2. There was no fixed sales target. It was simply intended to make available for sale whatever amount was required to lay a firm basis for an active secondary market. No offerings were made during the latter part of 1965 because of the unsettled market conditions which developed in June and no auctions were held in 1966 and 1967 because of the heavy pressure on the market for long-term funds.

3. Several approved lenders have greatly increased their marketing efforts and are aggressively seeking purchasers, particularly pension funds. Some lenders, in conjunction with investment firms, have offered bonds backed by N.H.A. mortgages and some intend to offer participation certificates. A wider market and demand for mortgages will increase the liquidity of mortgages or securities backed by mortgages.

4. No firm decision has yet been reached regarding further sales by the Corporation.

C.M.H.C.—RESEARCH TO DEVELOP NEW SYSTEMS

Question No. 1,013—Mr. McCleave:

What research, if any, has been undertaken by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to develop on their own new systems for building of homes?

However, funds are available under Part V of the National Housing Act for a wide range of matters relating to housing research and community planning.

New designs for better and lower cost housing are being developed continuously through cooperation with the Royal Architectural Institute of Canada by holding competitions and inviting the architectural profession in Canada to submit house designs. The plans for such designs are sold to the Canadian public at nominal cost.

Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation also encourages and provides financing for the development of new products and construction techniques, such as prefabrication and improved assembly techniques in cooperation with the National House Builders' Association, the Division of Building Research of the National Research Council and industry. In addition, C.M.H.C. maintains, through participation in international organizations and through other means, a system of information on the progress realized in these areas in other countries.

C.M.H.C. supports the development of individual household aerobic sewage disposal systems and the treatment of total wastes including human, household and all solid wastes at source within a large building complex. The objective is to eliminate the need for sewer and water lines and garbage removal from houses and large building complexes to reduce servicing and land costs.

Questions

L-1011 AIRCRAFT—CANADIAN PARTS MANUFACTURE

Question No. 1,117—Mr. Fortin:

1. In connection with the purchase of 10 L-1011 aircraft from the Lockheed Company, what measures were taken to ensure that a substantial portion of the parts would be manufactured in Canada?

2. What percentage of these aircraft will be manufactured in Canada?

3. How many jobs are expected to be created in Canada as a result of this order?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. Over the last 18 months, the Department of Industry has worked closely with both the Douglas Aircraft Company and Lockheed Aircraft Company to ensure that, regardless of the selection of aircraft made by Air Canada, a substantial portion of components of such aircraft would be manufactured in Canada.

2. It is not yet possible to define the percentage of the L-1011 aircraft which will be produced in Canada. However, Lockheed is currently negotiating with Canadian manufacturers for the supply of structural components, electronic equipment and auxiliary power units for the L-10,110 aircraft. In addition, the company is conducting bidding symposiums in Canada in January which will offer further opportunities for Canadian manufacturers to quote on the supply of components and parts.

3. It is estimated that approximately 1,800 jobs in Canada may result from work on the L-1011 program, the build-up of such work reaching its peak in late 1971.

2. If so, what is the term, annual cost, effective date and expiration date of the lease?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The Department of Public Works advises as follows:

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Would Your Honour be kind enough to call notices of motions Nos. 51, 61 and 62?

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining notices of motions be allowed to stand.

[English]

SUPREME COURT JUDGMENTS

Motion No. 51—Mr. Fortin:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a return showing, since the Supreme Court of Canada was instituted (a) the number of judgments rendered by judges whose mother tongue was French and, of those, the number of judgments rendered (i) in French (ii) in English (b) of the judgments rendered in English by judges whose mother tongue is French, the number of judgments respecting Quebec (c) the number of judgments rendered in French by judges whose mother tongue is English.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, with respect to this notice of motion for the production of papers the information requested would be very difficult to provide since in judgments of the Supreme Court a judgment is often written by one or more judges of the court, and the motion would compel assumptions about the mother tongue of certain of the judges since confederation.

I admit quite readily that notices for the production of papers taken together with the question period are one of the fundamental rights of the opposition, but I would submit to Your Honour that such a motion is for the production of information peculiarly within the possession of a minister or within the public service.

The judgments of the Supreme Court are published monthly. They have been published since confederation, and are public documents. The information is readily available to the hon. member. What he is asking the government to do is not to provide him with information but to do some statistical research. I would suggest that since this statistical information is not in the possession of the department and further, since it is not ordinarily required for departmental purposes it would entail, with greatest respect, laborious effort. Since, as I have said, the judgments of the court are public documents, a statistical analysis can be made of them by anyone who wishes to take the time to do so. Therefore, I would submit to your Honour that this is not a proper motion for the production of information but is rather a request for statistical research. In the circumstances I would ask the hon. member whether he would be prepared to withdraw it.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, after hearing the remarks of the honourable minister of Justice concerning motion 51 by which I was trying to find out to what extent the Supreme Court of Canada, a federal body, is truly bilingual or whether it is an Anglo-Saxon reserve, I must say that the minister's answer shows beyond all doubts, since he has not been able to provide me with the requested information, that it is definitely an Anglo-Saxon reserve. Now, the request for information is aimed—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Fortin: —precisely—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Fortin: —at bringing—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is it the wish of the hon. member to withdraw the motion?

Mr. Fortin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I believe the matter to be extremely important.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the wish of the hon. member that the motion be transferred for debate, pursuant to standing order 48?

Mr. Fortin: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

NORTHUMBERLAND STRAIT CROSSING—
CONSTRUCTION CORRESPONDENCE

Motion No. 61—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of all correspondence between the Government of Canada and any other persons, organizations, or governments, with respect to the construction of the Northumberland Strait Crossing project since September 1, 1967.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this motion is acceptable subject only to the usual reservations in respect of items that are privileged and, in the case of the provinces, concerning their approval.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations and conditions expressed by the minister, is it the pleasure of the house that notice of motion No. 61 be deemed to be adopted?

Motion agreed to.

NORTHUMBERLAND STRAIT CROSSING—
ENGINEERING FEASIBILITY

Motion No. 62—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of all surveys, reports and enquiries respecting costs and benefits and engineering feasibility of the Northumberland Strait Crossing project received by the Government of Canada since September 1, 1967.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this motion relates to documents that are in almost every case privileged. Those that are not privileged and encompassed by it will be tabled under the previous motion No. 61. I would therefore ask the hon. member for Egmont whether he would agree to withdrawal of the motion.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I am agreeable to withdrawing it provided the minister can assure me that this pertains to documents not only available to the government of Canada but also to the government of Prince Edward Island, and that the Stanford research document on cost benefit would be among those the minister would make available.

Mr. Laing (Vancouver South): May I ask the hon. member if I might reserve my decision on that until I have a look at it.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that motion No. 62 stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion stands.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, while we are on this order I should like to ask the house leader if he could facilitate the production of papers in respect of my motion No. 17, permission for which was given on October 30. I cannot again ask the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) because I believe his part has been completed, but there are other departments involved. Would the house leader be good enough to inquire into this.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Those documents were tabled today.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

KICKBACKS IN PURCHASE OF U.S. FILMS—REQUEST FOR APPEARANCE OF MISS LAMARSH BEFORE STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. It arises from the statements of the Hon. Judy LaMarsh concerning a so-called kickback system in the purchase of United States films by the C.B.C. I think it is important that these matters be investigated. Is the minister investigating this matter and, if so, will he report to the house on the matter? In the meantime will he undertake to table in parliament the full report of the committee of the president of the C.B.C. which was referred to by Miss LaMarsh and which I understand was refused to the Commons committee on broadcasting on an earlier occasion.

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have not read Miss LaMarsh's book but I have read a few excerpts from it in the newspapers. I had to do some important reading during the parliamentary recess and I did not get a chance to glance through that book. Therefore, I do not know exactly to which report the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) is referring.

As for the other complaints he alluded to, I am sure that should the C.B.C. receive any complaints, it would immediately take measures to correct the situation.

Up to now, neither the C.B.C. management nor myself, as a minister, have received any complaints and I would be happy to get, from Miss LaMarsh or any one else, any definite information likely to solve the problem.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Secretary of State will answer the questions I asked him. Although I recognize I have no right to insist on this, will he deal with the charges made in public by Miss LaMarsh concerning the so-called kickback system? I wonder whether he will investigate this matter and report to the house and, secondly, will he undertake to table in parliament a full report of the president's committee to which I previously referred and to which reference was made by Miss LaMarsh? Previously this report was refused the commons committee on broadcasting.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me the Leader of the Opposition has merely restated or repeated the question he asked in the first instance. If the minister wishes to reply a second time there is no objection.

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: I wish to reiterate, Mr. Speaker, in all good faith, believe me, that I just do not know which report the Leader of the Opposition is referring to which report apparently is mentioned in Miss LaMarsh's book.

I am not acquainted with the accusation made by Miss LaMarsh, but I will lose no time in looking it up, as the Leader of the Opposition seems to attach some importance to it.

As for a close study of the accusations made, assuming that they would prove specific enough for such a study, I have already answered the Leader of the Opposition—I think that he has not understood me—that both the C.B.C. and myself, as minister, are to examine this matter. We cannot, however, inquire into the matter on some vague statements or from hearsay.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: Also arising out of the statement by Miss LaMarsh in which she attributed to Mr. Alphonse Ouimet the allegation that Radio Canada was under the control of separatists and her further statement that she had further information to support this charge, is it the intention of the Secretary of State to determine the accuracy of this statement and will he undertake to make a report to the house?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I could quote a statement which was made in this house by Miss Lamarsh and which I heard with my own ears, in reply to a question put to her when she was Secretary of State.

She said that C.B.C. employees were not subject to any investigation as to their political opinions, unless underhanded or illegal dealings were involved and that it only mattered to know whether or not C.B.C. employees with political convictions let them show in the discharge of their duties.

This problem is still with us and will be forever, and the C.B.C. considers it greatly important. This area is kept under close scrutiny, and that policy will certainly be pursued.

With respect to the allegation whereby the C.B.C. as a whole, or any C.B.C. network for that matter, has been completely under the control of some people with a certain political ideology, I do not think there are grounds for such an accusation, and I believe it would be quite hard to prove it.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: I have one further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the Secretary of State conducted an investigation and is he in a position to assure the house that the last statement he just made is the result of such an investigation, or is it on the other hand a personal opinion he holds?

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, referring to the answer that the Secretary of State has just given to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), may I ask him whether we can expect the same attitude regarding the allocation of time by the C.B.C. to political, non-political and other groups, since, according to what the minister has just stated, it would seem that it is entirely untrue?

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Secretary of State.

In view of the important post held by his predecessor, does he not consider the matter serious enough to refer it to the standing committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts?

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, in the first place I must make something clear about the nature of my answers this afternoon. I was away from Canada on an official mission when Miss LaMarsh's book was published and I arrived barely an hour ago.

I must base my answers on press reports which can betray what Miss LaMarsh had in mind, the truth or both, so that at the present time I am not in a position to give detailed answers, since I have not examined the document which those gentlemen have apparently perused at leisure.

[English]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In order that this matter may be ventilated fully and properly, I ask the minister whether he will not consider discussing with the chairman of the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts the convening of the committee so that Miss LaMarsh might be called before it and have an opportunity to say publicly what she has said in her book.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pelletier: I think, Mr. Speaker, that the house committees could take it upon themselves—and they have proved so far that they are able to do so—important and necessary initiatives in matters entrusted to them by the house.

Mr. Bell: There's something rotten somewhere.

FINANCE

REQUEST THAT INTEREST RATES BE STUDIED BY STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, if I might turn from publicity for Miss LaMarsh's book to another subject, I ask the Minister of Finance a question consequent upon some questions I asked him yesterday, and an announcement made simultaneously after that by three of the largest banks, that they were increasing interest rates still further. Will the minister now reconsider his answer to me yesterday and agree to study the possibility of reinstituting some kind of control over the galloping interest rates which now seem to have no ceiling at all?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the matter of interest rates is always under consideration by the minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question to the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. Can he answer simply whether he would agree to refer the question of galloping interest rates to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs? I asked him that question yesterday and he said no. I ask it of him again today because of the additional increase made simultaneously by the banks.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I think the question as put today is not the same as that asked yesterday. I can assure the hon. member that I will seriously consider any representations made by him.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, a further supplementary question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the recognition which he granted in his white paper on price stability of the fact that interest is a factor, an ingredient in the upward pressure on prices, would the minister consider what steps his department might take in getting the banks and near banks to stop pushing interest rates up, in view of the large profits they are now making? Also, would he consider immediately establishing the joint committee on consumer affairs and referring this question to that committee?

[Mr. Pelletier.]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am endeavouring to establish the prices and incomes commission as quickly as I can. If the hon. member's question indicates that he supports the establishment of that commission, I welcome that support.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, come on.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he is concerned about the possible effect of the marked rise in interest rates upon the willingness of Canadians to hold investments in Canada savings bonds, and whether he fears any tendency toward liquidation in this regard. If so, has the minister any plan in mind to offset these possible effects?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, of course I am concerned about this particular matter in that, as my hon. friend knows, in late 1968 there was a good deal of redemption of Canada savings bonds.

I should like to assure him that to date, and since the recent compaign, the encashment of Canada savings bonds has not been any greater than is normal in the circumstances.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In order to assist in bringing down interest rates and in fact to make a major move in that direction, will the government now seriously consider dropping their medicare scheme?

Mr. Benson: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of what the minister said today and on other occasions with reference to interest rates, and as the banks have shown the highest profits in years, would he now reconsider setting a ceiling or at least referring the subject matter to the appropriate committee?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, the previous parliament to this one decided to take off the interest ceiling which was imposed under the Bank Act. The government has not at present considered any reimposition of a ceiling.

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance.

Is the $850,000 loan made to Brazil last week bearing interest at 9⅜ per cent or at what other rate?

GRAIN

ARRANGEMENTS AT LAKEHEAD TO CONTINUE DRYING OPERATIONS

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour but in his absence perhaps it could be considered by the Minister of Agriculture. Would the minister give consideration to opening negotiations with the unions and management at the lakehead in order to make feasible the continuous drying of damp and tough grain at the terminals?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I will take notice of the question and refer it to the Minister of Labour, although I think some progress has been made in this respect already.

SPORTS

EXERCISE OF DRAFT BY NATIONAL HOCKEY LEAGUE

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare relating to the National Hockey League universal draft. I want to ask the minister whether in fact he has had discussions on this matter, which represents the rankest sort of cartel in sports, whether he has met Mr. Campbell, and whether he intends to act to put an end to athletic peonage in this country?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question asked by the hon. member is perhaps more in the form of a statement than a question, and should normally be placed on the order paper. If there is urgency, of which I am not aware, the matter could be debated at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I think this is a very urgent problem. If I may add a few words, sir, many of our young athletes in Canada are being called to—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is now arguing his case. This is what should be done at this time of adjournment, if the hon. member wishes to do so.

Mr. Paproski: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

SHIPBUILDING

FISHING VESSEL CONSTRUCTION ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the present high unemployment rate in the Atlantic provinces shipbuilding yards, and the desire of some fishermen to build larger longliners, will the minister indicate whether it is the government's intention to reactivate the fishing vessels assistance program, and if so on what date?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): The program is under active consideration, Mr. Speaker. Further information will be supplied in the blue book containing the estimates of this department and of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

CANADIAN FILM DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

ALLEGED FAILURE TO ASSIST FEATURE PRODUCTION INDUSTRY

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): My question is for the Secretary of State and it arises from statements of the Montreal chapter of the Canadian Society of Cinematographers to the effect that the Canadian Film Development Corporation has done nothing since its establishment to assist the Canadian feature film industry. Will the minister undertake to make a full statement on motions outlining the government's intention in regard to this matter?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have read the brief referred to by the hon. member. However, that brief was not addressed to the minister but to the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts, which will have to deal with it and if it deems it advisable, will have to hear the representatives of the Montreal branch of the film-makers.

As for the accusation made in this brief against the Film Development Corporation, the least one can say is that it is exaggerated, since that corporation has already taken action to promote the production of films.

Should the house be interested to hear more about this, the minister could at some time make a statement on the matter.

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the brief that has been referred to by the minister, has he asked for a report on these matters from the president of the corporation, Mr. Lapalme?

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I came across that brief only this morning on the plane. So I have not yet had an opportunity to get in touch with anybody in that respect. However, it is understood that the Canadian Film Development Corporation keeps the Secretary of State posted on its activities whenever they make important decisions.

SPORTS

REFUSAL OF RUSSIAN TEAM TO PLAY CANADIAN SERIES

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Calgary South): I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of widespread concern over our recent record in international athletic competition, most particularly in hockey, would the minister inform the house of the government's attitude to the refusal of Russia's national hockey team to fulfil its obligation to play an eight game series in Canada this winter with our own national team?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking a question which is perhaps related in some way to the question asked previously by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre. Perhaps he might want to come back with the hon. member for Edmonton Centre for hockey night in the House of Commons.

CANADIAN FILM DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

FUNDS AVAILABLE FOR PRODUCTION PROGRAM

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. In view of the importance which the former secretary of state gave to the establishment of a film corporation when the legislation was drafted, could the minister make a statement in the near future outlining what specific films it plans and how much money the new corporation has in fact on which to begin production?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I repeat the reply I made previously. I will be very pleased to ask for a full report from the Canadian Film Development Corporation and to make a statement since the house has shown interest in the matter.

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

TRANSPORT

RESUMPTION OF MARITIMES SITTINGS

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Will the transport committee resume its sittings in the maritimes, and if so when?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): This is a question which should be directed to the chairman of the committee, but certainly if I may speak as a member of the house I would hope that it would visit the maritimes as soon as possible.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOLLOWING ACTION RESPECTING HOSPITAL CONSTRUCTION GRANT

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In light of the postponement of expansion of ten of thirteen medical teaching centres in Ontario as a direct result of the withdrawal of federal support for hospital construction and similar projects in the rest of Canada, will the minister undertake to make a full policy statement outlining the government's proposals in regard to assisting medical complexes?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is referring to the policy of the government with respect to the health resources fund, this was not a withdrawal but rather a spreading out over a further number of years. Under the legislation 15 years was provided. If all the provinces came in the fund would have been used up in five years, so we prefer to have it phased out over a longer period.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. These matters should not be debated now. My understanding of the question is that it asks whether a statement will be made on motions.

AIRPORTS

CAMP BORDEN—USE OF CROWN LANDS FOR SITE

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport. Has the government considered using the 30 square miles of crown lands at Camp Borden as a site for the proposed new international airport?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think this question should be placed on the order paper or, if urgent, debated at the time of adjournment.

HARBOURS

CORNER BROOK, NFLD.—PLANS FOR DEVELOPMENT

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe was gracious enough to give me 24 hours to find out something about the harbour development at Corner Brook. I can advise him that the report on phase one has been presented and accepted. It is our hope that we shall be in a position to call tenders by the spring and it is our intention, in the main estimates for 1969-70, to ask for a sum in excess of one million dollars.

EXTERNAL AID

POSSIBILITY OF EXTENDING ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My question is for the Acting Prime Minister. I suspect that if Your Honour were on the floor it is the sort of question you would probably be asking this week. Indeed, it might be asked by any of us who were with you in India last week.

May I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the government's review of Canada's foreign policy includes a study of the possibility of increasing our activities under our external aid program?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Yes, sir, I think I can answer that question in the affirmative. The study includes all relevant questions of foreign policy, and most certainly includes a review of both the amount and effectiveness of our external aid policies.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask whether the Acting Prime Minister would request the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs to make a full statement on this subject, when they are back with us next week?

Mr. Hellyer: I will bring it to their attention, though it might be better to wait until this particular question has been decided by the government in the context of the review.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR POLICY STATEMENT ON TAXATION COMMISSION REPORT

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, on December 19 I directed a question to the Minister of Finance, and in his absence the question was taken as notice by the parliamentary secretary. It referred to the implementation of certain aspects of the Carter Commission report. Is the minister now in a position to tell us when the government will be announcing its policy in this connection?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I have indicated that it is our intention to bring in a bill dealing with this subject this spring—it will be late spring, because as all hon. members will realize, legislation in this complex field requires a great deal of careful study before presentation to the house.

GRAIN

USE OF COMMERCIAL DRYERS AT ELEVATOR POINTS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Several months ago I raised the question of allowing commercial dryers to dry grain at country elevator points, an innovation which would require the authority of the Board of Grain Commissioners. Is the minister now in a position to give us an assurance that this can be arranged even at this late date, bearing in mind that there are still some points from which farmers cannot make deliveries at all?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I do not recall the exact context in which the hon. member put his question, but I did indicate yesterday that I intended to get an up to date report on this situation and place it before the house very soon.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR TASK FORCE REPORT

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Transport in his capacity as minister in charge of housing. Has the task force completed its report on housing and, if so, when does the hon. gentleman expect to present it to parliament?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I still hope it will be ready later this month, as I indicated some weeks ago. So far, we are right on time and if all goes well the report should be ready for presentation to parliament and the Canadian people about the end of the month.

FISHERIES

LOBSTER FISHING REGULATIONS IN DISTRICT 7B

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Cardigan): I should like to put a question to the Minister of Fisheries and ask him when we may expect an announcement with respect to the lobster fishing regulations in district 7B. The season is rapidly approaching.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): I expect an announcement will be made in the maritimes early next week.

HARBOURS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF POLICY RESPECTING CROSSINGS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): My question is directed to the hon. member for Trinity in his dual capacity as Acting Prime Minister and Minister of Transport. Could he advise the house, in the light of the decision to make grants in aid of a harbour crossing in Vancouver and the recent rejection of a similar request from Halifax, why there has apparently been a change in government policy?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that the question as asked is argumentative.

Mr. Forrestall: May I rephrase it, then, and ask the Acting Prime Minister whether he can enlighten the house as to the government's present policy in connection with financial aid to crossings of national harbours?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. It is as set out in my letter to Premier Smith. I understand this letter was made public. The premier sent me a telegram asking if I would be agreeable to that course.

ESTATE TAX ACT

REQUEST FOR INFORMATION AS TO CHANGES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I have a question for the Minister of Finance arising out of the question period yesterday in the course of which the minister indicated—bringing some comfort to a lot of us, I think—that small changes are always made to taxation bills. I was wondering whether the minister could advise us now whether, in fact, the small changes to which he referred had some reference to the estate tax bill.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Everything with respect to particular changes in a taxation statute cannot be included in the resolution as such, because other clauses in the act may have to be changed as well. Recently I gave an indication of some of the consequential changes which will be made in various parts of the Estate Tax Act—and I shall be pleased to send the hon. member a copy of the press release which was issued during the Christmas holiday.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): In the light of the minister's statement today and his earlier reference to the division of taxation revenue between the federal and provincial governments, I should like to ask whether this new tax bill will affect the ratio as between the federal government and the Province of Alberta bearing in mind the fact that the provincial government has abolished the estate tax in that province.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether this is not the type of question which might not better be asked when the legislation is being considered?

Mr. Woolliams: With all respect to your Honour, people across this nation are wondering about the effect of this tax; it is unknown, and I believe the minister could give us a quick answer, yes or no.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he can give us any indication of the date upon which this legislation will be presented to the house.

Mr. Benson: I indicated yesterday to the hon. gentleman that it would be within a matter of days—some time next week, I would presume.

AGRICULTURE

SALES TAX ON SNOW REMOVAL EQUIPMENT

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. Will the minister investigate the circumstances in which it is reported to me that Saskatchewan farmers are being charged 11 per cent sales tax on farm equipment being used for snow removal from municipal roads?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is making a representation to the minister. I doubt whether his representation qualifies as a question.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON FOREIGN POLICY AND DEFENCE

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the very pertinent questions put to our own Prime Minister at the conference in London on the international and defence policies of Canada, may we be advised when it is anticipated that the task force on the government side will complete its review and report to the House of Commons concerning those policies?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Acting Prime Minister): I am not in a position to give the hon. gentleman the exact date upon which reports may be made. I would be glad, however, to bring the question to the attention of the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in case there is any further information which they are in a position to give.

FREIGHT RATES

MARITIMES—PROCEDURE FOLLOWING FREEZE

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): A question for the Minister of Transport. Has the minister any information as to the manner in which the freeze on maritime freight rates, which will lapse in a few short weeks, will be dealt with this session?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I hope to be in a position within the next few weeks to present to the house and to the country the government's position with respect to policy in connection with transportation in the Atlantic provinces. In the meantime I still hope to hear from the premiers of the Atlantic provinces with respect to suggestions they might have to make. I still feel, as I felt last year, that suggestions which come from areas directly affected are worthy of serious consideration, because the people there are in a position to know better than anyone else exactly what the problems are. Nevertheless I hope that within a few weeks I will be able to make the position of the government known, and that when I do the program will have the support of my hon. friend.

Mr. Bell: A supplementary question. May I thank the minister for his very informative answer; things look good for the new year so far as his ministry is concerned. May I take it from what he says that he has given an assurance that either the freeze will be extended or that there will be new legislation? In other words, we are not going to be without some assistance in this regard, and the freeze will not be lifted before action is taken?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I would not want my hon. friend to take from what I said that the present freeze will or will not be continued. What I said was that the program will soon be introduced and I hope will meet with his general satisfaction.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, may I put one further supplementary.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Forrestall: This is really not a laughing matter. Would the minister assure the house that his program will be in before March 1 or that some action with regard to the freeze will take place prior thereto?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I think I can give the assurance that it will be in in March.

INDUSTRY

NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING DEVCO RETIREMENT PLAN

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. May I ask the minister whether negotiations have been carried on with the railway unions affected with respect to the Devco early retirement plan?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Yes, Mr. Speaker, negotiations are still going on. I think the union representatives are attending a meeting this week or next week.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

CARD SYSTEM FOR DRUG DISTRIBUTION TO INDIANS

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In light of the minister's undertaking of November 19 to replace with a card system the list system of identifying Indian people who are entitled to free drugs, will the minister tell the house when the list system is going to be replaced?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated at the time it is not a question of replacing a card system with a list system but the other way round. We are getting under way with this gradually over the next few months, and my latest information is that it is proceeding well.

Mr. Simpson: A supplementary question. Will the minister assure the house—we asked for this assurance previously—that when this system has been replaced these lists will be returned to the Indian bands and not retained by the drug stores who have possession of them?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, I will take that matter under consideration; I can see the merit in it.

RURAL DEVELOPMENT

NOVA SCOTIA—ARDA REPORT RESPECTING NORTHERN COUNTIES

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Following the minister's recent appearance on a speaking engagement before the Nova Scotia Federation of Agriculture, at which time he was requested to ask the minister of rural development about the ARDA report concerning the nine northern counties of Nova Scotia, has the minister had any luck in having the minister of rural development present the report and make it public? It is a very important report which is required by the Federation of Agriculture.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development will, of course, answer for himself in this house. All I agreed to do was to advise his office that a request for the report had been made, and this has been done.

Mr. MacEwan: A supplementary question. I should like to ask the minister of rural development to make this very important report public.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, I will take this question under consideration and answer later on.

SHIPPING

APPLICATION OF WHARFAGE RATES TO ATLANTIC FISHERY

Hon. James Richardson (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I promised to reply today to a question asked by the hon. member for South Shore.

The answer is that the increase in wharfage rates announced on January 2 this year will come into effect on April 1, 1969 and will apply to government wharves under the administration of the Department of Transport. The new rates will therefore apply to fishermen using these wharves. However, berthing rates have not been increased for vessels under 100 feet in length; therefore, fishermen using vessels below 100 feet in length will not have to pay the increased wharfage rates.

DRUGS

POSSIBLE RESTRICTION IN SALE OF PRESCRIPTIONS IN COMBINATION

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the minister of health and welfare. Has his attention been drawn to a decision by the food and drug administration of the United States to halt the sale of six prescription drugs which combine the use of antibiotics and other drugs in fixed ratios? If so, does the minister intend to take similar action and prohibit the sale of these drugs? I can give the minister the names if he does not have them.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I believe that this matter is presently under investigation by the food and drug directorate and I shall be happy to reply to the hon. member in further detail later.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

REASSESSMENT OF DESIGNATED AREA BOUNDARIES

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary and is addressed to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. Prior to the Christmas recess the minister stated that the regional development program was being reassessed. I refer in particular to the boundaries of designated areas. I wonder whether the minister will make a statement to the house today as to when this reassessment will be completed and we can expect a report on the matter.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Not before the new law comes before the house, Mr. Speaker.

HARBOURS

ROBERTS BANK, B.C.—DIVISION OF CONTROL BETWEEN GOVERNMENTS

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Would the Minister of Transport make a statement on motions—I hope in the near future—about what has been finally decided as to the relationship between the federal government and the government of British Columbia in regard to the ownership and control regulation in connection with Roberts Bank, particularly in view of the recent act of the government of British Columbia of outlining the railroad and expropriating an additional 2,200 acres on either side of it.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to do this immediately. As my hon. friend is aware I have suggested—and I hope this will be followed through almost at once—that the report prepared by some of my officials in respect to the management and control of harbours be referred to the house committee on transportation, giving that committee the opportunity to consider the report and the implications of the various kinds of participation that are possible.

Following this the committee may care to make recommendations to the house or to the government; but whether it does or does not, I think that after the question has been aired and evidence has been given the government will then be in a position to decide what its own long range policy should be and to negotiate with the government of British Columbia within that context. Following that I will be glad to give my hon. friend a precise answer to his question.

Mr. Winch: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that a study will be made by the committee and a report made, will this conflict in any way with the action taken by the British Columbia government of expropriating property and outlining the railroad?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, there is no conflict whatever. What is at issue is the ultimate organization, management, administration and control of port authorities on the west coast.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FARM MACHINERY SYNDICATES CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENTS TO BROADEN PURPOSES OF LOANS, ENABLE CO-OPERATIVE ASSOCIATIONS TO OBTAIN LOANS, ETC.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture) moved the second reading and reference to the standing committee on agriculture of Bill No. C-112, to amend the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this Bill C-112 was introduced in the house some time ago, indeed in October, at which time there was a debate on many of its aspects, as there was also on the other credit bills that went through. However, I intend to propose a very important amendment to the bill; it will be to clause 3 and will be moved when we get into committee. Perhaps there are one or two other things I ought to say in response to some of the questions and comments that were made during the debate on the resolution stage. At that time there was a resolution stage for this type of bill.

When introducing the resolution preceding this bill I made a general statement with regard to the intent of the amendments, or most of the amendments. This will be found on pages 600 and 601 of Hansard. I do not think I need to elaborate greatly on the statement I made at that time except to give some figures which will indicate the economic advantages to farmers who are purchasing machinery under the provisions of this legislation.

From the time lending started under this act in January, 1965, until September 30 of 1968, 376 syndicates have been formed with 1,512 farmer members. They have received 487 loans for an amount of $4.1 million; and with this amount they have purchased equipment at a cost of about $6.3 million. The average loan per syndicate has been $10,800, and this represents an average loan per farmer member of $2,700. The average equipment purchased per syndicate has been about $16,800. As a result we can see that for an average debt of $2,700, plus $1,500 of his own money—that is for a total investment of $4,200—the farmer member of these syndicates has the use of farm machinery valued at an average of $16,800. I am sure that those of us who are concerned about the costs of operating farm machinery today will recognize the savings which these syndicate members have been able to make by sharing the overhead capital and depreciation costs of their machinery with their neighbours.

I know that many farmers hesitate to make sharing arrangements because such arrangements reduce their independent use of this machinery. Experience has shown, however, that by working out proper agreements in writing in advance of the purchase of machinery farmers generally have been able to overcome the difficulties associated with the sharing of machinery. For example, a large proportion of the machines purchased under this program have been tractors and machines used for the tillage of land, the harvesting of grain and forage; and these generally are items where timeliness of operation is most significant to individual farmers. By purchasing, as syndicates, larger and more modern equipment than each farmer could afford individually and by adequate sharing arrangements our farmers have been able to get their seasonal work done as quickly, and in many cases more quickly, than they would have been able to do had they relied upon the smaller, older and less efficient machines they would have been able to afford as individuals.

The experience of the Farm Credit Corporation with this program has made it clear that the benefits inherent in this program could be extended to many more farmers if loans could be made for the various other purposes outlined in the bill. Other changes, such as the making of direct loans to farming co-operatives, will serve to increase the opportunity of farmers and make it easier for farmers to participate in the benefits offered under this program. When we come to a consideration of clause 3, as I mentioned, I propose to move an amendment to the bill in committee.

On October 29, as reported at page 2196 of Hansard, the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo (Mr. Marchand) asked that I look into the possibility of making syndicate loans available to Indians farming on reservations. The amendment which I propose to move would accomplish this purpose. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if it would be proper for me to provide a few copies of the amendment I propose to move in committee to some hon. members in the house. Of course, I will not attempt to move it until a later stage. If there are some hon. members who wish to look at the amendments I propose to move in committee I would be happy to send copies of those amendments around to them and make them available to the various parties here.

Mr. Baldwin: May I ask a question for the sake of clarification? Will the amendment or amendments to be moved be of such a nature that the resolution preceding the bill, if such a resolution were still part of the procedure, would have to be changed? In other words are these amendments of the kind which would require changes in the resolution if there were still a resolution stage, or do they not relate to the financial aspect of the bill.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, it would be fair to say that if a resolution were still required the change would have to be included in the resolution. Certainly, including loans to Indians on reservations will add to the financial requirement with regard to the operation and administration of the act. For this reason, it might be useful for me to read part of the amendment or amendments I wish to move, so that hon. members will know what is involved when we come to committee stage. At the same time, if the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) is questioning the propriety of our coming along with this amendment now, I do not know the answer to that. The amendment may be slightly at variance with the resolution.

Mr. Baldwin: Is it essential at this stage to secure approval from His Excellency of any change to be made? Would it be necessary to get that approval if the resolution stage were still with us? I will not ask the minister to give an answer now, but he and the government might consider whether anything else is required, bearing in mind the provisions of the constitution and the practise which prevailed, a practise which we have now varied.

Mr. Olson: We will take the hon. member's remarks into consideration and I appreciate his concern because this, in fact, would be a major amendment to the act. I think I ought to explain briefly to hon. members that the amendment here includes provisions that are essentially similar to those that were provided in the amendments to the Farm Credit Corporation bill, where Indians on reservations could become eligible for a loan from the Farm Credit Corporation under that act. The provisions of the amendment here are essentially the same and they will require an agreement with the minister of indian affairs for the same types of loans. Generally speaking, so far as I can determine, and bearing in mind the qualifications that exist when dealing with land that is on Indian reservations, the provisions of the Farm Machinery Syndicates Act will now be made available to Indians on the same basis as they are made available to any other citizens of Canada with the same qualifications.

I think this is a major improvement to the act and I hope hon. members of this house will support the improvements. I hope they will be supported in committee. So, considering the explanation I made at the resolution stage and the contents of the bill, I think that is about all I should say at this stage. I hope we can expedite this matter through the committee so that the provisions of the amendments will be available to the farmers of Canada generally and, specifically, so that the Indians of Canada can also make use of the provisions of the act.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, it is only fitting that these amendments should be brought in at this time and that this rather important form of assistance to the Canadian farming industry be brought up to date as this bill, in general, proposes to do. I am concerned, and I believe this is one of the biggest burdens carried by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), that just easing the supply of credit and the requirements which farmers have to meet in order to get credit are not going to meet the urgent problem of the Canadian farmer today. As the minister himself has said in this house on many occasions during previous debates, just increasing the debt load by making credit more easily available to the farmer is not going to solve his problem. But that does not detract from the importance of the bill before us. However, we must continually remind ourselves of this fact if the farming industry, which is still basic to our economy and national needs, is to remain strong.

The situation of the farmer was impressed upon me the other day when I was talking to one of my constituents who reminded me that as late as 1954, and certainly as long ago as 1948, he was selling barley at $1.40 a bushel. Today, he is selling barley at 75 cents a bushel, yet every cost involved in the farm industry continues to rise.

I have been concerned that the emphasis of the department toward the cost-price situation in which the farmer finds himself is encouraging the development of corporate farming. I notice that one of the amendments to the act setting up the farm syndicate program specifically makes that change. With the economic pressures that we face it is inevitable that there will be a greater degree of co-operative venture and an increase in the number of corporate farms but we recognize, and I think the minister continues to recognize, the fact that the basic strength of Canadian farming has lain in the independence of the individual farmer. The reason farming efficiency has improved in Canada, perhaps to a greater degree than in any other country in the world, lies in the initiative and enterprise that centre in the family farm unit.

Therefore, I would hope that when these amendments are passed, and other policies are enunciated by the government, the emphasis toward corporate farming will not prohibit assistance being given to the family farm unit in its struggle for survival.

Speaking of a specific case that is of concern to me because it relates to the principle of which I have just spoken, I would draw the minister's attention to a group of farmers in my constituency who, a year ago, in an attempt to increase their production efficiency decided to change from the use of dry fertilizer to gaseous fertilizer which has an ammonium nitrate base. This type of fertilizer has been used for a number of years in the United States but we have been slow to adopt its use in Canada.

To use ammonium nitrate as a fertilizer it is necessary to purchase a complete line of equipment, the cost of which is more than any single farmer can bear. In the instance of which I speak a group of farmers, not three but a sizeable number, formed a farm syndicate, and using the facilities of this legislation were able to borrow the money to buy the bulk storage tanks necessary to store this fertilizer on one of their farms. They also bought the pressure tanks that are necessary to transport the fertilizer from the storage tanks to the field applicator unit, as well as the field applicator equipment which injects the fertilizer into the soil below the surface.

This type of equipment was not specifically named in the tariff regulations. Not only was it not specifically named, but certain parts of it were not available in Canada. When clarifying the situation the Department of National Revenue finally came up with the decision that the imported equipment necessary for bulk storage was tax exempt as agricultural equipment. The department also decided that the equipment necessary to inject the fertilizer into the soil was agricultural equipment and free of tax, but decided that the equipment used to transport the fertilizer from the bulk storage tanks to the field applicator was not tax free.

We have tried to clear up this matter through a lengthy correspondence and discussions, yet the Minister of Agriculture in my opinion continues to uphold a vague interpretation of regulations that does not specifically name a particular implement since those regulations were drawn up when such equipment was not known or used. In this case, the group of farmers who formed themselves into a corporate syndicate to take advantage of this legislation and obtain the money necessary to buy the expensive equipment were required to pay customs tariff on certain parts of it.

In my opinion that decision is completely contrary to the spirit of the remarks which the minister has just made when he said the purpose of this legislation is to assist farmers to buy expensive equipment that individually they might not be able to afford. I am speaking specifically of the Red Deer fertilizer co-operative. The assistance which the legislation provides is legitimate and we in this party give basic support to the principle of it.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to pose a few questions to the minister in the hope that he may be able to answer them at this stage of the debate, or at least before we go into committee. First of all, I again raise the question of interest rates. I know that this may not be so pertinent at the present time, but I would point out that although we can continue to provide increasing amounts of capital to our farmers, if interest rates continue to rise it will be impossible even for the most efficient farmer to continue.

It is all right to say that farmers don't sharpen their pencils well enough when they buy equipment and therefore they over purchase; but if we expect the farming industry to do what we know no other industry in Canada does, that is increase its efficiency to not only offset the rise in the cost of living which has taken place over the last 20 years but also to overcome other inflationary pressures, then it is imperative that farmers receive every possible consideration.

• (3:20 p.m.)

I say that because I do not think the farmers in Canada are looking for subsidies nor does the minister or anyone else involved in agriculture want that kind of agricultural policy. I trust however, that the minister is watching this very carefully. This is not a long term type of capital financing; it is short term. I believe everything possible must be done to keep the interest rate down on this type of loan. I am a little concerned over one of the new amendments relating to the security required for a loan of this type. I hope the minister has no intention of requiring other security, as referred to in the amendment, than that which was contained in the original legislation and which is provided by the equipment to be purchased with the funds that are available.

[Mr. Thompson (Red Deer).]

I am not sure whether new section 3(2)(b) is as clear as it was in the original act, but I trust the minister might be able to make a very clear statement in this regard. I do not believe the security required under the provisions of this act should in any way affect the situation in which the farmer finds himself in respect to the over-all matter of credit. I think the suggestion that $15,000 be the maximum amount of money allowable for each member of a syndicate is reasonable, at least for the time being, and should meet the needs of the farmers.

I have another question with regard to financing. In some of the changes introduced in this bill I note there is to be established another review board to be known as the Farm Machinery Syndicate Loan Fund. I would hope this new provision will be on the basis of a revolving fund. I notice that the minister, in outlining the success there has been in the use of the provisions of this legislation, mentioned that a total of $6.3 million has been given out in loans and that the resources established by this legislation are set at a maximum of $25 million.

I would hope that in the provision for the farm machinery syndicate loan fund the revolving fund principle will be maintained. I think it is not only imperative that this be done in so far as using the initial resources in a continuing way is concerned but also that it is imperative if interest rates are to be kept down. I should like to draw this to the attention of the minister. I believe he would agree with me on this. He has agreed with me on this principle in times past; that is, when you place back into the fund the money that is being repaid on loans already made you are developing an internal financing picture which makes the final cost of interest less vital than if you have to bring in new capital every time a new increase in money is required under the legislation. Let us recall that the original legislation set up a revolving fund. I wonder whether the minister would clarify this point and make sure that this will be the continuing situation under these changes which are being brought about in clause 5.

I note also in section 9 the words "farming corporation" have been added. I have no objection to that. Farming corporations are as legitimate as any other form of farming operation. I believe it is necessary to include them in the provisions of this bill, but let us not leave out the family farm unit. If we are to place complete emphasis on the corporate or large co-operative type of farming operation I think we will defeat the very thing which has been the basis of the strength and ability of the farming industry to carry on as it has.

There are some other questions I should like to raise during the course of the discussion in committee.

Mr. Olson: May I ask the member a question. He referred to section 9. I do not seem to be able to find that. Is the hon. member referring to Bill C-112?

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): I am actually looking at page 5 of the bill, Mr. Minister, the bold number 6. It refers to paragraph (b) of section 9 of the act being repealed.

Mr. Olson: It is clear now.

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): In principle, we are happy to lend our support to this bill with the provision that these amendments are intended to strengthen not only the purpose of the legislation but also the very difficult position in which the farmers of Canada find themselves today. I would hope also that the specific question I raised in respect of adjusting some of the tariff regulations with regard to equipment available to the operator through this legislation might also be clarified favourably for the benefit of the farmers. This is a small but very vital point which I believe means a great deal in respect of the morale and ability of the farmer to carry on an effective, economic operation.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to thank the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) for indicating to the house his intention to move an amendment to this bill which would add a provision whereby people of Indian ancestry will qualify for loans under this legislation. I really want to welcome the minister's action in this regard because I think possibly it might indicate the possibility that the minister has taken a new year's resolution to show somewhat more responsiveness to the needs of the agricultural industry and the needs of those who are engaged in agriculture. This did not seem to be evident on some occasions in the old year. I hope that this spirit of responsiveness will extend throughout the year. I can assure the minister that members in this part of the house will certainly cooperate with him in an effort to find solutions to the problems.

I wish to make one comment with regard to the wording of the amendment which the minister circulated among some members of the house. I think it is sad that once again the minister finds himself in the position of having to present as an amendment a clause which stipulates that there must be agreement between the Farm Credit Corporation and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) in order to make loans available to the Indian people rather than enabling the Indian people themselves to take necessary action to enter into such arrangements. I do not place the responsibility for this on the shoulders of the minister. I realize that this is not the case. I think, however, that once again we should take note that just as in the case of amendments to the Farm Credit Act, it has been found necessary to use this particular approach rather than the more desirable approach of enabling the Indian people themselves to have control and direction over their own affairs. I hope we will see some change in this situation in the near future when the revisions to the Indian Act, which are expected some time later this year, are presented to the house. I hope we will see a fundamentally new approach in dealing with this problem.

I should like to make a few comments about the legislation before us at the present time. Certainly I think we in this group will approve the extension of its provisions to cooperative farms. I also note that reference has been made to farm corporations. Of course, a farm corporation is a legal instrument for carrying on farming operations which is gaining wider acceptance at this time. As a legal entity I think it should not necessarily be criticized, but at the same time, when the term "farm corporations" is included in legislation such as this, it might enable people the government had not intended to help to take advantage of the legislation. I refer to people whose principal occupation is not farming. These people may be in a position to take advantage of such legislation, and I hope the minister is in a position to assure the house that this in fact will not be the case under the terms of this measure.

We in this part of the house can also approve the extension of this legislation to include loans for buildings. There is no argument in respect of the rationale involved in this. We can also similarly approve the extension of the term of loans for up to 15 years.

Let me note as well, however, the possible problems which may arise in connection with the security being requested for loans made under this act. I realize that there are problems in respect of obtaining the necessary security for loans to purchase farm machinery, equipment and other items under a syndicate arrangement. There is provision for promissory notes on these loans. I should like to ask again whether this will unduly restrict the credit position of those individual members of the syndicate who will have to sign a promissory note for the loan and in fact take some responsibility for the entire loan.

Let me refer for a moment to some of the operations of the farm syndicate credit act as it will be known after these amendments are passed. The annual report of the Farm Credit Corporation for 1967-68, in reporting on the operations of the act under the old name, Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act, noted that the objective of this legislation is to help farmers overcome the high cost of individual ownership of farm machinery. I think members can have sympathy with this objective. They will go along with it as a basic principle as long as the operation of the act is consistent with that principle and as long as the legislation helps those who need help. I have in mind those farmers the government intends to help through this legislation.

On September 30, when the minister first introduced this legislation at the resolution stage, he made reference to the fact that from the inception of lending on January 1, 1965 until the end of July, 1968 some 444 loans had been made to 346 syndicates. Thus, there were some 98 instances where a second or third loan was taken out by a syndicate which had previously obtained a loan. As the minister suggested, this is an indication that this legislation has found acceptance among some people who have already made use of it, in that they have come back for a second or third loan.

Let me draw the minister's attention to some of the figures appearing in the table on page 13 of the annual report of the Farm Credit Corporation wherein there is a summary of the operations of the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act. This table indicates the number of loans made in each province, together with the amount. As a result of a little simple arithmetic we can see there is a disparity in the average size of loan in each province across Canada. We note, for instance, that the four loans in the Atlantic provinces average some $11,000. The 132 loans in Alberta totalling $1,324,000 represent an average of $10,000. The average in respect of Quebec is $9,500. The average in Ontario is $7,500; in British Columbia, almost $5,500, and in Saskatchewan and Manitoba it is somewhere around $4,500. This difference in the average size of loans is not consistent with the differences that exist in the scale of farming operations in the provinces at this time.

In addition, I must also note that it is difficult to measure or determine what was the average size of the loans to the 346 syndicates which have taken advantage of the legislation. This is because some syndicates have in fact obtained more than one loan.

The question is raised, therefore, as to whether these loans are being directed to or obtained by the people who really need them. I have nothing against loans averaging some $10,000 being made to people in the Atlantic provinces. In many cases this is necessary. I must note, first of all, that there were only four loans made and that the average size was much higher than was the case in other provinces.

As has been suggested before, we must look at this legislation to see who is benefiting. We have a high average loan level in the province of Alberta. It has been suggested that this results from the fact that certain large farm operators in that province, including some near the city of Calgary, have taken considerable advantage of this legislation. They were certainly legally entitled to do so, but are these the people this legislation is intended to help? These facts do raise a question about the use of this legislation.

If Canada is to obtain the greatest possible benefit from this legislation, it should be integrated with general rehabilitation programs in rural areas, especially ARDA programs. This will require extension to encourage the use of these programs. Co-ordination with other programs and considerable attention by administrators to the whole question of administration will also be required.

As was noted during the resolution stage, interest rates are now determined by the governor in council on the basis of what may be considered economic rates. The legislation embodied in the bill before us was originally introduced in conjunction with two other measures last fall, both of which involved an increase in interest rates. This bill did pass the resolution stage on October 3 last and has been on the order paper since then. At this time, some three months later, we are finally considering second reading. The delay was not the result of any opposition from members on this side to proceeding with the bill.

Since this bill passed the resolution stage during late September and early October we have received a number of announcements from the government. First of all, we had an announcement by the Minister of Agriculture on November 15 in which he indicated that the Farm Credit Corporation interest rate under the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act was being amended to reflect the current interest level. This is a very nice way of saying the interest rate is being put up. The Minister of Agriculture stated that loans under this act would now carry an interest rate of 1 per cent above the average yield on Government of Canada treasury bills. He went on to state that the average loan will cost 7½ per cent per annum and that the rate of interest on syndicate loans will also be established on a semi-annual basis. Judging from recent developments, I do not doubt that interest rates under this act will go up again at the next revision of the act.

The minister also announced new interest rates under the Farm Credit Act. He indicated that the rate would now be 7¾ per cent.

• (3:40 p.m.)

We had a great deal of difficulty during discussion of the Farm Credit Act in obtaining any commitment or indication from the minister as to what the interest rate under the Farm Credit Act would be as a result of the legislation then before the house. On the same day the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) made an announcement in which he indicated that interest rates under the Farm Improvement Loans Act would be 7¾ per cent for land purchase loans and 7½ per cent for all other loans. Thus, in both cases, interest rates were raised to a point where they are now over 50 per cent higher than those which had prevailed for a long period of time. No wonder the minister seemed to be rather hesitant at that time in letting the house in on the little secret as to just what the interest rates might be.

Mr. Olson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, that statement is not true. I said consistently, very firmly and positively that the rate would not be more than 1 per cent above the cost of the money to the government.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, I agree that the minister did give that indication, but he seemed very loath to quote any figure that would indicate what the interest rate would be to the farmer. In the final analysis, this is what interests the farmer. I point out that since this bill was discussed at the resolution stage farm prices have remained the same and in some cases have gone down. The Canada-wide index of prices of agricultural products shows that from August to October there was a drop from 305.4 to 300.00. This is a drop of 5.4 in the index figure within a period of two months. The October figure is the most recent one available to us. This drop is larger than the normal seasonal drop that takes place at this time of the year.

At the same time farm costs have continued to increase; they increased in 1968 for the three different periods of time in which a measurement was taken. In January the index figure was 367.6. The composite index of commodities and services used by farmers, exclusive of the living component, which provides a true index figure with regard to costs of production, was 367.6 in January and by April it had risen to 388.9. In August it had risen to 394.3. Judging from past experience the August figure will probably be further revised upward on the basis of final information available to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

Thus we can already see an increase of 27 points in the farm costs index for 1968, and I emphasize that these figures are in respect of less than a year. Therefore the spiral continues—increasing farm costs, and prices staying the same or going down. This policy will certainly not provide a solution to the problems of the agricultural industry. As I indicated in previous discussions on this bill and others, we cannot in this house isolate the farm credit program from other measures and policies designed to deal with the agricultural situation. The minister on one occasion seemed to think that the problem would be dealt with in this bill. The provision of credit, without other measures to stabilize the agricultural industry and to ensure an adequate level of income to those in the industry, will result in long run harm to the industry. It will result in a basic problem in respect of the whole economy of this country.

Thus I hope the government will see its way clear in the future to taking a firmer line with regard to the interest rate structure applying to this bill and to the other agricultural measures which have been considered in the house this session. It is certainly in the interests of agriculture that this be done. The farmers of this country and other Canadians will judge the government on the basis of whether they take action on this problem.

Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I wish first of all to congratulate the minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) for the new bills introduced in the house these last few days. If he keeps on, and I hope he does, it will perhaps be possible to call 1969 the year of agriculture. And I am convinced that he will manage to introduce legislation more up-to-date and concrete than that which is perhaps still prompted by petty financial interests. I am confident that the minister, as a former Social Crediter, will take into account the principles which he has been taught over the years and that he will remain within the limits of justice.

Now, Mr. Speaker, may I say that we are essentially in favour of this bill, although we would have hoped for a legislation more suited to the present requirements. Naturally, bill C-112, to amend the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act, will please the farmers who are still in a position to go into debt, because that is what those bills necessarily mean. And I always fear, Mr. Speaker, when discussing loans to industry and farmers, that we may play into the hands of financial interests instead of helping the farmer. As a matter of fact, at least I believe so, we are here first of all to protect the farmer.

To use finance is a very good thing, but to use it for the farmer's benefit is much better. Whenever an increase in interest rates is announced—as it has constantly happened in the last few years, because interest rates are going up at such a giddy speed that it has even become impossible to give them a fixed value in an act—the minister must be given full freedom to watch the day-to-day increase of such interest rates so as to be able to accept the lenders' as well as the financiers' decisions. Here, we are rather, I am afraid, the tools of that finance, whereas we should curb such an increase in interest rates. Such a task rests upon the government.

The consideration of those bills would therefore give us the best opportunity possible to set at last an interest rate that would really help the farmer. It is for that reason that when the rate increase was considered in this house, we spoke in favour of upholding the former rates and proposed that the difference resulting from the financiers' requirements be assumed by the government. We lost our case. Farmers will have to pay 8, 8½, 9, 9½ per cent and, tomorrow, 10 per cent. I say, Mr. Speaker, that we are not helping the farmer at all; this is far from being a gift, as I was told during the Christmas holidays; I met various groups of farmers and some of them told me: We have had enough of loans, we are fed up with interest charges that whittle down our incomes more and more.

I think those farmers were absolutely right, for when we consider their budget, we realize that the average farmer—I am not thinking of the industrial farmer—cannot possibly pay 9½ per cent interest. Loans are being granted to a category of citizens which is thought to be capable of borrowing still. In a few years probably, four at the very most, it will be realized that they were led to disaster, while those who even now cannot borrow, are breathing their last.

I take this opportunity to ask the minister whether he really wants to help the farmer, and do what is being done in the case of underdeveloped countries. If so, the farmer should be granted subsidies to enable him to buy agricultural equipment without having to turn to big finance and going deeper into debt. I feel we would be doing something constructive if we granted him subsidies for the purchase of his equipment, while expecting him to finance the balance. I feel that a bill in that sense would be the most logical the Minister of Agriculture could introduce, and I can assure him that if he were to do it he would remain Minister of Agriculture for many years to come. Indeed, what the farmer needs now is help and not a way of going into debt.

I should also like to ask the minister whether, for instance, he could not grant subsidies for the purchase of cooling tanks. Since last summer, many farmers in our area have purchased them. All processing plants require that the farmers have them; they really cannot do it without going into debt for five, eight or even ten years. I feel that it would be a wonderful opportunity to help the farmers by granting them, let us say, 50 per cent of the cost of those cooling tanks, so that they might make ends meet without imposing too many sacrifices on their families. Or else, those who want to borrow and can do so to purchase cooling tanks should be able to do it under the terms of that provision in the bill that applies to machinery syndicates. Several farmers have urged me to ask the minister to introduce, in the near future, a bill to help them directly by granting subsidies for the purchase of cooling tanks.

In fact, we know, and the minister and the government know it as well, that 90 per cent of the farmers owe money today for the purchase of machines too expensive for their operations. I think the syndicate will alleviate that poverty to some extent and I am sure that several farmers in our area will be able to take advantage of this policy. I cannot imagine a syndicate made up of two or three foreign farmers. I rather think that it is going to be at the family level—family syndicates—and it is a good idea, in my opinion, to provide these unions with loans more within their reach. However, I say it once again, they are unhappy about the interest rates for they do not know today, nor will they know in a couple of months, what interest rates they will have to pay for those loans.

Finally, I want also to say a few words about the last amendment introduced by the Minister. Incidentally I am very satisfied with the new house procedure. The people will perhaps notice that the members speak in lesser numbers and that there are not so many lengthy speeches because we have eliminated that famous resolution stage which I have always loathed and which caused a double waste of time whenever we discussed a bill. We shall now proceed right away to the second reading and we shall thereafter refer the bill to the Committee on agriculture.

I sit on that committee, together with one of my colleagues, and I think our work will be much more effective. I also think that the waste of time will be reduced by far if matters dealing with agriculture are considered by the committee instead of being discussed in the house before two-thirds of the members who are not interested.

I congratulate the government and Parliament for adopting this new procedure. I shall now come back to the minister's amendment concerning the reserves. I believe it is high time to treat the Indians as full-fledged Canadians.

I have always deplored this attitude in the Canadian legislation; whenever the reserves were concerned, it was just as if it were a different world.

I am sure that several farmers I know who are now living on the reserve in my riding, will be glad to hear about this amendment. The Indians of all the reserves in Canada will also welcome it. They must fully participate in Canadian life and they should enjoy the same privileges as all the other Canadians.

They will probably have to put up with its drawbacks, just as the others do, because some day, the interest rates might catch up with them too. However, we hope that some Minister of Finance will come and check the greed of these hawks of finance so that we may really help the Canadian citizen and improve his welfare.

[English]

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few moments to say a few words on Bill C-112, to amend the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act. First, I would like to congratulate the government on accepting the amendment suggested by the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo (Mr. Marchand) making it possible for Indian bands to participate under this legislation. I can assure the minister and the house that I and my party are in full accord with this amendment. I find it hard to understand why it was not incorporated in the orginal bill.

The Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act is a very important piece of legislation. I have always wondered why farmers did not band together more often in the operation of their farms in order that their machinery may be used for a longer period. We hear about farmers paying $8,000, $10,000 or $12,000 for machinery which is being used during a very short time, whereas if the cost were spread over a longer period of time it would help those who participate under this act to meet the increasing costs of operation.

The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) gave us a lot of facts and figures in connection with the cost-price squeeze in which so many farmers find themselves, so I shall not touch too closely on that subject. However, I should like to talk for a little while about the cost of machinery. I raised this subject a few weeks ago when we were discussing tariffs in connection with the Kennedy Round. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gray) told me then that the practice which has grown up in Ontario whereby farmers go over to England, enter into private agreements with English farmers and bring back tractors to Canada at great savings, is continuing. It is hard to understand why it should be necessary for individual farmers to go through this procedure when we have dealers and companies operating in Canada to sell and distribute this machinery. One cannot blame the farmers for making their own arrangements. As I said a few weeks ago, the first transaction I heard about involved seven tractors being brought to Canada at a saving of $20,000, well over $2,000 a tractor.

Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act

During the Christmas recess I found that a great many farmers in my own area were highly interested in this arrangement. Some of them are going through the same process either travelling to England themselves or sending agents to arrange for the importation of these tractors. I understand no duty is payable on them because they are in the category of farm equipment, and that no question of dumping arises because virtually no tractors are made in Canada at the present time.

I hope the minister will instruct the commission which is presently looking into this whole question of farm machinery prices to give special attention to the fact that tractors very similar to those being sold in Canada can be obtained so much more cheaply abroad. This is an important matter. After all, there are dealers in this country who have been selling tractors to Canadian farmers for a long time, and doing a good job. They are sound businessmen but now they find that some of their business is being lost because their customers prefer to go to England to buy tractors there.

This might even be a subject for inquiry by the Department of Justice. These are transactions which can be carried forward by individual farmers and I do not see why these reduced costs should not be available to all Canadian farmers who wish to buy tractors. I sincerely hope the minister will look into this question seriously and if necessary obtain the advice of the Department of Justice to determine whether anything is going on which is unfair or unjust to Canadian consumers, to ensure if possible that consumers are protected and that these lower priced tractors are available to all the farmers of Canada.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): At the outset, Mr. Speaker, let me say that this approach to lending to farmers is a good approach. I refer to syndicate or joint buying facilities. For instance, had this legislation been in effect earlier, farmers might very well have bought grain dryers under this system, enabling them to meet the present need.

As previous speakers have pointed out, this scheme is being extended to people of Indian descent so that they, too, may take advantage of loans of this type, an arrangement which will probably fit in very well with their approach to farming. Unfortunately the measure brings with it the highest interest rate in living memory for loans of this type, and this interest burden will be added to farm costs at a time when those costs are already inordinately high.

In my view, the government should be concerned about whether the farm industry will really be able to carry the credit which is being extended to it. Take, for example, a report which appeared in the Star-Phoenix this month, in which we read that farm implement dealers in the present crop year find themselves with very high accounts receivable. One dealer says he is okay for the next few months although his banker has been warning him to "watch it". This is the type of credit position we have to consider. I do not blame the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson). He is locked into the government's policy, a policy under which the ceiling was removed from bank rates some time ago. We were told then that it was intended to depend on competition to control interest rates, and that this competition would probably bring those rates eventually to a level satisfactory to the people of Canada.

Well, from the seat I sit in, it looks as though the competition is not awfully strong. We are still faced with increasingly high interest rates, and those rates, as I have said, are a charge on the overall operations of farmers. I do not observe that a great deal is being done on the other side of book to deal with farm sales and farm income.

A farm machinery commission has been sitting, now, for going on two years. While the commission continues its discussions some place, somewhere, taking evidence, going around the country, Ontario farmers, as the previous speaker has just told us, are solving the problem themselves by going to England and buying tractors there at prices far cheaper than those existing in Canada. Other farmers are hiring trucks to go below the border and haul fertilizer up to Canada because they can buy it cheaper in the United States. This should be an indication of the amount of competition which exists in Canada, whether in interest rates, in sales of farm machinery or in sales of fertilizer. This is a problem with which the government must come to grips; it will have to recognize the fact that the competition which is so often talked about simply does not exist.

On the other side of the coin, provision has been made to set up a grains council in Saskatoon. This Council will be another debating society where people will sit and cogitate, dream up plans of research which may or may not be carried out, and dream up plans for promotion which may or may not be put into effect. If these things were intended to be done they could be done right now. All the machinery in terms of government already exists to meet both the situations I have mentioned as far as the farmer is concerned. Machinery already exists for the investigation of monopolies, whether in the farm machinery industry or in the fertilizer industry. On the grain selling end there are already plenty of research establishments; all they need is the money and a direction from government to get going. The Board of Grain Commissioners has facilities for dealing with the research end, and the Canadian Wheat Board is able to look after sales. All we need in both cases is for the government to say: Here is the money; here are the men; get on with the job. Such arrangements are part and parcel of the lending program. I do not think that farmers, any more than anybody else, can "borrow themselves rich"; it just does not happen. There is not much point in farmers borrowing a lot of money if the actual structure of their farming operations is not such as to carry the loans, pay the interest and leave the farmers in a good sound operating position. Therefore, I plead with the Minister of Agriculture to give these other aspects the very thorough consideration and attention that he has given the credit program since the commencement of this session of parliament. If he will do so and bring proposals in connection therewith before the house, then the farming industry may be able to look with more confidence to the future.

• (4:10 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few remarks about the bill now under study. I would just like to point out that the proposed changes to section 2 seem to answer the need, I think, for three people to form a farming union in the legal sense and to be recognized as such in order to raise loans so as to finance farm mechanization.

Even if it is an advantage for farmers to unite towards that end, they should not fall into the opposite excess.

Let us then admit that the small ancestral farm, with its insufficient buildings and its diversified husbandry is submarginal and inadequate because it can no longer meet the normal demands of agricultural efficiency, nor face the imperatives of a society oriented towards an aim which it becomes constantly more expensive to achieve.

However, to assume that the family farm, as such, is doomed to a complete disappearance would seem exaggerated. In Quebec as elsewhere, we shall witness some day a transformation of sorts, a certain gathering of lands under the direction of a few partners.

But nothing proves that they will be, "in majority terms", so much more efficient than the present system of our excellent average family farms. If the State grants credit facilities for mechanization, well and good, but we must always observe a happy medium.

It would also be a good policy to have a 5 per cent ceiling on the rate of interest for these loans, because the farming industry has not got revenues as high and as stable as the other sectors of our economy.

The fact that the rate of interest is unknown for this kind of loans is a risky business. While in the agricultural and other fields, it is necessary to budget to see one's way clear, the revenues of agriculture are too low to enable the farmers to pay a high rate of interest.

Why should the same people be penalized all the time? Let bankers and financiers do their part. They have grossed over a billion dollars profits in the last year, which seems all right to me. Moreover, the price of farming machinery is too high and it is high time for the State to become aware of what is going on.

I do think that, it would be in order to add to this legislation—I beg the minister to take note of this suggestion—a group insurance plan for the payment, at the death of a member, of his share of the loan granted to the syndicate. Then, the other members would not have to bear the loss resulting from the death of one of their members.

The minister quoted figures so as to establish how many pieces of machinery have been bought by the syndicates under the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act. These statistics are interesting. However, the last edition of the annual report of the Farm Credit Corporation, clearly establishes that eastern farming differs from western farming.

In fact, in the province of Alberta in 1967, 38 syndicates borrowed $495,405 to purchase 424 machines while in Quebec 30 syndicates borrowed $247,851 to purchase 220 farm machines. It would be impossible, in the field of agriculture in Quebec to set up very large farms because it is mainly centered upon the dairy industry.

To be economical this kind of operation, ought not to go over a certain level. Farm Economy in Canada, Volume III, page 51, bears this out.

Decreases have been recorded in all parts of Canada except in Quebec and in British Columbia. In Quebec, the number of cows has increased by nearly 2 per cent. The number of heifers has increased by 11 per cent which more than offset the decreases in all other areas. This is why I state positively that it will be difficult to expect the setting up of large communities as in the western provinces, Quebec or the Atlantic provinces.

Therefore, I wish for the farmers during the year 1969 an increase in their income which would enable them to borrow less and yet to develop normally and to survive. With better prices and better farming methods, it will certainly be possible to increase their incomes. But if those incomes are offset by borrowings at excessive interest rates, things will not improve and the Quebec agriculture will not be able to make progress according to the wishes of the people, the government, and especially the farmers themselves.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. If the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I will not take very long to answer some of the questions that were raised during the debate.

First, the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) outlined some of the problems his constituents were having with regard to tariffs or perhaps he also said with regard to excise tax on some equipment that they had purchased. I am not sure that this kind of problem can be, or is even intended to be, resolved by Bill C-112 that is presently before the house. The problem of the application of these taxes rests, of course, with the Minister of Finance in so far as matters such as the budget and the making of laws are concerned; and the interpretation of the laws and the collecting of moneys rest with the Minister of National Revenue and his staff. I would like to say to the hon. member that there is not a general exemption for all farmers for all things they purchase. There is a schedule of items that are exempt from taxes that my hon. friend mentioned. There is also provision for exempting certain items beyond those that are mentioned specifically when certificates are produced. My hon. friend knows that. However, I do not believe that within the context of bill C-112 this problem can be resolved. I admire the hon. member's ingenuity in airing his grievances in this debate but I doubt whether I can be helpful if I am to adhere to the rules of relevancy, which I always attempt to do.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): May I ask a related question, Mr. Speaker. I shall try to adhere to the rules of relevancy. The money involved in the purchase of equipment is granted as a result of the provisions of the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act. That act must be interpreted by the Minister of Finance as well as by the Minister of National Revenue. Whenever there is a questionable item that may not be included under the regulations I would expect the Minister of Agriculture, who has acknowledged that he has goodwill towards farmers, to use whatever influence he has, which is considerable, with other departments of government in helping the farmers with their problems.

Mr. Olson: I am not sure of the level of influence I enjoy but I can assure my hon. friend that it is the full time occupation of the Minister of Agriculture to be helpful in all matters of concern to farmers.

The hon. member said that I had mentioned the fact that there was overcapitalization in the farm sector of our economy so far as capital costs, and so on are concerned. I was speaking of those costs as they relate to the costs of operation. I still hold to my former opinion. In many cases there is indeed overcapitalization on farms. I say that because of the size of some units in relation to the amount of machinery that has been purchased to operate them. Costs of operation, of course, include the interest and depreciation involved in that capitalization. I make no apology for my opinion; it is my opinion. Although I do not say this situation applies generally to all farmers, it does apply to many farmers.

The hon. member also mentioned that the bill calls for such security as the corporation may require for any loan. In the old legislation the relevant wording was found in section 3(2)(b):

> —such other security, including a mortgage on the farm machinery purchased with the loan, as the Corporation may require.

The present wording is not new. The legislation has been modified in order to benefit farmers. I share the hon. member's concern for the family farm and I think that the amendments to be made to the Farm Credit Act will enhance the position of the family farm in many respects. Indeed, this bill is not particularly and specifically adapted to the family farm as a unit operating by itself. This bill deals with the syndicate and provides for a farm corporation, such as a family farm, to be part of the syndicate. It insures that there may be a co-operative use of machinery whenever the operators of the family farm join with other farm operators, if that is beneficial to them.

The hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) did not like the idea that the Minister of Agriculture through the Farm Credit Corporation would have to enter into agreements with the minister responsible for Indian affairs in order that use could be made of some provisions of this legislation. The answer is that the Minister of Agriculture, as well as the Farm Credit Corporation, must abide by legal requirements respecting security, particularly when public funds are involved, as they are here. Therefore, we must bear in mind the legality of the security we take, and that is the reason for the wording of the bill. That is also why similar wording was included in the amendments to the Farm Credit Act.

Questioning whether those who most need the provisions of the legislation would benefit by them, the hon. member cited some cases where in or around Calgary some successful farmers had availed themselves of the provisions of the Farm Credit Act. Really, the hon. member answered his own question, since those people had a complete legal right to avail themselves of the act. I want to say clearly that we must not set up legislation which will discriminate against successful farmers. Indeed, we intend that the legislation we introduce will assist in making all farmers more successful. Therefore I really could not follow the hon. member's argument. I think I answered his query about why the Minister of Agriculture was reluctant to say what interest rates with respect to farm loans would be. I said all through the debate that took place last fall that the interest rate would be no more than 1 per cent above the cost of the money to the government. That is what it was, and I said that very positively. Anyone who took the trouble to learn what the current interest rate was at that time would have known that this was so. I also said clearly and positively that the rate would be adjusted from time to time, and "time to time" has worked out to mean every six months.

The hon. member quoted statistics and did something I did when I was in opposition. He took them out of context in order to make his argument more plausible. It is not enlightening to others when one quotes statistics taken from one month to another. If the hon. member had wanted to be fair, not only to this government but to farmers generally, he would have used statistics covering a much wider range. Although I do not have the relevant document in front of me, I believe he said that the index of farm receipts was at 305 for September and had decreased to about 300 for October. He neglected to mention that that index was some 3 points higher than for the same period last year. That is what happens when you select your statistics and take them over a short space of time. To be fair, I think we ought to see what the total cash receipts were for farmers. I have in front of me a document which gives that information for the years 1963 to 1968. I think you must take these averages over a broader period in order for them to be meaningful. Total cash receipts for the first half of each year from 1963 until 1968 were as follows. For the first half of 1963 farm cash receipts—that is total cash receipts—were $1.443 billion. For 1964 they were $1.6 billion. For 1965 they were $1.7 billion. For 1966 they were $1.9 billion and for 1967 they were $2.1 billion. You can see the steady increase ever since this party took over the reins of government in—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is 25 per cent inflation.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Olson: The average for the first six months of all those years is, therefore, $1.793 billion with respect to total farm receipts. For the first six months of those years total farm receipts were $1.793 billion, and in 1968 the figure was $2.1 billion. Significant increases were shown all the way, and indeed this includes the latest year.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): May I ask a question of the minister?

Mr. Olson: Certainly.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Are these in constant dollars, or do these reflect the 25 per cent devaluation in the purchasing power of the dollar?

Mr. Olson: There we go again, Mr. Speaker, with these statistics that don't mean anything. The hon. member mentions a 25 per cent devalued dollar. I would ask between what years?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Between 1963 and 1968.

Mr. Olson: These are current dollars, Mr. Speaker, but even if you take the figure for the first half of 1963 at $1.4 billion, which happened to be the last part of the reign of my hon. friend's government, and then take the figure for the first half of 1968 at $2.1 billion you will find there is a significant increase over and above the 25 per cent change in the value of the dollar, if that percentage is correct and I question that it is. That is the problem when you select figures and just average them. I suggest to the hon. member for Regina East that he ought to be fair with these selective statistics. We also have ways and means of looking at these statistics.

The hon. member for Wellington-Grey (Mr. Howe) asked why this amendment qualifying Indians on reservations for the provisions of the legislation was not introduced previously. I do not know what the answer is. I suppose we could also ask why Indian farmers were not included in the F.C.C. legislation when it was introduced in 1959 and 1960. I do not know why, but when we see these weaknesses in the act we try to correct them as rapidly as we can. Perhaps we could ask why this amendment was not introduced in 1964 and 1965, but I am grateful for the opportunity to bring it in now and I think it will receive general support from members of the house.

The hon. member also raised the question of farmers importing machinery directly from England. He asked us to investigate the reasons for the wide difference in the price the farmers were paying for exactly the same type of tractor on sale in England and in Canada, and how farmers could buy a tractor in England, pay the transportation costs and bring it to Canada at a total price substantially less than the price of the same tractor on sale in Canada. We are investigating this matter, Mr. Speaker, and we hope that some publicity will be given the results of the investigation, providing the figures that we have seen quoted in the newspapers are correct. If those figures are substantiated, then of course there is justification for some action to be taken to ensure that this equipment is distributed through the regular machinery distribution channels in Canada at prices in line with the prices in England.

[Mr. Olson.]

The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) asked why some grain dryers had not been purchased under the Farm Syndicate Loans Act. Several weeks ago I was informed of the exact number of dryers bought under the provisions of the act—

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, the minister may not have heard me correctly. I did not question why they were not bought. I said that under this act they probably could be purchased, and that its provisions would be useful for that purpose.

Mr. Olson: I thank the hon. member for clarifying that. I agree with him that not only is the legislation useful for that purpose but has been used for that purpose.

The hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) asked whether or not bulk tanks for milk could be purchased under the provisions of the act. If more than one farmer could use a bulk tank co-operatively, then I see no reason why the legislation's provisions would not cover such a purchase. However, this is a piece of equipment that each individual dairy farmer requires on his own farm for his own use. In a case where more than one farmer was going to make use of a single bulk tank, I see no reason why it could not be bought under the provisions of this act. In many cases, I do not think it would be a practical thing to do.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank hon. members for their contributions to the debate. We shall try to have the answers for many of the other questions raised when the clause by clause consideration of the bill is undertaken in the Standing Committee.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on agriculture.

FINANCE

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND AND EXCHANGE FUND ACCOUNT

Hon. H. A. Olson (for the Minister of Finance) moved the second reading and reference to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs of Bill C-138, to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act and the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act.

Mr. H. E. Gray (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the house will recall that I attempted to deal with the nature and background of this bill in some detail during the debate on its resolution stage last December 3. Therefore, I propose to speak relatively briefly at this time, and it is my hope that the house may wish to expedite second reading so that the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs can begin at an early date its examination of the detailed provisions of the bill and the special drawing rights scheme.

As I pointed out in my earlier remarks the proposals in the bill represent a highly negotiated package, the details of which were negotiated over a protracted period of time and agreed to by an overwhelming majority of the International Monetary Fund's one hundred-odd member governments. Therefore the changes in the articles of agreement of the International Monetary Fund which it proposes constitute what is in effect a single amendment and they should, I think, be looked upon in that way.

The bill furthermore provides for a change in the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act to provide authority for special drawing rights obtained by Canada to be held in the exchange fund account. It is visualized that any special drawing rights, or S.D.R.'s as I will refer to them from now on, thus held by Canada would be included in Canada's official reserves.

The more general point, Mr. Speaker, is that the S.D.R. proposal represents another step forward in the evolutionary development of the international monetary system since the Second World War to which I referred when I spoke on December 3 last. Despite the many critcisms of the system which seem to be in vogue today, one could well be impressed with the system's ability to cope with the major unforeseen developments of recent years in ways which do not impair national or international prosperity. This recent performance may be contrasted with the experience of the past when international monetary developments had much more severe consequences.

There is no denying that the spirit of international monetary co-operation and co-ordination, which has marked the postwar period and which is embodied in the International Monetary Fund, has made possible a rate of growth of world trade and a reduction in barriers to trade which have few if any parallels in history. Canada is a major trading nation and our prosperity depends on world trade to a degree equaled by few other countries in the world today.

We have been a prime beneficiary of this rapid growth of world trade and have every interest in all measures which can facilitate the continued growth of world trade in the future. This is why Canada has participated actively in the liquidity discussions of recent years and why Canada has given its active support to the special drawing rights proposal.

It would be wrong to suggest, however, that the S.D.R. proposal is more than one step, though a large step, in the process of evolution of the international monetary system. It is not a panacea. There are pressing problems remaining in the international payments scene which cannot be solved solely by the deliberate and orderly creation of international reserves. These problems will need to be solved if short term crises, of which there have been several in the past year or so, are to be avoided. Most of these problems stem from the inadequate operation of the adjustment process. A number of major countries have experienced deficits or surpluses of a persistent and intractable nature in their balance of payments, and these have to be corrected. Hon. members will have noted that this is recognized in the proposed amendment which provides that activation of the S.D.R. scheme is contingent upon the attainment of a better balance of payments equilibrium and the likelihood of a better working of the adjustment process in the future. Under these circumstances, however, the existence of the S.D.R. scheme can ensure that the future growth of trade and payments will not be impeded by a lack of liquid reserves in the system.

The amendment to the articles of agreement of the International Monetary Fund will not come into force until it has been approved and accepted by three fifths of the International Monetary Fund's membership holding at least 80 per cent of the total votes. As of December 31, 1968, 27 member governments with 47.22 per cent of the total votes had approved the amendment. As in the case of Canada, a number of other countries are currently well advanced with the legislative action needed before they can give their approval. I am confident the house would wish the action on this bill to be completed in time for Canada to be among those countries whose approval brings the amendment into effect. I therefore urge the house to give prompt second reading to this very important bill.

Finance

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. parliamentary secretary said, the house considered the resolution on this bill on December 3. Frankly, under the new procedure, one would almost think this stage of debate is superfluous. Therefore I do not think we will take too long. However, having had occasion to read what I said on December 3 I would not change anything I said at that time. I read what the parliamentary secretary said and what the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) said on that occasion also.

At this stage, I should like frankly to emphasize certain aspects of what was said at the time. The parliamentary secretary said that this is a very important bill. I agree with him entirely. After all, Canada is a country which depends a great deal upon its exports, more so perhaps than most countries of the world. Therefore, it is absolutely essential that there be a smooth working of the International Monetary Fund for the benefit of Canada's economic well-being. Any disruption in the international monetary system has an immediate effect on Canada.

The other day the minister was almost cavalier in his, shall we say, disdainful or detached interest in the crisis related to the franc, the mark and the pound. This may have been said in the house or in that other medium of parliamentary administration, television, but if I remember correctly the minister said, "Oh, well, that does not really affect us; it is a crisis over in Europe." As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) just pointed out to me, we are only about five hours away from Europe by air. The crisis is just as much on our doorstep when it is over in Europe as it would be if it involved the dollar. Therefore, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) was all wet when he said this is merely a crisis over in Europe.

Mr. Lind: Can we do much about it?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes; we could do quite a bit about it. There is no such thing as saying, "Well, it does not really affect us; it is over in Europe." There is a great deal we can do. There is a great deal that can be done right within our own economy in keeping our house in order. The hon. member will immediately recognize there is one fundamental basic principle that applies to the whole of the international monetary relations; that is confidence in currency. How is confidence lost? It is lost by reason of the fact that the country in question is mismanaging its affairs and is letting inflation run rampant. We have seen the effect of this. We have seen what has happened in Britain and we have seen what has happened right here in Canada. We will see it again unless the Minister of Finance pulls up his socks in so far as financial administration is concerned.

Some time ago the Minister of Finance had the temerity to appear on television and say he recognized his problems and had the solutions. But since that time, and concurrent with that time, the bond market has been going down and down and the interest rates have been going up.

An hon. Member: All around the world.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): But even in Canada. Why does the minister say he sees the problem and has solved it when he had not seen it and did not even know it. Then, he turns around and exhorts the provinces to cut back on their budgets and expenses and does the same thing with the municipalities. He then has the gall to come into this house and say that our expenses next year will be $900 million higher than last year. That is the reason I suggest to hon. members that we in Canada are in a very vulnerable position on two counts; first of all, because of our high degree of dependence on international trade. If anything happens in respect of world currencies in Britain, France or anywhere and we have import surcharges and restrictions on trade of course we will be hard hit.

Secondly, if our position is not credible, if there is a lack of confidence in the dollar because the government cannot be believed, then we become all the more vulnerable. Frankly, that is the position in which we find ourselves today. Since we last debated this subject one event has happened which I think might be of assistance to the minister. I referred to this in my remarks. I was glad to see an agreement reached by the United States and Canada to remove the ceiling on United States dollar holdings by Canada. I hope this will allow the government to better manage Canada's fiscal affairs, at least in part. But the special drawing rights that are provided in this bill are but a palliative which does not really go to the root of the trouble. I suppose the piling up of one line of reserves may help for a time to shore up confidence in a particular currency or currencies but, as I said before, essentially the real strength of a currency lies in the confidence in this currency in the world market. I pointed out that the degree of confidence is a reflection on the efficiency and skill in the management of a country's affairs.

This is particularly significant when you have mounting inflation as a result of unrestricted government expenditure. We heard the outgoing President of the United States say yesterday that the greatest problem facing that country is inflation. This was not said six months ago, and does not appear to have been recognized. Even the 10 per cent surcharge on income tax appears to have been too little and too late. The United States faces additional factors which lead to inflation but which are not applicable to Canada. That country suffers the terrible expense of a war, and I am not going to refer to the justification or otherwise of that expense, but it does exist. No amount of wishful thinking will wipe that away, and that is one of the chief sources of inflation. The United States also has some very expensive external aid programs which represent a drain on the economy. These expenses under the present circumstances, combined with other factors, may in actual fact prove to be more than that economy can support. This is something else we should consider in determining the level of our external aid.

Having regard to interest rates in this country and their result, let me refer to what was said during this debate on December 3 or shortly thereafter. At that time I was considering what the money market thought about Canada's increasing dependence on the short term market. What were the rates for treasury bills at that time? Let us take a look at the last report of the Bank of Canada and the charts which appear at page 9. We will see that the yield on 182 day bills was not the highest it had ever been, but it was very high. This was immediately after the dollar crisis last spring. The yield was much higher than it was at the beginning of December. The rate went up on 90 day bills to 6.40 per cent from 6.29 per cent on January 7. On 182 day bills the rate went up as high as 6.75 per cent.

