis, and I am not talking about the type of ad hoc philosophy which was in effect this year.

The fifth recommendation is that the provincial government refrain from lending money for the purpose of either the expansion of present company facilities or the establishment of new companies. This policy would remain in effect until some semblance of order has been restored to the present situation.

The sixth recommendation is that the federal and provincial authorities set up machinery whereby funds are made available to an improved industry structure for the following purposes:

Upgrading skills among inshore and deep sea fishermen and plant employees. This would include the cost of acquiring management consultants, work study personnel and training personnel.

Acquiring approved plant and fleet equipment geared exclusively to increasing productivity of existing facilities.

Partially compensating owners of uneconomic units that would have to be closed.

Providing initial financing regarding working capital.

The seventh recommendation is that the federal and provincial governments, each or both, contribute to a major campaign to promote the sale of Canadian fish in the U.S. market.

The eighth recommendation is that a study be made to check the feasibility of the federal authorities buying distressed stocks of Canadian fish at cost price. With all the above, this may have to be part of the immediate solution to look after the purported excess of frozen fish amounting to 40 million pounds that will be in surplus in 1969.

• (3:30 p.m.)

The ninth recommendation is that the federal government arrange to take over the management of the fish resource on the continental shelf as quickly as possible. In other words, Mr. Chairman, the industry needs reorganization and refinancing. This government seems to be afraid to take unilateral action. Yet we see the government claiming the continental shelf, the bottom of the ocean floor, and claiming the air space from the top of the sea, up; but the water in between, where the fish are, seems to be beyond the jurisdiction of our federal government at this time. I strongly recommend to the government that this is possibly the most important step that could be taken at this time or in the future. It is stated that the fishing industry in eastern Canada is in dire trouble. The problems are many and large, and the solutions not easy. The situation can be set straight, but it will take bold and sometimes unpopular action, and it will have to be taken in a hurry.

Mr. McQuaid: I am sure that every member of this committee, Mr. Chairman, must regret the fact that we are more or less limited in the time we have at our disposal within which to comment on the estimates of the Department of Fisheries. I consider fisheries to be one of the great industries of Canada. It is certainly an industry upon which our economy in the Atlantic provinces is very heavily dependent. This is an industry in which the men who are engaged in it risk more, work harder and unfortunately get less than in any other trade or industry in which they could engage. If, as I believe, there has been, some slight increase in the standard of living of our fishermen, it is certainly one which they have very dearly earned and one to which they are very rightly entitled. I say therefore it is the responsibility of the Department of Fisheries to see that this industry and the fish resources of this country are developed and improved so that an even further improvement may be made in the living conditions, as well as the working conditions, of the many thousands of Canadians who make their living from the harvest of the sea.

Improved working conditions is an increasingly important aspect of every phase of living today. These proper working conditions are as important, perhaps even more important to the fishing industry than to any other industry. I realize the provision of adequate wharf facilities, boat harbours, shelters, dredging and matters of this kind are the responsibility of the Department of Public Works rather than the Department of Fisheries. I mention them at this time because of their very great importance to the fishing industry.

Without facilities of this kind, the men just cannot properly do their work, and the industry just will not prosper as it should. The fishermen will try their best but they will be working under very great disadvantages and under conditions which constitute a real hardship. Improved facilities are needed in many places within my own constituency. I am confident they must also be needed in many other areas throughout this country. The Department of Public Works must show a greater interest in these needs and must be made to realize that the success of the industry can be very largely dependent on how well that Department of Public Works does its job. It is most important, too, that this work be done only after prior consultation with the fishermen. They are the men who know best what has to be done.

It is true that they may not have the technical knowledge, but they have what is just as important, the practical knowledge. Engineers, for some reason or other, do not seem to understand where or how to place many of the things that need to be built for fishermen. In many cases they have erected structures or carried out dredging operations which were entirely unsuited to the local conditions. These things were done at great public expense but they did not adequately fill the need. In fact, in many cases they could be very accurately described as a complete waste of the taxpayers' money. I therefore say to these engineers that they should not be afraid to consult with the fishermen before embarking on major construction projects of this nature. They must not be afraid to follow the advice given to them by the fishermen. These fishermen have been working in the area all their lives and they have the practical experience which should prove very helpful.

While I am mentioning fishing facilities, I feel I must comment on the deletion from the estimates this year of an amount to assist in the construction of bait freezing and storing facilities. This item has been in our estimates for the past number of years. This year, for some reason or other, it has been deleted. I cannot think of anything which could be of more assistance to our small boat, inshore fishermen than adequate deep freezing and fish storage facilities. At certain times of the year the securing of an adequate supply of bait becomes a real problem. Without bait our fishermen are just not able to operate. This bait cannot be brought in in large quantities and held for future use unless there are proper storage facilities located at the small fishing centres. Proper cold storage facilities for fresh fish are also necessary. This is particularly true in my own province of Prince Edward Island, where we have a serious transportation problem.

I suggest therefore to the minister that every effort should be made to encourage and give attention to this program of erecting bait storage facilities, and storage facilities for our fresh fish. This is something that must not be neglected. As I say, I regret that this particular item has been deleted from the estimates this year.

I should like to turn for just a few minutes to a problem facing our inshore fishermen. These inshore fishermen are the men who fish from small open boats; the men who go out in the morning and come back at night. I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that they still make up a very important segment of our fishing industry. Many thousands of people are daily engaged in this branch of the fishing industry; many thousands of people are dependent for their livelihood on this mode of fishing. This is a branch of the industry which gives employment to many, many people, and it is one in which millions of dollars has been invested. It must be protected, and in particular it must be protected from destruction by trawlers which destroy the gear of these inshore fishermen. I only wish the Minister of Fisheries could talk to these inshore fishermen and listen to their complaints, their very legitimate complaints, about the destruction of gear resulting from the operation of trawlers. These trawlers drag inshore. They not only destroy gear but they also destroy the fishing grounds of the inshore fishermen.

These inshore fishermen, because of the size of their boats, are not able to proceed very far from shore, whereas the trawlers can go many, many miles. The grounds close to shore should therefore, in fact must, be conserved for the use of the inshore fishermen. They have had almost exclusive rights to these fishing grounds for many years, and the whole economy of the inshore fisheries has been based upon the supposition that the small boat fishermen will have the use of these grounds, that they should be reserved for them. Further, I suggest that those fishermen with larger boats who can go farther from shore to earn their living should be prohibited from dragging over the gear of inshore fishermen.

Many full-time fishermen who are dependent upon inshore fisheries for their livelihood are facing a real crisis today, and something must be done, and done immediately, to protect them. I for one strongly oppose the idea that they must be phased out of the industry. One suggestion that we hear now is that these small boat fishermen must gradually be phased out of the industry. For hundreds of these men there are no alternative occupational opportunities. They have been fishermen all their lives. They know of no other way of making a living, and I say that they must be protected.

Higher operating costs, and fixed costs in relation to volume and value of their landings have resulted in a very great loss of net earnings, and something must also be done, and done immediately, to correct this situation. Some of our inshore fishermen are netting less than $1,500 per year, and this certainly places them well below the poverty line.

Conservation is also a very important aspect of the fishing industry, though I know this is now receiving some considerable attention from the department. However, I find fault with the government—not necessarily with the present Minister of Fisheries, because he has not been in office long enough to do very much about this problem—for not drawing the base lines so that some limit will be established within which foreign trawlers cannot operate. There is absolutely no excuse, except the excuse of negligence, for the government's failure to establish these base lines long before this, thus protecting the Canadian fisheries. The government did not take very long to establish the base lines for offshore mineral rights; this was done very quickly. Why cannot base lines now be established for the fishing industry? The law has been on the statute books since 1964, yet nothing definite has been done to implement that law. As I say, I am not placing this matter at the doorstep of the present minister, but I hope that now he is Minister of Fisheries he will see that these base lines are established immediately.

That is one aspect of conservation. Many people believe, and believe wrongly, that the supply of fish in the sea or in the ocean is inexhaustible. That is not the case. It has been incontestably proven, I think, that some of the most valuable coastal and ocean fisheries are susceptible to depletion because of over fishing. This is particularly true with respect to lobster fishing off the Atlantic coast.

I want to congratulate the department on its initiative in instituting a lobster trap limit in district 7B. This limit is presently fixed at 500 traps per boat and seems to be working out quite well. I believe fishermen are finding that their capital investment is very much less, and that they are making just as much money with considerably less expenditure. I would warn the minister however that this conservation measure, this trap limit, will not be entirely successful unless it continues to be accompanied by a corresponding restriction on the number of lobster fishing licences issued.

A program along these lines was tried last season, and though satisfactory to a point it was not entirely successful because of political interference with the decisions that were handed down by the board which had been set up to decide who should receive licences. This board, which was comprised of at least one departmental official and a number of men drawn from the fishing industry, tried to do a good job. They met and considered the applications which were placed before them, and then they rendered their decision.

However the regulations provide for an appeal to the minister from the decision of the board. I find no fault with this right of appeal; in fact I think it is a necessary precaution because there may very well be extenuating circumstances unknown to the board which, when made known to the minister, could cause him in all fairness to reverse the board's decision.

Last year, just about the time when the decisions of the board were being handed down, a federal election was called, and this was when the matter got entirely out of hand. May I inform this committee without fear of contradiction that political influence was used in some cases in granting licences to men whose applications had been refused by the board, and who in actual fact had no real right to a lobster fishing licence.

This is unfortunate. It is unfortunate for the present minister, because I do not know how in the world he will ever get that regulation back on the rails. Men who apply this year and who are turned down will, I am afraid, cite to the minister cases almost parallel with theirs where last year licences were granted. It is unfortunate, as I say, that this interference was allowed to take place. However, it did, and I certainly hope that the minister will not allow anything like that to influence him this year when appeals are directed to him.

It is also important that this board which hears these applications be set up immediately. It is not fair to keep these fishermen waiting until perhaps mid-April before they are told whether they are going to get a licence to fish. Applications should be heard just as quickly as possible and a decision rendered, so that men who plan on entering the industry may make the necessary preparations. In many cases these men who plan on entering the lobster fishing industry have to buy equipment, they have to buy boats and they have to buy other gear. Naturally they do not want to make this investment until they know for sure whether or not they are going to get a licence to fish. If, as was the case last year with some applications, these decisions are allowed to lag until the middle of April or even later, then this just does not give them time to get ready for the opening of the season.

There is one other phase of the industry with which I should like to deal briefly, and this is the Irish moss industry. The harvesting of Irish moss is rapidly becoming a very important industry on Canada's Atlantic coast. In the past 25 years the harvest of Irish moss has grown from about 1.5 million pounds worth $30,000 to last year's 79 million pounds worth over $2 million.

To give you an idea, Mr. Chairman, how valuable an industry this is, during one week in July of this year two families working in an area in my own province harvested moss worth $1,000 to each family. Several other families earned about $600 per family, and I have known as many as 20 boats to average as much as $40 each per day. This moss is harvested mostly by hand and is picked off the shore where it is tossed up by the storms. As a result of this method of harvesting, very little capital investment is necessary.

The moss is also raked sometimes from the rocks, and it is in connection with this operation of raking that I think some experimental work should be done by the Department of Fisheries, or by some other department of government, to make sure that the moss industry is conserved. There is a feeling among those who are engaged in the industry that this raking process may damage the roots of the moss, and thereby interfere with its regrowth. I suggest that some experiments be carried out to see whether there is a real danger from this raking process and, if there is, that regulations be immediately introduced to see that the industry is not destroyed.

From this Irish moss comes a very valuable extract which is known as carrageen. Carrageen is in great demand and its value today is from $1.75 to $3 per pound. Its uses are almost limitless. In the food processing industry alone it is used by the makers of chocolate milk, minute breakfast foods, ice cream, pie fillings, confectionary, beer, desserts, salad dressings, flavourings, and a host of other foods. It has many other uses.

The important point for the department to note, Mr. Chairman, is that there is no plan in Canada for the extraction of carrageen from Irish moss. The dry moss which we harvest near our own shores has to be exported either to the United States or Denmark. The valuable byproduct carrageen is extracted from the moss and then shipped back to Canada to be used here. That is not as it should be.

It is estimated that a commercially profitable extraction plant could be supported by an annual supply of 16 million pounds of wet moss. Last year in the maritime provinces we harvested, as I said before, 79 million pounds of wet moss. Conceivably therefore we could have supported at least four, or possibly five, extraction plants in the maritime area. The substance could have been extracted right here and we could have been exporting it at anywhere from $1.75 to $3 a pound, rather than importing it after the moss had been exported to Denmark or the United States and the carrageen extracted there. I suggest that we could have here a very nice little industry in the maritime provinces, and I recommend it to the appropriate department of government for serious consideration.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Chairman, under normal circumstances I would not take the time of the house to comment on the estimates of a cabinet colleague. In this particular case however I feel I have some distinct and unique responsibilities and a particular interest, since I am the minister from Newfoundland. For that reason I ask this house, or this committee, to allow me some time to sketch at least some of the background to what has been, in my view, quite properly described as a crisis in the Newfoundland fishing industry.

I wish to compliment the speakers who have preceded me today, and I particularly wish to commend the hon. members for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare and Bonavista-Trinity-Conception for the moderate tones of their comments and the worth-while suggestions they have advanced. I will say at once that I am not disposed to disagree with them in their references to the long time neglect of the fishing industry.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Chairman, I think the minister was mistaken when he referred to the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare. I represent South Shore.

Mr. Jamieson: I beg your pardon. I ought to have referred to the hon. member for South Shore. They keep changing the names of constituencies and I find it hard to keep track of them all. In any event, I was saying that I would not disagree with the remarks of hon. members in their complaints about the traditional neglect of the fisheries. I think that is quite correct.

I do dispute the argument that this has been governmental neglect. I do not say that in the sense that either one party or another is responsible. It seems to me that one of the difficulties we have had in Canada for a long time is that there has been a lack of awareness on the part of the population generally of the importance of the fishery. There has been a failure on the part of information services of government and elsewhere to convey to the Canadian population the figures which were quoted this morning by the hon. member for South Shore as to the economic importance of this industry to our nation. So I have no cause to dispute what has been suggested here in that regard.

Looking back to the beginning of the fresh frozen fish industry, however, it is obvious that with notable exceptions there has been a very sizeable amount of government investment, both provincial and federal, in getting this industry going and actually creating it in the first place. I was looking today at some of the expenditures which have been made from time to time at both provincial and federal levels. It is quite surprising, for one who is not deeply involved in the industry, to see the extent to which government participation has created plants, contributed to their survival or has been the instrument for transferring the ownership of plants for the expenditure of as little as $1 or sometimes a few dollars more.

As the hon. member for Bonavista-Trinity-Conception said, there has been in the past a continuing series of ad hoc aid measures. He may be perfectly right that these were not of long term assistance to the industry. I agree with him that some of them were, at best, only partially successful, or ill advised. Yet I fear that the conditions which brought about that kind of aid as a general rule were almost precisely the kinds of conditions we are discussing here today, which once again are resulting in submissions that other kinds of ad hoc aid programs be introduced.

From the comments which have been made today it is interesting to note that we are all reasonably good theoreticians when it comes to outlining long range solutions for the fishing industry. We have had a number of representations about that; obviously the hon. member for Bonavista-Trinity-Conception has been an expert in this field and I was greatly impressed by the solutions he advanced. I subscribe to many of them. I agree that a number of them are rather controversial and would generate quite a bit of disagreement among his colleagues, who formerly spoke for the fishing industry.

If I may make a comment here, it is that one of the difficulties we face is that there is no unanimity within the fishing industry—at least, there has not been until very recently—as to what the solutions ought to be. I can tell hon. members here that within the past few weeks a considerable number of alternatives and programs have been advanced that might be used to help the fishing industry. I have had diametrically opposed views presented to me by various groups within the fishing industry. Only three weeks ago we were able to obtain for the first time, so far as I am aware, a submission with regard to the future of the industry which was representative of all Atlantic provinces. In the past, for instance, Newfoundland representatives have made certain suggestions to us when seeking certain kinds of aid; at the same time, for example, a Nova Scotian plan may have been advanced, and for very good reasons they have said, "These formulae are not the most suitable from our point of view and we prefer some other type of programs." Indeed, there have been occasions when delegations have been sent to fight the suggestions of one province or another. I say that because I wish to tell hon. members of what has been, quite literally, a day to day involvement on my part in this problem ever since July, or ever since I assumed my new responsibilities.

I was aware then, as I think all hon. members were who were interested in the fishing industry, that the federal government through the introduction of the deficiency program—and I am referring here exclusively to the fresh fish industry—had bailed the industry out for 1968. I think it is also a matter of record that it was made abundantly clear that, regardless of what the federal government wished to do, the trade was as aware as we were that this could not be an ongoing program. Indeed, there were certain dangers, which I think hon. members will be aware of and which I need not amplify, in carrying on with it at all for as long as we had. So, early in July I met with the Newfoundland fishing trade and at that time advised them that, of necessity, the program would have to end. I suggested to them in July that they ought to start work immediately on a complete presentation to the federal government, which would not only state problems but which would result in industry-wide thinking on how to come up with specific ideas as to how federal assistance might be applied to the industry. I emphasize that this was in July, because I cautioned those people against last minute kinds of activity. As hon. members know, it takes considerable time to work out a new approach and formula.

In August I met with these people again and repeated what I had said in July: that I would appreciate it if they could make suggestions to the government as to the form of assistance, rather than having the government devise something which, in the long run, it might not feel was most beneficial for their purposes.

In other words, what we were asked to do was to wait for this submission. This was again in the month of August. The submission finally came—and I can well understand why it took so long to produce it—on November 13, when my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries, and I met with the representatives of the Atlantic groundfish industry and received their brief. That was just over three weeks ago, so that we have simply had this short period in which to consider this report and to consider whether or not the proposals which are in it are workable or practicable.

Mr. McGrath: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Jamieson: I have a limited time but please go on.

Mr. McGrath: Has the minister seen the reply of the Minister of Fisheries to the fish trades association? Has he read it and does he agree with it?

Mr. Jamieson: If my hon. friend will let me continue I hope that in the course of my remarks I can answer that question. I am simply chronologically stating the nature of the negotiations and the meetings held. It is simply a matter of record that the submission of the fish trade arrived here on November 13. Incidentally prior to that the subsidy program, the so-called deficiency payment program, exhausted its funds a good month ahead of what had been expected, 30 days at least ahead of what the trade itself had expected, because of higher landings and more production. If there were time it would be interesting to speculate why production was higher, but the simple truth is that the fund ran out of money that much earlier.

We immediately introduced a supplementary amount to ensure that this deficiency payment program continued until the end of October, but I repeat that it was not possible to continue that program in that form beyond the end of October and, as I have said before, I know hon. members will know the reason why.

The situation developed as of November 13 with this comprehensive report being given to us containing recommendations which, by the trade's own admission—and any who were present at that time can confirm this fact—they did not feel were wholly suitable, but they said in effect, "This is the best we can come up with."

Now, one week afterwards, just a single week after that report was submitted, long before there was time to read it even in detail let alone act on it, one seasonal fish plant in Newfoundland closed, and the story circulated was that it had closed because of the withdrawal of, if one wishes to call it that, or the ending or cancellation of the so-called subsidy payment. In that particular case the subsidy was only a relatively small part of the reason for the closing of that plant. It was a seasonal operation and the amount of fish being received was limited. As the hon. member for Bonavista-Trinity-Conception will apprecaite, these were net fish in the water for several days due to stormy conditions, and the operator was in difficult circumstances with the plant anyway. I simply mention that to point out that there is also a normal kind of slowdown in fishing activity at this time of year.

So the suggestion or the possibility that these plants will be obliged to close as a result of the minister's wire, or any statements he has made, is I recognize true in essence, and yet there are certain overtones of exaggeration about it. Let me deal first with the comments of the hon. member for Bonavista-Trinity-Conception with regard to the financial state of the plants in Newfoundland. It is quite correct, if one takes the homogeneous plants, those owned locally, that their financial straits are extremely difficult. Two of which I am aware are at the end of their line of credit so far as banks are concerned, and it is going to be literally impossible for them to continue without some kind of assistance.

On the other hand, as my hon. friend is well aware, there are plants in Newfoundland owned by large national and international companies, and with these it is not a matter of the companies themselves being distressed. Indeed were one to mention names such as B.C. Packers, Booth Fisheries, Unilever or whatever the name is, it is scarcely necessary to add that they do not have their backs to the wall in terms of national and international operations.

The question here is a difficult one relating to some of the recommendations made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Trinity-Conception as to whether or not in the long run it is wise for the Newfoundland ground fishing industry—and I have no personal knowledge of the Atlantic provinces other than Newfoundland—to have all its operations consolidated as part of very large corporate organizations, because a decision can be made in Chicago, or Vancouver, or indeed away down in the southern states, to close an operation in Newfoundland simply because one unit of a large organization is not profitable at any given moment.

I make this distinction because members should be aware of it—and I am sure Newfoundland members recognize this fact—that it is the home owned plants which have the immediate financial difficulty. The other plants can continue if they wish to do so, but there is no argument whatever about the fact that all plants, home owned, nationally and internationally owned, are losing money. So the question is, what is the alternative? This is the real crunch of this matter, because with the very comprehensive assessment made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Trinity-Conception most of the emphasis was on the whole, long range.

I quite agree that this is the way we should be thinking, but of course I add. as he does, and as does everyone else, there is no point in diagnosing the patient to death without applying some form of interim remedial action. The difficulty we are up against, and this is why I suspect the Minister of Fisheries asked for suggestions, is what form this assistance should take. It is pointless to impose or introduce something which is regarded as assistance, which might in the end be as harmful to the industry as if nothing at all were done. Again I trust I do not have to draw pictures.

I explored certain points of view with the industry. I asked, "What would be the likely effects if you were able to get long term financing other than through the conventional banking system? Let us say, for example, the government or some agency of government was prepared to provide long term financing." Obviously the trade's answer was that it would not be beneficial at all, in so far as its present state of affairs is concerned, because it would not alter its profit picture. It would not narrow the gap between their operating costs and their income.

As I say, Mr. Chairman, we have explored these matters. I hope hon. members will appreciate that we are not totally unaware of the problems that exist. I then asked, "What would happen if there was some type of long-term loan to increase efficiency, to improve productivity? This is the kind of assistance aimed at getting your productivity up and your costs down." Here again the answer came back, "Of course it is desirable, but it won't help in the immediate case."

In other words, what the industry must have now is some form of direct infusion of dollars. I have to express it in that form because frankly I do not know how else to describe it. We have to get funds into the hands of the fish plant operators.

We have had a reasonably good year so far as those fishermen fishing for fresh fish plants are concerned, because the deficiency payments have kept their earnings up to the average of the last three years. But when it comes to the trawler type of operation, which will be the predominant operation for the next three or four months in Newfoundland, that formula is not very good. If we were to take the figures, analyse them out and apply the same kind of deficiency payment—even if we could do that—it is not the solution so far as the trawlers are concerned. There has been a suggestion that there might be some form of payment made based on the number of days that trawlers are at sea.

I am sure hon. members are familiar with the suggestion that payments should be made to the fish companies in terms of the losses which they obviously sustain on the operation of trawlers, but this is not something you can work out even three weeks after you get a report. This would be a very complex formula. There are questions to be asked. Does it apply only to trawler operations in respect to types of groundfish which are not profitable, because it must be remembered that there are some types of groundfish which are not as bad revenue producers as others, and some which are reasonably profitable. Secondly, does it apply to all catches for all purposes, or only to those quantities which are destined for export to the United States?

For instance, do we give some form of commitment that would apply to fresh or iced fish sold to the rest of Canada. Again, while there are difficulties involved here, they do not appear to be as extreme. Then there was the other suggestion concerning some plant help, based on the number of man-hours in the plant or some other related coefficient. Once again I suggest this is a profitable and worth-while area to explore, but is not something that can be done in a very short time. The attitude of the government is one of complete awareness of the difficulties, and I think a general disposition to help; but in the long run it really is a matter of finding a formula or solution.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question.

Mr. Jamieson: Of course.

Mr. Carter: Does he agree with the removal of the so-called band aid policies? I am referring to the salt rebate and the vessel deficiency payments. Does he agree that these policies should be abandoned until a long range policy has been adopted to help the fishermen?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Chairman, I must have done a poor job of communication, because obviously the hon. member has not understood me. In the first place, the salt subsidy is not part of what we are talking about. Of course I do not agree with its removal. I am talking about the deficiency payment, which I assume is what the hon. member has asked about. I am afraid we had no other alternative. As any knowledgeable gentleman opposite knows, there was no alternative but to remove that program and end it as of the end of October. I am saying that we are trying to find an alternative which will achieve the desired result and which will not in effect result in some sort of policy or control that would eliminate the benefits of it. I suggest that this is the quandary in which we find ourselves at the present time. I do not mean that it is a quandary only so far as the government or those who have a direct interest in it are concerned; I say it is also a quandary to those involved in the trade. It is a general and serious problem and I hope a solution to it can be found rapidly.

Mr. Carter: May I ask another question?

Mr. Jamieson: I will accept another one, but I hope the time is being taken into account and will be allowed for.

Mr. Carter: I should like to return to my original question. Does the minister think it is sensible for the government to discontinue the deficiency payment until it has found the solution he is now suggesting?

Mr. Jamieson: I am afraid I will have to revert to what I said a moment ago. Of course it is not sensible at all in terms of purely internal Canadian national problems. It is probably the simplest way in which to continue this kind of aid. However if my hon. friend would consult with some of his colleagues I believe they would tell him why we could not continue the program. It was a question of this type of aid having to be of an interim and short term nature. October is the very latest it could have been kept on. If my hon. friend would like to discuss this with me later, I shall be glad to go into it in detail.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister would allow me to ask a question. I am sure the committee will make allowances for the time involved. What is the difference in the United States imposing a tariff which is closing down that market, and causing our whole groundfish industry to collapse?

Mr. Jamieson: I think that is a question which should more properly be directed, for example, to the fishing interests in the Atlantic provinces who themselves, with varying degrees of fear, have expressed this on many many occasions. I believe this was contained in a report that was submitted on November 13. I am quite sure this is the general reaction of the trade itself. I repeat that this is a situation in respect of which, in my estimation at least, the fishing industry has said they want another formula. There are hazards in the particular plan and they are worried about it. I say to my friends opposite, forgive me if I have not spelled this out as clearly as they wish, but I hope they have the message.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, I apologize to the minister for asking him a question in the middle of his remarks. I do not like to do so. Several weeks ago in a community in Newfoundland the minister mentioned that the Liberals had superior intellectual ability and that the Conservatives were intellectually bankrupt. Would the minister say whether he offered any solutions to the trade. He mentioned for example that the trade made these recommendations that they could not be accepted, and so on. Only a few days ago the Prime Minister unilaterally made a decision and a statement in respect of offshore mineral rights.

Mr. Jamieson: Don't make your speech now.

Mr. Lundrigan: I won't. With a government that has this kind of intellectual ability I am sure there must have been suggestions made to the trade by the minister in respect of a solution to these problems. I am sure, in his remaining remarks, the minister would like to indicate what alternative plans were suggested to the trade.

Mr. Jamieson: I presume you are talking about what alternative plan I suggested to the trade.

Mr. Lundrigan: The minister mentioned the suggestions of the trade and indicated that he asked the trade to make recommendations to the government. I wonder what recommendations were made by the government to the trade concerning the solution the government posed for the remedy of the problem.

Mr. Jamieson: I do not believe they were cut and dried suggestions or solutions. We batted around a good many things, as some hon. members who were present know. The first was to ascertain how to support the income of inshore fishermen by providing direct infusion to the fisheries operation. I think there should be a formula for getting additional funds into the hands of the fishermen who are fishing for the plants.

At the present time, except for a small portion of the southwest corner of Burin-Burgeo there is not much inshore fishing going on. There could be, for example, the trawler plan, the plant worker plan or some other alternative. Certainly I have been very strong on the matter of productive incentives. I was glad to have the support of the hon. member for Bonavista-Trinity-Conception on this; that is, that we would provide assistance in some way by industrial loans or in some other form to help them increase production. Two other suggestions were made which unfortunately are long range. One was that there might be a very strong promotional program in the United States to induce people to eat more fish. The matter of consumption is a key consideration. Then there is the matter of one desk selling for cod blocks. This I believe is also very important. Then there is the possibility of pooling trawler operations. Instead of each plant operating its own trawlers, there might be a co-operative trawler operation.

As my hon. friend will appreciate these things do not solve the problem we have here and now. This is why I have been endeavouring to find a formula that will give us, as a government, the ability to offer the kind of assistance which I readily agree is necessary. I heartily concur with those who say this ought not to be a partisan or a political issue. I understand that the representatives of the trade are meeting next week in Ottawa. I shall be very happy to arrange a meeting for them with anyone, in an effort to explore this further in order to see what kind of interim solution might be found. For myself I have no concern about the future of the fishing industry. I think there is a two or three year hurdle which we have to get over. I subscribe to the view of the Minister of Fisheries that it can be self-supporting in time. In the interim we have these problems. I suggest we are looking at every possible angle in order to achieve some kind of interim solution.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Chairman, if we are looking for a short term solution I find it difficult to understand the situation in respect of the sale of the 4.4 million pounds of salt cod to Biafra, in which the suppliers received approximately $27.50 for the commodity while the fishermen ended up with an average of $12 or $13 for 100 pounds. How can we reconcile this variation and the fact that there was no thought for the inshore fishermen while the suppliers received good prices?

Mr. Jamieson: I believe I should ask my colleague the Minister of Fisheries to answer this question specifically. I am on the record as indicating that the situation which he has properly outlined reflects a very wide gap in the whole process of buying and marketing fish. My view is that this can be solved only by some sort of marketing effort. Perhaps the minister would be able to answer that question further.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Chairman, may I ask another question—

The Chairman: Order, please. I should like to point out to the committee that I have on my unofficial list the names of eight hon. members who would like to speak this afternoon. If these questions are continued at this time it will interfere with this list. However, I certainly will recognize the hon. member.

Mr. Lundrigan: I believe the minister indicated he would take another question.

Mr. Jamieson: One more.

Mr. Lundrigan: I think perhaps for the record it would be wise if he could clarify the statement in respect of welcoming views from anyone about short term solutions. In that regard he really contradicted the minister, who said that we can forget about anything until March 31. This was contained in the telegram he sent to the fisheries people. I am sure that either the hon. member has not told us exactly what he wanted to tell us or he has intentionally avoided the issue in the hon. member's statement.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Jamieson: I do not think there is any suggestion of that kind, or any contradiction in respect of what was asked. As I understood the minister's reply—and of course he is perfectly capable of replying for himself—he was talking about the 1969 program. We are working on that. If you will remember, the program last year came into effect in May. I personally recognize the fact that there is a difficult situation in respect of the whole picture, and I certainly think the minister would be delighted if someone could come up with a formula which would solve this matter. I do not know what that formula is at this moment.

Mr. Carter: Yesterday in the house in the absence of the Minister of Fisheries my leader and several of my colleagues asked questions regarding the very serious situation developing in Newfoundland as a result of several of our fish plants being forced to close up shop, as it were, for economic reasons. This is seriously affecting directly and indirectly the livelihood of many thousands of my fellow Newfoundlanders. If these closures are allowed to take place it will do away with the livelihood of these people. I was shocked and completely amazed by the total lack of interest, and the indifference displayed by the Prime Minister to this situation. Apparently he was completely lacking in interest toward this problem.

This situation affects almost 25 per cent of the population of Newfoundland. They are facing an economic disaster. I do not intend to be critical of the Minister of Fisheries, but yesterday he sat in his office rather than in this house, where he could answer the questions of hon. members. He was not present to discuss these problems because his name was not on the attendance roster for yesterday. This is a most shocking thing and almost beyond human comprehension.

This problem, as I said, affects 25 per cent of the population of a province of this nation. It is an urgent problem, yet the minister is unable, or at least not permitted, to be here in this chamber to answer these questions of extreme importance. This is a terrible situation. As an individual who became a Canadian 19 years ago—and as I have said in this house, I was very proud to be a Canadian—I must confess that I changed my mind slightly yesterday. I am wondering how interested this government is in the welfare of the people of Newfoundland. This is a direct result of the Prime Minister's action yesterday. Let me go a step further and refer to what was actually said in answer to my question. I asked whether the prime minister would consider setting aside one day to discuss this problem, affecting as it does 25 per cent of the population of my province. His answer was "ditto". Let me tell him now on behalf of 125,000 Newfoundlanders who will be affected by this crisis, "ditto" to him too.

I am afraid that word "ditto" will not mean too much to the fishermen of Newfoundland, come Christmas, when Santa Claus does not show up. That word will not fill their bellies, sir, in the month of January or the month of February. I hope the government will take some action, and will not allow these fish plants in Newfoundland to close, thereby affecting a quarter of our population. Let me repeat on behalf of the constituents of my riding, who will be affected by this crisis, and on behalf of the other Newfoundland people, "ditto" to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Bigg: He could not care less.

Mr. Carter: That is understandable.

An hon. Member: That's not fair.

[Mr. Carter.]

Mr. Bigg: He said that yesterday.

Mr. Carter: This government must realize that the fishing industry cannot cure its own ills. It has been pointed out before by other hon. members that Canadian fishermen are competing with foreign industry supported by foreign government subsidies. Serious problems now face the Newfoundland fishing industry, and it requires immediate financial assistance. I hope this government will adopt a policy to make the Canadian fishing industry economical. Let me remind hon. members what the Minister of Fisheries stated in a speech he delivered at the American commercial fish exposition in Boston in October. He stated that we must adopt a policy of making our fishing industry "pay its way". If that is the case we may as well throw in the sponge.

If this government insists on following that line I suggest that the heaviest and most serious charge the minister and his colleagues will have to answer for before history is that they permitted the human resources of my province and other Atlantic provinces to rot away. In my province there is more than a quarter of the population which derives a living, such as it is, from fishing. This government, as well as successive Liberal governments, has allowed this once great industry to die by inches without putting anything in its place except a few handouts. This government is guilty of forcing a once great and industrious people to accept soul destroying welfare.

While I am on the subject of welfare I feel compelled to set the record straight so far as my province is concerned. The idea is fairly current in the rest of Canada that our province is a poor relation, living on Ottawa's hand-outs. Such a complete distortion of the truth can only be the result of prevailing ignorance and prejudice concerning Newfoundland. The simple fact is that Newfoundland gets the second lowest rate of welfare payments from Ottawa of all Canadian provinces, and this is not because we are a small province. I am talking about the per capita rate; the payments to the provinces computed per head of population. Let this house and the government understand once and for all that Newfoundlanders do not want welfare they want jobs. They do not want charity; they want opportunities. Our fishermen do not want welfare; they want a chance to make a decent living from the fisheries. They do not want other Canadians to carry them; they want to pull their own weight.

The government's fishery policy, or I should say their lack of it, is just another indication that as a nation Canada is living off her fat, when she should be building muscle. In a country where regional disparity is a wasting disease, no province has suffered more from this chief cause of economic anaemia than Newfoundland. No people have suffered more than the Newfoundland fishermen.

I remind the house that during the election campaign the Prime Minister repeated again and again the solemn undertaking to give the people of the Atlantic region a Marshall plan for the development of that area. Now, after six months of stagnation, during which time we have seen the discontinuation of the salt rebate to our fisherman, the discontinuation of deficiency payments to our fresh frozen fish industry, the discontinuation of the winter works program, nothing could be clearer than that the Prime Minister's undertaking was nothing more than another phony slogan in a phony war against regional disparity.

In my opinion this is a grim and foreboding prospect for the people of Atlantic Canada, especially the fishermen of my province. These people see disparity widening, opportunities decreasing, services in danger of being curtailed, population eroding, problems multiplying, provincial and municipal finances strained to the limit, taxes increasing, and a federal government that at least in its first six months of office has been utterly indifferent to the problems.

Before I close, Mr. Chairman, I should refer to the policy of the federal government and the provincial government of Newfoundland respecting centralization in my province. There is in my riding a situation, and I am sure I am not alone in this respect, wherein a large number of people were encouraged to move from their former homes to designated resettlement areas. In the town of Placentia in my riding there are in excess of 100 families who were encouraged by this government, and indeed paid by it to some extent, to relocate in Placentia. While I do not entirely disagree with the principle of centralization, I charge this government with destroying a way of life for a large number of Newfoundland people.

I had the pleasure of attending a meeting in Placentia a few weeks ago. At that meeting were some of the people who were relocated from the various islands. It was the most shocking and terrible experience I have ever had. These people took pride in the fact that they were independent, industrious, had their own homes and fishing stages, boats and nets. They were moved by the federal government and the provincial government of Newfoundland to an area where they have nothing whatever, where there are absolutely no facilities from which these fishermen can operate. These men left areas where, as I said before, they were reasonably well off. I admit there were a great many disadvantages in those areas. However these people were moved to an area which is in many cases completely unsuitable for fishing. These people, who were once proud, independent, industrious and hardworking Newfoundlanders are now forced to line up, as it were, at the welfare office to receive, as I have said, this soul-destroying means of keeping body and soul together.

Mr. McGrath: Join the just society!

Mr. Carter: If this is the just society, Mr. Chairman, I contend it is one society we can very well do without.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Carter: This government is responsible for destroying a whole way of life for a large number of Newfoundland people. I want to qualify that and make it clear that I do not disagree with the principle of centralization. But I think that before you start to move people from an area, provision should be made to receive them in other settlements, rather than just waving a cheque in front of their eyes and encouraging them to move to an area that is certainly inadequate and unprepared for them. This is a terrible injustice and is certainly not in keeping with the Prime Minister's promise and philosophy, of an end to regional disparity and a just society for all.

Before I resume my seat, Mr. Chairman, I would like to refer to a few problems that exist in my riding. I was quite amazed and concerned when we had the debate the other day and learned that one hon. member—I forget his riding—said on television that he can go to the Liberal caucus and up to a point can threaten the civil service and the ministers to give him what he wants. I would like to get his formula, because I have been a complete flop when it comes to getting things from the government.

Mr. Mahoney: Come over here.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, the trained seals can bang their desks, but to the people for whom I have tried to get these things it is no joke.

• (4:40 p.m.)

I have made numerous representations to various ministers to get certain things for my riding. I made a representation to the Minister of Public Works through the Minister of Fisheries for the provision of certain facilities in the small town of Peter's River in St. John's West. This was meant to assist the fishermen in a settlement called St. Vincent's, in St. Mary's bay. St. Vincent's is completely exposed to the Atlantic and it has no facilities for tying up or docking boats. Fishermen come in there and have to pitchfork their fish from the boat to the beach and then, with the help of a couple of young fellows or older people, they have to pitchfork the fish from the beach to the stage. When I asked that facilities be provided to eliminate this problem I was told by the Minister of Public Works that this would cost $66,000. I find it extremely difficult to reconcile the minister's refusal when it has been rumoured and indeed stated that as much as $50,000 has been spent on furnishing the office of one of the ministers in this government. How can I go back to the people of that area, whose livelihood is completely dependent on the fisheries, and tell them that we cannot get this facility provided because the government feels that the expenditure is not justified, while at the same time we learn that $50,000 can be spent to furnish a minister's office?

Mr. Drury: Which one?

Mr. Carter: I am sure the minister is as aware of which one as I am.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Did they not do it for you, Bud?

Mr. Carter: I support the remarks made by my colleagues on this side of the house when they said that a very serious situation is developing in Newfoundland at the present time. If it is allowed to develop and to come to a head it will have dire and drastic effects on the lives of at least a quarter of the population of Newfoundland. I feel that this government and the minister, for whom I have much respect, should make an announcement very shortly to the effect that assistance will be forthcoming so that these companies, which are now threatening to close their doors and thereby throw out of work 2,500 plant workers, plus 1,200 trawlermen, will be able to see their way clear to stay in business and to continue contributing to the economy of Newfoundland. This is what I ask. I hope that the minister and the government will see fit within the next few hours to make an announcement to this effect.

Mr. Durante: Mr. Chairman, I was a little reluctant to rise because I thought this was the day set aside for a discussion of the Newfoundland fisheries. I think hon. members opposite should realize that Canadian fisheries are not only to be found in Newfoundland. I should also like to point out that, in my opinion at least, many Canadians are not aware of the value of the Canadian commercial fisheries, both freshwater and saltwater, to the Canadian economy. I should like to cite some statistics in this regard. Canadian commercial fisheries employ in excess of 70,000 fishermen and some 15,000 other people involved in fish processing plants. I should like to quote figures relating to the 1967 catch. During that year two and a half billion pounds valued at $161.5 million was caught. The process value of this catch was $325 million. Canada is second only to Japan among the fish exporting nations of the world. It exports approximately 70 per cent of fish production and 60 per cent of its exports go to the United States, with the remainder to Britain and other nations. These statistics indicate how important the commercial fishery is to the Canadian economy. I was pleased to hear the Minister of Fisheries mention this morning that the 1968 catch, to date, is up by 10 per cent and that fishermen's earnings this year are up by 12 per cent. With all due respect to the Newfoundland representatives I should like to devote my remarks to the west coast fishery.

The total catch in British Columbia for 1967 was 332 million pounds with a total value of $49 million. Salmon, which is the chief catch in B.C., brought a gross revenue of $36 million, well over 50 per cent of the total. These statistics in turn indicate the importance in value of the west coast fisheries in relation to the total Canadian fisheries.

One of the first things that our present Minister of Fisheries did—and I think it is something for which he should be commended and applauded—was to announce licence limitations legislation which is to go into effect in 1969. I should like to quote the following from an editorial which appeared in one of the west coast newspapers:

> It takes considerable political courage for a cabinet minister to stride into the middle of a complex and artificially structured industry and arbitrarily establish rules that will reshape that industry's future.

Our fisheries minister has done just that by making his decision to limit the number of boats in the B.C. salmon fishing industry. For this he should be commended and applauded. With regard to that quotation I may say that I take exception to the word "arbitrarily" as a description of how our minister made his decision with regard to licence limitations, because government studies such as Dr. Sinclair's royal commission of eight years ago, and briefs from both fishermen's organizations and industry groups, have recommended and suggested some type of licence limitations.

As I see it, licence limitations will not be the panacea to the problems of the west coast fisheries because I firmly believe there is no panacea to any problems. I feel however that some hon. members opposite think that all you need do is wave a wand and there will be a resolution of any problem you wish to present them with. There are however some distinct advantages to licence limitations. First of all it removes the casual fishermen or the moonlighters as they have been referred to this afternoon. I think it is a step in the right direction. Second, productivity in the fishery has been decreasing at an alarming rate in recent years. It has been costing far more money to catch the same number of fish. As a result of licence limitations I feel that the efficiency of a reduced fleet should improve our productivity. I believe that conservation should be enhanced and fishermen's earnings be increased. I think that boat values will certainly be increased, and as a result of all these advantages I hope that in time lower consumer prices will result.

There are, however, some disadvantages to licence limitations which have already been drawn to the minister's attention. One of them is the loss of vessels at sea. I understand that an appeal board has been established to which anyone who loses his vessel at sea can make an application. I am personally concerned about the fact that there is a real possibility that the companies will take control of salmon fishing vessels on the west coast. I am confident that our minister is aware of this likelihood and that he will guard against it carefully. There are those who would have advocated licensing fishermen rather than vessels. Naturally, the unions take this view because they would like to take control. I agree with the present move to license vessels, but I think we should be aware of the danger of the companies taking control. I ask that our minister keep a very close eye on this possibility, as I am sure he will.

I should like to say a few words about our first Canadian fishermen, the Indians. I believe there is an awareness of the need to assist our Indian fishermen. I applaud the development of the Indian Fishermen's Development Board by the Department of Fisheries, in conjunction with the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. This is a five man board to administer loans and grants to be paid to the Indians of British Columbia for the construction and purchase of fishing vessels, equipment, gear and other related facilities, as well as providing a fisheries training course. This program involves an expenditure of $4.6 million to be spread over a five year period. Also in this regard, the new vessels built for ownership and operation by the Indians under the Indian fishermen's assistance program are exempt from the licensing limitation. I certainly believe this merits commendation.

Licence limitation is to be implemented, as I have already mentioned, because productivity has been going down and because, as our minister stated, there have been too many boats and too much gear chasing too few fish. The "few fish" in my opinion is the key, and conservation is the answer. In this regard, the legislation enacted in 1964 to establish the 12 mile limit would be of some help. A 12 mile limit with a base line drawn from headland to headland would be of even greater help. I urge our minister actively to undertake the establishment of this base line, and the 12 mile limit on the west coast, as soon as possible. As a matter of fact, of even more help would be a continental shelf limit. Foreign vessels are fishing just outside our 12 mile limit. These are large vessels, in excess of 200 feet in length, with factory and processing ships. They are dragging our ocean floor and nothing is returned; all that is seen is a puff of white smoke emitted from the stack on the stern of these ships.

Unfortunately our salmon and other species of fish do not recognize the 12 mile limit. I think the Department of Fisheries is to be commended for the research work it is doing, and for its foresight in establishing artificial and controlled flow spawning channels. The $10 million Babine project is a classic example of the work being conducted toward increasing salmon runs. The only way we can increase income and production per fishing unit is through licence limitation, which is a long term project, and by increasing or restoring the size of the salmon stock. As I have suggested, the project now being carried out should increase the sockeye and pink salmon runs extensively in the next few years.

However, the situation with regard to the cohoe and spring salmon stock is not nearly so rosy; in fact it is unsatisfactory. In this regard, possibly we had better take a lesson from our neighbour to the south, who has greatly increased his stock by the hatchery method, in spite of the many difficulties that have had to be overcome. I refer to such obstacles as dams, pollution and a limited number of suitable rivers. None of these obstacles confronts us, except possibly pollution, and even that is present to a lesser degree. Although we have no dams to contend with yet, and an unlimited number of suitable rivers, cohoe and spring salmon stock is decreasing at an alarming rate, and for two basic reasons. The first is the heavy fishing pressure and the second is the damage caused to our natural spawning streams and watershed areas by indiscriminate logging practices. Our natural spawning channels are still, and heaven forbid it should ever be otherwise, the best areas for salmon stocks. It would seem therefore that the preservation of these stocks through the preservation of our natural spawning channels should receive top priority from our Department of Fisheries. On the west coast I have seen, and I continue to get reports about, the damage caused to these spawning beds and watershed areas by logging operators of both small and large magnitude. The necessary legislation exists to prohibit such conduct. I therefore urge that this legislation be enforced—and that it be rigidly enforced.

In so far as salmon rehabilitation is concerned, I would recommend that the Department of Fisheries conduct a survey of all the streams on the west coast suitable for the introduction of spawning channels. May I offer for special consideration the Kennedy lake system of Vancouver island?

I keep referring to this problem of pollution. I have referred to it this afternoon because I am quite convinced our rivers, streams and lakes are being polluted at an alarming rate. I am convinced also that if any department has some authority over the prevention of this condition it is the Department of Fisheries. I urge that legislation to prevent the pollution of rivers, streams and lakes be introduced as soon as possible. Earlier I made reference to the fact the Canadian commercial fishery had contributed to the Canadian economy. I should like now to make a reference to the sports fishery, whose value to our economy is inestimable. Certainly, there is no—

[Mr. Durante.]

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Before Your Honour sees the clock, may I make a suggestion? I believe that if we do proceed to private members hour the bill to be debated would be one of mine. I am anxious to get a chance to debate it, but I believe this is the last full day we will have on these estimates, and there is a desire to continue a discussion of the fisheries estimates. I would be willing therefore that you not see the clock. But I hope that some time during the hour you will see the hon. member for Surrey.

The Chairman: I believe the procedure we should follow is for the committee to rise and report progress, then, any hon. member may make a suggestion along the lines suggested. If there is unanimous consent we can revert to the committee of supply.

Progress reported.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I now say "ditto" to what I said a few minutes ago?

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, speaking on behalf of the official opposition may I say we welcome this opportunity to continue with the debate. I should like to thank the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre for waiving private members hour. I would concur with his suggestion that the Chair should recognize the next speaker as being the hon. member for Surrey, even though there are a few more of our members who are anxious to participate in the debate between now and six o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please; the hon. member for St. Paul's.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL DEFENCE

FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Ian Wahn (St. Paul's): May I have consent to revert to routine proceedings for the purpose of presenting a report of the external affairs committee?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Wahn: I have the honour to present the fourth report of the standing committee on external affairs and national defence.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES AND FORESTRY

1. Departmental administration, including grants and contributions as detailed in the estimates, $3,509,175.

The Chairman: Order. The House in committee of supply, estimates of the Department of Fisheries and Forestry.

Mr. Durante: Mr. Chairman, if I may be allowed a few minutes more, I was making reference to the value of the sports fishery to the Canadian economy. I indicated that it was of inestimable value, that there was no way a price tag could be placed on its value. I should like to speak of my own personal experience. My sports fishing exploits have varied from very successful, on the one hand, to dismal failure on the other. Consequently the cost to me per pound of sports fish caught has also varied, and on occasion has run as high as $50 per pound. This is not meant in criticism of our sports fishery but indicates rather my inability as a sports fisherman.

However, my point is that this is a very valuable industry. In our changing society I feel that we are going to be faced with much more leisure time, and I know there are many people who enjoy sports fishing during their leisure time. I should like to urge that serious consideration be given to the possibility of instituting salt water sports fishing licensing. I am convinced that this would meet with approval, provided the revenues derived therefrom could be returned to the sports fishery in the form of artificial spawning channels or controlled flow channels.

Mr. Mather: Mr. Chairman, I thank you for seeing me. Like the minister, I too come from the west coast of Canada, and I am particularly interested in having an opportunity to take some part in the discussion of these estimates.

I should like to say at the outset that although I am a member of the fisheries committee of this house and am not entirely ignorant of the troubles and difficulties faced by the fishing industry and fishermen in the Atlantic and maritime areas, aside from saying that I and my party fully support the representations that members from that area have made so well today, I intend to devote my remarks more to a discussion of the problems of the fishing industry on the west coast.

The appointment of the present minister a few months ago was welcomed by many people in the industry in British Columbia. On the one hand, I think it was felt that coming from British Columbia he would be more conversant than his two immediate predecessors with the problems that we have in that industry on the west coast. Or if I may put it in this way, they felt that at least he could not be less conversant than they were. Therefore the minister took office with some support on the part of the industry.

I believe the minister should be congratulated upon the speed and energy with which he has taken up his position and got down to business. It is not for his lack of speed that some parts of the industry and hon. members here are criticizing him; it is for the decisions this speed has brought him to.

I will deal with one particular aspect of his major decision to date, but before I do so I want to outline very briefly some of the problems that were left over to this minister by the two previous administrations of both old line parties. Among these were the need for a licence limitation program; the need for the declaration of headland to headland base lines so as to give reality to the 12-mile fishing limit for Canadians; the need for resolute action to bring all these countries that fish the north Pacific into a new fisheries treaty; and the need for the development of offshore fisheries for Canadian vessels and fishermen in the Pacific. I add to that list one other need which has grown more apparent during recent years, and that is the need to combat pollution in the fishing rivers of the province.

The minister has made a start by tackling at once the issue of licence limitation. This is a move that was long overdue. To quote the Vancouver Sun, a basic problem has been—as other hon. members have said earlier—"too many fishermen and too many boats chasing too few fish and too little money".

British Columbia fishermen have been asking for a program of licence limitation for the past 25 years. It is eight years since Dr. Sinclair, the royal commissioner who dealt with this problem, made some specific recommendations. So that I think in taking up this issue the minister should be commended.

However, the ministers' method of dealing with the situation has been to propose the licensing of boats so as to limit the number of boats fishing. In the opinion of the fishermen, as represented by their union, this will put the whole industry further under the domination of the large fishing companies, many of whom are foreign owned.

On this particular point I can do no better, to illustrate the difference in the points of view of the government and the fishermen in British Columbia, than to quote from the union paper which carried an article dealing with the two methods involved—the government's proposal and the proposal of the union. According to The Fisherman for September 13, 1968:

> Under the union's scheme, the licence would be issued to the fisherman, to be retained only as long as he could show he was obtaining a set proportion of his annual earnings from fishing. Since it would be non-transferable, it would have no financial value in itself. Upon the fisherman's leaving the industry, for whatever reason, it would be surrendered. The fisherman could sell his boat and gear at market price and his place would be taken by the next on the waiting list of applicants.
> Under the government's scheme, the licence is to be issued to the boat—either an A vessel that can be replaced by a new boat or a B vessel that cannot be replaced. Even announcement of the scheme has had the effect of inflating the price of vessels that qualify for a licence.
> As the union has pointed out, the fact that the companies finance the majority of boats places them in a position to dictate which fishermen shall or shall not have the right to fish.

In the fisheries committee of this house various members of all parties have discussed this particular matter with the minister. The committee wishes to go to British Columbia and meet the fishermen and other interested parties in the industry, particularly to discuss the issue that is involved in this type of licence limitation. We wish to get the advice of the industry, and we want to get it before the plan really comes into effect. I think this is the only wise course to pursue. Either we go there as a committee and meet with the fishermen, or they should make strong representations to the fisheries committee on this particular point about the type of licence limitation involved. I make that recommendation to the minister.

[Mr. Mather.]

Another matter I want to touch on is the 12-mile fishing limit. I was very glad to hear the minister say in committee the other day that he intends at an early date to move to implement the components of the 12-mile fishing legislation having to do with headlands. The entire matter has been pending for years. All this time fishermen from other lands have been able to fish Canadian fishing resources. In the north Pacific we have only gone though the motions of passing the 12-mile fishing limit laws. I think that we ought to put the law into operation and so safeguard a major industry.

I, with other hon. members on a committee, recently went to Peru, where they have a major fishing industry. Though that country is relatively small when compared with Canada, it enforces rigorously a fishing limit that extends either 200 or 250 miles from its coast. Surely Canada can do what Peru has done, spell out clearly what are our own fishing borders and enforce those borders.

My next point will interest the minister, since as well as being responsible for fisheries he also has an interest in forestry. In fact, I have heard the minister described as the minister of fish and chips—the minister responsible for fish and wood. The other day in the fisheries committee he said that he would take up immediately with the provincial forestry authorities of British Columbia the question of pollution of the Stellako river—a pollution which enrages conservationists and fishermen—by logging operations. The former minister of fisheries attempted to remonstrate with the authorities, but I do not think he got very far with them. Since our present minister comes from British Columbia, he may be more successful than the previous minister in making his views prevail. In any event, he knows how urgent it is to stop the pollution of the Stellako river by lumber runs. I expect the minister knows what has been happening in the area.

As other hon. members noted, not only is it important to harvest fish but it is also important to sell that harvest. Not long ago I sent the minister a letter suggesting that whenever possible in promotional campaigns the word "fish" ought to be dropped, and that sea foods ought to be referred to by their generic names. I said:

> Having in mind that this is "buy-more-fish-month", I would like to make a suggestion as to how more people might buy more fish.

I suggest that the word "fish" be avoided.

"Fish" has a fishy sound. It is a word, fortunately, which does nothing to promote a desire to eat fish. I do not claim that this is a rational situation. I know it is a fact.

Would your department, i.e. the officials concerned in the promotion of fish sales, consider doing what they can to get the industry away from the word "fish" and to use, instead, such descriptions as ... "B.C. salmon steaks" ... "goldeye" ... "maritime lobster" ... "Arctic char" ... ?

I asked the minister to bring my suggestion to the attention of his officials and offered to buy him a B.C. salmon steak dinner if some of them did not agree it was a good idea. I have not had to buy that dinner yet, and I take this chance to remind him of my suggestion.

In conclusion, it is my view and the view of my party that, with regard to the question of the Pacific Coast fishing industry, there should be immediate consultations between our fisheries committee and the British Columbia fishing industry on the 12-mile limit proposals. Those consultations should also be between governments and unions. Second, within the next few months, or as early as possible, the government should implement the components of the 12-mile fishing limit that have to do with headlands. The limit at least should be from headland to headland. Third, there ought to be a stepped up and continuing effort to bring the British Columbia department of forestry into line, in order to combat river pollution and to conserve our fishing resources in the area. Also I support, as do the members of my party, the positions of hon. members from the maritimes who have brought to the attention of the government problems of their areas with regard to fishing.

[Translation]

Mr. Breau: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to participate in the debate on the estimates of the Department of Fisheries.

As a representative of the Gloucester riding it is normal, I think, that I should be interested in fisheries, because the fishing industry plays a very important part in the economy of northeastern New Brunswick.

I should like, with the same enthusiasm shown by my colleagues opposite, to call the attention of the hon. minister to the problems concerning markets and prices of ground fish. Several fishermen in my area find themselves in the same situation as those in Newfoundland, but contrary to the stand taken by the representatives of these people, I do not necessarily blame the government for the present situation of the fish market. In any industry, it is important to have a good market, a good support price and a well-managed industry.

All the fish caught in Canada today cannot be sold here. Therefore, we have to depend mainly on American markets and, for reasons that hon. members know as well as I do, because they were mentioned this afternoon, the American market has not been very good in the last few years.

The minister said this morning that in eastern Canada crab fishing is becoming more and more popular, especially in the gulf of St. Lawrence. That situation is of great interest to the fishermen in my riding because several of them this year—they started last year and are getting ready for next year—began to convert their boats from ground fishing to crab fishing.

It might be a good idea to point out—and it is encouraging—that it is not very expensive to convert those boats. Therefore, I hope that the fishermen in my region will take up that kind of fishing instead, because the market is good for the time being.

We must remember that when an industry pays a little more or a little less, it does not necessarily incumbent on the government to seek markets and find solutions. The members of the industry—in this case the fishermen—must do their share by altering somewhat their fishing methods and, especially, the type of fishing.

I feel it is imperative for the honourable Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) to see to it that there is co-ordination between the incentive programs of the federal government and the provincial governments with regard to crab processing plants. If the industries are not controlled, if incentives are given to all those who want them, if government aid is offered to too many fishermen, it will be very difficult to control a certain production and we will then have surplus goods which may lead to lower prices and other economic effects.

I should also like to mention that fishing as a sport is very important in my area. We have beautiful rivers like the Tracadie river, for instance, the Pokemouche river, which are most popular for trout and salmon fishing, although they are not publicized enough. I feel that the Department of Fisheries should do something to better acquaint the public with the tourist attraction of that area. In addition to restocking the rivers with small salmon and trout, the people should also be educated to make them understand more fully the importance of that industry.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Above all, I would like to deal with the protection of the rivers. Some people shirk the responsibilities too easily, saying that it is fairly easy to protect or control salmon and trout fishing to an extent of about 75 per cent. Beyond that, what is needed is more human capital, more money and, obviously, the co-operation of the people, especially the people who live in the areas which could become sport centres.

For example, in the province of New Brunswick, it is estimated that salmon fishing brings in approximately $10 million. In fact, I can give the example of little villages in my region, such as Tabusintac—which hon. members may know—with a population of around 700 or 800 people living exclusively on the tourist trade, that is, from the money spent by Americans or Canadians who go there to fish salmon, build a cottage and, consequently, have to hire people.

People realized, in those places, that, instead of making an immediate profit by destroying the fish, particularly in an illegal way, they should protect their rivers in order to derive a greater income from them.

I should now like to assure the hon. Minister of Fisheries that I am ready to support the long term measures taken by the federal government in order to solve the problems of the fishing industry rather than the short term programs.

In my opinion, we have tried far too long already, not only with regard to fisheries but in other fields as well, to find solutions to problems which would give immediate results instead of making long range plans.

I think that, at the present time, the fishing industry in eastern Canada and in Newfoundland or Nova Scotia faces a dilemna. In fact, when there is no market, we cannot expect that government action will necessarily solve the problem. I think that this problem requires a serious study and I hope that the government program will be realistic and will give some assurance to the fishermen who wish for technicological progress and large investments in the fishing industry.

Small fishermen must be told whether or not they will be able to carry on their fishing operations. I think that, because of these short term solutions, government assistance has been inefficient. Assistance was perhaps provided for a month or two, even perhaps for a year, but a guaranteed market for the fishing industry was not developed and this is what matters. When we have an important market which will yield high returns, the fishing industry will be viable.

Mr. Chairman, I have dealt briefly with the inshore fishermen of my area. Several are in a bad fix. They cannot improve their lot, on account of their lack of knowledge or investments. They cannot own big ships or practise offshore fishing. They want to remain small fishermen. I think that this problem should be considered separately from the fishing industry in general. Instead of providing social welfare, I think that it would be advisable for the Department of Fisheries or the government to study the problem of the inshore fisherman in another context.

[English]

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Chairman, I would first like to apologize to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, if he thought that the Newfoundland members were trying to take up all the time of the committee. This is not our intention, and I can assure him that if he is concerned with problems on the west coast we will support him. I would also like to thank the hon. member for Surrey for his kind words and support.

I rise, Mr. Chairman, to join with my colleagues in attempting to emphasize the critical situation which exists in the Atlantic region regarding the fishing industry. I do not intend to repeat the technological implications or to quote statistics. These were very ably offered by previous speakers.

What I would like to do is to try with sincerity and respect to point out the human problems which exist among the fishermen population of my province, and which will result from the present crisis, because of mismanagement, apathy, neglect and a lack of a common sense approach to an industry which could be prospering today, but instead is disappearing.

With each passing day as I sit in the House of Commons, the more frustrated and disillusioned I become at the lack of sincerity that is so evident on the part of government with regard to the problems of the country. What amazes me is how a group of individuals, who are supposed to be the ones most capable of solving our problems, are instead compounding them. I fail to understand how a government, with supposedly the most capable brains in the country at its command, cannot provide the leadership required to operate successfully the most fundamental business of buying and selling fish.

Some 25 years ago the fishing industry was a comparatively prosperous one in Newfoundland, an industry second only to the pulp and paper industry. With each passing year since then, instead of keeping pace with competition and modern methods, instead of giving management leadership to keep pace with competition, instead of on-the-spot training to ensure quality control, instead of creating markets, government has turned its back on the fishermen of the Atlantic region and has allowed the industry to reach its present depressed proportions.

In 1963 the then Liberal prime minister promised in an election speech that a new Liberal government would co-operate with Newfoundland, where fishing is such an important industry. Mr. Pearson said:

> We shall work out a program for fishery development based on the principle that the government of Canada should parallel action already taken for agriculture with action to develop the fisheries.

That was written five years ago, Mr. Chairman.

What a fishy story that turned out to be! If we were to ask the fishermen what action has been taken by the two Liberal governments, provincial and federal, to assist them, I suggest the answer would be, "None". The most amazing thing to me, and something I cannot understand, is how one can get the attention of the government in respect of an emergency that is real. Since the opening of the house we have been endeavouring to point out the seriousness of the typical position of the fishing industry in our province, and the needs for assistance. The Newfoundland members met with the Minister of Fisheries two months ago. They have been in touch with him or his staff almost daily since then. I should like to say here that the Minister of Fisheries and the members of his staff have been most co-operative in providing me with honest and sincere answers, although no solutions. I am sure the minister realizes the seriousness of the situation. I can only assume that not only did he take over a mess created by his predecessors, but that he is being thwarted in his efforts by his superior, whoever he might be—and I use the singular intentionally.

We have a very serious problem on our hands, which will become a national emergency, indeed if it is not one already. This emergency has been delayed only by a strange turn of events in the world situation. I wonder whether we realize this and whether the government realizes it has avoided the collapse of an industry affecting some 100,000 people, either directly or indirectly, only because of some ten million pounds of dried cod being provided to the starving people in a certain country? I might ask whether this should be the criteria for the future of the fishing industry? What will happen next year? I might also ask what will happen while the government is still looking for a long range plan? What about the next three months; what about right now? Why do we preach restraint in spending on the one hand and the waste of millions on the other? How can the government justify saving $350 thousand on salt subsidies and yet be prepared to spend that much on a by-election, due to the whims and fancies of one individual? How can the government justify the cutting off of deficiency payments to the fishing industry and waste millions of dollars on arts, cultural centres and fancy furniture?

Then, Mr. Chairman, what about foreign aid? Let us give foreign aid to needy countries, but let us not be blind to our own needs.

The district which I represent stretches along a coastline of some 300 miles. It consists of some 100 communities whose main occupation is fishing. The citizens of these communities are a sturdy, honest and industrious people. They are a reliable and conscientious group of Canadians. They have a native intelligence about the fishing industry that the supposed experts in the field of economics would do well to study. These people do not want handouts. They do not want disguised welfare—lard on the government, as it has been described. All they want is sensible direction from the government. But they have lost faith in the government, due to the ever changing policies. They are sick and tired of the here-today-gone-tomorrow assistance programs. They would like a chance to compete against the foreign draggers which are allowed to rape their very livelihood, because the government will not enforce fishing limits. They want only realistic direction by the government in creating a market, and being told what the market needs. They also want to have a fair price commensurate with the cost of equipment.

In a previous speech in the house I invited the various ministers to visit my district, instead of junketing to other countries. That invitation still stands. Perhaps I might invite the Prime Minister to visit the rural fishing communities of Newfoundland, where he would see the human problems. Yes, Mr. Speaker, human—a word which he uses so often in his speeches across the country. Let him take a good look at humanity in Newfoundland. We cannot fly him there by a special plane. There are no shopping centres and there will not be any crowds of mini-skirted teenagers. There will be no flowers, no hippies and no poles to swing on. Neither will he be able to book any hotel suites, as at Claridges in London, nor a suite that the queen mother of Jordan uses. But he will see a part of Canada, and a people who have for far, far too long been taken for granted, and for far, far too long have been neglected. He will see a fishing industry that has been allowed gradually to disintegrate to the present emergency proportion.

On November 22 in this house I pointed out very clearly, in a question which appears in Hansard, the impending shutdown of a fishing plant on the northwest coast of Newfoundland. No one took even a blind bit of notice. Today we are threatened with the collapse of the complete fishing industry of the Atlantic region. Now is the time for our task force, but let us make it an emergency task force and not a long term one.

The Newfoundland members have been crying "wolf" ever since we came here to Ottawa concerning the problems of the fishing industry. The wolf is at the door. Will the government believe us and find a solution to this emergency by reinstating the deficiency payments or offer assistance and thereby assure the industry and its people that there is some ray of hope for their future livelihood?

Mr. Lundrigan: First of all, Mr. Chairman, I should like to congratulate a great friend of ours from Surrey, who certainly came to our assistance very ably today. I should like also to point out to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, a very distinguished west coast area, that we sympathize if he has any problems, but we would like more understanding on his part as well.

I am greatly encouraged by the sincerity of the new Minister of Fisheries, who I am sure is sincerely aware of the problems in Canada. I am sure also that, in the long run, obviously he will make a genuine attempt to do something about this. I am not equally impressed by the attitude of the Prime Minister of Canada. In the few minutes I have, if I were to speak to this one point I would be certain to point out to the Canadian people that this lack of sincerity will show through to the Canadian people, and that this Prime Minister, who treats the House of Commons as a circus, will not continue to get away with this kind of clowning. The Prime Minister might kiss his way across Canada during an election, but let him not think that he will have the same kind of success in trying to kiss away the problems of the Canadian people as they relate to the economy of the Canadian Atlantic fishermen.

I should like to have seen the Prime Minister here today, because then I could be a little more aggressive; but as he is not here I will be polite now and refrain from doing so. I will take the opportunity when he is here to tell him exactly what I think of him, which perhaps might or might not shock my colleagues.

An hon. Member: He will be here for 20 years.

Mr. Lundrigan: He will not be here next year, if he continues in his present attitude. I say that in reply to the colourful remarks of the hon. member who just spoke.

I was a little disappointed about the statement today of the Minister of Fisheries. I cannot blame him for this kind of statement, because he is a new minister. All he actually did was an excellent job of identifying the problems, but we have had people identifying problems ever since I was very young. Many people have identified the problems facing the fishing industry.

On September 20 I asked the Minister of Fisheries if and when a long term plan would be announced to the house and the Canadian people. On a number of other occasions my colleagues have asked a similar question. This request has been made almost every day. We have wanted the Minister of Fisheries to make a statement in respect of a short term plan to keep this industry alive during the interim between now and the date when a long term plan is announced. Day after day we have received the same answer, that the "plan will be announced shortly". In the meantime, as I and my colleagues have said, the salt rebate has gone, indemnity relating to insurance has gone, the community stage program has gone, the plans for fishing facility expansion, which is under another department, have been curtailed, deficiency payments have disappeared and livelihoods are going. This is the situation we are finding ourselves in: The industry is bleeding to death, and all we have heard from hon. members who have spoken on the government side today, and all we have heard since we have been old enough to understand English or French, is that something will be done soon.

The minister told us today that we are on the edge of something. He told us that prices are down but that costs are up. This is his answer to the trade. During an emergency situation the minister sent a telegram to the industry in which he asked this of it:

> Please do not count on any new program of government assistance being put into effect before the end of the federal government's current fiscal year which is March 31st, 1969.

He further indicated today that if markets improved all will be well and good, and that if they do not the industry is going to have to improve its productivity, its cost arrangements and its expenditures in order to become self-sufficient. This is similar to what the minister said in Boston. He indicated that we need a long term plan, a new bright program and a new program of action.

Let me say to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni that if I had the time I should like to develop this. In the meantime let me quote from a statement made in 1964 in which the then minister of fisheries, Mr. Robichaud, told the Canadian people that the federal government was going to come up with a Magna Carta for the fisheries industry. King John would have been proud of this action in 1964. This statement was quoted all across Canada. We were going to have a new Magna Carta for the Canadian fisheries industry. If I had the time to quote in detail I would be able to make the same kind of speech the Minister of Fisheries made to the house today. In any event, in 1964, the then minister of fisheries said that the resources in Canada's inland waters and neighbouring seas can support a great long-term expansion of the fishing industry. He indicated that the future for fishermen is bright, and went on to say, not facetiously, that there must also be a progressive program which will take into account our sports fishery. That was said in 1964, after the minister had met with all the provincial ministers.

This report of the ministers' conference was tabled in Ottawa on January 24, 1965, and it states in part:

> The conference stressed the importance of effective long-term planning to provide adequate harbours marine works and navigational aids to meet the changing needs of the inshore and offshore fisheries.

I wish I had the time to quote the entire statement by the then minister of fisheries, and compare it with what the present Minister of Fisheries said today. Today we heard the minister define these problems. He presented us with a lecture. If talk could solve our problems we would be making the greatest progress ever made in the history of Canada, and perhaps I should say that I am sorry I feel I should add my two cents to this matter.

An hon. Member: Could the hon. member say whether the then minister of fisheries was referring to a long term plan to assist in marketing problems?

Mr. Lundrigan: Let me recommend to hon. members, especially on the back benches, that they read the results of this conference in 1964. It was a long and great conference of ministers of the various provinces. Even the premier of Newfoundland was present, and this was the statement that resulted from that conference. It was referred to in the former prime minister's statement to an hon. member for Newfoundland.

I do not think we can hold the minister responsible for the attitude of the Newfoundland government, which is responsible for many of the difficulties of the fishing industry today. Nor can we hold him responsible for the government's attitude in respect of foreign aid, but a little stimulation in this regard would alleviate this problem to some extent.

The fishing industry in Canada has been treated as the poor stepchild of the Canadian economy. This is the reason for the extreme difficulties we find ourselves in right now. We cannot hold the government responsible for the non-productivity or the sometimes questionable attitude of merchants, and I use that word deliberately. We cannot hold the minister responsible for those non-productive attitudes of fishermen. Neither can we hold him responsible for the lack of diversification in the industry. However, we can hold this government and this minister responsible for not taking issue with the present attitude of this government toward the United States government, because I think in Canada we are going to have to set up a trade relationships and prices support board in order to solve our problems, and to come to grips with the United States in respect of our fishing industry. This would allow us to call the shots so far as this industry is concerned. However, the federal government does not seem to give a damn about these things. I hope you will excuse the language, Mr. Chairman but apparently we are never going to have a fish policy.

I am trying to rush through my remarks to give other members a chance to put in their two cents worth. I should like to conclude by saying there are three basic problems in this industry which might be referred to as the three "p's". There is a lack in respect of prices to fishermen, there is a lack of productivity and a lack in respect of processing. If I had time to develop these three ideas I think I could point out, as my hon. friends have done today, that aspect referred to by the hon. member for Bonavista-Trinity-Conception. There is not an easy solution to these critical problems; but unless the federal government is literally prepared to come up with a medicine cabinet full of solutions, rather than band aid solutions, we will have no fishing industry in Canada, come spring. At that time we will not have to worry about the fishing industry because it will no longer exist.

We must worry now about what is going to happen next year. Long term planning is the only answer to the Canadian fishing industry's problems today. If the industry is left to die, our problems will be related to the creation of a fishing industry in Canada, rather than helping to preserve the industry we now have. We need a change of attitude on the part of the federal government, and the minister will have to face the facts. If he does not, we will be on our feet at every possible opportunity. We will continue to talk about this matter until the government is willing to deal with the problems facing the Canadian fishing industry today.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I listened to the minister during the debate on this issue and I was rather surprised by what can only be described as his cavalier approach to what we consider to be the very serious problem, and crisis, facing the groundfish industry in eastern Canada. We listened to the minister refer to the fact that we have never had it so good, and that these are the best possible years. He referred to the queen crab industry, and in glowing terms to the herring fishery. He also mentioned fish protein concentrates and several other things, but he had very little to say about the problems we are facing in eastern Canada today. We believe this problem to be critical and of a crisis proportion. If the minister thinks the Newfoundland fish trades are bluffing he is in for a rude awakening, because I guarantee that they are not bluffing. I am sure the Minister of Defence Production knows in his heart that these trades are not bluffing.

Let me suggest to the minister that it is about time he stopped playing Russian roulette with this serious problem. In his telegram of last Friday he as much as said to the Newfoundland Fish Trades Association that there will be no more aid and no further programs to assist the industry until next year. Some five months from now the industry might get assistance from the government of Canada in respect of the situation which exists today. Surely that is an indication that the minister is gambling over this serious crisis.

The Minister of Defence Production went one step further, trying to qualify what the Minister of Fisheries had said. I suppose one will have to wait until he reads Hansard to discover exactly what these ministers did say. We were treated to the unusual experience of two ministers speaking in the house on the same estimates, with one apparently attempting to qualify what the other said. Surely this points out the inconsistency of the entire situation.

I asked the Minister of Defence Production during the course of his speech whether he agreed with what the Minister of Fisheries said in the telegram he sent to the Fish Trades Association. However, he evaded my question; he did not answer it. I am going to read, for the record, what the minister said in the telegram which he sent to the trade the day before yesterday:

Re your tel November 28th the brief presented to the federal government by Atlantic groundfish industry is under active consideration. Impossible however for me to outline government's response to brief's proposal this week as your telegram suggests. While I recognize marketing and other difficulties which your industry faces it is now apparent that programs of government assistance cannot absolve your management of its decision-making function.

In other words, "We are going to call your bluff"—that is what the minister was saying. The telegram continues:

Please do not count on any new program of government assistance being put into effect before the end of the federal government's current fiscal year which is March 31st, 1969.

I ask the Minister of Defence Production again—he is not in his seat but he is in the house—does he agree with that telegram?

Mr. Jamieson: Do you want me to answer it now?

Mr. McGrath: Yes, of course.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that my answer was not clear enough before for the hon. member. The words used were, "Please do not count on any new program." I think those were the exact words used. I believe the Minister of Fisheries, as I said, was wise to put it in that form. I suggest, however—and I suspect the Minister of Fisheries would be willing to confirm this—that this does not preclude the introduction of something earlier if a formula can be devised. The whole emphasis I was putting on it was the difficulty in finding what that formula should be.

Mr. McGrath: The fish trades in their brief of November 13, to which the minister referred, made it very clear to the government that unless some aid program was continued the industry would collapse. If that was not sufficiently clear to the minister, they pointed out again to him in the telegram of last Friday that unless aid was forthcoming they would have to take decisions tantamount to the collapse of the industry. Is the minister prepared to take the consequences if the groundfish industry in Atlantic Canada collapses because of the lack of action by the government?

Is the Minister of Defence Production prepared to take the responsibility, in relation to the people of Newfoundland, if the groundfish industry in that province collapses, because of inactivity on the part of the government of which he is a member? Surely he must accept this responsibility. He tried in the house today to defend the government's inactivity. My time is limited, but I hope the minister will say something positive and definitive before the house rises today, because it seems to me there is very little wrong with the groundfish industry that the government cannot tackle in a positive way. The answer is overproduction, markets that are oversold, and a government that does not give a damn.

Mr. Jamieson: That is the problem. You have not given any answer.

Mr. McGrath: The minister said I have not given any answer. I would like to refer briefly to the fact that when the Minister of Fisheries opened his remarks today he requested members of the opposition to make suggestions, because he obviously did not have any. Now the Minister of Defence Production says the same thing. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that it is the responsibility of the government of Canada, and the Minister of Fisheries and the Minister of Defence Production as members of the cabinet, to bring in solutions to this serious crisis. It is not my responsibility as a member of parliament.

Mr. Jamieson: Just for the record, Mr. Chairman, I did not say anything of the kind. The hon. gentleman put words in my mouth and I am sure he did not intend to do that. I simply suggested to him that he had made a statement that the answer was overproduction. That is not the answer. I said these were the problems and suggested that he should put forward solutions to them.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, that smart alecky reply will not help the situation at all. This is the kind of frivolous approach on the part of the minister which tries to downplay what is in fact a serious crisis facing the basic, stable industry of our province. All the minister can do is stand in the house and make frivolous suggestions, as he has just done.

Mr. Jamieson: You do not like facts, do you?

The Chairman: Shall vote 1 carry?

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, before vote 1 carries, I am sure the committee would agree that the minister should be given limited time at least to answer some of the questions that have been raised today.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, first I would like to say in as emphatic terms as possible that I recognize we have a serious situation in the Atlantic fisheries. We certainly have a serious situation in respect of the ground fishery in the Atlantic area, and particularly in Newfoundland. I do not think anyone who has any knowledge of that area, and particularly of the ground fishery, would say otherwise.

There have been references to band aid treatments. There have also been references to the need for a whole medicine chest. I suggest there is also need, long term anyway, for a little surgery as well. I think we should face facts. What hon. gentlemen opposite are really saying is that an industry which has had difficulties over the years, and a great deal of support from the Canadian taxpayer, wants more support; it can get this support in band aid fashion in terms of millions of dollars with few or virtually no strings attached. That is perhaps the bluntest definition that I can give of the band aid treatment.

Certainly we need a longer term policy, and a longer term policy really points to the progressive rationalization of the industry, basically one which will reduce costs; a policy which must recognize, however, the human values involved, the rights of people, the attachment they have to their homes in many, and often remote, areas of the country. It is not easy to find long term solutions which do not influence the lives of people and will not uproot them and move them. We have to face this fact. We have begun to face it in Canada, and particularly in Newfoundland on a relatively small scale. The centralization program, which several hon. members have mentioned, is resulting in the movement of people, which affects their social values. We will have to continue this resettlement plan. I hope we can have a more effective and bigger program.

I made a few rough calculations about the extent of taxpayer support—it is not just government support; it is money of the people of Canada—for that part of Canada which supports groundfish industry, namely the Atlantic area. A great deal of assistance is now going to that area, without this additional band aid treatment in respect of which some hon. members have asked that an announcement be made in a matter of days or weeks. This support is of the order of $40 on every $100 of production. This is a great deal of support. There is no question of nothing being done, because a great deal is being done. Some people might say that the money has been misspent, but it is very substantial support.

Research in fisheries amouunts to 5 per cent at least of the gross value of the catch. This is the largest of any industry in Canada. There can be no doubt that research expenditure for the fishing industry has been very substantial in dollar terms, and I think in quality. So there can be no excuse asked for or given in that regard. With regard to general support, the budget of the department is $50 million. The total value of the fishery in Canada is $300 million. This is a great deal of money relative to the total value of the fishery, and certainly a proportionate share is going to those parts of the country which are having a problem with the ground fishery, particularly the Atlantic area.

We have to do several things. I am personally attracted to the idea of a solution for the salt fishery somewhat similar to that proposed for the fresh water fishery. I think that unless other and better propositions are advanced very shortly we will have to arrange for the more orderly and effective single-desk marketing of our salt fish production. I think this would certainly improve quality and would slowly, progressively centralize the industry as well. This would lead to the movement of people to fewer centres, where there could be more efficient collection and where fish in the round could be handled with centralized efficiency.

With regard to processing, we have to produce quality salt fish and regain our position in the world as a supplier of salt fish. We can do that when we come to the fresh and frozen commodity, which has been the mainstay of the industry. We are concerned with an industry which surely in some measure at least should remain in the hands of private ownership. It is certainly an industry in which the individual fisherman still has a very substantial role.

This is a question which hon. members on all sides of the house should really ask themselves: How far can a government assist an industry before the taxpayers who are supplying the money begin to demand remarkable changes in respect of the way that industry is run? We are all asking ourselves that question, and no doubt some hard decisions will have to be made.

I received a telegram, which had been referred to several times during the course of the debate today, which in effect said that the industry may shortly have to tie up many of its vessels. I was wondering where the money was going to come from to enable the fresh and frozen industry to send its vessels to sea in January or February of next year, and to make them productive again. As I said before, we have had two special programs totalling $8 million brought in during 1968. At this moment we do not have money set aside in the estimates or in the budget of the federal Department of Fisheries for additional support of this kind. It may be necessary to give some interim support, but I thought that the frank thing to do was to tell the industry that so far as I knew, and so far as I could tell them with certainty, no money at this moment is earmarked for payment to them prior to March 31, 1969. That is the situation as of this moment.

This does not prevent the government from developing two policies, one short term and one long term, communicating them to the industry, discussing them, and announcing them in full measure in the next month or two. However this is a frank statement of the situation in which we find ourselves today. I know that many companies are in difficulties; a few are in serious financial difficulties. We will have to assess the situation from day to day. But it would be wrong of me to try to outline a definite and final policy of financial assistance to the industry to help to get it back to sea again early in the new year, when the moneys are not yet definitely earmarked. Certainly it would be wrong of me to try to pretend we have all the answers in respect of a long term policy which will not hurt and will not involve moving people and closing down some plants. I hope that we will be able to define that long term policy and improve upon it as time goes by. I am sure we will define it in the new year and, with your help, improve upon it as the months go by.

Mr. McGrath: Before we rise, Mr. Chairman, may I thank the minister for his statement. It is a very sound and sensible one, and we on this side appreciate what he said. We are only sorry he did not say it earlier.

Item agreed to.

The following items were agreed to:

Fisheries Management and Development—

5. Operation and Maintenance including Canada's share of the expenses of the International Commissions detailed in the Estimates and of the costs of programs and projects shared jointly with the Provinces and industry, and authority to make recoverable advances in amounts not exceeding in the aggregate the amount of the share of the International Great Lakes Fishery Commission of the cost of work on lamprey control and lamprey research, $22,602,500.

10. Construction or Acquisition of Buildings, Works, Land and Equipment, including acquisition of land for the International Pacific Salmon Fisheries Commission, as required by Article VIII of the Convention and payments to provinces or municipalities as contributions towards construction done by those bodies, $5,378,600.

15. Grants, contributions and subsidies in the amounts and subject to the terms specified in the sub-vote titles listed in the Details of Estimates, $3,820,000.

Fisheries Research Board of Canada—

20. Administration, Operation and Maintenance, including an amount of $500,000 for grants for Fisheries Research and for Scholarships and authority to provide free accommodation for the International North Pacific Fisheries Commission, $12,135,000.

25. Construction or Acquisition of Buildings, Works, Land and Equipment, $4,000,000.

Forestry—

30. Administration, Operation and Maintenance, $18,271,025.

35. Construction or Acquisition of Buildings, Works, Land and Equipment, $3,697,000.

40. Grants and contributions as detailed in the Estimates, $1,516,000.

The Chairman: That concludes the estimates of the Department of Fisheries.

Resolution adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacLean: Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, for the convenience of hon. members the government house leader would indicate the business which the government proposes to place before parliament next week.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Speaker, on Monday we will return to the committee of supply and deal with the estimates of the Cape Breton Development Corporation and regional development, both of which were referred back to the house and to the committee of supply from the standing committee today. Perhaps I might add also, for the advice of the house, that under the order we adopted on September 20 this will be the last allotted day in committee of supply. All the estimates will, at the close of business at 10 o'clock on Monday night, or earlier if the house agrees, be put to the house. This will be therefore the final supply day coming up on Monday next.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask the minister if he would advise the house what departments we would turn to if we were to finish regional development before the time expired?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Well, the Minister of Transport will be available. However I might solicit advice and suggestions from hon. members as to those departments they would like to hear from, which have not already been dealt with, and I promise that to the best of my ability I would try to have them called during the day.

It being eight minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[The following items were passed in Committee of Supply this day:]

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES AND FORESTRY

1, 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, 35, 40.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, December 9, 1968

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

[Translation]

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

Fourth report of standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, in French and in English—Mr. Gaston Clermont (Gatineau).

[Note: Text of foregoing report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

TABLING OF SECOND REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table, with the consent of the house, copies of the English and French versions of Volume II entitled "Education" of the report of the royal commission of inquiry on bilingualism and biculturalism.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Has the right hon. Prime Minister leave to table these documents?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEDURE

MOTIONS FOR CONCURRENCE IN COMMITTEE REPORTS

On the order: Motions:

December 6, 1968—Mr. Blair (Chairman of the Special committee on procedure of the house):

That the fourth report of the special committee on procedure of the house, presented to the house on Friday, December 6, 1968, be concurred in.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to this notice of motion. The point of order I wish to raise is to the effect that in the light of the privileges and practices of the house this matter should not be dealt with in the way proposed, and further that consideration should be given to the form of this motion before we reach the point at which it is moved for debate. I do not contend that it is necessary for Your Honour to rule on my point of order today, but in view of the fact that this is the first opportunity for me to raise the point of order I felt I should do so at this moment lest I be out of court if I left it until later.

Standing order 50 reads as follows:

Whenever Mr. Speaker is of the opinion that a motion offered to the house is contrary to the rules and privileges of parliament, he shall advise the house thereof immediately, before putting the question thereon, and quote the standing order or authority applicable to the case.

I do not contend that there is a precise rule or standing order governing this matter. Indeed, there are no standing orders that tell us how to revise our standing orders. I do contend, however, that dealing with the matter in this way is contrary to the privileges of parliament, and I make that contention on three grounds. In the first place I draw the attention of Your Honour and the house to the fact that on other occasions when the rules of the House of Commons have been subjected to a thorough overhaul, it has been done by referring the matter to the committee of the whole house. I contend, therefore, that it is against the privileges of parliament to ask us to deal with this major overhaul with the Speaker in the chair, which gives us no opportunity to deal with the various rules one by one.

May I take a moment to document my contention that the privileges of parliament are clear so far as our past practice is concerned. In 1867, the first time there was any revision of the rules this parliament inherited from the parliament of the former Province of Canada, a motion was made on December 28 to refer the proposals made by the committee at that time to the committee of the whole house.

The next time the rules were revised was in 1876, and the same practice was followed. If you will consult Hansard for that year, at page 905, for March 29, 1876, you will find that the matter was referred to the committee of the whole house. The rules were dealt with seriatim by that committee of the whole house, and subsequently the house gave them both second and third reading.

Proposed Changes in Procedure

In other words, it was clear in the early days that these were matters that had to be dealt with as being of substance and importance; that the house had to have an opportunity to deal with the rules individually in committee as well as to pass on them in the house itself.

The next major overhaul came in 1906. Again, if one refers to Hansard of July 9 of that year, page 7459, he will find that Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier moved the motion to refer to the committee of the whole house the report of a special committee on procedure which had been presented earlier. The same thing happened in 1910 when there was another major overhaul. The motion was made on April 29 of that year, as recorded at page 8336 of Hansard. Again it was Sir Wilfrid Laurier who made the motion to refer the committee's report to the committee of the whole house.

The next occasion when there was a major change in the rules of the house was in 1913. I will come back to it later, rather than dealing with it at this point, because it presents a very interesting exception to the rule. After that the next occasion was 1927. On March 18 of that year, as recorded in Hansard at page 1337, Mr. Lapointe moved that the report of the committee that had been tabled be referred to the committee of the whole house.

The next occasion was 1944. On March 7 of that year Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King moved that the committee's report which had been tabled be referred to the committee of the whole house. That was the first occasion upon which I participated in a debate on procedure. I remember it very well. It did not get very far; certain members were against it, it bogged down in committee of the whole, and that committee's report was never adopted.

The next occasion was 1955, when we had a very thorough study under the direction of Hon. Walter Harris. The report of the committee was presented and on June 14, as recorded in Hansard at page 4751, Mr. Harris moved that the matter be dealt with in the committee of the whole house, and this was done commencing July 1 of that year. The next major overhaul came in 1965. On that occasion Mr. Pearson on June 8, as recorded in Hansard at page 2129, moved that the matter be dealt with in the committee of the whole house.

So our practice over the years is clear. Changing our rules is not something we do by a sudden death motion with Mr. Speaker in the chair, which gives us no opportunity to deal with the rules seriatim. It has almost always been done by referring committee reports to the committee of the whole house.

There are some exceptions to this practice, and I draw attention to them quite frankly. These exceptions do not alter the general rule. For example, there have been a number of occasions when committee reports proposed temporary changes. I had the privilege of moving some of them myself. They were moved with Mr. Speaker in the chair. There were a few occasions when the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was prime minister, when the same thing was done when some temporary rules were put in for one year, then another year and continued. There was no objection to its being done that way, so it was done on that occasion by adopting a report with Mr. Speaker in the chair.

I submit that in all these instances there was general consent to its being done in that way and they do not invalidate the established practice that whenever there is a major overhaul the committee's report is referred to the committee of the whole house.

The only exception to this rule so far as any substantial change is concerned was in the year 1913. I hope my hon. friends to the right will not take umbrage if I again express some criticism of the Tories of that day. The Tories of today are a little different; they are now Progressive Conservatives.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On that occasion back in 1913, Sir Robert Borden was prime minister. As all students of history know, parliament was engaged in the naval aid bill debate, which went on and on and on. In due course the government of the day stopped the debate right in the middle of it and brought in a motion to amend the rules. One of the changes proposed in that motion was the introduction of the infamous closure rule, which we now have as standing order 33. The matter was not referred to a committee of the whole house; it was done on a government motion with Mr. Speaker in the chair. But I hope no Liberal will cite that precedent. If he should, I would ask him to read the oratory of Sir Wilfrid Laurier who then sat on the opposition side of the house and condemned the whole practice out of hand. One of the things Sir Wilfrid Laurier complained about was the very fact that the matter was not being dealt with in committee of the whole house. I submit that the position taken by the Liberal leader of that day still holds at the present time.

So that is my first point. The others will not take so long. My first point is that the privileges of the house are clear, the rules are ours, and we have the right to be protected against one motion covering a whole host of rules, some of which we are for and some of which we are against. This denies us the opportunity to consider carefully this important matter. As I said, it has been done every time, except once, by reference to committee of the whole house, and that one time is not a precedent because it was opposed bitterly by the Liberals of the day. Furthermore, even on that occasion it was not a case of a report from a special committee but was rather a straight government motion on the order paper.

The second point I wish to make is that I have found at least one case—there may be others—where concurrence in a report with Mr. Speaker in the chair did not put into effect what was contained in the report. I will not take the time of the house to go into this now—I will be glad to present a memorandum on the point—but I submit there was some doubt as to whether the mere concurrence in a report with Mr. Speaker in the chair without the rules having been considered seriatim in committee of the whole would effect changes in our standing orders.

The third point is that I contend that although this motion seems proper because there is provision in the rules for motions to concur in committee reports, it is a disguised way of making us deal with a complicated question on one vote. May I remind Your Honour that on June 15, 1964, Mr. Speaker Macnaughton had to deal with this issue on the occasion of the flag debate, and those who were here will remember that that motion in its first form contained two separate sections. Some of us contended it was a complicated matter and we had the right to have it divided into its constituent parts. There was a procedural argument about it and Mr. Speaker Macnaughton gave his ruling on the day I indicated. That ruling is to be found in Hansard from page 4303 to page 4306. Mr. Speaker Macnaughton went over our own practices; he also went over the practices of the British House of Commons, and in the end he relied on standing order 1 of our rules which says that if nothing is provided for in our rules we have to go by the practices in the British house.

The precedents in the ruling he gave on that occasion made it clear that it is the Speaker's duty to see to it that members are not put in the position where they have to vote at once on several phases of a matter, to some of which they may be opposed and others which they may be prepared to support. I submit that this is what we are being presented with in disguise in the fourth report which is mentioned in the motion on the order paper at the moment, which contains some proposals which I for one am quite happy to support. It also contains at least one proposal to which I am strongly and bitterly opposed. I contend that I personally have the right to vote separately on those different rules in committee of the whole, and I contend that parliament as a whole has this right.

I found some interesting quotations in my research into these experiences during the past hundred years. One of them which amused me was back in 1876 when the rules were being revised. The house went into committee of the whole in the proper way. But one member complained bitterly that the changes in the rules were not going far enough. In fact he said, "If we don't watch out the sessions are going to get longer; they will be three months a year instead of two." This was in 1876. I also found many occasions when the chairman of the special committee, usually the Speaker himself, said to the house that the way we must deal with this is not on a partisan basis, not on the basis of government versus opposition, but in the full recognition that these are the rules of the parliament of Canada, a parliament that belongs not to us but to all the people. I submit, therefore, that we should not be confronted with any short cuts. We should deal with these rules in a way that has been made clear by the practices of this House of Commons for the past 100 years.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): I can just deal briefly, Mr. Speaker, with the three points brought up by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. His first proposition was that it is one of the privileges of the house that the rules should be amended by a procedure whereby a resolution is put in the committee of the whole house. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the precedents cited by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre indicated that there are at least two procedures for dealing with changes in the rules of the house. These changes can be dealt with either by way of a resolution to be dealt with in committee of the whole, as indicated in certain examples by the hon. member, or alternatively in the manner of proposals made in a committee and the recommendation that the report of the committee should be considered with Mr. Speaker in the chair. This procedure has equal validity.

I suggest there were really these two options open and we have chosen the one option, namely that of dealing with these very complicated matters through a report of the special committee on procedure and a motion for concurrence in that report. I point out that in recent years, on April 26, 1967, an order of the house was adopted covering some fairly complicated changes in the rules. As the hon. member says, those changes were made on a provisional basis; neverthless they were complicated, and this was done by concurrence in a committee report. This was the case, too, with regard to a permanent change which was made in the rules by concurrence in a committee report recommending a time limit for the ringing of the bells.

There are, therefore, precedents to support both these vehicles for getting house approval of these particular measures. I would therefore disagree with the argument advanced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre when he says there is only a unique procedure for doing this when you have complicated and perhaps controversial proposals.

I should like to make reference to one other matter which the hon. member mentioned, and that is that this is a complicated question and therefore is not to be decided on one single vote. I point out in the first place that the house decided, and I think it was a wise decision, that changes of the scope which have been considered in the special committee on procedure are perhaps better made by a small representative group of members in a special committee on procedure rather than in the house as a whole. I would say that is so because it was found necessary to hold no less than 26 sessions of that particular committee, and to invoke the assistance of the people at the table as well as other officers of the house for the purpose of drawing up these very complicated changes in the standing orders. I make the basic argument, therefore, that if changes are to be made, those changes should be made in a special committee on procedure because that is the most effective forum for dealing with such an examination.

It is acknowledged at once there is not general support for all the proposals. It is really because of this non-support of the whole of the report of the special committee on procedure that there was not a single report but three reports. The first report was merely for the purpose of explaining the attitude of the committee toward the proposals, and a general description of the changes. The second report contains the principal changes in the standing orders and also those which are the most subject to controversy. The third report on the order paper, the fifth report of the committee, incorporates those changes, which it has been assumed by the special committee on procedure will not be of a controversial nature and will probably find general acceptance in the house.

It is not true to say that the hon. member who has just spoken or any other hon. member will be without a vehicle for expressing his disagreement with what the committee has done, or without a vehicle for getting any committee decision changed. I suggest, given the complicated nature of the subject matter and given the complicated nature of the discussions which have taken place, probably the most appropriate manner for having the proposals changed is by taking the action that is open to hon. members, namely by moving an amendment to refer the report back to the special committee on procedure so the committee might further consider the report along certain lines, which would be suggested in the amendment to the original motion for concurrence in the report.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the two principal points made by the hon. member are, if I may express the last one first, that the house would not have an opportunity to express its opinion on the various proposals; and in answer I contend this opportunity does exist under the present procedure. The first of his two points is that there is a compelling precedent that requires rule changes of this kind to be dealt with in only one way; and I contend this argument is wrong, and wrong in face of the very precedents cited by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, which indicate that either procedure has been and is acceptable to the house in changing the standing orders of the house.

Mr. Baldwin: Next year the government will be changing them by order in council.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre suggested in his presentation that the debate on the report be carried out in committee of the whole rather than with the Speaker in the chair. He referred to a number of precedents and rules which he suggests should be considered by the Chair. I have also listened to the arguments brought forth by the President of the Privy Council. To give effect to the very reasonable suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre I will consider this question between now and tomorrow.

I might say that my natural inclination would be to have the debate in the committee of the whole rather than with the Speaker in the chair, but I will not allow this personal consideration to colour my objective judgment.

Shall the motion stand?

Some hon. Members: Stand.

On the order: Motions:

December 6, 1968—Mr. Blair (Chairman of the Special committee on procedure of the house):

That the fifth report of the special committee on procedure of the house, presented to the house on Friday, December 6, 1968, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton.

Mr. Blair: Stand.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I raise the same point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Motion stands.

CENTENNIAL MEDAL

TABLING OF LIST OF RECIPIENTS

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, if the house gives me leave I should like to table the list of recipients, excluding those nominated by the Canadian armed forces, of the Canadian Centennial medal, 1967.

Mr. Speaker: Has the parliamentary secretary leave to table these documents?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FEDERAL GRANTS TO PROVINCES

Question No. 289—Mr. Harding:

1. What was the total amount paid, or estimated to be paid, by the Government of Canada to the provinces for both unconditional grants and conditional grants for (a) the fiscal year 1967-68 (b) the fiscal year 1968-69?

2. What was the specific or estimated amount paid to each of the provinces by the Government of Canada for each category under the unconditional grants for (a) the fiscal year 1967-68 (b) the fiscal year 1968-69?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. The total amounts paid, or estimated to be paid, by the government of Canada to the provinces for both unconditional and conditional grants for the fiscal years 1967-68 and 1968-69 are as follows: (a) 1967-68, $2,258,-301,000; (b) 1968-69, $2,454,057,000.

Not included in these totals is the tax abatement portion of the post-secondary fiscal transfer. In 1967-68, the value of the tax abatement was $227,613,000. In 1968-69, the value of the tax abatement is estimated at $252,941,000.

2. The estimated amounts paid to each of the provinces by the government of Canada for each category under the unconditional grants for the fiscal years 1967-68 and 1968-69 are as follows:

(a) for fiscal year 1967-68

	Statutory Subsidies	Share of Income Tax on certain Utilities	Equalization	Stabilization

FEDERAL SUPPORT FOR FILM SOCIETIES, ETC.

Question No. 429—Mr. Roberts: (Supplementary)

Does the Government of Canada provide any financial support for film societies, film museums or cinematheques in Canada and, if so, what has been the amount expended for this purpose for each year since 1963?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): In so far as the Centennial Commission is concerned the answer is as follows: The following grants were made by the commission during 1967: La Cinematique Canadienne, $33,000.00; Canadian Film Institute, $26,000.00; Association of Amateur Cinematographers, $400.00.

In so far as the National Film Board is concerned the answer is as follows: Since 1963-64 the National Film Board has entered into contract annually with the Canadian Film Institute in the amount of $20,000 for which services, including the maintenance of film libraries, film catalogues and listings by subject and general information for the public on films are provided.

In 1965-66, the board contracted with La Cinematique Canadienne in the amount of $8,000 to produce, co-ordinate and distribute an exhibit in Canada and Europe of the work of Norman McLaren.

In 1967-68 and 1968-69, the Board made grants of $1,000 and $2,000 respectively to the Canadian Film Awards.

In so far as the National Research Council of Canada is concerned the answer is as follows: 1962-63, $24,500.00; 1963-64, $24,500.00; 1964-65, $24,500.00; 1965-66, $24,500.00; 1966-67, $24,500.00; 1967-68, $29,500.00.

[Mr. Benson.]

The amounts listed are the financial support given to the National Science Film Library which was established in 1962 and which is operated by the Canadian Film Institute under contract with the National Research Council.

AGRICULTURAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE, CAPITAL COMMISSION

Question No. 523—Mr. Code:

1. Who are the Members of the Agricultural Advisory Committee of the National Capital Commission and, what is (a) the present occupation (b) the experience, of each of them?

2. What are the terms of reference of the Committee?

3. In each year 1956 to date, how many meetings of the Committee were held?

4. What are the major recommendations which have been made by the Committee?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secetary to Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): 1. Dr. Grant Carman (Chairman): (a) Director of information, Canada Department of Agriculture; (b) Research officer, animal husbandry division, Department of Agriculture, 1953-59; chief of scientific information section research branch, Department of Agriculture, 1959-1965. Dr. Rosario Pelletier: (a) Special advisor, ARDA, Department of Forestry and Rural Development; (b) 23 years director of experimental farm, Ste. Anne de la Pocatière; assistant director ARDA since its inception in 1961; consultant with the World Bank (UN) on economic planning, Morocco, 1967; chief of FAO mission for the United Nations in Iran, 1952-54. Dr. Peter C. Stobbe: (a) Director of

3. Since its inception on February 25, 1966, the Committee has met as follows: 1966, 4 meetings; 1967, 3 meetings; 1968, 4 meetings.

4. This Advisory Committee has considered many matters over the period of its existence. Its recommendations are made to assist the Commission in its consideration of certain matters. Such recommendations, which are subject to approval or action by higher authority, have traditionally been considered as privileged information.

HISTORICAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE, NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

Question No. 524—Mr. Code:

1. Who are the Members of the Historical Advisory Committee of the National Capital Commission, giving date of initial appointment in each case?

2. What are the terms of reference of the Committee?

3. In each year 1956 to date, how many meetings of the Committee were held?

4. What are the major recommendations which have been made by the Committee during the said years?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): 1. Mr. W. E. Fancott, November 15, 1960; Mr. W. E. D. Halliday, November 15, 1960; Mr. R. H. Hubbard, November 15, 1960; Dr. R. F. Legget, November 15, 1960; Mr. Eric Morse, November 15, 1960; Mr. A. J. H. Richardson, November 15, 1960; Mr. D. Ritchie, November 15, 1960; Mr. Augustin Potvin, June 26, 1961; Dr. Louis M. Bloomfield, June 3, 1963; Dr. J. E. Bissonnette, June 3, 1963; Mrs. F. R. Crawley, June 3, 1963; Mr. Egide Dandeneault, January 20, 1964; Mr. David Farr, January 20, 1964; Dr. W. K. Lamb, January 20, 1964; Mr. Marc Laterreur, January 20, 1964; Prof. Jean Hamelin, October 20, 1967; Mrs. E. S. Stanley, November, 1967; Mr. C. C. J. Bond, January, 1968; President of the Ottawa Historical Society, January 29, 1962.

2. The historical advisory committee makes recommendations with regard to policies relating to the administration, preservation and maintenance of any historic place or historic museum of the National Capital region.

3. The historical advisory committee held its first meeting on March 24, 1969. Other meetings were: 1959, 5; 1960, 3; 1961, 2; 1962, 2; 1963, 3; 1964, 2; 1965, 2; 1966, 1; 1967, 1; 1968, 1.

4. This advisory committee has considered many matters over the period of its existence. Its recommendations are made to assist the commission in its consideration of certain matters. Such recommendations, which are subject to approval or action by higher authority, have traditionally been considered as privileged information.

ADVISORY DESIGN COMMITTEE, CAPITAL COMMISSION

Question No. 525—Mr. Code:

1. Who are the members of the Advisory Committee on Design of the National Capital Commission, when was each appointed and what is (a) the present occupation (b) the experience of each?

2. What are the terms of reference of the Committee?

3. In each year 1956 to date, how many meetings of the Committee were held?

4. What are the major recommendations which have been made by the Committee during the said years?

Questions

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): 1. There are ten members of the advisory committee on design to the National Capital Commission including the chairman. Members are: Dr. T. Howarth (chairman) architect and town planner, May 1964, Toronto; Mr. D. W. Graham, landscape architect, March 1967, Ottawa; Mr. Hart Massey, architect, June 1963, Ottawa; Mr. D'arcy Audet, architect, September, 1964, Hull; Mr. R. Affleck, architect, January, 1968, Montreal; Mr. J. L. Lalonde, architect, May, 1964, Montreal; Mr. J. Gareau, architect, May, 1964, Montreal; Mr. B. Myers, architect, January, 1968, Toronto; Mr. D. Crinion, Architect, March 1967, Ottawa; Mr. J. Issalys, Architect, June, 1960, Hull.

Each member has been selected for his broad experience and knowledge in his profession. All members are in practice or teaching.

2. The Committee's terms of reference are to consider proposals for the location erection alteration or extension of a building or other work by any person on public lands, or by or on behalf of a department, in the National Capital Region.

3. Prior to December 1958 the Committee was known as the Architectural Committee of the Federal District Commission.

The Advisory Committee on Design to the National Capital Commission held its first meeting in March 1959.

The number of meetings held by these two committees are as follows: 1956, 9; 1957, 5; 1958, 5; 1959, 6; 1960, 6; 1961, 9; 1962, 13; 1963, 8; 1964, 15; 1965, 13; 1966, 13; 1967, 12; 1968, 8 (to date).

4. This Advisory Committee has considered many matters over the period of its existence. Its recommendations are made to assist the Commission in its consideration of certain matters. Such recommendations, which are subject to approval or action by higher authority, have traditionally been considered as privileged information.

USE OF SATELLITE IN COMMUNICATIONS SERVICE

Question No. 578—Mr. Blouin:

1. Has the federal government made the necessary arrangements to provide television and communications service everywhere in Canada when the Canadian satellite is in operation?

[Mr. Code.]

2. Will these networks be put into operation with priority being given to isolated areas such as the Canadian North, as indicated by the White Paper submitted by the Minister of Industry on March 28, 1968 and, if so, on approximately what date is it expected that the English and French networks will commence operation?

[Translation]

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): In so far as Telecommunications is concerned 1. The White Paper submitted by the Minister of Industry on March 28, 1968, clearly establishes the government's policy in that particular field. As for arrangements to provide television and communications service everywhere in Canada when the Canadian satellite is in operation, it is intended to provide these to the maximum but the final decision can only be made when a comprehensive study of the system has been completed.

2. The comprehensive study mentioned above will provide the government with the necessary information to give an adequate answer to this question, but a prime objective of the satellite system will be to extend TV and communications service to the North.

REGISTRATIONS FOR EMPLOYMENT BY STUDENTS

Question No. 631—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What number of High School and University Students were registered with Canada Manpower Offices for summer employment in the months of May, June, July, August, for the years 1966, 1967, 1968?

2. Of this number, how many were placed for employment and how many was the Department unable to place for employment in each of the above months for each of the above years?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Clients of Canada Manpower centres seeking temporary employment are serviced in order of registration. Students have not been identified in the past as a special group but rather as individuals who were entitled to the same service available to all clients. For these reasons statistics for 1966, 1967, 1968 on student registration at Canada Manpower centres have not been compiled separately and are not available as such.

2. For the same reasons mentioned above, the number of students placed for employment and the number the department was unable to place cannot be determined completely. Summer unemployment in the 14 to 24 age group, which had been at a low level in previous years, increased sharply in 1968. An intensive publicity campaign launched in late July, and increased effort by Canada Manpower centres produced a positive effect. A record of student placements was maintained separately from other placements of a temporary nature from July 25 to September 11, 1968. During this period 13,131 students were placed in employment.

BOOKLET "CANADIAN OPPORTUNITIES—HOUSING"

Question No. 688—Mr. Nesbitt:

Will the Minister of Manpower and Immigration inquire into a booklet published by his department and apparently distributed to prospective immigrants overseas, under the tile "Canadian Opportunities—Housing" in order to ascertain when the "Juliana Apartments" in Ottawa should have been singled out as a typical Canadian apartment dwelling and whether the owners are being charged for the free visual publicity provided by a full-page colour photo?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Yes. The building in question is not described as a typical Canadian apartment dwelling. Rather, in context with a variety of photographs in the pamphlet, it forms only one part of a pictorial description of the different varieties of accommodation available in Canada. None is described as "typical". The apartment building is not identified by its name or the city of its location, nor is this pamphlet distributed in Canada. Under these circumstances, therefore, it cannot be seen how the owners of the building are receiving free publicity.

STATUE OF SIR CHARLES TUPPER ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Question No. 704—Mr. Coates:

Is the government giving consideration to the erection of a statue of Sir Charles Tupper on Parliament Hill and, if so, when, and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): The government does not have under consideration at this time extending the present sculpture project to include others who have at some time held the post of prime minister, including Sir Charles Tupper.

Questions

ELECTRICAL GRID SYSTEM, CANADA—U.S.

Question No. 708—Mr. Coates:

Have negotiations been initiated by the federal government with the Government of the United States regarding the establishment of a grid system for the transportation of electrical energy between Eastern Canada and the North-Eastern United States and, if so, what progress has been made in these negotiations?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No.

REPORTS ON MINE DUMP FIRES

Question No. 710—Mr. Coates:

Has the federal government secured reports on mine dump fires that are available in the United States and, if so, what has been the conclusion of the reports in the elimination or containment of such fires?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The mines branch, of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, reviews United States reports, principally by the United States bureau of mines, on mine dump fires, as they are published.

The conclusions vary, dependent on circumstances. The most successful control of mine dump fires has been experienced by the blanketing of the dumps with inert material to exclude air, or by water spraying.

ECONOMIC STUDY OF EASTERN TOWNSHIPS, QUEBEC

Question No. 728—Mr. Beaudoin:

Does the government propose to undertake a detailed study of the economic situation in the Eastern Townships to determine what could be done to assist them?

[Translation]

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Not at this time.

MACLEAN HUNTER CABLE TV

Question No. 729—Mr. Robinson:

1. When did MacLean Hunter Cable TV Limited obtain a Canada Department of Transport Land Station License?

2. (a) In what areas of Canada is this license valid (b) where are the towers located in each case (c) what is the height of each of the towers (d) does the proximity of the towers to aircraft flight paths and airport facilities affect in any way the reception of TV programming?

[Mr. Pelletier.]

3. What authorization was required from the municipality concerned prior to the provision of CATV service?

4. Will Cable TV installation in any way affect the reception of TV signals for those who do not subscribe to the service?

5. What charge is made to subscribers for the Cable TV service provided by MacLean Hunter Cable TV Ltd., and/or MacLean Hunter Limited and/or Frederick T. Metcalfe and/or Toronto Cable TV?

6. Do regulations permit Cable TV service to be provided by use of public utilities such as (a) hydro facilities (b) telephone systems, and (c) any other public or private system?

7. Are Cable TV operators authorized to place their own equipment of poles and line to provide this service?

8. Is any consideration being given by the government to the introduction of legislation to provide that Cable TV be treated as a public utility in the manner of telephone service?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): 1. MacLean-Hunter Cable TV Limited obtained licences for land stations performing a commercial broadcasting receiving service on the following dates: 1. April 12, 1967; 2. August 11, 1967; 3. September 27, 1967; 4. November 9, 1967; 5. November 9, 1967; 6. December 28, 1967; 7. January 23, 1968; 8. January 23, 1968; 9. January 23, 1968; 10. January 23, 1968; 11. January 23, 1968; 12. January 23, 1968.

2(a) The licences issued were valid in the following areas: 1. Metropolitan Toronto including the township of Etobicoke, North York, East York, York and the township of Scarborough, the villages of Long Branch, Swansea and Forest Hill, the towns of Leaside, Weston, New Toronto and Mimico, Toronto Island and the city of Toronto and the township of Toronto, and a portion of the township of Pickering; 2. Metropolitan Winnipeg; 3. Welland, Port Colborne, Niagara Falls, Ontario and surrounding area; 4. Welland, Thorold, Port Colborne, Fort Erie, St. Catharines, Niagara Falls, Ontario and surrounding area; 5. Burlington, Freeman, Boyne, Omagh, Drumquin, Streetsville, Clarkson, Oakville, Ontario and surrounding area; 6. St. Catharines, Ontario; 7. Owen Sound and Meaford, Ontario and adjoining suburbs; 8. North Bay, Ontario and portions of Widdifield and West Ferris township; 9. Guelph, Ontario; 10. Collingwood, Ontario and surrounding area; 11. Midland, Penetanguishene and the intervening area; 12. Huntsville, Ontario.

2(b) Tower Locations					(c) Tower Height
1. Lat.	43°	45′	25″	North	200 feet
Long.	79°	24′	30″	West
Lat.	43°	36′	05″	North
Long.	79°	47′	50″	West	200 feet (this site replaced the above site)
2. Lat.	49°	40′	00″	North	60 feet
Long.	97°	10′	00″	West
3. Lat.	42°	58′	12″	North	200 feet
Long.	79°	07′	36″	West
4. Lat.	43°	04′	30″	North
Long.	79°	10′	10″	West	200 feet
5. Lat.	43°	27′	00″	North	50 feet
Long.	79°	44′	30″	West
6. Lat.	43°	07′	29″	North	72 feet
Long.	79°	14′	22″	West
Lat.	43°	07′	35″	North	149 feet
Long.	79°	14′	20″	West	(this site replaces the above site)
7. Lat.	44°	33′	12″	North	200 feet
Long.	80°	45′	36″	West
8. Lat.	46°	20′	15″	North	100 feet
Long.	79°	31′	22″	West
9. Lat.	43°	35′	20″	North	60 feet
Long.	80°	13′	40″	West
10. Lat.	44°	28′	35″	North	70 feet
Long.	80°	19′	45″	West
11. Lat.	44°	43′	36″	North	60 feet
Long.	79°	55′	21″	West
12. Lat.	45°	18′	50″	North	60 feet
Long.	79°	13′	12″	West

2(d) The proximity of these towers to aircraft flight paths and airport facilities could possibly, under certain circumstances, affect television reception.

3. No authorization was required from the municipality concerned by the federal government prior to issuing the land station (CATV) licence since such a licence relates to a matter that is exclusively within the legislative jurisdiction of parliament. However the licence did not purport to prohibit the municipality concerned from requiring such authorization prior to the provision of CATV service that it had the power to require pursuant to competent provincial legislation.

4. No, under normal circumstances.

5. Unknown.

6. Regulations under the Radio Act do not impede cable TV service from being provided in the manners described.

7. This matter is under study for policy determination.

8. This matter is under study for policy determination.

CANADA PENSION PLAN INVESTMENT FUND

Question No. 738—Mr. Nielsen:

1. What was the balance of the Canada Pension Plan investment fund at March 31, 1968?

2. What was the amount of investments under the Canada Pension Plan held by each of the provinces and territories at March 31, 1968?

3. What was the total amount of Canada Pension Plan investment funds held by the federal, provincial and territorial governments at March 31, 1968?

4. What form did the investment of Canadian Pension Plan funds take at March 31, 1968 by (a) the federal government, and (b) each of the provincial and territorial governments?

5. Are Canada Pension Plan investment funds held by the provinces and territories available for investment in university or other educational capital and, if not, for what reason?

6. Are Canada Pension Plan investment funds including the returns on such funds, invested by the federal government eligible to be devoted to helping to meet capital costs in secondary education facilities, and, if not, for what reason?

Answer: 1. $1,280.8 million.

Ontario	$ 728.6
British Columbia	186.1
Alberta	113.3
Manitoba	76.4
Saskatchewan	55.6
Nova Scotia	47.9
New Brunswick	37.0
Newfoundland	23.7
Prince Edward Island	4.3
Quebec	2.2
	$1,275.1

The province of Quebec has its own pension plan. The amount available to that province under the Canada Pension Plan relates only to some federal employees, such as armed services personnel, who are not included in the Quebec plan but who were brought into the Canada Pension Plan by special legislature during 1966.

The contributions attributable to the Yukon and Northwest Territories must, under the Canada Pension Plan Act, be taken up by the federal government.

Provincial	$1,275.1
Federal	5.7
	$1,280.8

4. All securities held by the fund are special non-marketable securities with a term of 20 years and bear interest at rates equivalent at the time of purchase, to the average yield to maturity on all negotiable bonds of the government of Canada, having a term to maturity of 20 years or more.

5. The use of the funds invested by the Canada Pension Plan investment fund in provincial securities is a matter for each province.

6. The funds made available through the Canada Pension Plan investment funds to the federal government are used for general purposes of the government of Canada.

REPORT ON REGIONAL AIRPORT, VICTORIAVILLE, QUE.

Question No. 748—Mr. Fortin:

When will the report of the study group considering the possibility of building a regional airport at Victoriaville be tabled?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Economic and engineering studies have been authorized to determine an airport design and cost to ascertain if federal assistance to the city of Victoriaville for the development of a local airport would be justified. These studies were initiated at the request of the municipalities of Victoriaville, Plessisville, Arthabaska, Daveluyville, Princeville and Warwick, which have accepted the conditions under which federal assistance for airport development may be provided.

The engineering study will not be completed until next summer and there are no plans now to table the reports when completed.

PRESS RELEASES, TREASURY BOARD

Question No. 749—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

1. Do the government services presided over by the President of the Treasury Board issue documents which are of the nature of press releases, press communiques, news releases or the like and, if so, how many such documents have been issued since July 1, 1968?

2. What has been the cost of (a) printing headings or cover sheets (b) typing the stencils (c) mimeographing or other form of duplicating (d) collating and stapling (e) addressing and mailing the said documents?

3. With respect to the paper used for the said documents what is (a) its quality (b) the quantity used and the cost thereof?

4. What is the estimate of the number of man-hours consumed in the preparation, production and distribution of such documents?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Insofar as the Treasury Board secretariat is concerned: 1. Yes; 15.

2. (a) $29.07; (b) $98.44; (c) $586.03; (d) $96.47; (e) $152.66.

3. (a) 40M, no. 7 Bond; (b) 45,500 sheets; cost $193.38.

4. 75 (estimated).

PRODUCTION DELAY, DEUTERIUM OF CANADA

Question No. 758—Mr. Harries:

1. When the first contract between Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and Deuterium of Canada Limited was made on February 27, 1964, what was the approximate date when it was expected that the heavy water plant to be built by the latter company would be in production?

2. Has the expectation stated by Deuterium of Canada Limited and reported in Hansard on November 8, 1967, that production would begin in March, 1968, been borne out in fact?

3. If not, what is the present expectation as to when production will begin?

4. What is the estimate of the cost of the heavy water that was purchased from abroad between July 31, 1966 and June 30, 1968?

5. With reference to the delivery schedule referred to in Hansard on January 22, 1968, when do each of the reductions in the prices to be paid to Deuterium of Canada Limited become effective?

6. Has Atomic Energy of Canada Limited or the appropriate Minister protested to the owners of the company about the two-year delay in the beginning of production?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Atomic Energy of Canada Limited advises as follows:
1. 1 July, 1966.

2. No.

3. 1 January, 1969.

4. $29.3 million.

5. 1st reduction, 1 April, 1972; 2nd reduction, 1 October, 1974; 3rd reduction, 1 October, 1979; 4th reduction, 1 April, 1982.

6. Yes.

JAPANESE PRODUCTION OF MEAT FROM WHEAT

Question No. 785—Mr. Southam:

What action is the government taking with a view to stepping up wheat sales to Japan in light of the recent announcement by the Japanese Nisshin Flour Milling Company that it would soon start a full-scale production of artificial meat from wheat, starting off with an initial 150 tons of synthetic meat per month.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The Nisshin Flour Milling Company indicate that their project to produce a meat substitute from wheat is still in the experimental stage. They expect to have a pilot plant in operation next spring. The Department of Industry, the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Canadian Wheat Board are keeping in close contact with this development with a view to future wheat sales.

IMMIGRATION FROM WEST INDIES

Question No. 795—Mr. Nielsen:

1. Has the attention of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration been drawn to a statement on November 7, 1968, by the Attorney General of Jamaica, that Canada's immigration policy is "wicked and disgraceful" in the sense that requirements as to skill are being utilized to practise "colour discrimination"?

2. What criteria are applied to qualify Jamaican immigrants to Canada?

3. What was the total number of applications for immigrant status in Canada emanating from residents of Jamaica, Barbados, Trinidad, Bahamas and all other islands of the West Indies geographical group in 1967-68 and of the total number of applications from residents of the West Indies in 1967-68 (a) how many were granted approval for landed immigrant status (b) how many were rejected and, of those rejected, how many were coloured, in the sense of having black skins?

4. How many were skilled and how many were unskilled?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Yes. However, the Attorney General, according to subsequent news reports, has indicated that his earlier statement was misinterpreted inasmuch as he had actually been referring to a situation which existed some eleven years ago rather than today.

2. Canada's immigration policy is universal in application and free from any reference to race, ethnic origin, nationality or religion. Therefore, the criteria applied in the selection of immigrants from Jamaica, are exactly the same as those applied everywhere else in the world.

3. During the period January 1, 1967 to September 30, 1968, immigrant applications for admission to Canada were received on behalf of 46,083 residents of the West Indies. Of this number (a) 12,496 were approved and (b) 24,999 were refused. Because of the completely non-discriminatory nature of Canadian immigration policy, no information whatever is sought or recorded to reflect an immigrant's racial or ethnic origin.

4. Former residents of the West Indies who were granted landed immigrant status in Canada during 1967 and the first nine months of 1968 had the following occupational qualifications.

Occupational Qualifications	1967	1968 (to Sept. 30)
Managerial	85	27

METHOD OF FILLING HARBOURS BOARD VACANCIES

Question No. 809—Mr. Caouette:

When filling vacancies within the National Harbours Board what criteria does the government use to ensure that the whole region is represented and what other pertinent factors must it consider?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Appropriate considerations of broad regional representation as well as other relevant factors are taken into consideration when filling vacancies on the board.

INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT, QUEBEC

Question No. 824—Mr. Fortin:

1. Has the Department of Transport, on behalf of the government, set any final date for a decision regarding the development of an international airport in the Province of Quebec in the near future and, if so, what is the date set?

2. What sites have been studied by the Department's experts?

3. Of the sites proposed, have any been eliminated so far and, if so, what were the reasons for such elimination in each case?

4. What are the criteria set by the Department's experts for the development of an international airport?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): 1. Discussions with the province of Quebec are still in progress. It is hoped that a site decision will be announced very early in the new year.

2. A very large region, defined by the Laurentian mountains in the north, the Quebec-Ontario provincial line to the west, the Quebec-United States border to the south and a line approximately 70 miles to the east of Montreal, was carefully examined and some 20 possible sites were identified.

3. At present, 17 of those sites identified have been eliminated because they were judged to be less favourable than the remaining three when all criteria were considered. As discussions with the province are still in progress, the specific locations of these sites must remain confidential to preclude land speculation.

4. The location of a new airport is subject to many complex and interrelated criteria. Some of the major criteria are: (a) Air space utilisation; (b) Noise in relation to urban areas; (c) Accessibility; (d) Distribution of users; (e) Relationship to Dorval airport; (f) Cost and availability of land; (g) Topography; (h) Soil condition; (i) Meteorology.

PRESS RELEASES, NATIONAL REVENUE DEPARTMENT

Question No. 826—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

1. Does the Department of National Revenue issue documents which are of the nature of press releases, press communiques, news releases or the like and, if so, how many such documents have been issued since July 1, 1968?

2. What has been the cost of (a) printing headings or cover sheets (b) typing the stencils (c) mimeographing or other form of duplicating (d) collating and stapling (e) addressing and mailing the said documents?

3. With respect to the paper used for the said documents, what is (a) its quality (b) the quantity used and the cost thereof?

4. What is the estimate of the number of man-hours consumed in the preparation, production and distribution of such documents?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Acting Minister of National Revenue): 1. The Department of National Revenue, taxation, issues press releases and information bulletins. Since July 1, 1968, eight press releases and four information bulletins were issued.

Questions

2. The cost of (a) printing headings or cover sheets was $94.50; (b) typing and proof-reading was $22.44; (c) duplicating (offset press) was $195.86; (d) collating and stapling was $87.00; (e) addressing and mailing was $14.75.

3. The paper used for the said documents was (a) quality No. 7 bond, white 40M 8"x13" plain for press releases and 8½"x 11" circular for information bulletins; (b) quantity—for eight press releases 1,625 pages at $3.30 M—$5.36 and for four information bulletins 41,900 pages at $2.51 M—$105.17.

4. The estimated number of man-hours consumed in:

Preparation		441
Production
Printing headings	3
Typing and proof-reading	8¼
Duplicating	8½
Collating and stapling	23½	43¼
Distribution		5

Note:—Information bulletins are also reproduced in miniature from the Canada Gazette for business houses, banks and the public, the number being dependent on anticipated demand. #42 Bulletin (20 Oct. 68), 2,000 at $12.00M, $24.00; #43 Bulletin (31 Oct. 68), 12,000 at $4.50M, $54.00; #44 Bulletin (1 Nov. 68), 2,000 at $12.00M, $24.00; #1 (2nd Rev.) (4 Nov. 68), 2,000 at $12.00M, $24.00.

TAXATION ON ASBESTOS MINES

Question No. 828—Mr. Dumont:

1. What is the total amount of taxes derived from asbestos mines in Canada by the Canadian Treasury?

2. What is the total amount of taxes derived from the mines at Coleraine, Black Lake, Thetford Mines and East Broughton?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Acting Minister of National Revenue):

For Taxation Division

1. The total amount of federal income taxes derived from asbestos mines in Canada during 1966 was approximately $12 million.

2. Of the foregoing amount of $12 million, approximately $3.5 million of federal income taxes were derived from the mines at Coleraine, Black Lake, Thetford Mines and East Broughton.

For Customs and Excise

1. As practically all asbestos produced by mines in Canada is either exported or sold for further processing in Canada the sales tax collected is relatively small. During the first nine months of 1968 the total sales tax collected from all asbestos mines in Canada amounted to $1,855.07.

2. The sales tax collected from mines at Coleraine, Black Lake, Thetford Mines and East Broughton during the first nine months of 1968 amounted to $1,316.67.

CANADIAN PAVILION, JAPANESE WORLD FAIR

Question No. 834—Mr. Crouse:

1. Is it the intention of the Canadian Government to provide a pavilion at the forthcoming Worlds Fair in Japan?

2. If so, what is the intended cost of this pavilion?

3. Has a contract been awarded for its construction?

4. Were public tenders called, and, if not, for what reason?

5. If public tenders were called, what are the names of the firms who submitted tenders, and the amounts of each tender?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. Yes.

2. $2,070,542.

3. Yes.

4. The basic structure of the Canadian pavilion at Expo 70 consists of glue-laminated Douglas fir beams of abnormal size. Public tenders for the provision of materials were not called because: (a) The ability to supply these beams within the time schedule was confined to specialist British Columbia firms. Three firms were invited to tender and the contract was awarded to the lowest bidder; (b) Time and economic factors on an accompanying order of western lumber restricted tendering to British Columbia firms. Four firms were invited to tender and one submitted a bid. This firm was awarded the contract.

In Japan it is normal practice to invite only a restricted number of building contractors to tender on a construction project. For construction work at the 1970 world exposition, contractors must be registered by the Osaka prefectural office or the Japanese government and in addition must be approved by the Japan Association for the 1970 world exposition. Because of the structural complexity of the Canadian pavilion the seven largest building construction firms in Japan were invited to tender. The contract was awarded to the lowest bidder.

5. See answer to part 4. Bidders which did submit tenders are the following: Glue Laminated Beams: Glulam Products Ltd., New Westminster, B.C., $171,278; Amfab Products Ltd., Burnaby, B.C., $201,186; T.P.L. Industries Ltd., New Westminster, B.C., $207,482. Lumber: Glulam Products Ltd., New Westminster, B.C., $122,853; Facon Timber Sales Ltd., Vancouver, B.C., No bid; MacMillan Bloedel Ltd., Vancouver, B.C., No bid; Seaboard Lumber Sales, Vancouver, B.C., No bid. Construction: Taisei Construction Co., Ltd., Tokyo, $2,340,000; Fujita General Construction Co., Ltd., Tokyo, $2,430,000; Obayashi Gumi Construction Co., Ltd., Japan, $2,520,000; Takenaka Construction Co., Ltd., Japan, $2,550,000; Kajima Construction Co., Ltd., Japan, $2,552,000; Shimizu Construction Co., Ltd., Japan, $2,565,000; Toda Construction Co., Ltd., Tokyo, $2,571,000.

Note: The Taisei tender was subsequently negotiated downward to $2,055,000. This figure includes $307,654 for some exhibit construction which should be subtracted from the $2,055,000 to produce, along with the Glulam beams and lumber costs of $323,196, a total pavilion construction cost of $2,070,542. Contracts were awarded to Glulam Products Ltd. and Taisei Construction Co., Ltd.

CANADIAN HORTICULTURAL COUNCIL

Question No. 843—Mr. Fortin:

1. What is the annual grant made by the federal government to the Canadian Horticultural Council?

2. What role does the Canadian Horticultural Council play?

3. Does this Council report to the government on the use of its subsidies?

4. How many French-speaking, English-speaking and bilingual persons are employed by the Council?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): 1. $8,400.

2. The Canadian Horticultural Council performs the role of bringing together nationally the views of fresh fruit and vegetable producers and allied interests. It is not a federal government body but an autonomous group which includes among its members: florists, nurserymen, beekeepers, fruit wholesalers, food processors, mushroom producers, potato chip manufacturers and the Canadian Wine Institute. As well, the provincial departments of agriculture are members and there are associate members from allied industries.

3. Not in detail—although the financial statement is made available.

4. In as much as the council is not a public service agency, this information is not available.

DAM CONSTRUCTION UNDER P.F.R.A.

Question No. 846—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Have any changes been made in the operations of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act?

2. If so, what is the nature of these changes?

3. Under the Act does Ottawa still have sole responsibility for dam construction?

4. What dams will be constructed during 1969?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): 1. No.

2. N/A.

3. Yes.

4. New projects are under study but final decisions not yet made.

RURAL MAIL ROUTE TENDERS, STELLARTON, N.S.

Question No. 847—Mr. MacEwan:

1. What were the names of the tenderers and the amounts of the various tenders for the R.R. 1, Stellarton, N.S. mail route?

2. Has the contract been awarded and, if so, to whom and, if not, when can a decision and an award be expected in this regard?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): 1. John George Reid, R.R. No. 1, Stellarton, $1,450.00; Mrs. F. Neil Horne, R.R. No. 1, Stellarton, $1,850.00; Ralph Oliver Green, Stellarton, $1,914.00; Walter Keith Greene, R.R. No. 1, Stellarton, $1,920.00; James Boyd MacKay, R.R. No. 1, Stellarton, $2,500.00.

2. No. The contract will be awarded to the lowest tenderer, who upon investigation, can give sufficient assurance of being able to perform the service in a satisfactory manner.

DISCHARGE FROM ARMED FORCES OF YVON LANDRY

Question No. 850—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

1. Was one Yvon Landry, former Sergeant in the R.C.A.F. at Bagotville, Quebec, discharged from the Armed Forces and, if so, upon what date and for what reason?

2. If Mr. Landry was discharged for medical reasons, is he (a) eligible for and (b) in receipt of a pension?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. Yes, 1

July 1967, under the provisions of QR&O Article 15.01 item 3(a), "On Medical Grounds".

2. (a) Yes. (b) Yes.

*RESEARCH INTO PERENNIAL HIGH YIELD WHEAT

Question No. 856—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Is there any research being conducted in Canada, comparable to the recent development in Russia, of a perennial high yielding wheat, which will meet out milling requirements in this country?

2. Has the Department of Agriculture endeavoured to acquire any information concerning the development of Russia's perennial high yielding wheat and, if so, what is the evaluation of this information by the Department?

[Translation]

Mr. Florian Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): 1. No research on perennial wheat is being carried out at present by the Department of Agriculture. Some years ago research was conducted on perennial wheats. The results led to the conclusion that these wheats did not compare favorably with annual wheats for yield and milling quality and would not be of any advantage to Canadian producers.

2. Research officers of the department have kept informed of the work being done with perennial wheats in Russia. Their evaluation is that these perennial wheats are not competitive with annual wheats currently available.

OUT-PATIENT DEPARTMENT, CAMP HILL HOSPITAL

Question No. 858—Mr. Coates:

1. Is the Out-Patient Department at Camp Hill Hospital to be closed on weekends and statutory holidays after November 30 and, if so, for what reasons?

2. Will the closing of this Out-patient Department interfere with the admission of seriously ill veterans referred to that Department by their own doctors and physicians?

3. How many veterans have taken advantage of out-patient services on weekends and statutory holidays to date in 1968 and of that number how many were required to be admitted to Camp Hill Hospital as a result of the examination they received at the Out-patient Department?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. Yes, experience has shown that because of the small number of veterans reporting to that outpatient clinic on week ends and statutory holidays, it would be wasteful to man fully this clinic during these periods.

2. No; such cases will be taken care of by the duty medical officer at the hospital.

3. 132 veterans of whom 52 (about one patient a week) were admitted to hospital during these periods.

AGRICULTURAL LOANS, QUEBEC

Question No. 862—Mr. Caouette:

1. What is the total amount of agricultural loans granted by the government each year since 1963 (a) in the Province of Quebec (b) in the constituency of Témiscamingue?

2. What is the average amount of these loans?

3. How many have been refused for each of these years?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): The Farm Credit Corporation advises that statistics are not maintained on a constituency basis. However, for the province of Quebec and the municipal county of Témiscamingue, the answer is:

	1. Total Amount		2. Average Amount		3. No. Loans Refused
Fiscal Years	(a) Quebec	(b) Témiscamingue	(a) Quebec	(b) Témiscamingue	(a) Quebec	(b) Témiscamingue

INCOME TAX ON SINGLE PERSON

Question No. 866—Mr. Caouette:

How much income tax has the average, single wage earner paid over the past five years?

[Mr. Groos.]

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Acting Minister of National Revenue): This information is not available in the form requested.

TORONTO AIRPORT

Question No. 870—Mr. Robinson:

Is the government considering the sale of Toronto international airport at Malton and, if so, would such funds be used to establish another airport sufficiently distant from Toronto so as to reduce noise and pollution caused by aircraft?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The government of Canada does not have under consideration the sale of Toronto international airport (Malton).

PREVAILING RATES WORKERS, CORNWALLIS, N.S.

Question No. 888—Mr. Comeau:

1. What is the present number of day staff (prevailing rates workers) employed at Cornwallis, N.S.?

2. Has any reduction occurred within the past two years and is a further reduction anticipated?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. 128.

2. No.

EMPLOYMENT OF COAL MINERS

Question No. 889—Mr. Harding:

How many coal miners were employed in each province for each of the last five fiscal years?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The Dominion Bureau of Statistics reports that: The average number of employees in coal mines, in each province, for the past five calendar years, is given in the attached table. This information is only available on a calendar year basis.

AVERAGE NUMBER OF EMPLOYEES IN COAL MINES

Calendar Year	Nova Scotia	New Brunswick	Saskatchewan	Alberta	British Columbia	Yukon	Canada
1963	6,063	820	196	1,159	657	8	8,903

1963	4,532	947
1964	4,461	1,128
1965	4,122	1,058
1966	3,860	994
1967	4,381	891
1968	4,376	768

INTEREST ON BORROWINGS FROM PENSION PLAN FUND

Question No. 895—Mr. Simpson:

What rate of interest is being charged provincial governments to borrow from the Canada Pension Plan fund?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): All securities held by the fund are special non-marketable securities with a term of 20 years and bear interest at rates equivalent at the time of purchase, to the average yield to maturity on all negotiable bonds of the government of Canada having a term to maturity of 20 years or more. For instance, on securities being purchased by the Canada Pension Fund with funds available in November 1968 the rate of interest is 6.76 per cent.

ADDITIONAL TAX APPEAL OFFICE, ATLANTIC REGION

Question No. 902—Mr. Fairweather:

What plans has the Department of National Revenue to set up a 5th regional tax appeal office in either Saint John or Halifax to serve taxpayers in the Atlantic Provinces?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Acting Minister of National Revenue): The department has no such plans at present.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

PERSONNEL OF MINISTERS' OFFICES

Question No. 276—Mr. Ritchie:

By Ministries, including the Prime Minister's Office (a) what is the strength of the staff of the respective ministerial offices (b) what are the names, effective date of appointment, salary, nature of appointment, respectively of each Executive Assistant, Special Assistant, Private and Assistant Private Secretary, hired under authority of Treasury Board Minute?

Return tabled.

MOTOR VEHICLES FOR CABINET MEMBERS

Question No. 321—Mr. Coates:

1. Do the Prime Minister and Cabinet Ministers receive a car allowance and, if so, what is the amount of that allowance?

2. Has the Prime Minister and have any or all of the Cabinet Ministers had motor vehicles with drivers provided for their personal use and, if so, by whom and who assumes responsibility for payment of the service provided and what is the amount of payment?

3. Which of the Cabinet Ministers, besides the Prime Minister, are provided with a motor vehicle and driver, what is the type of motor vehicle provided and on what basis was the selection of Cabinet Ministers decided upon for this special consideration?

Return tabled.

AMENDMENT OF EXPROPRIATION LAWS

Question No. 660—Mr. Fortin:

1. Does the government intend to set up a committee to amend Canadian expropriation laws and, if so, when will this committee be constituted?

2. How many expropriations are now in progress and have been going on for one year, two years or three years or more?

3. When will such an expropriation bill be presented to the House?

Return tabled.

URBAN RENEWAL SCHEMES

Question No. 698—Mr. Robinson:

1. Is the government involved in any urban renewal schemes at the present time and, if so, where and how much money has been paid and/or will be paid in these schemes as the government's share?

2. What urban renewal schemes are seeking government funds at the present time, where are they located, what is the total cost involved and what is the government contribution to be made?

3. How much money has the federal government paid for urban renewal projects, where are the projects located, when were they commenced and when were they or will be completed?

Return tabled.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I draw the attention of the house to an unseemly delay in the reply to starred question No. 761. It was presumed that starred questions would be answered within three days. This question has to do with protests from the mayor and other citizens of Rock Island, Quebec, against the construction of a new post office. I think this is the first time in many years that any group within a municipality has protested against government expenditures. This is the first time a municipality has been forced to accept those expenditures regardless of their feeling. I do not know whether that is the reason for the delay, but certainly you would not think it would take such a long time to answer a question as simple as this one.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could deal with this matter. As you may notice, the question is not addressed to any single minister but to the entire government. Therefore to obtain a comprehensive answer to the question it is necessary to seek advice from all departments of government as to whether they received notice of the protest.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): In any event, if the question had been drafted better the answer could have been forthcoming earlier.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): But I point out that, as with the question with respect to the Centennial Medal which had to be answered at such heavy expense today, it does take time to answer some of these questions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. member will identify himself even to the Prime Minister if he keeps on like that. Unless there is no communication between government departments, there should be no difficulty in these questions.

Mr. McIlraith: You need a better draftsman.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): May I ask the President of the Privy Council when we can expect a reply to starred question No. 185, which was put on the order paper on September 19. It is of the utmost importance economically to Melville.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to look into the matter and see why the question has not been answered. We are waiting to see the right hon. member for Prince Albert identify himself with the Leader of the Opposition.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

RELEASE OF FEDERAL POSITION PAPERS ON CONSTITUTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Prime Minister has any further information in response to the question I asked him last week respecting the release of working papers and propositions of the federal government prior to the federal-provincial conference?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. After the meetings of federal and provincial officials last week it was decided that the federal government would be in a position to release its working papers, or, more precisely, its positions on the constitution on the Friday afternoon preceding the conference; that would be the coming Friday at three o'clock in the afternoon. So far as the provinces are concerned my understanding is that some will release and some may not, but they are advised of our position.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the importance of the matter when it was raised during the last federal-provincial conference on the constitution, will the Prime Minister indicate whether there will be a full discussion of the question of regional disparities, and whether that question will be raised in relation to possible changes in the constitution?

Mr. Trudeau: The subject of regional disparities is on the agenda we have suggested to the provinces. We have had answers now from most of the provinces. I feel that within a day or two at most we will be in a position to make a firm decision. Perhaps we will make that agenda public, if such is the desire.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AIR CANADA

PRESS RELEASE RESPECTING SALE OF WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and relates to the government's announcement that it is authorizing Air Canada to sell its overhaul and maintenance base at Winnipeg. Since this is the question period I cannot throw in any comments I should like to make; probably just as well. May I ask the Prime Minister whether the press release, or whatever statement was made in connection with this matter, can be tabled or even made an appendix to Votes and Proceedings, so we can have as a matter of record the guarantees which I understand the government has given to Air Canada's Winnipeg employees.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, if it is the will of the house we have no objection to tabling such a press release. I will get it later in the day, and with the permission of the house table an official copy of that press release; or that might be done presently.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, when it is tabled could it be agreed that it be made an appendix to today's Votes and Proceedings?

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, will the house have some knowledge of the contents of the document in advance of the tabling? Agreeing to the tabling in advance of knowing the contents is quite another thing.

Mr. Speaker: I must conclude there is no agreement at the moment. Perhaps the matter might be considered later.

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he has obtained a copy of the press release regarding the Winnipeg Air Canada base so it could now be tabled? Whether or not he has obtained it as yet, I believe the hon. member for Peace River would now agree to its being made an appendix to today's Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. Baldwin: It is agreed.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CRIMINAL CODE

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Justice a question. Does the minister intend to bring in the omnibus Criminal Code bill before Christmas so it can be a Christmas present to be studied by the Canadian people?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I hope so, Mr. Speaker. The redrafting of the bill is currently before the cabinet. If I can obtain the consent of the other parties in the house, which I understand I may be able to obtain, to bypass the resolution relating to one small section in connection with the number of members on the parole board, there is a good chance, if my colleagues will agree, that I shall have the bill available to hon. members before the adjournment.

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. From what the Minister of Justice has said I take it that except for one small part of the bill which deals with the parole board it will not be necessary to bring in a resolution. The bill would come in at first reading. Is that the proposition?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is my understanding, sir, yes.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the government intend to include in the omnibus bill to amend the Criminal Code a measure abolishing corporal punishment?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Not in this particular bill, sir.

GRAIN

USE OF DRYING FACILITIES AT LAKEHEAD ELEVATORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): In the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatchewan, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the question of grain drying at the lakehead terminals been resolved on a 24-hour, seven day basis, or is drying still being carried out on a six day basis?

[Mr. Baldwin.]

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have the impression that this matter has been discussed at some length in the house, but I will gladly refer it to the ministers involved.

Mr. Korchinski: On a question of privilege, on November 27 Your Honour, in disallowing a motion that this entire subject be debated, ruled that the wheat situation was a continuing emergency. This being so, the other day I asked that the Prime Minister should have at least one minister available to answer questions concerning this problem, for every day on which plant is idle at the lakehead, 260,000 bushels are left undried. Mr. Speaker, we have now lost one and a half months, during which something like 25 million bushels could have been dried at the lakehead.

This question has still not been resolved, and I have no opportunity to ask the ministers directly concerned what is being done about it. Moreover, neither the Minister of Transport nor the Minister without Portfolio, who answers questions in connection with the transport of wheat, is available for questioning. I believe it to be my duty to raise questions on this pressing matter on any opportunity which presents itself. I am sure the Prime Minister can revise the roster and see that one responsible minister is here so that hon. members may receive a reply more satisfactory than an undertaking to refer the questions raised to the appropriate minister provided he is available. Mr. Speaker, he should be available on all occasions, because this problem has been with us for a long time. I suggest I have every right to stand up each day in the house and ask questions which I believe to be extremely pressing and important.

Mr. Trudeau: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, no one disputes the right of the hon. member to ask questions every day, or every hour on the hour if he wishes to do so. The important issue is not whether he can ask questions but whether the problem itself will be solved, and we are trying to work out a system whereby ministers will have time in which to solve problems and not merely be present in the house to answer questions which have been asked a hundred times before.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): The right of members to ask questions carries with it as a corollary the right at least to expect an answer concerning matters as serious as the wheat situation on the prairies. At a time when western Canada is in so serious a condition that in November retail sales in the province of Saskatchewan declined by $15 million, over the year 1967, I ask the Prime Minister whether, having regard to the absence of all these ministers, he is not in a position to have one of his colleagues here who is qualified to answer in respect of the very important matter raised by my hon. friend from Mackenzie.

Mr. Trudeau: I have indicated that if the opposition parties would prefer us to rearrange this attendance list in a way which is more convenient, with some ministers present on certain days and others on other days, their absences alternated, we would be happy to do so.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): The Prime Minister has indicated in his statement that the ministers are in their offices studying this matter. If he says they are working on this serious problem of damp grain and transportation, can he tell the house what they are proposing to do about it? What suggestions are they making in their offices? That is what we would like to hear.

Mr. Trudeau: If I had the answer to that, the ministers would not be in their offices studying the answers to these problems.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: If the hon. member is trying to establish that the Prime Minister does not have the answers to all the questions asked, I am prepared to concede that; but on Thursday of last week there was occasion for a full debate on this subject.

Mr. Woolliams: The ministers have been studying this problem for six long weeks. How much more time will they need before coming up with any conclusion?

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): A supplementary question for the Prime Minister. I should like to ask him where he gets the right as Prime Minister to deprive cabinet ministers of the privilege of attending sessions of the House of Commons as members of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question cannot be allowed.

PUBLIC WORKS

GASPÉ—REQUEST FOR REPAIR OF STORM DAMAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works.

Is he aware that over the week-end a severe storm hit the coast of the Gaspé peninsula and that waves over 25 feet high caused the destruction of several federal government structures and damaged wharves and fishing coves? In addition, the railway lines have been torn away and trains are not operating any longer south of Gaspé. Would the minister tell the house whether his department will take immediate steps to rebuild or repair the numerous commercial wharves fishing coves and retaining walls which have been damaged by that tidal wave.

[English]

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Regrettably, we have received reports of very serious and widespread damage to marine structures in the Gaspé and the Magdalen islands. The Atlantic region engineers are at present making as rapid a survey as possible of the damage, and in all cases where commerce is impaired action will be taken with all speed.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

OVERTIME WORKED BY PERSONNEL IN CIVIL PAY SECTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): The question is to the Minister of National Defence. Why have personnel of the department in the civil pay section been working every evening, as well as Saturdays and Sundays, since December 2; and why have they not been paid overtime for this work?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that if this question is one of immediate urgency it might be discussed at the time of adjournment this evening.

INSTRUCTIONS TO REPORT FOR WORK NOT IN UNIFORM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, if I may I should like to direct this question to the Minister of National Defence.

Have the officers and men of the Canadian forces who are working here in the capital been ordered not to appear at work in uniform on certain specified days of the week? If this is so, why have such orders been issued?

Mr. Speaker: The question should be placed on the order paper.

VOCATIONAL AND TECHNICAL TRAINING

PAYMENT OF SUBSISTENCE ALLOWANCES DURING HOLIDAY SEASON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the impending loss of pay—their only source of income—by students in vocational and adult educational centres due to the closing down of classes for two weeks during the Christmas season, can the minister advise whether anything is being done to remedy this situation?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me this question was asked some time ago and replied to at that time.

Mr. Marshall: In view of the lateness of the season could we not be given an answer if the minister is willing to make one?

Mr. Speaker: My impression is that this question has already been asked and answered a couple of times, but I would have no objection to the minister replying if he wishes to do so.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have tried in negotiations with the provinces to provide for uninterrupted training during the holiday period. Under the law we are permitted to provide training allowances on statutory holidays.

In the great majority of cases we have succeeded in providing this uninterrupted training across Canada but we are still negotiating with the province of Newfoundland in the hope that we can provide classroom instruction during this period, thereby making it possible to pay allowances to trainees.

Mr. Marshall: Since it is so late in December, would the minister contact his colleague the Minister of Defence Production, who is the minister from Newfoundland, to ask the Newfoundland government to see whether something can be done quickly; because there are only 11 days left?

[Mr. Rose.]

Mr. MacEachen: We have been in touch with officials of the government of Newfoundland, and we shall continue our efforts.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): I would direct this question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the right hon. gentleman has been considering reform of the Senate, will he now take into consideration the appointment of Mr. Ernest Manning, the former premier of Alberta?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have heard the representation, Mr. Speaker.

PUBLIC SERVICE

DISMISSAL OF COMMISSIONAIRES FOR LANGUAGE REASONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State whose name, I believe, is on the roster for today. Perhaps in his absence the parliamentary secretary can answer it, since notice was given by a number of hon. members on Friday last, I think. I should like to ask whether the Secretary of State has a report to make to the house today regarding the displacement of members of the Canadian Corps of Commissionaires in various security positions in government buildings.

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am advised by the museum corporation that a policy has been implemented requiring commissionnaires who come into contact with the public visiting museums to be to a large degree bilingual, and that the staff in the Ottawa area from which these commissionnaires can be drawn is some 40 per cent bilingual. I am advised, however, that there have been no dismissals from the corps in connection with the implementation of any such policy, although perhaps there might be some transfers of personnel necessary to bring about this change.

Meetings have been held by the National Gallery with representatives of the company which provides the protective services there in an effort to implement a similar policy for the National Gallery. I understand it has been indicated that there should be no difficulty in implementing such a policy without dismissals of any employees.

OLD AGE SECURITY

REQUEST FOR ISSUANCE OF CHEQUES BEFORE CHRISTMAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could direct a question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can he say whether a second look could be taken at the matter of enabling the recipients of old age pensions to receive their cheques a little earlier, before Christmas, in order that it will be possible for them to have a better Christmas?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member again in this case is asking a question which was asked and answered a few days ago.

REQUEST FOR PENSION INCREASE TO EQUAL COST OF LIVING INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare may I direct this question to the Prime Minister. In view of the suggestion made by Scott Young in his column this morning that old age pensioners will spend their December cheques in a spree on New Year's and thus be in difficulty in January, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the government will reconsider the question of the amount of increase allowed in old age pensions because of the cost of living; in other words, will the government bring in an amendment to the act to permit an increase to equal the actual cost of living increase, so in other words it will not be frozen at 2 per cent?

[Translation]

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare is now on a tour of health services in the Northwest Territories. He will be back in the house tomorrow and I am sure he will be happy to answer that question.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—SALE OF ARMS BY BRITAIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Since the Prime Minister will be going to England soon, could he assure the house that he will protest to the British Prime Minister the sale of arms by England to Nigeria?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when I meet the British Prime Minister, I intend to speak to him about a number of matters, and I believe the one mentioned by the hon. member will be on the agenda.

[English]

AIR CANADA

POSSIBLE EFFECT ON SAFETY OF WORK DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to direct this question to the Minister of Transport, but because of the urgent nature of the matter I will direct it to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister tell the house if he has looked into the question of whether the slowdown, work to rule, or whatever it is called of Air Canada personnel will endanger the lives of any passengers or air crew?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): So far as I know it will not, but I will gladly inquire.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF SALT FISH MARKETING BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, normally I would have directed this question to the Minister of Fisheries, but in his absence I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary. Can he tell the house whether a salt fish marketing board for Newfoundland and other Atlantic region fishermen is being established and, if not, whether a study is being made of the feasibility of setting up such a marketing board.

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): I shall take the question as notice and advise the minister the next day he is in the house.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. When does the minister expect to bring before the house legislation with regard to regional development?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): I hope during the month of January.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SPECIAL CHURCH SERVICE OF JUSTICE AND MERCY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. In view of the unusual success of yesterday's service of justice and mercy, I wonder whether the minister has received requests from other institutions across the country for similar special services.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): A great many similar services were held yesterday in different parts of the country. I am very appreciative of the expression of approval for that program on the part of the hon. member.

[Later:]

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is for my fellow Presbyterian, the Solicitor General, and it follows on from the question of the hon. member for Egmont. I ask simply, has the lost been found?

Mr. McIlraith: Not yet, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I want to vary an earlier answer I gave. We are working rather rapidly in the department and the lost has now been found.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I was just wondering whether my lost previous question has been found.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

ASSISTANCE TO PROVINCES TO MEET EDUCATION COSTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister take advantage of the opportunities provided by the impending conferences with the provinces to begin discussion of an acceptable and constitutional arrangement to allow extensive federal financial assistance in meeting the crisis in education in Canada.

[Mr. Burton.]

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the matter of the division of jurisdiction as between the federal and provincial governments is also on the agenda. It is possible some of the provinces might suggest transferring educational jurisdiction to the federal government. I have no information on that.

Mr. Lundrigan: I hope I did not suggest to the Prime Minister that there should be a transfer of jurisdiction over education to the federal government. I asked whether some acceptable constitutional arrangement could be provided. I have a supplementary question. Have any discussions of this kind already been held with the provinces regarding financial assistance in the field of education, and could the Prime Minister say what was the nature of those discussions?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, in the past couple of years the federal government has vacated tax room for the provinces so they could increase by hundreds of millions of dollars their expenditures on education.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Has the right hon. Prime Minister received a specific request from the province of Newfoundland in the area of education.

Mr. Trudeau: Not that I am aware of.

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, can the Prime Minister tell us if, at the next federal-provincial conference, he will take into account the recommendations made by the Aird commission in 1927?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we take into account wise counsel from the past, but I must say that we are not among those who hold blindly to views from the past.

[English]

IMMIGRATION

TORONTO—DEPORTATION ORDER AGAINST POLISH SEAMAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration what action he has taken or will take in response to the telegram I referred to last Friday, protesting the treatment of a Polish refugee seaman in Toronto and others detained in Halifax who are destined for deportation after they have sought asylum in Canada.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend should be aware that there is no discretion for the minister in these matters. The cases have been heard by the immigration appeal board and as a result of the hearings deportation orders have been issued, which the department is bound to carry out as soon as practicable.

Mr. Haidasz: As a supplementary question, could the minister inform the house when he will act on the government's 1966 white paper on immigration and, specifically, proposals 54 and 55 dealing with refugees and seamen?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, Canada's treatment of refugees conforms both in spirit and to the letter with the international convention and protocol. We have under active consideration at present the formal acceptance of this convention and protocol, which we are scrupulously observing.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

INQUIRY AS TO PAYMENT OF SALARY ARREARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, in view of your ruling on questions of a similar nature I do not hold out great hope for this one; nevertheless I suggest it is most urgent. In the absence of the President of the Treasury Board and the Postmaster General I should like to direct it to the Prime Minister. What plans, if any, has the government to pay the arrears in postal workers' wages dating back to October 1, 1966, and the additional increases granted in October, 1968, before the new year?

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

CONSIDERATION BY COMMITTEE OF POST OFFICE REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the government house leader. In view of conversations between the government house leader and the house leader of the official opposition, would the hon. gentleman agree to refer to the standing committee on transport and communications the report of the Post Office Department so that discussions on the subject of effective work in that department, which will not be otherwise possible, may continue in the committee as per the arrangement?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Yes, I will consider that, Mr. Speaker. I also wonder whether I may pose a question to the hon. member and ask whether the opposition is agreeable that the Canadian National Railways and Air Canada reports as well as the expanded terms with respect to the question of Atlantic transportation be included in the terms of reference for study by the transport committee? Is that now agreeable to the hon. member?

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, it is a somewhat unusual procedure to direct questions to members of the opposition, but I would be very happy to consider discussing this matter with the house leader.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, it is not the hon. member's day to be in the house to answer questions.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, what right does the Leader of the Opposition have to prevent eight of his frontbenchers from attending the house?

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I would expect the Prime Minister to listen more carefully to the Leader of the Opposition. I said it was not the member's day to be in the house to answer questions.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

The Chairman: House again in committee of supply on the estimates of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, vote 35, to be found at page 425 of the blue book.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

35. Payment to the Cape Breton Development Corporation to be applied by the corporation in payment of the losses incurred in the operation and maintenance in the calendar year 1968 of the coal mining and related works and undertakings acquired by the corporation under section 9 of the Cape Breton Development Corporation Act and, notwithstanding section 31(2) of the said act, for grants to municipalities on Cape Breton Island not exceeding an amount equal to the taxes that might have been levied for their 1968 fiscal year by the municipalities in respect of the personal property of the corporation if the corporation were not an agent of Her Majesty, $20,000,000.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, as most members know, the standing committee on regional development has already given a good deal of examination to the operations of the Cape Breton Development Corporation and the 1968-69 estimates of my department. I therefore do not propose to give a long statement at this time. It will be more appropriate if I respond later to any new points that are raised. I do want, however, to take advantage of this opportunity to make a brief statement covering certain important points in connection with Devco.

A great number of subjects relating to the operations of the corporation were raised before the standing committee, and, I hope, satisfactorily answered. There is, however, one point of such importance that I feel it should be restated to the house as a whole.

The main objective of the corporation, as is well known, is to rationalize the coal mining operations but to do so only in a way compatible with the social obligations that we have to the miners. There has been, with good reason, a great deal of concern among the people of Cape Breton and the members of the standing committee about the possible hardship and dislocation which may be caused in the lives of employees. I can assure hon. members that the corporation recognizes its very fundamental social obligations. I can further assure members that the government will be watching closely to ensure that these obligations are fulfilled.

The first step in the corporation's program will be to introduce and implement the proposed pre-retirement leave plan. Until the corporation knows how many employees are going to take advantage of that plan, it is difficult to be specific about the details or the timetable for future operations. Accordingly, the plan is sufficiently flexible to ensure that coal mining operations will be adjusted to the labour force situation, so that no miner has to be discharged before he is entitled to pre-retirement leave unless there is a job for him to go to.

The corporation will be opening the new Lingan mine. That will in itself provide new work while the mine is being developed as well as after it is in production. In addition, the corporation is busily seeking to attract other industrial developments on the island of Cape Breton. The pace at which operations in the existing mines are reduced will depend on the pace at which, for these reasons, alternative jobs become available for the miners.

This is the essence of the plan. I invite members to consider whether any painful industrial situation of this kind, where an industry has to suffer a major contraction, has ever before been dealt with by methods as farsighted and humane.

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, following the brief statement by the minister in which he has indicated there have been questions and answers in the committee that he hopes satisfied members of the committee, let me review the situation. Because of annual costs to the federal government for the payment of coal subsidies or subventions the federal government saw fit to set up this crown corporation in conjunction with the provincial government in order that the coal mining situation would be somewhat stabilized, thereby giving the miners and these communities some security, which they have been labouring without for a number of years. Job insecurity in that area has been bothering the people for a great many years.

• (3:40 p.m.)

In brief appearance before the committee the chairman of the Cape Breton Development Corporation indicated that the Donald report was used as a guide. Several days later when he was questioned about this he said no, not necessarily, because they were undertaking certain plans and developments that were not recommended by Dr. Donald. This is not the case. The particular item I referred to was the opening of the mine at Lingan, which the chairman of the board said Dr. Donald did not recommend. At page 129 of Dr. Donald's report it can be seen that he recommended the opening of the Lingan mine and putting it in operation for a five-year period.

I personally did not believe that Dr. Donald's report should have been the basis of this legislation, and I do not think that when the legislation was put together his report was used as a guide. If any one wishes to study the difference between the Donald report and the Rand coal report of 1960 they can see there is a great difference of opinion between these two gentlemen. Mr. Justice Rand went into the coal mining areas and the mines and examined the situation there, and I think the house would agree that he would, therefore, be a far greater authority on the subject than Dr. Donald who brought in a report in respect of coal without even visiting the coal mines. A difference of opinion has been expressed by the chairman of the board. Dr. Donald never visited the coal mines, and he made certain recommendations that Devco did not think he made on the first place. However, they are there.

The intent of the legislation at the time it was drawn up was not only to give protection to the miners but to the mining communities.

In this respect I think the service provided to the mining towns also needs the protection of this development corporation. I point out to the minister that the intent of the act is spelled out in the preamble. I will read part of the preamble to the minister. It provides:

> And whereas the mines in the Sydney coalfield are faced with imminent closure unless a substantial capital investment is made for their rehabilitation and modernization—

Money has been provided toward that end, but the indications are that no effort is being made by the Cape Breton Development Corporation to rehabilitate these mines. It is said, of course, that it is the intention to broaden the base of the Cape Breton economy. That is all well and good. I ask the minister to explain how he feels the intent of the legislation, drawn up to protect the miners and the mining communities, will be served by the Cape Breton Development Corporation using its energies toward the development of the tourist industry. This, of course, broadens the base of the Cape Breton economy. The tourist industry has been promoted for a number of years. But I do not understand how any move in this direction by the Cape Breton Development Corporation will provide alternative jobs for displaced miners.

I hope the minister will also explain to the house later the approach of the Cape Breton Development Corporation to the early retirement plan. I agree that the early retirement plan could be acceptable to quite a few miners employed under Devco. Here again Dr. Donald did not have an original thought, because the early retirement plan was first introduced in the Nova Scotia mining communities by the Leader of the Opposition when he was premier of that province. It was introduced after considering the limited resources of the province and it was put forward strictly on a social basis. When the provincial government introduced the early retirement plan it saved $16 million, $18 million or $20 million a year spent on coal subventions. Therefore the federal government has every reason to be very generous in such an early retirement plan. I ask the minister to speak to the Devco authorities and see to it that if they are going to put an early retirement plan into effect it at least surpasses the standards set out by the Economic Council of Canada. They should at least see that the early retirement plan provides benefits above the poverty level, as was quite clearly pointed out by the Economic Council of Canada. In other words, I am saying to the minister that the early retirement plan gives the miners of Cape Breton less than the poverty level. If the federal government is introducing and is going to support this approach, while at the same time saving millions of dollars in subventions, the least it can do is make the plan worth while. The early retirement plan should provide more than the poverty level, which is now the case.

I also ask the minister to explain, since he has a considerable labour background, how the development corporation can compulsorily retire men at 60 years of age when the general agreement under which these men are working calls for retirement at the age of 65. How can they compulsorily retire a miner at 60 years of age when he is working under a general agreement which calls for his retirement at 65? Does this mean the minister supports the breaking down of bargaining units throughout the country?

I point out to the minister a question I asked in the committee. This matter is clearly spelled out in the legislation. I asked whether the early retirement plan was negotiated with the unions. I am sorry I do not have the committee reports here to verify this, but I was told in the committee there was nothing in the legislation which required Devco to negotiate such plans. Nevertheless the legislation distinctly says that any working arrangements should be carried out with all the unions that were certified under the Nova Scotia labour law prior to the coming into effect of this legislation.

I was told by the vice-president in charge of coal that when I referred to negotiating this matter with the unions I was drawing a pretty thin line, because nothing in the legislation required them to negotiate such a plan. If that is the case, nothing in the legislation gives Devco the authority to go ahead with such a plan. I ask the minister to examine all aspects of the early retirement plan and to take into consideration the fact that it provides benefits below the poverty line. They should introduce a plan which would at least make it worth while for those willing to take early or voluntary retirement, whichever it may be. I suggest that to make it worth while would mean a considerable increase in the amounts paid.

I also ask the minister when considering this particular phase of the plan to give some thought to the restrictions placed upon a miner accepting early retirement. There has been disagreement between the mines and the chairman of the board in this respect. In the committee I said restrictions were placed on a miner taking early retirement. The chairman at that time said there were no restrictions. This is not the case. Restrictions are placed on any miner who goes on early retirement in that 50 per cent of anything that he earns over and above $50 is applied against any funds he would receive on retirement. In other words, if he earns $100 a month he can only keep $75 and $25 is applied against the payment he will receive on retirement. I think this restriction should be removed. Also I see no reason why miners who might retire early should subsidize this plan through the unemployment insurance program. If they are going to accept early retirement they should be entitled to their pensions and to whatever benefits they may have from unemployment insurance rather than have to subsidize pensions through payments to unemployment insurance.

With regard to job opportunities, I believe in all sincerity that the intention of the legislation was to provide alternative work in and around the mining communities affected. I do not see anything in any of the Devco reports concerning any developments by that corporation although there are many rumours concerning this throughout Cape Breton. I see nothing about their intended investment in an oil refinery in the Port Hawkesbury area, although action was supposed to have been taken in this respect. I have no objections to broadening the base of the economy of Cape Breton, but I want to emphasize again the fact that this legislation was intended to assist the mining communities. Here again I might say that the development of the oil refinery in the Port Hawkesbury area, despite the credit which some people may be getting for it, was done on the initiative of the present Leader of the Opposition when he was premier of Nova Scotia in 1958, at which time he made land deals with the British American Oil Company. I might also say that I have found it surprising that such action has been taken in this area by the Cape Breton Development Corporation when one considers the fact that B.A. has now been taken over by U.S. interests.

I am also surprised to hear, although I have nothing to substantiate this, that Devco has shown some interest in a possible investment in a Holiday Inn. Here again they are emphasizing the tourist trade, but I do not feel that the tourist industry provides Cape Breton or the mining communities in that area with the incentives for which they were looking and the security which they expected to receive from this legislation. No one expected Devco to bring in industry which would replace the coal mines and only employ 500 or 1,000 men, but it was certainly expected that Devco would make an all-out effort to assist the suffering mining communities. Even though Devco may invest millions of dollars in the Cape Breton area, this possible venture cannot be expected to do anything to serve us in particular or to protect the mining communities involved.

Since the Minister of Manpower and Immigration is here may I remind him that during the last election compaign he indicated that a ski resort would be built in Cape Breton. I am all in favour of it but I do not think Devco should dip into funds provided by parliament to develop the economy of the mining communities of Cape Breton in order to build a ski resort which again will only serve the tourist industry. I think I can speak with some authority on this program. It is not a development which will do much for Cape Breton, and I fail to see how a ski resort can help to develop the Cape Breton tourist industry because it is a recognized fact that skiing cannot take place during what is regarded as the tourist season in our area.

I see no indication that the government intends to fully support the over-all plan put forward by Devco. I believe that the opening of the mine at Lingan, which was forcefully promoted by everyone involved in the mining industry over a period of years, has been brought to the minister's attention. The thought behind the promotion was that the opening of a mine at Lingan would provide coal operators with an opportunity to drastically reduce production costs. It was never intended that Lingan be opened for the purpose of closing down other mines operating in the area. At the time that Devco came forward with the over-all plan to open the Lingan mine, without any thorough study of the plan, I criticized that approach because they were going to close down other mines. Yet, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, who I hope will have something to say in this debate, indicated at that time that it was a wonderful thing and was a fulfilment of a promise he had made several years ago prior to another election. Since then it has been clearly indicated to him by the mining interests—and I might say here I am speaking of miners and unions—that they are not happy about Devco opening the Lingan mine for the prime purpose of closing other operations. Again I wish to remind the minister that Bill C-135 was passed in this house for the purpose of rehabilitating and modernizing existing operations.

It should also be noted that the phasing-out period recommended in the Donald report was to take place over 15 years. Nowhere is it indicated in this legislation that its purpose is to phase out coal mines in Cape Breton. However, it is certainly indicated in the legislation that an effort should be made to revitalize, rehabilitate and modernize the mining communities. Possibly those mines that do not prove economical after this attempt is made should be phased out after 15 years. It is stated in the Devco report that the prime purpose of Bill C-135 and of the Donald report is to close down Cape Breton mines as quickly as possible. This was never the intention of the legislation. If the minister would examine the legislation closely he would find nothing in it indicating that the Cape Breton Development Corporation should close down coal mines. I should think that any effort on their part to close down coal mines should be made after they have attempted to produce some form of alternative employment. May I remind the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, who has considerable experience with labour unions, that this corporation cannot completely ignore the general agreement under which the miners have been working over a long period of years and tell them they may be pensioned off at the age of 60 or may have to take early retirement at that age.