Let us look at the interest rate on government loans. The rate is up to 7.30, the highest that I think anybody who is present in this house can ever remember. In considering the terminal dates of these various bonds, we must ask ourselves where these higher rates exist. The answer indicates what the small investor thinks about the long term obligations of the government of Canada at the present rate of inflation. Frankly, they are not worth a great deal. Bonds maturing in 1983 are trading on the market today at $70. This is a terrible reflection on the credit position of this country. These things are only incidental, but they show how important it is that the internal financial matters of this country be handled properly. They should be managed in such a way that others will have confidence in our currency. This confidence is the greatest asset we have in respect of maintaining the value of the Canadian dollar on the international market.

The present bill is lengthy and technical. I make no pretense at this time of being able to find my way through it, but under the new procedures I look forward to the sessions of the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs when we will have officials of the department and the Bank of Canada before us to help us understand it. I invite not only the members of the committee but all hon. members to attend these sessions in order to acquaint themselves with what is happening in the international market and how Canada may be affected by changes in the international monetary position.

The parliamentary secretary has indicated that this measure provides for new reserve assets to supplement gold and reserve currencies in the participating countries' foreign exchange reserves as well as pertinent and related administrative changes in the structure of the International Monetary Fund. It is my understanding that special drawing rights were not to be of a permanent nature. I hope we can get some clarification in this regard.

As I read the bill, participating countries will only be able to avail themselves of these special drawing rights for relatively short periods of time to deal with emergencies. This is not a procedure through which they may deposit funds in special accounts and draw cheques on them. These participating countries will use these special drawing rights under their normal reserves. These reserves will exist, but I suggest they must be clearly identified. A country's foreign exchange reserves should not be lumped together as a number of billions of dollars, or whatever the currency may be. A clear indication should be given as to which are gold reserves and which are other reserve currencies for the purpose of special drawing rights. I may be overly sensitive in this regard and perhaps the parliamentary secretary or the officials of the department will be able to clarify this point, but it would be disastrous if special drawing rights were directly related to the other reserves held by a country in its foreign exchange account without a clear and distinct identification.

Let me suggest at this time that not only are we going to ask for full explanations regarding these changes and how they will affect the situation, we are going to ask for the views of the financial authorities and experts who from time to time have expressed the opinion that a change from a fixed exchange system would be of advantage to Canada. I do not know to what extent they may feel this would be of advantage to the world, but these voices, although relatively few, have been heard.

We have gone through several monetary crises within the last three or four years. We have experienced these crises regularly and with increasing rapidity and intensity within the past two years.

• (5:00 p.m.)

These crises show that the fixed exchange system under which we are operating, based on the U.S. dollar and the pound sterling, has some weaknesses. We know there are weaknesses. We know that these weaknesses become apparent with increasing frequency and intensity. Therefore it behoves us to look for something better. I say to hon. members that we should be prepared now to listen to these people; to the president of the Royal Bank of Canada, for example. It was an odd thing that the late member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands was against the banks in such a deadly fashion. What a strange couple Mr. McLaughlin and Mr. Cameron made, both advocating a free floating dollar.

Mr. Lewis: They will never meet again in the same place.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I do not know where Mr. Cameron is, but I do not think the hon. member suggests he is in a place that is unattainable. There are others to whom the committee should now listen, the economists, the economic advisers to the Bank of Nova Scotia and some of the financial writers, so that the credibility of the case for flexibility may be judged. I suggest that when asking them to appear before us the burden of proving what they advocate, whether it is a free floating dollar or a floating peg, to use the jargon of the financial market—

Mr. Lewis: Crawling peg.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): —is better than the fixed exchange should be upon them. The burden of proof will have to be on them to show that not only that will it benefit Canada but the whole of the international monetary market and financial relationships the world over. It would be rather ridiculous if we simply said: We will put ourselves on a tight, little, safe island and to blazes with the rest.

It may be that they are able to demonstrate the advantages of the system they advocate. I for one would invite some of them to be prepared to come before the committee and explain just what they propose and what advantages they foresee not only for Canada but for the whole of the operations of the international monetary sytem.

I agree that after some of our colleagues have spoken the house should be prepared to accept the motion and the bill should be sent to committee after second reading.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate as a citizen who for many years has attempted to understand the international monetary system and has become increasingly impatient with the morass which it in fact is. One of the points I want to make immediately was emphasized by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) who preceded me. Everyone keeps talking about a currency needing confidence. My hon. friend says that the position of a currency in the international market depends upon the skill and competence with which governments run their countries. I say to him, horse feathers. That is true in some cases, but in many cases the position in the international market of the currency of a country is unrelated in any way whatever to the internal state of the economy of that country. This is the crushing fact and the undesirable consequence of an international monetary system that is really a straitjacket to progress in the world. In what kind of economic, internal difficulties were Canada, the United States and France when their currencies were in some difficulty? None.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Inflation.

Mr. Lewis: My hon. friend says "inflation". Inflation my aunt, in this particular context. The inflationary pressures in these countries were not any greater than those in many other countries whose currencies were not in any difficulty. In fact, the inflationary pressures in the countries I have named were considerably less than those in many other countries which had no currency difficulties. This confidence about which every international monetary spokesman makes long speeches and homilies to the world is a shibboleth. They say we must have confidence in our currency. Who, in heaven's name, destroys that confidence except the people who want to destroy it? The fact is that there is a constant kind of vicious circle in this international monetary morass for which speculators and thoughtless governments are responsible. When they think a currency may be in some difficulty, they try to make money out of it; and by trying to make money out of it they are making certain the currency will be in difficulty. The more you do that, the greater is the difficulty for the currency. In many cases this difficulty has no relation whatever to the economic situation of the country. I do not say this applies in all cases.

An hon. Member: Why is the mark so high?

Mr. Lewis: I think the mark is high partly because of the particular export situation of Germany and partly because somebody is playing the mark against the franc. It is so high, I believe, partly because of an international monetary situation which does not permit of the kind of quick adjustment by some international monetary agency which would avoid these ups and downs or at least diminish them.

The point I am making is that there is a mythology about the international monetary system which tries to say that if a currency goes up it is because a government or country has handled its affairs well, and if it goes down somebody has handled the affairs badly. Not in all cases is that true; in fact, in many cases it is not true at all. We ought to get rid of this mythology and approach international monetary problems on a more rational basis.

What is the basis on which we should approach these problems? As a layman who claims no great expertise in the subject, I suggest that one of the reasons the Bretton Woods arrangements have fallen apart in some instances is that at the time they were adopted we talked about going off the gold standard when in fact we did not. In fact, we have always been on the gold standard. Through the Bretton Woods arrangements we have been on the gold standard in an indirect, rather than a direct, way. We have in fact been tied to the price of gold, the reserves of gold and the reserves of dollars related to gold, as well as to the pound sterling, but mainly to the reserves of dollars.

Therefore instead of the Bretton Woods arrangements actually freeing international trade and exchange, they continued in a modified form precisely the same kind of international strait-jacket that the gold standard represented years ago. Some of us in my party said 25 years ago that the Bretton Woods arrangements would not work in the long run. There is a simple logic in the situation, I suggest, even though I claim no expertise in the subject. All that these schemes represent, whether it be the Bretton Woods arrangements or the amendments we now have before us, is a certain amount in an international reserve pool. At some point in the future, as the international economy grows, as international trade grows and as international payments increase, the reserves which are set up will be found to be inadequate. You cannot provide for a continuing international fluidity, for a continuing adequacy of international reserves to deal with increasing international trade if at any time you set a limit on those total reserves across the world.

This was done under the Bretton Woods arrangements. It will be done under the S.D.R.'s because there will be a total amount of S.D.R.'s available in addition to the reserves.

• (5:10 p.m.)

One of the points I want to emphasize is that the speculators in the world are, to a very large extent, responsible for the trouble into which the currencies get. I do not know what the solution is to dealing with speculators but I want to say a word about the problem. When I say speculators, I am not referring merely to the gnomes of Zurich but I am also referring to all the large corporations the western world over which have officers especially assigned to the task of watching the international money market. They buy and sell international currency in order to protect the welfare of the corporation without the slightest thought for the welfare of the country in which they operate and without the slightest thought for the welfare of the world in which they trade. These are the speculators to whom I refer. We have them in Canada; they have them in the United States, in London, in Paris, in Bonn, in Hamburg and in every other western country and centre. The vice presidents, managers or others are given the specific task of playing the international money market, having in mind only the protection of the interests of their corporations without regard for what that may do to the general economy, to international trade, to international exchange or to the balance of payments. Our concept of "free enterprise" gives them the right in Canada, in the United States and anywhere else to play this game. It is a game which they play at the expense of the welfare of people throughout the world, not only of people in the countries in which they have their headquarters.

I submit that this is the basic problem. I do not deny that this is my philosophy of opposition to the uncontrolled capitalism which permits this kind of game by large corporations, national and multinational, despite its adverse effect on international trade and international welfare. In some way it should be controlled by some authority, either national or supranational.

I object to the approach which permits these corporations to play havoc with currencies and with economic situations in various countries. Every time people say that a country has lost the confidence of the international money market they mean that government expenditures in social welfare should be reduced. I hope my friend, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), who sits very close to me and is bigger and stronger than I am will not get too violent when I suggest to him that when he says we have to be worried about the confidence of the international money market, that we have to put our house in order, that we have to cut public expenditures, every time he makes these little homilies about countries in difficulty pulling in their horns and straightening out their affairs so as to revive confidence in their currency, he is speaking about nothing else than that the standard of living of the people be reduced. What these people mean is that the expenditures in social welfare and in social security measures should be curtailed and that the investment in new jobs should be reduced. That is what they are talking about all the time, and that is what they mean when they talk about confidence in the money market and setting one's house in order. I am opposed to that. That is what France had to do under the present international monetary scheme, and that is what Great Britain had to do because of its currency difficulties. Instead of being able to deal with their internal economy in terms of the welfare of the people, they were forced by international speculators to tighten their belts, which meant the belts of the ordinary workers in Great Britain and France. This is the way I look at the international monetary system, and I make no apology for it. I am not interested in this blessed mythology, this mystery, this secretiveness of the workings of the international money market.

[Mr. Lewis.]

Perhaps God has given me at least a partially sufficient intelligence to understand how these things operate and I have studied the subject to some extent. But I am not interested in the mechanics of how the people are rooked; I am interested in the fact that they are being rooked by an international system that pays no attention to and is not necessarily a reflection of the economic soundness of a country and the economic objectives of a country. It can easily become the victim of international currency manipulation despite the state of its economy, as has been shown.

My only criticism of the Canadian authorities—and I put it that way because I do not think it is the fault of the minister—is directed at the total Ministry of Finance and at the Bank of Canada, both of which have very competent, if orthodox, men heading them. I appeal to our braintrust in the financial world and in the international monetary world to become a little less orthodox and to look at these problems more in terms of human welfare and less in terms of the mechanism that is involved.

It is for these reasons that we in our party believe that the special drawing rights are a useful addition to the total pool of international reserves; there is no doubt about it. But I venture to suggest they will only be a palliative for a relatively short time.

The suggestions that I have seen in print as to the size of the special drawing rights do not lead me to think that the time will be very long. The addition to the international pool of reserves of what is now proposed does not seem to me in the total picture to be adequate even now. I think there are some other things that we and our financial experts in Ottawa ought to consider. I would be surprised if they have not done so already, but I would ask them to do so with greater readiness. I would ask them to improvise, to insist and to give some leadership on these issues.

The first thing which we should consider is a change in the mentality concerning the fixed exchange rate. The hon. member for Edmonton West made a quite legitimate remark regarding the late hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands who proposed free or flexible exchange rates. He said that now Mr. McLaughlin, the president of the Royal Bank of Canada makes the same proposal, and what strange bedfellows they are. I think the significant fact is that the hon. member for Edmonton West was not prepared to accept the word of my late friend, but the moment the president of the Royal Bank of Canada and the economic adviser to the Bank of Nova Scotia say the same thing the proposal becomes feasible, practical and sensible. I say that you do not have to be a genius to see that when there is a system of fixed exchange rates automatically a strait-jacket is put round the world and the speculators have a point at which to aim.

If the speculators know that the Canadian dollar can only go one per cent up or down from 92½ cents, then they know the point at which they can make it uncomfortable for the Canadian dollar. The same thing is true for every other currency on a fixed rate under the International Monetary Fund when permission is given to go up or down within two per cent, one per cent above or one per cent below, without breaking the commitment to the International Monetary Fund. It has always been obvious to me, not only in recent years but over the years that I have studied economics and finance, that this is the kind of rigidity that a growing international economy cannot tolerate; that there should be more manoeuvrability in the rate at which the currency sells in terms of other currencies. This manoeuvrability can then reflect the actual market situation and be responsive to the international trade of commodities and to the invisible trade among countries rather than responsive to some speculative behaviour of corporations and gnomes.

If, for the time being, it is not possible to immediately establish freedom in exchange rates across the industrial world, then you should start with what is called a floating or a crawling peg; in other words in area of, say, five per cent above or below the rate set. This leaves a relatively large area within which a currency can move in terms of other currencies. Speculators would then have much greater difficulty in feeling certain about their speculations, their gambling, because it would then be possible for authorities inside a country to take steps which speculators might not like and by which they would be punished when they began to press a particular currency.

When we have established either a wholly free exchange system across the world, or a partially free system of exchange, there will, of course, need to be measures to prevent national governments manipulating the rates for their currencies for purely selfish national reasons at the expense of other nations. However, I think there ought to be international measures available for the punishment of speculators, and that the International Monetary Fund or some such international agency should be given authority to watch the situation, recommend preventive measures and obtain some reaction from the country affected when speculators are "rooking" the people of the world.

To give an example. When the United States dollar was under pressure some months ago and the price of gold was going up as a result of speculation, the United States government, had it possessed the courage and had the International Monetary Fund been a party to such action, could have punished all the speculators within 24 hours—and it could do so tomorrow—by dumping two or three billion dollars worth of gold on the market. Then, the speculators who intended to make a killing would have found themselves losing a great deal of money. Possibly, having lost a great deal of money once or twice in the course of their manipulations, they would begin to take a different attitude. Instead of being the victims of speculators, either of Zurich or of the international corporations of the western world, governments should act in such a way as to make it painful for speculators to upset, distort and dislocate the economy of the world at the expense of the welfare of its people.

Utopian though this may sound, and Utopian though it is, I want to suggest that it is time we began thinking about an international central bank. One of our basic problems today is that we lack any international agency with the authority to deal with the flow and volume of international currencies in the way in which the Bank of Canada is able to deal with the volume and total amount of money circulating internally in this country. It will take years, maybe decades, before we get to it, but we ought to be thinking now in terms of a genuine international community in this field. We ought to be thinking of setting up an international central bank to which the sovereignty of individual nations would, for this purpose, be given. The bank would have the power and the means to regulate the amount of international currency in given situations and to make the international money market respond quickly to changes in the balance of payments situation and the international trade pattern.

Finally, in the meantime, contrary to what has been suggested by the hon. member for Edmonton West I believe Canada ought to abandon its fixed exchange rate and adopt a completely floating exchange rate. Let me say to the hon. member for Edmonton West that unless I am mistaken—and I may well be—this would not hurt anybody. With whom is Canada competing? Who are we helping by adopting a pegged exchange rate? What is it we are helping to do? All that would happen if we removed the exchange peg from the Canadian dollar would be that the reserves we must now hold could be used by someone else, by some other country which might need them. The total amount of the international reserves would remain unchanged. Instead of worrying about keeping Canada's reserves at a certain level to back our pegged dollar, we could allow the dollar to reach its own level in line with the condition of the market and international trade flow. We need no longer worry about reserves, except, of course, within certain limits. No country would want to be entirely without some reserves for the support of its currency.

Action along these lines would not only protect our own situation in the international market but it would serve as an example to other countries to get away from the orthodox deification of certain rates being set down and adhered to as though they were symbols of some kind of religion whereas in reality they are part, as I have indicated, of some kind of straitjacket which is of no value to the people of the world and which is of value only to the large corporations and speculators.

No doubt this bill will go to the committee and emerge with whatever improvements the committee can make. The additional reserves will become available and for a short time this exercise will reduce the possibility of international crises occurring on one form or another, for a short time. But, Mr. Speaker, the point of my contention—and this is why I have added my voice to what was said by members of this party on December 3—is that as an important country within the I.M.F., and as an important industrial nation despite the size of our population, we should not be satisfied with these steps. We should look into the possibility of a floating exchange rate and begin to discuss the immediate implementation of a crawling or floating peg.

We should look into the possibility of some international control of the evil behaviour of speculators to the detriment of the people of the world, because only by this total approach can the problem be seriously tackled by the international authorities.

[Mr. Lewis.]

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I would feel guilty if I did not say a few words on the Bretton Woods Agreements and on the bill under consideration now.

While that question, and that of the International Bank are very complicated, and though I am not entirely familiar with them, I would ask the honourable members to forgive me if I err; I was caught off guard and did not have time to really look into the problem. I know however that the International Bank and the Bretton Woods Agreements, like all other national or international banks, are institutions that throw economy off balance instead of steadying it.

Agreements entered into by international banks are governed by almost identical regulations, except that the International Bank, grants no credit, while in the national banks, credit is created with a stroke of a pen.

The International Bank borrows capital from great financial institutions, trust companies, at the current rate of interest, just like all other national institutions that borrow capital on an interest basis. Now the International Bank's rates of interests, like those of the National Bank, are outrageous and this creates an intolerable, a preposterous international situation, for like the national institutions, existing banks are making loans. They lend the initial amount but not the interest, yet they require repayment of it. That is why, on the international front, debts are being repudiated. It happened in France, in England and in many other countries and it will happen again.

Remissions of debts are seen everywhere. It is done at the national level and soon we will see it at the international level. When it becomes impossible to pay back a loan and to pay the interest which was never part of the loan, then remissions of debts are granted.

International agreements such as the Bretton Woods Agreement and many others, are not worth much for the people of the world, Canada or other countries because since we are subject to the same regulations, the same conditions, the same consequences we do not manage to maintain an international or national balance. This is one reason for international deficits as well as national and international bankruptcies.

Mr. Speaker, our financial and economic organization is improperly constituted. The basis of the system is wrong. It must be reformed and if international institutions, people of the international community, responsible members of government, do not assume their responsibilities, within a few months, a few years, we shall experience a situation even worse than the one prevailing now.

In fact, the French problem is not settled yet it is simply a poultice on a wooden leg and many other countries find themselves in the same situation.

• (5:30 p.m.)

The situation for Canada is every bit as serious. From an international point of view, it is in a very awkward situation. It cannot compete with the other countries, it cannot meet its obligations, and it cannot keep on injecting money into the International Bank, lending it money so that it can help various countries.

The World Bank was set up to help underdeveloped countries and those which were destroyed by war, to give them the help required for their economic, physical and intellectual development.

The International Bank must operate on the international as well as the national level; but now it is operating only half-way; it is not producing the expected results and that situation must be corrected; otherwise, we will witness horrible catastrophes that will have repercussions begging description.

And so, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the myth of clinging to gold as international currency for international exchanges, or else having 25 per cent in gold and the rest in bills, I must say that the Canadian people no longer believe it, nor do several other peoples. The gold myth should also disappear within the United Nations Organization which influences the International Bank and its member countries.

Several countries have signed that international agreement, those Bretton Woods agreements, and all signatory countries are in a bad way. Those which need some loans cannot obtain any, because there is not enough money in the fund, the rates of interest are too high and those which have already borrowed too much and have no credit are unable to borrow. Several countries would like to borrow from the International Bank, but since they have obtained other loans, they are unable to borrow, because their credit is nil. They have no more credit at the World Bank and that does not help matters. Neither does it help, Mr. Speaker, the international situation of the countries which signed those Bretton Woods agreements. Now, the gold myth should no longer exist.

This is what should be done in Canada: As a signatory country, we should demand its total and complete disappearance to which should be substituted a simple debit and credit accounting. When a country shows a debit, it is registered, as is done for a credit. Let us make away with that deplorable international gold situation. It does not render us any service. Even the United States which are among those countries which have particularly taken advantage of that agreement based on gold are denouncing it today. That country believes that it is financially foolish to encourage the use of the gold standard.

In conclusion Mr. Speaker, if we have an International Bank with various member countries, it should be authorized to grant credit, according to the needs, the situation and the possibilities of each country.

The International Bank should be able to extend credit to a country that needs money, but not at the fantastic interest rates known today, that is 5, 5½ and 6 per cent, and sometimes more than 6 per cent, as is the case presently. In granting those funds, the International Bank should make loans to meet the needs of the various countries and charge only for its operating expenses. Then, Mr. Speaker, we could do something for the nation, instead of only creating mountains of debts. Instead of having debts impossible to repay, we would have manageable debts. Instead of lending what does not exist, we would rely on the real value, on the real physical needs of our country and this way, every country could expand normally and operate according to its possibilities, not according to the money that is in the International Bank.

If there are no funds in the International Bank, the development of countries or natural resources has to wait because that famous bank does not serve its purpose which is to lend money issued in accordance with each country's actual and physical capabilities. That, Mr. Speaker is the role and raison d'être of an international bank or of a national bank. As long as this problem is not settled, we shall have to face even worse situations than the one we have to cope with now, because the more the present system is implemented, the more national economies are disrupted. The more that harmful indebtedness system is applied, the more we create insoluble problems of never-ending debts.

This is why we will have further repudiations of debts in many countries. This will also happen in Canada, as our difficulties to pay the interest on our debt are only beginning. If we borrow money to pay the interest, how will we pay the debt itself and how will we manage to get out of the hole? We will never avoid this horrendous calamity, this fearful chaos created by heartless men who think only of making profits and keeping their control over people and countries, complete control and monopoly, in the hands of a few individuals at the expense of the masses. This is brought about by the Bretton Woods agreements, and there is much to be said about the agreements signed in the past and about the activities of this bank. I have here a whole bundle of documents I could read, but I think many hon. members have read them and I will spare the house all the details, so tedious and complex that many would fail to grasp their meaning.

Mr. Speaker, before I conclude my remarks, I would like to ask the government of Canada to introduce a resolution to the effect that the International Bank, under the Bretton Woods agreements, issue credits according to the needs and the potential of each country, at administration cost. If we do that, we will do something for some countries and enable them to develop in a normal way, according to the facts and their real potential.

• (5:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must inform the hon. parliamentary secretary that if he speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. H. E. Gray (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank hon. members of the house who have participated in this debate on second reading for their very interesting contributions to our discussion of this bill to permit Canada to participate in the special drawing rights scheme. A number of points have been raised. I think that hon. members will agree that the most appropriate place to pursue them in greater detail will be in the finance committee of the House of Commons. However, I might attempt to deal very briefly with one or two of the points raised by hon. members.

With respect to the question posed to me by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), I am informed that S.D.R.'s can be used by a holder without condition but it is provided that holders are not to use all their S.D.R.'s as they get them and not replace them. There will be a rule that they should hold minimum balances over five year periods on average amounting to 30 per cent of the S.D.R.'s which a country has received. This rule will be able to be changed on the basis of experience in the operation of the scheme.

The bulk of S.D.R.'s received can be used permanently if needed, and this is unlike the method of access to the present International Monetary Fund resources. It would be contemplated, that member countries would distinguish between gold currencies and S.D.R.'s in their reserves.

The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) spoke about the question of an upper limit on international reserves. He may well be pleased to note that, as I am informed, there is no upper limit on the number of amount of S.D.R's that can be created. More can be created at any time by the International Monetary Fund under this amendment to the I.M.F. agreement, which this bill will help put into effect in so far as Canada is concerned. This, can be done when there is a collective judgment by International Monetary Fund members that more reserves are needed.

It is true that the normal practice will be for decisions about changes in the amounts of S.D.R.'s to be taken at five year intervals and implemented annually. As I said, decisions may be for shorter periods and the fund will have the authority to take a new decision at any time. Therefore, contrary to what I understand to have been suggested to the hon. member for York South, there will be no upper limit on the amount or number of S.D.R.'s that can be created and therefore I submit they will be able to play quite an effective role in the development of the International Monetary System.

Again, I suggest to hon. members that we pursue these more detailed questions when this bill is before the standing committee of this house on finance, trade and economic affairs. At that time we will have with us as witnesses officials of the Department of Finance and it may well be that the committee will want to consider calling others, as well. I am sure that in line with the traditions of the finance committee our deliberations will be considered useful for all concerned.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I conclude by again urging this house to adopt the second reading of this very important bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read a second time and referred to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs.

PRECIOUS METALS

LEGISLATION RESPECTING DEFINITIONS, MARKING, ETC.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (for the Minister of Corporate and Consumer Affairs) moved the second reading and reference to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs of Bill S-4, respecting the marking of articles containing precious metals.

He said: Mr. Speaker, my colleague the Minister of Corporate and Consumer Affairs (Mr. Basford) will be in the house in a few minutes. This bill really has to do with the re-enactment of a measure that has been on the books for some years. The matter has been considered at some length in the other place. The purpose of the bill, as hon. members will have noted, is to make provision for quality standards with respect to certain precious metals.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): We did not know you were to call this bill.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): As was indicated in the other place, it has become desirable over a period of years to modernize the regime with regard to these particular commodities and my recommendation would be, Mr. Speaker, that the matter might be considered fairly rapidly.

• (5:50 p.m.)

On a subject of relatively specialized nature such as this it might be appropriate to give the bill fairly rapid progress on second reading and refer it to the standing committee for further consideration. As hon. members will have noted, the intention is to refer the bill to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs where it could be expected that a fuller explanation would be given with respect to its purposes. Probably a more lucid explanation of the bill can be given by my colleague the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) who, propitiously, has just joined us.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am in the hands of the opposition. I do not know whether the opposition would like a lengthy statement at this time or will allow the bill, which is essentially a housekeeping measure, to go to committee where I would make a statement. This is legislation that we have had in Canada since 1908 to provide for the marking of gold and silver. It is a bill to provide for the marking of gold and silver, but because of technical changes in the industry and in the precious metals business we are revising the act to include two other metals, palladium and platinum, and we are providing for one mark for all four.

As I say, I am in the hands of the opposition. If there is any hope that we could pass the motion before six o'clock I would be happy to make my statement in committee.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, so far as this party is concerned we would be agreeable to passing it before six o'clock but I am not aware of what some hon. members may want to say at this point.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, since this bill is going to land for some strange reason into the catch-all of the finance committee, again with the greatest respect I must ask the government house leader who on earth uses what divining rod to determine where bills go? Yesterday I pointed out to the minister that the finance committee was going to deal with some fishery improvement loans act, which I think should have gone to the forestry and fisheries committee because that is where the expertise is in that subject.

This bill is a matter of interest to consumers, dealing as it does with standards. I would have thought it should go to the committee that deals with matters on the consumer side. In any event we shall have to listen to the minister's statement, but in approaching these bills I think greater care could be used so that the finance committee will not be saddled with a lot of bills that really do not affect is directly. That committee deals with finance and trade.

I also suggest that hon. members can examine the proceedings on this bill in the other place. I presume it went before the Senate banking and commerce committee and that the minister made a statement there. I agree that the bill looks like a standard housekeeping one but it contains one clause that I hope will be buried. With respect to any regulations that the minister makes thereunder these shall be tabled by the minister. Let us have none of this business of relying on the Regulations Act. If we are going to have a committee on delegated legislation let us have it clearly spelled out in the act.

Also I would hope we would not have to introduce another new act if new precious metals are discovered, or some combination thereof, this being the motivation for bringing the present act up to date. I shall now give the remaining two minutes to members of other parties, and I thank hon. gentlemen opposite for the notice they have given us about this bill.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, we all appear to be in the same position as the house leader with respect to this bill, but I think we would agree that the finance committee is not the committee to which it should be referred. In other countries it would be the department of finance that would be involved. In this country it would be the Mint which would decide what the marks were to be and the grade of precious metal.

There is strict legislation in other countries like Mexico, India and Spain which have expert craftsmen in the working of precious metals. These craftsmen and other purchasers can be sure of the content of precious metal in articles manufactured and sold. In Canada, this is not the case.

I believe we should look at this bill from the point of view of the people involved in the manufacturing field and from the point of view of people who buy crafted products. In either case, it should not involve the finance committee. I am not sure which way the bill is oriented, whether it is for the protection of craftsmen or for the people buying their products.

When one goes into Ryrie-Birks today and buys a silver tray there is a mark on it but the mark really does not mean anything. It says it has got a certain value in terms of the silver content, but if you take it back to sell it again it does not seem to have that same content. The mark really does not mean what such marks do in other countries, and I hope the minister of consumer affairs is interested in the protection afforded by these marks to purchasers.

In other countries, one can look at the number on a mark and it represents a given quantity of precious metal in a particular product. But this does not seem to apply in Canada. For instance, if you bought silverware in Canada a number of years ago when the price of silver was 60 cents an ounce you should be able to get a return on your investment now when the price is $1.25 or $1.30 an ounce. But if you take that silverware back to Ryrie-Birks you will find they probably hosed you in the first place because the silver content is very low.

On the other hand, craftsmen entering this field in Canada, even in my area where silver is a readily available commodity, are entering it without the protection necessary with respect to a bench mark that would set the quantity of silver. Both of these matters are involved in this bill, and I do not think the finance committee should be the committee to undertake perusal of the bill.

• (6:00 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to prevent referring the bill to the committee, because I think that it is a matter which must be discussed specifically within the committee. As for the question which has been raised, relative to the choice of the committee, at first sight, it is certainly a matter for the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs and it also concerns consumption. We agree that the bill should be referred to the committee immediately.

[English]

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, would the government house leader confirm whether the schedule of business for tomorrow will be the continuation of what was announced yesterday? We would be pleased if he would announce any variations in advance. He seems to have mixed up the precious metals and fresh fish.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): The minister responsible for the freshwater fish marketing bill will be with us tomorrow and, therefore, we will commence business with that particular measure and then have the pleasure again of seeing our colleague the Minister of Corporate and Consumer Affairs (Mr. Basford) on the drug prices bill.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put pursuant, to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, January 16, 1969

The house met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DISCUSSION OF NATIONAL DEFENCE POLICY IN STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions with respect to the work of the external affairs committee and I think there is general agreement in the house that it would be desirable to have a further order of reference to the committee so that it may continue with the order of work that has already been planned. I believe there would be unanimous agreement to the acceptance of an order in the following terms:

That the standing committee on external affairs and national defence be instructed, and hereby is instructed, to hear evidence on and to consider the national defence policy of Canada.

If it is acceptable to the house that could be made an order of the house.

Mr. Speaker: Is this so agreed?

Mr. David Lewis (York South): With respect, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) why the proposed order is limited to defence policy rather than to defence and foreign policy?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Well, I gather that has been the subject matter of discussion in various corners. The timetable that has been planned was related to defence policy rather than to the broader area.

Mr. Lewis: With your permission, Mr. Speaker, may I take another moment to suggest to the President of the Privy Council as well as to the chairman of the committee that the information I received from the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) before he immersed himself in French was not to this effect. However, whatever the agreement may have been, is it not better to have both questions considered? You cannot really separate defence from foreign policy and it does not seem very sensible to limit the order in this way.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It appears, Mr. Speaker, that there is not unanimous consent to the form of the order I suggested. Perhaps, therefore, we could have further consultation later today to find what is acceptable.

RESEARCH

"HUDSON 70"—CANADIAN OCEANOGRAPHIC PROJECT

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I should like to advise the house of a Canadian oceanographic project of significant impact, we believe not only to Canada but to the world. The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources science ship, C.S.S. Hudson, will set out from Halifax in November, 1969, on an oceanographic expedition of 41,000 nautical miles and completely encircle North and South America in Canada's first oceanographic venture on a world wide scale. It is interesting to note that this is the first circumnavigation of the two continents by any ship and that the Hudson is the only fully equipped scientific vessel to have this capacity. This expedition will be known as "Hudson 70".

Hudson 70 will be a one year expedition through the Atlantic, Antarctic, Pacific and Arctic Oceans. Aboard will be scientists from the federal Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, other federal departments, Canadian universities and American oceanographic institutes and universities. Investigations will range from ocean circulation studies to geological surveys of Canada's continental shelf on its east, west, and northern coasts, and include biological, geophysical, chemical and other oceanographic studies.

The scientific staff will be drawn largely from the Atlantic Oceanographic Laboratory of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, and the Marine Ecology Laboratory of the Fisheries Research Board, both at the Bedford Institute. Scientists from other institutions, Dalhousie University, University of British Columbia, Defence Research Establishment Atlantic (Defence Research Board), and other branches of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. Also participating will be scientists from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution, and the Department of Oceanography of Oregon State University in the United States.

In this age of science, a country of Canada's size must deploy her scientific resources wisely. We cannot afford to be in the vanguard in all aspects of science, and must choose wisely the disciplines wherein we have the capacity and which will be of greatest benefit to Canadians. The field of oceanography is one where Canada does have capacity, and where research can be of great benefit in Canada's future. The Bedford Institute of Oceanography was opened but six years ago, and has already achieved considerable scientific stature. Canada has the longest coastline and thence the greatest potential for undersea resources of any country in the world. These resources, even though yet largely untapped, are the heritage of all of the people of Canada.

Apart from domestic interest, all mankind has a great interest in the development of undersea resources, if the challenge of meeting the needs for food and economic progress in a world whose population is to double in the next thirty five years is to be met. The president of the United States recently urged countries of the world to embark on expanded studies of the world's oceans during the period 1970-80 to be identified as the "International Decade of World Ocean Exploration". The United Nations subsequently endorsed, by formal resolution, this concept and the designated period of 1970-80. This research voyage will be Canada's contribution to the International Decade of World Ocean Exploration.

In accord with the government's intent to achieve closer ties with the countries of Latin America, those South American countries having an interest in these studies and who themselves have facilities in this area, will be asked to participate to the extent that is possible in keeping with the objectives of the mission. I had the opportunity to discuss this possibility with my counterparts in some of the South American countries during the recent Canadian mission. Scientists of my department have already been in communication with Chilean scientists regarding the possible program off the Chilean coast.

A study of the geological and geophysical features of Canada's continental shelves is the prime objective of the northern part of the voyage. Surveys, which will use to full advantage the complex of advanced equipment assembled on board the Hudson are being planned in areas off the coast of British Columbia, the Mackenzie River delta, in passages through the Canadian Archipelago, and in Baffin Bay.

The planned geological and geophysical studies in the Arctic will help to assess the mineral and other resource potential of the area, extend understanding of the evolution of continents and of ocean basins, such as Baffin Bay, and test the theory of continental drift. The surveys will form part of the extensive program of geological and geophysical exploration in Canada by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources; scientists from the observatories branch and the Geological Survey of Canada will be involved in the operations and planning.

In the South Atlantic, South Pacific and Antarctic Oceans, the program consists of closely interrelated studies in biological, chemical and physical oceanography and underwater acoustics, geodesy, geophysics and geology.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Greene: I am sorry this is a little over the heads of some of my friends over there, Mr. Speaker.

During the transit of the ship down the Atlantic and up the Pacific, an experiment will be conducted by scientists from the United States in measuring the slope of the ocean surface to obtain information which is vital to the precise calculation of the volumes of water transported by ocean currents.

The ship will spend several weeks in the vicinity of Cape Horn investigating, by new techniques, the circumpolar current, the greatest in the world, which flows around Antarctica and passes between Cape Horn and the Antarctica continent.

The Hudson is scheduled to return to Halifax in October of 1970. It may be well known that underwater research in the realm of the oceans will be as important—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has exercised all possible patience in connection with the statement now being made by the minister. He knows of course the provisions of standing order 15. My understanding of this standing order is that statements should be reasonably brief. I have the impression that the minister's statement is unreasonable in that respect, and I hope he will bring it to a conclusion as soon as possible.

The minister will recognize that it is embarrassing to the Chair to have to remind hon. members of the opposition that according to the standing order their comments on ministerial statements must be brief. It is more difficult for the Chair to do this when we have statements of the length now being made by the minister.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, I wil conclude forthwith. I think this statement is extremely reasonable, if not brief.

An hon. Member: It should also be intelligible.

Mr. Greene: It is intelligible to those who understand this subject, Mr. Speaker.

It is our belief that Canada can play a full and worthy part in this realm of science. The exciting scientific adventure of Hudson 70 we believe will be an important step toward this end.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I think unknown to yourself, the minister had practically completed his trip around Cape Horn before you stopped him. He had almost completed his statement, which he kindly sent me earlier. I feel that any comment I could make on the statement would be somewhat anticlimatic because I understand the minister has already had a press conference today on this particular statement, during which he made this statement.

I am sure the minister must find it exhilarating that his first announcement in the house, after his illness, is a pleasant one, rather than one like the unpleasant announcements he had to make when he took over his department earlier this year. I hope this is a good start which will be continued, and that one program after another of this nature will be announced by his office.

The general outline of the expeditions given to the house by the minister can only meet with approval. Canada, with its extensive shoreline and tremendous untapped continental shelf, badly needs more complete knowledge of the ocean and its resources. At first glance one might question the advantage of proceeding into the southern seas and around Cape Horn, but the movement of waters and marine life around the whole continent does affect our own shores. Work around Canadian coastal waters is very important.

In concluding, may I say that the statement by the minister indicates the germ of an idea developing in the science policy of this country. This is an acknowledgement that Canada should select the areas in which we can best develop scientific research, without trying to cover the whole field of science, with the limited resources at our disposal.

I noticed in a newspaper that a similar proposal was made earlier this week by Dr. Hans Selye, a well-known medical researcher. We approve of the theory of this research and the approach which appears to be indicated by this statement, and we welcome the announcement.

• (2:20 p.m.)

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I am not an expert on science, as is the minister; therefore I shall not say very much about the value of this project. I am certain it will have a great deal of value and much scientific information will be obtained from it. At the same time, it seems to me that while the minister has said that a country like Canada must deploy its scientific resources wisely and that we cannot do everything, it is rather difficult to square this project with other announcements the minister has made in recent months.

The HARP project sponsored by McGill University has been scrapped. The construction of the Queen Elizabeth Observatory in British Columbia was announced at the time of the visit of the Queen. That project too has been scrapped. The ING project, which was to give tremendous impetus to our research in the field of nuclear physics, has been scrapped. Medical research is being hindered by the cut-back in the construction of hospitals.

I think members of the house, especially those on the committee which will deal with the estimates, ought to look very carefully into the question of how much say the science secretariat and the science council had in the decision that this particular project was more important and would bring greater benefits to our country than those which on earlier occasions the minister announced, and which have subsequently been scrapped.

It seems to me that without this kind of information we are left with the feeling that the scientific projects which will be begun in Canada will depend upon which minister speaks the loudest in cabinet meetings, or which person in the treasury department decides what shall and what shall not be done. I believe we need to be told in detail at some point exactly how the government chooses what shall and what shall not be done.

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the minister of Energy, Mines and Resources for his statement; however I do not approve the remarks of some hon. members who said that the statement was a little too long. I think that the minister is not to blame but his officials.

First of all, I express to the minister my best wishes to the minister and I hope his health will get better still. I sat on the committee on Energy, Mines and Resources and I noticed that we did not see him very often because of his illness. I hope that he will now enjoy good health and that he will be able to come and visit us quite often.

I think that it would be in order first to congratulate the minister for taking the initiative in doing more research; however, in order that the research intended to find riches in the marine subsoil be profitable, I think it would be urgent for the government to provide for special credits. In fact, I understand that it is a lack of funds which prevents the department from proceeding with its work in the research field.

I would like also the government to think of voting enough money to ensure that the project is carried through and that the industries are prevented from polluting the inland waters.

JUVENILE DELINQUENTS ACT AMENDMENT

AGE AT WHICH PROSECUTIONS CAN BE INSTITUTED

Mr. Kenneth Robinson (Lakeshore) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-158, to amend the Juvenile Delinquents Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret I have to advise the hon. member that the bill has already received first reading. The hon. member can give his explanation on second reading.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), in accordance with the new rule 26, to move the adjournment of the house under the said standing order for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely the extremely serious situation confronting the people of this country as a result of the mounting unemployment as reflected in the figures released today by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. These reveal an increase in December, 1968, of 35,000 unemployed over November, namely 373,000, as compared with 338,000, a number which had already shown an increase of 49,000 over the month of October.

In view of the fact that, historically, unemployment in January and February is significantly worse than in the other months mentioned, urgent consideration of this matter by the house is required so that there may be an immediate opportunity for a discussion of policies to deal with this threatening situation.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South has given the Chair written notice as required by standing order 26(2) of the new rules of procedure. This has produced a useful opportunity to give the most serious consideration to the hon. member's notice of motion that the house adjourn for the purpose of discussing the subject matter of this motion described as "mounting unemployment as reflected in the figures released today by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.".

The right to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 is subject to a number of conditions. In particular the matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency calling for immediate and urgent consideration. This test, applicable to the new rules, was also one of the essential factors to be considered by the Chair under the previous corresponding standing order, namely that there must be a genuine emergency. The word "emergency" has been defined as "the sudden or unexpected occurrence of a state of affairs". This definition indicates that the element of suddenness which was essential under the old rule is also a requirement under the new standing order 26.

A number of similar motions have been made in previous years. On March 23, 1959 Mr. Speaker Michener made the following ruling:

> I have felt that the question of unemployment, which is a continuing one, can scarcely be brought forward under rule 26. The circumstance alleged by the hon. member for Essex East, namely a joint release by the Department of Labour and the dominion bureau of statistics, scarcely alters the situation, in my opinion, to a point where the house should be asked to interrupt its ordinary business.

A similar ruling was made by the Speaker on February 17, 1960 at page 1152 of Hansard of that day. The Speaker is reported as follows:

> In dealing with this application to interrupt our ordinary proceedings of this day under standing order 26 in order to embark on a discussion of "the grave unemployment situation in the country as revealed in a government press announcement made today," I remind hon. members that this is not a new problem for the Chair. Unfortunately the problem of unemployment is a continuing one and has been a continuing one. As I recall it, motions of this kind have been advanced or attempts have been made to deal with the general problem of unemployment under standing order 26, and I have taken the view in the past that that is not an appropriate procedure for a continuing general problem which this undoubtedly is.

On another occasion, in a ruling made on January 14, 1958, Mr. Speaker stated:

> There has been a great deal of talk about the unemployment situation during this session and I am sure there will be a great deal more without allowing this additional debate which would interfere with the planned routine of the business of the house. Hence, I do not consider it a debate which should be entered upon at this stage.

The Chair recognizes readily that the motion raises a matter which is of importance and urgency. I am sure it is of important concern to all hon. members of the house. However, a careful and objective interpretation of the relevant standing order cannot, in my view, justify the acceptance at this time of the hon. member's motion.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT PROGRAM TO ALLEVIATE CONDITION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to address a question to the Acting Prime Minister arising from the latest statistics on the labour force issued this morning. These show that both the labour force and employment figures registered larger than seasonal declines between November and December and that fully 4.7 per cent of the labour force is unemployed.

Would the Acting Prime Minister tell us whether the government is now reconsidering the policy, as stated by the Prime Minister, to de-emphasize job producing policies in favour of reliance upon training programs, and whether in view of increasing unemployment which is not being offset by the training programs the government will now introduce additional useful programs to alleviate the obviously growing unemployment in the country?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, our programs are designed to produce the maximum of employment both in the short and in the longer range. Certainly, the investment in the manpower training program is designed to equip those being trained to re-enter the labour force in a manner which would be most beneficial to them and to the Canadian economy. I can assure the hon. gentleman that this is a matter of continuing concern to the government, as I am sure it is to all Canadians, and that every possible step within the power of the government will be taken to maximize employment opportunities for Canadians in all parts of the country.

Mr. Stanfield: I presume the answer to the questions I asked is, no. I should therefore like to direct a further question at this point to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development.

In view of the fact that unemployment in the Atlantic provinces now amounts to 7.1 per cent of the labour force, and that it amounts to 6.8 per cent in Quebec, would the minister inform us whether his department intends to introduce additional useful programs which might be implemented even on a regional basis to lessen the high unemployment rate in those parts of the country?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, as soon as I have the pleasure of heading a department created by the house, I will gladly bring in legislation for that purpose.

[English]

Mr. David Lewis (York South): A supplementary question, first, to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. He may recall that some time before the Christmas recess—I do not remember the exact date—I asked him whether he would consider making a statement to the house shortly on policies designed to deal with increasing unemployment. My memory tells me that at that time he said he would certainly consider doing so, though he did not want my hopes to be raised too high.

May I repeat, now, the question I then asked? In view of the growing unemployment shown by the latest figures, would the minister be prepared to make a statement to the house within the next day or two, as to his policy for dealing with the unemployment situation to which reference has been made?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The policies which have been administered by the department of manpower, and which will continue to be administered by the department, have been explained extensively in the house. Yesterday, for instance, there was an extended answer to a question on the order paper indicating the large sums presently being spent to combat winter unemployment. At the present time there is nothing further that I have to say about the policies of my department, although as to the general question of unemployment I shall continue to give it consideration and discuss it with my colleagues.

Mr. Lewis: A further supplementary question, this time to the minister responsible for rural development. On several occasions the hon. gentleman has been asked about his policies for dealing with regional disparity, particularly in the employment field, and he has told us that when the bill setting up his new department comes before the house, those policies will be discussed. May I therefore ask the hon. gentleman to inform the house when the bill setting up his and other departments will be before parliament, so that we may discuss the whole question of unemployment and regional disparity in Canada?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I am probably one of the members of this house who is most anxious to have this bill brought in as soon as possible.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister a supplementary question.

[Mr. Lewis.]

In his previous answer to the Leader of the Opposition, the Acting Prime Minister seemed to consider the adult retraining program as greatly important to prepare those people to hold a position, to get employment in Canada, and I would like to ask him if he is aware of economic regions or Canadian industries short of qualified labour at the present time.

[English]

Mr. Hellyer: I think the answer to that, Mr. Speaker, would be, yes. Not more than a few weeks ago, travelling across this country, I visited a number of places where there were jobs available and no men available to take them.

An hon. Member: Name them.

Mr. Hellyer: Thompson, Manitoba, is one of them. There are others, too. I should like to tell the hon. member that the action of the government late in the year in making mortgage loans available through its agent, the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, has resulted in tens of thousands of additional jobs for Canadian workers this winter, in addition to tens of thousands of jobs indirectly as a result of house building activity which, during the year just ended, was at the highest level in the history of Canada, even beyond the forecast requirement of the Economic Council.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): A question to the minister of trade and industry. I wonder whether the minister, bearing in mind the questions which were asked before the recess, would do his best to accelerate the sittings of the special cabinet committee, which I understand he heads, so as to bring forth policies to deal with the heavy unemployment in shipyards across Canada.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I have written recently to the shipyards association calling attention to the advantages which they have, and have had in the past, and asking them to bring forward projects, plans and ideas for their own reorganization, perhaps with help from the government. They are preparing for a meeting now.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): My question is directed to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. In the light of the worsening unemployment situation in the Atlantic region and the minister's remarks last fall on a couple of occasions about immediate projects of some magnitude to alleviate that situation, would the hon. gentleman be prepared to make a statement within the next week or so about those programs specifically, even before the introduction of any measure which would establish a new department of regional development?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is aware that we are now negotiating an agreement with the Maritimes. I hope that within a few weeks I will be in a position to confirm that such an agreement has been signed.

[English]

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Transport. It arises from the example he used a few minutes ago, one which brings the problem back to his own doorstep. Does he not realize that the reason prospective employees will not go into Thompson, Manitoba, is that there is absolutely no housing available in the town?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

AIR TRANSPORT

POSSIBLE FATIGUE FACTOR IN JET PILOT OPERATIONS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Can he assure the house that pilots operating Air Canada jet passenger aircraft are never required to be on duty for more than eight hours at a time? I ask this question in view of the report of the Department of Transport made public yesterday concerning the crash of a Boeing 707 airliner last February.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in view of the sensitivity of this question I should like to check into it before giving a definitive answer to see whether or not there are exceptions to the rule.

Mr. Nesbitt: A supplementary question. Since the minister is making inquiries in this regard may I ask him whether it is a fact that Air Canada jet pilots are usually required to be on continuous duty for 17 hours at a time on the Montreal-Moscow flight, and also are sometimes required—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that the question as asked is not in proper form. The hon. member is asking the minister to confirm or deny a statement.

Mr. Nesbitt: With respect, Mr. Speaker, I asked the minister whether it is a fact that these—

Mr. Speaker: That is precisely the form in which questions cannot be asked.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Transport. In view of the amazing disclosures in the press release concerning the crash of a Boeing 707 aircraft at Vancouver, will the minister also take under consideration and inform the house whether there will be or is contemplated a tightening of commercial air rules, or possible action against C.P.A. in view of the disclosure to the board of inquiry that errors were made?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be best to deal with all of these questions at the same time. I should like to have the opportunity of getting all the relevant facts before replying.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): A further supplementary question. When the minister is making his inquiries I wonder whether he would determine if the Department of Transport is satisfied that the non-embarrassment clause in contracts between pilots and our two major airlines is not the cause of the situation that has been referred to in earlier questions.

GRAIN

GLUT AT VANCOUVER—REQUEST THAT BOARD APPEAR BEFORE STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the serious situation developing at the port of Vancouver with respect to wheat shipments, will the minister refer the report of the Canadian Wheat Board to the standing committee on agriculture so that witnesses can be called and the whole matter of grain shipments and exports thoroughly examined?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, a request was made of me to ask the Wheat Board officials to come before the agriculture committee of the House of Commons to answer questions. The officials of the Wheat Board would prefer to do so in March when their annual report will be out and on which questions could be posed by hon. members.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Gleave: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I can understand the preference of the Wheat Board. However in view of the urgency of the situation which has arisen over the last several months, would the minister be good enough to reconsider this decision in the light of these circumstances?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, in view of the urgency of the situation it might be wiser to let the Wheat Board do their job in the west.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pepin: What I am trying to say in the most polite way I can is that there are two ways of looking at the possibility of the Wheat Board officials coming to testify before a committee of the house. At the present time the Wheat Board is very busy trying to solve the glut situation which exists in Vancouver. It is also trying to maximize Canadian exports. Therefore, on balance I thought it might be wiser to ask the committee to hear the Wheat Board officials in March.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the minister's statement with reference to the Wheat Board not appearing before the committee at this time, and in view of the fact that some eight or nine ships, on which the Wheat Board will be paying demurrage, are waiting to be loaded, will the minister take administrative action at his level to see that dry grain gets into these ships and to export markets before the farmers of this country starve to death?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has the advantage of possessing a clear, simple mind. When one looks at this situation in depth and with objectivity one realizes that it is unfortunately more complicated than the hon. member would like it to be. The complication, in very simple words, is that we have here a conflict between two advantages. I can remember the hon. member asking me to see to it that damp grain would be shipped to terminal elevators as rapidly as possible. That was done, and the result is that we now have a glut. We are at the same time faced with a situation where dry grain is required for exports that could not be anticipated, such as added exports to Japan. These could not be anticipated to be at their present level. So priority is being given now to shipment of dry grain to Vancouver in order to remedy the present situation of waiting ships.

REQUEST FOR FINAL PAYMENT

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary and is addressed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the tight money situation prevailing on the prairies, due to the lack of grain sales, would he consider discussing with the Wheat Board the desirability of making the final payment on the previous crop year's grain pool at the earliest possible opportunity?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I try to speak to the Wheat Board as often as I can and I will bring this additional subject into my conversations with them.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): A further supplementary question. Would the minister report to the house as soon as possible on his discussion with the Wheat Board?

REQUEST FOR GREATER DELIVERY OF DAMP GRAIN

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I am going to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, but I should like to inform him that there are boxcars sitting on the sidings at the moment filled with dry grain.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member ask a question.

Mr. Korchinski: I should like to ask the minister whether he would undertake to get some sort of indication from the Wheat Board, and report to the house, whether the farmers can expect to deliver at least the three bushel quota of damp grain that was authorized by the Wheat Board; and whether the Wheat Board expects a further movement of damp grain might be made, possibly before the spring weather.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the answer was given by the chairman of the Wheat Board yesterday in his press conference, as follows:

> We have also had a policy in effect which allows producers advance delivery privileges on damp grain to the three bushel quota level. It is still our objective to try to equalize at a six bushel level but in view of the large quantity of damp grain now in the marketing pipeline, it will be impossible to give any further advance delivery privileges beyond the three bushel quota level for damp grain.

Mr. Korchinski: A further supplementary question. May I ask the minister whether he expects that any farmer who has not delivered his full three bushel quota of damp grain will be able to make delivery before spring?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I fail to understand the hon. member. I will read his question and try to answer it later.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question for the minister. In the event that the Canadian Wheat Board is assessed demurrage charges owing to vessels waiting to load grain, will the government absorb those charges so that the cost will not be borne by the farmers?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question as asked is hypothetical.

[Translation]

TRADE

LATIN AMERICA—REQUEST FOR REPORT OF MISSION

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce a question concerning another subject matter.

Would he tell the house if a full report on the ministerial mission to Latin America will soon be tabled and if a house committee will be invited to consider it?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs headed the delegation. He is therefore to table a preliminary report within a few days, and I am under the impression that he will submit it to the committee on external affairs and national defence.

[English]

HARBOURS

SAINT JOHN, N.B.—BERTHING PRIVILEGES DENIED FISHING VESSELS

Hon. Hugh John Flemming (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister in his capacity as Minister of Transport. Has the attention of the minister been drawn to the fact that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police during the last few days have been called in to force Charlotte county fishing vessels to discontinue using public wharves in the port of Saint John and to put to sea, thus placing them in grave danger? If so will the minister explain the cancellation of a privilege which has existed for a good many years. Also, does the minister approve of such drastic action?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this question was brought to my attention just at the moment I came down to the house. The National Harbours Board advises me that this matter is a local one and has been solved at the local level. Port management in Saint John has made arrangements for fishermen to radio berthing requirements into the port prior to arriving, and the harbourmaster will continue to assign berthing to such vessels. I understand that this is satisfactory to the fishermen.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister or the Minister of Justice. Either may volunteer to answer. As a result of the implied threat contained in the Prime Minister's statement made in a press conference in London yesterday, may we receive a categorical assurance that the government does not require the R.C.M.P. to inquire into the private lives of journalists and assemble files on them.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there was no implied threat. I should like to say that in saying to the members of the press exactly what his feelings were the Prime Minister displayed that kind of courage which makes us on this side of the house proud to serve under his leadership.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): You said that with tongue in cheek.

TRANSPORT

NORTHUMBERLAND CAUSEWAY—ANNOUNCEMENT RESPECTING CONSTRUCTION

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to pose a question to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the long lead time required in order to take full advantage of the summer construction period, is the minister in a position to say when the government will announce that it is proceeding with the construction of the Northumberland causeway?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, we are not so prepared today.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HEALTH AND WELFARE

OTTAWA-HULL—QUALITY OF ABORTION PILLS IN DISTRIBUTION

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare and his parliamentary secretary may I direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. Will he investigate whether abortion pills being dispensed in the Ottawa-Hull area have been given a certificate of quality by the Food and Drug Directorate?

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Acting Prime Minister): While not familiar with these pills, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hellyer: —I wish to say that I want to direct the question and its related allegation to the attention of the appropriate authorities.

GRAIN

USE OF COMMERCIAL DRYERS AT ELEVATOR POINTS

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your recognizing me just now. I was going to reply to a question different from the one just asked.

An hon. Member: Coward.

Mr. Olson: I wish to answer some questions that were asked yesterday and, indeed, the day before yesterday concerning grain dryers in certain elevators. The questions were asked by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) and the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski). But by way of answer I wish to say that my information is that there is nothing in the board regulations to impede, restrict or in any way prevent the installation of grain dryers in country elevators. In most instances such installations are prevented by fire and insurance regulations which the companies do not choose to violate. Some companies have hired commercial dryers and some own their own dryers. In most instances these dryers are set up next to the elevator, with adjoining spouts. The Board of Grain Commissioners has no objection to these arrangements.

GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS

INFORMATION LEAKED TO PRESS BEFORE PRESENTATION IN HOUSE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister which has nothing to do with the matter we discussed previously. It arises from the fact that three government documents which parliament has been awaiting to receive have now been leaked to the press. I refer to the report of the task force on housing, the working papers for the constitutional conference, and information respecting the hazardous products bill. Will the Acting Prime Minister undertake to have these documents placed before the house immediately, so that parliament and the country will have the benefit of the full and official report instead of those selected portions leaked to the news media?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hazardous products bill has been approved for introduction in the Senate. I can say that that will happen almost immediately. With respect to the report of the task force on housing, this will be presented to parliament just as soon as it is translated and printed. With respect to the other document the hon. gentleman mentioned, I do not know what in fact happened in that case. However I can assure my hon. friend that it is the position of the government and remains its position that it will produce those documents at the time of the dominion-provincial conference which, I think, would be under the appropriate circumstances. I am as anxious, naturally, as is my hon. friend to know where the information leak came from. Nevertheless it is the government's position that those papers will be produced at the time of the conference.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. With regard to the report of the task force on housing—and my remarks apply equally to other reports and documents—may I ask whether it would not be appropriate for the government or the ministry concerned to withhold statements as to what would be in such report until it is placed before the house. Has the minister any comment to make about the obvious leak with regard to the report he proposes to lay before the house shortly?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend will find when he reads the report that some of the matters of greatest substance have not yet been disclosed.

Mr. Bell: They have not yet been leaked.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hellyer: In a matter as complex and diverse as this there is bound to be a certain amount of inspired speculation. I think perhaps my hon. friends will appreciate this when they see the total magnitude and complexity of the problem with which we will be faced in a few weeks.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, which I ask as a result of the question asked by the Leader of the Opposition and the answer of the minister. Will the minister assure the house that these daily leaks—and there have already been quite a number of them—of the report he is to present to the house have been made with his authority. If not, is he prepared to investigate as to who exactly is responsible for giving to the press material that ought to come to parliament first?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I think the fact that these leaks appeared almost daily has been merely coincidental.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. While on the subject of leaks, which was brought up by the Leader of the Opposition, may I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether it will be the Prime Minister's policy in future to have a public relations staff leak to the news media of this country anything pertaining to his personal life, as has been happening in the past?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

HOUSING

REQUEST TO LOWER INTEREST RATE

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

Does the minister or his department intend to make representations to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation with the view of lowering the present interest rate of 9⅜ per cent before the 1st of April, in order to give new impetus to the construction industry?

[English]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a question which will have to be considered in the larger context and I am not in a position to give any direct information about it at the moment. But I can tell my hon. friend that the level of interest rates is a matter of concern to the government and, certainly, to all those who are interested in seeing that the very commendable record of lending in the housing field is exceeded in 1969.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CRIMINAL CODE

REQUEST THAT STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT ON INDIVIDUAL SUBJECTS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Since we shall soon be debating the omnibus amendments to the Criminal Code would the minister be prepared to recommend that the standing committee that will study this bill bring in three or four distinct reports having to do with matters such as abortion, homosexuality, lotteries and the other general terms of the bill, so that the committee could break down the bill into four distinct parts and bring in four reports. Would the minister give some consideration to that and make a recommendation along those lines?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I hope the standing committee in its good judgment will deal with the bill as it finds it.

Mr. Woolliams: Do I take it then that the minister is standing firm in every regard and that the bill will be presented as it is to the house and debated as one complete document?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, sir.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The Prime Minister has ordered him to do that.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON POSSIBLE WORK STOPPAGE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Postmaster General. Have the discussions between the representatives of the postal workers unions and the department been concluded and, if so, can he report that we are not going to face another work stoppage in the very near future?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I regret to say that the minister is ill to day and I shall have to take the hon. member's question as notice.

SPORTS

DECISION BY RUSSIAN HOCKEY TEAM TO PLAY CANADIAN SERIES

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I should like to pass along information I have just received and that should normally be released by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) who is absent at this time. In my capacity as Secretary of State, I should like to break the news by quoting the title of a film: "The Russians are coming... All games but the first will be played on schedule".

[English]

An hon. Member: If you stay in power the Russians will come.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

SUGGESTION THAT RADIO CANADA IS UNDER CONTROL OF SEPARATISTS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the very frank and illuminating answers given to my questions yesterday by the Secretary of State, I would like to ask him whether it is the intention to verify the accuracy of the allegation that Mr. Alphonse Ouimet advised the former prime minister that Radio Canada was under the control of separatists, and that there was nothing the management of the corporation could do about it? Is it the intention of the Secretary of State to investigate the accuracy of this allegation?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am now in a position to tell the Leader of the Opposition that I have read the chapter dealing with the history of the C.B.C. but that I have not personally taken any decision as to whether or not an investigation should be conducted with respect to that allegation.

NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

RIGHTS OF LEASEHOLDERS IN NATIONAL PARKS—SUBMISSION OF DECISION TO APPELLATE COURT

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Now that the Exchequer Court has reaffirmed the legality of the leaseholds originally granted in western Canada national parks, what action does the minister contemplate to bring the recent administrative decrees on this matter into conformity with this ruling?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, it being a ruling of a court of first instance, the government has decided to appeal in order to have that ruling upheld or quashed.

[English]

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): As a supplementary question, will the minister assure the house that the civil rights of people in the western parks, whose leases were changed by duress and other means before the decision of the Exchequer Court was given, will be reinstated as they existed prior to that decision?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the government will reach a decision in connection with all the aspects of the problem once the Court of Appeal has ruled on the matter.

DRUGS

POSSIBLE RESTRICTION IN SALE OF PRESCRIPTIONS IN COMBINATION

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I directed a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare who indicated he would have an answer for me today. I see the minister is not in the house and I wonder whether he has delegated anyone else to answer my important question regarding certain drugs offered for sale on the Canadian market ?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Fundy-Royal.

Mr. Saltsman: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I object to not receiving a reply. I asked an important question and I was assured that it would be answered today. The minister is not scheduled to be in the house tomorrow. Therefore an answer will not be available until next week. I think the government could have extended the courtesy of having another minister answer on behalf of the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, it is possible that the reply to that question has been made available to me. Unfortunately, as I was not acting yesterday on behalf of the minister, I do not know which question the hon. member has in mind. I may have received the reply, but I do not know which question is involved.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, I will be very pleased to repeat the question. It was about a decision by the food and drug administration of the United States to halt the sale of six prescription drugs which combine the use of antibiotics and other drugs in fixed ratios. I asked the minister whether any action had been taken to ban the sale of these drugs on the Canadian market.

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, again I shall call the attention of the Minister of National Health and Welfare to this matter. No information has been conveyed to me in that respect.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BIAFRA—POSSIBLE CHANGE IN NIGERIAN POSITION

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Would he say whether the Prime Minister's statement that Chief Awolowo is prepared to meet the Biafrans without pre-conditions indicates that Nigeria is now changing its position that peace can come only if Biafra surrenders?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the reports on this subject and some related matters are not complete. I would suggest to my hon. friend that he might agree it would be better to wait until the Prime Minister is back in the house, at which time I am sure he will wish to make a statement and answer questions based on greater detailed knowledge than we have available at the moment.

EXTERNAL AID

BIAFRA—POSSIBLE EXTENSION OF RELIEF EFFORTS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, in view of the fact that it is also reported that the Prime Minister has instructed officials of the Department of External Affairs to meet with Biafran representatives in London with regard to possible peace talks, will our representatives be talking about the possibility of expanding or initiating new relief efforts that will be coordinated with government transport?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I suspect that the talks will not be confined to one narrow issue, but I think it would also be better in this case to wait until we have a complete report from the officials who have been engaged in these discussions.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State.

Would he tell the house whether he holds that the economic situation will improve in the province of Quebec in 1969? Does he expect sizeable progress in foreign investments in Canada, and especially in the province of Quebec?

Mr. Speaker: I feel that the hon. member's question as stated is far too general. It calls on a member of the government to make a general policy statement. I consider that such a statement should normally be made on motions.

GRAIN

PAYMENTS TO FARMERS FOR CONDITIONING OF DAMP WHEAT

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the opinion of farm experts that much of the 400 million bushels of farm stored damp grain will spoil, come spring, owing to the slow conditioning of this grain, has the government considered giving a direct payment on a per bushel basis to farmers to have the conditioning carried out and thus prevent a drastic loss to our economy?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the premise that much or a large part of 400 million bushels will spoil.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, just to satisfy my own curiosity I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Did he get permission from the Prime Minister to be in attendance today, a day when he should not be here?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR SPECIAL TAX TREATMENT OF EXPENDITURES ON DRYING EQUIPMENT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the light of the answer the Minister of Agriculture gave earlier today, for which I thank him, I wish to direct a further question to him. In view of the fact that a number of elevator companies are now prepared to go to additional expense to instal dryers and may lose money on this operation, will the minister and the government consider giving a financial incentive in the form of no sales tax, no duty, and faster depreciation allowances on such equipment installed at country elevators?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, some time ago the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce made certain announcements with respect to some of these taxes. There has been no change in the government's attitude with respect to taxes on grain dryers. I do not see any justification for going beyond that at this time. It is up to the elevator companies to decide what is best for their own operations.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Will the elevator companies be allowed to use these dryers at local points to dry wheat or grain which is held to the account of the Canadian Wheat Board?

Mr. Olson: I will look into that. However, that raises some pretty complex problems about wheat shrinkage and that sort of thing.

CORPORATIONS AND LABOUR UNIONS RETURNS ACT

FAILURE TO FILE RETURNS

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the number of corporations that have failed to file returns for the years 1965, 1966 and 1967 under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act, does the minister intend to penalize those companies which are guilty under the act?

Mr. Speaker: This question should be placed on the order paper.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

MISLEADING ADVERTISING RESPECTING STAMMERING AND STUTTERING

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker. my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Has he received a communication on misleading advertising concerning the treatment of stammering and stuttering and, if so, does he intend to look into this?

Mr. Speaker: This question should be placed on the order paper.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, may I have the permission of the house to ask the President of the Privy Council as government house leader what business the government intends to introduce for the balance of this week and next week?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have had consultations with other groups. I gather that at the moment there would be no wish to have an opposition day under standing order No. 58 called during the coming week. Subject, therefore, to any unforeseen contingencies and depending on the progress which occurs on each particular item, I propose the following order of business. As previously announced, the items of business to be called today would be in the following order: First, item No. 30, second reading of Bill C-148, in respect of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation; second, item No. 13, second reading of Bill C-102, in respect of the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act and the Food and Drugs Act; third, item No. 17, second reading of Bill C-153, to amend the Historic Sites and Monuments Act; fourth, item No. 9, second reading of Bill C-151, to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act.

With regard to the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act amendment I have noted the observation of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) recommending that the bill be referred to the standing committee on fisheries and forestry, even though it comes under the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and involves the chartered banks. Therefore I intend to propose an amendment to the second reading motion to refer the bill to the standing committee on fisheries and forestry. The Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) will be responsible for conducting the bill.

Tomorrow we will again call the freshwater fish marketing bill and the drug price bill, if these have not been given second reading. Then we would call item No. 37, second reading of Bill S-3, to amend the Canada Evidence Act. If those items are dealt with before the close of business, my colleague, the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé), would be prepared to move second reading of Bill C-152, to amend the Veterans Land Act.

On Monday next we would call in this order the Historic Sites and Monuments Act and the Veterans Land Act amendments, if they have not been dealt with, and would then call item No. 36, second reading of Bill S-15, with respect to amendments to the Food and Drugs Act and related statutes.

On Tuesday next we would call the first reading of the fisheries improvement loans bill, if that has not already been dealt with, and then the bill to amend the Veterans Land Act. That would be followed by item No. 33, second reading of Bill S-14, to amend the Aeronautics Act, and item No. 41, second reading of Bill S-19, to amend the Navigable Waters Protection Act. Prior to the close of business on Tuesday and depending on the progress of the items already announced, I will be in a better position to indicate what the business will be on Wednesday. In any event I would propose on Thursday to call for second reading item No. 40, second reading of Bill C-150, the omnibus Criminal Code amendment bill.

With regard to the timing of business in committees I can advise the house that it is expected that the estimates for 1969-70 will be available for tabling by the end of this month. After consultation with the opposition parties we would propose to refer these to the standing committees by the middle of February. It would be desirable, therefore, for those standing committees which have legislative business before them to be in a position to complete their work by February 14 so that they may commence after that date their consideration of supply business. There will, of course, be exceptions to this general guideline as progress takes place.

Mr. Baldwin: Do I understand from the hon. gentleman that, irrespective of the progress made next week, on Thursday next it will be the intention of the government to call the item dealing with the omnibus Criminal Code bill, C-150? Do I understand that this will be called as the first item of government business next Thursday?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Subject to any unforeseen contingencies, that is correct.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, in view of the urgency involved, would the hon. house leader consult with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce some time between now and next week to arrange for the introduction of the bill that is necessary in order that advances may be available for the drying of grain?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Discussions with regard to that measure are already in progress. I am not sure what the exact timing will be.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FISHERIES

ESTABLISHMENT OF FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING CORPORATION

Hon. Otto E. Lang (for the Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved second reading and reference to the standing committee on fisheries and forestry of Bill C-148, to regulate interprovincial and export trade in freshwater fish and to establish the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-148, to regulate interprovincial and export trade in freshwater fish and to establish the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, has had some discussion in the house. Indeed, it had the interesting honour of occupying the time of the house on the last occasion a resolution stage was debated before the change in the rules which eliminated that stage of debate. In my remarks, therefore, I will not repeat what was said about the proposed bill. I might point out, however, what are the general objectives and the principle involved.

In collaboration with the provincial governments the federal government's objective is to establish an effective marketing board for freshwater fish produced in the prairie provinces, the Northwest Territories and northwestern Ontario. In order to accomplish this purpose a crown corporation with necessary powers to trade in fish and fish products is to be created. The corporation is desirable in order to serve the purpose of developing markets and sales for the production from these areas so that the corporation on its own account, where necessary or where it is deemed desirable, can join with private industry in developing the potential of this industry.

It is expected the corporation will operate jointly with private industry where private industry can fill an effective role with regard to processing and distribution. Through the intermediary of agents it is anticipated the corporation will purchase direct from the fishermen the catch in these areas and that it will then sell the resulting production. Though the powers given to it by this bill, it will be in control of the marketing of fish for export and for interprovincial trade. The commission will also have the power to obtain by consent from the provincial governments, and the government on behalf of the territories, similar powers regarding marketing within the provinces and the designated areas themselves.

• (3:20 p.m.)

In addition to attempting to develop and expand the markets for freshwater fish, the corporation will engage in efforts to rationalize the operations of the industry for the benefit of the fishermen whose difficult position was one of the very strong motivating factors in producing and initiating this particular bill.

Years of study have gone before this bill, including work done by the McIvor commission and studies by provincial governments and dominion-provincial conferences. The objective is to obtain a more rational industry, a more stable situation, a better marketing practice and, through all these, a better share for the fishermen of the money which is to be obtained from this valuable product.

The real and ultimate purpose of this government and the provincial governments concerned is to create a totally new environment in this sector of the freshwater fisheries, and environment which will again be attractive to capital investment so that the whole organization of the industry may be changed. There are some 6,000 or 7,000 fishermen who obtain employment in the freshwater fisheries, many of whom at the present time are living at or near subsistence levels. Many of them are Indians or Métis.

The objective is that through this corporation and the regulation of the industry a better market and better prices may be obtained and that through rationalization of the industry a better return may be available to the fishermen. Through the co-operation of the provinces and the legislation which they will enact the corporation will be the effective purchaser of the commercial product for this wide area of the freshwater fishery. The corporation will be in a position to take steps to expand markets at home and abroad and to improve the quality of the product and the dependability of that product, which in itself is an important factor in improving markets and prices.

The corporation will be under the supervision of a board of directors with members appointed by the governor in council, with some of them nominated by the lieutenant governors in council for the interested areas. There will be an advisory committee which is expected to include representatives of the industry in the widest sense, from all its parts, so that the corporation may have in this form some direct communication with the affected people and, in particular, with the fishermen. It will know quickly at all times the reaction to its efforts in the areas concerned.

The provinces will continue to be responsible for the administration of the fisheries themselves; that is to say, for the basic responsibility for conservation and similar matters. This will remain with the provinces. The corporation will not produce quotas. This will result, if it results at all, from the conservation measures taken by the provinces acting under their jurisdiction. It is to be expected that the corporation and the provincial authorities will be in close contact on these matters, but the corporation will have the basic responsibility to purchase commercial catches in the areas and to use the best possible commercial means of taking these catches to market in the most rational manner.

This is an industry that has been in need of action for some time. It is an industry which can only be successfully helped through the co-operation of the federal and provincial governments concerned. It is hoped that with the fruits of these efforts and co-operation, this corporation will do a great deal to improve the status of the men who work in the industry.

The corporation has been given powers broad enough to enter into the necessary commercial aspects of this venture, to ensure good and sound marketing practices and the best possible return to the fishermen and the industry. This bill is expected to be a very important milestone for the freshwater fish industry in Canada and I am delighted to move its second reading at this stage.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister without Portfolio why the fishermen of southern Ontario, particularly those on lake Ontario, are excluded from the proposed benefits of this bill?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): The particular areas of the fishery covered by the bill represent the result of discussions with the provincial authorities concerned. These are the areas of the freshwater fishery in respect of which, in the opinion of the provincial authorities, there seems to be a very definite need for help at this time.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, before the minister resumes his seat I should like to ask whether the corporation will have monopoly control in those areas designated by the provinces for inclusion under the provisions of this fish marketing enactment?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): In the areas concerned it will have a monopoly as a result of the combined provisions of this act, which gives it a monopoly in regard to any purchase for sale or export abroad or for export from one province to another, whether or not within a designated area, and the provincial legislation in respect of all the concerned designated areas covering the sale of the products within the boundaries of the provinces. That will give it a complete monopoly on the purchase of fish within the areas concerned.

Mr. Peters: In provinces where there may be internal sales, have the provincial governments agreed to implement legislation which will allow the equalization of interprovincial and export sales as well as local marketing by this corporation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether hon. members might not feel that we are reviving committee of the whole at this stage. It seems to me that some of the questions asked and the type of discussion we are beginning should take place when the bill is considered in committee, if it is referred by the house to the committee.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, we have passed the resolution dealing with the regulations covering interprovincial and export trade in freshwater fish, and Bill C-148 to establish a Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation received first reading on December 18. At that time a number of speakers from the official opposition as well as other members spoke extensively on this measure, and questions were asked which have now been answered by some sections of the bill.

It is my understanding that it is the government's intention to refer this bill to the standing committee on fisheries and forestry where it will receive a thorough, clause by clause study. Therefore it is not my intention to speak at great length on the measure at this time. However, there are one or two points with which I shall deal briefly, especially since the bill raises some doubt about the overlapping of authority between the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation and the saltwater fish industry.

As I stated previously, this bill sets a bad precedent in that it implies that only our inland fisheries are facing economic difficulties. During the Christmas recess I had an opportunity to visit my constituency and was told that the landings of the groundfish and shellfish industries of Nova Scotia would for the first time in history exceed 700 million pounds with a value in excess of $50 million. These are the figures for 1968.

I am also informed that these tremendous advances in volume and value were made against a groundswell of falling prices for frozen and salted groundfish, and that three or four species, namely herring, scallops, lobster and the new queen crab industry, have enabled our processors to stay in business and remain solvent. The old, historic backbone of the saltwater fishing industry is broken. Here I refer to groundfish species such as cod, haddock and pollock, which are being purchased, processed and sold in many cases at less than the cost of production owing to the devaluation of foreign currencies and excessive competition in our major market, which is still the United States.

All the facts pertaining to this situation have been made available to the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis), the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) and the rest of the cabinet, but unfortunately we have to date heard nothing from the government that would give encouragement to the fishermen of the Atlantic provinces who are literally fighting for economic survival with their backs to the wall. Even the so-called band-aids for the saltwater fishing industry have been removed and nothing has been put in their place. For example, we no longer have the salt rebate assistance program, and for the benefit of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing) I would point out that dredging, construction and the maintenance of wharves and skidways, which are essential to our fishermen, have been seriously curtailed.

In view of the fact that the income of fishermen is declining, the government's attitude can only be construed as one they have adopted from Rowan and Martin's "Laugh-In", where "sock it to me" is the big event of the night. "Sock it to the fishermen" seems to be the attitude of this government with its recent announcement that wharfage, storage rates, berthage, wintering and laying-up charges for shipping and fishing interests have not been altered for ships up to 100 feet in length but for those over 100 feet in length we understand that the increase in these charges will bring to the government an additional revenue of approximately $300,000 next year.

I ask the Minister without Portfolio, the Minister of Fisheries and the other ministers of the government, where in the name of heaven do they think the money will come from with which to pay these increased charges? Fishermen's incomes have declined and they are not in a position to pay any additional charges of this nature. I warn the government that its present policies with regard to the Atlantic provinces, and especially its lack of policy with regard to our major, primary fishing industry, cannot be continued indefinitely without creating major social and economic problems in our area.

Our Atlantic coast fishermen are crying out for the protection which would be afforded them through the implementation of Canada's Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act which which was passed under a Liberal government in 1964. When can we hope to see the geographical co-ordinates established and the base lines drawn so as to give protection to the new, queen crab industry, for example, which in Nova Scotia alone had last year an estimated landed value of $1 million?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I consider it my duty to interrupt the hon. member to remind him that the bill being considered by the house at this time deals with export trade in freshwater fish. The hon. member has in his remarks strayed some distance from the bill before the house. If he is allowed to make this kind of speech, other hon. members would be able to discuss salmon fishing in the Pacific, for example, and the general policy of the government regarding saltwater fish.

If the Chair allows the hon. member to continue along these lines it will be impossible to prevent other hon. members making speeches dealing with fishing in Newfoundland, on the west coast and in our salt waters generally. I would think that the hon. member, having made his point in a rather strong fashion, would want at this stage to return to the matter before the house, which is export trade in freshwater fish and the establishment of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation.

Mr. Crouse: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is rather unusual for one from the east coast to get off course, but it happens once in a while. Perhaps the cold, winter weather has somehow affected my magnetic compass. I wanted to relate some of the problems of the east coast fishing industry to this bill. In a few moments I shall deal with the bill itself and hope to relate the problems of the saltwater and freshwater fishing industries; therefore my remarks will be relevant to the bill.

The fishermen on Canada's Atlantic coast are asking in all earnestness when the government will take some action with regard to the problems I have mentioned. They face real problems because of the scarcity of fish on our inshore banks, coupled with the low prices they are receiving for their catch. Many of them realize they must go farther out to sea if they are to catch sufficient fish to provide a livelihood for their families.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member cannot simply disregard what has been said by the Chair. If there is to be order of debate, the hon. member's remarks should be relevant to the bill now before the house. The hon. member's remarks are entirely irrelevant and I do not propose to allow him to continue along these lines.

Mr. Crouse: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I mention the problems of the east coast fishermen and the promises made to the industry because there is a relationship between that situation and the promises made in this bill. Having read the provisions of Bill C-148 I cannot help wondering whether it will also fall short of its promise to our inland fishermen. The bill calls for a board of directors for the corporation, composed of a chairman, a president, one director for each participating province and four other directors each of whom shall be appointed by the governor in council to hold office for a term not exceeding five years. In addition, the board may employ such officers and employees as it considers necessary, and while the head office of the corporation will be in the city of Winnipeg, meetings of the board may be held in other parts of Canada as the board may determine. All of this expense, plus a paid advisory committee of 15 members, will be incurred and yet under clause 15 of part I it is stated that:

> The corporation shall conduct its operations on a self-sustaining financial basis without appropriations therefor by parliament.

Under the former system of marketing the fishermen in this segment of the freshwater fishing industry received approximately 50 to 60 per cent of the export price. This was small indeed, but it will be interesting to read the annual report of this corporation, which I note must be prepared and submitted to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce within three months after the end of each financial year, and compare the percentage of return received by the fishermen vis-à-vis the return which they formerly received.

At the present time the marketing of Canadian freshwater fish is of major concern to some 7,000 fishermen, more than 300 dealers, and close to 100 exporters. Most of the freshwater fish produced in western Canada and in northern Ontario, mainly pike, pickerel, sauger, lake trout and whitefish, requires the participation of all three levels. However, I note at page 11, clause 25, it is stated that this legislation applies to Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario and the Northwest Territories, and that the provinces concerned must undertake to make arrangements for the payment of compensation to the owner of any plant or equipment in the plant which may be rendered redundant through the operations of the marketing corporation.

This section of the bill raises a number of questions. Since Manitoba, for example, has a large number of plants compared with Saskatchewan, what federal process will be used to equalize the cost of purchasing redundant plants in these various provinces? I should like to put this question to the Minister Without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) who is piloting this bill through the house.

Another question that comes to mind is the effect that this legislation will have on present plant owners in the provinces concerned. Who will decide, for example, which plants will be retained and which plants will be classified as obsolete? Will the owners of obsolete plants be given a time limit in which to bring their plants up to a certain standard before the government inspector steps in and declares the plant redundant? Is it the intention of the government to declare a number of plants redundant as soon as this legislation is approved and, if so, what preparations are being made for those employees in the plants whose livelihood will be affected? As we have heard today from the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), unemployment has reached dangerous levels, and so I ask the minister whether any plans have been made to take care of these people who will become unemployed.