I fail to understand the approach that Devco is using. They say these men are going to remain on the payroll, subject to recall. The men will receive a pension from Devco but that pension will be below the poverty line. Despite the fact the pension will be below the poverty line, if the men earn $100 in one month outside the coal operation, their earnings will be returned and applied against their pension. I feel it is a rather coldblooded approach to pension them off arbitrarily at a rate below the poverty line and at the same time place a restriction on the earnings they may be able to receive outside the coal operation. As has been indicated, the men will be left on the company payroll and will be subject to recall. I did not have the opportunity to question the Devco authorities that I thought would be available. I wonder what the position of a man would be under this early retirement scheme who found it necessary to move with his family to some other part of the province or some other part of the country and was then recalled by the company? Who is going to handle this procedure? If he is not available for work, is this man removed from pension? Presumably the corporation has already prepared itself for a situation that might develop whereby an employee who accepts early retirement can be cut off from pension rights because of his activities outside the mining industry.

The Cape Breton Development Corporation, both the coal and development sections, seems to be concentrating its efforts on the mining activities that are going to be affected by any phasing out. Early retirement should mean that the miners will be provided with an adequate pension. I repeat that the pension falls below the poverty line. I feel that the miners should be given an opportunity to earn whatever moneys they are able to earn when they are on retirement. In addition, I do not believe that the Devco plan should be in any way, shape or form subsidized by unemployment insurance benefits that any miners may have coming to them. This is an area in which the miners have been contributing. I had hoped for an opportunity to examine the Devco officials more closely and get some definite answers with regard to some of these issues connected with the early retirement proposition.

I should like the minister to give consideration to the fact that the early retirement plan should be strictly voluntary. It is something that the government should not support because, in effect, this crown corporation is bringing about compulsory retirement at age 60. I say to the minister again that I am sure he does not want to be a party to any plan of the crown corporation which would violate the general agreement under which these miners have been working for years. I hope that before the afternoon is over the minister will enlighten the house as to what his intentions are with regard to this approach.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Chairman, the act establishing the Cape Breton Development Corporation required that the corporation present a report by October of this year. We received such a report and have had a look at it in committee. At this point I should like to ask some questions that I raised at that time and perhaps the minister could give answers which I hope will prove to be more adequate than the ones received in the committee. It seems to me that the Devco people who prepared this report had ample time to prepare a more adequate plan. I am not suggesting, however, that the six months period available was sufficient for the development of a completely detailed plan. However, this period was certainly sufficient for them to come up with a much more substantial one than they have presented. At the time I suggested that some of the pages of the report reminded me of a university professor who had been on holiday throughout the summer and then on the first day of classes presents to his undergraduates a plan written the previous week end full of some persuasive generalities about what is going to take place but one which is totally devoid of any serious content. The plan is devoid of specific proposals which will arouse interest in those who are going to be affected by it.

Pages 4 and 6 of the report contain a number of generalities and clichés. For instance corporation is going to "attract secondary manufacturing industries, and build up the service industries" and prepare special programs "to develop the full potential of the tourist industry." What details are provided? We get no details. In fact, when we were in committee I asked for details and the answer I got, first, related to the time factor. I suggest this answer is inadequate because it really does not take that much time to give specific information. Surely six months should be enough time to come up with something. The other answer was that everyone has to compete in Canada for industry and therefore they could not make a particular proposal they might have in mind available to the members of the committee. I suggest that this is a very inadequate answer.

If we are to look seriously at a report of this nature and make a thoughtful judgment upon it, we should have had proposals. It may well be that these proposals, for competitive reasons, should not be made available in complete detail to the public; if so, we could have had an in camera session of the committee. Then we could have given some thoughtful consideration to those proposals. I think we could and should have done that.

I do not want to pass final judgment on Devco, but it seems to me it could develop into another Atlantic Development Board. That board has been in existence since 1962 and we still hear reports that the board is working upon a plan for the maritimes. The plan presented by Devco is really a charade, not a plan at all. I hope that something more substantial will emerge very soon.

More constructively, Mr. Chairman, I should like to suggest—and this suggestion was made in the committee—that what we need for the area is not a plan that is narrowly defined in terms of immediate economic objectives, such as the Devco plan, but a plan that is much more comprehensive. We need a FRED project, something that will deal not just with economic growth but also with all the related social services and educational and housing needs that are required in the area.

Experience in the United States and in underdeveloped countries indicates that in order to do a serious job in an area such as this something more than merely defining economic objectives is required. For example, assuming, as seems to be the case, that miners will be retired at age 60, what provision is being made for them when they pass that age? These men have a number of years left to live and I should like to know what kind of existence is being planned for them in terms of their recreational and human needs. Are these people who have spent their whole lives working in local communities going to do what the chairman of the board suggested in all seriousness they should do—spend their time fishing? Even though this part of the country is very attractive and has appropriate resources for this kind of activity, I do not think any of us take this suggestion seriously.

If a man who has spent his life working in an industrial capacity is thrown back completely on his own resources at the age of 60, he is going to have a very difficult time to find some meaningful existence for the remainder of his years. It seems to me that something should be done in a much more serious vein in terms of providing some recreational potential for these men, their wives and their families.

Related to this, of course, is the whole question of the participation of those who are directly affected in the planning process itself, whether through their trade unions or private community organizations. Surely these people should be involved in the development of plans and projects which are going to be designed for their benefit. It seems to me that this factor has been totally neglected.

A particular example of the inadequacy of the existing legislation is the situation of the railway workers. They are a small group in terms of total number affected by Devco, but it is quite clear that they are being dealt with inequitably. The Donald report, as has been pointed out, recommended that if early retirement were introduced it should be voluntarily entered upon. The Devco report states quite categorically that retirement at age 60 will be mandatory. The railway workers in particular are going to suffer a real loss of income if they are forced to retire at the age of 60 rather than 65. According to the figures I have, the legislation provides them with about $3,000 per year. This means they will lose about $15,000 for the five-year period, or about $3,000 a year, because their average wage is approximately $6,000 per year. I ask the minister whether it is equitable to force a man to retire under these circumstances. If retirement is going to be made mandatory, I suggest that instead of the $3,000 that these men would receive annually under the legislation they should receive what their average income would amount to over the five-year period in which they are no longer permitted to work. This relates, of course, to the point that I was making, namely, that it seems to me that the groups most specifically and directly involved in this region have not played the full role they should have had in developing a plan themselves.

I missed the earlier remarks of the hon. member who preceded me and he might well have raised this question, but in case he did not I should like to ascertain from the minister when it is contemplated that the pre-retirement plan will come into effect. Further, would he assure this committee that those who are directly affected, and more particularly the railway workers, will have the chance to make representations and criticisms respecting the retirement plan either to the minister or to Devco?

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I have a particular question that I should like the minister to comment on if he has the information available. We all know that before the steel company at Sydney became a crown corporation it was losing money. However, we are now informed that over the past year it has likely made a profit of some $2.5 million. My question, which is a factual one, is, why is this the case? Does the minister have any statistical evidence that he could present to the House to indicate why the corporation, when it was privately owned and greatly subsidized by the people of Canada for a number of years, lost money and then all of a sudden when it becomes a public corporation it makes a profit? I should like to know whether this is really a case of the people of Canada subsidizing the profit made by a group of private individuals or whether there is a more acceptable reason to explain the profits that apparently are now going to be made by the company, profits which a few years ago would not have been made. With that point, Mr. Chairman, I shall conclude my remarks.

[Translation]

Mr. Dumont: Mr. Chairman, if we analyse the report submitted by the Cape Breton Development Corporation, we realize that when the state takes a hand—and we now have the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Marchand) to help it in other similar undertakings—in the development of Canada, it is nothing but administration, bureaucracy, when for 35 years on this side of the house we have been asking for the perfect solution.

In fact, I have never been able to understand that it is possible to set the value of a dollar earned by an engineer or a carpenter in any way except by the number of hours needed to prepare plans or to extract ore from our mines rich in resources. I find it hard to understand that we have to say: The dollar is worth less than the products taken out of the mines.

If, in the past, those Cape Breton mines were so rich and if it is expected that within a few years coal will no longer be needed, because of the large supply of atomic energy, we will then have to use something other than coal for heating. If the previous governments had set the value of the dollar according to the value of the product, the value of the production of those mines, it would not be necessary today to talk about such regional development corporations. That situation shows that in Canada, as in all the other countries of the world at the present time, there is something wrong with the economy.

France is now facing a serious economic problem. It must keep a constant eye on the value of the franc, which is subject to fluctuation every day.

The same thing happens here, as in every country in the world. It would be unthinkable that an engineer or a carpenter should decide one morning that a 12-inch rule measures 11 inches only and, a week later, that it measures 13 inches. If the value of the dollar were regulated according to the value of the product, which would be possible in an economy which, in 1968, gives promise of unusual technical developments, we could, thanks to past experience and the unparalleled resources of Canada, enjoy prosperity instead of resorting to national development corporations. In fact, these involve in the long run, as we now see in Canada, deficits which may exceed $1 billion.

If Canada benefited from the war, if it is a rich country, as everyone likes to say everywhere, why could this wealth, which is measured according to the value of the dollar, not be measured by the working hours in mines or elsewhere? Then, we could have a truly progressive economy, instead of having to analyse the deficits of corporations and listen to the criticisms of the opposition. In fact, if the state is forced to intervene all the time to settle problems, it is because our monetary system does not meet the requirements of a 1968 economy.

I am not well acquainted with the Cape Breton area, but I know from the criticism I have heard that the problems and difficulties of those miners are similar to those of the asbetos miners. For those people, whether they are French, English, American or Canadians in Cape Breton, Quebec City or Vancouver, the real problem is always economic. The dollar never represents the true value of products which are the natural wealth, that is the available consumer goods. This is why I think it is unfortunate that the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development who used to know those problems quite well cannot find another solution but only suggests the intervention of the state to settle the problems in all those areas.

In view of the fact that national production this year will amount to $68 billion, we suggested, in this corner of the house, several remedies. One of them would be to base credit on production. This is just a matter of credit and debit, and the difference between the two of them is an administrative surplus. We should rather be able to grant subsidies to private enterprise when it is no longer economic. It would be a better solution. In fact, crown corporations simply produce administration and confusion, which prevents private enterprise from progressing and taking advantage, in the case of economic hardship, of subsidies which might fill the gap and even allow a surplus.

In a well-balanced economy—production and consumption equating surplus—private enterprise would bring to the country overproduction which would increase constantly, thus making possible the development of our country which is tremendously rich, because we are entitled to expect that development in order to continue our advances and to be considered as a large nation. Development corporations should not continue to be taxed in Canada as had to be done in the case of Cape Breton.

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I want to make a few remarks about the estimates of the Cape Breton Development Corporation. In so doing I wish to congratulate the minister responsible for regional development for taking on the responsibilities of this corporation. I wish him all success in this important endeavour.

The Cape Breton Development Corporation Act, passed just over one year ago, was the result of the policy declaration by the government of Canada in the fall of 1965, of various recommendations contained in the Donald report, and of consultations undertaken between the government of Canada and the government of Nova Scotia. The policy declaration made by the government of Canada in the fall of 1965 committed the government to a policy expenditure on the modernization and rehabilitation of existing mines and investment in a new opening at Lingan. Of course, the study conducted by Dr. Donald at that time was ongoing. It has often been suggested in the house and elsewhere that a commitment or promise was made in that statement that $25 million would be made available to the Cape Breton coal industry. The statement itself, of course, made reference to no particular sum, as may be verified by looking at it. The $25 million arose from one of the development proposals that had been undertaken or proposed by Dosco, which had a cost figure of $25 million available. It was more or less an easy way of estimating the commitment that was contained in that early proposal.

The hon. member who spoke earlier mentioned the Donald report. Those of us who have felt that the opening of a new mine at Lingan was a viable proposal, and good sense in the long run, were certainly disappointed by one of the conclusions of the Donald report. In No. 4 of the summary of Dr. Donald's recommendations Dr. Donald recommended that the opening of a new mine at Lingan should not be undertaken. That recommendation at that time certainly appealed to a number of people. The argument was put: What is the point of opening the new mine when the proposal of the report and of the legislation is to phase out gradually coal production on the island of Cape Breton? Does it make sense to open a new mine, in that context? As I say, that recommendation by Dr. Donald certainly dashed hopes at that time for a new mine opening. Without going into the question of preparing legislation, it was a matter of prohibiting the new corporation from undertaking any new opening, as had been recommended by Dr. Donald, or of giving the corporation a chance of making a decision for itself as to the viability of the new opening.

The government did recommend in the legislation that the Cape Breton Development Corporation should have the authority to decide for or against any new opening. I am pleased that the corporation in its over-all plan is proposing the opening of a new mine at Lingan. I thought it made sense in 1965. I thought it made sense even after Dr. Donald had recommended otherwise. I think it makes economic and social sense today and I am glad that on this particular point the corporation departed from Dr. Donald's recommendation. In saying this I acknowledge the contribution which Dr. Donald made and the debt we owe him for his proposal that a corporation be established to undertake this job. It is unique in Canada. There is nothing else like it and I think it is breaking new ground. It is entrusted with a mining operation but it is also given broad powers in connection with new development. There is no region in Canada faced with a similar situation which has an instrument such as is available on the island of Cape Breton, supported jointly by the government of Canada and the government of Nova Scotia.

We know that on the federal side we committed $25 million. In the coal sector, the corporation has decided how to spend these funds; it will spend part of the amount on a new opening and part on the purchase of a coke oven from the steel operation, because this was regarded as an important element in Cape Breton production.

On the development side the federal government put a sum of money at the disposal of the corporation, while the provincial government under the leadership at that time of the present Leader of the Opposition committed the amount of $10 million, I believe. It is understood that any savings which may be forthcoming from the reduction in the large subvention which was being paid for the moving of coal will be directed toward the general strengthening of the island of Cape Breton in future years.

A serious effort was made to get a good board of directors and a good staff. While it is certainly too early yet to make a final judgment on the success of the corporation, I think it has made a good start and that at this stage it deserves the widest possible public support for its undertaking. The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond talked about the role of the corporation in the mining areas. Undoubtedly the act intended that the purpose of the corporation should be to provide alternative employment opportunities and to strengthen the economic base of the island. I hope the hon. member does not take an exclusivist view about this. The act is intended to apply to Cape Breton as a whole and not to any particular community. I would certainly take a very dim view indeed of the corporation if it hesitated to support viable projects in all parts of the island.

It has made a big investment at the strait of Canso in assisting the B.A. Corporation to establish an oil refinery there. No one questions that all governments are called upon to play a role these days in industrial development, and when I say "all governments" I mean to include provincial and municipal governments. But I do know that without the assistance which was forthcoming from the Cape Breton Development Corporation, the Atlantic Development Board and the Government of Canada, the decision of B.A. Oil to establish at the strait of Canso would have been postponed for an indefinite period. I know this to be a fact. It is a good thing that the Cape Breton Development Corporation seized this opportunity to assist in the immediate establishment of the refinery and help create a growth centre on the strait which will be as important toward a solution of the economic difficulties on the island as any other possible endeavour.

In defending this action I am aware that the corporation has a real obligation to the coal miners in terms of the operation of mines and also in terms of its obligation to provide alternative employment opportunities on a planned basis to miners who may be affected by closures. I believe the over-all approach outlined in the corporation's report has stressed an acceptance of this obligation. Certainly I shall be as eager as any other hon. member to ask the corporation to recognize this responsibility if at any time there appears to be a feeling that it is being ignored. I hope there will be no such feeling.

The hon. member talked about a comment I made during the election campaign concerning a ski development in northern Cape Breton. I suppose it would have been better had I made the reference at another time because announcements made during campaigns are usually suspect. But in this case, at least, the validity of the announcement was confirmed by action subsequently taken by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in calling for tenders from private promoters to establish a ski development on South Mountain, northern Cape Breton.

An hon. Member: How many were received?

Mr. MacEachen: Up to the present, none, but it is not likely that private developers will be ready to submit tenders until they have had a chance to observe snow conditions in the area during the current winter. I hope private developers will come forward because such a development would have an important effect upon the tourist industry in northern Cape Breton. This ski development has nothing to do with the Cape Breton Development Corporation; it has been sponsored by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the department responsible for the administration of national parks. This development is supposed to take place in Cape Breton Highlands national park.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Would the hon. gentleman allow me to interject for a moment? I could be wrong, but I believe my hon. friend was referring to a proposed ski resort in the Coxheath area which was mentioned by the president, Mr. Orde, in the committee.

Mr. MacEachen: He referred to my having made an announcement about a ski resort, and the only ski resort I have talked about in public was this proposal for northern Cape Breton.

Mr. Coates: Would the minister tell us whether this is the same ski resort as the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria, as the constituency then was, announced when we were in office but which was later cancelled?

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. MacEachen: I have never kept track of my hon. friend's promises. In any event I hope that this particular tender will receive a good response and that we will have this development apart from any past history.

I should like to conclude by a reference to the over-all plan. The over-all plan is not in any way specific about dates and times of closure of any mine. It is a general plan. I believe that in the time at the disposal of the corporation it was too much to expect it would have been possible for it to do much more than it put forward in that particular plan. I was reassured by the testimony of the chairman of the board before the committee and in private about the attitude of the corporation in respect of the schedule of closures of mines. As I understand it the act requires that the government of Canada approve the report and that it be sent to the province of Nova Scotia for examination by the lieutenant governor in council. I believe that has been done. To my knowledge no objection has been taken by the provincial government to the general concept of the plan. At this stage I do not think it would be helpful if a conflict developed because the solution to this particular problem in Cape Breton is bound to require the support of both the federal and provincial governments since both are committed to the long term purposes of the Cape Breton Development Corporation. For myself I am delighted that the corporation has been established, that it is moving, that it has made certain significant proposals and is getting down to the very tough work of developing a method of adjustment for this very important Canadian problem.

Members of the house who are not from the province of Nova Scotia ought at least to be made aware that the coal industry in the island of Cape Breton has been the mainstay of the economy of Nova Scotia and that it has been accepted that this industry should be phased out over time. It seems to me that this indeed represents an attitude of acceptance that is not always easy to develop. It is an acceptance, however, that is based on the expectation that the phasing out will go along with a phasing in of alternative employment opportunities. That is the mandate the Cape Breton Development Corporation has had and it is the mandate the parliament of Canada will expect it to fulfil.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister would permit one question, although his comments could provoke others. Would he agree that the legislation refers specifically to the phasing out period as a 15-year period? Would he also agree that the projected plans of the Cape Breton Development Corporation do not set out anything specifically concerning what the intentions of that board are? The minister will also recall that during the time this legislation was before the house it was continually emphasized that not only the jobs of the miners but also the mining communities would be protected. Would he not agree that this was the case and that we were given this assurance at the time of the passage of this legislation.

Mr. MacEachen: The minister of regional development will be answering with regard to the policy behind the legislation. The broad purpose of the bill itself was set out in the preamble. Certainly no one need be in any doubt concerning the position that has been accepted by the parliament of Canada.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to be controversial, although I must express a little surprise at the Minister of Manpower and Immigration going back to the undertaking of the fall of 1965. I would not have raised this myself, but I must say quite frankly I do not believe it was actually done in conformance with the undertaking given in the fall of 1965. I say this simply because I do not wish to sit here quietly while the Minister of Manpower and Immigration gives the impression that what has actually been done constitutes in effect the opening of the Lingan mine and modernization of existing mines.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, there obviously is a very great difference of opinion between myself and the Leader of the Opposition. I was attempting to argue that without the policy declaration of 1968 the Cape Breton Development Corporation would hardly have taken the form it did.

Mr. Stanfield: As I say, I do not wish to prolong any controversy but just wish to make it clear that the opening of a new mine and the phasing out of the other mines with the possible exception of mine 26, which as I understand it is the plan, was not contained in the assurance of 1965 which definitely gave people the impression that the existing mines would continue to operate but under improved conditions. I do not wish to argue the point. I simply want to make the point that I cannot agree with the Minister of Manpower and Immigration when he says that the policy statement of 1965 has in fact been carried out by the government of Canada. I cannot accept that statement. I must say that the fact that the minister felt it necessary to go back to 1965 and go over the ground indicated to me that he perhaps has a little something on his conscience in this regard. However, I do not wish to thresh old straw today unless the minister chooses to continue to do so.

There is a vast problem involved here. I hope the Cape Breton Development Corporation will concentrate heavily on an attempt to develop alternative jobs as well as give its attention to humane ways of phasing out existing employment in this whole industry to the extent it is considered necessary. I should like in particular to associate myself with the remarks of the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond with regard to retirement pensions and the means test. I do not wish to be unfair about this, but as I understand it the pension is reduced to some extent if a person on a pension earns money. I suggest this is unfortunate. I would hope this policy in fact would be reviewed and that a man who is retired and has the good fortune or perhaps the enterprise to supplement his income would be permitted to earn this additional income without his pension being decreased, because to the extent that his pension is decreased as a result of additional earnings he becomes a prisoner of the pension he is receiving. As I have suggested in other circumstances, there is far too much imprisonment within the pension and welfare structure in our country today. I would hope that this situation could be reconsidered in connection with the Cape Breton Development Corporation so that a person who has retired on a pension at the age of 60 would receive that pension as of right and indeed be encouraged to supplement that pension by being able to retain any supplementary earnings without his pension being reduced.

There is a great deal that could be said on the subject of development in Cape Breton Island. I simply hope that Devco in co-operation with the government of Nova Scotia and these agencies can make a very determined effort to attract additional industry to the area. There has been some success in this regard, and I hope the emphasis will be placed upon development and not simply upon phasing out the coal mines. I say this most earnestly.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Before I sit down I should like to ask the minister whether he can give us any information about the government of Canada or Devco, whichever is the appropriate agency, reaching an agreement with the Dominion Coal Company or other companies on the price to be paid for the coal resources or the mines as operating units. Can the minister tell us whether any agreement has been reached in respect of the price to be paid for the mines?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Chairman, I must be a very naive member and a very uninformed former union leader because I would normally have expected a report such as this, coming before the house—independently of political parties because it is not exclusively the work of the people on this side, but a joint effort with the Nova Scotia government and labour unions—to stir up at least a little enthusiasm and satisfaction with what a corporation, which I do not own personally but which belongs to all Canadians, has managed to do, something extremely difficult, while safeguarding the fundamental interests of the workers.

I confess that I am disappointed, not because there is criticism—that is normal, even what seems perfect can always be criticized—but because there is a lack of enthusiasm, a lack of gratitude towards those who worked. I do not mean the government but those who really try to help the miners and help the development of Cape Breton, Not only is there is no enthusiasm, but there is even an attempt to minimize the efforts that were made, and I shall explain it.

The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis) spoke of a $2,400 pension for bachelors with no dependents, and of a $3,000 pension for those with dependents. There is more than that, Mr. Chairman. A bonus of $50 for each year of service up to a maximum of $500 is given to those who are forced to retire and they receive a comparable sum when they reach 65, which is the normal retirement age.

The provisions in the act concerning the leave prior to receiving the pension also provide for the payment of a certain percentage to compensate for the 2 per cent increase in the cost of living.

Mr. Chairman, I have spent my whole life negotiating collective agreements and trying to protect the workers. I have known a great many affiliated unions both in the C.L.C., the old C.I.O. and the central which I represented. I have seen all sorts of agreements concluded in similar circumstances. Not a single one of them, Mr. Chairman, remotely resembled this one or could be compared to it, whatever the strength of the unions represented. The Canadian government, in co-operation with the government of Nova Scotia, the miners and their representatives, seems to understand the problem rather better than some of the hon. gentlemen in this house.

All these people, in my opinion, are creating an extremely interesting precedent. I have not seen anything like it, Mr. Chairman, not even when I had to deal with other industrial concerns, for example the shipyards in Lauzon. The hon. member for Frontenac has left, but he could perhaps have compared the two cases earlier. The George T. C. Davie company decided to close down because it is not making enough money. Workers are dismissed without any pension or any protection whatsoever. Nevertheless, they are Canadian citizens like you and me, as the coal miners of Cape Breton. They are human being who have responsibilities, who enjoy life; but they have received nothing at all. They will have to get unemployment insurance and if they cannot find a job, they will be distitute. That is one case among others.

It is not because I regret what is happening in Cape Breton Mr. Chairman, because I do not regret it. I feel that what is going on in Cape Breton should happen everywhere in Canada. We should not allow people to be harmed as they are very often when plants are shut down. They are merely left with their small pension or they have to obtain unemployment insurance, because they have no other choice. Here are workers who remain with an uneconomic business which costs the Canadian government $28 million a year. Every ton of coal extracted costs the government and the company $15 and brings $6. It takes a long time to make money that way.

This is a truly unprofitable undertaking and if it had been administered by private individuals—that is to say, if the government had not taken an interest in it, and here I am talking about the Nova Scotia government as well as the federal government, it was not a matter of pettiness—they would have laid off those people years ago. They would have closed the coal mines and, in fact, those people would be in the most dire need.

But under an agreement, the Devco—of course that is its task and, no matter how it is interpreted, reading the preamble to the act is enough to be convinced—was set up to put an end to the production of coal in Nova Scotia unless it becomes profitable. That is the very objective of the undertaking and it is clearly stated in the Act.

It is very well to refer to past speeches or statements, but the legislation which was passed by the Canadian parliament, is very clear. But according to the legislation, workers must be taken care of and given human working conditions, and Devco does that.

The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond wonders by what right—and he appeals to my trade union experience—an employee can be forced to retire at 60, or be encouraged to retire between 50 and 55?

Unfortunately, there is in our society no legal right to a function. Under what statute do I breathe? I do not know. Under what statute is an employee without work dismissed? None that I am aware of. No worker, except in very special cases, has a legal right to the job he holds. That is why, every day, employers lay off workers who are no longer needed, and the unemployment insurance or other social welfare programs take those workers in charge.

I do not need to find a statute that authorizes Devco to do the same. Furthermore, the hon. member could read section 18 of the Act, which provides for the retirement of coal miners. I do not have to refer to other statutes. If that were the only problem to solve, it could be done easily. It is clear that Devco has not only the right to do such a thing but, according to the law, everything shows that it has the obligation to retire miners who are no longer needed, but also to make sure at the same time that those people are treated in a human way.

The honourable member suggests that I be more generous with regard to the pensions. I could be, it is not my money. However, I feel that for 150 reasons—for which I am not responsible—the workers of Cape Breton are really, at the present time and compared to the rest of the Canadian workers, getting very special treatment, which I would personally like to see generalized and incorporated in our statutes.

I do not mean that the Cape Breton miners are exploiting the Canadian society. That is not true. That is not what I mean. What I mean is simply that they are fortunate in having, at the present time, the government of Canada as an employer; and that does not mean that the government members are the only ones who take into account and protect the interests of those people.

Obviously, that money comes from the Canadian taxpayers. Perhaps $10,000 a year, $15,000 or more could be given those miners. But, keeping in mind the average salary and what is now going on in our Canadian society, I feel that the coal miners in Cape Breton are not ill-treated. On the contrary, they are getting better treatment than any of the workers I have ever known, and surely I have known as many as most of those now sitting in this house.

Naturally, they will not go to Florida with $3,000 a year, plus two $500 bonuses and a 2 per cent increase in their annual income. They will certainly not buy yachts on that kind of an income. But there are many Canadians wo do not go to Florida, who do not own yachts and who do not have a $3,000 annual pension. that is normal in that field. The member is shocked and says that the miner in fact is paying the Canadian government or Devco a subsidy. Let us not carry absurdity too far. The whole undertaking now exists thanks to government subsidies. It could not survive a single day were it not for the money of the Canadian government. So, to say that the miners pay a subsidy to Devco is really, to my mind, overstepping the mark.

Mr. Chairman, as far as coal is concerned, I believe the house has good reasons to be happy; those who are responsible for the setting up of Devco have made a very good job of it. I hope the Devco's authorities will soon come to an agreement with the Miners' Union so that the collective agreement will be signed and, thus the purposes of the legislation achieved.

The case of the railwaymen has been mentioned earlier. I think that the point raised is important and serious. The solution will not be easy to find, and I do not intend to discuss it here, in the house, this afternoon. However, I am prepared to admit that a particular problem exists there and I shall no doubt have the opportunity of discussing the matter with the people involved in order to try to find a solution to this problem. Apart from that, I think that the Devco plan corresponds exactly to the letter and spirit of the legislation passed by the House of Commons.

Mr. Chairman, if I may express a wish, I would like some day all workers in Canada to enjoy the same kind of protection in the same circumstances. If the labour unions ever succeeded in reaching that goal, I think they could congratulate themselves.

As to development, at this time one can talk indefinitely about it. The member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) seems surprised that after eight months no definite development plan has been brought forward. Perhaps he knows more than we do on the subject, but at all events I would have been surprised if there had been one.

When I think of ARDA in the lower St. Lawrence, when I consider what is happening now on Prince Edward Island, and what happened to all the programs established not only by us but also by all provincial governments, I suggest that after eight months, it would be unfair to cast stones at Devco and blame it for not having found magical solutions to the development problems Cape Breton Island.

Certainly some elements for solution, have been found and efforts are being made, but I think it is too early to either applaud or to criticize.

Personally I think that Devco should be congratulated. The opening of the Lingan is considered by some to-day as a mere trifle, but for me and for the miners I have met, it is more than a trifle, it is truly a harbinger of hope, and that is what counts for them; I believe that the miners must be happy, even if some people here, in the house, see the dark side of everything—as dark as coal. In my opinion, Devco has done its work well.

On the other hand, I think it is too early to judge. However, I am well aware that construction of a motel has been discussed. Obviously, Devco does not intend to develop the tourist industry as it would be unwise in the first place and rather childish. However, if some economic development is to be achieved in Cape Breton Island and if technicians are to be attracted there, there are housing problems to consider. It will be necessary for Devco to accommodate these people in Sydney if they are invited and are interested. This is quite a secondary aspect and it has no bearing on development as such. This is indirectly connected and it is somewhat premature, I think, to blame Devco at this point.

I was asked why Dosco was making money at the present time, since it was taken over by the government, while as a private enterprise, it was losing money. There are several reasons, and not just one, as some would seem to think.

I do think that this example would not be enough to prove that any government corporation is necessarily more efficient than private enterprise, precisely because Dosco assets were obtained at a very good price. In fact, what we will pay for Dosco will certainly be a terrific bargain which does not happen every day. Capital costs are much lower and besides, at the present time, there is a good morale among Dosco workers which did not exist previously. It seems that a new cooperation prevails and even that the present unity of management is also one of the reasons why the company now makes a profit. There is also the market, since the railway track market is rather prosperous at present and Dosco benefits therefrom.

I do not think one can come to any conclusion, but if one wants to know why Dosco is now economically sound, whereas it was not before, I think it is not enough to say simply that the state took over, although I am not ready to speak favourably at this point of the efficiency of the managers of Dosco before the state took over.

Anyhow, the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) asked me whether an agreement had been reached with Dosco and with the companies which had businesses before. I know that negotiations are taking place. Unfortunately, I do not know what stage has been reached, and I can give no information on the subject at this time. I know that lawyers are meeting and that discussions are taking place, but I am completely in the dark as to their results.

Mr. Chairman, this is a most interesting experience from a human point of view. I am referring to Dosco and Devco. This experience shows that the interests of the workers can very well be looked after. The government of Canada and those who dealt with the situation on behalf of the government of Nova Scotia—a highly industrious area, trying to expand and to cooperate—should be commended. Hats off to them. This is one of Canada's worthy projects and I hope it will be carried through.

[English]

The Chairman: The Chair is ready to recognize the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys, but may I ask first whether the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby is rising to ask a question?

Mr. Broadbent: I have a question with reference to what the minister said in reply to a number of my questions. In turn, I want to ask him a question with regard to his reply.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Chairman, I thought the minister rose just to answer the question posed to him by the Leader of the Opposition. However, he went on to deal with other remarks. I would have spoken at that time but I did not want to interrupt him.

I had not planned on saying anything much in this debate because we spent some hours in committee with the officials from Devco; in fact we had two meetings with them. Frankly, they were much more enlightening than the minister has been up to the present point. The only problem we had in the committee was that the chairman seemed to be herding the committee members like a fussy old schoolmarm. He kept hurrying us along although there were a few other questions we wished to put to the officials. He was in a great hurry. Perhaps he was afraid we might ask something which might embarrass either the government or Devco.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Ask it now.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): The minister should relax. A few moments ago we were almost deafened by a man who was carried away by the sound of his own voice. I hope he will relax and allow us to say a few quiet, mild words because we certainly did not interrupt him when he was speaking. I might say in passing that after listening to such verbiage and verbosity I can now understand why the C.N.T.U. did not get very far in the province of Quebec when he was their leader. In any event, we will deal with that later.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): You can deal with it now.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): The minister is in a very touchy mood today. It is shocking. I see he had to bring in the representative in the cabinet of the province of Nova Scotia to bail him out, so now he is getting very important. In any event, I was glad to hear the minister in his opening remarks reaffirm and confirm what Mr. Gerald Blackmore and Mr. Douglas Fullerton, vice-president of Devco, said. They stated there would be no lay-offs of coal miners, no one would be put on the street and absolutely no one would be displaced until alternative employment was found for them. I was very glad to hear the minister reaffirm that statement. However, we have not seen much evidence of it. I fully agree with the minister that it is only seven or eight months since Devco started its operations and they have not had too much opportunity to produce very much in the form of new industry. But they are working hard and I have good faith in them to the extent that I think they will do the best they can to try to bring in new industry. They have made some steps along that line up to the present time.

The minister suggested that questions be put to him. I shall be glad to do so and I hope he will be in a position to answer them. My first question concerns the decision concerning pre-retirement. Were the amounts of $2,400 and $3,000 decided upon on an actuarial basis as is done by life insurance companies with regard to pensions, or how was the decision reached that $2,400 would be paid to single employees without dependants and $3,000 to married employees?

Second, does the minister not feel that the program which has been placed before us by Devco puts too much emphasis on tourism? Tourism is very important and I am glad to see that the corporation will promote it as much as possible and to the best of its ability. However, I am sure that the minister, despite his feelings of great importance today, will agree with me that—

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The hon. member is childish.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): I wish the minister would relax. I am afraid I might raise his blood pressure a few points. This bothers me no end. However, I am sure that even he will agree with me that not everyone can operate a motel or a service station, just as not everyone can operate a restaurant. However, these facilities will provide service, and thus tourism will be promoted. Nevertheless, great emphasis is put on tourism and I hope that Devco has not overemphasized it to the extent of forgetting something else.

There is another question I would like to put to the minister. There are approximately 2,000 men on pension on the island of Cape Breton. They are receiving the magnificient sum of $35 a month and up. Will Devco give any consideration to bringing up the level of income of these people through a superannuation allowance because, as I mentioned in committee, when a large number of people are put on allowances of $2,400 or $3,000 this will definitely have an impact on the whole economy of Cape Breton island? Has this matter been considered by Devco? I asked that in committee and the answer was that Devco had considered it but they did not know if it would affect the total economy to such a great extent. Will the minister go into that matter with Devco to see if some assistance can be given to those people who were pensioned off prior to Devco taking over?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): From what year?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Perhaps the minister could go back a period of ten years because he spoke about the great amount of money that would be saved. I think the minister should know that there are quite a number of people in Cape Breton who have received the magnificent sum of $35 a month from Dosco, and this is being continued by Devco. This does not constitute a large amount of money at the end of 12 months. It is surprising that the minister, who has had great experience with unions, should consider this to be a good pension. Frankly I think it is peanuts and an insult to men who have spent up to 50 years working underground, crawling around like rats in water in very hazardous conditions. This was the pay-off they received when they were finally forced to leave, some of them because their health was broken and they could not continue working in the coal mines. Perhaps out of the goodness of his heart the minister will go into this question with Devco to see if some consideration could not be given to these unfortunate people on pension.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Another question I would like to ask the minister is what consideration is being given to the opening of a new mine on the north side of Sydney harbour? I am sure the minister is very familiar with all this. The Princess colliery is operating on the north side and two or three other mines on the south side of Sydney harbour. They are all scheduled for closing by 1973 under the plan put forward by Devco. Mr. Blackmore said in committee that production per man had gone up tremendously. In view of this I asked him whether he would not consider maintaining the Princess colliery in operation. He could not say very much at that point, but he did say that we would have to wait and see what develops because what might be a good situation today might be a bad one tomorrow. Could the minister advise whether any consideration has been given to opening a new mine? The miners now have to go out more than three miles under the Atlantic ocean to get the coal and the long hauls involved in bringing the coal to the surface naturally increase the cost of production. While the phasing out of the Princess mine was taking place it would be possible to prepare new slopes on the other seams. By opening a new seam, naturally you are going to get cheaper coal because it is not going to cost as much to bring the coal to the surface. I was hoping the minister could take that into consideration in his discussions with Devco, since I am sure he works with them quite closely.

I should like to reply to some of the points that were made by the cabinet representative from Nova Scotia. He stated that the $25 million to which reference was made some years ago was never promised. I must advise him, and I am sorry he is not here at the moment, that this promise was used in Liberal advertising prior to the election of 1965. With regard to his remarks concerning the points brought up by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond, I may say we are all in favour of expanding the economy of Cape Breton Island. We are very pleased that the provincial and federal governments have gone into the oil business on the strait of Canso. We are very happy about any progress that is made in maintaining industries or bringing new industries into any part of Cape Breton Island. I think that what was worrying the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond, and what worries me, is the fact that this development is 90 miles away. In the Glace Bay area and the Sydney Mines area mines are being closed down. What is going to take their place? We have people there almost of working age and there will be a number of people displaced. I would think it would only be right and proper to establish some industries close to the particular areas affected. This is the crux of the question at the moment. Is Devco going to give consideration to promoting industries in these areas?

Before I leave the cabinet minister from Nova Scotia, I may say I was glad to see him here today because I have been a bit worried about that hon. gentleman. He has no part to play in this house any more. He used to be the fair-haired boy under Mr. Pearson but he has become the office boy under the present Prime Minister. I would hope that the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development, who has the ear of the present Prime Minister, would use his influence to see that the cabinet representative from Nova Scotia stays close to the Prime Minister and takes an important part in the operations of this government. I say this in all sincerity. When the Liberals had only 49 members he did a lot of hard work to bring the Liberals back to the government side of the house. During that period the present Prime Minister was calling all those 49 members, including Mr. Pearson, some unpleasant names. The cabinet representative from Nova Scotia is quite capable and I hope he will not be ignored continually. We may be on different sides politically, but I think the people of the maritimes, particularly the people of Nova Scotia, dislike to see the Prime Minister of this country ignoring the cabinet representative from Nova Scotia in the manner in which he has.

While the minister was speaking, Mr. Chairman, he mentioned the situation at Lauzon. It is not a good situation. In the same breath, he intimated that the millenium had come to Cape Breton and that all these coal miners, including the union head, Mr. Marsh, should rush to Ottawa and kiss the hand of the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. He said that not a damned thing had been done for all these people at Lauzon, but look what the government is doing for the people in Cape Breton. The situation is a little different.

As I said, Mr. Chairman, I had no intention of entering this debate but as a result of listening to the minister and others I thought I should say a word. We spent a number of hours in committee going into Devco. We questioned the representatives from Devco quite thoroughly and they were quite happy to answer questions. They did not have any problems at all except that they were cut off by the chairman. The minister mentioned also the millions of dollars that had been spent in protecting the coal mining industry in Cape Breton and Nova Scotia. I would remind him, as I am sure he must recall, that indirectly many industries in Canada are protected by tariffs which are a form of subsidy. I mention only the white goods industry and the electronics industry. Name me an industry that is not protected. Millions of dollars have been spent under the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act. Many industries are protected. All the money successive governments used to protect the coal industry gave employment to Canadian National Railways workers and kept the dollar moving.

We hope we can find a solution under Devco, as the minister has suggested. We wish Devco well. I could not wish anything better for them. In conclusion, after listening to the minister all I can say at the moment is that a fellow by the name of Dwight Eisenhower said that in politics one should take everything seriously except one's self. I commend that remark to the minister after his actions today.

Mr. Broadbent: I have one question for the minister, Mr. Chairman, and then a couple of comments. For the sake of clarification, may I ask if I understood the minister correctly to say that before the compulsory retirement section is implemented, particularly with reference to railway workers, their union representatives will have an opportunity to renegotiate or reassess the proposals?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I think they will have the opportunity to discuss their problems, yes.

Mr. Broadbent: I should like to comment on a couple of other matters. I noticed the minister did not reply to one point I raised, namely, the matter of a FRED program being a very important requirement in connection with any serious development of the Cape Breton area. This would be necessary to provide some kind of recreational facilities. Would this not be an important part of the Devco plan for the area? Would the minister like to comment on that?

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Devco was specifically set up to phase out the coal mines and at the same time to try to find alternative employment for the workers concerned. So its role is quite limited. We are now setting up this new department of regional economic expansion, and it will be the duty of that department to do just what the hon. member is suggesting, to see, if we do need a FRED plan, that there is over-all development not only in Cape Breton but throughout the whole maritime region. This is not the objective of Devco but the objective of the department of regional development.

Mr. Broadbent: What I was suggesting, Mr. Chairman, was that this should be part of Devco's objectives.

With reference to my comment about the lack of concrete proposals in the plan that was presented to the committee, the minister said that the time had been too brief for this, that the issues are very complex and that we could not expect much more. In my earlier comments I think I suggested that I agreed with that at least in part. It certainly is a very complex problem and I do not think that any sensible person would expect the presentation of a whole range of programs.

However, we did expect a few things, and in this context one of the points I made was that the chairman of the board himself suggested to the committee that there were specific projects he had in mind but which he could not reveal to the committee because the public should not know about them. My point is that as members of parliament we should be kept informed. If it is necessary that these proposals should not be given broad publicity, then the committee should hold in camera sessions. Certainly I think we should have been able to make a more sensible assessment of what is being done.

I enjoyed the minister's comment about the relative efficiency of privately-owned versus publicly-owned enterprises. My point was not necessarily that it can be inferred that publicly owned enterprises are more efficient; I simply asked the non-rhetorical question whether the minister had any information which would lead the committee to draw some conclusions in this respect. Obviously, as a result of what information he did have in this regard the question still remains very much an open one, at least to me.

I was interested to note that the minister referred to the high level of morale which perhaps had contributed to the efficiency of the enterprise. This may be an indication that the sense of involvement and immediate concern evidenced by those who work for an enterprise has a direct relationship to its efficiency and may point to the necessity for some kind of legislation in this area to involve those who work in our enterprises at a higher level of intensity.

May I conclude with one general observation with reference to the minister's rather ringing defence of what is being done by Devco. I share the minister's belief that what Devco is doing compared with what has been done in public enterprises elsewhere in the country, and certainly in private enterprises, represents a very significant improvement. But I do not think he should suggest that it is up to the members of the opposition to stand and laud the government for what is being done; I do not think that is our function. The situation is an improvenent as a result of which most of the workers have benefited to a substantial degree.

I am a member of the opposition, and although the minister is not personally responsible he is a member of the cabinet that must be held responsible for what the government has done in the last few years for the average person in this country. Here one cannot make the same kind of defence. There is no capital gains tax. The Freedman report, which was published three years ago, still remains to be implemented. The government has failed to do a whole range of things that could be done for our workers, not only in the province of Nova Scotia but all across Canada. Certainly the government cannot take any pride for things done on this score.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister a short question. About a year ago a firm assurance was given to the house by one of the minister's colleagues—I apologize for not remembering which one—that as a result of any of Dosco's actions on the island of Cape Breton there would be no immediate follow through to dispose of such facilities as the marine slip in the Dartmouth and Halifax shipyards and the Trenton works. Can the minister give us a further reassurance at this time, inasmuch as the agreement may be nearly concluded, that the status quo of one year ago will still prevail? If not, has Devco made any representations to Dosco in connection with other holdings of that company in Nova Scotia?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, as I have said, I am not in a position to give any information in this field; I just do not have the information at hand.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Chairman, may I put a question in view of the minister's earlier remarks to the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. With regard to the possibility of the development program being extended beyond the basic terms of reference of Devco, is any consideration being given by the minister's department to some form of restructuring of Devco, as a result of which it may lose its status as a crown corporation?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Devco is authorized by the law to promote industrial development on Cape Breton Island. The only restriction is that the development be industrial. Devco is not a substitute, of course, for the department. The department has its own duties. What Devco is going to do is specially for the benefit of the coal miners and affects all communities on Cape Breton Island.

I do not know whether the hon. member's question relates to the possibility of there being a FRED plan for this region. If so, I think it is a little too soon to answer that question. First of all, we have to set up the new department and define its powers. I cannot answer that question at this stage.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I think we know what Devco is doing now. The minister speaks for Devco though it does not actually come within his department. Nevertheless, what Devco is doing is quite different from various other programs of the government, and I am wondering what the future position of Devco is going to be as a result of the restructuring that is obviously going to take place.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Devco's objectives are laid down by law, and it will continue to be a crown corporation trying to fulfil the same ends.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, the minister may have answered this question previously, but can he tell me whether the effective date of the implementation of the pre-retirement plan has yet been decided?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I did not give any date. Even though the plan that has been outlined may not be part of the negotiations being conducted with the union, Devco has discussed the matter with the union. Probably as soon as there is some kind of understanding the plan will be implemented.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. Skoberg: When the minister speaks of a union no doubt he is referring to the United Mine Workers Union. Other unions mentioned today will also be involved. I remind the minister that on page 164 of the Donald report there is a suggestion that an early retirement agreement will have to be negotiated by management and labour. Up to this time there has been consultation with labour, but no negotiation. I am concerned about some of the railway unions involved, particularly the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen. I ask the minister to make sure that no retirement plan is implemented until all the unions have had an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Of course, it all depends on what we mean by negotiation. There have been meetings and discussions with all unions. As you know, it is not a contributory plan. Devco pays the full bill, and that is another reason to hold negotiations. As I said, there have been discussions with all unions, including the railroad unions. I know that on this particular point there have been difficulties, as I mentioned a few minutes ago. I do not know if I shall have to meet personally the representatives of the unions but I know the Devco people are going to, and I am ready to meet them too in order to iron out this situation.

Mr. Skoberg: The minister said, when talking about the pension, that the company pays the whole shot. But is this not a compulsory retirement plan which the company makes available to employees who have worked for Devco for some time?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Of course, once it is adopted it is compulsory. It is compulsory for those who were 60 years of age and over. Now it is only compulsory for those who are between 55 and 60 years of age. But the whole plan will be part of the regulations of the company.

Mr. Skoberg: I am sorry if I did not make myself clear. Was the pension available to the employees of Devco prior to this time a compulsory or voluntary plan?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I am afraid I am not aware of this. I will seek the information and pass it on to the hon. member.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, I hope that all unions and all representatives of the employees involved in this Devco operation will be given an opportunity to be heard before the implementation of any pre-retirement plan. That is very important, and the Donald report spoke about this matter. Unless the company can bring about good management-labour relationships a very serious situation could result, especially if some of the bargaining units were left out of the negotiations.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to sound officious but may I point out that I know something about the background of developments in Cape Breton. Actually the pension payable by Dominion Coal Company to Dosco coal workers is not a contributory plan. It is a very modest pension. For many years efforts have been made by governments of Nova Scotia to get a contributory pension plan established. The government of Nova Scotia more than 20 years ago offered to contribute toward coal royalties, under a three-way business arrangement, in order to get a contributory pension plan established. For a variety of reasons it was not so established. Any pension payable by the coal company—

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Was at the will of the coal company.

Mr. Stanfield: As one hon. member says, it was at the will of the coal company. The pension was not contributory and was quite inadequate.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Chairman, at one time I argued before the Minister of Finance that Dominion Coal Company did not pay a pension to its employees but a gratuity. The minister saw fit to tax that gratuity.

In my general remarks earlier this afternoon I hope I did not leave the impression that everything is wrong with the Cape Breton Development Corporation. The minister took that interpretation and, by shouting the way he did, only succeeded in drowning out the House of Commons interpreter.

Several of the minister's remarks are in complete disagreement with certain answers he gave to my hon. friend from the N.D.P. The minister referred to negotiations with the unions. A thin line must be drawn between negotiations and discussions. As the vice-president in charge of coal said at one time, there is nothing in the legislation requiring Devco to negotiate with the unions. I asked him whether the matter we are interested in this afternoon had at any time been discussed and he said, yes, it had been discussed with about 90 per cent of the members of one union but not with the members of all unions involved. The hon. member from the N.D.P. asked a question about this matter. I understand that only one union was involved. I think it is correct to say that a retirement plan was drawn up and presented to the United Mine Workers for approval. Possibly such a plan was presented to other unions, but there was absolutely no negotiation.

[Mr. Skoberg.]

When the minister says that there have been negotiations with unions I think it will be found that he erred.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I do not understand in what I am wrong. Is it because I used the word "unions"?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I think the minister referred to negotiations or discussions with the unions involved. This is not the case. I think it will be established by reading the reports of the area development committee that this was not a negotiated plan. According to the information presented to the committee, this plan was drawn up and presented for approval.

The minister spoke of how well Cape Bretoners are treated, implying that we ought to be most grateful for the grant which the federal government pays toward maintenance of coal operations. I think reference was made to a subsidy having been paid over a period of 40 years. By the same token, would it not be interesting to look at the protection afforded the uranium industry in which the Prime Minister is personally involved, since part of that industry has dealings with his constituency?

An hon. Member: Cheap.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): At the same time let us look at that colossal white elephant which will require subsidies, subventions or what have you from now until eternity. I speak of the St. Lawrence seaway which was to benefit the area between Montreal and Toronto.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Did anyone ever say clearly what the cost would be to support this white elephant? We hear talk about subventions on coal over the years. What was invested in the seaway? More than $500 million, and it will be a burden on the Canadian taxpayer forever. If they want to begin cutting out these things which they claim they are supporting, why not cut out the seaway?

• (5:50 p.m.)

I see some hon. members are laughing. I invite them to check into this. They will be able to verify my statement that the seaway was built for the purpose of providing hydro for the sake of Ontario and Quebec. It was supposed to bring the farmers six cents more on every bushel of grain sold. But the farmers have the same problem today as they did then. It has been before the house day after day for the last three weeks. They are still looking for box cars to carry their grain.

The minister implies that Cape Breton should be grateful for what is being done for the island. I suggest members should look around at what is being spent in support of other industries in this country and keep in mind that on the very day the corporation came before the committee saying that one of its biggest problems was transportation, an announcement came from the west coast that Kaiser was thinking about shipping coal from Cardiff, Wales. And the development corporation complains about a transportation problem!

Certainly we have a transportation problem, but it is mostly underground. Dr. Donald never went down to see it, though. The government put so much faith in his report they were willing to condemn the report of a previous commissioner who maintained there were 190 million tons of Cape Breton coal which could still be economically mined. Dr. Donald never went to the Cape Breton coalfields. He never went into a mine. But the previous commissioner did, and if the minister would read his report, which is available to him, he will see it is estimated there that 190 million tons of Cape Breton coal could still be economically brought to the surface.

The minister referred to the preamble to the bill. I would ask him to look at it closely and show me where there is authority given to the corporation to phase out this coal mining operation over a five year period in accordance with the plan to which reference has been made. I will read the preamble:

> Whereas it has been estimated that the realistic working life of the Sydney coalfield on the Island of Cape Breton is only about 15 years and that as a result of rising operating costs the future operation of the mines in the coalfield will require the continuance on an increasing scale of the subsidies and other government assistance which have been provided over a period of almost 40 years—

They are rubbing it in. For 40 years the government has been helping them, it says.

> And whereas the mines in the Sydney coalfield are faced with imminent closure unless a substantial capital investment is made for their rehabilitation and modernization and as a result of the aforementioned factors and the substantial dependence of the people of Sydney and the surrounding area and of the economy of the Island of Cape Breton on the coal mining operations in the coalfield, a critical situation exists on the island which is a concern to Canada as a whole;
> And whereas it is considered desirable and the governments of Canada and Nova Scotia have agreed that a Crown corporation be established to promote and assist the financing and development of industry on the island to provide employment outside the coal producing industry and broaden the base of the economy of the island, and to acquire the interests of the major coal producer in the Sydney coalfield and reorganize and operate the mines with a view to the rationalization of coal production therefrom and the progressive withdrawal of the corporation from such production in accordance with a plan that takes into account progress in providing employment outside the coal producing industry and in broadening the base of the island's economy;

Where in that preamble does the corporation get the idea, as expressed on October 1, 1968, that it can close down this mining operation? It is stated here in the second paragraph of the report: "It is the intention of the corporation to reduce coal mining employment as quickly as possible." Let the minister show me how the corporation has been guided by the preamble to this bill, or, for that matter, by any portion of this legislation.

The minister should become acquainted with the terms of this measure. I would refer him to what appears a little farther on in section 19 where it is stated:

> (b) in accordance with approved budgets, paid to the corporation from time to time as required by it amounts not exceeding in the aggregate twenty-five million dollars for the purposes of reorganizing and rehabilitating the coal mining and related works and undertakings referred to in section 15 and for preparatory work in connection with conduct by the corporation of coal mining and related operations.

If the minister would read what section 15 says he would find it does not detract from the argument I am making now. The people of Cape Breton have been waiting for the fulfillment of promises made to them by this and previous governments with respect to the coal operation. They do not consider that the present and previous governments have taken into account the manner in which the nation was served by Cape Breton miners during the war when coal was so urgently needed. The corporation said it would spend $25 million on reorganizing the industry and rehabilitating the men concerned. Now it comes out with a report promising: We shall rid you of these men in five years.

The hon. gentleman talks about his concern for the unions. He says he believes there should be discussion with the unions. At the same time, the man in charge of the coal division of the corporation says before the committee that there is nothing in the legislation which requires the corporation to negotiate. According to him, these matters had not been discussed with the unions involved, and we were "drawing a thin line".

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Not at all.

Mr. MacInnis: The minister is contradicting what he himself said a few minutes ago. He used the word "unions" and implied that this question was discussed with them and would continue to be discussed with them.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, it was stated in the committee that nothing in the law compelled Devco to negotiate with the unions, and that is true. But Devco had discussed the proposed retirement plan with them.

Progress reported.

AIR CANADA

PRESS RELEASE RESPECTING WINNIPEG OVERHAUL BASE

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, might I have the unanimous consent of the house to revert to motions for the purpose of tabling a press release relative to the Air Canada base in Winnipeg?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Has the parliamentary secretary leave to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Walker: I wish to table this press release, in English and in French. I believe it would be agreeable to hon. members if it were printed as an appendix to today's Hansard.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is that agreeable?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I believe the agreement was to have it printed in Votes and Proceedings but I would have no objection to it being printed as an appendix to Hansard as well—or instead.

Mr. Walker: In Hansard, I think. It covers the hon. member's point.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For text of press release, see appendix.]

HEALTH, WELFARE AND SOCIAL AFFAIRS

THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the house would revert to presentation of reports by standing and special committees?

[Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond).]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Does the house agree to revert to that item?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Isabelle: Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table the third report of the standing committee on health, welfare and social affairs, in both official languages of the country.

• (6:00 p.m.)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It being six o'clock the house will now proceed to consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions.

EXTERNAL AID

SUGGESTED INCLUSION OF FAMILY PLANNING ASSISTANCE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give consideration to including in its external aid program family planning assistance to developing countries requesting such assistance, and that the Government of Canada should take a more active role in the United Nations and in its specialized agencies in supporting measures dealing with world population problems.

He said: Mr. Speaker, hon. members will recall that about two weeks ago just after I returned from the war-torn region of western Africa I spoke in this house from an international perspective concerning family planning and the need to bring a certain amount of international feeling into it in an effort to see the problem from this type of perspective. In the debate on Biafra-Nigeria I said that this is an international problem. I said that the Nigerian-Biafran problem should concern all of humanity. I said it was a tragedy of the human race. I said that we are all brothers and should start thinking like brothers as if we are all part of a great united nations society. I said also that an ailment which affects one segment of society is a sickness which affects the whole of society.

As a result of such things I believe there is a growing awareness in the international community of international affairs and problems. People are becoming restless because of the type of thinking, the uncertainties they see in the world, the conflicts which are precipitated by the ability to make modern weapons, and the political institutions that are squabbling throughout the planet. People are restless because of what might happen if we should have a conflict in the world. People are afraid of the bomb. Therefore the challenge in the world today is a challenge of a preventative nature in respect of an international disaster. In order to prevent such a disaster we must have some kind of policy throughout the world. We must first diagnose some of the symptoms of the disease which is plaguing our planet and devise some kind of a remedy. Today in the world we have a multitude of problems such as economic and social disparities, death, war, poverty, insecurity, fear, prejudice and discrimination. We have modern problems involving cybernation and technology in respect of our institutions and industry. There are problems of pollution and urban sprawl. But there is one major factor which underlines one of the problems in our modern society and that is the problem of population explosion.

What is population explosion and how significant is it in Canada? I should like to quote a few statistics in an endeavour to define the problem which confronts each and every one of us. Modern medicine and transport have brought a drastic decline in death rates so that population continues to increase at a progressively faster rate. In the year 1600, for example, there was a world population of 500 million people. It took a few hundred years to double that population from 500 million to one billion people.

In order to try to illustrate this I should like to backtrack a bit. In 1961 there were three billion people in the world. By the year 2,000 it is expected there will be 6.8 billion people. By the year 2050 it is expected there will be 25 billion people and by the year 2110 or 2150 it is expected there will be 150 billion people on the face of the world. The population is exploding in a geometric progression. This is the reason it grows so fast.

I should like now to quote some of the things Mr. Mel Thistle said when he was addressing the National Research Council. I believe some of these quotations will help illustrate once again the problem which is confronting us. These words might make some members of parliament sit up and face this problem. He said:

> I hope this figure will seize you, and make you realize that before you personally die, chances are there will be at least twice as many people as there are now, and that your own personal children will live to see eight times as many people burdening the earth as we have this moment. Have you any idea of what 25 billion people will be like?

It is about eight times as many people as we have today. Then he mentions a geometric possibility:

> If we keep up our present rate of procreation . . . the time is not far distant when the surface of the earth entirely will be converted to human beings, we will be expanding at several times the speed of light.

That is what is meant by the population explosion. We must take a sort of over-all national view of this because man's unprecedented numbers are placing a relatively tremendous and increasing demand on all parts of the environment—air, water, food and space. In this context no nation dares choose automatically for immediate selfish ends. To survive as a nation, choice must tend more and more to be in the best interests of humanity.

I do not think most people understand that the physical environment of the world is not infinite. The physical environment of the world contains many unrenewable items. Many of these items are already starting to be exhausted. In the United States, for example, today the people of that country are consuming about half the present world supply of unrenewable items and resources such as metals. When the population of the world doubles I wonder how many unrenewable items these people will consume. This in itself is a very frightening thought. I believe that these illustrations point out that something must be done and must be done very soon.

It is vitally necessary for countries with severe unemployment, under employment and rapidly growing populations to consider the problem of population control with the utmost seriousness. Some people argue that it is nonsensical to consider a population policy for the underdeveloped countries. History, they say, has frequently demonstrated that a close link exists between high income and low birth rate. They maintain that the birth rate will not fall unless incomes rise. They say it is a waste of time to suggest population control to governments of low income and developing countries. These critics buttress their arguments by stating that in many underdeveloped countries there are a large number of social and economic factors which make a high birth rate inevitable. There is the desire to have a surviving son, for example. Other factors are religious taboos against interference with procreative functions, a source of security in old age and the need of a large family to maintain a small or marginal farm. The critics also claim it is not possible to except a progressive attitude in the developing countries when illiteracy rates are so high. They say that for these reasons any population control program would meet with little response.

I maintain that these views are precise but very debatable. To begin with, historical experience is hardly an adequate guide in a field where governmental action has been notoriously absent or undertakings have been negligible and disorganized. The chances of a population policy succeeding cannot therefore be discounted or ruled out. It remains sensible to propose such a policy as an alternative way of using resources to aid the advancement of underdeveloped countries. If economic growth is to be achieved then huge amounts of capital are required, and if this capital is to be created within an underdeveloped country by the country's own efforts it is necessary to direct resources from the production of goods for current consumption to the production of capital goods. This requires a cut in present personal living standards. If living standards are already virtually at the subsistence or poverty level, then such diversion is impossible.

This situation is often described as the vicious circle of poverty. It is described as such because when a country has limited resources per head it is poor, and because it is poor it can devote only few resources to creating new capital rather than producing goods for immediate consumption. Because little new capital can be produced, capital per head remains low. Because capital per head remains low the country remains poor. It seems to me this is tragic testimony that the natural methods of population check are still in evidence in our world today. These are pestilence, war and mass starvation. We could give many examples of these and Biafra is only one. People are starving all over the world and it is time that we as members of the human race opened up our eyes and started to do some planning. Canada as one of the more affluent nations has to take the lead in this activity.

The resolution now before the house is not compulsory nor does it infringe upon individual or the rights of countries. It only offers assistance in family planning and points out that many countries need this kind of assistance. Canada should take a more active role in international organizations and in trying to solve the world population explosion problem.

[Mr. Nystrom.]

I do not wish to say much more about this subject and I should like to hear the opinions of other hon. members. I hope this resolution will be allowed to pass for the consideration of the government of Canada because this is only one of a number of things we must do if we are going to create a viable world and a viable future for all members of the human race regardless of ethnic background, race, creed or colour of skin. This is something we can offer to do and I should like to see Canada as one of the better off countries in the world take this issue in stride.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to take part in the debate on the motion of my colleague concerning family planning.

Naturally, I am in favour of family planning in Canada, as I am for it throughout the world. But, I do not really agree with the motion, although the philosophy on which it is based has merit. I feel that were it to be adopted things might become a bit tricky, as it would conflict with section 150 of the Criminal Code which forbids publicity on, and I quote:

—any means . . . intended or represented as a method of preventing conception or causing abortion or miscarriage—

Now, as we are now dealing with contraception, it seems to me Canada would be ill-advised to give its support, through an agency, to fostering what is forbidden at home by the Criminal Code.

The philosophy on which my colleague bases himself has great merit, as I have already said. Three or four days ago, the president of India, Doctor Hussein, said that if the family planning program did not prove effective in India, its population of 500 million today would within the next 30 years grow to a billion people.

It is said that in India family planning is not readily accepted. I wonder what tomorrow holds if that program does not become a fact. I do feel that it does not fall to Canada to interfere in the affairs of other countries, in any way whatsover, and particularly in India where tradition is a way of life. From time immemorial, the Hindus have lived on a mystic plane. Cows roam the streets and it seems that a law cannot be passed to solve that problem. Now, if a country cannot even accept a law to protect the health of its population, one can imagine what troubles the government of India will have on its hands if it dares interfere with the women.

In another connection, I should like to say that Canada is not the guardian angel of the whole world. To hear some of the members speak of the problems in Nigeria, Biafra, Africa, Czechoslovakia, Russia, of the French students, of those of Quebec and Toronto, and Vancouver, one would think that the government of Canada should solve them all.

Canada is still growing and it has not yet reached maturity. Proof of this is that we still have growing pains and, like a good father, the government of Canada is awaiting the outcome, knowing full well since that we are still at the growing age, that we will know better days and that everything will one day become orderly.

As regards family planning, my colleague said the Canadian government or other governments dissociated themselves from this important question. Yet they could do this through certain organizations. If we intend to deal with it, we will have to consider its legal aspect. We can certainly not act in an illegal way and try to apply one of our laws in a foreign country. We would have, first of all, to amend the Criminal Code and I think we are coming to that, especially in the field of birth control.

It was said, moreover, that this problem belonged to the external aid program and that this organization could do something in that field. But it does not behoove such an organization to deal with problems of that kind. There is available a very well developed agency called the World Health Organization to which Canada has contributed financially. Many countries are making studies about health needs throughout the world. I think, therefore, that one day, through the World Health Organization, we should try to bring help to other countries in that field, if we can. We might be able to radiate in the world through that agency, as we have often done, especially in Lagos where one of the most modern schools of anaesthesiology in the world was set up thanks to our government's co-operation.

We did not give any money but we supplied the personnel and the equipment. We simply taught them how to do things and they learned very quickly, so that Canadians were able to withdraw from the program. That undertaking was lauched by the University of Toronto and today it has become one of the best schools of anaesthesiology in Africa.

Canada can give assistance, in various ways, in the field of family planning, which presents a very delicate problem, since it relates to the very privacy of the individual. Up to recent years, man was not especially concerned with the problem of his reproduction. In fact, nature ensured some sort of balance. There were illnesses, outbreaks of contagious diseases, wars and a very high rate of infant mortality. It must be said also that the population in the year 1600 took 250 years to double, but this has completely changed today. Formerly, when people wanted a family of two children, they had to have four or five, because of the high rate of infant mortality. So the increase in the world population was slow. Now, there is a population explosion because our sanitary measures and preventive and prophylactic methods have enabled man to develop tremendously.

In the Middle Ages, it was necessary to have five children to be sure to keep one or two, and to reach a decent average.

There is another factor which should be considered. It is pointed out in an article which my colleague, Dr. Mongeau of Montreal, the president of the Family Planning Association was kind enough to give me.

There is also a quite important physiological need for family planning. The Criminal Code should be amended as soon as possible to allow family planning which is urgently needed in 1968.

Nowadays, large families are no longer necessary, because we know that human life has been considerably extended thanks to modern technical and medical methods. It is now established that a woman who bears a child, needs 2 years to recover. The former custom of having children every 8 or 9 months, is out-of-date. In fact such a practice can have harmful psychological and physiological effects on the mother and I think that in 1968, it is the duty of young married couples to practise family planning. It is absolutely necessary that the mother should recover, physically as well as physiologically before thinking of having another child.

We know that nowadays, it is quite a psychological problem for a husband and wife to live together, and practise continence. I know that some members use without moderation a fruit that is no longer forbidden to them. That every appearance of the man in the house should entail the birth of a child nine months later, is a thing to be avoided. Some light psychological traumas must be prevented, because the strange thing about family planning is that it is always related to love.

The other day, I saw on a wall, in Paris, a poster that made me laugh. It said: The more I make the revolution, the more I make love, and the more I make love, the more I make the revolution. It was at the beginning of the term at the Sorbonne.

I suggest this shows clearly how people think in some parts of the world. This is the reason why Canada should not meddle too much in international affairs, since we are a people of wise men. We have always been considered as such by the whole world.

There are also sociological needs. The word stress is gaining momentum. Prolonged continence between husband and wife creates a kind of vacuum. They seem bored, both of them. At a certain point, they outgrow the love stage. Love becomes stabilized and cold, and then it often degenerates into hatred.

This is why family planning is one of the essential needs of the Canadian nation. There is no question in Canada of having any population explosion. We are only 21 million and our country could contain a great deal more. That is why we should not panic and start family planning on a large scale. It is necessary for the individual but not collectively.

Statistics could be quoted at length. Moreover, apparently the proportion of the population now living in cities is 61.6 per cent higher than in 1951, and it should be 72.14 per cent this year and 80 per cent in 1980.

Therefore, everybody will go to live in the cities and some solution to the problem will have to be found. I think the only solution is family planning. It is quite a feat today to bring up a large family, to educate the children and show them a bit of the world. Those who come to our offices always come to ask our advice about this problem.

I do not want to start a discussion, but I think one is often faced with a dilemma, and it is difficult for a doctor today, in view of our present laws, to give good advice, because he could be taken to court. It is rather ridiculous, but it is a fact and nobody says anything. No association has spoken out against section 150 of the Criminal Code. It is only in the last year or two that some hon. members asked, by means of a private bill, that this section be removed. Since this was asked, however, everyone has been saying: What is happening in Ottawa? They are dealing with matters of morality. It is terrible, it is simply awful. Members of parliament are dealing with matters which are none of their business. However, no progress can be made with regard to family planning unless that section is repealed.

Talking about family planning, it is always difficult to make plans concerning individuals. Everyone has his own individuality, his own views. We are all made of flesh and blood. Some are good looking, others are ugly. Those who are ugly will never become good looking and those who are good looking, one day, will become ugly. It is somewhat paradoxical, but it is still a fact.

If one wishes, planning can be applied to a corporation. There could be planning for progress as far as groups of men are concerned. In West Berlin a rather amusing development occurred with regard to morals. I was impressed. In the Express of March 1968, babies born in Berlin are mentioned. This is to show you that, at the individual level, it is difficult to undertake family planning.

Certain groups of architects had met and decided to build, in West Berlin an ultramodern residential district. They had anticipated everything, except that three and a half times more children than in the rest of the city would be born there. It is strange because everything had been planned; a difficulty was encountered because they had thought that a very small number of children would be born in that district, but at a given time, it had exceeded their forecast.

With 270,000 widows and a tremendous number of retired people, Berlin actually has the lowest birth rate in all Germany. It amounts to exactly half the national rate. No welfare legislation has been able to raise that rate. Government authorities tried everything, but nothing changed.

Thus, in the Humberstag, the district I am referring to, which was supposed to receive the same type of people, that is, retired men and widows, homes had been erected and public benches carefully provided where they could enjoy the sun until dusk.

• (6:30 p.m.)

Today, baby carriages go down ramps provided for passenger cars, expectant mothers occupy public benches and nurseries are sorely lacking in this so-well-planned area. Humberstag oddly registers 534 births per 15,521 inhabitants as compared to 100 for 10,000 in the eastern section of the city, thus exceeding briskly the German national average. Town planners and sociologists remain puzzled before this phenomenon and various theories have already been put forward.

The New York experience of 1965 is quite fantastic: a peculiar population explosion occurred nine months after a gigantic power failure, which put the city council on the track of the most likely explanation.

One Berlin town planner admits that there is so little entertainment in Humberstag—this famous plush place which had been built—that the tenants go to bed early, with the result that more babies are born there than in all the rest of West Germany.

In view of the complexity of the problem, I am in favour of intelligent family planning so that we avoid hara-kiri, or putting an end to the white race. That is what is happening with the use of the pill and other contraceptives.

But there certainly could be good, intelligent family planning, at the hands of people who know the problem and who know how best to make available the necessary information so that it can be used. Everyone does not understand what "family planning" is. There are girls in Canada who take the pill. That is not family planning. On the other hand, some women are afraid of taking it because they fear cancer. They believe they may get cancer, grow heavy about the hips, or have various aches and pains; and so they imagine, that they have no information with regard to that problem.

According to the Criminal Code, we may not distribute that information. I do not want to end my days in jail for having told a woman: You have had fifteen children; perhaps you could start taking the pill tomorrow morning and planning your family. I should think that with fifteen children, she has had enough; but I do not want to wake up in jail. I cannot say these things because I much prefer the atmosphere of the House of Commons to that of a jail.

Women should also be given a chance. We should have some sort of planning course similar to the one given by the Montreal Family Planning Association which is really quite advanced and has given excellent results.

In any event, I agree with my colleague. When the Criminal Code has finally been amended, I do think I will give him a helping hand so that together we may work towards that end and, through the World Health Organization, for instance, participate in a worldwide family planning program, because I know some countries are in dire need of it.

External Aid

Not so long ago, I was speaking to an education minister of Africa and I asked him: How many children do you have, Mr. Minister? I have nine, he replied. I added: Do you not find that nine children is a lot of mouths to feed? To which he replied: That is God's wish. I said no more. But I feel that bill might help those countries; but as I said a while ago, there is a lot of mysticism in those countries. Perhaps, having won their independence—but even that is not too sure—they might approach the problem from a non-sentimental angle. I hope they will do that and become a bit more practical. I think that everybody will benefit from it.

Love will flourish more than ever in Canada, and I know very well that governments are opposed to revolutions, as the Frenchman wrote on the blackboard: When I make the revolution, I make love! The more I make love, the more I make the revolution!

Governments can stop revolutions, but they will never be able to fetter love.

I am sure that with family planning, Canada will become the land of love.

[English]

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy Royal): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to make love or indulge in a revolution, but I would remind the hon. member for Hull that there is an amendment to the Criminal Code, section 150, which is contained in Bill S-15, passed by the Senate of Canada on November 19, which presumably awaits some activity in this House of Commons. So that his problems, in so far as that quite archaic and outmoded section of the Criminal Code is concerned, will be at an end. It is a rather interesting further example, if we need any more examples, of the public being light years ahead of legislators in so far as amendments to our public legislation are concerned.

I want to indicate my support for the motion and to commend the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) for bringing it forward. It calls on the government to include in its external aid program family planning assistance to developing countries. In requesting such assistance it recommends that the government take a more active role in the United Nations and its specialized agencies in supporting measures dealing with world population problems. I do not have before me a list of statistics about the population explosion in the world. However I have one simple fact, that on the basis of present trends, if there are not widespread initiatives by governments, by the year 2,000 the present population of the world, which is about three billion three hundred million people, will be seven billion. This is a prospect that I am sure should cause people in positions of responsibility very serious misgivings.

In the few minutes I have I want to comment on what I think is an important element in the motion, and that is contained in what to me is a clear understanding that assistance in this regard should be given to developing countries that require it. There is no suggestion in the motion of any efforts to coerce a country into instituting a program of population control. I think it would be a very serious thing if the western so-called developed and rich countries were to tie aid, assistance or funds through the World Bank, or any other initiatives that we might want to take in the development field, to an undertaking by the recipient countries to institute population control. I am afraid there is a tendency to use methods that amount to coercion. I suggest that these methods are now gaining favour at high levels in the international community, and I would like to object in the strongest possible terms to any suggestion or possibility that our country become a party to such methods, either in respect of aid programs financed by international agencies or through our own external aid program.

What I have in mind is that on September 30 of this year Mr. Robert S. McNamara, president of the World Bank, spoke to the board of governors of the bank and left the very clear impression that the World Bank would give preference in the allocation of development funds to those countries that have initiated programs of population control. Mr. McNamara, to my knowledge, has never denied that this is implicit in his remarks to the World Bank. Indeed the press reports written by those who covered Mr. McNamara's speech were almost unanimous in making the interpretation that he intended that the World Bank would give a preference to countries which had initiated programs of population control. I repeat that Mr. McNamara has never challenged that interpretation of his remarks.

What concerns me is that the first person who volunteered his enthusiastic support for Mr. McNamara's statement was none other than the Canadian Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). According to a press report carried in the Toronto Globe and Mail of October 2, referring to the speech of the minister in Washington, our Minister of Finance said that—> —he specifically endorsed the former U.S. defence secretary's intention to link birth control programs with injections of development funds.

The Leader of the Opposition raised this matter during the question period on October 1, but it was not until October 7 that the minister was back in Ottawa and offered an interpretation of Mr. McNamara's speech, and therefore of the minister's own support of it,—which has not been offered by anybody else, including Mr. McNamara. On October 7 the minister said it should be apparent that Mr. McNamara did not envisage giving first preference for World Bank loans to countries which are willing to initiate population control. It is apparent to whom? I ask because the minister himself quoted from the speech of Mr. McNamara, outlining the plans and intentions of the World Bank as follows:

> First: to let the developing nations know the extent to which rapid population growth slows down their potential development, and that, in consequence, the optimum employment of the world's scarce development funds requires attention to this problem.

• (6:40 p.m.)

The statement was phrased delicately and skilfully, I suggest, but there is no doubt as to what it means. What it says, in effect, is this, that scarce development funds must be sent where there is optimum potential development. Rapid population growth will stunt potential development, and therefore scarce development funds must be sent to developing nations that are willing to control rapid population growth. To insist, as the editorial noted, that development funds will go to countries conditional on those countries embarking on programs of population control, should of course be quite unacceptable to Canadians. To establish or support such a policy would inspire deep resentment and bitterness amongst the very countries that it is our objective to help. Most of them, of course, are not people of the white race. This policy would be construed by people in those countries as evidence of a feeling of racial superiority on the part of the wealthier countries. In the long run, it could only be a serious setback to world progress and harmony.

Perhaps at some time during this debate, although I see it is rapidly drawing to a conclusion, or at any rate at any early opportunity, some spokesman for the government will, I hope, dissociate our country categorically from any such policy. In an editorial, the Globe and Mail commented on Mr. McNamara's speech and said:

> The danger lies in the interpretation that is already being put on his words—and reports of Finance Minister E. J. Benson's supporting speech on Tuesday back this interpretation. This is that the bank will link its development loans (for all sorts of projects) to readiness by the recipient government to start a family planning program.
> Washington has, with certain success, tied some of its alliance for progress aid to Latin American governments' acceptance of tax and agrarian reforms. But if Mr. McNamara attempts the same method for population control, it could badly tarnish the new image he is hoping to give the bank. Persuasive co-operation is one thing; economic coercion would set him in the role of anti-Pope, trying to answer encyclical with sanctions.
> In his annual report last week to the General Assembly, U Thant offered a different perspective. The population problem remained a major source of anxiety, he said, but a turning point had been reached in December, 1966, when the assembly adopted a resolution that recognized the urgency for action. Some 20 developing countries had already launched measures to moderate population growth, and others were contemplating similar schemes; but the transformation of traditional attitudes toward the family, U Thant warned, would be slow.
> The problem is of utmost importance—significantly it is the theme of this month's international teach-in at the University of Toronto—but Mr. McNamara may need to learn a lesson from U Thant, that a delicate rather than a dragooning approach is most likely to bring results.

As I said, I think the motion of the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) is obviously a progressive step. It represents an intelligent, enlightened approach by our country. Let us by all means give family planning assistance to developing countries that desire it, but let us not associate ourselves with those who would take what I believe would be a backward step, by trying to bring economic coercion to bear upon countries in order to influence their domestic policies in this regard. We have had too much evidence of late of some people who criticize our welfare scheme by trying to suggest, for instance, that the entitlement of unmarried mothers to grants should be cut off if they have another child. This type of thinking, I am sure, is reprehensible to members of this parliament.

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) has put on the order paper a notice of motion which he is presenting today and which reads as follows:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should give consideration to including in its external aid program family planning assistance to developing countries—

I did not know that in presenting his notice of motion, the hon. member would give such detailed explanations. I realized that he was very much impressed by his recent visit to Biafra. He saw for himself that thousands of children have died there since the beginning of the war. He has probably been given figures.

Personally, I do not appreciate the puns of the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle) who makes me think of a young girl standing at the corner of the street and saying:

I am for planning, I am against planning, therefore I shall like to be kidnapped, I should like not to be kidnapped.

It is rather funny to hear the hon. member, but since this notice of motion has been introduced and because it might have very serious effects, I will analyze the few figures which my learned colleague has quoted when introducing his motion.

I am quite disappointed that he should see in planning the solution to the problem. I am referring to a very large country whose population reaches the 650 million mark and which lives under the Communist regime. There was also on the democratic side a country which could have offset the Communist thrust if planning programs had not been implemented. I am referring to India which some day could have prevented the Communist Chinese from eventually dominating the world, thanks to the planning program advocated even by former prime ministers of Canada with the help of the World Bank. We can see programs being applied which will make the population of India decrease tremendously and the natural order of things will be upset.

When introducing his notice of motion, the hon. member told us that, at the present time, there are a lot of people without shelter. Do we lack materials or workers who would be willing to build houses? The Supreme Being—and I know that the hon. member is one of those who believe in Him—wanted every one to have a shelter and to eat three times a day. This is a question—and once more I put the motto forward—of making financially feasible which is physically possible. The hon. member will agree with me that science and intelligence have allowed men to achieve wonderful things which might make it possible perhaps tomorrow for human beings to reach the moon or other planets where they could live if, for instance, there were too many people on earth. In Canada, as was mentioned by the hon. member for Hull, we do not have to worry about that, because there is room for millions of citizens.

● (6:50 p.m.)

I shall never be in favour of family planning, as family education is the thing. I still recall the words of a well-known Cardinal who said once: I am the thirteenth child in my family. He was not unwanted.

I knew an honourable senator who was the tenth child in his family, and also I knew the twelfth child, who became a member of parliament.

All this, Mr. Speaker, to say that there will never be too many intelligent people at the service of humanity.

The Supreme Being alone regulates everything in this world. We are but a drop of water in the ocean, we individuals. And that is why, as long as it will be possible to provide education for children, if a couple decides, to have so many children, they are free to do so. And since under the commitment made at the foot of the altar we accept responsibility for a family, we must show courage before that population explosion, that increase in population which is taking place today. We should ask instead for a system that would allow each and every citizen to have a home, a place to live decently.

I remember having read in history books that in our own province of Quebec had it not been for large families the French language would never have survived.

During the war of 1939-45 thousands of soldiers fought on the battlefields for that freedom which enables us today to speak freely still in this parliament. In the province of Quebec thousands of soldiers were not afraid—forced by conscription, I admit it—to go overseas to preserve that freedom.

How can we be sure that tomorrow we will not have to be even more numerous than we are now to fight back some invader who might want to drive us from that piece of land where it is good to live, where it is possible to get three meals a day. That is the problem. People are left in a state of misery they do not deserve, thousands of people who have not only life but intelligence.

All one has to do to find examples is to look around. Once it was thought that a way had finally been found to cope with the problem of the spruce budworm. Airplanes were used over the Gaspé peninsula to kill the spruce budworm with the help of DDT. However, as a proof that natural forces remain at work, forever maintaining the needed balance, by destroying the spruce budworm—on which fed thousands of birds—people also destroyed the lake and river salmon. So, in the Gaspé peninsula and in thousands of other places where this insecticide was used, people are deprived of a product which could be sent to Biafra had it not been destroyed by human beings. This goes to prove that man sometimes is self-destructive. Therefore, such a notice of motion cannot and should at no time be accepted.

Let God alone have the right to decide, if we systematically violate the laws of nature, what will happen to-morrow. Who can tell us that to-morrow, 650 million communist Chinese will not invade our territory? What forces will we have to oppose them? One of my friends went to China to deliver three ships built in Lauzon—this same shipyard which has been in the news lately—purchased by the government of Chiang Kai-shek. When he arrived in the capital, in Shanghai, the Communists were about to assume power. Mao Tse-tung was coming with his armies to drive out Chiang Kai-shek. My friend was in a position to ascertain that in the democratic system which existed in China in the past, people had not worried about misery. The problem had not been settled, and Mao Tse-tung, through an evil instrument, through communism, enrolled all these people and found in the soil enough to give food to 650 million Chinese. And my friend said to me that if ever each of those Chinese was given a rifle, it would be the end of life on earth.

Today, fifteen years later, we are faced by the problem of 650 million Chinese who have been enrolled by the communist system which gives them a decent living, gives them rifles and sends them to conquer the world, and we are powerless before communism, because capitalism does not have the answers.

Only we, on this side of the house, have always had the courage to ask for a system which, while making financially feasible that which is physically possible, would allow every citizen to live happily, to be ready to stand up and demand justice if those 650 million Chinese tried tomorrow to invade our country. We should say: I am ready, I stand up and fight because life is good.

The capitalistic system is outmoded to-day and we do not have the courage to request the establishment of a monetary system which would allow us to find sufficient time to live and be happy. And to combat efficiently this perverse ideology called communism, I have found only Social Credit, the credit to society.

This is the reason why, on the contrary, I want the population to grow. I have seven children and I do not believe that I have one too many. If some hon. members in this house have a family and think they have one child too many, let them come and discuss the matter with me and I am sure that we shall part as friends, since they will be convinced that we should set an example and prove to the whole world that the mind is at the service of human beings, provided we establish a system allowing us to distribute such plentiful riches.

If my hon. friend takes pleasure in saying thousands of Biafrans are dying in Nigeria at present, I say to him that there are also in Western Canada 664 million bushels of wheat and we do not know what to do with them. Let us go back in history. I know that Joseph stored grain in order to be able to feed people during, the seven lean years. As for the wheat which is so abundant at the present time, we should send it where it is needed, for with that wheat, that daily bread, Biafrans would not be dying any more. Let us stop selling arms and protest to those countries who want people to kill one another. Instead of permitting a continuation of such a massacre, we could see to the establishment of a democratic system—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the hour assigned to consideration of private members' business has now expired.