I noted, for example, that under this legislation wide powers will be granted to the fish and plant inspector appointed by the Governor in Council. At page 12 of the bill the inspector is authorized, at any reasonable time, to enter any place or premises that he reasonably believes is being used to store, pack, process or prepare fish for market or shipment, or any vehicle, trailer, vessel, railway, car or aircraft that he reasonably believes is being used to ship or convey fish to market. He may open any container found therein or examine anything found therein that he reasonably believes contains any such fish, and take samples thereof. He will have to be a very reasonable man. It seems to me that the government, by introducing this clause in the bill, is anticipating something less than 100 per cent co-operation from the fish processors and will be taking every possible action to control the entire freshwater fishing industry.

The entire bill is, of course, based upon the report of the commission of inquiry into freshwater fish marketing problems as submitted by Commissioner George H. McIvor, following his appointment in July, 1965. In his report, Mr. McIvor made 17 specific recommendations for the improvement of the freshwater fishing industry, and most of his suggestions are incorporated in the present bill. In fact, his first recommendation is that the interprovincial and export movement of fish and fish products and the sale of same for export or interprovincially should be prohibited except by the board, which should also have the authority to control imports. These recommendations are incorporated in the bill under clauses 20, 21, 22, 23 and 24.

The granting of an outright monopoly to the board covering the complete control of the import and export of fish in the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Ontario, plus the Northwest Territories, raises certain questions. I was rather surprised at the answer given to the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack) that the bill does not include the southern sections of Ontario. As I read the bill, and I have read it carefully from cover to cover, there is absolutely no mention of a definitive area in the province of Ontario being excluded. I would like further clarification from the minister at a later date on that particular point.

The granting of this monopoly compels all fishermen in these designated freshwater areas to sell their fish to the corporation, even though some of them residing on Lake Erie or adjacent to the United States border may prefer to continue marketing their catch directly to their old customers in the United States or in Quebec rather than through the corporation.

The purpose and powers of this corporation are far-reaching. The authority of the corporation is set out in clause 7 of the bill on page 4 under nine different headings and comprises the following:

The Corporation is established for the purpose of marketing and trading in fish, fish products and fish by-products in and out of Canada and, in addition to the powers conferred by any other Act and by other provisions of this Act, has for that purpose power to

(a) buy fish and dress, fillet, freeze, package or otherwise prepare fish for market;

(b) buy, manufacture or produce fish products and fish by-products and package or otherwise prepare fish products and fish by-products for market;

(c) store, ship, insure, import, export, market, sell or otherwise dispose of fish, fish products and fish by-products bought, prepared, manufactured or produced by it;

(d) purchase, lease or otherwise acquire and hold, pledge, mortgage, hypothecate, sell or otherwise deal with any real or immovable property;

(e) establish branches or employ agents in Canada or elsewhere;

(f) invest any money in its possession or control that in its opinion is not immediately required for the purposes of its operations, in securities of or guaranteed by the Government of Canada and sell any securities so acquired by it and re-invest the proceeds thereof or any part thereof in like manner;

(g) borrow money from any bank upon the credit of the corporation;

(h) make loans of working capital on a seasonal basis to persons engaged in fishing for commercial purposes in a participating province; and

(i) do all such other things as are necessary or incidental to the exercise of any of its powers or the carrying out of any of its functions under this Act.

However, I would point out that in all of this part the bill refers to fish when defining the purpose and powers of the corporation, and it is not until you reach part III on page 9 that you find the following words:

In this Part except section 31,

(a) "fish" means round, dressed or filleted fish of any species enumerated in the Schedule—

So there can be no mistake as to the powers and purpose of this bill, I suggest to the minister that under part III, clause 20, the wording be changed to read:

In this bill except section 31 which deals with offences and penalties, for the purpose of this Act fish shall be freshwater fish of the kind defined in the Schedule of this bill.

This wording would be very definite and would take away any doubt with regard to the authority granted to the corporation under this bill.

Another question that arises covers import and export control and the authority granted the corporation. In clause 21 on page 9 we read these words:

Except in accordance with the terms and conditions set forth in any licence that may be issued by the Corporation in that behalf, no person other than the Corporation or an agent of the Corporation shall

(a) export fish from Canada;

(b) send, convey or carry fish from a participating province to another participating province or to any other province;

(c) in a participating province, receive fish for conveyance or carriage to a destination outside the province; or

(d) sell or buy or agree to sell or buy fish situated in a participating province for delivery in another participating province or any other province, or outside Canada.

• (3:50 p.m.)

I cannot but wonder whether this export-import control applies only to freshwater fish and fish from other countries or whether it also applies to saltwater fish shipped to markets in central Canada. The words here are quite definite:

No person other than the Corporation or an agent of the Corporation shall ... (d) sell or buy or agree to sell or buy fish situated in a participating province for delivery in another participating province or any other province, or outside Canada.

I ask the minister this question: will it be necessary for Canadian saltwater fish processors to forward all their orders to the corporation for distribution to their customers in the four provinces and one territory, or will the supermarket chains and regular customers for saltwater fish products be permitted to make their saltwater fish purchases without going to the corporation? I point out in passing that the corporation would, of necessity, make a charge in connection with its part of the transaction thereby increasing the cost of saltwater fish to consumers.

There are other questions I could raise but these can be discussed in committee. Since we have never before witnessed a monopoly of this type in the fishing industry of Canada, I trust the minister will deal with some of the points I have brought up concerning matters which are vitally important to our fishermen, to fish processors and to Canadians generally who are interested in the economic well-being of this important primary industry.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to compliment the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) on his venture into socialism. In 1945 or thereabouts, when similar legislation was introduced in Saskatchewan, the Liberals there said: "Ah, this is compulsion, this is communism." Well, it is nice to know you have converted the opposition. I should like the minister to know that I support this measure, and I wish him well in its operation.

The success of boards such as the one now proposed tends to reflect the ability of their members and the importance attached to them by the minister and the government concerned. I suggest that the Canadian Wheat Board has reflected at various times the attitudes of Mr. C. D. Howe and Mr. Alvin Hamilton. Possibly it now reflects the ideas of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), though I wonder about that when I see that Canada's share of the world wheat market has dropped from 25 per cent to 20 per cent.

As I say, the success of such boards depends to a large extent upon the quality of the people who constitute them and direct them. No act of parliament is any better than the government which puts it into effect or enforces it. Those to be appointed to such boards should be chosen with great care. It might be that candidates perfectly suitable at one period of time would not be suitable at another. To refer again to the Wheat Board as an example, it might well be that an ex-air force type would be suitable for dealing with a foreign government in connection with grain trading but far less qualified when market conditions changed and he was called upon to sell to private buyers on a tough commercial market, with the emphasis upon developing different tastes and catering to them. This is true of the fishing industry. Board members must be aware of the problems of the moment; they must be prepared to change their tactics with regard to the selling or processing of fish as need may arise.

I should like to say a few words about selling. When the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) was discussing the saltwater fisheries some time ago he laid some emphasis upon the production of fish protein and similar products. After he had finished my reaction was to go to the dining room and order a lamb chop. I do not think this is the response which a minister of fisheries should provoke. He should be enthusiastic about the product, and I suggest that the Minister without Portfolio should be prepared to discuss fish in such a way as to leave his listeners with a desire to eat some. In this connection, perhaps I ought to mention one of the members from British Columbia who is involved in selling chicken products. Whenever the subject is raised with him, a light seems to go on automatically and by the time he has finished talking about it his listeners all want to eat chicken. This is the effect that the Minister without Portfolio, who I understand will be in charge of this operation, should attempt to produce. When he gets through talking about fish we should all want to eat some.

While I am on this subject there is one other matter I should like to mention. At one time I had a meal of whitefish in the town of Lac la Ronge. What the cook did to that fish should have qualified him for jail. I am not sure how one can get round that sort of thing.

An hon. Member: A recipe book.

Mr. Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): I suggest that the minister and the board should be developing new types of recipes and ways of preparing fish so that they may be even more attractive to the palate. The public, in turn, should be encouraged to use these recipes. I hope the minister will also encourage the canning of fish in ways which will develop new markets for fish products. We are all aware of the importance of canned tuna fish and canned salmon to both our export and home markets. I trust the minister will explore the possibility of developing these markets still further through advances in the canning industry.

After perfecting the recipes to which I have referred the minister and the board ought to be prepared to tour the country and speak to housewives and representatives of the food industry all over the nation, and in the United States if necessary, about the advantages of eating fish. I wish the hon. gentleman well in his new department and in his relations with the new fisheries board. I trust the establishment of the board will result in a larger income to fish producers in the areas concerned, increased market stability, a higher income to all concerned and a more effective industry generally.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, this bill really puzzles me.

Indeed, several questions come to my mind when I notice, first of all, that it deals with a program in which only four out of ten provinces have agreed to participate. I wonder why it is so.

With regard to Quebec, I think I know the answer. Quebec keeps a jealous watch over those fields in which it has—or at least it believes it has—exclusive jurisdiction, such as fresh water fisheries, for instance, which have always been considered as a solely provincial matter.

Now, if Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Ontario deem it advisable to set up that Corporation, why do they not get together to do so? It would then be possible to prevent the Corporation from favouring certain provinces unduly. I agree whole-heartedly that the various areas should co-operate in improving marketing conditions in that industry. But, what I would like to know is whether that Corporation which in a way will regulate operations in four provinces, will not hamper the same industry in those provinces which are not members of it? Will not the taxes levied in Quebec be used to help the fishing industry elsewhere, to the detriment of the Quebec industry, which is extremely well off?

When this type of bill is proposed, I wonder whether we should not wait until there is agreement between all the provinces, in order to be sure that each will get a fair deal. I feel that this is another example of what often happens when the government seems to look for excuses to interfere in provincial affairs.

The government might perhaps make suggestions, but most of the time, it could wait until the provinces ask for a thing like this.

It would certainly be a good thing in my opinion, if trade pertaining to the freshwater fish industry were coordinated across Canada. Such coordination, however, would require the co-operation of all contracting parts. Such are the questions that come to my mind.

There have been endless discussions, which reached their peak in December, about ways of accelerating the proceedings of the house.

There is a very good way to achieve that. It would be, for Ottawa, to mind its own business and to let the provinces take care of their own problems. If matters under provincial jurisdiction happen to need coordination or planning, it will be up to the provinces to seek the co-operation of the federal government, if necessary. The reason why we are always short of time, to the point of considering the possibility of limiting debates under section 16A, is that there are several fields where the federal government concerns itself with matters that are none of its business. If one would confine oneself to one's own field, I think we might settle, partly at least, the problem of speeding up the proceedings of the house.

[Mr. Matte.]

I would like all these questions to be answered, so that we may know why some provinces do not co-operate. Of course, those which do not have such an industry are not interested and this is most understandable. In other fields, however, it should be possible to establish bodies to deal with all the business of all Canada. Of course, in areas where there is no such industry, the province would not be interested. However, in the case of an industry such as this particular one—and we know that in a state like Quebec it can grow into a very prosperous one—I wonder why the federal government, whose field it is, suggests establishing a Corporation which will deal only with the provinces that agree to co-operate.

Therefore, it is advisable to give it serious consideration before passing such a bill; consideration must be given to any possible consequences and if we do not watch for those things, we will have once more to bear with recriminations from Quebec and once again the rest of Canada will have the opportunity to say: If things are not going well in Quebec, it should simply get organized as we are, and so on.

When the federal government has to spend money, it must do it equitably. We must of necessity be just in the sense that when the federal government deals with matters which are not of particular concern to it, we must reach an agreement with all the provinces, and not with just a few, before legislation is passed. It is this point in particular which I want to emphasize.

I would not want the provinces concerned to think that we are opposed to the progress of this industry but if four provinces and one territory are interested in the setting up of that Corporation, they should do it themselves, and the federal government should not do it alone without the previous consent of all the provinces.

I should like to have an answer to all my questions so that we would really know whether this is another blow aimed at provincial autonomy.

[English]

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, in commenting on the freshwater fish marketing bill at this stage of its passage through the house I should like to make a few remarks thereon. Many of my comments will be in the form of questions to which I hope to obtain answers in order to ascertain how the act will function once it is brought into effect, if indeed it is. I should also like to point out a few places where the bill seems to be obscure and should be clarified before final passage.

In my riding there are a few hundred licence-holders in the fishing industry who will be affected by the legislation. They have been asking questions about it and making comments, and I do not think these are altogether clarified by the provisions of the bill. One of their main points is in connection with the duties of the corporation and the extent to which it will take over the buying, processing and marketing of fish. It does not appear quite clear whether fish can be sold to the trade within the province in which they are caught without passing through the hands of the corporation.

For instance, it is not clear whether licensed fishermen will have the opportunity of selling to neighbours, local restaurants and so on, bearing in mind, of course, that they are bound by the requirements of our food laws and so forth. It is not clear from the terms of the bill whether or not this type of enterprise is going to be prohibited or allowed. Indeed, there does not seem to be anything in the bill that will prevent a fish producer from marketing fish in any form within the province in which the fish are caught. This may be an indication that the purpose of the bill is to allow some private competition or private trade in fish, or that there may be a low level of competition in fish products in the province in which the fish are caught. The legislation does not spell out whether the corporation can or will allow private enterprise to engage in fish marketing or, particularly, in the manufacture of fish into fish by-products. In my area, for instance, there is at this time considerable interest in the manufacture of coarse fish into pet food. I believe that this point ought to be clarified since clarification would remove the considerable uncertainty of the processors of fish. They are not sure whether there will be any need for private initiative in the actual marketing and manufacturing of fish products.

Another area where the legislation does not seem to be quite clear is in the definition of a fisherman. This has been a bone of contention in my province. Our fishermen argue about the definition of a fisherman. Although all commercial fishermen must procure a licence to fish, all too often this has been a mere formality. There has been criticism of some fishermen who make their livelihood from fishing. There has been considerable discussion among fishermen themselves as to the designation of a fisherman. Some hope to make a livelihood from the fishing industry most of the time while others are part time fishermen who fish on a part time basis to supplement their incomes or who go fishing when fishing is good and proceed to another occupation when fishing is not so good. I believe the licensing of fishermen will have to be considered, as will the definition of a fisherman. If the corporation is to handle all or almost all fish on the market it may eventually have to be the body which will make this decision.

There is a further clause in the bill dealing with the granting of licences for the carrying on of interprovincial trade and the export of fish. It is not clear whether the present system of export licences will be continued, with the province having the power to grant an export licence to anyone it sees fit, or whether the corporation will grant such licences. In the past many people involved in the marketing of fish products have been worried about this situation. They have felt that to a large extent the existing conditions did much to bring about the McIvor report. Indeed, they feel that too many export licences are being given to people without adequate trading or marketing facilities. It is felt that such individuals or companies dealing in fish have tended to drive down the price, with the result that the market was depressed. It would seem that this activity would also have to be carried out by the corporation if any kind of rationalization at the interprovincial or international level is to be achieved.

There is another point of general concern in my riding. Will the board buy all species of fish that are procured by fishermen or will it set some sort of quotas? Some fishermen in some areas catch mostly coarse fish and very few good fish that can be sold, while others in other areas catch good, saleable fish most of the time. If the board is to acquire control over the marketing of fish and fish products, surely it will be required to take all saleable fish caught by fishermen subject, of course, to the quotas which must be imposed on the yields from lakes in order to make for good fish husbandry. Unless it is made clear that the board is required to buy all fish offered to it, it does not seem likely that the corporation could carry on a meaningful rationalization of the industry.

One area has not been spelled out in the legislation and probably it cannot be. I am referring to research into various types of fishing and fish products. We do not know whether the effects of the legislation will spill over and affect research into the production of worth-while species of fish and good fish husbandry. In any event, no doubt the board will have some interest in this matter and will investigate the possibilities with the appropriate provincial authorities.

There is also the matter of pooling to consider, which is of considerable interest to my area. As I mentioned before, some lakes yield mainly coarse types of fish while others yield mainly good quality fish. It is important for us to have good quality catches and to preserve fish during transportation for processing purposes. I want to know whether fishermen catching high-grade fish will be rewarded by higher prices than those paid to fishermen who do not care so much about the quality of their catches and produce lower grades of fish. This will be an important problem and I believe the board may have considerable difficulty with regard to it.

The matter of transportation must also be considered. Will fishermen residing close to centres of consumption have a transportation advantage over fishermen not residing close to such centres? We must also consider the subject of compensation for processors of fish whose facilities will become redundant. The legislation on this point is obscure. I understand that the provinces are to be involved in this matter, with the corporation reimbursing the provinces. Very likely a number of companies, by no means all of them large, will find that their fish sheds and warehouses have become redundant. Although the legislation on this point seems obscure, I take it the corporation will reimburse them in some way. In any event this ought to be looked into. If there is to be compensation I should like to see wording in the bill setting out who is responsible for determining compensation as well as what that compensation will be. Also we ought to set up some type of appeal board or appeal mechanism in case some people feel they have not been adequately compensated.

Finally, I point out that in 1964 the freshwater fishing industry brought a return to the fishermen engaged in it of approximately $12 million, which is considered to be between 50 per cent and 60 per cent of the total amount of money received for the fish caught by them in that year. Approximately 6,000 to 7,000 fishermen will come under this legislation. The price of fish is not rising and the catches do not seem to be any greater. There is a big problem here in that a total income of $12 million for 7,000 people means that each fisherman receives less than $2,000 a season for his work, or less than the minimum wage. Further, the fisherman has to deduct from that amount his expenses, which are not unsubstantial. So it is obvious that this is an industry in which the participants are operating at a very low level.

The proposed corporation is a very expensive looking set-up and to my mind it is doubtful that it will be able to conduct its business in a businesslike manner and be self-sustaining, at least in the initial stages. I believe that an ARDA type program may have to be instituted for many of these fishermen under which they can be upgraded to obtain a higher income, and some may have to be assisted to go into other occupations.

I am most interested in this bill. Although it does not deal with a large segment of our population it is interesting in that it deals with a perishable food product, and the history of marketing boards for such products has not always been the best.

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, to the extent that this proposed legislation attempts to carry out the very lofty aims set out in clause 23 I would certainly go along with it. That clause says it will be the aim of the proposed corporation to improve the lot of fishermen by:

(a) marketing fish in an orderly manner;
(b) increasing returns to fishermen; and
(c) promoting international markets for . . . fish.

These are indeed lofty ideals, I say to the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) and to the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang), who is piloting this bill through the house, that if they are successful in carrying out these ideals I for one will certainly be prepared to sing their praises loud and long. Also, to the extent that the legislation proposes to improve the economic position of freshwater fishermen and gives recognition to the importance and value of marketing boards I am prepared to go along with it.

There is certainly need today for improved methods and practices in the marketing of fish and fish products. Through no fault of their own our fishermen have seen their cash incomes slump from year to year. For as long as I can remember fishermen in all parts of Canada have been at the mercy of fluctuating prices so that from one year to another they can never be sure what their incomes will be. While the fishermen themselves have made a great deal of progress in solving their own problems, and while it must be admitted that they are a capable group, nevertheless I am firmly of the belief that they must have machinery to protect themselves. Every other class of producer has machinery whereby its interests can be protected and our fishermen must be afforded the same means of protection.

Not too many years ago we had markets for our fish in Europe, South America, the West Indies, Puerto Rico, Cuba and various other countries, but one by one these markets have been falling away. As we lost them our fishermen were placed in a more and more precarious position. More and more of them were forced out of employment and more and more of them were forced to leave the industry. Therefore, I am also in accord with the principle of a marketing board involved in this bill. I believe we should have a dominion marketing board under which we could control the marketing of fish of all kinds, not just freshwater fish. Nobody will deny there is need for improved methods and practices in the marketing of fish and fish products. This is a highly commendable objective, and anything which tends to further this end without depriving individuals—I stress this—of the rights, liberties and privileges which are so sacred to all of us will, I am sure, receive general endorsation.

The greatest factor working against the orderly marketing of fish and fish products in Canada is the surpluses we have from time to time. This also applies to farm products. In times of surpluses fish are literally dumped on the market, prices to the fishermen are depressed and, of course, the fishermen suffer. A properly constituted marketing board should be the means by which this situation can be corrected. I stress the fact that it must be a properly constituted board, but in my opinion the legislation before us fails in that respect. It fails because it does not guarantee that there will be even one qualified fisherman on the proposed board. I suggest that the producer should be given the fullest measure of control over his own product. He is the one who has the most at stake. But this legislation gives no indication that there will be even one qualified fisherman on the board proposed to be set up to help fishermen control the marketing of their products.

I say that the producers themselves should have a say on all marketing boards. I maintain that a board of this kind will never work successfully unless it has the full co-operation of the producers of the product to be controlled by it. The only way to make sure that the fishermen are behind the board is to make sure that they are adequately represented on it. I repeat that this legislation fails in that respect. The board should be the collective voice of the fishermen. It is proposed that it speak for the fishermen and protect their rights. Surely the fishermen should be given a guarantee that they will be represented on the board by people actively engaged in the fishing industry.

There is another feature of the legislation which I do not like. It smacks just a little too much of government control. My fear is that the legislation as presented could set up a bureaucracy which would undertake to regulate the production and marketing of fish. If we examine the bill we find that the Governor in Council is the body that will appoint the members of the board. I suggest that the freshwater fishermen's associations—I presume there are such in existence—should have some voice in determining who is going to be appointed to the board. As I have said, it is their business that is going to be controlled. I do not think it is fair to give the Governor in Council complete say as to who should be appointed to the board.

From day to day we see the old policy of laissez-faire rapidly becoming a thing of the past. I suggest, however, that we must not allow the government to take over all our activities. Surely we should be able to retain some power. Surely the fishermen themselves should have some say with regard to the composition of this board. We on this side of the house suggest very seriously that this is an example of government control with a vengeance. Obviously this bill is intended to give a greater measure of control over the activities of our fishermen. I feel that unfortunately there is a very grave danger that this board may become government controlled. We must not become overburdened with paternalism and bureaucracy. Already the hand of the state is almost everywhere except perhaps in the bedrooms of the nation. The Prime Minister says it has not got there yet.

Although I agree in principle with this legislation, it would appear to be an unwarranted extension of governmental authority and interference with the rights of the subject. I believe something must be done to protect not only the freshwater fishermen but all our fishermen against the vagaries of the market, and I suggest very seriously to the Minister without Portfolio that some consideration be given to amending the proposed legislation in such a way that the fishermen, those who are primarily interested in the matter, will be guaranteed representation on this board.

Mr. Mark Smerchanski (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak in favour of Bill C-148, to establish a freshwater fish marketing corporation. Such a corporation is long overdue. It is necessary and desirable for the benefit of the fishermen on our freshwater lakes. When we consider the fact that most of the fishing operations on the lakes are divided between frozen fish products and fresh fish products and when we realize the difference in price is some six or seven cents a pound it becomes evident that this places a heavy burden on the fisherman who is entitled to a higher return. Aircraft transportation has to a great extent been brought into play in relation to the fishing operations on the freshwater lakes. We find that these fishing operations are highly specialized. Fish are transported from the lakes by air in the form of fish meal, fillets and headless. The weight factor is very important.

It is almost mandatory that the fisherman should have a ready market for his product. In the past he has lost a great deal of his product by reason of not being able to sell it when he brought it to the market. This freshwater fish marketing corporation should resolve this problem and provide the fisherman with a better return for his product. The industry needs this type of control. In turn the fisherman will profit from the possibility that some of the by-products which are not considered to have much value because of air transportation costs will likely revert to the fisherman and produce additional income. The fisherman will be able to have centrally located filleting plants and will be able to avail himself of proper freezer facilities in certain areas.

I wish to commend the minister for bringing this bill before the house because it will co-ordinate efforts and will further the ability of the fisherman to increase his income. He will be able to market his product through the corporation at a higher price. There will be an orderly control over the marketing of fish from fresh waters, especially in western Canada.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take a few moments to express some of the fears I have in connection with this board. While the operation of such a board may be desirable—at least in the early stages we hope this will be so—I have always had some reservations about marketing perishable products when there is a possibility that too much emphasis may be placed on storage facilities, transportation and marketing rather than on providing the primary producer with an adequate return for his efforts.

In Saskatchewan we have had some experience with such boards. Some producers at times have been satisfied with the situation but, on the other hand, such boards have tended to monopolize the market too much and at times the fisherman was not really aware whether he was obtaining the maximum benefit from the board. The Indians and Métis who are engaged in fishing tell me they often feel it is not the fisherman who benefits from such boards but rather the operators of air lines or other transportation companies that are involved because these companies ensure for themselves an adequate return while the fisherman receives the crumbs from the operation.

It is now obvious that the existing provincial boards will no longer function in a really competitive manner, and since the grant which will be available to this board will be only about $100,000 I am somewhat concerned that this will not be sufficient to establish the board, pay for its operating expenses and salaries, and at the same time compensate the operators of the filleting plants or storage facilities. It is obvious that the corporation must operate at a profit and use its profits to provide filleting plants, storage facilities and transportation. I suggest that in its early stage the corporation will concentrate on establishing these facilities. It will be interested in providing modern equipment. This will take a number of years to accomplish. As a result there will be a period of time when the fishermen will not receive the maximum benefits of this legislation. I would like to see some arrangement made whereby the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) would provide increased grants from the consolidated revenue fund so that the industry could operate on a sound basis. Under the present circumstances the primary producer will not be able to obtain the maximum benefits for many years.

It is my belief that even with this marketing board there will be fluctuations in price. What may be necessary in conjunction with the operation of the corporation is a price stabilization board. This could be of assistance to the industry. One must be very careful in establishing initial prices for this product, just as with wheat. The initial price very often is not as high as the realized price. Having established a certain initial price it should not be possible during the following year to reduce the price because of greater competition or the unavailability of markets. The primary producer must have some assurance in respect of price and markets. The establishment of a price stabilization board might help this corporation in its infancy when it is spending money for the acquisition of the necessary operating equipment.

I wonder what the effect of the establishment of this board will be in respect of existing fish marketing boards such as the one in Saskatchewan. I imagine there have been some discussions in this regard. Perhaps some facilities will have to be taken over from the Saskatchewan fish marketing board or operated in co-operation with this corporation. I hope adequate provisions have been made to compensate equitably the people who have an interest in these facilities.

We must always consider employment opportunities for those people who reside in the areas to be affected by this corporation. I suggest that rather than establishing a bureaucracy to be administered from somewhere in central Canada great emphasis should be placed on hiring native Indians and Métis who, because of their locale and nature, are well suited for employment in this industry. There are many Indian settlements around lakes on the prairies. These people will not take part in the fishing industry because they feel it is a waste of time. In order to succeed in such a venture one must spend a great deal of money. These people feel that the cost and the effort involved cannot be justified by the return. There is not adequate compensation for their efforts.

In view of the fact there will be no competition in this field I hope a real effort will be made to avoid placing emphasis on the purchase of facilities. If it is found necessary the government should extend the time limit in respect of the acquisition of necessary facilities by the corporation or in co-operation with existing authorities. We should not be too quick to establish a bureaucracy. We should do everything possible to assure a greater return to the primary producers.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to note that the proposal to establish this marketing board was presented by a minister who comes from a province where most elections have been fought on the basis of local reaction to crown corporations. I was pleased to see that the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) was not unwilling to present such a bill. I was equally surprised to hear another hon. member say that he is in favour of marketing boards. This is a very conservative attitude, but someone should always express such opinions.

I do not come from an area which produces a great deal of marketable fish. Most of the fish caught there are game fish. In northern Ontario as in Manitoba the potential production of commercial fish is greater than what now exists.

The government in drafting this proposed legislation has stuck fairly closely to the recommendations of the McIvor commission. The saltwater fisheries have reason to be concerned about the establishment of an inland freshwater fish marketing agency. The freshwater fishery in central Canada and central United States has not been a great threat to the production and distribution of saltwater fish.

I have for many years read with great interest the advertisements placed in farm papers in respect of frozen fish in bulk for shipment from the Winnipeg area to parts of Ontario and the prairies. I have noted that a great fluctuation has taken place in this regard. If we are to have a viable industry we must do something to stabilize the price of fish and perhaps develop a totally new type of industry.

I agree to some extent with the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) that caution should be exercised in regard to heavy capital cost expenditures in the initial stage. We will have to develop in Canada a greater market for fish. When I first came to the house Winnipeg gold-eye was on the menu of the parliamentary restaurant at least once a week. I have not seen this fish for several years. I thought they were terrible fish to eat, but I am sure they were a good advertisement for Winnipeg. It was a unique-looking fish which I had not seen before. In this way we were doing something to increase the sale of this type of fish.

We do not have live lobster on the menu of the parliamentary restaurant. I think the salt-water fishermen would be very much in favour of increasing the sale of lobster. I find the Department of Fisheries is becoming very cheap, from the point of view of members of parliament, because I remember that a few years ago about one-third of the members of this house were invited to visit the excellent kitchen of the Department of Fisheries. We started with the first course, which was of course fish. We then proceeded through the soup course and several other unknown courses. Then we had a choice of several kinds of fish and finished with a dessert made out of fish in their own laboratory. The Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) has perhaps not been long enough in his portfolio to realize the value of advertising the developments that have been made in this industry. I am not sure how you can make custard out of fish. I am sure that most housewives, even those in the fishing areas, would not know how this is done, but I was informed that we were eating custard made out of fish. The minister should consider having his department provide assistance in advertising the value of processing in the kitchen many of the fish products that are available to us.

I am sure the minister will find that many agents who have been selling freshwater fish up to this time will not look upon this new board favourably. They have developed a great deal of competition and have had a very lucrative business. This measure will of course put some of them out of business. There will be an established quality and quantity of fish available and therefore stabilization of the price is almost inevitable. As happened with former cattle buyers, if there is a stabilization of price there will not be so many people in the business and the market will be developed on much more orderly lines.

The problem in the Northwest Territories has been handled by the former minister of northern affairs, now the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing). He did a great deal of work in the development of the char fishery program. This market was developed for the benefit of Indians and Eskimos and a very coarse and, I presume, almost mullet-type fish was produced. The sale of this fish resulted in a very high return.

In my area we have a form of sturgeon in Lake Timiskaming. It is fished commercially and sent to the New York market where it fetches a very good price. Occasionally the local fishermen steal a sturgeon from the commercial nets so they may try it out. They cannot get it any other way. They find it to be a terrible fish so far as eating is concerned, but it is very much sought after and fetches a high price in the gourmet markets.

Char was developed in this way. The minister will have to concern himself with this fish because I am sure we have only scratched the surface of the potential trade. We should be able to develop a market far larger than at present. I am sure the market is there to be found. As a more orderly price is obtained for fish I am sure we could consider many other areas that are not now considered to be commercial and will be able to make these products a commercial proposition.

I have for many years had a running battle with the department of lands and forests in Ontario with regard to the type of fish produced. The Americans I have observed fishing come to northern Ontario for wall-eye or pickerel, but the department of lands and forests has been spending millions of dollars on stocking lakes with trout. An American can go to a trout farm in the United States and for about $1 can buy a trout. If he pays $10 he is entitled to so many trout. Somebody puts them in the pond and he takes them out. We will have to decide whether it is worth while stocking our inland waters with fish. The minister will under this legislation have to consider restocking our inland waters. If a fish is worth $3 or $4 on the market and it costs us 50 cents to develop this industry, that is good business. It is an easy type of fish farming and one in which we should be involved.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It is my duty, pursuant to standing order 40, to inform the house that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr Knowles)—Public Service—superannuated federal employees—request for increased pension; the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Dumont)—Finance—request that interest rates be studied by standing committee; the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski)—Sports—exercise of draft by National Hockey League.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DISCUSSION OF NATIONAL DEFENCE POLICY IN STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might have the consent of the house to revert to motions in order to move a motion with reference to the standing committee on external affairs and national defence. I believe this motion which was mentioned earlier today, might now be found acceptable.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Does the house agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I move, seconded by the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis):

That the standing committee on external affairs and national defence be instructed, and hereby is instructed, to hear evidence on and to consider Canada's policy with reference to defence and external affairs.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. It being five o'clock p.m. the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions (papers), public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

LONDON AND MIDLAND GENERAL INSURANCE COMPANY

The house resumed, from Tuesday, October 29, consideration in committee of Bill C-101, respecting London and Midland General Insurance Company—Mr. Lind—Mr. Béchard in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: When the committee dealt with this matter on Tuesday, October 29, 1968, clause 1 of the bill was under consideration.

On clause 1—Change of name.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, this bill has been to committee and while in committee the Avco Company, who are the principals of this company, had the opportunity to make a number of statements in reply to questions that have been asked for some time regarding the company under consideration. The questions really fall into three categories. First, is this company willing to make a concession to the general policy of Canada as it has been outlined in respect of other financial institutions, including the Mercantile Bank? Is the company willing to provide through legislation for changes in ownership and control over a period of time, taking into account the financial considerations which might evolve? Second, has this company legitimate proof to offer regarding the necessity for the change in name from one that has been used in Canada over a considerable period of time and in view of the participation of a large number of Canadians through the purchase of policies from that company? Third, is it the desire of the company, as indicated by the sponsor of the bill, to state that it is losing money by continuing to be known as the London and Midland General Insurance Company and that it wishes to be renamed so as to eliminate what appears to be confusion in the British market because of a bankruptcy which occurred in a company of a similar name in England?

I gather from reading the report of the committee—I did not have the opportunity to attend the meeting—that the officers of the company did not avail themselves of the opportunity to make statements on the three points which I have enumerated, nor did they really make any attempt to do so. In fact, with regard to the inherent right to establish Canadian ownership, all the statements made by this company were negative in terms of their relationship with the Avco Corporation and its multi-unit corporation in England and the United States. They indicated that the strength of the company was going to flow from its association with the Avco Corporation, and obviously they were not willing or even in a position to consider the right of Canadians eventually to own this corporation.

Second, they spoke about the desirability of a relationship between this company and the previous company, but they made no effort to indicate the profit of the London and Midland Company in relation to other companies. I am not in a position to do so either. I have information available which would provide a comparison, but there are many unknown factors which would make it an unfair comparison.

The London and Midland Insurance Company has no distinct advantages in the Canadian market which would distinguish it from other companies, but in the case where agents are involved each of them plays some role in the development of the company and in the sale of insurance underwritten by this company. Therefore it would seem to me that there would have to be identical salesmen, identical situations and identical circumstances before it could be decided whether or not the statement was true. However, the company did not make any attempt to indicate that such is the case. They made the flat statement that they had been hurt and they let it go at that. This can be proved because we have a record of it in the report of the Superintendent of Insurance. I have volume 2 of the annual statements of the fire and casualty insurance companies which lists, among others, the London and Midland General Insurance Company.

In looking at this company we find that it has not done badly and, in fact, in my opinion has done very well. For instance, the investments owned by the company have a book value of $7.292 million. I suggest that this company has not been hurt very much. If we go back and check their assets at the time of the bankruptcy of the other company with a similar name, we find that their assets have increased and so has the business they have done. I think that the person who represented the company was downright dishonest in implying that the bankruptcy in England has hurt the sales of the company in Canada. In looking over the record of this company, if they wish to compare themselves with another company of similar size selling in a similar market—all of them sell exactly the same insurance anyway; they use a model bill and therefore it is all underwritten in exactly the same way—it appears to me that they would be hard pressed to find justification for a change in name for that reason.

With regard to the financial position of this company it was very interesting to read certain portions of the report of the committee. Mr. Burton said the following:

> Could I ask, Mr. Chairman—I could move the motion if necessary—to have this balance sheet printed as an appendix to the proceedings for this day?

That would have been very nice because it would have meant that we would have had an up to date balance sheet. I am using as a reference the 1966 balance sheet which is the last copy I have of the report of the Superintendent of Insurance. There may be a 1967 copy out now but it must have come in since I brought this volume to the house. What actually happened? The representative of the company said he would be very happy to provide the balance sheet and then a member of the committee said:

> I say, Mr. Chairman, it is not germane to this discussion; it is irrelevant and out of order and, therefore, I would oppose merely on that ground.

He went on to say:

> I am trying to establish here a line of conduct for this coming year.

He did not need to establish that because he has been running interference for these insurance companies for a long time.

I think that the proposed change in name of this company hinges on these three points, and it is my contention that they were not discussed. I believe that there probably could have been a straight answer to this problem had the company provided their balance sheet. I am sure that if they had done so they would have been prepared to compare it with the balance sheets of previous years and to give an indication in dollars and cents of the growth which they would expect their corporation to have over a given period of time, knowing the performance of other insurance companies of a similar nature and relating it to their gain and growth over that period.

They could have said then that they had experienced a loss as a result of the name of the company, and this would have gained some support from some of the members of the committee. This did not happen as a result of interference, but I understand that in the end the committee members were provided with a copy of the financial statement. Of course this is an indication of the fact that the representative of the company was prepared to make the information available but that certain members of the committee were not interested in having it. Because of the fact that the balance sheet was not attached as an appendix to the committee's report it is not now available to other hon. members who did not have the opportunity to attend the meeting of the committee.

The major problem we face in Canada today appears to arise from the ownership and control of many of these companies by corporations outside Canada through interlocking directorships and financial arrangements. This means that by virtue of a corporate decision changes may be brought about in 20 or 30 interrelated companies without Canadians having any say whether those changes are in the national interest. In many cases this might not matter but I suggest that in the case of insurance companies it does matter. They are financial institutions. A great deal of the mortgage money which our people need must come from savings which are held in trust by insurance companies operating in this regard in the same way as banks and trust companies.

In the case we are considering today the total direct investment amounts to $7,292,000. That is a lot of money which could be invested in housing or in related fields. The company now under consideration is only one of a large number of similar companies, perhaps a thousand, doing business in Canada. So there are probably a billion dollars available from insurance companies for reinvestment.

We have on several occasions held conversations with representatives of insurance companies and similar companies in the course of which suggestions have been made. We are now suggesting to this company that it should give consideration to certain proposed changes. One of these changes is similar to the one brought about in the case of the Mercantile Bank where it was agreed that the bank should be given a period of time in which to put its business in order for a sale to take place, or else continue as it was doing for a further period of time at the end of which it was bound to cease business. In several cases companies have agreed that after a ten-year period dating from registration they would either be owned to the extent of 51 per cent by residents of Canada, persons normally of Canadian citizenship, or else that would give up their right to do business and would cease to exist. I presume their petitions are already on the order paper or will be there shortly. Some of the insurance companies have agreed to this procedure. When I talked to the heads of some of these insurance companies they said—and I was pleased to hear it—We, too, want our companies to be Canadian; we want our companies to be so Canadian eventually that we shall be able to make policy decisions free altogether from outside influence.

I asked an American who owns one of these companies why he wanted to establish business in Canada. He did not beat about the bush. He said quite frankly that the market in Canada was so lucrative that if the company were given ten years in which to establish itself it would be willing to get out to the extent of 51 per cent of its shares at the end of that time. The value of the shares sold would represent everything he expected to get out of the operation and afterwards he would be content to let Canadians run the business. If this is true in the case of one of these companies I maintain it is true of others, and in these circumstances I suggest it is time for us to invite these petitioners to state plainly whether they wish to do business in Canada through a Canadian corporation or through a branch office.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, we are dealing now with Bill C-101. The explanatory note to the bill says that the sole purpose is to change the name of the company to Avco Insurance Company and, in French, L'Avco, Compagnie d'Assurance Générale.

If this were the sole purpose of the bill one might be disposed to view the petition with sympathy. Nevertheless, when one hears the name "Avco" one is perplexed as to its meaning. You will recall, Mr. Chairman, that the last time I spoke on the subject I expressed regret that we in Canada should be asked to agree to change a name like "London" with all its implications of parliamentary democracy, all its wealth of associations for people who have left it to come to Canada, for a name like "Avco". Take the other part of the present name of the company—"Midland". I understand this is the name of another region in England. I know that the sponsor of this bill is the hon. member for Middlesex. Middlesex is a county in England of great fame and name and I am surprised that the present hon. member would apparently agree to such a change in name as is proposed.

It was revealed to me that the name "Avco" is a short name for "Aviation companies". This was stated before the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs when the representative of this company appeared on October 10 and 22. When one thinks of aviation companies one thinks of the large companies in the United States. When one looks at the background of Avco and the type of activities in which it participates one is confronted by the general question of the degree of horizontal and vertical development which is taking place in the corporate world today.

For example, Mr. Paterno, one of the witnesses before the committee, was asked to give a breakdown of the areas of economic affinity to which the Avco company was directing its investments. This is the answer he gave:

> The type of industries that we are in would be aerospace, less than 1 per cent; agricultural equipment, 1 per cent; automation equipment, 2.4 per cent; automotive equipment, 3.4 per cent; banking and trust, 5.3 per cent; beverages, 1.4 per cent; building materials, roughly 1 per cent; chemicals, 1.36 per cent; construction, 1.25 per cent; electronics, 3 per cent; food, both distributors and things of that nature, 6 per cent; investment companies themselves, which would be trust companies and things of that nature, 10 per cent; merchandising, 13.4 per cent; metals and mining, 5.1 per cent; oil and gas, 8.5 per cent; pipe lines, 4.2 per cent; real estate, 6.78 per cent; recreation, 3.3 per cent; secondary manufacturing, 4 per cent; tobacco, 1 per cent; transportation, 1.4 per cent; utilities, 8.3 per cent, and miscellaneous, about 2.4 per cent.

• (5:20 p.m.)

That gives a pretty good idea of the spread of the investment involved. These are the sort of industries that this particular company invests in, and the record is quite impressive both in regard to its horizontal as well as its vertical development in the corporate field.

I should like to put on record the different companies that form part of Avco. In the opening statement of Mr. Alexander the parliamentary agent, appear these words:

> I would point out that Delta Acceptance Corporation Limited was incorporated as a public company under the laws of Ontario by letters patent dated March 26, 1954. In July, 1962, Delta Acceptance Corporation acquired the whole of the outstanding share capital of London and Midland General Insurance Company, a company which was incorporated by an act of parliament on July 17, 1947, under the name of the Progressive Insurance Company of Canada and which subsequently changed its name to London and Midland General Insurance Company by an act of parliament on April 12, 1957. Subsequently Delta Acceptance Corporation changed its name to Avco Delta Corporation Canada Limited.

In addition to the London and Midland General Insurance Company the following companies are subsidiaries of Avco Delta Corporation: Avco Delta Corporation Canada Limited; Avco C.F.C. Limited, which was formerly C.F.C. Finance Corporation Limited; Avco Delta Dominion Limited, which was formerly Delta Acceptance Canada Limited; Avco Delta Quebec Limited, which was formerly called D.A.C. (Quebec) Limited; Avco Finance Limited, which was formerly the Crescent Finance Corporation Limited; Avco Highland Plan Limited, which was formerly called Highland Trial Plan Limited; Avco Delta Realty Limited, which was formerly Grand Prairie Investments Limited; Adanac General Insurance Company of Canada; Avco Delta Realty, Manitoba, Limited, which was formerly called The North West Mortgage and Finance Company Limited; Consolidated Finance Western Limited; Empire Acceptance Corporation Limited; General Finance Company Limited; Lorne-Bruce Motors Limited, and Waverly Finance Company Limited.

So not only is there an impressive number of subsidiaries of Avco but there is a very wide range of operation which is indicative of the corporate enterprises that are carried on today. This is why the hon. member for Timiskaming raised three preliminary questions in considering this very important bill. The one that I would underline is the question of foreign ownership.

My reason for so doing is the serious concern that was expressed by the "late" Walter Gordon. When I say "late", I mean late in the sense of his being an active member of the Liberal party. Hon. members will recall that Mr. Gordon set up the Watkins commission to make a study of the impact of foreign ownership in Canada. After completing the study Mr. Gordon presented the report to the House of Commons. He prefaced his remarks by saying that he did not necessarily commit the government to the recommendations contained in the report; in other words, he was left alone on the iceberg to withstand the prevailing winds that were blowing at that time.

It is remarkable that during the last week another book was published by a former minister, the former secretary of state, in which she said that Walter Gordon was one of the most progressive and intelligent members that had ever graced the front benches of the Liberal party, that he was a visionary with regard to economic and financial ideas.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think the last remarks of the hon. member have nothing to do with the bill under study.

Mr. Gilbert: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for bringing that to my attention; I was rather carried away. I have read excerpts from the book and the commendations of the "late" minister of finance were so impressive that they caught my attention.

If I may relate my remarks directly to the question of foreign ownership and more directly to Avco—as hon. members know the purpose of the bill is to change the name "London and Midland General Insurance Company" to "Avco General Insurance Company"—I was equally impressed by the speech made by the present Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) on Tuesday, January 14, two days ago, at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York. On that occasion he addressed the members of the Compressed Gas Association. I happen to have been fortunate enough to glance through his speech, and the opening remarks of the minister have a serious bearing on this problem. This is the way that the present Secretary of State commenced his speech:

"Canada, I have long believed, is fighting a rearguard action against the inevitable. Living next to our nation, with a population ten times as large as theirs and a gross national product fourteen times as great, the Canadians recognize their need for United States capital; but at the same time they are determined to maintain their economic and political independence ... The struggle is bound to be a difficult one—and I suspect, over the years, a losing one ... Thus, while I can understand the motivating assumptions of the Canadian position, I cannot predict a long life expectancy for her present policies."

Thus wrote Mr. George W. Ball, in his book, "The Discipline of Power", published last year in New York. Mr. Ball, as you know, was Under-Secretary of State under the Kennedy and Johnson administrations. The personal opinion he expresses regarding Canada's future seems to me to reflect the opinion of the American public.

Canada, 51st State of the Union? ... Basically, this is not such a fantastic idea.

Thus today, I am speaking to you in English, a language common to you all, Canadians or Americans.

Those were the opening words of the Secretary of State in regard to the United States' attitude to Canada's financial, economic and political independence. He must have had good reason to use them because later in his speech he sets forth how the Canadian government set up the Watkins Commission to study foreign ownership in view of the concern so many Canadians had about it. At page 24 of his speech appears this passage:

You know better than anyone how much the American economy has affected that of Canada. The report of the Watkins Commission, which was set up to study the problem of foreign ownership in Canada in relation to the structure of industry, begins with these words:

"The extent of foreign control on Canadian industry is unique among the industrialized nations of the world. Canadians are aware of the economic benefits which have resulted from foreign investment. They are also concerned about the implications of the present level of foreign control for Canada's long-run prospects for national independence and economic growth."

Some experts hold a much more radical opinion; they believe that Canada has deliberately sacrificed the advantages which economic independence would eventually bring for the more immediate advantages of a high standard of living.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Then, he sets out some statistics, as follows:

—in 1965, more than 60 per cent of the Canadian gross national product resulted from foreign investments in Canada and about 75 per cent of these investments were American. Therefore, 45 per cent of the Canadian gross national product came directly from the United States—this through the agency of 6,000 industrial and commercial companies belonging to American interests or controlled by them. This represents about 14 billion dollars. In Canada, the United States owns:

—more than 60 per cent of the petroleum and natural gas industry;

—approximately 60 per cent of the mines and refineries;

—35 per cent of the pulp and paper industries;

—45 per cent of the factories;

—13 per cent of the public services;

—more than 50 per cent of the chemical, electrical and farm-implement industries—

We could continue this listing of statistics indefinitely, but statistics are sometimes misleading and always tiresome. Best we should stop here.

After reading this interesting and revealing speech by the present Secretary of State which shows the extent of penetration by foreign ownerships in Canada, and when we couple with that the present attitude of the government which does not want to stop foreign ownership of our assets but rather encourages it, one can well become alarmed at the prevailing attitude on the government side of the house today.

When Canada was born in 1867 it had humble beginnings. We started as an agricultural country and through the years have developed not only our agriculture but our industrial life as well. Progress has been made by dedicated Canadians prepared to give their time and talent to the development of our Canadian economy. This development took place steadily over the years. But after the first war, or for the last 40 years, there has been a steady penetration of our economy by our friends to the south. Their capital and their expertise have penetrated our economic life, as well as their more recent technique of developing in this country a branch plant economy. When one reads the long list of concerns the company we are presently considering has under its control one realizes that the extent of penetration is almost beyond the control of Canadians. If we lose financial control of our country we may well lose our political independence. That is why our present Secretary of State showed such concern about the attitude expressed by George Ball, the former secretary of state under Presidents Kennedy and Johnson.

As the hon. member for Timiskaming said, Canada ought to develop her own economy. The way to do that is by telling our friends to the south that we must participate in the development of this economy. We welcome their capital which, I am sure, has helped us over the years. But the type of capital coming in has changed. At the turn of the century capital coming in did not involve the foreign ownership of our assets. Now, equity capital is coming in, and with that our assets are coming under foreign domination. This fact is dramatically exemplified if one studies Avco Insurance Company. They have brought with them their capital and have demanded what is known as equity ownership, foreign ownership in this case. We, as Canadians, must be alert to this problem. The hon. member for Middlesex and other hon. members in his position ought to say, "As a representative of this company and as sponsor of this bill I am prepared to suggest to this company that Canadians must be permitted an equity in ownership as well as participation in company growth. Canadians should be permitted the opportunity of becoming directors of the company and making decisions."

Only in this way can we maintain our identity as Canadians and show men like George Ball, who think we are fighting a rear guard action and that it is only a matter of time before we become the fifty first state, that they are wrong. I am certain that if men like the hon. member for Middlesex, the sponsor of the bill—I am glad to see the hon. member for Hamilton is here—as well as cabinet ministers and their friends realize that this is the No. 1 issue in Canada, they will direct their minds, efforts and attentions to the creation of a country which will be developed by Canadians for Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Chairman, I believe the question now under study is far more important than it might seem to be, and that, for two reasons.

I believe it should be given precedence over all other questions under study. The London and Midland General Insurance Company—in French, la London et Midland Compagnie d'Assurance Générale—according to the statutes, changed its name in 1947 for that of the Progressive Insurance Company of Canada. In 1957, it changed its name again to become known as the Progressive and now it is to be called the AVCO General Insurance Company. I believe that although the company acquainted the committee to some extent with its portfolio, its directors and president did not prove that they wanted to reveal their names.

As stated by the members who spoke before me, that is the members for Timiskaming and for Broadview (Messrs. Peters and Gilbert), AVCO is dished out all around: AVCO Finance, AVCO Aviation, AVCO this, AVCO that. If the London and Midland, which now calls itself AVCO General Insurance Company, really wants Canadians to hold a majority of its shares some day, it must continue to prove its seriousness with regard to its policy holders.

For instance, once the insured has paid his premium, the policy belongs to him and at some given time he may find out that the company is known as the London and Midland, La Progressive, and AVCO. He must certainly trust his insurance salesman and I think he must have great confidence in the general economy or in the seriousness of the legislation of our country which allowed the company, by granting it a federal or provincial charter, as the case may be, to do business in Canada.

Our concern today is the granting of a federal chart. I guess the policy holder can feel confident, but what about the little man, who owns such a policy? Indeed, we know that in most provinces today, especially if we consider the act granting compensation to the victims of accidents, it is important to know where one stand.

I need not mention here those companies which have already been granted federal charts in the last three, four or five years, nor incriminate them, but I daresay—that two of them as least—have gone bankrupt since.

I do not think that because the London and Midland went bankrupt in England is a good reason to change its name into the common name of Avco. I call it a common name because here in Canada the United States' Avco is a household word. I think the idea is rather to enjoy the monopoly of a name so that the publicity made by anyone of the companies may benefit the others. In my opinion, that would be extremely detrimental and would affect the confidence of the Canadian people with regard to investments in that company.

As far as we, the legislators, are concerned, we must be worthy of the confidence of our constituents. As stated by the hon. member for Broadview, that confidence should rise upward and spread from left to right.

I think we should be given conclusive evidence that the name of the company should be changed. Since the representatives of the company have not proven beyond any shadow of a doubt that this change was essential, I think that it is not necessary at this stage to let that legislation go through.

As far as I am concerned, I do not support this bill and I do not agree with those who want to change the name of a company every three, four, five or six years.

Therefore, I believe that, on these grounds, we should act in a responsible manner and firmly oppose such a change in the name of that company, since the fact that the London and Midland went bankrupt in England cannot be considered as a valid argument. For my part, I believe that we should strongly object to the change in question.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Moose Jaw—sorry—the hon. member for Fraser Valley East.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, if I may offer an amendment to your remarks the riding I am privileged to represent is Fraser Valley West, but I congratulate you on your second attempt in being at least in the right province. I realize as someone sitting here a long way from the Chair, it is sometimes very difficult for the Chair to see the various members. This is especially true if they happen to be sitting in the back row and have not come to the Chair's attention previously, at least not often enough to etch indelibly on the Chair's mind the particular ridings that they happen to represent.

Like the previous speakers, I am concerned about the things that are happening in our country. I say this with all the sincerity I can muster. I would like to identify myself with the remarks made most recently by the hon. member for Richmond and certainly by the hon. member for Broadview.

I was particularly impressed, also with the knowledge, and the strength of the convictions of the hon. member for Timiskaming. I was very impressed with the quality of his remarks and naturally, since he is a colleague of mine, I look to him for a certain amount of leadership in these matters.

What is happening here, Mr. Chairman, is really another example of the Americanization of our country. We spend sizeable sums of money on research satellites, the C.B.C., the Canada Council, and the National Film Board for purely social reasons. Over the past three years we have spent millions of dollars on similar projects such as the World's Fair that was so successful in Montreal. We do all these things because we believe they have importance so far as our identification as Canadians is concerned, and our culture is at stake. We are willing to spend billions of dollars on public enterprises of one kind or another to preserve and enrich our culture, but on the other hand I feel that for a great number of years the policies we have followed have had the opposite effects.

The particular company with which this bill is concerned has a profoundly British name in terms of its traditions. Certainly, to most English speaking Canadians the name London and Midland Company is a good solid one, and one which I think should inspire a great deal more confidence than the amended name proposed, at least so far as the buying public is concerned.

People have tended to associate themselves, as clients, with a particular company. This was mentioned in part by the hon. member for Richmond. I believe their interest will be aroused as to what business reasons necessitated a change in the name of a company which has solid British traditions to one which perhaps has a more North American connotation. At least the London and Midland Company sounds like an insurance company whereas the Avco Company sounds like an airline company or perhaps a brand new deodorant.

I notice the reason given for the proposed change of name is to make it consistent with the names of various other members of the group of associated companies, but I am certain that the name is not really the important thing at all. What's in a name? Several finance companies in Canada have had severe financial problems in recent years, regardless of their names. For instance in my own province we have now before our courts a group of companies similar in nature to the kind of thing in which Avco and this group are engaged. Included in this British Columbia group we have various mutual funds, certainly finance companies, and perhaps trust companies of various kinds and complexions. This B.C. group is known in general as the Commonwealth group.

I agree that the failure of the Commonwealth group in B.C. has really nothing to do with this particular bill, but it is interesting to note that in spite of the solidity of its name it was called by the receiver a financial garbage can.

Failure on the part of a company does nothing to enhance the confidence of the public. Even the fact that this name "Commonwealth" was so prominent among this group really did nothing to save the company from failure. I believe what is happening here is that some members have recognized the inconsistency of my argument. However, I do not think that is the main point. We can see that by this sort of manipulation of names, capitalization and so on, as well as other little stunts such as intercompany transactions, these companies are doing nothing to improve the kind of situation I thought we were attempting to improve in this country. I thought we were attempting to build a very solid financial structure upon which to base the kind of expansionist policy in our economy that we so desperately need, especially when one considers the extreme nature of the employment situation today. Unemployment is not a problem only in my province. I am sure a number of other provinces are a great deal worse off in this regard. In any event, there is a growing distrust among the public of our financial institutions generally. The reason behind this is not just the failure of various financial institutions but also results from the fact that there are numerous little manipulative arrangements which go on from time to time which people do not understand. Some of them are interesting, and it even takes years for the courts to understand them.

We are concerned with the type of arrangement of our finances that will have a beneficial effect on our economy. If we continue to play around with this kind of thing, and if members on each side of the house concern themselves mainly with passing a particular measure regardless of its long term consequences, I do not see how we can make any progress. In fact we are wasting money on these changes. In this country we are faced with galloping interest rates. The hon. member for Timiskaming stated that the field in which this company is engaged is an extremely lucrative one, although it may not be lucrative to everyone. However, if one happens to be in a position of command and has the necessary knowledge it can be lucrative for him. This is not so in all cases. It was not so in the case of my constituent who lost $10,000 or more in a recent transaction because of our failure as a government to guarantee the type of protection needed to guard against violation by a member of a financial institution of the principle of protecting the money of the investors.

Mr. Lind: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the hon. member would permit a question.

Mr. Rose: Certainly, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Lind: I fail to connect the remarks of the hon. member concerning this loss of $10,000 with the change of name of this company. I understand that this company, the London and Midland General Insurance Company, is a respectable company which has never been in bankruptcy. I wonder how he connects the $10,000 his friend lost with this company.

Mr. Rose: I shall be glad to attempt to relate this for you. I was just giving this as an example of the kind of financial jungle which is operative in our country. My friend, or my constituent, happened to lose his money through an investment in a Canadian institution. This type of transaction not only involves him as a person but also shakes the confidence of people all over the country in the kind of arrangements we make for the protection of people who happen to make investments of this nature.

Mr. Lind: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member for Fraser Valley West what the situation in respect of this particular gentleman who lost his money has to do with the change in the name of this insurance company.

Mr. Rose: I attempted to explain to you the connection. If I have been vague or if you have been unable to understand the answer I would be very pleased to ask if you made yourself quite clear. I am wondering whether there is any connection between you and this particular insurance company about which we are speaking.

Mr. Lind: You did not ask that.

Mr. Rose: I am attempting to demonstrate to you that this kind of manipulation of names and shaky financial situations are some of the things which destroy the confidence—

Mr. Lind: Mr. Chairman, I object to the hon. member using the words "shady financial manipulation". There is no shady financial manipulation.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Lind: Yes.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Middlesex on a point of order.

Mr. Lind: Mr. Chairman, I object to the remarks of the hon. member for Fraser Valley West when he implies there is shady business in respect of the change of a name merely from London and Midland General Insurance Company to Avco Insurance Company. This company has never been in bankruptcy. It has enjoyed doing business in the city of London. It is a respectable company which has been in operation for a number of years.

Mr. Rose: On a point of order—

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

Progress reported.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

FISHERIES

ESTABLISHMENT OF FRESH WATER FISH MARKETING CORPORATION

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt) (for the Minister of Trade and Commerce) for second reading and reference to the standing committee on fisheries and forestry of Bill C-148, to regulate interprovincial and export trade in freshwater fish and to establish the freshwater fish marketing corporation.

Mr. Peters: Just before the adjournment hour, Mr. Speaker, I was pointing out that this bill will have very far reaching effects in the development of the fishing industry where fishing is not now of commercial importance. The government will find itself involved in a very large operation before long. I concur with the previous speaker who indicated that the government would be very wise to be cautions in respect of capital expenditures for the establishment of this corporation. Changes will take place in respect of fish production and processing. This board will have to concentrate on selling fish to Canadians, and Canadians are not notably fish-eating people. Canadians have never taken advantage of this natural resource.

I am proud of the work done by the Department of Fisheries on the methods of production, utilization of fish products and the issuing of pamphlets regarding culinary arts in respect of fish. I hope this effort continues. As a result of the establishment of this Crown corporation the government will be in the position of guaranteeing grades, freshness and suitability of products. In this country we have been provided with an inferior product, with a resultant decrease in the use of fish and its desirability. The government will also have to engage in a sales program of this Canadian product to Canadians and to export markets. In this regard it will face problems in respect of the saltfish market. I suggest before long this measure will be amended to cover the saltfish industry in Canada.

If the government attains success in the marketing of freshwater fish it will very shortly hear a clamour from the saltwater fish industry to provide the same type of service. I am sure this proposal will be amended before long to include that industry.

In closing, I should like to refer to the Indian population and the role that it could play in this field. Many areas in Manitoba, Northern Saskatchewan and Northern Alberta have Indian populations now engaged in commercial fishing. As a result of the enactment of this measure and the increase in markets in North America for freshwater fish, the Indian population will treat this industry in a little different manner.

The native population in Northern Ontario has never engaged to any great extent in commercial fishing. In many cases they do not have the knowledge or the equipment to fish commercially. In northwestern Ontario fishing could, and probably would, be a source of income for those who participate on a commercial basis.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) will have to take some interest in this measure. Success in this regard will require that hon. minister's co-operation because we could capitalize on the commercial production of fish as a source of income to the native population. There will have to be an influx of capital in these areas to provide a satisfactory economical development in this field.

This measure reminds me of the legislation in respect of feeds and grain. That measure had a great deal of merit and even more support. In my opinion it was very worthwhile, but it was not carefully considered. When this bill is referred to the committee I hope hon. members will consider the changes it will bring about in commercial fishing in those areas not now considered as economical fishing areas. It will be absolutely necessary to conduct a study as to how to ensure a steady flow of fish products to the markets.

In the future we will have to find steady markets and ways to reduce the spread between the cost to the consumer and the sale price to the producer. We must at the same time maintain fish products of high quality, both in respect of production and type. The solution to these problems will require the attention of those people who are best equipped in this field. These questions will task the ingenuity of the minister and his officials.

Those hon. members who represent saltwater fishing areas will probably be able to advise members of this committee. However, I hope they will not demand an expansion of the crown corporation at this time but will co-operate in seeing that it becomes a success. It is my belief that if we can succeed in the limited and controlled markets that we have in Chicago, Toronto and the hinterland of the North American continent we will also be able to apply the same type of marketing legislation to much broader areas.

I therefore hope the minister has in mind some very good people for the operation and development of this board. I congratulate the minister for the attention he has paid to the report of the McIvor commission which made the recommendations that in the main appear to form the basis of the legislation and the powers of the board.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, having had the opportunity to study this bill, a couple of questions come to mind in connection with it. Bill C-148 will, of course, result in the setting up of a corporation for the marketing of freshwater fish. I am in favour of the general principle of the bill. I am very much in favour of the ideals which are set out in the bill, but there are some questions I would like to raise in connection with it and two or three observations I would like to make with regard to this subject.

First of all, as my friend and colleague, the hon. member from the province of Prince Edward Island said this afternoon, if a marketing board can achieve the ideals set out in this bill we will certainly not be reluctant to give praise where praise is due. The aims of the proposed legislation should result in a very much better situation in respect of the marketing of fish and should work to the benefit of the fishermen in various parts of Canada.

However, there are some observations I would like to make in connection with the proposed legislation having in mind the fishermen who will be affected by the provisions of the bill. First, Mr. Speaker, I wonder why the legislation was not drafted in a much broader way. I am required, of course, to speak only to the terms of the bill. There are other aspects of the Canadian fisheries which should perhaps be considered, but I will confine my remarks to bill C-148. There is in the bill one phrase that has stuck in my mind. It is one that has been in my mind since I entered this house last September. Since that time I have listened to several ministers talking about our fisheries, specifically the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis), of course, and his colleague the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin). I have always been fascinated by one concept which seems to be popular in Canada. I refer to the statement made on page 7 of Bill C-148, in Clause 15 (1), as follows:

> The corporation shall conduct its operations on a self-sustaining financial basis without appropriations therefor by parliament.

This phrase has received a great deal of attention from the ministers I have mentioned. Not too long ago our Minister of Fisheries while in Boston observed that the Canadian fishing industry must pay its way. This remark gave to the American people the impression that the fishermen of Canada are the recipients of a great deal of welfare and have to depend upon government hand-outs in order to survive. I do not feel comfortable about this statement because I am one who has a great deal of respect for our fishermen. I think this remark has painted the fisherman of Canada as being a person receiving from the government half of the money he needs in order to live. I am sure the minister did not intend to convey that impression, but it was the impression we received after reading what he said.

Several weeks ago the Minister of Fisheries admitted to the committee that a guarantee had been given to the government of the United States that certain assistance which was being rendered to the Canadian fishing industry would not continue. An agreement was made between the Canadian government and the United States government that the government of Canada would not continue to assist the fisheries in certain ways because it might appear to the United States government that the Canadian fishing industry was being heavily subsidized. Consequently, this would be sort of a black eye to American fishing interests.

I am wondering whether there is more to the phrase "self-sustaining" than one would imagine. I have a feeling there is a great deal more behind this phrase than meets the eye. This is the reason I am a little concerned about it. Any fisherman in this country must wonder whether this phrase is used because of Canadian policy with regard to our fisheries or to comply with American policy. This question must be in the minds of many Canadian fishermen. I would like an answer from the Minister of Fisheries, his parliamentary secretary or the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who is responsible for the proposed legislation. What is the purpose of this statement?

We can of course see that there is a clause in the bill that will allow the corporation, when set up, to borrow $5 million. If one thinks in terms of the corporation surviving, one would say there is no danger of a great burden being placed on the fisherman because, under the provisions of this bill, the corporation may borrow up to $5 million from the banks or the government.

However, Mr. Speaker, will there not be situations under which the government will have to guarantee that it will assist any aspect of the Canadian fishing industry in the event of an emergency? For example, in the 1940's, and later by a revision to the act in the early 1950's, the fisheries prices support board was set up. The purpose of the board was to assist any aspect of the Canadian fishing industry which at that time was lagging behind or was not in a good, viable position. Anybody involved in Canada's fishing industry, any member of parliament whose constituency is concerned with the fishing industry, can think back and recall a number of ways in which the prices support board has come to the assistance of our fishing industry.

On the one hand we have the prices support board which guarantees that under certain emergencies, given certain world marketing conditions, competitive conditions, and so on, it will assist in keeping alive any aspect of the industry until it can stand on its own feet. Of course, every fisherman, merchant and person involved in the industry wants this assistance to be available. Now, we have a proposed pice of legislation which seems to contradict that principle completely and says that in no circumstances will the government take any action to assist the industry after the corporation is set up, because the corporation must be a completely self-sustaining entity.

There is no guarantee of any kind of government assistance under any circumstances, no matter how badly assistance may be needed. This strikes me as peculiar and I am wondering whether it is a case of the Canadian government setting high standards for this corporation. This is, of course, a very good thing because every fisherman and person involved in the industry wants the board to be effective. If this is the purpose of the legislation, well and good. We are saying to the corporation: Under certain terms of reference and responsibilities we want you, the corporate body, to stand on your own feet and conduct your own affairs. We want you to assume this responsibility and be a self-sustaining, viable entity. This is fine; this is a great ideal and is the sort of expectation any government should have in respect of a crown corporation.

But if the purpose of this objective is just to satisfy persons in other countries who have particular interests in fisheries and are not willing to state their own policy on their fisheries, then I am not in favour of it. In other words, I have a feeling that the Government of Canada is actually stating what is called a Canadian policy but it is actually only a reflection of some one else's policy.

There are several points on which I should like to elaborate. For example, I am wondering what interest a fisherman would have to pay on loans which he might receive from the corporation. According to the proposed legislation, the corporation will be given authority to make loans to any fisherman or to any person involved in the fishing operation. Likewise, of course, the government will be given authority to make loans of up to $5 million available to the corporation, but there is absolutely no mention anywhere of the interest which is to be paid on these loans.

I am sure the government is not asking the fishermen or the corporation to go on a blind date. I do not think that any minister of the crown, apart perhaps from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), would enjoy this kind of activity, so why should we ask the fishermen of Canada to get involved in this kind of affair? So, I am asking the minister, in response to my inquiry, to make some reference to the interest rates which would be charged. Certainly, we are not going to charge any fisherman who is going to borrow from the corporation an interest rate of nine or ten per cent or even higher, because those are the interest rates being paid today in Canada.

I have indicated, for example, that there is no mention here of any government assistance in an emergency situation. Also, there is no mention of fishermen. Having read this proposed legislation, I wonder if it is designed to set up a corporation or if it is designed to assist fishermen. There is an important difference. I have a feeling, for example, that the only important thing in this bill is the corporation, and that is just another way of providing a few jobs for a number of people who are not already earning $25,000 or $30,000 a year. This is the sort of thing with which I am not too happy.

As the hon. member from Prince Edward Island said today, there is no mention here of the actual fishermen involved. There is no advisory body to help the board to gain a knowledge of the industry, and thus aid in the decisions of this corporate body. There seems to be no indication of guaranteed prices and no guarantee that the fishermen will receive a return from their labour investment which is the procurement of fish. I see no indication here that the fishermen are the focal point of interest, and that is all I am concerned with. I do not give a darn about the corporation. The corporation is only a means to an end which is to benefit fishermen, and we are in favour of this. However, I see little evidence in this proposed legislation of interest in the man who is the prime reason for the existence of the corporation, namely the fisherman.

My last observation is about the confusion which seems to exist regarding jurisdiction over the Canadian fishing industry. I am sure the Minister of Fisheries will be happy to hear what I have to say on that subject, or at least my feelings on it. Early in the last session on a number of occasions I and a number of members of the house, even some members of the Liberal party, asked questions of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce regarding the marketing of fish. On a number of occasions the minister made eyes at the Minister of Fisheries regarding the latter's position, and although he might have had a keen interest in the marketing of fish he did not seem to know too much about it, at least I did not receive much response. Several times the minister indicated he would answer my questions tomorrow but as yet I have not received any answers from the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce regarding government action to stimulate the fishing trade in North America. Now, we have this bill before the house. Originally, I thought it would be presented to the house by the Minister of Fisheries, but then I found it was to be proposed by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

I am wondering now whose responsibility the marketing of fisheries products is. On inquiring I found that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is responsible for marketing fish outside Canada and the Minister of Fisheries is responsible for the marketing of them within Canada. There is ample evidence in the bill that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is responsible for the marketing of fish outside Canada as well as for interprovincial marketing. There seems to me to be a measure of confusion here. I would like to see the ministers responsible put their heads together and specify exactly who has the jurisdiction over the Canadian fishing industry. I would like to see the Minister of Fisheries have this responsibility, which I do not think he would shirk. We are talking about the same product and we are talking about it in Canada. This is not an export problem but rather an inter-provincial or an intra-Canadian problem. Consequently, I do not see any reason for the confusion which is evident here.

It is obvious that the Minister of Fisheries has a keen interest in this matter since he has been the only minister present in the house today since debate on the bill commenced. So, I would like to see the minister responsible give some consideration to this matter and seek to eliminate the confusion.

I could go on for quite some time making specific observations about a number of other sections of bill C-148 but I think other hon. members commented on most of the points to which I would have made reference. I would certainly like a reaction later on the viability of the Canadian fishing industry.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): As a member from western Canada and as a member from Saskatchewan I welcome the legislation that is now before the house. As a member from western Canada, I welcome it because I think it extends some hope to those people and to those communities having a vital stake in the future of the fishing industry. In western Canada there are many communities and many fishermen who have found themselves at the mercy of a small number of people who have controlled the buying of the fish they had to sell. A large portion of the fish caught in western Canada has been exported to the United States, and a great deal of that has gone to the Chicago market. As is well known by some people, there has been a difficult marketing situation there, one which in fact has resulted in a very low level of returns to the fishermen of Saskatchewan and western Canada for many years.

I also welcome this legislation as a member from western Canada because I know of the great similarity which exists between the proposed corporation and the structure and operations of the Canadian Wheat Board which has served western Canada so well over the past number of years. This is not too surprising in view of the fact that this bill arose in large part out of the work of the McIvor commission and, as is well known, a man by the name of McIvor had a great deal to do with the Wheat Board in past years. I think that this lays a good foundation for a possible solution to the problems that have been faced by fishermen in western Canada.

As a member from Saskatchewan I also welcome this legislation because in fact it represents an extension of efforts that have been carried on in our province for some years. As was referred to by some hon. members previously, it is now some 20 odd years, or about 24 years, since an attempt was first made at orderly marketing of fish products in that province.

The first attempt took the form of a fish marketing board, later succeeded by a fish marketing service, which some ten years ago was converted into a co-operative fish marketing service. These agencies performed a very useful function in bringing a good deal of stability to the communities and people who are involved in the fishing industry. However, at the same time it has to be recognized that the work and the objectives of such an agency operating only within one province were very limited. This agency could not do the things that might have been possible if the scope of operations had been extended on a wider scale.

Thus it is a welcome development, this proposal to set up machinery which will be able to operate across a large part of Canada. I would certainly be in favour of the suggestion, put forward by other speakers today, that it might even be desirable to extend the scope of the arrangements still further at some time in the future.

This program, as has already been pointed out, could be of great assistance to people of Indian ancestry who are involved in the fishing industry. It could do a great deal to improve the economic position of communities in which large numbers are of Indian descent.

As hon. members realize, this bill arises in large measure out of the work of the McIvor commission and the recommendations which it placed before the government. There is no need to refer at this moment to all the recommendations which were made, but there are certain points to which I should like to draw the minister's attention.

One of the recommendations was that the board accept delivery of freshwater fish only from the fishermen. My reading of the bill leads me to believe that this will in fact be the case. I think it is of considerable importance that the board should deal only with those who are actually doing the fishing. I mention this aspect because it is possible in this industry, as in so many others, that there could be invasion by outside commercial interests which have no particular concern for the welfare of the industry itself other than the protection of their investment and profits. I should like to feel confident that in the future this agency will be used to serve the people who are actually fishing on the lakes and streams and that it will not be used for the benefit of some commercial interest which simply happens to employ a large number of people.

A further recommendation of the commission was that the board should determine and make a final payment to the fishermen after all the fish have been sold. This is a system which is obviously patterned upon the arrangement followed by the Canadian Wheat Board. I am not altogether clear about the situation from my reading of the legislation, particularly clause 24, but I should like to be assured that the payments will be made directly to the fishermen and that no intermediate agency will be able to get its hands on money which belongs to the fishermen by right.

The commission also recommended that the Canadian government make a formal approach to the government of the United States in an effort to agree on a method of inspection of white fish which would be mutually satisfactory. I understand this would probably involve a considerable amount of negotiation and difficulty due to some of the parasite infections which have affected some of our fish in the past. I should like to hear from the minister whether such negotiations have in fact been commenced.

Another recommendation was that a co-operative educational effort be made by all levels of government to acquaint the fishermen with the operations of the board. I support this recommendation and think it is important that such efforts be made by the government and by the new board. I think I can say from my own background in Saskatchewan, and as a supporter of the political party which first introduced orderly marketing in the fishing industry, that one of the things learned from experience was the necessity of doing more educational work to inform those affected of the benefits of the action which is being taken.

The commission further recommended that research pertaining to freshwater fish and freshwater fish products be continued and expanded where desirable. In my view such expansion is necessary; reference is made in the report again to some of the infections which have affected the quality of our fish.

Finally, a recommendation was made that the opening and closing of fishing seasons on lakes be determined collectively by the governments concerned in order to facilitate the co-ordination of supply and demand. I note from the minister's introductory remarks that the decision has been made, apparently, to leave these decisions in the hands of the provinces. I can understand that acceptance of the recommendation would have involved negotiation with the provinces. The government may have decided to try to achieve the desired results through voluntary co-operation rather than through any attempt at direction from the federal level. Nevertheless, I am concerned about this point because by the very nature of the wording of the recommendation the commission showed concern about the co-ordination of supply and demand in this context. I believe further consideration should be given to this aspect and I would appreciate hearing the minister's comments on it.

I conclude by repeating that we welcome this legislation. It will not automatically solve the problems which face the fishing industry. There is room for further extension and expansion of the activities of the corporation once it has gained some experience in its operations. I certainly hope that its work will be to the benefit of the people of Canada.

[Mr. Burton.]

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Needless to say, I support this legislation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Davis: I support any legislation which, in addition to helping to stabilize the fishing industry will also, in the years to come, help to increase the incomes of fishermen.

In the case of fishermen on the prairies and in the northwest territories, we need one particular device. Essentially, it is a device for single desk selling on the United States market. This will enable us to improve the condition of the industry and provide a better return to the fishermen themselves. In other words, this bill and the corporation which will be set up as a result of it, will put us in a stronger bargaining position in the United States; it will enable us to streamline the process of the manufacture and transportation of fish products and will provide a better return to fishermen and a more certain price for their products.

I am not convinced that this device is the only one which can be used. It is certainly not one which we should use in all parts of Canada. Reference has been made to the fact that this particular legislation, for the time being at least, will cover northwestern Ontario, the prairies, the northwest territories and the Yukon. It does not cover all Ontario. It does not cover the fishing on Lake Erie, for example, where in the last few years the catch of perch has been growing rapidly. It has been growing under the impetus of private enterprise, and it is proving very successful, because of the selling initiatives including the use of wholesale and retail channels in the United States, the use of well known brand names, and so on.

Our supply of fish, on and off, has been in a surplus position, but looking ahead some years I think the supply will fall behind market demand. I think the time will come when fish will increasingly be in short supply rather in surplus supply. In other words, the long term prospects are good, but we have to get through an intermediate period, which may run for five or ten years and use various devices to improve our bargaining position.

The market price in the United States of late has remained roughly constant or has increased slightly; it certainly has not fallen. At the same time, and in marked contrast to this the return to the fishermen of Canada—this is particularly true of our salt water fisheries—has actually gone down. Usually the trade has been able to maintain prices to the fishermen, but the processors and distributors, caught in the middle, are in difficulties. This is the case today in Newfoundland. It has also been true as well of our freshwater fisheries.

It is true that we must improve our efficiency. We can do this in respect to catching methods, processing, the collection of fish, refrigeration to preserve quality and distribution. The corporation proposed in this bill will do that. It will be doing it, I expect, in a more efficient manner than the slipshod, relatively primitive, and unorganized way which has characterized most of our freshwater fish operations. There have been efficient operators and there are a few first class companies but, by and large, it is still an industry in a relatively early stage of development. By moving in with a single agency which will look after collecting, processing, interprovincial and international trade, we are doing what was done years ago with respect to wheat. We are enabling the fishermen—in the former case it was the wheat farmers—to get a better break, and over a period of time to make their product one that is highly desirable and will attract premium prices.

Through this single desk operation we will be able to do several things. Not only will we be able to bargain more effectively in the markets of all of North America, but we will also insist upon quality products, provide refrigeration and other plant necessary to preserve fish and maintain quality, as well as avoid duplication by streamlining facilities and arranging for higher load factors in plants, thus making the maximum use of our transportation system. Certainly, in this way the fisherman will enjoy the greater certainty of knowing what the floor price will be for the coming season. At the end of the season, if the corporation has been able to market fish at a higher price, the fisherman will get a supplementary payment. In other words, he will be receiving an income that he can predict with some certainty, and with greater accuracy than he could before, and will receive an income with which he can plan and invest.

This corporation will also be assisting the fisherman to finance his operations. It will grubstake him, in loose terminology, and assist him by paying for such things as fuel, his nets and so on. As I undertand it, the corporation will not be helping him to buy a new boat or to make an even more substantial investment in new plant and other fixtures. I hope that our own improved Fisheries Improvement Loans Act and the legislation respecting the fishermen's indemnity plan, which covers the risk of losses and so on, can be used for this purpose by the fishermen. I also notice that perhaps the department of northern affairs will be able to assist our native people, the Metis and others, in the financing of boats and so on; but basically I expect that the same improved capital assistance and insurance programs which are available right across the nation will be used in this case as well.

The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) raised several points which I think are quite relevant. He referred to a speech that I had made in Boston about the fishing industry standing on its own feet. I hope that it will stand on its own feet and I am sure that he looks forward to the time when it can and will stand on its own feet.

Certain industries in this country are doing quite well at the moment, though we have others that are in some difficulty. It is the role of the government often to help industries adjust to new and changed circumstances, but I should like to see industries given adjustment assistance rather than perpetual assistance. The hon. member comes from an area where part of the fishing industry, at least, does need adjustment assistance. It needs assistance not on an ad hoc basis, a sort of band-aid, temporary basis implemented in the late spring of the year and terminated in the late fall of the same year; it needs a five, 10 or 15 year program. This is what industries like the salt fish industry on the east coast require.

It occurs to me that perhaps this particular industry also needs a salt fish marketing corporation similar to the freshwater fish marketing corporation. But such a body would have to be tailored to the particular circumstances, geared to improving the incomes of our fishermen, helping stabilize their industry, giving them a base from which they can plan ahead and helping rationalize and streamline the processing, sales and transportation phases of the industry so that returns from the market are greater.

Another big problem, one that is not totally confined to Canada, is getting a larger share of the retail price for goods sold outside the country. There are various ways of achieving this. Perhaps in one case it is achieved through the establishment of a crown corporation. Undoubtedly it is achieved through well organized, competent co-operatives and corporations whose operations are integrated right across the United States, doing whatever further processing is required and selling their own brand name products from one coast of the country to the other. With this sort of arrangement we would get our fair share of the retail price that is paid by housewives in the United States and Canada, and as a result our fishing industry would be much healthier.

In turn, our industry would be able to lend itself to more predictable operations, attract more money, buy better plant and equipment, and as a result we would all be better off.

There is a division of labour, naturally, between departments. For example, the Department of Fisheries administers the Fisheries Act, the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act and so on. Basically, the Department of Fisheries looks toward the fishermen and the fish processing industry of this country.

The department of trade and commerce, which is now the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, is responsible for international trade, particularly for the promotion and development of expandings markets and the securing of a fair share of markets abroad. Since interprovincial trade is also trade, I would say that, to some extent at least, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce has an important responsibility there as well.

The legislation setting up the freshwater fish marketing corporation is joint legislation with the provinces. The provinces are taking an inward look and will be responsible for the redevelopment of plants, the acquiring of property within the provinces, and so on. So that in some measure, the provinces will be doing what the federal Department of Fisheries may do in other areas. As I have said, fisheries department also has an involvement. Certainly the fisheries department is involved through its inspection service, and the federal Fish Inspection Act provisions will have to be adhered to so far as the processing and marketing of fish products are concerned. In addition, the provisions of the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act will apply, as will the fishermen's indemnity plan. So, this is a co-operative enterprise, as many such enterprises are.

I am pleased to endorse the motion of the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang), speaking on behalf of the department of trade and commerce, in regard to this bill, which I think is a worthy one and I hope will receive speedy passage through the committee on fisheries and forestry of the House of Commons.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I had no intention whatever of participating in this debate. This afternoon when I heard the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) say that this legislation applied to northwestern Ontario I thought his inexperience had probably caused him to make that remark. Tonight, after hearing the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) say this bill only applies to northern Ontario, I am completely perplexed. Clause 25(1) of the bill says:

> In this section, "province . . ." means . . . Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario or the Northwest Territories.

Mr. Peters: That is because they have no name for northern Ontario.

Mr. Rynard: Not north of Aurora, anyway.

Mr. McCutcheon: Maybe we have two jurisdictions here, although I am completely unaware of that fact. I should like to know why the fishermen of Lake Erie are precluded from this plan? I notice that the main catch, yellow perch, from that particular body of water is covered by the legislation. Although the fishermen I am referring to may be in better shape financially than some of the other fishermen that have been referred to by other hon. members in the debate this afternoon, they are not all that well off. The fishermen of Lake Erie want to know why they cannot be included in a marketing scheme, if it is good. For the last several years they have co-operated extremely well with the federal government in a quota system, and that cost the government plenty of money. Unfortunately, the money did not seem to filter down to the point where it could help the individual fisherman. Now, the fishermen from the north shore of Lake Erie want to know the how-come and why of the present situation. Are they not included because there is only one big market or only one big processor? They want to know what steps they should take to be included.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty to inform the house that if the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) speaks now he will close debate.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, this has been a very interesting debate in a general way. I was delighted that the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan) could come into the house for a few minutes to participate. I was surprised that he had the temerity in those few minutes to comment upon the attendance of a number of ministers who attended while he was not here. Also, he did not seem to know what was in the bill since he did not seem to know that the prime object of the bill, to be found in part in clause 23, is to increase returns to fishermen. That is the whole object of the bill, of the establishment of the corporation and of the introduction of regulations into this part of the industry.

I was also interested this afternoon to hear one of my compatriots from Saskatchewan, a socialist. I must say I would ordinarily not use that word, having thought that hon. members in that corner of the house, generally speaking, had abandoned the term. Since the hon. member styled himself as a socialist, I take the opportunity to describe him that way.

The hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. Thompson) made the very wise observation that the success of a board of this sort, which is a crown agency, will on many occasions depend on the kind of minister who is behind it. I was a little surprised to hear that.

Mr. Lundrigan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I hate to be petty because I am sure the Minister without Portfolio did not intend to mislead the house. However, I have been in the house for the entire debate. I was here until five o'clock this afternoon. The hon. gentleman indicated I had not been present throughout the debate and I am sure he did not mean to say that. He has completely misrepresented the true situation. This is a minor point but it is the kind of misrepresentation of a situation that ought to be clarified immediately.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to accept the statement of the hon. member opposite. I did not misrepresent the fact that he did not seem to know what was in the bill. I concluded, naturally, that he would have known if he had been here during the debate.

The hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley congratulated me on several aspects of the bill and suggested that it represented some kind of conversion to the socialist cause. He does not seem to appreciate that there is a fairly fundamental distinction in the ways in which socialists and Liberals over the years have come to enact measures of this kind. The distinction lies in the nature of the men in charge of efforts like this. The socialists tend to take over ventures that are going and efficient concerns, nationalize them because that seems to be their prime objective, and run them into the ground. The Liberals use such weapons, as well as many other weapons, in order to do something for an industry or area where there is real need for improvement, as there is in this particular case.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): There were several comments this afternoon and this evening about the area involved and the scope of the bill before us. The bill mentions certain specific areas that are involved. Some hon. members who know about the intentions of the participating provinces have referred to a portion of Ontario as being involved. It is, of course, largely a matter of negotiation; it is for the provinces themselves to opt in or out, in total or in part, of the provisions of the bill. Hon. members opposite, therefore who were critical of some of the aspects of the bill should look elsewhere for the responsibility in this regard.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): To people like Mr. Robarts.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Hon. members have also said that certain provinces are not mentioned at all in the bill. The cause of that has a similar root. This corporation developed from the involvement of the provinces in the conference of dominion and provincial fisheries ministers. This corporation is to cover a particular area of the fishery.

It is noteworthy, however, that the area of the fishery covered does include by far the greatest part of the specific species of fish which are enumerated in the schedule. The proportion of fish in any area coming within the scope of the bill, compared with the total produced in that area, varies from 90 to 100 per cent because of the variety of species enumerated in the schedule. So, in fact, the corporation will be in a position to deal with the great bulk of the fish which are caught.

There were some questions about the operation of the corporation with regard to buying and selling. It is clearly the intention of the bill to make it the duty of the corporation to enter into direct relationships with the fishermen or their agents to buy fish.

• (9:00 p.m.)

The expectation is that the fisherman will be paid as close to market value as possible for his catch. Indeed, the initial price will be as close to market value as possible, but there will still be reflected variations for kinds of fish, qualities of fish, and the average of areas in regard to the proper price of fish.

The sales of fish within an area, generally speaking under this legislation and the complementary provincial legislation, will lie entirely with the corporation. However, it will be possible and it is expected that certain direct local sales by fishermen, which will not affect the general quality or market control, will be allowed. Thus, sales to mink ranchers, to local smokehouses and local customers, may indeed be permitted. The general approach is to give the corporation significant power to deal with the various exigencies which may face it. The expectation, as I stated before, is that the corporation will make great use of private industry in all those areas where existing facilities are at hand.

There is expected to be some problem of redundancy where at the moment there is improper equipment, inefficient operation, or unnecessary duplication and the like. This question of redundancy is basically a provincial responsibility and the bill envisages the bearing of that responsibility by the participating provincial regions.

The suggestion by one hon. member was that there be some reimbursement by the corporation to the provinces for this redundancy, and of course this is not envisaged at all. The redundancy costs will be borne by the provinces, and this is part of the understanding between the government and the provincial authorities which was arrived at prior to the introduction of the bill in this house.

It is expected that the advisory council will be an important factor in the work of this corporation, and that a significant voice for fishermen themselves will be found in the advisory council.

The corporation is, of course, basically intended to be a business operation. It is not intended to be involved in other regular governmental or non-governmental activities with regard to many other facets of the fishery. The corporation is not intended to take over governmental efforts with regard to research, improvement of lake standards and the like. It is not intended to replace governmental programs with regard to education or retraining, or indeed programs specifically designed to make it possible for Indians to participate in an occupation such as fishing.

These, then, are the objectives behind this bill and I am sure the establishment of the corporation will be a tremendous help to the fishing industry of the regions concerned.

[Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt).]

Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising for the purpose of asking a question?

Mr. McCutcheon: Yes, indeed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Will the minister allow a question?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Yes.

Mr. McCutcheon: I wonder if the minister would care to reply to the question that I posed to him?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): He did. You should have been here.

Mr. McCutcheon: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I hear somebody saying I should have been in the house. I have not been out of the house. If the minister answered, then I am afraid my hearing is getting pretty bad.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, I am having trouble with the presence and the absence of hon. members opposite but I am sure the hon. member will find the answer to the question in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Lang, seconded by Mr. Macdonald moves—

Mr. Burton: Will the minister permit another question before he resumes his seat?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Certainly.

Mr. Burton: With regard to the minister's comment that all dealings would be with fishermen or their agents, as I understood it, I would like to ask what is the situation with respect to Indian fishermen who are members of bands on Indian reservations? Will they be able to deal directly with this corporation or will they deal with it through the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, the observation I made was that the fish would be purchased by the corporation directly or through its agents. I did not intend to convey the impression that the corporation would be dealing with the fishermen's agents but rather that the fishermen would be dealing with the corporation's agents.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Lang, seconded by Mr. Macdonald—

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, may I ask another question before the minister resumes his seat. During the course of my remarks I posed a question with regard to the sale of saltwater fish in the areas concerned. I asked the minister to advise the house whether it would be necessary for the shippers of saltwater fish to deal with the corporation, in view of the course contemplated in Part III, clause 21, which prohibits the buying and selling of fish without the corporation's approval? Will the saltwater fishing industry be required to sell its catch in the four provinces and one territory concerned through the corporation, or will it be allowed to deal directly with the wholesalers and chain stores as it has been doing to date?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Fish, other than fish enumerated in the schedule, is not affected in any way by the operation of Part III because Part III in clause 20 defines "fish" as fish enumerated in the schedule. As a result, saltwater fish are in no way affected by that part.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt), seconded by Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) moves the second reading and reference to the standing committee on fisheries and forestry of Bill C-148 to regulate interprovincial—

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I have to remind hon. members that when the minister spoke he closed the debate and that we are not in committee of the whole. However, if the minister will allow the hon. member to ask a question I will allow the debate to continue.

Mr. Forrestall: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. My question will not be antagonistic nor will it provoke debate. I simply want to re-ask in much briefer form, the question asked by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. McCutcheon). Would the minister advise the house why Lake Erie was not included?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): The question of which portion of any province, or whether any province at all, is included is a matter for the decision of the provincial authorities.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Ask Mr. Robarts.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question in which I feel the whole house will be interested. Can I ask in all seriousness why the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) did not sponsor this legislation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on fisheries and forestry.

PATENT ACT—TRADE MARKS ACT

EXTENSION OF AUTHORITY TO GRANT LICENCES

The house resumed, from Thursday, October 17, 1968, consideration of the motion of Mr. Basford for the second reading and reference to the standing committee on health, welfare and social affairs of Bill C-102, to amend the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act and the Food and Drugs Act.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I had concluded my remarks when this bill was previously before the house.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, on February 12, 1968, the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Turner) moved the second reading of Bill C-190 to amend the Patent Act and the Trade Marks Act. He explained that the purpose of the bill was to permit the importation of drugs from outside Canada, which would have the effect of reducing drug prices in Canada which he said were among the highest in the world.

• (9:10 p.m.)

He said this, as recorded at page 6623 of Hansard:

> The government now has a program which it calculates will bring about a reduction in the price of drugs to the consumer.

The former minister explained the program in three steps. First, the removal of the sales tax from drugs and reduction of the customs duty from 20 per cent to 15 per cent. Second, the removal of the barriers to imported drugs provided under the Patent and Trade Marks Act, and, third, provision of information to the medical profession relating to drug prices.

The effect of this bill is to allow the commissioner of patents to grant licences permitting the importation of prescription drugs on a more flexible basis than that which applies at present. Where there is a delay in the granting by the commissioner of the required licence over a period of six months, provision is made for the granting of an interim licence under a patent relating to medicine.

The minister indicated the following on December 15, 1967, as recorded at page 5467 of Hansard. He said the objective was to——allow compulsory licences to import prescription drugs, having the effect of injecting more competition at the manufacturers' level in the drug industry, and beneficially affecting the prices of drugs.

Anything which can be done to bring about a reduction in the price of prescription drugs will win the approval of the public at large and this party. At the same time there must be no weakening of the protective standards expected by Canadians and to which Canadians are entitled.

As a result of this legislation, we are likely to witness the importation into Canada, under interim licences in many cases, of a whole range of pharmaceutical products bearing brand names identical or similar to those of Canadian or United States products which have undergone testing and inspection at the government level.

What assurance will Canadians have that these products bearing similar identification to Canadian or United States products have passed the same tests as products produced in this country? The question of safety in the use of drugs is a vital one. There have been instances in the past which indicate that in spite of all possible precautions, dangerous consequences can arise unless drugs meet the most rigorous conditions with regard to manufacturing standards. A case in point is the thalidomide problem of a few years ago.

The Commons special committee on drug costs and prices recommended that applicants for importation of drugs under compulsory licences satisfy the Food and Drug Directorate that in the manufacture of their product they had met the minimum requirements consistent with public health standards. Surely, this is a minimum requirement that Canadians have a right to expect. It is the government's responsibility to see that Canadians are granted adequate protection. Canadian drug manufacturers have operated on a high level of efficiency, safety and reliability for many years.

The Department of National Health and Welfare, through the food and drug division, is in close and constant touch with those who manufacture drugs in this country and in the United States. The same situation does not exist in the case of imported material originating we know not where. There will be no assurance that controls are in existence in every case or even of the nature or extent of such controls as there may be.

Mr. Roy (Laval): Nonsense.

Mr. Yewchuk: With new drugs coming on the market every day, with each new discovery bringing a rush of imitators, once you open the door to unrestricted and unregulated importation from unknown sources, the government's inspection and testing facilities will be strained to the limit.

Canadians, when they buy drugs, are entitled to know they will not be risking harm or injury. We cannot be too careful in dealing with considerations of human health.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Yewchuk: We must not break down safeguards laboriously erected over the years. In summary, my position is this: We will support any measure having as its objective the reduction of drug prices. I remain unconvinced at this moment—and I do not think the minister has made a strong case—that this measure will in fact accomplish this purpose. On the other hand, while we are prepared to give the minister the benefit of the doubt with regard to the price question, we are not prepared nor should Canadians be asked, to give the benefit of the doubt as to safety and inspection procedures. Canadians will have to have greater assurance than has been given so far by the minister that this bill will not result in a lowering of pharmaceutical standards and in the importation into this country of products which do not measure up to Canadian standards.

I am a little confused about whether the hon. member who is interjecting is supporting or rejecting what I have said. On the one hand, he appears to be supporting me and on the other hand says "nonsense". I do not know whether or not he knows the difference.

In view of the thalidomide problem of a few years ago, for example, it would seem obvious that if we were to allow importation of drugs under a wide open patent provision there would have to be a stringent tightening up of inspection and testing procedures. We should like to hear something from the minister on that score.

I am confident that every member of the medical profession, while supporting a measure to reduce drug prices at the same time will require assurance from the government that there will not be a lowering of standards and that every possible precaution will be taken with regard to inspection and testing procedures.

Mr. Basford: You have that assurance.

Mr. Yewchuk: Thank you very much. So far, the accent has been on the question of price. We have had very little information about the procedures which the government will have to take to expand and strengthen inspection facilities in order to give the assurance to medical practitioners and consumers that safety and performance standards will not be lowered.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, before beginning to discuss the position of our party with regard to this bill, I believe I ought to say a few words about the speech we have just heard from the hon. member speaking for the official opposition. If that speech was not written by representatives of the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association, it very well could have been. Those members of this house who were on the committee which sat over a period of more than two years looking into the question of drug prices and drug safety—a committee which heard representations from doctors, pharmacists, representatives of the pharmaceutical manufacturers and of the food and drug administration—will know that the department found as many infractions of the standards by the large, well known companies, as they found by those companies which sell what are commonly referred to as generic drugs. So, the suggestion which is implicit in the hon. member's speech that if we restrict the use of generic drugs and leave the field open to the other companies the public will not have to worry about safety is nonsense. This was proven during the long hearings which the committee held.

Mr. Yewchuk: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I believe the hon. member is accusing me of saying I want to restrict the sale of generic drugs. I did not make that statement.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I listened to what the hon. member said. I know that if members read Hansard tomorrow they will see that the whole tenor of what the hon. member was saying, namely that we have to worry about safety—

Mr. Yewchuk: I have another point of order, Mr. Speaker. I feel I should reiterate that I support any measure which will reduce drug prices, but not at the cost of high standards in respect of drugs.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not a point of order. Under the rule the hon. member may have an opportunity to take part in the debate again if he thinks he has been misquoted or misrepresented by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). I suggest the hon. member for Winnipeg North might be allowed to continue his speech at this time.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I am glad you ruled that that was not really a point of order because I suppose I could rise on a point of order to say if the hon. member—

Some hon. Members: Order.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. Orlikow: I did not realize it is out of order to comment on statements made in this house by an hon. member. Certainly if the hon. member implies that he and his party are worried about the safety of drugs and they are the only ones worried in this regard, then obviously the rest of us are not worried. I reject that idea.

Let me say something about this bill. We in this party find ourselves in a somewhat strange position. We are going to support this bill and vote for it even though we do not believe—

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Orlikow: I see that the hon. member for Burnaby—where is it? What is his name? When I see him supporting me, I begin to think I am saying something wrong because I do not often agree with him. We are going to support this bill because it is a step in the right direction. I think I will be able to easily demonstrate that this bill, as well as the other measures the government has taken and proposes to take, will do very little to reduce the onerous price of prescription drugs which the Canadian public must pay.

This is a subject about which there can be little argument. The price Canadians have to pay for prescription drugs is much too high. Exorbitant and unconscionable prices are being charged by drug manufacturers in Canada and other countries. We have had a whole series of careful and detailed studies conducted in this and other countries. In this country we have had studies conducted by the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, by the Ontario government committee on drugs and by the royal commission on health services which was appointed by the former Conservative government. As I listened to Conservative members speaking about the various aspects of this matter with which that commission dealt, I came to the conclusion they were sorry they ever appointed Mr. Justice Hall to conduct that inquiry. We have also had a study by a special committee of the house on drug costs and prices on which I and other members of the house served. All of these bodies came to the same conclusion; that the price of prescription drugs is too high and the drug companies are making too much money. I have had the opportunity of looking at some recent examples of the fact that these drug companies have not mended their ways but still gouge the public as they have always done. Smith, Kline and French, one of the respectable companies, makes a drug called stelazine. I suppose the hon. member who spoke before me would commend this company. This is one of the important tranquilizers on the market today. It is made by a United States company at a cost of $1.32 per thousand tablets, and sold to Canadian consumers in 50 tablet lots at a price which brings the drug company $125 per thousand. I leave it to members of the official opposition to calculate the margin of profit.

Thorazine, another drug sells in Paris at $1.08 for 100 tablets, in Rome for $2.40, in Mexico for $4.80 and in the United States for $6.06. You could add 15 per cent to the U.S. price to get the price of this drug in Canada.

Another one of these international companies is Schering, which manufactures meticorten. One hundred tablets in the United States sell for $17.90 and in Berne, Switzerland, where the parent company has its offices, for $4.37. In Rome, they sell for $12.20 and in Canada for $22.70, almost five times the cost in Berne, Switzerland. This is the kind of thing which goes on.

In late 1967 a group of New York city drug companies were prosecuted by the United States government for illegally combining to set the price for tetracycline, one of the most important antibiotics prescribed by doctors. The cost of manufacturing 250 milligram capsules was $1.52 per hundred. They were sold by those five companies in the United States, which either made them or had a cross-price arrangement with the company that produced this tetracycline, at $30.60 per hundred.

It is some years since I worked in a drug store but I am certain that the minimum price which a patient would pay for a drug which cost $30.60 cents per hundred would be $45. The patient would pay $45 for a drug used to save lives which cost the manufacturing company $1.52 to produce. This is the kind of thing that is happening. Those companies were prosecuted and were found guilty. This kind of thing takes place and has led to the numerous inquiries we have held. I am sure it is the feeling of all the members of this house that we must do something drastic in order to bring down the price of prescription drugs in this country.

The committee of this house found that the high cost of drugs resulted from the high rate of profit obtained by the manufacturing companies in this and other countries. The evidence of this is on the records of the proceedings of that committee. That committee found that the drug companies in this country were spending about $5,000 per doctor per year for advertising. They do not call it advertising, they call it the cost of detail men. What is the job of a detail man?

A detail man goes to the doctor and convinces him that he should use chloromycetin instead of aureomycin, even though they do the same thing. About $5,000 per doctor per year is spent by drug companies on this kind of advertising. It is not very difficult to figure out who pays that expense. It is not paid by the drug companies, it is paid by the customer or the patient. The cost of detailing or advertising is added to the cost of selling the prescription to the patient. About 30 cents of every dollar the drug companies in Canada spend is spent on selling the product to the doctor, not to the customer.

We will never obtain proper drug prices until the government of Canada amends the Income Tax Act and puts a ceiling on the amount of money drug companies can legitimately claim as advertising expense.

An hon. Member: Why stop at the drug companies?

Mr. Orlikow: It is necessary that we start somewhere. We have looked into other fields. We have considered newspapers and magazines. We have to start with drug companies because of their importance. I am sure the people of Halifax would agree with me in this regard in spite of what the hon. member for Dartmouth seems to think.

We have been told, of course, that if we pass this kind of legislation we will stifle scientific research and that the drug companies will not be able to spend as much money on research. The evidence we received at the hearings of the committee was to the effect that the drug companies have never spent very much money on research. We were told that Canadian drug companies have been spending 2½ cents of every prescription dollar on research at the same time they have been spending 11½ cents on promotion and advertising. So, again, we ought not to worry about the drug companies in this respect.

The government proposes to take a number of steps, of which this bill if passed will be one, to try and bring down the price of prescription drugs. What are the steps the government has taken or proposes to take? There was the removal in September, 1967, of the 12 per cent sales tax on prescription drugs. There is no question that this led to a reduction in the price of prescription drugs, but the reduction was far below the 12 per cent sales tax which applied to prescription drugs. As a matter of fact, statistics of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics some time after the 12 per cent sales tax was removed indicated that only half of the tax decrease was passed on to the consumer in the form of lower drug prices.

I am told and I am certain—if anybody questions what I am about to say I can at a later date bring the evidence to prove it—that the price of a very substantial percentage, if not all, of prescription drugs has risen since that tax was taken off. Therefore drug prices are nearly, if not entirely, back to what they were before the 12 per cent tax was taken off.

Second, the Department of Industry established the pharmaceutical industry development assistance program which was supposed to provide loans at commercial interest rates to firms in the industry, mainly the small, generic drug producers, to improve their competitive position by mergers and thus rationalize production. The amount budgeted for this program was $2 million. This, together with the financial terms under which the money was available, really made a mockery out of any attempt to help the small company. Therefore, this program did not work.

Then, it was proposed unanimously I think by the committee chaired by Dr. Harley, who was then the member for Halton, that if we were to get the price of prescription drugs down, if we were to get generic drugs used more extensively, we could not expect, and this is probably the only thing that the previous speaker suggested with which I agree, doctors to use generic drugs instead of brand name drugs produced by the large companies unless they could be certain that the generic drug was as good as the brand name drug. You cannot expect a doctor to prescribe a generic drug, meprobamate, if he does not know that meprobamate is as good as equanil. How can he know this?

There are two things that have to be done, and the committee made it very clear that they have to be done. First, the food and drugs organization must have the facilities, staff and equipment, by arrangement with university medical colleges, to carry out sufficient testing so they can be certain that the drugs used are adequate. With regard to the question of safety, I do not think any prescription drug should be sold in Canada if it is not safe, whether it be cheap or expensive. I think poor people who have to go to hospital and dispensaries in out-patients' departments where they use generic durgs are just as entitled to high quality drugs as the rest of us who go to neighbourhood pharmacies. We ought not to sell any drugs which are not safe.

The way to make sure that drugs are safe, and the committee made this very clear, is to give the food and drugs administration the ability to test drugs. We are caught in a financial squeeze. We have to be careful; we have had to cut the budget, and therefore the food and drugs administration is not getting the money which the committee said it needed.

The second thing that is necessary, and without this second step all the other steps will be useless, is this: Unless the doctors of Canada know that the generic drugs available in Canada are safe, they will not use them. I do not blame them for this; I think they are right. I believe a doctor should be concerned about the financial ability of his patient to buy the drugs which he prescribes. I believe most doctors are concerned about that. But the first concern of the doctor is, and should be, that the drug he prescribes is of high quality.

How is the doctor to know that there is available a generic drug? He will not know it from the detail men, I know the detail men will not only not tell him about the generic drug but will do everything possible to convince the doctor that the generic drugs are not safe; that they are of poor quality; that they have not been properly standardized and all the rest of the horror tales that the medical profession has heard for years. The detail men who work for a particular company are like any other salesmen. They are like the Ford salesman who tells the prospective car buyer that Ford is the best car, or the Chrysler salesman who tells the same prospective buyer that Chrysler is the best car. This is what detail men do. This is their job, and I do not blame them for it.

An hon. Member: They are hucksters.

Mr. Orlikow: They are hucksters, exactly. How can the doctor know there is available a meprobamate or an antibiotic of high quality which is cheap? He can only know it if the department, which does not represent a particular company in the industry, has an information service. I do not mean the kind of information service that we are becoming accustomed to in this house, where every minister has his own P.R. man who is trying to convince the Canadian people that the minister is the best the department has ever had. I mean an information service that will distribute factual information to the doctors of this country.

What has happened? Again we are caught in this cost squeeze and do not have the money. When are these information bulletins going to be published? How will they be distributed? We do not know, because the poor minister is being told by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) that he had better go slow because the government just does not have the money. I say, as I have said from the time the committee was first established, that the expenditure by the government of Canada of a relatively small amount of money would save tens of millions of dollars for the Canadian people. Having said that, Mr. Speaker, the house will understand that the proposals the government has implemented, those they are proposing today and those they still have to propose, are really not going to do very much to solve this problem.

I now want to speak very briefly about what we think ought to be done if we are to bring down the cost of prescription drugs. The details will be dealt with by some of my colleagues who will be speaking later in the debate. In my opinion, these specific proposals should be followed. Most of them have been proposed by others, by the people who worked for the Kefauver committee and people like Mr. Douglas Fullerton who is well known and cannot be radical about all things because he has had some pretty important appointments from the Liberal governments.

He went into this question pretty extensively and has made some specific proposals. I want to indicate some of the things which we think should be done if we are really serious about bringing the price of prescription drugs down for the Canadian consumers. First of all, we think that brand names for all new drugs should be abandoned and that new drugs should be used and sold through the use of the generic name. If there is one thing which we must keep in mind, it is that the doctor is the key to the prescriptions which are used. The patient has no choice. After the doctor sees the patient, he writes the prescriptions, and if he uses a brand name the druggist has no choice. The druggist must fill it in that way and the patient pays the increased price which can be two, three or ten times more. So, we think the government should bring in legislation prohibiting the use of brand names for new drugs.

Second, we believe that the provisions of the corporation income tax applying to manufacturers, importers and distributors should be amended so that a maximum of ten per cent of total sales should be the allowable deductible expense for advertising and sales promotion. This would immediately reduce the cost of prescription drugs by 20 cents in every dollar. These are the figures which we have from the pharmaceutical manufacturers themselves.

Third, we believe that drug advertising should be extensively scrutinized and legislation introduced to control drug advertising. Not a month goes by in which one does not read a report that in Canada, in the United States or in Great Britain a government authority charged with the responsibility of policing advertising in the field of drugs has issued an order to a drug company to cease using advertising which is misleading. The largest and most important drug companies have been involved in this kind of game.

Next we believe that a standard cost report for all new drugs having sales of over $500,000 a year should be filed with the department. This should include anticipated sales, proposed profit margins and proposed selling prices. Evidence before the Kefauver committee made it very clear that when some of the large companies develop a new drug, such as Parke Davis' chloromycetin or aureomycin, they were able in the first year or two to make net profits of between 40 and 60 per cent. Why was that? Because they were able to get the jump on everyone else. This was done at the expense of the consumers, and we think it ought to be stopped now.

As I said before, we believe that there should be an intensive doctor education program established regarding prescription drugs, prices, safety, quality and generic names. This can only be done by the government giving the food and drug administration the financial ability and the staff to do that kind of job.

There is one last point I wish to make. We believe that if we really want to bring down the price of prescription drugs, the Government of Canada should establish a crown corporation which would manufacture and distribute a limited number of important and basic prescription drugs. I want the house to be very clear on what I am suggesting. I am not suggesting public ownership of the drug industry, nor do I suggest the nationalization of the drug industry. We are not interested in taking over the drug companies. What we are interested in is that we establish a crown corporation which will probably make not more than a dozen or 15 important prescription drugs, a few antibiotics, a few tranquillizers and a few drugs in other fields. What we want is a crown corporation which will act as a yardstick. After all, if we had a crown corporation producing prescription drugs, there could be no question on the part of doctors, hospitals or consumers that the drugs are of high quality.

If the government follows our proposal, the corporation would operate as close to cost as possible. It would not be interested in making a profit, and the doctor would have a choice. He could use one of the brand name tranquillizers, one of the brand name antibiotics or else a product in the same field produced by the crown corporation. Since the doctor would know that here was a drug of high quality he could afford, on behalf of the patient, to look at the relative cost. If the government had that kind of crown corporation, I am certain that the drug companies would do what they do in every other country, namely meet the competition. They would bring their prices down to meet the prices set by the crown corporation. That kind of corporation, which I think would not cost a great deal of money to set up, would save millions of dollars a year to the people of Canada. This is a program which we think would meet the needs and requirements of the Canadian people. It would bring down the price of prescription drugs and it would ensure safety. That is what the Canadian people need.

When I began I said that we were going to vote for this bill. We are going to vote for it because, as I said tonight and on other occasions, it is a small step in the right direction. But when you look at all the steps which this government proposes, I think the Canadian people will find that when they are implemented the government will not really have accomplished very much by way of reducing the price of prescription drugs.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, the members of the Ralliement Créditiste have a few brief remarks to make on Bill C-102 entitled: "An Act to amend the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act and the Food and Drugs Act". That legislation is the repetition of a bill introduced during the last parliament and put off indefinitely because of the elections.

The bill now under consideration will amend the Patent Act in order first to allow the Patent Commissioner to grant licences to manufacture medicines in any form.

This would allow for a broader and better sampling of drugs, and would give the possibility of making discoveries such as are made in other countries while providing a better service for the Canadian consumer.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation has two different aspects. It allows a more thorough sampling of drugs, a greater number and a wider variety of drugs. On the other hand, it might slow down domestic trade as imported products will take the place of Canadian products.

In that respect, the Drug Manufacturers Association of Canada claimed that imports now make up nearly 10 per cent of the sales in Canada which, between you and me, is not exorbitant.

In his speech of October 17 last, the minister stated that this figure of 10 per cent was not likely to increase in view of the particular nature of the industry and of its integration into the international network.

Mr. Speaker, I would rather be inclined to think that the Drug Manufacturers Association is justified to fear a massive and free inflow of foreign products on the Canadian market. In that respect we support the bill in principle but we fear the ill effects of a too heavy inflow of imported products which would saturate our market.

If we compare, for instance, what happens in the drug industry with what has happened, and is still going on, in the footwear industry in Canada, we notice that the adoption of this bill will increase Canadian reliance upon foreign products and will kill—I did say "kill" Canadian initiative.

Mr. Speaker, we would be surprised to know how many Canadian shoe manufacturers have had to close shop because of massive imports or because the import market was poorly supervised by the federal government. We fear that the same phenomenon might recur—perhaps not within two, three, four, five or ten years—but over the long run and, then, we will face the problem which now confronts the footwear industry. I believe that this section of the act carries a hidden danger with regard to the import market. We must in fact watch our imports and not be content to talk only.

The control provided in the bill on imports of new products appears to me inadequate. The protection afforded Canadian products and manufacturers also leaves much to be desired. However, this represents an improvement on what was being done up to now, since we are facing a major problem due to the prohibitive cost of drugs. This was the main point on which I wanted to comment.

By the way, I greatly appreciated the remarks of the previous speaker, a member of the New Democratic party, who said that drugs must be within the means of anyone, whether rich or poor.

When one considers that some pills cost $4.12 and retail at $105, one can rightly wonder what is going on. When one sees a spread of from 194 to 491 per cent in tenders for the purchase of drugs, one has a right to ask questions. When hospitals pay $1.95 for 100 capsules of prednisone, a cortisone-base chemical for the treatment of arthritis, as compared to $17 paid by the druggist, one understands why the user has to pay more for those drugs.

Mr. Speaker, because of the high cost of drugs and their prohibitive retail price, for the Canadian consumer, this government not only repealed the sales tax, but also enacted another legislation to reduce the cost of drugs.

However, the former Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) revealed not so long ago—and I shall give the reference—that an unofficial survey indicated that the saving which resulted from the removal of the sale tax had reached only the wholesale and retail dealers without yet having benefitted the consumer. In other words, the Canadian government has taken steps for which he has to be commended, as they promote better competition. Indeed, it is very well known that the drug industry operates entirely on a monopolistic basis, because of the patent system. The government tabled some bills aimed at improving the situation; however those steps seem to favour the doctors, the druggists and the wholesale dealers, rather than the poor, the housewife or the head of a family who is disabled or has a diabetic condition.

At this stage, I would like to mention the case of one of my constituents, and I am sure that it happens in all ridings. This man is the father of eight children, he is an invalid, a diabetic and he had a stroke recently. After a stay in the hospital he went home, and he now receives a social welfare allowance of $85 through patronage. But since he must pay $50 a month for his medicine how can he make ends meet? It is absolutely impossible! Thus, considering those facts, the federal government has taken certain measures; it helped those who had money and not the needy.

Besides, the former Minister of Finance himself admits it because since he does not know whether the legislation has been effective or not, he uses his $1.25 words, and I quote:

It is difficult for us to say definitely—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member. I see it is ten o'clock.

ADJOURNMENT DEBATE

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under standing order No. 40 deemed to have been moved.

PUBLIC SERVICE—SUPERANNUATED FEDERAL EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR INCREASED PENSION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, January 14, as reported in Hansard at page 4245, I put a question to the President of Treasury Board (Mr. Drury). I realize that the rules of the house permit parliamentary secretaries to answer on behalf of ministers at this time of night, but on this occasion I do regret that the President of the Treasury Board is not here to deal with this matter. This was my question:

> In view of the fact that the government has acted upon a recommendation of the special joint committee on the public service of Canada with respect to the salaries of deputy ministers and assistant deputy ministers, when will it act on the recommendation of the very same committee for increases in the pensions of retired civil servants?

I draw attention to the reply made by the President of the Treasury Board. He said:

> Mr. Speaker, I think the first step to which the hon. member has just referred was attributed rather more to the recommendations of an outside committee known as the Clyne committee.

There is one more sentence in the reply, in which the minister said, with regard to the matter of substance, that it was still under consideration.

I want to register a very strong objection to the way in which the President of the Treasury Board tried to turn aside my question. My statement stands that the special joint committee on the public service of Canada made the two recommendations to which I referred. In its sixth report, tabled on February 3, 1967—I am looking at page 1274 of the Journals for that session—the committee expressed concern about the position of public servants who would be excepted from bargaining units, and recommended that within six months the government do something about the position of those public servants who were outside collective bargaining units.

The Clyne committee to which the President of the Treasury Board referred on Tuesday was set up in response to that recommendation, and this was done in six months. This was exactly the point of my question, that our recommendation that something be done about deputy ministers and assistant deputy ministers had been met. The Clyne committee was established, and that committee made recommendations that there be certain rather large increases in salaries. The government has now said that it approved the recommendations of the Clyne committee. But the self same committee which made the recommendation in its sixth report on February 3, 1967, that led to the appointing of the Clyne committee, recommended in its ninth report on May 8, 1967, that there be immediate action to increase the pensions of retired civil servants.

The whole point of the question that I asked on Tuesday still stands unanswered by the government. Here was a committee of parliament that made two clear cut recommendations; one that something be done about a certain group of people whose salaries are not low but who nevertheless are outside the ambit of collective bargaining, the other that something be done for a very large group of people who are in a very difficult position. Yet this government still seems to think it is perfectly all right to do something for those who need it the least and to ignore those who need help the most.

I do not object to the proposal that there be adjustments to and increases in the salaries of deputy ministers, assistant deputy ministers and others in executive and professional positions, but I do say that this kind of discrimination is an affront to our retired civil servants and to the whole system of parliamentary committees.

We made those two recommendations in good faith. As I say, one concerned people some of whom are in the higher income brackets of the public service; the other concerned people who are in dire need because their pensions are not equal to the needs of the present day. I say that for the government to act on one of the recommendations, and to act within the six months requested, but to ignore the other recommendation for nearly two years is scandalous.

So, the premise of my question still stands. I repeat it tonight: Since the government has acted on the one recommendation that was made by the special joint committee, when is it going to act on the other one and increase the pensions of retired civil servants?

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

Mr. H. E. Gray (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am here this evening at the request of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) to respond to the question asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I regret that there is nothing I can add to the response of the President of the Treasury Board when he attempted to deal with the hon. member's question on January 14. At that time he said that this matter remains under consideration by the government.

However, I can say, as I have said before on similar occasions, that concern over the question of increased pensions for retired civil servants has been expressed by members on all sides of this house; it is not limited to one particular corner of the house. Therefore, I am going to make a point of drawing the attention of the President of the Treasury Board to the remarks of the hon. member so that he will be able to bear them in mind in his continued consideration of this matter as a member of the government.

SPORTS—EXERCISE OF DRAFT BY NATIONAL HOCKEY LEAGUE

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is reported at page 4323 of Hansard and I was hoping that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro), would have had some startling remarks to make after the discussions that were to take place with the president of the National Hockey League during the Christmas recess. Perhaps he would have discussed what right a young junior hockey player has to choose the club for which he wants to play? What happens the moment he signs his first pro contract? Does the minister realize that the player is the property of that club for life, to be traded and demoted as the club sees fit? I do not think the minister is that concerned. He is unaware of what is happening to our amateur athletes in this country and he does not care about the N.H.L. universal draft; otherwise, he would be here this evening to answer some of these questions.

I was most disappointed to learn that no discussion took place, apparently, about a concomitant situation in hockey which, in my opinion, has far greater substance than the windmill at which the hon. minister chose to tilt. The Professional hockey league has denied that it stoops to slavery in shinny and affirms strongly that this old albatross has been finally discarded. The professionals would have us believe now, that they have no interest whatsoever in amateur hockey. Finally they have achieved the ultimate solution; that is, an annual draft of overage juniors.

I would like to object, Mr. Speaker, and suggest that professional hockey has merely changed, chameleon-like, to another form of slavery. They may not be called the Sultans of Shinny Slavery any more perhaps, but I suggest that the distinction in the light of facts which have come to hand may be more one of semantics. There still exists in hockey a form of serfdom so odious that I cannot conceive it being countenanced in a so-called just society. I wonder how many hon. members have heard of this fantastic and ingenious arrangement called "Draft of Overage Juniors"? It is a plan so simple and so ingenious that I heartily endorse the recommendation that its authors be installed immediately in the hockey hall of fame.

It means simply that all junior players who reach the age of 19 and one half, which is the new lower age agreed upon by the C.A.H.A. and the professionals, can be drafted for the price of $3,000, only $2,200 of which goes to the Junior A team which discovered, developed, educated, and subsidized the player over three or four years.

Quite simply, it means that a player drafted for a mere $3,000 is worth, only seconds later, a minimum of $30,000 to the pro club. If he happens to be a Bobby Orr, a Frank Mahovlich, or a Bobby Hull he is instantly worth $1 million or more. That's a pretty nice profit to turn in a few seconds. Is it any wonder the professionals feel they have achieved the ultimate in arrangements? You have heard the minister say there is no direct liaison now between the professionals and amateurs in the sense of sponsorships. Nevertheless, the liaison is no less effective, ironclad, and slave like through the unique agreement between the C.A.H.A. and the N.H.L. Under this agreement, which the C.A.H.A. demanded in its search for greater autonomy, the pros pay a sum of approximately $550,000 a year—a figure which they plan to reduce with time, if you can believe it—in exchange for which the C.A.H.A. agrees to deliver the bodies, so to speak, each June at the annual draft.

Because the boy is under the age of 21, and that was carefully guarded by reducing the age even further to 19½, he is completely at the mercy of the draft, and so is the Junior A team which developed him and which is about to finally reap dividends. The player has no choice about where he may want to play, nor has his junior club any redress with regard to the recompense for producing him. All this is reprehensible enough; but when I consider that 31 of the professional teams in hockey are in the United States and only four are in Canada I react with even greater shock. Canadian junior teams and Canada youngsters are being recruited for the masters of the Coliseums in the United States, to reap profits for them and another government and bringing back little or nothing to Canada. It is small wonder that many of the Junior A operators in Canada feel their days may be numbered. Indeed, many have already rebelled and have quit the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association.

In western Canada a new hockey association was formed this year called the Canadian Hockey Association. Because it refused to go along with this new version of serfdom these clubs were declared outlaw by the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association and now exist in a form of limbo. But do you think for one moment that the better players on these teams won't be drafted this June by the N.H.L or other pro teams? They will be absolved of their sins as soon as they are drafted.

Last year, and this year, each Junior A team was given $9,000 out of moneys paid to the C.A.H.A., but this amount is to be lowered and, as I am given to understand, gradually phased out altogether. Then there will be only the $3,000 for each player drafted.

The plan is so fantastically ingenious and inexpensive that one of the new N.H.L. owners, when appraised that his share for future talent was a mere $40,000 a year, was astounded. He suggested that the figure wouldn't even pay for a scout's entertainment expenses in baseball.

At one time it cost the six N.H.L. teams about $100,000 on the average each year to maintain farm systems. On that basis the pros should today be putting at least $1,200,000 back into amateur hockey. But how much are they investing? A mere $550,000, of which each N.H.L. team puts up about $40,000. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that even the old slave ships didn't have a margin of profit like that.

Recent years have seen the decline of hockey in Canada, both in number of leagues as well as clubs. Today, outside of the four professional teams, only the top Junior A clubs appear to be keeping the sport going economically. But how long can these people keep going in the face of rising costs, little or no help in producing or developing players, and no one to share the risk? Even the C.A.H.A., which has the fantastic gall not only to give the orders with no personal investment whatsoever, but to extract a percentage of their profits as well, will not be able to keep going.

Justice, Mr. Speaker, was once described by Cicero in De Officiis, as indispensable for the conduct of business. He also wrote that good faith is the foundation of justice. But do we have justice here? If there is it is heavily weighted in one direction.

This is no mere plea for a few Junior A clubs. It is a plea for all those who work in amateur hockey in Canada; the men, the boys who become the Bobby Hulls and the Bobby Orrs. It is also a plea for a better share of the fantastic profits which are now accruing to hockey from television and the result of expansion to the United States. Perhaps Canada can't charge for the snow it exports to the United States, but we can and should charge for the players we develop.

There is now an investigation taking place of amateur sport in Canada. If the minister had people assigned to this task force who know the difference between a jock strap and a pair of ear muffs, then perhaps the arrangement between the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association and the N.H.L. would be highest on its list of priorities. Right next to that should be the nefarious draft of underage junior players.

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of his remarks, the hon. member for Edmonton-Centre (Mr. Paproski) said that if the minister were more interested in this serious problem, he would be in the house.

I think the hon. member will admit that the minister's absence is clearly justified, since he is discharging his duties as chairman and host at the federal-provincial conference on welfare now under way.

In addition, I would like to quote the words of a poet: "On old tunes, let us sing new songs", because I answered a similar question from the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Gibson) on December 16 last.

Perhaps the hon. member would be well advised to refer to the speech delivered by the minister in Moncton on November 23, 1968, when he dealt with this matter, and, as we would say, he made no bones about it, in connection with the complaints made by the hon. member. He said in part:

> We cannot allow businessmen to buy or sell athletes as if they were properties. Players are not movables.

Needless to say that the minister has exposed the matter outlined by the hon. member by dubbing it a slave market. Not only has he wanted to make public statements in this regard—to show that he is strongly in favor of correcting such a situation—but he has also established a task force or a committee which must, as early as January or February, report on its findings in connection with the serious problem pointed out by the hon. member.

We hope that, as a result of the conclusions of the committee's report, it will be possible for us to pass legislation to set things right.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.20 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, January 17, 1969

The house met at 11 a.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

TRANSPORTATION

ATLANTIC PROVINCES—STUDY OF PROBLEMS BY STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been certain discussions in various corners of the house with regard to the work of the committee on transport and communications. It has been agreed that it might be desirable if that committee were to make a detailed study on the spot of transportation problems in the Atlantic provinces. I therefore ask the leave of the house to present a motion in this regard.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I move, therefore:

That the standing committee on transport and communications be empowered to consider and report upon the problems of transportation in the Atlantic provinces and that for the purposes of its inquiry the committee be empowered to adjourn from place to place within Canada and the clerk and the necessary supporting staff be authorized to accompany the committee.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the opposition party I should like to say that we welcome this announcement very much.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FINANCE

BANK ADVERTISEMENTS TO ATTRACT BORROWERS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance, and welcome him back to the house after his expedition last evening. Today I wish to ask him whether he is concerned about the advertising campaign of the chartered banks in which they urge Canadians to borrow from the banks to buy convertibles and other items which they may desire, and to use bank credit freely for spending purposes.

In view of the inflationary pressures and inflationary psychology of the country, as well as the difficulty in the capital markets, is the minister concerned about this? If so, I should like to know whether the minister has discussed this with the banks and whether he believes it is in the public interest for the banks to be urging Canadian individuals to borrow for anything they may desire. I consider this question particularly appropriate when I notice the pressure of the banks in constantly urging Canadian governments to live within their means, and not to borrow freely.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I find the views of the Leader of the Opposition very interesting. As he knows, banks have been competing with one another and with other institutions very aggressively for consumer loans. I presume that part of the advertising to which he has referred, and incidentally I have not seen it recently—this morning, at least—is to attract business from other consumer lenders. The over-all effect of this has been a reduction in the rate at which consumer loans have been made to the public in the past year or so. As the Leader of the Opposition has mentioned, and the President of the United States has done this also, we have urged people in Canada not to spend freely. I was very interested in his comment that banks castigate governments for spending and then turn around and encourage the public to spend.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

WATKINS REPORT—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PROTECT ECONOMIC INDEPENDENCE

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister this question. In view of a speech made recently by the Secretary of State in New York, again emphasizing the need to protect Canadian economic independence, is the government considering legislation to implement aspects of the Watkins report to provide that Canadian firms, which are subsidiaries of American companies, are free to trade anywhere without being subject to United States laws? Has there been consideration of the recommendation to provide a state foreign trade agency, and of the other recommendations in the report to protect Canadian economic independence?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Acting Prime Minister): Of course these questions are under continuous review by the government. Any definitive policy decision will be announced in the normal way.

CANADIAN DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR INFORMATION RESPECTING LEGISLATION

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I should like to ask the President of the Privy Council when this house may expect the introduction of the bills dealing particularly with the government's reorganization program and the Canada Development Corporation?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I hope to make a general statement within a week or so about the intended legislative program between now and, I hope, the end of the session in June. Perhaps hon. members could wait until then, when I can be a little more definitive.

AIRPORTS

QUEBEC—LOCATION OF INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport with regard to the selection of the site for the future international airport which is to be announced before the end of January. Can he tell us whether such decision will be taken by technocrats or by the cabinet?

[English]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the official decision will have to be taken by the government, which will be held responsible for it. Naturally the advice of the technical people will be taken into consideration. The government will have to base its decision on the advice it receives and the discussions which have taken place with the province of Quebec.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport.

[Mr. Lewis.]

Is the ballistic centre located in La Macaza a major and definite technical obstacle to the sites suggested north of Montreal along the Hawkesbury-Saint-Jérôme-Rigaud axis?

Mr. Speaker: I do not think that the supplementary question is in order.

[English]

GRAIN

FAILURE TO LOAD SHIPS AT WEST COAST

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce or the Minister of Transport, whichever one is responsible. Why are ships being kept waiting for grain on the west coast during a time when there has been a drop of 18 per cent or 1,100 fewer carloadings as compared with the same period in 1967?

Mr. Speaker: I have the impression that the question as asked is argumentative, but under the circumstances perhaps the minister might be allowed to answer.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, if there are any specific cases the hon. member would like to bring to my attention I would gladly meet him after the question period and bring these to the attention of the Wheat Board and the grain transportation committee.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, there are ships waiting at the present time and there have been 1,100 fewer carloadings than there were at the same time in 1967. This seems general in respect of any delivery point. I do not know what more the minister wants.

Mr. Pepin: I inquire nearly every morning about this situation and I have been informed that the box car situation at the moment is as good as it can be. As I said, I will gladly take notice of any specific case to which the hon. member is referring.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce would discuss these problems with officials of the railways. These nine ships have been waiting many, many days for dry grain, of which we have an abundance in Canada. This is costing the nation as a whole and the farmers in particular a great deal of money. Would the minister be prepared to discuss the matter with the railways?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Pepin: I just said I would, Mr. Speaker.

ESTATE TAX ACT

REQUEST THAT EXPLANATORY MATERIAL BE SUPPLIED TO OPPOSITION MEMBERS

Mr. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. It is based on a newspaper account which might be accurate, but I do not propose to call for any files.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fairweather: Could opposition members of parliament be furnished with the explanation with regard to the new estate tax, which was allegedly given by the Department of Finance to backbenchers who support the government?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the explanation was not given by the Department of Finance but through my office. Yesterday I instructed my office to make it available to members in the opposition as some of them have requested.

Mr. Bell: Is it helpful?

Mr. Benson: It is very helpful and it shows how fair the estate tax is.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lewis: Then why did you delay supplying us with the explanation?

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SECURITY CHECK OF STAFF MEMBERS

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the government house leader because I do not know to whom else it should be directed. Would the government house leader be kind enough to advise the house now or later as to the procedure with regard to security checks on the staff employed by the House of Commons and Senate. I ask the question in view of the fact that there was this morning some kind of security check. It amazes me that secretaries who have been here as long as 16 years were stopped for a security check, when to my personal knowledge three new employees who were right ahead of me were not stopped for this check.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to obtain from the hon. member the details of the particular case referred to. I would then make further inquiries and consult my colleagues on the point.

Mr. Baldwin: Has there been another leak?

HARBOURS

NOVA SCOTIA—ACTION FOLLOWING SURVEY OF STORM DAMAGE

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. On December 9 the minister stated that the Atlantic region engineers were making a survey of possible storm damage as far as harbours are concerned. Would the minister advise the house whether the engineers have completed their survey and whether any action will be taken?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): We have a report, Mr. Speaker, that is fairly complete with regard to damage done by the storm in all areas. The damage was very widespread, however, and I think the information that we have could probably be disseminated to individual members with more value than by making a statement in the house. I will endeavour to get that information out at once to the members concerned.

SPACE EXPLORATION

CONGRATULATIONS TO RUSSIAN COSMONAUTS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport a question in his capacity as Acting Prime Minister. Will consideration be given to extending Canada's congratulations to the U.S.S.R. on the completion today of an outstanding space achievement by that country?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all Canadians wish to congratulate the Russian cosmonauts on this really remarkable achievement. It is a further step in the exploration of space which lends new knowledge to that field of endeavour. It is a matter of interest and concern to all citizens of the world. I think that with the United States astronauts who performed such an amazing feat at the Christmas period, the Russian team deserve the congratulations and best wishes of all interested citizens of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INDIAN AFFAIRS

TABLING OF STANBURY-FIELD REPORT ON INDIAN TAXATION

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Will the minister say when he will be tabling the Stanbury-Field report which analyses taxes paid by Indians in British Columbia to the government of that province?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what document the hon. member is referring to. I will inquire and give an answer in the house as soon as possible.

AIRPORTS

QUEBEC—LOCATION OF INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development, but in his absence I shall direct it to the Minister of Transport.

Is the decentralization policy often announced by the federal government taken into consideration for the location of the future Quebec international airport?

Mr. Speaker: I think that the question as asked should be put on the order paper. If the hon. member feels that it is urgent, he could give notice to have the question discussed at the time of adjournment.

[English]

ESTATE TAX ACT

ALLEGED THREAT TO FAMILY FARMS AND BUSINESSES

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the serious threat to the continuance of family farms and businesses contained in the changes to the Estate Tax Act, would the minister give serious consideration to a review of these matters before bringing in the proposed legislation?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me the hon. member is asking a question which has been asked in the last few days, but in spite of this fact I am disposed to allow the minister to reply.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to say that the presumption is unfounded.

[Mr. Hellyer.]

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since there are indications in the press that Liberal members of parliament have been provided with certain information on the new proposals, would the minister make this information available to all members?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question has already been and answered.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

FRED—PLAN FOR WESTERN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the acting minister of regional development. Could the minister advise whether he has received a report on the proposed development plan for western Newfoundland under the FRED program amounting to $305 million from the Newfoundland government, as announced in the local papers there?

[Later:]

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, in view of the silence to the question I asked a couple of moments ago, I wonder if I may ask the Acting Prime Minister whether there is an acting minister of regional development, or what was formerly forestry and rural development?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, he will be in the house on Monday.

Mr. Marshall: Thank you for the answer.

[Later:]

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Hon. members realize that when they put questions to members of the government they are not necessarily entitled to answers. But because of the roster system introduced by the Prime Minister, and the fact that the Acting Prime Minister is probably fumbling around with the old list, the least courtesy which the government could offer the opposition would be to inform us whether there are acting ministers.

Mr. Hellyer: There are, indeed, acting ministers, but today is not the day for the attendance in the house of the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. I am sure he will be here on Monday; in case he should not be, the acting minister will be present.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Who is the acting minister?

FISHERIES

ACTION TO ASSIST EAST COAST INDUSTRY

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries but in his absence I will direct it to the Acting Prime Minister. Will he inform the house when we may expect a statement on the action which will be taken by the government to assist the east coast fresh and frozen fish industry?

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, for very good reasons the Minister of Fisheries is not able to be here today, but I will take the question as notice.

SHIPPING

MERCHANT MARINE—SUBJECT FOR DISCUSSION AT SHIPBUILDING MEETING

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): I have a question for the Minister of Transport with respect to the shipbuilding meeting on January 20 just announced by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Will the Minister of Transport, in charge of the revival of the merchant marine, be invited and be fully participating at the said meeting?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): My colleague indicates by nodding to me that that is the case, and I can assure my hon. friend of my interest in that very important subject.

Mr. Bell: I have a supplementary question. Will the minister give the further assurance that he and the government will keep in mind the promises made on June 17 in the heat of the election compaign by the present Minister of Forestry and Rural Development, who irrevocably promised a merchant marine for Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's supplementary question is argumentative.

RESEARCH

USE OF ANIMALS FOR SCIENTIFIC PURPOSES

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. In view of widespread public concern, is it the intention of the government to refer to an appropriate parliamentary committee at this session of parliament the matter of the use of animals for scientific research and other purposes.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): To the best of my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, there is no such intention.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it the intention of the government to introduce in this session legislation to regulate the experimental use of animals, such as they have in Great Britain and the United States?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I think that when the house leader reports to the house on the amount of legislation we have yet to deal with during the balance of the current session, my hon. friend will see that it will be virtually impossible to introduce any measures that are not contemplated at this time.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Acting Postmaster General.

I should like to know why there has been an eclipse of the sun, the Quebec newspaper Le Soleil, in the reading room for about a month?

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's questions will be drawn to the attention of the House of Common astrologers.

SPORTS

ASSISTANCE TO NATIONAL SKI TEAM

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, earlier this week I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether the government had received a request for financial aid to our national ski team and I was told the matter would be looked into.

Can the minister in charge or the acting minister give us any information in this regard?

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the minister is now presiding over the federal-provincial welfare conference, and I believe that upon his return to the house he will be pleased to give the member an answer.

[English]

TELEVISION

TRANSACTION BETWEEN GOVERNMENT AND GEOFFREY STIRLING

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I have a question for the Acting

Prime Minister. I would ask him whether the C.R.T.C. has held a meeting to discuss the ethics of a transaction between any minister or ministers of the Crown, and Geoffrey Stirling.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Acting Prime Minister): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member would have to provide better information than that before I could inquire.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): The Acting Prime Minister tells me, Mr. Speaker, that I would have to provide better information than that. As Acting Prime Minister, would he look into this question and have the internal fortitude to bring it forward?

Some hon. Members: Oh.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR GREATER DELIVERY OF DAMP GRAIN

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I left three questions unanswered yesterday, Mr. Speaker. The first was from the hon. member for Mackenzie, having to do with the delivery of the three-bushel advance quota on damp grain. He asked whether farmers would be entitled to make this delivery before spring. I have now received an answer from the Wheat Board on this point: The Wheat Board is hopeful that such will be the case.

ABSORPTION OF DEMURRAGE CHARGES

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The second question with which I should like to deal was concerned with demurrage charges on vessels waiting to load grain in Vancouver. I was asked by the hon. member for Regina East whether the government would absorb these charges. The answer is that this has never been done by the government. If I might be allowed, I would refer hon. members to a paragraph taken from last year's testimony of the chief commissioner of the Wheat Board, as follows:

> The board believes it is better to take on the sales and to take the risk. If it then turns out that demurrage must be paid, it is one of the costs of doing business and, in the overall, represents a small part of the total costs of operation.

As a matter of fact, the whole page should be read.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): May I ask a supplementary question arising out of the reference the minister made to the statement by the chief commissioner of the Wheat Board? Will not the minister bear in mind that these ships are waiting, not for markets which have yet to be ascertained, but to supply markets which are already ascertained? These markets are waiting for the loaded ships to arrive. Is the minister aware of that fact?

Mr. Pepin: Obviously the hon. gentleman is in great need of reading the page upon which appears the Chief Commissioner's explanation of how demurrage works.

Mr. Woolliams: We know how it works.

Mr. Pepin: Shortage of box cars is not the only reason for delays.

[Later:]

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. One may expect—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member should ask a question.

Mr. Gleave: In view of the fact that this year there are extraordinary circumstances both in the harvesting and in the movement of grain, would the minister not accept the fact that the approach to demurrage on these vessels would be different from that of previous years when movement was normal?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I realize that I must circulate copies of the document referred to.

REQUEST FOR FINAL PAYMENT

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The third question had to do with the final payment from the Wheat Board and it was asked by the hon. member for Lisgar. I might know more about that next week and, if so, I shall report to the hon. member and to the house.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the Prime Minister will be returning to the house on Monday and whether it is the intention of his right hon. friend to make a statement in the house with regard to his various activities abroad?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I expect the Prime Minister will be in the house on Monday. I have not had definitive word from him in respect to a statement, but I am almost certain that he will making a statement on Monday which will include reference to the Commonwealth conference and his trip to the Vatican.

COMMUNICATIONS

BRIEFS IN OPPOSITION TO BELL TELEPHONE RATES INCREASE

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General, but in his absence I will address it to the acting minister or the parliamentary secretary. In view of the fact that today is the last day for filing briefs opposing the proposed increase in rates by the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, has the government filed a brief and, if not, why not?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Postmaster General or the acting minister will be here on Monday to reply to that question. In the meantime I shall draw it to his attention.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DISCUSSIONS ON STRATEGY AND PROCUREMENT

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Minister of National Defence and ask him whether he would inform the house as to the purpose of the discussions that will be taking place during next week in Paris between the Canadian chief of the defence staff and the French chief of the joint staff, reportedly on matters of strategy and procurement, and specifically whether this has any connection with the review of Canadian defence policy and implies either Canadian procurement of supplies in France or joint procurement projects between France and Canada.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether my hon. friend would agree to wait until the minister is back in his place. I think he will be back some time early next week, if I am not mistaken, and he will have a chance to answer this question at that time.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, that is quite agreeable if the Acting Prime Minister will bring my question to the attention of the minister.

INCOME TAX

INQUIRY AS TO SOCIAL PROGRESS LEVY

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question to the Minister of Finance.

Has he received any favourable comments since the social development tax has been implemented?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member should put this question on the order paper.

[English]

GRAIN

CANADIAN BOX CARS ON U.S. RAILWAYS

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the great demand for grain cars in western Canada for the movement of grain, and in view of the fact that the president of the Canadian Transport Commission on November 28 said that the transport committee will be looking into the number of Canadian box cars on United States lines, could the minister say whether there is any unduly large numbers of Canadian cars on U.S. railroads?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): There are a considerable number, Mr. Speaker. I think this will be reflected in an answer to a written question which will be tabled next week. In addition to this I might add that most of the box cars in the United States are not those that would be suitable for the movement of grain. It is necessary to have both sets of figures, and I hope that both sets can be produced.

Mr. Skoberg: May I ask the minister an additional question. Has he made the Canadian Transport Commission aware of the situation, and is he instructing them to look into the situation at all times?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, Mr. Speaker, they are very much aware. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is also in constant communication with them and we have undertaken, in effect, to do anything that it is felt is required to assist in the movement of grain.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PATENT ACT—TRADE MARKS ACT

EXTENSION OF AUTHORITY TO GRANT LICENCES

The house resumed from Thursday, January 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Basford for the second reading and reference to the standing committee on health, welfare and social affairs of Bill No. C-102, to amend the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act and the Food and Drugs Act.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, last night at the time of adjournment, I was dealing with bill No. C-102 entitled an act to amend the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act and the Food and Drugs Act.

Among other things, I quoted a statement made by the former minister of finance (Mr. Sharp) in which he commented on the efficiency of two bills designed to lower the cost of drugs. In fact, the first abolished the sales tax on drugs and the second reduced from 20 to 15 per cent the custom duties on drugs, apart from curtailing tremendously the dumping duties on the imports of some drugs.

Since the coming into force of these measures, several months ago, we have noticed—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the honourable minister wish to rise on a point of order?

[English]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question. Would he allow me to ask him for the precise reference to the statement that was made by the former minister of finance, the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Sharp), so that I can look it up?

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I have the exact reference in my office. In any event, I can have it photostatted and copy of it sent to the minister after my speech, which will amount to the same thing.

I said that the federal government had adopted two measures with the view to reducing the cost of drugs. Now, what are the results? The cost of drugs has not gone down. Of course, it has for wholesalers and retailers, but not for the consumer.

The cost of drugs is still outrageous, prohibitive and unacceptable. Retail prices for drugs in Canada run $2 to $13 higher than in the United States and in Europe. Canadians pay too much, Mr. Speaker, for the drugs they need. Everyone recognizes that, including the minister whom I wish to congratulate for being a realist.

• (11:40 a.m.)

What is the cause of this situation? It will be no news for anyone that drugs, with regard to their discovery, their brand names and their sale, represent a tremendous and almost sacred monopoly, which makes a handful of specialized people richer and which is detrimental to most Canadian people who have to use some drug or other as a cure. That monopoly, in my opinion, comes from the exclusive privilege provided for 17 years by a brand name.

Mr. Speaker, the patent could be considered as a reward to the inventors, in the form of a temporary monopoly but it is too long, in my opinion, as a reward for the service they render to society by making their discovery known. Furthermore, the attraction of that monopoly, because of its related material advantages, tends to strongly stimulate the creative mind and to protect the inventor.

Under legislation in force in almost every country of the world and according to agreements to which these countries adhere, a discoverer can, for a certain period of time, through patents, keep the exclusive property of his discovery, that is to say, he will benefit from a privilege which allows him to prevent other individuals or legal entities to make and even to use the object of those patents. Therefore, a monopoly is established which serves quite well the interests of the inventors and distributors but not those of the consumers.

Therefore, I welcome this bill, at least the part dealing with the restriction of that monopoly, since we are then in favour of private enterprise in Canada and we protect the consumer. Although technical advances allow of great hopes, this progress in some way depends, in every country, on the purchasing power. Furthermore, it directly contributes to an increase in the living standard and so, in quality. However, an improvement in the quality of life or standard of living triggers inevitably an increase in the cost of living. Whether we admit it or not, Mr. Speaker, we come back to the problem of prime importance, that is, the purchasing power which is in the pockets of the consumer or the taxpayer.

Supposing our standard of living were the most desirable and the best in the world, if our cost of living is the highest, there will still remain, because of the present financial system which serves the interests of the monopolies of high finance, too many poor people for us to be satisfied.

Therefore, we must use all the means at our disposal to lower the selling and the retail cost. At the present time, two things are drawing my attention, Mr. Speaker. The first one concerns the need to have drugs to get cured and even to save our lives. Indeed, it is no longer possible to do without drugs today, and research is conducted in order to improve the quality and the safety of these products. The second one, which I think derives from the first, concerns the ability to pay for these drugs which are absolutely necessary for our well-being, to get cured and to restore us to health. So, to get cured we must use drugs; then we have the problem of being able to pay for these drugs.

Here is the paradox of our society. We can be ill one day or another, but our financial system does not allow us this luxury, since the majority of Canadians have not the financial means to be ill and to get cured. Once again, we have to face a financial and economic problem, no matter how we look at it.

Mr. Speaker, considering our monetary system and due to the fact that the Canadian government has entrusted the chartered banks with its administrative powers rather than the Bank of Canada which belongs to the Canadian people and which, in our estimation, should regulate the purchasing power of Canadians, most of our citizens cannot afford the luxury of being sick or buying drugs.

The bill now under discussion is intended to promote more competition between the drug manufacturers and distributors. Therefore, it is intended, through an increased and healthy competition, to lower prices and to diminish a monopoly being exerted on people through prices which are evidently abusive. As a result of this competition, the government is aiming at the decentralization of the price levels now under the control of a handful of manufacturers and retailers. In our opinion, this is a commendable measure because we, of the Ralliement Créditiste, are opposed to any kind of monopoly, especially those of a financial nature.

We, of the Ralliement Créditiste, are in favour of the progress of private enterprise, small or large. We, of the Ralliement Créditiste, are also the proponents of free enterprise which, more than any other system, encourages greater security and freedom whatever the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who has communistic leanings, may say.

Mr. Speaker, free enterprise must be encourage. Hence, this is an occasion for us to welcome this bill which is intended to bring about more competition among imported products. This is commendable because it might help—I say "might"—the Canadian consumer pay a little less for the drugs he needs.

I want the minister to listen to what we are saying to him. This bill, like others of the same kind, is nothing but a poultice on a wooden leg because it is not increasing the purchasing power of Canadians which they essentially and basically need, by all means, to buy drugs.

Mr. Speaker, far from helping the Canadian consumer by increasing his purchasing power, the present government is doing no more than the previous governments, including the Progressive Conservatives who did not bring about any changes either; both parties are the same, two different side of the same coin; only the colour changes. Such governments, which we have put up with for too long, are levying taxes from the taxpayers in every way through unintelligent methods: voluntary taxes, non-voluntary taxes, direct taxes, indirect taxes, admitted taxes, unadmitted taxes, circumstancial taxes, social development taxes and social backwardness taxes. Mr. Speaker, these annoyances result in an economic regress which affects our productivity and our prosperity. They are causing, from month to month, from year to year, from one government to the next, economic regress instead of economic progress because people have less and less purchasing power. They are increasingly tied up with debts, credit and higher interest rates to which the present government applies the blind eye.

Those are the main remarks I wanted to make. As long as this is not understood, Mr. Speaker, we will not realize in what position are our people, those born in debt, living in debt, sick in debt, dying in debt and buried in a coffin bought on credit.

This system is working the wrong way; it does not settle anything because it is choking more and more the little people for the benefit of the rich people.

• (11:50 a.m.)

We support the present leglislation not because we think it will settle the whole problem, as it will be clearly insufficient, but because it will have the advantage of encouraging private enterprise; for that reason it is commendable, Mr. Speaker.

Before concluding my remarks, I would like to call the attention of the minister to the fact that the five measures announced in his speech of October 17 and aiming at fostering private enterprise are, in the principle, in our opinion, basically excellent; we would like to congratulate him for his inititive. In fact, for a long time we had been complaining that our governments did not take any interest in the pharmaceutical field. It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that the PIDA, set up by the Department of Industry, and the Department of Trade and Commerce, can help private industry by means of direct or indirect subsidies, particularly direct subsidies, and by intelligent help, in order to enable our Canadian companies to manufacture a product whose safety and quality which will be envied by other countries.

However, Mr. Speaker, as one NDP member was saying yesterday, there is only $2 million left, which is surely not enough to help compete against foreign industry, improve the quality of drug products, and intensify research in Canada. In fact, in all Canadian pharmacy schools, universities and other institutions we have only 80 pharmacology students; this is less than sufficient. Also, the federal government granted a mere $350,000 for research in 1966-67.

Before I conclude, I ask the minister to direct more investment from his department towards research, to enable the drug companies to put on the market good products which will not endanger the health of the Canadian people. After all, it is the individual who must be considered in this bill and although I congratulate the minister for his initiative, I dare say this measure is far from enough; it is just a makeshift solution. It is high time that the minister should take an interest in financial problems, because such bills are merely drugs that lull the public and hon. members to sleep.

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) would have been glad to take part in this debate but, as you know, he is presiding at the moment—with much skill and distinction, I daresay—over the federal provincial conference on welfare. In his absence, I shall try to express as faithfully as possible his philosophy about this bill amending the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act and the Food and Drugs Act.

My colleague, the hon. member from Vancouver Center, has made clear to you, in moving the second reading of Bill No. C-102, this government's deep concern about the high price of drugs in Canada. We are particularly concerned about the economic burden imposed by unduly high drug prices on the chronically ill and aged in our society.

Bill C-102 plays an important role in the fulfillment of this Government's pledge to the Canadian people to work towards a just society for all of our citizens. What aspects of the bill relate to health matters and thus fall within the jurisdiction of the Department of National Health and Welfare?

In order to place the legislation in proper context, what is the present status of the drug industry in Canada? In terms of business volume, the Canadian pharmaceutical industry is dominated by firms which are subsidiaries of giant foreign corporations—for the most part either in the United States or Switzerland.

These subsidiaries hold the Canadian patent on chemical processes developed by their parent firms. The majority of pharmaceuticals produced in Canada are manufactured from primary chemicals imported by these subsidiary firms, which are formulated in final dosage form in this country.

Under our present legislation, independent Canadian drug manufacturers can obtain a compulsory license which permits them to produce the primary chemical in Canada, and then formulate it into a finished dosage form. At first glance, this appears to provide competition to the firms which are subsidiaries of foreign companies. Unfortunately, however, the size of the Canadian market is not sufficiently large, in most instances, to permit the Canadian manufacturer to produce the chemicals at prices competitive with those at which the subsidiary can import them from its foreign parent firm. The net result, therefore is that the compulsory licenses have had limited practical value and the effective monopolies of the subsidiary firms have been maintained.

It is for this reason that we have introduced this bill—to inject competition at the manufacturing level, into the drug industry in this country, and thus reduce drug prices.

Hon. members will recall that when the predecessor of the present bill, Bill C-190, was introduced into the house last February, there were well-meaning, earnest and sincere outcries that its end result would be to jeopardize the health of the Canadian people. Although Bill C-190 died with the dissolution of the house, I am sure hon. members are familiar with all of the arguments used by those who for various reasons were opposed to it. I can assure you that the Government has taken very much to heart the concern expressed by a number of individuals and organizations.

As a result, Bill C-102 differs from its predecessor in a number of significant ways, which are designed to prevent any deleterious effect which the passage of the legislation could theoretically have on the quality and safety of drugs sold in Canada.

Prominent among these changes is the fact that Bill C-102 includes an amendment to the Food and Drugs Act. Section 24 of this act will be amended by adding to it provision of specific authority to the governor-in-council to make regulations "governing, regulating or prohibiting" the importation into Canada of any drugs manufactured outside of Canada, or the distribution or sale of such drugs in Canada. Action taken under this section of the act would of course be based on the necessity to protect the public in relation to the safety and quality of imported drugs. I am sure hon. members will agree with me that this amendment provides, in the clearest and most unequivocal terms, the necessary authority to control imported drugs.

There is another section of the new bill which provides added health protection to the Canadian public. As hon. members are aware, section 3 of Bill C-102 provides for an amendment to the Trade Marks Act. Under this section, there is a new paragraph, 49A (2), which states that the amendment to the Trade Marks Act permitting the sale in Canada of a drug product manufactured by a company abroad under the same trade mark used by a related Canadian company, would not apply if the product manufactured outside Canada was sufficiently different in its composition to represent a hazard to health. Authority is provided for the publications in the Canada Gazette of a declaration by the Minister of National Health and Welfare relating to a specific pharmaceutical which has been imported and is being sold under a trade mark registered in Canada.

• (12 noon)

Some drug manufacturers have made representations to the Food and Drug Directorate of my department, pointing out differences in the composition of products, produced by their company and sold under the same trade mark in Canada and abroad. In no instance have they presented evidence that the differences in composition would present a serious hazard to health. However, should such a situation develop, the necessary authority to deal with it effectively has now been embodied in the legislation.

Bill C-102 also formalizes the present informal advisory arrangements between the Commissioner of Patents and the Food and Drug Directorate.

Section 1, subsection 13 of the bill requires the Commissioner of Patents to report all applications for compulsory license to the Department of National Health and Welfare. It will be obvious to hon. members that this provides an opportunity to the Directorate to conduct inspections, procure samples of the drug in question, review label claims, and carry out other investigations or examinations to determine if the drug product produced under compulsory license complies, or is likely to comply, with the Food and Drugs Act and Regulations. Furthermore, section 1, subsection 16 provides that nothing in any license granted shall be construed as conferring upon any person authority to prepare, produce, import or sell any medicine contrary to, or otherwise not in accordance with, the requirements of the Food and Drugs Act and Regulations.

Some have expressed concern that imported drugs are intrinsically inferior to those of Canadian firms. There are those who have gone so far as to raise the spectre of a veritable flood of inferior drugs appearing on our market, with disastrous consequences. The evidence does not support these dire predictions. Of the imported drugs in finished dosage form analyzed in 1967 by the Food and Drug Directorate of my department, 16 per cent were unsatisfactory for one reason or another. The percentage of domestically produced drugs in finished dosage form found unsatisfactory was identical—16 per cent. Thus the data provides no support at all for those who claim that imported drugs, as a class, are of inferior quality to those produced in Canada. The analytical results obtained by the Food and Drug Directorate are in line with other information which shows that the vast majority of drugs in final dosage form imported into Canada come from countries with advanced food and drug legislation and manufacturing standards.

Let me illustrate: as of June 1968, 329 firms had filed information with the Directorate on 2761 imported products in accordance with the requirement of the Regulations on Drug Notification. Of this total, 2215 products were produced by 168 firms located in the United States, 238 products originated in France, 146 in England, 83 in Germany and 46 in Switzerland. Of the remainder, 8 were produced in Denmark, 7 in Austria, 4 in Holland, 4 in Ireland, 4 in Hong Kong and 1 in each of Italy, Finland, Scotland, Sweden, Japan and South Africa. I should emphasize that this data relates to the importation of the final dosage form of the drug only and does not include bulk chemicals or partially processed pharmaceuticals.

We anticipate that most of the increase in drug imports resulting from the passage of Bill C-102 probably will be in the form of bulk drugs, which will then be formulated into final dosage form in Canada. Under these circumstances both the Canadian manufacturer and the Food and Drug Directorate—through its inspection and analytical programs—can exercise adequate surveillance.

The Food and Drug Directorate has taken a number of steps to assist foreign manufacturers to meet Canadian standards for imported drugs. A comprehensive Drug Manufacturers Guide has been prepared explaining the manufacturing facilities and control requirements of the Food and Drug Regulations in considerable detail. This Guide covers such items as Premises and Equipment, Sanitation, Personnel, Records and Samples, Quality Control, Product Information Records and Recall Systems.

The contents have already been discussed with pharmaceutical manufacturers and the Guide will be available shortly for distribution to the trade.

In addition, a draft has been prepared of a Guide on the Manufacturing Facilities and Controls of Imported Drugs. This document deals particularly with the interpretation of the Food and Drug Regulations as they apply to the information and evidence a drug importer must maintain about the manufacturing facilities and controls of his foreign drug supplier. This Guide will be ready shortly for distribution to the pharmaceutical industry. I am sure it will be apparent to hon. members that these two Guides—the preparation of which has been a task of considerable magnitude for officers of the Food and Drug Directorate—will be of considerable assistance to manufacturers.

They will also be of great value in obtaining voluntary compliance with the Food and Drug Regulations.

[Mr. Gendron.]

Regulations under the Food and Drugs Act have been amended to increase the control over imported drugs. It now is an offence for a person to import a drug in dosage form unless he has information available in Canada to show that the manufacturing facilities and control regulations have been met. Moreover, it is an offence for a person to import a drug in dosage form unless each lot or batch has been tested in Canada by an acceptable method to ensure identity, potency and purity for its recommended use, or failing that, satisfactory evidence is available to the Directorate that each lot or batch has been adequately tested in the country of origin.

Because a considerable number of drugs imported into Canada originate in Europe, the Directorate has taken an additional step to keep European manufacturers informed of the requirements which must be met before drugs can be imported into this country. A senior officer of the Directorate, who holds a Doctorate in organic chemistry as well as a degree in pharmacy, will be stationed permanently in Europe. As the Directorate's representative there, he will be able to provide valuable advice to European drug manufacturers who wish to export drugs to Canada, and will be in a position to evaluate their capabilities of meeting Canadian requirements. This arrangement will not only assist the Directorate in assessing the information and evidence supplied by European manufacturers but also alert the Directorate as to the standards of manufacturers in Europe.

For many years all foreign manufacturers of biological products such as vaccines, sera, toxoids and antibiotics for parenteral use, have been inspected at regular intervals by a senior officer of the department.

We look forward to the day when effective mechanisms have been established for the international standardization of requirements for manufacturing facilities and controls in drug plants. Until then, we are continuing to cooperate with the World Health Organization in its laudable efforts in this field.

A draft document on this important subject has been received from the World Health Organization and officers of the department have provided extensive comments on it. In addition, we are expanding our exchange of information with other governments regarding the quality of drug manufacturers in their country. For example, within the last two weeks an officer of our Food and Drug Directorate obtained extensive information on this matter at briefing sessions held with his counterpart in the United States Food and Drug Administration.

It is clear that the Government has gone to considerable length to ensure that drugs imported into Canada will have to meet the same high standards of quality and safety required of domestic drugs.

It is legitimate to inquire, however, regarding the capability of the Food and Drug Directorate—on whose shoulders the added burden must necessarily fall—to monitor adequately any increased flow of drugs into this country which may result from passage of the legislation before you today. We have made a careful and soul-searching inquiry into the operational capabilities of the Food and Drug Directorate. In April 1968, 11 man-years were made available to the Food and Drug Directorate for the specific purpose of improving the Directorate's ability to maintain an adequate surveillance over imported drugs. I am pleased to announce that a further 22 man-years will be provided as of April 1, 1969 to improve the present level of surveillance of drug products. These man-years are being, and will be used to provide additional drug inspectors and drug analysts. Furthermore, additional funds and personnel have been made available to provide an increased capability for the review of new drug submissions as well as additional funds for the testing of drugs under research contracts for the next fiscal year. I should emphasize that these resources are over and above the necessary funds and man-years required by the Directorate to maintain its present level of service. This will, in effect, permit the Directorate to substantially improve the level of service in these areas.

As part of continuing studies on more efficient utilization of resources, the Food and Drug Directorate has begun a program of research on the feasibility of employing automated equipment to increase the analytical capabilities of the Directorate's laboratories.

It is anticipated that application of modern technology and instrumentation will markedly increase the analytical output of our chemists and technicians. One knows, for example, that by means of proper automation, it is possible to analyze from 10 to 50 times more of given pharmaceutical preparations in a day than can be analyzed by conventional methods. Procedures have been described in the scientific literature which permit analysis of up to 100 samples of certain drugs per hour. The equipment involved is complicated and considerable development work will be required before automated procedures can be used routinely on a broad basis. Nevertheless, we are pressing ahead as rapidly as possible to take advantage of this significant technological advance, which, if successfully applied, will permit the Directorate to substantially increase the routine survey type of analytical work on drugs with a relatively small increase in staff. If we increase the number of drug samples analyzed, our chances of locating inferior quality drugs will of course be increased.

The Directorate's knowledge of drugs on the market has been markedly increased as a result of the drug notification program. The Food and Drug Regulations relating to drug notification require that a manufacturer must provide, within 30 days after the drug is first sold, information on its name, the purpose for which it is recommended, a quantitative list of the medicinal ingredients and the recommended dosage. Notification is also required when a drug formulation is changed or a drug is withdrawn from the market. Data on nearly 30,000 pharmaceutical preparations have now been received and stored in a mechanical information retrieval system. The Directorate thus has rapid access to data on the drugs on the Canadian market.

Hon. members have no doubt read about, and been exposed to, arguments relating to therapeutic equivalency of drugs. This issue—of which much has been made recently by certain drug manufacturers—boils down to this fundamental question: Will two drug products containing the same amount of the same active ingredient give essentially the same clinical effects. The answer to this question has great significance to physicians, manufacturers, Government and the public. If the answer to the question is "yes"—if, in fact two products with the same amount of active ingredients will give comparable clinical responses, a physician's choice between the two products may well be based on relative costs. If a less expensive product is equally effective, there is no advantage to prescribing a more expensive brand of the product. For the direct determination of therapeutic equivalency, the ideal method would be to compare two or more drug products containing the same amount of active ingredients, in the same dosage form, by measuring their capabilities to alleviate the symptoms or control a specific disease in human patients. Except perhaps in rare circumstances, such a comparison is neither practical or necessary. It would be extremely costly and very time consuming even if the required personnel and facilities could be found for such investigations. In many instances it would be contrary to medical ethics, since it would involve human experimentation under conditions in which a lack of therapeutic efficacy could have undesirable or even fatal results. Furthermore, objective clinical comparisons between drugs are notoriously difficult to achieve, because of differences between patients and differences in the symptoms or diseases under consideration. Therefore, our attention has been directed to use of an indirect measure of therapeutic equivalence—termed physiological availability. In determining physiological availability, the concentration of the drug being studied is determined in the blood and/or urine of human patients at intervals after dosing.

The problem of therapeutic equivalence—or the lack of it—received great prominence last year when it was found in the U.S. that certain brands of chloramphenicol, an antibiotic, gave reduced blood levels of the drug. These products also showed abnormal dissolution characteristics when examined in the laboratory. In Canada, our Food and Drug Directorate also found that one lot of chloramphenicol from each of two companies dissolved at significantly lower rates than that of the first brand of chloramphenicol marketed in Canada. Although this did not necessarily mean that these products were clinically ineffective, the Directorate as a precautionary measure advised the manufacturers involved to recall those lots of chloramphenicol from the market. The companies agreed and carried out a voluntary recall of the products involved.

The problem of therapeutic equivalence has been studied in detail by a task force of the United States Department of Health, Education and Welfare. A senior officer of the Food and Drug Directorate has served on one of the expert panels of the task force, concerned with the conduct of clinical trials carried out by various agencies of the U.S. Government to assess the biological equivalency of a variety of drugs. The task force in an interim report issued in mid-September of this year, concluded that instances of therapeutic non-equivalency have seldom been reported, and few of these have had singificant therapeutic significance. The lack of therapeutic equivalency among drugs meeting all official standards for parameters such as identity, purity, potency and dissolution rate, has been grossly exaggerated as a major hazard to public health, the task force reported.