[English]

It being seven o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At seven o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

The Chairman: Order, please. The house again in committee of supply on the estimates of the Cape Breton Development Corporation. The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Chairman, before six o'clock I was presenting arguments to the committee that had to do with the over-all plan provided by the government with respect to the Cape Breton Development Corporation. I could not understand why the minister had become so exercised. He said something about subsidies for Cape Breton coal operations going back over 40 years.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I never said that.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I mentioned some subsidies which are paid in other parts of the country, and after that the minister decided, just for the sake of comparison, to talk of the problem of the shipbuilding workers at Lauzon. When one considers that the problems of those workers stem from a lack of shipbuilding policy on the part of the government, I fail to understand why he mentioned the subject. I asked the minister, "Why do you not introduce some sort of shipbuilding plan into that area, rather than throwing the workers out in the cold?"

The minister also referred to steel unions. He made uncalled for remarks in reference to the success of steel operations under the Nova Scotia government. Probably, as a matter of conscience, a government member speaking before 20,000 Cape Bretoners said the government was searching desperately for ways to assist them; yet not long after that the government cold shouldered a request for help in this steel problem.

The Leader of the Opposition asked, when speaking of this matter, what price is to be paid to Dosco and what is being negotiated with Dosco, what it is intended shall be bought from Dosco, and under what formula. Does the government intend to follow the formula set out in the powers of acquisition clause of Bill C-135 of the last session or will it follow what the Prime Minister laid down in this recent pronouncements with respect to offshore mineral rights? Perhaps some may think that a question like this ought not to be asked during this debate, yet I think it important enough to raise at this time. I wish the minister would explain what is meant by the powers of acquisition in this legislation. It seems that those powers give the government authority to purchase from Dosco lands beneath the waters adjacent to Cape Breton.

I have always contended that this piece of legislation, which grants a crown corporation authority to acquire land beneath the seas adjacent to Cape Breton, is a tacit recognition that the right to minerals under the sea in such an area vests in Nova Scotia. As I said, I shall be interested to know what is to be purchased from Dosco and at what price. Also, are the powers of acquisition under the bill not a tacit recognition that the mineral rights I have referred to vest in the province? Or, on the other hand, is it intended to follow the pronouncements of the Prime Minister in this regard, given without the advice of the Supreme Court of Canada?

The minister made statements about negotiations having gone on with unions. He talked of more than one union, using the word "unions". He also spoke of "negotiations". I point out that Devco officials coming before the committee said there were no negotiations. Those officials said they had dealt with one union only, after the retirement plan had been finalized. I point out that prior to the time the Devco people said there were no negotiations and prior to the meeting in which those officials said they had talked to about 90 per cent of the membership of one union, the minister said these words, as reported on page 3010 of Hansard for November 21, 1968:

> I understand that negotiations with the unions are still continuing on this subject.

The minister did not seem to know what was going on, yet suddenly he has become all knowing on the subject. The Prime Minister did not seem to know what Devco was. When the question was addressed to him he referred the matter, in the presence of the minister, to another minister, and then in turn to a third minister. As I say, the minister who should have answered was sitting there at that time. The Prime Minister did not know who was responsible until the report was presented to him.

The legislation specifies that there are other unions involved in this. I do not suppose the reference to these other unions would have been included if they had not meant that Devco should have been talking to their representatives before the finalization of any retirement or pre-retirement plan.

Before the day is over I think the minister will be quite familiar with the legislation he was supposed to have known before he came into the chamber. Let me refer to page 16 of this act, section 35 (2):

> Each trade union that on the day preceding the coming into force of this act was certified under the Trade Union Act of the province of Nova Scotia as a bargaining agent for persons employed by the companies in connection with the works and undertakings declared by subsection (1) to be works for the general advantage of Canada shall be deemed to have been certified under the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act on the day this Act comes into force as the bargaining agent for the person so employed by the companies in respect of whom it was so certified as bargaining agent.

Here is a clear indication in the legislation itself that Devco should at least have to talk to the various unions involved. The minister spoke of his experience with trade unions. He said that if Devco so wished it could arbitrarily pension men off at the age of 60.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The hon. member did not understand what I said. I never said that.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I did not understand a lot that the minister had to say about this particular development plan. The fact remains it is pretty hard to understand him when he does not understand the legislation put forward.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Speak for yourself.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): The minister made mention of the preamble while talking about the over-all plan presented by Devco. This over-all plan says: "It is the intention to reduce coal mining employment as quickly as possible." I invite all members on the Liberal side to read the preamble in this legislation and tell me how those two statements can be reconciled. There is nothing in the preamble to indicate that it is intended to phase out these mines. In fact, the preamble says that every effort should be made to revitalize and modernize the mines.

Does the minister think that miners in Cape Breton should be grateful for what is being done with respect to pensions? Perhaps the hon. gentleman would take the opportunity when he gets to his feet to tell us what the pension set-up will be for the chairman and the other officers of Devco. I remind each and every member of the committee that under the act setting up the corporation the chairman and the president are appointed for seven years. The phrase used is: "not exceeding seven years". The governement is giving them a pension. Are these pensions to be just below the poverty line? The minister says the miners of Cape Breton should be grateful—

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I never said that.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): The legislation provides that the chairman and the president shall be appointed for seven years, and it authorizes the setting up of pensions for these gentlemen. If the minister is thinking of the pensions to be paid to the miners he should reflect on the pensions to be received by those appointed to this corporation for a period not in excess of seven years. He is setting up pensions for men who have given seven years service. But men who have given more than 40 years service to mining will in many cases get less than the poverty level as recognized by the economic council.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): On a point of order, I never said the miners should be grateful. I did not say that, either in English or in French. Stop saying nothing.

An hon. Member: That's a new one.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Well, does it have to be in the minister's exact words? I am paraphrasing what he said.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Why did the minister compare what was being done for the Cape Breton miners with the action taken in the Lauzon situation?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I said that all the other workers should be treated in the same way.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I will go along with that, if you treat every worker in the same way as you are treating the president of this development corporation, whom we appointed for seven years. Let the minister get up and tell us that he and his colleagues are going to receive a pension below the poverty line.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): What is bothering you? I recommend the reading of the act.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The act is there.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): You will find it all set out on page two in section four:

> The chairman and the president shall be appointed by the governor in council after consultation with the lieutenant governor in council of Nova Scotia, to hold office for a term not exceeding seven years.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Can they be reappointed?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): To familiarize ourselves further with the legislation, let us turn to page 14, section 28 (e) which says the board may decide—> —respecting the establishment, management and administration of a pension fund for the president, the officers and employees of the corporation—

And after all that we are told: Be grateful for the below poverty line pensions to be provided for miners who in some cases have put in 40 years of service or more. I say to the minister that a lot of things need to be straightened out, and when the committee reports to the house I shall if necessary raise this subject on a question of privilege and prove from the written words in the records of this house as against the written words of the report of the committee proceedings that the statements made by the minister are not in line with the answers to certain questions given by some of the Devco officials.

As I stated earlier, the minister became agitated when I maintained that Devco should be channelling its energies in a certain direction. The tourist industry in Cape Breton is not a field which will generate jobs for miners.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I agree.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Where, in the over-all plan presented by Devco, do we find any specifics? The minister talks about this report. In general, what has been undertaken by the corporation cannot be criticized because we cannot put our fingers on anything to criticize—we have not seen anything yet in the way of alternative job opportunities which the corporation is supposed to provide before any miner is displaced. I believe them when they say no miner will be displaced until alternative work is provided. But this approach along the lines of an early retirement plan, together with the idea of attrition, is not what the legislation intended. Whatever the minister may say was the intent of the legislation, it was clearly understood through questions and answers back and forth across the house when the bill was being debated that the welfare of the mining communities concerned would be taken care of. On a number of occasions assurances were given that nothing would be done which would be detrimental to the jobs of the miners or to the communities in which they live.

It has been suggested by one of the Liberal members to my right that we should buy them all a Cadillac.

• (8:20 p.m.)

An hon. Member: You are hearing voices.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): There is one voice I am not going to hear too long without doing something about it. As has already been said in this house, the hon. member must keep it up so that he will be recognized by his own Prime Minister.

Mr. Perrault: You are being psyched. I did not say a word.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): This reference to buying them all a Cadillac is just a callous approach, such as the Liberal members have in respect of this particular problem. If there is a similar problem in Lauzon, then it is their responsibility to bring it before the house to see whether there is anything that can be done about it. I doubt whether the minister knows what it is all about, but at least they could put the tab in operation so far as the Lauzon workers are concerned. There are a number of questions which remain unanswered by the Devco people, not only before the committee but also in the consultations between the minister and the Devco corporation. This afternoon I made some remarks of a critical nature respecting what I think Devco should be doing and where they should be channelling their energies. Because of that the minister allowed himself to be exercised. Now I should like to ask him whether he will assume his responsibility and answer some of the questions which have been presented to him, and then I shall have further questions as we go along.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Which question?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. For the past 20 minutes and probably for 20 minutes before dinner I had indicated on a number of occasions certain questions which I thought the minister should take the responsibility for answering. I even repeated questions put to him by other hon. members, including the Leader of the Opposition. When I resumed my seat he then wanted to know what question I asked. I think that is a flagrant abuse of the approach to the whole situation.

[Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond).]

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I will speak somewhat reluctantly, as I am convinced that my words will be distorted. I thought that by speaking in French, I would make myself better understood, but things seem to be even more confused.

[English]

In respect of the question concerning negotiations with the unions, when I answered a few moments before the adjournment of the house at six o'clock I said that there were negotiations, but I said it depends on how one defines negotiations. If the reference is to negotiations in order to reach a collective agreement, that is not what I had in mind. Of course there were no negotiations of that type. However, if you mean discussions and meetings between the union and the employer, there have been discussions not only with the mine workers but with the other groups. Is that clear? I do not know why the hon. gentleman insists on using the term "union". Of course I used it; why not?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Is the minister asking me a question?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): No. I just told the member I used the term union.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. My point of order arises from the fact that the minister clearly indicated he was speaking to me and asked if it was clear. Therefore, on that particular point, I say, no it is not clear. The inference from the hearings of the area development committee will prove that point.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): If this is not clear, then I am sorry because I cannot do better than that. I must use words to express opinions or ideas. It is very clear to me. I say there have been discussions. There have not been formal negotiations in the sense that those discussions were supposed to lead to a formal collective agreement.

[Translation]

With regard to the second question, the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond said: "Where is it written in the act that Devco eventually intends to stop operating the coal mines?" Then he read the preamble, and it said precisely what I tried to explain to him. However, he said: "You can see that is not what it says". I shall therefore read the third paragraph of the preamble again, Mr. Chairman; it says:

The aim of the corporation of—

[English]

—in the Sydney coalfield and reorganize and operate the mines with a view to the rationalization of coal production therefrom and the progressive withdrawal of the corporation from such production in accordance with a plan that takes into account progress in providing employment outside the coal producing industry and in broadening the base of the Island's economy;

[Translation]

Is that not clear? That is what it means.

However, the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond reads it and says just the opposite. He says: "You can see that the aim is not to stop operating the coal mines". What can one do? I thought it was only when I spoke French that he did not understand, but apparently he does not understand me when I speak English either. Therefore I might as well give up.

[English]

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, I am glad to hear the clap. I am sure this means that the Liberal members have not read the report of the hearing. I have one direct question for the minister. I am given to understand that the miners may be on their annual vacation as of December 20. I wonder whether this is correct.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes, I guess so, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Skoberg: I am also given to understand that on January 2 the pre-retirement plan will be effective for the miners. They are to be given their holidays at that time and the pre-retirement plan will then go into effect.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I would not like to give any definite answer at this stage because there are still discussions taking place between Devco and the unions. I have no final report on this and, therefore, I would not like to say that this will happen in December or at the beginning of January, because it might be otherwise if there is some different understanding.

Mr. Skoberg: Before the dinner hour the minister nodded his head in agreement when I asked if he would answer any general representation particularly from the rail union people such as telegraphers, trainmen and engineers. Would the minister give the assurance that there will be no pre-retirement plan before all the representatives have had an opportunity to appear before him.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I have already met with the representatives of those unions. If they want to see me again I am ready to see them. If the miners reach an agreement with Devco on the pre-retirement plan I cannot say that I will postpone the implementation of this understanding. But I do say that before anything is done for those employees I am ready to wait until I have met with the representatives of those unions.

Mr. Skoberg: If I understood the minister correctly, this could become effective for the miners as of January 1—I am referring to the pre-retirement plan—but not necessarily so for these other employees to whom I have referred. Is that correct?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): It will depend on the agreement Devco can reach with either the mine workers or the other groups. This I do not know. If the railway groups are not satisfied and wish to present arguments I can assure you that no final decision will be taken by Devco before I have met and discussed this with the railway employees.

• (8:30 p.m.)

Mr. Skoberg: I am sure that cleared this up and I thank the minister. I am also quite sure the minister will realize that the Canadian railway labour and executive association intend to meet with the minister in this regard.

My other question relates to whether the pensions for pre-retirement, being $2,400 for single individuals and $3,000 for married employees will bear any relationship to the number of children the married men may have. A married couple may have one child or ten children. I also understand that unemployment insurance benefits will be included in this package of $3,000 or $2,400. Is that correct?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): That is correct.

Mr. Skoberg: Do the ministers feel it is fair and just for these people in this country to pay into this fund, from which they expect to derive benefits, and have those benefits included in this package deal for pre-retirement benefits? These people have paid into the fund for many years. Does the minister think it is fair to use this part of the fund in order to provide these pre-retirement pensions? I should like to ask the minister to reconsider this matter, in so far as including unemployment insurance benefits with amounts of the pre-retirement fund?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): On that point Mr. Chairman, I think that we can do like the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond and say that the pension is not high enough. There is a lot to be said for that.

I also find that $3,000 a year is no fortune, as I said earlier. But the amount can be discussed.

However, when one takes into consideration the fact that unemployment insurance benefits serve in the definition or the accumulation of the amount, I feel it is unfair because in setting up the pension, these benefits are taken into account. These people enjoy special conditions where the state creates a pension of $3,000 a year, out of public funds, for someone who is, say, 55 years old. Under the circumstances, the amount cannot be divided and one cannot say: Do you think it is fair that they should lose their right to unemployment insurance? When in fact, the state has added to those benefits a considerable amount taken out of public funds.

If is the same as if we said to someone: The State is willing to give you $20,000 a year if you agree to give up your unemployment insurance benefits; and then that someone would come up and say: That is unfair because I have already contributed towards those benefits. I doubt that the matter can be discussed objectively on that level and I believe the member is right. If this were done, the ordinary worker would have no other income, and if the state gave him nothing else, I would naturally be first to blame those who acted in that fashion.

The over-all amount must therefore be taken into consideration and a decision reached on whether it is reasonable or not. But, to my mind, reference should certainly not be made to vested right under the Unemployment Insurance Act to its benefits, because of the amount that has been added.

[English]

Mr. Skoberg: I should like to ask one further question following those remarks. Does the minister agree that these people who are used to making considerably more than $3,000 but will be reduced to that pre-retirement level and that this creates a situation which will downgrade their standard of living considerably? I am referring now to these particular classifications within the employee group of the Devco corporation?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): In this regard, as far as the miners are concerned, this will represent an average of about 75 per cent of their income. They are entitled to more income. It is expected that nothing will be subtracted from the first additional $50, and that for all amounts above the $50 only half will be subtracted. This will mean they will get approximately the same income. I do not say it is a very high income, but I do not think they will be badly treated. I think the hon. member probably had in mind the railroad groups. In this regard there is no doubt that there would be a sharp decrease in their income. This is why I mentioned that this is a particular case and perhaps we can find some kind of a solution. This does not involve a very large number. At the present time I think there are 22 of these employees.

Mr. Skoberg: Would the minister then agree on a percentage of about 75 per cent? Would that be realistic or would it be in that vicinity? In other words you would not downgrade a greater number and thereby lower that standard of living? Does the minister suggest that this is a realistic percentage?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think the only suggestion I should make at this stage is that we will discuss all these problems with the interested parties.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): In order that the minister fully understands there are some questions which have been left unanswered, let me say that the pensions of these miners appear to be something of particular concern. I should like to ask the minister what the new development corporation plans to set up in the way of pensions for someone who is only to serve for seven years?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): You are referring to those who will serve seven years?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I refer to those who have been appointed to these jobs under the legislation, which require them to serve a period of time not exceeding seven years. Perhaps the minister could explain to the house what sort of pension setup these men will have.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think the hon. member is referring to the president who can be reappointed. In any event, the law is there and I do not intend to discuss a law which is on the statutes as approved by this house. That is not my purpose.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): The hon. minister was agitated earlier this afternoon when questions were put to him about the plans of Devco. Let me refer again to the fact that the chairman, the president and other directors are to be appointed. They all cannot be reappointed, and I should like the minister to indicate what plans Devco has in respect of their own pensions?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): To my knowledge, Mr. Chairman, no plan has been presented to us with regard to the pension of Devco senior officers.

[English]

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Chairman, could the minister satisfy his curiosity, having regard to the specific plans put forward by Devco in respect of these pensions?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): My curiosity for the time being is related to the miners and employees, not the president of Devco.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Apparently the minister has misunderstood my question. I wanted to know whether he had concerned himself with the plans of Devco in respect of providing alternative work for the miners to be replaced.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes, Devco is concerned in this regard, as the hon. member knows very well. Devco is trying to find new jobs for those who are likely to be laid off. I do not think Devco has laid anyone off without being sure in advance that a job was available. If there is no job, there is the pre-retirement plan which applies.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Chairman, is the minister personally aware of any proposal for the development of alternative industry in the area by Devco?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Not personally, no.

Item agreed to.

40. Payments to the Cape Breton Development Corporation in accordance with terms and conditions prescribed by the Governor in Council, in respect of the rationalization and operation of the McBean Mine in Pictou County, Nova Scotia, and to and in respect of former employees of Acadia Coal Company Limited, and to authorize Cape Breton Development Corporation to manage and operate the McBean Mine pursuant to the terms of an agreement between the Corporation and The Pictou County Research and Development Commission and Thorburn Mining Limited, $930,000.

Item agreed to.

1. Administration, operation and maintenance, including Canada's fee for membership in the international commission on irrigation and drainage, $17,887,200.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister would like to say something at this time to inform the committee as to the position of the government in respect of regional development, or does he suggest we simply have a debate on these estimates?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, with regard to the estimates, we deal now with the aggregate of all the programs which were implemented and which the department under my leadership has inherited.

It is quite difficult for me at this time to make any comments or projections since these were already existing programs which the house is aware of, and which hon. members have already had the opportunity of discussing. When we study the new estimates the house will expect the minister, and rightly so, to give explanations and also to make projections so that it may know exactly in what direction the department is going.

At this time I shall try to give all the explanation I can about these estimates.

• (8:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Chairman, I must admit I am somewhat disappointed that the minister has decided not to make any statement to the committee, because it seems to me that we have been going now for far too long with very little by way of explanation as to what activity is at the moment taking place within the proposed new department or related to on-going programs which have now been placed under the responsibility of the minister.

It is close to half a year since the reorganization was announced by the government, and there was considerable discussion before that going back almost a year. We are on the verge of having in Ottawa a very important conference on the constitution. This will take place in a very few days. At the last such meeting one of the main points raised at the conference, originally by the premier of Nova Scotia, was the whole question of regional disparity.

It is believed, not only by the premier of Nova Scotia but by the Prime Minister himself, that one of the basic issues that concerns us at this time is the question of regional disparity and its effect upon national unity and the future of this country. We had tabled in the house this afternoon a further document from a very expensive commission which studies one problem confronted by this country. Now we have a very brief opportunity of examining the estimates of a department that is charged with attempting to deal with one of the very basic questions of national unity, that of regional disparity.

This problem is not new; it is one that goes back to the beginning of this century and before. It has been suggested it is part and parcel of confederation, which is 100 years ago. I am, quite frankly, disappointed with the way the government has handled this problem. In spite of the fact that we are dealing with estimates which by and large have been spent, and with a department that has not been created, the minister has not been able to offer to the committee this evening any concrete proposals, setting of goals or indication of priorities. This government has failed to deal seriously with the problem of regional disparity. I speak for the people of my province and those of many other parts of the country who have been hoping the government would be serious in dealing with these questions.

An hon. Member: Speak for yourself.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I am. You can speak later, if you wish. The approach to the problem of regional disparity seems to be somewhat in conflict with some of the actions already taken by the government. Anyone who remembers back to the latter part of this summer, just prior to the reconvening of parliament, remembers the announcement that the winter works program was to be abandoned, and must have wondered what thoughts were going through the heads of the leaders of our government when they were considering summarily to abandon a program which, allowing for all its faults, had achieved a good deal in shoring-up many of the areas of difficulty and chronic unemployment.

We were then delivered a budget which we thought might outline some of the fiscal and monetary priorities which are inherent in carrying out a program of regional development initiated by the government, at least in its initial stages. Instead, Mr. Chairman, we saw that this was a rich man's budget; that increased taxes were being levied on the lower income segment of our society. Then we saw a conference among federal and provincial ministers of finance in which it was suggested that in the foreseeable future the whole question of social welfare programs might be turned back to the provinces. This suggestion failed to recognize that such a program would create great economic hardship for the provinces and areas that the program was supposedly going to raise up under some kind of over-all program of regional development.

Tonight the minister suggests that he really has nothing to say to the committee in this respect. It is true that a short while ago he spoke to the committee of the house regarding regional development, but I know he would agree with me that there is not a great deal new that would indicate the directions to be taken by the government and the seriousness with which it viewed the program. It was really, in the main, a repeat of an earlier speech the minister made to the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council. This is the only thing we have heard today after almost half a year of waiting for action in this regard. I am wondering whether all we are having is a little bit of light housekeeping. I wonder, also, whether in fact there is on the part of the government a serious intention to deal with one of our great problems, that of national unity, because the problem of regional disparity is closely linked with it.

We want to hear the minister's views with regard to the programs being grouped together in his department at the present time. We want to know when the big plans, the programs for increasing employment in the near future, as contrasted with the more long range programs that will be covering a period of some 15 years, we are told, will be launched. What about some of the programs that have already been launched and which now seem to be faltering? I think of the Northumberland strait crossing, which is a program near to my heart. Apart from its long term economic value to Prince Edward Island, this program would improve the economic situation of the government of Canada in the way of costs of ferry construction and operation. What about a project like this, in terms of what it would do to this area of the Atlantic region during its construction period? We have not heard what the government intends to do in this respect.

We have not heard about the government's intention with regard to other programs such as the corridor road, which would greatly alleviate one of the basic problems in the Atlantic area, that of transportation. We would like to know a good deal more about other programs. We heard the minister's announcement in September with regard to the area development agency for Saint John, Halifax-Dartmouth and Fredericton, including them in this program. We are now told these things will happen only when amendments are made to the program some time in the new year. We want to know what will happen to some other programs now in operation. The P.F.R.A. program has done some good things with regard to conservation in the west. We are told that this program will be restructured. We wonder whether it will be expanded in its restructuring in the future. We wonder what is the reassessment in regard to these programs which are now under consideration. So far in this discussion we have been told none of these things, and frankly I think the Canadian people, especially those primarily involved, are greatly disappointed.

I would be interested to know what the minister means when he talks about regional development. This is a kind of loose and amorphous term which we would like defined. It has been used now for some months, perhaps some years, but very little definition has been given to us by the government with regard to what they mean. Does every person who lives in an area in which there is a slightly higher unemployment situation or a lower productivity situation suddenly look around him and say, this is one of the areas going to be tackled seriously in a program of regional development? If you live in the maritimes you might make that assumption. But do you make this assumption if you live in northern Alberta, rural Manitoba, parts of Ontario, or the interior of British Columbia for instance? What are the definitions we are to give to the words "a program of regional development"? To be more specific, what are our priorities and goals in this respect?

Surely to goodness even the setting up of the department would be a rather shallow or hollow task, unless there has been some public discussion of what our goals are. Are the goals of this new department primarily directed toward reducing chronically high unemployment in certain areas of the country, or are they related to increasing productivity, and if so at what levels? Do they deal in any realistic fashion, in a way that can be measured to determine the success of the program, with the question of income disparity, or do they deal, with the very disturbing problem facing the Atlantic region, one with which A.P.E.C. has been so concerned, namely that of out-migration? We have had no statements or indications, or indeed no opportunity for any discussions, and it disturbs me greatly that what may in fact be happening behind the scene is a subtle reorganization of a series of programs and projects, a kind of patchwork quilt which in the end will mean not much more than what we have known to date, and that is very little.

I wonder also whether in our thinking of the problem of economic disparity we are thinking only in what I would call narrow, limited and perhaps unrealistic ways of exclusively economic questions, or whether we are facing what in fact to me are some of the basic issues with regard to regional disparity, that is the social questions. If we are looking at the social questions and if, as the minister suggests, this is indeed part of the responsibility and concern of this projected new department, then surely to goodness we have already got off on the wrong foot because we know that as a result of constitutional problems, when it comes to a matter of social questions and social issues we must have a considerable amount not only of consultation with various provincial government officials, but of effective co-ordination and co-operation.

Unless I have been badly misinformed, there seems to have been little evidence to date that such is taking place. I am afraid we are going through the traditional federal pattern of failure. A program, a project or a concept is now being evolved within the department or with a group of federal officials, and when we have finally evolved our position we will then agree to enter into some kind of negotiation with the various regional representatives. Whether they be provincial officials, municipal officials or officials of other kinds of voluntary agencies, will not be clear, but what we will in effect be saying is that we know here in Ottawa what all the goals and priorities are in the various regions that we will tackle seriously, and then we will tell them what we are going to do.

We have been down that road before, and we only have to look back to see how unsuccessful it has been. I think that if we are going to take this seriously, what should be done even now before this department is fully formed and so structured that there is little room for manoeuvrability, is to have the kind of full and frank public discussions that are badly needed. The Economic Council of Canada in its latest report put it very clearly when talking about regional development when it said that full participation of provincial governments in the planning exercise, as well as in subsequent decision making and implementation, is essential. This is where I fault the minister and his departmental officials. If there has been such a discussion, it has been held in the greatest secrecy. We have had some secret meetings in the past, but this will take the cake because even the vaunted sleuthing of Peter C. Newman has not been able to unearth useful conversations and consultations at this level. Even if they have taken place, their validity would have been questioned, inasmuch as many public bodies closely interested and concerned in this issue have not been called upon to participate. I refer to a few that come to my mind, bodies such as the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council, the Nova Scotia Voluntary Economic Planning Board and various industrial estates that operate as crown corporations in the Atlantic provinces, to mention the ones with which I am most familiar. Seemingly we have not come close to tackling this, but instead have followed the usual federal pattern of failure by evolving our plans here. We have evolved our plans in Ottawa and then stated that it was our position, like it or lump it.

I want to turn now to one specific agency under the minister's responsibility, which I am afraid is going to disappear and perhaps even create less of an opportunity for effective consultation and co-operation with the Atlantic region. I am referring to the Atlantic Development Board. Rumours have it that this board will cease to exist as an autonomous board. It may have some kind of an advisory capacity, but that will be a pretty limited function. For the last six years now the Atlantic Development Board has been dispensing money on a variety of projects without too much rationalization, except for the oft stated remark that all of this will be useful in the future development of the Atlantic region. It is strange that we have actually spent tens of millions of dollars in the Atlantic region without having any kind of plan or system whereby we might effectively evaluate whether or not we have been putting our money in the right places, or getting any value from it.

One of the most important things that the Atlantic Development Board could have done, and yet might do, is to produce some kind of plan, and yet we are told that to date we have a series of unco-ordinated surveys, and far too little consultation with those who have done similar work either at the provincial or at the federal level. More than a year ago the then minister of national health and welfare, the present Minister of Manpower and Immigration, indicated that we might be very close to having such a plan. However, it has not yet seen the light of day, and we are told that by the first of next year all we will have is a series of studies. I can speak for part of the maritimes that I know best. We have been studied to death, and what we want now is a little concrete planning, some direct planning, some planning that says something about the goals and priorities that can, should and will be achieved.

There are a couple of other things that I would like to refer to briefly because I think they are important to the future success of this department, and I have not written off its success yet. I am simply stating here that the concern that many people have that this is nothing more than a shuffling process is becoming more and more fortified by the lack of a clearcut statement by the minister, and the lack of open discussion, effective consultation and real planning with the various provincial and municipal bodies that will have to participate. In many cases if regional development is to be more than just a slogan or the title of a new department, this process must take place.

I think also that we must realize that what will be done and what is being done now in the joining of any of these programs will not be sufficient in itself. What should concern the members of this house and what will concern all of those interested in regional development is the question as to what effect all government policies having to do with productivity, with income and unemployment are tailored to get at these pocket areas of regional disparity across the country, what kind of effective machinery will operate at an interdepartmental level, for instance, to effectively co-ordinate the kind of decisions that may be made, not only in abandoning certain things, which may have an economic impact on a region, such as the abandonment of military installations, but in initiating programs that other departments have established. What is needed is an over-all rationale, because without that rationale we will be simply putting a band aid on a very large sore, which will do little to alleviate the basic problem.

We regard regional disparity and regional development as one of the fundamental concerns of Canadians in our time. I would like to see the minister indicate, not only in his remarks here this evening, but by his action in effective consultation with the provinces, that more is being done about it than just the setting up of a new department and the restructuring of some of the programs that are presently in the department.

The reason for our concern about regional disparity is that perhaps half of the provinces in this country are not on an equal footing with the rest of the country. There is one Canada that is known quite well to those who live in the central part of this nation, extending from Montreal to Windsor. There is another Canada on the fringe which seeks to join the rest of this country in sharing in its natural resources, in its wealth and in its affluence.

This cannot be done, I suggest, simply by a shuffling of programs or by a bit of patching here and there. It can only be done by a determination of the government to tackle the problems seriously and to do this, not unilaterally but with the most effective and far reaching kind of co-ordination and co-operation with other responsible bodies that has ever been seen. As yet, we have not seen an indication of that. We look forward to seeing it very shortly.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words on the problem of regional development. I am rather mindful of the time, and the fact that other members would like to speak, so I will not make my remarks too lengthy. First of all, I should like to point out to the minister that I have not been impressed with the work done by his department to date. I am going to be very frank, Mr. Chairman. I have had questions on the order paper for two and a half months seeking information from the minister's department. If this is an indication of how your department is going to handle regional development, then it is a mighty poor start. It is absolutely and utterly disgraceful for questions asked by members to remain on the order paper for this length of time, when many of them are simple questions seeking information which should come to a member so that we know where we are going. We find these questions stay there day after day, until finally the estimates are passed by the house.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Which questions?

Mr. Harding: There are six. Last week I rose on a question of privilege because I had not received answers to these questions. Here we are, the last day for the consideration of estimates, and no answers have been received. If this is an example of how your department is going to work, I am afraid you are off on the wrong foot.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman. Are you sure these questions do not refer to the Department of Manpower and Immigration, rather than to my department?

Mr. Harding: Yes, I am sure; some of them may refer to manpower but some of them refer to your department.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Which ones?

Mr. Harding: I am not going to go through them now. If they refer to manpower, then—

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman. This is a very serious accusation against my department. I should like to know to which questions the hon. member refers. I see here a series of questions, but they all relate to the Department of the Manpower and Immigration. There is not a single one that relates to my department. If there is one, please mention it right now.

Mr. Harding: These questions are listed on pages 39 and 40 of today's order paper. Some of them no doubt refer to the manpower department, Mr. Chairman, but they are tied in, hand and glove, with the minister's department. I want to point this out. The winter works program has gone down the drain. So far as I can make out, nothing has been introduced in our area to replace this particular program.

There is one point I want to raise with the minister. I believe he has had an interview with a group of people from the city of Nelson in my area, with regard to regional development. The minister, I understand, gave them a very courteous interview. I am very pleased that the interview took place. However I believe the delegation went home not much wiser than when they came here. This is the thing that is worrying a large number of regions all across the Dominion of Canada, but I speak specifically for the province of British Columbia.

I was very interested in the remarks of the preceding speaker. He spoke very generally, but I think he hit the nail right on the head. We are wondering what the minister's plans are. We have been given to understand from other ministers that a new program, an incentive program, is going to be introduced. The idea behind the program is to liquidate the pockets of high unemployment across the country, as well as the areas in which there is a large degree of regional disparity. What I should like to point out to the minister is this: I do not think we can afford to neglect any area in Canada. Even if an area has a relatively high degree of employment, such as the area of Kootenay West which I represent, where the earnings per capita compare favourably with some of the best areas in Canda, conditions can change. What is happening rapidly in my area, as well as in many other areas, is that in some of the larger towns and the rural areas we are seeing unemployment creeping in, and it is getting worse. This condition must be checked or what can be classed now as a relatively good area will soon reach a stage where it will be one of the depressed areas. This is why we are so interested in seeing programs developed on a regional basis to deal with these problems.

I think the minister is well aware of the incentive program that was introduced in the Okanagan. I do know this program has cost the government some money, but it has been very successful. Some industries have been brought into the Okanagan area which would never have come there unless some type of incentive had been arranged. The result, of course, has been industrial development and an increase in permanent jobs in that area. This is what we are after. As the minister knows, the brief which was presented to him by the city of Nelson, referred to the loss of industry in that area. There was a reference also to the rapid rise in taxation in the district, and the very low industrial base upon which taxation is imposed.

This situation is rather alarming, particularly when we know that the area has all the attributes for real progress. Around Trail and Rossland we have the C.M. and S. complex and a great deal of industrial activity. In the northern section of the constituency there is a good climate and we have the resources, hydro power and manpower. We cannot afford to neglect all these things. I am going to suggest that programs be investigated in conjunction with provincial, municipal and regional governments in an attempt to do something about keeping the employment picture in this part of British Columbia very good.

• (9:10 p.m.)

There are two or three other points I should like to make, Mr. Chairman, before I sit down. It is always interesting to hear about the new incentive plans that are to be advanced by the present administration. Surely the minister, in this first semester of this session of a new parliament, should be able to give us some idea of what is going to happen in other parts of Canada, other than the developments he has drawn to our attention in relation to the Atlantic provinces and parts of Quebec. I think we are entitled to this information. I also suggest to the minister that in his closing remarks this evening he deal with the points that have been raised.

I understand that at least seven or eight other members would like to make brief comments about regional development so I will not take much more time. I understand that questions of manpower come under the minister's department; if they do not they certainly fit hand in glove with the department's operations. Unemployment and incentives must go hand in hand.

One last point, Mr. Chairman, that I almost forgot and it has to do with the minister's department. In my constituency there is a town called Creston. As far as manpower services are concerned, Creston is bracketed within the east Kootenay area, which has a fairly high employment rate as a result of C.M.S activities around Kimberley. However, in other respects Creston is really divorced from the east Kootenay area although, as I say, it is included in the employment figures for the whole area. Creston is an area with a very high rate of unemployment. It is in a pocket almost by itself. This is a region into which the department should move and provide the incentive for setting up new industries, thus cutting down the severe rate of winter unemployment. I just draw that to the attention of the minister and trust that his department will look at the matter this coming year.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Chairman, I shall not speak for very long but I do want to raise one particular matter on this estimate. The minister has treated me very courteously in this regard and knows how I feel on this issue. I am particularly glad that the member of the cabinet from New Brunswick is in his seat, because I am sure that the combination of these two ministers means that something will be done in regard to a grant to the University of New Brunswick that was severely cut back by Treasury Board, in spite of a recommendation for capital funds made by the Atlantic Development Board.

I feel particularly strongly about this issue because some people in the maritime provinces are beginning to feel that the Atlantic Development Board is now just a series of initials, that it has no power. If each submission of the Atlantic Development Board to Treasury Board is going to be subjected to such severe curtailment as in this particular case, then I think the people of the Atlantic provinces will have legitimate reason for complaint.

I am going to take the somewhat unusual course of reading three letters, for which I take full responsibility, as I believe is the rule. I will identify the senders and in every instance give the names of the addressor and addressee. There is no mystery about this and it is not a partisan matter; it is the wish of a member of parliament from New Brunswick to see that one of the important resources of the Atlantic area receives just treatment.

The first letter is addressed to me and is from the vice-president, administration, B. F. Macaulay, of the University of New Brunswick. The letter is dated September 6, 1968 and reads as follows:

—I write to you concerning developments associated with the university's request for a capital funds grant from the Atlantic Development board.

Then Mr. Macauley says he will outline the history of their requests and the federal treasury's grant award. He then encloses supporting data.

The letter continues:

In August, 1964—

This is the reason for some of my frustration.

—the university made a submission to the Atlantic Development Board for a grant of $1,850,000 for capital expenditure to provide research and graduate student space and to purchase additional equipment and library resources for research purposes, all of which include only areas of direct relevance to the social, economic and technological advancement of the Atlantic provinces. The Board recommended a grant of $1,500,000 and this amount was finally approved by treasury. Of this amount $1,038,000 was to support the space requirements. You will note this sum is indicated and its allocation to various areas are indicated in column 1 of the attached analysis of submissions to Atlantic Development Board and Supporting Grants.

It continues:

Although the new buildings containing the space being supported by grants have been constructed, with the exception of the extensions to the chemistry, biology and geology buildings, and most of the equipment and books have been purchased, none of the supporting grant money has been received over this four year period. This delay has apparently been due to slowness in completing the associated agreements, and the agreement between the province of New Brunswick and the federal government is still not signed.

This was last September; perhaps the minister can indicate whether the agreement has been signed since.

In April of this year it became obvious to us that increasing academic requirements and the rapidly rising costs of construction would make it impossible to build the extensions to the chemistry, biology and geology buildings with the Atlantic Development Board grants requested in 1964. Accordingly, we requested our architects to give us new estimates of the cost of these buildings, and we prepared a new submission to the Atlantic Development Board, dated April 1, 1968. This second submission was based on three considerations—increase in building costs; increase in size of the space required; and 100 per cent support for those areas where 50 per cent support was requested in the first submission, including the extensions to the chemistry, biology and geology buildings. The increase in grants and the total grants requested are shown on the attached tabulation sheet.

The Atlantic Development Board recommended—

I want to emphasize this.

—that the maximum increases resulting from all three of the considerations in the preceding paragraph should be granted. This would have given us an increase of $2,318,200 and a total grant of $3,356,200. Consideration of these grants by treasury board was considerably delayed by the federal election, but when our submission was considered treasury only approved increases in the grants for increased building costs and the increased space requirements, but not for 100 per cent support in the areas where 50 per cent support had been requested initially. This decision was made in the face of the recommendation by the Atlantic Development Board for 100 per cent support. The result is that our request for increased grants has been cut by $1,262,200.

• (9:20 p.m.)

While the Atlantic Development Board and the Treasury Board were considering our second submission tenders were called for the extensions to the chemistry, biology and geology buildings so that we could have firm prices on which to base our decisions. To our dismay the total bids for the three buildings came in at $504,415 over the estimates given by our architects.

So we find ourselves in the serious position of suffering from the additive effect of our requested grant being cut by $1,262,200 and the construction bids being $504,415 over the estimated price. The result is that we cannot proceed with the construction of the three buildings, nor can we consider some other badly needed buildings which we had hoped to get on with, had we had full support. I think the attached tabulation sheets will indicate our position quite clearly.

Because of the seriousness of the implications in the letter from the vice president of administration attempts were made, through correspondence and other ways, to see whether the request of the University of New Brunswick, fully supported by the Atlantic Development Board, could be met. The letters from the premier of the province of New Brunswick and the minister of economics and resource development—I think it is—Mr. Higgins support the request of the University of New Brunswick.

Many people in the maritime provinces—and not just chauvinistically, either—legitimately feel that if there is one area where we can fulfil a useful role in trying to conduct a bootstrap operation, if one may call it that, it is within the various campuses of the Atlantic provinces. I am making this pitch for the University of New Brunswick, but I should be happy to make it for the University of Moncton, Mount Allison, Dalhousie, St. Francis Xavier, or any of our universities. Here is a pressing and obvious need. As the hon. member for Egmont said, we have been studied forwards and backwards and up and down. And here was one request that was supported by the A.D.B. and ruthlessly cut back by Treasury Board.

I wanted to read a number of letters into the record but I feel guilty about taking up any more time. I have letters to the deputy minister from the president of the University of New Brunswick, letters to Dr. Weeks and other letters, but I will not take any more time. I see the President of the Treasury Board is at the table, no doubt studying the implications of my request. I hope he can persuade his colleagues to support my reasonable request. I hope that those hon. gentlemen will see their way clearly to doing something—and I hope that something will not be another study. The need is pressing. As I was saying, there are people in the maritime provinces who feel that our universities can support the sort of role that is performed, in the field of superior education, by institutions such as Boston and Cambridge in the state of Massachusetts. We are ready to undertake this job but we must have support, not only from the Atlantic Development Board, but from the minister and his colleagues.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, I do not feel like making a speech at this time, although I am pregnant with several—I think our permissive society allows us to use such expressions. Before these estimates pass I wonder if the minister would indicate to the committee with reasonable precision the amount that is contributed by the government of Canada to the Economic Improvement Corporation—the E.I.C.—of Prince Edward Island, which is progressing with a comprehensive plan for the improvement of our province. We want to know how much financial assistance is being given by the government of Canada. Corollary to that, and this is also important, can the minister indicate to the house, and thereby indirectly to Prince Edward Island, when it is likely that we can expect that an agreement between the two governments will be signed so that the things which have been promised to our province in this important field can be brought to fruition.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, with regard to the first question, I will try to obtain the information and give it to the hon. gentleman before ten o'clock. I do not have it at hand. As to the second question, I cannot say when an agreement is going to be signed because it is supposed to be an agreement between both parties. I hope it will be signed soon, but I cannot tell you when.

Mr. Macquarrie: I understand the premier of Prince Edward Island indicated that this will probably take place early in December. Does the minister feel that this is an optimistic, pessimistic or realistic suggestion.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think, Mr. Chairman, that this is a realistic assessment, but I cannot really say, because as I mentioned before, this is supposed to be an agreement between both parties.

[Translation]

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Chairman, my remarks will be brief.

Still, I should like to say how surprised I am at the remarks of the hon. members for Egmont (Mr. D. MacDonald) and for Kootenay-West (Mr. Randolph Harding), who claim to be astonished that the minister should remain mum about his plans and projects concerning the policies of his new department.

To my mind—and I am not defending the minister for I know full well that he is quite capable of doing so himself—it must be admitted that it is no time for him, when we are asked to pass the estimates for what was left when he took over his new portfolio, to comment on the new policy he is in the process of formulating with the help of his officials and other wise men.

The attitude of those two members surprises me for they know full well, that those things must be considered and reconsidered; plans intended to bring a long term solution to the problems of regional disparities cannot be set down on paper just like that, overnight, or even in six months, in spite of what some people maintain. I therefore cannot approve the attitude of my honourable opponents. I even feel that, under the circumstances, their criticism is somewhat unfair.

Obviously, we are all anxious to know the plans of the new department, whatever party we belong to; but I feel that such eagerness should simmer down to a healthy patience. Let us give the minister time to think out the new policies he intends to implement. It would be useless to criticize all those projects at this time; it would only further mix up and delay the plans he intends to put before the house.

In this regard, I might mention the long term project some of my electors are working on. For instance, the members of the North-West area Development Council, which takes in almost three quarters of my riding, have now been studying for four years the problems of regional disparities and economic development.

In spite of their long hours of sitting, and long nightly studies, they have not been able to find a magic solution to their problems and they are still at it. It is then hardly surprising that the government cannot on short notice submit a concrete project that would solve the problem of regional disparities. I might have mentioned as well one group of people in the Riley Brook region of the Upper Tobique who have during recent months been reviewing the problems of economic disparities.

Criticisms are good but patience is better; those who can wait will learn in due time what has been accomplished by the minister and his team. The minister must be completely free to do his work and plan the organization of his department. I think all hon. members should now give him this opportunity. He should not be pressured into giving us merely a rough draft of the project he intends to introduce at the very beginning of the year.

Mr. Chairman, those were the few comments I wanted to make.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: During the passage of the estimates of the Atlantic Development Board I drew attention to problems surrounding the closing of mines on Bell Island. In the course of my examination of actions taken by the Atlantic Development Board it became obvious to me that the programs they had brought in to meet this emerging situation had, in fact, proved unsuccessful.

After the mines closed down in 1966 the board, acting on the advice of a committee, decided on a program of forced migration, feeling there was no solution to the problem caused by the closing of this industry and that the only answer would be to provide the residents of that unhappy place with a subsidy under whose terms the government of Canada in co-operation with the government of Newfoundland would provide home owners with a subsidy of $1,500 per home if they would leave the island. In other words, they would be able to sell homes which as a consequence of closing the mines had become practically worthless.

Officials of the Atlantic Development Board admitted in effect during the course of the committee hearings that the program had not been successful. They had set out to reduce the population of the island to the elderly and the very young. But after two years the island still has a population of 6,500 people including the old, the young, and more than 2,000, able-bodied people who are virtually unemployed and are forced to live on relief.

Until the closing of the mines the population of Bell Island was 14,000, or at least that was the peak population. These people had brought into being an incorporated municipality, a modern 50-bed hospital, a technical and vocational training school, high schools and all the things which provide modern amenities. Like most people, Bell Islanders are loyal to their community, proud of their accomplishments, proud of their schools, their hospital, the town hall and all the other things they have developed through their labours and as a consequence of their taxes. It was with a heavy heart that many of them decided to write off their homes and their investment in the community, with its schools, its hospital and all the other necessary requirements of a town of 12,000 or 14,000 people. But since they could not provide their families with a livelihood on Bell Island, they decided to move elsewhere. Many others feared the consequences of such a move. They were uncertain about what they would face if they left the security of their homes, hesitant to move out into the world for which they had not been trained and whose problems they were not prepared to meet. Many people preferred to stay.

This brings me to the point of my remarks. After two years of failure on the part of the federal government and the provincial governments to come to grips with this problem, Bell Island stands today, and I hope the minister hears my remarks, as a mute testimony to bureaucratic bungling and government inefficiency.

The government has failed to meet this problem right in our own environment. A community of 6,500 is still resident on Bell Island, the vast majority of whom are living on relief. This, to me, indicates a complete incapacity on the part of the government of this country to live up to its responsibilities. Poverty is no longer a problem of regional disparity. It is widespread, it is national. I have no less an authority for saying this than that of the economic advisory council. Hon. members are probably familiar with the fifth annual report of the Economic Council of Canada which brings this national disgrace into focus. Canadians will continue to live in poverty in this country as long as we have a government, as long as we have bureaucracy, which does not have the heart to take seriously conditions such as exist today on Bell Island.

I have seen poverty, as have other hon. members. It is a relative thing. It is what you make it. Poverty, to my mind, is not the starvation of Biafra, tragic as that may be. Poverty is the problem of Canadians who have been deprived of their national heritage, deprived of their pride, deprived of their right to earn a living. Poverty to me is a situation where children are brought up in environments where their parents have no opportunity to work. Heads of families are degraded by public welfare, people are being destroyed before our very eyes. There are people who are dead; they are dead because they have no other source of income, save a government cheque which comes to them once a month and for which they have to plead that they are in poverty. Mr. Chairman, the minister who will be speaking to the house tonight hopefully will have something to say about this matter. How can we deny that there is a situation, when there are 6,500 Canadians who are on relief. These people are ignored by the government of Canada, they are ignored by the government of their own province and they are ignored by a minister who does not see fit to listen to my remarks. Yet, this supposedly is a government in a just society. It is a government, within the ministry of which sits the minister of regional development, that great exponent of the just society, who now chooses to ignore me. He does not know what I am talking about, and just chooses to ignore what I say. Surely the federal government, working in close co-operation with the government of Newfoundland, must now recognize that it has failed in this deliberate program—and I repeat "deliberate program"—to reduce the population of Bell Island to the aged, the infirm and the very young. They have failed because we still have today in this country a community with 6,500 people containing not only the aged, the infirm and the very young, but also some 2,000 able bodied people on relief who are prepared, and in fact want, to work for a living.

This great exponent of the just society, this minister who represents the working population of the province of Quebec, ignores what I say. Mr. Chairman, I realize the minister must listen to a lot of things. I know he has to listen to representations. I know the passage of his estimates must represent to him an absolute bore, as indeed parliament represents a bore to the Prime Minister. But I say to the minister that the sufferings of the people in my constituency, as in all of Canada, surely must command his attention. I hope the minister of regional development will see fit to reply to my remarks, even though he has so far seen fit to ignore them. I hope he will be able to say what the representatives of the Atlantic Development Board said before the committee, when they said that the government of Canada does not have an answer to this problem, and then I hope he will say that the government of this country is prepared to look into it with a view to using the expertise they have at their disposal and the vast resources they have at their disposal to alleviate the real tragedy that exists today in this country, where there is a community of 6,500 people without jobs and without hope who look to this government for an answer.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, may I have one moment in order to give an answer which I promised. The amount is $600,000.

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Chairman, we have listened with a great deal of interest during the past hours to the voices of gloom, doom, disaster and worse. I think there are very few people in this house, certainly from the maritime provinces, who would regard these Jeremiah voices as their authentic voice in this parliament of Canada. We have not heard one optimistic word all day about the future of the great maritimes. There has not been one optimistic word. We have heard nothing but condemnation of the efforts being made by the government of this country, this country of great potential, to lessen the regional disparity. We have been told that nothing is being done in the maritime provinces. We do not find in any of the budget speeches of the province of Nova Scotia in recent years words which—

Mr. Nowlan: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Perrault: I hold in my hand—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Annapolis Valley on a point of order.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, since the Prime Minister is unable to tell us who this man is, I would like to know—

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Nowlan: —whether he is a member and what his name is.

Mr. Perrault: You see, Mr. Chairman, this typifies the kind of destructive, negative opposition we have heard in this house today. Those in the opposition, who are so concerned about the facts, may some day wake up to a realization of what actually is being done to lessen the regional disparity in this country. I hold in my hand the facts about the kind of aid that is being extended to the maritime provinces. I hope that my friend from Nova Scotia, who had nothing but words of condemnation for the government would note this. The Federal contribution to Nova Scotia, its municipalities and certain provincial institutions in 1961-62 amounted to $56 million, in 1962-63 to $65 million, in 1963-64 to $69 million, in 1964-65 to $77.64 million, in 1965-66 to $95.246 million, in 1966-67 to $132 million and in 1967-68 to $181 million.

Mr. Peters: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. May I ask the hon. member what the source is for the figures he has just presented to the house.

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Chairman, I would be delighted to table all these figures. I will make them available to the house. Here are the figures—

Mr. Peters: On a point of order—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Timiskaming on a point of order.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I am rising on the same point of order. It is a rule of this house that when the source of figures which have been presented to the house is asked for the hon. member must give that source. I only asked for the source because I think it would be of interest to hon. members.

Mr. Perrault: I shall be delighted to do so. The source is the Dominion Bureau of Statistics official figures. If you would like explicit information I think you could extract it very easily. The Leader of the Opposition, when he was premier of Nova Scotia did not condemn the Atlantic development fund and other programs of this kind. I resent very much the fact that—

Mr. McGrath: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Perrault: We listened to you and now you sit down.

Mr. Nowlan: You make a lot of sound and no sense.

Mr. Perrault: There is a program for improvement of poverty, increased economic efficiency and more vigorous competition.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Great progress is being made on the path to reducing economic disparity. I want to say I am immensely encouraged by the information and indication from the minister that we are going to see a new set of criteria established for the so-called slow growth areas. Up to this time the criteria have related to the number of unemployed people in this country. I believe that the number of unemployed people is not a valid criteria as to whether a certain area requires assistance. I hope that the minister can perhaps give us some indication of these new criteria. Surely the criteria—

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Perrault: Surely the criteria—

The Chairman: Order, please. Will the hon. member resume his seat.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I know the hon. member will not mind being interrupted at this point by the suggestion that in the six minutes left perhaps the minister would like to speak to the estimates in reply—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Perrault: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to a point of order.

The Chairman: Order, please. Will hon. members resume their seats. I understand the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order because of the attempt made to table the document to which the hon. member referred. I draw Your Honour's attention to the fact that since this was not received by the chair, or properly tabled, and if such a document is to be tabled, similar figures should be provided by that hon. member for each and every province in the country.

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Order, please. I am advising the committee that the document was not tabled.

Mr. Perrault: I simply want to say that I premeditated the member's request. I had made statistics available to the table relating to every province in Canada, including British Columbia, Ontario and Saskatchewan, Alberta and all the rest. The facts are available.

[Mr. Perrault.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Chairman: Order, please. I should like to repeat that these figures were not tabled, nor was the document tabled. I understand the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond is rising now on a question of privilege.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, with all honesty I should like to say—

An hon. Member: You haven't had a valid point of privilege for five years.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like the hon. member to withdraw his remarks.

An hon. Member: Make it six years.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Chairman, I should like the hon. member to withdraw the remarks, that he premeditated my move in requesting that similar statistics be made available for all provinces.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Chairman: Order, please. May I suggest to the committee that I think the suggestion by the hon. member for Egmont was a reasonable one. If the committee wishes to hear from the minister in the last few minutes we should make provision to do so. On the other hand it is important to recognize that the hon. member has this time to use if he wishes.

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Chairman, I simply say to the hon. member that I anticipated his desire.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I say to the hon. member, you are a liar.

Mr. Perrault: That is an unparliamentary expression but I shall just consider the source, Mr. Chairman. I shall complete my remarks and sit down very shortly. I urge the minister to tell us whether we are going to have a set of criteria which will take into account realistically the areas of slow development which exist in the country. Surely if a viable income base can be established anywhere in this country, in the maritimes or in British Columbia, let us provide assistance for such economic growth. If a viable income base cannot be established, then let us improve our manpower mobility program, our retraining program and simply leave the labour force where it exists. I think I echo the feeling of many Canadians when I say that we are improving in the mobility of labour and doing an excellent job of retraining labour, in spite of what the opposition says. Surely the time has arrived to attempt to co-ordinate the educational facilities which exist in this country and all provinces. It is ridiculous to say to a man who wants to go to work in Manitoba—

Mr. McGrath: I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Perrault: Surely the hon. member who is now speaking is using a surreptitious way in which to prevent the minister speaking, by using up the time of the committee—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

The Chairman: Order, please. The procedure in the committee is that when an hon. member rises he should allow the Chair to recognize him.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, with great respect, I point out to you that the hon. member who now has the floor is speaking surreptitiously in a way to prevent the minister from replying, and is thereby inflicting closure on the committee.

Mr. Perrault: I want to point out to the house that had these interventions not occurred there would have been six or possibly ten minutes for the reply. The fault lies on this side of the house in failing to listen to what I have had to say so the minister could reply. I conclude by saying—

An hon. Member: Hurrah.

Mr. Perrault: If the federal government could work with the provinces, universities and school boards across the country to obtain a better agreement with respect to acceptable standards it would be easier for families in Canada to transfer from one province to another, and for university students to accommodate that switch as well.

The Chairman: Order, please. It being ten o'clock it is my duty, pursuant to the provisions of the special order adopted September 20, 1968, as amended December 4, 1968, to interrupt these proceedings and forthwith, without any amendment or debate, put every question necessary to dispose of the main and supplementary estimates now before the committee of supply. Accordingly, the chair proposes to continue with the department now being considered and proceed in alphabetical order, through those departments which remain before the committee of supply.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. With the unanimous consent of the committee perhaps the minister could reply to some of the representations that have been made tonight.

An hon. Member: No, you took up all the time.

Mr. McGrath: I repeat my request, for the unanimous consent of the committee to hear from the minister.

The Chairman: Order, please. If there is unanimous consent, of course, we could hear from the minister. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

An hon. Member: Hickory, dickory dock.

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Chairman: Order, please. Item agreed to.

The Chairman: That concludes the business of the committee of supply for the time being. Shall I rise and report certain resolutions—

Mr. Bell: On a point of order, I just want it to be recorded in Hansard for all posterity to see that the government, with its huge majority, has crammed through billions of dollars without the opposition having a chance to say anything about it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: Why didn't you vote against them?

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

House in committee of ways and means, Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

Mr. Drury moved:

Resolved, That towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending the 31st March, 1969, the sum of $1,575,-007,182.08 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

• (10:30 p.m.)

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, before the resolution is concurred in, let the record show that if the government has its way this is the last time the house will have an opportunity to have a discussion on a supply vote.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Drury thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-141, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1969.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

On clause 2—

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Chairman, might we have an explanation of this from the President of the Privy Council.

The Chairman: It is my understanding that there is no debate allowed at this point.

Mr. MacInnis: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman; I fully understand that the Prime Minister refuses to allow ministers to come into the house, but I now see a minister refused the opportunity to speak when he rises to his feet.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 3 to 6 inclusive agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Schedules A and B agreed to.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Chairman, while you are contemplating, I should just like to ask whether this is not a new record of western democracy so far as billions of dollars being spent?

An hon. Member: A million a minute.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a third time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Drury moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Baldwin: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the President of the Privy Council what business we will be conducting tomorrow, and when he proposes to introduce the bill dealing with the anti-dumping legislation?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Speaker. We will be dealing with the first two items under the name of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, firstly the motion for concurrence in the fourth report of the special committee on procedure of the house. I expect that the bill on anti-dumping will be considered during the course of this week and that the government will be ready for final approval. We will have to consider the matters under the ways and means resolution preceding it. The exact time in that regard will depend on the time it takes to conclude the procedure committee report.

Mr. Speaker, I move that the house do now adjourn.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.40 p.m.

APPENDIX

AIR CANADA—PRESS RELEASE RESPECTING WINNIPEG OVERHAUL BASE

Paul T. Hellyer, Minister of Transport announced today the government of Canada's proposal for maintaining repair and overhaul facilities in Winnipeg and developing additional aero-space manufacturing activity in Manitoba.

These plans include the retention of Viscount overhaul work, further maintenance work from other companies, and new work in building and assembling parts for new jet aircraft.

Following serious consideration of the representations made by the air policy committee of Manitoba, the government of Canada agreed that the people of Manitoba and the Winnipeg employees of Air Canada should be protected against the consequences arising from the Air Canada decision of several years ago to establish consolidated maintenance facilities in Montreal.

The government has therefore authorized Air Canada to commence negotiations with two large Canadian firms to enable one of them to undertake continued operation of the overhaul base in Winnipeg. Such negotiations will involve protection of the interests of present employees, maintenance of the present level of work, and provision for further expansion.

The two companies, Northwest Industries Ltd. and Aircraft Industries of Canada Ltd., have each submitted plans for major development of the Winnipeg overhaul facilities. Activity at the base will include present Viscount maintenance, additional Air Canada work, substantial repair and overhaul work from Lockheed California, repair of National Defence aircraft, and maintenance of other commercial aircraft. In addition, the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation has undertaken, as a result of purchases by Air Canada and the initiative of the federal government, to place substantial manufacturing and repair work with Manitoba firms. The combination of these specific commitments can produce in Manitoba a major centre of aero-space activity.

It is expected that negotiations with these companies will require several weeks. During this time the government of Canada has agreed to reconstruct the working party, composed of representatives of the government of Canada, the government of Manitoba and Air Canada to review all facts and considerations upon which the proposal has been based.

In announcing its proposal, the government of Canada has fulfilled the commitment made by former Prime Minister Lester B. Pearson, reiterated last year by the present Minister of Transport that...“the base will continue to be used for the overhaul of Viscount aircraft as long as these aircraft are in service” and ...“to ensure that other aircraft work is available in Winnipeg so that the eventual withdrawal of Viscounts is at least balanced by new activities...”

The government of Canada believes that through the co-operation of the people and government of Manitoba this proposal will permit Winnipeg to look forward to continued prominence as a major centre in the rapidly expanding aircraft industry.

PROCEDURE

CONSIDERATION OF COMMITTEE REPORT—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) has given notice of a question of privilege. Before hearing his question perhaps I might be allowed at this moment to give the result of the work I have done, with the advice of the senior officers of the table, in relation to the point raised yesterday by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

In a very learned presentation the hon. member suggested yesterday that the committee's fourth report should be considered in a committee of the whole rather than by a motion to concur therein with the Speaker in the chair. The member quoted a number of precedents going back to confederation which he submitted in support of his view that the report presented by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) should be referred to the committee of the whole.

Since yesterday, as I have noted, a review has been made of all instances when rules changes were proposed for the consideration of the House of Commons, beginning with and including the enactment of the first set of rules in 1867 but excluding the motions now before the house. There have been 29 such occasions. Many of these proposals, of course, were concerned with minor changes only, but some of the amendments which could be considered as substantial at least at the time they were proposed, were in fact debated with the Speaker in the chair. They were not considered in a committee of the whole.

For example, the 1952 amendments dealt with hours of adjournment, time of meeting and the consideration of private members' business. In that case the report of the special committee was considered by a motion to concur in the committee report; there was no reference to the committee of the whole.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre mentioned the rules changes in 1960-61 and in 1962. These alterations, I submit, were not inconsequential. The rules of procedure were amended, for instance, to reduce the length of speeches when private members' business was being considered. The length of the address and budget debates was reduced by two days in each case, a new procedure on questions was adopted, and private members' business was reorganized.

In 1960-61 and in 1962 all these changes were effected by way of concurrence in the report of a special committee. The proposals were not considered in committee of the whole. In all those cases the house itself, with the Speaker in the chair, debated the committee report. It will thus be seen that while most of the major revisions of house rules were considered in committees of the whole, as was quite correctly explained by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, on a number of other occasions there was in fact no provision made for debate in committee of the whole.

This leads us to the view expressed by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) that rule changes can be dealt with procedurally in one of two ways. The minister has suggested that either procedure has been acceptable to hon. members in the past in changing the standing orders of the house. This opinion is borne out particularly by more recent precedents, and especially by those of 1952, 1960-61 and 1962.

It may also be relevant to remind hon. members that in most cases when major revisions were proposed, these were considered first by a special committee chaired by the Speaker, as, for example, in 1867, 1876, 1927 and 1955. In the case now before us the Speaker did not participate in the special committee.

I should add that there must be serious doubt whether the Speaker has the authority to take the action suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. After all, the Speaker is guided and bound by existing rules, precedents and practice; he cannot arrogate to himself powers which the house itself has never placed in him. The hon. member referred to the flag debate when Mr. Speaker Macnaughton agreed to divide the question then before the house. That decision, however, was based on precedents and citations of Canadian and British authors, and specifically recognize the authority of the Speaker to divide a motion. There appears to be no precedent in Canadian parliamentary practice to support the proposition that the Speaker is at liberty to decree, on his own initiative, that a motion will be considered in committee of the whole rather than by the house, or by the house rather than by the committee.

Ruling by Mr. Speaker

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has submitted that the Speaker would have authority to direct that the proposed procedural changes be studied in committee of the whole, by virtue of standing order 50, which reads as follows:

Whenever Mr. Speaker is of opinion that a motion offered to the house is contrary to the rules and privileges of parliament, he shall apprise the house thereof immediately, before putting the question thereon, and quote the standing order or authority applicable to the case.

I would not think it could be argued reasonably that the motion to be proposed by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton is contrary to the rules of parliament. Is it contrary to the privileges of parliament? The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre contends that it is and that the procedure now contemplated would adversely affect the privileges of hon. members.

The question arises as to whether hon. members would have greater opportunity to debate and amend the report in a committee of the whole. The scope for debate and amendment, in my view—and I suggest this to hon. members—is as great with the Speaker in the chair as it would be in committee of the whole. There is no limit to the number of amendments that can be proposed at this stage. Each individual proposition may be the subject of an amendment by way of a direction to the special committee. Hon. members may wish to refer to citation 221 of Beauchesne's fourth edition which refers to permissive instructions and mandatory instructions. Citation 221 (2) reads as follows:

• (2:40 p.m.)

The object of mandatory instructions is to define the course of action which the committee must follow.

In view of this it seems to me the privileges of hon. members would not be diminished by conducting the debate with the Speaker in the chair.

My conclusion therefore is that the privileges of parliament are not affected in a way which would justify the Chair's intervention on the basis of standing order 50.

[Mr. Speaker.]

PRIVILEGE

MR. MCGRATH—OMISSION OF RESOLUTION FROM TRANSPORT COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege affecting the rights and privileges of every member of the house. In so doing I refer to the second report of the standing committee on transport and communications which was presented to the house on Tuesday, December 3, but in relation to which there has been no motion for concurrence. On December 3 the then chairman of the standing committee, the hon. member for Manicouagan (Mr. Blouin), introduced under routine proceedings a notice of motion that he would move concurrence in the report on Thursday next, which would have been December 5. To date there has been no such motion for concurrence.

My question of privilege relates more particularly to the fact that parliament has before it a document, the report of the committee on transport and communications, and it is my understanding that such report must constitute an accurate reflection of what took place in the committee and must at the very least record the various motions and resolutions forming part of the minutes of proceedings. The report now before the house does not contain the resolution moved by myself and adopted by the committee on Thursday, November 28. On Friday, December 6, the standing committee met and had as the first item on the agenda the motion moved by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grace, which reads as follows:

Resolved: That the resolution passed at the meeting of the standing committee on transport and communications held on Thursday, November 28, 1968, be now rescinded.

I might point out that this motion has not been voted on by the committee. I would point out for your information, sir, and for the information of the house, that the motion was an important one relating to the visit of the committee to the Atlantic provinces, authority for which is requested in the committee's second report. My motion called for deferment of any action by the C.N.R. in curtailing rail passenger service in Newfoundland until such time as the committee had an opportunity to visit Newfoundland with a view to examining the situation at first hand. I might point out that the matter is one of some urgency since the decision to phase out rail passenger service in Newfoundland has gone into effect as of December 2.

My question of privilege is based on the fact that the resolution adopted by the committee on November 28 was, in my view, deliberately omitted from its report to the house on November 29; that it constitutes an important part of the committee's recommendation to visit the Atlantic provinces, and thereby infringes upon the rights and privileges of myself and the other members of that committee who by majority vote moved its adoption.

I therefore move:

That the second report of the standing committee on transport and communications be referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections to determine the reason for the omission of the resolution adopted by the committee on November 28 from the second report of the committee presented to the house on November 29, and which reads as follows:

"Resolved: That the Canadian Transport Commission be requested to postpone the implementation of its decision to abandon railway service in Newfoundland until such a time as the committee travel to Newfoundland to study the transportation problems of the Atlantic provinces."

Mr. Speaker: As hon. members know, the Chair has to decide in circumstances such as these whether there is a prima facie case of privilege. I would appreciate hearing from hon. members on that point to facilitate the Chair in the making of a ruling in due course.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to endorse the remarks made by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and to commend the very able and succinct manner in which he presented his question of privilege. Unlike some questions of privilege, this one had attached to it a motion relating to the fact that a resolution adopted by the standing committee on transport and communications with reference to Newfoundland railway service was not included in the report of the standing committee. The hon. member has moved, therefore, that the report of the standing committee on transport and communications be referred to the committee on privileges and elections.

Now, I think the first question to ask and answer, in accordance with your direction, Mr. Speaker, is why the hon. member for St. John's East wants to have these facts examined in the committee on privileges and elections. He wants to ascertain why this motion which was passed in one committee, namely the committee on transport and communications, should have been omitted from the report. There seems to be some suggestion, and I say this without any reservation whatever, that there was a little hanky-panky. We cannot come to a definite conclusion on this, however, without evidence. The only way we can determine whether or not there has been hanky-panky so far as this committee is concerned, the chairman of which was a government member and which was controlled by a government majority, is to get the people we believe to be directly concerned with the matter before a committee and examine them under oath about this omission from the committee report.

As Your Honour knows, so I do not need to repeat this, once a matter has been dealt with in one session, or dealt with in a committee, that ends the matter. You will recall our argument in relation to the Crowsnest Pass freight rates. When the section of the bill dealing with those rates was defeated in committee of the whole, the then minister of transport moved another amendment relating to what was called statutory rates. At that time we took the position that they were trying to take a second kick at the cat. We say that the facts of that case are on all fours with the facts of this case. If one committee, Your Honour, has the right to rescind a motion which was carried in that standing committee, then every standing committee of the House of Commons is a farce.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: The question of privilege, sir, relates to the fact that we want to find out why the Liberals tried to pack a meeting to rescind this motion. Indeed, they would have done so if every Tory had not been present, together with the members of other parties, to make sure they could not get away with that hanky-panky they were trying to perform.

Now is a good time, perhaps, to mention the fact that this government is trying to transfer to the standing committees consideration of expenditures involving $11 billion, and to have them approved. Now, is this not a true question of privilege? If such committees get that authority and can be controlled by a Liberal chairman and a Liberal majority, and if when the Liberals have been absent they can then meet in a quiet little room to rescind a motion, what will happen to the expenditures and taxation problems of this nation? We cannot involve people in certain places who have given us certain information but I can say to you, as I stand in my place as a member of parliament, we believe there has been hanky-panky so far as this committee is concerned. I cannot speak for other committees. The only way we can find out who the culprits are in relation to this committee is to place them before another committee. The only regret I have is that this other committee will be chaired by a Liberal, and will have a Liberal majority.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would ask you to give this point of privilege serious consideration, because it does go to the very root of democracy. The present situation constitutes a dictatorial act that is dangerous to democracy and will destroy democracy. Those are the three "d's" that we want to investigate as far as this question of privilege is concerned. I support and incorporate in my argument everything the distinguished member has said, and I hope, sir, you will give this matter your most serious consideration; because this institution will fall to pieces if this is the way our committee structure is going to be run, particularly when the government hopes to turn over the responsibility for $11 billion to this kind of kangaroo court.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I rise briefly to support the motion moved by the hon. member for St. John's East. I should like to point out to Your Honour one or two matters that have not been dealt with already, and which I think are very pertinent to the point at issue.

First of all, a report presented by the standing committee on transport and communications was tabled in this house and the usual procedure was not followed, in that concurrence of that report was not asked for. Instead this report of the committee, or the alleged report, still lies on the table of the house, and this in itself is a very strange state of affairs from which I think any reasonable persons could draw their own conclusions.

Second, I have been a member of the standing committee on transport and communications since this session of parliament started, and to the best of my knowledge attended all its meetings during the period that the matter contained in the report has been dealt with. It is quite possible that I might have missed a committee meeting because so many committee meetings were called without notice and unexpectedly, without any warning being given the members of the committee, but I repeat that to the best of my knowledge and belief I have not missed any meetings.

At no time to my knowledge was this alleged report that has been tabled in the house ever presented to the committee for approval or discussion, or as far as I know to the steering committee either. This seems a very strange state of affairs. I should like to know exactly how this report was drawn up, who drew it up, and what authority there was for tabling it in this house. I have been a member of committees of this house for nearly 15 years but have never before seen a situation where committee reports, which are normally drafted by the chairman and the steering committee, were not presented to the committee for approval before being tabled in the house.

In my opinion there is a prima facie case here for referring this particular report, which still lies on the table of this house, to the standing committee on privileges and elections in order to ascertain exactly how the report was put before the house, who drafted it, and what if any omissions were made in the report.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, in urging that Your Honour grant this motion for referral to the committee on privileges and elections, I must first of all state that although I have not been in this institution of confusion too many months I am finding so many things that in my opinion are against the grain of democracy that it makes me wonder in which direction we are going in this regard.

The point I would certainly like to have cleared up and which I think can be cleared up if the matter is referred to the committee on privileges and elections is what purpose a committee really performs, and what its function is in this institution.

I bring this up, Mr. Speaker, because it has always been my opinion that matters referred to a committee and referred back to this house, or any action taken by the committee, should be dealt with. I respectfully suggest that the resolution in question before the transport committee was adopted by a majority vote. I thought at that time, and I was then serving as a temporary replacement for the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Schreyer) on the steering committee, that we would be consulted with regard to the report to be brought into the house. We were not consulted. That report did not include everything that had been passed by the transport committee. I was disturbed to find that the report did not include that one portion referred to by the hon. member.

I therefore ask Your Honour to give serious consideration to referring this matter to the standing committee on privileges and elections in order that we may clear up this particular matter once and for all.

I plead with Your Honour to do this. If committees are to perform useful functions—and no doubt hon. members are well aware of the debate that is to come before us—then committees must be given authority to pass resolutions and motions that will be recognized by this house. If they are not recognized by this house and voted on by members of this house, there is no useful purpose in having any committees under our system of government.

Mr. Albenbrack: This is the just society.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to say a few words in support of the motion which has just been moved to refer the second report of the committee on transport and communications to be committee on privileges and elections.

I was very much surprised, on November 28 last, to hear the chairman of that committee making an awkward attempt to explain on TV what happened during the committee meeting.

Mr. Speaker, it will remembered that, on that day, the house adjourned in order to allow a larger number of members to participate in the proceedings of the committees, and if that motion was adopted in the transport and communications committee it is due to the absence of the members of the party in power. To my mind, that proves the weakness of the party in power with regard to committee work, and that is one of the reasons why this report should be referred to the committee on privileges and elections for a more thorough study of the matter.

• (3:00 p.m.)

A little later on today, we will probably consider the special committee report on the procedure of the house, and I note that this report intends to give a greater responsibility to the committees of the house.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, if such things are allowed to happen in committees, if members of committees who are members of the opposition, are given so little consideration I am wondering why we should give greater responsibility to these committees for consideration of departmental estimates or bills that are referred to them.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I support the motion made by the hon. member.

[English]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I think the question before Your Honour is a very simple one. The allegation is that, at best, there has been a misrepresentation of what has happened in this committee. A committee report must reflect the true state of affairs with regard to resolutions which have been carried by that committee. If here we have, say, an innocent omission, that would be an innocent misrepresentation. On the other hand it has been alleged, and Your Honour must take cognizance of this, that there has been a deliberate omission of a resolution carried in the committee. Under the circumstances I submit it is not for Your Honour to decide whether there has been either a deliberate misrepresentation or an innocent misrepresentation, but whether there is a prima facie case of an abuse of the privileges of hon. members of this house.

After all, it is a report of a committee of this house which had been charged with the examination of a certain subject matter. If the committee report is a misrepresentation, innocent or otherwise, of the conclusions of that committee then there must be an examination, because there has been a breach of the privileges of this house.

I put it to Your Honour that this is the limited question you have to decide. With the greatest respect, I suggest to Your Honour that the motion is well founded.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I would have thought that by now the Prime Minister or someone on behalf of the government would have made your task easier, Mr. Speaker, by agreeing to the motion. If there was nothing wrong in what was done, then the government members of the committee on privileges and elections would be able to show that this was so and the matter could be cleared up.

Mr. McIlraith: No. There would then have to be the resignation of the member making the charge.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lewis: If there is something wrong, the thing has been done and I would think the Prime Minister would be particularly concerned about this. Why do I hold this view, and why do I take a few moments of the time of the house to urge Your Honour to see a prima facie case of privilege? I do so in the context of the fact that we are about to consider changes in the rules, one of the most important parts of which consists of giving more work and more authority to the standing committees of this house.

I was saying we were about to change the rules so as to give more authority and more work to committees of this house. If the allegations are correct—and I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that you cannot know at this point—you have to accept them as stated, and there has been no contradiction of them.

If it is still correct that a report of a standing committee can be written by a chairman alone, or by a chairman and some of his buddies; if it does not need to go to the steering committee, then those who say our standing committee procedure will be a farce are thoroughly correct.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: One then gets the suspicion that one of the objectives of putting estimates in the hands of the committees is, in the minds of some persons, precisely to achieve that kind of purpose.

Mr. McIlraith: Order.

Mr. Lewis: The Solicitor General may call "order" if he likes, but I suggest to Your Honour that in the context of the duties we want to place on these committees it becomes terribly important that the kind of misbehaviour alleged against the chairman of the committee should not be permitted to go unchallenged, without action being taken by this house.

This is why I suggest that Your Honour is deciding in this case not merely an isolated instance but something which is important as a precedent for the future work of this parliament. As to the incident itself, I agree that what you have before you is a simple allegation of misconduct by an officer of a standing committee of this house, an allegation that a report tabled in this house was an incorrect report, an incomplete report which did not represent the decision of the committee. I can hardly see anything which is more clearly an abuse of the privileges of the house than that.

Mr. Lundrigan: On the same question of privilege, may I just say "ditto".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Lewis.]

Hon. D. S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): I rise only to deal with some of the points made by the hon. member for York South. First, he implied there was something sinister about the fact that at this point the government has not indicated whether the motion would be accepted by it. Perhaps I can remind the hon. member that at this stage we are faced with the question of deciding whether there is a prima facie question of privileges, not whether the motion is acceptable. When that has been determined we will be prepared to make a decision in favour of a reference.

It seems to me that allegations of the sort the hon. member for York South has made against the chairman of the committee, who is regrettably absent today, are the kind of thing which should be considered by the standing committee on privileges and elections, and for my part I would be quite prepared to support this motion. But I would point out to the hon. member that there is a tradition in this house that where serious allegations such as the hon. member has made against the chairman of the committee are discovered to be unfounded, it has been the tradition in the past that the hon. member's seat goes with them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I suggest both to the hon. member and to others in this house—and I say this on behalf of the absent member who is not here to defend himself—

Mr. Bell: Talk about tradition, when last night we passed billions of dollars in estimates in five minutes.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I suggest it is not proper to suggest there has been some kind of false or fraudulent conduct on the part of the hon. member who is absent, and I for one would be delighted to see the allegations made by the hon. member for York South and others disproved by the committee.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the President of the Privy Council a simple question. If there is unanimous agreement that this be considered a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker might be able to deal with it without the necessity of this debate.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): May I say to the hon. member that Mr. Speaker has the right and the responsibility to decide questions like this, and the hon. member for York South should not seek to arrogate this right to himself.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): It is well to go back and read what happened on December 6 when this matter was brought before the house by my hon. friend from St. John's East. As reported at page 3587 the question was asked as follows:

> Would the house leader advise us what is the position of the resolution which was passed by the committee dealing with the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission allowing the Canadian National to abandon rail passenger service in Newfoundland, which was not incorporated in the first report of the committee to which I referred in my original question?

The answer given by the President of the Privy Council is most revealing:

> I have not studied this. I am advised the resolution was passed but that it was out of order.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Mr. Diefenbaker: I can understand the overheated nature of the hon. gentleman's argument a moment ago, because after all conscience does have its effect, even on ministers. In other words, sir, there is the admission by the minister that a resolution was passed, and he is now endeavouring to raise a smokescreen concerning the unfortunate illness of the chairman of the committee. He himself took the responsibility, in his answer in the house, to admit that the resolution had been passed, but said he was advised it was illegal. Sir, if this be not a privilege of parliament then we might as well close down here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The government goes from stand to stand as it tramples on the rights of the house. It says in effect, "Let us be efficient and have an expanded committee system". I am one of those who through the years have not supported that stand. I believe this committee system is the American congressional plan and will not work under our system of government.

We are to have committees now. This is the essence of the proposed change in the rules, but even before the matter has come before the house we have the situation of an alteration of a resolution clearly defined by the minister and which he said was out of order. What business has he to be an appellate court over a committee of the House of Commons?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, if this be not a question of privilege we might just as well close down the committee, for each time the government finds itself with its points down or its members absent and loses a resolution it can say "It wasn't legal; it was unlawful." This is a repeat performance of what happened in February, 1967, when the government was defeated and said in effect, "Oh, we are not defeated. We will give you another chance to say that we are here properly." And they got that chance.

This is a denial of the rights of every member of the house, and I am surprised that no member of the government has stood up and agreed to the necessity of an investigation taking place. No doubt there will be red faces if it does take place, because the minister who has just spoken admitted in the house that the resolution had been passed. So there is no question about that; it was passed. Sir, we have to rely on Your Honour to protect our rights which are being trampelled on day by day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The minister has already taken part in this debate.

An hon. Member: He wants to break another rule.

Mr. Speaker: The minister cannot speak a second time except with the consent of the house—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: —or unless he rises on a point of order or on a question of privilege.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Well, Mr. Speaker, the regrettable thing is that the right hon. member for Prince Albert during—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister knows the rule. He can speak a second time only if he has the consent of the house or if he seeks the floor on a point of order or a question of privilege, and I have not heard that.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the only point I would make, and I am raising it by way of privilege to speak a second time, is that my remarks have been misconstrued by the right hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I refer to the fact that as the right hon. member for Prince Albert read out, I made it perfectly clear on that occasion that I had no direct knowledge of the events that took place. As a matter of fact the hon. member for St. John's East at that time took exception to my remarks and I had to indicate—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Read on. It is just as well, because I missed that next section.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Perhaps I could be heard, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister should be allowed to speak. He has claimed the right to speak a second time under a standing order which provides clearly that an hon. member can speak a second time if he claims his words have been misinterpreted. Standing order 37 is the one in question, if hon. members will consult it.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I made it perfectly clear as recorded at pages 3587 and 3588 of Hansard that I had no direct knowledge of this. I was recounting advice I had received, and as recorded at page 3588 I indicated that what I did was probably wrong—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Read the next line.

Mr. Speaker: Order. We are getting into a discussion on the substance of the matter. I see that the hon. member for Annapolis Valley would like the floor so I shall recognize him, but I have to indicate to hon. members that I have reached the point where I can give a decision.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is only one point I would like to cover which has not been covered and which might affect the deliberations of Your Honour. Not only is a prima facie case supposed to be established, but I think the evidence is abundantly clear here today from what has been said on both sides of the house, in heat and out of heat, that privilege is at stake. The right hon. member for Prince Albert has read part of the record but, more important, we have the statement of an hon. member here today stating as a fact that has not been rejected and challenged, and cannot be rejected and challenged by any hon. member, that this resolution was passed.

Unless committees are to become a charade the privilege we suggest is well established. but there is the other point on which I am afraid Your Honour may be misled, and that is that a question of privilege must be raised at the earliest possible opportunity. Addressing my remarks to that point I would point out that this matter was before the transport committee, and even after the report was tabled an abortive move was made, one day a week afterward, to rescind the resolution, and there were rumblings and moves made thereafter to bring the resolution back before the committee.

I would point out that as a result of the estimates being passed last night in an abundance of dollars, in effect the work of the transport committee expired. It was only after last night, when the work of the committee expired, that the hon. member for St. John's East had the opportunity to raise the question of privilege today. So, Mr. Speaker, you have the question of privilege, and you have it raised at the earliest opportunity, which is today.

Mr. Speaker: The conclusion I have come to after hearing hon. members of the house is that it obviously would be easier to resolve the question now before the house in a standing committee than it might be to resolve it in the House of Commons. My initial reaction was to follow the advice of the hon. member for Calgary North and give the matter serious and protracted consideration, but hon. members have indicated quite clearly, in my view, that there is a prima facie case of privilege and that it is the type of question which might be sent to a committee.

I must say I am worried to some extent about the remedy sought by the motion. I think the committee would have some difficulty in examining the members of another committee, one committee of the house looking into the affairs of another committee. That may cause procedural difficulties at that stage, but that question is not what we are seized with at the present time.

What the Chair has to decide without resolving the question of whether it is a de facto question of privilege is merely to determine whether it is a prima facie case of privilege. I think the hon. member for Annapolis Valley has made a very important point, one which had worried me all along, as to whether this matter had been raised at the first opportunity. In view of the fact that we have reached the end of consideration of the committee's reports probably the question has been raised at the first opportunity, thus disposing of one objection which I had in the back of my mind.

I do have to reach the conclusion that there is a prima facie case of privilege and, if the house decides the motion should be carried, the matter would be referred to a committee as proposed by the hon. member for St. John's East. I would therefore put the motion of the hon. member for St. John's East, as follows:

Mr. McGrath seconded by the hon. member for Calgary North, moves that the second report of the standing committee on transport and communications be referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections to determine the reason for the omission of the resolution adopted by the committee on November 28th, from the second report of the committee presented to the house on November 29th, and which reads as follows:

"Resolved:—That the Canadian Transport Commission be requested to postpone the implementation of its decision to abandon railway service in Newfoundland until such a time as the committee travel to Newfoundland to study the transportation problems of the Atlantic provinces."

Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BROADCASTING

INQUIRY AS TO REQUESTS FOR TAPES OF NEWS BROADCASTS

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants inquired whether any member of the task force on government information had requested the Canadian Radio-Television Commission to ask Canadian radio stations for tapes of news broadcasts. I stated that I would inquire, and on the following day I informed the house that the answer to this question was no.

While the answer given to the house was technically correct, in that no member of the task force made any such request, I have since learned that a researcher employed by the task force did initiate such a request.

The task force, as hon. members know, is seeking to assess the effectiveness of government information services. To assist it in doing so the task force studies the manner in which information about government activities reaches the public. Information printed in the daily and periodical press is collected through the employment of clipping services; information broadcast by radio stations is equally important but requires a different technique of collection. The Canadian Radio-Television Commission was approached in this respect for its technical assistance. What was being studied was not the operation of any radio station but only the transmission of news events. A technical supervisor at C.R.T.C. undertook to request ten radio stations to provide tapes. This request was made at the end of November.

I felt it necessary, Mr. Speaker, to enlarge to this extent on my previous answer, to assure the house that there is no attempt on the part of the government or on the part of the task force to withhold information in this respect, and I apologize should my brief answer of Friday have been regarded as in any sense complete.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, since I was the member who raised this question I should like to thank the right hon. Prime Minister for his more complete explanation today. I wish now to simply say for the record that it is a matter of regret that the officials of either one or other body who advise him gave him incorrect advice in the first place.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

LATER CONSIDERATION OF MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN COMMITTEE REPORT

On the order: Motions:

December 6, 1968—Mr. Blair (Chairman of the special committee on procedure of the house)

That the fourth report of the special committee on procedure of the house presented to the house on Friday, December 6, 1968, be concurred in.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am wondering whether the house will agree at this stage, before the hon. member proceeds with his motion for concurrence, that this motion be taken as the first order of government business in order that the ordinary routine proceedings can be followed. I believe hon. members and the government might be prepared to accept this suggestion.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I must consider this in view of standing order 43(2), and would accept this suggestion with the understanding that the provisions of this standing order would apply, having the effect to transfer this as the first item of government business, giving it priority thereafter. Subject to that I think this suggestion would be acceptable.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Mr. Baldwin: Agreed.

Inquiries of the Ministry

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

REPORTED ANNOUNCEMENT BY STATE SECRETARY OF CONFERENCE ON ECONOMIC DISPARITY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the Secretary of State was announcing government policy in Winnipeg when he said that in January or February a special federal-provincial conference will be held on economic disparity.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the statement, and I must confess I am not aware of this timetable. I imagine the minister may have been considering a meeting at the official or ministerial level rather than a full-blown federal-provincial conference.

Mr. Stanfield: Is it possible that the government of Canada, as the Secretary of State said in Winnipeg, considers that the Canadian constitution and economic disparity have nothing in common and that economic disparity and constitutional equity is secondary and must be preceded by linguistic ability? Does that represent government policy?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, let me say again that I must see the statement to assure myself that those are exactly the words of the Secretary of State. Government policy on this has been stated many times. There is a danger to the unity of this country on a language basis, but there is also a danger on the basis of economic disparity, and it should be the intent of any federal government to seek justice in both fields.

Mr. Stanfield: Would the Prime Minister confer with the Secretary of State and perhaps make a statement to the house that is acceptable to the minister and the right hon. gentleman as to what is the policy of the government?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I often confer with the Secretary of State, but I have made this statement now without conferring with him as of this date. The statement is that both are extremely important; the correction of regional disparity and the correction of linguistic inequities.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister inform the house whether such a conference, if it does occur, will take place finally in respect of regional development, and whether some consideration will be given to provincial and other important bodies such as municipalities participating in such a conference?

Mr. Trudeau: In answer to the first part of the question I must repeat that as far as I am concerned I have no knowledge of the minister having made that particular statement. If he feels there should be a federal-provincial conference at one level or another, and if this is agreeable to the provinces, it certainly would be acceptable to this government.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Is the Prime Minister suggesting that there is a possibility such a conference would not in fact be headed by the present minister of regional development rather than the Secretary of State?

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

APPLICATION FOR RATE INCREASES BY BELL TELEPHONE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General, who is scheduled to head up a department of communications, asking him whether in view of the record of profits by the Bell Telephone Company, which has in some years exceeded the permissive level set up by an appropriate authority, he is giving consideration to steps to oppose the application by the Bell Telephone Company for an increase in rates.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Transport Commission is a court of record set up by the government and proposes to investigate the justification of such claims.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Canadian Transport Commission hears evidence and argument and, does review with various levels of government this evidence and argument, I should like to ask specifically whether the minister has given consideration to taking some appropriate steps to make sure that the Canadian Transport Commission is not only effective, but effective in the public interest.

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member may be assured that the Postmaster General will follow the hearings with close attention. What action he may take is a question which he obviously cannot resolve at the present time.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO PROVINCES TO MEET EDUCATIONAL COSTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in an answer to my question, the right honourable Prime Minister answered and I quote:

> We are not among those who hold blindly to views of the past.

Could he tell me if taking into account the recommendations contained in the Aird Report of 1927 which recognizes to the provinces the exclusive legislative right in educational matters is to hold blindly to views of the past?

Mr. Speaker: This question is argumentive and I do not think that, as put, it is in order.

OIL

STUDY OF DEVELOPMENTS IN ALASKA AND NORTHERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister which I intend to phrase in two parts. Will he be meeting within the next few days with Premier Manning of the province of Alberta in reference to setting up a special committee to study the oil industry in view of developments taking place in Alaska and the north; and has he agreed to have or has he had any discussions with Dr. Howland, chairman of the National Energy Board, in reference to such a study, as he recommended to a committee of this house?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have the pleasure of meeting with Mr. Manning tomorrow morning, as will some of my colleagues. I suppose he will want to raise this matter, but I have not had a discussion with the chairman as requested. I thank the hon. member for giving me an idea as to what the subject matter of that discussion might be.

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder whether I might ask one supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I do not say this by way of criticism. Dr. Howland mentioned that he was short of staff and short of money to make a study. Would the Prime Minister consider—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member ask a question?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, Mr. Speaker. But, with the greatest respect, I have to preface my question with these remarks so that the Prime Minister will understand it. Dr. Howland mentioned that he was short of money. I wonder whether the Prime Minister would consider discussing this matter with his colleagues. I refer to allocating money for this very important study which will be so important to the national revenue of Canada.

Mr. Trudeau: I will consider discussing it with my colleagues, yes, Mr. Speaker.

HUMAN RIGHTS

ANNIVERSARY OF UNITED NATIONS UNIVERSAL DECLARATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that today is the 20th anniversary of the United Nations universal declaration of human rights, I ask the Prime Minister a two fold question. First, is the government planning any statement on or commemoration of this very important day? Second, in view of the fact that Canada has given such full and complete endorsement of this universal declaration, is the government prepared to amend section 6(1) of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act so that this act will not be in violation of but consistent with the express provisions and purposes of the United Nations' universal declaration, particularly article 20 (1)?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making a speech, and I suggest he should ask a question.

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): The question has been asked, sir.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for having brought to the attention of the house this very important anniversary. I had not planned to make a statement today. I just want to say that last week there was a conference held in Ottawa, as there were in other places in Canada, and the federal government played a large share in sponsoring them. I myself participated in the name of the government and made statements about the importance of this event, such as suggested by the hon. member. On the second part of the question, we are not thinking of any specific amendment in this context but we are doing, I think, something much more important. We have set aside this year, the 20th anniversary of the declaration of human rights, as a year when we raised with the provinces at the federal-provincial conference in February the matter of putting into the constitution a charter of human liberties. We will be discussing it also next week. We hope the people of Canada will support us, and indeed the opposition parties too, in this very important endeavour.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

INQUIRY AS TO IMPROVEMENT IN INDIAN SERVICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Following the minister's return from his tour of Indian reservations, where he apparently found inadequate health services, is he going to make a statement to the house outlining the proposals he will be suggesting by way of improvements for Indians living on reservations?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I had not planned to do so, Mr. Speaker, but I indicated previously in the house, in answer to questions from several hon. members, that we were reviewing the question of Indian health and were making improvements. I think many hon. members have a general idea what those improvements are.

Mr. Korchinski: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In his statement to the news media the minister indicated that he was going to make some proposals in respect of changes. Would he immediately enlighten the house as to what these proposals may be?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's first question was quite in order. He asked whether the minister was going to make a statement. I gather that the minister has replied to that question.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister's statement that he is improving the health services for Indians include the proper staffing of the Charles Camsell hospital in Edmonton, which has reached the point where it is non-effective in certain sections?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The allegation is there.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPRESENTATIONS TO CHINA RESPECTING CONFINEMENT OF JOURNALIST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will the government give consideration to making representations to the government of the People's Republic of China in respect of the case of the journalist, Mr. Anthony Grey of Reuters, who has been kept in close confinement, I believe, for a year and five months by the Chinese government?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman knows, we do not have diplomatic representation with the People's Republic of China. It is our objective to try to attain a mutual recognition. We are very concerned about the internment of this gentleman. I do not know whether it would help very much if we were to make representations through other channels, but I can assure the house that we share the hon. member's concern about this gentleman and will do everything we can to help.

Mr. Brewin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Secretary of State for External Affairs consider getting a message by some means to the government of the People's Republic of China saying that this breach of fundamental human rights might damage the future good relations between Canada and that government?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I take it that the minister has noted the hon. member's suggestion.

AIR CANADA

POSSIBLE EFFECT ON SAFETY OF WORK DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Yesterday I directed a question to the Prime Minister concerning hazards to safety owing to the work to rule program being carried out by some members of the staff of Air Canada. The Prime Minister at that time undertook to look into the matter. Since then several instances have been reported to me of aircraft landing and, because of this work to rule program, apparently being unable to discharge passengers at the proper location, which causes obvious hazards. Has the Prime Minister had an opportunity of looking into this matter? If so, can he inform the house whether all safety precautions are being taken by Air Canada so that the safety and lives of passengers and staff will not be endangered?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am told that the Department of Transport is doing what it can to make sure that, without breaking the law itself and without interfering unduly in problems of labour relations, it has this question under advisement. The minister may have a fuller report to give to the house tomorrow.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ELECTION OF CHIEF AND COUNCIL OF GARDEN RIVER RESERVE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Can the minister tell the house whether he has reached a decision to confirm or otherwise the recent election of the chief and band council of the Garden River Indian reserve in Ontario? I ask this question in view of the representations made last week by the said chief and band council to the minister.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have received of course representations from the chief and the band council, and after consideration of the matter with the Minister of Justice, I have come to the conclusion that I could not recognize the election of the chief and the six councillors who had been elected on that reservation. If there was a misunderstanding, it is due to an error of one of the officials of my department.

[English]

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

POSSIBLE STAFF REDUCTION FOLLOWING REDUCTION IN DELIVERIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Is the department giving consideration to a substantial reduction in the staff of letter carriers as a result of the change to five day delivery?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, as I explained during the debate on the bill, we do not anticipate that there will be any reduction in staff, but that the people who would normally be laid off will be taken care of by the normal growth of the department and also by those who retire. In other words, no people will be laid off because of the five day week.

Mr. Orlikow: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can I take it that it is not true that discussions are going on between officials of the minister's department and representatives of the union concerned with respect to this very question?

Mr. Kierans: There are always discussions going on between the officials of the department and the leaders of the union. I saw them myself last week about a number of different problems. However, I imagine that such discussions deal with the orderly transition to a five day week in the urban centres after February.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Could the Postmaster General tell us if, in view of his policy to close down post offices, postmasters left without a job will be assured of getting another one in his department?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): We are closing down the small suboffices and all the postmasters in such premises already operate a business or hold another job.

[English]

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the transition to the five day week, which has been referred to, the cause of the drastic impairment and reduction of satisfactory mail service throughout the country?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question includes allegations which are not acceptable.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The Postmaster General advised members of the house on October 7, I think, that some payment would be made to the rural mail contractors who provided services during the mail strike. Would he now advise the house when these cheques will be paid?

Mr. Kierans: They are going out at this time. We had to prepare a complete accounting of the amount that was owed and therefore had to apply to the Treasury Board to obtain approval for the total amount. This has been obtained and the cheques are going out this week and next week.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON BASE CONSOLIDATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Defence. Is he planning in the near future to make a statement regarding the consolidation of Canadian military bases, a matter which he and his department have been studying recently?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, this matter will have to be considered in cabinet before I can make any statement on the Canadian base posture. The study is concluded within the department and we are now preparing a submission to the cabinet in that respect. Following that I expect I will be able to make some announcements.

Mr. Hees: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister bear in mind the fact that a number of bases have been anxiously awaiting a decision by the government in this regard, and would he do his best to hurry it up?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

STEPS TO OVERCOME SHORTAGE OF MEDICAL PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the request of the health minister of Ontario that medical schools increase the turnout of physicians, has the minister reached any decision on the virtue of continuing the health services grant for medical complexes beyond 1970?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking the minister to give a statement of policy. I suggest to him that that cannot be done now.

[Mr. MacEwan.]

OLD AGE SECURITY

REQUEST FOR PENSION INCREASE TO EQUAL COST OF LIVING INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is he now in a position to answer the question I asked yesterday in his absence? If I may summarize it briefly, it is as follows. Will the government give consideration to proposing an amendment to the Old Age Security Act to make it possible for the cost of living increase in pensions to reflect the full amount of the cost of living increase rather than being limited to 2 per cent in any one year?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I indicated previously that this matter was not one of our priorities for this year.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since this year is almost finished could this matter be considered in the new year, or could it not at least be included in the review of social welfare matters that the minister's department is undertaking?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, I believe it is fair to say it is included in the review.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

MONTREAL—INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION OF BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the President of the Treasury Board.

Could the hon. minister tell us whether the Treasury Board has approved an expenditure of about $40 million to allow the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to continue the work on Place Radio-Canada in Montreal?

My question is in two parts, Mr. Speaker. First, has the Treasury Board already approved the expenditure and, if so, what amount has been approved?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. minister could perhaps answer the first part of the question.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): This question is on the agenda of the meeting which will take place later on this week.

[English]

TRANSPORT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CAUSEWAY—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF INTENTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. In view of the commitment given a month ago to make a decision and announce it on the future of the Northumberland strait crossing, has the minister been in contact with the premier of Prince Edward Island to communicate to him the difficulties in arriving at a decision and could he enlighten the house at the same time?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is yes, I have been talking to the premier of Prince Edward Island, and at this time the answer to the second part is no.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I have a supplementary question. In view of the nearly one year's consideration that has gone into the resumption or otherwise of this project, can the minister indicate whether or not we will hear on this matter before the end of the year?

Mr. Laing (Vancouver South): I indicated November at one time, and now I hesitate to suggest December.

OIL

CONSIDERATION OF BRIEF OF INDEPENDENT PETROLEUM ASSOCIATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I directed a question to the Prime Minister on December 5, as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and his parliamentary secretary were both away ill, asking whether the government had considered the adoption of the proposals of the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada, at which time the right hon. Prime Minister said he would take notice of the question. Can the Prime Minister say whether the government will follow the recommendations and proposals of the I.P.A. of Canada and allow western oil into eastern Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have some doubts whether I should have allowed the question in the first instance. It seems to me the hon. member was asking then and is asking again for a policy statement. But in view of the fact that in a moment of weakness the first question was allowed, the second one may be allowed also.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a highly technical question to which, I confess, I do not know the answer. As the hon. member knows, the minister is still in hospital and I do not have an answer to the question from him. I will make sure the department studies the question.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, may I ask if the government could look into the resolutions and proposals sent by the I.P.A. of Canada?

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO REPRESENTATION OF NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Will he authorize official representation from the Northwest Territories at the forthcoming federal-provincial conference next week?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have answered this question several times before, Mr. Speaker. We intend to include as part of the federal delegation some representatives of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon.

Mr. Yewchuk: I have a supplementary question. Will the official representatives of the Northwest Territories at the federal-provincial conference consist of the elected members of the Northwest Territories council?

Mr. Trudeau: The selection of the delegation has not yet been finalized both as regards members from the Northwest Territories and members of the cabinet, but I expect it to be done at this week's cabinet meeting.

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): I have a supplementary question I would like to ask the Prime Minister. Will these representatives be considered as delegates to the conference?

Mr. Trudeau: They will be part of the federal delegation and in that sense they will be delegates. However, as the hon. member knows, the federal government speaks with one voice at the federal-provincial conferences, as does each province.

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am certainly glad to hear that representatives of the Northwest Territories will be present at the conference. However, when I asked the Prime Minister the other day if representatives of the Indian people would be allowed to attend, he said there would be no delegates other than those representing the provinces and the federal government.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Will he discuss the future of the Yukon with the premier of British Columbia at the provincial conference next week?

ATTENDANCE OF OPPOSITION MEMBERS AS OBSERVERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I believe he has already indicated that provision is to be made at the federal-provincial conference next week for observers from the opposition parties. What arrangements are being made, and will we receive information shortly as to what those arrangements are?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I can assure the Leader of the Opposition and the leaders of the other parties, Mr. Speaker, that there will be space available for observers from all parties in this house. The exact number of seats depends on the number of seats which will have to be allotted to provincial government observers. We have not had replies from all of them indicating how many observers they want to bring. The cut-off date will be very soon, so I think we will be in a position to approach the leaders of the parties and tell them how many seats they will have. It will be approximately the same number as last year or perhaps a few less if the provinces ask for more room.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

INQUIRY AS TO TESTS OF ARTIFICIAL SWEETENER

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the recent highly suggestive findings of the U.S. food and drug administration that cyclamate, the artificial sweetener used in many dietetic foods and soft drinks, causes chromosome damage in animals with the danger of cancer, a shortened life span and congenital abnormalities, have any tests of this sweetener been made in Canada and, if not, will the minister ask the food and drug directorate to investigate it?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the food and drug directorate is investigating this matter.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON HEALTH RESOURCE FUND GRANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether he would make a statement on motions on the results of his discussions with provincial health ministers and his own senior staff on the future of national health resource funds grants?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the discussions have gone far enough at this early date to enable me to announce anything.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DATE OF PAYMENT OF RETROACTIVE PAY INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could ask the two distinguished gentlemen across the way, the Minister of National Defence and his seatmate, the President of the Treasury Board, whether or not they can now unequivocally indicate to the civilian employees of the Department of National Defence that they will receive their retroactive pay increases?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether the hon. member is not simply restating a question asked before. Perhaps there is a distinction between this question and the one asked previously, and if there is the minister might reply.

Mr. Forrestall: The question is a restatement, of course, but earlier neither minister was in a position to answer. I hope they are in a position to do so today.

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think I indicated the other day we were making a real effort to come within the limitation of December 31. I think we can achieve that. There are indications we are going to achieve it. This question is related to one I had the other day about overtime. I should like to add that the people working overtime to achieve this end are going to be compensated not by receiving double time but by receiving leave after the holiday period.

Mr. Forrestall: I might just comment on the minister's remarks and pass along the gratitude—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF SALT FISH MARKETING BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Fisheries whether he can answer the question I put to his parliamentary secretary yesterday in his absence. Has the government any plans to establish a salt fish marketing board for the Newfoundland and Atlantic fishermen?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the desirability of setting up a salt fish development board or marketing board is receiving active consideration in the fisheries department.

Mr. Carter: A supplementary question. Can the minister inform the house who is conducting the study into the feasibility of this project?

Mr. Davis: Departmental officials at the moment.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I have a further supplementary question. Has the minister had a communication today from the Newfoundland Frozen Fish Trade Association, which is meeting in St. John's to take a decision on whether or not they should close down the industry as a result of the inaction of the government?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member knows it is not sufficient merely to ask whether a communication has been received.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): I have a further supplementary question to the one asked by the hon. member for St. John's West. Will the Minister of Fisheries undertake to hold consultations with provincial fisheries ministers and representatives of the salt fish industry in the Atlantic provinces prior to taking any firm stand on the establishment of a salt fish marketing board?

Mr. Davis: Yes, we will continue our consultations, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Carter: A further supplementary question to the Minister of Fisheries. Can the minister say when the study to which he referred a moment ago with regard to a salt fish marketing board will be completed? If the findings lead to the establishment of such a board, will that board be functioning in time to handle next season's catch?

Mr. Davis: I doubt very much that a board could be set up and functioning in time to handle next season's catch.

BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS IN SECOND COMMISSION REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I do not know whether he has had time to study the report yet or will be able to answer the question. I was wondering whether the Prime Minister would consider setting up a special federal-provincial committee of ministers and officials to study ways and means of implementing the recommendations contained in the second volume of the B. and B. report?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have given consideration to that, Mr. Speaker, and I will, if the occasion arises, discuss it at the federal-provincial conference at one time or another. It looks to me, however, that there might be a disposition to use the already existing subcommittee on languages which was set up last February at the federal-provincial conference. The forthcoming meeting may decide to continue using the subcommittee to further the consideration of the second report. However, I will be in the hands of the participants in the conference.

Mr. Lewis: Do I understand, then, that the subject matter of the report or the effect of the report will be on the agenda of the federal-provincial conference next week?

Mr. Trudeau: The general subject matter of official languages, Mr. Speaker, will be on the agenda. There will be, at any rate, a report of the subcommittee of officials as part of the total report of the committee of officials, and if the provinces or the federal government decide to discuss that report, as I have no doubt they will, I am sure they will be considering the general subject matter of languages. They may also want to address general considerations to the kind of recommendations made in the second volume. I would merely say that one week's notice in this respect will perhaps not be enough to enable very good progress to be made at this particular meeting.

AIR CANADA

PRESS RELEASE RESPECTING SALE OF WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and relates to a press release, which was made an appendix to yesterday's Hansard, page 3731, concerning Air Canada's Winnipeg base. There is a reference in that release to the fact that negotiations for the sale of the base will involve protection of the interests of the present employees. Does that involve a guarantee to employees that they will retain their jobs, seniority and other rights they now have?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the member would mind asking the Minister of Transport this question? He is the one who is responsible for the press release. I cannot answer this particular question.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister what commitments he may have made to the Canadian Manufacturers Association in response to their brief opposing any moves toward a planned economy?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is not a question which can be asked at this time.

[Mr. Lewis.]

PROCEDURE

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN FOURTH REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. D. Gordon Blair (Grenville-Carleton) moved:

That the fourth report of the special committee on procedure of the house, presented to the house on Friday, December 6, 1968, be concurred in.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise to move concurrence in the fourth report of the special committee on procedure of the house. In doing so, I hope—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Blair: I must say immediately that we did not take into consideration the electronic devices, but perhaps we should have.

Mr. Nowlan: The lights of parliament are getting dim.

Mr. Blair: In undertaking this task I hope that without offending the rules of the house I can explain briefly the nature of the three reports which were filed on Friday last. The third report is an explanation of the various recommendations made by the committee. These recommendations are set forth in the form of draft standing orders in the fourth and fifth reports. The fourth report contains major recommendations of the committee dealing with such matters as supply, ways and means, the legislative process, the programming of business, and so on. The fifth report contains a number of important but less significant amendments and also includes a number of amendments which would be consequential upon the adoption of the fourth report.

• (4:00 p.m.)

In making these remarks I am conscious of my duty as chairman of this committee. I intend to speak factually, objectively and dispassionately in an attempt to explain what this committee, composed of representatives of all parties in the house, attempted to accomplish in its reports.

I should say at once that your committee held 26 meetings in the space of almost three months and that all of its deliberations were marked by extreme cordiality and by the fullest and frankest exchanges of opinion. At the end, despite its best efforts the committee had to agree to disagree on what appear to me to be only two or three issues at the most. The suggestion that was made in some quarters of the press that the committee broke up in violent disagreement is entirely false and does a great disservice to all members of the committee and also, I suggest, to all members of this house.

All hon. members will be aware that since 1964 this house has carried on much of its important business under a series of provisional orders. The reforms which have been accomplished by these orders are important, but it was generally recognized that the house could not complete the task of reforming its procedure until it had dealt with important matters such as the business of supply and the legislative process. These matters were studied intensively by a committee in the last session of the last parliament. The fourth and fifth reports of that committee, which were filed on March 13 and March 20, 1968, form the background for the report which is now presented to the house.

First, I propose to deal with the business of supply, because if this aspect of our report is adopted it will provide the framework and the parliamentary timetable about which all the other business of the house will revolve.

I need not remind hon. members that under the present provisional rules supply is discussed in two stages. There are four two-day debates on supply motions and 30 days are allocated to the consideration of estimates in the committee of supply, a total of 38 days in all.

I think it is fair to say that the handling of the supply business of the house satisfies no one and it is the subject of much justifiable criticism. First and most important, it fails—and it has always failed throughout the life of all the parliaments of Canada—to satisfy its basic purpose of providing for a full, careful scrutiny of the estimates of departments. Whether or not a fixed period has been set for the conclusion of the business of supply, the Hansards of our parliaments are full of lamentations and condemnations of the practice of passing numerous items of supply without debate, without scrutiny, without check at the end of the session or at the end of a supply period. I call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that most of these lamentations which have always been on record come from the years before the time that there was a formal limit on the number of supply days.

In addition, I think it is fair to point out that such discussion and scrutiny as there has been of supply, particularly in recent parliaments, have tended to occur long after a good part of the money has been spent. This scrutiny long after the event runs counter to the theory of parliament appropriating money only when it is satisfied that the purposes are proper.

Without derogation of hon. members I think it is also fair to comment that the debates on supply estimates tend to be general speech-making events on the part of both opposition and government members. There are few, if any, detailed questions about the money expenditures proposed. The speeches are uneven in their effect, concentrating always on the first item of the departmental estimates and leaving many items undiscussed.

In addition to this unsatisfactory discussion of estimates in committee of supply, the practice on supply motion debates is equally unsatisfactory and imprecise. As the house well knows, on the four occasions now prescribed by the provisional rules when the government must propose a motion to go into committee of supply, it is the right of the opposition to move amendments and subamendments and to raise serious issues of national policy. These debates, although valuable, lose considerably their force and effect for two reasons: first of all, because they are too few in number and second, because no proper notice is given. It is only in the latter stages of these debates that the members of the house are prepared fully to grapple with the points which have been raised.

The principal purpose of your committee in dealing with the business of supply was to restore vigour and purpose to the supply proceedings of the house. Your committee noted that the British parliament, for example, no longer undertakes any detailed scrutiny of estimates in advance and reserves supply days for general discussions of national policy matters that are raised by the opposition.

In essence, Mr. Speaker, your committee, on this question of supply, adopted the unanimous recommendation of its predecessor committee made in March, 1968, which combines the British concept of general days of debate in the house with continuing scrutiny of the details of the estimates by standing committees of the house. In connection with the business of supply, your committee recommends that parliament should adhere to a regular yearly timetable. The session, it recommends, should start normally in the month of September or early October of each year and should terminate around July 1 of the following year.

For the purpose of the allocation of supply the parliamentary session would be divided into three periods, which have been termed semesters, ending on December 10, on March 26 and on June 30. The most important business of supply would take place in the third period ending on June 30. This would commence with the tabling of the main estimates of the government in February of each year. These estimates would be immediately referred to appropriate standing committees, which would be directed to report them back to the house not later than May 31. In the first semester it is possible that some supplementary and additional estimates would be considered, and they too would be referred to the appropriate standing committees. In the second semester there would be supplementary estimates and, in addition, interim supply would have to be voted before the end of the fiscal year or March 31 to cover the period from April 1 to June 30.

The committee recommends that in total, during the three periods 25 days should be allotted to the opposition for motions on any subject within the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada. Only at the end of these allotted days, only after the opposition had had their say on these motions, would the house be asked to vote supply. Five of these allotted days would occur in the first semester, seven in the second and 13 in the third. In each of the periods the opposition would have the opportunity to move not more than two no confidence motions. The other motions would simply expire at the conclusion of the day of debate.

In addition to the 13 allotted days in the third period the committee has recommended that a further three days should be allowed for the consideration of final supplementary estimates, if any are brought down during the period ending on June 30. In connection with the allotted opposition days I should emphasize that it is the recommendation of the committee that the opposition would have complete freedom to choose whatever topic for debate it desired. I think it is to be expected that in the third semester some of the opposition motions, perhaps most of them, might relate to the reports of the standing committees on the estimates of the different departments, or they might relate to criticisms based on information discovered by the opposition during standing committees.

On the last allotted day in each period all motions and all other business relating to supply would come on for decision at the end of the day. At this stage members of the opposition would have the right of giving notice to call for separate votes on specified items in the estimates. Your committee considers that the adoption of this procedure would provide much greater protection to the public and members of parliament than prevails under the existing procedure. Undeniably it will provide a much greater opportunity to hon. members to scrutinize the estimates in committee where officials as well as ministers may be examined.

The procedure of permitting debates on prearranged subjects will give the opposition an opportunity it does not now possess to raise meaningful debates on matters of national interest as they occur from time to time. I emphasize again that the government's request for supply must pass first the hurdle of the standing committees, then the debates on the various opposition motions and, finally, the final vote on the estimates in the house. Consequently I believe it can quite properly be said that the house will have more effective control over the granting of supply than it has had heretofore.

On the other hand, the committee felt that the provision of supply on a timetable such as proposed would be of immense benefit to the house and to hon. members. It would enable the government to expect timely decisions on its requests for appropriations. In all respects the form proposed is similar to that which has been adopted by other parliaments such as that of the United Kingdom. I also suggest that this new procedure would avoid what many regard as an existing scandal under existing procedures, where the estimates of different departments are considered in a committee of the whole house attended usually by hardly more than a bare quorum.

The second major area of reform considered by your committee was the legislative process, namely, the procedure under which public bills are translated into law. At the present time any money bill, that is, a bill imposing a charge on the exchequer, must be preceded by a debate on the resolution which, under the provisional rules, is limited to one parliamentary day or a total of five hours. The bill must then have its three readings, the first being a formality. Second reading frequently is preceded by a major debate, followed by a clause by clause consideration in committee of the whole house; that is then followed by third reading. I wish to say that the committee felt general agreement that the resolution stage of a money bill no longer serves any useful purpose. Debates on a measure which has not yet been placed before the house are so stylized and artificial, and they waste so much time, that it is hardly necessary to elaborate in detail why it is sensible to dispose of this procedure. It is contemplated that any bill making a charge on the consolidated revenue fund would be accompanied by the type of message from the crown recommending the expenditure which is contemplated by section 54 of the British North America Act. The bill, on the motion for first reading, would be directed to be read the first time and printed. With the elimination of the resolution stage it is contemplated that the government could publish many, if not most, of the bills relating to its total legislative program early in the session, with immensely favourable consequences for the total planning of the session by the joint action of government and opposition parties.

Your committee gave very careful consideration to the question of second reading and it considered that under present circumstances there is an exaggeration of the importance of second reading. The true accomplishment of second reading is the definition of the scope of the bill and the agreement of the house to examine further into it. But at second reading it seems premature to engage in a decisive debate—a debate which is long and perhaps hard-fought, before the house has had an opportunity to consider the detailed clauses and provisions of a bill. Second reading admittedly is an important step along the way, but in order to place it in proper perspective your committee has recommended that the motion on second reading hereafer be, "That this bill be now read a second time and referred to a committee."

• (4:20 p.m.)

Under the revised standing orders it is contemplated that practically every bill will be referred to an appropriate standing committee. Some bills will not be referred to a standing committee, namely, the taxation measures following on the budget and the formal bills dealing with supply. It also seems possible that the house leaders will agree that certain minor legislation requiring no intense study at the committee stage might continue to be dealt with in committee of the whole.

The effect of this new procedure will be to revive the importance of the stage at which the report on the bill is considered. Our report recommends that if the bill is reported with or without amendment, it should be put to a vote at the report stage without debate unless members have put down specific amendments to the bill to be considered at this stage.

The rules would provide a proper period between the publication of the report and the commencement of the report stage and also for the giving of notice of amendments which probably would be printed on a separate notice paper to be attached to the bill. Mr. Speaker would have the right and authority to select and combine amendments so that the debate would follow the order of the bill and would be concentrated on the decisive questions to be determined by the house.

It is expected that the effect of this change, if accepted by the house, would be to transfer the fulcrum of debate on major legislation to a later stage in the consideration of the bill. In some instances it is to be expected that this new procedure would greatly enhance the importance of third reading.

It is obvious that under this procedure legislation will receive more careful consideration and scrutiny than at present. Instead of legislation, estimates, and all the other business of the house having to go through all the required stages in this chamber, it would be possible for important stages to occur outside the house where more time can be taken and more detailed consideration can be given particularly to the drafting of legislation. This procedure could be adopted, of course, only if the committee of the whole stage were abandoned. For otherwise ministers would not be willing to have their legislation considered in detail in both a standing committee and committee of the whole and the members themselves would regard the standing committees as unimportant.

The foregoing description of the legislative process substantially applies to the proceedings of the United Kingdom parliament, which was favourably commented upon by last year's committee.

The business of ways and means is of an importance equal to that of supply and the total legislative process. Your committee felt that like the committee of supply, the committee of ways and means has also become superfluous and merely an interesting procedural survival from long forgotten history. The motion to go into committee of ways and means is made by the Minister of Finance on the presentation of his budget. It is recommended that this procedure be abolished and that the minister, when he wishes to present his budget, make a resolution couched in very general terms to the effect that the house approves the financial policies of the government. As part of his budget presentation, the minister has always filed resolutions for the amendment of the different taxing acts and at some stage subsequent to the budget debate these resolutions have been considered and the bills given first reading. It is consistent with the committee's approach to the resolution stage that it should recommend that debate on these budget resolutions should be abandoned and that they should be put to the vote after the conclusion of the six-day budget debate or at such time thereafter as appears to be suitable.

In other respects, the business of ways and means would be transferred to the house and would be conducted with the Speaker in the chair, and after second reading all the various finance bills would be referred to a committee of the whole house.

The effect of the changes recommended and summarized thus far may be emphasized at this point. Although there are 365 days in the year, it is self-evident that parliament will not sit on all of these days and it is highly advisable that it should not do so because hon. members must keep in close contact with the constituencies they represent. Assuming members want to be in their constituencies during the summer, approximately four weeks at Christmas and two weeks at Easter, and making allowance for Saturdays, Sundays and statutory holidays, it seems that a reasonable number of sitting days would be approximately 160 to 170 in any year. Of this total, eight are occupied by the debate on the Speech from the Throne, six by the budget debate and, if these recommendations are adopted, 28 by the business of supply, a total of 42 days in all for general debate. I should have added earlier that your committee recommends that any days unused on the debate on the address or on the budget debate should be transferred to supply.

This leaves something like 125 days during the parliamentary year for the passage of legislation and the completion of other business of the house. This is by no means an inconsequential number of days but measured against the volume of legislation presented to this and previous parliaments it does not provide room for the luxury of wasted time.

The scheduling of parliamentary work is in no sense a new idea. It has been followed in Britain and elsewhere for many years and the Canadian parliament is one of the few major parliaments, if not the only one, lacking any procedure effective for the prior planning of its legislative and other programs.

I believe that most members agree that procedures should be adopted to permit the house to plan its work. Naturally different members have different ideas as to how this might be done. The basic proposals of your committee is that a proceedings committee be established consisting of the house leaders of each party in the house. I think it is important to point out that this committee will consist of the four house leaders treated as equals, and will not reflect the numerical proportions of the different parties in the house. This excludes the possibility of majority decisions by this committee.

It is recommended that the committee be chaired by the government house leader, that it meet generally twice a week, and that it make its reports to the house on most Thursdays. This committee, in its work, would have many advantages.

Under the new rules most of the legislation proposed by the government would be disclosed in detail early in the session. The publication of this legislation would not be held up by the necessity of waiting for approval at the resolution stage.

Placing less emphasis on the second reading debate, and the reference of most important legislation to standing committees would fully acquaint members of the house and the country of the significant features of legislation which was under discussion.

At any time the proceedings committee would be in a position to make a reasonable and intelligent assessment of the amount of time which might properly be allotted in the parliamentary program for the specific stages of different bills before the house. Your committee recommends, where the proceedings committee would make a unanimous recommendation to the house as to the amount of time to be allotted to a particular stage of a particular measure that that recommendation would automatically become an order of the house. Knowing the specific amount of time which has been allotted to different stages of different measures the government leader, in consultation with his colleagues, the other house leaders, would be in a better position than at present to establish a reasonable timetable for calling the different stages of measures before the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Blair: I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this is no time for hon. members to make remarks. There is no reason to expect that the house leaders will not co-operate conscientiously and effectively in making the new proceedings committee work. To a very large extent this new committee will permit the leaders of the various parties, particularly the opposition parties, to assume responsibility for the performance of their parties in the house. Heretofore the inability of the house to enforce agreements made between party leaders has resulted in a wasteful prolongation of debate which often has been deplored in every quarter of the house.

To me it seems unthinkable that any party would fail to take a serious part in the discussions of the house program, and it would appear to me that any party which failed to make a positive contribution to this discussion would suffer in the public esteem. I find it hard to believe that any party would take the peculiar stand of saying that it opposed a procedure for the establishment of a sensible program for the house business, and that it would not conscientiously and sensibly take part in these procedures.

Nevertheless we have to recognize that we live here in a political forum and, notwithstanding the desire of hon. members to accommodate themselves, there may be times when serious and unbridgeable disagreements may arise as to the programming of business in the house. Where such disagreements arise, the question which faced the committee, and which I submit this house must answer, is: who shall have the responsibility to propose a resolution to the disagreement? Much has been said, and may be said again, about the desirability of leaving an issue of this type to be worked out by the parties or, failing this, to be worked out by events. This, in the opinion of the majority of your committee, would mean in effect that any opposition party represented on the proceedings committee would have an absolute veto over the planning of the business of the house.

This veto would have both its obvious effects and its hidden effects. Obviously it would express itself in a prolongation of debate, a repetition of arguments, and a filibuster hopeful of political advantage. But it is likely to have a hidden and even more insidious effect. The undue prolongation of debate on one measure precludes the house from dealing with other measures during the session and as a consequence important sections of the public may suffer. Moreover, experience has shown that such discussions might be of an endless character giving no indication to parliament or to the public of when such a debate would end.

Accordingly your committee has recommended that the event of disagreement in the proceedings committee should not be dealt with by default, should not be dealt with by the unsatisfactory process of permitting one or more parties to impose an open and a hidden veto on the proceedings of the house. In the recommendation of your committee it is much more open, straightforward and businesslike for the house and the whole of the country to know how a stalemate of this kind is to be resolved. Consequently the proposal of your committee is that the government in such an event be confronted with its responsibility, that it be able to bring forward a timetable for the disposition of a disputed bill or bills, and that this timetable be subject to debate and to decision by the house.

Again I point out that this procedure in its essence is very similar to that used at Westminster.

Mr. Nowlan: The czar of the House of Commons.

Mr. Blair: Finally, the fourth report recommends changes in standing order 26. The recommendations of your committee follow almost exactly those of the sixth report of the committee which reported to the last parliament. The purpose of the change is to provide for a proper and more effective use of the standing order. I think all hon. members realize this is the standing order which provides for the adjournment of the house to consider a definite matter of urgent public importance.

No one will be surprised by my assertion that as matters now stand this standing order is looked upon askance by many hon. members because of what might be called the bootlegging debate that takes place on the substance of a proposal under the guise of a discussion on whether or not it is a definite matter of urgent public importance. Your committee recommends that a member seeking to make a motion for the adjournment of proceedings under this standing order should file with Mr. Speaker, at least two hours before the opening of the sitting, a statement of the matter of urgency. The member would be permitted to read his statement to the house but not to argue his case. The Speaker would make his decision—

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must bring to the attention of the house that the hon. member's time has expired. Has he leave to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion for Concurrence in Report

Mr. Blair: Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my thanks to hon. members and I will try not to transgress too much.

An hon. Member: You did not allocate your own time too well, did you, Gordon?

Mr. Blair: I was dealing with standing order 26 and had made the point that a member would not be permitted a further argument in support of the statement submitted to Mr. Speaker. The Speaker would then give his decision but would not be required to give reasons for his decision unless he wished to do so.

Should the Speaker find that the matter raised was, in the terms of the new standing order, a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, on ordinary days debate would be fixed to start at 8 p.m. in the evening. I should think that there will be general agreement with this proposal, but there may be some doubts about the desirability of not requiring the Speaker to give reasons for his decision. It should be noted that in order to prevent their parallel standing orders from accumulating a burden of precedents that would restrict Mr. Speaker in his judgment, the British house specifically prohibits the Speaker from stating his reasons.

I think that this abbreviated description of the matters covered in this report will serve to indicate the scope of the work which the house assigned to the committee and the importance of the recommendations the committee has decided to make to the house.

At all times the aim of the committee was to enhance the importance and the effectiveness of parliament. Its aim was to give a greater opportunity for participation to individual private members of parliament on both sides of the house, to provide better scrutiny for bills and for estimates, to provide a basic timetable which would enable hon. members, both private and ministerial, to plan their days and years so they could meet necessary obligations here and in their constituencies, to place the government in a position where it could only reasonably bring before parliament a legislative program which it was capable of enacting, to give the government the assurance of knowing that at certain stated intervals decisions would be made for or against its requests for supply. The final and I think the most important purpose of these recommendations is to give the opposition in parliament an ample opportunity to bring on debate on the issues they deem important to the nation. This they do not possess at the present time.

Therefore I have the honour of moving, seconded by the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome), that the fourth report of the special committee on proceedings of the house, presented to the house on Friday, December 6, 1968, be concurred in.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin by thanking the mover of the motion for the moderate manner of his presentation, and I trust he realizes now that there may be different standards of judgment as to what is a waste of time and as to how long a member should have the opportunity to speak in the house.

I was struck by the continual emphasis the hon. gentleman placed upon British tradition. I also admire the British tradition, but I thought that hon. members opposite as well as most Canadians were anxious to develop our own traditions in Canada suited to our own conditions. I was a little surprised to find that whenever my hon. friend found the going somewhat heavy he fell back upon the practice at Westminster and on British tradition.

This debate may be a long one. I hope it will not because I hope the government will see reason before we spend too much time in this process, but whether the debate be long or short I hope it will be restrained and reasonable in tone.

We on this side of the house in more than one party believe that a fundamental issue is at stake—perhaps the fundamental issue. I refer to the right of parliament to control itself and thereby to control the government. This question has arisen before and we know it is an issue over which passions can be aroused on both sides of the house. It is also, in the context of this country at this time, an issue which can become obscured and partisan and, indeed, the subject of passionate debate.

All hon. members know that legislatures do not today everywhere enjoy the high repute in which we would like to see legislatures held. There is now a popular impression in some quarters that legislatures are an obstacle to good government. That impression offers to those who genuinely seek reform the natural temptation to change more than is needed and a temptation to change the purpose of parliament in the name of improving its procedures. This impatience with legislature, therefore, requires special vigilance on the part of defenders and friends of parliament. I assume that all of us, being here, would support and defend the purposes of parliament.

It is not a simple task, in an age impressed by urgency and efficiency, to defend an institution whose purpose is to deter legislation that is bad, sometimes to delay, and sometimes indeed to oppose to the end bad legislation. It is not easy to make Canadians, who are accustomed to their freedoms, aware when these freedoms are under threat. I would hope that no one on either side of the house would use the weaknesses of legislatures in the public esteem to weaken parliament further.

The great majority of the members of this house know that if parliament becomes a rubber stamp it becomes useless. That is the main reason for being here, and one weapon we possess is our ability on occasion to compel the government to reassess its measures and force it to change or even to halt a course of action which we believe to be inadequate or wrong. If that were not necessary parliament would not be necessary. But governments make mistakes, even governments with computers. A government which knows it must face an effective opposition will take more care than will a government which has the power under its rules to disarm the opposition. Members of a government are not perfect. Lord Acton, a brilliant man, a man I believe admired by the Prime Minister, (Mr. Trudeau), said in the course of a well known quotation:

• (4:50 p.m.)

There is no worse heresy than that the office sanctifies the holder of it.

Members of a government are subject to fault like the rest of us. The function of the opposition is by our probing to reveal and correct those faults, by our presence and by our powers to make the government more careful, to make the government more compassionate, to make the government more responsive to the needs of the people of this country.

There are some facts to establish about parliament and about parliamentary reform. The first is that the problems that frustrate Canada were not created here in parliament, and they will not be solved by a mere amendment of the rules of parliament. It was not the rules of parliament that caused inflation, created a crisis in housing, or slowed the sales of grain. It is not the reform of parliament which will produce a satisfactory foreign policy, bring growth to our economy, reduce unemployment, end the alienation of the young or reduce the strains within confederation. Parliament is not the cause of these frustrations, and parliament ought not to be the victim or the scapegoat of them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: The second fact is related to the first. It is that changes in the rules will not radically or suddenly increase the quantity or the quality of the output of this parliament. There will be improvements, I would hope, but there is no magic in procedure, no magic that will cause the government to draft more and better laws quickly, above all, no magic that will produce policies and solutions where there have been none produced to date.

If this government had no opposition at all to face it would still be behind. It would still face a backlog of things it should be doing and problems it has not been able to solve. That, after all, is the fate of governments in a changing and complex time, in a changing and complex country. We are not going to transform the capacity of this government simply by amending the rules of parliament. There is no magic wand, and there should be no attempt to suggest that these or any other changes to the rules will suddenly and as if by magic make the government efficient.

The third fact is that the purpose of parliamentary reform is not simply to serve efficiency, as the hon. member who introduced the motion seemed to believe, important though efficiency naturally is. The purpose, rather, is to work out a process of debate and legislation which is consistent with the democratic values of the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: I emphasize that. We do not simply need a procedure which passes laws. We need a procedure which also passes the demanding test of free and adequate debate. It is not enough to be concerned merely with the efficiency of the process. I would assume that the legislative process in the Soviet Union is very efficient. But we are a different kind of country and the rules of our parliamentary debate must reflect and protect that difference. We must not demean the importance of debate. Of course, there must be reasonable limits upon the time parliament spends in discussion. But there must also be time for adequate discussion here. The right of discussion and debate, the associated right of inquiry and the consequent capacity to arouse and inform public opinion, is the single most important safeguard the country has against arbitrary, secret or unresponsive government. This is the place in Canada where grievances can be raised with most effect. To arbitrarily limit the right of members to speak is to limit the capacity of the government to understand and respond to the problems of Canadians.

I suggest we must remember that this is the only national forum in which spokesmen for all parts of Canada can speak and expect to be heard. I need not remind the house that different regions of the country have specific problems and points of view. Discussion in a national forum helps to knit the regions into a whole nation and to build a stronger unity. It seems likely that one of the serious casualties of any major limitation upon the time of debate would be the right of spokesmen to be adequately heard on the problems of the regions. I suggest that national unity would suffer.

When considering our constitution we take it for granted that we must consider the nature of our country. It seems equally obvious to me that when considering the rules of our House of Commons we must consider the nature of our country. Members of the opposition generally, as I understand it, approve and support the vast majority of the changes proposed in this report. Indeed, spokesmen for the opposition parties suggested many of these changes. We recognize that in some cases the traditional powers of opposition parties and private members are withdrawn or reduced, and we are prepared to accept this to the extent it is necessary to improve and strengthen parliament.

I will not dwell at length upon the obvious, but it is important to assert that the contest in this house is not a contest between reformers and intransigents. We on this side of the house have supported and proposed extensive reforms, all of which we believe will make parliament more effective, government more responsive and the private member a more useful part of the work of the house. We in this party, indeed, have additional reforms that we would like to see incorporated. We believe that government has the right and responsibility to govern. The rules of parliament should help the government to govern well. We support the reform of parliament. We support it enthusiastically and out of conviction. But we draw the line at certain fundamental and unnecessary changes which would deform parliament and make it ineffective. We draw the line at proposals which would put parliament in the hands of the government because that, we believe, would reverse the appropriate relation. Parliament must not be made subservient to the government. Parliament must continue to be responsible to the people through parliament. That is a parliamentary tradition and we defend it today, not because it is an old tradition or even because it is a British tradition but because it is a good tradition—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: —and the best safeguard we have against arbitrary government. It is, in the final analysis, the only safeguard we have. At various stages we will have changes and improvements to suggest to the proposals made by the special committee. We shall have certain reforms to suggest on our part. I say in passing that whether the arrangements suggested by the committee for written amendments at the report stage are practical, you may, Mr. Speaker, find yourself flooded with amendments proposed in respect of important legislation with which you may find it very difficult to cope.

• (5:00 p.m.)

We will certainly be interested in the amendments and suggestions made by hon. members from all parts of the house and we will consider them carefully. Any proposal that seems to us to be likely to improve the effectiveness of parliament and the contribution of its members will be welcomed. Our attitude in this regard will continue to be constructive and co-operative.

But, sir, there is not the slightest chance that we will ever accept the proposal that the government majority should have the power to impose allocation of time in advance on any number of items on the order paper or before standing committees before a word has been uttered in the house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: I should make a slight correction, Mr. Speaker. We would be allowed two hours to protest and then we would be crushed by the juggernaut of the just society.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: One must be frank. This is a vicious proposal, unnecessary, excessive and brutal in its potential impact on parliament and those whom parliament is sworn to protect. I repeat, we will never accept it.

What is being proposed here? It is proposed that there be a proceedings committee, to be composed probably of the various house leaders, to help arrange the introduction and orderly consideration of the business of the house. So far, so good. We agree that upon the unanimous agreement of the house leaders, subject to the considerations noted in the proposed standing order, the allocation of time for a specific item before the house becomes an order of the house. This is in itself a major departure. It is a considerable convenience for the government, but we do not oppose it. It is founded upon the consent of the various house leaders, and we would be bound by their consent.

Members of the house should be reminded that we have not had any machinery for authorizing house leaders to make effective agreements as to the allocation of time binding on the house. A house leader today has ordinarily not been able to commit his party to terminate a debate within a given time because he could not prevent debate from continuing beyond the time in question. If the rules were changed to translate agreements between house leaders into house orders, as is suggested, the vast majority of the difficulties of the house regarding length of debate would thereby be eliminated. The hon. member himself said there is no reason to believe that house leaders would not co-operate. I suggest we stop there. That in itself would enable a solution of a vast majority of the problems of the house with regard to the orderly arrangement of debates.

But the government is not satisfied with this. What happens if the house leaders have not reached agreement? First of all, there is the convenient provision that would allow the government house leader, sitting alone all by himself, to constitute a quorum. We are told that this is inserted to prevent the other house leaders from boycotting his meetings. But he could very easily end up by having his meetings in the shower at home in the morning.

Mr. Woolliams: And then he may boycott himself.

Mr. Stanfield: This provision that a quorum may consist of the government house leader, the President of the Privy Council and hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald), has to go.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: Surely I do not have to elaborate on the point. There is not an impartial observer anywhere who knows anything about this parliament who would not agree that for the sake of parliament and the parliamentary process the present government house leader is one who has to be kept on a very short leash.

But what is much more destructive of parliament is that we are told now to accept that, in the absence of agreement among the house leaders, the government house leader can determine in advance how much consideration any given government measure or batch of measures requires. If I were to employ a form of argument enjoyed apparently by the right hon. Prime Minister, by reductio ad absurdum it would be possible for the government house leader, with the support of the majority, to put a whole batch of bills before the house and to insist that they be dealt with at the rate of about ten minutes apiece. There is certainly nothing in the rules to prevent it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Don't put ideas into his head.

Mr. Stanfield: I do not think the house leader needs any tutoring from anybody on this subject. The house leader could determine this for a whole collection of items before a word had been uttered in the house. He could include in his order anything that was on the order paper or before a standing committee and give the house two hours to protest, following which his majority would ram it through the house.

I say this is vicious and absurd. It is a perversion of the parliamentary process to say that the government should be able in advance to decide how much time a batch of bills requires for consideration by this house, how much time is required for clause by clause examination in a standing committee, and how much time is required for debate or discussion before a batch of bills is passed.

It is the natural instinct of every government that has a difficult, unpopular or controversial measure to get it through with as little fuss as possible. A government house leader is the last person in the world to have in effect the power to decide unilaterally and in advance how much consideration should be given to various items of legislation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: The rule of closure is still on the books. The hon. member who made the motion suggested that unless this rule is adopted debate could go on endlessly. But the truth is that on any specific item of legislation, if the government feels that the right to debate is being abused or that the public interest is suffering by not having a particular law passed, if the government feels it can justify the use of closure in that instance, it can invoke closure. It does so, accepting the responsibility for it before the people of Canada and relating it to a particular case.

But what is proposed today goes far beyond the present rule of closure. It would permit the government house leader to decide a week or more in advance to apply closure to all stages of all measures on the order paper or before standing committees before any consideration had been given to any of them. He would determine. He would be the dictator. The government majority in the house would give his dictate the stamp of approval, and parliament would be bent to his will.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Stanfield: The government house leader or others on his behalf may assure us that he will use this power moderately and responsibly. He can keep his assurances. They are worth nothing in this parliament and less than nothing to any future parliament. The government has more than enough power to act under the present closure rule. If in a given case the government feels the right to debate is being abused and if it feels it can justify cutting it off, why does it want this new power? Why does it want it, except to apply closure in advance to a whole parcel of legislation? The only reason for having this added power is to use it, and use it it would.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Now, why this added power? A majority government does not need this power unless it wants or intends to be authoritarian. This power would be of no use to a minority government because only a government with a majority to ram through the will of the house leader can make any use of this particular rule. The intention is clear, to make closure the routine rather than the exception. The assumption contained in this proposal is that the minority is always irresponsible and always wrong, the majority is always responsible and always right. Pass this proposal, and the volumes that have been written by the Prime Minister over 20 years on the rights of the minority will be categorized as sanctimonious hypocrisy. I say to the Prime Minister through you, sir, that if he insists that these changes be passed he will deny and betray what he says he has stood for.

We will be told by the government in the course of this debate that no government would really abuse this power because they would be turned out of office by the voters at a general election. This argument is nonsense. If we follow that line of reasoning, we might as well pack up parliament and all go home. The people could go on electing governments every four years or so, they could defeat governments, change their political complexion and the personalities that compose them, and we would continue to call it a democracy. It would be no democracy at all if in the meantime the government could use parliament as a rubberstamp.

The government is not satisfied with the changes that have been largely accepted by members of the opposition. They are not satisfied with our willingness to be committed by the agreement of house leaders to a given time. They are not satisfied with having a recourse to closure in extreme cases where they are willing to accept the responsibility and think they can justify it to the people. They are not satisfied with any of this. They are determined that parliament will be programmed, and programmed by them, by the government and the government majority. The reference to programming of business recurs three times on one page in the third report of the special committee.

Let me put it in the most direct way possible. No hon. member of this house, least of all the minority in this house, has been elected to parliament so that we can be programmed by the government. You can computerize the Prime Minister if you like. You can make automatons of your cabinet ministers if they are docile enough to allow it. You can put ministerial activities on a flow-chart and program the Prime Minister's political and social life, if that is the way you want it. However, you should take the word back to those industrious gentlemen in the east block that the computer stops here.

What is the context in which this unnecessary power is being demanded? First, it is being demanded within the context of a majority government, a government with a comfortable majority in this house. As I have said, a majority government does not need this power, and wants it so that it can permit itself the excesses that this power allows. Second, the power is demanded within the context of an opposition that has proven itself to be responsible. We cut off, that is, all parties on this side of the house, the throne speech debate early. We suggested the reference of the Biafra issue to a standing committee and used one of our own opposition days to debate the report of that committee. We tried to have the postal bill referred to a standing committee. This procedure would have saved several days of time in the house. We tried to have one of the farm bills passed in all its stages at one sitting. We agreed to sit extra time to pass bills, and so on.

Third, this excessive power is being sought when we have already obviously gone a very considerable distance in our willingness to accept so many of the recommendations of the committee that impose limitations on members of opposition parties in this house. But none of this is enough for this government. Apparently they want absolute control of the house. Throughout these recommendations there is a continuing emphasis on the value of study by standing committees. There are, of course, many advantages in the use of standing committees. But we are now in a position where two-thirds of the estimates go to standing committees. There is plenty in the existing state of our standing committees to give all of us concern about how much more we should turn over to them. I am not making any comment now upon the merits of the discussion earlier in the afternoon. The third report of the procedure committee itself reflects some doubt about the manner in which committees are presided over.

If I may say so without flattering, Mr. Speaker, there is a vast difference between the conduct of our procedures under yourself or the Deputy Speaker of this chamber and being at the tender mercies of some 20 members of the government party who, with all the good will in the world, do not have necessarily the training or competence of yourself or your deputy.

This report would require all the estimates to be referred to committees. Furthermore, this report would have all legislation referred to standing committees, except the very few instances in which the hon. member indicated use might be made of the committee of the whole house on bills. This use of standing committees under these circumstances is proposed without any effort to give expert assistance to the committees.

The Prime Minister did a very constructive thing earlier in the session when he made additional help available to the opposition parties. This was a constructive measure, and one upon which I have no hesitation in complimenting him again. The committees, Mr. Speaker, are in no condition today, I suggest, to receive the vast amount of work that this change proposes be turned over to them. All of this would occur at a time when we have many committees meeting at the same time. As I say, we must recognize the limitations and traditions of those committees, to put it as tactfully as I can.

We should ask what would have happened in a situation such as prevailed here in this house between 1958 and 1962 when the combined opposition numbered 60 or less? The opposition would never have been able to man these committees effectively. The close examination of government spending and legislative proposals would be a farce. The consideration of these matters would be far less effective than if it took place here in this chamber, either in the house or in committee of the whole.

Even now, Mr. Speaker, when this government has its comfortable majority, it does not seem able to man these committees properly. Having been defeated on a motion in the transport committee and having decided on a new chairman last Friday, they apparently could not muster enough members to elect him. I think perhaps the government should bear this in mind when they are considering the views and difficulties smaller parties might have in adequately manning committees which are considering important measures. I must say I also wish to congratulate the government whip because apparently nobody would ever be able to program him.

Why should the government and its supporters in the house insist on abolishing the committee of supply at this time and sending all departmental estimates and in addition virtually all bills to standing committees for consideration? We recognize that the standing committees are a good place for the consideration of the estimates of most departments of government, but I have mentioned the weaknesses of the committees and the unsatisfactory traditions surrounding chairmen. I have already referred to the overloading of committees, which in turn is having an effect on attendance in the house.

We in this party want the right to have some departmental estimates considered in the committee of the whole house, and this is a right that we want recognized. We are suggesting that roughly one-third of the departments be considered here and that we have some choice as to which departments they are to be. Surely this is a perfectly reasonable suggestion, and I should like to know why this is something that my hon. friends opposite will not allow the opposition to decide. Why do they insist on jamming their views down our throats in regard to what is the role of the opposition?

This proposal would not involve extra time. Not one additional minute is involved in what I am suggesting. The government does not save one minute by doing what it is proposing compared with what we want done. When members of the government stand in this house and purport to be putting this proposal forward on the ground that it would help the opposition, then I do not think one is being too skeptical if one does wonder a little about this.

I do not want to be offensive about this, but obviously no time is saved by the government as a result of what it is proposing. In addition, it is contrary to the way that we who have the main responsibility for examining estimates want to see them examined. There is really only one belief possible for us to hold, and that is that the government wants to weaken the role of the opposition in examining estimates. If that is not the intention of the government, then let it simply indicate that it is prepared to accept the views of the opposition in regard to retaining about one-third of the departmental estimates for consideration in the house. Let us be the judge of that and it will not cost the government one additional day as far as its business schedule is concerned.

These proposals should not be viewed in isolation from other developments which together have the ominous effect of building the power of government at the expense of the individual citizen. It is important to ask the question: What kind of system are we building here? The office of the Prime Minister of Canada already involves enormous power, especially when the Prime Minister controls a majority government. The office of the Prime Minister of this country controls more power than the President of the United States in his sphere, because none of the checks and balances of the United States system are built into our constitution. All the checks and balances there have ever been in our parliamentary system have been built in here in parliament; yet this is a function that my hon. friends now wish to remove.

Indeed, it can be argued that the Prime Minister of Canada has more power in his sphere than the Prime Minister of Great Britain, even if my hon. friends wish to rely entirely on the argument relating to the British tradition, because in our parliament we do not have the degree of independence in our parties that is evident in Britain where frequently a large slice of a particular party votes independently of the view of the party leader or party caucus.

All of this is occurring at a time when government and society are growing more complex and the feeling of effectiveness of the individual citizen is growing smaller and smaller. The Prime Minister himself has recognized this social and psychological problem and has spoken contagiously of the prospects of involvement and participation. I must say in all frankness that these words have a hollow ring against the background of a guillotine which will even further weaken the control Canadians have over their government today.

Speaking briefly on television the other night when he was addressing the human rights conference here, the Prime Minister affirmed his belief that government must serve and protect individual citizens, and I assume the Prime Minister includes parliament in this context. Certainly that is our conviction. Other agencies exist in a free society to protect the individual against the state—the courts, the free press and some other forums. But none has the ultimate strength or sanction of parliament. And parliament has that strength only because, when the chips are down, parliament can force a government at least to delay. This proposal would deprive us of that power.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that these gentlemen would deform parliament, not reform it. Therefore I am going to propose an amendment and I would ask the Prime Minister and the supporters of the government in this house to consider carefully our position, to consider the fact that it is so easy to destroy and to weaken and so difficult to restore and to strengthen this institution. I assure the members of this house that we on this side are anxious to co-operate in genuine reform and in measures that go to the improvement of the country. But we are not prepared to see parliament weakened. So I call upon the Prime Minister and his colleagues to consider very carefully what they are doing and also to consider very carefully the suggestions we are making.

[Translation]

Seconded by Mr. Baldwin, I move:

That the fourth report of the special committee on procedure of the house be not now concurred in but referred back to the committee with instructions that it have power to recommend that proposed standing order 16-A be amended to provide that a motion to accept the decision of the proceedings committee shall only be made following the unanimous decision of the proceedings committee arrived at during a meeting properly convened upon adequate written notice.

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would be less than fair if I did not say to the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) that I congratulate him on that part of his speech, and it was the greater part, in which he described the changes that are proposed in the various reports our special committee is making to the House of Commons. No doubt he will recognize that I disagree with him in his interpretation of one or two significant provisions, but he made an excellent statement of the total picture that has been presented to parliament. To these remarks I must add my warm congratulations to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) on the important speech he has just made. My colleagues and I wish to associate ourselves with his defence of the rights of this free institution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Like others, Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I believe that the rules of this house must be improved. We stand for parliamentary reform. Like the Leader of the Opposition, we do not think that improved rules are the final answer. We think in the long run that what really counts is the quality of debate, the nature of the legislation that is placed before us and the motives of those who take part in the work of this institution. If we are here to make a shambles of it we can do it no matter how good the rules are. If we are here to do the business of the people of Canada we can do that even if the rules are not as good as they might be. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, we think that there are reforms that must be made.

In a brief aside in my remarks yesterday I possibly indicated the area in which we have to work the hardest. I said I found it interesting to read the words, reported back in 1876, of an hon. member who complained that the special committee on procedure of that year had not gone far enough. He said, "If we do not do something the sessions will get out of hand. Instead of our getting along with two month sessions they are going to last three months." That was back in 1876. Now our concern is to get 15 or 18 months of work done in the course of 12 calendar months. In other words, the area about which we have to concern ourselves most so far as reform is concerned is the area of time, how we use the 12 months of the year or how we use the time of the year that is available to us. Speeches I have made both inside and outside the House of Commons and articles I have written for newspapers and periodicals have concentrated on this issue. I know I am speaking for my colleagues in saying that one of the most important things we must accomplish in any revision of the rules of this house is the provision of machinery by which we can make the best use of our time. We are no longer a parliament concerned only with post offices, roads, customs tariffs and a few things like that. We are concerned with everything that affects our people from the cradle to the grave. We are concerned with problems from under the sea to outer space. The year is only 12 months long and we must cope with the problem of time.

Having said that I am advocate of parliamentary reform and having admitted that I think the major area where we must work is with respect to time, that seems to put me foursquare alongside the changes that our committee has recommended, since many of those changes are directed to solving the problems confronting us because there are only 12 months in the year. That is true. I am on the side of the most of the changes in the rules in the various reports that were presented to the house on Friday of last week. But when I recognize in those reports just one rule—never mind some of the others about which there might be some minor questions—which I regard as dangerous to the freedom of speech, as dangerous to the character of debate in this house and as dangerous to this institution itself, I have no option but to take the same stand that has been taken by the Leader of the Opposition. This rule must not be written into the standing orders of this house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Let us, in our concern about planning the year and organizing our debates, not get the notion that somehow debate is a sin. Debate is not a sin, a mistake, an error or something to be put up with in parliament. Debate is the essence of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Motion for Concurrence in Report

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Debate is the means whereby we bring into focus the problems, opinions and thoughts of the people of Canada whom we represent. Yes, I agree with the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton—perhaps he was quoting me—that the most insidious form of closure is unlimited time spent on one or two measures so that there is no time left to deal with other matters. I am very clear in my mind where I stand. We must have reforms that cope with the problem of time. But you do not cope with the problem of time in a democratic state by giving all the power over parliament to a dictator—which is what the new rule 16-A would do.

The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton referred to this report as the report of our committee. He was correct in saying once or twice that certain things were passed by the majority. That is true. Indeed, when it came to proposed standing order 16-A, all the Liberals voted for it and all the members from all opposition parties voted against it. We were not only against it in committee; we are against it here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Although I am opposed to proposed standing order 16-A I think it is only fair to the house and, I think, fair to myself that I take a few minutes to express my approval of most of what is in the fourth report and practically all that is in the fifth report that we shall be dealing with later. Many of the items in those reports are items we have been proposing for a number of years. I like what we have done. For example, we have decided to cut out what some new members in particular have felt to be a ridiculous duplication of debate. We have done that by saying that it is not necessary to debate money bills at the resolution stage, at the second reading stage, in committee of the whole and at the third reading stage. We decided to cut out one of the stages of debate, namely the resolution stage, and we recommended that in our report. We have also taken the view that it is hardly a good use of our time to have a thorough debate on a bill in a standing committee so far as its clauses are concerned, only to have that debate all over again on the floor of the house. We decided that we should have one or the other but not both debates. We made a similar decision with respect to the budget. We noted that the budget went through several stages. There is the six day debate with Mr. Speaker in the chair, debate on the resolutions, debate on second reading, debate in committee of the whole and so on. We decided to cut out the stage of debate on the resolutions.

These things, Mr. Speaker, I regard not as something we have consented to begrudgingly but as improvements that are long overdue. We are pleased to support them. But I draw attention to the fact that all these items are means by which we have tried to cope with the problem of time. We have tried to contract the time to be used on certain stages so that we can have more time for more pieces of legislation.

We have done some other things, too. We met requests put to us by the government, and I have no hesitation in saying that we agreed to those requests. For example, hon. members who have been here for a while will recall that there have been times when the government wanted to deal with urgent matters but was not able to bring them before parliament because of the requirement that 48 hours notice must be given, and so on. There have been occasions when the whole house has been prepared to deal with something but one hon. member—let us think of one who is not here any more; he used to sit across the way—said, no. As a result, parliament was frustrated. We have therefore provided for rules which enable notice to be given of urgent legislation during the period of prorogation or during the period between a general election and the first meeting of parliament. We have also made a provision under which a government can ask for an extension of time through the supper hour or at the end of the day. It is true we have surrounded this with certain precautions, we have made it possible for ten members to prevent this happening and in this way to prevent abuses. Generally speaking, however, the whole tenor of our recommendations has been to try to eliminate duplication of debate and to facilitate the possibility of the nation's business getting before parliament and being dealt with.

I think it is true to say that these general recommendations meet with the approval of all of us. The new members who, after coming here, felt we were wasting a certain amount of time are delighted with them, and I believe the old members feel the same way about them. I also approve of the trial we propose to make of the new arrangements concerning the business of supply. If there is a slight difference of opinion between the Leader of the Opposition and me over this, maybe we could reconcile it behind the curtain. I deeply share his concern whether or not the reference of all the estimates to standing committees will work. I feel concern for the same reason as he does.

First of all, our committees do not perform in the same way as does the House of Commons in this place. If we load the committees with an abundance of estimates and other work as well, if we fail to accept the recommendation that there be times when the house should adjourn in order that more committees may meet, and if we fail to provide the committees with adequate staff, the system will break down. Nevertheless, I think the proposal is worth a trial if only for the reason that the present system is not working. In support of that last statement I need only refer to what happened at the end of last evening. Hon. members who were present witnessed the approval without question of estimates amounting to billions of dollars in the space of a few minutes. Apart from this, the 19 days we spent in committee of supply on estimates were frustrating. Take this session. Never were we able to pin a minister down and get a satisfactory answer. Never were we able to say: we will not let your estimates through until we get a satisfactory reply. After all, the minister had only to sit tight and count on the efflux of time. The present system is so unsatisfactory that it becomes worth while to try something else. I think that what the committee has recommended is a workable proposal, and it is worth trying.

Some hon. members may ask: are you not aware that if this report is accepted these rules will become permanent and will not apply on an experimental basis? That is true, but in the fifth report we recommended that a committee on procedure and organization be made a permanent committee of the house. We have been given an assurance by the leader of the house that the government itself will give an undertaking during the course of this debate that at the next session of parliament a term of reference will be given to that committee enabling it to review the working of these rules at this session, should they be approved. So there is an element of experiment left, and I think this is what we should do in terms of supply.

Perhaps I have now spent enough time on the things in the report which are good. I thought I owed it to the house to say what I have said and that I also owed it to myself to say that 90 or 95 per cent of this report—I do not know how one measures these things mathematically—is good, good not only because it means change but good because it tries to cope with the main problem facing us, that is to say, the proper use of our time.

Having got all these things in the special committee—and I am referring now both to ourselves and to the government side—the government was not satisfied. I would point out that chronologically speaking we did not get this proposed standing order 16A until we had agreed to most of the rest of these proposals. It might be thrown back at me that we could not agree earlier in the meetings of the committee on a programming arrangement, so it was put off until the end. But the fact of the matter is that after we had agreed to a scheme which abolishes the committees of supply and ways and means, after we had agreed to cutting out the debate on the resolution stage of all bills, after we had agreed to cutting out debate on the resolution stage of the budget, after we had agreed to give the government special powers to bring in emergency measures and so on, the leader of the house came before the committee with the proposed standing order 16A and the suggestion that a committee on procedure be formed and given the powers outlined in the wording which is now before us.

One of the reasons some of us feel annoyed about this is that it seems to us our own words are being prostituted. Time and time again I have argued for the planning of the parliamentary year. I have used the word "calendarizing" to describe the process we ought to follow. It is being done, in part, in the proposed arrangements for supply. But the fact that we have argued for the planning of the parliamentary year does not give the government the right to come along with a proposal which completely takes away the rights of members of parliament and then try to tell us that the government is simply implementing our own ideas.

What does standing order 16A do? The Leader of the Opposition will forgive me if I go over some of the ground he has covered, but no doubt it will be covered again a few times until the government recognizes the validity of our argument and realizes that this report, at least so far as 16A is concerned, ought to be turned back to the special committee for review and for change. Standing order 16-A proposes that there be a committee on procedure, presumably made up of the four party house leaders, which would meet usually on Mondays and Wednesdays but in any case at the call of the Chair.

This piece about the quorum is really most interesting. The quorum is to consist of the member or members who happen to be present. Mr. Speaker, we met in camera, I know, but once the meetings are all over surely what is in the minutes of the committee becomes public property. I must say that when I saw the first draft it read that the members present should constitute a quorum. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) said he wanted it to read "member or members". I confess that I laughed. I thought he was joking. But he was serious. He said he wanted it written in that way in order that members of the opposition parties could not make this committee ineffective by boycotting its meetings. But the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton stood up this afternoon and said it was inconceivable that opposition house leaders would not co-operate in this new regime. He said it was inconceivable that any opposition house leader would not come to these meetings and try to work things out. If it is so inconceivable, why cast this reflection on opposition house leaders by suggesting that some of them are going to boycott this whole affair and that the proceedings of parliament will bog down?

• (5:50 p.m.)

I suggest that this provision simply cannot stay there. I would like to see the whole of 16-A thrown out, but if it is going to stay some changes will have to be made. One is this business about the quorum consisting of the member or members who happen to be present. The Leader of the Opposition said that the President of the Privy Council could hold a meeting in the morning while he was taking a shower.

An hon. Member: And throw the baby out with the bath water.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Somebody says, "and throw the baby out with the bath water," but it was a shower that the Leader of the Opposition was talking about.

There is another item in that rule that will require a little more consideration. Farther on there is a reference to the distinction between reports made unanimously and reports that are not unanimous. Mr. Speaker, can you not see an interesting point of order arising some day if this recommendation goes through?

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

The government house leader comes in and says: "This motion is made pursuant to a unanimous decision of the committee." We, the other three house leaders, get up and say, "Oh, unanimous? We weren't there." But he says he was there, he was the quorum.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We will have no corroborative evidence, but he will ask us to believe that he agreed with himself. So we have a unanimous report brought in by one member of a four member committee and whatever he proposes has to be decided immediately without debate. The only possible delay there can be is that if ten of us stand up and object we can have a recorded vote. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this way of dealing with the business of a free parliament goes even beyond the ridiculous.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton has a nice way with words. You know, Mr. Speaker, when he got to this point today wasn't it lovely the way he put it? He said: If there is a breakdown, a disagreement among party leaders, then of course the government must be confronted with its responsibility.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You can't beat it, Mr. Speaker. What he was really saying was that in the final analysis they control parliament, in the final analysis they are the masters of the house, in the final analysis they over there have the complete say and the opposition can go jump in the lake.

The rest of this proposed standing order 16-A is quite clear. The house leaders meet. If there are occasions when they are in agreement then under this rule, of course, their report is brought in on a Thursday and there can be no debate. The house decides on it right away. We accept that. If there is agreement we think this is the way it ought to be done.

One of the things lacking in recent years is that it has been possible for the house leaders to reach agreement among themselves but there has been no way to give effect to that agreement so far as the business of the house is concerned unless that agreement has been made an order of the house by unanimous consent. As a house leader I recognize the responsibility that will go with that position when a recommendation of this kind is going through. All of us holding the position of house leader will have to know pretty well the thinking among the members of our parties, and we will have to do some arguing with the members of our parties as to the things we think should be agreed to. We are prepared to accept that responsibility but, Mr. Speaker, that is the way parliament ought to be run, by all of our members through their representations, the house leaders, accepting the responsibility of organizing the work of parliament. Parliament should not be run by one man supported by a majority over there saying how things should be done.

The Leader of the Opposition made a reference to the fact that assurances might be given that this rule would not be used in its extreme. I am afraid these assurances will not have any value so far as I am concerned. You see, Mr. Speaker, during the course of our committee proceedings a proposal that was made at one time was that all second reading debates be limited to one day, and at another time the proposal was made that all third readings be decided without any debate. When you have people with that frame of mind toward parliament you do not put a rule like this in their hands.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): One of these days a complicated, omnibus bill will be coming forward from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner). Under the new rules it would have a second reading debate, go to a standing committee, and come back to the house for a report stage debate and third reading. It is a contentious bill and you know, Mr. Speaker, that lots of things can happen. I imagine that at the report stage of that bill there may be 40 amendments for Your Honour to sort out, select, and so on. Let us say that the government house leader thinks that too much of this sin called debate is going to take place. I am going to the extreme, Mr. Speaker. I am going to the reductio ad absurdum, but it can happen with this government. He can bring in one of these unanimous reports if he has met alone, or in the event that the rest of us are not in agreement with him, and then we can have a two hours debate on his recommendation. He recommends a one day debate on second reading of this omnibus bill and that it go to committee, that the committee have two days or three days, that the report stage last for one hour, and that third reading take half an hour. The one hour on the report stage will save Your Honour the problem of sorting out the 40 amendments.

I know I have stated this in ridiculous terms, but that is possible under this proposed rule, and in that same motion based on his unanimous recommendation the government house leader could make proposals for every other item appearing on the order paper.

I do not suppose we will get to this omnibus bill until after the Christmas recess, if we have a Christmas recess, but by that time there may be a measure on the order paper to sell Air Canada to C.P.A., and that could be covered in the government house leader's motion, giving us no real opportunity to fight it. By that time the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) may have completed his review of social legislation and we may have legislation on the order paper concerning old age security and family allowances. These can be included in the government house leader's motion also, and all we have is the right to debate it for two hours, with speeches limited to 20 minutes, and then the vote is put.

This is a rule that we cannot stand for. I hope that the government will listen to reason and will agree that it has to be changed. We do not enter this debate with any desire to keep it going forever and ever, to prevent our getting out of here for Christmas week and that sort of thing. We are not starting a filibuster. We are not daring the government to bring on closure. We are making this protest because we believe debate in parliament is valid, and if we can make our case for the deletion of the proposed standing order 16-A, or its improvement, we hope the government will give consideration to it. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we in this party support the amendment which has been moved by the Leader of the Opposition.

I have some suggestions I want to make about standing order 16-A as to ways in which improvements can be made, but perhaps I can keep Your Honour guessing until eight o'clock as to what those suggestions are.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Dumont)—External aid—Increased aid to French-speaking countries; the hon. member for Renfrew North (Mr. Hopkins)—C.B.C.—Protest against program respecting Algonquin Park; the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave)—Broadcasting—Inquiry as to request for tapes of news broadcasts.

It being six o'clock, the house will now proceed to private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills and public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

THE CANADA TRUST COMPANY

Mr. D. Gordon Blair (Grenville-Carleton) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-6, respecting the Canada Trust Company.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the Canada Trust Company is a well known Canadian financial institution. It was incorporated in 1894 by an act of the parliament of Canada. Its original capital was set at a maximum of $500,000. In the year 1899 this company became a wholly owned subsidiary of the Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation. The amount of authorized capital was increased at that time to its present maximum of $5 million, all of which has been issued and outstanding for some time. The company was given the additional power to receive money on deposit by an act of parliament in 1922.

The growth of the role of trust companies generally in Canada's economy has been accelerating by almost geometrical progression, and the growth of the Canada Trust Company has been keeping pace. When the parent company, the Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation, reached its 100th birthday in the spring of 1964, the total assets under the administration of the Canada Trust-Huron and Erie organization passed the $1 billion mark. This year, as a result of internal growth and acquisitions, the total assets under administration will pass the $2 billion mark.

One of the major functions of the company is the acceptance of money in trust through guaranteed trust certificates, or guaranteed deposit certificates, for investment. At present the Trust Companies Act limits the amount that may be borrowed by any trust company, together with moneys entrusted to it for investment the repayment of which is guaranteed by that trust company, to a maximum of 15 times the excess of the assets of the trust company over its liabilities. Notwithstanding a conservative policy of retention of a substantial portion of its annual earnings for growth purposes, the company anticipates that this internal generation of reserves will not be sufficient to provide for the expected growth in borrowing and acceptance of public money for investment arising from its expanding business, and the company finds itself in a position where all the existing capital has been subscribed for and issued for many years, while at the same time it is faced with a need for increased capital by the issuance of further shares.

The expansion of the services of the Canada Trust Company, with 56 branches and being licensed to carry on business in eight of the provinces of Canada and in the Yukon territory, has been accomplished partly by acquisitions and partly by internal growth, and while no further acquisitions are contemplated at the present time it is clear that additional capital is presently and will in the future be required to enable the company to play its full part in the growth of the economy. For these reasons the Canada Trust Company is seeking the present legislation to increase its authorized capital to $20 million.

I do not wish to infringe on the rules of order, Mr. Speaker, but it will be noted that on the order paper the next bill to be presented is one to amend the charter of the Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation. In view of the interest that has been expressed by hon. members of this house in the ownership of financial institutions, perhaps I might be permitted to make one comment about the Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation which, as I said earlier, is the parent of Canada Trust. The Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation is a company which is almost 100 per cent owned and controlled by Canadian shareholders. As it is the sole owner of Canada Trust, it can be said that the Canada Trust Company is a wholly owned Canadian corporation.

I hope it will be possible for hon. members to accord rapid passage at the second reading stage of this bill and the one relating to the Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation. The officers of these companies would then be able to appear before the appropriate committee of this house to give full answers to questions that may be asked and further explanations of the matters which I have raised during my brief remarks.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, we appreciated the remarks of the sponsor of this bill, particularly in view of the fact this company is, as he stated, a Canadian-owned company operated by Canadians. Many things have been said in the past few months regarding private corporations in Canada and the fact that Canadian capital is not available in our financial community to develop corporations. It has been said on many occasions that it has been necessary for hon. members to sponsor foreign-owned companies. Therefore the history of this company is exceptional and the state of its financial report would indicate that it has had absolutely no difficulty in finding money and no need to ask parliament to allow it to increase its capitalization. It is now asking parliament for authority to increase its capitalization by almost four times.

I went to the library to find out who owned this company and its genetic background. I was surprised to learn that this was a rather exceptional company, or at least an exception to the general rule, in that the mortgage company owns the trust company. The situation is almost always the other way round. Usually the trust company owns the mortgage company and in many cases has numerous other companies under its control. There is probably some significance in this fact although it escapes me, not being very skilled in the field of economics.

It was interesting to note in looking up the genetic background of this company that it started from a mortgage company rather than a trust company. I am interested in what appears to be a phenomenon in this regard. It appears to have been highly successful for a century in a field in which many other companies have failed. A number of companies have gone bankrupt and, between you and me, Mr. Speaker, it is fortunate that this company was not among them.

This company has the name "Canada Trust Company". This name may carry a certain amount of prestige or an intimation of government support, at least in the minds of the public, because of the word "Canada ". One might guess that this company was owned by General Finance, Avco, the Delta Corporation or any other major financial corporation which used the name "Canada" to its advantage but our detriment.

I was surprised when reading the reports from the other place to note the interest of senators in the ownership of this organization. I was surprised to find that certain senators questioned the legitimacy of this company expanding its financial position, mainly because it was not known whether it was foreign owned. Mr. Humphrys was quite definite in his understanding that there was no foreign control of this trust company.

We are all familiar with the pattern of the history of these companies. It seems to me that the history of this company in comparison with other companies is reversed. It seems to have wanted to establish a bank to obtain the financial resources that would allow it to lend money through the finance company rather than the bank itself. The method being used at that time is probably not necessary now because of the increased bank rate of interest which in some cases surpasses that of the finance companies in their lending programs. On a number of occasions finance corporations have come to parliament to establish banks. Therefore I fail to see the significance of bank ownership of this trust company. I think the fact this corporation is owned by a mortgage company would further complicate the matter.

The company is seeking to increase its capitalization from $5 million, as it has been since the turn of the century, to $20 million. The company, of course, started out with a smaller capitalization in 1894. At that time it was only $500,000. I think this is an indication that there is a role for Canadian owned trust companies. It is a role legitimately being played by this company. It has been supported to the extent of increasing its capitalization tenfold and it is now asking for it to be increased by $15 million.

The sponsor of the bill has pointed out that borrowings are limited by law to 15 times the excess of assets over the liabilities. I presume the relationship between assets and liabilities will vary not necessarily in relation to the capitalization of the corporation but according to the type of loans it makes and the call made on particular mortgage fields. To some extent it will also vary according to the portfolios the company holds. I suggest that the portfolios held by Canada Trust Company are very significant. They have total demand notes as of December 31, 1967, of $1,296,333. Changes since 1966 amounted to $1,153,667. This indicates a very large turnover. In addition they hold a great number of shares in many corporations. I am sure those interested in accumulated investments of one type or another or mutual funds would, after looking at this list of portfolios, consider they had made a very good investment. I am surprised at the stability this company has had in the portfolios they hold. For instance, they hold 10,000 shares of the Bank of Montreal. There was no change in this portfolio. This is just one stock. The same thing applies to the other stocks held by the company.

I figured it out the other day for my own satisfaction. I think this is a very wise way to play the stock market. If I had bought Bank of Montreal stock a couple of years ago to the tune of 100 shares at $75 each, I would have invested $7,500. I calculated that with the split of that bank's stock and the dividend they have paid, which was about $1.50 a share last year, and multiplying by five times to cover the five shares for one, a person would in one year have made about $4,600 on a $7,500 investment. That is not bad business when you are playing with bank stock.