Despite the unequivocal nature of the task force's statement, so-called brand name manufacturers of drugs and their associations, both in the United States and Canada, have made much of the supposed therapeutic advantages of brand name products, for which they claim to have demonstrated evidence of clinical superiority. My officials, however, agree with the American task force. We feel that lack of therapeutic equivalency among drugs meeting all official standards has been grossly exaggerated as a major hazard to public health. With the exception of chloramphenicol, to which I have referred, we know of no documented instance of therapeutic inequivalence among drug products which are physically and chemically equivalent. Our views on this matter coincide exactly with those of Dr. Philip Lee, Assistant Secretary in the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare, who testified to this effect recently to the Nelson Committee of the U.S. Senate. The question of therapeutic equivalence has been used as a convenient bogeyman by certain drug manufacturers in attempts to document unsubstantiated claims for therapeutic superiority of their products. They got a great deal of mileage out of the chloramphenicol incident, and have used it to make unwarranted generalizations about all drugs.

The plain facts—and they are abundantly documented in the scientific and medical literature—are that so-called brand name manufacturers of drugs do not have valid grounds for objection to so-called generic drugs on the basis of lack of therapeutic equivalence. Nor do they have evidence that brand name products are of better quality in other ways. The Director-General, Food and Drugs, testified in January, 1967 before the Special Committee of the House of Commons on Drug Costs and Prices (the Harley Committee) that on the basis of laboratory examination the Directorate had no evidence drugs sold under a brand name differed in quality from those sold under a generic name.

The Directorate's experience and views, have not changed since that time. It is clear that some so-called brand name products are lower in quality than they should be, and so are some so-called generic products.

Actually, it is our view that far too much emphasis has been given to the question of generic versus brand name drugs. Just to give one example, the Compendium of Pharmaceuticals and Specialties, Fourth Edition, 1968, published by the Canadian Pharmaceutical Association, Inc., lists seventeen acetylsalicylic acid products, manufactured by 14 different companies, all of which are sold under a brand name. Only 4 of these manufacturers are listed as member companies of the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada. I am sure that this Association and others who have been most vocal on this subject, would not be prepared to class the remaining 10 as "brand name" manufacturers or their products as "brand name" products. The truth is that practically all drugs sold at the retail level carry brand names. Thus any attempt to divide the drugs on the Canadian market into "brand name" and "generic name" products is an exercise in futility.

I referred previously to the fact that drugs which meet official standards may be expected to show therapeutic equivalency. One of the most important of these standards relates to the rate at which the drug dissolves in artificial gastro-intestinal fluids. An officer of the Research Laboratories of the Food and Drug Directorate is a member of a joint committee of the United States Pharmacopeia and the National Formulary, which is studying various procedures for measuring the rate of dissolution of drugs. In our own research program, we are giving high priority to the development of simple physico-chemical methods for dissolution which will correlate as closely as possible with the physiological availability of drug products.

Opponents of the proposed legislation have claimed that Bill C-102 provides an invitation to counterfeiting. There is no evidence to support this contention. Drug counterfeiting has been a much more serious problem in the U.S., where legislation similar to that embodied in Bill C-102 does not exist. Only one instance of the sale of counterfeit drugs in Canada is known. Last Spring the Food and Drug Directorate of my Department became aware of counterfeit tablets of a tranquilizing drug known under the brand name of Valium. Investigations carried out in conjunction with the R.C.M.P. showed that counterfeit Valium tablets were being peddled to pharmacists in the Montreal area in unlabelled bags and bottles. Analyses conducted in the laboratories of the Food and Drug Directorate revealed that the active ingredient, diazepam, was present in the declared amount.

Furthermore, no impurities of significance were present. Therefore the counterfeit product was not a hazard to health but it was being sold in clear and obvious violation of the Food and Drugs Act and Regulations. Prompt action by the Food and Drug Directorate and the Company producing the genuine product brought the sale of these tablets to a halt, a few days after the counterfeit nature of the product had been confirmed. I should like to repeat that there is no evidence that the passage of this legislation will encourage the counterfeiting of drugs.

Finally I wish to refer to the reports of the Hilliard and Boyd Committees. It has been frequently said by opponents of this legislation, that if the recommendations of these two committees has been implemented, there would be no problem. Well, let me review the situation as it now stands.

As you will recall, the Hilliard Committee was appointed to examine the patent licensing arrangement with respect to drugs. The action taken to date on the report of this Committee can be summarized as follows:

1. Under present procedures the Commissioner of Patents requests the opinion of the Food and Drug Directorate regarding the compliance of an applicant for a compulsory license with the manufacturing facilities and control Regulations under the Food and Drugs Act. Under Section 1, Subsection 13 of Bill C-102, it will now be mandatory for the Commissioner of Patents to give notice to the Department of National Health and Welfare of an application for a compulsory license.

2. The intent of the recommendation that the definition of a "new drug" be amended to include a drug manufactured by a new process or if new or more serious side effects develop, has been included in modified regulations currently being reviewed by the Department of Justice.

3. Drug manufacturers have been advised that prior to the issuance of a notice of compliance on a submission for a new drug for human use, a factual scientific document on the drug products, devoid of promotional material, must be available for distribution to physicians and pharmacists. This product monograph is to serve as a reference standard against which subsequent labelling, professional literature and promotional material can be compared.

4. The new regulations requiring importers of drugs to have available in Canada evidence of adequate testing of the drug to ensure its identity, potency and purity, I have referred to already.

I believe the actions which I have enumerated above, meet the intent if not the exact wording of the major recommendations of the Hilliard Committee.

The Boyd Committee was appointed to study the existing legislation on investigational drugs. Action taken implementing the recommendations of this committee are as follows:

1. Regulations pertaining to the emergency use of new drugs were promulgated in November, 1966. These regulations permit the Director-General, Food and Drugs to authorize the sale of a new drug, for which a notice of compliance has not been issued, to a physician for use in a specified medical emergency.

2. A draft of regulations pertaining to new drugs to include requirements for clinical pharmacology trials and therapeutic trials has been submitted to the Department of Justice for review.

3. Drafts of guides outlining the general requirements for new drugs as well as guides for the preparation of submissions for the various trials have been prepared and will be sent to the pharmaceutical industry for comments and suggestions.

4. A draft of separate veterinary drug regulations have been prepared.

Again, the action outlined above, meets in large measure the recommendations of the Boyd Committee.

Hon. members may also recall that the special committee of the House of Commons on Drug Costs and Prices (Harley committee) in its final report recommended "that the Food and Drug Directorate publish not less than once a month an informative bulletin to the medical procession giving complete details on drugs and their actions and reviewing major drug uses in Canada". The Food and Drug Directorate has now been provided with the necessary resources to carry out this project and the initial steps have already been taken to implement this proposal. I believe that this publication will be of considerable value to physicians, pharmacists and dentists as a source of factual information on drugs available on the Canadian market. Therefore I was surprised to learn recently in a letter from the Pharmaceutical Manufacturer's Association of Canada this organization "entertain the gravest doubts as to the feasibility of such a report"—that is the bulletin recommended by the Harley Committee. This concern seemed completely out of harmony with a statement contained in a brochure entitled "Prescription Drug Industry Facts", published by the P.M.A.C. in September, 1968. The statement reads in part as follows:

> "Pharmaceutical companies must ensure that every physician and pharmacist across Canada is kept fully informed about their products. This continuous medical information and marketing service, covering a scattered population over a vast area and conducted in two languages, is an essential operating cost accounting for approximately 11 cents of the prescription dollar".

In this same publication the average cost of a prescription was given as $3.46, and therefore the promotional cost amount to 38 cents per average prescription. The P.M.A.C. is apparently saying it is essential—and worth 38 cents added cost per prescription to the public—that they keep physicians and pharmacists fully informed of their products, but that it is not a good idea to provide these same physicians and pharmacists with factual data obtained in the laboratories of the Food and Drug Directorate on these same products. I think physicians, pharmacists and dentists will be interested in such information as well as in comparative costs of drug products. Certainly the Harley Committee, which consisted of members of this house, felt it would be a good idea, and the Department plans to implement this recommendation to the fullest possible extent.

I have taken a considerable amount of your time to explain in detail the steps taken by my department to ensure the quality and safety of drugs imported into Canada. The legislation before you today—Bill C-102—should have a significant impact in reducing drug costs in Canada, without jeopardizing in any way the quality of the drugs offered to the public. Our responsibility to the people of Canada in ensuring its prompt passage into law is clear.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments on this complex bill. They will be general because the bill is going to committee where it can be carefully analyzed. Certain necessary changes have been made to the bill since it last came before the house. The question arises whether the measure goes as far as it should in guaranteeing the safety and efficacy required to protect the Canadian people. I should like to put on the record what was said in an article which I picked up in a United States hospital this year. It is a very interesting article and is extremely apropos of what we are speaking about today. It reads as follows:

> The entire science of pharmacy and biopharmaceutics is based on the well-documented scientific fact that even minor changes in the formulation or an inadequate or an inconsistent formulation of a drug product can and do have profound effects on the clinical response to that product.

• (12:30 p.m.)

> To assume that drug products with the same active ingredient will always produce an equivalent clinical result is a scientifically unsupportable premise that has been repudiated by factual data and experience. No informed pharmacologist would deny that a variation in the formulation of a drug product, even though the active ingredient remained the same, could and often does produce a different biological and clinical effect. Since no two drug products have the identical formulation, varying clinical response can be expected. The very fact of standards and batch testing attest to this phenomenon, but even these are not sufficient. No official standards exist today that provide a biological performance test by which one can conclude that a particular drug product will perform as it is supposed to in the human.

I think this illustrates and points up the very difficult problem with which we are dealing here.

Now I would like to put on the record a report from the Canadian Medical Association Journal of July 27, 1968. It is interesting because of the fact that this bill is being brought in to lower drug prices. It reads:

> Drug prices for both prescribed and over the counter preparations showed a decrease of 4.1 per cent during 1967, compared with a slight increase over the past ten years, averaging 0.7 per cent per year. This decline in drug prices occurred shortly after the 11 per cent federal sales tax on drugs was removed. Not all items registered decreases: antiseptics were up 3 per cent in contrast to decreases of 5.1, 4.8 and 4.7 per cent in vitamins, prescriptions and laxatives.
> Yearly price changes for the range of drugs included in the index have fluctuated and show no definite trend, but changes have been moderate. It must, however, be kept in mind that the effects of the price levels of newly introduced drugs are excluded from these measurements.

Here we are dealing with another problem which I would like to bring up because Bill C-102 may be said to be basically an attempt to reduce certain retail prices in Canadian stores through competition injected by cheaper foreign products. It seems to me questionable whether this is an objective which parliament should encourage. Since Canadian wages are among the highest in the world and since unit costs are also high, it follows that our cost of living could be reduced across the board by fostering the importation of cheaper foreign products of all types. I wonder whether the Canadian people want that. It is questionable whether such a step would be approved by Canadians generally. I wonder what the automotive workers of Oshawa, the textile workers in Montreal, the fruit growers in British Columbia and the dairy producers in Ontario and Quebec would say about this. This is something that we must think about. We must think of the economy in which we operate, of the sacrifices we are making and of what we are doing.

However, I believe there is a much more important aspect to the possible wider importation of foreign pharmaceuticals. I refer to the health of the users. We in Canada are accustomed to a very high quality in our drugs, manufactured under approved and inspected conditions by highly qualified Canadian pharmacists. I want to say here that in my opinion the Food and Drug Directorate, with the facilities it has at hand, has done an excellent job. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) would like to substitute for these drugs—I think this is his point—drugs of lower cost manufactured in other countries. But we require the assurance of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) that the officials of his department have the facilities to ensure that such imports will be satisfactory in every way. Nothing less will do.

I am glad the minister referred to that because I made a few notes of what the preceding speaker said. I understood him to say that for the direct determination of therapeutic equivalency the ideal method would be to compare two or more drug products containing the same amount of active ingredients in the same dosage form, by measuring their capabilities to alleviate the symptoms or to control a specific disease in human patients. Except perhaps in rare circumstances, such a comparison is neither practical nor necessary. It would be extremely costly and very time consuming even if the required personnel and facilities could be found for such investigations. I think that deals with that point. I think there is no justification for spending the taxpayers' money in this careless manner. Why should the importer not pay for it?

Now I would like to deal with another point regarding a doubt which was expressed by officials within the department. The Canadian drug advisory committee of the Department of National Health and Welfare passed a unanimous resolution last fall expressing concern as to the ability of the Food and Drug Directorate to safeguard adequately the quality of drugs under Bill C-102.

Next I would like to say a few words about patents. There is no positive mechanism to date for the revocation of an in-force licence in the interest of public safety or to prevent abuse. For example, in July of last year over 2,500 bottles of an impure health salt had to be removed from the Canadian market. The manufacturer discovered this impurty and he felt it was his moral duty to report it. It was not the Food and Drut directorate that discovered it. Neither did they discover the counterfeit drugs that were sold in the city of Montreal. Let us be careful. But what about patent drugs arriving from some foreign country on which no one has the responsibility to report? I do not believe the Food and Drug Directorate has the staff to police this and I do not think they should be expected to do it. I feel that it does a good job, and I have said this before.

In introducing bill C-102 the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs made certain statements. He claimed that the proposed government action on drug patents will break a monopoly and reduce drug prices. He knows better than that. This statement is not according to fact. Many patents have been broken by compulsory licensing in the last ten years, and he knows this as well as I do. Many Canadian manufacturers are operating under compulsory licences.

The minister said that the new legislation, if passed, will increase competition. Later he said that competition is present now. As a matter of fact, the bill may well destroy this competition by destroying the source of Canadian chemicals. The minister knows as well as I do that most of our chemicals are bought in Europe or Asia. Pharmacists buy those chemicals and have their contracts there. If foreign companies are going to manufacture more drugs they will require more of those chemicals. There is a danger there.

The minister also spoke about reducing drug prices, and then stated there was competition now. He mentioned that the owner of a drug patent has a 17-year hold on a drug, but then he admitted that a compulsory licence can be granted at any time if the applicant qualifies. Although the minister is a nice guy, it is not quite cricket to play the game this way.

The minister also mentioned that the industry would give a loan to Canadian companies and he added: "But they will have to compete with imported drugs". What will this cost the taxpayer? How many more millions of dollars will have to go into this? Will the United States subsidiaries qualify for this loan? I would like to have an answer from the minister because under the automotive trade pact they did. Will the drug firms be treated in the same way if they establish their factories in incentive areas?

The minister stated that this bill was necessary because of the high cost of drugs. When the discussion was started some years ago this was true in that there was not as much competition in the open market as there is today. I want to draw attention to the fact that the minister's figures, the ones he used to substantiate this statement, are not correct today. They are not in accordance with the facts. He probably picked them up somewhere—I don't know where—but they are a few years old. The table which appears in Hansard at pages 1512 and 1513 on October 17, 1968 is very misleading. In the first place, no dosage is given; there is no indication of the strength of the drug. I do not think it is fair to make use of a table of that kind. Then again, no generic equivalent of the drug is given. I might say there are many Canadian firms which have begun to manufacture generic drugs which bear a brand name—and I can give details if I am asked to do so. They are manufacturing these drugs. They have made their own stamps and put them on.

Here is another paradox. The minister said the purpose of Bill C-102 was to reduce the price of drugs. Then he carefully indicated that he had no control over the doctors who write the prescriptions to be filled at retail level. I wonder what is behind this. Is it an indication that the government intends to take over and control the whole practice of medicine? Will the next step be to tell the doctor that he must prescribe a certain drug whether or not he believes it to be suitable? Is this what lies behind the minister's statement?

It might be wise to look at the question of patents. Here is another interesting aspect. I have checked the percentage of patents which are foreign owned because this is a good indication of the amount of research which is being done in each country. In the United States only 16 per cent of the patents operating in that country are not owned by that country. In Japan, only 34 per cent of the operating patents are not Japanese owned. In Germany the figure is 37 per cent, in the United Kingdom it is 47 per cent, and in Australia, a country quite comparable to our own it is 63 per cent.

What about Canada? Ninety-five per cent of the patents operated in Canada are foreign owned. We ourselves only own 5 per cent of our patent arrangements. If this is not the biggest mark against us for backwardness in research, I do not know what is. It is a sad reflection on research in Canada and it emphasizes the need for greater activity in this field, in short, for less reliance on research done by other people.

Turning to another point, again I find the minister's statement somewhat confusing, to say the least. Of the nine products listed in Hansard on October 17 I find that four are no longer covered by patent protection. Yet the minister puts forward this list in support of his argument on patents. The drugs listed do not necessarily sell today at the prices given in the list. Three of the patents will have expired by 1972, and only two of the products have significant remaining protection.

I want to take a closer look at this question. One of the arguments advanced in favour of this bill is that the patent laws as they now exist bring about increased prices. Italy has no patent laws. Consider the case of achromycin, one of the drugs listed on page 1512. In Rome, where there are no patent laws, achromycin sells for $19.50. In Canada, the price is $13.56. What effect do patents have there, I should like to ask the minister? Take the sulfa drug gantrisin. In Rome, the price is $3.75, in Berne, it is $4.34, and in Canada the price is $3.64. You know, Mr. Speaker, there are two sides to every story and in this case the minister did not ride the two horses. He gave us one side but he did not give us the other.

Next I wish to look at the position of the drug enovid. In Rome, the price quoted is $19.20. Here in Canada it is $10.50. What about that? Next we come to butazolidin or phenylbutazone. Here is an interesting thing. According to the list the price in Canada is $5.57. Mr. Speaker, I could go into a drug store in Toronto and purchase the same drug for $2.15. I see the hon. member for Spadina is in the chamber, and he can confirm the truth of what I am saying.

Here in this list is premarin. The price in Rome is quoted at $9.85. Here in Canada it is $5.84. I could go on giving examples like these but I believe I have already said enough to show that the existence of patents does not always lead to higher prices.

I wish to refer now to the proposal for the enforced licensing of imports. Let me say this: a company obtaining a licence will likely choose the drugs for which there is the largest sale and upon which there is the biggest profit. This is a law of economics. It will leave to someone else the import of other products on which the profit is small and for which there is only a small demand. I wonder whether it is in this latter respect that the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) wants a Crown corporation to operate.

Manufacturers will buy the necessary materials from the cheapest source and will always seek to sell in the most lucrative market. This always works to the advantage of the copiers of those drugs which have the biggest market, but it leaves the work of discovery and development for somebody else to carry on and finance. This being so, a good many years are needed before expenditures on the original investment in research are recovered.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North told us that millions have been made on two drugs in particular; he referred to chloromycetin and aureomycin specifically. I happen to know something about chloromycetin. In fact, the losses suffered in connection with this drug were terrific because it was recalled from the market. For a number of years it was not sold at all except under certain strict regulations. Millions were lost over the production of that drug. It has been made up since—

An hon. Member: How much had been made before it was withdrawn?

Mr. Rynard: They did not make anywhere near enough to cover their original investment. If memory serves me right, I had a chance to look into this one time when I was in Detroit.

I should like to point out that the cost of pharmaceutical research in Canada amounts to about $18 million. More than 10,000 people are engaged in it, about 2,500 of whom are university graduates. This is another aspect which I believe should be kept in mind. We should also remember that under the strict controls now applied in the United States and likely Canada 6 per cent of the drugs now in use will be rated ineffective within a short period and no less than two-thirds now require revision of the claims made for them. This is according to a statement by the National Academy of Science of the United States.

The minister is opening the border to imports. How many millions will it cost to police the clinical safety of the products imported? How much would it cost to arrange for the inspection of the factories in which the products are made? How many more people will it be necessary to add to the existing staff? If these products are to be admitted, the department will have to police them. Can this work be properly done at any price? And if it can be done, is the price likely to be too high?

What would it cost to follow the Harley commission report findings and inspect factories where these goods are manufactured? Of what value would it be if notice of the visit is sent beforehand? Is there enough trained personnel to do this job if such drugs are coming into the country, and will we have to pay too great a price? Perhaps we might be saddling the taxpayer with a greater burden than any advantage he might derive. Even the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) had some doubts in this regard.

I have less confidence in this bill than I have in the Minister of Finance who said that he would balance the budget or he would put on his hat and walk out. He did not walk out but he certainly left the Canadian people holding the bag as a result of a mistake involving over $600 million. I do not want to be unkind, but we have done some things here that have been wrong and made some mistakes which have been pretty costly to the Canadian taxpayers. As I say, at the moment I have no confidence in this bill. I think it is window-dressing, and like a lot of other things that the government does it is misleading. Again the Canadian people will be left to pay the piper.

I believe that every member of this house wants to see the cost of drugs lowered. I am sure that statement is correct and I give everybody credit for their views. But we also have to protect the Canadian people. We have to be sure that foreign drugs are up to quality and, second, that they are clinically efficacious for the diseases for which they are used. No Canadian should lose his life just because some drug does not measure up to the standard the doctor expects of it.

The hon. member who preceded me, if I understood the interpretation of his remarks correctly, referred to the fact that tests can determine what are the blood levels of a given drug. I agree that can be done, but I would like to ask him what this would cost.

Counterfeit drugs have been sold in Canada, and it was not the food and drug directorate that discovered the sales. It is my contention that the food and drug directorate does not have the personnel to do the job of protecting the Canadian people and affording the protection that this bill promises to give. If such protection should be provided, would its cost be much higher than any saving that might be achieved through lower drug prices?

I now come to my final conclusion in this matter. A survey was conducted in the province of Saskatchewan which showed that 50 per cent of the people over the period of one year had bought prescription drugs. It is estimated that roughly 25 per cent of the people of Canada find it difficult to pay for prescription drugs. Who are these people? They are the chronically ill, the unfortunates, the elderly, people who are sick, people on mothers' allowances, people on meagre pensions that inflation has eaten away.

I suggest to the government that if they really want to do something they should assist the people crying out for help to whom I have just referred. For example, the other day I visited a house where a man is keeping himself alive by drugs that cost him over $30 a month. He is receiving $107.50 a month and out of this also has to pay for his food and shelter. I suggest that the government should introduce a bill to provide for payment of the greater part of the cost of prescription drugs for people in this situation. Such action would bring some comfort and satisfaction to the hearts of those who today are beset with financial troubles and find life very difficult. Some are unable to buy drugs and as a result become ill and have to go to hospital, and hospitalization costs between $40 and $50 a bed a day, depending on where the bed is in Canada. Therefore, if the minister wants to show the people across Canada that he really wants to do something for them, let him do something for the 25 per cent of the population who find difficulty in obtaining the drugs that they need to live.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to call it one o'clock since it is so near the hour?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Just before lunch, Mr. Speaker, I was listening to the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard), the chief spokesman, I believe, of the Conservative party, and I was very disappointed with what he said. From his remarks I found it difficult to determine exactly what the position of the Conservative party is on this bill in general and about the high cost of drugs in particular. I felt there were many contradictions in his speech and I will deal with some of them later. When the hon. member dealt with the table the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) presented to the house on October 17, 1968, he indicated that the table could be misleading since it did not specify the strengths of the drugs listed, the implication of the hon. member's remarks being that this was unfair.

May I point out that the table introduced by the minister, which may be found on pages 1512 and 1513 of Hansard, was based entirely on the table forming appendix (f) to the report of the Harley committee. It is set up in the same way and the strengths of various drugs are set out in the appendix. Moreover, I understand the hon. member was a member of the Harley committee, supported its report and supported the form which this particular table took. The difference between the two tables, that is, between the table forming appendix (f) to the Harley report and the one presented by the minister on October 17, lies in the fact that the table presented by the minister has brought up to date the prices of drugs to retailers in Canada and in other countries that are listed. May I also point out that this table was used by the minister who introduced a similar bill last year. That table, in the form in which it appears on pages 1512 and 1513, has been used on three occasions. If anyone is being unfair and misleading in this matter I suggest it is the hon. member for Simcoe North. As a matter of fact, on page 1512 of Hansard the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs clearly states that the table he is presenting is based on the table that was produced by the Harley committee.

The hon. member's remarks contain many red herrings and contradictions. At one stage he said, "We, in the Conservative party, would like to see drug prices come down." Other hon. members of his party applauded him. Later in his speech he said, "After all, generally speaking, most Canadians have a high standard of living and can afford to pay for drugs. It is only those people whose incomes are fixed or at the low end of the scale who cannot afford to pay for drugs." After hearing the hon. member's remarks one could not tell whether the Conservative party felt drug prices were too high. The party's position, to judge from the hon. member's remarks, is not clear.

At another stage he criticized the government for spending money on certain medical and drug programs and said the government was spending too much money. Later in his address he suggested that we subsidize drug prices for certain people. Again it was very difficult to know what was the policy of the Conservative party with respect to drug prices. They offered no alternative policy and I doubt that they have one.

In discussing this bill there are several points that must be emphasized and I would like to deal with a few of them. The first point which is most important is that drug prices in Canada are too high compared with drug prices throughout the world and with other consumer prices in Canada. The allegation that drug prices in Canada are too high is supported by three very thorough studies. This has been placed on the record previously. This conclusion was reached by the combines branch, by the Hall Royal Commission on medical and health services, and by the parliamentary committee on drug prices which sat for more than a year and received evidence from all parts of the country. All three of these reports said drug prices in Canada were too high and away out of line.

Certain examples can be given. One is with respect to a drug called prodnisone, which is a cortisone preparation that is sold to retail pharmacists at $17 for 100 units, whereas the same drug is sold to hospitals at $1.95 for 100 units. Many other examples like this have been put on the record and I do not think there are many people who will contest the allegation that drug prices in Canada are too high.

As I say, three studies have backed up this allegation. The Harley parliamentary committee stated that drug prices in Canada range from two and a half to eight times higher than the corresponding lowest prices elsewhere, and the table which was filed by that committee, by the former registrar general and by the present minister indicates that generally speaking there is a great difference between drug prices in Canada and drug prices abroad.

Another factor which indicates that drug prices are too high is the rate of return on invested capital received by drug companies in Canada. It was shown that in the last 12 years drug companies made a 20 per cent return on invested capital compared with an average 10 per cent return by other manufacturing industries in Canada. There is quite a spread from 10 per cent to 20 per cent, and we all know that there are many manufacturing concerns in Canada which make an even smaller rate of return than the average 10 per cent.

Why are drugs prices so high in Canada? Some of the drug companies have suggested that the reason is that they have had to do a lot of research and development, and that if we want to have a progressive drug industry, new discoveries and so forth, we will have to pay for it. Again, Mr. Speaker, when we look at the evidence given in the different reports we find that this just is not so. It has been found that 30 per cent of the sales dollar received by drug companies goes into sales promotion and only 7 per cent into research work. There is not really that much being spent on research in Canada compared with what is spent on sales promotion. Sales promotion takes up four times as much as research by drug companies.

The various studies to which I have referred said that the reason for high drug prices was, first, sales and promotion costs and, second, a market situation in which the drug companies were highly protected. One of the reasons they are highly protected is due to the protection given by the Patent Act. Patents are meant to encourage development and research but in fact they have led only to a high price structure for drugs sold to the Canadian public.

It may be asked, why is it important that we do something about high drug prices? The hon. member who preceded me suggested that the great majority of Canadians could afford these drug prices and that therefore possibly we should not stimulate competition and try to bring the prices down. But we must remember the very nature of the product involved. Drugs are designed for use by people who are sick.

When people are sick many of them have to meet high medical and other costs. Sometimes they lose their work owing to chronic illness. As a result their income goes down and their expenditure goes up. They spend a considerable amount to purchase the drugs they need. In addition, the older group in our society needs drugs much more often than other groups. There are many retired people in this group on pensions, on fixed incomes. As they get older they become ill more often and have a greater need of drugs. They find it hard to pay the high prices which drug companies and retailers are asking. Therefore there is a great necessity that we do something about these high prices.

The hon. member for Simcoe North said he did not know whether the Canadian people would accept this type of program that is designed to stimulate competition from abroad. He asked what the Canadian people would do if the same type of program were applied with respect to automobiles, textiles and several other products. To begin with, Mr. Speaker, the drug industry is necessary for people who are sick. Its product is a more essential one than the other products to which the hon. member referred. Second, the prices of these other consumer products are not as far out of line as are the prices of drugs in Canada.

This bill is not meant to be a single program to combat the high price of drugs. Originally it was placed before us along with four other measures. The former minister and the present minister said they did not expect any one of these measures alone would be able to bring down the price of drugs, but that acting in concert it was hoped they would. This was the recommendation made by the Harley committee and by other studies.

We certainly do not expect miracles from this one measure, but we think it will have a big effect along with other measures to which I refer. The others are the elimination of the sales tax on drugs, the reduction of the customs duty, and the program designed to have the Food and Drug Directorate keep Canadian doctors informed of the different drugs on the market and comparative prices so that doctors can prescribe a wider range of drugs, especially drugs of equal quality selling at a lower price.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, is not a radical one. As a matter of fact some lawyers feel that the things it proposes to do could be done under the present law. The present law allows for compulsory licences on patents for drugs, but the director of patents has felt he could only grant such a compulsory licence for manufacture but not for import. As I said, many lawyers have disagreed with this. They felt the present law would allow compulsory licences for imported products.

The bill before the house, however, will make this point very clear. It will make very clear that the director of patents will be able to grant a compulsory licence for the importation of drugs. The whole purpose of the bill is that it is felt that by bringing in competition from outside the country we will force down drug prices through competitive measures. We know that drugs in other countries are sold at a much lower price than in Canada. The price often is one-third or one-quarter of what it is in this country. It is felt that if individuals or companies can import these drugs this will force the companies which make and sell drugs within this country to bring down their prices and that there will be a downward pressure on drug prices.

This measure is not very radical. Furthermore, when the Ilsley commission reported on patents it said that they should not be used as a tariff barrier to trade. Right now this is what is taking place. In many cases patents are being used as a tariff barrier to trade. If we look at the experience in other countries such as the United Kingdom and the United States, where there are similar procedures in respect of the importation of drugs which are under patent, we will see that the drug companies have not gone out of business. They did not stop doing research; they did not suffer very much.

I should like to refer to another point which has been raised by the official opposition, that is, the question of safety. The first speaker for the official opposition last night dealt primarily with the question of safety. I am referring to the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk). He said that he would like to see lower drug prices but not if this meant unsafe drugs. This morning the hon. member for Simcoe North returned to that argument. He said that if this bill is passed we run the risk of having unsafe drugs.

I think it should be made very clear that the Patent Act and changes to it have no effect whatsoever on whether or not drugs are safe. The question of the safety of drugs in this country is determined by the Food and Drug Directorate. Whether or not this bill had been introduced we would want to see a food and drug directorate which would protect us against unsafe drugs. We would want to do everything possible to strengthen the Food and Drug Directorate. I and many other members of this house maintain that the question of safety lies with the Department of National Health and Welfare and the efficiency of the Food and Drug Directorate. It is their business to test new drugs which come into this country. We have been assured they would do this job well. This morning the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare again gave us this assurance which has been given on many occasions.

It has been pointed out that the policing of drugs and faulty drugs is not always done in respect of imported drugs. I believe it was pointed out last night by one member that very often the drugs which have been found to be faulty are drugs that have been produced by some of the major companies in Canada which have been producing drugs for a long time. So the policing of the drug industry will be carried out by the Food and Drug Directorate and will be done in respect of drugs produced in Canada and those imported under compulsory licences. But this has nothing to do with the Patent Act or changes to the Patent Act. I believe everyone agrees that everything must be done to protect the safety of the general public in respect of drugs. That will be done.

Objection to this bill has been expressed by those who say that if it becomes law it will affect research which is being carried on by the drug companies in Canada. They say that right now certain research is being carried on and that this bill could have the effect of cutting back on research programs and that much of this work will not be done in the future. Again I have not been convinced by that argument. I must say I listened to the many people who came to my office. Some of them are scientists working for drug companies and friends of mine. I have them sympathetic hearings. I invited their arguments in writing. Whenever I was approached by the officials of a drug company in Montreal I was asked if I would listen to their side of the story. I did so and told them that if they could convince me they were right I would change my opinion. But the more I listened to them the more I became convinced they were wrong. I do not think this bill will in any way discourage those who are carrying on research in Canada.

When research is done by a drug company it is not done in respect of a drug which is to be used just in one country. It is done in respect of a new drug or product which will be sold throughout the world wherever it is needed. If a subsidiary of a particular drug company decides to do certain research work in Canada the reason they do it here has nothing to do with the patent laws of the country. If a new drug is discovered that drug will not be sold only in the country in which the research is done. It will be sold throughout the world.

In addition the bill provides that certain royalties will be paid to the holder of a patent when a compulsory licence is given. These are royalties which would be fair in an attempt to repay the developer of the product for the research that has been done. Furthermore, under the regulations of the Food and Drug Directorate new drugs are given a five-year period in which to operate without competition. In that five-year period there is an opportunity to establish a market and recoup the cost involved in the development of the product.

Therefore I really do not see how these companies will suffer too much with regard to research programs. Even if they were to suffer a certain amount, it would appear from their high rate of return, an average of 20 per cent on invested capital compared with an average of 10 per cent in other industries, that they could stand a little cutback in that area, although I do not think they will suffer that much.

A few other arguments were made this morning. The hon. member for Simcoe North stated that even though a compulsory licence is given in respect of import drugs the federal government has not indicated any program to make sure that the cheaper import drug will reach the consumer. He asked whether the government intended to control doctors when they write prescriptions. Of course this was a red herring. The government does not intend to force doctors to write particular prescriptions. The government made an announcement in this regard and the hon. member should have been aware of this. It announced that it intends to inform doctors on a regular basis, through the Food and Drug Directorate, about all the drugs that are on the market and their comparative prices so that when a doctor writes a prescription he will have information in respect of certain drugs which he might not otherwise have. He will know whether a particular drug is as good as the one he usually prescribes, whether it sells at a lower price, and he will know when he is prescribing it for an individual who is not too well off that it will do just as good a job as a very expensive one.

In asking that question this morning I thought the hon. member for Simcoe North was being very unfair. He said that 95 per cent of Canadian drug patents were owned by non-Canadians and that this indicated a lack of research in Canada. He suggested that through this bill we would discourage research to a greater extent. If 95 per cent of Canadian drug patents are now owned by non-Canadians, this situation must have developed during the time the present patent law has been in force. This does not provide a licence for importing. If the present law was that favourable to research we would have in Canada a much higher percentage than 5 per cent Canadian ownership of Canadian patents. The fact is that this 95 per cent foreign control occurred under the present law. If we are going to have a greater amount of research in Canada in the drug industry we cannot expect it to occur under the law as it now stands. This will have to take place as a result of government assistance to research in the drug and medical fields.

In conclusion let me say that we should be very clear that the people of Canada are faced now with extremely high drug prices. This has been confirmed by several studies. Very often the people in this country using these drugs are those least capable of paying or prepared to pay the prices. These are elderly people, sick people, the chronically ill and those without work. For that reason this bill should be passed as quickly as possible. It represents an attempt in conjunction with other measures the government is putting forward to correct this situation, and there is strong evidence that it will.

I am a member of parliament from the west end of Montreal and I know that some of my colleagues from that area are not as enthusiastic about this bill as I am. As a matter of fact, in the west end of Montreal there are many drug companies and many pharmaceutical houses. They have tried to convince us that this is not a good bill. I listened to them but they did not convince me. The drug companies in Montreal are doing very well as are drug companies generally in Canada. They will continue to do reasonably well. The major benefit resulting from the passage of this measure will go to the consumers in the west end of Montreal and in other parts of Canada. We will have a much more equitable and just price structure in the drug industry, and I think this should be achieved as soon as possible.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, before getting into the details of this bill I should like to make it perfectly clear that I have no quarrel with its purpose. The people of Canada would be happy with lower prices for all commodities, including drugs, and this is a worth-while end to strive toward. From a humanitarian point of view it is very worthwhile to strive for lower prices in the drug field.

This bill should be examined in light of three or four aspects. Is this measure going to reduce the cost of drugs? This measure will be referred to a committee at which time we will have an opportunity to examine many factors which cannot be properly examined at this time. We must ask ourselves whether this measure will lower drug prices and what will be its probable effect. No real study has been made in this regard.

Will this measure allow a high level of control in respect of drugs? I have in mind value, purity, strength and clinical efficiency. What effect will this bill have on the drug industry as a whole and will the effect be immediate? What do we as a nation want to do in respect of the drug industry? Do we want a drug industry at all? I am sure we all agree that we do, but what level should it attain here? The drug industry is largely international. What effect will this bill have on the introduction of new drugs developed in the future? Will it help or hinder the distribution of these drugs for the benefit of the health of Canadians?

I should like to make one or two comments about other matters dealt with by the minister. Much has been said about this measure in respect of reducing drug costs. Several factors make me wonder whether it will actually reduce the cost to the consumer. The cost to the consumer is comprised of the manufacturing cost, the distribution cost and the prescription cost at the local drug store. The average cost of a prescription in 1966 was $3.50 to $3.75. It was found as a result of a joint survey carried out by the Saskatchewan Department of Public Health and the Saskatchewan Pharmaceutical Association that the average cost for one month's prescriptions in a small town in Saskatchewan was $3.71. A breakdown of this amount indicates that approximately 51 per cent was retained by the local pharmacist to carry on his business.

Before deciding that local pharmacists are overcharging we must remember that many of them are going out of business. The profession is not attracting many people, and the corner drugstores are disappearing. Of this average cost, 35 cents to 40 cents was taken by the wholesaler who distributed the drug from the manufacturer to the retailer. This only left approximately $1.40 out of the original $3.50 to $3.75 the consumer paid to the drugstore. It seems unlikely, no matter how many drugs are introduced as imitations of existing drugs to drive down the cost of competition, that the consumer will benefit materially as a result of lower prices. It would appear that the best a patient could hope for is a reduction of 20 cents to 30 cents per prescription even with very fierce competition.

Factors in respect of this new pricing arrangement might work against the lowering of the price of drugs at the retail level. Local pharmacists would have to increase their volume of drugs. This would increase their stock. There would be more wastage as a result of more brands being left on the shelf. This would occur as a result of a greater variety. Whatever advantage there would be in the reduction of drug prices would likely be more than offset by the increased wastage at the local distribution level.

There are other factors which would prevent a marked reduction in the cost of drugs to the consumer. Brand-name drugs, as result of promotion, would gain a larger share of the market. The imitators, those selling the same drug under another name, would be scrambling for the balance of the market. It is not likely they would obtain more than 30 per cent to 40 per cent, and there would be very little profit. These people would likely sell under a brand name in order to make as much money as possible. After all, they are in business to make a profit.

In my estimation the cost of drugs will continue to increase. The factor that will cause an increase and which has had the most significant effect on the cost of drug prescriptions is the changing pattern of drug pricing at the retail level in the last few years. There has been practically no patient demand to reduce the cost of drugs. In other words, very few patients now say to their doctor, could you make this drug as cheap as possible as I have little money? This situation has been brought about by changes in retail pricing. I shall try to explain this, as I believe it is not of general knowledge.

Until approximately three years ago drugs were priced on a wholesale mark-up of approximately 100 per cent. A 75-cent prescription at the wholesale level for sleeping pills was being retailed for $1.50 and a $5 to $6 wholesale prescription for antibiotics was retailed at $10 to $12. A few years ago the pharmacists in conjunction with the industry—this was applauded by the government and all those in the health field—changed the pricing system. This was done by applying a dispensing fee to the wholesale cost of drugs. The fee varies in many parts of the country but in my province it amounts to about $1.90 at the moment, which I believe is about average. Nearly all sections of the country are slowly changing over to this method of prescribing. It has the advantage of reducing the cost of more expensive drugs to the patient in that a $5 wholesale price now becomes $7 but the cheap 75-cent prescription becomes $2.75.

This has caused an upgrading of cheaper prescription drugs and a downgrading of more expensive items. It has reduced the pressure on physicians to prescribe less expensive drugs and permitted them to prescribe drugs that are more expensive and which are in general considered to be a better product. There is now little point in not prescribing a more expensive drug. In addition, the practice has been growing of supplying drugs free to patients, but at government expense, in respect of those in the income group where the price of drugs is a significant factor. Five per cent of the people in my area are designated as indigent by the provincial government and under its medicare scheme they receive all forms of drug therapy free of charge. It is because of the chronically ill in this group that the most pressure exists for a physician to prescribe a cheap form of drug. This segment of the population has now been taken care of by means of government sponsored plans, and this has resulted in the pressure on doctors to prescribe cheaper drugs being not nearly so great. Indeed, doctors may be unfamliiar with the price of drugs, and therefore the relative cost of a prescription is of much less importance to them than is the case when the patient is himself paying for the drug.

If the cost of a prescription is only $3.75 to $4, the physician thinks that prescribing the more expensive brand of drug means a difference of only 25 cents. It is impossible for him to think of 14 brands of tetracycline and decide which one in a prescription will be, say, 30 cents cheaper than a more expensive drug that will cost about $5. I would also like to point out that the physician tends to prescribe brand name drugs because he knows them better and thinks they are the best. I am not saying that this is the fact, but it is generally the way the physician feels.

As an example, I noticed in a local drugstore about a dozen types of tranquillizer which might be given to a member of a family that had suffered a bereavement. One was a brand name tranquillizer costing a nickel each and another was not a brand name and cost only one cent each. This means that the brand name tranquillizer costs 60 cents a dozen and the non-brand name product only 12 cents, or one-fifth the price of the brand name drug. One was a good looking pill and the other was not, but they were both passed by the Food and Drug Directorate.

The second major factor of the bill is the effect it will have on the pharmaceutical industry of this country now and in the future. If it is our intention to dampen down the pharmaceutical industry and perhaps dispense with some of it, we should understand that this is the intention. Mr. D. H. W. Henry, when testifying before the Harley committee on February 7, 1967, stated that perhaps the first fundamental issue emerging in the committee's proceedings was whether a drug manufacturing industry ought to be preserved in Canada in its present form. To do so would require the continuation of the protective devices which the industry considers necessary to its viability but which deny Canadians access to less costly drugs. I question whether the change made in this respect will necessarily make less costly drugs available to Canadians. Therefore this is one of the points we have to consider.

I suggest to the minister that he should ask the finance, trade and economic affairs committee to recommend that some aspects of this question be referred to committee of the whole in order that we may decide whether the passing of the bill and the granting of compulsory licences thereunder will have a significant effect on the industry and, if so, is this what we want? I have an open mind about whether we should or should not make changes which would seriously affect the industry. There is no doubt that the provision relating to compulsory licensing will have an effect upon the sources of supply of these drugs. It is quite possible that some manufacturers will become distributors to a greater extent than is now the case. Manufacturing would then tend to concentrate on those products which Canadians can produce.

I would like to point out that there is one drug company which is perhaps considered small in this country but is large in the world. It is based in western Europe. The name product which it produces is a tranquillizer but it also produces a few other lines in small volume. It is almost certain that these small volume lines will be produced elsewhere than Canada. The company has been considering this question and may decide it can import from Mexico the drugs it needs. It has plants in 24 countries. Its Canadian plant produces the largest selling drug. It is not considered to be as good a drug as their own. I think it is of interest that the company produces a different quality drug in different parts of the world. Therefore they will wait and see what effect this bill will have on the industry.

The Canadian drug industry is made up largely of foreign companies based in the United States, Switzerland and Germany. This is the nature of the drug industry. It is a world wide industry which transcends borders, and its market is the whole world. It is in Canada a significant factor in our economy. Its exports run as high as $20 million. Its sales of packaged pharmaceuticals were $200 million in 1966. It employs 10,000 Canadians, of whom one-quarter are university graduates.

These large companies are for the most part subsidiaries of parent companies that are spread around the world. Whether we like it or not, these drug companies have brought us new drugs. Without the drug industry in the world as a whole many of our new drugs would not have been developed. Over 80 per cent of the new drugs that have been developed in the last 30 years have been developed by the industry. Penicillin is a classic example. It was known for many years, but it took the drug industry to process it to the stage where it could be prescribed as widely and as cheaply as it is now.

The question of safety is extremely important in connection with this measure. The parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare referred to a long, complicated, detailed and technical study in respect of measures taken in an attempt to preserve the high level of safety sought in conection with drugs on the Canadian market. The thread running through the whole question of safety is that the Canadian Food and Drug Directorate will rely largely on their counterparts in various parts of the world when making decisions in respect of the safety of drugs. Hungary was disclosed as the country which produces the cheapest drugs. Italy, Japan and Hong Kong are areas in which a great many drugs are produced. In many countries drugs are not that highly developed and their safety leaves something to be desired. I think this is particularly so in respect of Hungary; and for many years the Italian drug industry was notoriously poor in that some manufacturers produced poor quality drugs. Therefore the Food and Drug Directorate is faced with a tremendous task in attempting to police drugs which are really only being touched on now.

If I understood properly the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, he said that the Food and Drug Directorate will still rely largely upon generic equivalents in deciding whether a drug is as good as its makers claim. This, of course is a bone of contention. He also stated that it would be practically impossible to prove the clinical efficiency of drugs by blood levels and all the other means by which scientists ascertain whether a good drug is being marketed. There is nothing better than the good name of a company when it comes to deciding the quality of a drug.

The thread running through the whole question of drug safety is whether a clinical generic is the equivalent of the brand name drug. Those who argue that the generic equivalent is the same are generally people concerned with research in universities or the Food and Drug Directorate who do not deal with patients directly. Those who feel that there is a difference between generic name and brand name drugs are mostly those who deal directly with patients. It is interesting to note that the Russian drug industry, which cannot be accused of being profit-minded, gives brand names to the same drugs coming out of different factories. Apparently they believe that some factories make better drugs than others although supposedly they are all the same. It will be interesting to see in the committee whether it can be ascertained how effective these safety measures will be.

Patent Act—Trade Marks Act

I think the matter of the introduction of new drugs in this country in the future should concern us. I understand that the Food and Drug Directorate will now require a five-year guarantee that the producer will be the sole maker and seller of a new drug in Canada. I welcome this because I believe it will foster the introduction of new drugs into the Canadian market as it will give the producer of new drugs at least five years during which time he will be able to exploit the market if he is successful and to ensure he will not have a competitor. I would like to point out that without this measure there will be little desire on the part of new drug manufacturers to introduce drugs in any great quantities if they feel there is a possibility these drugs could be picked up by their competitors as soon as they became popular and are promoted and established.

There is one area concerning which I would like to say a few words, and on this the success or failure of this bill will rest so far as its application is concerned. This legislation will put the drug industry almost wholly in the hands of the director of the Food and Drug Directorate. He will be the one who will determine whether or not new drugs and new licences will be issued. This is an enormous responsibility. It may well raise the question of delegated legislation because the number and brands of drugs that are to be introduced into this country will depend on whether or not the director grants import licences. The second person on whom much depends is, of course, the physician. It is he who will decide whether or not to prescribe a cheaper drug.

We should consider the effect of drugs and we should keep some perspective. I know of a hospital whose capital cost amounts to $1,200,000 a year. Their drug bill amounts to $30,000. Even with the most rigid economizing it is unlikely that its drug bill could be reduced by more than $5,000 or $10,000. When one considers that in a hospital employing 200 or more people all the patients are receiving one form of drug or another and probably 60 per cent of them receive regulated drug therapy, one must retain a sense of perspective concerning the cost of drugs. We can have cheaper drugs if we wish to have fewer of them or if we wish to have less effective ones or a greater variety and variance in their quality.

The Food and Drug Directorate apparently feels that the circulation of pamphlets to doctors would be of considerable value. I would like to remind the minister that doctors have many circulars coming to their desks. It does not really seem to be very useful to add further circulars, particularly a drug price list. Most likely it will not be available when the physician wants it or could use it. So I think that this method of attempting to reduce drug costs is of doubtful value.

Finally, I would like to say that I am looking forward with particular interest to dealing with the clauses of the bill concerning the retention of efficiency in drug inspection when the bill reaches the committee.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, although this debate has just commenced the points made by a number of physicians in the house are emerging very clearly. It is fairly obvious that all of us are concerned about the high price of drugs and about the old, sick and weak in this country. But there seems to be some difference as to how the problem should be tackled. If I may be permitted to say so, the Conservative position may be summarized in this way. They say: "We are concerned about making drugs available to people who cannot afford them. Let us subsidize the industry, but for goodness sake let us not touch the companies nor affect their profits. They are sacrosanct. The government of this country must subsidize these companies, not bring the price down. That is wrong." This seems to be the Conservative position at the moment. I think they are men of good will who are concerned about those who are suffering in this country because they cannot afford the necessary drugs.

The Liberal position is similar, particularly the position taken by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand), who seems to have spent a good part of the time at his disposal soothing the drug companies and assuring them that their profits were not going to be affected very much by this legislation, that nothing terrible was going to happen to them, that nothing drastic was on the horizon, and that they did not have too much to worry about. I might say to the hon. member that he is one of the more courageous Liberals in the house. Here is a man who is willing to collide with the drug companies, which is more than can be said for some other hon. members in this chamber. We are all aware of the enormous influence that the drug companies have exercised on members of this house and members of the other place. I say this as a compliment to the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, but it is still an indication that even that courageous man had to get up and defend the profits of the drug companies of Canada and assure them that nothing drastic was going to happen to them as a result of this legislation.

We are going to support this legislation because we think that it brings a measure of improvement to the situation in that it will inject an element of competition which is much needed in the drug industry. Our position has been stated in the past. Hon. members may recall that our party was highly unpopular because of the position we took. The Liberals were scrambling to go to a convention and insisted that we stop talking about drugs. But we stayed here until we got an assurance from the government that this bill would come back. We are glad that we put pressure on the government at that time and that we received that assurance.

We are glad to see this legislation before us because there was a real danger that even this milquetoast piece of legislation would never see the light of day. I say this because it is an open secret that hon. members belonging to the Liberal party approached members on this side of the house asking them to fight for this legislation because they felt the same kind of fear. So, we are glad to see the bill before the house today, and glad it is to go to the committee.

Nevertheless, we also wish to say that the measure will not do the job which is needed and that the government should consider putting into effect the suggestion we made when the legislation was before the house earlier this session, namely, that a Crown corporation be established to market and, if necessary, to manufacture drugs for the benefit of the people of Canada.

I should like to believe that such a corporation will be established despite what may be indications that the government is not prepared to support a proposition of this kind today. So often in this house have we seen a pattern along these lines. I was interested to note that in reply to a question put to him during a television program on January 5 the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) indicated that he would be willing to consider the establishment of a Crown corporation if the merit of such a course could be demonstrated. I hope we may receive the same kind of reply, or perhaps even a stronger statement in favour of a Crown corporation, from the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford). In Canada, Crown corporations are an accepted instrument of national policy and development. Many Crown Corporations have been set up for different reasons at various times in our history. I suggest there is a compelling reason at this moment for introducing legislation to establish a Crown corporation in this particular field, namely, that the drug industry in this country is a national disgrace; it has miserably failed to meet the needs of the Canadian people.

The present situation is a clear example of the conflict between the goals of private companies and the public welfare. I am not saying that the gentlemen involved in the drug industry are bad people as individuals. As a matter of fact, I understand they are very nice. I hear they take great care of their children. Some of them like dogs. Some of them keep cats. They do not kick animals. They do not go around with gabby women. The integrity, as individuals, of those engaged in the drug industry is not the question before us. The point is that the aims of the industry as such are in conflict with the public need.

It often happens, I suppose, that people simply drop into a situation of this kind, and having done so there is little they can do about changing the pattern, even if they wanted to do so. Each company they compete with operates within the same terms of reference. The very character of the industry itself makes it hard for changes to be made. As we have heard, the industry spends something like 30 per cent of its gross income on advertizing and promotion. Any private company trying to compete would have to do the same thing. If a competitor sends out detail men, it would have to do the same. If a competitor gave away free samples, it would have to follow suit. If one made little presents at Christmas time, the other would be forced to do so.

An hon. Member: Or an election contribution.

Mr. Saltsman: If one gave an election contribution or placed an advertisement in a medical journal, the other would have to do the same. So they are all on a merry-go-round, and even though certain people within the industry might recognize the inefficiency of these arrangements they would be unable to do anything about it.

How does one get away from such a situation? Obviously the industry cannot reverse its own course, nor can it correct its errors. It is for this reason that urgency attaches to the setting up of a Crown corporation which would break through the present structure. If the situation is not corrected, if the Canadian people do not get the quality drugs to which they are entitled at the lowest possible prices, it is not the drug companies which are to be blamed. The United States corporations should not be blamed, the blame must rest directly with the government responsible for acting on the people's behalf.

Only the government carries such a responsibility. The private drug companies have a responsibility to their stockholders, and much as we may decry their higher than average profits, their terms of reference are to enlarge their profits and return as high a dividend as possible to their stockholders. But those are not the government's terms of reference. It is not the role of the government or of the opposition in parliament to worry about the profits of drug companies. It is their role to concern themselves with the welfare of the people of this country and to cease to be preoccupied with silly inhibitions as to the way in which the drug industry should be organized. The way in which the drug industry should be organized is the way which is best for the Canadian users of drugs, and I suggest the most useful thing to do in this connection would be to establish a Crown corporation.

Hon. gentlemen in the official opposition should not frown upon Crown corporations. If history is examined we see that most of the Crown corporations in this country were set up under the sponsorship of the Conservative party. I believe the Conservative party was responsible for the C.B.C.

I should like to quote the opinion of a former prime minister, Mr. R. B. Bennett, as expressed when introducing the bill to establish the C.B.C.

> No other scheme than that of public ownership can ensure to the people of this country, without regard to class or place, equal enjoyment of the benefit and pleasure of radio broadcasting.

I understand that only one member of the house rose at that time in objection to the bill. Rarely has there been so harmonious a debate. Granted, Mr. Speaker, this was before the book by Judy LaMarsh had appeared. Nevertheless, it is an indication of the way in which this house has been willing from time to time, when faced with a national imperative, to make use of the services of Crown corporations.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

We have used Crown corporations to assist the businessmen of this country. We have set up an Export Credits Insurance Corporation to help businessmen insure their goods against loss through non-payment by foreign buyers. I approve of this measure. I think it is one we all support. We have set up an Industrial Development Bank, which also assists businessmen, because it fulfills a purpose, based on a need. For the farmers, we have the Canadian Wheat Board which has done a great job for western growers. It has easily demonstrated its value. In wartime when we were unable to secure adequate supplies of rubber for the war effort we did not hesitate to establish a special corporation. This corporation has become internationally famous as the Polymer Corporation of Canada. It has become profitable and has returned large dividends to the Canadian public. All attempts to sell it to private concerns have failed because it has demonstrated its profitability and value to this country. We have established crown corporations for somewhat less worthy reasons, albeit for reasons that were sound. The Canadian National Railways Company was formed to bail out investors. Instead of letting the investors fall flat on their faces, the Canadian government came to their rescue and we have been paying for it ever since. However, the action was justified at the time because it was part of the nation building process.

• (3:10 p.m.)

All kinds of crown corporations have been established in this country, and for different reasons. Only yesterday we discussed a bill to set up a further crown corporation to be known as the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. Again this corporation is to be established for good reason: the marketing arrangements for our fishermen have been unfair and the new corporation is designed to correct the situation.

I think it would be instructive to quote the words of the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis), who spoke last night about the reasons for asking the house to set up this corporation. As reported at page 4397 of Hansard he said:

> The corporation proposed in this bill will do that. It will be doing it, I expect, in a more efficient manner than the slipshod, relatively primitive, and unorganized way which has characterized most of our freshwater fish operations.

I suggest we could characterize the drug industry in the same way by deleting the words "freshwater fish operations" and substituting "drug industry".

If we are willing to bail out investors, to establish crown corporations to assist businessmen, or farmers, or fish producers, then what is the inhibition about establishing a crown corporation to assist the people of Canada to buy drugs at the lowest possible price? Surely, there can be no argument against this if the government is willing to do it.

Perhaps the government will say, and I hope it does, that it is willing to set up a crown corporation in this industry if it can be indicated what the corporation's role will be, how it will operate, and how it will assist the Canadian consumer of drugs. To this end, I should like to make a number of points.

There is now considerable evidence that the drug industry requires some price competition. It can be demonstrated that there is a great deal of product competition; perhaps half a dozen different manufacturers make similar products. But I suggest this is really not true competition, particularly when so much of what the manufacturers call research goes into creating minor variations of drugs that can be labelled and identified as different one from the other. Rather than reducing prices, this kind of minor variation product competition increases prices. Too much of our energy and sales effort is expended in arguing the value of A over B, when both products are really much the same except that they are made by different companies. This is not the kind of competition that has any significance.

On top of that, Mr. Speaker, these companies have been colluding with each other. There are numerous examples of drug companies being brought before combines investigation boards because it is alleged they have conspired together internationally to artificially maintain prices. As time goes on this problem becomes more acute. As these companies become more and more internationalized and their roots spread, even free trade is no answer to the probem of lowering prices. With whom are these companies going to compete if they are making cartel agreements internationally? As I say, free trade offers no answer to this sort of thing.

I suggest that the only meaningful kind of competition that can take place in a situation of this type is that which comes from a crown corporation that will not play ball with the other companies; a corporation that is not internationalized and that is responsible to this parliament; one whose terms of reference are the service of people rather than the highest margin of profit. This can be the only significant kind of competition in light of what is happening internationally.

Drug prices, on many authoritative estimates, are at least 50 per cent greater than they need be. I listened with interest to the speech of the hon. member who preceded me. He talked about the hospital in his riding that spent only $30,000 on drugs; I think that was the figure. It did not seem a great deal in view of the total budget of the hospital. However, what he perhaps neglected to mention is that hospitals buy their drugs for a great deal less than the average consumer. Hospitals tend to buy their drugs in large lots, and usually in generic form. So, hospitals are in a different position.

One of the things that this bill will attempt to do, and I think it is a worthy attempt, is to inject some competition into the system by encouraging smaller manufacturers to compete with the giants. I hope the minister will recognize that simply making a few million dollars available to try to cope with a problem of this magnitude is not going to be enough. Not only that, the smaller companies already find it virtually impossible to compete with the giants except under very unusual circumstances.

I should like to indicate part of the nature of the problem with which the small drug manufacturer is faced by reading a portion of an article that appeared in the Globe and Mail of August 13, 1968. It is headed "Tiny Toronto drug operation Canada's biggest independent", and reads:

> For his own industry, he would like government recognition and promotion. Paul Maney's biggest problem is fighting the big companies' whisper campaigns in doctors' offices—

Then, the article quotes a Mr. Cook:

> "—We need the government to take an interest and endorse the companies who deserve endorsement."

• (3:20 p.m.)

Simply making money available to these companies is not going to solve that problem. That will not stop large drug manufacturers from frightening doctors with whispering campaigns. I do not suggest the doctor's position is not difficult, because it is. The doctor is responsible to his patient. Yet, when a fellow comes along the doctor has known for a long time, a fellow who gives him samples, who seems a decent sort, who does not kick animals and says, "Look, these little guys are dangerous," the doctor will listen to him.

After all, he does not know how long the smaller companies will stay in business. He has confidence in the man he has been dealing with and therefore continues to prescribe the drugs of the larger manufacturers despite the fact that equally effective and cheaper generic drugs are available.

A Crown corporation which would act as an independent marketing agent for some drug manufacturers would gain the public's confidence. The corporation need not be a manufacturer of drugs. Being a crown corporation, involved perhaps in the distribution and marketing of products in which the public could have confidence, it need not spend 30 per cent of the money it takes in pushing sales to doctors. A Crown corporation would have to act in a responsible way because, in the final analysis, it is answerable to the highest forum in this country, this house. The operations of such a corporation would mean that the smaller drug manufacturers could have their products marketed, with the public enjoying full confidence in the quality of those products. That would cut through the entire nonsense of present marketing techniques.

The operating costs of a Crown corporation would not be low because it would need to employ well paid, high calibre people. The great advantage to be gained from a Crown corporation, however, is that we could circumvent present spurious marketing techniques which undermine the public's credibility in drugs. People would have more confidence in drugs approved by the Crown corporation, and that is an important point to consider.

The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) demonstrated the fallacies in an argument raised by a previous speaker. He showed that 95 per cent of all drug patents do not originate in Canada. Any Canadian looking at the facts casually must be shocked. After years of having their own sweet way, the drug manufacturers have undertaken almost no research in this country.

An hon. Member: Parasites.

Mr. Saltsman: My colleague from the west uses strong language, but I think it describes the situation.

Mr. McCleave: You are thinking of insecticides.

Mr. Saltsman: The language is becoming very strong. Perhaps I better continue with my argument.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Tell it as it is.

Mr. Saltsman: I will tell it as it is. Obviously, the major drug manufacturers will not conduct any research in this country. Let's stop kidding ourselves that they will. They will not, despite all the incentives we give them. Most of our drug companies are owned by United States parents, and it makes no sense for them to do research here. Why should our drug companies undertake research here? I suggest that most of the significant Canadian research has been undertaken within government agencies. After all, our government agencies have no United States parents.

Since our Crown agencies have no United States parents they undertake original research work. In fact, such research work has been undertaken only in our universities, Crown corporations and research institutes. Therefore let us stop kidding ourselves that if we allow drug companies larger profit margins we will induce them to undertake research. The value of a Crown corporation such as I suggest ought to be set up lies in the fact that it will undertake research. The money we are spending in support of research—so far that money has brought negligible results—will bring results, and original research will be undertaken in this country.

Canadians search for fields in which they can excel. We have specialized in the production of raw materials, such as forestry products. Canadian grown wheat is greatly admired all over the world. I suggest that we could excel in the production and distribution of generic drugs, which could be made available to the developing countries of the world. We could take a lead in this field, have the know-how, the personnel and the appropriate institutions in which such work could be undertaken. In conjunction with countries like Sweden, Germany, France and Italy we could work towards the objective of producing drugs at low cost to be made available all over the world.

Though drug prices are high in this country, we are fortunate in that drugs are available here. The people of many emerging countries who need drugs do not have access to drugs. If through a Crown corporation we managed to market high quality but low cost drugs in those countries we could break this international cartel that exists only for the purpose of making as great a profit out of us as it can. Any research the cartel does it does with a view to increasing its profits and not to benefit mankind. I do not see why Canada should not specialize in the manufacture and distribution of drugs. I agree that it is necessary to make safe drugs, and possibly we could specialize in the manufacture of a selected number of drugs. The value of a Crown corporation is that it exists to serve people. I do not care whether companies in the drug field come under private or public ownership.

I have no hang-up about public ownership or private ownership. I do not think there is intrinsically any greater merit in one or the other. That is not my argument. It is not a philosophical argument I am making. The argument I am making is that a crown corporation would be more effective for serving the needs of the people of the country. It would be more responsive because it would be answerable to the people of the country in the way that these major international drug corporations are not. Surely, this must be the ultimate test of the value of an organization, the test of its responsiveness to the needs of people.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, because the drug companies have failed the people of the country, because they have been preoccupied with their own interests, there is a vital need for the establishment of a responsive instrument, a crown corporation, for the manufacture and distribution of drugs.

Mr. Ray Perrault (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, two developments were predictable this afternoon. First of all our friends to the far left took credit for this legislation. Since 1933 the socialist party in this country has taken credit for almost everything that has happened in Canada with the possible exception of motherhood, and they made their contribution in that area. Before I leave this first point, may I say there has never been any doubt at any time that it was the intention of the government to proceed with this legislation after June 25 last year. This has always been enshrined in Liberal belief and policy. It did not require the pushing of any group in this house in order to inspire Liberal members to introduce this legislation again.

The other predictable development this afternoon was that our political medicine friends to the far left again suggested that the universal snake oil that cures everything is nationalization or the establishment of a Crown corporation. This medicine has been splashed all over the country since the formation of that party and really, Mr. Speaker, it is impossible to simplify great national problems by merely suggesting that we nationalize an industry or establish a crown corporation. That bottle of medicine should be labelled "Dangerous if taken internally," certainly for some maladies. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, I think the government members are gratified that there is such a measure of support, at least on the part of some members in opposition, for the legislation that is before us.

I rise in support of this measure and I commend the responsible minister for his unswerving determination to fight the excessively high cost of drugs in this country and his determination to bring on this legislation early in the new year. Undoubtedly, this bill is going to encounter opposition in many sectors of Canada. Certain sectors of the community are going to suggest that there are dangers inherent in this legislation, dangers to health, dangers to freedom, dangers to research, but all of these considerations are outweighed by the advantages of this proposal.

There will be opposition from those who will provide frightening descriptions of a vital drug industry in ruins. There will be opposition from those who profess to be clairvoyant. They give us the picture of research scientists leaving Canada by the thousands, thus finishing research in this country. There will be opposition, some I am afraid by well-heeled lobbyists, who will assert that free enterprise is in peril and that somehow, if the government acts to protect the consumer of Canada in this way, we are going to do irreparable damage to the system.

One of the objects of the measure before us is to relax patent protection, as we know it, in order to inject more competition into the drug industry in Canada. It is hoped that this will bring down prices. The government is not suggesting price control; it is not suggesting nationalization. But this is the type of thing which is now being threatened in Sweden. Some hon. members may be aware of the fact that the Swedish government states it may nationalize the country's pharmacies to reduce the cost of drugs in that country, yet the Canadian prices of eight popular drugs are estimated to be 86 per cent higher than the prices of those drugs in Sweden. So, the government of this country is acting to make sure the Canadian consumers are not paying an excessive amount for vital drugs.

In the weeks to come we can expect additions to the lexicon of fear literature and propaganda against Bill C-102. There will be opposition, some of it from those who are sincerely concerned about some of the implications or what they believe to be the implications of this measure. But I fear, Mr. Speaker, that at least some of the opposition to Bill C-102 emanates from those with a vested interest in soaking the sick. Their specious reasons for opposing this measure are rooted not so much in a concern for the consumers of Canada but in a desire to maintain a status quo which has seen Canadians spend far too much on certain drugs.

Those who remain unconvinced that excessive profits are being made in certain sections of the drug industry should read the reports which have been amassed in this country by three committees, which indicate that this fact exists.

There are few members of this assembly who can remain unaffected by the letters and telephone calls received from people on limited incomes, pensioners, retired civil servants, people living on very small incomes with their purchasing power diminishing day after day but who are saddled with a drug bill. I can recall one lady who phoned me over the Christmas vacation to tell me she spends over $75 a month for drugs.

Not only must we attempt to lower drug prices in this country but we should encourage provincial governments, where they have received substantial amounts of money under the terms of the national medical care plan, to proceed as soon as possible to provide a certain amount of drugs each year per family.

My telephone rang many times over the Christmas vacation and I was told the story of the effect the cost of drugs is having on many families in our country. Surely, a just society must be concerned about the ability of our people to maintain a decent level of health. And just as surely, if that level of health depends upon access to certain drugs at fair prices then an assembly of this kind must act to assure that drug prices are fair and that the drugs themselves are safe.

The brutal and tragic truth is that some families have been stricken by chronic illness, and there are thousands of them in my own province and across the country. As a result they have required large supplies of expensive drugs and have been virtually ruined by high prices. When it is demonstrated, as it has been, that many vital drugs are vastly over-priced, and when self-regulation by the industry does not result in the establishment of satisfactory price levels for these drugs, any responsible government must act.

Some articles have appeared in national magazines on this subject. I have here Maclean's magazine for July 25, 1965, in which the president of one of the drug manufacturing companies wrote:

> —the politicians and the public have to ask themselves if this is really in their own best interests—

Meaning the promotion of legislation of this kind.

> If we abandon the patent system, we cannot expect Canadian companies to spend money developing new drugs. It is significant, I think, that all the important drugs have been discovered in the Western World and under the free-enterprise system.

He added:

> One enormous advantage of the drug-patenting system is that it has encouraged a drug-manufacturing business in this country. Drugs are produced here under the regulations of Canada's Food and Drug Directorate and the manufacturer is responsible. If anything goes wrong, he's easily found and held accountable. There is a very grave risk that if all drugs were imported their general quality would go down.

• (3:40 p.m.)

This is the gist of the opposition to this measure which we have heard across the country. But it is not quite that simple. If we look at the report of the Harley committee we must ask ourselves the question, how much should Canadian consumers be required to pay for this so-called research. The report states:

> The costs and benefits of alternatives must be weighed. The various inquiries re drugs have concluded that research on drugs in Canada is not significant, and that which does exist is not supported by the patent law.

Those are the facts, regardless of the public relations speeches made in this country. The report continues:

> In terms of the manufacturer's dollar, 7 per cent is spent for research and development of all kinds as reported by 41 P.M.A.C. companies in 1964. This figure would be somewhat higher for 1965, possibly relating to increased tax concessions for Canadian research. If it can be assumed that the manufacturer receives only 50 per cent of the pharmacists' price to the consumer and the suggested list price for a specific drug was $5, then the consumer's contribution to research and development as a result of that particular purchase would be 17½ cents—in any event, a fairly insignificant sum.

Then, we have the argument which has been cited that research will be endangered by this measure. During the parliamentary session of 1966-67 hon. members will recall the special committee of the House of Commons on drug costs and prices received a report from the pharmaceutical manufacturers explaining the expenses of a group of 41 member companies in 1964. They sold $110,465,396 worth of pharmaceuticals and spent $32,977,561 on so-called marketing expenses. This figure included $16,844,633 for field selling expenses. In other words, the care and feeding of the detail men. Also included is an amount of $11,438,533 for advertising and promotional expenses. That includes medical exhibits, promotional samples and direct mail advertising. It might include a glossy pamphlet or a teak box containing a new tranquilizer. This is an item of $32 million to sell $110 million worth of drugs.

The question we must ask ourselves is whether this is really necessary in order to preserve the health of the Canadian people. I am not willing to accept the suggestion that is circulated around the country that this is a recognized and responsible practice in some sectors of the economy. Surely, a just society must be concerned about the ability of our people to maintain a decent level of health. The measure before us does not contemplate the need or the possibility of placing the drug industry in shackles. The measure has as its objectives lower prices, safe drugs and a viable and competitive drug industry.

A special committee of this house several months ago came to the conclusion that the people of this country pay far more for their drugs than they should and that our drug prices are among the highest in the world. It recommended that several steps be taken to ease the burden of the heavy drug bills many families must pay. The 12 per cent sales tax on drugs was abolished over a year ago. While this had a beneficial effect in some areas, some drug prices continued to rise. A report in one of the national newspapers last July stated that the average price of a prescription drug at that time was $3.62 as against $3.49 the year before. The report stated further that 49 per cent of the pharmacists are filling prescriptions with less costly generic drugs, while 43 per cent are using the same drugs sold under a brand name. The remaining 8 per cent use either, depending on the drug prescribed.

Action in the area of the sales tax has not totally corrected a situation which led three public inquiries between 1963 and 1967 to blame lack of price competition due to patent, tariff and trademark protection among other things, for the unduly high prices of some drugs in this country. It is difficult to understand how there can be any serious opposition to a five point measure of the kind we have before us. We have already instituted the sales tax removal from drugs and reduced the customs duty on drug imports by 5 per cent to 15 per cent. Who in this house can in sincerity oppose a program of providing objective information to doctors about the properties and prices of drugs? Who in this house can in sincerity oppose a pharmaceutical industry development assistance program? There is the direct loan system under the Department of Industry to strengthen low price drug houses competing with major international drug firms.

Who in this house who is concerned about the health of the Canadian people can, in good conscience, oppose conferences with the provincial governments about ways to tackle the high cost of retail distribution of drugs? What about the dangers in respect of alterations of the patent law which have been referred to by some hon. members? Canadians are told that an alteration in the law—and I cite the Harley report—would clearly have a detrimental effect on the quality and the safety of drugs. Visions are conjured up of bootleg drugs being furtively imported into the Canadian market. We are given the vision of the drugs coming into Canada through the auspices of non-inspected distributors with a resulting lack of the degree of quality control that attends the Canadian manufacture and distribution of patented drugs under brand names.

What are the implications of these allegations? The first is that the so-called generic drugs, or non-brand name drugs, are unsafe. The second is that increased importation of them from overseas will result in a failure of the Food and Drug Directorate to be able to maintain the quality of drugs in Canada and, third, that drug products from overseas have some sort of sinister connotation and are to be distrusted because they are foreign. This is the suggestion to be found in some of the articles which are being written. We are given a vision of some unethical foreign company turning a fast pound, franc, lira or zloty by mixing a batch of ingredients in some dirty basement and putting the product in a plain brown wrapper for shipment to some fast-dollar distributor in North America. Arguments of this kind are rooted in prejudice, misinformation and perhaps worse.

All members will agree that it is of the utmost importance that drug safety be a paramount consideration. Drugs that hazard health are intolerably expensive at any price; but let us consider the arguments which are advanced in some quarters in opposition to this bill. Patents have nothing to do with the quality of drugs. Assurance of quality depends upon the controls exercised by the Food and Drug Directorate and quality controls exercised by the manufacturer. All manufacturers must meet all the requirements of the Food and Drugs Act and regulations. The government cannot check every batch. That is clearly impossible. But new requirements went into effect in May. The require that manufacturers must have information available in Canada to the effect that all requirements relating to manufacturing facilities and controls are being met. The drug must either be analysed in Canada or the data concerning its potency must be listed and made available. The onus is on the manufacturer and the information must be available in Canada so that we will know exactly what is in the drug which is manufactured abroad and brought here.

Contrary to the implications of some, a patent confers no guarantee of quality. Indeed, let those who espouse this belief present evidence to indicate that quality declines in a product whose patent expires or is not patented at all. It is too bad that the people who appear on television and talk about the dangers of this legislation did not provide persuasive evidence to the successive commissions which invited them to do so.

Mr. Basford: They have not read the act.

Mr. Perrault: As the minister points out, they have not read the act. How did the Harley committee deal with this allegation? What the Harley committee said about this appears at page 12 as follows:

• (3:50 p.m.)

> Unfortunately the brand name manufacturer often gives the impression that generic products are not safe.

The report of the committee then stated:

> It is the opinion of your committee, however, that this viewpoint is not necessarily valid, it not only having been challenged by the generic drug manufacturers but also by purchasing agents of some hospitals and government departments who have ordered and continue to order ... drugs by their generic name.

Government agencies are using these drugs and this has been pointed out earlier today. I ask hon. members to note the following, again from the Harley report:

> The food and drug directorate made it clear that, in their opinion, based on the testing they performed, generic name drugs and brand name drugs are equally "safe".

Indeed, it was reported to this house earlier in a speech today that a percentage of the products, for one reason or another, labelling or contents, is the same in respect of drugs manufactured in Canada and those manufactured abroad. Drugs sold under a common or proper name do not differ significantly from those sold under a brand name according to tests conducted by the food and drug directorate.

The proposed amendment allowing the importation of drugs into Canada under compulsory licencing presents no new elements as far as the importation of the active ingredient and the preparation of dosage forms in Canada are concerned. At the present time, as hon. members know, there is no bar to the importation of non-patented drugs as basic chemicals into Canada for manufacturing into dosage forms. Both brand name and generic manufacturers are importing fine chemicals now for finishing into dosage forms.

Again, before the Harley committee, as recorded at page 2022, the question of domestic drugs vis-a-vis imported drugs was discussed by Dr. R. A. Chapman, director of the Food and Drug Directorate. He said:

> In summary, then, we do not have evidence that imported drugs represent a significant hazard to health.

He then said:

> However, we feel that to ensure that this situation prevails in the future it will be necessary to periodically assess the manufacturing facilities and controls of foreign firms exporting drugs to Canada.

This is the kind of action which is being taken. The importation of basic pharmaceutical ingredients under compulsory licence is not likely to be any different from the situation that exists at present.

In this house at the beginning of this debate the hon. minister gave the assurance—he is present and he has done an outstanding job in respect of this measure—that high standards would be maintained. In effect, he has assured this house on behalf of the government that if the importation of finished dosage forms from a wider selection of sources necessitates additional measures to ensure that these drugs meet all the requirements of the Food and Drug Act and regulations, these additional measures will be taken.

In effect, we are assured that if the Food and Drug Directorate is unable to elicit the necessary co-operation from foreign manufacturers, then their product will be excluded from the Canadian market. In this regard let it be noted that the Food and Drug Directorate already has the responsibility to ensure that drugs on the Canadian market including those from abroad meet all the requirements of the Food and Drug Act and Regulations.

The Hoffmann-LaRoche company of the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers' Association of Canada acknowledges the practice of generic manufacturers of maintaining adequate quality control as outlined in their statement again before the Harley committee. Let me quote from page 730:

> —the copier has to have quality control all the time; he has to, to comply with the Food and Drug Directorate and in order to stay on the market... If he is caught with bad drugs he will not be there—

The Horner company expressed a similar opinion when a representative said:

> If the Canadian importer of raw materials is able to show that his compounded dosage form meets food and drug requirements for stability, disintegration and dissolution, there is no reason to think that the public will be exposed to any new or different risks.

The same principle shall apply, of course, to the importation of finished dosage forms.

In conclusion, I should like to say that the amendment to the Trade Marks Act should not in any way affect present levels of safety assured by the Food and Drug Directorate. Hon. members know that before drugs which are imported can be offered for sale, an arrangement is in effect whereby customs officers at the larger ports of entry hold drug shipments until the invoices have been checked and, where considered necessary, lots sampled.

There are other safety controls. Hon. members should be aware of the fact that the Food and Drug Directorate has the responsibility to ensure that drugs which have different formulae, but bear the same trademark, which are imported into Canada are as safe and as efficacious as those drugs which bear the same trademark and are manufactured in this country. In addition, all imported drugs must meet all requirements of the Food and Drug Act and regulations. These include the requirement that both the inner and outer labels shall carry adequate direction for use, a quantitative list of the medicinal ingredients contained therein, and a correct statement of net contents. By this regulation, the composition of imported drugs would be known to the pharmacists and, if the drug is not sold on prescription, to the purchaser as well.

Variations in the formulae of drugs imported into Canada which bear the same trademark as Canadian drugs will probably be minimal, but if they are sufficiently different to constitute a danger to Canadians hon. members know that under this legislation the minister can and will probably take appropriate action.

Safety and efficacy should not be maintained by conferring and perpetuating a monopolistic control over the drug market by large drug firms through patent and trade mark legislation. The obvious and sound technique, the technique contemplated in this measure, is to ensure safety by providing that drugs on the Canadian market, be they imported or domestically produced, meet all the provisions of the food and drug regulations.

I apologize to the house for racing through a speech which was scheduled to be longer than 25 minutes. Many aspects of this measure have been discussed heretofore in the house and I think it has been established that the case for action is unassailable. It is to be hoped that this measure will enjoy substantial support on the part of hon. members concerned about the welfare of Canadians, no matter where those hon. members may sit in this house.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order, please. It being four o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills, public bills and notices of motion.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, before we proceed to private members' business perhaps the government house leader would place on the record the order of business for Monday and one or two other days of next week.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question and for this opportunity to outline the business for next week. There is a change in the order of business announced yesterday in view of the fact the item we have been discussing today has not been passed. As the first order of business on Monday we will call item 37, the bill amending the Canada Evidence Act. The second order of business will be item 17, the bill in respect of the Historic Sites and Monuments Act. We will then return to the drug prices bill which is item 13, an act to amend the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act and the Food and Drug Act which we have been discussing today.

BONAVENTURE AND GASPÉ TELEPHONE COMPANY, LIMITED

The house resumed, from Tuesday, December 3, consideration of the motion of Mr. Cyr (for Mr. LeBlanc, Rimouski) for second reading and reference to the standing committee on Transport and communications of Bill No. S-12, respecting the Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company, Limited.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, when one reads this bill, which is private members' legislation, or public legislation in the hands of a private member, he will note that the purpose of Bill S-12 is to resolve the doubt as to whether the company may dispose of its undertaking to a company incorporated under and subject to the laws of any province of Canada. One might presume there is a legal problem involved, and that is the end of the matter.

This bill was discussed in the house on December 3, some weeks ago. I wonder whether the sponsor is aware of the fact that this is not a small company which started with a capitalization of a couple of hundred thousand dollars to provide local telephone communication in a small rural area, but that it is a company totally owned by the Anglo-Canadian telephone company which in turn is owned by General Telephone. This makes it a subsidiary of one of the largest telephone companies in the world. In fact, this is one of the largest corporations in the world with telephone communications in Australia, the West Indies, and across the United States. Therefore, the question involved is not whether there is a legal qualification in relation to the sale of this company. I say this is not the question because we can refer to previous debates in connection with the bill and see what was said about it. This house dealt with Bill S-33, respecting The Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company, Limited. The Senate dealt with the bill in 1968 and the following was said about it:

• (4:00 p.m.)

Honourable senators, the purpose of this bill is very simple—

I presume it is very simple for exactly the same reason.

—for, as shown by the explanatory note, attached to the bill, its object is to resolve doubts as to whether The Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company, Limited, may dispose of its undertaking to a company incorporated under or subject to the laws of a province.

When Bill P-6, respecting The Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company, Limited, was dealt with in the Senate in 1955, the following was said about it:

One of the main purposes of the bill is to ask parliament for authority to increase the authorized capital to $2 million, and to divide this into shares of a par value of $25 each. The par value of the present shares is $100, and the proposal is that existing shareholders will receive new shares in the proportion of four for one.

Then, it was said:

A further effect of the bill is to change the date of the annual meeting, which at present is fixed for the first Thursday of September in each year. The bill repeals section 8 of the act of incorporation and thereby makes the date of the annual meeting conform with the company's fiscal year—

And so on. Then, we find these words used in the Senate debate on the bill:

The bill would also give effect to the company's desire that amalgamation and acquisition or sale of property may be carried out with the consent of the majority of the shareholders, and under the supervision of the Board of Transport Commissioners. Since the present act was passed, parliament has given the Board of Transport Commissioners jurisdiction over telephone companies. The bill provides that all matters pertaining to this company shall come within the jurisdiction of the board.