I point this out to illustrate that with this type of portfolio the assets have increased so rapidly over the liabilities that the balance of 15 to 1 is probably providing them with even more than the amount mentioned by the sponsor of the bill. I gather that in 1964 the assets amounted to $1 billion and in 1968 they amounted to $2 billion. When you consider just one item you realize that 10,000 shares would amount to about—well, Mr. Speaker, it is a very large amount of money in any event. It is not really the kind of calculation I make when I am pretending that I have bought some stock on the market.

This company holds a portfolio of 25,000 shares in Seagrams distillery. They increased the holding by 15,000 shares last year. They hold 30,000 shares in John Labatt. That is not bad stock, either. In Hiram Walker they hold 20,000 shares. That is not bad, if the government does not start playing around with the liquor tax. The company sold their 3,000 shares in Canada Cement. That was probably good business because the monopoly in the cement field seems to be disappearing. In respect of chemicals they bought an additional 3,000 shares in Du Pont of Canada. and now hold 6,000 shares in this corporation. They hold 5,000 shares in Union Carbide. In the field of finance they hold 15,000 shares in Industrial Acceptance Corporation. In regard to food they have some 9,000 shares in Canada Packers and 10,000 shares in Maple Leaf. In the field of heavy industry they hold 15,000 shares in Algoma Steel, 25.000 shares in Dominion Foundries, and 25,000 in the Steel Company of Canada.

[Mr. Peters.]

Reading this list hon. members will also be surprised, as I am, by the number of shares they have bought in Canadian corporations. I could read the names of the board of directors and probably find a reason for this. This company has also bought shares in the mining fields, in Cassiar Asbestos, Cominco, Falconbridge Nickel, Hollinger Consolidated Gold, International Nickel, Kerr Addison, Noranda Mines, Pine Point and Rio Algom. These companies, including International Nickel now, are mainly Canadian owned and pretty well Canadian controlled.

Canada Trust holds shares in B.A. Oil, Canadian Superior Oil, Dome Petroleum, Hudson's Bay Oil, Imperial Oil and Texaco. In the field of public utilities they hold shares in the old, reliable Bell Telephone Company, which Bell will tell you is Canadian owned and controlled. Incidentally, Bell Telephone is asking for an increase in the amount paid by subscribers for the service, and I suppose that will give this company a little more to bid on. The company also holds shares in Calgary Power, Consumers' Gas and International Utilities. In the field of pulp and paper they hold shares in Abitibi Paper, B.C. Forest Products and MacMillan-Bloedel. Under the heading "Miscellaneous" they hold shares in the C.P.R., Dominion Textile, Moore Corporation, Southam Company and Westcoast Transmission. In American equity funds, they have 341,461 shares in U.S. Equity. This would strike me as being an American-owned company, but the main reason for my impression is the fact that the name indicates it is American. If you look at all the companies that are called Canadian but are owned by Americans you realize that this does not mean much.

• (6:20 p.m.)

On reading this list I am impressed by the fact that most of the companies are Canadian owned. I think this makes our point. We have been saying for a long time that in Canada there is money for investment in a reasonable company, and there is money available for investment by these companies. We have been saying that a company owned and controlled by Canadians normally resident in Canada will in turn invest in other Canadian companies. I suggest that those who have been so willing to support U.S. companies because, as they have said, we need U.S. capital, should look at this company and take an interest in it. It seems to me that this is the kind of company that we should support. It is owned and controlled by Canadians and it will invest in the Canadian scene. I suggest it is a good company.

Whether or not this company needs to be expanded, I am not really qualified to say. If it were a U.S. company I would say we should not let it expand, but since it is a Canadian company I cannot say for sure. I was interested in hearing the remarks of the superintendent of insurance, for whom I have great respect. His report seems to indicate that the control of this company remains stable and that no effort seems to have been made to change that control. He also indicated that the only purpose of this bill is to allow for the expansion of the company. He really has no objection to the Huron and Erie Mortgage Company owning this company. He assured the committee that they are paying income tax separately and that there is no hanky-panky between the two companies so far as the Canadian government and the insurance branch are concerned. Therefore we can give it a fairly clean bill of health.

I am in favour of this type of company. As we have been trying to convince hon. members for a long time, this is the kind of company which would bring about progress in the investment field. It is a fact that there is more money available from Canada for investment in the United States than there is coming the other way, and the fact that this company has been able to raise its assets from the original capital of $500,000 to $5 million is an indication that we in Canada have the necessary financial ability and backing and that we are capable of developing along the proper line. With a slight amount of assistance from the government there is the necessary capital in this country to do this type of development in other Canadian enterprises.

I have listed some of the companies in the primary industries of Canada such as banks, breweries, construction, chemicals, food industry, merchandising, mining, public utilities, oils and the pulp and paper industry. We have been able to contribute to these industries through the purchase of their stock. By accumulating this kind of Canadian asset we have been able to do business as does a trust company in making loans.

While we wish to use this company at the present time for the purpose of convincing other companies interested in developing and expanding in Canada, it is our hope that this company will eventually be able to make the changes it desires and that after being established in Canada for 100 years it will be able to continue its business and to convince other Canadians in other fields that to own and operate a Canadian company in the field of mortgages and loans is a worth-while and lucrative proposition.

Mr. Mongrain: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, and I do so for the sake of the record of the proceedings of the house. I should like to point out that there is not one Conservative member in the house and in fact there has not been for the past half hour.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is hardly a point of order.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, it is quite true that there is not a great number of members in the house at present, but when I look across the floor and around me I realize at this time that quality is stressed rather than quantity.

When I heard the opening remarks of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) I was very impressed with his presentation. I might say that although he made a very eloquent presentation this afternoon it was not very persuasive.

To return to the point about quality, may I say that on looking across the way I see a banker. Since bankers are always interested in trust companies, I have no doubt that the hon. member, with his banking experience in the past, will rise and make some remarks with regard to trust companies because of the relationship that has prevailed between trust companies and banks. On looking across I also see the hon. member for Lanark and Renfrew (Mr. McBride) who is a minister and a theologian. As well as having been quite successful in the election on June 25 he has a deep knowledge of mortgage and trust companies since so many churches have mortgages on them and it is usually a trust or a mortgage company which holds them. I am sure that when he realizes the high percentage paid on mortgages he is made aware of the close relationship between banks and churches. I am certain he would like to rise and tell us about the close relationship that prevails between the two.

I also note the presence in the house of the Minister of Defence Production (Mr. Jamieson) who comes from a province which has had a spate of different churches moving in. They have done an excellent job with regard to education and have assumed an educational role which the province at one time was not prepared to accept. The minister has made quite a name for himself in the communications field and he wrote an excellent book, part of which I happened to read and with which I was quite impressed. He certainly has made an excellent impression on the house and he does a good job in his field although he is restricted. I am glad to see he is here. Again I must say that it is the quality of the members of the house present that impresses me this evening.

Having prefaced my remarks I will now turn directly to Bill S-6 respecting the Canada Trust Company. As the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton said, it is a Siamese twin, and the other twin is the Huron and Erie Mortgage Company. The explanatory note in the bill reads as follows:

> The authorized capital of the corporation, the Canada Trust Company, and, in French, La Compagnie de Trust Canada, is presently limited to an amount not exceeding $5,000,000 divided into 250,000 shares of the par value of $20, all of which shares have been allotted and issued as fully paid and non-assessable. The corporation now desires to have additional capital available for issuance.

As I said, one could not help but be impressed with the opening remarks of the sponsor of this bill when he said that the company was incorporated in 1894 with a capitalization of $500,000 and in 1899 it became a fully owned subsidiary of the Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation. The assets of this concern have been accelerating in geometric progression. This is an excellent phrase which could apply to the economic and financial progress of this company.

Then, he said that in 1964 the assets amounted to $1 billion and between 1964 and 1968 they increased to $2 billion. This business of the corporation embraces the issuance of guaranteed trust certificates, a general deposit service and other matters. At the moment the problem is that the internal generation of earnings is not sufficient to meet present day commitments in the capital field. They have 56 branches operating in eight provinces. More capital is required, and they would like their capital to be $20 million. As the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) said, he was more than delighted to know that this company was a Canadian company because the burden of our message since the commencement of this session has been the amount of ownership by United States companies that prevails here in Canada.

One would think that when a company such as the Canada Trust Company is applying for an increase in capitalization the members of the other place would take a very keen interest. I noticed, as a result of reading the proceedings that occurred there when this bill was presented on October 16, that the proceedings covered less than two pages. This does indicate that there could not have been too much interest by the members of the other place in this very serious business of increasing the authorized capital of this company. Some of the questions that were asked seemed to be rather simple ones concerning the relationship of the company with the banks. No one really gets into the nub of the matter because really the crux of the situation is the need for a thorough understanding of the activities of trust companies, and their relationships with banks.

During the last session, Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege of being a member of the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs. At that time we had representatives from the banks and the trust companies appearing before us in connection with the proposed changes in the Bank Act. It was at that time I realized there are two types of trust companies. There are what are known as senior trust companies and junior trust companies. If I recall rightly, the attack by the officials from the banks was on these near banks. They said these trust companies were invading the jurisdiction of the banks, so the banks had to have some protection against them. The banks were convincing in their representations, first of all to the minister of finance of that time, now Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), and then to the members of the committee, so that they were successful in having the 6 per cent ceiling in the Bank Act lifted. The result of this move was disclosed last week when the banks revealed that their earnings and profits for this year exceeded a maximum of 48 per cent, for the Royal Bank of Canada, and went down to about 20 per cent for the junior banks.

One would think that the junior and senior trust companies would demand an immediate inquiry because at that time the villain in the piece was the banks. Now, it is quite true that trust companies have made a modest record with regard to their earnings, but it does not compare for a moment with the earnings of the banks. Another more important issue relates to the activities of trust companies. When we think of trust companies, we think of a company or group of men who look after the estates of people and also perform corporate duties. They issue investment certificates. They also issue debentures for the purpose of raising capital. In this battle between trust companies and banks, there has been a continuing friction with regard to the cashing of cheques; the competition has been very keen. Many trust companies refuse to cash cheques that are issued by banks, but more important some banks are refusing to cash cheques that have been issued by trust companies. This indicates the stress and strain of competition between these two major institutions. This is why I must say that I would have hoped the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair), rather than sponsoring these bills, would have impressed upon the Minister of Finance the necessity of bringing these financial institutions back to parliament for a review of their activities. This is the important feature. When it comes to the economic affairs of the country, it is the financial institutions that form the basis of the economic activity in Canada.

When I heard the impressive investment portfolio of this company set forth by the hon. member for Timiskaming, I realized that it is not only bank shares, but it is the shares they have in some of the other important companies in Canada. This capital that has been accumulated by the people of Canada and entrusted to these financial institutions forms the economic basis for the economic growth of Canada. I say therefore that we need a constant review of our financial institutions in Canada. I was hoping that the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton would really direct his remarks to the Minister of Finance and ask for the reconvening of the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs so that the officials of banks and trust companies could be brought before that committee again in order to review their activities in the light of the changes that were made in the Bank Act. It is possible that the trust companies may be in a worse position than the banks. I think the trust companies do perform a function in this society, and although I may not agree with it, I think it is very necessary. When one realizes that the banks are able to increase their credit by eight and a half times the amount of deposits they have on hand, it becomes apparent that the trust companies may now be in a worse position than the banks.

Having said that, I would point out that there was a very interesting debate in the committee with regard to the expansion of money. Our friends from the Ralliement Creditiste put forth a very impressive argument with regard to the many services of the banks and the expansion of credit. We heard the members of the Ralliement Creditiste state that Canadian banks had expanded money eight and a half times, and this is not true of the trust companies. Again, this is partly the result of the restriction imposed on their credit. I say therefore that the trust companies should not be in any worse position than the banks. I think in the near future banks will be carrying out corporate duties and doing what the trust companies are doing now in regard to setting up trusts and financing various matters. They will be issuing debentures. In fact the banks were given authority to issue debentures for the purpose of increasing their financings. In all probability banks will be administering estates. So having criticized the banks for their preferred position in regard to expanding credit, I feel that in future banks and trust companies will be on an equal footing and that both will administer estates, carry out corporate duties and issue income certificates and debentures.

Having laid the groundwork for establishing equality between these two types of institution, it behooves me to say that there must be common regulations applying to both. Although I should like to support the bill that is being presented, which seeks permission for the development of this particular company, I am reluctant to do so because I feel a review of these financial institutions should be carried out.

It this regard perhaps I should relate a few experiences that I have had with trust companies. The Canada Trust Company, which has as its parent the Huron and Erie Mortgage Company, does a fair amount of mortgage financing. Many people in the area in which I live, which is Toronto, have approached the Huron and Erie and the Canada Trust for mortgages. Canada Trust is like every other trust company in that it is interested in increasing its profit. At the moment the prevailing rate on mortgages charged by Canada Trust, I would think, is between 9 and 9¼ per cent.

I might also point out that this company has placed quite a few mortgages on church buildings. If a church has to pay an interest rate of 9 per cent on a mortgage, which might be as high as $50,000, then this is an illustration of the financial burden that falls on church members who wish to build a new church.

But more important than this, Mr. Speaker, my concern is with the percentage of the company's investment portfolio that is devoted to mortgages. When I became aware of the diversity of common shares and equities in which the Canada Trust Company invests, I thought I would receive some information in this regard. The housing crisis in Canada today can be laid at the doorstep of financial institutions that by and large have directed their investment moneys to equities, rather than assuming responsibility for supplying mortgage money in Canada.

I should like to say to the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton that if this particular company would increase the percentage of its investment portfolio that is directed into the mortgage field, then I would be very impressed.

Mr. Benjamin: And lower the rate of interest.

Mr. Gilbert: Yes, Mr. Speaker, as one of my colleagues points out, if it also lowered the rate of interest. The money derived therefrom is the savings of the Canadian people. It does seem rather odd that people invest money in trust companies at an interest rate of 4 or 5 per cent and then borrow money to build a home at a rate of something like 9 or 9¼ per cent; but this does happen.

Mr. Blair: Mr. Speaker, may I have permission to ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Gilbert: Certainly.

Mr. Blair: I wonder whether the hon. member has been able to ascertain to his satisfaction that rates of 4 and 5 per cent are indeed paid on deposits and that rates of 9 or 10 per cent, that I believe he quoted, are indeed charged on mortgages. Would he not agree with me that perhaps these are questions which could be better explored in committee with the officials of the company?

Mr. Gilbert: I should like to thank the hon. member for asking that question because I would not want to mislead him, or indeed any member of the house. I just wanted to indicate that such interest rates are charged. I know that the rate on guaranteed income certificates has been ranging between 5 and 6 per cent. Due to the enormous increase in rates generally, it is very difficult to keep interest rates on mortgages down. I think earlier I mentioned rates of between 9 and 9½ per cent, because those rates have been charged in my experience. But my main point concerns the direction given moneys that are received from Canadians it is what these companies do with such moneys that causes me anxiety. That completes my remarks, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, as a new member of the house I should like to say that so far this debate has been most illuminating and extremely fascinating to me. All of us need to explore this whole field of finance a great deal further since over the past few years there has been a number of crises which were financial in nature, not only at the national but also at the international level. I think that on any occasion when a bill of this nature comes before the house we should do all in our power to have not only a debate of quality, as pointed out by my colleague from Broadview (Mr. Gilbert)—and I agree with him that in this case the quality has been high—but also a debate that has more quantity.

I disagree with him when he says that there are sufficient people present in the chamber. I did not make a point of this earlier, Mr. Speaker, because I did not want to raise this issue while we were discussing this most important matter, but there were at one stage fewer members present than the number required for a quorum in the house. I think that if the general public were to learn that a matter of such importance as this interests so few members, they would express concern.

A little while ago, assisted by one of my colleagues more able in arithmetic than I, I took a count and ascertained the percentage of the members of the New Democratic party who were present for this debate. Compared with the other parties in the house, our percentage was the highest. This party had 24 per cent of its members present.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I do not think the remarks of the hon. member are pertinent to this debate.

Mr. Rose: With respect, sir, if I may be allowed to complete my point, the N.D.P. had 24 per cent of its members present, the Liberals 8 per cent, the Créditistes 12 per cent, and less than 1 per cent of the members of the official opposition were present.

• (6:50 p.m.)

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, as a matter of privilege, I consider myself more than 1 per cent.

Mr. Rose: I accept the hon. member's remark. Perhaps I rang the wrong bell, and I apologize to him. No hon. member in this parliament ought to be considered as representing less than 1 per cent of anything, no matter where he sits in the house.

I congratulate the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton for his detailed presentation and his diligent research into this matter. We all welcome receiving this kind of information; I think it behooves all of us to learn more about the companies operating in Canada. This firm is known as the Canada Trust Company. There is something warm and conforting about the word "trust". It encourages trust, something we need in all business dealings. On the other hand I notice that this company is to have dealings with the Huron and Erie corporation, and the word "eery" is not nearly as comforting as "trust". Be that as it may, I should be obliged if the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, whose background in mathematics seems a lot broader than mine, could elaborate on the differences between geometric and arithmetic progressions, since those terms sounded very formidable to my ears.

I notice that the assets of the company in the past four years have grown by $1 billion. I think its directors are to be congratulated. As a Canadian owned company it merits the support of hon. members of the house, especially if its business is of benefit to the people of Canada. Although trust companies by the very nature of things must pursue profits, there is no reason why their activities should not be in the best interests of our people in developing a stronger Canada. They do much worth-while work as executors of many estates, and acting as trustees for beneficiaries. I think that there ought to be no doubt about their integrity, acceptability or sincerity so far as business dealings are concerned.

These qualities have not always been present. For example, in recent years a number of companies, among which British Mortgage loomed large, did not act in a manner that was in the best interests of Canadians. I receive letters regularly from a constituent of mine who is a beneficiary of an estate held or administered by the Royal Trust Company in Montreal. Her major complaint is the interminable delay she is experiencing in having this company settle a rather complicated estate. She and her husband are elderly, and she feels that the company is not acting in her best interests. Apart from instituting legal action there is little she can do to solve her problem.

Current newspaper articles reflect the concern people feel about our financial institutions. In this regard I wish to quote from an article printed in the Financial Times News Service. It is headed "Corporations protest investment regulations", and was written by Judith McMahon. The body of the article says in part:

> The government has at least introduced legislation to protect the public from losses created by the collapse of overextended financial empires like Atlantic Acceptance Corporation.
> But the sweeping powers to inspect and regulate investment companies proposed in the government bill have stirred up a howl of protest in the business community.
> Bill S-17, quietly introduced in the Senate weeks ago, is intended to prevent recurrences of financial collapses like Atlantic and Prudential Finance Corporation, which between them caused $75,000,000 in savings to be wiped out, a few years ago.
> But many corporate executives claim that the legislation reaches far beyond what is necessary to safeguard the public against such financial failures. It would give a federal official, the superintendent of insurance, the power to oversee and investigate the operations of any company which borrows money from the public and invests 25 per cent or more of its assets in stocks, bonds or other debts.

It appears to me, sir, that this is the kind of thing this company is asking permission to do in its expansion program. I continue quoting:

> The act is aimed primarily at the finance and acceptance companies which up to now have not been regulated by the government. But the definition of investment company goes far beyond the finance industry. It would include many industrial and commercial companies with large investments. It is thought it would apply to conglomerate companies and to holding companies.

In conclusion may I say that I was most impressed by the number of distinguished Canadians on the company's board of directors. I wanted to read out the list but have no time for that. Instead I wish to ask several questions.

Apparently about 1,400 shareholders have contributed toward a capitalization of $2 billion. If this bill is allowed to pass, who will be able to buy shares in this company? What is the extra capitalization to be used for? More particularly, will it be possible for foreign owned firms to buy into this expansion?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion for Concurrence in Report

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It being seven o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At seven o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

PROCEDURE

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN FOURTH REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

The house resumed consideration of the following motion (Mr. Blair):

That the fourth report of the special committee on procedure of the house, presented to the house on Friday, December 6, 1968, be concurred in.

And the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In my remarks prior to six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I had endeavoured to make it clear that we in this party are strongly in favour of procedural reform, and in particular that we think the major area in which we need to deal with our rules is that which concerns the use of time. We support most of the proposals which have been made in the reports of our special committee, because for the most part they are directed to that very problem. I hope I also made it clear that we are not entering upon this debate as though it were so much fun and games, but rather that we want almost all of the proposed rule reforms to become part of the standing orders of this house.

I made it equally clear that there is one proposal in the fourth report which we regard as iniquitous, inasmuch as it is inimical to the whole parliamentary process and that, like the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), we are determined that standing order 16-A in its present form at least shall not find a place in the rules of this House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I might take a moment longer to say there are certain specific objections to this rule. First of all the whole idea that a committee of four can function with the attendance of only one person is opposed to every concept of the democratic process. Likewise, the suggestion that in a committee of four the will of one, even though the other three are opposed, can be brought forward as a report from that committee is unthinkable. If there is nothing else to be said about it, that is contrary to the spirit of the section in the British North America Act which says that decisions of the House of Commons are reached by a majority of the voices, not by a minority of one.

We are also opposed to the way in which standing order 16-A would work, because placed in the hands of the government house leader it could amount to closure in advance. I want to make it clear that we do not object to the planning in advance of the business of the house, when that planning is done by agreement, and particularly when it is done by unanimous agreement. But there is all the difference in the world between advance planning by way of agreement as to the use of time, and the right of the government house leader to bring in a proposal which imposes a limitation of time in advance applicable to all members of the house. If this rule goes through, there is certainly no point in retaining standing order 33, the old closure rule which was imposed on parliament back in 1913, because it will be tiddlywinks compared with the authority the government house leader will possess.

I should like to point out also that if this change is put into effect it must be for a purpose. And I know what that purpose is. It is to shorten the debates which take place on the floor of the House of Commons. The government's hand has been shown. The government believes in short debates—one day debates—and this is something the extension of which I believe we ought not to stand for in this House of Commons. Better have no debate at all than any more of these one day debates which amount to nothing more than a round of statements by party leaders or front bench spokesmen. As for the backbenchers on both sides of the house, they might as well go home.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): According to this process of thinking, all the backbenchers need to do is give power of attorney to the front benchers to vote on their behalf from time to time to approve the government's programs.

I believe there is still something to the concept of debate. I hope we shall put it into practice in this very debate—that it will not be just a case of attrition, or the use of closure. I hope the government will be responsive to the arguments put forward. I am delighted to hear that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) himself intends to take part in the debate tonight, and I hope he will demonstrate that he has listened to the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition, and indeed that he has listened to mine. I thank him for the courtesy he has extended to each of us in staying through these speeches this afternoon and this evening. My point is that if this proposed change in the rules makes for a series of one day debates it will have destroyed the whole character of parliament as a forum where matters are thrashed out in the cut and thrust of discussion.

There is another point. No government which is in power for four years, however large its majority, has the right to change the basic nature of this institution. If I may put it in the simple terms I used half an hour ago when the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) and I shared the spotlight on a television program, the present government has been put in charge of the store by the people of Canada for four years. But they do not own the store; they do not have the right to change its basic nature.

This house is basically a debating institution. The government is still the executive; the government still proposes the legislation. But we have the right, by debate, to decide whether or not that legislation should be put into effect. I urge the government to realize that it does not have the right to change rules which are fundamental. Most of the revisions of the kind we have dealt with in our reports are not, but this proposition concerns something basic, namely, the right of the majority to say to backbenchers on either side: You will get your right to represent your constituents only when the government house leader thinks there is time for you in the schedule he dictates.

So, Mr. Speaker, I go along with the proposition that there is an obligation on the part of all of us to organize and plan our time. That means that there are responsibilities on the opposition side as well as on the government side. But I deny absolutely the right of the government, just because it is a majority government, just because it says it has a mandate, to deny to members on either side the right to exercise the thing that is basic to all who come here, namely the right of free speech on behalf of the constituents whom they represent.

Lest my time run out before I get to the suggestions which at six o'clock I said I would make, perhaps I had better come to them now. I indicated earlier that we of the New Democratic party will support the amendment that was proposed this afternoon by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), but I hope that he will not feel that two or three suggestions I am going to make are contrary to the spirit of that amendment. I hope that amendment will be accepted by the government so that this matter can go back to the special committee for further consideration.

Now I am going to suggest one or two other ways that this problem might be solved. I do not move them as a subamendment. I do not put them forward in any firm way but as points of negotiation. If we can be reasonable and responsible about this, I wish to say there are three main things that are wrong with the proposed standing order 16-A—if we are going to have it at all.

The first is the notion that one man out of four is a quorum. Surely nobody can defend that. The second is that one man, although overruled by three, can still put forward his motion as though it were the report of the committee. I know that the standing order is worded to imply that he can do one of two things. He can either bring in a report of the committee, or a motion after there has been consultation with the committee; but, in spirit, what that part of the new rule permits is for one man to be overruled by three and yet come ahead with his recommendation.

The other thing wrong with the rule is the permission contained in it for the government house leader, in one motion, to make any arrangement he wishes covering the time to be allocated to or the disposition of any item or items of the business of the house or any of its standing committees. Mr. Speaker, if I may borrow the word used by the Leader of the Opposition, that is the most horrendous part of it all.

The government house leader tells us it is the government's plan to get to the point where at the start of a session all its legislation will appear on the order paper right away. That did not happen this session, although we were given a list of proposed items. But look at what could happen. The government could put on the order paper 15, 25 or 50 items of legislation and on the first Thursday of the first full week's sitting the government could bring in, in one motion, a provision regarding the time for each and every one of the 15, 25 or 50 items on the order paper.

Before you know it there could be a motion providing one day for each second reading, or providing one hour for each of five items in one day. It could provide for time in standing committees, that that time would be one day each, or even less than that. It could provide for report stage and third reading to be one hour each. Oh, this is efficiency, Mr. Speaker, efficiency gone mad; but it is possible under this provision. I say that the most horrendous part of it all is this right to include any kind of arrangement having to do with the disposition or allocation of time to any item or items of the business of the house or any of the committees of the house. Surely that has to be altered.

I suggest that there are some things which might be negotiated if we get this matter back to the special committee, if the government tonight decides that it will accept the amendment of the Leader of the Opposition. In the first place I think it should be made clear in the order that a quorum shall be a majority of the members of the committee. Let me come in a moment to the question of what should be the composition of the committee and how you determine a majority.

In the second place I think it should be made clear that no report can be made from that committee unless it is at least a majority report. In the third place I would be prepared to make this suggestion: that there be only two kinds of reports and that they be treated differently.

On the one hand if a report is unanimous, then it should be possible for that report to include two, three or four items. Maybe we should specify the number of items, but certainly it could be more than one, and if the report is unanimous it should be decided by the house without debate. But if it is a report that is only a majority one—

Mr. Speaker: I apologize for interrupting the hon. member in the middle of a sentence, but I would like to ask the house whether the hon. member has leave to go beyond his allotted time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I thank Your Honour and the house and I shall be very brief. I was saying that if the committee brings in a report that is not unanimous but only a majority report, then it should cover only one item of business, not the omnibus Criminal Code bill, the sale of Air Canada, and three or four other things at the same time; and in that case there should be reasonable debate. Maybe the two hours suggested is enough, maybe it should be a bit more. That can be negotiated.

I was speaking a moment ago about the majority. At the present time the committee consists of four members. I would settle for a majority of the four. In other words, that would be three. But if the government thinks that is too high and wants to negotiate it, maybe we could enlarge the committee by putting two government members on it and three opposition members, and then have provision for a majority to be three out of five. In that case in order to win its point the government would have to win the support of at least one of the opposition parties.

I have not told the other opposition parties that I was going to make these suggestions, Mr. Speaker. That is one reason I do not put them forward as a subamendment but rather as negotiable propositions. But I think surely among reasonable men, people who believe in democracy, who believe in section 49 of the British North America Act, who believe in the rule of the majority, who believe in negotiating and compromising, surely among people of that kind we can arrive at an acceptable formula for a proceedings committee that will plan the business of the house: And I mean, plan it.

This proposed standing order is not an order for planning the business of the house. This is a standing order for muzzling the house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): This is a standing order which gives the government house leader the right to impose limitations that no free parliament could possibly accept.

As I said earlier, I am glad to hear that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is going to take part in this debate tonight after my hon. friend from the Creditiste party makes his speech. I hope he will indicate that he has been listening earnestly to the proposals made from this side of the house. I say to him again that this is not fun and games. We are not trying to develop a lengthy debate. We are not trying to keep the house in session Christmas week, although if necessary we certainly will.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we consider that this is a very serious matter. We firmly believe that our rules need to be reformed. We think that the special committee, of which I had the privilege of being a member, has done a very good job. We think by and large that this package should be accepted, but we firmly believe that with this one single requirement in it the package is no good at all. It would so completely change the character of parliament that the institution would not be the same, and so, Mr. Speaker, we have to stand against it.

As the Leader of the Opposition has said, we are not reformers against non-reformers. So, Mr. Speaker, in the name of the reform we all believe in, and in the belief that we are all reasonable people who can work things out, I hope that the Prime Minister and the government tonight will indicate that they are prepared to accept the amendment, or one like it, so that this report can be sent back to the special committee where this standing order can be improved. If we can do that I think we will come up with a package that will make the performance of this house in this session, and in the sessions that lie ahead, the better performance that we all want it to be.

• (8:20 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my first remarks will be to congratulate most of all those who spoke before me and had the opportunity to express their views on the motion asking that the report of the committee on procedure of the house be concurred in.

I would like to congratulate in particular the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who certainly enlightened the committee during the discussions, as well as the government house leader (Mr. Macdonald) and the chairman of the committee with whom we had fruitful and satisfactory discussions.

There is no doubt that in this corner of the house and like the other house leaders, we are in favour of parliamentary reform and have proved it. In fact, when they came to the house in 1962, the members of the Rallie-ment Créditiste soon noticed that Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms was in English only, and they badgered to government to obtain a French translation of the procedures of the house.

Several of our predecessors said that the procedures were archaic, outmoded and antiquated, but when we came here, we found that they were not available in French and we were the first to ask for a French version of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms. But after getting the French translation of Beauchesne, we had to work towards the improvement of the rules of the house. That is why I say this committee is extremely important, because what comes out of our discussions will be approved by the house and the new procedure that we will adopt, even if we hope that other amendments or changes will be made to it, will regulate the proceedings of the house.

We need not criticize the old procedure, since we are all agreed on rejuvenating it and we all admit that it is archaic and obsolete. I feel that it is imperative that we should change our parliamentary procedure this year in order to give the public a better image of the Canadian parliament. For several years—not only in the last ten years but even before that—the standing orders of the house gave the Canadian public the impression, on many occasions, that parliament had become a joke, because of the extent and slowness of discussions and the time it took to make decisions.

We must reform our parliament for another reason: because of the duties which are ours. Our responsibilities and the importance of parliament itself should keep us from reaching decisions lightly, especially taking into account the fact that the whole Canadian economy will depend on the legislation we will pass.

However, one must not think that parliamentary reform will solve at once the economic problem of Canadians. A better parliamentary procedure does not necessarily mean a better government, because a government is not judged merely by the value of the measures it adopts. We can have a better procedure and pass legislation more rapidly but, if the opposition is governed by a mediocre procedure, it can hardly do much better. This means that the government must introduce legislation that will meet the needs of the Canadian people.

Furthermore, parliamentary reform must not contradict democracy, and because we may have had archaic rules in the past, because we may have suffered from them, we must not, adopt an extremist attitude. If we modify the procedure in such a way as to allow other abuses, the house will suffer from them in the future. To my mind, parliamentary reform must, first of all, reinforce the role of members in this house, in this way that a member who is elected by the people—there are 264 of us—must be able to express himself more easily and personally with regard to the decisions the government should reach. Indeed, parliament is the national forum of public opinion and if debates must be limited to a bare minimum on important legislation, we may reach a point where parliament will become again what it was formerly, that is a joke, from several points of view.

We accept most of the changes put forward today because they have been discussed by the majority of the house leaders. We accept, for instance, the one concerning the distribution of the time of the house. In fact, we must admit, as the chairman of the committee on procedure said this afternoon, that we only have at our disposal about 165 sitting days a year, including 8 for the address in reply to the speech from the throne, 6 for the budget, 28 for estimates and about 123 for legislation in general.

So the time of the house must be allotted; it was the primary objective of the committee on procedure. For that, we must shorten certain debates so as to divide the session into quarters, ending respectively on December 10, March 10 and June 30. We approve these changes, because they provide for an intelligent and logical allotment of time. They will enable parliament to know where it stands, but procedure will have to undergo other changes.

We are also in favour of eliminating the duplication of debates, that is for instance, to hear three speeches on the same subject, simply because our procedure authorizes it. In the past, it was possible to make a speech at the resolution stage, another on the motion for second reading and a third on the motion for third reading, which was a useless repetition of debates. We admit today that we have agreed to these proposals for the elimination of these repetitions so that the house would have more time for the study of legislation.

It is not our intention to review all the items in the report which was tabled by the chairman of the committee this afternoon. We have discussed this report together and we have accepted it. However, we were most surprised by the changes which had been kept until the end and which we do not accept, namely standing order 16A where, on the one hand, the co-operation of house leaders is requested and, on the other hand, their agreement is compulsory, otherwise the decision of the government will be forced upon them and the quorum required to enforce that decision is "me, myself and I." It is said that this committee will consist of three members when, in fact, it will always be the same person.

Mr. Speaker, such practice singularly exceeds the legislative power of a member of the house who, in this instance, could decide the time allotted for the consideration of such and such legislation. If the time to be alloted for the study of a bill is set by one man only, the house leader could shout "closure", just as General de Gaulle could have shouted: Long live free Canada, and the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau): Long live a just society. Yet, I could say that this is a just society only for fun, because the government house leader, under standing order 16A could very well convene us on Mondays and Wednesdays, at the time of his choice, in the way he chooses, since this is not mentioned.

The practice always observed in the past amongst house leaders, the discussion and the agreement, are scorned. From here on, no discussion; one man will decide and the government will vote.

In my opinion, this procedure is not only undemocratic but also arrogant. As pointed out by the honorable member for Winnipeg North Centre what can the backbenchers do in this house with such a procedure? If one day, the house leader decides that one hour will be allocated for a debate on some legislation, that the spokesman of the government will be allotted 30 minutes and a spokesman of the opposition 30 additional minutes, the hour will be over. No representative of the New Democratic party nor of the Ralliement Créditiste will have the opportunity to speak on that legislation, while in Great Britain, they have reached a point where some members even vote against their own leader.

In Canada at the present time, under standing order 16A, the opposition is threatened with being deprived of its freedom of speech and with being unable to do anything in parliament, which amounts to this: You will accept, otherwise we will show the mailed first. We will therefore have to defer to the will of just one man.

I hope the government will revise its decision, because once standing order 16A is passed, it will become a weapon in its hands, the first victim of which will be, I am sure, democracy.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that the Prime Minister, who advocated parliamentary reform, should see to it that standing order 16A disappears, so that in the future parliament can give a better image of itself and, above all, while saving face, save democracy also.

• (8:30 p.m.)

[English]

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the members of this house have been entrusted with many heavy responsibilities by the people of Canada, but none is more far reaching in its results than our responsibility for the conduct of this house. All that we try to do is shaped, either helped or hindered, by the procedures of this house. If we, the members, cannot deal with the business of the House of Commons in an orderly fashion, surely we will undermine public confidence in our ability to deal with the business of the nation.

As members we take part in the life of parliament for a brief span of years; but parliament itself carries on over the centuries. We have inherited an institution that has grown through the years. This institution has incorporated the experience and wisdom of countless men and women. I am sure all hon. members will agree that in its general structure the parliamentary system of government corresponds better than any alternative to both the traditions and needs of Canadians.

Over the years our predecessors have adapted this system to the requirements of their times. We, in our turn, must not shrink from the contemporary changes of our society. We must not refuse to make the necessary adjustments and improvements in our institutions. For it is true that parliament and each of its component parts are, like living organisms, subject to the universal law of life: adapt or wither away. It is not sufficient for us merely to cherish this heritage as if it were a relic, of interest only to historians. We must reform it so that in our time it will serve us well. We must revitalize it so that our successors will receive from us, not an outdated, moribund survival from an earlier age, but a vital and responsive institution of democratic government.

[Translation]

In certain periods of time, the House of Commons changes imperceptibly either through gradual changes in social conditions or because of the personality and outlook of the parliamentarians themselves. From time to time, the standing orders are amended slightly to improve a procedure or correct an abuse. But the time comes when it might be necessary to make a complete review of our work methods and to arrive, in accordance with the findings of that study, at major changes in our standing orders.

For a good ten years now the standing orders of the house have not been satisfactory. Several parliamentarians have often complained about that. Newspapermen, university professors have written articles about it, so much so that the public is now aware of the situation. During the last election campaign, the matter was even discussed openly: the candidates of all parties committed themselves in fact to parliamentary reform. Whatever party we represent in this house, we have, as elected representatives of the people, a clear and specific mandate to reform our methods of work. It is obvious that the Canadian people expect that their members do something about parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: In the face of the discontent expressed in a thousand and one ways, we must reply with a coherent and vigorous over-all reform of our rules, based on a thorough study of the present duties and program of the house.

[English]

In the last few years knowledgeable critics both inside and outside this house have raised many serious questions about our proceedings. Let us consider a few of them. In the first place, is the house keeping pace with the legislative requirements of the nation; or is it true that all too often laws are made or amended years too late? In a single session do we have an opportunity to examine systematically a full legislative program? In view of the irregularities of our sessions, can the members, the ministers or the civil servants who advise the government plan their work sufficiently in advance?

Second, does the opposition enjoy adequate opportunities throughout the session to bring on debates about the great issues of our public life? One of the principal functions of this house should be to hold such debates; members of the other parties have been saying so again today. Whatever party is in power, these debates should often be brought on by the opposition. They have suggested this, and I agree with it. An opposition, under the present situation, has some control over the topics discussed during the debates on the throne speech and the budget; but these debates normally occur only twice a year.

In addition, of course, there are the supply motions; but they are often concentrated in one or two short periods. In an orderly calendar for the session the opposition should have regular opportunities to debate the issues of its choice.

• (8:40 p.m.)

Thirdly, is the house giving enough careful attention to the spending estimates? Or is it true that for the most part the house has abandoned the task of controlling departmental expenditures to the Treasury Board, and that members use the estimates debate mainly to show their constituents that they have demanded new expenditures on their behalf, and this generally without any real hope that those expenditures will be made? Everybody knows that politicians must not forget their constituents. But my question remains: Under our procedures are the estimates examined with sufficient care?

Fourthly, what about the bills that we do pass? Are they examined thoroughly? Or do we spend our time on the politically exciting parts, and for the rest rely on civil servants and draftsmen?

We are all here as party politicians; yet we have a more fundamental responsibility to this house and to the people. I ask myself if our present procedures do not encourage even the most conscientious members to be good politicians first, and good members of the House of Commons in a secondary way. To all of these questions I fear anyone familiar with our present system would have to give negative answers.

Reform in our rules should aim toward certain goals:

First, a regular legislative session with opportunity to examine systematically an entire legislative program;

Second, regular opportunities throughout the session for the opposition to debate the issues of its choice; and Third, thorough examination of all the estimates and of each public bill.

This is certainly not the first time that these questions have been considered by members of this house. It is not the first time that these goals have been set up. Members will have noticed a close resemblance, for example, between the recommendations in the present reports and those of the special committee on procedure established during the last session. Those reports were produced and adopted after careful study which included an examination of current practices in the United Kingdom parliament.

Last September the government was prepared to propose to the house changes based on the work done by that committee and other committees in previous years. We considered, however, that the whole problem should be referred once again to a committee of the house. The house appointed a committee on September 24. That committee has gone into the problem intensively and it has now reported back to the house.

Before turning to the reports themselves I should like to mention some general considerations which must govern any set of rules we can devise. "Had we but world enough and time", mused Andrew Marvell. Although he was a member of the English house of commons he probably did not have his mind on his parliamentary duties when he wrote that line; but some imperatives apply to legislators as well as to lovers.

Obviously, there are limits to the number of days and hours available for the sittings of this house in any year. Each year the pressures of more business, of increasingly complex business, push harder against those limits. As members, we are faced with a double challenge: We must get through a larger volume of business, and we must examine the individual items in greater detail.

It is easy to agree that the situation demands better planning and a more systematic apportionment of our time. It is more difficult, it may often be impossible in a healthy democratic legislature, to obtain agreement on how the time should be apportioned. We cannot expect every member of the house to decide at the same moment that the time has come to stop talking and to start voting. Nor is this problem peculiar to the Canadian House of Commons. Every democratic assembly requires some procedure for turning discussion into decision. In the parliaments of Australia, New Zealand and India, for example, there are procedures for bringing on decisions on bills. As long ago as 1932 Lord Campion wrote:

> Most modern legislatures have found it necessary to adopt rules for limiting debate, whether by providing for the termination of debate at the will of the majority, or by laying down the time limit in advance, or by limiting the duration of speeches, or by some similar device. The closure is perhaps the commonest of these devices, and it is a serviceable instrument. But it does not generally stand alone. Most parliamentary bodies, certainly the British house of commons, find that for certain kinds of business other methods of restricting debate are necessary.

There are the sins of omission. These are commission; there is business that is slighted or prevented when discussions by the house are delayed. Consider the present situation. Bills often get priority, not because of their great importance or complexity, but because of their urgency. Sometimes a deadline must be met. Interest rate provisions may have to be changed to keep an act in operation. We may have an international obligation to change a law by a particular date. The result is that instrinsically more important bills are dealt with hastily in the waning days of the session, and, what is worse, some important proposals may never even become bills at all.

Something similar often happens during the various stages of debate of a bill. Days are consumed on the second reading debate and on the first few clauses. Then interest lags, and the tough and technical clauses, the ones that need intensive study, slide by untested.

There are the sins of omission. These are the cruelest closures: Closure by neglect and closure by exclusion.

It is not even possible under our present system to assign full responsibility for these omissions. We spend a great deal of time in this house blaming each other for them. Surely it would be an improvement to assign responsibility for the use of time and to know whom to blame for its misuse.

Under our system, responsibility for the content of legislation clearly rests with the government. In case of disagreement among the parties, the responsibility for making a proposal on proceedings to the house must also rest with the government. The proposed rules would make this equally clear.

To recognize that the government has a right to make a proposal to the house on its proceedings must not be thought to reduce the dependence of the government on the house. Nor does it diminish the right of those in opposition to test, and test again, the attitude of the house to the government. The proposals before us would allow the government, when there is no voluntary agreement among the parties, to propose a timetable to ensure adequate discussion of all parts of a bill. This timetable would itself be submitted to a vote in the house; and let us not forget that the proposed rules would also provide the opposition with better opportunities throughout each session to bring on votes of no confidence in the government. The proposals would maintain a balance at all times between the government's legitimate desire to meet its responsibilities to the country, and the opposition's legitimate desire to test the support for the government in this house.

This balance is assured in proposed standing order 56 which sets a timetable for the annual session. The special committee has suggested that, if the house is to do its financial and legislative work during a regular annual cycle, the sessions normally should start in September or October. This would enable the government to complete its legislative program during the summer months. By the time the house convenes, a substantial number of bills would be ready for first reading. The bulk of the legislative work would be undertaken in the autumn and early winter. The house would be able to concentrate on the main financial work in the spring and to complete it before a summer adjournment. During each of three periods of the proposed annual session a fixed number of days would be set aside for the opposition. These are the days allotted for the business of supply.

As members know, we now divide the business of supply into two parts. One part is debate on supply motions. The other is the examination of the estimates by the committee of supply. A supply motion is for the Speaker to leave the chair so that the house may go into committee of supply. Amendments of which no notice is given, are moved, and these regularly entail the question of confidence of the house in the ministry. The standing orders in effect in 1962 provided for six debatable supply motions. The standing orders in effect provisionally in 1967-68 provided for four debatable supply motions.

The use of supply motions as the main opportunity for the opposition to show the shortcomings of the government—apart from the debates on the throne speech and on the budget—has been criticized on three grounds:

First, because under this system the opposition can initiate debates on only four or six topics chosen by itself during an annual session;

Second, because in a normal session these debates tend to be concentrated into one or two short periods; and,

• (8:50 p.m.)

Third, the two day supply motion debates are not used economically due to the lack of notice and the early hour of the division on the second day. To meet these criticisms, the opposition should be given better opportunities than the supply motion debates, either to raise important subjects for debate or to reveal the alleged errors of the minister. These are provided by the provisions of the proposed standing order 56, to which I will refer in a moment.

Motion for Concurrence in Report

First, let me talk about the other part of the business of supply, that is, the examination of the spending estimates of the various departments by the committee of supply. This committee, as we all know, consists of 263 members of the house. Under the provisional orders a total of 30 days was provided for the consideration of the estimates in committee of supply. The use of the committee of supply as the forum for the examination of the estimates has been found unsatisfactory for many reasons. First, the committee tends to move at a leisurely pace early in its work and then, whether or not there is a prescribed time limit, with great haste toward the end. Second, the proceedings take place on the floor of the house, so members tend to make speeches rather than to probe for information. Third, ministers, too, for the same reason tend to make speeches instead of providing detailed answers. Fourth, the committee includes almost all the members although some sets of estimates command the interest, and therefore the attendance, of only a few members. Fifth, the estimates often are examined and passed months after the money has been spent. Obviously an examination which takes place before the money has been spent would be far more meaningful and effective as a deterrent to waste and extravagance than one that merely confirms what already has taken place.

To meet these five criticisms, Mr. Speaker, the committee proposes that the examination of the estimates be assigned to the standing committees. This, of course, is not a new suggestion. Over a quarter of a century ago it was recommended at Westminster in the following words:

> I agree that after (the estimates) have been presented to parliament their consideration should take place by committees dealing with each branch, military, civil and so forth, and that those committees should apply the scrutiny which the public imagine is applied on the supply days, but which has fallen into very great disuse. I should be in favour of the estimates for the current year going up to be criticized and examined in a series of committees—quite small committees too—and those committees would report to the house. They would make a report, for instance, on the army estimates or on the naval estimates or the civil service estimates—they would make a report and the estimates would come before the house with a report drawing attention to all the weak points or scandals that had come to light, or any means of making revisions would be placed before the house before the subject is debated on any supply day.

This was the view of the Right Hon. Winston Churchill, as expressed on March 6, 1931, when testifying before a select committee on procedure of the British House of Commons. This is exactly the view adopted by the special committee in recommending the new standing order 56. For purposes of supply business, the committee proposes that the annual session be divided into three periods. On five days between the opening of the session and December 10, the opposition would select the business of the house with complete freedom. It would have seven more days before the end of March. There would be 13 or 16 opposition days before the end of June.

During March, April and May the main estimates would be under study in the standing committees. By late May and June, the opposition probably would want to bring on debates in the house centred upon, and I quote Sir Winston, "The weak points or scandals that had come to light". This is why the number of days in the third period is considerably larger than in the earlier two periods. Instead of eight days of supply motions and 30 days on the estimates, the proposed rules would provide at least 25 opposition days in the house and a substantial number of days in each of over a dozen committees.

I believe that by adopting the arrangement set out in the proposed new standing order 56 we will achieve at least three important results. First, we will have provided ourselves with a basic time-table for annual sessions, beginning and ending at reasonable dates. Second, we will have provided the house with occasions distributed throughout each annual session for real debate on the great issues of our country's public life. Third, we will have made it possible for members to examine thoroughly the spending estimates and to do this early enough so that their scrutiny can be influential.

Now, I want to comment on the proposed new standing order 16-A. This deals with the planning of the work of the house. As hon. members know, the British house has used guillotine time-tables for bills since 1881. All parties have introduced guillotine time-tables for bills. Indeed, Sir Ivor Jennings, who is generally recognized as a leading authority on the British constitution, has written:

> The guillotine, whether formal or informal is . . . the essential—

I am sorry.

Mr. Woolliams: Read better.

Mr. Trudeau: Listen.

An hon. Member: Read it properly.

Mr. Trudeau: You are quite right; I am reading too rapidly and perhaps I should slow down.

Mr. Lewis: Sir Ivor Jennings knows what he is talking about.

Mr. Trudeau: That is right, and I want some members to know, too.

I quote again:

> The guillotine, whether formal or informal is ... essential if highly controversial bills are to be passed through strenuous opposition in a reasonable time.

Mr. Lewis: Who will say what is a reasonable time, that is the point?

Mr. Trudeau: Reasonable men.

Mr. Lewis: On the treasury benches only.

Mr. Trudeau: The proposed new standing order 16-A makes provision for two kinds of bills; those that are not highly controversial and those on which there is a fundamental disagreement. The proceedings committee to be established under the standing order would include one member from each party. The proposal is designed to encourage participation and co-operation. It puts pressure on both the government and opposition parties to attend, and to strive for a unanimous recommendation from the committee to the house. My hope is that in most cases all the members of the committee would agree on such a recommendation.

But perhaps, Mr. Speaker, there is no point in being naïve. There are bills, and there will be bills, on which the opposition will believe the government is fundamentally wrong and on which the government will believe that it cannot procrastinate. On such bills it would be unfair and unreasonable to insist that the opposition ought to co-operate. After all, the opposition, too, has its responsibilities.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: Thank you.

Mr. Trudeau: But I have not said it was always responsible, Mr. Speaker. When the opposition believes a government bill is fundamentally wrong, it should not be coerced by cries for co-operation. In such situations the opposition has a right to say to the government: "We think you are wrong. We hope that you will reconsider. If you won't change your mind, don't ask us to conspire against our principles. You are the elected government. If you think you must go ahead with your plans, don't ask us to subscribe to them".

Mr. Lewis: Timeo Danaos et dona ferentes.

Mr. Trudeau: Virgil.

Mr. Lewis: That is right, Virgil. Don't be so nice to us.

Mr. Trudeau: The proposed standing order 16-A is meant to be nice to you; it anticipates being nice to you.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. Lewis: Even the Prime Minister smiles.

Mr. Trudeau: Like the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, I smile even when I am serious.

This standing order would permit the government to present to the house a plan for dealing with a controversial bill, and it would permit the House of Commons to decide whether or not to accept that plan.

A good deal has been said by some members about reliance on full co-operation. I wonder if hon. gentlemen opposite have read the testimony on this very point given by Right Hon. Herbert Morrison in 1958.

An hon. Member: Who is he?

Mr. Trudeau: Somebody Ivor Jennings knew. The complaint had been made that the debates on the motion to set up a guillotine timetable were always predictable and dull, and lasted an entire day. Better methods of planning the work had been sought. Mr. Morrison was asked if a voluntary timetable could be adopted for all bills. His reply was emphatically negative. When leader of the house he said this:

> I was genuine about wanting a voluntary timetable, and I would have been not ungenerous about agreeing time with the opposition, but the opposition took the view—and I understood their point of view—that this was a fight to the death, so to speak, and that therefore if they made a voluntary timetable, then at any rate the death element in the fight would be eliminated and in the eyes of their supporters inside and outside the house they would, so to speak, have compromised in the spirit of the battle against a bill which they regarded as a very bad bill and which we regarded as a very good bill. So the tendency was for the opposition not to agree to a voluntary timetable on such bills. But I do not see why we should not try a voluntary timetable over as wide a field as we can. It may enable the house to deal more expeditiously but nevertheless adequately with legislation; but I think you must have a provision whereby the opposition is not bound to agree to a timetable and even that it would prefer to be guillotined by the government—

Naturally, as Prime Minister, I hope co-operation can be achieved in planning most of our business. But only in a totalitarian regime would it be demanded that all disagreements be merged into ostensible unanimity. There will be times when any opposition in the name of its principles will have to refuse to co-operate, and when the government, conscious of its responsibility as the government, will have to refuse to yield to the will of the minority. This is entirely normal and healthy in a parliamentary democracy. The proposed order provides a systematic method of dealing with such situations.

I have been dealing with the committee's proposal to establish a proceedings committee to plan the work of the house. Obviously, it would be with government bills that this committee would be chiefly concerned. The special committee makes important recommendations in relation to the procedures for dealing with such bills. These are set forth in the proposed standing orders 77 and 78.

Under our present rules we often spend days debating the second reading motion, but I, for one, have yet to see a government bill stopped by a defeat at that stage, and I doubt that any other member of this house has. In many cases the time that might be used for a thorough study of the clauses of the bill during the committee stage is consumed by the debate on second reading. In its recommendations the committee has sought to play down the importance of the second reading stage and to shift the emphasis to the later stages in the legislative process.

The committee recommends that most bills undergo clause by clause examination in the standing committees, not in a committee of the whole house. This would allow the committee stage to be conducted in a workmanlike way. It would have the additional benefit that more than one bill could be in progress at any time in different committees.

Under the proposal the house itself is to have an opportunity to deal directly with the bill when the report of the committee is under consideration. The debate on the report is not to be a repetition of the work already done by the committee; rather the house will move from proposed amendment to proposed amendment.

The requirement of notice of a proposed amendment is important, for the house ought not to be taken by surprise. The new power to be given to the Speaker to permit him to marshal proposed amendments and to select those that best permit the house to express its views will help to focus and to improve debate. If adopted, this will be one of the first instances in which the house has made use of the Speaker's new status in order to improve its own procedures. It is consistent with the proposal to eliminate appeals from the Speaker's rulings.

I have dealt with only a few of the constructive recommendations put forward by the special committee. Many of the proposed changes will be supported generally throughout the house. It would be surprising, however, if on a subject such as this there were complete agreement on every point. Indeed it has been reported that there are those who have announced a filibuster to force the government to impose closure.

Back in 1919 when he was explaining the changes that the ministry was advocating in the rules of the British house, Mr. Bonar Law commented that—> —there has never been any change in the procedure of this house which has not been held by the opposition and by a large number of private members to be the end of the House of Commons and to mean that everything was going to pieces... We must not look at questions from that point of view. We have to look at it from the point of view that the thing has got to be done; and looking at it from that point of view I am disappointed at the reception that has been given to our proposals.

I hope we have a good debate. Procedure is a complex subject; and this is the most important reform of its procedures ever considered by this house. Such a debate may help all of us to understand better the changes proposed by the committee.

Nobody should misunderstand the situation. The opposition has stated repeatedly that it believes in debate. We too believe in debate, and we agree that the essence of the House of Commons is debate. But we have not prejudged this issue. We like the recommendations of the committee; but if valid arguments for modifying the proposals are made in the debate, we will not feel bound to adhere strictly to those recommendations. We will consider any reasonable proposals put forward for consideration. I hope that those who do not like the recommendations of the committee will adopt the same approach.

We should let debate have its effect, and then the house should decide.

If it is true that there are members who have prejudged the case, members who have robbed the debate of its purpose by announcing before the debate has started they intend to conduct a filibuster to force closure, I ask them to reconsider.

[Translation]

If there are valid arguments against the proposed reforms, let them be expressed clearly for the greater benefit of the members and the Canadian public. Once the pros and cons of the matter have been expressed and debated, the matter must be settled rapidly by the vote of the representatives of the people.

If obstruction is made solely for the sake of obstruction, if it is decided to delay the vote for political ends, the very foundation of parliament stands in danger of being undermined. Of course, it is the duty of parliament to see to it that the opposition can express its point of view. But no one should forget that parliament can only fulfil its role by reaching decisions within a reasonably short lapse of time, even in controversial matters.

[English]

Worse still, those who would extend the present debate indefinitely have misjudged the temper of the Canadian people.

• (9:10 p.m.)

I know, Mr. Speaker, that no hon. member will claim his constituents have elected him to frustrate the work of parliament, to stall, to obstruct, and to bring this institution into disrepute.

Surely the members of all parties must agree that if parliament is to play an effective role in the contemporary world we can no longer afford a repetitious filibuster of five or six months on a single issue. In this session we have already allowed three months to go by and only passed nine measures. We should not spend a substantial part of this session wrangling fruitlessly over rules of procedure.

Some hon. members of the opposition have talked of closure. A filibuster is a form of closure. It is a device for invoking the closure of neglect on some measures which must be dealt with later in this session, and the closure of exclusion on others which we may never reach.

If we learned a single lesson from the election, it is that the Canadian people are impatient for reform.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: Not only are they impatient for reform in the legislation of this house, Mr. Speaker, but they are impatient for the reform of this parliament and of this house. They did not elect us to take part in a marathon of oratorical endurance; they expect us to revise our rules with all deliberate speed and to get on with the business of this house. Mr. Speaker, if we respect the will of the people, if we value the institution of parliament, we must debate these proposals fully, and, having done so, make our decision on them.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, we learned something else during the last election. About 55 per cent of the people of this country took a good look at the right hon. gentleman, heard what he and his colleagues had to say, decided they did not like what they heard, and called for hon. members on this side of the house to speak for them. And we intend to speak for them.

As the right hon. gentleman has said—and we on this side of the house agree with him; my leader has indicated he agrees, as have the hon. gentlemen for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and Shefford (Mr. Rondeau)—this is indeed an important issue, probably the most important which will come before this house this session, or even before this parliament. But who is there in this house who, speaking honestly, would not say that if proposed standing order 16-A had been in effect when this session commenced we should now be facing a limited period of debate to deal with this serious measure which is now before us? I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the intent of the Prime Minister and his colleagues in proposing the adoption of the standing order is such that, if the standing order had been previously adopted, the time we would have had to deal with this matter would indeed have been extremely limited.

The right hon. gentleman suggested that a filibuster has been indicated by hon. members on this side of the house. I reject that imputation out of hand. We have indicated that we understand and accept the seriousness of the issue; we accept the responsibility of our position and are prepared to debate it. We are so adamantly opposed to this measure that we intend to fight it because it should not, must not and cannot be imposed on this house as a rational measure of debate from now on.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Baldwin: When we talk of responsibilities, Mr. Speaker, we must bear in mind that the government has an international obligation which will compel it to pass an anti-dumping measure before the new year. In a sly and surreptitious way it has been postponed until the end of this debate in order that the government may attempt to bring unfair pressure upon hon. members of this house to pass, or bring to an earlier decision than need normally be the case, the debate on this important matter now before the house. I suggest that has been done deliberately in order to bring undue pressure on hon. members of this house.

There is one area in this debate where, respectfully, I disagree with my leader and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. They considered with horror the idea of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) sitting by himself and considering various measures. I think that might be very useful; it might be an improvement. Sitting by himself the hon. member might argue with himself and question the soundness of some of his own decisions. He might even be persuaded to bring in both a minority and majority report, all on his own. More than that, he might infect some of his colleagues, including the one sitting right in front of him, with good sense, and they might be persuaded to have some doubts about their own infallibility.

The debate has been useful for another reason. We have had produced before our wondering eyes large batches of ministers—ministers who normally would be in their offices working hard to execute their duties.

An hon. Member: They were ordered out of the house.

Mr. Baldwin: They are ministers, as we have every reason to believe, who have not been coming into the house as often as they wished. They are here now—I do not mean to drive any of them away—and that is one worthy contribution the Prime Minister has made in this debate. Having spoken here tonight the Prime Minister, so to speak, produced these ministers before our wondering eyes.

An hon. Member: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Baldwin: I would be willing to allow 15 minutes of the time available to me to be used for the question period—if that is the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

In his discussion the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said a good many things with which most of us can agree. In his professorial remarks he said things which are consistent with what the committee suggested, with what my leader suggested and with what the hon. members for Winnipeg North Centre and Shefford suggested. I do not think it is necessary for me to deal with those particular areas.

The institutions of democracy throughout the world have all been open to varying measures of criticism over the last few years, and certainly with some justification. Certainly all representative groups must conduct their business in the light of today's conditions and the conditions likely to prevail tomorrow.

There is much to be done, much to change, much to alter. As a matter of fact it is no secret that many of the proposals which are reflected today in the committee report have been suggested by hon. member of this house in past years, some by members of the opposition parties in and out of this chamber, in the procedure committees of last year and of previous years. For example, the proposal with relation to the elimination of financial resolutions, the proposal to place more emphasis on standing committees, the proposal to attach less importance to second reading, the suggestion that unanimous decisions by the proceedings committee concerning the allotment of time for individual items should be bringing, the idea that there should be regular sittings of the house—as one goes through the litany of proposals contained in the fourth and fifth reports he finds many proposals and ideas which have been advanced from this side of the house, and, as has been said, we have really no quarrel with the majority of the recommendations. We might disagree with some of them in detail but, basically, we do not quarrel with all of them.

Mention has been made of the committee which went to England. I agree with my hon. friend who leads this party that the kind of procedures we want in this house are those which are native to our institutions, native to this country and adapted to the fact that we have a federal system. They should take into account that as individual members we represent areas which are distinctive from geographic, ethnographic and economic points of view. What may be good for the United Kingdom is not necessarily good for Canada, and I think this should be made clear. We did find some practices in the United Kingdom which appeared to be reasonable and we dealt with certain of these in the report which was made last year, part of which was carried over. But we were careful to include in that report a statement which has not been mentioned as yet, namely that many of the private members of the house of Westminster, the mother of parliaments, were most concerned over the fact that the mad rush toward efficiency and expedition had destroyed some of the values of the democratic process which they had keenly desired to retain. Nor had they gained any real alternative.

This caveat was filed by the committee last year and it appears in the report. We also suggested that in approaching this whole subject, Canadian conditions and practice must be kept in mind. Efficiency and expedition are all very well. Mussolini said he had made the trains run on time. But he did a great many other things, in the country over which he ruled as dictator for so many years, which were most repugnant to us, and still are.

In our analysis of the proposals before us we must be careful not to be carried away by the wild winds of expedition, efficiency, processing, computerization. Those are fine words, but they contain within them the essence of great danger to the process of democracy. Every year more countries have, in the sacred name of efficiency, scrapped or altered their parliamentary institutions so that they are no longer able to reflect honestly and effectively the views of the people of the land. Each year we find the countries which possess truly democratic institutions, dwindling in number. It is not enough for the government to come to us and say: We like this, or that, recommendation because it guarantees that in the course of a year we shall be able to program what we feel is essential for the government of this country. Mr. Speaker, no government is entitled to say that it is a reservoir of all that is good, wise and intelligent. Merely because it has access to the sprawling bureaucracy which inhabits this country and can produce a program of legislation is no reason at all for the government to suppose that we in this house, members of opposition parties and private members on the government side alike, should refrain from challenging, examining and scrutinizing its proposals free of the inhibitions which, for example, the proposed rule 16-A would inflict upon them.

I wish to deal for a minute or so with the advantages, in terms of parliamentary time, which are likely to result from the proposals made by the committee. It is my submission that, quite apart from the proposed rule 16-A, the proposals as a whole would provide for the use of the government and the house approximately 50 days more per session than are now available. As a result of the elimination of the financial resolution I would say that in an average year 20 days additional debating time would be gained. The elimination of the budgetary resolutions would save another five or six days. Thirteen days have been cut from the total of 38 days which were available for supply. In addition, the fact that less emphasis is being placed on second reading would, in normal circumstances, make available an additional eight or ten days. No longer will it be necessary for members of this house considering second reading of a bill to say that, having accepted the principle on second reading, they are bound by its terms and can no longer challenge the measure. Since second reading will be just another step in the legislative process, I am confident from my experience in this house that at least 10 or 12 days will be saved in each session. Thus, as a result of these proposals, many of them emanating from this side of the house, approximately 50 extra days will be available, in addition to those available in the past for debating government proposals and other measures with which the house might wish to deal.

But that is not enough, apparently. The government demands more. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) mentioned the omnibus amendments to the Criminal Code. I ask the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) and his colleagues what assessment they would make of the time required to debate this measure in the house during the legistative program of a session? It may well be, of course, that the Prime Minister, who has been trying for the last year to lead parliament out of the bedrooms of the nation, where he unfortunately feels it has spent too long, may feel that this year has been a very long year. I would of course point out to him that having introduced a measure, it led him on to greater heights, and then it languished and withered on the vine.

This year, of course, was the in year for elections. The right hon. gentleman thought this would be an excellent time to have an election, but of course this was bound to take up a good part of the year. Nevertheless, being an impatient man he might very well say, "I think this bill should be through all its stages in two days," and there is nothing to stop the government from engaging in a practice which would lead to this being done, covering 80 or 90 clauses, dealing with substantive and procedural matters, a great many important issues which are especially crucial in the social and moral life of this nation. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I ask the members of the house, how would this measure be programmed? I suggest to you that any opposition party—and I go further—any members of the government, the private members of the government party, who are prepared to accept without challenge the type of programming envisioned in this proposed standing order 16-A, do not deserve to sit in this house. They are not justifying their responsibilities to the people who have sent them here. Mr. Speaker, this place must not become a legislative incubator.

Now, sir, some mention has been made about the practice in the United Kingdom. I challenge the implication contained in the remarks made by the right hon. Prime Minister. Virtually all of the arrangements which are made in the United Kingdom are worked out by virtue of agreements.

When our committee was over there last year we went to a dinner given by Mr. Speaker. I sat next to a gentleman with whom I struck up a conversation. I discovered he is what is known in England as "the usual channels." He is an official of the treasury department attached to the office of the chief government whip, and he stays in that capacity. When the government changes, this official goes as an assistant to the chief whip of the opposition party. He ranges between the parties, through constant negotiations. He is trusted as an honest broker. He shuffles from one side to the other, working out the course of the legislative program measure by measure, session by session, even section by section in order to try to develop for the benefit of the members of the house some indication of the time which will be spent on a measure and when it will come up for a vote.

As a result of that I think it is safe to say that 95 per cent of the business announced by the government house leader during the course of the week comes from these arrangements. The balance is usually contained in private members bills and private members resolutions. For what it is worth, Mr. Speaker, I have here a copy of the Hansard for the day I was present, containing a statement made by the Hon. Richard Crossman on the business for the week. Three of the days of that week were private members days, one was a government bill, second reading, and two were committee stages of other bills. I had the occasion to discuss these with the government people and with opposition people. In each case there had been arrangements worked out.

Without in any way denigrating the party of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) I would say that my responsibilities are a little heavier than his. Our party is Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. From time to time he and I feel it is our duty to arrive at the same destination, but sometimes we think it possible to get there by different routes. This occasionally may make my task as house leader a little more difficult than that of the hon. member. But I suggest through you, sir, to the right hon. Prime Minister, to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald), and to all the members of the house that in virtually every one of the cases where the government sees fit to put a measure before us, with a proposal such as that contained in the amendment of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), agreement would be reached. There would be negotiation. There would be bargaining. There would be the necessity of distributing the functions of the usual channels in the United Kingdom between the respective house leaders. But I suggest this would be done, and where it is not done the government would then have to put itself in precisely the same position as the government in the United Kingdom. When in the opinion of the United Kingdom government a measure has been debated to an extent which requires termination, the government moves closure. This is a weapon which is available here. All that is required is 24 hours notice under the appropriate standing order. Debate having been initiated and not being completed, the government has the option to exercise this responsibility and bring the debate to a close.

But I go beyond that, Mr. Speaker. How will it be possible for the members of this house, dealing with important, complex, difficult measures—measures dealing with economic, social and human problems—to know what is involved until debate has been commenced, until there has been an opportunity to question, to challenge, to scrutinize? This was the case in the famous pipe line debate and in the debate on the emergency measures of some years ago. After the debates had been commenced these measures were subjected to crucial examination, and only after it had become apparent to members of the opposition precisely what were the problems involved, then and only then did the opposition say, "Here is a measure where the rights of the people of Canada are involved. We, in the exercise of our duty and our responsibility, will say no to this measure." The result in the pipe line debate was that the government imposed closure. Mr. Speaker, this is the only way it can be.

It is not possible, it cannot be possible to precut, to prepackage all of the legislative proposals which the government may see fit to put before the house at the beginning of a session. Using the reductio ad absurdum theory, why wouldn't the government make its task a great deal easier by simply attaching a schedule to the speech from the throne, with the number of days, number of hours and number of minutes opposite and say, "This is our program. This is the time available to deal with these measures"? I suggest this is the sort of thing which the government is seeking to impose upon us, and I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is not right.

Parliament, sir, must be an instrument of attack to deal with the problems which hold back the advance of progress. But parliament is also the final line of defence against tyranny, present or potential, and also against the encroachment of a vast, impersonal and sprawling bureaucracy. The average man, bewildered and overpowered by thousands of laws and regulations which press in upon him and increasingly restrict his freedom, his right to make decisions, would be left absolutely defenceless without an active parliament with the strength and vitality which it must possess.

This afternoon we had the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) telling us about his expedition into the north, and what he had done with regard to changing the situation in respect to the provision of health care for Indians. Mr. Speaker, that would not have been done if it had not been for the fact that last year in parliament members of the opposition brought this problem before the government. They raised it on the estimates. They raised it in questions. In the result, this brought a very serious and difficult situation to the attention of the government. The result is that the minister has possibly carried into effect a decision which might nave been made earlier, but which had its initial stages on the floor of this house.

Our strength here lies in the ability to debate matters and oppose the government when we feel it is wrong. We reject the idea that an executive branch of government represents all that is good and wise. We feel that because of our close and considered connection as members with the people we represent, and all the people of Canada, that we are very often placed in a better position than members of the government to assess and evaluate their proposals. We feel that the tremendous and accelerated zeal of the government to levy a devastating taxation burden, accompanied by the high cost of living, has such a detrimental effect to the present and future of the Canadian people that we should be entitled to challenge and scrutinize government spending proposals for an adequate time, and in an adequate way. That right is not discharged by a proposal which limits us to debating spending programs and determinations in a standing committee. We disagree with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and his group of parliamentary busters, that the election has put them in the driver's seat, not only to initiate but to brush aside or minimize objectives. Here lies the fundamental difference between the government and us, and here we draw the issue, and here we will fight.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin my remarks this evening first by complimenting the leader of the opposition, and by offering my thanks to him for the compliment he gave to me. My compliment to him is, first, in relation to the uncommonly good speech, and while—

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Oh, come now; come now.

An hon. Member: You are getting cheeky.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Let me compliment him then on his extremely good speech. While I do not agree with many of the things he has said, I regard his speech as an outstanding rhetorical performance and one of the best I have heard in parliament. I should also like to give thanks to him for the compliment he paid to me. He is looking a little nonplussed at this point, but I assure those surrounding him that he did not let them down. He made it perfectly clear that there was little in the way of godliness to commend me, but he made it clear also that there was something to be said for me on the subject of cleanliness. Perhaps I should not argue in respect of the godliness part, but the hon. member was kind enough to credit me with cleanliness on a Monday morning, and at least in that respect he gave me the benefit of the doubt.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre raised a question which, as he said, was discussed in the committee and which was central to the special committee's conclusions in respect of amendments to the standing order, which should take a permanent form. He suggested that the standing orders as we may finally put them during the debate on this resolution, should receive scrutiny within the period of the next year. I would be glad to give an undertaking on behalf of the government that after we have had experience with these suggested standing orders for the balance of this session, we would at the commencement of the next session in September or October of next year, be prepared to refer these amendments to the new committee on procedure and organization, which I trust will be established by this motion. That committee could consider these procedural changes if not within one year, within at least nine months later.

The two questions upon which the debate so far has focused have been, first, questions in respect of supply and, perhaps more particularly, in respect of the proposed standing order 16-A. The question of supply was referred to at some length by the Leader of the Opposition. After what has been said on this point in the house; on the question of supply, I think little more need be said. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) rather abruptly, albeit gently, pulled out the rug from under the Leader of the Opposition in indicating that his group favour a change in the length of the supply procedures. I must say that the hon. gentleman representing Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) may be said to have pulled the rug from under the Leader of the Opposition in his support, along with other members of his party, of the fifth report of the last session which recommended that estimates should be referred to committee.

Mr. Baldwin: Subject to the caveats I referred to.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Subject to the caveats to which you referred, which do not seem to have been reproduced with the recommendations in respect of supply.

Mr. Baldwin: You have not read in the right places.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member for Peace River has now changed his mind on this question and I agree that is his right. It seems to us that we should continue to be persuaded by what formerly persuaded him.

A question has been raised both by the amendment of the Leader of the Opposition and, secondly by remarks made to me by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—one could say privately, but also on television and repeated in his speech this evening—as to certain methods by which the proposed standing order 16A may be amended. I may say, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has already said, we are open to suggestions for amendments to this proposed standing order.

I think it is fair to comment that it would have been more reasonable to have looked for and expected these suggestions to be made at the special committee itself when it was considering the proposed standing order. One wonders why the suggestions were not forthcoming then, and in fact why there was not negotiation in respect of this particular proposal similar to the negotiation the hon. member is now proposing.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It was made on a take it or leave it basis.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member suggests we gave it to them on a take it or leave it basis. We were hardly presenting it on that basis in light of the fact he did not appear to be intimidated by most of the discussions, and I am surprised that he appears to be intimidated now.

Mr. Baldwin: You can't negotiate with a bulldozer.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The special committee report would indicate that you have done pretty well on the whole.

I should like to emphasize the fact that there has been very considerable reference by speakers opposite, statesmen as they are, with respect to co-operation and respect for the parliamentary institution they so often put before us, to the fact that there will never be any need for the government or anybody else to take any particular action to arrive at an agreement as to a timetable, and that everything will from now on fall into place. I think they are just trying to put us on.

We are in politics and they too are in politics. This notion that political parties will never seek to prolong the debate on a particular matter is a trifle disingenuous. We are engaged, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre once said, in the process of political warfare. Perhaps we could be spared these statements that inevitably by some kind of heaven-sent co-operation or circumstance that we will always arrive at the best decision in relation to the best dispatch of public business. I don't think anyone believes that.

Let me reply to some of the objections that have been made to the proposed standing order 16A. I think they can be summarized under three headings; the so called quorum of one argument; the so called unilateral decision of the house leader argument, and the essence of programming itself. First, let us refer to the so called quorum of one.

In essence the suggestion has been made which imputes bad faith on my part in respect of meetings with house leaders, that I will have separate unilateral meetings. It has been suggested that I myself may ultimately persuade myself to take a certain course of action. I think it is perfectly clear that I will not follow that course of action, as suggested by hon. members opposite, not only because I think it is not a moral course of action but also because it happens to be politic. The hon. member suggests that if there is a quorum of one this will automatically and necessarily take place. I do not think that the quorum of one will ever happen so long as house leaders on the opposition side do not voluntarily absent themselves from the meetings of house leaders.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): In case there is a suggestion that there is anything imaginary in the concern which led us to put this particular provision in the standing order, let me remind hon. members of the time not too many years ago when the house leader of the official opposition—not the present gentleman but another one—was in effect refusing to participate in meetings of house leaders and it was not possible to call these meetings.

Mr. Nesbitt: Tell us why he did not participate.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): You tell us why he did not participate. And will it happen again? Perhaps it will.

Mr. Nowlan: There is a new politics.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): There is a new politics on this side.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): We know the kind of people we are dealing with on that side.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I do not say it in any—

Mr. Monteith: It is the same arrogant approach.

Mr. Nowlan: From the same old wagon.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The President of the Privy Council has the floor.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Speaker, and I will not be provocative.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Monteith: That is something new for you.

Mr. Lewis: The President of the Privy Council is arguing with himself, no doubt. What does he think of his argument?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I hope the hon. member will think that the better side may just win.

Mr. Lewis: I don't know.

Mr. Baldwin: We are not sure yet.

Mr. Lewis: Would it be your alter ego?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Which one is my alter ego? Second, I refer to the suggestion that the decision of the government house leader will really be a single-man decision which will enforce itself on the house. I have heard the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) make some very skilful arguments in this house from time to time, but he has made no more skilful argument that the one he made on the assumption that the action by the government house leader would be contrary to section 49 of the British North America Act. Section 49 of that act says:

> Questions arising in the House of Commons shall be decided by a majority of voices other than that of the Speaker—

That is exactly what we are proposing in standing order 16A. We are proposing that a recommendation should be made and the house should decide this question, as with other questions that may be before the house, and should decide it with a view to the best dispatch of public business. May I suggest that there has been a lot of talk this afternoon and this evening about democracy and democratic principles but I think the fact is that on the whole the principle that ultimately has to be recognized is that imposed upon us by the British North America Act, namely that the majority should have the right, after reasonable discussion, to come to some decision. That is what we are putting forward.

Third, I deal with the programming of legislation. I am much obliged to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) for having put forward a certain amount of mathematics in making his argument, because it excuses my doing the same thing. I refer hon. members to Hansard of September 12 in which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) set out for the benefit of the house and the country a list of 47 legislative items which it was the government's hope might be enacted in this session.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We have not seen most of them yet.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would point out that the majority of them could have been seen but for the provision of the resolutions preceding financial bills, which I am sure the hon. member agrees should be abolished. Of those 47 items, nine have been passed. Therefore there are 38 still to be dealt with. To that list two more have been added by way of the budget bills, making a total of 40 public bills to be dealt with in the remainder of the session.

Assuming that the house sits for the balance of this session from approximately January 14 until June 30, there would be 120 business days. One should deduct from that two statutory holidays, that for celebrating the Queen's birthday, and St. Jean Baptiste, and also a period of approximately 15 days assuming the house takes an Easter holiday. This leaves 103 sitting days during that period of time to deal with the existing business.

Assuming the proposals with respect to supply are adopted, from these 103 sitting days there should be deducted the 23 days allotted for the business of supply from the beginning of the year to the end of the session, leaving 80 sitting days to the house in which legislation can be considered. This is 80 sitting days in which 40 items of legislation are to be considered. This is some indication of the nature of the problem that the government faces in putting legislation before the house and, may I suggest, that the house faces in discharging its responsibility as the parliamentary, legislative body of the federal government.

Mr. Stanfield: Two budgets and two sets of estimates in one session.

Mr. Baldwin: And six months off for an election.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Hon. members opposite are making comments, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry that I do not hear them. I point out that the hon. member for Peace River laid very great stress on the serious and fundamental nature of the proposed changes to the Criminal Code. I agree with him that this is a very big bill, and there are very many more—

Mr. Baldwin: It is still changed from what it was last year.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, may I point out to my hon. friend that it is being changed because recommendations have come from members of the public, indeed possibly even from hon. members opposite, recommending changes to Bill C-195, and I think it is good legislative procedure to take those recommendations into account and effect the changes.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit a question on that point?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member can ask me questions, if he likes, at the completion of my remarks; but I would like to develop my own argument, if I might.

Mr. Nowlan: The question—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Ten o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to bring to the attention of hon. members that it is ten o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AID—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOR FRENCH SPEAKING COUNTRIES

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, in asking a question concerning increased help to French-speaking countries, I wanted to call the attention of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to a problem which exists in African countries, among others. At the present time, the average annual income in those countries is only $115, whereas in the rich countries of this same French-speaking community it is $1,714.

What strikes us, however, is that following the interparliamentary conference held in Paris, a Canadian representative assured us that the $8 million difference in Canadian help to British commonwealth countries and to French-speaking countries would disappear in 1969. We hope that this project will be carried out.

Before our departure from Africa, we had the opportunity to see what is being done by the Chevrier mission packed with money and fine promises, reminding Africans that we also speak the beautiful French language from British Columbia to Newfoundland.

I would now like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that when French-speaking countries can come into contact with the French culture, they are able to improve considerably their trading operations with other countries. In fact, what especially contributed to assure the success of the Canadian mission is that it enjoyed plenipotentiary powers. The decisions were taken on the spot. The African authorities were quite pleasantly surprised to be able to conclude in a few days agreements on 49 new projects, among which assistance to Algeria, Morocco, Tunisia, The Cameroons, Ivory Coast, Niger and Senegal. However, if that assistance is to remain efficient, those people will have to be in a position to use the French telecommunications services, so that they may communicate with all those countries, because the lack of French short waves seriously hinders communications in French-speaking countries.

An enormous quantity of transistors are spreading over one third of the world at the present time. And still much more important, in five years at the most, satellites will assure long-distance communications. Now, according to technicians, there is room for not more than 72 satellites around the earth. On account of the considerable lead taken by the two space giants, the Americans and the Russians, the available wave lengths are scarce and the saturation point seems to be near.

As the unit regulations require that a country apply for its wave-lengths only two years before a satellite is launched, there is the danger that the satellites of tomorrow will be American or Russian, which would reduce to very little the cultural progress achieved by francophone countries in the last ten years, at the cost of great effort.

I have here a press release which I wrote; it proves that if it is possible to protect French culture through co-operation with all francophone countries, we have a duty to do so. In fact, in the majority of developing French-speaking countries, material which Quebec industrialists could supply is very sorely needed. That is why communications in French must become possible, for if use of that language is not maintained, considerable erosion would follow in those francophone countries.

As a result of the study we were able to make during a visit to Paris with the delegates to the interparliamentary conference, we saw that France now has at its Chantilly base—which we visited—a satellite which could guarantee all African francophone countries communications in French.

The satellite "Symphonie" could, even in Canada, broadcast from Halifax to Banff, thus reaching all the French-speaking minorities. In addition, if that satellite were located on the equator, it would be possible to broadcast French programs as far as South Africa. Besides, following those meetings, I would like to inform the house about the results of the work we did, which is greatly encouraging for all those French-speaking countries, including Canada.

It must be remembered that here, even if salaries are higher than in the African countries, Canada has 300,000 unemployed, 150,000 of them in Quebec, and if the co-operation kindly offered by France to reach all those African countries through its satellite is rejected, Canada will be responsible.

Last week the board received a message to the effect that the communications satellite from Halifax to Banff could broadcast in French not only in Canada but in all the countries of Africa, to allow for that exchange of ideas which would lead to increased trade in the future.

I will end my remarks by reading the press release issued about the opportunities for development in those French-speaking countries.

The meetings of the two ethnic groups, French and Canadian, make it possible to hope that the relations between France and Canada will increase while, at the same time, the relations between France and Quebec will continue, especially in the field of education which comes under the provinces.

During that meeting, it was announced that an oil refinery would come to Quebec, as well as a tire factory, since Peugeot-Renault factories are already assembling cars in Saint-Bruno. It was also said that a decision concerning the establishment of an airplane factory in Quebec would be made in January.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Dumont) said himself, the Canadian government has considerably increased its help to French-speaking countries, particularly in the last few years.

The hon. member spoke of satellites. It is to be hoped that co-operation between France and Canada could increase in this very important field of communications by satellite.

I should like to quote, for the benefit of the hon. member, certain figures which show the increased help the Canadian government has given to French-speaking countries.

In 1967-68, an amount of $12 million was devoted to this program as a whole; the corresponding amount for 1968-69 is $22.5 million, that is an 88 per cent increase in one year.

The hon. member will probably remember—and he referred to it earlier—that the Canadian government sent last winter a mission of co-operation headed by hon. Lionel Chevrier in a few French-speaking countries of Africa. As a result of the work carried out by that mission, the government is implementing 50 projects—I think the hon. member said 49—in seven African countries, which will account for financial commitments of about $30 million in the next three years, and $40 million for the next five years, in addition to programs and projects agreed to before.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—PROTEST AGAINST PROGRAM RESPECTING ALGONQUIN PARK

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew North): For some time now, Mr. Speaker, there has been a prevailing feeling among businessmen in the forest industry, and many of their employees in the Ottawa valley, that the news media, and particularly the C.B.C., has been emphasizing the views of the Algonquin Wildlands League and their allies, who want the forest industry out of Algonquin park. At the same time the forest industry, which for years has been a tradition in eastern Ontario, has been given the short end of the stick. Proof of this can be found in the C.B.C. program "The Way It Is" which was televised a week ago Sunday night, December 1. The portion of that program which dealt with the Algonquin park issue was portrayed so that it left the impression in the minds of the viewers that the lumber industry is made up of a group of irresponsible people.

We are not discussing mediaeval methods of conservation here, but we are discussing forest management. These companies operate under licences and permits which would be cancelled if they violated any of the regulations contained therein. They pay a considerable sum of money for these privileges and pay for fire protection as well. Any company that does not obey the regulations should be disciplined by the Ontario department of lands and forests and not by an emotional and irrational television film presentation.

I should like now to emphasize the importance of jobs for the residents of the upper Ottawa. A week ago last night on "The Way It Is" the employees in the woods operation were portrayed as a group of lumberjacks who did not deserve very much consideration. No serious thought was given to the real economic issue which will be created by a major cut-back in timber operations in Algonquin park or if this industry is phased out in that locality. Let us take a hard look at the person who built up the case against the lumbering industry on "The Way It Is". At the same time, let us remember that this telecast was paid for with public funds. The man who built up the case against the lumber industry was one John Livingston, who I have been told by the C.B.C. was a former employee of the C.B.C., but is now a freelance reporter.

A further investigation has elicited the fact that this same man is a former managing director of the Audubon Society, and as such would naturally be a strong supporter of the Algonquin Wildlands League, and others who are going all out to put pressure on the department of lands and forests of Ontario to reduce greatly or even phase out all timber operations in the park. The issue that was emphasized was the destruction of the forest, when in fact discussion about forest management was literally cut off.

With this evidence to back up my suspicion and the suspicion of others, there can be little doubt that public funds have been used to pay for the kind of publicity that will in turn mould the public opinion or support that would be needed to create a large scale decline in the forest industry and mass unemployment in the upper Ottawa valley.

As anyone who has some knowledge of forest management knows, there is a big difference between the mediaeval idea of conservation, which is exemplified by no cutting of trees at all, and the modern day conservation concept, which is exemplified by forest management. Timber that is not harvested when it is ripe simply rots and decays and is a lost natural resource. We who live in and around the area of Algonquin park are in favour of the multiple use of the park, and we have never thought otherwise about it.

The Algonquin Wildlands League and their friends are using the news media to confuse the general public and to work upon the emotions of the general public by trying to tell them that conservation means that man never touches the forest, when in fact conservation and forest management are one and the same thing. Those who participated on this issue of Algonquin park in the program "The Way It Is" on December 1 are guilty of this charge.

We in the Ottawa valley welcome and promote the tourist and other visitors to our area at all times but we cannot be so generous as to give up the livelihood of thousands of people without having something else to take its place. If the urban areas in the province of Ontario are so crowded and hectic that we have to destroy half the economy of a large section of this province so that others can find solitude, then I ask if it is not time that far more importance be placed on better roads, and a greater transfer of industrial development to areas that have not witnessed the kind of economic growth that has taken place in many other areas. If some of those who want to move more people from rural areas into the urban areas of Canada are already frustrated by the hectic life in urban Canada, why then is it their desire to transfer more people to an area of frustration?

Let us look at the "gut" issue that is at stake here. If mass news media such as the C.B.C., and newspapers with large circulations, in which we find uninformed and emotional letters by people who talk about an Algonquin wilderness, succeed in so moulding public opinion, then many communities for miles around the park will be affected economically. This would not only affect industrial establishments in the towns and villages in the upper Ottawa valley, but would also affect other industries across the country to whom many of the forest products are sold. But then, of course, perhaps our idealists would like to see the forest industry fall into the hands of millionaire operators such as E. P. Taylor, and eventually create an even worse monopolistic system than that which is in existence today. If we are to have freedom in Canada there must be room for the smaller businessman.

These are factors that have been ruthlessly shoved aside by those who are more interested in their own selfish solitude than they are in the economy and the livelihood of the area surrounding Algonquin park. It is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that one of the directors of the Algonquin Wildlands League is a canoe outfitter whose business is just outside Algonquin park. Can a man in this position be considered an unprejudiced promoter?

There is another interesting point that I would like to point out to Mr. Livingston, who seems to take delight in attacking the forest industry. Sixty-two per cent of the fires in Algonquin park are caused by recreationists, rather than by people who work in the forest industry. As we know, fires destroy large amounts of good forests annually. It is too late to start to build a road when a rampant fire is destroying hundreds of acres of inaccessible timber. Therefore those who complain about the building of roads in the park are not being constructive in their thinking, or conservation minded.

The C.B.C. has an obligation to film some of the constructive things done by the forest industry. Among these must be included visits to mills and veneer plants in order to portray a true picture to the general public. It is a sorry day when the C.B.C. will produce only the informative side of the story, after it has received over 100 letters of complaint, most of them from people who were educated in forest management, as well as several telephone calls which outlined the complete bias and emotional approach to ideas of conservation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, in closing—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am afraid the hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Speaker, I am willing to yield some of my time to the hon. member, for him to express his complaints and interest, if there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Unfortunately that is not in order in these proceedings. I think it would set a dangerous precedent.

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am sure nothing the hon. member would say could be dangerous to this house. The hon. member, who is concerned with preserving the interests of his constituents, thinks those interests may have been threatened by what he considers a biased presentation on a public affairs program. I need not remind the hon. member that programming on the C.B.C. is completely a matter for the corporation and is in no way under the control of the government. In the past the C.B.C., by its programs, has brought to the attention of the Canadian public certain problems which are of acute interest to all Canadians. The preservation of our natural resources interests us all, as does the pollution of our atmosphere, streams, rivers and lakes.

I am informed by the corporation that an effort was made in this case to describe both sides of the question in the program referred to by the hon. member. I understand it was explained that the logging operations were conducted at a reasonable distance from the highway crossing Algonquin Park. That precautions were taken not to damage or divert streams, and that in some cases the felling of trees was of considerable benefit to surrounding trees. I also understand that the producers of the program did not intend it to be an in depth study of the question but rather they hoped to make a reasonable presentation of the problem of our diminishing forest resources.

I am aware, however, that the hon. member takes a different view of that presentation. He has expressed a contrary opinion and has made suggestions which, I can assure him, will come to the attention of the corporation and be given careful consideration.

BROADCASTING—INQUIRY AS TO REQUEST FOR TAPES OF NEWS BROADCASTS

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last as reported at page 3527 of Hansard I asked the following question:

> Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Did any member of the task force on government information services, set up by the right hon. gentleman, request the Canadian Radio-Television Commission to ask Canadian radio stations to provide tapes of their news broadcasts to the commission?

The Prime Minister replied:

> Not that I know of, Mr. Speaker, but I will gladly inquire.

• (10:20 p.m.)

The next day, on Friday, after setting forth the question, he said as reported at page 3592: "The answer is, no, Mr. Speaker."

Later that afternoon as the result of further information I acquired, I telephoned the Prime Minister's office to suggest that the answer be looked into. Still later, about two o'clock on Friday afternoon, I received actual confirmation as to the type of letter which was being sent to various broadcasters across Canada. From notes I took down, the first paragraph of the letter was to this effect:

> The special task force on government information is undertaking a study of newscasts from a representative group of radio stations and has asked the C.R.T.C. to assist by suggesting appropriate sample stations and by contacting the stations to ask for recordings or preferably the scripts of all newscasts broadcast within a specified time period.

I have a motion on the order paper, No. 53, for the production of the letter concerned, and a number of questions wrapped up in one comprehensive question which is also on the order paper.

Today, at the earliest opportunity to answer me, since I was not here yesterday when motions were called, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) acknowledged that the request had in fact been made, and his answer will be found in today's Hansard.

I draw three conclusions from this. First, I think the advisors of the Prime Minister should be called into question. They should not put into the mouth of the right hon. gentleman wrong information to give to the House of Commons. I believe this has placed him in an awkward spot. I do not for a moment suggest that he intended to fall into it. He had simply been given wrong information by people in the public service. Second, it is obvious that top management of either the Canadian Radio and Television Commission or of the special task force did not know what the lower levels of both groups were doing. Third, to come to the substance of the request made by this person working for the C.R.T.C., I think it is an abuse of what that organization was established to do. I do not think the C.R.T.C. should be tied in with what many newsmen, particularly broadcasters, consider to be attempts to strengthen the propaganda efforts of the government.

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I appreciate the hon. member's courtesy in not attributing to the Prime Minister any fault in the manner in which the hon. member's question was answered. I think it has been made very clear that, in the terms in which the question was asked, it was properly answered. However, the Prime Minister has attempted to give the fullest possible information in the spirit of the question, and I hope he has done so. I shall not attempt to defend the public servants whom the hon. member has attacked. I regret he has seen fit to do so. I also regret that he should have put in the mouths of unnamed journalists, particularly broadcasters, an accusation that the work of the task force is somehow activated by motives lower than those set out for it by the Prime Minister.

The hon. member must know that the C.R.T.C. has a regulation that radio stations should keep all scripts and tapes of news broadcasts for 30 days, and that such records are from time to time requested by the C.R.T.C., for examination and assessment. I understand from the C.R.T.C. that anyone who wishes to listen to these tapes here in Ottawa may do so. In fact, the C.R.T.C. would request and obtain a tape from a radio station for such a purpose. There is obviously nothing sinister or improper about this. It seems to be a normal and proper function of the C.R.T.C. and the C.R.T.C. would appear to be the proper agency to make such surveys, if they need to be made.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.28 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, December 11, 1968

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

POWER

TABLING OF REPORT ON LONG DISTANCE TRANSMISSION

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table the report to the federal-provincial ministerial committee on long distance transmission. The report is entitled "Regional and national electric transmission systems for Canada—stage II assessment". Appended to this report is the main volume of the report by the consultants of the committee.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table this document?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CRIMINAL CODE

PENALTY AND PROHIBITION ORDER FOR CRUELTY TO ANIMALS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-142, to amend the Criminal Code (cruelty to animals).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, this bill is designed to put a few teeth in the law in respect of those who mistreat animals, both domestic animals and others, and provide a minimum penalty for those so convicted and also an order against those who have been convicted once prohibiting them from keeping animals or birds of any kind in their possession for a period of two years.

I hope perhaps this and other, similar bills will be referred to the standing committee on justice and legal affairs.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

MANPOWER TRAINING INSTITUTIONS

Question No. 193—Mr. Harding:

1. How many new training institutions, which can be utilized by "Canada Manpower" for its training programs, will be completed in Canada, by provinces, by (a) December 31, 1968, (b) December 31, 1969?

2. Does the federal government share in the cost of this new construction and, if so, on what basis?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Number of training institutions to be completed by the end of:

	Dec. 1968	Dec. 1969
P.E.I.	0	0
Nova Scotia	1	3
New Brunswick	0	1
Quebec	2	Could not be established
Ontario	6	5
Manitoba	0	15
Saskatchewan	0	1
Alberta	0	3
British Columbia	0	0
North West Territories	0	1

2. Under the Adult Occupational Training Act the federal government continues reimbursing the provinces for approved expenditures incurred in providing vocational training facilities, up to a maximum of $800 per person in the 15-19 year age-group in the province (Census 1961). Federal share is 75% of approved expenditures up to $480 per capita, and 50% for the remaining $320 per capita.

CANADA MANPOWER TRAINING CAPACITY

Question No. 198—Mr. Harding:

1. What was the total training capacity available to "Canada Manpower" by province, for 1967 and 1968?

2. How much of this total training capacity was utilized by "Canada Manpower" in 1967 and 1968?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. In general, the total training capacity available to the occupational training for adults program is sufficient to accommodate clients of Canada manpower centres referred to the program. This is especially true for courses such as language training and educational up-grading that do not require special facilicites. In certain communities, however, facilities for vocational and technical courses are either non-existent or scarce. In such cases, candidates for training are either sent to training centres in other communities or are asked to wait until training places become available. In many instances, training centres operate two or even three shifts daily in order to accommodate adults who were referred to training.

Another factor affecting the capacity is the availability of suitable instructional staff. The provinces are aware of the problem and are taking appropriate steps to solve it.

The level of training under this program is by and large determined by the availability of suitable adults who can benefit from training by acquiring skills which are in demand, and by the funds made available by parliament.

2. In the fiscal year 1967-68, the following numbers of adults were enrolled under the program: Newfoundland, 4,119; P.E.I., 1,474; Nova Scotia, 4,729; New Brunswick, 4,756; Quebec, 68,748; Ontario, 69,049; Manitoba, 5,979; Saskatchewan, 4,761; Alberta, 11,168; British Columbia, 8,625; Yukon, 132; Canada, 183,540.

As the budget for the fiscal year 1968-69 is substantially higher than that for the previous year, it is expected that enrolments will be higher in all provinces.

MANPOWER TRAINING PROGRAM

Question No. 208—Mr. Harding:

1. How many persons in Canada, by provinces, are currently being trained under Canada Manpower?

2. What is the estimated cost for 1968, by provinces, of this training programme?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. As of November 29, 1968 the following numbers of adults were enrolled in OTA courses: Newfoundland, 2,091; P.E.I., 984; Nova Scotia, 3,493; New Brunswick, 1,502; Quebec, 20,100; Ontario, 17,986; Manitoba, 2,388; Saskatchewan, 2,141; Alberta, 3,871; British Columbia, 2,550; Canada, 57,106.

2. The OTA budget is allocated to the five administrative Regions of the Department. The 1968-69 allocation is as follows: Atlantic region, $26.3 million; Quebec region, $67.3 million; Ontario region, $66.0 million; Prairie region, $27.0 million; Pacific region, $10.5 million.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

MANPOWER TRAINING PROGRAMS AND CENTRES

Question No. 209—Mr. Harding:

1. Under the Canada Manpower Training Plan in 1967 and 1968, by provinces, what were the training programmes in effect and the number of persons in each programme?

2. How many training centres were utilized by "Manpower" in each province for (a) 1967, and (b) 1968 (to date)?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. In the fiscal year 1967-68 the following numbers of trainees were enrolled under the OTA legislation:

	Adults under OTA	Trainees under the Phase-Out Agreement
Newfoundland	4,119	3,813
P.E.I.	1,474	666
Nova Scotia	4,729	5,267
New Brunswick	4,756	3,197
Quebec	68,748	39,776
Ontario	69,049	34,671
Manitoba	5,979	5,089
Saskatchewan	4,761	3,631
Alberta	11,168	7,744
British Columbia	8,625	6,084
N.W.T.	—	58
Yukon	132	97
Canada	183,540	110,093

For the fiscal year 1968-69 the numbers of trainees are not yet available. Enrolments as of November 29, 1968 are given in the answer to question 208.

2. The number of training institutions utilized by Canada Manpower in 1967-68 and 1968 (up to September 30) is as follows:

	1967-68	1-3-68 to 30-9-68
Newfoundland	15	16
P.E.I.	9	25
Nova Scotia	27	50
New Brunswick	43	76
Quebec	334	651
Ontario	79	94
Manitoba	63	95
Saskatchewan	22	43
Alberta	23	81
British Columbia	36	34
Yukon	2	1
N.W.T.	—	1
TOTAL	653	1,167

MANPOWER TRAINING, 1967

Question No. 210—Mr. Harding:

1. How many persons in Canada, by provinces, were trained under "Canada Manpower" in 1967?

2. What was the total cost, by provinces, of this training programme in 1967?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. In the fiscal year 1967-68 the following numbers of trainees were enrolled under the OTA legislation:

	Adults under OTA	Trainees under the Phase-Out Arrangement
Newfoundland	4,119	3,813
P.E.I.	1,474	666
Nova Scotia	4,729	5,267
New Brunswick	4,756	3,197
Quebec	68,748	39,776
Ontario	69,049	34,671
Manitoba	5,979	5,089
Saskatchewan	4,761	3,631
Alberta	11,168	7,744
British Columbia	8,625	6,084
N.W.T.	–	58
Yukon	132	97
Canada	183,540	110,093

2. The total cost to the federal government in the fiscal year 1967-68 for training under the OTA legislation was as follows:

Newfoundland	6,588,000
P.E.I.	928,000
Nova Scotia	6,349,000
New Brunswick	3,974,000
Quebec	48,691,000
Ontario	52,469,000
Manitoba	7,267,000
Saskatchewan	5,437,000
Alberta	8,586,000
B.C. and Yukon	7,598,000
Canada	147,887,000

ADULT MANPOWER TRAINING BY PROVINCES

Question No. 258—Mr. Harding:

What is the amount of training under the Adult Occupational Training Act which Canada Manpower agreed to purchase for (a) each of the provinces in the fiscal year ended March 31, 1968 (b) each of the provinces in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1969?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): (a) In the fiscal year 1967-68, the department purchased places for the following numbers of adult trainees:

	Adults under OTA
Newfoundland	4,119
P.E.I.	1,474
Nova Scotia	4,729
New Brunswick	4,756
Quebec	68,748
Ontario	69,049
Manitoba	5,979
Saskatchewan	4,761
Alberta	11,168
British Columbia	8,625
N.W.T.	–
Yukon	132
Canada	183,540

(b) Negotiations for purchases for the current fiscal year are not yet completed, but the department expects that these purchases will be substantially higher in all provinces than last year.

ASSISTANCE TO NOVA SCOTIA ON STEEL INDUSTRY TAKEOVER

Question No. 538—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys):

1. What has been the total amount of the assistance that has been made available to the Government of the Province of Nova Scotia by the federal government in the province's take-over of the steel industry on Cape Breton Island, have these monies been paid to the government and, if not, for what reason?

2. What arrangements have been made by the federal government to turn over the federal government's rights to certain loans made to the Dominion Steel and Coal Company for the construction of dock loading facilities at Sydney, Nova Scotia?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): 1. $9.9 million, of which $2 million has been paid to the government of Nova Scotia. The remainder consists of (a) direct payments to the steel company; (b) turning over to the province of rights to loans made to the former owner.

2. Final arrangements to take up the federal offer are now under discussion with the province.

Questions

TAX ADVANTAGES THROUGH EXPORT SALES

Question 547—Mr. Saltsman:

Have any companies requested and received tax advantages on the basis that most of its product is sold outside Canada and, if so, what are the companies and what tax advantages have been accorded?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Under the authority of the Customs and Excise Tax Acts, and regulations thereunder, drawback or repayment may be made of 99 per cent of customs duties and excise and/or sales taxes paid on imported goods and materials used or directly consumed in, wrought into or attached to any articles manufactured or produced in Canada and exported therefrom. There are some 9,500 firms in Canada directly or indirectly involved in the import and re-export of goods and which normally qualify for drawback of duties and taxes under this authority. The names of these firms are not published.

Remissions of customs duties and, on certain occasions of sales taxes, have been made under the authority of Section 22 of the Financial Administration Act in respect of machinery and equipment for use primarily in the production of goods for export. Remission of duties has also been extended in certain instances to materials for use in the manufacture of goods produced in Canada exclusively for export. The Financial Administration Act requires that a statement of each remission of $1,000 or more granted under Section 22 of the Act, must be reported to the House of Commons in the Public Accounts.

In respect of tooling, machinery parts or accessories supplied by a prime contractor abroad to a Canadian manufacturer under the terms of a subcontract to produce goods for export, there is a standing provision under the authority of Section 22 of the Financial Administration Act for remission of the customs duty and excise taxes in excess of those payable on one-sixtieth of the value of the goods for each month that the goods remain in Canada. Remissions under this authority in excess of $1,000 are reported in the Public Accounts.

C.B.C. TELEVISION, SASKATCHEWAN

Question No. 553—Mr. Burton:

1. Has the CBC made application to the Canadian Radio Television Commission for a licence to operate a television station in Saskatchewan and, if so, what is the current position of this application?

[Mr. Honey.]

2. Does the CBC hold an option for the purchase of a television station in Saskatchewan and, if so (a) what is the name of the station (b) when does the option expire?

3. What other plans does the CBC have for television facilities in Saskatchewan?

Hon. John C. Munro (Acting Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows: 1. Yes. An application for a C.B.C.-owned outlet in Saskatoon is being held in abeyance at the request of the corporation pending the outcome of negotiations for the sale of CHAB-TV Moose Jaw and CHRE-TV Regina.

2. No. C.B.C. is negotiating for the purchase of CHAB-TV Moose Jaw and CHRE-TV Regina.

3. These are subject in part to the outcome of the Regina-Moose Jaw negotiations but it is hoped to extend the English language service to other parts of the province including a C.B.C. outlet at Saskatoon. The broadcasting needs of French speaking Canadians across the country have been the subject of a major study by C.B.C. during the current year. The final report is now being assessed with a view to further extension of the French language service to groups not presently served, including those in Saskatchewan.

ENTRY OF STOKELY CARMICHAEL

Question No. 554—Mr. Coates:

1. Was the recent visit of Stokely Carmichael sponsored by any organization in Canada and, if so, what is the name of that organization?

2. On what basis was Stokely Carmichael allowed to enter Canada, were any limits placed on his travels in this nation or any time limit on the period he might remain in this country?

3. Did the government have the option of either allowing Stokely Carmichael to enter Canada or to remain outside and if this option were available, what reasons can the government give for allowing him to enter Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Yes. Mr. Carmichael came to Canada to address the Congress of Black Writers conference which was sponsored by the Caribbean Students Society of McGill University and organized by the Congress of Black Writers committee.

2. Mr. Carmichael was allowed to enter Canada as he is not deemed to be within the classes of people prohibited admission under the Immigration Act. In such circumstances, the act compels the examining officer to grant entry. This was done for the period October 13 to 16. No restrictions were placed on his travels in Canada by immigration authorities.

3. No. See answer to question two.

PAINTING OF FEDERAL BUILDING, STELLARTON, N.S.

Question No. 560—Mr. MacEwan:

1. Were public tenders called for the painting of the Federal Building at Stellarton, Nova Scotia and, if not, what firms or individuals were asked to tender for this work?

2. To whom has the contract been awarded, and what is the amount of same?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. No. Tenders were invited from the following: Martin Cameron, Pictou, N.S., John Andrews, New Glasgow, N.S., Kimbal Lucas, New Glasgow, N.S., Parker Bros. Ltd., Halifax, N.S.

2. A contract was awarded to Kimbal Lucas, October 23, in the amount of $2,455.

INDIAN CHIEFS AND COUNCILLORS

Question No. 619—Mr. Stanfield:

1. As of October 1, 1968, how many Indian Chiefs were there who are recognized as such by the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs?

2. Of these, how many were in full, part-time or casual employment by the Government of Canada, or any federal agency or Crown corporation?

3. As of October 1, 1968, how many Indian persons held office as councillors or other elected officials in Indian Bands in Canada?

4. Of these, how many were in full, part-time or casual employment by the Government of Canada or any federal agency or Crown corporation?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. 531.

2. 76.

3. 1,786.

4. 191.

STUDIES BY CONSULTANTS, MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION

Question No. 630—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Since the Department of Manpower and Immigration was established, how many consultant firms have been awarded contracts to conduct studies within the Department?

2. (a) What was the name and address of each consultant firm which has received contracts from the Department of Manpower and Immigration since the Department was established (b) what has been the total payment made to each firm to date?

3. How many of each consultant's recommendations have been adopted by the Department of Manpower and Immigration to date and what are the names of the firms making the recommendations adopted?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Five.

2. (a) Hickling and Johnson Limited, 120 Avenue Road, Toronto 5, Ontario, (b) $6,115.62; Operations Research Incorporated, Silner Springs, Maryland, U.S.A., $98,658.88; Kates, Peat, Marwick and Company, 4 King Street, West, Toronto 1, Ontario, $24,000.00; Operations Research Industries, 151 Slater Street, Ottawa, Ontario, $162,649.78; Belanger, Ouellette and Associates Inc., 1224 West Ste Catherine, Montreal 25, Que., $37,112.83.

3. Hickling and Johnson Limited, 19; Operations Research Incorporated, 1; Kates, Peat, Marwick and Company, final report not received; Operations Research Industries, recommendations being considered; Belanger, Ouellette and Associates, recommendations being considered.

"DIRECTORY OF CANADIAN EMPLOYERS"

Question No. 669—Mr. Thompson (Red Deer):

1. To how many persons engaged in post graduate study or research outside Canada was the publication "A Directory of Canadian Employers" distributed?

2. Are all of these persons Canadian citizens?

3. What was the cost of circulation of the booklet?

4. What was the purpose of the circulation of the booklet?

5. What other programs are designed to encourage Canadian citizens, who are engaged in post graduate study or research outside of Canada, to return to Canada to pursue their careers?

6. What programs of financial assistance are available from the Government of Canada to Canadian citizens engaged in post graduate study of research outside of Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. The "Directory of Canadian Employers" was mailed to 2650 Canadians in post graduate study or research outside Canada.

2. All those in receipt of the directory identified themselves as Canadian citizens.

3. The cost for printing and circulating the booklet was $3,500.

4. The purpose of the circulation was to assist Canadian students at foreign universities investigate employment opportunities at home. This was to ensure that these highly qualified individuals would have the same opportunity of being considered for vacant positions as Canadian students at home.

5. The program, "Operation Retrieval" is designed to encourage Canadian students abroad to return to Canada upon completion of their studies. My department provides them with labour market information. At major universities in the United States where there is a sizeable number of Canadian students, additional information on employment opportunities is provided by visiting teams. These teams are comprised of representatives of Canadian universities, the Public Service Commission and the Department of Manpower and Immigration.

6. Financial assistance is available to Canadians engaged in post graduate study or research outside Canada through the National Research Council and the Canada Council. Although there is no single program of federal aid to all graduate students in all fields, many departments of the federal government offer awards to graduate students who are engaged in an area of study which is related to their particular interests.

PRESS RELEASES, MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION DEPARTMENT

Question No. 722—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

1. Does the Department of Manpower and Immigration issue documents which are of the nature of press releases, press communiques, news releases or the like and, if so, how many such documents have been issued since July 1, 1968?

2. What has been the cost of (a) printing headings or cover sheets (b) typing the stencils (c) mimeographing or other form of duplicating (d) collating and stapling (e) addressing and mailing the said documents?

3. With respect to the paper used for the said documents what is (a) its quality (b) the quantity used and the cost thereof?

4. What is the estimate of the number of manhours consumed in the preparation, production and distribution of such documents?

Answer: 1. Yes; since 1 July 1968, a total of 7 press releases have been issued.

2. (a) $77.60; (b) $3.23; (c) $44.07; (d) $98.76; (e) 1040.74.

3. (a) No. 7 bond, white, 32M; (b) 23688 sheets were used at a cost of $97.73.

4. The estimated number of manhours consumed in preparation was 99; in production was 25⅓; and in distribution was 20.

HIGHWAY AND BRIDGE TOLLS, EASTERN TOWNSHIPS

Question No. 727—Mr. Beaudoin:

Has the government received from Chambers of Commerce and other intermediary bodies, especially in the Eastern Townships, representations regarding abolition of tolls on the Eastern Townships Autoroute and the Champlain Bridge and, if so, what is its policy in this regard?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): In so far as the Champlain bridge is concerned, representations have been received for the abolition of tolls on that bridge and such representations are carefully studied. No change in the present policy of Champlain bridge tolls assessment is contemplated at this time.

*ROCK ISLAND, QUE.—PROTESTS AGAINST NEW POST OFFICE

Question No. 761—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. Has the government received protests from the Mayor and other citizens of Rock Island, Quebec, protesting the construction of a new post office, on the grounds that it is not needed and is an unnecessary expenditure?

2. If so, does the government intend to go ahead with the construction?

3. Has it entered into an option for the purchase of, or has land been purchased, upon which the said post office is to be located and, if so, at what price?

4. What is the estimated cost of the new post office?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the answer to part of this question is yes. Several written protests have been received from citizens of Rock Island.

The answer to part 2 is that the matter has been reopened and a new study is now under way.

The answer to part 3 is no.

The answer to part 4 is that it is not applicable.

Although the right hon. gentleman is not present today, I would nevertheless apologize for the delay in answering this question.

WINTER WORKS EXPENDITURES, TEMISCAMINGUE CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 808—Mr. Caouette:

1. How much did the federal government spend through its Winter Works Program in the federal constituency of Temiscamingue in each of the years from 1962 to 1968 to date?

2. How much was spent in each municipality during these same years?

HARBOUR AND AIRFIELD IMPROVEMENTS, GEORGIAN BAY AREA

Question No. 833—Mr. Noble:

1. Does the federal government intend giving prompt attention to improving Collingwood outer harbour so that larger ships may make use of the dry dock facilities?

2. Does the government contemplate building any ships in the foreseeable future on which shipyards in the Great Lakes area might be given an opportunity to tender?

3. Has the government any plans for the establishment of an airfield in the Eastern Georgian Bay area?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Public Works, Defence Production and Transport as follows:

1. Preliminary engineering investigations have been made and studies are continuing into the economic aspects of this major project. No decision has yet been reached.

2. Yes.

3. No.

Question No. 865—Mr. Caouette:

What amounts have been given to each of the provinces in aid to specialized technical schools since the setting up of such program?

FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Question No. 868—Mr. Caouette:

1. How many children in Canada receive Family Allowances?

2. Does the government intend to increase the amount of Family Allowances and to extend them to students as well?

[Translation]

Hon. John Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. 6,884,212 as of October, 1968.

2. If the Government decides to propose an increase in Family Allowances rates, it will be announced in the usual way. With respect to students, allowances are payable, under the federal Family Allowances Program, for children under 16 and thus students are included. The Youth Allowances Program provides for an allowance for young people aged 16 and 17 who are students or who are prevented from attending school by a physical or mental disability. The federal Youth Allowances Program does not operate in Quebec but similar payments are made by the Quebec Government and the Federal Government reimburses Quebec for the cost of such payments.

DISTRIBUTION OF STATEMENT ON ESTIMATES BY LABOUR MINISTER

Question No. 872—Mr. Nielsen:

1. What was the total cost of production and distribution of "Introductory Statement by the Minister of Labour in presenting the Canada Department of Labour Estimates Fiscal Year 1968/69 to the House of Commons Committee on Supply November 21, 1968" issued by the Information Services of the Department of Labour?

2. How many copies were produced, to whom was distribution made and, what was the cost of production of one copy?

3. (a) Does the text differ in any material respect from the statement of the Minister of Labour on presenting the estimates of his Department on Thursday, November 21, 1968, in the Committee of Supply as recorded in Hansard pages 3014 to 3018 inclusive (b) if material differences do exist what is the explanation therefor?

Mr. Jim McNulty (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): 1. $365 (Queen's Printer charges for time, plates and stock.)

2. 3,565 copies. Distribution: Daily and weekly press, independent journalists, 1,205; Labour publications, union officials, 220; Press gallery (Ottawa), 154; M.P.'s and Senators, 600; Federal government departments and agencies (e.g. U.I.C., Manpower Centres, etc.), 556; Provincial government, labour departments, etc., 63; General business and industry, 546; Universities and industrial relations institutes, 72; Total, 3,416. Unit cost of production—10 cents.

3. (a) and (b) Text contains no material difference except pages 14 to 16 dealing with the vote structure were not included in the minister's statement in the house because every member of the Committee had a printed copy of the revised estimates 1968-69 before him; the vote structure and other financial implications referred to in the text were self evident from the printed estimates.

PRESS RELEASES, INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT DEPARTMENT

Question No. 875—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

1. Does the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development issue documents which are of the nature of press releases, press communiques, news releases or the like and, if so, how many such documents have been issued since July 1, 1968?

2. What has been the cost of (a) printing headings or cover sheets (b) typing the stencils (c) mimeographing or other form of duplicating (d) collating and stapling (e) addressing and mailing the said documents?

3. With respect to the paper used for the said documents, what is (a) its quality (b) the quantity used and the cost thereof?

4. What is the estimate of the number of man-hours consumed in the preparation, production and distribution of such documents?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Yes—104.

2. (a) $435 approximately; (b) Nil—Stencils are not used. Releases are printed by off-set process directly from a repro-copy; (c) and (d) $3,205.55 approximately; (e) The addressing process is done in one location for the whole department. Addressing releases is only a small part of this operation and no cost assessment is available.

The department is charged annually by post office for all postage cost on a bulk payment basis. It is not possible to assess the cost of mailing releases. However, releases are distributed by hand to the press gallery and other news media in Ottawa. Cost of this service amounts to $423.

3. (a) Bond paper No. 7, 16 lbs.; (b) 234,000 sheets—$463.32.

4. 300 hours approximately.

*GRANT TO B.C. FOR P.G.E. EXTENSION

Question No. 920—Mr. Borrie:

1. Has the Province of British Columbia been given a grant or subsidy toward extension of the Pacific Great Eastern Railway from Fort St. John to Fort Nelson, British Columbia?

2. If so, what is the amount of the grant or subsidy?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my answer to part 1 of the question is no, and to part 2 is that it is not applicable.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

Question No. 972—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys):

1. Who is the member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada designated as the Minister for purposes of the Atlantic Development Act and on what date was such designation, if any, made?

2. Have any Orders-in-Council relating to the proposed Department of Regional Development, the Department of Forestry and Rural Development and any other departments been passed which in any way affect the operation of the Atlantic Development Board under the provisions of the Atlantic Development Act and, if so, in what manner?

3. (a) Have any steps been taken, either by way of Order-in-Council or by departmental or inter-departmental action, to alter the direct relationship previously enjoyed between the Atlantic Development Board and the designated Minister (b) has any such action as mentioned above affected the statutory obligations upon the Atlantic Development Board in relation to the Economic Council of Canada (c) has any such action as mentioned above affected the Atlantic Development Board's independence of action in discharging any of the statutory obligations laid upon it by virtue of Section 9 of the Atlantic Development Board Act as amended in Chap. 5, 12 Eliz. II, 1963?

4. Will the Atlantic Development Board continue to be able to make plans, proposals and recommendations and carry out certain works, subject only to approval of the Treasury Board and the Governor-in-Council, or will it, in the future, have to receive approval of the departmental deputy-minister?

5. Is it the intention of the government to put the present Atlantic Development Fund amounting to some $150 millions in a common pool of funds for the development purposes or will the Atlantic Development Board still have access to this Fund as a separate and distinct entity?

6. What is the intention of the government in regard to other funds now administered by the Atlantic Development Board—specifically, statutory road money amounting to $55 millions; the Bell Island Fund for housing, etc., of $1,750,000; the special transfer to the Government of the Province of Nova Scotia of $2 millions in connection with the take-over of the DOSCO Steel installation on Cape Breton Island?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): 1. The Minister of Forestry and Rural Development, 12 July 1968.

2. No.

3. (a) No; (b) No; (c) No.

4. The Atlantic Development Board, under its legislation, does not make submissions to Treasury Board. It makes recommendations to the minister as to submissions. No change has been made in this procedure.

5 and 6. Any changes would be a matter of future legislation.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I realize that this is about the fifth time of asking, but I am still looking for answers to my questions about the pensions of retired civil servants. They were filed on September 12. How many more times must I ask?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding the hon. member will have to ask every day until the 15th.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I shall do so.

MOTION FOR PAPERS

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you kindly call notice of motion No. 50?

[Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys).]

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining notices of motions be allowed to stand.

[English]

MOVE OF AIR CANADA BASE FROM WINNIPEG

Motion No. 50—Mr. Fortin:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all extracts of the minutes of the Board of Directors of Air Canada concerning the move of the maintenance base from Winnipeg to Montreal and of all correspondence exchanged between the government and Air Canada in connection with this matter.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as all members of parliament will appreciate, this motion relates to correspondence that has always been claimed to be privileged, not public documents. The tabling of such items as the minutes of meetings of the boards of directors of crown corporations and correspondence between the government and such crown corporations could create a precedent that would require the production of documents in the future that would interfere with the competitive position of the companies. For these reasons I would ask the hon. member to agree to withdraw his motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, as it is very difficult to obtain information from crown corporations, I should like to transfer this notice of motion for debate, since I do not accept what the Minister of Transport has just said.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate, pursuant to standing order 47.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR POSTPONEMENT OF CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question arising out of the illness of the Prime Minister of Quebec and the report that the government of Quebec is seeking to have the federal-provincial constitutional conference postponed. What is the position of the government of Canada with regard to this reported request from the government of Quebec?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I received from the Prime Minister of Quebec slightly after noon today a telephone call saying that he was in the hospital, and that he was forbidden to leave for some period of time. He asked if we could postpone the federal-provincial conference. I undertook to consult the various premiers and Prime Ministers of the provinces to see if they would agree to such a postponement. I sent telegrams to that effect about an hour ago.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PROPOSED NATIVE TASK FORCE TO DEVELOP POLICIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister and ask whether he is giving consideration to the proposal made to him by the National Indian Brotherhood to appoint a task force consisting of Indian people to develop new policies, leaving the development of major responsibilities for Indian matters to the Indian people themselves.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I did not understand the question. I wonder whether the hon. member would repeat it?

[English]

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The question has been discussed among the minister, the Minister without Portfolio and myself, Mr. Speaker. We are not as yet convinced that this would be the most effective way of arriving at a policy which would be to the greatest advantage of the Indians. However, it is a matter that is under consideration.

Mr. Orlikow: A supplementary question. I wonder if I could ask the Prime Minister whether he is giving consideration to recognizing the National Indian Brotherhood as the advisory body to the government on matters pertaining to the Indian people, as proposed by the National Indian Brotherhood.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we consider that the National Indian Brotherhood is a step in the right direction. We encourage the Indians to form provincial associations and we also think that it is advisable for them to have a national association. That is why we invited them to meet here last week and I must say to the hon. members that the meeting with the Indian chiefs was very successful.

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: The minister did not answer my question whether the government was giving consideration to recognizing the National Indian Brotherhood as the advisory body on behalf of the Indians in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, of course, if we recognize the existence of the National Indian Brotherhood, it is normal that we should wish to consult them as often as possible.

[English]

[Later:]

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Has the government agreed to a request from the National Indian Brotherhood for financial assistance in carrying out community development programs and other activities?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, this request was made by the National Indian Brotherhood.

We are now considering this suggestion.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CZECHOSLOVAKIA—INQUIRY AS TO PROTEST NOTE FROM RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, as suggested to me last week by the Prime Minister, I wish to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question.

Has Canada received from Russia a note of protest similar to that received by Great Britain in view of the discontinuance of cultural exchanges with Czechoslovakia? If so, what position will the Canadian government take about that note of protest and related comments?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am unaware of any such note of protest having been received, but I will make inquiries.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

STEPS TO MEET INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Since the Prime Minister stated in the house on September 13 that the government's attack on poverty is based on curtailing inflation, and since the latest Dominion Bureau of Statistics figures show that in each of the three months since that time the cost of living has been rising—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Hees: —at a steadily accelerating rate—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I was just leading into my question.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member should have started with a question.

Mr. Hees: I am just getting to it. Does the government expect in the near future to announce its plans for reducing the cost of living, so the Prime Minister's stated objective of fighting inflation and poverty in this country can be proceeded with?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member knows the government is doing everything within its power to fight inflation and rising costs in this country. In view of what he has just said I am sure the hon. member will support wholly all the budget measures that are now before the house.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the Minister of Finance referring to the increase of $845 million in taxes that the government is imposing on the people—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: —as their means of reducing inflation?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that new car prices were a major factor in driving up the cost of living for November, and since the United States labour bureau finds that improvements which raised the prices on new cars by $40 actually cost $1, will the minister initiate now a special inquiry into new car prices in Canada?

Mr. Benson: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): A further supplementary question to the President of the Privy Council. Will the minister consider setting up as soon as the house resumes in January a standing committee on consumer and corporate affairs to which this matter might be referred?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): I am prepared to consult with my colleagues on this, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question arising out of the answer given by the Minister of Finance in regard to support for measures that are proposed in his budget. I should like to ask him when he is going to give the house the draft changes in the income tax and succession duty legislation that I requested some time ago, so the house and the country will be in a position to know what they are actually being asked to support.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to my hon. friend privately it is a matter of house time. If he would like to pass without debate the succession duty resolution, I would be pleased to present the bill very shortly.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the minister has considered with his advisers how many years it will take him to close the credibility gap which he admits the government now has.

GRAIN

PROVISION OF DRYING FACILITIES AT COUNTRY ELEVATORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity of asking the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question relating to a question I raised on November 29, in which I asked whether the government was giving any consideration to allowing dryers at country elevators to dry grain that had been purchased by the country elevator companies, and at that time he said he would take this matter up. Are there any definite results from his investigations which he could report on this occasion?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Not today, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Korchinski: I am sorry; I did not hear the answer.

Mr. Pepin: Pas aujourdhui.

An hon. Member: That means nothing's been done.

Mr. Korchinski: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister taken up this matter with the appropriate people and consulted them on this question, since no damp grain is now moving out of the country elevators? Are dryers at the terminals working on a seven day a week basis yet?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, as I have said before, the transport committee, which is composed of the four entities my hon. friend is aware of, is trying to rationalize and regulate the flow from country elevators to terminals so that there will be no bottleneck and so the grain will neither freeze nor heat.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to one that has just been asked and is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Will the government allow farmers who are having their grain dried under the emergency program to pay for this by future grain deliveries, or would the federal government absorb part of the cost of drying?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, it is quite easy for my hon. friends always to be two or three steps ahead of me in suggesting the provision of subsidies.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pepin: Perhaps if I were on the other side of the house I would do the same thing. We are trying to cope with the situation as it develops. A few months ago hon. members were asking us to pay subsidies on grain which had not then been harvested. It has now been harvested, and we are trying to cope with the situation now that the grain has been harvested. I am willing and eager to look at any suggestions, but the necessary steps will have to be taken as needed and not as suggested by hon. members.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—STORAGE FOR PERISHABLE GOODS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport in reference to the situation whereby the Canadian National does not accept freight or express on week ends for shipment from the province of Prince Edward Island. Will the minister explore with the railway people the possibility of providing storage facilities for perishable goods awaiting shipment?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to do that.

[Translation]

NATIONAL REVENUE

INQUIRY AS TO TAXATION OF CO-OPERATIVES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

In view of pressure exerted by many financial bodies in Canada, would the minister tell the house whether it is his intention to tax credit unions' revenue on the same basis as other financial organizations in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: It is difficult to determine whether or not this is an urgent question, but it seems to me that it could be put on the order paper.

[English]

TRANSPORT

KINGSTON, ONT.—ACCIDENT BETWEEN TURBO TRAIN AND TRUCK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grace): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Will he advise the house whether he has requested a report on or an investigation into the level crossing accident yesterday near Kingston, Ontario, involving the turbo train and a truck? Will he also advise whether, before the first running of the train, any study was undertaken to determine whether the route taken by the turbo train and the level crossings were safe? Was it safe for the train to go across this level crossing?

Mr. Baldwin: Why not refer this to the transport committee?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Transport Commission is investigating the accident to determine exactly how it happened. I can also advise my hon. friend that advance studies were undertaken with regard to the safety aspects of operating trains at the speeds the turbo trains will travel. Every effort is being made to reduce risks to the maximum possible extent.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Did the Canadian National take steps to inform the public of the nature of the train and the speeds it will travel at? I ask this question in the light of yesterday afternoon's accident.

Mr. Hellyer: The introduction of the train, Mr. Speaker, has been widely advertised. Actually the difference between the speed of the turbo train and the speed of conventional trains is not great. Many conventional trains run over the same route at approximately the top speed attained by the turbo train.

The major difference in operating time between the two cities lies in the rate of acceleration and deceleration, which depends on the weight of the train itself. So there is not very much difference in the operating requirements, although obviously a train running at high speed gives a shorter warning time before level crossings than does one running at a slower speed.

Mr. Baldwin: A profound observation.

OIL

STUDY OF DEVELOPMENTS IN ALASKA AND NORTHERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Yesterday I put a question to the Prime Minister on the subject of our petroleum industry. I asked him whether he was meeting with the Premier of Alberta and whether consideration was being given to setting up a special study with reference to new markets for Canadian petroleum. Has the right hon. gentleman met with the premier?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I had a meeting with the premier this morning. He had requested an interview, and since it was not his expressed intention that the contents of it should be revealed, I prefer not do to do so.

As to the second part of the question, the general subject of petroleum, may I say I have been discussing this with the officials and with the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Does my colleague have something to add?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Before I saw the question asked by the hon. member yesterday I had already contacted the chairman of the National Energy Board and had a long conversation with him concerning the kind of studies which are taking place now in view of recent important developments in Alaska, in particular. He has given me the following report.

The tempo of exploration activities, particularly in the north, has greatly increased over the past few months and industry is actively engaged in numerous studies—

That is their interest.

—relating to possible alternative methods of transporting oil into various markets if its expectation of large, highly productive oil resources prove correct. The impact of these on United States markets now supplied with crude is also being studied by individual oil companies and by consultant and investment analysts. The National Energy Board—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret I must interrupt the minister, but it seems to me he is giving the type of information which ought to be given by way of a statement on motions.

Mr. Woolliams: I agree with your ruling, Mr. Speaker, but in view of the importance of this industry and the seriousness of the situation, I wonder whether the minister would be prepared to make a statement on motions tomorrow. I should also like to ask him whether anything has been done to provide a proper staff for the chairman or vice chairman of the energy board, since we were told in committee that they were short handed and lacking in funds with which to make the investigation.

Mr. Pepin: The President of the Treasury Board said a few days ago he was looking into this, and I impressed on him—it was not necessary but I did it anyway—the seriousness of the situation. With respect to the formation of the committee, I might say there is already an interdepartmental committee which brings together representatives of the National Energy Board and the various departments interested in this question of oil. As to the possibility of making a statement, I hope to make one at an early date.

TRADE

WHEAT—POSSIBLE EXTENSION OF EXPORT CREDIT POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): My question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Is the government considering extending its export credit policy to further increase wheat sales?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): That is a possibility, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gleave: As a supplementary question, in view of the statement by a spokesman for the Canadian Wheat Board to the Saskatchewan Farmers' Union convention in Saskatoon last week that if credit facilities were improved—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should ask a question directly and not quote from statements made outside the house.

Mr. Gleave: Will the minister clarify the situation at an early date?

Mr. Pepin: Now, Mr. Speaker. I said this was a possibility. Before finding out if you should improve your credit facilities you must have a potential market, and we are waiting for such a market before we decide whether to implement the possibility.

AIR CANADA

POSSIBLE EFFECT ON SAFETY OF WORK DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Yesterday and the day before I directed a question to the right hon. Prime Minister concerning extra precautions for air safety regarding Air Canada in view of the slowdown, and the Prime Minister undertook that today the Minister of Transport would answer the question. Is he prepared to do so at the present time? Also, Mr. Speaker, since we are discussing safety may I inquire from the Minister of Transport just how it happened that someone on that turbo train got such a wonderful picture of the accident taking place?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am assured that the slowdown of Air Canada employees will have no effect whatever on the safety of passengers or air crews.

Mr. Nesbitt: How about the other part of my question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

BROADCASTING

MONOPOLY CONTROL OF MEDIA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. Some weeks ago in response to a question the hon. gentleman indicated that he would be making a statement on the monopoly ownership or control of broadcasting facilities in Canada. I would like to ask the minister, does he intend to make that statement before Christmas?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I had indicated in my reply, the first time the hon. member put that question to me, that we and the C.R.T.C. are working on this very complex matter. I believe I also indicated that I was unable to say exactly when a statement could be made in this regard. However, I believe I may say now, with certainty, that the work will not be finished before the Christmas recess.

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: As a supplementary question, would the hon. gentleman inform the house whether he will be incorporating in this statement a reference to the growing monopoly in the ownership of newspapers in Canada?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, the matter of press monopolies is only incidental to the work we are now doing. Newspapers would be considered in that perspective only if they are part of an information monopoly with radio and television stations.

While I am on my feet, I would like to refer, if I may, Mr. Speaker, to the question of the Leader of the Opposition yesterday when he inquired about two statements I am said to have made in Winnipeg. I do not know where he got that account, but I made neither of the statements attributed to me which, I believe, prevents them from representing the official position of the government.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—EXTENSION OF TERM OF OBSERVER TEAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the secretary of State for External Affairs. Will the minister advise us whether Canada has been asked by the federal military government of Nigeria to extend the terms of the observer team there. If so, what has been Canada's response?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, some time ago I indicated that the Canadian government would be very happy to extend the terms of the observers. It is my understanding that they have in fact been extended more or less indefinitely, and we are happy about the situation.

Mr. Fairweather: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, has the minister made representations to Nigeria, having in mind the recommendation made by the committee on external affairs that the observer team look at both sides, both the secessionist and the federal military government side?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, our ambassador in Lagos was of course furnished with a copy of this report which I am sure he has passed along to the government as representing the views of the committee, as well as the statement I made on this subject in the house. However, the observer team is to observe the conduct of the federal military government troops, and there are none in Biafra.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, has the minister followed up two specific recommendations in the house committee report, one as to the expansion of the observer team in federal territory, and the second the provision of independent transport facilities for the team?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, we have made these views known to the federal military government. However, the position at the moment is that the observers are not fully occupied, and the question that had arisen in connection with their activities was whether in fact there was a useful role for them to perform under present circumstances. We urged the government to continue the observer team in existence. We indicated our preparedness to help in any way we could, and the position now is that the observer team is going to be retained. However, so far apparently there has not been a great deal of need for supplementary members or supplementary equipment.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Not supplementary.

[Mr. Fairweather.]

DRUGS

HEROIN—REPORTED STATEMENT AS TO DISTRIBUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Justice. On November 21, as recorded at page 3011 of Hansard, I addressed the following question to the minister:

> In view of the alarming statement by an R.C.M.P. spokesman that the hippy world has become an important distribution centre for heroin, a dangerous and rapidly habit forming drug, would the minister inform the house if this matter is now being given his consideration?

At that time the minister said he had this under investigation. Has he a statement to make now?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for his usual courtesy in giving me notice that he was going to put this question to me again. We have just received a report in our department from the R.C.M.P. on the use of drugs by young people, and officials of the Department of Justice are currently meeting with officials of the Solicitor General's department and the Department of National Health and Welfare. When we have analysed the facts we will be pleased to give a statement to the house.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. A few days ago I asked the minister a question with reference to the incentives provided by the federal government for research and development in the civil sector of our economy as opposed to incentives in the military sector, at which time the minister said it would take too long to answer and offered to discuss this point at any time and place. Would he be prepared some time during the next week or ten days, either at the University of Ottawa or Carleton University—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Broadbent: —to discuss it in public?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

SPORTS

HOCKEY—INTERFERENCE WITH FREEDOM OF CHOICE OF YOUNG PLAYERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin D. Gibson (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Will the minister request the task force investigating amateur sports to inquire into acts of illegal and unreasonable interference by hockey league executives with the right of young boys throughout Ontario and other parts of Canada to play hockey for teams of their own choice and not be indoctrinated into professional sport?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

BROADCASTING

ALBERTA—LICENCE FOR RADIO STATION CKUA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the hon. Secretary of State.

In view of the answer given by the hon. minister to the house on December 5 in which he reaffirmed that licences for educational broadcasting would not be given to the provinces or their agencies, could the minister give us the assurance that nothing will be done to cancel the licence of the CKUA radio station of the University of Alberta, which is operated by the telephone company of the government of Alberta?

Mr. Speaker: I think this question should be put on the order paper.

[English]

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

CHURCHILL, MAN.—NEGOTIATIONS ON DEVELOPMENT OF TOWN SITE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works on the proposals by his department to cabinet in relation to the development of the town site of Churchill. Can the minister say just when these proposals will be passed along to cabinet?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I would expect that some announcement in respect of our intentions will be made in a very few days indeed.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REPORT ON MEETING OF ADVISORY COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Can he tell the house the outcome of the first meeting of the consumers' advisory council which was held last Monday?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I can only report, as I am advised by the chairman, that they had a very successful one day meeting, the purpose of which was mainly to organize their activities and procedures for the ensuing meetings. They agreed to appoint a five man committee which would be concerned with organization and to attend to the appointment of a research director and staff. A date was set for the next meeting, which will be the second or third week in February.

Mr. McGrath: Will the council study the whole question of rising automobile prices and decreasing warranties which has already been referred to in the house today?

Mr. Basford: I should make it very clear that this advisory council is neither a regulatory nor an investigative council.

POWER

MINAS BASIN—FIRST REPORT OF STUDY GROUP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. May I ask that hon. gentleman when the house may expect to have the first report of the joint federal-provincial study group on the Minas Basin tidal project.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I will obtain information on that subject. I know that recently the study was extended and agreement was reached among Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Canada for provision of the necessary amounts. However, I do not know when the report may be expected.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

USE OF HOTEL ACCOMMODATION BY RECRUITING TEAMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the

Inquiries of the Ministry

Minister of National Defence. Could the minister explain why Canadian forces recruiting teams are using hotel accommodation for recruiting purposes at needless cost in areas where there are government armouries with recruiting offices specifically allocated for that purpose?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question should be placed on the order paper.

FARM MACHINERY

REQUEST FOR REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address this question to the Minister of Agriculture. Could the minister advise the house when he expects to table the report of the commission studying the cost of farm machinery?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I cannot give an indication of when we intend to table the report in the house. I can advise the hon. member that I have asked Dr. Barber for an interim report to be available before the end of this year which would be used as one of the position papers in respect of one of the subjects to be discussed at the national agricultural conference in March.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—PROVINCIAL PLANS WITH UTILIZATION FEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the minister's statement that the experience in Saskatchewan illustrates that medicare is absolutely necessary, does this mean that provincial medicare plans with utilization fees are now acceptable to the federal government?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking for a statement, and I would think the question is argumentative. If I am wrong on all counts, the question might be placed on the order paper.

FINANCE

STEPS TO BRING ABOUT INTERNATIONAL MONETARY REFORM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance concerning international monetary arrangements in view of the uncertainty concerning the health of the arrangements as they now stand. Is the government of Canada putting forward any suggestions regarding further reform of the system relating to international currencies?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Representatives of the government of Canada have been and are constantly in touch with representatives of the Group of Ten concerning matters such as this.

Mr. Stanfield: But is the government of Canada taking any position, for example, with regard to the question of the fixed parity exchange? Is the government of Canada putting forward any position or is it simply engaging in consultations?

Mr. Benson: The government of Canada is in no way considering a floating exchange rate.

PROCEDURE

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN FOURTH REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

The house resumed, from Tuesday, December 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Blair that the fourth report of the special committee on procedure of the house, presented to the house on Friday, December 6, 1968, be concurred in, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield, (p. 3762).

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, at ten o'clock last evening I was putting before the house some information with regard to the business of the house in this session and particularly in the coming part of the session. I mentioned that because of the slow progress on the legislative program of this session, a slowness produced by an inability to obtain effective agreement from the opposition on time for the measures needed this autumn, the house is now faced with some 40 bills, many of them of a very fundamental character, with about 80 days for legislative business between the resumption of the sittings in January and the end of June.

Last night the Prime Minister mentioned the closure of neglect and the closure of exclusion. I think it is fair to raise the question, is this what the opposition has in store for much of the legislative program of this year and, cumulatively, for the years to come? From these figures, 40 bills and 80 days, it must be clear that a very difficult problem of timing is confronting the house. If the opposition wishes to be responsible about the legislative work, they will have to sit down with us and participate in some of the hard choices involved in deciding how each item will be dealt with and over what period.

While his leader yields to the temptation to mock references to the British experience, I notice that the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) is ready to refer to that experience and particularly to the institution of "usual channels". He is perfectly correct in doing so. It is true that in the British house a great deal of consultation takes place through usual channels and that the rule of convention is that the second reading debate on a bill almost never takes more than one sitting day. I regret, as he does, that we have not built up a body of custom and co-operation of this kind.

But the hon. member for Peace River did not explain to us that since 1881, despite this body of custom and co-operation, the British house has used government timetables for passing bills. In referring to government timetables I might remind members of the house that this, of course, is not closure. The closure rule has also been used at Westminster and, I think, often dozens of times in a single session. Government timetables for passing bills have been used for almost 100 years. For example, from 1900 to 1913 it was used for 25 bills. From 1919 to 1932 it was used for 12 bills. From 1945 to 1967 it was used for 19 bills. Indeed, the British select committee on procedure in 1967, after discussing voluntary or co-operative arrangements, reported to the house that:

> Until there is greater experience in the making of voluntary agreements, your committee consider that governments should continue to rely on the traditional form of guillotine when there has been no agreement reached.

That is from the report of July 4, 1967, page x. Obviously in the House of Commons at Westminster they are not entirely happy with the government timetable procedure. The procedure has at least two obvious defects. We tried to overcome these in the proposed standing order 16A. The first criticism is that the debate on the government motion to adopt a timetable on a controversial bill lasts for a sitting day and the debate is regarded by many members as boring and repetitious. In 1967 they cut the debate to two hours. The second criticism is that there is no formalized consultation with opposition spokesmen before the government timetable is submitted to the house.

Under the proposed standing order 16A the government would not be able to put forward a timetable motion until the proceedings committee had met. This at the very least would permit the spokemen of opposition parties to make their views fully known before the government made a proposal to the house. If opposition spokesmen are really worried that clandestine meetings would take place, a gilt-edged notice requirement can be provided. No one on this side was so machiavellian as to think that it would be good politics to hold clandestine one man meetings of a four party committee.

• (3:20 p.m.)

A good deal has been said about the quorum. I appreciate hon. gentlemen raising the question, and I think it is a fair question to raise. It should be perfectly obvious that parties would be tempted to emasculate standing order 16A by simply staying away from the meetings. We all know what happened to a previous standing order of this house, standing order 15A, because a Conservative representative decided to boycott the meetings. The proposed standing order 16A therefore provides a disincentive to the boycotting of a committee of this house.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Oh, come on!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) can make a speech on this matter if he wishes. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre criticized the requirement for unanimity in this committee. He would prefer to have the committee decide by a majority. He even invoked the British North America Act, section 49, as authority for that proposition. We all know that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is a great author of red herrings on various procedural subjects in the house. But surely last night we observed the very best of his performances in this regard when we were privileged to see a veritable whale of a red herring.

Let us remember that the proposed committee would not be a committee of the members of this house. It would not reflect the strength of the parties. It would be a committee of the parties, with each party, the smallest like the largest, represented by one member. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would put the government in the position where it could not propose a timetable to the house unless it carried a majority in a committee in which the government would always be in a minority. All this he proposes in the name of section 49 of the British North America Act.

What we are really being told is that there should be some kind of a committee and that if the committee did not come up with a timetable the government would be permitted to do nothing. I wonder whether those opposite who have taken on the responsibility of leading the parties in the house have thought through what kind of pressure that kind of arrangement would put them under. Members would come to them and say, "There is no reason why you should agree to anything in the proceedings committee. If you take a tough stand, we will be able to speak as often as we want and the government will be able to do nothing about it." In that situation either the house leaders would change at a fast rate or the committee would amount to nothing.

We have heard solemn assurances from the Leader of the Opposition and from speakers from other parties on that side of the house that never will there be obstruction to reasonable actions. This is what they say. But what are reasonable actions? They will decide. They will veto decision by this house.

These solemn assurances are made to us again and again. I must say, however, that I can see no reason why I should give any greater credence to those assurances than the Leader of the Opposition insists he gives to my assurances. I suspect that the Leader of the Opposition would admit candidly that he cannot see any reason either.

What is being asserted is really very simple. It is that the opposition knows best. It is that they have an inalienable right to prevent the house reaching decisions they may not like.

An hon. Member: That is not right.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member agrees with that.

An hon. Member: No. I said that is not right.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): There have been in the past men in the opposition who have made such assertions. I think perhaps we would be best guided if we again read section 49 of the British North America Act. It reads:

> Questions arising in the House of Commons shall be decided by a majority of voices other than that of the Speaker, and when the voices are equal, but not otherwise, the Speaker shall have a vote.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

I suggest that this provision should be the basis for deciding any programming of the business of this house.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would say a few words about the proposed amendment. I note with interest that the Leader of the Opposition has made no effort in the amendment to deal with the government's right to make a motion on its own. His proposed amendment deals only with motions to accept the decisions of the procedure committee, such decisions being, by the definition of the standing order, those which are unanimous. He does not deal in the amendment with our proposal that after consultation the government can introduce its own motion. The only change he of the meetings of the committee on would propose is that there should be notice procedure.

My first reaction to this amendment is one to which I have given expression, namely, that indeed this was not raised and dealt with in the special committee on procedure. This seems to be a reasonable suggestion. It seems to me that if that be the only objection hon. members opposite would make to standing order 16A, it bears very serious consideration, and I would agree that the amendment is a very tempting one to vote for.

Mr. Baldwin: Yield to temptation.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Before terminating my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be appropriate if I made some reference to the assistance that was available to the special committee on procedure. In particular I refer to the many long hours and hard work put in by the secretary of the committee, Mr. Philip Laundy, who was ably assisted by Mr. Michael Kirby. Able assistance was also provided under great pressure by Mr. Gordon Dubroy and his colleagues at the table. I think all hon. members would agree with me that we are much indebted to them for their services to the committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): On a personal note, Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my own appreciation, and take this opportunity of so doing, to one of our former colleagues in the house who I think it would be acknowledged in all corners of the house has an encyclopaedic knowledge of the procedures of the house and a great grasp of the parliamentary system. I am referring to the former member for Antigonish-Guysborough, Mr. John Stewart. I would like to express my thanks for his contribution and services, not only to me in my role in the committee, but to parliament generally and the cause of reform of the house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in opening my remarks this afternoon I want to in many ways re-echo the opening words at least of the chairman of the committee on procedure, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair). As vice-chairman of the committee I think I can also echo the closing remarks of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) with regard to the staff and assistance we received in the committee. I particularly want to underline the remarks of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton with regard to the spirit of harmony that prevailed in the committee.

As the hon. member indicated, and I reiterate his statement, it has been said that the committee concluded its deliberations in wild disagreement, but someone must have been under the strong influence of opium, or whatever it was, to say this and must have been looking for sensationalism. Of course there was disagreement on some principles. There was serious discussion. There was a great deal of consensus. There were proposals and counter-proposals, and we agreed to disagree on certain fundamental points. The opposition lined up on one side and the government on the other. There were lesser disagreements with regard to supply, and other disagreements with regard to emergency procedures. But anyone who suggests there was wild disagreement is saying what is very far from the truth. Indeed, the representatives on the committee of members of parliament in all parties in the house were concerned with the efficient operation of this house, our house, not the government's house but the house of the members of parliament. This concerns all of us.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Therefore representatives of all parties have indeed a vested interest to see that we work out the best possible rules. I would say that within the limitations of our respective interests and our respective views, this has likely come about.

• (3:30 p.m.)

This report is not in any way a government blueprint of what it considers the rules to be, except for a couple of very fundamental points which have already been referred to by the Leader of the Opposition, (Mr. Stanfield), the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) last night. We know now what the issues are in regard to the fundamental parts of these reports. The points of major departure are the elimination of the committee of supply and the allocation of the time of debate or otherwise by direction of the government, not only in the house but in committee as well. I will come back to that point later. Provision 16-A is not limited to proceedings in this house, and therefore any statements by the Prime Minister or other representatives of the government that this is going to give much greater freedom to the private member to discuss in committee either legislation or estimates are a fallacy. Why is that so? Because the government house leader, under the conditions of provision 16-A, has the right to dictate to this house by way of a government order how long proceedings may take in committee, either on legislation or in supply, inasmuch as the proposed standing order states "every item".

I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that the one place where the government house leader has no place—as a matter of fact this house really has no place—is in the committees because it is said that a committee is the master of its own proceedings. In fact you, Mr. Speaker, and I when I occupied your chair, have refused to intervene in the proceedings of the committees because the chairman is supreme there. The committee is the master of its own proceedings, and yet under rule 16-A there is a subterfuge that the government, through its house leader, can interpose and will interfere.

I say further that Mr. Speaker has, from time immemorial, categorized himself as being the servant of this house and the servant of the members of this house as expressed through the rules of this house which protect the privileges of members and their rights and obligations as against each other, the rights and obligations of the opposition versus the government, and vice-versa. However, if we take government imposed rules this means that Mr. Speaker does not become the servant of this house but instead becomes the servant of the government, and that is a denial of our democratic form of government. That is why I maintain that the principle of government imposed rules which go down to the fundamental points that these do are wrong because Your Honour's position has been placed in jeopardy as the result of these proposals. You are no longer the arbiter of the rules of this house but instead you are the arbiter of the rules as put forward by the government, and that, I say, is quite wrong.

Having occupied the position that you now so well occupy, Mr. Speaker, I should like to approach the question of rules on the basis of certain general principles. First of all, our system of responsible parliamentary democracy means that the Prime Minister and his cabinet are responsible to parliament and, as part of parliament, to this house. Neither parliament nor this house is to be a mere tool of the cabinet or at the beck and call of cabinet. If anyone wanted to talk about the reform of the parliamentary system I would say to him, let us curtail the power of cabinet and restore power to the members of this house. This is what has been the big problem.

If hon. members would bother to acquaint themselves with what has been going on at Westminster and what is the attitude of the private member there, they would see what I mean. There has been an outrageous growth of cabinet power vis-à-vis parliament. It has now become the mere tool of the cabinet. Let us look at recent writings on the subject of Westminster such as "the legislative process in Westminster" by Mr. S. A. Walkland and a book by Mr. Berkeley, a former member of the British House of Commons, which describe what has happened over there. Yet in a half-digested way we are being asked to pick and choose from the system at Westminster after what I would call shallow and unconsidered thinking has been given to some of the procedures that apply over there.

Second, proceedings in this house must be so conducted that the rights of all hon. members as representatives of the people who elected them and as individuals are protected with scrupulous impartiality and that all members stand before you, Mr. Speaker, as equals, with certain limited exceptions provided for in our rules. These usually have to do with the amount of time that one is allotted in particular debates.

Third, in this house the government has certain rights which must be recognized and protected. A government cannot be forever held at bay and constantly harried and thwarted from fulfilling its recognized task and its responsibility of governing. Having such responsibilities, however, it cannot possess unbridled licence to ride roughshod over the rights of members who are not part of the government. Again I would like to point out to hon. members opposite that outside of those members of the Privy Council they are not members of the government but are government supporters. The government consists of the members of the cabinet, and all others opposite are private members who possess rights which must be protected. Members sitting in opposition to the government have their undeniable rights which cannot be trampled upon, but in possessing those rights let us recognize that they too have responsibilities toward one another and toward the government.

Fourth, these rights and responsibilities are to be recognized in our rules of procedure wherein they may be enshrined. Such rules must be readily understandable to hon. members—I would hesitate to say they must be understandable by the Chair—and they must lend themselves to effective and ready application by the Chair.

In devising our rules the house must provide you, Mr. Speaker, with an acceptable task. When Mr. Speaker is elected he is asked to accept a charge which must not be impossible. It is the duty of the members of this house collectively to furnish the Chair with effective, workable rules. The Speaker must not be placed in an impossible position. Regrettably, Mr. Speaker, this is not always recognized. All too often procedural proposals are made without thinking or unthinkingly of the consequences as they affect the Chair.

I wish to re-emphasize the opening remarks of the Leader of the Opposition, in particular when he said we are now considering a fundamental issue, perhaps the most fundamental of all, the right of parliament to control itself and in so doing to control the government. I come back again to the theory that in the parliamentary form of democratic government which we enjoy the Prime Minister and the cabinet are responsible to parliament, not parliament responsible to the cabinet. However, in the eyes of the technocrat it all too often appears that legislatures are obstacles to good government. Efficiency, measured by the technocrat himself, is the underlying standard. Critical questioning, alternative proposals and even dissent itself are not acceptable to the technocratic philosophy of government. As my leader said yesterday, we must never dismiss the importance of debate. In so saying we do not subscribe to unlimited debate merely for the sake of debate, merely for frustrating the effective working of parliament. Debate must provide for the adequate discussion of any proposal that is made in this house.

I would put it to you, Mr. Speaker, and to hon. members that the words "adequate discussion" really are the point at issue. What is adequate discussion? I think this underlies the closing remarks of the government house leader today, and it pretty well underlies all the discussion we have heard to date. Now, the government may feel that anything beyond token debate or statements of position by representative speakers is more than enough. I suspect that this is the philosophy of this government in its determination to program the business of the house as it proposes in the present changes before the house.

Of course, government supporters are totally ignored in these proposals, notwithstanding the hopeful but regrettably naïve assertion of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton yesterday. Their position is totally ignored by the government. It will be affected just as much as that of hon. members opposite because I would put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that this is a move in the struggle between the cabinet and the house for the control of what is parliament. Every time there has been more than a mere tinkering with the rules, this has been the case.

Let us go back to 1955 when the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) was a member of this house. He will tell you—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): When wasn't he a member?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): From 1958 to 1962.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I was in the gallery, watching.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): He will agree that the changes in 1955 resulted in a considerable shift in favour of the cabinet against the rights of individual members and a further curtailment of debate. Now we get to the ultimate this afternoon when the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) indicated that he would like to recommend, and I am not telling tales out of school, that second reading last one day. It would not matter how controversial the bill; we could have a day. On his basis of thinking, a subject like medicare would be debated for one day.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And the omnibus bill?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It is difficult to determine just what is the principle of that bill, but certainly according to his thinking one day would be sufficient to debate the omnibus bill. What becomes then of the distribution of membership in this house? One cannot foresee that it may be fundamentally changed for some time. The position of the parties may be changed, but the point is that we are not making rules for just this year or next year. These are supposed to be permanent changes. What does that mean? Does it mean there will be merely position statements, one by a government spokesman, one from the opposition, one from the third party and one from the fourth party? If there were time left over we possibly could get in a few contributions more. Is that debate, Mr. Speaker? We might as well file these statements. Why does the government house leader even suggest we have second reading? As I have said, the government now feels that anything beyond a token debate or a statement of position by representative speakers is more than enough.

That power—I call it almost unbridled licence—given the government house leader by the proposed standing order 16A not only governs proceedings in this chamber but I warn hon. members opposite and emphasize to them that rule 16A reaches right down into committees. I do not know what the two hour debate is going to do, if the government house leader makes a proposal that contains any number of items that are unacceptable to the house leaders of other parties. In other words, the proposals could be outrageous, and designedly so if I want to ascribe to him the ultimate motive, not only with regard to several items of legislation but every item before the committees. We are to have a two hour debate to discuss the pros and cons and then there would be a guillotine, a vote presumably supported by the government members. This is how the business of this house is to be conducted. I call it unbridled licence; it is nothing more than that.

Hon. members must realize just what they are doing, the power they are turning over to the cabinet against themselves by their acceptance of this particular proposal. I think my proposals to the committee went even further with regard to the legislative process for discussion and flexibility by the government. Personally, I prefer the French system of giving notice on the order paper, printing the bill, and the bill going immediately to a standing committee, or to committee of the whole if that is to be its fate, where the bill is to be discussed. Then if any amendments are made either from the government side or the opposition side it is at the report stage that the government either accepts them or rejects them. Alternatively, if in the eyes of the government the bill has been torpedoed, the report stage is regarded as a vote of confidence on the issue on which debate was divided. This is where the cabinet asks itself whether it is responsible and whether the house is going to back it up. In other words, the cabinet is responsible to the house. If the cabinet felt that its proposals did not have the confidence of the house, then it could ask for that confidence.

There has been a via media in that the second reading stage has been de-emphasized—I will not say downgraded—and I think this may be to advantage. We are all agreed on eliminating the resolution stage, and it will be of immense advantage to eliminate duplication. It is a simple procedure to move amendments to every clause of the bill which would be voted on in the report stage.

It is here, Mr. Speaker, that the government and its advisers have been rather incautious, I would say, in their proposals. Your Honour will have the task of marshaling these amendments and frankly, with the greatest respect, I do not envy you your task. Amendments could be moved to every clause of the bill, and it does not tax the ingenuity of man in this house to fashion them. Therefore, unless the debate is kept very relevant—and Your Honour knows how difficult that is—I wonder what time will be saved.

We agree that marshalling or maximizing our time is the great problem today. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) laid emphasis on this last night, and I agree with him. But is anything going to be gained by this procedure, particularly if the government house leader imposed his weekly closure? Who is going to be so naive as to suggest, since the government house leader is cutting back on second reading, that if amendments line up before Mr. Speaker one after the other the government house leader would not also wish to restrict debate on them? It would amount to weekly closure.

And this house is to be a place for debate, Mr. Speaker? This simply is not inherent in this particular government proposal. This is the most vicious and dastardly attack upon parliament that has ever been perpetrated. Provisional standing order 15A was bad enough. In fact, it was so bad it was never used. If it is felt that debate has extended too far, then the government must assume its responsibility. We all know there is a second forum for debate that is not in this house but is in the antechamber where government ministers and the Prime Minister are prone to run to the television camera to do their ministerial second thinking. This sort of discussion is one-sided because no one is there to question them. The Prime Minister has been quoted as saying on television last night that there comes a time in every democratic assembly when debate must come to an end and a decision made. He made that statement here, and no one quarrels with it. But this was the most undisguised red herring that the Prime Minister could ever have dragged up from the bottom of the ocean and brought into this debate. The government just does not have the courage of its convictions. Standing order 33, which under these proposed rules is being continued, was made for this purpose. If the government feels that debate has gone on far too long, then let the government have the courage to bring in closure frontally instead of having the government house leader do it in advance before the debate has even begun.

I agree that closure has to be used if the debate has gone too far, but this can only be ascertained after the debate has got under way, not beforehand. Yet this is what we are faced with. The government house leader has this authority now, and the Prime Minister knows it. In effect, what the Prime Minister is seeking is authority to cut off debate a week before it is commenced in so far as any or all matters on the order paper are concerned, and not only matters on the order paper but also matters before the committees.

Let us suppose that the government had got wind of what had happened in the transport committee and was concerned that it would run into trouble in that committee. They would not have had to put the chairman in hospital or "cut off his head" or "eat him", as they did; all the government house leader would have to say is that the proceedings presently before the transport committee will be brought to an end as of a certain date. Let us say this proposal was made on a Thursday. Once it is voted on he can cut off debate as of the next day, even though the committee may have been going to meet the following Tuesday. That is what is possible under these proposals.

When the Prime Minister makes this fine statement that sounds very impressive, frankly he is just trying to muddy the issue, to distort the facts and to mislead the Canadian people about what is involved here. And I would say that he is doing that deliberately. I am not infringing any privilege here because this was said on television, not in this house. This picture of distortion was given direct to the Canadian people. As far as the opposition is concerned, the Prime Minister and his cabinet colleagues are not going to get away with it.

The government has the weapon of closure at its disposal. If the government house leader or the Prime Minister wants to use it, then let them be men enough to say they are going to use closure, instead of resorting to this round-about, hidden way that is being proposed. Let them say that debate has gone on too long; certainly I would prefer that to this. I am sorry for Your Honour if their admiration or partial admiration for the British system is going to make it difficult for you, because they are going to hand to you the power to determine when debate has gone on long enough. That is what your counterpart does in the United Kingdom.

I fully realize Your Honour might not like that. I would have found it most difficult to come to that very difficult decision. But at least closure is not imposed by the government. Mr. Speaker is independent. We want him independent and we want the rules to maintain the independence of Mr. Speaker.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): With the greatest deference I suggest that in this field that will not be the case. Having said all this, and I wish to keep my remarks reasonably brief, I must emphasize once again what I have spoken of before. We agree that we must modify our rules to meet changed circumstances. We made many proposals I indicated that some of them are much more radical even than the proposals before us here. We too are concerned with the effective disposal of our time, as was said so well yesterday by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. We subscribe to many of the changes. In a general way, and I say "general" because certain hon. members have different appreciations of individual rules, we approve of much of the report.

May I go back, Mr. Speaker, to one of my original points. The rules of this house are the prerogative of this house and not of the government. I rather suspect that the government house leader does not agree with me because this does not agree with his philosophy.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. member has no evidence of that.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I can only reply to the Minister of Justice by saying that I base myself on 26 meetings in committee where there was a free interchange of views. The advocacy of the government house leader with regard to certain changes can lead to no other conclusion. In so far as the programming committee and the committee of supply are concerned, Mr. Speaker, these are government imposed changes.

What are we to do with regard to supply? Before I deal with supply perhaps I ought to make one comment to the government house leader. He indicated that the former hon. member who represented Winnipeg South Centre and was this party's representative on the business committee had boycotted that committee, the implication being that rule 15-A was not effective because of the boycott. That is not factual, Mr. Speaker. There are persons present in this house who were members of that committee and they will attest to that. I know they feel that Hon. Gordon Churchill always attended meetings of the business committee; after all, rule 15-A operated on one or two occasions only. That hon. member fully discharged his responsibilities. It is true that when he was house leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition he and the then government house leader decided to eliminate the meetings of all house leaders generally.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): They did not like us.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I will not go into details. There was some problem about confidentiality and that sort of thing. I will let bygones be bygones. But with respect to rule 15-A there is no question that the hon. member then representing Winnipeg South Centre who was our representative on that committee discharged his obligations fully, both in spirit and to the letter of the rule. I therefore say that the government house leader was wrong in the assertion he made earlier this afternoon.

The point I now wish to make with regard to supply is that we do not agree, Mr. Speaker—and here perhaps we part company with my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre—that the committee of supply should be suppressed. This house is not a legislative grist mill; it never was designed to be in the past and will never be in the future. A good part of the responsibility of this house vis-à-vis the people and vis-à-vis the government is to exercise the most careful diligence and surveillance over government expenditure. Supply is an integral part of the responsibilities of this house, as is consideration of legislation.

It is the preponderance of a technocratic frame of mind which downgrades supply or the consideration of estimates as against the passage of legislative proposals. Does the government think it is going to cure the ills of the country merely by passing laws? I think not. It would be better in so far as this house is concerned to allow the committee of supply to remain. There is no copyright with regard to this proposal. I do not think every department of government should be examined in detail every year. I think every department ought to have a detailed examination with all officials present not more than once in three years. After all, we must recognize the administrative responsibilities of the officials of these departments and tailor our policy to deal with them intelligently. It is my view that if a department were to go before the related standing committee once in three years for detailed examination, that would be enough. That could be followed up by one stage in this house where there could be for a limited period a general statement, shall we say, about the philosophy or administration of the department. Three years later that department could again be brought before the standing committee for examination.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, every department would come before the committees and before the house. There would be a not so intensive examination of the department and then an intensive examination. That would preserve to this house the right of granting supply and the right of discussion of supply. For that reason we do not think the committee structure as now set up would be adequate. It is going to be a fearsome system. I have had a good deal of experience in committees and I like to see them work. The government is proposing to throw on to a structure that is now only evolving the whole burden of the study of supply and of estimates, plus a great deal of legislation. Before we jump, Mr. Speaker, let us know where we are going to land. Frankly, the committee structure as it now exists is not designed for the task that is being asked of it under these proposed rules.

I close by saying that we give a great deal of support to some of these rule changes. But on the questions of eliminating the committee of supply and the programming committee, there we cry, "Halt."

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, one of the great advantages I have found in our democratic system is that one may make the assumption, no matter what party one belongs to, that the motives of all other hon. members are of the highest in relation to the good of the country and its people. Everyone of us makes that assumption with pleasure about everyone else here. Yet I must admit, in the presence of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald), that on the debate in which we are now engaged and on the issues which are now before us I find some considerable difficulty in making that assumption about the insistence of the government to shove down the throat of parliament a particular rule I object to, namely, rule 16A.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Lewis: I have no doubt that many Canadians across the country are puzzled by what is taking place here. They are concerned about many serious problems both at home and abroad and they want to see the government and parliament act on these problems. So do I. So does every member of the opposition parties in this house. So, I am sure, do the members on the government side. I say as I begin my remarks that it is within the power of the government to achieve this objective even now. Any delay as a result of this debate, short or long, is entirely the government's responsibility. That should be made clear, and I hope it will be made clear to the people of Canada by those who carry the responsibility for informing our people in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: Why do I say this? I say, Mr. Speaker, that the government could and should have introduced the committee's report without the hooker contained in rule 16A. If it had done that the report could have been passed possibly without debate. Certainly with no more than a few speeches in the house, and parliament could even today be dealing with the problems of the Canadian people and with other problems which affect the people of the world.

It is important to emphasize that according to the information which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) gave to the caucus of the New Democratic party, the government knew that all the changes proposed, except for two, were acceptable to all parties in this house. The Conservative party had some objection to the supply situation—it was not an adamant objection—and all the opposition parties were opposed to rule 16A as the President of Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) proposed it to the committee. The reason I find some difficulty in keeping to my determination to allow that everyone's motives are of the highest is that the government insisted on introducing rule 16A when it knew that to do so would provoke a long debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: Let me remind you, Mr. Speaker, to emphasize that I am not just throwing words out, that the President of the Privy Council last night gave an assurance, as I am told he indicated to the committee he would, that the government would see to it that a permanent standing committee on procedure and organization would be established and given the opportunity to review the rules we are now debating. Was it not reasonable and civilized to expect that in those circumstances the government would place before parliament a rule 16A in a form which was acceptable to all the parties and which could be given a try for the remainder of this session? And if the hon. gentleman, as government house leader, found it was being abused by the opposition he would then have reason to come before parliament and ask for changes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: He sits and laughs.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I am trying not to be cynical about the hon. member.

Mr. Lewis: He is trying not to be cynical. Let me tell him that he does not have to try. His behaviour shows that he is cynical in the worst sense of the word. He is cynical about this parliament, about the needs of the Canadian people and about his behaviour in this house.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We have been talking about motives and imputing motives—

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether the hon. member for Winnipeg North wishes to raise a point of order? He has been standing—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am raising a point of order, Mr. Speaker. We have been talking about motives and perhaps getting into personalities. I was hoping that the hon. member would stick to the principles we are debating.

Mr. Lewis: I respect the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), as I do all hon. members in this house including the President of the Privy Council, without reservation. If I made any remarks about being cynical they were in reply to a comment which I believe to be completely unjustified. It reminds me of another comment which was made earlier in the day, one which I suggest will not make co-operation easier in this house. The President of the Privy Council referred to my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre, whom everyone in this house and in the country respects as an honourable man, a man who is concerned to see that parliament functions properly, as a "master of the red herring." Such a remark was, in my view, irresponsible. As I was saying, despite the giggles and interjections of the President of the Privy Council, even now the government can say it is prepared to recommend the report less the hooker in 16A, that it is prepared to try out the new procedure on the basis of agreement for the rest of the session, and if they find it unworkable they will come back next year and seek to change the rule. Surely this is a better way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: If the government is prepared to do that—

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Which one do you describe as the hooker?

Mr. Lewis: That part of 16A which gives the President of the Privy Council the opportunity to meet by himself and make a decision against the wishes of the other members of the committee and then bring it before this house, relying on the majority which the government has to take away the rights of members should he desire to do so.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Is the hon. member objecting to the quorum provision or to the fact that ultimately the majority of members in the house would decide on the allocation?

Mr. Lewis: Come, now. Like the hon. gentleman I have practised law, and if I have not been in the house for many years I have been in politics for quite a few years, and the minister cannot ask me whether I am going to stop beating my wife and expect a direct answer. I object to everything in rule 16A except that part which deals with agreement with decisions reached by unanimous consent of the entire committee. Really, I am appealing to the government, if it is of any use, to follow the course I am proposing. It has a duty in my estimation to give my suggestion a try for the remainder of the session. See whether the opposition parties will co-operate to make parliament function properly. For our part, we shall agree to a reasonable allocation of time, we shall work with the government to see that the business of this house is accomplished in a proper way and that the committees function in a proper way. I say on behalf of the party which I have the honour to lead in this house that we shall give the government every co-operation to that end, and I should be very surprised if the party which the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) leads is not prepared to do the same.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: If the government is willing to accept that challenge, then this debate can end.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Another reason I find it difficult to accept the general proposition about motives in this case, which I stated earlier, concerns something which the Prime Minister and the President of the Privy Council said. Either these words mean something or they are just words, sand in our eyes and in the eyes of the Canadian people. The Prime Minister said last night:

> —if valid arguments for modifying the proposals are made in the debate, we will not feel bound to adhere strictly to those recommendations. We will consider any reasonable proposals put forward for consideration.

How can that be done here? By the procedure which the government has chosen to place this report before the house with Mr. Speaker in the chair we are not permitted to move any amendments other than that the report be referred back to the committee. How then can the government take into account any reasonable proposals? Are we playing games, or are we being honourable with each other? If they are prepared to consider reasonable proposals they must make the next step to create the forum in which those reasonable proposals can be brought forward in negotiation, and consider them. Otherwise these are no more than words.