Finally, the bill would give the company the right to furnish radio and television services and other improved means of communication, in line with the right enjoyed by other companies.

How the sale was to take place was outlined exactly in the debate which took place in 1968, when the following was said:

The special 1907 act which set up The Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company, Limited—and I would refer honourable senators to chapter 64 of the 1906-1907 statutes—was amended by chapter 86 of the 1955 statutes in order, among other things, to empower the company to sell its business under the following conditions: first, the sale has to be approved by a meeting of shareholders called together for this purpose, at which meeitng two-thirds of the shares issued must be represented by shareholders present in person or by proxy; second, the sale cannot take effect unless first approved by the Board of Transport Commissioners which, as the honourable senators know, has since become the Canadian Transport Commission.

It was originally agreed that this company should have the power—and that power was granted in the amendment of 1968—to sell or acquire additional property and to modernize its operations. The measure provided in the main that the company would, if necessary, be able to dispose of its undertaking. I understand that since that time the company has been able to sell all its stock, except four shares. These four shares are held by an estate and there is a small difficulty, not from a financial but a legal point of view, in transferring them. The remainder of the company is owned, operated and totally controlled by Quebec Telephone. I am sure that many people in the province of Quebec believe that Quebec Telephone is a provincial agency. This is not true, of course. Quebec Telephone, like British Columbia Telephone, is owned by Anglo-Canadian.

It is interesting to note that Anglo-Canadian is the Canadian counterpart of a number of subsidiary companies under the control of General Telephone and Electronics Corporation which hon. members will find, if they read Moodie's Public Utility Manual, is really a holding company with subsidiaries in many countries.

In July, 1966, General Telephone purchased Anglo-Canadian Telephone Company and made it a wholly-owned subsidiary. They acquired the controlling interest in Quebec Telephone Company, with 119,000 telephones. In 1967 General Telephone, together with a controlled subsidiary, Anglo-Canadian Telephone Company, controlled 50.24 per cent of British Columbia Telephone Company and 53.07 per cent of Quebec Telephone Company, with 835,000 telephones in British Columbia and approximately 126,000 telephones in Quebec as of the end of December, 1967. This indicates, Mr. Speaker—and I know that you have a great deal of knowledge of corporation law—a great difference between what this bill says and what is the fact.

If this bill is passed this company will retain an inter-provincial charter, and it will be operated by a company which almost totally owns its assets. Again, that company will be controlled by a 53 per cent ownership in the Anglo-Canadian Company which in turn is wholly owned by General Telephone and Electronics Corporation in the United States. So, we are not really dealing with a small rural telephone system which needs to be upgraded and brought into another area. This is a major corporation power play in which we are involved, and we should look at it in that light. It may be advantageous for us soon to think about the amalgamation of all our telephone services in Canada, not for economic reasons in particular but so as to bring together all the telephone systems that have linked up the various rural municipalities in the past.

In last night's Ottawa papers I noticed, as I am sure other hon. members did, a small announcement proposing that the shareholders of a company meet and make a decision concerning the sale of the Lever River Telephone Service at Masson, Quebec. I am sure that this also is a very small telephone company. They mention that they have only several thousand subscribers, and quite often the subscribers of this type of telephone service are also the shareholders in the company. We have hundreds of these small companies all across the nation and they are being gobbled up either by Bell Telephone Company, by General Telephone or by the American Telephone and Telegraph Corporation. My colleague says these are good shares to buy. Frankly, I would say that the shares of any of these telephone companies are good because they almost have the right to print money, and when they come before us to ask for an increase in rates they can always justify their request.

The house will remember that when we reduced long distance rates because of automation, very shortly thereafter we found that the company had increased the rates of the subscribers because their income had been lowered in one area and they had a need for profits in another.

Surely, members of parliament are aware that there are many disadvantages in allowing three major corporations to get involved in our Canadian telephone service. I think that this is where the difficulty arises. Anyone who has travelled very much across Canada would agree with me that there is no country in the world that is as well equipped to handle telecommunications as is Canada. This is something of which everyone in Canada should be proud. On the other hand, in the United States where the telephone companies have operated on a dog eats dog basis, it is very difficult to make connections with certain types of telecommunications equipment between one system and another.

It may be that the type of conversion of all systems in Canada makes it possible to make a telephone call with any kind of equipment from any part of the country to almost any other system even when mobile, remote, satellite and radar communications are used. In the United States this is not always possible. There is considerable difficulty there in intercommunication. In England the system is chaotic. On the European continent it probably takes half a day to make a telephone call. This is also true in other countries.

I think one of the advantages that we have in Canada where there have been so many small companies with subscriber shareholders is that we have been able to unite them into a unfied telephone service across the country. If large units had been involved, we would have been using Northern Electric equipment in one area, automatic equipment in another and English Electric in still another. We would find then that these various pieces of equipment were not totally compatible and the difficulties in communications would have been compounded.

We in Canada are probably more dependent on telephones than any other place in the world. We are notoriously the greatest users of telephones in the world. Our per capita use of the telephone indicates a female tendency to long windedness, and therefore telephones have become a very important part of our everyday life. Therefore, I think it behooves us to be very careful in passing this type of bill, which I consider to be very dishonest. The bill does not say anything dishonest but it does not present the whole picture. Perhaps we cannot do much about it. It may be that we will soon have to face up to whether or not we want a monopoly in the telephone system in Canada. I believe we do. I believe that we satisfy provincial separatist traits when we allow the Northern Telephone to operate in northern Ontario, the Quebec telephone system to operate in Quebec, the British Columbia telephone system to operate in British Columbia and the Saskatchewan telephone service to operate in Saskatchewan. We may be fostering provincial pseudo nationalistic pride, but this will not really solve the problem of the establishment of the best type of telecommunication that can be obtained for the money available.

I am sure that when the Northern Telephone Company, which was one of the largest independent companies, was bought out, many methods were used to purchase the control of the stock. In effect, however, Bell Telephone now owns the Northern Telephone Company which might as well be called Bell Telephone. The Quebec telephone service might as well be called General Telephone because that is what it is. I do not even think it should be called Anglo Canadian Telephone because that is a wholly owned subsidiary of the parent company, General Telephone. There is nothing wrong with this situation and I am not suggesting any dishonesty, but I do not think it is in the interest of the Canadian public. I presume that the problem facing the people in Masson today is that they have to make up their minds whether or not they will sell their stock and allow a large corporation to control their shareholder controlled company or whether they wish to participate in a larger corporation.

[Mr. Peters.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order, please. I wish to advise the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate mainly because of some personal feelings I have about matters like this, feelings that I have held for a number of years, and also because I think I have some idea of how the members of my party right across this country feel about it. I also wish to take part in this debate because I am convinced that a fairly large number of Canadian citizens, some of whom do not necessarily support or do not belong to my party, would agree with the kind of arguments that my colleagues and I are putting up in this house on this measure.

We are told that the Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company merely wants a slight change in the wording of previous legislation in order to eliminate any possible doubt that they can dispose of the remainder of their shares. We are also told by the sponsor of the bill, and this was said in the other place also, that there is not much to this request because after all 99.9 per cent of this company is already owned by the Quebec Telephone Company. Therefore, it is only a matter of arranging for the remaining one tenth of one per cent ownership.

Mr. Speaker, I suspect—I hope I am wrong—that if this is all that is bothering these various companies they would be unlikely to allow the small matter of a few words about which they are in doubt to prevent them from completing the transfer of ownership. Methinks there is more to this than meets the eye. Whether this is true or not, I, for one, feel this bill will never pass this chamber. I say so for a number of reasons. For one thing, we are considering a measure which is concerned with United States ownership in the communications field, precisely the field in which there should be, at best, public ownership or, at least, Canadian ownership. Personally, I could not give a tinker's damn about the welfare and good order of various United States communications companies. I will not be a party here or anywhere else to improving the health and welfare of corporations of this kind.

I maintain that systems of communication, whether by telephone, radio, television or telegraph, should be completely and totally the business of the nation concerned, not entered upon or interfered with by any other nation. I believe, along with my hon. friends and members of my party across the country, that there must be no foreign ownership of telephones, radio, telegraph, television or similar methods of communication and broadcasting in Canada. It is bad enough that a telephone company should be privately owned. It is even worse that it should be foreign privately owned. As a Canadian I don't like it when I know that if I live in Gaspé or Rimouski and pick up the telephone it is really owned and controlled by a United States corporation. You may think, Mr. Speaker, that I am overly worried about foreign interests. Nevertheless I do not think it would too difficult for somebody in the C.I.A, for example, who wished to find out what a subscriber of the service was saying on the telephone, to arrange to listen to his conversations.

For these and similar reasons it seems to me no Canadian worthy of the name would have anything to do with the passing of legislation which allows the transfer of a Canadian communications business to foreign ownership. I do not envy the sponsor of this bill, the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. LeBlanc). I feel sorry for him for having sponsored it. I would not touch it with a ten foot pole; I would not sponsor it in this house or anywhere else on a bet. The efforts of this company to complete its transfer to the Quebec Telephone Company represent nothing more than the consolidation of various United States companies owned and operated in Canada. We are told the present arrangement is causing extra expense, duplication of administration and so on. That is too bad. As I said earlier, I am not interested in improving the good order and financial position of United States companies in the telecommunications industry in Canada.

The telephone is a public service and by its very nature such a service should be provided by public enterprise. This is a proper field in which public enterprise should operate. I hope that some day the government in the province of Quebec will say: Enough of this; we intend to take over all the telephone companies operating in Quebec and provide at cost, or as near cost as possible, a completely integrated and wholly publicly owned telephone service in the province. Three provinces have already done this. I do not altogether agree with the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) that the establishment of a nationwide telephone service operated by one company is necessary at this time. The system may one day evolve into that, but in the meantime it seems to me the ten provinces, owning and operating their own telephone services and integrating their long distance and microwave networks would provide not only a better and cheaper service for Canadian citizens, but a system—and this is even more important—which was owned and run by Canadians.

When I look at Moodies Public Utilities Manual and take a look at the entry concerning the General Telephone and Electronics Corporation, I am impressed by the fact that this is not a company one could easily feel sorry for. It is not ready to become a welfare case and it is certainly not one whose survival depends upon the transfer of supposedly one-tenth of one per cent of the shares of the Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company. Its acquisitions go back many years. When one looks at the amount of debentures, both convertible and cumulative—preferred and subordinate convertible debentures, whatever those are—it becomes apparent that the company is not ready for the social welfare department. It cannot be said to need any part of the Quebec Telephone Company or the Bonaventure and Gaspé Company for the success of its operations.

In Moodies directory there is a map of the United States showing the extent of this corporation's holdings. They do not really consider the operation in Canada to be of sufficient significance to justify putting it on the map. I do not even know why they bothered with it. I suspect the main reason is that the corporation has plans for moving into the communications field to a greater extent in the future, not only in the telephone service but in the manufacture of communications equipment in Canada. As far as I am concerned, we need more of this like we need a hole in the head. This corporation has proceeded to acquire not only telephone companies but organizations which market telephone and communications equipment. It has acquired ownership in telephone companies in some 15 states in the United States, including Alaska. It is by no means the largest international telephone or electronics corporation. A.T & T. is larger, as are one or two others. Bell of Canada would be larger than this one. But, as I say, I believe foreign communications companies have absolutely no business, in fact, no right, to be in this country. They should be hastily bought up and politely asked to return home, so that we can run our own telephone service.

In some respects I consider the private ownership of telephone services in Canada by companies such as Bell almost as bad, and that is saying quite a bit. I think there is an outrageous history of exploitation of the public in this regard. Because private enterprise holds a monopoly it has been able to exploit the public users of telephone services far beyond the point that could be considered reasonable. The profits and financial turnover of Bell are at record highs.

I could go on to talk about many other companies in various industries, Mr. Speaker, but I suspect that you would call me to order. Suffice it to say that I will oppose as vehemently as I can and for as long as necessary any legislation that seeks to place any part of a telephone or communications company's operations into United States ownership.

I say this firstly as a Canadian. It may sound strange for a democratic socialist to talk about a form of nationalism. In my opinion, before you can be a good internationalist you must be master in your own home. You cannot truly be recognized as speaking for the nation or truly be recognized as a nation unless you own the nation.

I cannot see that asking the parliament of this country to adopt measures such as this contributes in any way, shape or form to our nationhood. In fact, to me measures such as this contribute to the betrayal of our nationhood. I hope that other hon. members on all sides of the house will agree with me when I say that this kind of legislation is neither proper nor in the national interest. I hope that never again will any member of the house sponsor legislation in this house which will contribute to the transfer of the ownership of Canadian industry to the United States or any other country. The betrayal of our nationhood has been contributed to in this chamber too many times in the past in previous parliaments. Too often has it been blithely and lightly done without examining the consequences for the future.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

I am not saying that hon. members have done this deliberately, certainly not with any sense of disloyalty to their country. They have conscientiously done what they thought would be, if not in the best interests of the country, at least harmless to the country and at the same time beneficial to one or more enterprises. However, it seems to me that it is high time this sort of thing stopped.

I am afraid that in the future the government, led by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), will arrange for this kind of bill not to be brought before the House of Commons, but for the courts or the other place to deal with it. I hope that this never happens, but I am afraid, in view of the battle that members of this group have put up on a number of issues in this particular hour of the business of this house over the past several years, the government will decide to deprive hon. members of the House of Commons of the opportunity of speaking to this kind of legislation.

I think much better use can be made of private members' hour. We could discuss the much more constructive legislation, resolutions and motions introduced by members of the house on all sides which await our consideration. Certainly, I hope no attempt is made to dispense with the introduction of private members' public bills, as I believe they are called, because these bills give private members of all parties the opportunity to bring instances such as this one into public view. As a result, perhaps foreign corporations will refrain a little more than they have up to now from attempting to gain further control of our national wealth and resources and, as a logical result, further control of our country.

I hope that members of other parties will speak out against this sort of nonsense. I know that this bill concerns a fairly minor matter that is pertinent to one particular company, but there are thousands of other bills like it which could be brought to this house, and which when viewed as a total package militate against a fundamental principle of Canadian nationhood. This is why all of us should speak out now.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, in reviewing Bill S-12 I went back to Hansard for December 3 to see what the sponsor of the bill had to say when he introduced it. I should like to refer to part of what the sponsor of the bill said at that time. He pointed out that the purpose of the bill is to resolve doubts as to whether the company may dispose of its undertaking to a company incorporated under, or subject to the laws of any province of Canada.

The sponsor, in his explanation of the bill, went on to say that the disposal of the undertaking is allowed, subject to the approval of the shareholders and the Canadian Transport Commission. Then, I respectfully suggest that the real crux of the matter, the issue to which I take strong objection, appears in this paragraph, which is reported at page 3404 of Hansard:

> We feel that the act passed in 1955 does not clearly grant the comapny the power to sell or dispose of its assets to a company which does not fall within the jurisdiction of the Canadian parliament.

I suggest that those words make this bill itself suspect, no matter which way you look at it. Those words in Hansard for December 3 certainly indicate a desire to remove this particular company from the jurisdiction of the Canadian parliament. Therefore, I take issue with those words.

The sponsor of the bill goes on to say:

> —doubts concerning the power to sell or dispose of its assets to a company which does not fall within the jurisdiction of the Canadian parliament would be resolved if the following sentence were added to section 11 of the constitution:

The hon. member then spelled out exactly what he had in mind with regard to this proposed addition to section 11 of the constitution of the Company. It is as follows:

> Such sale or disposal, whether of the whole or any part of the said undertaking, rights and properties, may be so made by the company to any company or person, whether within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada or not, authorized to carry on a business included within the objects or powers of the company.

Once again, it is my belief that this clearly spells out the purpose and intent of the bill, and indeed of the sponsor who is attempting to put it through parliament at this particular time. The sponsor of the bill suggests that this alteration is being sought to allow the company, which holds a provincial charter, to dispose of its assets to Quebec Telephone Company. Nevertheless, I suggest it is time that hon. members of this house examined bills like this to see exactly what is the ownership structure of companies coming before this house.

To learn something about this company I went to the library. I learned very little there and had to resort to the reports of hearings in the other place. Hansard for December 3 also contains some relevant information. What I learned gave me cause for concern, and I do not think this bill ought to obtain too easy passage through this house. From my research I learned that the Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company is actually a wholly owned subsidiary of Quebec Telephone Company and is not the small company serving the relatively small community its name might suggest. To demonstrate the intricacies involved in unravelling the ownership structure behind the company may I read the remarks of an hon. member of the other place as reported on page 3441 of Hansard for December 3, 1968:

> It is a matter of establishing clearly the power of The Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company Limited, incorporated by a special act of the Parliament of Canada, to sell its telephone network to Quebec Telephone, a company incorporated in accordance with and subject to the laws of the province of Quebec.

Investigation revealed the further fact that, in the final analysis, the company in question is wholly owned by a United States parent company. Although I do not object to some ownership by our friends to the south of some of our companies, generally speaking I am not in favour of it. As the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) said recently, we must remain masters in our own house and keep enterprises in Canada under Canadian control. We must make sure that the ownership of our utilities remains in Canadian hands and that directors of such companies are Canadians. I am afraid that a number of hon. members here do not care whether control of our companies passes to our friends to the south. We must heed the recommendations of the Watkins report in order to deal intelligently with a number of bills similar to this one that will come before the house.

From my research I learned that Quebec Telephone Company obtained the stock of Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company. Then, in 1955, Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company sought authority from this house to sell its assets, having already sold them two years previously. That action was highly suspect. It has been suggested that the company wanted to validate what had been done. If so, it acted incorrectly. The company ought to have gone before a committee and made all the facts surrounding the transaction available to members of the committee. If debates on bills like the present one are to be fruitful I think that hon. members of this house ought to know all relevant facts. Clearly, hon. members do not know everything they ought to know about this company.

For instance, it has now been established that the company in question is foreign owned. I maintain that quasi public utilities such as this one ought to be owned and controlled by Canadians. If hon. members are to vote intelligently on bills like this they ought to know whether the company in question is Canadian or foreign owned; because by their votes they will tell Canadians whether they are in favour of foreign or Canadian ownership of our assets.

If we want our utilities to be owned by Canadians we should look carefully at bill S-12. I am frightened by the implications contained in the bill, and I think it would be well for hon. members to know all the facts surrounding this situation before voting either for or against this measure. Even if the bill were to go to committee any witnesses who may testify would say only what they want hon. members to hear. I am sure that much information would not be divulged. As has been said before but not emphasized enough, perhaps, Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company which serves the south shore of the Gaspé peninsula is a subsidiary of Quebec Telephone, which in turn is owned by a foreign company.

Actually, as suggested by my colleague, this is really the first chain of ownership. It indicates that this company is really part of an over-all chain, a part of something with which I believe not too many of us want to be associated. I agree completely with my colleague from Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) that a close look must be taken at everything that comes before us relating to the ownership of these particular companies.

We in this party, believe there are certain things that must be controlled by the public. The public must have a complete say so far as the setting of rates is concerned. I understand that this is the last day for lodging appeals against the increase in telephone rates proposed by the Bell Company. This is a typical example of what will happen if we allow bills such as this to go through unchallenged.

I believe that any company wishing to do business in Canada, and not wholly owned by Canadians, must be rigidly regulated by the enforcement agencies which we have. I would like this bill to be explained further. I believe there are more facts with regard to it that should be considered. I believe hon. members feel something must be done to provide more facts with respect to such bills.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, there is not much time left for debate today on what might appear to be a very innocent looking bill, No. S-12. I have prepared some notes for my contribution and I presume I shall have to leave them aside for some other time because it had been my hope to trace the chain of ownership of this company in some detail.

It has been a shock to me since coming to Ottawa to find that frequently we see a move being made in bills of this type to hand over some of the small remaining portion of Canada to foreign ownership. If there is anything in Canada that should be publicly owned it is those monopolies which are complete monopolies, and the telephone system is one of them.

It is rather amazing to see a member of the government party advocate that we reach into, what should be the public sector of ownership, and turn it over to a foreign nation to control. We, in the New Democratic party, say it is time we called a halt to this. It is time these moves were exposed so that the Canadian people may be made aware of what is happening in this Canada of ours.

This bill tells us that the Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company wishes to sell its assets to the Quebec Telephone Company. That is very innocent. The average citizen would say there is nothing wrong with it. He does not look beyond the first move.

On December 3 last the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) clearly traced the chain of ownership of this company and it led right down into the United States. The chain started with the Quebec Telephone Company, went to the Anglo Canadian Telephone Company and across the border to the General Telephone and Electronics Corporation in the United States. In my frank opinion, this information should have been given to the house by the sponsor of the bill and by the party he represents. Members on the Liberal side of the house should be taking a stand on this matter.

We want to know whether other private bills will be introduced here to turn over other sections of our communications systems to the big foreign corporations that already dominate and control an alarming percentage of Canadian industry. This is basically the reason members of this party are determined to dig down, get more information, and expose the stupid and foolish trend to have the whole of Canadian industry controlled by people who live outside the borders of our nation.

If we are ever to become a strong nation in control of the destinies of our own people, we must take a close look at the problem of foreign ownership. Certainly Bill S-12 must be looked into very carefully.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order, please.

It being five o'clock this house stands adjourned until Monday next at two o'clock in the afternoon. I hope you all have an enjoyable weekend.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The same to you.

At five o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

DISCUSSION RESPECTING LONDON MEETING—DIPLOMATIC EXCHANGE WITH THE VATICAN—RELATIONS WITH THE PRESS

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to report briefly to the House of Commons on the Commonwealth Prime Ministers Conference which concluded in London last week.

An hon. Member: Were you there?

Mr. Trudeau: Where the hell were you?

An hon. Member: We weren't invited.

Mr. Trudeau: And you never will be, I may tell you that.

This was the sixteenth of these meetings since world war II. The 28 members of the Commonwealth represented at the conference made it the largest by far of any of the Commonwealth meetings held to date. Twenty-four of the 28 states were represented by heads of government—either prime ministers or presidents—and this, according to the calculation of the chairman, was one of the biggest meetings of heads of government anywhere since the 1945 San Francisco conference.

This is perhaps the greatest strength of the Commonwealth, this opportunity on a regular basis for men of good will to sit down together and discuss one with another the problems which affect them and the 850 million people whom they represent. All the other advantages of the Commonwealth relationship—the exchanges of people, the trading patterns, the economic assistance and co-operation schemes, the informality of diplomatic representation—these all assume their tone from the free and frank dialogue which takes place at the prime ministerial meetings.

It is difficult for me as a newcomer to these meetings to compare this latest conference with those that have preceded it in recent years. My impression is that this meeting was not only successful as Commonwealth meetings go, but significantly so. Indeed this conference may have marked some kind of watershed for the Commonwealth. For one thing the Commonwealth is now close to its maximum size, and future meetings will not note the presence of many new members. For another, the scope of the secretariat seems now to have been defined and its services identified. But most important, and here I rely not simply on my own observations but on the comments of several veteran heads of government, the Commonwealth meeting appears to have attained a new plateau of maturity. Those who anticipated dramatic events at this meeting were incorrect; those who forecast an emotional confrontation over racial issues have been proved wrong. Equally, of course, those who hoped for the emergence of some brilliant answers to vexing questions were disappointed.

What did emerge was a realization by all leaders present that there was great value in open discussion and in an exchange of opinions. It was obvious, for example, that an easy solution for the complex problem of Rhodesia simply did not exist. This being so, no advantage was to be gained from a prolonged and emotionally charged argument alleging breaches of faith or lack of understanding. Instead, the observations and the admonitions of the several Prime Ministers and Presidents were made and recorded and the meeting moved on to the next item on the agenda. I do not mean to leave the impression that the Rhodesian question was not adequately discussed, or that the conference did no more than touch it in passing. Quite the contrary. The case of Rhodesia's African neighbours and those who supported them was argued with great vigour and skill; nothing material was omitted in order to avoid hurting the feelings of others; there was no hypocritical attempt to pretend they did not exist. The Rhodesian debate was honest and it was tough, yet at its conclusion something of considerable significance occurred.

After looking at the problem in its exact dimensions, after closing in on its many difficulties, men holding opposite views admitted that the true nature of the difficulties was now better understood than before and they noted in some instance, after listening to the comments of others that their rigid attitudes were capable of some modification. Of most importance, however, honourable men agreed honourably to disagree.

There is little headline material in this kind of decision; neither is there much domestic political advantage for individual leaders. But to a world burdened almost beyond endurance by incredibly complex problems of immense moment, an agreement to disagree and to search patiently for solutions and areas of agreement is of immeasurable value. Delegates can walk out of meetings in anger, but they cannot remove with them the underlying cause of their annoyance. Organizations can be broken apart by impatient members, but the act of disintegration contributes nothing to the easing of the original tensions.

The conference revealed in still another way the coming of age of the Commonwealth. For if the African states did not insist that the meeting preoccupy itself exclusively with Rhodesia, neither did the Asian or Caribbean states view the meeting simply as an arena within which to press their own demands for economic assistance. And, in my view, as important as either of these events, none of the white countries attempted to dominate the proceedings on the pretext that their economic development, their political experience or their longer independence gave them any superior wisdom in the solution of new problems. One sensed that at this meeting the participants were equal members; no one pretended to possess all the problems, no one claimed to have all the answers. The 88 contributions to the debates on the five agenda items were remarkably evenly distributed around the conference table.

There is a well known tradition at Commonwealth conferences, Mr. Speaker, which denies to members the right to discuss, without consent, matters affecting the domestic policies of another member, or matters of solely bilateral interest. It is this rule which prevents the meeting being employed as a forum to the particular advantage, or disadvantage, of any single country. It is this rule as well which encourages the participation in general debate of all 28 member states. There is little doubt that in the long run the rule is a wise one. In the short run, it does present a challenge to countries seeking to discuss a problem which, because of its very size, seems to them to be of international, rather than of domestic, implications. At this meeting the Nigerian civil war fell into this category.

The tragedy of Nigeria was mentioned at the conference by Prime Minister Wilson in his opening remarks on the first day. It was the subject of considerable corridor talk and out-of-conference discussions. Though not on the agenda, it was regarded by most delegations—and not least the Nigerian delegation—as of extreme importance.

On Wednesday of last week, at a gathering of heads of government outside of the conference proper, which I attended, the leader of the Nigerian delegation agreed on behalf of his government to enter into fresh talks in London with the rebel representatives, without any pre-conditions to be attached to those talks. He agreed as well that it would be in order for other Commonwealth governments to do what they could to urge the Biafrans to engage in talks on this basis. Before we left London, Canadian officials met with Biafran representatives in an attempt to convince them to do just that. I am deeply disappointed that that attempt was unsuccessful, as were, we understand, the representations of other delegations and of the Secretary General.

I mentioned a few moments ago, Mr. Speaker, that the role and scope of the Commonwealth secretariat were defined with more precision than heretofore, at this conference. The general view as expressed was that the secretariat has an important role to play, but that the Commonwealth should not become over-structured. If I may repeat what I said in London at the conference.

As the Commonwealth grows in number of members it increases in diversity. The common ingredients, which were once the adhesive of membership, are now outnumbered by the unique institutions and practices of so many of the members. Nor, wisely in my view, have any steps been taken to create some artificial adhesive or binder. There is no charter, no constitution, no headquarters building, no flag, no continuing executive framework. Apart from the secretariat, which is a fraction of the size one might expect for an organization which encompasses a quarter of the peoples on this earth, there is nothing about the Commonwealth that one can grasp or point to as evidence of a structure.

Even the use of the word "organization" creates an impression of a framework which is misleading. The Commonwealth is an organism, not an institution—and this fact gives promise not only of continued growth and vitality, but of flexibility as well.

Mr. Horner: Did you say flexibility?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, flexibility.

If this peculiar characteristic of the Commonwealth offers difficulty, as it seems to do, to historians or journalists or persons from non-Commonwealth countries, it is perhaps unfortunate. But surely this unique source of strength should not be surrendered in the name of conformity to accepted institutional practices. The Commonwealth is not a miniature United Nations Organization; the conference is not a decision making body. To attempt to convert it would simply underscore differences of opinion; it would force countries to take sides and to vote against one another. There exist international organizations where this has to be done and where it is done; the Commonwealth is not and should not become a replica of them.

The Commonwealth provides an opportunity for men of good will to discuss with one another, both in plenary session and in the many bilateral meetings, their problems and their hopes for the future; to learn from the wisdom and experience of others. The Commonwealth conference is a forum for men who are as different as God has made them. It is a meeting place where men are able to demonstrate the advantages of dissimilarity, the richness of diversity, the excitement of variety. Is this not what life is all about, to learn, to share, to benefit, and to come to understand?

I think it is. I think Canadians agree with me, for in our own country we exhibit a multiplicity of character a diversity of climate, of topography, of resources, of customs, of traditions, of peoples, which is a segment of the wide world beyond. We accept almost instinctively the view that of the many challenges offered by the 20th century, none is greater than the aspiration of men to live in societies where tolerance and equality are realities. The Commonwealth is a means toward such a goal. To suggest, as some do, that the Commonwealth must be more than a forum for discussion or a clearing house for economic assistance from the few rich nations to the many poor ones, is to miss the vital point of the exercise.

Is Canada any less strong, and less united in understanding because Canadians and their leaders engage in constant dialogue, because the wealthier provinces accept the principle of tax equalization? I think not.

So too in the broader international community of the Commonwealth. Human inequality is a political fact of great potency. The most effective means of reducing the explosive potential of discrimination is to meet other persons as political equals and to assist them toward economic equality. That is what the Commonwealth does. I believe these are useful exercises. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I assured the London conference that Canada firmly supported the Commonwealth principle.

In this brief resumé I have purposely not catalogued many of the matters discussed at the conference for these are dealt with in the communiqué issued at its conclusion and may more conveniently be found therein. I should now like to table the communiqué in English and in French. If hon. members agree, the communiqué might be printed as an appendix to Hansard, as has been done on previous occasions.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For communiqué above referred to, see appendix.]

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: At the close of the Commonwealth conference I went to Rome where, after a most cordial interview at the Quirinal Palace with His Excellency the President of the Italian Republic, Mr. Saragat, I was received at the Vatican by Pope Paul VI.

We spoke of peace in the world, the difficulties of maintaining it, for instance in Vietnam and in Nigeria, and of the importance of promoting it more particularly through the respect of human rights and international aid.

In the course of the conversation, I informed the Holy Father that Canada was considering setting up diplomatic relations with the Vatican. The Pope welcomed the idea, stating that the Vatican would be honoured by such relations. But he added that he would leave it to Canada to decide on taking that initiative.

Pope Paul VI spoke very warmly of Canada, the problems and the tremendous possibilities of which he is well acquainted with. Speaking of our fellow-countrymen, the Holy Father said he was convinced, and I quote:

What unites them is stronger and more important than what divides them.

Statement on Commonwealth Conference

And, speaking of the great cause of peace in the world, he added:

> Your country, Mr. Prime Minister, is basically a pacifist country, and we like to think that it will continue, under your leadership, to bring with authority its precious contribution to so vital a cause to the future of humanity.

After this most cordial interview, I also had the pleasure of conversing with the Prime Minister of the Italian Republic, Mr. Mariano Rumor, and several of his ministers.

Together, we reviewed the international situation. We also talked about the relations between Canada and Italy. In this regard, we noted the real progress that has been accomplished in the last few years, and we expressed the hope that this progress will continue.

That, in brief, sums up that day in Rome.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to begin by saying we all welcome the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) back. We missed him—except I do not think he was ever really very far from sight. I could report to him on the pace of legislative achievement in the house during his absence, but I am sure this would be unnecessary. Undoubtedly he has spent the past week end in his usual blameless way, curled up in front of the fire with a copy of Votes and Proceedings before him, and by now he is well informed as to what has transpired here. By now he is up to date, at least in this sense of the phrase. Possibly, even trendy. In any case, I venture to speak on behalf of parliament and the country in saying how pleased we are that the Prime Minister is back safe and well.

I am pleased, too, that he found the conference useful. However, I do feel it necessary to speak quite frankly here on occasions such as this, because I think we must be frank. Parliament and the country have to consider in a very serious way what has transpired in the course of this conference, and I think the country has the impression, as I have the impression, that never in the history of the Commonwealth has Canada made a contribution less important and less useful than has been made by the Government of Canada in connection with this conference. I do not think any leader of the opposition has ever had occasion in the past to reproach the government of this country in any way in this connection, and, if I may say so, I hope it will not be necessary again. None of us in my party—and I think this applies to every informed person in the country—is under any illusion as to the difficulty of arriving at a consensus among members of the Commonwealth at this conference; but there are things which should be said.

The Prime Minister has spoken about the usefulness of this organism, the British Commonwealth of Nations. the Commonwealth exists as a unique world organization—I refer to it as an organization. It is multi-racial, worldwide, embracing, as the Prime Minister said, about a quarter of the population of the world, bringing together both established and emerging nations of varying views and colours. The Commonwealth has helped maintain international order and understanding and has helped to reduce international tension in the past. Any international organism or institution, whatever one might choose to call it, which serves as a bridge between the races on a worldwide basis is surely of great value today. It has a potential for good both in the present and in the future—I am speaking here in terms only of its minimal potential and not in terms of tradition—and to that extent it is well worth using, well worth preserving, well worth strengthening.

Canada, in the past, has played a leading role in that community. I think it is quite clear that other members of the Commonwealth are disappointed in the lack of Canadian leadership last week. It would not be surprising if there had grown among other members of the world community a concern that Canada might similarly abstain from other international responsibilities that she has heretofore assumed.

While we welcome some of the structural improvements in relations between Commonwealth members to which the Prime Minister has referred, we must recognize with regret that these were due to the initiatives of others. There seems little doubt that the negative attitude of Canada in abstaining from the responsibility of leadership has contributed, I fear, to a weakening of the Commonwealth, and I fear a weakening of its importance as an institution or organism in the modern world.

Secondly, I want to acknowledge the truism that Canada cannot be all things to all people. That is one of those truisms to which the Prime Minister subscribes. Let us then choose the policy areas and objectives and methods that we can pursue with the realistic prospect of making a significant contribution. That truism has the corollary that there are some areas in which we are unusually qualified to contribute. The Commonwealth is one area where we have had a decisive influence in the past.

I am not suggesting that Canada should concentrate exclusively on the Commonwealth role or that we should neglect our responsibilities to the United Nations, to NATO or to any other institution with which we are connected and which is important to world peace. But we do have very significant opportunities to assist in the development of the Francophone communities. The nature of our country enables us to play an important role here. All of these things that are of value not only to us but to international understanding should be explored and pursued.

Our role in the Commonwealth remains of central importance to Canada, not because of historic connections alone but because our service to the Commonwealth in the past has built up a trust and a confidence which it would be wrong to weaken or to waste.

In another forum the Prime Minister has sought to excuse his abstention on the ground that he was a "New boy". He may be a new boy with the Commonwealth, but Canada, sir, is not. In any case I have too much respect for the Prime Minister to find him believable in his self-assumed pose as the innocent abroad.

Canada's failure at the Commonwealth conference—the government's failure on behalf of Canada—has at its root, I think, the same attitude of casual non-involvement and non-commitment that also threatens to become the trademark of the government's response to urgent domestic concerns. At a London press conference the Prime Minister brushed aside suggestions that Canada might have an important role to play in certain mediation efforts, by disclaiming any desire to engage in international heroics or to intervene in the domestic affairs of any nation. I am sure that it was not from any tendency toward heroics that the Prime Minister's predecessor helped bring the Commonwealth through an impasse on Rhodesia on a previous occasion, nor from which the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) took the lead in bringing the Commonwealth to its agonizing decision on the South African question. It was, I suggest, at least partly because these questions threatened the existence and integrity, and therefore the usefulness, of the Commonwealth as an institution.

In referring to Nigeria the Prime Minister told us of the assurance the Nigerian federal authorities gave him that they were willing to meet Biafran representatives, without there being any previous conditions. The Prime Minister expressed regret that efforts to encourage the Biafrans to meet with the Nigerians at the negotiating table have proved fruitless to date. I could not help observing from press reports that the day after the Prime Minister announced that Nigerian federal authorities had agreed to hold discussions with the Biafrans without there being any previous conditions, that same proposal was clearly and emphatically withdrawn by a spokesman from the Nigerian government. I, too, am disappointed that the effort to bring Biafra and the Nigerian federal government together has proved fruitless. I hope that what has been done indicates on our part a firm intention to keep lines of communication open so that Canada may, even if belatedly, play a leading role in alleviating starvation and bringing a measure of peace to that unfortunate country.

It is noteworthy that the United States has recently begun to take initiatives in this field. The sale of four aircraft to the churches and the review by the United States State Department of that country's entire policy toward Nigeria offer a small but perceptible glimmer of hope that the civilized world will accept some responsibility in ending the conflict and suffering in Biafra. Canada has been lax in accepting any responsibility there. One hopes that the government will take advantage of any initiatives taken by the United States or other countries.

I do not claim to be an historian, but I suspect it will be said that in the last week or two Canada for the first time failed to exercise leadership in the Commonwealth; that, as a result, the Commonwealth has suffered; that its importance as a modern worldwide institution has been weakened; and that Canada's potential influence in the world is less now than it was a few weeks ago. Certainly as a result of this conference our position has not been enhanced, but diminished. Canadians and the entire international community will regret this. Let me add, the world does not stand still for the government of Canada. Opportunities passed up are opportunities lost for alleviating the anxieties and problems facing the world, as well as for supporting existing institutions. Mr. Speaker, events in the world do not wait for the Prime Minister's programmers.

The Prime Minister referred to his Vatican visit, indicating he favours an exchange of diplomatic representatives with the Vatican.

He said this despite the understanding we were given that this matter is still under review and that the government has not taken a definite decision on it. If the government should decide to exchange diplomatic representatives with the Vatican it will be following a political step taken by many other countries. While not wishing to carp, I am surprised that the Prime Minister has taken this initiative after having some weeks ago expressed doubts, in an offhand way perhaps, about the usefulness of existing methods of diplomacy. Perhaps his was only a passing doubt. The entire country will await with interest the government's decision on the exchange of representatives with the Vatican.

Finally, may I touch briefly on several matters that have caused me concern. I emphasize that the matter of the coverage of the Prime Minister's personal life by the press is a matter between him and the journalists, and is no concern of mine. But for the Prime Minister to suggest, even in a lighthearted way, that it would be possible in this country for the government to use the police in order that a private vendetta might be pursued, would be to joke in inexcusable taste. As it happens, there was nothing lighthearted about the remark, nor the context in which it was made. So, sir, I cannot take that remark lightly and I must tell the Prime Minister in all frankness that I found his remark deeply disturbing.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I join the Leader of the Opposition in welcoming the Prime Minister home and I tell him that he can be certain that some of the reports to which he apparently took objection did not in any way affect the reputation he has across this country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lewis: He remains the object of pristine purity now, just as he was when he left for London—no more and no less.

I wish it were possible to welcome the Prime Minister's contribution in London, but I am afraid that is not possible. In fact, it is not easy to know what Canada's contribution at the meeting of Commonwealth prime ministers was. I regret to add that after the Prime Minister's lengthy and not very exciting lecture this afternoon about the Commonwealth, we are still in the dark as to precisely where he stood on what issue, and for what reason.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Lewis: I should like to remind the Prime Minister that the question of Commonwealth structure and the desirability of keeping that structure informal was discussed many years ago. There are a good many people in this country, and in this house, who are fully aware that there was general objection to any kind of formal structure to the Commonwealth, and that there was some difficulty even about setting up the Commonwealth secretariat. Therefore the Prime Minister's lecture about the details of this informality this afternoon were both unnecessary and unrevealing. I should have been much more interested in a statement about the relevant issues that plague many Commonwealth members, as well as his statement on where he stands on those issues and what he said about them. It appears that Canada's participation at the recent conference amounts to one big zero.

An hon. Member: A flop.

Mr. Lewis: I happen to be one who was and still is strongly opposed to imperialism. Over the years I have frequently been critical of the activities of the British empire, just as I have criticized other empires. Partly for that reason I, and people sharing my opinions in Canada, Britain and elsewhere, welcomed the emergence of the Commonwealth, because it was an association of free and equal states representing all continents and all races. I spoke about this when we discussed this matter in the house before the Prime Minister left for London.

I was proud of the British government which, under Prime Minister Attlee, immediately after the war embarked on the road to freeing British colonial possessions.

Despite the declaration of a great statesman, a declaration many hon. members will recall, that he was not prepared to preside over the liquidation of the empire the fact is that the British Empire was liquidated. The fact is that a large number of the now free and independent members of the United Nations gained their freedom and independence by action of successive British governments after decades, and in some cases centuries, of struggle.

These new countries gained their independence without the kind of war and destruction which occurred in Indo-China and elsewhere. This is a matter of great pride to all of us associated in the British Commonwealth, and is the important historic development which produced the Commonwealth, and is the important historic development which produced the Commonwealth and made it a useful instrument in the international world.

It has always seemed to me, and it seems to me now, that an informal association of this sort could, if employed imaginatively, make an important contribution toward progress in the relationships between the developed and the developing nations, and in the relations of peoples of different races and colours. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that such an informal association can achieve meaningful results only if it is prepared to confront the real gut issues haunting the new world and members of the Commonwealth.

One of the overriding international facts since the end of the second world war is the challenge to the exclusiveness and complacency of the white club which had previously dominated all international relationships and all international policies.

The new developing nations are still weak and poor economically. They are still uncertain politically, but increasingly they are developing a sense of self-assurance and participation, and are demanding an equal place. In this context a meaningful and frank dialogue, to use the Prime Minister's favourite word, among the heads of the members of the Commonwealth can be of immense value; but as far as our part in the discussions in London was concerned, our part in the dialogue, it was neither meaningful nor frank.

These are the reasons I feel a deep disappointment about the Prime Minister's role at the conference, as that of a non-spokesman. It is again necessary to recall Canada's particular opportunities in this field. From all our contacts and all our reading we know Canada has a special place of trust among the developing nations. We emerged as an independent nation almost a century before them, but we also emerged out of colonial status. We have never an imperial goal or imperialistic intentions. This has given us a special position which we can either use to promote good will, or which we can dissipate by appearing to be insensitive to the problems which worry the new members of the Commonwealth.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), when he was prime minister used Canada's position properly and admirably in the case of South Africa.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: I remind this House of Commons that the right hon. Mr. Pearson used Canada's special position properly and admirably when he represented Canada at the meetings of the prime ministers of the Commonwealth. Through those actions Canada gained stature in the Commonwealth and credit throughout the new world. It is a great pity that the present Prime Minister, who raised so much hope, produced so much disappointment, and played no part of consequence, relevance or importance in the debates which took place.

He was reported to have said that he wished the conference to deal with the problems of the future and give less concern to the difficult problems of the past and the present. May I say, I hope without sounding too unkind, that I have seldom heard or read such a fatuous statement, unworthy of a man of intellect—as if the future descends from heaven in a vacuum unaffected by the past, as if indeed it is possible to think of building a future without removing the ills and the ill will created by the past and persisting into the present.

This attitude of uncommitted dilettantism explains the absence of the kind of commitment to first principles which is essential in dealing with such primeval problems as human equality, with which many sections of the Commonwealth are concerned.

I am not for one moment suggesting that solutions were easy or even that the meeting of Commonwealth prime ministers could have produced them, particularly in view of the informality and the structure of the Commonwealth. But I am saying that a position on Rhodesia which says "Nibmar if possible but not necessarily Nibmar" is a betrayal of first principles and cannot but do damage to the future of the Commonwealth.

If the struggle for equality in Rhodesia should be lost temporarily—if that should happen—at the least let us not be a party to giving Smith the appearance of legality, by supporting a deal which negates solemn assurances previously given by the British Prime Minister and the British government. This seems to me another disastrous application of the theory of quiet diplomacy, another example of irritating ambiguity which makes no one happy except the person who is determined to avoid forthright commitment.

I do not want to take longer than I have, Mr. Speaker, although all of the comments have been rather lengthy today, I feel the same way as the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) does about Nigeria—Biafra. I notice that the Prime Minister in reporting on that point today told us merely about the first undertaking of the Nigerian delegation in London to meet with the Biafrans without pre-conditions, but I presume because he has not yet been brought up to date he failed at the same time to remind the house that the leader of the Nigerian delegation in London had stated the next day that he would not meet with Biafrans to discuss any ceasefire, that he would only meet with them to demand their surrender. That was hardly a readiness to meet with the Biafrans without pre-conditions. I also echo the hope that the Prime Minister will pursue a little more actively than in the past the objective of peace in Biafra-Nigeria.

I believe in the potentialities of the Commonwealth precisely because it is informal, precisely because it reverses the attitude of the empire, precisely because it does represent so many parts of the world. But if the Commonwealth conferences in the future are treated by a leading government like that of Canada in the same innocuous and irrelevant way as was instanced in the last one, then I suggest to you that association in the Commonwealth will become meaningless and frustrating for many of its members; and I remind the Prime Minister and other hon. members that nothing leads faster to alienation and disruption than does frustration. I therefore hope our attitude will change in the future.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, may I say a word about the Prime Minister's report on his visit to Rome. I am sorry to have to carp about this without even expressing the hope that I don't sound carping. The Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) have made a great deal out of the fact that they seek to involve the people of Canada in the review of international policies, and yet here is a very important step, an important step in terms of the Canadian community, and without any warning to the people of Canada, or indeed to members of this house. Without anything but indirect warning, apparently a decision is made and the Prime Minister goes to Rome and says we are anxious to establish diplomatic relations with the Vatican.

It may be a very good idea; but I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that one of the reasons the Prime Minister is reported as having given for that step is certainly the worst possible reason one could present. The Prime Minister was reported to have said that just as we are interested in other French speaking countries, because we have a large number of French speaking people in Canada, so we are interested in some relations with the Vatican because we have a large number of Roman Catholics in Canada. I cannot think of a more irrelevant reason for taking an important international step. If it is useful to have diplomatic relations with the Vatican—as it well may be, because the Vatican is a good listening post and provides us with a good international association of value to Canada in our role in the world—then by all means let us have it, but not on the basis of religious division in Canada or across the world.

The Prime Minister was certainly in one of his less cautious moods when he made that statement, although I am not sure his caution makes me feel happy about the future of my country. Finally I say it is still not too late to have an involvement in this matter, to have participation, certainly by members of this parliament. I am beginning to suspect that the Prime Minister's talk about participation really amounts to an opportunity being presented to him to explain his position rather than a two-way participation; but it is still not too late.

In order to avoid the kind of divisive results which have plagued the unity of our country for so long in various ways, and in order that the step of establishing diplomatic relations with the Vatican may be made on the correct basis without divisive repercussions in Canada, I appeal to the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) to refer this matter to the external affairs committee of this House of Commons for the purpose of study, and hearing from the minister and officials of the department the uniting international reasons that make this representation necessary.

Mr. Speaker, I close the way I started. I welcome the Prime Minister home. With many others in this house and across the country, I am deeply disappointed about his non-representation at the conference so far as Canada is concerned.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I will not repeat the remarks, very accurate for the most part, of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), as well as those of the leader of the New Democratic party (Mr. Lewis). Allow me, however, to express our views on that recent journey.

First, the London reporters were disappointed with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) as we all have been since last June 25. Nevertheless, I congratulate the Prime Minister for being aware of it, since he said, in his opening remarks, that there had been disappointment. Of course, we have been disappointed, but why? Canada would have been proud to see the Prime Minister assert himself as one of the leaders of the 24 heads of government who gathered in London, in order to meet the aspirations of all those people and justify the trust put in him.

But the reaction was entirely different.

It is true that nobody expected that concrete solutions would come out of this conference, but neither was it expected—nor hoped for—that his sliding down banisters, his escapades and his sensational doings would be the main topics discussed about his participation to the conference. This is unfortunate, and one does not know whether to laugh or cry. That is the reaction in our areas. In fact, that is the actual thinking of the people, who are of course awfully disappointed.

The Prime Minister seems to have linked together recognizing both the Vatican and Communist China. In Quebec particularly, people have made the connection. His visit to the Vatican seemed to be one way of making the recognition of China easier to accept.

Of course, we are in favour of the establishment of diplomatic relations with the Vatican, and we have been for years. When I was still a child, members of Parliament were already advocating it in the house. If finally that takes place in 1969, it would be a very normal thing, in my opinion; the Prime Minister could then be commended for it. But if it is a political play to make something else more palatable, such means is, to my mind, somewhat despicable.

Of all the Prime Minister's escapades, I would like to recall the one which impressed me the most, and which was told to me by some government members. We sympathize with the few Liberal members who were given a good beating by the Prime Minister in London itself. We are wondering—and some pointed it out to me—who are the members concerned? We are anxious to hear from the Prime Minister the names of those "undesirables", as he said. According to him, undesirable people found their way into the Liberal party at the time of the election and he added, very candidly, that fortunately, most of them had not been elected. By using the expression "most of them", he meant undoubtedly that some of them were elected.

Therefore we sympathize with those unfortunate members who not only have a sword of Damocles hanging over their head but who are wondering whether they are among that group of undesirables or, more precisely, "bums", as the newspapers reported, and which could be translated freely in French by the word "undesirables". For all these reasons, I sympathize with the Liberals.

Many questions are cropping up after this conference. However, we are happy about the return of the Prime Minister because the way things were going, we were wondering how low the reputation of Canada would sink.

2. Has the government issued instructions concerning the payment of municipal and school taxes by Crown corporations and, if so (a) on what date (b) what is the nature of such instructions?

Questions

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. Payments under the Municipal Grants Act, R.S.C., 1952, c. 182, as amended, by province during the years 1963-64 to 1967-68 were as follows:

Province	Amount of Payment (Dollars)
	1963-64	1964-65	1965-66	1966-67	1967-68
Newfoundland	162,169	76,200	394,332	220,241	209,983
Prince Edward Island	129,573	120,887	171,644	155,377	159,442
Nova Scotia	3,628,011	2,582,672	2,982,208	2,855,309	2,837,334
New Brunswick	779,926	1,573,086	1,254,949	963,472	363,072
Quebec	4,605,709	7,491,881	7,008,359	7,354,395	8,095,850
Ontario	14,441,308	15,452,445	16,814,122	17,452,941	19,337,426
Manitoba	1,882,411	2,259,318	1,980,941	2,014,545	2,541,837
Saskatchewan	943,960	1,005,386	1,151,816	1,164,104	1,218,501
Alberta	2,050,474	2,162,148	1,908,909	2,207,699	2,230,721
British Columbia	2,743,088	2,704,449	2,779,417	3,006,950	3,223,802
Total	31,366,629	35,428,472	36,446,697	37,395,033	40,217,968

2, (a) and (b). Policy statements of a general nature have been given on two occasions as follows: In a statement to Parliament on November 14, 1949 the Minister of Finance explained a new government proposal for the payment of grants in lieu of municipal taxes on properties of federal departments. He also indicated that the federal government would, if Parliament approved the new grant policy for municipalities, authorize its Crown corporations to work out fair and equitable arrangements with the municipalities in which their properties were situated.

On May 15, 1967, following a review by Cabinet of Crown corporation practice concerning grants in lieu of real property taxes, Ministers responsible for Crown corporations were advised of general policies to be followed in respect of such grants. These policies were that Crown corporations should pay full grants in lieu of real property taxes on property which they owned and occupied in respect of municipal fiscal years commencing after December 31, 1968 if they were not already doing so. It was noted that Crown corporations should exercise their own discretion concerning the meaning of full grants in lieu of taxes, but that they should pay in respect of real property tax on a basis generally not less favourable than that provided in the Municipal Grants Act concerning payments on departmental properties and that they should pay in full in respect of local improvement and frontage charges wherever the services financed by such charges brought significant benefit to their properties.

[Mr. Fortin.]

In addition to the foregoing, the government has formulated specific policies concerning grants by particular Crown corporations. For example the National Harbours Board was authorized in 1967 to increase the scale of its grants from a 1965 basis of 50 per cent of the formula contained in the Municipal Grants Act to 62½ per cent for 1966, 75 per cent for 1967, 87½ per cent for 1968 and 100 per cent for 1969 and subsequent years. With respect to government owned railways entrusted to the Canadian National Railways for management, the policy now in effect developed from an undertaking to Parliament by the Minister of Transport on September 8, 1966 in connection with the debate on the motion for second reading of Bill C-231, the National Transportation Act. The Company now pays grants in lieu of normal real property taxes, local improvement charges, business taxes and license fees imposed in lieu of business taxes, subject to certain limitations. Grants in lieu of taxes are not paid in respect of personal or movable property or in respect of property which would be excluded under Section 2(c)(iii) of the Municipal Grants Act such as tunnels, bridges, pole lines and trackage. Local improvement charge grants are not paid in respect of work bringing no significant benefit to Railway property. Business tax grants are subject to a general limitation that the rates and bases used in calculating the grants are not to be such as to discriminate against the Railway either in respect of competing forms of transportation or in respect of business generally.

Other instructions of this nature may be expected in the future as a result of a continuing review of the application of grant policy to particular Crown corporations and to particular circumstances.

9. What is the percentage of persons who completed their courses and found a job in line with the course they took (a) in Quebec (b) in Pontiac?

[Translation]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Number of persons on courses under OTA during the fiscal year 1967-68: Quebec, 41,277; Pontiac, 39.

2. This information is not available since clients do not complete application forms. Authorization for training is made by a manpower counsellor based upon a counselling interview during which individual training needs are assessed in relation to the needs of the labour market.

3. During the 1967-68 fiscal year, payments were as follows:

Quebec
Training Costs	Allowances
$15,171,000	$12,171,000
Pontiac
$21,300	$40,040

4. (a) During the fiscal year 1967-68 training was given in 334 centres in Quebec. The Department of Manpower and Immigration buys places in courses from the Department of Education and the Department of Labour. Course costs may include rent but the amount paid for rent is not separately identified in Departmental records. (b) No courses were organized in Pontiac during the 1967-68 fiscal year; trainees were sent to training centres elsewhere. Our records on course costs do not include details of individual cost grants.

5. While teachers' salaries are included as a component of the cost which the Department will pay to the province, our records do not separately identify the amounts.

6. In calculating the cost of courses, the following costs may be included: salaries and other benefits for instructors, supervisors, administrators, and support staff; materials, tools, supplies and teaching aids; rental of space and equipment; travel of instructors and teachers; maintenance, repair and minor renovations; cost of providing power, gas and water and other services; interest on loans raised for the purpose of providing facilities; depreciation; residences; and provincial administrative costs. Details of the amount paid for each cost component are not separately identified in our records.

7. Courses offered to the public were as follows: (a) In Quebec, Basic educational upgrading—Grades 7 to 11; skilled development courses in 65 trades and occupations; language courses for immigrants; apprenticeship courses in some 30 trades; and upgrading courses in agriculture. (b) In Pontiac, Manpower clients from the constituency of Pontiac were sent to other centres for training on trainee travel grants. Of the 39 trainees, 26 were enrolled in meat-cutting and heavy equipment operator training courses. Of the 41,277 trainees in Quebec, 32,733 were males. Of the 39 trainees from Pontiac constituency, 38 were males.

8. The distribution of trainees by age is as follows:

	Quebec	Pontiac
19 years and under	7.8%	0%
20 to 24 years	30.0%	18%
25 to 44 years	46.5%	82%
45 years and over	10.8%	0%
Age not reported	4.9%	0%

9. The large majority of Quebec clients of Canada Manpower Centres receiving training in the 1967-68 fiscal year entered classes during the winter season. The time lapse since their re-entry into the labour market is of such short duration that accurate details on their improved employability as a result of their training are not available yet. Departmental studies to determine the degree of this increased employability are underway.

COLLECTION OF PROVINCIAL INCOME TAX

Question No. 739—Mr. Gauthier:

1. At the federal provincial conference, held on November 4 and 5, 1968, did the federal government obtain permission from the provinces to collect their income taxes for a period of 5 years?

2. What is the date of the first agreement, did the Province of Quebec agree to it and what was the intended duration of this agreement?

[Mr. MacEachen.]

3. Were there other requests for extensions and, if so (a) on what dates (b) did the Province of Quebec always agree?

4. What percentage of these taxes has Quebec recovered since ratification by the provinces of this agreement (a) on succession duties (b) on corporate income (c) on individual income?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. Those provinces that were parties to the existing tax collection agreements indicated their intention to enter into an amending agreement to extend the collection arrangements for an indefinite period subject to termination by Canada or a province on due notice being given.

2. The first agreements were for a period of five years with effect from January 1, 1962. Quebec did not enter into such an agreement.

3. The agreements were renewed for a further period of two years with effect from January 1, 1967. Quebec did not enter into an agreement.

4. The tax collection agreements do not cover succession duties. The agreements cover the collection of taxes on individual incomes and on corporation incomes.

Quebec has collected her own individual and corporation income taxes at rates determined by that province. During the years covered by the tax collection agreements and to facilitate the provinces imposing their own taxes, the Government of Canada has, since 1961, abated: (a) its individual income tax payable by the following percentage points for the years specified:

	In Quebec	In other provinces
1963	17	17
1964	18	18
1965	44	21
1967 and subsequent years	50	28

(b) its corporation income tax rate by the following per cents for the years specified:

	In Quebec	In other provinces
1962-66	10	9
1967 and subsequent years	10	10

The larger abatements to Quebec were associated with contracting out arrangements. The larger abatement in the individual income tax field was associated with youth allowances and the shared cost programs specified in Schedule I of the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act. The larger abatement in the corporation income tax field was associated with the grants to universities.

While there are no tax collection agreements with respect to succession duties, the Government of Canada has abated the federal estate tax in provinces that imposed succession duties by 50 per cent up to March 31, 1964, and by 75 per cent subsequent to that date. If a province did not wish to raise its own taxes to take advantage of the increased federal abatement effective April 1, 1964, the Government of Canada offered to make a cash transfer equivalent to the value to the province of the 25 per cent increased abatement. Quebec did not choose to increase its succession duties. In consequence, the federal estate tax has continued to be abated by 50 per cent in that province and, in addition, a cash transfer equivalent to the value of the additional 25 per cent has been paid to Quebec.

CANADIAN BOX CARS ON U.S. RAILWAYS

Question No. 837—Mr. Diefenbaker:

How many boxcars of (a) Canadian National Railways (b) Canadian Pacific Railway were in the United States on September 1, 1968, October 1, 1968, November 1, 1968, and November 21, 1968 respectively?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Canadian National Railways:

	Box Cars in United States	Number of such Cars suitable for Grain Loading
September 1, 1968	9,783	3,266
October 1, 1968	10,138	3,688
November 1, 1968	11,184	4,730
November 16, 1968	11,573	4,760
Canadian Pacific Railway:
September 1, 1968	5,598	*20%
October 1, 1968	6,681	20%
November 1, 1968	7,722	20%
November 21, 1968	8,110	20%

*Canadian Pacific unable to produce such a figure from their records. 20 per cent is an educated guess of the average number of C.P. box cars on U.S. lines suitable for grain loading.

APPOINTMENT OF AIR CANADA OFFICIALS

Question No. 905—Mr. Diefenbaker:

Was the Board of Directors of Air Canada acting on the recommendation of the government in the appointment of (a) the President (b) the Chairman of the Board, of the Corporation?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The appointments were made by the Board of Directors following liaison and discussion with the government as the ultimate shareholder pursuant to normal corporate practice.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE
PRESS RELEASES

Question No. 934—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

RECOMMENDATIONS FROM RESOURCES FOR TOMORROW CONFERENCE

Question No. 966—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

Were any recommendations made at the "Resources for Tomorrow Conference" held in Montreal a few years ago and, if so, what was each such recommendation and what action has the federal government taken with respect thereto?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): There was a large number of recommendations and suggestions made at the Resources for Tomorrow Conference held in 1961. These may be found in "Resources for Tomorrow, Volume 3", the Proceedings of that Conference.

It would be impossible to spell out all the actions the federal government has taken with respect thereto. The government's responses have pervaded the research, planning and development of programs of the various departments responsible for renewable resources, and has influenced the organization of the government's departments, interdepartmental institutions, and federal-provincial institutions.

FORCED RETIREMENTS FROM DEPARTMENTAL ADJUSTMENTS

Question No. 975—Mr. McIntosh:

1. Is it government policy to permit the forced retirement of civil servants in connection with departmental adjustments such as the current amalgamation of the Departments of Industry and of Trade and Commerce and, if so, under what authority is such action taken?

2. If pre-mature or forced retirement is resorted to in such circumstances, what are the criteria for selection of civil servants to be thus designated?

3. Does bilingual ability or the lack of it have any part in determining civil servants who are slated for compulsory retirement?

4. In such cases is any form of special retirement allowance, augmented pension or other compensation offered the civil servant forced out of the Public Service and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): 1. When employees are displaced as a result of departmental adjustments, it is Government policy to arrange wherever possible for the reallocation of these employees to vacancies elsewhere in the Public Service that have arisen as a result of attrition, the introduction of new programs, or the expansion of existing programs. This reallocation may be accompanied by retraining programs, assistance in removal expenses or both. Only as a last resort is there a form of "forced retirement".

Under Section 29 of the Public Service Employment Act "forced retirement" is authorized by subsection (1) which reads as follows:

"29(1) Where the services of an employee are no longer required because of lack of work or because of the discontinuance of a function, the Deputy Head, in accordance with regulations of the Commission, may lay off the employee".

The government policy in connection with the departmental reorganization announced by the Prime Minister on July 12, 1968, which included the amalgamation of the Departments of Industry and Trade and Commerce, was explained in a Circular released jointly by the Treasury Board and the Public Service Commission on July 26, 1968. This Circular, in describing a program designed to ease the impact upon employees whose jobs are eliminated by the reorganization, stated that it is expected that in most cases reassignment will be possible.

2. and 3. The selection of employees to be laid off is determined according to their reverse order of merit as specified in Section 34 of the Public Service Employment Regulations.

4. In addition to pension entitlement under the Public Service Superannuation Act, an employee who is laid off from the Public Service is eligible for a form of special retirement allowance. This takes the form of "retiring leave" under the provisions of Section 43 of the Public Service Terms and Conditions of Employment Regulations under the Financial Administration Act. Retiring leave is earned at the rate of one week for each year of service up to a maximum of 26. Upon the request of the employee this retiring leave may be paid in the form of a gratuity. In the case of those Public Service employees for whom collective agreements have already been signed there is a provision for severance pay which replaces retiring leave or the gratuity, but is similar in value to the employee.

BAY ST. LAWRENCE, N.S.—ENROLMENT FOR ENGINE COURSE

Question No. 1,089—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys):

1. Has the Minister of Manpower and Immigration received a number of letters from fishermen in the Bay St. Lawrence, N.S., area, to the effect that they have been prevented from taking an engine course organized under the local Manpower Office because all those selected for the course are employees of one employer, Victoria Co-Operative Fisheries?

2. Will the Minister take steps immediately to set up an additional course for those excluded from the first course?

3. Will he take steps to ascertain why all of those enrolled in the present course were taken from the same organization and why others were excluded and will he investigate charges that favouritism has been shown in the selection of candidates?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Correspondence has been received from one person. In addition, I received verbal representations and discussed the problem with those concerned while visiting the area early in December 1968.

2. Some time prior to the asking of Question 1,089 steps to set up an additional course were already taken. Arrangement of this course was hampered by the fact that only one mobile trailer classroom for a course in engine repair is available from the Province of Nova Scotia. However, we were able to purchase places in a second course in nets and gear repairs which started on January 6 in Dingwall. Most, if not all, of those who were not referred to the first course are enrolled in this one.

3. A thorough investigation was carried out some weeks ago and it was determined that no favouritism was involved in the referral of persons to the first course. The course could only accommodate a maximum of ten people who had to be selected from a total of seventeen applicants. This, of course, meant that selective criteria had to be used to ensure that those candidates who could most benefit from the training would be chosen. I am advised that referral was made after consideration of such matters as the individual's need for training, his ability to benefit from it, the date of his application for it, marital status, number of dependents and, in one case veterans preference. Records show that most, if not all, of those omitted from the first course applied for training within a few days prior to the start of this course.

4. How many companies or individuals had a loss written off by Industrial Development Bank, what is the name of each company or individual and where was each located in Canada and what was the amount of write-off in each case and why was the amount written off?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. The Industrial Development Bank Act assigns to the Board of Directors the responsibility of managing the Bank, including matters relating to the recovery from debtors of amounts owing.

2. The record of amounts written off, by fiscal years, is given on pages 28 and 29 of the IDB Annual Report for the fiscal year 1968.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I do not know why it is that simple questions cannot be answered, unless the Secretary of State is adopting the attitude toward the house that he adopts toward members in refusing regarding current matters to reply to letters for two months. On November 19, I placed on the order paper question No. 803 regarding the opening in Saskatoon of an office for the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang). This two-month delay indicates an arrogant disregard for parliament. The answer should be available. I ask the Secretary of State to give more attention to these matters than he has in the past, and I refer particularly to the way he delays in answering correspondence.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

KICKBACKS IN PURCHASE OF U.S. FILMS—REQUEST FOR APPEARANCE OF MISS LAMARSH BEFORE STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State whether he has now had an opportunity to consider the statements made by Miss LaMarsh regarding alleged kickbacks in connection with certain films, and the exercise of undue control of Radio Canada by separatists, and reference of this subject by the former president of the corporation to the former Prime Minister? Has the Secretary of State had an opportunity to familiarize himself with these charges and has he made any decision as to what he intends to do? Will he inform the house as to what action he proposes to take?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, when the Leader of the Opposition first asked this question, I answered him that one could, of course, initiate inquiries only if there were sufficient details concerning the charges made.

Now, I can tell him that as regards the first question which he seemed concerned about, namely an accusation to the effect that the CBC president, before submitting to the CBC Board of Directors a report that he himself had asked for, had allegedly deleted or suppressed parts pertaining to kickbacks in the buying of films, this accusation was precise enough for the C.B.C. and myself, on my own authority, to check whether it was true or false. Now, we have contacted four out of seven of the authors of the first report—two others have died since and the third could not be reached—and our investigation showed that the former C.B.C. president (Mr. Ouimet) could not have falsified this document by deleting from it this kind of accusations, since the writers assured us that the said report never mentioned any kickbacks, scandals, or films, taken or not, that might have been stolen, as reported in Miss LaMarsh's book. The report did not even mention such things, but was entirely devoted to the C.B.C. organization or rather, I should say, to the line of authority chart within the C.B.C. This charge, precise enough for us to investigate, proved to be entirely false and groundless, since it was impossible for the president of the C.B.C. to have done what Miss LaMarsh accused him of.

As regards the other accusations, they seem to me extremely vague, or they are not real charges, but strictly references to facts of which the interest must be assessed in 1969. I must say that this question, both for the C.B.C., as far as they are concerned, and for the minister, as far as he is concerned, is still being examined.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee on broadcasting whether he would consider requesting Miss LaMarsh to attend the committee to substantiate or elaborate on the charges she has made in public, in order that the committee will have an opportunity to settle this matter for the benefit of the people of Canada and also for the benefit of the C.B.C., which now stands under some suspicion? Will the chairman of the committee entertain such an investigation?

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to refer this matter to the subcommittee on agenda and procedure for discussion, and perhaps report back to the house.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether he has directed any questions by correspondence or otherwise to Miss LaMarsh to seek clarification of the statements she has made other than those facts received in a privileged position?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I have not written any personal letter to Miss LaMarsh, but I have had several opportunities to say on radio and on television that we would inquire into any charges sufficiently precise.

I suppose that owing to the great interest shown by this author for the C.B.C.—she has written a very long chapter on the subject—she must sometimes listen to the news on radio and look at TV. She certainly knows that we are anxious to read any precise charge that she may not have published, but that she could substantiate. We will conduct an inquiry as soon as she makes any precise charges.

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in view of the statements made over the week end by the parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs in respect of separatists in the C.B.C. and Radio Canada, along the lines of statements made by Miss LaMarsh, is the minister looking into the question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows he cannot refer to statements made outside the house—I was going to say by ordinary members but I will not do so—by members other than cabinet ministers.

Mr. Orlikow: May I rephrase my question. Is the Secretary of State prepared to ask the chairman of the standing committee to request that Miss LaMarsh bring any information she has about separatism in Radio Canada to the committee?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: I have already stated, Mr. Speaker, that I considered the standing committees of the house as organizations serious and responsible enough to determine themselves their course of action when Parliament entrusts them with a mission.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

WATKINS REPORT—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PROTECT ECONOMIC INDEPENDENCE

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The other day I asked the then Acting Prime Minister a question, and it has since been drawn to my attention that perhaps the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is responsible for some part of my question. I refer to the question whether or not he has prepared or is preparing amendments to the Canada Corporations Act or other relevant legislation to deal with foreign ownership of Canadian industry in relation to the question of protecting Canada's economic independence?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it was announced in the Speech from the Throne that I would be introducing amendments to the Canada Corporations Act. I have subsequently said I will be introducing amendments to deal with corporate disclosures. These amendments are in the process of being drafted and approved. During that process we have before us a number of very excellent and helpful reports, some from the province of Ontario. We have before us the excellent report of the joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons on prices, and its comments on corporate disclosure. We also have the Watkins report which indicated, and I paraphrase it, that Canada should leave no stone unturned to create greater public disclosure in Canada.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I was certain the minister would agree that the report of the joint committee on consumer prices of the House of Commons and Senate was a good report. I suspect he wrote part of it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): After all, he was the chairman.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, he was the chairman. I would like to ask the minister whether his amendments in any way affect such problems as the policies to be pursued by Canadian subsidiaries of United States multinational firms in terms of sending assets or money back to their parent companies, or the policies that may be pursued with respect to foreign trade and the like, or are the amendments limited to disclosure only?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, some of the matters the hon. member raises could not properly be covered in a companies act or a corporations act. The amendments I will be drawing and introducing will be concerned solely with the legal framework within which companies in Canada operate, and more specifically those that receive letters patent under the Canada Corporations Act.

POSSIBILITY OF STRIKING OUT PART DEALING WITH ABORTION

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DIPLOMATIC EXCHANGE WITH THE VATICAN—POSSIBILITY OF DISSENSION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the question I am about to direct to the Prime Minister is a personal one. It has to do with references to providing representation to the Vatican. I might point out that I am the only member of this house who has had the the honour of two audiences with Popes, one with Pope John and one with Pope Paul.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I realize there are arguments on both sides, but does the Prime Minister not realize that Prime Minister King, Prime Minister St. Laurent, Prime Minister Pearson and myself took the stand that if the action were taken of sending a representative to the Vatican it would split this country? Does he not realize, on the basis of the arguments advanced today by the hon. member for York South, that taking this action will bring about a division in this country serious and tremendous in its import?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure that the right hon. gentleman's question is personal but it is certainly argumentative. However, in view of the interest in the matter the Prime Minister might want to reply.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): If you wish, Mr. Speaker. If the right hon. gentleman is right in saying that it will split this country right down the middle, I think the course of the government would be not to exchange representation with the Vatican. But I have cause to doubt his diagnosis of the country's temper on this matter.

SPORTS

NATIONAL HOCKEY LEAGUE—POSSIBLE TRANSFER OF OAKLAND FRANCHISE TO BUFFALO

Mr. Ray Perrault (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Is the government contemplating any action in view of the fact there are strong indications that the National Hockey League board of governors are prepared to approve transfer of the Oakland franchise to Buffalo, contrary to their previous pledge to approve Vancouver as the site of the next N.H.L. franchise?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure how urgent this matter is but I sense that hon. members would want the minister to reply.

Mr. Baldwin: Get the minister out of the penalty box.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my view of some of the past actions of the governors of the National Hockey League is a matter of public record. I have stated that I have no evidence that they have acted in the Canadian interest in the matter of expansion or transfers. I would hope that with regard to the Oakland franchise they would take action to demonstrate to me and to the people of this country that they are concerned about hockey in Canada and about having more than two National Hockey League teams in Canada.

My colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, has a Task Force which may well recommend some action with regard to the National Hockey League. The Economic Council of Canada will soon be reporting on the Combines Investigation Act and recommending amendments to that act. I hope that by the time I have to deal with amendments to the Combines Investigation Act the governors of the National Hockey League will have demonstrated to me that they need not be included within that act or in some other national or bi-national regulation of professional sport.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

H.M.C.S. "BONAVENTURE"—ALLEGATIONS REGARDING OVERCHARGES IN REFITTING

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that aspersions have been cast on the involvement of members of the public service, more especially those associated with the Department of Defence Production, in the refit of H.M.C.S. Bonaventure, can the Prime Minister inform the house what action the government intends to take in this regard?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the incident to which reference is made. I will have to look it up.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has said he is not aware of this incident. If he would read today's newspapers he would find statements—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member can only ask questions; he cannot give facts to the house.

Mr. Coates: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, a most important matter that casts reflection upon every civil servant in this country has been bandied about not only in the Canadian press but in the international press, and the Prime Minister informs this house that he is not even aware of it. Surely to goodness—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not a question of privilege. It may be a subject of distress to the hon. member but it is not a question of privilege.

Mr. Coates: It is not distress, Mr. Speaker; it is complete frustration.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Although the question was put to the Prime Minister, having regard to the information just given by the hon. member and the fact that this matter is within the knowledge of the Minister of Justice, would he be prepared to say whether an investigation is now being carried out by his department in reference to these serious charges? If there is such an investigation taking place, have any charges been laid to date against anyone, including Canadian officials or other citizens or people in other lands?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, this matter was recently brought to the attention of the Canadian public—

An hon. Member: Not all of it.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —as a result of a court case in western Germany. The Prime Minister was out of the country at the time. Allegations of fraud involving certain defence contracts made with Cardinal Engineering and Machinery Company Limited of Montreal were investigated by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and referred to the Department of Justice as long ago as August of 1965. Pursuant to that, on January 12, 1966, a member of the R.C.M.P. swore out an information against Remus Rodaru and Cardinal Engineering and Machinery Company Limited. The information contained some 13 counts of defrauding the government of Canada of various sums of money contrary to section 323 of the Criminal Code.

In late August of 1966 the prosecution was terminated by the local crown attorney, it falling, of course, under the administration of justice within the provincial sphere, largely because of difficulties in obtaining evidence from Germany that would support the case. In that regard, evidence from a man, Erhardt Junkers, was regarded as necessary but it was found it could not be obtained in an acceptable form.

Following the termination of the criminal proceedings it was decided to recover, if possible, from Cardinal Engineering and Machinery Company Limited certain sums of money that were felt to be in excess of the fair and reasonable cost of performing the contracts, and on January 6, 1967, the Minister of Industry made an order for this purpose under section 21 of the Defence Production Act. By virtue of that order, Cardinal Engineering and Machinery Company Limited was directed to pay to the Receiver General the sum of $111,643.66.

On February 8, 1967, Cardinal Engineering and Machinery Company Limited gave notice of its intention to appeal that order and the direction of the Minister of Industry to the Exchequer Court of Canada. The matter is now pending before that court. The testimony of Erhardt Junkers in Germany will have to be scrutinized, as it is now being scrutinized, in order to see whether it contains any facts that might have a bearing on the legal proceedings now pending or that may influence the government of Canada to reinstitute proceedings in this country.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question. I appreciate the minister's frankness in this matter, but as soon as he receives that information from the German legal officer in that particular area, would he be prepared to make a further disclosure to the House of Commons as to what will be the situation so far as the Department of Justice is concerned?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will certainly be prepared to do that, perhaps when my colleague, the Minister of Defence Production, returns to the house. We will certainly keep the house informed of any new facts in the situation.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Justice. Can the minister elaborate and say whether the proceedings in Montreal were terminated by the Crown not calling further evidence, resulting in the dismissal of the charges, or were the proceedings simply adjourned and no further evidence called?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. member is an authority on current proceedings—

Mr. Nielsen: I have to be.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I have said that Crown counsel found that the case could not successfully be proceeded with because of shortage of evidence for the reasons I have outlined to the house.

Mr. Nielsen: The minister did not understand my supplementary question, I am sure. Was it simply by way of a stay of proceedings which would permit the Crown to reinstitute proceedings, or is this precluded now by reason of the fact that the case was dismissed?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will have to look into the matter a little more closely.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

POSSIBLE INCREASE IN OLD AGE SECURITY BENEFITS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of last week's federal-provincial conference of welfare ministers and in view of various speeches, statements and press releases that the minister has been issuing, will he at an early date make a statement to the house as to the government's intentions regarding pensions, allowances, the guaranteed annual income, and so on? Can he also state at an early date whether it is the government's intention this year to increase the basic amount of the old age security pension?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as has been indicated several times by the Prime Minister, by the Minister of Finance and by myself in the house, this whole matter is at present under review by the government. When that review will be completed and what firm conclusions we will reach at that time will be announced to the house in the normal course, but it is going on now and it is difficult to say just how soon it will be completed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does that review include a study of the possibility of increasing the basic amount of the old age security pension?

Mr. Munro: It is a factor which will be included in the review.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INDIAN AFFAIRS—POSSIBILITY OF WITHDRAWAL BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT FROM WELFARE PROGRAM

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question arises from the same conference and is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. Arising from the reports that the provincial governments are not willing to provide welfare service to Indians because of the fear that the federal government might withdraw from the program once it is established, is the Prime Minister in a position to assure the provincial governments that the federal government will not withdraw support unilaterally from such a program?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Of course, Mr. Speaker, the kind of unilateral action to which the hon. member refers is not one the government would take. I would not want to speak for the minister responsible for Indian affairs. His policy on this particular point is being presented to the government. I cannot say what negotiations he has embarked upon with the provinces, but whatever they are it will not be done unilaterally.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In the proposal made by him to the provinces that they take over welfare services for the Indian people, which are now the responsibility of the federal government, did he propose to the provinces that the federal government was prepared to pay only for 85 per cent of existing welfare programs or did he propose that the federal government was prepared to pay the full amount now and in the future?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The proposal was to bring the Indians to whom the hon. member is referring under the provisions of the Canada Assistance Plan but under a different cost-sharing arrangement which, depending on the province involved, would range from 85 to 97 per cent of the cost. Hopefully it would diminish over the years as the rehabilitation features of the Canada Assistance Plan took effect.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Did the minister give the provincial ministers an assurance that there would be no possibility of a unilateral withdrawal from this program if it was agreed to?

[Mr. Munro.]

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, I think the majority, if not all, of the welfare ministers were aware that discussions had gone on between the federal and provincial finance ministers as to cost sharing and, if there was a withdrawal, whether tax points would be given up by the federal government and so on, and that all this was in a state of negotiation in terms of the constitution and federal-provincial relations. So that it was not really pertinent to our discussion inasmuch as these discussions have been going on at other levels so far as the whole picture is concerned with regard to the cost-sharing programs that we have.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PUBLICATION OF EXCHEQUER COURT RULES

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I recently asked the Minister of Justice whether the rules of the Exchequer Court would be translated into French, and I was told that the new bilingual edition was expected to be published early in 1969. Is the Minister of Justice in a position to indicate the approximate date of publication, in French and English, of the rules of the Exchequer Court?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Within a few weeks, Mr. Speaker.

GRAIN

VANCOUVER, B.C.—POSSIBILITY OF CO-ORDINATING COMMITTEE TO RELIEVE CONGESTION

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, in the light of the very serious problem of grain congestion at the port of Vancouver, can the minister advise the house whether the recent suggestion to set up a Vancouver co-ordinating committee in the grain trade has been carried out?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce announced to the house that some meetings had been arranged and indeed meetings have been held in Vancouver of what is in effect a subcommittee of the overall co-ordinating committee involving the grain companies, the Wheat Board, the transportation companies and the terminal operators.

Mr. Southam: I have a supplementary question. Can the minister say how effectively this committee is working to resolve the very difficult situation which exists at the port?

Mr. Olson: That would be a matter of opinion, and we usually deal only with facts.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the one asked by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain. In the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce may I ask the Minister of Agriculture whether any investigation is being made into the feasibility of diverting at least some of the ships now waiting at Vancouver to the ports of Prince Rupert and Seattle? Carloads of dry grain might also be diverted to those ports for loading on such ships. Has any consideration been given to this?

Mr. Olson: I am not sure whether consideration has been given to that specific proposal but I know there was a meeting in Winnipeg of the co-ordinating committee, attended by many other people in the grain industry, at which an attempt was made to find the best solution to the congestion problem at Vancouver so that the ships in the harbour can be loaded.

PERMITS TO MOVE DAMP GRAIN ACROSS PROVINCIAL BOUNDARIES

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce but in his absence, I will direct it to the Minister of Agriculture. Is he or the Wheat Board considering the granting of permits for the movement of damp grain across provincial boundaries, without it going to the Wheat Board, to facilitate the movement of damp grain which, if it is not utilized before spring, will be completely spoiled?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have had a large number of representations to this effect and we have had an equally large number of representations from people who do not wish to see a relaxation in the movement of feed grain over provincial borders. The fact is that this does give an advantage to those people living near feed mills adjacent to provincial borders. Therefore it seems that the most equitable way of sharing the over-all market among all the producers who have tough and damp grain, no matter where they live on the prairies, would be through the Canadian Wheat Board.

Mr. Horner: My question dealt with the granting of permits to individual farmers and in that way allowing the Wheat Board to keep track of the movement of damp grain and the prices at which it is moving. I would like the minister and his department to consider the feasibility of granting permits similar to those that were granted to feed mills to purchase feed grains in western Canada.

Mr. Olson: If there is some novel idea with respect to this matter that would be useful, without giving a larger share of the available market to some producers at the expense of others, I would be very interested in having the hon. member pass that information to us.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR POSITION PAPERS ON FOREIGN POLICY

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs whom I should like to welcome back to Canada. Could the minister tell us whether the position papers upon which certain academics were invited to comment in connection with a reassessment of Canada's foreign policy can be made available to members of the external affairs committee of this house?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I see no objection, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, if any members of the house would like to have copies I would be glad to supply them on request.

IMMIGRATION

POLICY RESPECTING REFUGEES FROM COMMUNIST COUNTRIES

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Has there been any change in government policy since the present ministry was formed in connection with the admission of refugees from communist countries seeking political asylum?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking for a statement of policy and I suggest this is not in order during the question period.

Mr. McCleave: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I directed this question to the Prime Minister some weeks ago and he suggested I should ask it of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. I believe it is of some urgency. It could be answered simply by a "yes" or "no".

Mr. Speaker: If the minister wishes to answer "yes" or "no" I might allow the question.

WOMEN

REQUEST FOR INFORMATION CONCERNING PRESENTATION OF ROYAL COMMISSION REPORT

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State or the appropriate minister. Could the hon. gentleman advise the house when the report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women will be available? It appears to me that although spokesmen for many women throughout the country have given some indication of the existing inequalities which affect their lives, the evidence includes many submissions which affect all facets of Canadian life involving men, women and children.

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to inquire into this matter and report to the house.

COMMUNICATIONS

BRIEFS IN OPPOSITION TO BELL TELEPHONE RATES INCREASE

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): May I take this opportunity to reply to a question asked on Friday by the hon. member for Broadview. I think I should state the following on behalf of the Postmaster General, who is still indisposed.

No brief, by or on behalf of the government, has been filed with the Canadian Transport Commission in connection with Bell Canada's application for approval of certain tariff adjustments. The commission is a quasi-judicial body with the power to make decisions on applications of this nature, pursuant to legislation passed by this parliament. In making its decisions the commission is obliged to ensure that all tolls shall be just and reasonable, and has the power to obtain such information as it deems necessary for these purposes.

It is my understanding that several parties have filed briefs in opposition to the Bell application and that these parties may be heard as well as the company.

Beyond this, the Governor in Council has specific optional powers and responsibilities provided for in legislation. These powers include the ability to vary the commission's decisions and to handle appeals. If, after the commission has determined this particular case, it should develop that government initiative is desirable, hon. members can rest assured it will be fully considered and appropriate action taken.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

REQUEST FOR NAME OF NEW CHAIRMAN

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister of the Crown who answers to parliament for the operation of the Atlantic Development Board. In view of the fact that the term of office of the present chairman of the board expires on Friday of this week, and since under the act he is not eligible for reappointment, can the minister tell the house whether a decision has been made with regard to a new appointment and, if so, who the new chairman is to be?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, no one has been appointed to replace him. That matter will be discussed at the cabinet meeting this week.

OFFICE OF THE PRIME MINISTER

POSSIBILITY OF DROPPING REGIONAL DESK SYSTEM

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, now that the Prime Minister has returned from his far-flung foreign adventures, is it his intention to drop the regional desk system which has been described by one Liberal backbencher as a high class patronage system?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Paproski: May I ask what is wrong with that question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: I can see many things wrong with that question. First of all, I do not think the hon. member is referring to a matter which is under the administrative responsibility of the Prime Minister. I have serious doubts about its being in order. However, if the hon. member thinks it is urgent and wishes to attempt to place it on the order paper, I might have a closer look at it then.

RURAL DEVELOPMENT

ARDA—ONTARIO—CUT-OFF OF DRAINAGE FUNDS

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. In the light of all the submissions received by western Ontario members from municipalities in connection with the cut-off applied to ARDA funds for drainage, does the minister intend to hold further negotiations with the provinces in an effort to alleviate the present difficulties produced by the lack of assurance that further funds will be provided by the federal government?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, as you know, under the ARDA program the provinces make recommendations to the federal government which approves them.

With regard to the particular case mentioned by the hon. member, I shall look into the matter; I might be able to give more information to the house sometime later on.

[English]

Mr. McKinley: Could the minister not assure these people that at least the original commitment of a five-year period given to the provinces in this respect—I believe there is one more year to go—will be respected?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, to my mind it would not be wise to give at this time an assurance with regard to something I am not fully familiar with.

I shall look into the matter and within the next few days I will probably be able to give a more complete reply to the hon. member.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BIAFRA—SITUATION FOLLOWING STATEMENT OF CHIEF AWOLOWO—DAYTIME RELIEF FLIGHTS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): My question is to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In view of the seeming conflict between the statement made last week by the Prime Minister and the statement made by Chief Awolowo that there would be no negotiation in the absence of certain preconditions, can the right hon. gentleman clear up the position of the Nigerian government in connection with the situation in terms of his own announcement last week?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to attempt to do so. I believe the confusion which arose in the understanding of some members of the opposition derived from the fact that Chief Awolowo did give a commitment to certain heads of delegations in London that he would meet while in London, without any conditions, representatives of the Biafran regime. The further statement to which reference has been made was relevant to meetings which might be held at some future time back in Nigeria or elsewhere. The chief was stating that while in London he would be prepared to meet, without any preconditions, the representatives of the Biafran regime. In the event, the representatives of that regime refused to meet with him at that time.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Are we to understand that Chief Awolowo attached a fuse to his commitment at that time? Now that the Canadian representatives have been talking with Biafran officials I wonder whether they are in fact only considering the possibility of cease-fire discussions or whether they have attempted to clear up some of the communications difficulties which have existed with regard to possible daytime relief operations in that part of Africa?

Mr. Trudeau: Did the hon. member ask whether he had attached a fuse? I am afraid I do not see the significance of that question.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): As to the second part of the question with regard to the possibility of daylight relief operations in Biafra, have discussions been held?

Mr. Trudeau: The position as we learned it in London was the same as we have reported to the house on previous occasions. The Nigerian authorities have agreed to allow daylight relief flights to go through but the Biafran authorities refuse to contemplate such flights.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): On a point of clarification, Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister aware of the lengthy statement that has been made by Colonel Ojukwu and gentlemen of this kind, and has he not received confirmation of the statement from the Biafran authorities in London?

Inquiries of the Ministry

BIAFRA—CURTAILMENT OF ARMS SHIPMENTS NIGERIA

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in connection with the matter we are discussing, may I ask what representations, if any, the Prime Minister made to the British government in connection with curtailing the shipment of arms to Nigeria as a step toward a cease-fire?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I told the British Prime Minister and the British minister of foreign and commonwealth relations what I had said in the house here, that Canada felt it was a mistake for any country to ship arms to this theatre of war. To this I received the answer that the British government has given, I believe, on other occasions; that if they were to agree to any official cessation of arms shipments this would not preclude arms smuggling or arms running, which goes on now. The result of such cessation would perhaps be only to have the unofficial suppliers of arms to Biafra continue shipments, thus piling up arms there.

EXCHANGE OF REPRESENTATIVES WITH VATICAN—REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in connection with a subject discussed earlier on motions, whether he will consider referring the question of the exchange of representatives with the Vatican to the external affairs committee?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the government has no objection if this matter is contained in the terms of reference of the committee.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

INCREASE IN BOX RENTALS

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): I was beginning to worry, Mr. Speaker, in case I had undergone some strange metamorphosis which had possibly rendered me invisible. I have a question for the Acting Postmaster General. Can the acting minister explain to the house why the cheapest form of mail delivery, the post office box, has been doubled in price while the more expensive form of mail delivery to residential letterboxes and rural route boxes pays only the additional postage that is required under the new rates?

[Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is not only visible but also audible, and he should place his question on the order paper in order to make it readable.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA EVIDENCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading and reference to the standing committee on justice and legal affairs of Bill S-3, to amend the Canada Evidence Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the laws governing the admissibility of evidence are of vital importance in the administration of justice. Therefore it is important that these laws and rules of procedure themselves be vital. The provisions contained in the Canada Evidence Act and the evidentiary provisions scattered throughout other statutes of Canada are merely the tip of the iceberg. Canada inherited most of its laws of evidence from the common law of 19th century England, and as a result of a combination of factors, including the doctrine that the courts generally consider themselves bound by prior decisions, by precedent, and that their function is to interpret and apply the law rather than to make it, the general law of evidence in this country has tended to remain as frozen as the iceberg, while the substantive civil and criminal law has been developed largely by statute to keep in pace with changing social conditions.

This year I am initiating a general overhaul of the Canada Evidence Act which I hope will result in major reforms to that statute. In the course of that review I hope to consider whether the broad ends of justice might not better be served by a re-examination of the provisions regarding competence and compellability of witnesses as between husband and wife which are contained in section 4 of the act, whether the law of evidence dealing with confidentiality of communications or privileged communications deserves further examination, and whether accused persons who testify in their own defence should be protected from disclosure of prior convictions in some such way as they are under the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 of the United Kingdom. In short, there are a good many areas of evidence, particularly in the realm of self-incrimination, to which I believe we have to devote a full review of the law based on modern principles.

In the meantime the scope of this particular bill is limited to certain amendments to the Canada Evidence Act which I think ought not to be delayed. The most significant of these I propose to outline very briefly without, I hope, trespassing on the rules of the house.

The bill is designed to remove a completely awkward, rigid and unnecessary limitation in relation to the calling of expert witnesses. The present section 7 of the Canada Evidence Act provides that a party to a legal proceeding may call up to five expert witnesses without obtaining leave of the court. The effect of subsection 2 of this section is that, no matter what the justice of the situation requires as the trial develops, a party is absolutely precluded from exceeding the limit of five expert witnesses if he has not taken the precaution of getting the leave of the court before he called the very first witness. This bill proposes that that limiting subsection 2 be repealed completely. The position will then be that a party will be able to call more than five expert witnesses if he appeals to the court's discretion at any time during the trial.

The bill is also designed to assist the courts in reaching the truth by removing an obvious impediment in the way of a proper assessment of the credibility of witnesses. At present a party who produces a witness is not permitted to prove that the witness had previously made a written or oral statement inconsistent with the testimony that he is giving the court unless that witness, in the opinion of the court, upon the application of the party who has introduced the witness' testimony, is adjudged adverse.

For the benefit of those who do not practice law as a profession, or did not do so before entering the house, I should mention that the word "adverse" here means that a witness has a hostile animus, or a hostile bearing or intent, toward the party who calls him and is not prepared to give his evidence fairly, or with the appropriate desire to tell the truth.

The defect in the present law is that the courts have generally held that in deciding whether or not the witness is adverse they are not entitled to consider any previous statements made by the witness. They have restricted themselves to considering such matters as the demeanour of the witness, the way he is testifying in the court, and so on. The indefensible result of all this is that the highly polished witness, the highly polished prevaricator, frequently dazzles the court into deciding that there is absolutely no justification for holding that he is adverse.

Mr. Baldwin: We see that sort of thing here in the house.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. member for Peace River is trying to divert me into a political rather than a legal context. He has been in court many times, as has the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams). Frequently a witness can convince the court with a razzle-dazzle performance that he is not adverse. The more glib the deception, the less likely the detection.

• (3:50 p.m.)

In these circumstances it is proposed to amend section 9 of the act to empower the court to permit a party to cross-examine his witness as to a previous inconsistent statement, but only if that statement is reduced to writing, so that the court can consider the results of the cross-examination and, on the basis of that previous inconsistent written statement, decide whether the witness in fact is adverse. Such cross-examination would, of course, be limited to that previous written statement. If the court decides the previous statement is not inconsistent with the present testimony, that is the end of the matter. But if there is an inconsistency, then the party who calls that witness may discredit the witness by contradicting him with the statement in question or any other previous oral or written statement, or may establish from the testimony of the witness under oath that all or part of the previous statement represents the truth.

I think hon. members should also observe that the bill extends to other financial institutions the provisions of section 29 of the act which is at present limited to banks. Section 29 derives from the English legislation of the 19th century which was designed to avoid disruption in business affairs from the search, seizure and production of original books and records of banks in legal proceedings. The section, for example, permits the use in court of copies of bank records and provides for proof by affidavit of records and certain other facts. The scope of the section will be extended to financial institutions as defined in the bill.

In addition, a new provision is also added to section 29 of the act. According to a recent decision, bank records and documents are not, except in very limited circumstances, subject to the ordinary search and seizure provisions contained in section 429 of the Criminal Code. The amendment proposed in this bill will authorize search and seizure, provided the warrant is expressly endorsed as not being limited by this section.

Another significant amendment is designed to unfetter the law from some of the unrealistic technicalities which have resulted from the hearsay rule. Traditionally, the general rule has been that assertions of a fact or opinion can only be presented by the person or witness having direct knowledge of that fact in order that the soundness of the presentation and the credibility of the witness can be tested by the court and the adverse party by way of cross-examination. I have stated the general rule broadly in layman's terms and I hope that my definition will meet with the approval of learned counsel in this chamber. There are many exceptions to it which grew up under the common law or were created by statute, and this would provide another exception to the hearsay rule.

A few years ago in England it was held that the court has no power to create or recognize further exceptions to the hearsay rule. This decision, which resulted in legislation in 1965 in England, has been followed in at least two reported cases in Canada. It is therefore apparent that the law in this country has fallen far behind the major changes which the computer age has brought to business methods.

Frequently records are kept either entirely or almost entirely by mechanical means, and in such cases it may be difficult and perhaps impossible to produce a witness to testify to the facts of a particular case, as distinct from testifying about the mechanical system under which transactions or events are recorded. Even in the case of records kept manually it is frequently impossible to trace the person, assuming he is still alive, who made the entries originally in the business records. A useful source of evidence is thereby excluded from the courts. It is little wonder that intelligent laymen conclude that, far from being blind, the goddess of justice is looking the wrong way.

I consider that, in general, the law of evidence should be moving away from the rigid rules of admissibility toward assessment of the cogency of logically relevant facts. If the facts are relevant, what is the best way to introduce those facts without there being any unfairness to either side? Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, this bill would, subject to certain safeguards, render business records as defined in the bill generally admissible and would entrust the courts with the discretion of assessing the probative value of those documents.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the bill provides also a minor but useful amendment which it is hoped will avoid the present confusion and uncertainty that arises where an affidavit on a purely provincial matter is taken in the form provided by the Canada Evidence Act.

The only feature which these amendments have in common is that they would modernize the law by removing outdated, awkward and unjustifiable impediments to the full and convenient disclosure of relevant facts in legal proceedings. I emphasize again that these are only first steps in dealing with the many problems in the field of the law of evidence which I will be considering in the review I have discussed.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, under the new rules we are really discussing a bill which, after the second reading stage, will go to a standing committee to be examined. In that committee we shall have the opportunity to study the proposed changes. I thank the minister for outlining briefly the contents of the bill which are to be studied in committee.

The minister may have some reason for saying a second time that, "I will do certain things in future, one of them being that I shall review the Canada Evidence Act." He has made similar remarks about the Criminal Code. From my reading of a certain article in Maclean's it is evident what changes he contemplates making in the Criminal Code. The changes in the Canada Evidence Act in many ways are analogous to the proposed changes in the code. It seems to me that the best procedure would have been to allow the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to examine the proposed changes in order that the entire Canada Evidence Act could be considered.

Unless the minister has not disclosed everything he ought to disclose I fail to see, after having heard his speech, what the urgency is in bringing about these changes. One amendment deals with hostile witnesses. I will not repeat the minister's definition of a hostile witness, nor will I repeat in what circumstances the court can rule a witness hostile. Yet what will the proposed amendment really do? I think we should look at it carefully. Certainly it will not help the accused. Will it not help the Crown? I am only asking these questions and not prejudging the issue.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The amendment will help both sides.

Mr. Woolliams: Well, I shall discuss that in a moment. As I say, we ought to look carefully at the amendment since in my view it will make the Crown, which already is powerful, more powerful at the expense of the accused. It is well known that in some criminal cases before the courts the accused tenders no evidence. The onus is on the Crown. The defence counsel cross-examines the Crown witnesses and if the Crown has not discharged the onus and established a prima facie case, out goes the charge. Who is really concerned and worried about this? Has the minister had submissions from the local Attorneys General of the various provinces? Has somebody in his department become concerned about prosecutions they will not be able to win because of some weakness?

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Baldwin: Maybe there are some pending now.

Mr. Woolliams: Maybe there are some pending now, as the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has said, and I would not be a bit surprised.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The Canadian Bar Association.

Mr. Woolliams: I know the Canadian Bar Association went a long way. I am not criticizing it, but wait until we come to some of the other amendments. If one happens to be a corporate lawyer one looks at it differently from a Crown counsel. I am not saying that either attitude, in the field of philosophy or of jurisprudence, is right. It is all right for the minister to refer to the Canadian Bar Association, but I am not always complimentary to the associations to which I belong. I do not know if my friends to the left would agree with me but sometimes that association gets a little close to being a closed shop.

I am a little concerned about what will be done after the preliminary hearing of a criminal indictable offence. The police have a very good memory. But in the heat of a trial in the high court, when emotions get a little high, the truth comes out and it is discovered that the Crown has not got as good a case as originally wallpapered. As a result what they want to do is ask whether the witness did not make such and such a statement, and then probably depend on the definition of a hostile witness.

A case may involve prosecution by a layman. We have seen laymen with great imaginations. I remember one case where a lady had been charged with causing a disturbance because she and a boy friend had been a little noisy after taking some liquor in a tent along the Assiniboia river. The question came up whether or not it was a disturbance and in giving his judgment the judge said, "I do not think the complainant was so worried about what she heard and saw as she was about what she did not hear and did not see." It may be that changing this section in this regard is not all that altruistic and commendable. Once again it is building an all-powerful state, an all-powerful Crown against a bankrupt accused. Most of the people who are charged with indictable offences do not belong to the affluent or just society.

The next question I am concerned about is the giving of evidence by affidavit in cases of banking and other financial institutions. I hope the committee will take a sincere look at this amendment. The clause reads:

> Where a cheque has been drawn on any financial institution or branch thereof by any person, an affidavit of the manager or accountant of the financial institution or branch, sworn before any commissioner . . . shall be received as prima facie evidence—

I am always a little concerned about affidavit evidence. I always like to see the right to test the truth retained. The art of cross-examination is testing the truth.

We have all seen affidavits in civil matters. A client goes to a lawyer and completes an affidavit. Then another lawyer draws up an affidavit on the other side of the issue, and one wonders whether the two situations described are identical. The only way to get the right information is to examine carefully the terms of the affidavits, and to do that you might as well examine the persons who have sworn the affidavits. I want to make certain that when changes like this are brought in the right to test the truth will remain so that we can have conformity with the truth and fully verify the indisputable facts. We want honesty, integrity and truthfulness based on recorded information.

The minister may say that banks do not make mistakes. I wish to give an illustration. Two people with identical names were living in the same district. One had $12,000 in a certain bank. I am not going to name the bank because I do not want to spoil their business, but the bank was negligent. The second fellow with the same name had an account in the same bank with $21 in it. The fellow with $21 died. His will was probated. Probably the signatures of the two men were never compared in the bank. The estate got the $12,000 and the fellow still alive was left with only $21. He had not written any cheques for a number of years, but shortly after this occurrence he decided to return to Scotland and wanted to draw out some money for his trip. He then found he had only $21 in his account instead of $12,000. The mistake had been made by the bank. The conclusion I am drawing is that these great bankers can also make mistakes. Only under cross-examination can such errors be pointed out to a judge or jury, and that is why I am a little concerned about evidence going in by affidavit.

We know that officers of a company can refer to documents. That is the law today. A responsible officer of a company can give certain facts from reviewing certain even hearsay documents and have them admitted either in a criminal or civil case. There are no problems in that regard.

In his speech the minister threw out these amendments to us and made it sound like the proposed changes were coming from heaven. I thought the Crown might have gone a little farther to help out the subject.

I want to refer to a particular case, and I have never been quite sure whether the Exchequer Court has followed the decision laid down. It is the case of the City of Saint John v. Irving Oil Company Limited. What is it all about? It is very important in regard to the law of evidence. The case deals with the expropriation of land.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): What is the citation?

Mr. Woolliams: It is 1966 Canada Supreme Court Reports, at page 592. You will find it down at the bottom of the page. What is this all about? In order to value land that is expropriated you retain expert appraisers to come up with a value. They go out and talk to A, B, C, D and E about sales of similar land in the area under similar circumstances and of similar commercial value. From those discussions they arrive at an opinion as to what the land is worth.

In the last court case I had I was challenged on the ground that although the opinion evidence was admissible it could be disregarded because unless I called A, B, C, D, E, F, G and H—all these people—it would become straight hearsay. But fortunately the judge in that case had made a decision on this matter previously. That is why I am always thankful for the Supreme Court of Canada. The higher the court you go to, the more just it becomes. The judgment says:

> The nature of the source upon which such an opinion is based cannot, in my view, have any effect on the admissibility of the opinion itself. Any frailties which may be alleged concerning the information upon which the opinion was founded are in my view only relevant in assessing the weight to be attached to that opinion, and in the present case this was entirely a question for the arbitrators and not one upon which the Appeal Division could properly rest its decision.

This court really said, "Look, arbitrators and other courts have based their findings on valuations on opinions based on hearsay evidence. They have not scrutinized the hearsay evidence and examined and measured the weight of the opinion evidence for it to become admissible. That may seem quite a mouthful but basically it boils down to this, that I do not want to see that in the statutes. I read this opinion to the judge before whom I appeared and he then became silent. There is nothing worse to a counsel than a judge becoming silent. You do not know whether he is with you, and the final judgment may not be as good as your client anticipates.

Surely in a day when the Crown is reaching out with stronger tentacles to expropriate land for various reasons, a poor subject who has only a little piece of property and has to hire appraisers should not be put to the cost of calling as witnesses all the people who gave various opinions to the appraisers. If someone had an expert who had examined 110 sales in order to come to an opinion on a certain problem he might think it necessary to call all those people. If the Crown were really concerned—and I am sure the Department of Justice is aware of this situation—here is a case where the Crown could move in to help the subject. There is talk about waiving the hearsay rule. Here is one field in respect of which the Canada Evidence Act should be reviewed. I will ask the minister a question before the committee. I understand that ministers become witnesses now. It is nice to find out some of these things.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Would you consider me a hostile witness?

Mr. Woolliams: No. You are one of the ministers who answer questions frankly. This is a case in which the hearsay rule is being set aside. The minister could have gone farther.

Let us take another matter which has bothered lawyers for a long time. A case either is or soon will be before the courts involving a fellow who devised a very ingenious plan to get rich by running a country elevator—of course quotas are low these days—and issuing cash tickets in the name of farmers who never brought in any grain at all. If the farmer did not turn up he then forged the farmer's name. These farmers are being called to give evidence that they did not deliver grain. Many of them do not want to appear. This question has been raised by some criminal lawyers. People who give evidence can incriminate themselves if they do not have the protection of the Canada Evidence Act. The farmer might get up on the stand and say that he met the elevator man on Wednesday, that they were a little dry and wanted to get a bottle of whisky from the liquor store but did not have any money because the government is not increasing quotas, so they devised this plan.

The farmer wants to come in and clear his soul even if he does not clear the elevator man. He might then be charged with conspiracy although he has not made any statement to the elevator man. Basically he is home free while the elevator man is on the griddle, but as soon as he goes on the stand he becomes concerned. He is not really worried so much about the elevator man but is concerned about making a statement which may put him in the same position as the elevator man. If we look at section 5(2) of the act we see that it says:

> (2) Where with respect to any question a witness objects to answer upon the ground that his answer may tend to criminate him, or may tend to establish his liability to a civil proceeding at the instance of the Crown or of any person, and if but for this Act, or the Act of any provincial legislature, the witness would therefore have been excused from answering such question, then although the witness is by reason of this Act, or by reason of such provincial Act, compelled to answer, the answer so given shall not be used or receivable in evidence against him in any criminal trial—

That means in any other criminal trial. Some lawyers have raised this problem. Some judges have also taken the point of view that it refers only to answers to questions. One could get up and say to the magistrate or judge that the witness is about to say something which will likely incriminate him because he wants to make a clean breast of it. He is supposed to tell the truth under oath. In such a case I would ask that all the questions asked and answers given in that sequence of facts not be used in any other criminal case against him or in any civil action by the Crown or by anybody else. That would be doing the job. The special crown prosecutor under the drug act takes the position that in respect of every question and every answer one must ask for protection. Some judges have gone along with this. It would be easy to clarify that by pluralizing and referring to questions and answers.

I mentioned the habit of land valuators, in arriving at land values in the case of sales, of going to various people. I think there should be a clearcut provision changing the hearsay rule in this regard along the lines of the very wise decision of Mr. Justice Ritchie in the Supreme Court of Canada. I am sure this is what he meant, but it could be clarified. This would be a good point to make in respect of evidence of people called on behalf of the Crown or the defence.

In respect of the other matters in the bill I do not see very much change. I agree that we are moving into the age of computers and that computers have their place. But I am concerned about whether we can ever get justice without the human element which is not found in a machine that shoots out facts and comes up with decisions. The fact is that the art of cross-examining a witness to determine whether or not facts will hold up is most important. In this way the judge can look at both sides of the fence.

I recall a murder trial where the police officer had an 11-page statement. I mention this example to show how important cross-examination is. He had an 11-page confession of some type by the accused who was charged with the murder of his wife. The 11-page statement was composed of questions asked by the police officer and the answers by the accused. In cross-examination the police officer was asked whether all the questions asked the accused and all the answers were contained in the 11 pages. He said yes. I then asked the police officer whether it was not strange that although he obtained an 11-page statement he did not once ask the accused, "Did you kill your wife?" The police officer told me that he did ask him but he forgot to put it down. One could become a little concerned about something like that. Then I asked him what the answer was. I could not ask that question before a jury but I could do so at the preliminary hearing because I wanted the worst to come out at that time rather than at the trial. I found that the answer he gave was different from the one he gave at the inquest. Then at the trial by judge and jury he gave me a different answer again. So I had three different answers to a question that was not contained in the statement although the police officer had stated that everything he had asked and the answers thereto were contained in that statement. This was an answer that was so important he could not forget it and yet he gave three different answers. So when you take away the art of cross-examination you take away the purity of justice. I think these things are not done to help the citizen but to speed up and expedite the work of the Crown.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, we in the New Democratic Party welcome the opening statement of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), in particular this statement that it is his intention to have a general overhaul of the Canada Evidence Act in the near future. When one remembers that the recommendations in respect of Bill S-3 originated in 1960 with the criminal law section at the uniformity conference and were re-examined in 1966 one would hope that the Minister of Justice would open up this bill for a general overhaul. I would have liked the Minister of Justice to tell the house that he had set up a law reform commission to study all the laws on the Canadian statute books, and that it would be a standing commission composed of experts not only in the law but in other related fields so that Canadian law could be updated.

The best example in that regard is the existence in Ontario of a law reform commission which examined expropriation procedures in depth with the result that the province recently passed the new Expropriation Act of Ontario. But we are dragging our feet even on expropriation matters in the federal field. I hope that the Minister of Justice will not only initiate a general overhaul of the Canada Evidence Act but will also set up a law reform commission to study all federal statutes and bring forth measures to update those which need revision.

It was rather pleasant to hear the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) refer to the Minister of Justice as a gentleman, which means that the minister will not be considered a hostile witness when he appears before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. This probably has relation to the statement by Miss LaMarsh that she considers the present Minister of Justice to be a man who fits well in the establishment. I hope he will go beyond that and become one of the avant-garde in making changes in the criminal law.

I was very disappointed that the minister did not incorporate in the omnibus bill the principle of the bill I introduced in respect of abolishing corporal punishment. I have high hopes that he will bring forth another measure after that bill has been disposed of which will incorporate some of the other new changes most Canadians have in mind.

Bill S-3 has five main divisions. The minister has dealt generally but rather succinctly and perceptively with these different divisions. The first is the repeal of subsection 2 of section 7 of the Canada Evidence Act which, as he said, will do away with the necessity of counsel bringing a motion at the commencement of a case for permission to call more than five expert witnesses. As the law will now stand, discretion will be given to the presiding judge. One wonders whether such discretion will have to be exercised at the commencement of or during the trial.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): At any time.

Mr. Gilbert: The minister says at any time during the trial. The question arises, why should the discretion reside with the presiding judge? Why should not counsel for both sides have the opportunity to call as many expert witnesses as they require? One can appreciate the problem when a case may be weak as it develops and counsel for one side might decide to call an expert witness. This would place the presiding judge in a rather difficult position in ruling whether he should be permitted to call another expert witness, more especially after having heard a good part of the evidence. I ask the Minister of Justice to reflect on some of these problems in respect of expert witnesses.

The second division the minister dealt with involves adverse witnesses. The key to this is that witnesses can be cross-examined in regard to statements in writing they have previously given. What is the applicability of this particular measure? In criminal cases there are statements made by the accused. One would hope that they are voluntary statements, and the testing that point is done in a trial within a trial called a voir dire. On such occasions Crown counsel presents a statement to the accused and asks him to identify his signature.

Again, in determining the voluntary nature of a statement, where does the written aspect come in. It would have to come in with regard to witnesses in a particular criminal case, be they Crown of defence witnesses. In any case I cannot recall the Crown having its witnesses sign statements that they give to police officers. It may be that this is the case in other jurisdictions, but in Toronto I cannot recall detectives requiring crown witnesses to sign statements. One wonders whether this is to be the commencement of a practice by detectives to ask witnesses to a case to sign the statements they have given for the possible purpose of treating them as adverse witnesses if something goes wrong at the trial. Perhaps the minister would look into this.

Another aspect with regard to written statements might arise in negligence cases where you have insurance adjusters interviewing witnesses. If an adjuster speaks to a witness, reduces what he says to a written statement and asks the witness to sign it, one would hope that this type of statement would not be acceptable. Many Canadians are not apprised of the status of insurance adjusters, and we may be placing ourselves in the position of strengthening the position of adjusters. In an advanced country like Canada one would hope that we would eventually get rid of all negligence cases in the courts by taking a forward look and adopting the kind of legislation the province of Saskatchewan has in respect of motor vehicle cases. I ask the minister to be very wary about written statements produced by insurance adjusters.

The third area covered by the minister had reference to affidavit evidence in respect of copies of entries in books of record kept in any financial institution. So far as legal proceedings are concerned, these would be received as prima facie evidence. One appreciates that banks and other financial institutions are so busy these days that they are not anxious to send their bank managers to court to prove a signature on a cheque or any other document. In the past the law has been that banks, by filing an affidavit of the appropriate person, could provide prima facie evidence. This is now being extended to cover financial institutions, the test being that they are institutions which accept money deposits. I think this is a good step forward. There is no reason that certain officials of these institutions should be put to the bother of attending in court to give this kind of evidence in view of the fact that it is only prima facie evidence. It would allay some of the fears expressed by the hon. member for Calgary North on this problem if he would consider that it is only prima facie evidence. If other evidence comes forth which rebuts the affidavit evidence, that evidence does not stand in a strong position.

The fourth aspect of this bill covered by the minister is new. It is intended to facilitate proof of matters contained in records made in the usual and ordinary course of business. Again this seems reasonable when one realizes that we are in the age of the computer and other modern business techniques, including microfilming, recordings and so on. I think we should update our laws in respect of this type of evidence. As the minister said, one has to look at the probative value of any evidence. Surely we should be up to date with regard to the tendering of such evidence and should not waste a great deal of time on the question of proof, which at times is very difficult. This matter is in the area of statutory declarations. The bill is intended to make uniform a statutory declaration which would remove any doubt about whether the form of the statutory declaration is in conformity with the Canada Evidence Act or any provincial statute. I think this is a step forward.

At one of our committees—I think it was the committee on banking and commerce—the legal representative said that these five areas are those in which the government considers we should take action now. I am inclined to agree with him. I was rather impressed when the minister said there is a great deal of in-depth study to be carried out with regard to problems as between husband and wife and confidential relationships between solicitor and client, accountant and client and doctor and patient. This also applies to evidence given by an accused in other cases. If we embrace all these things—

Mr. Baldwin: What about the member of parliament and his constituent?

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has just made a most laudable interjection with regard to the confidentiality that exists as between a constituent and his member of parliament. I am sure the minister will take that matter into account, especially having regard to the hon. member who asked the question.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The new politics is an open book; there is nothing confidential.

Mr. Gilbert: The minister has said that the new politics is an open book. If it is an open book, and we apply the test of the performance of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) at the Commonwealth conference, every page would appear to be blank. These are some of the matters that I hope the Minister of Justice will take into consideration in the general overhaul of the Canada Evidence Act. More important, I hope he will set up a law reform commission to study the law in all its facets, and will bring forth a freshness and updating such as in his best moments he is capable of doing.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to speak at length on Bill No. S-3. I would rather get at once at the heart of the matter and make pertinent remarks, in order not to prolong the debate unduly.

Mr. Speaker, the Evidence Act was enacted 75 years ago and it has never been amended since. Several members in the other place expressed dissatisfaction when the present bill was considered by the committee on banking and commerce. Why has the legislation not been adapted to our evolving society over the years?

Conditions under which justice is applied are certainly not the same in 1969 as they were in 1893. A great many things and ideas have changed since. To be just a legislation must be able to adapt to various circumstances. It must take into account the whole situation, without omitting anything. It is the price we have to pay for a sound application of justice.

We had to wait 75 years before at last daring to change this legislation, to reconsider it and to adapt it, when any jurist knows that it is outmoded and a hindrance to the sound and efficient application of justice.

Before studying the present bill, I wish to tell the minister that we are dissatisfied it took so long. Of course, he is not entirely responsible for the delay since he has not always been Minister of Justice, but I suppose his predecessors cannot boast of having made any efforts to move "the iceberg", as the minister called it a few minutes ago. I think those ministers have been as motionless as the "icebergs" mentioned by the minister.

It is difficult for us, as it is for Canadians, to understand that such a situation could exist. We would be very happy if the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), whom we have always considered as a progressive man, who looks forward and not backward, would explain the situation to us and would tell us why we must be satisfied today with amending the Evidence Act—and very limited amendment indeed—instead of changing entirely such an important legislation, on which rests in a way the efficient administration of justice.

The minister is aware, no doubt, that present social and technical conditions are not what they were in 1893 and that a complete review of the Evidence Act would certainly help improve the efficiency of our judicial system.

I therefore want him to give us the assurance that the law as a whole will be reviewed without further delay because we have already waited far too long.

Moreover, I feel, and I dare say, other hon. members feel the same about it, that the administration of justice is so important, that one should not be limited, when it comes to submitting the evidence, by all kinds of red tape. For instance, the act we are now amending, sets a limit on the number of witnesses, as if the full administration of justice could possibly be hampered when trying to set the blame.

Mr. Speaker, the old act did not allow each side more than five witnesses, save by leave of the court or of the judge. That obsolete provision sets limits and I wanted to emphasize the fact.

I am therefore all in favour of the amendment proposed in the present bill which simply removes such limits.

The old act, in my opinion, truly limited the administration of justice.

Clause 2 amending section 9 of the act is another example of the yoke imposed by the act, and it is high time to change and adapt it to our present social and technical conditions, which certainly are different from those of 1893. Until now, as senator Walker put it so well, and I quote:

> You could call your first witness thinking that he was your best witness because you have a signed statement from him. But, lo and behold, you find that somebody has got to him in the meantime. (...) And when you call him, he gives an entirely different story from the one he has given in the signed statement. (...) You are taken by surprise, you can appeal to the judge, but nothing can be done.

Those are the words of the senator, who has a long experience in this field.

Here therefore is another example of a limitation that justice cannot tolerate unless you want to make of this very justice a matter where money, blackmail and influence rule.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot but agree with the amendment proposed by Bill No. S-3.

In order not to take up too much time, I shall limit myself to making comments on two clauses. As for the others, they too are excellent, especially the one that extends the present law to all financial institutions, and not merely to the banks. We all know how our economic situation has evolved. We trust that it will be recognized that the same goes for our monetary situation and that Creditiste measures will be taken. Here again, we could dwell at length on the matter, Mr. Speaker, and prove that the section to be amended constituted a limitation to the application of justice and its processes. Indeed, I wish to congratulate the honourable minister and the mover of the bill, introduced in the Senate, for their praiseworthy and necsesary initiative. I wish to remind them, before bringing my remarks to a close, that we wish to be assured that, in the near future, the whole Canada Evidence Act will be revised—not only parts of it—to insure better administration of justice.

Mr. Speaker, there is another matter, which is related to this one and could even be included in it, which intrigues me a good deal and to which I should like to draw the attention of the house for a minute or so.

I had a question put on the order paper asking the Department of Justice whether it intended to proceed with judiciary "decentralization" with a view to bringing the justiciable closer to the court; I was told in reply that the government was in the process of studying several ways and means which might be adopted with a view to decentralizing further the activities of the Exchequer Court of Canada.

I should like to ask the honourable minister to give us more details on that matter of decentralization of the judiciary administration. I feel that that reply was rather vague and, for that reason, unacceptable. I know he can give us more information on the ways and means through which the Canadian judiciary system could be decentralized. I believe that not only the Canadian Bar Association but all those interested in the administration of justice would be grateful to the minister if he was to give us more details with regard to that matter since, at present time—we can come back to this later—the Supreme Court is truly an untouchable body.

Mr. Speaker, I bring my remarks to a close by congratulating the mover; I trust the bill will be adopted after having been studied seriously by the committee.

• (4:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, may I make a few comments and ask the minister a question? I do not know whether it is his intention to close the debate. Our position has been adequately put by the hon. and learned member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), the hon. and learned member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) and the hon. and learned member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin).

Mr. McCleave: Learning goes a long way.

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, both here and in London. I would like to think that when we are dealing with questions relating to evidence and the Evidence Act the whole picture will be reviewed. I am sure the minister will recall when, as a law student, he was directed to study "The Art of Cross-examination" by Wrottsley, and later went into the police courts from time to time and saw there the application of the great principles of justice where 95 per cent of the people of Canada meet the criminal law at first instance. I think he will have observed that through the courts and the judges, the magistrates, the judges of the county courts and the judges of the Supreme Court, there are fashioned on the anvil of experience the instruments which we must have and preserve for our system of jurisprudence to ensure that the rights of the citizen come first.

Two of these proposals, one under clause 2 and the other under clause 4, have the effect, I think, either of nullifying or of departing from the rules of practice with relation to evidence which have been incorporated in this country by the application of the British common law and have been the subject of judicial declaration. Merely because they were sound a hundred years ago does not necessarily mean they are sound today. However, it is my experience, after some 40 years in and out of the criminal courts, that a person occupying a judicial position has a better opportunity than anyone else of determining the factors which must be brought to play in the reinforcement by judicial decision in this country of these two particular rules.

One is that a witness cannot be declared to be hostile unless the judge is satisfied in his own mind that the witness is in fact hostile and adverse, following which he may then be cross-examined. Very sound and practical rules for protecting the rights of the subject have surrounded this principle, which is not a statutory principle but one which has come to us over a great many years of practical application in the courts.

In the second place, I can understand why in our society today people may make declarations in writing, and this may even be extended to cover tape recordings at some time. I do not know whether the interpretation of the word "writing" is wide enough to cover this. I know that it does not have to be a writing signed by the person in question as long as it is something which has been reduced to writing. I throw this out as something that the committee may take up. Would this mean, for example, if a witness made a statement and a police constable or any other person with authority examined the witness and took the statement down in writing, that this would be considered to satisfy the wording in the proposed new clause, "a statement reduced to writing"?

Then there is a statement with regard to oral evidence in respect of a matter received in a legal proceeding involving a record made in the usual and ordinary course of business. If I remember correctly, there was always an additional safeguard inserted in the rules of practice in relation to such evidence that it must be made by a person required in the proper course of his duty to make the entry and reduce it to writing as the record. In other words, this requirement was made so as to safeguard against the possibility of self-serving statements being made by people who are not authorized to make them and to put them in writing. Thus it became part of the record of a business or an institution, as the case may be.

What I say is not to be taken as a reason for these clauses not being passed, but I do point out the very grave dangers which come about when we interfere by statutory amendment with rules of evidence which have proven effective safeguards and which we have used to surround our system of criminal justice over a great many years. I think we should look at it with the greatest care. It may well be that because of present jurisprudence these are essential. I am not really uttering it in the form of a caveat.

My final suggestion would be that the minister might take a look at standing order 62 (1) or (2), as the case may be, which provides that a committee may be instructed to consider a bill rather than the bill being introduced and read the first time. This is the sort of practice which could be very useful in relation to matters of this kind.

I recognize that in the past few years there have been problems facing the government in bringing forward various amendments which have been very much required and which we have omitted in the past. But I would suggest that the minister might wish to consider even allowing a draft statute to be sent to the committee under standing order 62, with authorization to the committee to proceed to bring in a bill based on the draft as well as, of course, the government's own recommendations. The committee would then be authorized to call not only for the evidence of department officials but for that of Crown counsel, people from the Attorney General's department, and distinguished counsel whose duty it is to appear for accused people and to maintain the proper perspective between the Crown and the accused. It might well be that, before the minister gets around to bringing in new changes, something of this kind could be done so as to have the benefit of the thinking and knowledge not only of the Crown and the Department of Justice but of people outside who are concerned for professional and sociological reasons to see that our system of justice continues to be what it has been in the past, the best in the world.

• (4:50 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I must inform the house that if the minister speaks at this point he will close the debate.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I rose on that assumption, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

My thanks go to those who have taken part in the debate this afternoon. I suggest that it would be more appropriate for me to answer questions before the committee which will be sitting soon, and I hope that the chairman of that committee will be able to convene its members in order to deal with this bill immediately.

[English]

I want to say that I appreciate the remarks made by all who have spoken this afternoon.

I wish to tell the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) that I am on record as being in favour of a national law reform commission. We are actively moving toward it; I mentioned it in a speech I made during the convocation at Osgoode Hall in Toronto last fall. I agree with the hon. member. I believe we need an objective, independent body constantly reviewing federal law, particularly the Criminal Code. The law of evidence would be a very useful reference to it, although we are proceeding internally as well and have set up a new research division within the Department of Justice so that the justice side of the department can be just as active as the Attorney General's side, in other words, so that the doves can be just as active as the hawks. We are moving along in that way.

I think the whole issue of the administrative law and the judicial review of administrative tribunals mentioned by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) could well become a reference to the law reform commission. When we are thinking of the Ontario law reform commission, it seems to me it is properly independent, but it may be that the Attorney General of the province does not have sufficient powers when it comes to putting references or subject matter before the commission. I will be reviewing the New York State law reform commission, the American Law Institute and, of course, the law reform commission which was set up by the United Kingdom two or three years ago.

I believe there is a further use for a law reform commission for Canada. It is to ensure that the civil law—

[Translation]

The Civil Code is integrated in our federal statutes, as well as the common law, and the law reform commission can compare those two legal systems perhaps more efficiently for the future than for the past.

[English]

When we are reviewing the general law, there is a great deal to be said for securing the close co-operation of the provincial Attorneys General. This measure affecting the Canada Evidence Act applies primarily to the criminal law. Both evidentiary rules and procedural rules affecting civil cases are a matter for provincial jurisdiction. There ought to be some harmony in the development of our evidentiary rules, and we have discussed this with the department of the Attorney General of Ontario. So perhaps we could embark on some sort of joint study.

The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) suggested that the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs might be given some initiating power in this regard. When the expropriation bill reaches the house, soon, I hope, I intend that it should be referred at an early date to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. The committee may call witnesses from across the country, members of the legal profession, representatives of municipalities and planning boards—

Mr. Gilbert: And the victims, too.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Well, I think there are enough defence counsel to take care of them—but the victims, the average citizen, yes, as well.

At the moment I envisage a strenuous time for the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. All being well, the bill before us will be submitted to it at five o'clock, as will the omnibus amendments to the Criminal Code which I shall be introducing here on Thursday. Then there are the estimates of the Department of Justice and the Supreme Court amendment bill.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It will not have any time for illegal affairs, will it?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I should also mention the expropriation bill. The general question of wiretapping has already been referred to the committee. All in all I imagine the members of the committee will be doing a lot of good, constructive work between now and the end of the session. I look forward to my own appearance before the committee as soon as the chairman in his good judgment assembles it. I wish to thank the house for its courtesy this afternoon.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills.

Canada Elections Act

NOTICES OF MOTIONS

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT RESPECTING DISFRANCHISEMENT, ARMED SERVICES, PUBLIC SERVICE

Mr. Paul St-Pierre (Coast Chilcotin) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of introducing a measure to amend the Canada Elections Act to prevent to a further degree the disfranchisement of numerous citizens who are absent from their residence areas on polling days, and to prevent the Armed Services being singled out as the only professional group whose political choices are made public, by mingling Armed Service ballots with other absentee ballots, and, for those purposes:

(a) to entitle an elector to vote on polling day for the candidate of his choice who is nominated in his Electoral District, by casting his vote in a polling station or Electoral District other than his own, using an absentee ballot;

(b) to provide that Armed Services ballots shall henceforth be called absentee ballots and be counted simultaneously with other absentee ballots without, however, altering the present method of balloting by the Armed Services;

(c) to provide further that members of the Public Services of Canada and their dependents stationed abroad shall be enabled to cast absentee ballots in the manner prescribed for the Armed Services.

He said: Mr. Speaker, we have just dealt with an amendment to the Canada Evidence Act. The spokesman for the Creditiste party, the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin), pointed out that the Canada Evidence Act had failed to move with the times and had become badly out of date. Essentially, my motion urging changes to the electoral law of Canada says precisely the same thing—that this law has become badly out of date. It is no longer in tune with present day realities and as a result a shockingly large number of Canadians are losing their votes in every election.

I am a little disturbed to find that my motion is the longest on the order paper. I have learned to be afraid of too many words. I recall one case in British Columbia where a senior lawyer was asked by another lawyer whether he should attempt an appeal. The older lawyer inquired: "how long is the judgment?" The younger one replied: "17 folios." The older lawyer then commented: "I don't want to read it; go ahead with an appeal; no man alive can be right for 17 folios."

If my motion is long, however, it is not really complex, and I think I shall be able to show to the satisfaction of this house that it has proven of practical use already in Canadian elections. In the national election just completed, 25 per cent of the eligible voters of Canada did not cast ballots. We have no way of knowing how many of these would have cast their ballots if the advantage of the absentee ballot form had been available to them.

No doubt a great many of them did not vote because they were generally satisfied with the course of affairs in the country. No doubt, too, a good proportion of them did not vote because they have very little use for any of the political parties which came forward. I am not one of those who believe people should be forced to vote. I believe that to absent oneself from the poll is not a privilege but a right, just as it is a right to vote at the polls. I do not favour the Australian system which obliges people to vote on pain of a penalty. Nevertheless, I do not think there can be any doubt that a high proportion of the 25 per cent who did not cast their votes are people who were unable to do so because they were absent from their homes on election day. This is the purpose of an absentee ballot—to accommodate these people.

I might point out that in my own riding of Coast Chilcotin the number who did not vote was 33⅓ per cent, or one-third of the people.

An hon. Member: Dull election.

Mr. St. Pierre: Someone says it was a dull election. Possibly. It did not seem so to those of us who engaged in it. I would remind hon. members that mine is a large riding devoted mainly to primary production. There are many loggers and fishermen who must be absent from their homes on occasion as a matter of business. As a matter of fact I can give the house a particularly shocking example of the disenfranchisement to which I refer. One of the larger Indian reserves in Canada is situated in the riding of Coast Chilcotin—the Bella Bellas. On the day of the last election there were 410 Indian adults on the voting list and only 176 voted.

The reason for this absenteeism is that the community is entirely dependent for its income on fishing. Both on the day of the election and on the day of the advance poll since this year's major fish run was at Rivers Inlet 100 miles distant from Bella Coola, these Indian people had to be about their business. Because they were about their business they were denied their right to vote. As I say, this is a shocking situation, and I hope we do not go into another election without provision being made for an absentee ballot.

Advance polls are of no help or of very little help in this matter. They are open one day only and are usually poorly advertised. In any case we are in the age of the two-week and three-week vacation in many parts of Canada. The British Columbia coast logger or fisherman may well be absent from his home not just for a few days but for three weeks, a month or even two months at a time. Why should such people be deprived of their privilege of casting an absentee ballot?

My constituency is not the worst in Canada in this regard. I am sure my hon. friend, the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), where there is a very large proportion of fishermen, would consider his people are very greatly disadvantaged in this matter. Both the Yukon and the Northwest Territories are vast expanses of land far, far bigger than the constituency of Coast Chilcotin. I also imagine that Rocky Mountain constituency, which is a long and difficult to negotiate geographical area, must suffer very severely in this connection.

In any case we are not in the age of our ancestors 50 years ago in Canada, or in the hungry thirties when travel was difficult because we could not afford the gas. I imagine that most hon. members who did occasionally beg or borrow a car would remember how gas for it was purchased two bits' worth at a time. The federal election law that requires the voter to present himself at his home polling station is really and genuinely fitted only for the horse and buggy days when men did not move far from their homes in order to work, the days when vacations were unknown and when, except for trains, the only method of travel was the horse and buggy, which did not take one very far from home.

I think it is important to note that the absentee ballot has been used with success in several elections in the province of British Columbia. It is a fairly simple method. An applicant for an absentee ballot must fill in a form at whichever polling station he attends and swear to the information he provides, and the secret ballot is then delivered to his home electoral district. There is also a safe and satisfactory method of counting these ballots. There is also a system of double-checking to prevent electors from casting two ballots, one in their home district and one in a neighbouring district.

I suppose there have been abuses of this system, because there are abuses in any law, but I have lived in British Columbia since 1945 and have never heard of one single abuse of the absentee balloting system. Those that have occurred have therefore, I think been small in number and not significant to the final vote.

In urging a system of absentee balloting I am fortunate to have the support of a very distinguished Canadian, Mr. Castonguay, who has reported on methods of registration of voters and absentee voting. This report of the representation commission was made in 1968. In his report appears this recommendation:

> If the Commonwealth of Australia system of continuous electoral rolls is adopted, I recommend:
> (1) That the Australian method of absentee voting, which provides voting facilities for electors who are unable to attending at their own polling place by reason of absence, but able to attend at another polling place located in the state in which they are registered, be applied to federal elections in Canada.

Hon. members may wonder why the motion that I am presenting here does not simply recommend that the government adopt the Castonguay report; certainly that is the evidence and the recommendation of an expert. The reason is that Mr. Castonguay's recommendation is based on the provision that Canada adopt the system of continuous electoral rolls. I am not opposed to that. In fact, I would hope that the committee on privileges and elections will adopt the whole of the Castonguay report. But in his introduction Mr. Castonguay makes this point:

> However, it is my belief that the adoption of such a system would prove to be very costly.

My fear is that the committee on privileges and elections may very well be alarmed by the cost involved. Mr. Castonguay does not say exactly how much it would be. However, in rejecting or postponing the adoption of a continuous election roll system for Canada, the committee would also again be rejecting or postponing the absentee ballot. My hope is that in such circumstances the baby will not be thrown out with the bath water and that at least an absentee balloting system similar to that in use in British Columbia, where it has worked very well, will be retained—in short, that there be a compromise. What is a compromise? It is a meeting of minds of reasonable men.

One or two hon. members have expressed an interest in fishing in my constituency. Fortunately I had an experience recently that I think points up splendidly the value of compromise in human affairs. I was fishing for salmon and I caught a 14-incher. which by our system of measurement is an extremely large fish.

Mr. Pringle: That is between the eyes!

Mr. St. Pierre: Yes, between the eyes. Unfortunately I did not weigh it. My wife had a camera and took a black and white picture of it, and the negative alone weighed seven pounds! I was mentioning this to Jim Chambers, the head of the fishermen's union at Powell River, and he said, "What was the size of the fish, Paul? I said, "I would estimate it at about 160 pounds—dressed, that is." Well, Jim said he had a big catch himself. He had been fishing just off Desolation Sound, near Refuge Cove, which was first mapped by Captain George Vancouver of the ship Discovery in 1792. Jim was fishing very deep and snagged something on the bottom. When he brought it up he found he had snagged the binnacle lamp from Captain George Vancouver's ship Discovery. You can imagine his surprise, Mr. Speaker, when he found the candle in it was still burning.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Now, Jim Chambers and I are reasonable. Reasonable men. We compromised. I took 100 pounds off the fish and Jim put out the candle. As you can see, Mr. Speaker, compromise is very necessary. We may have to compromise in order to reform our electoral system by 1972. If we cannot implement the recommendations of the entire Castonguay report, at least let us deal with absentee ballots.

Paragraph (b) of the motion in my name says:

> —to provide that armed services ballots shall henceforth be called absentee ballots and be counted simultaneously with other absentee ballots without, however, altering the present method of balloting by the armed services;

Our servicemen who serve in many parts of the world vote under an intricate system which, to the best of my knowledge, in most ways seems to satisfy them. What does not satisfy them, and on this I am inclined to agree with them, is that at present servicemen as members of a professional group are singled out and the way they vote is made public. We are told how many service votes each party gained. We are not told, however, how the doctors or other professional groups in the country voted, and to this extent servicemen have been discriminated against.

Acceptance of my motion would mean that servicemen's votes would be collected as at present. Their ballots would be treated as other absentee ballots are treated and, instead of coming to a central office here in Ottawa to be counted, with the results of the vote being transmitted to the various polling divisions, would go directly to the chief returning officer of each electoral district in Canada, where the ballots would be mixed with other absentee ballots and counted. It is as simple as that.

Paragraph (c) of the motion seeks to extend to the members of the Public Service of Canada and others serving abroad the polling privileges extended to our armed services. Of course, there is a limit to the number of Canadians living abroad who can participate in an election. After all, 15,000 Canadians live in London alone and we could not reasonably expect to service these people. Many Canadians live in other foreign cities. The members of our diplomatic service, however, are in a different position since we send them abroad as our servants. I think that their votes ought to be collected as we would collect the votes from the armed services, with identical or very similar machinery being used.

It is extremely important to make sure that the votes of our diplomatic representatives are not broken down, as are our armed services votes, in order to reveal party support. No one should know that our overseas personnel voted largely for this party or that party. Our absentee ballots should be entitled to the anonymity that attaches to the votes of all our citizens.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I hope the provisions of our electoral act will be revised by 1972 or earlier, if there should be an election earlier, so that those voting through absentee ballots will not be faced with a situation in many areas which is shocking and quite undemocratic. I thank hon. members for their courteous attention.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I commend the hon. member who has just spoken for his excellent presentation and his excellent fishing story. In one sense we are all fishermen, since we have all gone fishing for something that is important to us in order that we may sit in this house. Our methods have perhaps been similar to the methods that have been described in some fishing stories we have heard.

The hon. member's notice of motion is welcome and I will not speak at great length on it. I merely wish to bring up one or two points since I know other hon. members wish to speak on this matter. First, I should like to see the principle embodied in the idea behind the absentee ballot extended to those who are crippled, who live in nursing homes or find it difficult to go to the polls.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McCleave: I realize that the hon. member's notice of motion deals with those who are physically absent from their constituencies on election day. I think it might cover those who can only attend at a polling booth after making tremendous sacrifices and going through great hardships. I will cite a case I am personally familiar with.

Provincial election laws have provided for those people in nursing homes who are elderly and not mobile or in other ways incapacitated to cast their ballots, and in that way provincial laws are ahead of federal laws. That often leads to confusion, since many voters do not think election workers are telling the truth when they say that the provisions of certain provincial electoral acts are not included in the federal election legislation.

Sometimes when a person has driven up to a polling booth and has not been able to alight from the car that person has been approached by an agent of one of our parties and been permitted to vote without leaving the car. While that sort of action may contravene the letter of our electoral legislation it does not contravene its spirit.

I said I would cite a case I was familiar with personally, and I do so now. During my second election campaign I remember one particular voter who was seriously ill and who came to the poll, no doubt to frustrate my attempt to be elected. No one will say that the lady in question was forced to come since I imagine she had been a lifelong adherent of another party and no doubt wanted to nip my political career in the bud. At any rate, she went to the poll and voted in tremendous agony. Shortly thereafter, within hours of voting, the woman had passed away. She could have been given at least a little more life if a ballot had been brought to her sickbed. So I hope that in this parliament we can come to grips with this problem. I think that every parliament during its four-year term should make changes in the Canada Elections Act. I hope this change will be one of them.

I understand that the hon. member who proposes this motion lived for some time in my area. Therefore he should be familiar with the armed forces problem. Perhaps that problem is not so acute for the Halifax constituencies because there are large numbers of servicemen concerned, but I think the hon. member is right in his general criticism that service voting is too often identifiable. Somebody on a base in Germany may be the only one going to vote in a particular riding in Canada and it does not take much imagination to see which way he voted. Therefore I certainly support those provisions in the hon. member's motion.

I would hope the Department of National Defence would be less sheltering in its attitude to the people in the armed forces. There seems to be some idea that they are to be protected at all costs from political ideas. I think this ghetto approach to the serviceman, not only to make his vote a rather special and different sort of thing but also to make it very difficult for politicians of any kind to bring ideas and discussion to him, is less than commendable in a democratic age.

The last meeting of the national defence and external affairs committee last year will provide useful information with regard to the problem of employees of the Department of National Defence, the Department of External Affairs and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce who serve abroad. The problem there is simply to get Canadian ideas and newspapers to these people. Some newspapers do get to them but not all. To give them more participation in general elections some heed should be paid to the evidence given before that meeting.

Those are the few points I wish to add in my most fulsome support for the notice of motion proposed by the hon. member for Coast Chilcotin. I simply conclude by saying it should be referred to a committee, together with any other similar subject matter, and I would hope the committee would be generous enough not only to consider the hon. member's motion but to give it a somewhat broader aspect by dealing with those who for physical, medical or health reasons, or for sheer age, find it somewhat difficult to get to the polls on election day.

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, aside from being entirely in support of the proposal put forward in the motion of the hon. member for Coast Chilcotin (Mr. St. Pierre), I have a particular reason for taking part with some pleasure in this debate. It happens that the hon. member and myself are from the same department of the same newspaper in the same city, Vancouver. We both served in it at one time. No matter how much we may have disagreed in the past and still may disagree on many other matters it is good to think we agree in principle on such an important issue as he has brought forward, the reform of the electoral law of Canada.

This subject is long overdue for action. Over the years members of all parties, such as the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), have taken up this issue at the election committee level and urged that reform take place. For many years it has been the plight of many Canadians to be disenfranchised because of no absentee voting procedure for them.

Naturally reference has been made to the larger constituencies in different parts of Canada, particularly in British Columbia. In the area from which I come, the lower mainland of British Columbia and in particular my constituency of Surrey, there are hundreds if not thousands of industrial workers who are disenfranchised by the lack of absentee balloting every time a federal election is held in the summer. We have hundreds of fishermen in that area, many miners, and many hundreds of loggers who are away from their homes when elections are held. They would like to vote for or against the candidates in their own constituency but they are out of the constituency long before the advance poll is held. As the hon. member for Coast Chilcotin has pointed out, advance polls are of little or no use to many Canadians because they do not have an absentee ballot to use when they are hundreds of miles away from their own polling booths.

The proposals the hon. member has made summarize so well the need for action in this regard that I will conclude what I have to say in about one more minute so that I will not contribute in any way to talking out the motion. I would simply add that the hon. member's point with regard to armed services voting is also very good. As matters stand members of the armed services are the only group of Canadians who are made distinctive at the time of federal elections or, if you prefer, are discriminated against by the fact that their votes are tabulated separately. I am sure that the principle involved in the hon. member's motion is such that it will commend itself to all members in all parties. I would hope that if the principle is not approved in the house tonight the house could at least agree to send the motion to the appropriate committee as being material requiring action and having the blessing of the members of the house.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): I should like to comment briefly on this motion from one of our colleagues, to amend the Canada Elections Act.

Mr. Speaker, I wish first to congratulate the hon. member for taking the lead in trying to have the Canada Elections Act amended, although I must tell him that I do not quite share his views. I shall try to set forth my reasons quickly. I wish to point out that some parts of the motion, particularly the last sections, will encourage the fraudulent practices now prevailing in the Armed Forces and among civil servants stationed outside Canada. This motion does not change anything to the way they vote which I think is basically wrong.

Mr. Speaker, so as to bring the discussion back to its true framework and to show how important this matter is, I should like to say first of all that Canadian citizens must have every opportunity to cast their votes. I therefore agree in principle with the hon. member's proposals since it is an attempt to improve the efficiency of the vote. It can be noted by everybody at the time of an election—whether the last election or the previous one—that the rate of absentee voting keeps increasing, for the simple reason that people, because of the government inaction or the people's indifference for governments, have lost any interest whatsoever in public affairs. It can be seen that the number of non-voters keeps increasing from one election to the next. Of course, there may be several reasons for that, but we would be led to discuss political issues, and I do not want to turn this into a political debate, since the matter being looked into is the Elections Act.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it is my opinion that the hon. member's attempt has merits per se. We should aim at giving every Canadian citizen a chance to vote if he knows in advance he will be away from his constituency on polling day, since it is in the interest of Canada as a whole to give every Canadian a fair chance, without any patronage, blackmailing or bribery, to cast a free vote so that this house may be made up of free men.

However, Mr. Speaker, to reach that point any possible fraud should be prevented. I maintain that the present Elections Act has been obsolete for a long time and does not meet Canada's requirements. I would say, for instance, that in the Shefford riding, in 1965, the Creditistes lost an election not because the people were less créditistes—in fact, they were more inclined that way—but because the votes of the armed forces upset the results of the vote. I was present when the judicial recount took place in order to assist my colleague, the present member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau).

Four things have to be considered.

First, the members of the armed forces do not vote at the same time as the rest of the Canadian citizens; secondly, they do not use the same ballot; thirdly, they have no control over their ballot and fourthly, they are ill-informed as to what is going on in their respective ridings and in Canada generally.

Therefore, not only do the armed forces control the boys "left, right, left, right, left, right" as was said earlier by my colleague from Champlain (Mr. Matte), when a similar question was being discussed—but also, in some way, the military vote. I think that we have here a first rate instance of fraud.

On several occasions, Mr. Speaker, we asked the minister responsible for the armed forces—the Minister of National Defence—to investigate the matter very thoroughly. I sit on the committee on privileges and elections and I should like the sponsor of this motion to pass on my request to the minister—asking him to inquire on the military vote and to report to the committee so that we may study extensively and circumscribe this problem which, in my opinion, makes the military vote more or less just, more or less fair.

Mr. Speaker, the motion under consideration concerns first the people who are absent from their riding on polling day.

I agree entirely with that part of the motion since the present system does not make it as easy as possible for those who are called away from their own riding to vote on election day. Since Canada as a whole needs those votes, the polls must not be faked, but honest. I can only approve the mover on that point and congratulate him. I think the committee will be pleased to examine the motion, because, according to me, it will bring some order into the present electoral system.

The second part of the motion deals with the armed forces. Here, I do not agree at all, Mr. Speaker, when we are told, for instance, and I quote:

b) to provide that armed services ballots shall henceforth be called absentee ballots and be counted simultaneously with other absentee ballots—

Up to there I agree, but I do not any longer when the motion states, and I quote:

—without, however, altering the present method of balloting used by the armed services—

The sponsor takes a step forward and two backward. If he approves the last part of that sentence, he is acting like a crayfish. A while ago, he talked eloquently about fish, I will now speak to him about crayfish. A crayfish is a shell-fish which moves a step forward and two backward; that is how the Liberal government is acting.

This motion, Mr. Speaker, shows that the present electoral system is accepted and that no change whatever is made to it. There is fraud not necessarily because the members of the armed forces are not in their constituency, since this would be working from a false principle. Fraud is due to the balloting system used by the armed forces.

I was present at the judicial recount for Shefford and Sherbrooke and I noted that we lost those two constituencies because the vote was fraudulent and not because people did not vote for the Créditistes.

What did I find out? That scores of ballots bore the same signature. Indeed, no one can make me believe that Canadian soliders have all the same signature. I recognize that strict discipline is enforced in our armed forces but surely not to that extent.

Secondly, many of those votes are in the same handwriting. Thirdly, I have noticed—and I can find it hard to understand—that very few servicemen of the Lotbinière constituency stationed abroad and known to me before they left, when I was not yet a member of parliament, voted for me whereas I know very well that they supported the Ralliement Créditiste before I did.

Now, if I add the number of servicemen outside Canada supporting the Ralliement Créditiste to the number of votes I got, Mr. Speaker, I get an impossible figure. Either these people have died or they were off their heads when they voted for the Liberal government. So, something did happen.

That is the information I want to get and that is exactly the information the minister refuses to disclose. Consequently, this motion will bring about no change at all if the said passage is maintained, and I quote:

—without, however, altering the present method of balloting by the armed forces—

We must change this procedure, Mr. Speaker. I urge the sponsor of this motion to change that sentence to read.

—however, by altering the present method of balloting by the armed forces—

Then, he would be able to tell between a man who goes forward and a crayfish.

Mr. Speaker, I said I would be brief and I shall be.

The third part of the motion concerns the members of the public service who are posted abroad.

Here again, Mr. Speaker, I do not understand anything. I quote the relevant part:

—that members of the public services of Canada and their dependents stationed abroad shall be enabled to cast absentee ballots in the manner prescribed for the armed services—

There is not only too much cheating in the method of balloting used by the Canadian armed forces, but the situation would be even worse if the members of the Public Service posted outside Canada were treated in the same manner.

Mr. Speaker, I do not accept that. I would like our Elections Act to be completely revised, so that it be adapted to our modern life. We are clever enough to give a free vote. Mr. Speaker, when I consider the number of impersonations at each election, I am flabbergasted and I cannot tolerate such a situation. One knows that money is circulating in all constituencies in Canada during an election campaign, that there is blackmailing and that refrigerators, electric stoves, crayfish, in short, all you can think of, are offered to people. One also knows that advertising which says the same thing over and over again without being controlled, leads people astray in many cases. I do not speak necessarily about Liberals or Conservatives; I mean that our electoral system is basically rotten.

Mr. Speaker, these are so many methods we must expel from present electoral system. Our governments will be much better because they will be more free, more legitimate, more desired and not imposed. That is the reason why so many voters are absent: our governments are not wanted.

When I organized the campaign for my party on the occasion of the by-election in the Hull constituency, the member of parliament was Mr. Caron. At that moment, I realized that there were more undecided people, more people who did not vote. Why? We cannot explain it.

Mr. Speaker, the mover of the motion said, a few moments ago, that 33 per cent of his constituents did not vote. Now, if the Liberal party. The New Democratic Party, the Progressive Conservative party and the Ralliement Créditiste have been unable to bring those electors to vote, it is because they are utterly disgusted by what is going on in the political field—and I can but approve on the main of this—because of the out-of-date and unsatisfactory electoral methods used in Canada, a free country. However, it is possible that they are not public-minded, and we must react against this. I admire the words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when he spoke about the permanent democratic participation as a means of getting the people involved in what is happening in this country.

Secondly, they should be given every possible chance, every opportunity to vote, and to do so honestly.

Mr. Speaker, I regret, of course, that everything cannot be put together, that everything cannot come within one motion, and I regret that no mention is made of identity cards, as a means to avoid such a fraud.

I regret also that there is no mention—still in the same field—of an amendment concerning the manner of voting for members of the armed forces.

I also regret that no mention is made of civil servants posted abroad, so that they could vote as intelligent people should do—I suppose they are—honestly, respectfully, individually and not collectively, as it is done in the armed forces.

I regret also that those who are away from their riding on voting day, are not given more incentive to vote. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few remarks on the transportation of ballot boxes.

Nobody mentions this problem, but we know the scandal which occurred in the province of Quebec, during the provincial election, in connection with the transportation of ballot boxes. I myself, with other persons concerned with election organization in the riding of Shefford, found some in ditches, Mr. Speaker. Yet voting was devised to enable us to choose a legitimate elected government, not an usurped one. I found ballot boxes in the ditch, and the people responsible for that state of affairs know all about it. That is unacceptable. I regret that nothing is changed in that field and that electoral expenses are not controlled.

A royal commission enquired on the matter of electoral expenses. I read its report many times, as probably all members concerned, and especially members of the committee on privileges and elections.

In reading that report, we find that members—and once again, I do not wish to offend anyone,—are elected by money and not by the people. We also find that money is the prime factor of the people's confidence in a government. If you are willing to pay such and such an amount for our vote, we shall vote in your favour. The same persons turn around and go to the candidate of the other party and say: If you are ready to buy our vote for so much, we shall vote in your favour. They pocketed money from both sides. The people who do such a thing, Mr. Speaker, are voting for the Ralliement Créditiste.

Mr. Speaker, if my colleagues refuse to change the present system, they are running the risk of having some day a Créditiste government, because voters are fed up and tired of a fraud system that does not do justice to a country like ours which has so many examples throughout the world to prompt it to change its electoral system.

I would have many further remarks to make, but I know that several members are also interested in speaking on the subject.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw the attention of the house on electoral frauds and to say that we disagree entirely with the proposal put before us, namely, to change nothing to the present procedure as far as the armed service ballots are concerned.

I think that we now have the opportunity to prove beyond any doubt that we are responsible and that we are not afraid to face the voters.

If the Liberal government and the Conservative party are not afraid to face the voters, they will have no fear of amending the present elections act in order that everybody will be entitled to a free, strictly honest and unpretentious vote. However, should they be afraid to face the people, they will be using the same methods in order to win elections as those used in the Shefford and Sherbrooke constituencies.

Before concluding my remarks, Mr. Speaker—I have to repeat it over and over again because it is necessary in order to be understood—I beg the intelligent ministers and members of the government now listening to me, although few are present, to inform the minister that, for the fourth time, we are asking him to conduct an investigation concerning the armed forces. I wish I could say it in English but, Mr. Speaker, I cannot speak this language well enough and in fact I am afraid I would stumble in my speech. I ask that an investigation be carried out regarding those members of the armed forces that are stationed outside of Canada with a view to reviewing their election system and to control what goes on at election time, not only to have one or two persons testify but to thoroughly investigate the situation. I think that the situation has deteriorated generally to the extent that members of the armed forces are unaware of whom they are voting for.

Mr. Speaker, they are not told what is going on in their country and in their constituencies but they are told that the better man is Mr. So and so. The serviceman does not fill out his ballot-paper himself, as this is probably done by the sergeant, the colonel or whoever teaches military drill or sentences them to detention for misbehaviour.

I am not making any charges accusations, but we have doubts, Mr. Speaker, since no definite information has been given to us. I think that, to enlighten the committee on privileges and elections, it would be quite appropriate for the hon. minister to have such an investigation conducted, which would not necessarily be expensive but would prove that the government is willing to modernize the elections act.

Once again, I wish to congratulate the mover of this bill which I trust will be referred to the committee on privileges and elections. Personally, I wish to assure the hon. member that I will give my most sincere attention to his motion, while expressing the reservations I have just mentioned concerning members of the armed forces and public servants serving outside Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that one day we will have an honest, intelligent and fair election system which will produce the governments we want and not forced upon us like those we have had since 1867.

[English]

Mr. D. W. Groos (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join that chorus of voices in support of this private members' notice of motion. I note that we have only ten minutes before this measure will come to a vote, so I intend to be brief. It is hoped that it will be referred to the committee on privileges and elections.

No single notice of motion could possibly cover all the defects which exist in the Canada Elections Act, but this notice of motion would certainly correct a very important error. In paragraph (c) of this notice of motion the hon. member very rightly proposes that members of the public service of Caanda who live abroad, and their dependants should be able to cast absentee ballots. I am entirely in favour of this suggestion, but he continues to say "in the manner prescribed for the armed services." Perhaps I did not do my homework before entering the house, and I only entered a few moments ago, but I think it will be found that dependants of armed servicemen abroad are not now in a position to vote during a general election. I hope this matter will be corrected when a correction is being made in respect of dependants of members of the public service of Canada.

What I am really doing is putting in a plug for the dependants of armed servicemen serving abroad in order that they may be permitted to cast absentee ballots. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gerald Richard Cobbe (Portage): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to speak on this most important motion dealing with the Canada Elections Act. I support it wholeheartedly but suggest that possibly it does not go far enough. In proposing a motion like this, and it is the longest one on the order paper, I am sure the hon. member found difficulty in drafting it in shorter form.

Some comments by hon. members regarding the vote of our armed forces abroad have surprised me. I was surprised to hear any suggestion that there is a considerable amount of fraud connected with the armed forces balloting.

I certainly hope the armed forces personnel will have the opportunity to refute this allegation because I do not believe it is fair for these people to have to accept such statements without having such an opportunity. I would say that the suggestion 33 per cent of the people were not motivated to vote probably accounts for these changes being recommended. I do not believe these people were not motivated to vote. The truth is rather that they were not given the opportunity to vote. As was indicated before, it was impossible for them to get to the polls on election day.

I believe that this suggestion not only affects Canadians who travel abroad, such as those who travel on government business, but also other persons who should be given the opportunity to vote on absentee ballots. I am referring to people who have been moved from their districts after the electoral lists have been posted. What opportunity do these people have to vote? In most cases they would have to travel half way across the country to get back to their proper poll. I believe some consideration should be given to these people and their ballots should be separated from those of the armed forces.

There are also people whose place of work is many miles away from home. Our advanced poll system does not take care of these people. If we look up the statistics we will find that one out of every five families in Canada moves every year. So, it is obvious that in our vast country the privilege of voting is taken away from a great number of people.

To get back to the subject of the armed forces vote, I think there are other measures that could be implemented to assist the armed forces personnel in voting. I do not agree with the statement that it is not possible to inform our armed services personnel abroad about what is going on in our country. A list of constituents who are in the armed forces abroad is available to all candidates, and it is quite easy to communicate with these people. I suggest that members of our armed forces abroad have a much greater interest in what is going on in our country than many people who live in Canada, and they are in very close touch with what is going on here. I am sure that the newspapers that are sent to them are more widely read than they are by people living in the constituency who choose not to vote. However, I am not in total agreement with the provisions made for the armed forces to choose where they wish to vote.

Sometime during the months of January or February each year the members of the armed forces are allowed to choose their place of voting. We know that when people join up they automatically vote in the place at which they joined the services. Sometimes our armed forces personnel are stationed in a community for five years. They are active in that community and have much more knowledge of what is going on there than their place or origin. There is provision for these people to transfer their vote, but I do not think it is a simple matter. This decision has to be made in January or February but if an election is called in March it is too late for them to change. I believe this situation should be considered to see whether we cannot make some more practical provision for these people.

I support the suggestion of other hon. members that people in hospitals, bedridden patients and people who cannot leave their homes should be given an opportunity to vote. This would take care of much of the 33 per cent to which reference has been made.

Mr. Benjamin: Don't cut one of your colleagues off. How can you do that to a member of your own party?

Mr. Cobbe: I believe there are many people who are deprived of the privilege of voting because they cannot get to the polls.

I should like to put the following motion:

That the said motion be deemed to have been withdrawn and that the subject matter thereof stand referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

HISTORIC SITES AND MONUMENTS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING BOARD MEMBERSHIP, REMUNERATION, ETC.

Hon. Jean Chretien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved the second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development of Bill C-153, to amend the Historic Sites and Monuments Act.

He said:

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this is an amendment to the act amending the Historic Sites and Monuments act. This is a quite normal measure which implies no considerable change. The first part of the change that we want to bring about is to enable an official of the National Museums of Canada to sit on the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada.

When the government was reorganized in 1964, the representative of the National Museums of Canada lost his seat on the board and we thought that, in view of the common interest the National Museums of Canada and the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada it would be advisable to appoint again a member of the National Museums to the board. As this board is concerned in particular with the historic sites and monuments of Canada, all hon. members will realize the importance for the board, considering its task of conservation, to benefit from the superior knowledge and the guidance of a representative from the National Museums of Canada.

As to the second part of this act, which is very brief, we would like to amend the section which sets out the remuneration of the members of the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada.

The present act provides for an allowance of $20 per day for those experts who apply their knowledge both historical and otherwise to the benefit of Canada. The appointment of the members of that board has always been made very conscientiously. The members appointed by the different administrations have been chosen for their technical knowledge and their qualifications in history. I feel therefore that it would be most fair that they be granted now a more appropriate return for their many services to the community.

I know that most members on the Board are good Canadian citizens, quite happy to serve their country in that capacity, but I also think that we should give them a better salary because it would not be fair for doctors in history, university professors or well-known historians to get only $20 per day. We wish therefore to empower to governor in council to determine, as changes occur, what will be a fair remuneration for the Board members, the more so as several of them—and I should like to pay them a special tribute tonight—devote many hours and even whole days, on weekends or in the summer months, to conduct free of charge their own personal research so as to be able to judge the historical value of the projects suggested to them.

Mr. Speaker, it would be absolutely normal, in the circumstances, to amend this somewhat outmoded provision and, in the case of the Historic Sites and Monuments Board, to do as for other boards, that is to have the remuneration of its members fixed but order in council.

Those are the only comments I wish to make at this stage on the measure that can be readily understood by everyone.

[English]

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, the minister has briefly outlined the purposes of the legislation now before us. As he says, it is merely housekeeping legislation. It makes two small changes to the act, one of which is increasing the membership of the Historic Sites and Monuments Board from 14 to 15. I believe the amendment also provides for a proportionate increase in the quorum. The bill makes the further recommendation that the responsibility for determining the remuneration of the distinguished Canadians serving on the Historic Sites and Monuments Board be placed in the hands of the Governor in Council.

I am sure no member of this house has any quarrel with those recommendations. In fact, the only complaint I would raise is that the minister did not seize this occasion to make more sweeping changes to the Historic Sites and Monuments Act. I am sure the time has come when we should review this legislation in a more comprehensive way and recognize that the growing interest in the preservation of Canada's historic sites and monuments should be recognized in a more fitting and enthusiastic manner.

The only comment I wish to make about the appointment of an additional member from the national museums of Canada is to express satisfaction that the legislation is trying to achieve co-ordination in this way between the functioning of the Canadian museums and of the Historic Sites and Monuments Board. It is an indication that these two areas of government activity have very much in common. While it is a step forward to bridge the gap which presently exists, I hope the government will in due course bring about the even closer co-ordination of these activities. The Historic Sites and Monuments Board is now operating under the national parks branch of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. At one time the museums also came within the responsibility of this department. It would seem to me that both should be supervised by one department, either under the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) or under the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien), so that we might achieve co-ordination which would really be effective, making possible a more realistic program to preserve our ancient sites and monuments.

It is a waste of time to get the whole machinery of parliament turning over merely to indulge in housekeeping operations rather than make significant changes such as I have mentioned.

With reference to remuneration of members of the board coming under the control of the Governor in Council, may I say I agree that the present rate of $20 per day plus travelling expenses is hardly sufficient to recompense the kind of people who serve on these boards. This gives me an opportunity to pay tribute to a man who served as chairman of the board for a long period of time—indeed he was active from as far back as 1955, and he continued as chairman right up to the time of the centenary celebrations. I refer to Dr. Bruce Fergusson who is the archivist for the Province of Nova Scotia. Dr. Fergusson is typical of the men who serve voluntarily on the Historic Sites and Monuments Board. Twenty dollars a day scarcely pays a hotel bill nowadays, let alone the other expenses which are incurred by these gentlemen and ladies. We have had some distinguished ladies, too, including Dr. Hilda Neatby, who come to Ottawa to advise the government on the preservation of our monuments.

This increase really reflects the fact that we are living in an inflationary period. All Canadians are having difficulty keeping abreast of the greatest increase in the cost of living in Canadian history. While this is not a debate on fiscal, financial or economic policy, and while the minister did not say so in his remarks, the reason for this amendment placing remuneration in the hands of the Governor in Council, where the amount could be varied at will, is that the Governor in Council is himself having trouble keeping up with the rising cost of living in Canada. We object to this rapid increase in the cost of living but we would not want members of the board to be penalized because of the government's maladministration.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In the way the pensioners are.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, in the way the pensioners are. That is the difficulty, here. If the principle applies in one area it should apply in all areas. The trouble is that the government is discriminating.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear.

Mr. Dinsdale: I hope the minister is giving earnest consideration to a program which has long been contemplated in connection with the preservation and commemoration of our national historic sites and monuments, that is, the animating of our historic sites, particularly of our historic parks. This program has been under way for a number of years, but it has not been making much progress in recent years. I hope that when Louisburg is completed, or becomes operational—and I believe it is getting into the operational stage now—animation will be a fundamental part of the program.

Historic sites and monuments and historic parks have strong appeal to the tourists who are coming to Canada in increasing numbers. This means, of course, that the functions of the branch of government concerned here have an important commercial and economic value. In my opinion, the presentation of living history at precise periods in Canada's past has great educational value as has been demonstrated in some of the developments undertaken by the Province of Ontario, in particular at Fort Kingston, the Upper Canada village, and so forth.

This is the sort of thing the federal government should be encouraging right across Canada. I shall not take the time to mention areas which are ideally suited to animation but there are several in every province which deserve this kind of treatment. We have not had a chance to discuss this matter, and I am sorry that the minister did not take the opportunity to deal with it—

Mr. Speaker: Order. At this point I think I should say that if the minister had taken the opportunity to discuss the points which the hon. member is attempting to make now I would have been obliged to call him to order and remind him that this is a bill limited in scope and dealing with two matters only, one concerning the quorum and the other having to do with remuneration. I hope hon. members will seek to confine their remarks to the limited aspects of the bill now before the house.

Mr. Dinsdale: I was in the middle of a sentence when Your Honour rose. I was about to say I was sorry the minister had not broadened the scope of this bill, in which case we could have had a debate which was worthwhile. As it is, the whole machinery of parliament is being used to make these minor changes with no opportunity for the whole subject to be discussed. The labour of the house will bring forth nothing but a mouse, nothing of any real import.

Here too, was the golden opportunity to co-ordinate the functions of several branches of government so that we might have a more suitable program of historic sites and monuments commemoration. We have many government agencies working in this field. Some are doing a good job but would do a much better job if they worked under one minister or branch of government.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to state that I feel the time is long overdue when the National Battlefields Commission should amalgamate its operations with the functions of the National Historic Sites and Monuments Board to encompass all the historic sites of significant battles fought in Canada, such as the war of 1812, the Northwest rebellion and so forth. Under the aegis of one branch of government we could move forward to meet the rapidly increasing demands from the Canadian public for recognition of this particular facet of our Canadian history, as evidenced by growing attendance at monuments and historic sites.