The President of the Privy Council made a similar statement last night, and I suggest that statement was no more than words, because if the Prime Minister and the President of the Privy Council mean what they say, that they are prepared to accept reasonable proposals for change, then to me their duty is simple. They should say they are prepared to send the proposed new rule 16-A back to the committee where those reasonable proposals can be put to them and where they can consider them. Then we can move on with the legislative program that the government has stated it has, and the suggestions made by my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre can be considered, as well as other suggestions.

There certainly are problems. Unemployment in the country is growing higher. Housing is still a crisis. The western farmers have great difficulties resulting from weather and other causes. Government reorganization is an important matter I would like to learn about. We get shunted from one minister to another without knowing exactly what the new set-up will be in areas like regional development, in areas like communications, in areas like a department of supply or whatever it will be called. It is time we heard about these things, and we are prepared to listen to the government on these issues. These are things that should be done now.

As I have said, if the government were prepared to do what I consider to be—and I am not using these words offensively—the civilized, reasonable thing among people who are trying to make a civilized place of this parliament to deal with modern times, then I suggest the government ought to yield on this one point of sending rule 16-A back to the committee. But obviously, Mr. Speaker, the government does not intend to do so.

Like many others in this house I have in the last few years spoken frequently about the need for parliamentary reform. But I reached the precisely opposite conclusion to the one that it seems to me was reached last night by the Prime Minister who gave one of his charming, professorial lectures to the house. What is the problem of this parliament, of other parliaments, if you will permit me to be professorial for a minute or two?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And charming.

Mr. Lewis: That is not for me to say. It is the problem rising out of a changing social environment, but not of an abstract kind about which the Prime Minister spoke; it is about some of the very concrete things of modern life so far as they relate to the work of parliament.

The problem derives from the fact—I know some hon. gentlemen agree with it and I know that some are not very much in favour of it—that the role of government grows yearly, that the intervention by government in the lives of the ordinary people of the country, indeed in the lives of the ordinary people of the world, grows daily. It derives from the fact that modern society places more and more duties and more and more demands on those who govern the people and on those who legislate on behalf of the people. This is the source of the problem, and the source of the problem is compounded by some other facts that we ought to recognize in a modern legislative situation.

The first of these facts is the power of the civil service. It is a myth that in most cases the laws are drafted by the ministers of the crown. In most cases the laws are drafted by the senior civil servants.

Some hon. Members: Right.

Mr. Lewis: The role of the government has grown bigger, and within the government the power of the Prime Minister has become pretty nearly unlimited in our modern society.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Horrendous.

Mr. Lewis: As every writer on political science has outlined in dealing with the British, New Zealand, Australian and Canadian systems of government, the Prime Minister of our government has unlimited power. When one talks about the President of the Privy Council making a proposition, he does not make it unless it is approved by the Prime Minister, nor does any other member of the cabinet unless the Prime Minister has approved it. Therefore this problem in parliament derives from these facts, the fact that more and more is demanded of the legislature and of the government, the fact that government intervenes more and more whether one likes it or not, and the fact that the power of the government is concentrated in the hands of the Prime Minister.

The conclusion I reach from those facts is not the conclusion that the Prime Minister reached last night. I must speak very carefully and say he did not state it in these words, but to me he implied that the result of these developments is that parliament should have less power and the government should have more control over parliament. I say that precisely the opposite conclusion follows if we are to have a meaningful democracy. Precisely because the power of the government is so great, precisely because the power of the civil service is so overwhelming, precisely because power is concentrated in the Prime Minister, it becomes more urgent than ever that parliament continue to have the right to control the acts of the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: This surely is the right conclusion. How does parliament control the acts of the government? It is not merely by a vote on a piece of legislation. If you have a majority government that vote is automatic under our system, whether it should be or not. It is automatic, it is there, and the opposition cannot do anything except register its opposition—period. It does not change a thing.

The way in which parliament controls the government under a modern system, with modern communications, is to speak and for our words to be heard by the people of Canada, because the ultimate control is necessarily the vote of the people of the country. Unless the backbenchers of every party, including the government party, have ample opportunity to express their views, to speak on behalf of their constituents, to underline the needs which their constituents press on them, then you have government without the control of parliament.

I hope no one will be offended when I say there are two ways of having a one party state. One is to prohibit opposition parties from existing. That is open totalitarianism. The other way is to permit opposition parties to exist and to elect members to parliament and when they get here to muzzle them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: That is the way to create a subtle one party state, and it is not an exaggeration to say that is precisely what rule 16-A proposes.

We have heard from the words both of the Prime Minister and the President of the Privy Council that they are reasonable men. Last night the right hon. Prime Minister said a reasonable time would be allowed for debate. When I interjected and inquired, "who will say what is a reasonable time", he replied, "reasonable men."

I have often said, Mr. Speaker, that our Prime Minister, whom I have had the pleasure of knowing for some years, is one of the cutest political ingenues this country has ever produced. I say there is nothing ingenue about him. Every word is calculated. When he uses a word it has a meaning and when he leaves out a word that also has a meaning. When he answered my interjection "who will decide what is a reasonable time" by saying "reasonable men", that had only one meaning. Reasonable men on the treasury benches. They are the only ones who will have the right to pass on what is a reasonable time for debate. Backbench members of the government party, if they were not bound by the traditional discipline that sometimes is so overwhelming it tears one's conscience, would themselves say they are not prepared to leave the judgment and decision in the hands of those on the treasury benches to decide what is reasonable time. The only way to know what is reasonable is by discussion and debate.

• (4:30 p.m.)

I recall a little discussion I had a few years ago with Mr. Ivan Rand, an ex-judge of the Supreme Court of Canada. We were both at a session of the Law Society of Upper Canada taking part in some lectures in the field of law. We were listening to someone who kept on saying, "the fact is". Mr. Justice Rand turned to me and said, "David, whenever I hear someone say "the fact is" I have before me the representation of a four-walled prism made of glass. One side of the prism is made out of an ordinary pane of glass. Another side of the prism is made of magnifying glass. The third side of the prism is painted red on ordinary glass. The fourth side of the prism is magnified and painted red. Then you throw in a little green pea." Mr. Rand said, "If I look through the ordinary glass pane I see an ordinary little green pea but when I look through the magnifying glass which is painted red I see a huge red ball." That is what "reasonable" is in this context. Who says whether or not it is reasonable? Whether or not it is reasonable depends on whether you look through the ordinary piece of glass or through the magnifying glass painted red. How does one arrive at a conclusion in this regard in a civilized society? It is done by discussion and give and take on the part of all parties concerned, if you are a person who is motivated to make parliament work in the interest of the Canadian people and not otherwise.

On a number of occasions the Prime Minister has spoken about participatory democracy and about the need to involve people in politics. I ask the simple question, how seriously can those words be taken when one of the first important steps he takes as Prime Minister of this country is to deprive members of parliament of their opportunity of participatory democracy. Who else in this country has a more direct involvement in politics than those whom the people elected to represent them in parliament? How seriously can this kind of theoretical stuff be taken from one who seeks to decrease, stultify and, if he can, cut out altogether the involvement of ordinary members of this house in the running of this country?

Will this political power be used? Will the government be unreasonable? I do not know. As the Leader of the Opposition, and as my colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said yesterday, the assurances that may be given are of no value. In the heat of battle God alone knows what might be reasonable. I do know, however, that if there should be a measure in the future about which the government feels very deeply and is determined to pass, it will use rule 16A in any way it sees fit in order to get its way.

Like many members here I have studied now for some 40 years the theory of politics and political science, and others who are younger have studied it for fewer years but just as intensely. Therefore we are aware that if anything is valid in the history and theory of political science it is that if you give a person or body a power you may be darned sure that that power will be used. Furthermore, if anything is true in history or political theory it is that no one seeks a power which he does not intend to use. And when the government seeks the power contained in 16A it intends to use it and there is no control over the manner in which it might be used, except by discussion with opposition representatives to arrive at an allocation of time, agreement by sensible, civilized behaviour on all sides.

I see no reason in the world why I should be asked to trust the government to be reasonable when the government insists that it cannot trust the opposition to be reasonable. Man for man, Mr. Speaker, we may not be better than the members of the government—I repeat, "we may not be"—but I assure you that we cannot be any worse. We are as determined to be reasonable in conducting the affairs of this parliament as is any member on the government side whether he be on the front-benches or on the backbenches.

One of the arguments for the extreme need to be tough about the allocation of time which the President of the Privy Council used was the prolonged flag debate. I do not recall whether he made that statement in this house or somewhere else. As it happened I was not a member of parliament at that time. This occurred during the parliament of 1963-65 and I was defeated in the election of 1963. Like very many people outside parliament, I felt that that debate was a waste of time. I was irritated that members of a certain party were responsible for dragging out that debate. I still feel that perhaps the debate was somewhat too long, but I say very seriously to the members of the cabinet who are here that often in retrospect I have thought it might well be that the length and acerbity of that debate served a purpose for Canada.

Having travelled across this country and having met many people who objected to the abandoning of our former flag, it seems to me it might well be that the bloodletting which took place on the floor of this house and the arguments which took place here as well as the length of time the debate took, which gave the people of all regions an opportunity to write and send wires to their members, might be the reason, historically speaking, that Canadians accepted the flag in a manner and in a way in which they might not otherwise have done. I suggest seriously that perhaps that debate should have taken half the time it did, but I am confident that when there is a major issue of that sort the expression of the people's feeling about it in the house and the opportunity given to the people of Canada to express their feelings through their members is an example of the way in which democracy works. It is the way in which the consent is obtained of the people who are concerned about such a matter and it is the way in which to avoid having constant and continuous feeling of bitterness and frustration on the part of those who have been defeated.

Democracy works by consent only when it gives those who oppose what is being done the fullest opportunity to express themselves, so that they do not live with the frustration of having had something shoved down their throats without having had the right and freedom to think about it and to speak on it. I claim no originality for that statement. Surely this is an elementary fact of the democratic process. Nowhere should that fact be reflected more carefully and clearly than in the parliament of Canada. This is what the proposed standing order 16A would endanger.

The Prime Minister last night made a speech in which for the most part he talked about the need for change. He does not need to persuade us about that. We have in our party, and I think members of all other parties as well, Liberal, Conservative—I am not sure I have heard the Creditistes say this—advocated the need for changes in the rules.

[Translation]

I do not often have the opportunity to go to the province of Quebec—

[English]

I have heard Conservatives, Liberals and members of my party talk about the need to reform parliament. We accept that proposition. But when we think of reforming parliament we have to accommodate two opposing principles. Both principles are important, but I believe one is more important than the other. We should not move in the direction which the government indicates. The two principles we have to accommodate and reconcile are the principle of efficiency and that of adequate freedom of speech in this parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: I agree with the Prime Minister—and we in my party said this a long time ago—that if parliament is so silly and if members of the opposition are so silly as to prolong a debate on one bill beyond a reasonable time, what they are doing is preventing the possibility of debate on another bill which may be equally important. They are cutting their own throats; they are doing a disservice to Canada, whichever way you like to put it.

Therefore efficiency is an important principle. But efficiency for what, is the question we have to ask. Efficiency for what purpose, is what we have to decide. Is it efficiency merely in terms of the government getting its measures passed with the least possible difficulty, or is it efficiency in terms of conducting the work of parliament so that there takes place the fullest debate possible under the circumstances, an expression of all views, a confrontation of differing and conflicting philosophies, a consideration of legislation with as much objectivity as any politican can muster? That is the kind of efficiency I am talking about, not the kind of efficiency that is represented in proposed standing order 16A.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: We should think of the efficiency of parliament in those terms, not of the efficiency of parliament in bureaucratic, technocratic, organizational, computer terms, which I must say the Prime Minister and the President of the Privy Council seem to me to be thinking about, wherein you say there should be one hour for this, one day for that, one and a half days for that, 40 minutes for this, and 60 minutes for something else. It is not something that you can put on a tape and run through a computer. I am darned if I can see any sense in it.

But if you think of efficiency in terms of the functions of this parliament, the functions of members of parliament who are here to speak on behalf of the people of Canada, each one of them, backbench as well as frontbench, then of course you can come to a reasonable conclusion because in that case you look at a bill and see that it has only three or four clauses, the principle is not terribly controversial, and it can be dealt with in half a day. Or you look at the omnibus bill to amend the Criminal Code and you say, in discussion in committee, "This is a large bill which deals with a number of subjects, there are deep feelings about it, and we will have a debate of three, four or five days in order to be sure that every point of view is adequately expressed in parliament." That is the reason we are here.

I suggest this is the only way we can reconcile the conflict of efficiency with the need for freedom of speech. This is why we in the opposition cannot agree to leave the decision as to what is reasonable time, and the decision as to exactly how much time is to be given to what, not only in the house but in standing and select committees of the house, as members have already indicated, to the government. I do not say this because I think this government is any worse than other governments Canada has had. I happen to belong to a party and to have a philosophy that does not consider any other government has been of the best for Canada.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): You are short on experience.

Mr. Lewis: Maybe that is it. I do not say that because I do not trust the members of the government as individual human beings. I do. I am sure every other member of the opposition would agree that they are honourable men. Those who have wives do not beat them, and those who have dogs do not beat them. One can rely on their being humane and decent in normal circumstances. I had to say "those who have" for obvious reasons.

But you cannot leave this kind of power to a small group of men to control, subvert and destroy the effectiveness of this parliament to function on behalf of the Canadian people.

My time is up, Mr. Speaker. I want to end the way I started. I plead with the President of the Privy Council, as the minister responsible for the subject matter of the reports, to seriously consider making this concession to parliament, namely, leaving the committee on procedure to act by agreement for the rest of this session, knowing that he has the authority under the rules which the committee of which he was a member proposed to set up a permanent standing committee.

The President of the Privy Council gave an undertaking last night. He gave it to us, so it would certainly be good for him. When the President of the Privy Council speaks to the hon. member for Rosedale he can tell him, "I gave this undertaking to the opposition and must keep it." I refer to the undertaking that this permanent committee will review the rules that are to prevail for the remainder of the session. I plead with him to do that so this debate is not prolonged, so we can get to the legislation which the government says it wants to put before us.

If the opposition does not behave for the remainder of the session, if the committee on procedure does not function on the basis of agreement, those of us who are anxious that it function will be here at the next session to listen to his proposals for improvement. But if we show that this committee does function, surely it is better to have an allocation of time by agreement than to have one by dictatorship. I appeal to the President of the Privy Council even at this stage to accept this suggestion and to see whether we cannot have a stabilized parliament that works in co-operation, as everyone wants it to do.

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): Mr. Speaker, having listened to the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) and others, I was quite convinced that the purpose of the new rules was to reduce the time for debate to about two months. I had to read them again to convince myself that this is not the case at all. They are not going to limit debate. We will have more time for debate because the 15 or 16 committees will take a great burden off the house and all those things we want to debate will be debated.

• (4:50 p.m.)

The question is, which subjects will be debated? Again, under the new rules the opposition will have their choice in many respects, but it seems that the hon. member for York South is questioning the reason for this. Apparently he believes that the government will not be reasonable and the power which the opposition had will be used by the government, as he said, maliciously. According to him the government will use the power in an unreasonable way but the opposition will use sweet reason at all times. Never will they try to pile up points for the next election, never will they try to filibuster. Obviously the impression is left that the people gave a mandate to the opposition to use the power and not to us. May I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that in the last election the mandate was given to the government, not to the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Forty five per cent.

Mr. Otto: No, 52 per cent. In listening to the speeches from the Conservative side I was reminded of a statement made by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) when he took me to task about three years ago and said "the young gentleman", meaning me—

Mr. MacEwan: It certainly was more than three years ago.

Mr. Otto: —is under the impression that this house is a legislative body. I want to remind him that this is not a house for legislation or for governing; it is a house solely to maintain freedom and a place to express grievances." That is what he said and that is what the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has repeated. He said it is not a legislative grist mill. If this were a debating society without any connection with the public and without any idea of what the public will is, all of the arguments used would have been valid. However, I would like to remind the house that so far as the people are concerned it is their will that this be a house for legislation. They want legislation to be passed here. But no one has yet been able to tell us how we will be able to get 80 or 90 bills through this house without having to invoke rule 16-A.

An hon. Member: Try us and you will find out.

Mr. Otto: Unless such is the sweet will of the opposition, of course. That is what the people want. The fact is that the Prime Minister is not only changing the rules of this house but also changing the structure of the government itself.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You were right on the first one.

Mr. Otto: The people thought we were a legislative body. They found we were not, and they are disenchanted with us. Here we are, a nice little debating club discussing rules of procedure and hope we will be able to get a little more popularity or use from the people on the opposite side and how to add up points and ammunition for the next election. That is not what the people want, and this is the very point at issue. Surely you, Mr. Speaker, must acknowledge that it is not only the rules of the house that are being changed but also the whole structure of the government. No one could have missed the announcement by the Prime Minister that there would be a change in the whole cabinet structure.

The hon. member for York South pointed out what the Prime Minister has already said, that indeed it is questionable whether the cabinet itself sets down policy, that in many cases it is the administration, the senior civil servants, the establishment, the mandarin class that does so. Why do hon. members think we now have a schedule for ministers? The Prime Minister himself has said we must give time to the ministers to look after their departments and to come up with policies. There is nothing strange in this. Have you not heard of regional desks?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): But they are not part of government.

Mr. Otto: There is nothing sanctimonious about members of parliament, but the purpose of all these rules, and especially of rule 16A, is to make this house a functional body which will live up to the expectation of Canadians.

Mr. Peters: A substitute for brains.

Mr. Otto: I am not saying that the proposed rules will take away power from the backbenchers because the backbenchers have never had power, and it is sometimes questionable whether the cabinet has ever had power. However, we certainly like to fool ourselves and our constituents by telling them what powerful people we are. There has never been any communication between the backbenchers and their constituents and the real seat of the government. I had great expectations in regard to the new rules because they send the estimates to committees and I expected that this would allow the backbenchers, including the backbenchers on this side if they felt very strongly about an issue, to vote a reduction in the estimates without a vote of confidence, indicating that they had some power when they questioned the administrators so that the administrators would be more co-operative. The backbenchers are supposed to have this power. However, I have the feeling that the time will come very shortly when the backbenchers will be instructed not to use this power and that it will be unheard of for these estimates ever to be reduced. If we do not have power over the purse I doubt that we are going to have any power, and I doubt that the administrators are going to be very co-operative.

An example of this was what happened recently in the committee on transport and communications. One of the Liberal members had asked for information concerning a contract between the Kaiser Corporation and the government of Canada. The answer was that of course it could not be produced, and in fact it was not produced. I do not think any particular reason was given for not producing it. I myself have asked the Department of Manpower and Immigration officials to produce their little secret booklet indicating the points for all the trades and all the classifications of trades. I was given a wonderful story about the usefulness of this booklet and about how it changes every three or four months, but I have never seen it, nor has anyone else. As long as backbenchers have no power over the purse, this will continue. I doubt that the estimates will be as carefully scrutinized as we would like if this power is taken away from the backbenchers. I do not think for a moment there would be five or six Liberals, except on a very important issue, who would vote against an estimate. However, there is a possibility that it can be done and the administrators know that that possibility exists.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills.

[Mr. Otto.]

POLLUTION

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE PROBLEM

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich) moved:

That a special committee of the House of Commons composed of not more than 15 members, to be later designated by the house, be established to investigate generally the problem of pollution in the waters and air of Canada, and the plans of the federal government in relation thereto, with powers to report from time to time its observations, opinions and recommendations thereon.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the notice of motion which I am introducing in the house today is to set up a committee to consider the ever-increasing problem of pollution in Canada, in North America and elsewhere in the world. Perhaps I should address myself first to establishing the fact that the problem exists and, second, to describing how I think a committee of this house might help to alleviate the problem.

Pollution is an inevitable aspect of man's existence. Whatever a man does, wherever he lives, his action will ultimately be considered by some other person to be in some way interfering with nature. So, I think we should realize that there is no easy solution to this problem. We should bear in mind that we must do what we can to minimize the problems that pollution raises. But while pollution to some degree is inevitable, what is not inevitable for Canada, and we are perhaps lucky in this respect, is a high level of pollution. We do not yet have the development that exists in other countries of the world, and I do not think it is inevitable for Canada's heritage of lakes, forests, streams and other natural advantages to be destroyed when the country develops. I think it is important to realize that while, on the one hand, we may not have the world's highest standard of living, we are perhaps fortunate in that we have large areas of unspoiled country, and thus we may well enjoy the world's highest standard of life. It is hoped that in the future we will be paying particular attention to these points, that we will be doing what we can to preserve in this country the streams, forests, lakes and clear skies which I think we all appreciate so much.

In North America, Mr. Speaker, the rate of urban development is becoming greater and greater. It is estimated that in the year 2000, only some 30 years hence, there will be three cities in North America, three collective conglomerations of cities, which will have total populations of something like 140 million. These will be between Boston and Washington on the east coast, between San Francisco and San Diego on the west coast and between Chicago and Pittsburgh in the centre of the United States. We in Canada may not have cities of the same size but we will have the same problems. In the Vancouver area of British Columbia it is quite possible that the entire lower mainland will become one urban area. It is certainly possible that the enormous population surrounding Toronto will be linked up in one large urban area, and we may well have a city there which will be as large as New York city is now. I think, therefore, we should not say that because we have space in this country we will not be faced in the future with the same problems the United States faces today. We should realize that these problems do exist and we should do what we can now to prevent the change of our environment from radically altering our environment for the worse.

I do not want to belabour this particular point. We have with us in this house, by great good fortune, the hon. member for York West (Mr. Givens) a former mayor of Toronto, who is an expert in the urban field. I am sure he will have much of interest to say on this subject in future debates. I should like to leave you with the thought that in 30 years time, I certainly hope well within your lifetime, Mr. Speaker, and within mine, we will be having urban centres in North America with populations from 40 million to 50 million. Even now, with population centres much less extensive, we find that in North America, in Canada, there are lakes which are dying, bays and rivers which are becoming nothing more than open sewers.

I think we are very fortunate that the people of Canada have become aware of this problem. Perhaps they are well ahead of political leaders in this house, in the provincial legislatures in municipal politics. The people of this country are concerned. We can tell this from the correspondence we receive and from the representations that are made. There is a great demand for clean soil, for pure air and for pure water. They know that these things are vital to our way of life, to our enjoyment of our natural environment.

Every year there are more organizations and more and more individuals who realize that in order to preserve the standard of life we enjoy, we Canadians must take steps to preserve our natural heritage. The problem is extremely complex. It cannot be solved, as I mentioned earlier, simply by spending a lot of money in one area or by following one single program. The solution of the problem will require time; it will require patience and certainly it will require large sums of money. If I may digress let me mention for a minute this question of money. In the United States today, in one way or another, $10 billion is being spent on pollution control. When we compare that with our entire Canadian budget of $12 billion, we realize there is a fantastic amount of money already being spent for this purpose, but from all appearances without any great success. This I think emphasizes that the whole problem of pollution control is expensive. Ultimately the people who will pay will be the public, either through taxation or through higher prices for industrial products.

I should like to quote Dr. W. R. Drynan of the research institute of the University of Waterloo, who said:

> Pollution control is a matter of establishing priorities, but first we have to establish the goals of society. Technology exists for an acceptable level of pollution control, but a value judgment has to be made and then society has to decide whether or not it is worth while to spend the money.

It is perfectly clear from this statement that money has to be spent and that a great deal will have to be spent. I suggest to the members of this house that if it is not spent now, if we do not set our sights high enough now, if we worry too much about costs today and too little about the bill for pollution tomorrow, we will not have much of a legacy to pass to future generations in this country.

The question of pollution embraces a great number of disciplines. The obvious ones are biology, physics, chemistry and engineering. There is also agronomy, ecology and even acoustics, as the people living near the Toronto airport know. Bacteriology and thermodynamics are also involved. Similarly, we have a great number of government departments involved in pollution control. One is the federal Department of Fisheries. The Department of Transport is also involved, as is the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. Another department that comes to mind when we consider pollution control is the Department of National Health and Welfare. I have just given these four examples from the federal field. The provinces are involved in this area because the constitution gives resource management to them. On this point I believe it would be worth while to quote a noted authority in this field, Mr. F. H. Finnis, who states:

> The provinces should take primary responsibility for pollution control because, constitutionally, it is their field.

As we can see, there are many government departments involved and there are various levels of government involved. At present there is no body which co-ordinates these various aspects of pollution control. It is for this reason that I have suggested a house committee. I feel that at present the problem of pollution control is dealt with in its various aspects by various departments at various levels of government, and we have nothing which brings these various aspects together and focuses attention on them as a whole. This is particularly important. There is a need for a committee of this house to devote itself to this task, and to this task alone.

It is suggested that perhaps there are other committees of the house which are capable of examining the various aspects of pollution control and therefore there is no need for another committee. I submit to you, sir, that many of the things now done by other committees, should be done by a single committee on pollution, and would be done better. This committee might have representatives from, say, the fisheries committee, the health and welfare committee, or any other committee of this house. I am not concerned with its composition at this stage. My suggestion is that a single committee can focus attention on this problem of pollution control. With it we would then be better able to make the extremely important decisions on resource allocation which the whole question of pollution control requires.

Although some people feel there are already too many committees, a further committee would in no way result in any overlapping or duplication of the work of civil servants who at present testify before other committees on the subject of pollution. What should happen is that instead of testifying before these many committees, members of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources would have to testify before only one committee. I think this is an important consideration and might save time. Certainly there might be a saving of the very expensive time of government civil servants, and for that reason alone I think it well worth considering.

The argument that in some way a committee of this nature would get into what is a provincial jurisdiction and thus cause friction with the provinces is, I think, also fallacious. It is true that this committee would be able to summon any witness and make any report that it feels necessary. In no way would it be restricted entirely to the consideration of aspects within federal jurisdiction. The committee can suggest, for instance, that in a certain area of pollution control nothing should be done without the co-operation of the provinces, and that therefore the federal government take the steps necessary to co-operate with the provinces to achieve a certain end. I cannot see any real problem about this committee interfering in areas of provincial jurisdiction.

I do not think we need at this time go into the details of how the committee would be set up and who would decide its terms of reference.

I should like to sum up my remarks by saying that the problem of pollution exists and I think all Canadians are now becoming aware of that fact. But that is not what I am trying to demonstrate here today. What I am saying is that a committee of this house, which would have the opportunity of calling witnesses and of travelling to various parts of the country to observe pollution problems that might have been caused by industrial exploitation or by any other circumstance, would perform a useful function. I cannot accept the arguments that this would interfere with the functions of other committees or that it would be an interference in a provincial jurisdiction.

Therefore I hope that those who follow me in this debate will limit themselves to discussing the pros and cons of establishing such a committee. If they do this with maximum dispatch then perhaps we can come to a vote on the matter this afternoon and recommend to the government that the setting up of such a committee be considered.

Hon. Hugh John Flemming (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I rise particularly because I want to express my support for what the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Anderson) has said this afternoon in connection with this very important matter. I am quite prepared to vote for his motion if it comes to a vote, and I will be glad to give further support if he will follow this through with a later motion, or take whatever course he chooses, in order to bring about a very desirable improvement in the pollution situation that exists all over Canada.

I am sure I will be excused if I refer especially to the situation in my own province of New Brunswick, because in that province pollution is a most difficult problem to solve. Questions of jurisdiction are involved. In this regard I draw to the attention of the house and the sponsor of this motion that New Brunswick has two rivers, the Saint John and the St. Croix, which may both be considered international rivers. Since they are international rivers they fall within the ambit of the international joint commission. As it is a body composed of representatives two countries instead of one, jurisdictional difficulties are just about doubled.

The Saint John river flows along the border of the state of Maine and New Brunswick, entering our province at the city of Edmundston. At this point the river is an international one since it is the boundary between New Brunswick and the state of Maine. About 50 miles farther on the river becomes entirely a New Brunswick river, though farther back toward its source it is entirely within the state of Maine.

The river flows through New Brunswick parallel with the boundary for about 100 miles. Small streams which spring from the state of Maine flow into the Saint John river, and the pollution of the Saint John river, generally speaking, comes from plants situated in the state of Maine. This pollution flows into a great many of these small streams that join the Saint John river and consists partly of ordinary sewage from towns and partly of waste from processing plants of one kind or another.

I mention this so as to bring to the attention of the house the great jurisdictional difficulties that exist here, though I do not suggest these difficulties are entirely confined to our particular situation. However, Canada does have a 4,000 mile boundary with the United States, a good part of which is water.

Before terminating my remarks I think I should refer to the situation that affects the Saint Croix which is almost entirely an international river. We are trying to preserve the salmon fishery of the river, but since several towns are situated on both sides of the border along the river the improvement and restoration of the salmon fishery are most difficult. So many jurisdictional problems are involved.

The people of the town of St. Stephen on the New Brunswick side of the river are most anxious to bring about this improvement because the pollution at that point is getting to be scandalous. A pulp mill is situated upriver about 15 miles and pumps its effluent into the river. Immediately across the river on the Maine side is the town of Galais. A little farther upriver is Milltown on the New Brunswick side. These towns collectively have a population of something like 15,000 to 20,000 people, half of the people residing in the state of Maine and half in New Brunswick, and they are concentrated in this small area.

Although this makes a solution difficult to find, it does not mean that nothing should be done. I submit that it is the function of governments to pay attention to problems such as this. However, since the federal government and the provincial administration must first get together, and then the municipal administrations and the two countries themselves must be brought into the discussions, one can readily see that the task is far from easy.

Last summer a processing plant so polluted one of the rivers in the county of Carleton that people driving their automobiles along the road running parallel to the river had to wind up their windows to shut out the terrible odour. The people of the little town of Centreville did the best they could to get some action about this from the authorities in the state of Maine since the plant was on the U.S. side, but without result. Therefore they decided to take the law into their own hands and built a dam across the river between New Brunswick and Maine. A bulldozer was donated to them; they built a dam, dammed up the water and shoved it back into Maine. It was only a few weeks before relief was afforded to people of the town. They went in and knocked down the dam. I was one of a fairly large group of people, some 800 or 1,000, who erected a monument to the people who built the dam. It is still there but there are no names on it. I submit it is a symbol of the frustration people feel in connection with pollution.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Certainly pollution has never received adequate attention by governments at any level. The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Anderson) deserves to be commended for bringing the matter to the attention of the house. Since he has brought it forward perhaps some of our governments may react to his proposals and do something to benefit those parts of the country suffering from pollution.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, may I say a few words on this motion. I know that it calls for a special committee to be set up to deal specifically with pollution but I am not too sure we need a committee. We already have a national resources committee not much larger than the 15 man committee suggested here and it deals primarily with Canadian water resources. It would not be too difficult to have that committee tackle this problem. Mind you, I am not objecting to a special committee being set up. I say that because for many years I have spoken out against the lack of federal or provincial control over pollution. In this day and age it is a pretty severe indictment of the types of governments we have had, both federal and provincial, that we have reached the stage where pollution has become a danger of such proportions that mankind's very existence on earth is threatened.

In my hand I have a clipping printed by one of the British Columbia papers just over two years ago. The article is headed, "Man's Future Soon Will Be Known". It deals with the opinions of Ernst Mayr, director of the Harvard Museum of Comparative Zoology. The article says in part:

> Life on earth will probably persist for millions of years, but there is little chance man will be among the surviving species, a Harvard zoologist said here Monday. Ernst Mayr, director of the Harvard Museum of Comparative Zoology, said in an interview that we may soon know whether man will survive. Either some cataclysmic event, such as a nuclear war, will end man's tenure on earth, or through a tremendous effort of self-control he will make a new start, Mayr believes. One or the other probably will take place in the lifetimes of people now living, he said.
> Describing himself as pessimistic of man's chances for survival, Mayr pointed out that 99 per cent of all life forms which have existed have become extinct. If man is to persist on earth there are two things he must do, and do at once, according to the Harvard scientist. He must quickly learn to control the increasing human population, and he must learn to stop destroying the environment.
> "Man's ability to control the environment was said to be his biggest advantage over other species," Mayr said. "In the beginning this was true, as he invented shelters and clothing to protect him from the weather, and weapons and tools to help him harness the productivity of nature."
> Mayr said the contrast of those ancient times with these modern times is dismal.
> "Now almost everything we do is harmful to the species and works against its survival. We make the air unfit to breathe, the water unfit to drink, we seed the atmosphere with radioactivity, erode the soil, clear the land and plaster it with asphalt and concrete," he said. "Our destruction of our environment seems endless."

I will not read the rest of the article, but what I have read is a sampling of what has been coming to governments at all levels—municipal governments, provincial governments, federal governments and even to the United Nations. The top scientists of every nation on earth have warned that we are in danger of wiping mankind from the face of the earth. And we have been heedless of those warnings.

Politicians are primarily to blame for our pollution troubles. I say that because many politicians and governments are afraid to move against the powers that be which are responsible for much of the present-day Canadian pollution. Perhaps the offender is a big industrial plant pouring effluent into a river; perhaps it is a plant pouring filth into the air. Always the economic weapon that is used against the workers, governments and people of Canada is, "If we are forced to take effective measures, it will cost money and we will be priced out of the market." That is why all across the dominion of Canada in 1968—and I do not care where you go—there is no effective pollution control. Neither provincially nor federally have we proper legislation with teeth in it. There is no appropriate legislation in any of our great country's jurisdictions to take care of this problem which has become acute. I say it is time that Canadian politicians and the Canadian people realized that we cannot deal with pollution by closing our eyes and going to sleep. We must sit down realistically and tackle the problem, find out what is causing pollution, find out what it will cost to fight it and learn what governments will have to do to control it. We must discover what regulations will be necessary to fight pollution; we must draft and enforce those regulations regardless of which party is in power and see they are adhered to.

I wish to draw the attention of hon. members to one or two facts to show how serious the pollution problem is. I know there is not one hon. member in this house who has not a file on pollution and who cannot recite problems relating to some stream, river or lake with regard to pollution, or perhaps the problem might be one of air or land pollution.

I turn now to the situation in British Columbia. After all, I come from there and I am more familiar with what goes on in that province. We have a government in office in British Columbia which has ignored this problem. For two or three successive years representatives of opposition parties in the legislature pressed the administration to bring in laws against air pollution, but all their efforts were unsuccessful. To me, this failure by the government to take action amounts to sheer stupidity. But that is what happened. Members of all parties gave instances of spawning beds being harmed by the pollution of some of our great rivers and streams. In my own area of Kootenay West, one of the most beautiful parts of Canada, sections of the Kootenay river are so polluted that health authorities have issued warnings against using the water or even swimming in it. I presume the fish are seriously affected.

This is not an isolated case. This is happening in every province in Canada. It is happening because we have failed to take time out to study this problem and make certain that we are in a position to force individuals, industries and government, too, to adhere to certain strict principles which we in Ottawa should be prepared to lay down.

In closing I should like to say I have a vast amount of material on this subject together with a long list of solutions, or suggested solutions, which I should like to put before a committee or before this house when a suitable opportunity occurs. We cannot afford any delay in tackling this problem. Whether the job is done in a special committee or in the committee on natural resources, it must be carried out, and I urge members of this house, particularly supporters of the government, to insist, regardless of what those on the treasury benches may think, that a committee be set up to look into this problem and propose legislation for enactment before the first session of this parliament is completed in June.

I urge hon. members to support action along these lines to see whether we cannot make 1969 the year in which we really made a start in trackling the pollution hazards which confront the Canadian people today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Ray Perrault (Burnaby-Seymour): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend my colleague from British Columbia for his action in putting forward this resolution. I think the interest he shows in this subject is shared by all members of the house.

Since I, too, have had the pleasure of serving in the British Columbia legislature, I was particularly interested in certain of the remarks made by the hon. member who has just resumed his seat. Having sat in the legislature with him for a number of years, let me say I find myself in agreement with many of the sentiments he has expressed regarding the lack of activity in our province when it comes to measures against pollution.

It is a paradox that a society which has witnessed such enormous advances in technology, science and health standards should witness at the same time a proliferation of pollution in all its forms. To a large degree, society seems to be frustrated by this problem. Waste of all kinds pollutes our air, our soil and our water. I note that the resolution makes no reference to soil pollution, though soil pollution can be extremely serious in its effects. We have experienced a serious case in British Columbia in recent years in the Grand Forks area, and I hope that if we do form a committee and if a major study is undertaken, soil pollution will be included in the terms of reference.

As our population grows and living standards rise, there will be more waste and more pollution. This situation must be dealt with. Those who are denied pure water, pure air and clean soil have little patience with the endless constitutional dialogue, important as that dialogue may be. They want pollution control and they do not want buckpassing. Surely a just society is, among other things, a society which does not penalize any of its citizens by obliging them to live in a polluted environment.

In years past little public attention was paid to pollution. The standard reply of many, given to those who did complain about it was: the smell of pollution is the smell of money. We know now that in economic terms alone, apart altogether from considerations of health and aesthetics, the money price has become too high. We know now that unsafe, unclean water, whether consumed directly or sprayed on crops, poses a serious health hazard. The same applies to the improper use of pesticides, or to polluted air. No one can condone air pollution which may cause chronic bronchitis or emphysema, or the pollution of water which may cause even more serious disabilities. As to air pollution, industrial smoke and dirt are the most obvious targets for control. But the jet age has brought new problems. People talk about building new jet-age airports, despite the fact that these are now considered by some authorities as likely to become a serious source of air pollution.

Proposed Committee on Pollution

The Montreal city health department in a report signed by Jean Manier, head of the air pollution division, said on February 15 of this year as reported in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald that motor vehicle exhaust gases could, under certain weather conditions, cause the carbon monoxide intake of the average city driver to rise to serious levels. It has become necessary to consider in this country the installation of exhaust devices of the kind made compulsory in California. The time to do so is now, preparatory to introducing legislation accordingly.

Air pollution caused by dirt recently short-circuited two 120,000 volt power lines in Montreal and was blamed by Hydro-Quebec as the major cause of the electricity blackout in Montreal east last March. In this one instance alone, the old simplistic excuse that the smell of pollution is the smell of money has been discredited utterly. Industry was, in this instance, penalized directly and in a dramatic way. Industry was hit right in the pocketbook, and so were the people of Canada.

In my home province our citizens have been affected by pollution, some tragically. One group of farmers in Grand Forks had a bitter experience of soil pollution. A few years ago they were advised by the federal Department of Agriculture to apply dieldim to the land to cure a potato disease. The farmers followed this advice but were later told the department had decided that dieldim was injurious to health. It found traces of dieldim in the milk produced by the cows that ate the potatoes. It caused economic tragedy for those farmers, and no one can measure the effect it might have had on the people who consumed those products. I would like to see the government take action this session to compensate those who are affected economically by this particular type of soil pollution.

We can all agree that the devil of pollution exists. The question is how best can that devil be exorcised. Control of pollution, water and air pollution, is a matter which falls partially within the constitutional powers of the federal government and partially within the powers of the provinces and their subsidiaries, the municipalities. All levels of government are becoming more active in the field. The result has been much confusion and duplicated effort.

It is encouraging to see conferences of the kind held in Victoria last week when resource ministers from all across Canada, provincial and federal, sat down together in a non-contentious, constructive conference to cope with the problems of pollution, unlike some conferences where there are differences of opinion and clashes of viewpoints. There is now concern at the federal, provincial and local levels of government that we must work together and achieve a workable framework within which pollution can be combatted.

I know there are other hon. members who wish to speak in this debate and so I shall keep my contribution short. I have here some of the background papers from the water workshop seminar held in Victoria at the beginning of last week. A very significant paper was presented to that conference by Dale Gibson, professor of the faculty of law at the University of Manitoba. His main thesis is that despite what people say about the constitution, that the constitut on prevents the federal government from taking certain action and prevents the provincial governments from taking certain action to fight pollution, and thus the problems land between the two of them, he believes that the constitution presents no insuperable obstacles to the creation of a more satisfactory scheme of water management and the maintenance of purity in water. He concludes:

> The administration of Canadian water resources will continue in the foreseeable future to involve a blend of federal and provincial activities, but there is no constitutional reason why it should continue to be hampered by the confusion and poor co-ordination that mark the present situation.

Excuses are no longer tolerable to the Canadian people. They know that if pollution is to be combatted we must have an adequate pollution control structure.

Local government is concerned about the disposal of garbage, sewage and industrial wastes and, in some cases, with the responsibility for the prevention of some forms of air pollution, usually smoke abatement. A recent survey by the Canadian Tax Foundation indicates that in general an appalling situation has been allowed to develop with regard to sewage treatment from coast to coast. A significant number of Canadians must still rely on septic tanks for sewage disposal, and too often the soil in which septic tanks are located is unsuitable for such installations. The survey also shows that most communities which have some form of treatment plant provide primary rather than secondary treatment. I find it intolerable that there should be any raw sewage whatsoever dumped in any river in any part of Canada. Many municipalities would like to improve their disposal systems but they are frustrated by lack of money. There is another argument for a new sharing of revenues and responsibilities between the provinces and the federal government and between the provinces and local governments.

Time does not permit me to speak about the subject of detergents, and about the terrible effects which phosphates have had in many lakes in British Columbia and in other parts of Canada. Some hon. members may be interested to note that the pollution effect of effluent from a large sulphite pulp mill producing 500 tons per day may be equivalent to that of sewage from a city of two million people. Fortunately, many Canadian pulp mills are acting like good corporate citizens and are now installing equipment to fight pollution.

The problem is to achieve a sensible and safe balance, to establish tolerable pollution levels and standards in this country. We must find ways to minimize pollution while at the same time assuring a good level of industrial growth and expansion. The government is doing good work now in all parts of the country to meet the problem. Time does not permit a recitation of what is being done province by province. We have the Canada centre for inland waters, the national advisory committee on water resources research, and the continuing meetings of resource ministers, but suffice it to say that pollution control cannot be effective only at the municipal level, the provincial level or the federal level. All three levels of government must be concerned. The spirit of this resolution is an excellent one, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, the notice of motion under study proposes the creation of a 15-member committee of the house to which would be assigned the task of studying the problem of pollution.

In the few minutes I have left, I shall limit myself to a few brief remarks as we shall be given, at a later date, the opportunity to express all our views on this most important problem.

However, I am flabbergasted to see that the only solution the government can suggest is to study a problem which everyone knows about.

I have here, in my hand, the complete report on a study made by the National Pollution Conference. This report, published in four volumes, deals with all kinds of pollutions and proposes solutions to the problems. Now, if another house committee studies those problems, it must arrive at the same conclusions, because scientists have studied those problems for over four years.

As the government takes pleasure in advising us that it is anxious to introduce legislation, I feel that the mover of this notice of motion—even if he is filled with good intentions—should have proposed legislation capable of fighting pollution, for if we ask the committee to study the various problems of pollution during two or three years, we will then have wasted precious time.

In addition to air and water pollution, I feel that something should be said also about food pollution, the pollution of moral standards, money and politics, about which the Ralliement Créditiste has been talking for a long time.

But with regard to the matter under consideration, namely air and water pollution, I wish to tell the house about the recommendations I found in the information which I was given by the parliamentary library. I think it is backward to waste more time studying a problem known by all industrialists, merchants, municipalities and public bodies. The time for study is past, it is time to legislate. And if I take the floor today, it is to urge the house to legislate on an important problem.

In fact, statistics show that two infants out of ten—and Canada is no exception—die from the harmful effects of air or water pollution. I have here another publication which says that water is life. One knows that man can live for a while without clothing and shelter, but he dies very quickly from lack of food or water.

If you consider in particular the problem of water pollution, you find today that most of our lakes are polluted, as well as most of our rivers and beaches. Although it is a general and urgent problem the only suggestion made in this house is to conduct studies when legislation should be passed to implement the recommendations made by the national conference on pollution.

Mr. Speaker, the measure before us today is outdated, in view of the urgency of solutions which must be found, because this problem is very serious for human, animal and plant life, indeed any life on earth. If air and water are polluted, where shall we be in a few years? When we look at statistics available to us, which we do not have time to quote in the house, we are astounded by the seriousness of the problem.

In my opinion, this notice of motion should be accepted, and I blame the government for not introducing legislation likely to settle this problem, which should not be considered any further but actually solved.

[English]

Mr. Bruce Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, when I came to this house I had in mind one very important thing, and that was to work toward a solution of the pollution problem that affects the Okanagan Valley of British Columbia. Those who have travelled through that part of the country are aware of the beauty of the area and the tragedy that can befall such a beautiful place when pollution gets beyond the control of the normal agencies of the community. Although this is the situation, it is not so because the community has not done a great deal. It has done all in its power to control pollution in the area.

When I came to Ottawa I discovered that the federal government also had been doing a great deal about this problem. I am very pleased in respect of what the government at Ottawa has been doing. Many of the measures which have been taken by the government have been mentioned this afternoon such as the Canadian centre for the administration of waters in respect of which $23 million has been spent, and the regional pollution control centres in Moncton and Calgary. The federal government has offered to pay the full cost of regional assistance in this regard. It has also recommended the establishment of a national advisory committee. All these things were suggested and discussed at the conference on pollution that was conducted by the federal and provincial governments in the fall of 1966.

This conference produced some very admirable and useful recommendations. Above all, it was suggested that a national advisory committee should be set up on the problem of pollution. It was further suggested that this committee should be composed of representatives of the federal government, the provincial government, the universities and industry. The purpose of this committee would be to establish water quality standards in Canada. We do not know what pure water is; we do not have any laid-down standards concerning what is pure water or pure air. We know we must accept some limitation in respect of purity because of the inroads of civilization. But how much? This is something we do not know. The national advisory committee was asked to identify pollution problems in respect of their effect on the economy of the country. These are very worth-while and important objectives.

There are other things the federal government has done. It has offered to provide joint studies in respect of many of the problems related to pollution. We have an example before us with regard to the Ottawa river. The government has offered to bring together the governments of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. Here again, however, very little or perhaps nothing has happened because the provincial governments have not agreed to act together on this matter. This has been the situation all down the line in respect of these recommendations. Time after time the problem has been one of a jurisdictional dispute among the municipal, provincial and federal governments.

This is a field in which the committee proposed by this resolution would have value. The committee would be a political organization which would have an opportunity to handle the problem at a political level. Many inquiries have been made and a great deal of work has been done by very capable public servants of the country both at the provincial and at the federal level. But the problem is a political problem which must be decided by people in public life. The advantage of this committee would be that it could inquire into the problems, interview witnesses, and discuss the actions that should be taken by both the provincial and federal governments.

The time has almost expired and as I am most anxious to see this resolution passed today I shall sit down so that the motion may be put.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Allen B. Sulatycky (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested to hear the hon. member mention the problem of divided jurisdiction. I should like to bring to the attention of the house the fact that in the townsites of Banff and Jasper, which are entirely within federal jurisdiction, no provincial or municipal government has any authority whatsoever. Yet raw sewage is being dumped into the Athabasca and Bow Rivers. This underscores the fact that something must be done to see that in areas which have been set aside specifically so that they will be preserved for future generations this type of pollution does not exist. Pollution does not occur only in large urban areas. It occurs equally in the remote areas where the rivers originate. Again this is an indication that there must be some new study of this very great problem. The resolution does not go far enough.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. It being six o'clock this house now stands adjourned until 2.30 tomorrow afternoon.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

HUMBER-ST. GEORGE'S-ST. BARBE—CERTIFICATE UNDER CONTROVERTED ELECTIONS ACT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received from the Honourable Mr. Justice H. G. Puddester and the Honourable Mr. Justice A. S. Mifflin, both of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland, the two judges appointed for the trial of a petition pursuant to the Dominion Controverted Elections Act, a certificate of judgment in the matter of an election in the electoral district of Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that a message has been received from the Senate informing this house that the Senate have passed Bill No. C-131, an act to amend the Customs Tariff, as well as Bill No. S-18, an act respecting the Canadian Order of Foresters, to which the concurrence of this house is desired.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

INQUIRY AS TO PROPOSED NEW DATE FOR CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government has been able to fix a new firm date for the federal-provincial constitutional conference which was originally scheduled for next week.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Since I answered the question yesterday I have had word from all except one of the provinces that they are accepting the idea of postponing the conference. There is fairly general agreement that the new date should be early in February. There is one province which still does not see its way clear to having the conference then, but I hope within the next 24 hours to find some suitable arrangement.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance could indicate whether the federal-provincial meeting of finance ministers, which I think was scheduled to take place immediately following the constitutional conference, will continue as scheduled.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I have communicated with the various ministers of finance, and at present it appears that the conference of finance ministers will go on next week as scheduled.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): May I ask a supplementary question. I wonder if the Prime Minister can inform the house whether the government plans to go ahead and publish the position papers that were to be produced tomorrow afternoon, in light of the importance of those documents and the chance of public discussion prior to the conference.

Mr. Trudeau: The suggestion has been considered, Mr. Speaker. We were asking ourselves what the best arrangement would be in view of the fact we only had a commitment from the provinces that they would have no objection to our publishing a few days before the conference. The conclusion we are forced to reach is that we will not be able to publish the position papers as planned at the end of this week; the date will have to be postponed to some other time agreeable to the parties concerned, provided the provinces themselves do not publish theirs until there is some agreement.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the decision of the government not to publish, would it give consideration, perhaps along with the provinces, to have these documents published at least in sufficient time before the rescheduled date of the conference so there can be some useful public consideration and discussion of them?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we are considering this. When a date has been agreed upon for the conference proper we will then raise the question of publication, somewhat in advance if possible.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In view of the postponement of the constitutional conference, does the government intend to delay the official languages bill until after the same has been discussed at the constitutional conference?

Mr. Trudeau: That is another complex question, Mr. Speaker. I too would like to be in a position to play Santa Claus and bring this bill in before Christmas, but some provinces did ask that the bill not be adopted before the constitutional conference. The new arrangement as to date would mean postponing it by at least a month.

I think what might be acceptable to parliament and to the provinces would be to consider introducing the bill and passing it through some of its stages in this house, though perhaps not adopting it officially on third reading until the constitutional conference has been held. I will explore this possibility.

POLLUTION

INQUIRY AS TO INITIATION OF CONTROL LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources during the minister's illness. In view of further emphasis on the need to make an organized beginning in the control of pollution, what progress has been made by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and, as far as the minister knows, the department of health and welfare in getting pollution control legislation initiated?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we are looking forward to the introduction of the Canada waters act. Last week I spent two days in Victoria meeting with the provincial ministers and our respective officials responsible for water. We made some progress at that time in the discussion of approaches. More specifically, the multi-jurisdictional approach to pollution problems is getting more and more accepted by the provinces. The regional approach is also becoming more and more accepted. I told the ministers that when we introduce the water act we would bring them together for a full debate on that particular bill.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If I may just briefly introduce my question, last May, I think it was, a suggestion was made to the house when the minister was minister of energy, mines and resources, to the effect that an advisory council on water and air pollution would be established. May I ask whether any progress has been made in this direction.

Mr. Pepin: No, Mr. Speaker. This is still one of the subjects that we are discussing with the provinces. My hon. friend is quite aware that not all provinces agree with us or among themselves on these subjects. I agree it is a slow process, but we have been working for a number of months toward building a consensus on these matters, and I think we have made some progress. By the time we bring in the water act we will be much closer, I think, to a consensus on these questions than would have been the case had we introduced the act last year.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have another question arising out of the minister's answer. Would he be good enough to inform the house whether these discussions are being carried on intermittently between ministers, or is there a permanent committee of officials representing federal and provincial governments that is entering into a discussion of all these areas?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, discussions have obviously been going on among ministers on these subjects. The federal interdepartmental committees have also been at work here. The co-ordination between federal and provincial governments in this matter is generally undertaken through the council of resource ministers.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Since those negotiations have been going on for quite some time, does the minister feel that he will be in a position to introduce in the house in 1969 legislation on water pollution, because we feel that the matter is urgent.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, this measure is advocated in the speech from the throne.

[English]

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. While he is looking into some of the problems that have been raised would the minister also look into a statement that has been made alleging that the federal fisheries department is polluting 56 small lakes and 17 watersheds in northern Ontario?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, we are trying to divide responsibilities in these matters. The federal government cannot be held responsible for the pollution of every creek in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance, which stems from the government's decision to give up winter works.

Could the minister tell the house whether the government, in conjunction with the provinces, intends to grant subsidies to municipalities wishing to build sewage disposal plants?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question is very simple. The Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation already grants loans to municipalities for that purpose.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the minister.

Does the government intend to ask the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to increase the borrowing privileges of municipalities?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of general government policy, and of government responsibility for distributing the resources as equitably as possible between the various departments and various interests.

GRAIN

ASSISTANCE IN MOVING OF DRYING EQUIPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the meetings which have been held since I last asked a question about the matter will the minister say what part the federal government is now prepared to play in moving grain drying equipment from Ontario to western Canada to help the situation there?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the departments of agriculture of each of the three prairie provinces have held meetings with the grain industry—that is, with the elevator companies, producer organizations and anyone else vitally and directly interested in this problem—and have ascertained that in each of the affected areas there appears to be sufficient grain drying equipment in place now. It is a matter of making the maximum use of this equipment by coordinating activities so that grain dryers are in fact used in those areas where there is the greatest amount of tough and damp grain. The members of the Board of Grain Commissioners have also been attending all these meetings and I expect a report very soon to see if there are any further steps we can take to be of help.

Mr. McKinley: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Minister of Agriculture indicate why members of the wheat board did not appear before the standing committee on agriculture during discussion of the estimates, as had originally been intended?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I have no way, any more than the hon. member has, of knowing why the standing committee on agriculture did not call certain witnesses.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the Minister of Agriculture any information with regard to the Board of Grain Commissioners allowing grain dryers to operate at country elevators, as of today?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, this is another matter that has been considered during the committee meetings. As I have said, I expect a report on the last of these meetings very soon.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Would the minister advise the house whether the government has any intention of proceeding to expand grain drying facilities at government terminals, particularly inland terminals?

Mr. Olson: There are one or two places, and perhaps Moose Jaw is one of them, where we could make use of more grain drying facilities at this time. However, there is a question whether such equipment could be ordered and installed quickly enough to be useful this year. The other suggestion is that some smaller or portable drying facilities could be used at some of the terminals, and this is under consideration now.

Mr. Benjamin: Could the minister advise the house whether the dryer at the Lethbridge terminal is in operation?

Mr. Olson: The dryer at Lethbridge has not been used for a very long time. I am advised it is a very low volume dryer and so old that it would be very difficult to make it operational. The reason is that there is very little tough or damp grain in that area, and any which might be there would have to be shipped out of line, adding substantially to the cost.

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): In view of the fact that there has been very little improvement in the supply of box cars to the areas of tough and damp grain in Manitoba, would the minister look into this situation to determine whether it can be corrected?

Mr. Olson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, although I would not like to agree with the preamble that there had been very little improvement, because there has been improvement in all areas.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF FREEDMAN REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): My question is directed to the Minister of Labour. Speaking in this house on November 21 the minister said:

> I think the time has come for the Minister of Labour to convince his colleagues that legislation defining and emphasizing management's responsibilities to its employees in the area of technological change is long overdue.

He was referring to the Freedman report. My question is, has the hon. gentleman since been able to convince his colleagues that legislation based on the substance of the Freedman report is long overdue, and how soon can we expect to see legislation of this kind on the order paper?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: May I have a reply?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that the question as asked is not in order. He is referring to communications between cabinet ministers, and I do not think a question of that type can be accepted.

Mr. Hees: May I rephrase my question. The reason I gave the background information is that I find these ministers require a great deal more background information than is normal before they are able to give answers to questions.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member ask the question now?

Mr. Hees: With pleasure. May I ask the minister whether in the near future, on motions, he will give a report as to the likelihood or otherwise of the government introducing such legislation?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): If the hon. member can persuade me that he is able to convince his colleagues as rapidly as I am able to convince mine, this desirable legislation will have a rapid passage through this house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hees: If the minister does introduce such legislation I think he will find that members on this side of the house are very much in agreement with such a course.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON SEAWAY EXPANSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a question for the Minister of Transport, and since this is one of the many days on which he is not present I will direct it to his stand-in, the Minister without Portfolio from Winnipeg. Can the minister tell the house the current status of the St. Lawrence Seaway expansion plan, which the seaway authority presented to the cabinet some little time ago?

Mr. Speaker: I would think what the hon. member is asking the minister to do now is to give the kind of general information which should normally be given by way of a statement on motions.

Mr. Nesbitt: Well, as a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nesbitt: Would the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There cannot be a supplementary—

Mr. Nesbitt: Well—

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member resume his seat? There cannot be a supplementary to a question which has been ruled out of order. The hon. member may wish to ask a related question.

Mr. Nesbitt: On a point of order, since Your Honour has been so kind to point out how the same thing can be accomplished, would the minister care to make a statement on motions the next day he is in the house, tomorrow or Wednesday next?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I will convey that request to the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister with respect to the absence of the Minister of Transport. Will the Prime Minister assure the house that he will cause the minister to make up this time he has missed, dock his pay, keep him in after school, or do something?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. That cannot be accepted as a supplementary question.

AIR CANADA

REPORTED SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTE WITH EMPLOYEES ASSOCIATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Is the minister in a position to confirm reports that the dispute between Air Canada and the air line employees' association has been settled?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I understand that some time during the middle of the night the representatives of Air Canada and the representatives of the particular union concerned reached an agreement that is now, of course, subject to ratification by the union members and by Air Canada. I am very appreciative of the hon. member's reference to this question, and I particularly hope both parties may very soon ratify what I think is a very fair agreement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Inquiries of the Ministry

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

CHURCHILL, MAN.—NEGOTIATIONS ON DEVELOPMENT OF TOWN SITE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. B. Osler (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Some time ago he indicated to the house that he had been in communication with the premier of Manitoba about possible federal assistance to the town of Churchill. I wonder whether he has anything he will be able to tell us soon on this subject, as Christmas and the recess are coming up? Have there been any results from this communication?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member knows that the information he is seeking now would normally be given by a statement on motions, but if there is urgency and the hon. member wants to give notice to the Chair the matter can be discussed at the time of adjournment.

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR RETRIAL OF DEPORTATION ORDER AGAINST POLISH SEAMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. It concerns the case of the nine Polish seamen now in detention at Halifax who have been ordered deported back to Poland. Will the minister instruct the legal counsel representing him to recommend or agree to a retrial of this particular case?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the case has been heard by the immigration appeal board. As I understand it, the board itself can determine to hear the case again if there is a claim of additional facts to be brought out, and of course there is appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada. But the minister, under the law, has no discretion whatever to intervene in this particular case.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, may I pose a supplementary question, and perhaps it should be directed to the Prime Minister. Is it still the policy of the government, as stated in this house by the former prime minister on April 21, 1967, that the government will grant refuge to people from communist countries whose deportation there would certainly mean imprisonment and deprivation?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is the policy. In this case presumably the immigration appeal board concluded there was no danger of persecution with respect to these seamen, but the board itself would hear evidence on this point before reaching a conclusion.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, has the Minister of Manpower and Immigration any evidence that no harm or hardship will be done these men if they are deported to their country of origin?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the decision was made by the immigration appeal board and presumably the board itself considered all the facts before reaching a decision.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): In his answer the minister said that presumably the board considered all these matters. Will he check into the matter with the chairman of the board and report back to the house tomorrow?

Mr. Forrestall: Would the minister ensure that the actions taken by counsel on his behalf do reflect the continuance of the policy of granting refuge in Canada to people.

Mr. MacEachen: Yes. I am sure the policy is still being observed in the department.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, may I ask my supplementary again?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is making a representation to the minister.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—PROPOSED INTERNATIONAL EMBARGO ON ARMS SHIPMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the urgent appeal by the Archbishop of Canterbury at Westminster to the government of the United Kingdom to join in establishing an international embargo on the shipment of arms to either side in the Nigerian-Biafran dispute, I should like to ask the minister whether the Canadian government will make or renew—I am not sure which is appropriate—its representations to a like effect.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Fortunately, of course, Canada is not supplying any arms in this conflict. Both the Prime Minister and I on a number of occasions have expressed our desire that no arms should be shipped to Nigeria from any source. This continues to be the position of the Canadian government.

[Translation]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, can the right hon. Prime Minister tell the house whether or not he has received an official request from the Canadian Mayors Association for financial aid to municipal works?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am not aware of any such request having reached my office, Mr. Speaker, but I shall certainly inquire.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

COVERAGE OF THE FORTHCOMING POLITICAL CONGRESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the hon. Secretary of State.

Is he aware of the policy or attitude of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation concerning the coverage of the mini-convention of a certain party which is to be held in Montreal during the week-end?

Mr. Speaker: I have the impression that the question as worded is out of order. If it is really urgent, the hon. member could discuss it at time of adjournment tonight.

Mr. Fortin: May I rephrase my question, Mr. Speaker?

Can the Secretary of State assure us that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation will send at least 100 journalists to cover this mini-convention?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is even less acceptable.

[English]

INQUIRY AS TO STATUS OF DISPUTE WITH TECHNICIANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Would the minister advise the house whether he has any news in respect of progress in the labour dispute between the C.B.C. and NABET.

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): This morning I received the report of that particular conciliation board. I might point out that it was a unanimous report accepted by the representatives of the union, of the C.B.C. and the judge. I have released it by registered mail today. I shall release it to the press around 3.30, and hope it will be ratified very shortly by the interested parties.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO COST OF AUTOMOBILE REPAIRS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs whether his department would consider initiating in this country an investigation similar to the one now being carried on in the United States by the United States Senate with regard to the alleged high prices and low quality of car repairs.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member we are aware of the inquiry which is going on in the United States Senate at the moment. We will obtain a copy of the evidence placed before that inquiry so we may judge its appropriateness to Canadian conditions. We are also aware that the legislative assembly in the province of Ontario may be starting the kind of an inquiry the hon. member suggests. Therefore, in the light of that we have to consider our own position here.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION

REPORTED NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES OF TERMINATION OF EMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour, arising from the proposed three months' notice of termination of employment given a number of permanent U.I.C. employees in Vancouver and other parts of the country. Could the minister advise whether it now is government policy to lay off permanent civil servants and replace them with casual help?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, you will realize that this is a loaded question. It is not and never was government policy. Anyone who is to be laid off by the Unemployment Insurance Commission will be given at least six months' notice as long as I am minister.

Mr. MacEwan: Will the minister advise whether a number of permanent civil servants are being laid off in the U.I.C. offices in Vancouver and in other areas of the country?

Mr. Mackasey: In order to get an honest answer from me the hon. member will have to be honest about the number he is talking about.

Mr. MacEwan: Answer the question.

Mr. Mackasey: The hon. gentleman opposite asked a question and I wish to answer it honestly. Over the next year there definitely will be a number of lay-offs in the Unemployment Insurance Commission. As all hon. members know, the Unemployment Insurance Commission has a degree of autonomy. The principle of the present commissioners, with which we cannot argue, is to render the best service with the least number of permanent employees. This is the policy; but the principal policy is service to the people. I understand that had they introduced these changes without prior consultation with the workers, 600 people would have been laid off. At the present time we have succeeded through negotiations with the unions to keep the projected number down to 75. Those 75 will be given official notice probably six months in advance so they can exert certain rights that are theirs under the Public Service Act.

AIRPORTS

TORONTO—PROTESTS AGAINST EXPANSION OF FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport I should like to direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio. Has the Minister of Transport to date received any communication from the government of Ontario with regard to the expansion of Toronto international airport, as an outcome of the recent meeting between the local municipal officials and the members of the government of Ontario?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the government of Ontario has been closely in touch with the department and with the minister throughout recent days and weeks and the Minister of Transport today is in Toronto on this matter.

Mr. Stanfield: Will the minister give the house the position of the government of Canada with regard to the contention of the representatives of the municipalities concerned that the expropriation in question would violate the Ontario planning act? Is the position of the government of Canada that the expropriation actions are not subject to the provincial statute; is this the position?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am suspicious that what the Leader of the Opposition is suggesting now is that the minister be asked to give an interpretation of a legal position, although I may be wrong.

Mr. Stanfield: With respect, Mr. Speaker, I am merely asking the minister what is the position taken by the government of Canada with regard to this matter.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, the representations of the municipalities have been borne in mind very carefully. I believe the final result will reflect the concern that has been expressed by some of the municipalities.

Mr. Stanfield: Has the government of Canada taken a position with regard to the effect of the Ontario legislation on the position of the government of Canada with regard to expropriation?

Mr. Trudeau: That is out of order.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The minister has just stated that the Minister of Transport is in Toronto. I would advise him that I saw the minister get on the elevator as I came into the house.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will take the question of privilege under advisement.

FINANCE

PROPOSED POLICY CHANGE RESPECTING EXCHANGE RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is the minister taking into consideration the recommendation of the former assistant deputy minister of finance, Mr. Plumptre, for the introduction of a crawling-peg exchange rate to alleviate the problems in respect of the international monetary system?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me the question is very like one which was asked yesterday, about which I had some doubts. I have the same doubts today.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that Mr. Plumptre's recommendations, which are mentioned in my question, were made since the matter was last raised in the house, I suggest this would be a relevant item and that it would be proper for the minister to comment on it at the present time.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government has no intention of changing its present policy in respect of exchange rates.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Finance consider referring the entire matter of Canadian international monetary policy to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs for further study?

Mr. Benson: I will consider it, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE OF PERSONS IN GALLERY NOTING OPPOSITION ATTENDANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, Mr. Speaker, and it is a very serious point of order. I have observed two strongmen sitting in the gallery taking the attendance of the official opposition for a number of days. They work in the house leader's office, and I was wondering why. This is something that should be taken into consideration by the protective staff. They are smiling now. The protective staff should make an examination to find out why they are there and what is their purpose. I know of no rule that the attendance in this house should be taken by two strongmen from the house leader's office.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: The Gestapo.

Some hon. Members: Out, out.

An hon. Member: Send the Hitler group home.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Out, out.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Your attention has been drawn to the presence of certain strangers in the gallery.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I wonder, therefore, whether Your Honour would consider your duty under standing order 13, which reads:

If any member takes notice that strangers are present, Mr. Speaker, or the chairman (as the case may be), shall forthwith put the question that strangers be ordered to withdraw, without permitting any debate or amendment; provided that Mr. Speaker, or the chairman, may, whenever he thinks proper, order the withdrawal of strangers.

This has been brought to your attention.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will realize that this is not the motion or the point of order raised by the hon. member. The hon. member referred to the fact that notes were being taken. He assumes that a certain type of notes are being taken. Of course the Chair has no information as to what is being done.

I think I should bring to the attention of hon. members that since last year, there having been an overflow of officials in the official gallery—and this has been the case for some time—following negotiations with the Chair by members of the press gallery, it was agreed that the press gallery would be kept exclusively for members of the press and that part of the diplomatic gallery, that is the part to the west, would be assigned to the overflow of members in the official gallery. This is why officials are using that particular gallery.

As hon. members know it has been the practice for officials in the official gallery to have the right to take notes. This point which was raised by the hon. member, as I understand it, is not a point of order. If the hon. member points to the strangers in the gallery then this is a different matter, and I have to give effect to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Perhaps someone wants to make that proposal.

Mr. Woolliams: Thank you very much for clearing up this matter, Mr. Speaker. I should have thought the house leader would also clear it up. I have seen these two, and they are smiling again now—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: They are sitting there by the translator and I know exactly—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Woolliams: I can stand and wait for silence. I know exactly what they are doing. They are taking the attendance. I have seen them using the list of the House of Commons, looking down and marking off the names. Let them stand and deny that. I should like the protective staff now to examine these men and find what these documents contain. If they are doing exactly what I suggest in my point of order and taking the attendance, then this is against the rules of this house. This is another part of this dictatorship on the part of this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: The house leader is the dictator, and he is showing that now by using these strongarm men.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I must say I am surprised that the hon. member is so sensitive about the question of attendance. I am sure all of us would greatly miss him if he were not in the house. It does not seem to me he has indicated any particular rule which is being violated. As Your Honour has indicated, it is the custom for officials to have the right to make notes. It seems to me it is of little relevance what the subject matter of those notes is.

Some hon. Members: Oh, Oh.

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please? The President of the Privy Council I understand is speaking to the point of order raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and I think perhaps I should be given the opportunity to hear him out.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Thank you, Mr. Speaker; and it seems—

An hon. Member: Didn't you have your shower this morning?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I did indeed, and I suppose the hon. member is disappointed because I did not invite him. Perhaps I could make it clear to the hon. member and the Leader of the Opposition that I do not intend to invite him or his colleagues into my shower. They will have to find their own.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Lotbinière wish to speak on the point of order.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to point out, with due respect, that when the guests of the members are in the galleries, they are not authorized to read or to make notes, as they are liable to be expelled from the house. In my opinion, the same rule should apply to all officials who are in fact intruders in the house.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must remind to the hon. member that usage of long standing allows the officials to sit in the special gallery and to make notes.

[English]

The point of order raised by the hon. member for Calgary North is of interest, but the only way I could act would be if, under standing order 13, the hon. member asked that certain specific strangers be excluded.

Mr. Woolliams: I don't know their names.

Mr. Speaker: I assume he does not want the entire gallery emptied.

If the hon. member wants me to put the question to the house and ask that the house be called upon to resolve the matter and decide whether one, two or three persons in the gallery be expelled, I will hear him and according to standing order 13, as suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I will have no hesitation at all in putting the question to the house.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I do not know the names of these two strangers, but I can describe them for you. I am sure you will recognize them and I believe they will now leave of their own accord. They are sitting beside the translation box. They are two men in dark suits, one with long sideburns—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: The other fellow is in a dark suit. I think they should be removed, and according to the standing order to which you referred I ask you to direct that those two gentlemen leave the gallery and keep it pure for the guests.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am not sure whether the description given by the hon. member would make it possible for me to put the motion to the house, because I would be called upon to repeat the description. However, I wonder whether the house would agree that in view of the fact that the question period expired some minutes ago, and that whoever these gentlemen are their work would normally be finished by this time and they will leave the gallery of their own accord together with their other colleagues, we might, for this day in any event, abandon the matter. If the situation arises again and there is cause for complaint, then the matter may be reconsidered.

I believe there are four or five points of order which hon. members wish to raise.

[Later:]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I ask Your Honour to give consideration, on behalf of members of parliament, to the matter that was raised in the previous question of privilege in connection with the keeping of a record of attendance of members in the house. It seems to me that a record of attendance is being taken in a very informal way which can be detrimental to members of parliament on all sides of the house. If this is going to be allowed I strongly urge Your Honour to give consideration to keeping a formal attendance record so there can be no abuse, as there was in the matter of quorums and the attendance of members in committees last year. I believe that record was used dishonestly. So I suggest that Your Honour give consideration to publishing a formal attendance record so that unfair use cannot be made of the absence of certain members on certain days.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the best way for the Chair to deal with the hon. member's suggestion is to advise him that I shall be pleased to take official note of it and bring it to the attention of the committee on procedure if and when it meets again.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It certainly will.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If what you suggested is done, would you also ask the members of the committee to consider as well the fact that the opposition draws attention to the absence of ministers on this side.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege, is the Prime Minister trying to suggest that he wishes to ask questions of the opposition every day?

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I also rise on this question of privilege. I wish to draw to Your Honour's attention the fact that in the past there has always been pressure for the presence of government officials in the gallery. This was also the case when I occupied your position. However, after a count of the number of seats available in the official gallery, it was soon concluded that unless ministers wanted to be followed by a legion of officials there was ample room for every ministry to be represented by one or two officials, and there was no need to invade the gallery for distinguished persons by what we might call today the ministerial mafia.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest there is no point in pursuing the point raised by the hon. member for Timiskaming. Certainly there is some importance in the point he has raised. However, at the same time hon. members know it is not for the Speaker to change the rules of the house. I am sure notice has been taken of the suggestion by the hon. member for Timiskaming and by other hon. members who have spoken after he brought this point to the attention of the house. I can only repeat that I will consider it my duty to bring to the attention of the committee in due course the hon. member's view that an official record of attendance in the House of Commons be inaugurated.

[Translation]

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

I wish to confess that I counted the number of Conservative members present on Tuesday night, during half an hour. There was not one in the house.

[English]

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I merely want to raise an additional point on this question of privilege. While you have made it quite clear that it has been the custom for officials in the gallery to make notes necessary to properly fulfil their duties, in my view specific notes regarding the attendance or otherwise of any members of this house are quite contrary to their responsibility as employees of the public service. Further, I suggest that this would create a serious precedent in that it would constitute a form of coercion. I think we have always held it to be one of the marks of this house that no form of coercion exists here whereby any member of the house is placed under undue pressure. I suggest, sir, that through your office it be ascertained that no public official attempts by his activities in the gallery to carry out such activities as might encroach on the full freedom that is possessed by the members of this house.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I draw your attention to the fact that there are a number of vacant seats in the official gallery, and perhaps this nullifies one remark made earlier. My second point refers to the right hon. Prime Minister's statement regarding the presence of ministers in the house. I want to make it clear that we have not been objecting to the presence of ministers in the house but rather to their absence, and I think he has misrepresented the point. Further, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that the debate we are having now is not very constructive.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I will resume my seat with the final remark that I think perhaps we should take cognizance of the point that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration is possibly trying to ease the unemployment situation through the presence of these strongmen in the gallery.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the question period has expired, may I ask whether the house leader would be entitled to rise to his feet and tell us what will be the business for next week.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we propose to continue the debate on the two motions to concur in the reports of the procedure committee until debate on them has been completed. The remaining item of business for this part of the session would be the ways and means resolution preceding the anti-dumping bill, and all stages of the anti-dumping bill itself.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the house leader in reference to a matter discussed last week. May I ask whether arrangements have been made to have the annual report of the Post Office Department referred to the transport and communications committee.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the question was much discussed and it was suggested that that subject matter, along with three others which I had proposed to hon. gentlemen opposite as being appropriate matters for reference, could be referred to the committee. I am still waiting to hear from hon. members opposite in this regard. I am not sure exactly what the situation of that reference would be in relation to the terms of reference of the privileges and elections committee, but I will be glad to discuss it.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO STATUS OF DISPUTE WITH TECHNICIANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, you will recall that just prior to the time we got into the hassle about strangers in the gallery, you recognized me. In view of the fact that I have an urgent question, I wonder whether you would allow me to put this question at this time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: There is no objection whatsoever from the Chair.

Mr. Alexander: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the Secretary of State. It is an urgent one, and I believe he has notice of it. I wish to ask him if an agreement has been reached between the negotiators for the C.B.C. and the National Association of Broadcast Employees and Technicians, thereby averting a nation-wide shutdown of television and radio services.

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, this question was asked and my colleague, the Minister of Labour, answered it a few minutes ago. I have nothing to add.

PROCEDURE

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN FOURTH REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

The house resumed, from Wednesday, December 11, consideration of the motion of Mr. Blair that the fourth report of the special committee on procedure of the house, presented to the house on Friday, December 6, 1968, be concurred in, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Stanfield (p. 3762).

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): At five o'clock yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I was dealing with the new orders as they relate to the work load of committees. I pointed out, and I point out again, that no one can deny that under the present rules estimates have never been given serious scrutiny. In the consideration of estimates members could refer to anything under the sun, and they did. The estimates were passed, and the only objection a member on the government side could take was by voting against an estimate, which would amount to a vote of confidence.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has said that the purpose of the new rules is to have the estimates scrutinized in committees so that this can be done without a vote of confidence being involved. It is true that party pressure will be brought to bear and discipline will be applied in order to make sure that hon. members on this side will pass the estimates in accordance with the wishes of the ministers. However, if a matter is sufficiently serious and if enough members in a committee decide to oppose it, under the new rules they can, with the co-operation of the opposition, reduce an estimate and thereby embarrass the ministers. In this way members can make their power felt. In this respect I should like to bring to the attention of the house the new standing order 65(4)(b) which reads as follows:

> Changes in the membership of any standing, joint or special committee may be effected by a notification thereof, signed by the member acting as the chief government whip, being filed with the Clerk of the house who shall cause the same to be printed in the Votes and Proceedings of the house of that sitting, or of the next sitting thereafter, as the case may be.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, we have now introduced into the rules not only the idea that there is an opposition side but that there is a government side. Formerly, we were all hon. gentlemen. I think it is about time we did this. In addition, we have introduced into the rules certain rights for the opposition to bring up certain estimates or reports as they see fit. This particular rule introduces something else, and that is party discipline. In effect, what it does is this: it says to the government whip, do not worry about members who may cause you some annoyance in a committee because all you have to do is file a notice of change, take him off that committee and put on somebody else who is more co-operative. This applies to the whips on both sides, government and opposition. They now have the right under the rules to effect party discipline, which was always the right of the leader of the party in caucus.

I have said before that the backbenchers have no power at all, but at least when a bill was being considered clause by clause in committee of the whole a member on this side could take issue with any of the clauses and thereby express disappointment or antagonism with regard to certain matters in the bill, in accordance with the feelings of his constituents. The member might not vote against the bill; very few members on this side have ever voted against a government bill, but at least the member had the right to express his opposition to any clause in committee of the whole. Now he does not have that right because the minute he opposes any part of a bill the whip will take him off that committee and put on somebody else. The member will have no recourse at all. He cannot have recourse to you, Mr. Speaker, so he cannot appeal. In other words, this is an arbitrary action affecting party discipline in the House of Commons and I wonder whether this house will accept a rule that goes that far.

What I have to say does not apply to the present leader of the house. I say this in all seriousness. The house leader and I have had many disagreements on these various items. We have argued this out and he knows where I stand. He has been fair at all times. Indeed, he knew exactly what I was going to say today but he made no attempt whatever to keep me off the list. Therefore, these remarks do not apply to the present house leader. I do not believe they apply to any other minister. However, the time will come when, in order to satisfy officials who are being examined in committee, a minister may speak to the whip or house leader, indicating he would like a certain member removed from a committee.

Mr. Baldwin: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Otto: Yes.

Mr. Baldwin: I note the hon. member's speech with approval. At this point could he say whether he approves a statement made in an article written by the Prime Minister in 1963 in Cité Libre, when he was expressing his views about party discipline and particularly in the party opposite?

Mr. Otto: I regret that I am not familiar with the article to which the hon. member refers, but I am questioning now the statement the Prime Minister made that much more attention ought to be given to individual rights. I am sure this must apply to the rules.

Mr. Stanfield: And even to members.

Mr. Otto: Let me put the other side of the question because nothing is one-sided. Perhaps I may be the devil's advocate for a moment. It is true also that the government must maintain attendance in these committees; they must make sure the committees are attended. I am sure hon. gentlemen recognize that if some members continually fail to appear in these committees there must be some method of removing them or substituting other members for them.

I regret that the house leader is not here at the moment because I should like to suggest to him that rule 65(4)(b) should be amended. The rule should provide that when a committee is sitting and all the members are not in attendance, the whips may appoint or authorize the chairman to appoint any other member of the house who may be present at that committee to be a member of the committee for that sitting. When there is a lack of government members to pass a bill or to pass a section of a bill or estimates, I can see that we are not going to allow a vote to be registered against the government. Therefore, it will be merely a matter of whips getting enough members to make sure the government is supported. These members would be entitled to vote at that meeting, but the minute the meeting is over a member who may have taken issue with a certain part of a bill will still be a member of that committee with his rights completely vested in him. I should like to make that serious recommendation to the house leader because this rule introduces party discipline as part of the rules of this house and, party discipline has no place in the rules. It is a matter between the caucus and the leader.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Ask your Prime Minister about that.

Mr. Otto: I have asked my Prime Minister about it and I am hoping he agrees with me. In fact, we have discussed it at some length. Therefore I seriously suggest that the house leader make the change I have suggested, because it would satisfy the government and also take this question out of the house.

In conclusion, may I say I am in favour of all of the rules changes. I am not afraid of changing the structure of the House of Commons. I think all members recognize that there are going to be vast changes both in government and in the House of Commons. However, as I said yesterday, there is nothing sanctimonious about us. We will be replaced by a different breed of career M.P.'s A lot of policy decisions are going to be made by constituents through the regional desks, and I am certain they will be very beneficial.

Mr. Orlikow: Tell us about the regional desks.

Mr. Otto: You can read about them. My point is that there has to be change. Hon. gentlemen who have been here for 20, 15 or in some cases for even 10 years must recognize that there is nothing sacred about the rules that they know so well. It is always difficult for the older members who are experienced in the application of certain rules to accept new ones, because they are experts on the old rules but not on the new ones.

I welcome these changes. The sooner we make this house a house of legislation and not merely a house for debate, the better. All of these changes work toward that end. This house will be able to deal with more legislation. We will have eight or nine months for debate, longer than is the case now. We can debate all issues. The opposition parties will be able to bring forward those subjects they want to debate but which they are unable to debate now. The only thing lacking will be power to harass and to delay. The people of Canada do not want the opposition to filibuster or delay; they want them to contribute in an effective way. This they will be able to do under the new rules in the committees provided the committees are given some real strength.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, like other members who have taken part in this debate I am pleased to have this opportunity as a member of parliament to speak on parliamentary reform.

As the last speaker said, I do not think that anybody would argue, at least not on this side of the house, about our being in favour of reform. The Conservatives believe in parliamentary reform. We believe in reform now and not tomorrow. Why do I say this, Mr. Speaker? Because members of our party, together with other members of the opposition and members of the government, have for a number of years worked together harmoniously as members of special committees on reform, initially established under a former Speaker, the hon. Alan Macnaughton, and then later under you, sir. Finally, the special committee on procedure was established to formulate a set of rules that would make parliament more effective in this new age that demands that decisions be made with compelling haste.

The first point I want to make is that all members agree with reform. The members of this party agree with all the rules that have been brought in by the special committee on procedure with the exception of two recommendations. Members of other parties agree with them all with the exception of just two points or perhaps one. So as I say that we are all in favour of reform, with the exceptions I have mentioned.

I should like to point out that if the government in all its wisdom were to compromise on those two recommendations the report presented by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair), the chairman of the special committee, would be approved at this moment and we could get on with the country's business. As I have said, there is no argument that the members of this party agree with the reforms presented in the report with the exception of two.

I suggest that no party alone can declare that it is the party of reform because, as I said at the beginning of my remarks and as I shall repeat often, there has been a harmonious working arrangement toward this end on the part of members of all parties who have sat together on committees from time to time. I too have had the opportunity of representing my party on one of the earlier committees established to consider reform. Much of what the first committee recommended, much of what the second committee recommended, and much of what was contained in the provisional rules has been approved by the special committee on procedure, as outlined by my good friend and fellow graduate from the same university, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), both in this debate and on other occasions, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and, last but not least, the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), have all stated that they are in accord with reform. So no problem arises there. We all want changes and we have all compromised our ideas about what kind of changes should be made in order to come to some agreement as intelligent members of parliament. And we are in agreement on all matters but two, as far as we are concerned.

First—and we have stated our argument in this regard—we oppose and will continue to oppose vigorously closure in advance, the muzzling and gagging of parliament in advance on the authority of not so much a rule but of one man, the government house leader. He is not really the man in charge but is merely the agent of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I do not say this by way of criticism. As several speakers, including the leader of our party, have said, the house leader on the government side must carry out the will of the Prime Minister. But it is really left to one man under the proposed standing order 16A to decide for how long any matter can be debated. Whether the debate be in a standing committee or in this chamber, one man will carry out the will of the Prime Minister.

I do not need to remind hon. members how eloquently the Leader of the Opposition put the argument against what we say is deliberate dictatorship, or how eloquently other members, particularly the hon. member for York South, have spoken. He said at the beginning of his remarks and repeated at the end that this proposal was what he called a subtle way of obtaining totalitarianism without openly wiping out all opposition.

Let us remember what Edwin Burke said when talking of the function of and need for an opposition. He said:

> He that wrestles with us strengthens our nerves and sharpens our skill. Our antagonist is our helper.

The hon. member for York South was every bit as eloquent as Benjamin Disraeli, who stated—and I ask members of the government party, particularly the backbenchers, to note this:

> No government can be long secure without a formidable opposition.

The second objection that we make as a party is to the complete abolition of the committee of supply. In brief, this would remove from the House of Commons the consideration and supervision of all expenditures by parliament, and the preventing of overexpenditure by parliament exposing to the light of public opinion wasteful expenditures, or worse.