Having said that, I presume the bill will go to committee, where perhaps we will have the opportunity to inquire into some of the broader aspects of the problem. However, I do urge the minister to move far beyond the confines of this bill so we can do something in these matters that is worthy of a great and growing nation such as Canada.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like very briefly to discuss the bill and to raise one problem that we have in our area in connection with the act. The amending bill that is before us makes only a few slight changes to the Historic Sites and Monuments Act; it adds an officer from the National Museum of Canada to the Historic Sites and Monuments Board, and this raises the total membership of the board to 15.

I am hopeful that the addition of one member to this board will reverse a decision I believe the department has made with regard to a project in my riding of Kootenay West. It is interesting to note that the board will now consist of the following members: the Dominion Archivist, an officer from the National Museums of Canada, an officer from the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, two representatives for each of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and one representative for each of the other eight provinces, to be appointed by the Governor in Council. The bill also provides for an increase in the remuneration paid to board members. I believe that the amendments which have been offered by the minister are good ones.

I should like to speak briefly on the functions of this particular act which was assented to in 1953. Since the act was passed about 15 years ago, in my opinion an outstanding job has been done in putting up plaques and monuments across Canada which go a long way toward preserving the history of our nation. One of the act's objectives, among others, is to establish historic museums and to provide for their administration, preservation and maintenance. Very recently, a request was made by the Rossland Historical Museum Association—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member resume his seat. I have to admonish the hon. member in the same way as I did the hon. member who spoke before him, and remind him that the only matters before the house for discussion at the moment are very simple ones, namely the quorum of this commission and, secondly, the amendment to section 4. As the hon. member knows, the fact that a statute is being amended does not allow hon. members to go behind the amendments to the statute and consider the details of the statute being amended.

I appreciate that the hon. member may have a matter of interest to bring to the attention of the house, and he will certainly be allowed to do this. But at the same time I hope he will limit his remarks as much as possible to the very specific points that are now before the house for consideration.

Mr. Harding: Thank you, Mr. Speaker; I intend to be very brief. I should just like to raise this point. My hope is that the addition to the board will provide a much better chance for a new hearing which would result in changing a verdict that I think should be changed.

I was talking about the Rossland Historic Museum which was very interested in setting up in the city of Rossland a Nancy Greene Ski Museum. They had hoped to incorporate it in the existing Rossland Historical Museum building. This request was made to the minister and I think passed on to the National Advisory Council on Fitness and Amateur Sport, who in turn I think should have passed it on to this board. I presume the minister has the correspondence in this matter.

I should like to point out to the minister and the government—I will take only a moment or two—that the Rossland Historical Museum Association has done an outstanding job in the preservation of the history of Rossland, as everyone is well aware. Nancy Greene has become one of the best known sports figures in Canada's history. She has made the name of Rossland synonymous with skiing. It was here that she learned the art of skiing which won for her and for Canada a gold medal and the title of World Cup Ski Champion.

I feel it is essential that every consideration be given to the establishment of a Nancy Greene Ski Museum in Rossland, her own home town. A museum of this type would add immeasurably to the already successful Rossland Historical Museum. It would be an outstanding attraction in this already famous ski town and would highlight the exploits of Nancy Greene, who by her fine example, her sportsmanship, courage and achievement has already made a tremendous contribution to Canadian prestige and Canadian youth.

Before any further time elapses, I feel action should be taken. Nancy Greene has become a legend in her own time. A Nancy Greene Ski Museum at Rossland would be a tangible and permanent token of appreciation by the Canadian people in honouring this great Canadian. I urge the minister and the government to assist the Rossland Museum Association in the establishment of this museum.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank you for your indulgence in allowing me to present this very brief, but I can assure you tremendously important plea from the West Kootenay riding, and particularly from that great ski centre in my riding, Rossland. I trust the minister will give this matter full consideration and will let the people know that the government will go along with the minute expenditure that is involved.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I will also try to speak briefly and not to wander from the subject.

Of course, we admit that there should be a representative of the national museums on this Board. We think that is quite normal.

As for the remuneration, it seems to me that the government is too readily entrusted with the care of determining it under an order in council. It could have been suggested, for example, that the committee dealing with these matters should set each year, if necessary, a new allowance, as it could be done here. I recognize that the amount of $20 is entirely insufficient and that it should be increased to a more logical, concrete and actual amount for 1969. However, I agree that instead of always giving that responsibility to the governor in council, it could be assigned to the committee of the house.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the minister that when it is a question of historic monuments, we should take into consideration the existence of the two nations in Canada. Therefore, I would like to see more attention paid to Quebec's wishes in that field, and its views considered, as it represents the great majority of the French-Canadian nation, and I want to stress this. Why? For the simple reason that when there are two nations, both do not necessarily have the same heroes. A hero, to one nation, may be a zero for the other. Therefore, it is important in a country such as ours, to consider the views of the two nations, with justice and equality, as far as historic monuments are concerned

Finally, and this is my last remark, I believe that representation on that Board would be more adequate and equitable if members were chosen according to their nationality and not the areas they come from as at present.

• (8:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I shall not delay passage of this bill, item No. 17 on today's order paper. I merely wish to compliment the Historic Sites and Monuments Board for the diligent work it has done in the past. I should like to pay special tribute to a friend of Alberta, whom I will not name, for the tremendous job he has done in reminding Canadians in general and Albertans in particular of the historic sites which played so great a part in the history of our province. I particularly wish to remind this house and the board of the historic significance of the peace treaty signed in the 1880's in which the chief participants were Colonel McLeod and Chief Crowfoot.

An hon. Member: Wasn't it 1877?

Mr. Horner: An hon. member suggests the date was 1867 or 1877. I think the date was closer to 1880. I do not know the exact date, although no doubt members of the Historic Sites and Monuments Board do. It is well known that after the uprisings at Portage and in northern Saskatchewan generally, Chief Crowfoot played a prominent part in bringing peace to western Canada. In addition, his actions brought peace to our Indians.

Chief Crowfoot's actions have passed into history and we ought to pay tribute to the tremendous part he played in bringing peace. When one remembers the difficult times the settlers in the United States had during that period and the fights there were between General Custer and the Indians one cannot praise too highly the actions of Colonel McLeod which culminated in the signing of the peace treaty along the Bow river in 1877, I think.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner: I hope the Historic Sites and Monuments Board will commemorate that occasion in an apt way. I have visited the site where the peace treaty was signed. The occasion ought to be commemorated, and I stress these words, because of the confusion our Indians find themselves in today. Nearly 100 years have passed since that event and those who judge us may say that the white man has failed to integrate the Indian into his society. I should not like it if others could judge us that harshly with justification.

I should like to think that, 100 years after the signing of the treaty, we are integrating our Canadian Indians into our society and treating them in every way as full fledged Canadian citizens. It would be apt if in some way the federal government and provincial government concerned could commemorate the signing of the treaty. Surely, it had significance for those concerned when it was signed. I hope it will have significance for us all in the future.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty to inform the house that if the minister speaks now he will close debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I have only a few things to say.

I thank my hon. friends for having kept generally to the matter before the house and which is rather simple, that is the number of members and their salaries.

I simply want to make—

[English]

I think we all agree that Nancy Greene made a great contribution to Canada, and we can be very proud of her. Certainly, I am happy to recognize her contribution. But because she is so young and so lively, we cannot consider her an historic site or monument. I think there are probably other ways to give her credit for what she did for Canada.

PATENT ACT—TRADE MARKS ACT

EXTENSION OF AUTHORITY TO GRANT LICENCES

The house resumed from Friday, January 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. Basford for the second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs of Bill C-102, to amend the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act and the Food and Drugs Act.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I shall not speak at length on this bill. I hope it will pass very quickly and be sent to committee where it can be scrutinized and improvements brought to the attention of committee members and of the house.

I want to make it quite plain that this party is not opposed to second reading of the bill. In fact, we are quite anxious to have it approved under the new practice so that it will go to the committee and receive careful examination. I do not think there is any question about that. Some suggestions have been made to the contrary. I have read the speeches made to date in the house and I think some rather unfair suggestions have been made concerning the position taken by this party.

It is true that, in the legal phrase, we are approving it dubitate. We are dubious that the bill will have the results which are envisaged by the minister, but we hope it will. We feel that the question of drugs and drug prices is a subject of very substantial importance to the people of this country. Any suggestions to the contrary are improperly conceived. We think it could be a better bill. Hon. members on the government side have said it could be a better bill. Hon. members in the party to my left have said quite definitely it could be a better bill. This remains to be seen. Time will tell.

Personally, I will support any reasonable measure directed towards achieving better and cheaper drugs for the people of our country. However, I would equally oppose any measure which would result in placing before the people of the country drugs which are not likely to do the job which they should do. Anything which prevents people from being relieved of the indignities, the unhappiness and the misfortune of disease and illness should be removed, but it is just as wrong for people to be deceived and to have drugs given to them which do not achieve the effect which they should. It is of no value to provide cheaper drugs if those drugs do not do the job which they should. That is our position.

I read the evidence contained in the Green book, the discussions which took place and the examinations conducted by the officials of the Restrictive Trade Practices Branch. I read the evidence given before the Hall royal commission. I read the statements prepared by the authorities of the province of Alberta. In that regard I want to pay tribute to the province of Alberta, to Dr. Ross, and to a particular friend of mine and a friend of many hon. members in this chamber, Mr. James Frawley, who made this particular project his own and did a great deal of work. He is entitled to a lot of credit for what he has done.

I have read part of the evidence given before the parliamentary committee on food and drugs in 1964 and 1965, which dealt almost exclusively with the question of safety and control of drugs. I have read a lot of the evidence given before the special committee, the Harley committee, in 1966 and 1967, and I would like to recall for the memory of the house one of the statements made in the recommendations of the 1964 and 1965 parliamentary committee on food and drugs.

One of its recommendations is that the inspection of quality control methods here and abroad should be carried out by the Food and Drug Directorate. If felt necessary by the Food and Drug Directorate, this quality control check was to be carried out by any importer before a drug is released for use in Canada. If this inspection is not carried out or does not meet our standards, the imported drug should not be released for use in Canada. That was coupled with a number of other recommendations.

I would assume it is the government's view that these and other similar recommendations are met by clause 5 of the bill which empowers the government to pass orders in council. I will not bother to read that clause but I think it is quite plain the intention is that the Food and Drug Directorate would make recommendations to the government which, in turn, would be incorporated into regulations. I am not happy about that. It seems to me that if it is possible for the government to set down in detail in this bill the various steps it proposes should be taken to reduce the price of drugs, then that should be accompanied at this stage by fairly specific proposals which the government intends to take in the future. This important matter should not be left to the good faith of the government and the Food and Drug Directorate.

I am not questioning the good faith of the Food and Drug Directorate but this subject is something with which we cannot trifle. In effect, by clause 5, the government is saying it is underwriting and guaranteeing that the quality of drugs brought into Canada as a result of the legislative changes envisaged when this bill is passed will be effective, efficient and safe. I want to say to the government that this is a very heavy responsibility to bear. Should there be injury, death or disaster, following the passage of this bill, as a result of the failure of the Food and Drug Directorate or of the government to introduce regulations which provide these safety features, the responsibility will lie squarely on the government. This is a responsibility it must be prepared to assume.

When the bill gets into committee it will be possible for members of the committee to make proposals, by way of amendment or otherwise, to improve the legislation. I am quite confident it is susceptible of improvement and change under the new rules under which we now operate. The committee is the place where this can be done.

I hope no undue restrictions will be placed on the committee in its effort to improve this legislation and to extract from the government something more specific than is contained within the four corners of clause 5 of the bill. I think this is something which members of this party who have spoken have stressed over and over again, as it was their duty to do. I think they would have been derelict in discharging their responsibility under the oath they have taken as members' of this house had they, with the special knowledge they have, failed to emphasize this fact. I believe they are entitled to approbation from this house for making this point so strongly on many occasions. This is the position we take. I hope this bill will pass through the second reading stage, will be committed to the standing committee tonight, and that this committee will undertake its duty to examine this legislation as soon as possible.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Mr. Ian Watson (Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe any member of this house opposes the principal objective of this bill which is the lowering of drug prices to the Canadian consumer. The minister indicated that the bill which is presently before us is based on the recommendation of the special committee on drug costs and prices chaired by Dr. Harley. The Harley committee based its recommendation concerning the amendment of subsection 3, section 41, of the Patent Act on the recommendation in the Hall Commission report which commission in turn based its recommendation on the recommendation of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission.

In going through the recommendations of the Harley committee, I find myself in general agreement with 21 of the 23 recommendations. The only recommendation to which I take exception is recommendation No. 18 which is the basis for the bill before the house. In reading through the Hall Commission recommendations with respect to drugs I find myself in agreement with 22 of its 24 recommendations and, in the case of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission recommendations, I agree with all but one of their seven recommendations. The committee and the two commissions have made an exhaustive and thorough study of the safety and cost factors involved in the sale of prescription drugs to the public in Canada. Unfortunately, the two commissions and the Harley committee failed to give in depth attention to the effect which some of their recommendations might have on further capital investment in manufacturing and research facilities and to the growth of certain ancillary raw material supply industries located in Canada. I am intervening today in the hope that when Bill C-102 is considered in committee detailed attention can be given these items.

The official opposition has expressed concern at the possible health dangers involved to the public in the importation of drugs and drug ingredients. I do not share this concern as I have complete confidence in the ability of the Food and Drug Directorate to enforce the safety standards necessary to protect the Canadian public. I cannot imagine any Canadian government official taking a risk with the health of the Canadian people. If the facilities are not yet available for adequate testing of these imports, then the Food and Drug Directorate obviously will not allow such importations until it is able to impose adequate surveillance.

The basic issue posed by the amendment to subsection 3 of section 41 of the Patent Act has been succinctly stated by D. H. W. Henry, Q.C., Director of Investigation and Research, Combines Investigation Act, to the special committee on drug costs and prices on February 7, 1967. Mr. Henry said:

> —The first fundamental issue emerging in this committee's proceedings is whether a drug manufacturing industry ought to be preserved in Canada in its present form. To do so requires continuation of the present protective devices which the industry considers necessary to its viability, but which deny Canadians access to less costly supplies of drugs. To remove significant elements of that protection (as by extending compulsory licensing to imports, or by abolishing drug patents) should lower the prices of drugs reaching the Canadian market but may well shift some sources of suply to plants abroad. It is possible that some Canadian drug manufacturers may become distributors to a greater extent than they are now. Manufacturing would then tend to concentrate on those products which Canadians can produce most efficiently.

Bill C-102 reflects these views and the minister in his remarks of October 17, 1968 indicated that these views were in effect the basis for Bill C-102. I say that I share the minister's hope that as a result of Bill C-102 drug prices will be lowered to the Canadian public. The expert witness I have just quoted indicated in these general terms what he thought the effects on the drug industry would be if compulsory licensing of imports were allowed. I wish to point out that the possible effects mentioned by this witness have not been completely investigated. Certain other side effects have never been mentioned, let alone seriously considered by the Harley committee or the two commissions.

It was this particular area of neglected attention which led to my original interest in the drug bill. My constituency, as it existed before redistribution, had 26 farmers who were supplying P.M.U. to a major pharmaceutical company in Montreal. The initials P.M.U., for the uninitiated, stand for pregnant mares urine. Since redistribution my constituency has six such suppliers of the raw material for estrogenic hormones. The total number of farmers involved in this field in Canada exceeds 600 and the revenue which these farmers derive from the sale of this product exceeds $7.5 million annually. To give you an idea of the importance of this agricultural product in comparison with other sources of agricultural income, I should point out that the total peach production in Canada in 1966, according to the Canada Year Book, was valued at $7.4 million; grape production, $6.6 million; sugar beet production, $12.1 million and sheep and lamb production, $9.4 million. Of particular importance is the complementary nature of the revenue so derived. The production season is from November to April. Farmers involved in this production receive an income during what is normally a slack farm revenue season.

It is worth noting that this industry was developed by a Canadian company, a company which has been highly praised by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) in his remarks to the house on October 17, 1968. The development of estrogenic hormones is an outstanding example of a discovery made and developed in Canada, with production continuing in Canada under the laws as they have existed to date. As a result of this extremely successful discovery this particular company has prospered and expanded and has in consequence developed the most extensive drug research facilities in Canada. From reading the report of the Harley committee and the two commissioners, one gets the impression that because most large Canadian drug companies are foreign subsidiaries there is little potential for the Canadian export of drugs. The example I am dealing with belies this suggestion since this company now exports more than $11.3 million worth of estrogenic compounds annually. In addition to payments to farmers, the company also pays out substantial amounts in wages, for goods and services.

The question which I should like to see the committee consider is whether under the change proposed by Bill C-102 it would be possible for the success story I have outlined to be repeated with a future Canadian discovery. I would hope that the committee would consider whether the shifting of sources of supply, as predicted in the testimony to the Harley committee which I quoted, poses a danger to the P.M.U. industry as well as to the growth of this industry. The Harley committee, in its report at page 2604 of its proceedings stated, and I quote:

> No recommendations could be considered, which, although designed to lower drug prices . . . might . . . have a detrimental effect upon other aspects of the Canadian economy.

This statement was set forth by the committee as a basic principle from which other recommendations of the committee would flow.

Since Bill C-102 is the direct result of the Harley committee's recommendation, I would urge the committee of this house which will consider Bill C-102 to give effect to this basic principle enunciated by the Harley committee and, in consequence, to consider thoroughly any economic effect upon this industry or other areas of the Canadian economy.

Another industry which needs to be looked at again and in greater detail is the fine chemicals industry. The minister stated on October 17, 1968 as recorded at page 1514 of Hansard for that date:

> Even now, as pointed out by the Harley commission and admitted by the drug industry, pharmaceutical corporations in Canada, taken together, import some 85 per cent of the active ingredients from their parent corporations or other foreign producers.

This may be true, but I would ask the minister and the committee which will be studying the subject, if it is not a desirable objective for Canada to encourage rather than discourage the industry. The latter will be the case if Bill C-102 passes in its present form. Is there not a way to at least allow this industry some hope for expansion within the confines of the government's stated objective to reduce the cost of drug ingredients by allowing foreign competition?

On October 17 when the minister introduced Bill C-102 he indicated that the proposed legislation should not be assumed to be discriminatory against domestic manufacturers. He stated they will continue to enjoy a virtual monopoly for their products while such products are classified as a new drug by the Food and Drug Directorate. This view was expressed, not as an opinion but as a fact by the Harley committee in respect of its proceedings at page 2636 as follows:

> After full consideration your committee is of the opinion that under the present system, the patentee has ample time to establish and consolidate his position in the market (and thereby recuperate his research cost) by virtue of the fact that it takes some four to five years for the drug to lose its new drug status as determined by the food and drug directorate. As explained earlier it is more "likely" that a compulsory licence will be sought prior to the date the drug loses its status as a new drug.

It is true, therefore, that the Harley committee in making its recommendations for amendment of section 41(3) of the Patent Act considered that the patentee had time to recoup his research cost and consolidate his position in the market in virtue of non-competition during the period of the new drug status, which the committee accepted as a fact to be four or five years.

I should like to point out to the minister that this is one specific area which should be reviewed. This so-called fact, accepted as such by the Harley committee, is not a fact at all. Even under the previous act, at least one licence was issued during the period of the new drug application. Thus the Harley committee made its recommendation for amendments to section 41(3) of the Patent Act on the questionable assumption that it is highly unlikely a compulsory licence would be issued while the compound is classified as a new drug. Despite the minister's recognition of this assumption inherent in his remarks of October 17, a proviso governing compulsory licences does not appear in either the present law or in the amendment proposed in Bill C-102. Therefore, the inventor does not actually have this implied protection.

The danger resulting from this situation, and this was not pointed out by the Harley committee or by the minister, is that until a patent issues there is presently nothing to prevent a competitor from manufacturing the new drug, completing the food and drug requirements and proceeding to market. It is conceivable that he could even reach the market in advance of the originator by taking advantage of the following circumstances.

Canada is a member of the international convention on patents. When the applicant for a Canadian patent wishes to protect his patent in foreign countries, he must file such application within one year from the date of filing his Canadian application. His foreign patent application would then carry the Canadian priority date. That is, it would be regarded as if it had been filed on the same day as the original patent application. In the case of Holland or Belgium, the contents of patent applications are publicly disclosed six months after the date of such application. Hence, the inventor in absolute terms has at most 1½ years maximum lead time, not four or five years as members of this house have been led to believe.

Once the invention is made public, it is quite conceivable that a competing firm could proceed with the utmost speed and utilize all its facilities in developing a new compound. This firm might even market it before the inventor, after having met all the food and drug requirements. Since the patent has not been issued, there is no contravention of industrial property rights. At the time the patent issues the competing firm could then apply for a compulsory licence with the result that, having met the food and drug requirements, this firm could market its product either prior to the inventor, concurrently or shortly thereafter.

As indicated at the beginning of my remarks, an area of economic consequences which I feel should be considered by the committee is the effect which the proposed legislation will have on investment in manufacturing and research facilities in Canada. It is common knowledge, and the minister himself has underlined this, that the drug industry is international in scope and the larger Canadian drug companies are all subsidiaries of international companies.

It must be remembered, however, that whether a drug company carrying on operations in Canada is a foreign subsidiary or not, the local management has a vested interest in increasing the scope of that company's activities. Quite simply, the local management gets paid more if its activities are larger. Fortunately for Canada, local management has until recently been successful in convincing head offices that expansion should take place in Canada both in manufacturing and research facilities. The recent incentives afforded to research by the minister of industry have undoubtedly helped local management in their arguments with their head offices, for purposes of installing research facilities in Canada.

Unfortunately, since the advent of Bill C-190 and the present Bill C-102, the capital investment picture in the drug industry has not been quite as rosy. I know as a fact that one large pharmaceutical firm based in the province of Quebec recently expanded its research facilities in the United States instead of Canada with a substantial capital investment. An even more serious loss to Canada and the province of Quebec resulted from a decision by another large pharmaceutical firm to expand both manufacturing and research facilities in the United States rather than Canada. The amount involved in this second decision was considerably in excess of $25 million. This story is fact, not rumour, and I recently confirmed this with the company. To be fair, in the latter case I do not think that the climate of uncertainty created by Bill C-102 and its predecessor Bill C-190, should bear the exclusive blame for the decision. However, it was a major contributing factor in the decision which cost the province of Quebec a multi-million dollar capital investment.

It is very easy to say that this climate of uncertainty was and is unjustified, but unfortunately this uncertainty is a fact. I wish, therefore, to suggest one measure for the committee's consideration which I feel would mitigate the climate of unease and uncertainty which Bill C-102 has created in the drug industry. This suggestion would also give effect to the statement made by the minister on October 17, that the government does indeed wish to extend a minimum degree of protection to the original drug patent holders as well as the small Canadian chemical manufacturers. Unless we are to eliminate the small Canadian chemical manufacturers altogether, some minimal protection is needed. Unless such a manufacturer enjoys the advantages of lead time over foreign competitors he cannot hope to effectively compete, and the existence of the remaining small manufacturers in Canada will be jeopardized.

I have outlined three areas of economic consequence of Bill C-102 which I hope the committee of this house will study as thoroughly as time permits. I do not think there is any question but that Bill C-102 will be adopted by the House of Commons. But I hope that in its final form it will more closely than is now the case give effect to the basic principles enunciated by the Harley committee when it stated, and I quoted this earlier, that no recommendation could be considered which, although designed to lower drug prices in Canada, might have a detrimental effect on other aspects of the Canadian economy.

I believe strongly that a relatively minor amendment could go a long way toward meeting the criticism which I have outlined. I would hope that both the government and the committee would consider an amendment which would give statutory effect to the five year protective period which the Harley committee in its recommendation, and the minister, assumed existed. I suggest that when the committee of the House of Commons is considering amendments to Bill C-102, it consider adding to section 41(4) of the Patent Act words along these lines:

> A compulsory licence may be granted at any time during the life of the patent to anyone who wishes to manufacture a compound in Canada, while compulsory licences shall only be granted for imported material five years after the patent issues.

I suggest that the amendment would continue the use of competitive market factors as a means of reducing drug prices because it would permit compulsory licences to be granted immediately for drugs manufactured in Canada. It would give the originator a five year protection from the compulsory licensing of foreign imports of drugs and drug ingredients. All this amendment would do would be to put into law what is already an implied protection, but I am convinced it would clear the air and vastly improve the investment climate for the drug industry in Canada.

I might add that the issues I have raised are solely economic. I wonder if the minister would consider referring Bill C-102 to the trade and commerce committee rather than to the Health, Welfare and Social Affairs Committee. I realize it is a little late in the game to suggest this. However, in support of my suggestion I would point out that witnesses have been heard covering all health aspects including safety factors and the cost of drugs, but the various committees and commissions have not had full discussion on the economic aspects of the proposed changes to the Patent Act. I hope the minister will consider referring this bill to the trade and commerce committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, no measure that has come before the house this year has more interest for large numbers of people across Canada in every riding, I am sure, from the Atlantic right through to the west coast. It is now nearly ten years since the Director of Investigation and Research under the Combines Investigation Act reached the conclusion that "prices of drugs in Canada are among the highest in the world". Since then no government has done anything worth while to get away from this unenviable distinction for Canada.

For thousands of Canadians the price of drugs has been, and continues to be, a crushing burden. One member of the house the other day stated that a quarter of our population cannot afford to buy the drugs they must have in order to live. These are the people on low income, people with large families, the chronically ill, the elderly, the pensioners. For far too many of these people, the only way they can get the life-giving drugs they need is to cut down on the food they ought to be having. They are consequently aggravating the vicious cycle of poor physical and nervous health. But I was rather shocked to hear the hon. member, for whom I have very high regard, make the suggestion that the best way for the government to show the people of Canada that they want to help in the problem of drugs would be to bonus the 25 per cent who need help the worst and, presumably, otherwise to allow the drug situation to remain as it is now.

If the price of drugs is too high, and that has been proved beyond the shadow of a doubt, the remedy is, surely, not to help the poorest people buy drugs and continue to allow the rest of us to be victimized by the drug companies. The remedy is for this government to take action to bring down the price of drugs for all Canadians in every part of the country and at every income level.

We shall support the bill now before us as a first, small step in this direction. But we are under no illusions. We know that it is a very small step indeed. We warn that it must be supplemented by other steps if the aroused expectations of the Candian people are to be met. Indeed, the minister and his predecessor warned that this measure would be only one small step in a number that must be taken if the price of drugs was to be brought down.

My colleague the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) has given cogent reasons for the establishment of a crown corporation to act as an independent marketing agency which would provide a yardstick by which the public could measure the performance of the existing private drug companies. It is to be hoped that the government, which has already been forced by the logic of events as well as by public opinion to establish crown corporations for other purposes, will shortly come to see the light in the handling of prescription drugs.

Still other measures will be needed if the price of drugs is to be brought down. I want to touch on one aspect this evening that has not been discussed in the debate up to this point except by way of very casual reference. I refer to the tremendous power of international cartels in setting the price of drugs, and the need for the government to co-operate with other governments and international agencies to devise ways and means of controlling them and breaking their power over the people who must have the products they handle.

Instead of talking in general terms I want to outline a single case that has come to my attention and that highlights the need for action that goes far beyond the scope of the present bill. Almost three years ago, in March, 1966, I received a letter from an elderly widow in Toronto. She had suffered for many years from heart trouble and her doctor prescribed quinidine sulphate pills to relieve the distress occasioned by that condition. For some time prior to writing to me she had been paying $12 for 500 pills. Suddenly, over a very short period of time, the price had gone up to $65.25, 5½ times as much. Thoroughly alarmed, she wanted to know why. She wrote to various government ministers, federal and provincial alike and was always given the same answer: It was because of the war in Viet Nam.

When she wrote to me, I in turn wrote to the Food and Drug Directorate. The office replied that recently they had received many similar inquiries about this drug. They told me that the supply of quinine and its derivatives came mainly from Indonesia, India and certain parts of Africa. They added:

> As you are aware, all these areas are unsettled to varying degrees ... The current problems of a number of these countries have resulted in a lower production and a resulting short supply of the crude material, cinchona bark. It has also been reported that the United States government has recently purchased significant quantities of quinine to supply to their troops fighting in Viet Nam. The above circumstances have resulted in the substantial increase in the cost of quinidine.

The Viet Nam war was cited as being the cause of the sudden rise in the price of quinidine sulphate pills. A few weeks later I received another letter from my Toronto correspondent telling me that she had read a newspaper report saying that quinidine sulphate pills were being sold in Britain at $7.50 for 500. Of course, she was paying at that time $65.25 for the same number of pills. She wanted to know why she, in Canada, should have to pay almost nine times as much for quinidine sulphate pills as they were paying in Britain. This time I wrote to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) who was then the Registrar General, the predecessor of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford). With his reply of May 4 came the dawn. I quote from his letter:

• (9:20 p.m.)

> This matter (that is, the price of quinidine sulphate tablets) was recently investigated by the sub-committee on antitrust and monopoly of the United States Senate. The situation is rather complicated but the evidence given appeared to indicate the existence of an international cartel in which Dutch interests played a prominent part. The United States maintained a large stockpile of quinine (of which quinidine is a derivative). The presence of this stockpile had the effect of keeping prices down. Then the United States decided to sell a large part of its stockpile. Most of the released supplies were purchased by the cartel. Having gained control of most available supplies of the drug, the cartel increased prices, reportedly as much as 500 per cent. The combines branch has a transcript of the hearings before the U.S. Senate committee which contains the full details. I am enclosing photostats of press clippings which you may find interesting.

I certainly did find them interesting because the clippings bore out in full detail the excellent summary of the situation outlined in the minister's letter.

I wish to add two new developments in what I call the case of the cover up cartel. The United States senate subcommittee continued its investigations, and I may say that they were long, detailed and thorough. It reported the fact in its year end report for 1967 that while the price of bulk quinine had dropped dramatically from almost $6 an ounce to $2.53, the manufacturers of quinidine tablets were not passing on the savings to the consumers. It also said, and this is very important, that there is not now, nor has there ever been since world war II, either a shortage of world supplies or an excess of world demand for quinine or quinidine.

It pointed out further that even though the cartel had bought almost 90 per cent of the U.S. stockpile of quinine before the U.S. defence department froze the remainder, based on the current military needs there is now left enough quinine in the stockpile to last for at least 1,142 years. So much for the Viet Nam war theory as an explanation for the price of quinidine tablets.

The United States did not rest at this point. The latest development I could find appeared in the Toronto Star of October 26 of last year which published a UPI special despatch from Washington as follows:

U.S. federal grand jury yesterday indicted 15 drug companies and 8 of their executives on criminal charges stemming from an alleged international conspiracy involving quinine and related drugs.

I have been trying very hard to follow up the result of that indictment and of that trial. So far I have not been able to trace it, and I would be very glad indeed to find out how that trial is progressing.

Now, I should like to go back for a moment to my letter of May 4, 1967 from the then Registrar General. He continued:

While it appears clear that increased prices have been due to the action of the cartel, all of the operations of the cartel have taken place outside Canada and beyond the reach of Canadian law. I was advised by the Director of Investigation and Research that Canadian suppliers appear to have acted responsibly. They are not parties to the cartel but have been forced to pay the inflated prices to obtain supplies of the basic drug. As far as can be learned, the increased prices for tablets simply reflect these increased prices.

I am wondering whether or not the same thing could have been said of U.S. manufacturers and people who were handling these drugs, that they were not parties to the cartel but had been forced to pay the inflated prices to obtain supplies of the basic drug. This is not the view that the U.S. government has taken of this matter. I want to know what measures our government proposes to protect Canadian consumers in this and other similar cases of exploitation and of merciless gouging by these international cartels. If the whole matter is presently beyond the reach of Canadian law, what can Canadians do to get such drugs at prices the great majority who need them can afford? This is a question with which I hope the minister will deal when we reach the committee stage of the bill. It is very relevant and urgent, and of course this bill does not elucidate how to deal with a situation of this kind. I should like to know whether the minister has other proposals as a follow up. Perhaps he will indicate them when we reach the committee stage of the bill.

If this whole matter is presently beyond the reach of Canadian law, and I have no doubt that it is, what can the government do to help people get drugs at prices the great majority of them can afford? This is an urgent question. I cannot believe that we should accept an attitude of helpless and hopeless resignation in the face of these international cartels. The United States authorities have acted to indict 15 drug companies and 8 of their executives on criminal charges. Why cannot we do likewise in a similar situation? What is our Combines Investigation Act for? If it cannot be used for such purposes in its present from, let it be amended or scrapped in favour of an act with teeth in it to protect the Canadian consumer. If that act is not suitable, let the minister make explorations as to what else can be done. I understand he is preparing amendments now for dealing with various phases of the need to protect the Canadian consumer, and perhaps this is one matter which he has under advisement. If not, surely it is up to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) to get together and devise ways and means of protecting the Canadian consumer from exploitation by this and other similar cartels.

There are still other measures which must be taken. I think it is exceedingly relevant that we should underline the fact that bill

C-102, even though it is important and even though we are going to support it, is only a very small step toward the measures that must be taken to protect the Canadian consumers and to bring down the price of drugs. I would urge that in these days of air travel, in which this government is taking its part as it should, the minister or ministers involved visit their opposite numbers in other countries, in this case the United States and perhaps Britain, for consultations as to ways and means of dealing with the situations created by such cartels. Obviously, such cartels are not within the control of any one country.

Also, I believe that there are countries which are farther along the road toward the control of drugs than is Canada. Of course, we have heard about Sweden. I hope that Sweden is not a dirty word in this house, although I have heard hon. members object to having Sweden mentioned. I hear suggestions from my confreres behind me that we had better not make it a dirty word. In Sweden, they have given notice that they intend putting the drug industry under national control because they do not think there is any other way of bringing down the price of drugs. I have been told by several people that Japan has been exploring ways and means of controlling the drug industry. I have no doubt that some members of our government, and I hope they would include the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the Minister of Justice, will next year be visiting Expo in Japan. Perhaps they might make it their business to find out what is being done there to protect the consumers of drugs, because I believe that sooner or later we shall have to have international control of these cartels and of the drug industry. Perhaps this should be done first through O.E.C.D. and eventually through the World Health Organization of the United Nations. Such a course was suggested last fall at a meeting in Geneva by no less a person than Dr. Karl Evang, director general of health services in Norway. He suggested that the World Health Organization would be the most suitable organization through which the various countries could come to an agreement and find ways and means of dealing with international cartels. This is not a far fetched idea. The W.H.O. is already dealing with a number of matters relating to health and welfare and various other matters of concern to countries throughout the world. I do not think it is a moment too soon for the government to begin considering steps of this kind.

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Basford: I wonder whether the hon. lady would permit a question? Has she heard that Mr. David Henry, the director of research under the Combines Investigation Act is chairman of a working group under the O.E.C.D. and attended a meeting in Paris just before Christmas on the subject of international co-operation in the field of combines? Perhaps, too, the hon. lady noted the remarks of the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Gendron) when he drew attention on Friday last to the work the department is doing on an international basis to develop standards of safety and control.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I am delighted to hear it and I hope Mr. Henry's interests will include the drug industry as well. If the department is thinking along these lines I am more than ever convinced we should be taking action now of the kind I have indicated. We are faced by the prospect of a new and potentially dangerous organization.

Last summer a big new cartel was formed in Stockholm, the International Federation of Pharmaceutical Manufacturers' Associations. This is an organization of drug manufacturers from all over the world. I am sure a regular covey of midwives were present, but among them was none other than our old friend Dr. William Wigle, president of the Pharmaceutical Association of Canada. This is the same Dr. Wigle, the friend of the people, who during the hearings of the committee on drugs put up such a relentless battle against each and every proposal designed to bring down the price of drugs to Canadian consumers. So if our friend Dr. Wigle is on the warpath organizing drug manufacturers all over the world to see that drug manufacturers are able to stand up in the face of possible intervention by governments, I am certainly pleased to hear indications that the Canadian government is making plans accordingly. It will be extremely difficult to cope with Dr. Wigle and his cohorts. They move fast, and today we know they need to move fast because the Canadian people are aroused over this question of high drug prices.

I was not much impressed during this debate by assertions on the part of hon. members to my right that the freer import of drugs would prove dangerous to the Canadian people, that it would mean the entry of drugs affected by dirt and foreign elements.

In the first place, this manifests a lamentable lack of confidence in the Canadian Food and Drug Directorate, a lack of confidence which I do not think is justified by the record of the directorate. Hon. members to my right used this same argument last year. This year the minister has added a number of clauses to the bill giving additional safeguards. These, in my opinion, ought to be sufficient to allay the fears expressed by members of the official opposition. Nevertheless, the same argument is still being used just as though there had been no additions to the bill. I am inclined to believe members to my right are using the danger of impure drugs as a kind of smoke-screen behind which to hide their unalterable objection to putting any curb on the activities of drug manufacturers in this country.

The time has come for hon. members to stand up and be counted. Either they are on the side of the manufacturers or they are on the side of the Canadian people who need the prices of drugs brought down. They cannot have it both ways. The screen which worked so well for them last year, because everyone is concerned about the safety of the Canadian people, has worn very thin, now. It no longer hides them. Although they may still be holding it in front of their faces, their rear is unprotected.

The battle to protect the Canadian consumer must be waged internationally as well as on the home front. We think of McLuhan's phrase "global village" and we realize he spoke words of truth and perception when he used that term. Unfortunately, we are living in a global village which is located in the middle of a jungle of private profit and greed; we must introduce a measure of safety and town planning for the inhabitants. This bill is a tiny beginning, or, to use a metaphor, it is a small crumb when we need the whole loaf.

A great many people are anxious to see drug prices brought down. We, in this corner, will take the crumb, but having done so we shall continue to ask for slice after slice, each slice building up our strength until finally we get the whole loaf. I am glad a great many members on both sides of the house are determined that this bill shall be passed and that it shall constitute only the first step in a program to bring down the prices of drugs to a point at which the Canadian consumer realizes he is getting drugs approximately at cost and not at a figure designed to produce enormous profits for the drug manufacturers. I trust the bill will receive a speedy passage and that it will be the first of a number of measures deisgned to protect the Canadian public.

[Translation]

Mr. René Émard (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I am quite favourable to any measure aimed at providing the Canadian people with quality drugs at lower costs. Given the interest that I always have shown in the field of labour, I could hardly be accused of being too much in sympathy with the large industries or high profits made at the expense of the wage earner. We all know that the worker must pay for everything he gets, and I also know that he wishes the best when the health of his family is concerned. The safety of his family must in no instance be jeopardized.

I was not a member of the special Committee on drugs and this probably is a handicap for me. However, I can now consider the drug cost problem impartially.

The proposed legislation is based on some research statistics going back to 1959 and 1960 and issued by the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission. The matter was examined, but not reexamined by the Royal Commission on health services, that made recommendations in 1964 on the basis of the 1960 data. The special Commons Committee heard many witnesses in 1966 and 1967. Nearly all of them referred to particulars going back to 1959-1960 and provided by the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission.

Except for some superficial comparisons on prices, we are presently discussing a bill that will regulate the future of an important Canadian industry, without a detailed economic study having been done on the part played by this industry in our Canadian society, without having adequate data on the true breakdown of the cost of drugs, namely by age, illness, economic sectors and so on; without an exhaustive study of the primary role played by drugs in some specific diseases like mental diseases, tuberculosis, and so on; and without waiting for the report on the thorough examination being made by the Economic Council on the role played by patents in our modern industry.

For example, the role played by patents as a factor of the high cost of drugs in Canada still remains to be determined. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) made an international comparison of the cost of drugs in his introductory speech, in which he stated that Canadians were at a disadvantage. I am sure that all those who have heard that speech have understood that the same comparison would apply to virtually all the other commodities which we manufacture in Canada, inasmuch as the comparison is made on an official international basis of exchange. The only way to make a decent comparison would be to base it on the relative purchasing power.

But to go back to the speech of the Minister. As an example, he gave a list of nine drugs, which would be enough to warrant the repeal of all patents on drugs in Canada. Besides, the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) mentioned it last week. The patents on four of those drugs are about to expire, if they have not expired yet. The patent on three other drugs will end within a few years, and only two will be protected by a patent for some years to come.

I am also told that the Canadian prices referred to in the same speech are quite higher than the most favourable prices charged now to Canadian pharmacists.

I wish to say again that I favour low-priced drugs as long as there is a guarantee that the quality of the drug will not be reduced, that the proceedings covering the importation of drugs will not jeopardize opportunities for new discoveries in Canada, that research and manufacturing facilities will be used at their fullest capacity and that there will be an objective and complete appraisal of the importance of industrial patents in Canada.

The hon. minister pointed out that 95 per cent of Canadian patents belong to foreign countries. He places Canada in such a situation that she has nothing to do but to pick up the ball and go home if she thinks she has no chance whatsoever to win the game. The government should act in this field. Why not set up a nationwide organization aimed at enhancing industrial research?

The former minister of Industry said that our country's objective for research and development should be 4 per cent of our gross national product. How could we attain such a goal? By eliminating substantial facilities for drug research in Canada? By ignoring and disregarding the most important incentive to research? By trying to dismantle the most important machineries for the international sharing of technological advances to be found in the domestic patents system?

I admit that we must provide pharmaceutical products at fair and reasonable prices, but I do not think the legislation proposed but the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs will bring the expected results.

I am forced to believe the Canadian Medical Association when its representatives tell us their great concern that the legislation will open the way to drugs of which the security and effectiveness will not always be up to the quality standards that Canadian citizens are entitled to.

I must take the word of experts in international research who draw our attention to the most important part played by the patent system in world trade.

I am most interested in the report prepared by the Economic Council of Canada on the importance of industrial patents in the Canadian industry. Since the report is to be released at the end of February, why not wait for it?

I am also interested to learn the results of the study that the Medical Research Council has performed on the industrial pharmaceutics in Canada.

Besides, I would like to know when the Department of National Health and Welfare will establish a selective assistance regarding drugs for the benefit of those who need them most, such as old people who rely on a small allowance and who are chronically ill, and all the other citizens who are poor and who need drugs badly.

The proposed legislation will only be a risk to the future of our national medicine and an obstacle to the means we have at our disposal to guarantee medical care for those who need it.

Having heard all the speeches delivered on the sujbect in the House of Commons since the beginning of this debate, I am surprised at the little attention given to the economic aspect of this the bill and the consequences it will bring about.

Drug production in Canada is worth about $150 million per year and that industry employs more than 10,000 workers, 2,500 of whom are university graduates. It is estimated that an equivalent number of Canadian workers earn their living by providing services and products directly connected with that industry.

With the passage of Bill C-102, competitors who barely have a telephone and employ perhaps a salesman could put on the market imported products soon after their development, knowing that the government will grant them a temporary license less than six months after the issuance of a patent. I expect that companies of pharmaceutical products now manufacturing their products will also obtain licences. Then, instead of plants and laboratories of pharmaceutical products, we will have warehouses, as it often occurs in several Canadian industries.

If the governmental program is really successful, it is obvious that the industry will have to close its research laboratories in Canada and tranfer its manufactures in countries where salaries and manufacturing cost are comparable to those of imported products.

While nearly all the nations in the western world, which use advanced technology, are endeavouring to find fair means for providing pharmaceutical services required by adequate welfare programs, within competitive international patent systems, our government seems determined to endanger the very existence of that industry.

Bill C-102 aims only at cutting the price of drugs to the utmost. What would happen, supposing our pharmaceutical industry was destroyed, our research laboratories were eliminated, and thousands of workers were dismissed, if this bill failed, as did the suppression of the 12 per cent tax?

There are other very important points. We should remember that druggists who sell to the consumers do not come in any way under the jurisdiction of the federal government.

In my opinion, we should have come to some agreement with the provincial governments before introducing this bill. I am convinced that there are other ways to get the desired result, without taking the risk of ruining our drug industry and I hope I will have the opportunity to deal with that within the committee.

Before concluding my comments, Mr. Speaker, allow me to quote the report of the special committee of the House on the cost and prices of pharmaceutical products, commonly called the Harley report. Sub-section 1 of Chapter II gives the basic principles, and I quote:

—your Committee remained fully conscious that its responsibilities in fact exceed those of the Commissions in that the Committee's conclusions must be such that any of its recommendations, if adopted—

Here is a very important excerpt, and I quote:

—should continue to maintain a proper balance between industry and consumer and take into consideration the importance of continued and increased scientific research in Canada.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I shall first take the liberty of recalling the remarks made by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) regarding this bill. In my opinion, he is one of the few who have outlined the real problem. All possible means are used to reduce the price of drugs at the risk of jeopardizing Canadian pharmaceutical firms.

As the hon. member for Lotbinière pointed out consideration must be given to the other aspect of the problem, that is to give the taxpayer enough money to enable him to buy those products. If their price is exorbitant because it is impossible to do otherwise on account of their nature, it is obvious that the best solution is to enable people to buy them since, as the hon. member also pointed out, it must be said that, as far as health is concerned, nobody can assume control and declare that he will forever be exempted from having to use drugs.

There exists therefore an innate right to drugs and that is why we should think more often of giving people the means to get them easily. That should be made extremely easy because no distinction must be made between the rich and the poor, the individual from the East or the West, the North or the South. Everybody has the indefeasible right to get proper medical care.

When the minister brought his bill before us on October 17 last, he set up the various stages in connection with it. He stated that the first step had been taken towards reducing prices by removing the sales tax on drugs.

Of course, this legislation was an improvement, but God knows that when one takes a walk among our people the only topic of conversation when one talks about social welfare and national health is always the same, namely that these products are out of reach. Of course removing the sales tax was a step forward, but really that hardly helped the customer. Therefore, this first stage did not produce any significant result and the reduction of the customs tariff from 20 to 15 per cent as well as the limitation of the anti-dumping duty to imported drugs had of course to bring some results. But I think that much more significant results were expected. However, as the minister said, the second stage of the program is provided in the legislation now proposed.

I agree with the previous speaker that we have here a rather serious menace to the drug industry of this country. That is why we shall have, some day, to reconsider the solution advocated by the Ralliement Créditiste and create a real "just society" by giving the people the necessary buying power to get the commodities they need. Everybody agrees that the commodities with which the present bill is concerned are essential ones and that is why we take advantage of this debate to emphasize the importance of bringing about reforms enabling the citizens to enjoy the buying power necessary to get what they need.

Thus, it is not a matter of slowing the pace of production through laws which would make it impossible to produce at a reasonable price. If, however, we care to get at the bottom of the problems we shall have to give the consumer buying power, and this will automatically bring about progress in production industries.

The third stage of the comprehensive program had to do with the establishment of an information service for doctors. But there are precisely glaring cases of conspiracy between doctors and manufacturers. In fact, we often see, for instance, a pill which costs 5 cents and contains such and such quantity of such and such ingredients, while a similar pill containing exactly the same quantity of the same ingredients sells for 17 cents. If the doctor prescribes the 17 cent pill, the patient will purchase it. How is it that such things can take place? We should clarify that in our present administration. A drug should never be paid more than what it is worth. We should exert ourselves on finding out the true manufacturing cost of products; we would often find that the excessive price of drugs is not only due to the cost of labour, but often to a bad organization. Moreover, it is only a matter of fraud, and again it is the humble folk, those who pay and who do not have the necessary purchasing power, who are the victims.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being ten o'clock, in accordance with standing order 40, a motion to adjourn the house is deemed to have been put and seconded.

[Mr. Matte.]

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, before Your Honour launches into the adjournment debate may I say that since the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt), as well as one or two hon. members of our group, wish to contribute to this debate our party would give favourable consideration to any proposal to extend the sitting for a reasonable period, if it were felt that this debate could be completed. In view of the importance of the bill and the desirability of completing the second reading and sending it to committee, I was wondering if the house would be favourably disposed to extending the time of sitting. I will not move any formal motion. Instead, I am indicating our party's view on the matter.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): We would be agreeable to that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I submit that too many wish to speak for us to finish this debate tonight.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baldwin: Could I ask the government house leader what the business will be tomorrow, since this bill will obviously not be completed tonight?

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would expect it might be completed tomorrow and we would call it as the first order of business. As the second order of business, we will call item No. 9, which is the bill to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. The third item of business would be No. 12 on the Order Paper, the bill to amend the Veterans Land Act; the fourth item No. 33, the bill to amend the Aeronautics Act, and the fifth item No. 41, the bill to amend the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under standing order No. 40 deemed to have been moved.

CORPORATIONS AND LABOUR UNIONS RETURNS ACT—FAILURE TO FILE RETURNS

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act, which came into force in 1962, was to determine the effects of non-resident ownership and control of corporations, and to chart the flow of funds between the Canadian and U.S. sections of international unions.

Last October 4 I asked in the house why the annual returns from the corporations section under the act were complete only up until the year 1963. On adjournment debate on October 8 the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) stated that it was not the intention of the government to let this legislation waste away. He also said that the returns have been made on time but the difficulty has been in compiling, investigating and reporting upon the data received. It was stated that the corporations are not in default in filing the returns and that the 1967 returns are on hand.

There are 70 full time employees filing the corporations' returns. My question of the Department of Trade and Commerce was how many corporations have not filed returns under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act. The answer was that these figures were not available, but I later received an answer to my questions concerning the total number of corporations for which returns must be filed.

It seems strange that these figures are known. The statement was that 185 corporations are under investigation for 1965, 745 for 1966 and 2,990 for 1967, yet the Minister without Portfolio says all 1967 returns are on hand. I ask whether or not the responsible government department intends enforcing the penalty provision of the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act, and if not why not?

A further point should be clarified. In view of the debate which took place on this measure in 1962 and 1965, and particularly in view of the concern expressed by the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs in 1966 over the manner in which the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act was being administered as shown in the minutes of proceedings and evidence No. 13, July 5, 1966, what specific steps have been taken to implement the committee's warnings to officials of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics who appeared before it on July 5, 1966? They were instructed to proceed forthwith with the preparation of any amendments or revisions necessary to define clearly the type of organized labour group which the legislation was intended to cover?

I suggest that either this act must be made worthwhile in its entirety or the government should move to abolish it. I would also suggest to the Minister without Portfolio that tonight he should not repeat the words he used in his answer some time ago.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, as was indicated in the discussion of this matter some time ago, this is not the easiest legislation to administer because of the large number of corporations that may fall under the provisions of the act. Steps are being taken now, in correspondence and other means of communication, to acquaint firms with their obligations under the act and to discuss fully the reasons for not supplying the required information. As a result of this correspondence and communication, the 1967 returns are being received at the rate of 200 to 300 each week. The process of making appropriate contacts with the number of firms involved is very time consuming and staff resources must be allocated between the various parts of the program.

Many of the delinquent firms are small and do not have full-time accounting and legal staff, and therefore do not fully understand their obligations under the act. In some cases, the companies do not have a full-time office staff, and on occasion do not have a permanent place of business and are therefore difficult to locate. In some cases, the company concerned is inactive or in the process of being wound up, and it is difficult to locate a responsible officer of the corporation to furnish the information.

The Dominion Statistician is continuing his efforts to secure compliance with the reporting provisions of the act. The penalty under the act is not automatic, but prosecutions will be initiated of those officers and corporations that deliberately refuse to comply with the provisions of the act.

AIRPORTS—QUEBEC—LOCATION OF INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, last Friday, I put to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) a question that reads in part as follows:

> —with regard to the selection of the site for the future international airport which is to be announced before the end of January. Can he tell us whether such decision will be taken by technocrats or by the cabinet?

The minister replied: By the cabinet.

Nevertheless, we are still convinced that the decision will be a purely political one which will not necessarily take into account the long and short term policies of the present government from the point of view, say, of decentralization.

Mr. Speaker, by the decision to construct an international airport in Drummondville, the federal government will solve the overcrowded Dorval international airport problem. At the same time, it will fulfill the landing possibility needs of modern aviation.

I think that the technocrats' report will clearly show that the representatives of the area are justified in making this application. On the other hand, the Quebec government officially endorses this project.

Simultaneously, the federal government will apply its decentralization policy on behalf of an unfavoured region.

Through the investment of public funds in a project of that importance, the federal government will encourage and open the door to private investments essential to banish a staggering local economy and promote prosperity. Never a region has met the needs of such a large project with so many positive arguments: technical arguments are undeniable, social and economical arguments are decisive.

Mr. Speaker, I had the pleasure to welcome a delegation from Drummondville in this regard. I have even distributed to each member the brief presented by the Chamber of Commerce, in order to draw their attention to the importance of the substantial investment resulting from the establishment of an international airport in Drummondville.

For several similar reasons and mainly because I am convinced that the Eastern Townships need some very special assistance to promote further economic development, the establishment of an international airport in Drummondville would intensively and continuously contribute to the progress of our region from the labour point of view, as well from the point of view of touristic, commercial and other means of communication. Better roads would lead to the site which is located at less than 30 minutes from Sherbrooke, less than 20 minutes from Victoriaville and less than 30 minutes from Trois Rivières which would be within easy reach thanks to the new bridge. The site is also located at less than 45 minutes from Montreal. Mr. Speaker, the Eastern Townships have been left out in the cold for too long and, as I said, it is high time that each and everyone's political interests gave way to concern for the economic well-being of our area.

That is the reason why I put my question. However, I was very disappointed with the answer received. I expected a more precise, positive and progressive reply, which would have led us to hope that the ministry, on the advice of well-informed technocrats, would make an economic decision likely to solve the problems of this buffer area which I consider the center of the province of Quebec. Located between Quebec City and Montreal, it has been neglected far too long by the present government and the previous ones.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this is a forceful proposal. I suggest that hon. members acquaint themselves with the brief and the government take a clear and positive decision, meeting the expectations of some 800 municipalities. Through resolutions or other means, they have openly approved the establishment of the future international airport on the site suggested in the brief submitted by the Drummondville Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Speaker, I am waiting of course for an answer from the parliamentary Secretary, and I hope he will tell us that the decision made will be an economic one. Indeed, I think that if the government shows that it is serious and makes an economic decision, it will have to choose Drummondville. Since they are dinning into our ears a decentralization policy, we will then see whether such a policy is only talk or if it is a serious one.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer), all I can say to the hon. member for Lotbinière on this important question of the future International Airport is substantially similar to what the minister answered him last Friday, since the final decision has not yet been made.

The decision obviously rests with the federal government and they will make it. Of course, they will take into account the advice of technicians or experts in that field, who have submitted reports, and they will also have to consider the results of their talks with the authorities of the province of Quebec.

As the hon. member knows, there are several elements that must be considered before a final decision is reached, like the availability of air space, the topography, the means of transport, the noise that can affect urban areas. Among these elements, of course, there is the regional economic development, which is certainly important and which must also be taken into account.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

• (10:10 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the house is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this house stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX

COMMUNIQUÉ FOLLOWING COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

Marlborough House,
London, S.W.1
Tel. No. 01-839 3411

MEETING OF COMMONWEALTH PRIME MINISTERS—LONDON 1969

Communiqué

Commonwealth Heads of Government met in London from 7-15 January. Botswana, Cyprus, Malawi, Tanzania, Uganda and Zambia were represented by their Presidents. Australia, Barbados, Britain, Canada, Ceylon, The Gambia, Guyana, India, Jamaica, Lesotho, Malaysia, Malta, Mauritius, New Zealand, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Swaziland and Trinidad and Tobago were represented by their Prime Ministers. Ghana was represented by the Deputy Chairman of the National Liberation Council; Kenya by its Minister of Finance; Nigeria by the Vice Chairman of the Federal Executive Council; and Pakistan by its Minister for Foreign Affairs. The Prime Minister of Britain was in the Chair.

2. This was the largest meeting of Commonwealth Heads of Government and one of the biggest consultative gatherings of Heads of Government from all parts of the world since the signature of the United Nations Charter. Heads of Government warmly greeted the President of Botswana, and the Prime Ministers of Barbados Lesotho, Mauritius and Swaziland, whose countries had become new members of the Commonwealth since the previous meeting.

3. The Republic of Nauru has become the Commonwealth's first "special member", with the right to participate in all functional meetings and activities, and to be eligible for Commonwealth technical assistance. The Associated States of the West Indies, having reached a full measure of self-government although not fully independent, also take part in Commonwealth meetings and activities in fields within their constitutional competence. Heads of Government welcomed these arrangements which had been agreed since their last Meeting to enable very small States to participate in the work of the Commonwealth.

International Affairs

4. Heads of Government were aware that they were meeting at a time of some misgivings about the effectiveness of international organizations and associations. They were unanimous that effective international co-operation was more than ever important. Any weaknesses and failures of international machinery were a reason to improve that machinery, not to despair of it. They expressed their continued support for the purposes and principles of the United Nations Charter and their wish to contribute to efforts to strengthen the institutions and work of the United Nations, particularly its role in maintaining and promoting peace.

5. They noted with pleasure the part played by Commonwealth countries in the development of regional co-operation. At the same time they recognized that exchanges of view and consultation within a wider association such as the Commonwealth offered one means by which its members could form a better understanding of one another's problems and attitudes and of their growing interdependence.

6. With these considerations in mind, they reviewed some of the major issues and trends in the world political situation.

7. They were in agreement that the principles of non-interference by one State in the internal affairs of another and of scrupulous respect for the sovereignty, the territorial integrity and political independence of all States are the very cornerstone of the structure of world peace.

8. Heads of Government also felt that events in Czechoslovakia in violation of these principles and of the United Nations Charter tended to undermine respect for the territorial integrity and sovereign independence of all States, particularly small States.

9. They considered that events in the Middle East in violation of the United Nations Charter and the Security Council resolutions emphasised the need for the establishment of a durable peace in the area as a matter of urgency. This could be achieved in accordance with the Security Council's Resolution of 22 November, 1967. The Heads of Government expressed support for the efforts of Dr. Jarring, the special representative of the UN Secretary-General, and urged all concerned to give him their fullest co-operation. They were encouraged to note the round of consultation now in progress among the four permanent members of the Security Council and urged these Governments to persist in their efforts to help bring about a settlement in accordance with the November 22 Resolution of the Security Council. While the role of major Powers was important, other countries especially those who have an interest in the reopening of the Suez Canal, including Commonwealth members could contribute towards a settlement.

10. Recalling the views expressed at their Meetings in 1965 and 1966, Heads of Government welcomed the commencement of the Vietnam talks in Paris and expressed the hope that they would lead to discussions aimed at securing a just, lasting and genuine peace.

11. It was the view of the majority of Heads of Government that the People's Republic of China has a right and a duty to participate in full in all the world's efforts towards peace. Most Heads of Government expressed the hope that the People's Republic of China would be able to take its rightful place in the international community, although some of them also stressed that this should be achieved without prejudicing the rights of the people of Taiwan to an independent existence if they chose. However, certain Prime Ministers of countries whose Governments recognised the Government of the Republic of China (Taiwan) reiterated their support of that Government's right to membership of the United Nations.

12. Heads of Government, recalling the ending of Indonesia's policy of confrontation against Malaysia and Singapore in 1966, were encouraged by developments towards stability in Indonesia since their last meeting in 1966 and felt that this would contribute to the general stability and economic development of the region.

13. The Meeting observed that difficulties between Malaysia and the Philippines arising out of the Philippine claim to Sabah had hampered the progress of regional cooperation in South East Asia. It expressed the hope that these difficulties could be resolved by peaceful means, upholding the right of self-determination which has been exercised by the people of Sabah.

14. The Meeting also noted with concern and sympathy the difficulties which Guyana was experiencing in connection with Venezuela's claim to more than one-half of Guyana's territory. Acknowledging that threats to the territorial integrity of the State make inevitable the diversion of resources and energies from the constructive tasks of development, many members shared the view advanced by Guyana's Prime Minister that there was an urgent need for an international effort to secure the territorial integrity of every state—and especially of the small developing countries of the world.

15. The Meeting expressed the hope that the recent achievement of independence by many small states would bring home to the international community the need to introduce special and effective measures to guarantee their territorial integrity.

16. The Meeting considered that major barriers to progress on negotiated agreements in critical areas and fields would be overcome by significant progress in achieving detente and in co-operation between the major Powers. It was therefore considered essential that efforts to reduce tension and extend areas of peace and co-operation should continue.

17. Heads of Government recalled that at their Meeting in September, 1966, they had expressed the view that events were throwing into ever sharper relief the need for firm and far reaching agreements on disarmament. They considered that the need for such agreements was even more urgent now than it was then, and hoped that the Eighteen National Disarmament Committee would resume consideration of this matter.

18. The Meeting considered that the Eighteen Nation Disarmament Committee should, as a matter of priority, explore possibilities of reaching agreement on effective measures designed to bring about a cessation of the nuclear arms race at a very early date. With this end in view a universally binding comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty was an urgent necessity. In this connection the British proposal to the Eighteen Nation Disarmament Committee for a phased approach to a comprehensive test ban treaty was deserving of further study. They considered that the Eighteen Nation Disarmament Committee should also seek to achieve a cut-off of the production of fissionable material for weapons purposes. Both these measures could be of great significance in halting the nuclear arms race. Mention was also made of the possibility that the Eighteen Nation Disarmament Committee might undertake the study of various proposals made for a convention on the prohibition of the use of nuclear weapons. The Meeting gave particularly strong support to one of the recommendations made by the Conference of Non-Nuclear Weapon States (whose distinguished President was present at this Meeting) and repeated by the General Assembly of the United Nations to the Governments of the United States and the Soviet Union, that they should at an early date begin their bilateral discussions on the limitation of offensive strategic nuclear weapon delivery systems and systems of defence against ballistic missiles.

19. The Meeting stressed again that effective disarmament must cover non-nuclear as well as nuclear weapons. In this connection the Heads of Government drew attention to the urgent need for action to deal with the threat presented by chemical and biological weapons and welcomed the British proposal to the Eighteen Nation Disarmament Committee for a new convention prohibiting microbiological methods of warfare. They looked forward to the report on chemical and biological weapons which the Secretary-General of the United Nations had been requested to prepare; they hoped that this would make a valuable contribution to the consideration of arms control measures to deal with these weapons.

20. Heads of Government recalled that at their Meeting in September 1966 they had stressed that while there was still time it was imperative to halt the spread of nuclear weapons. A step towards this goal was taken with the opening for signature of the Treaty for the Non-Proliferation of nuclear weapons. In so far as the Treaty achieved this objective, most Heads of Government welcomed it. However, some Heads of Government had reservations on certain aspects of the Treaty including its effectiveness and the reliability of security guarantees for non-nuclear weapon states. It was recognised that the Non-Proliferation Treaty would not fulfil all the hopes set upon it unless progress could also be made by the nuclear powers towards effective measures of nuclear disarmament. It was also recognised that member states which were subjected to attack or threat of attack by either nuclear or non-nuclear weapons had the right to the protection afforded to them under the United Nations Charter.

21. The Meeting heard a statement by Britain on the progress of the remaining British dependencies towards self-government or independence. Twenty such dependencies were now left—many of them very small islands—and there had been recent constitutional advances in sixteen. It noted that in the case of British Honduras, the Falkland Islands and Gibraltar, the British Government stood ready to hold discussions with interested neighbouring countries, consonant with its basic principle, which was enshrined in the United Nations Charter, that the interests and wishes of the inhabitants must be paramount.

22. The Prime Minister of Malta drew the attention of other Heads of Government to the situation arising from the rapidly increasing technological capacity to exploit the immense resources of the sea bed, which constitutes nearly three-quarters of the surface of the earth. They considered that the area of the sea bed and ocean floor beyond the limits of present national jurisdiction, for which a precise definition should be sought, should be accorded a special legal status as part of the common heritage of mankind, and as such should be reserved for peaceful purposes and for the orderly exploration and exploitation of its great resources, by such appropriate international machinery as is agreed acting for the common benefit of all States, irrespective of their geographical location, and taking into special consideration the interests and needs of the developing countries.

23. The Meeting welcomed the initiative of the Government of Malta which led to the appointment in December 1968 by the General Assembly of the United Nations of a Committee on the peaceful uses of the sea bed and the ocean floor beyond the limits of national jurisdiction, and declared its support for the committee's work.

Rhodesia

24. The Meeting had a full discussion on the problem of Rhodesia. Heads of Government agreed that there were several reasons why Rhodesia was so important in Commonwealth consultations. The legal authority and the responsibility for the terms on which it would be brought to independence rested with Britain, a Commonwealth member. The attempts of Commonwealth countries adjacent to Rhodesia to establish non-racial societies and prosperous economies were jeopardised by the growing threat of race conflict within the region. But the overriding reason was that problems such as this involved principles of racial justice and equality and the right of all peoples to self determination which are embodied in the United Nations Charter and in the Declaration of Human Rights. These matters went to the heart of the Commonwealth relationship and were therefore of deep concern to all Commonwealth members.

25. The Meeting recalled that, for these reasons, Rhodesia had been an important subject of discussion at recent Commonwealth conferences, and Heads of Government reiterated the principles and objectives affirmed at their four previous meetings.

26. They also reviewed developments since their last Meeting, noting that the illegal regime had continued acts of political repression against the African majority population, and that there were increasing trends towards an apartheid system in Rhodesia.

27. The constitutional proposals drawn up on board HMS Fearless were discussed. Most Heads of Government emphasized their view that these proposals were unacceptable as the constitution of an independent Rhodesia, and should therefore be withdrawn. They considered that to transfer sovereignty to a racial minority as the result of an agreement reached with that minority would settle nothing, if the settlement was not freely accepted by the people of Rhodesia as a whole including the four million African Rhodesians and seen by the international community, especially the independent African countries to be so accepted. Otherwise internal strife, and outside support for guerilla activities would increase, with the inevitable risk of increasing instability and eventual race war. They stated that historical experience suggested that once independence was achieved, a minority in power could not be prevented from changing a constitution in whatever way they might wish. The only effective guarantees of political and civil rights lay in vesting those rights in the people as a whole.

28. The Meeting recalled the pledge given by the British Prime Minister, following discussion at the Commonwealth Conference in September, 1966, that independence would not be granted before majority rule was achieved (NIBMR). The British Prime Minister stated that although the Fearless Proposals remained on the table, there had been no change in the British Government's policy on NIBMR. The Meeting welcomed the statement that the British Government's policy on NIBMR remained unchanged, but most Heads of Government reiterated their position that the Fearless Proposals should be withdrawn.

29. Some Heads of Government reiterated their call on the British Government to use force to quell the rebellion in Rhodesia. The British Prime Minister explained the reasons why the British Government regarded the use of force as wrong and impracticable.

30. The British Prime Minister said that he had taken careful note of the view expressed by most other Heads of Government that the Fearless Proposals ought to be withdrawn. But he could not himself accept this view since he considered that it would be right, if it proved possible, to give the people of Rhodesia as a whole an opportunity to decide for themselves whether or not they wished for a settlement which would be fully consistent with the Six Principles laid down by successive British Governments. Any such settlement would need to be clearly shown to be the wish of the Rhodesian people as a whole. If that took place, he would consult his Commonwealth colleagues about the NIBMR commitments. He emphasized, however, that a settlement based on the Six Principles would not be possible if it were shown that there could be no genuine test of its acceptability in present circumstances in Rhodesia.

31. It was agreed that any settlement must depend for its validity upon the democratically ascertained wishes of the people of Rhodesia as a whole. The process for ascertaining their views was the British Government's responsibility, but the test of the acceptability of any proposed settlement would need to be made in a manner which would carry conviction in the Commonwealth and in the international community generally, so that its results would be accepted as truly reflecting the wishes of the people of Rhodesia. Many Heads of Government urged that this could only be carried out through the normal democratic process of election or referendum, and doubted whether adequate safeguards for free political expression and verification of the results could be provided so long as the rebel government remained in power. The Meeting noted the British Prime Minister's statement that it would be open to the proposed Royal Commission to say that in the circumstances prevailing in Rhodesia, no genuine assessment was possible of the acceptability of the proposed settlement to the people of Rhodesia as a whole and that, further, if the Royal Commission felt themselves unable to adjudicate on the acceptability or otherwise of the proposals to the people of Rhodesia as a whole, they would be free to recommend any alternative method, including a referendum, which in their view would adequately test Rhodesian opinion.

32. The Meeting had before it a review of the working of economic sanctions prepared for it by the Commonwealth Sanctions Committee. The Meeting agreed that the comprehensive mandatory sanctions were having some effect. It was important to strengthen the enforcement of these and other pressures on the illegal regime, and to intensify them wherever possible, in order to bring about an acceptable political settlement. Heads of Government therefore affirmed their support for the Supervisory Committee of the United Nations Security Council and for the Commonwealth Sanctions Committee, which they requested to continue to keep the situation under review.

33. Notwithstanding some differences of opinion on method, Heads of Government remained unanimous on the ultimate objectives to be sought in Rhodesia. They were more than ever resolved that, whatever the time needed to reverse it, the seizure of power by a small racial minority could be neither recognised nor tolerated. Concerted international action was being steadily built up particularly through the United Nations and the Commonwealth and Heads of Government pledged their continuing support for all efforts to strengthen and extend this and to continue to assist Rhodesian Africans in preparing themselves to take their rightful place in the Government and administration of their country. The special problems encountered by Botswana and Zambia arising from the Rhodesia crisis were recognised.

34. The British Prime Minister undertook to continue to consult Commonwealth members on the issue of Rhodesia.

Southern Africa

35. The Meeting considered other problems in Southern Africa. It reaffirmed the condemnation expressed at previous meetings of the policy of apartheid of the South African Government—a policy totally abhorrent to world opinion. It expressed serious concern at the continued refusal of South Africa to accept its international obligations in respect of the territory of South West Africa.

36. The Meeting deeply regretted that Portugal continued to deny the right of self-determination to the inhabitants of her colonial territories in Africa and called on Portugal to concede that right without delay. Some Heads of Government felt that the situation in Southern Africa if continued, would endanger peace and security and pointed to the threats which they felt were posed to their countries by the armed forces of South Africa and Portugal.

Migration

36A. Informal discussions took place outside the meeting between some Commonwealth countries on certain problems of migration between those Commonwealth countries. The Secretary-General was requested by the countries engaged in these discussions to examine in consultation with representatives of those countries general principles relating to short and long term movement of people between their countries and to consider the possibility of exploring ways and means of studying this subject on a continuing basis with a view to providing relevant information to those Governments.

36B. The Prime Ministers re-affirmed the declaration made in communiques of 1964 and 1965 that for all Commonwealth Governments it should be an objective of policy to build in each country a structure of society which offers equal opportunity and non-discrimination for all its people, irrespective of race, colour or creed. The Commonwealth should be able to exercise constructive leadership in the application of democratic principles in a manner which will enable the people of each country of different racial and cultural groups to exist and develop as free and equal citizens.

Economic Affairs

37. Heads of Government held a general discussion on the world economic situation and broadly reviewed recent developments and trends. They agreed that the representative character of the Commonwealth and its tradition of informed and sympathetic interest in the problems of development make it a most valuable forum for constructive discussion and a useful instrument for co-operative endeavour.

38. They noted that early last year, in New Delhi during UNCTAD II, Commonwealth Ministers had exchanged views on some of the problems affecting trade and development of member countries, and that more recently, Commonwealth Finance Ministers at their annual meeting held in London had a full discussion of the world economic situation with special reference to international monetary problems, development and aid.

39. Heads of Government were concerned that the gap between the rich and poor was widening, but were encouraged by growing recognition of the increasing inter-dependence of nations. Greater co-operative action was vital to ensure economic progress and prosperity on which stability and peace so largely depend. Postponement of adequate and united efforts would lead to greater political and economic problems.

40. They took note of the fact that developing countries of the Commonwealth were making efforts to help themselves. They were steadily laying the ground-work of future self-sustained growth by paying increasing attention to agriculture, education, population control and administrative and institutional reforms. It was therefore hoped that if they were assisted by appropriate international measures, they would be in a position during the decade of the 1970's to achieve higher rates of economic growth.

41. Heads of Government noted the growing movement towards greater regional co-operation among the developing countries of the Commonwealth. This represented a valuable form of self-help on the part of the developing countries.

42. Heads of Government recognized that the results of UNCTAD II had been very disappointing to the developing countries. While there had been agreement on the need to evolve an international policy for development and a global strategy to implement it, little progress had been made in achieving this. On the other hand UNCTAD II had mapped out certain promising lines of approach.

43. They stressed the need to give practical effect to the unanimous agreements reached in principle at UNCTAD II. They expressed the hope that it would soon be possible to conclude successfully the negotiations on a scheme of generalized preferences which would be of benefit to all developing countries and which would provide compensation for the less developed countries whose export trade might be adversely affected by the introduction of such a scheme. They agreed that close and continuous consultations among Commonwealth countries would be necessary during the consideration of the scheme of generalized preference. They emphasised the importance of continuing consultation at the Trade and Development Board and other organs of UNCTAD and asked the Secretary-General to maintain close contacts with these and other international agencies in order to keep these developments under review.

44. Heads of Government agreed that the first Development Decade had fallen short of expectations in achieving practical results. They hoped, however, that the experience gained would help in the identification of areas of development and the strategy to which urgent attention needs to be directed with a view to achieving greater concrete results during the second Development Decade.

45. It was recognised that the terms of trade had moved against some countries of the Commonwealth who depend to a great extent on the export of primary products. More orderly and satisfactory markets for primary products were crucial for Commonwealth countries. Recognising the present unsatisfactory state of major export markets for many primary products, Heads of Government stressed the need for further efforts by Commonwealth countries in international forums to secure improved conditions for international commodity trade, including better access to markets in both developed and developing countries and equitable and stable prices for primary products. They expressed gratification at the extension of the Commonwealth Sugar Agreement which has always been of special interest to the Commonwealth producer countries. They welcomed the recent conclusion of the International Sugar Agreement and expressed the hope that those governments which had not already signed it would do so. They further hoped that other commodities of special economic importance to Commonwealth countries would be covered similarly by suitable international arrangements which arrangements would be pursued and be supported by Commonwealth countries.

46. In this connection, they noted recent developments in the negotiations for the conclusion of an International Agreement on Cocoa. They urged all parties to the negotiations to intensify their efforts so as to reach a speedy agreement, and on the progress of which the Secretary-General should keep members fully informed.

47. Heads of Government welcomed the liberalization of trade in respect of manufactured products consequent on the conclusion of the Kennedy Round of negotiations, and hoped that this process of trade liberalization would be carried further in respect of all products. They regretted however that these negotiations had produced no significant benefits for most developing countries. They expressed the hope that continuing efforts would be made under the auspices of GATT and UNCTAD to enable developing countries to secure improved access for their products to international markets with a view to increasing their foreign exchange earnings, while making every effort to increase trade among themselves.

48. They stressed the dangers of excessive protectionism in a number of Foreign industrialized countries for agricultural products of export interest to Commonwealth countries.

49. While it was recognised that Commonwealth trade must be seen in the larger context of global trade of which it was a vital part, they agreed there was continuing scope for the expansion of Commonwealth trade and for this purpose there was need to strengthen the well-established links amongst Commonwealth members.

50. Heads of Government took note of the Secretary-General's report that, in pursuance of an earlier decision, the Secretariat had begun a study on the feasibility of Commonwealth co-operation to assist in trade promotion. They looked forward to the completion of this study.

51. The Meeting took note of the special difficulties of Lesotho and other African landlocked Commonwealth countries. These countries expressed the hope that all concerned would find it possible to accede to or ratify the international convention on the transit trade of landlocked countries. Heads of Government hoped that all countries concerned would make every effort to provide adequate transit facilities to the trade of such landlocked countries.

52. Heads of Government reiterated the importance of continuing close consultation by the British Government with Commonwealth Governments in regard to developments of interest to them concerning the British application for entry into the European Economic Community.

53. In discussing the international monetary situation, Heads of Government stressed the importance of restoring stability in world payments—and of adapting the world monetary system to meet evolving needs. They stressed the need for providing adequate international liquidity for implementing and activating as early as practicable the scheme for Special Drawing Rights through the International Monetary Fund to supplement reserve assets. They regretted that it had not been possible as yet to get the necessary broad international agreement on a special link between international action to increase liquidity and the needs of developing countries. They hoped that further consideration would be given to establishing such a link.

54. They expressed the hope that more liberal trade policies would follow from improvements in the international payments system.

55. Some Heads of Government felt that Commonwealth countries should call for a world monetary conference, open to all members of the I.M.F., to reappraise the World Monetary System since Bretton Woods and to make recommendation for its improvement, and that there should be a Commonwealth Meeting prior to such a Conference. Others while sympathising with these objectives felt that it would be inappropriate to attempt to achieve them through such a conference and that it would be better to continue official discussions through existing channels.

56. The meeting discussed international assistance for economic development, and noted with concern that the net transfer of resources from industrialized to developing countries had stagnated at a level which was inadequate to facilitate an acceptable rate of economic development in the developing countries. A critical situation was emerging for a number of countries because of the burden of debt servicing. Heads of Government expressed the hope that countries which had not already done so would be in a position to signify their acceptance of an early date for complying with the UNCTAD resolution on the target of 1% of gross national product at market prices. They stressed the urgency of the replenishment of the resources of the International Development Association and expressed the hope that all countries concerned would follow the lead already given by some in effecting such replenishment.

57. Heads of Government noted with approval the recent tendency on the part of some Commonwealth countries to soften the terms of their loans which they are extending to the less developed Commonwealth countries. They considered that Commonwealth donor countries should take the lead in seeking further improvements in the terms of international aid generally, and hoped that donor Governments would view sympathetically in appropriate cases the granting of more flexible terms.

58. Heads of Government expressed the hope that the consideration of the scheme of supplementary financing would lead to early results of benefit to developing countries.

59. They welcomed the appointment of an International Commission by the World Bank to review the total aid experience of the past two decades and to make recommendations for future aid programmes, and were particularly gratified that a former colleague, The Rt. Hon. Lester B. Pearson, was presiding over the Commission's work.

Commonwealth Co-operation

60. Heads of Government reviewed the extensive range of co-operation which exists among Commonwealth countries in such areas as technical assistance, education, science, medicine, law and many other functional fields. Such co-operation is facilitated and rendered more fruitful by the advantages the Commonwealth association offers—a common working language, similar traditions in government, administration, educational methods, and the organisation of the professions. With the increasing membership of the Commonwealth and the potentially wider areas of co-operation, they recognised the importance of seeking ways and means of achieving more effective co-operation among members in all fields.

61. Much was being done through bilateral arrangements between member countries. The Meeting noted that intra-Commonwealth official bilateral assistance, which accounts on the average for about 85% of the total of such assistance provided by Commonwealth members in all developing countries, had increased in 1967 and 1968, and they hoped that this would continue to grow.

62. They also reaffirmed the value of programmes of specifically Commonwealth effort in certain fields. An example would be increasing application of the principle of third-party financing, as a useful mechanism for bringing qualified experts and important tasks together quickly and efficiently. Third-party financing, by which experts from one country can be financed wholly or in part by another, can significantly enlarge the pool of expertise available for technical assistance arrangements by drawing on skills available in developing countries. These skills, moreover, are often of particular relevance to the needs of other developing countries. The Meeting agreed that early consideration should be given to the extension of the principle of third-party financing to education, training and consultations. This would allow students to be trained in surroundings and under conditions more appropriate to their future employment, and in this way ease the problem of the brain-drain.

63. The Meeting noted several examples of mutual assistance which had already grown up among developing members of the Commonwealth. The Commonwealth Programme of Technical Co-operation, established within the Secretariat the previous year and on which the Secretary-General submitted a progress report, was a further step in building on the special advantages which the Commonwealth affords. A number of them underlined the particular usefulness of the Programme to the smaller members. They noted that a review of this Programme is to be carried out later this year.

64. The Meeting also considered a number of proposals for strengthening Commonwealth co-operation in specific fields.

65. They agreed that the nature and work of the Commonwealth should be more widely known in member countries. They approved in principle the proposal by Guyana for a Commonwealth Information Programme, and authorised the Secretary-General to appoint an Information Officer and to undertake in consultation with Governments a study of the implications of a programme as proposed.

66. Heads of Government also welcomed in principle the proposals submitted by Pakistan on co-operation in the fields of mass communication and education and asked the Secretary-General to undertake studies in detail and in consultation with Commonwealth governments.

67. The Meeting had before it three proposals by Britain for increased Commonwealth co-operation. The first was for extension of co-operation in the legal field. This proposal involved the establishment of a small Legal Section in the Secretariat, which was agreed; and a conference on legal education, to which further consideration should be given.

68. The second British proposal was for regional centres for the teaching of English and the teaching of science, which was welcomed in principle, and which it was agreed should be further considered by the Commonwealth Education Liaison Committee and the Secretariat.

69. The third British proposal was for a series of studies on the problems of youth. The Meeting asked the Secretary-General to examine its feasibility taking into account the work in this field undertaken by other international organizations.

70. In addition the Meeting discussed proposals for a Commonwealth Book Development Programme designed to assist developing Commonwealth countries to obtain books and journals for educational and research purposes. The Meeting asked the Secretary-General to undertake studies in detail in conjunction with the Commonwealth Education Liaison Committee, convening expert working parties where necessary. The Secretary-General was asked to include in these studies the implications of the ratification of the Protocol to the Berne Copyright Convention.

71. Heads of Government took note of the Second Report of the Secretary-General and the Report of the Commonwealth Foundation.

72. The Meeting also expressed appreciation of the valuable contribution to the strengthening of Commonwealth co-operation and understanding being made by the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association. As an independent association of Parliamentarians, it provides unique opportunity for the sharing of experience, the discussion of common problems and the development of personal links to the benefit both of its members and of the people they represent.

73. They expressed high appreciation with the work of the Commonwealth Secretary-General and his colleagues which they thought more than adequately justified the decision to establish the Secretariat.
